ERRATA—VOL. I.

Col. 185, third paragraph from bottom of page should read thus :

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The amount asked for is the same as last year. There are increases for three officers in the first-class. One is promoted from the second-class to the first-class. Outside of the two increases caused by the promotion of two third-class officers into the second-class there is only $50 increase in that class. It is proposed to have seven first-class officers instead of six, ten second-class instead of eleven, and three junior second-class clerks instead of two. The number of messengers remains the same, with increases of $30 each.

Col. 1930, line 32 from top to read thus :

shipped, Great Britain took 668,000. In 1893, out of 1,187,000 barrels, Great Britain took 946,000.

These figures in each case represent the crop of the preceding year. I would like to ask what would be the effect on this industry, if Great Britain were to impose a tariff against those apples similar to the tariff we now exact on her goods ?

House of Commons Debates

FIRST SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 6, 1901.

To-day being the first day of the meeting of the First Session of the Ninth Parliament for the despatch of business,—Sir John George Bourinot, K.C.M.G., LL.D., D.C.L., Clerk of the House of Commons, and Lieut.-Col. Henry Robert Smith, Serjeant-at-Arms, Commissioners appointed by Dedimus Potestatem for administering the Oath to Members of the House of Commons, all attending according to their duty, Henri G. LaMothe, Esquire, Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, delivered to the said Sir John George Bourinot, a Roll containing a list of the names of such members as had been returned to serve in this parliament.

The aforesaid commissioners did administer the oath to the members who were present, which being done, and the members having subscribed the roll containing the oath, they repaired to their seats.

A message was delivered by René Edouard Kimber, Esquire, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod :

GENTLEMEN,

The Honourable Mr. Justice Gwynne, in his capacity as Deputy Governor, desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Senate Chamber.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate, when the Speaker of the Senate said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency the Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law ; but, to-morrow, at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon, His Excellency will declare the causes of his calling this parliament.

And the House being returned,

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Sir John Bourinot, it is probably in the minds of all the members now assembled on the floor of this House that the unfortunate circumstance of the recent demise of the great and noble lady who was for more than sixty years our Sovereign, should call from us, as our first duty, the adoption of an address to His Majesty the King, conveying to himself and the Royal Family the expression of our deep condolence for the great loss they have sustained—a loss which is not theirs alone, but which I am sure is the loss of all British subjects the whole world over. But I would remind hon. members at the same time that this House has no voice and can take no action except through the Speaker of the House, and that practically it has no existence for business until a Speaker has been elected. So, from the very necessity of the case, our first duty must be to elect a Speaker. I would also remind the House that our next duty, according to parliamentary usage, is to hear from His Excellency the Governor General the reasons why he has thought fit to summon us together. When this double duty has been performed, I am sure it will be very appropriate—and in this I express the views of all the members of this House—that we should pass such an address as I have just alluded to. Therefore, I here and now invite the House to proceed at once to the election of a Speaker, and I suggest as a fit and proper person for the occupancy of that high office—the highest in the gift of the House of Commons—Louis Philippe Brodeur, member for the electoral district of Rouville. The cheers which have just met the name of Mr. Brodeur are an evidence that his acceptance of this high office will be acceptable at all events to this side of the House, and I venture to hope that it will be equally acceptable to the other side. We have endeavoured in this country to follow as closely as possible the parliamentary system of Great Britain, where the accumulated experience of many centuries has brought that system well nigh to perfection. In one particular, however, and a very important one, we have departed from that system. In England, when once a Speaker is elected, he is elected practically for life. He is continued in office from parliament to parliament, and occupies the Chair so long as he has a seat in the House. We have adopted another system. With us it has become almost an article of the unwritten law of parliament that with a new parliament there should be a new Speaker. Of course, a good deal might be said as to the respective merits of these two practices ; there is no occasion, however, to enter upon such a discussion to-day. The hon. gentleman who was our Speaker in the last parliament, Sir James Edgar, unfortunately did not complete his term, having been removed by death. The hon. gentleman who succeeded him, Mr. Bain, did not seek re-election. Therefore we have not with us to-day the Speaker of the late parliament ; but in that parliament the office of Deputy Speaker was occupied by the hon. gentleman whom I have just named, Mr. Brodeur ; and I venture to assert that he performed the duties of that office with great acceptance to all, displaying both fairness of mind and an accurate knowledge of parliamentary practice ; and in the high position to which I venture to hope he will now be called by the unanimous assent of the House, I am sure he will display the same qualities in a still higher degree, and will be a true representative Speaker, holding even the scales of justice between all parties, and maintaining the principles and dignities of that great office. I therefore beg to move, seconded by Sir Richard Cartwright, that Louis Philippe Brodeur, member representing the electoral district of Rouville, do take the Chair of this House as Speaker.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Sir John Bourinot, speaking for the moment for His Majesty's loyal opposition in this House, I may say that we do not intend to question in any way the selection of the hon. gentleman whose name has been mentioned for the high office of Speaker of the House of Commons of Canada ; and I merely rise to add that we fervently hope on this side of the House that the hon. gentleman, an old colleague of many of us on both sides of the House, will be so able to observe the great traditions of that high office, both in this House and in the House of Commons of the mother country, that he may confidently rely upon the equal support of the gentlemen who sit either to the right or the left of the Chair.

The motion being put to the House,

The Clerk of the House (Sir John Bourinot) declared the motion carried in the affirmative neminè contradicente; and Louis Philippe Brodeur, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Rouville, duly elected to the Chair of the House.

Mr. Brodeur was conducted from his seat in the House to the Speaker's Chair by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Richard Cartwright.

Mr. SPEAKER ELECT. I beg to tender to this House my most sincere thanks for the great honour they have been pleased to confer upon me, by electing me to be their Speaker. It will always be my earnest desire to deserve the confidence reposed in me and to discharge my duties with the greatest impartiality. I am somewhat diffident as to my ability to meet the requirements of this important function; but I do venture to rely upon the indulgence of the House, and I am sure that members, on both sides, will always assist me in preserving the freedom and dignity of debate, and in vindicating our rights and privileges according to our rules and established usages.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The Serjeant-at-Arms then placed the Mace on the Table of the House.

On motion of the Prime Minister the House adjourned at 3.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 7, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

A Message was delivered by Réné Edouard Kimber, Esq., Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod :

Mr. SPEAKER :

His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Senate Chamber.

Accordingly the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

Then the Hon. Louis Philippe Brodeur Speaker elect, said :

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

The House of Commons has elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned me. If in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their King and country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable consideration.

The Hon. The Speaker of the Senate then said :

Mr. SPEAKER :

I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor General to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to His Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temperance and prudence, he grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have access to His Excellency upon all seasonable occasions, and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

Then His Excellency the Governor General, was pleased to open Parliament by a Speech from the Throne.

And the House being returned,

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to state that the House, having attended on His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, I informed His Excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen on me, and, in your names, and on your behalf, I made the usual claim for your privileges, which His Excellency was pleased to confirm to you.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform this House that when the House attended His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate Chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and, to prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy of the Speech, which is as follows :—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

Since our last meeting the Empire has been called on to lament the demise of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria. The universal regret and sympathy with which the tidings of her decease have been received throughout the entire civilized world, afford the best testimony to the manner in which she has, at all times, discharged her duties, both as a woman and a sovereign, throughout her unprecedentedly long and glorious reign, and I will venture to add that in no portion of her vast territories were those sentiments more profoundly felt than in the Dominion of Canada.

You will, I am sure, take early action to express your sympathy with the Royal Family in their bereavement and your loyalty to the new Sovereign.

The Canadian contingents to South Africa have nearly all returned, and it affords me a very great gratification to be able to assure you that the valour and good conduct of our Canadian soldiers have called forth the highest encomiums from the several commanders under whom they have served during the arduous contest.

The union of the several provinces of Australia into one confederation, upon lines closely resembling those on which our own Dominion has been established, marks another important step towards the consolidation of the outlaying portions of the Empire, and, I am well assured, will call forth your most sincere congratulations to the new commonwealth.

Acting on the advice of my ministers, I had, previously to the great grief which has fallen upon the nation, tendered an invitation on your behalf to His Excellency the Duke of Cornwall and York to conclude his intended visit to Australasia by one to the Dominion of Canada, and I am glad to be able to inform you that His Royal Highness has been pleased to signify his acceptance of the same. I still hope that that visit may not be considered impossible. I have no doubt of the warmth of the welcome with which he will be received.

My government has learned with great satisfaction of the progress being made with the Pacific cable scheme, and I trust that nothing may occur to delay its early completion.

Last summer I made a tour through Canada as far as Dawson City, and was everywhere received with unqualified proofs of devotion and loyalty. During my journey, I was, from personal observation, much impressed with the great activity displayed in the development of the mining and agricultural industries of the country, and with the substantial increase in its population. The thrift, energy and law-abiding character of the immigrants are a subject of much congratulation, and afford ample proof of their usefulness as citizens of the Dominion.

It gives me great pleasure to note the excellent display made by Canada at the Universal Exposition in Paris. The fine quality and varied character of Canadian natural and industrial products is evidenced by the number of awards won in nearly every class of the competition. It is a remarkable testimony to the effectiveness of our cold storage transportation facilities, that fresh fruit grown in Canada secured a large number of the highest awards. It is extremely gratifying to observe that, as a result of the display of Canadian resources, considerable foreign capital has found its way to Canada for investment and large orders from foreign countries have been received for Canadian goods.

The improvement of the St. Lawrence route continues to engage the very careful attention of my government. During the past year ship channels have been widened and deepened, additional lights and buoys have been provided and, in a short time, there will be telegraph and cable communication with Belle Isle. These additional securities will tend to make safer and more efficient than ever our great waterway between the lakes and the Atlantic.

I am glad to observe that the revenue and the general volume of trade continue undiminished, and even show a moderate increase over the very large figures attained during the past year.

Measures will be submitted to you for the better supervision of the export trade in food products, and also in connection with the Post Office, the Pacific cable and various other subjects.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

The accounts for the past year will be laid before you.

The Estimates for the succeeding year will likewise be placed upon the Table at an early date.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I commend to your earnest consideration the measures to be submitted to you, invoking the Divine blessings upon the important labours on which you are again entering.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That the Speech of His Excellency the Governor General to both Houses of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, be taken into consideration on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That Select Standing Committees of this House for the present session be appointed for the following purposes :—1. On Privileges and Elections. 2. On Expiring Laws. 3. On Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. 4. On Miscellaneous Private Bills. 5. On Standing Orders. 6. On Printing. 7. On Public Accounts. 8. On Banking and Commerce. 9. On Agriculture and Colonization,—which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—NEW LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier.) Before I move the adjournment of the House, I desire to give notice that to-morrow, if it be convenient to my hon. friends on the other side, I propose to move an address to His Majesty the King, of which I intimated the nature yesterday. I will avail myself of this opportunity to tender my congratulations, as well as the congratulations of this side of the House, to my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) on his advancement to the high office of leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition. Of course, it would not be fitting for me to offer any suggestion whatever, or any observations, as to what should be the internal policy of the Conservative party ; but speaking as a citizen of Canada, I am quite sure that the elevation of my hon. friend to the position that he now occupies must be very gratifying to himself. Speaking personally, and as leader of the House, it affords me much pleasure to think in advance that the relations between my hon. friend and myself will be always pleasant and cordial. I am well aware that it will be my painful duty on many occasions to dissent from the views of my hon. friend because, as it is his misfortune to be in the wrong on the main question, I do not anticipate that he can be in the right on the minor ones. But we will agree to disagree as we have done in the past, and I am quite sure that my hon. friend will believe in my absolute sincerity when I tell him that I hope, with all my heart, he may continue to exercise for a long, long period, the functions of leader of the opposition. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. gentleman for the kindness and courtesy which he has so well expressed in the remarks he has just seen fit to make with regard to myself. He will permit me, however, to say, in passing, that if I should remain leader of the opposition for as long a period as that joke is old, it will be wholly beyond my own expectations, and beyond the expectations of the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. It will be our painful duty, I expect, on some occasions, to differ with the right hon. gentleman and those who support him, as to what will be the best interests of the country, but I can only say that I shall add my efforts to his in the direction that our differences shall be adjusted, so far as they can be adjusted in this House, in a kindly and courteous manner. In saying that, I am sure that I voice the sentiments of every hon. gentleman on this side of the House. It is needless for me to say that I have accepted the trust which has been reposed in me by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House with a great deal of diffidence and hesitation. That diffidence and that hesitation have not been inspired by any fear of the loyalty or fidelity of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, in which I have the most perfect confidence. They have rather been inspired by my own comparative inexperience in public life, and by the fact that I doubted my own capacity to follow in the footsteps of those great men, who, in times past, have filled the position of leader, on one side or other, in the House, of the party which I now have the honour to lead in this House. I remember also that the traditions of this House have been sustained by great men who are now on the other side of the House, but who for many years fought the battles of their party with more or less varying fortune from the side of the House which is now occupied by my hon. friends and myself. It will be quite convenient for us to dispose of the motion to which the right hon. gentleman has referred to-morrow, and I am sure that the motion which has been suggested will receive the most cordial support from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—INTERNAL ECONOMY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message, as follows :—

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons an approved Minute of Council, appointing the Honourable Sir Richard Cartwright, G.C.M.G., Minister of Trade and Commerce; the Honourable Sir Louis Henry Davies, K. C. M. G., Minister of Marine and Fisheries ; the Honourable William Stevens Fielding, Minister of Finance, and the Honourable Joseph Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons, as Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the 13th Chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intituled : 'An Act respecting the House of Commons.'

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, February 7, 1901.

DEATH OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I rise to move the resolution of which I gave notice yesterday, which seems to be eminently called for by the fatal occurrence under which we have met. We have met under the shadow of a death which has caused more universal mourning than has ever been recorded in the pages of history. In these words there is no exaggeration ; they are the literal truth. There is mourning in the United Kingdom, in the colonies, and in the many islands and continents which form the great empire over which extend the sovereignty of Queen Victoria. There is mourning deep, sincere, heartfelt in the mansions of the great, and of the rich, and in the cottages of the poor and lowly ; for to all her subjects, whether high or low, whether rich or poor, the Queen, in her long reign had become an object of almost sacred veneration.

There is sincere and unaffected regret in all of the nations of Europe, for all the nations of Europe had learned to appreciate, to admire, and to envy the many qualities of Queen Victoria, those many public and domestic virtues which were the pride of her subjects.

There is genuine grief in the neighbouring nation of seventy-five million inhabitants, the kinsmen of her own people, by whom, at all times, and under all circumstances, her name was held in high reverence, and where, in the darkest days of the civil war, when the relations of the two countries were strained, almost to the point of snapping, the poet Whittier well expressed the feeling of his countrymen when he exclaimed :

> We bowed the heart, if not the knee,
> To England's Queen, God bless her.

There is wailing and lamentation amongst the savage and barbarian peoples of her vast empire, in the wigwams of our own Indian tribes, in the huts of the coloured races of Africa and of India, to whom she was at all times the great mother, the living impersonation of majesty and benevolence. Aye, and there is mourning also, genuine and unaffected, in the farm houses of South Africa, which have been lately, and still are devastated by war, for it is a fact that above the clang of arms, above the many angers engendered by the war, the name of Queen Victoria was always held in high respect, even by those who are fighting her troops, as a symbol of justice, and perhaps her kind hand was much relied upon when the supreme hour of reconciliation should come.

Undoubtedly we may find in history instances where death has caused perhaps more passionate outbursts of grief, but it is impossible to find instances where death has caused so universal, so sincere, so heartfelt an expression of sorrow. In the presence of these many evidences of grief which come not only from her own dominions, but from all parts of the globe ; in the presence of so many tokens of admiration, where it is not possible to find a single discordant note ; in the presence of the immeasurable void caused by the death of Queen Victoria, it is not too much to say that the grave has just closed upon one of the great characters of history.

What is greatness ? We are accustomed to call great, those exceptional beings upon whom heaven has bestowed some of its choicest gifts, which astonish and dazzle the world by the splendour of faculties, phenomenally developed, even when these faculties are much marred by defects and weaknesses which make them nugatory of good. But this is not, in my estimation, at least, the highest conception of greatness. The equipoise of a well-balanced mind, the equilibrium of faculties well and evenly ordered, the luminous insight of a calm judgment, are gifts which are as rarely found in one human being, as the possession of the more dazzling though less solid qualities. And when these high qualities are found in a ruler of men, combined with purity of soul, kindness of heart, generosity of disposition, elevation of purpose, and devotion to duty, this is what seems to me to be the highest conception of greatness, greatness which will be abundantly productive of happiness and glory to the people under such a sovereign. If I mistake not, such was the character of Queen Victoria, and such were the results of her rule. It has been our privilege to live under her reign, and it must be admitted that her reign was of the grandest in history, rivalling in length, and more than rivalling in glory the long reign of Louis XIV., and more than the reign of Louis XIV., likely to project its lustre into future ages.

If we cast our glance back over the sixty-four years into which was encompassed the reign of Queen Victoria, we stand astonished, however familiar we may be with the facts, at the development of civilization which has taken place during that period. We stand astonished at the advance of culture, of wealth, of legislation, of education, of literature, of the arts and sciences, of locomotion by land and by sea, and of almost every department of human activity. The age of Queen Victoria must be held to be on a par with the most famous within the memory of man. Of course, of many facts and occurrences which have contributed to make the reign of Queen Victoria what it was, to give it the splendour which has created such an impression upon her own country, and which has shed such a luminous trail all over the world, many took place apart and away from her influence. Many events took place in relation to which the most partial panegyrists would, no doubt, have to say, that they were simply the happy circumstance of the time in which she lived. Science, for instance, might have obtained the same degree of development under another monarch.

It is also possible that literature might have flourished under another monarch, but I believe that the contention can be advanced, and advanced truly, that the literature of the Victoria age to a large extent reflected the influence of the Queen. To the eternal glory of the literature of the reign of Queen Victoria be it said, that it was pure and absolutely free from the grossness which disgraced it in former ages, and which still unhappily is the shame of the literature of other countries. Happy indeed is the country whose literature is of such a character that it can be the intellectual food of the family circle ; that it can be placed by the mother in the hands of her daughter with abundant assurance that while the mind is improved the heart is not polluted. Such is the literature of the Victorian age. For this blessing, in my judgment, no small credit is due to the example and influence of our departed Queen. It is a fact well known in history, that in England as in other countries, the influence of the sovereign was always reflected upon the literature of the reign. In former ages, when the court was impure, the literature of the nation was impure, but in the age of Queen Victoria, where the life of the court was pure, the literature of the age was pure also. If it be true that there is a real connection between the high moral standard of the court of the sovereign and the literature of the age, then I can say without hesitation that Queen Victoria has conferred, not only upon her own people, but upon mankind at large, a gift for which we can never have sufficient appreciation.

But there are features of the reign of Queen Victoria which are directly traceable to her influence, and if I were to give my own appreciation of events as they have made their impression upon my judgment, I would say that in three particulars has the reign of Queen Victoria been most beneficient.

It has been stated more than once that she was a model constitutional sovereign. She was more than that. She was not only a model constitutional sovereign, but she was undoubtedly the first constitutional sovereign the world ever saw—she was the first absolutely constitutional sovereign which England ever had, and England we know has been in advance of the world in constitutioal parliamentary government. It may be said without exaggeration, that up to the time of the accession of Queen Victoria to the Throne, the history of England was a record of a continuous contest between the sovereign and the parliament for supremacy. That contest was of many centuries duration, and it was not terminated by the revolution of 1688, for although after that revolution the contest never took a violent form, still it continued for many reigns in court intrigues and plots ; the struggle on the part of the sovereign being to rule according to his own views ; the struggle on the part of parliament being to rule according to the views of the people.

Queen Victoria was the first of all sovereigns who was absolutely impersonal—impersonal politically I mean. Whether the question at issue was the Abolition of the Corn Laws, or the war in the Crimea, or the extension of the Suffrage, or the Disestablishment of the Irish Church, or Home Rule in Ireland, the Queen never gave any information of what her views were upon any of these great political issues. Her subjects never knew what were her personal views, though views she had, because she was a woman of strong intellect, and we know that she followed public events with great eagerness. We can presume, indeed we know, that whenever a new policy was presented to her by her Prime Minister she discussed that policy with him, and sometimes approved or sometimes, perhaps, dissented. But whether she approved or disapproved no one ever knew what her views were, and she left the praise or the blame to those who were responsible to the people. That wise policy upon the part of our late sovereign early bore fruit, and in ever-increasing abundance. The reward to the Queen was not only in the gratitude and affection of her people, but in the security of her throne, and dynasty. When the terrible year of 1848 came ; when all the nations of Europe were convulsed by revolution ; when thrones were battered by the infuriated billows of popular passions ; England, England alone, was absolutely calm and peaceful. Thrones crumbled to pieces like steeples in an earthquake, but the throne of the Sovereign Queen of England was never disturbed ; it was firm in the affection of her subjects. As the reign advanced, it became the pride of her subjects that there was more freedom in monarchic England than under any democratic or republican form of government in existence. That being true, the Queen rendered her people a very great service indeed. She saved them from socialistic agitation, and so the great prosperity of England to-day is due not only to wise and economic laws, but due also to the personality of the Queen, and to her prudent conduct all through the sixty years of her reign.

But that is not all. The most remarkable event in the reign of Queen Victoria—an event which took place in silence and unobserved—the most remarkable event in the reign of the late Queen was the marvellous progress in colonial development, development which, based upon local autonomy, ended in colonial expansion.

Let us remember that in the first year of the Queen's reign, there was rebellion in this very country. There was rebellion in the then foremost colony of Great Britain ; rebellion in Lower Canada, rebellion in Upper Canada ; rebellion—let me say it at once, because it is only the truth to say it —rebellion, not against the authority of the young Queen, but rebellion against the pernicious system of government which then prevailed. This rebellion was put down by force, and if the question had then been put : 'What shall be the condition of these colonies at the end of Victoria's reign,' the universal answer would have been : 'Let the end of the reign be near or let it be remote, when that end comes these rebellious colonies shall have wrenched their independence, or they shall be, sullen and discontented, kept down by force.' If, on the contrary, some one had there said : 'You are all mistaken ; when the reign comes to an end, these colonies shall not be rebellious; they shall not have claimed their independence; they shall have grown into a nation, covering one-half of this continent ; they shall have become to all intents and purposes one independent nation under the flag of England, and that flag shall not be maintained by force, but shall be maintained by the affection and gratitude of the people.' If such a prophecy had been made, it would have been considered as the hallucination of a visionary dreamer—but, Sir, to-day that dream is a reality, that prophecy has come true. To-day the rebellious colonies of 1837 are the nation of Canada—I use the word 'nation' advisedly—to-day the rebellious colonies of 1837 are the nation of Canada, acknowledging the supremacy of the Crown of England, maintaining that supremacy, not by force of arms, but simply by their own affection, with only one garrison in Canada at this present moment, and that garrison manned by Canadian volunteers.

What has been the cause of that marvellous change? The cause is primarily the personality of Queen Victoria. Of course the visible and chief cause of all is the bold policy inaugurated many years ago of introducing parliamentary constitutional government, and allowing the colonies to govern themselves. But, Sir, it is manifest that self-government could never have been truly effective in Canada had it not been that there was a wise sovereign reigning in England, who had herself given the fullest measure of constitutional government to her own people. If the people of England had not been ruled by a wise Queen; if they had not themselves possessed parliamentary government in the truest sense of the term; if the British parliament had been as it had been under former kings in open contention with the sovereign, then it is quite manifest that Canada could not have enjoyed the development of constitutional government which she enjoys to-day. It is quite manifest that if the people of England had not possessed constitutional government in the fullest degree at home, they could not have given it to the colonies ; and thus the action of the Queen in giving constitutional government to England has strengthened the Throne, not only in England, but in the colonies as well.

There is another feature of the Queen's reign which is but little taken notice of today, but which, in my judgment, has an importance which we have not yet fully realized, and perhaps the term of which we have not yet seen. Towards the end of the eighteenth century, all the colonies of England in America, with the single exception of the French colony of Quebec, claimed their independence, and obtained it by the force of arms. The contest was a long and arduous one. It left in the breast of the new nation which was then born a feeling of—shall I say the word?—yes, a feeling of hatred, which continued from generation to generation, and which extended into our own time. Happily we can say at this moment that this feeling of hatred has largely abated. I would not say that it has altogether disappeared. Perhaps we can still find traces of it here and there ; but that feeling has so largely abated, that there is to-day between England and the United States of America an ever-growing friendship. What are the factors which have made this possible ? Of all the factors which have made reconciliation possible, the personality of the Queen is doubtless the foremost. It is a matter of history that from the day of her accession to the Throne, the Queen exhibited, under all available circumstances, an abounding and lasting friendship towards that country which but for the fault of a vicious government would still have formed part of her dominions—a friendship which could not fail to touch the minds and hearts of a sensitive people. This was manifest in times of peace, but still more in time of war, and especially in the supreme hour of trial of the United States during the civil war. In the early months of the civil war, as perhaps few now remember, an event took place which almost led to hostilities between Great Britain and the United States. An American man-of-war stopped a British merchant ship on the high sea, and forcibly abducted from it two envoys of the confederate government on their way to Europe. That act was a violation of the territory of England, because England has always held the decks of her ships to be part of her territory. It not only caused excitement in England, but it caused excitement of a different kind in the United States. The action of the commander of the war vessel in making the abduction aroused a great deal of enthusiasm among the people of the United States, which was reflected even on the floor of Congress, and evoked many meetings and resolutions of commendation. Lord Palmerston was at that time the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and he was not the man to brook such an affront. He had a despatch prepared by the Foreign Minister, who, if I remember rightly, was at that time Lord Russell, peremptorily demanding the return of the prisoners and an apology. The despatch which had been prepared was submitted to the Queen; and then was revealed the good sense and the kind heart of the wise and good woman at the head of the British nation. She sent back the despatch remarking that it was couched in too harsh terms, and that it ought to be modified to make possible the surrender of the prisoners without any surrender of dignity on the part of the United States. This wise counsel was followed ; the despatch was modified accordingly ; the prisoners were released, and the danger of war was averted. That act on the part of the Queen made a most favourable impression on the minds of the people of the United States. But that was not all. Three years, or a little more afterwards, at the close of the civil war, when the union of the United States had been confirmed, when slavery had been abolished, when rebellion had been put down, the civilized world was shocked to hear of the foul assassination of the wise and good man who had carried his country through that ordeal. Then the good heart and sound judgment of the Queen were again manifested. She sent a letter to the widow of the martyred president—not as the Queen of Great Britain to the widow of the president of the United States ; but she sent a letter of sympathy from a widow to a widow, herself being then in the first years of her own bereavement. That action on her part made a very deep impression upon the minds of the American people ; it touched not only the heart of the widowed wife, but the heart of the widowed nation ; it stirred the souls of strong men; it caused tears to course down the cheeks of veterans who had courted death during the previous four years on a thousand battlefields. I do not say that it brought about reconciliation, but it made reconciliation possible. It was the first rift in the clouds; and to-day, in the time of England's mourning, the American people flock to their churches, pouring their blessings upon the memory of Britain's Queen. I do not hope, I do not believe it possible, that the two countries which were severed in the eighteenth century, can ever be again united politically ; but perhaps it is not too much to hope that the friendship thus inaugurated by the hand of the Queen may continue to grow until the two nations are united again, not by legal bonds, but by ties of affection as strong, perhaps, as if sanctioned by all the majesty of the laws of the two countries; and if such an event were ever to take place, the credit of it would be due to the wise and noble woman who thus would have proved herself to be one of the greatest of statesmen, simply by following the instincts of her heart.

Sir, in a life in which there is so much to be admired, perhaps the one thing most to be admired is that naturalness, that simplicity in the character of the Queen which showed itself in such actions as I have just described. From the first day of her reign to the last, she conquered and kept the affections of her people, simply because under all circumstances, and on all occasions, whether important or trivial, she did the one thing that ought to be done, and did it in the way most natural and simple. Thus, on the day of her accession to the Throne, when she had to hold her first Council of State, when she had to meet veterans of the army and dignitaries of the church and the state, she performed all her duties in such a way as at once to win the hearts of all present. The Duke of Wellington expressed his gratification in the blunt language of an old soldier by remarking that if she had been his own daughter, he could not have expected her to have done better. So it was on the first day, so it was every day, so it was on the last day of her reign.

She was a Queen, she was also a wife and a mother. She had her full share of the joys and sorrows of life. She loved, she suffered. Perhaps, though a Queen, she had a larger share of the sorrows than of the joys of life, for as Chateaubriand somewhere says, we have come to know how much there is of tears in the eyes of queens. Her married life was one of the noblest that could be conceived. It can be summed up in one word: it was happy. But death prematurely placed her cold hand upon her happiness by the removal of the noble companion of her life at an early age. From that moment she never was exactly the same. To the end of her life she mourned like Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be consoled. After the lapse of forty years, time may have assuaged, but it did not remove her grief; we can apply to her the beautiful language of the French poet:

Dans sa première larme elle noya son cœur.
('In her first tear she drowned her heart.')

She is now no more—no more? Nay, I boldly say she lives—lives in the hearts of her subjects; lives in the pages of history. And as the ages revolve, as her pure profile stands more marked against the horizon of time, the verdict of posterity will ratify the judgment of those who were her subjects. She ennobled mankind; she exalted royalty—the world is better for her life.

Sir, the Queen is no more, let us with one heart say: Long live the King!

I propose to the House that we should unite in a resolution to His Majesty the King, to convey to him the expression of our sorrow at the loss he has suffered—a loss which, we may say with every respect, is ours also.

I propose that we should unite in conveying to the King the expression of the loyalty of his Canadian subjects.

Only a few days ago His Majesty sent a message to his broad dominions across the sea, in which he said it would be his aim in life to follow in the footsteps of his great and noble mother. Sir, we did not want that assurance on the part of His Majesty, to know that the wise policy and the wise conduct of the great Queen whom he has succeeded on the Throne would be his guide. We have believed from the first that he who was a wise prince would be a wise King, that the policy which has made the British Empire so great under his predecessor would also be his policy, and that the reign of King Edward the Seventh would be simply a continuation of the reign of Queen Victoria.

On our part let us offer to His Majesty the King the expression of our loyalty—a loyalty which does not spring from any sycophancy or fetichism—but from grateful hearts, who duly appreciate the blessing of living under British institutions. Let us wish him Godspeed, and let us hope that his reign may be as fruitful of good as was that of his wise predecessor. I now beg to move:—

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's dutitful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly beg leave to approach Your Majesty with the expression of our deep and heartfelt sorrow at the demise of our late Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria.

In common with our fellow subjects in all parts of the empire, we deplore the loss of a great ruler whose manifold and exalted virtues have for three generations commanded the respect and admiration of the world.

As representatives of the Canadian people, we mourn for the beloved Sovereign under whom our Dominion first rose into being, and to whose wise and beneficent sway are due in no small measure its growth and prosperity.

May we venture to add that above and beyond these sentiments which the sad occasion naturally calls forth, there has come to each one of us a sense of personal bereavement which, we say it with all possible respect and duty, makes Your Majesty's sorrow our own.

We pray that the God of consolation may comfort Your Majesty and the members of the Royal Family in the affliction.

It is with feelings not less deep and sincere than those to which we have just given utterance that we hail Your Majesty's accession to the Throne of your ancestors. We beg to assure Your Majesty of our devoted attachment to Your Majesty's person and government, and to express our unclouded confidence that the glory and the greatness of the British Empire abroad, and the happiness and well-being of Your Majesty's people at home, will suffer no diminution under Your Majesty's gracious rule.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I have little to add, Mr. Speaker, to the very eloquent and appropriate words in which my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister, has moved his resolution, beyond saying that it will meet, I am sure, with the cordial approval and support of every member of this House.

The right hon. gentleman has well referred to the condition of this country at the time when Her Gracious Majesty ascended the Throne, and its condition at the present time. Then there were five or six disconnected provinces, having little means of inter-communication, with hostile tariffs between them, with our North-west a wilderness, and with British Columbia an unknown country. Now we find this great country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, governed by one parliament, subject to the same general laws; and instead of rebellion, we see our volunteer soldiers returning home from fighting the battles of the empire across the seas. It is truly a great change, and a change which has been, to no small extent, brought about by the influence of Her late Majesty.

I may be permitted to add a word with respect to the interest which Her Majesty always took in her colonies on this side of the Atlantic. We well remember how anxious she was that the measure should pass which resulted in the confederation of these provinces. I may recall the words which Sir John Macdonald addressed to Her Majesty on the occasion of his interview at that time. 'We have desired,' he said, 'in this measure to declare, in the most solemn and emphatic manner, our resolve to be under the sovereignty of your Majesty and your family for ever.' These words are particularly appropriate for all of us to remember at this time. And this we know, that subsequently, when the great work of binding together the provinces of Canada by a great railway was completed, Her Majesty expressed to Sir John Macdonald, in a letter, her pleasure at its accomplishment, stating that she had watched its progress with much interest, and that she hoped for the future success of a work of such value and importance to the empire.

Then, Sir, we may well recall the kindly words which Her Majesty addressed to Lady Macdonald on the death of Sir John Macdonald, and not less may we recall the kindness which she exhibited towards the family of the late Sir John Thompson on the occasion of his death in England. We remember that on that occasion she placed on his coffin a wreath of lilies and laurels as a token of her sincere respect for him, and the country of which, at the time of his death, he was Prime Minister.

I entirely concur in all that my right hon. friend has so well said with respect to the influence of Her Majesty, both in public and in private life, and I feel that perhaps one more word may be added in that connection, namely, the great toleration which she exhibited for all opinions, the great sympathy which went out from her to all races and creeds in the vast dominions over which she ruled. Victoria was great enough to recognize the greatness of truth, to know that it had many sides, and I believe that her influence in that respect will survive long in the memory which will be handed down of the achievements accomplished during her reign.

I think we might well quote, as a nation, with respect to her, the touching words which James Russell Lowell addressed to his wife :

> Blessing is she; God made her so.

Throughout the empire—not only throughout Canada, but throughout the empire—we may well say of her who is now gone :

> Blessing was she ; God made her so.

I believe that nowhere in the empire more than in Canada, will her memory be honoured and revered ; and may we not add that in our sorrow for her death, though in the fullness of her years, there is mingled a note of triumph for the character and the example she has left behind her.

With respect to the accession of His Most Gracious Majesty, it might be well to recall that when visiting Canada, and while he was yet a young man, he laid the corner-stone of this very building in which we now assemble. The corner-stone which he then laid might well have been thought a symbol of the great dominion which has since grown up. As the right hon. gentleman has said, there have been great developments during the reign of Her late Majesty. The foundations of our great Dominion were laid deep and broad and true during that time. Let us hope, as we all believe, that the structure which will be erected upon these foundations in the reign of King Edward VII. will be a fair and stately one, a structure of which all the empire, and not Canada alone, may well be proud.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House proceeded to the consideration of His Excellency's speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and in rising to perform this important duty, permit me to say, at the outset, that I am deeply sensible of the high honour which has been conferred upon me in my selection for the important task. I am also well aware of the difficulties which beset my path, and I would ask, Sir, with great respect, that the House would view my shortcomings with that lenience which in times past it has bestowed upon hon. members under similar circumstances. My inexperience will, perhaps, appear the greater, and I trust, on that account, your indulgence will be the less restricted, when I inform you that the past two or three days have furnished the only opportunity which I have ever had, even as a mere spectator, of witnessing the deliberations of this House ; so that my request is by no means a formal one, but by all means a most sincere one, when I ask you to bear with me for a short time whie I endeavour humbly to discharge the honourable duty which has been cast upon me. Hon. members will agree at the outset, when I remark that parliament has met upon the present occasion under circumstances, which, while they are both solemn and momentous, are likewise without parallel in the history and experience of the House. We have now embarked upon the first session of a new parliament, in the first year of a new century, and in the first year of the reign of a new sovereign. While these are conditions which render the present session more or less unique, there are other conditions which render it more than ordinarily impressive. During the brief period which intervened between the autumn dissolution and the meeting of the present House, an event of world-wide magnitude and importance has transpired in the British Empire in the death of our late Sovereign Lady the Queen, and the consequent demise of the Crown upon her illustrious son and successor His Majesty King Edward VII. It would be utterly impossible for me to add anything to the eloquent and finished tributes which have already been paid in this House to the memory of our late Queen, tributes which so fully and so appropriately express not only the sentiments of the House, but likewise the sentiments of the whole country. Permit me only to remark in this respect, that the long and glorious reign which has just been brought to a close will for many years to come form a particularly bright spot in British history to which Canadians will look with the greatest veneration and gratitude. It was the reign that gave Canada national birth ; the reign which raised her from a position of comparative colonial obscurity to the high position she occupies to-day in British history. It was the reign which not only gave us a constitution, but which moulded and construed our constitution and rendered it the almost perfect system of government it is to-day. It is gratifying to our pride to know that our Canadian constitution has been very largely adopted as a model for the federation into one great British territory at the other side of the globe. To the people of the Australian Commonwealth the people of Canada extend most hearty greeting and most cordial congratulation.

Her late Majesty acceded to the Throne through a long line of noble ancestors, a line to which her own reign has added untold dignity and splendour. And, while we mourn her loss, yet we can rejoice that she has left us a strong line of her own royal blood and descent who, by God's grace we pay, may long be spared to reign over us.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It will be gratifying intelligence to the people of this country to learn that Canada has at this most opportune time extended to His Royal Highness the Duke of Cornwall and York an invitation to visit this country on his return from his contemplated visit to the Australian Commonwealth. His Royal Highness has been graciously pleased to accept that invitation, and all Canadians, without distinction, will prepare to give a loyal and a fitting welcome to that noble prince not only on account of his exalted station as heir-apparent to the British Throne ; not only on his own account, but because he is the son of our reigning sovereign and the grandson of our late Queen whose death all Canada yet so bitterly mourns.

However, Sir, we must turn from the past with its glorious and vast achievements, with its triumphs and its mournings —our duty lies before us. Full well we know that this busy world throbs on careless of the coming and going of sovereigns. We must prepare to wrestle with the problems of the present and provide for the future. From a material point of view the speech from the Throne furnishes many substantial grounds for congratulation upon the excellent position which Canada occupies at the present time. It is very pleasing to know the vast strides which in recent years have been made towards colonization and towards the fuller development of our varied resources. It is most satisfactory also to know that almost every branch of industry in this country is to-day flourishing. I have before me recently compiled figures relative to the trade of this Dominion which would furnish a most interesting theme did time permit me to discuss them, but I shall refrain from doing so as hon. members will be able to see these figures in the departmental returns. However, Sir, common every-day experience in the business world will establish far more clearly than statistics or returns would ever prove, that the golden era of prosperity in this country, which dawned shortly after this administration attained power——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Every day experience in the business world proves that the golden era of prosperity shows up to the present time no apparent sign of diminution, but on the contrary, Canadians may look forward to even vaster and more profitable commercial operations in the future than they have enjoyed in the past. I am well aware, Sir, that it is a vexed question as to what precise degree of credit the administration of the day is entitled to for the very happy surroundings which we now see on all sides. I do not know that any useful purpose can be served by an examination of the facts with the view of ascertaining just what the legitimate claims of the government are in that respect. I assume, Sir, that the government itself rests content with the knowledge, not only that its fiscal policy has received the approval of the great bulk of the community, but likewise with the knowledge that it must have received a considerable degree of approval even in the estimation of those who seemingly opposed it. It was approved at least to this extent: that its opponents did not see fit to offer any well defined alternative policy of their own but rather contented themselves with a desultory and indefinite sort of criticism of the general and detailed policy of the administration. I am well aware that I would enter upon highly contentious ground if I were to attempt a discussion of these much-debated subjects. However, I believe I may be permitted to remark in passing, that no matter how marked may be the division of opinion upon the government's rightful dues in these respects, upon another phase of the question, there is a singular unanimity of opinion in Canada, and that is, that if the course of those who are opposed to the policy of the government has in any degree whatever contributed to the general prosperity, it is in a degree so minute as to be quite imperceptible.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is a well recognized fact that there is a certain peculiar spirit of generosity which frequently pervades the mind of the victor in the hour of his victory, and I think the hon. members on this side of the House will be generous enough and candid enough to acknowledge the many grave difficulties which involved their opponents and against which their opponents were compelled to contend, not only in the recent general election, but likewise in the general election of 1896. We will remember that in 1896 our opponents were a government battling against adversity and in 1900 they were an opposition battling against prosperity. While there was a marked similarity in the difficulties of the two situations, there was a marked dissimilarity in the conditions under which they were forced to contend. I am satisfied that neither of these difficult positions—neither that of 1896 nor that of 1900—was the result of deliberate choice, these were rather the result of what I might term the admixture of fault and of misfortune. It was largely fault in 1896, and it was largely misfortune in 1900 which compelled hon. gentlemen opposite to labour under those unfavourable conditions. At this distance of time we have probably grown more candid than we were immediately after the event and I think it will now be readily assented to on all hands, that if the prevailing commercial distress in Canada for two or three years prior to 1896 was not wholly the result, it was very largely the result of the misdirected efforts of the Conservative administration of that day. And though we may not as readily admit it to-day, I believe that in two or three years, when we have grown more candid, we will admit that the very marked prosperity in Canada to-day, if not entirely, is very largely the result of the well-directed efforts of the administration of this day. Of hon. members opposite one might be permitted to say that their difficulty as a government in 1896 was to excuse adversity, while their difficulty as an opposition in 1900 was to explain away prosperity; and in order to achieve this end with as little injury as possible to the credit of the government of 1896 and to allow as little credit as possible to the government of 1900, they boldly proclaimed to the people that these very wide-apart conditions of commerce in this country were not the result of the acts or omission of any government, but were entirely the result of the prevailing trade conditions throughout the world. Their argument in a reduced form was simply this, that depression throughout the world renders Canadian success impossible, and commercial prosperity throughout the world renders depression in this country impossible. Now, Sir, while that argument might be applied to some countries, it is, in my humble opinion in the case of Canada, a thoroughly fallacious and perhaps pernicious one, and one not likely to inspire any very great confidence in the future of the country.

I do not offer these remarks, Sir, in any spirit of unkind criticism, nor with the idea of exciting discussion upon them; but I offer them more as a prelude to a statement which I would now venture to make. Whether it has arisen from the course of hon. gentlemen opposite, whether, perhaps, in some degree it may have arisen from the course of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House during their somewhat prolonged training as an opposition, or whether it arises entirely from other causes, there is in Canada an opinion of some prevalence which I think should be discouraged; that is, that trade conditions in this country are almost entirely dominated or controlled by trade conditions throughout the world—that the world's prosperity is necessary to ensure Canadian success, and that world-wide trade depression will involve this country in calamity as surely as night follows day. Now, Sir, I for one most emphatically dissent from a proposition involving such a wholesale admission that the trade conditions of this country are so entirely dependent upon foreign conditions. While it would be unreasonable to argue that we can pursue the even tenor of our way in peace and plenty, absolutely indifferent to or independent of external conditions, what I do maintain is this, that Canada should be far less dependent upon external conditions than almost any other nation in the world. Be the world's distress as marked as it may be, that is no conclusive reason why with reasonably progressive and able government, Canada should not at all times and under all circumstances enjoy a very fair measure of prosperity, and no period of prolonged or marked distress at all. I do not believe we shall ever go seriously behind the proud record which has been established in the last few years. Certain it is that without the very grossest mismanagement and incapacity, Canada will never be relegated to that humiliating, that melancholy condition through which Canadians made so gallant a struggle for two or three years prior to 1896.

I do not make these remarks in any spirit of idle boasting. I believe the position is well backed up by the facts. I feel that we occupy a position of superior advantage to that of other commercial nations, and superior advantage to that of our chief trade competitor, the United States. Hon. members know far better than I do the facts and reasons that go to prove the truth of this assertion. I can only mention a few of them, and discuss them most superficially.

In the first place, we are a very new and young country. National youth may involve some disabilities; but it has compensating advantages, and Canada's youth is by no means the least of her advantages. We have an intelligent and educated population, and a population capable of great adaptability ; and that is a great thing in a country offering such a diversity of opportunity as Canada offers.

Then, Sir, a more important reason is that we have untold natural wealth. The natural wealth of this country is its reserve capital, a capital which has hardly yet been drawn upon at all—resources, not piled in impossible situations, not stored under impossible conditions, but for the most part ready for the hand of man. Take not only the fact that we have these resources, but consider the nature of the resources. Look at the natural products of the country, look at all the products of the country, if you will, and what will strike one who examines the trade reports is the very great proportion of our total trade which is made up of that class of commerce which the world deems necessaries, and the relatively small proportion of our trade which is made up of that class of commerce which the world calls luxuries. Older countries claiming greater refinement and larger riches, go into the production of luxuries to a far greater extent than a new country does; and in a moment of world-wide depression that country which produces luxuries is the country first to suffer, while the country which produces the prime necessaries of life, as Canada does in abundance, will be the last country in the world to feel the depression. There will never be a time, Sir, when the people do not want bread, meat, and the other food products which this country offers. There will never be a time when the commercial requirements of the age will not demand iron, steel, timber, fuel and the like articles of prime necessity which Canada can supply in abundance.

Then, Sir, as another reason why we occupy so essentially good a position, consider the natural advantages of the country. Take the great waterways extending from the very heart of the country to the seaboard; improved, it is true, by artificial means involving great expenditure, but now forming a reasonably complete system from the centre of the country to the Atlantic ocean. If there is one thing which the government of the day, and perhaps parliament, may take credit for, it is the manner in which they have viewed the question of transportation in recent years. I do not think anything has been done in recent years that has been more appreciated by the people of Canada than the wise expenditure which has taken place in bettering the transportation facilities of this country. The man who ten years ago would predict that raw fruit grown in Canada would be exhibited in Europe and carry off many of the leading prizes there, would have been looked upon as an idle dreamer; yet, Sir, in this first year of the new century, that is an accomplished fact; and that fact alone opens up boundless possibilities for the future trade of this country.

These are some of the reasons why I claim that Canada occupies a position of pre-eminent advantage. I know that it may be said that all I have advanced may be advanced equally on behalf of our great trade competitor, the United States. It may be said that they have an intelligent people, great resources and great waterways, that they produce an abundance of the necessaries of life, and still that country does suffer from periods of marked depression—why not Canada ? Well, Sir, while a few years ago that might be an argument, almost a conclusive argument, against us, the relative position has since become changed and no longer can it be seriously advanced. There was, a few years ago, some degree of parallel, but we have reached a point when there is no longer any parallel between the two situations. We have now, I maintain, a position of far greater advantage than that enjoyed by the United States. It took us a long time to recognize that we had such a position and to appreciate it, but now that we have given due recognition to the fact, each succeeding year will magnify that advantage. Just so long as Great Britain continues to be the great commercial centre of the world, just so long as she continues the dominant factor in the money markets of the world, just so long as we find in her one of the great consuming powers —the great publishing and distributing power in the world's commerce—and just so long as we maintain our present trade relations with the mother land, Canada is bound to enjoy a pre-eminent advantage over her chief trade competitor.

We have always been a part of the British Empire, relatively speaking, for a century and a half at least, we have been a part of that system, but the bond between the mother land and the colony has been, for the greater part, one of sentiment. It was one which afforded us sentimental gratification, it is true. We were delighted that we were British subjects, living under British rule, enjoying British institutions, but beyond that sentimental gratification, the bond was a very vague and visionary affair. Well, Mr. Speaker, we still enjoy that sentimental gratification and have increased it a hundredfold, but we have to-day besides a still stronger bond—the material bond of commercial advantage.

Now, if you will permit me I will for a moment go back a little to advert briefly to what many of us, myself included, looked upon as a sort of crisis in the affairs of this country. I refer to that period of time when the United States adopted towards Canada what many looked upon as a distinctly hostile tariff. I think it was in 1891 that the McKinley tariff was first put in force, and while I have no doubt that there is a uniform opinion in Canada to-day that the ideal trade condition both for Canada and the United States would be a very large measure of reciprocal trade, there seems to be just as uniform an opinion, on the other side of the line, that the proper policy for that country is a high protective system. When the McKinley tariff was first put in force, there were many Canadians who considered that something like a staggering blow had been dealt to a large part of the commerce of this country. But, I do not think that, at this period of time, any one would say that the adoption of that high tariff was an evil unmixed with a large element of blessing. If it did nothing else, it made us more independent and put us on our resources and our mettle. Nevertheless, the fact remains that when that tariff did come into operation it seriously disorganized and disarranged a large portion of the trade of this country by cutting it off from the market where it had been profitably disposed of for many years. But our people, during that crisis in our history, showed their adaptability to circumstances and their readiness to meet new conditions. They said : If we cannot send our horses and barley and hay and other products to the United States, where we have been sending them for years, we will find new markets for them. There was then a Conservative government in power. In my humble opinion and belief, if ever an opportunity was offered in the history of this country for the display of some of those qualities of statesmanship, the possession of which that government was never tired of boasting and proclaiming to the country, that opportunity came to them shortly after the McKinley tariff went into operation in 1891. The whole cry of our people then was for new markets. The cry was a loud and prolonged one. But, whether due to the fact that the administration of that day turned an absolutely deaf ear to the appeal, or that they did not realize the necessities of the situation, or whether long years of power had rendered them careless and had imbued them with the idea that they had themselves become one of the fixed institutions of the country—whatever was the cause, certain it is they calmly rested on their oars, and year after year pursued the Micawber policy of ' waiting for something to turn up.' During all that time did the cry continue. Divine providence had done its part in giving us uniformly abundant harvests, but still the cry went up for new markets. In 1896 the elections came on, and that cry had its effect, and the government of that day was relieved from further duty and a new order of things established.

It was a bold stroke—and if we may judge by results it was a wise stroke taken by the incoming administration in the first few months of its tenure of office, when it adopted what has now become the settled trade policy of this country so far as the mother land is concerned. The administration seemed to cut away from all the old moorings, and gave a preference to the mother country upon the principle of giving a little in order to gain a little, and the principle has worked well. I am free to say that I was one of those whose ignorance and inexperience did not enable them to see just what the effect of that movement was going to be. There were many others in the country like me, but I think I may claim credit to myself, that I have risen superior to many of those who thought with me, because now I do realize what some of them do not yet admit, how advantageously that policy has operated in our behalf. I submit that if any impartial man will take up the Trade and Navigation Reports of Canada and see how the trade of this country with the mother land has increased in the last two or three years, he cannot fail to come to the conclusion that the preference to the mother land has been a direct moving power in the increase of our export trade. I know it is said that the increase is largely in food products, and that there is no increase to any great extent in the ordinary manufacturing output of the country. But, we must not forget that the latter trade is as yet only in its infancy; and if we can compete with the United States in food products in the mother land, there is no reason why we cannot, with equal success, compete with them in other products, because we can meet them both in price and quality.

I know also that not very long ago it was held by some of the leading men of this country that the ideal position for Canada to occupy was that of a sort of vast emporium for the supply of raw material to the world. There were men who considered that that position would be infinitely more beneficial to us than any other. But that is an exploded idea to-day. All modern efforts, all modern energy, point in the opposite direction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am glad to see hon. members opposite have at last come to agree with this side of the House. The opinion is now generally held that it is better for this country to export flour than wheat, lumber than logs, manufactured paper than pulp.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. And with the advantages which the present administration has given for the sale and distribution of these articles in the mother land, our position of vantage will be more fully maintained in this country in the future than ever it was or could have been in the past. I trust that very soon it will be demonstrated in Canada that it is more profitable to export dressed beef than live animals. I believe that I may claim the honour of representing a portion of the great stock centre in the Dominion, the county of Wellington. The stock industry is not a local industry in any sense of the term. There is no industry in the country, I believe, which is more general in its effects than stock-raising. I think the time has come when parliament might fairly be asked to take some action to put that trade upon a basis of a dead-meat trade rather than upon a basis of a live-animal trade, which it is as now pursued. It has been demonstrated conclusively in the United States that there is more money in the dressed-meat trade, notwithstanding the trifling difference in price between the two qualities in the British market. Under the system of slaughtering these animals here there are compensating advantages which more than make up for the little loss in price on the other side of the water. Canadians will get the employment and the wage; and besides, all those portions of the animal which, up to this time, have been looked upon in this country as merely refuse and offal, material of no value, when treated by modern processes, can be transformed into profitable commercial commodities. Besides, there is a vast saving in freight, whether you estimate it by cubic space or by actual weight. To demonstrate the point clearly, let me take the case of the hide. The hide now goes to the old country on the live animal. It is stripped by British labour. Many of these hides come back to our tanneries and are manufactured into leather ; and of these, a great proportion go back to the British market. They make three distinct trips across the Atlantic ocean, whereas one trip would suffice if the animals were slaughtered here. It is gratifying to know that the government of the province of Ontario is taking steps in this direction. And, as the matter is so general in its application, I think parliament might well be asked to do something to establish that trade in this country on a substantial basis.

Now, I have occupied fully the time I intended to occupy. But there is one subject touched upon in the Speech which I crave leave to refer to in a few sentences. Otherwise, I should be guilty of a most glaring omission. If there is one thing from which we in Canada do not suffer, it is lack of pride. Canadians are a proud people—proud of their country and proud of their countrymen. We believe that the men who are bred in the northern half of the North American continent are second to no race of men in the world. We know that in the native Canadian you will find a stout heart in a strong body, surmounted by an intelligent head. We have known this for a long time ; but it has now been demonstrated to the whole world by the magnificent manner in which the Canadian soldiers acquitted themselves during the terrible conflict in South Africa. Their powers of endurance under most difficult circumstances, their valour and steadiness on the field of battle, their willingness and their intelligence have all been attested by officers high in the Imperial service. To say that Canada is proud of these South African soldiers is to put it in a very mild way. Day after day, this whole country watched their career with critical eye ; and day after day we became prouder and more proud of these soldiers. When they embarked for South Africa, they took with them the honour of the country. It was pure and unspotted when committed to their charge. Through all their difficulties, through all their trials and privations, they have maintained it unsullied and inviolate ; and on their return to this country, they have brought it back with them if possible more pure—certainly more beloved, more highly prized than ever it was before.

Mr. Speaker, this is the opening year of the new century. The census will be taken this year. It will not only be a numbering of the people, but it will likewise be a measure of our national wealth and progress. Canadians look forward with the utmost confidence to the story the census will have to tell. We know that this country has grown in the last few years. We know that it has grown to the north and to the east and to the west ; and we are proud and thankful to know that the growth to the south of our international boundary line, which found so much favour a few years ago, has been stopped—we trust once and for ever. As between Canada and the United States, the movement of population is entirely satisfactory to this country. Surely, Sir, in this first year of the twentieth century, with all present conditions so satisfactory, without a cloud on the horizon of the future, Canadians may feel that they are within measurable distance of the realization of their dearest hope in seeing this country among the most splendid, most prosperous, most enlightened nations of the world.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to second the motion, moved in such felicitous language by my hon. colleague and friend, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). Sensible as I am of the honour that has been conferred upon me, still I regret that some other member, more qualified than I am to perform this duty properly, was not selected. No doubt, the choice thus made was prompted by friendship, and I here offer the right hon. gentleman my heartfelt thanks. Had I consulted but my own wishes, I would have declined the great honour thus conferred upon me. But the electors of the constituency to whom I am indebted for the honour of sitting in this House have a right to expect from me the sacrifice of my own preferences to their interests. And it is in the name of the constituency which sent me here to represent them ; it is as the mouthpiece of my constituents, that I wish to address the House.

I am happy, Sir, to avail myself of this opportunity to tender you my warmest congratulations on the exalted position which you occupy as Speaker of this House, as also for the honour which has been conferred upon you when called to preside over our proceedings. That honour, which you fully deserved, reflects on the constituency of Rouville, which you so creditably represent here ; it reflects also on the province of Quebec, and on the whole French Canadian race.

It is not my intention to go at any length into all the matters dwelt upon with such marked ability and in such choice language by my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie). But I shall content myself with playing a more modest part, by merely referring to the salient features of the speech from the Throne.

We have met, Sir, under exceptional circumstances. We have met here in the first days of a new century, at the beginning of a new reign and at the opening of a new parliament. We stand on the threshold of the reign of Edward VII., who succeeds the most illustrious woman the world ever produced. We, the members from the province of Quebec, cannot forget that it was under the rule of the illustrious Queen upon whom the grave has just closed that Great Britain put into execution the treaty which had been sealed by the blood of heroes upon the Plains of Abraham. We cannot forget that it was under her reign that constitutional government and the full exercise of our political rights were secured to us. We are grateful and proud that one of our fellow-countrymen should now occupy the position filled by the French governors of old. We are also grateful for being allowed the use of our mother-tongue, on the floor of this House and in the administration of justice in this country, under the ægis of the British Crown. We are equally proud to see a man of our race and nationality occupying in the old Quebec basilica the pew occupied by the French governors under the old regime. And in return for those liberties, our fellow-countrymen have invariably showed their devotion and loyalty to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and they feel that they owe her a debt of eternal gratitude for the rank which Canada now occupies among the nations of the world. My hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) has referred to the second paragraph of the speech from the Throne, in which allusion is made to the return of our soldiers from South Africa. A remarkable coincidence which deserves to be mentioned in this connection is that one of the last public acts of Her Majesty the Queen was an audience granted to a group of our fellow-countrymen, who were returning from South Africa with the laurels of victory. That matter of the contingents sent to South Africa has been exhaustively debated, and I think it is now a settled question. But I thank heaven that we, French Canadians, should have had at Paardeberg and upon other battlefields, representatives of our nationality. I am proud that on that memorable occasion, as upon several other occasions, our fellow-countrymen gave such a good account of themselves and furnished a fresh proof of their loyalty to the British Crown. Some people, who are unacquainted with the province of Quebec, and are unaware that gratitude is one of the moral characteristics of our race, are still inquiring whether the French Canadians are really loyal to the British Crown. That is now a question of the past. French Canadians are as loyal to the British Crown as their fathers were in 1776 and 1812, when, in a supreme effort, they spared the Union Jack the fate meted out to the flag adorned with fleurs-de-lis, which had to cross the sea again. Our fellow-countrymen have upheld the British flag in this country. And as to us, the young generation of to-day, we mean also to uphold the same flag. Still, were I allowed to offer a suggestion, en passant, I would ask to simplify the Dominion flag. As it is now, it bears the arms of seven provinces. It is too complicated and too hard to popularize. I would suggest that the Canadian flag, instead of having the Canadian coat-of-arms on the red field, should bear simply a maple leaf, as a type and symbol of a united Canada.

We are given to understand in the address that Canada may be favoured, next summer, with the visit of the Duke of Cornwall and York. It is within the recollection of several members of this House with what enthusiasm the Prince of Wales in 1860 was received at Halifax, Quebec, Montreal and elsewhere. Canada will feel proud and happy, and, in a particular manner, the people of the province of Quebec, I have no doubt, will be delighted to tender the royal visitor just as enthusiastic and as loyal a reception as that accorded his illustrious father.

And in this connection, Sir, there is a point to which, for my own part, I wish to draw attention. And I think I am voicing the general opinion of the House, when I say that we should be glad that His Royal Highness, on his return trip from Australia, should be accompanied to Canada by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who is expected to go and attend the celebration of the opening of the great Australian Commonwealth. Should the right hon. premier consent to visit that country, I need not say that he will just as creditably represent Canada upon that occasion and reflect as much honour on our country, as he has already done, when upon former occasions representing us in Great Britain, in France, and in the United States.

I shall not dwell at any length upon the visit of His Excellency the Governor General to Dawson City, as a review of all the facts connected with it would involve too lengthy developments.

Let it suffice to say that the country, in general, is satisfied with the organization of the Yukon territory and with its administration by the government. Canadians, who but a few years ago, fancied that the Yukon was the limit of civilization, have fortunately been undeceived, as we are now told that a French Canadian, no longer satisfied with going to the Yukon, is about to undertake the task of hoisting the Union Jack on the North Pole. Such an achievement would certainly redound to the credit of Canada, provided it were undertaken with the energy, patience and necessary resources to make it a success.

Now, I come to another clause in the address, that which makes mention of the Universal Exposition in Paris, and of the prominent place occupied by Canada. There is ample matter for congratulation in the excellent display made by Canada, and in the number of awards won by our country; and we have reason to believe that our natural resources will be better appreciated as they come to be better known. It was undoubtedly no small matter of wonderment to France to see such a display of natural products and such evidences of marked progress, coming from a country referred to by Voltaire in the last century, as 'a few acres of snow.' For the triumph which has been achieved in Paris we are indebted to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who have spared no efforts to make our exhibit a success. It is gratifying to know that one of the results of that great industrial competition will be the removal of such obstacles as now bar the way to the full development of our trade with France. We hope in the near future to see that commercial intercourse increase by leaps and bounds.

The next subject touched upon in the address is the improvement of the St. Lawrence route, that great thoroughfare of our country. If Canada wishes to successfully compete with the United States, on the peaceful ground of trade, there is no other way open to us but in improving more and more the St. Lawrence route, and making it the great thoroughfare Providence intended it to be. It is gratifying for the country to know that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) is devoting all his energies to the achievement of that task. Much has already been done, but much remains to be done. The St. Lawrence route is at present threatened so far as the insurance rates are concerned, and attempts are being made to deprive it of the natural advantages bestowed upon it by Providence. I am confident that the government will spare no efforts to secure to that route the control and supremacy it has a natural right to.

In a short paragraph of the speech, reference is made in a very modest way to the increase in the general volume of trade and revenue. True, there was no necessity for the government to expatiate on the position of the country. For, no man can plead ignorance of the present state of prosperity of Canada, and no one is ignorant of it but the man who wilfully closes his eyes to the light. That prosperity is so manifest from the Atlantic to the Pacific that no man in his sober senses would dare deny it.

We are promised new legislation on various matters, and among other measures which will be brought down is one for the better supervision of the export trade in food products. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has shown with his wonted eloquence that there was room for improvement in that direction.

The speech from the Throne further alludes to the post office, and here I may say that in the county which I represent, the mail service has undergone substantial improvements, as it has, no doubt, in all other parts of the country.

No man, I am sure, will begrudge the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) the praise he is entitled to for the creditable way in which he has administered his department these four years past.

The present position of Canada is excellent. Since the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues have been called to the head of affairs, truly astonishing results have been achieved. In the first place among those achievements let me mention religious peace and harmony restored to the country. We have undertaken the task of harmonizing the different classes and nationalities in this country, and of fostering those common sentiments and aspirations which go to the building of a great nation, and we have succeeded therein. Within the last five years, our trade has increased by leaps and bounds; and the growth of affairs has been simply phenomenal, and to-day Canada stands in the eyes of the world, in the front rank. If we only go on progressing at the same rate for the next twenty-five years, those among us who will then be spared will witness a wonderful growth of the country. We are on the high road of prosperity and let us hope that nothing will impede our course.

I now wish to conclude my remarks in the language of the majority of this House. As I have the honour of representing here a constituency one-third of whose electors are English-speaking, I think it proper to wind-up my speech in English, so as to be understood by the majority of this House.

Mr. Speaker, representing as I do the county of Bonaventure, one-third of whose population is English-speaking, I think it fit and proper to conclude my remarks in the language of the majority of the hon. members of this House. I was desirous to say a few words in the English language, but I was also anxious to keep up the tradition that has prevailed in this House, and therefore, I began my remarks in the French language. We have met, Sir, under exceptional circumstances. The death of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, the accession of her son, and the beginning of a new reign with the beginning of a new century, synchronising with the opening of a new parliament—all these things, Sir, are of a nature to break the routine of ordinary openings of parliament. I am glad to be able to declare on the floor of this House that in no part of this Dominion was there more heartfelt sorrow, more genuine grief, felt at the death of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, than among the French-speaking people of the province of Quebec. And, Sir, the reason is plain. The French Canadians of the province of Quebec and their fathers saw realized under the reign of Her Majesty and put into execution the treaty which had been sealed by the blood of heroes upon the Plains of Abraham. It was under the reign of Her Majesty the Queen that constitutional government was secured to Canada ; it was under her reign that constitutional government was developed, that confederation was brought about, and that justice was extended to all classes and to all nationalities. French Canadians are among the first to honour her memory, and to be grateful to her for having been to some extent instrumental in bringing about the happy condition of things which now exists in this country.

Sir, I represent a county where, I believe, the race problem has been solved. This may seem somewhat extraordinary to some of the hon. members of this House. The county of Bonaventure adjoins the province of New Brunswick ; it is peopled by Acadians, by descendants of the United Empire Loyalists, by Irishmen, Scotchmen and Frenchmen. The majority of the people speak both languages. I have gone through three election campaigns in that county, and I never heard the race cry raised in any shape or form. One of my predecessors in the representation of that county, and one who will be remembered by some of the older members of this House, was the late lamented Mr. Fauvel, a French Huguenot, who represented the county of Bonaventure by the almost unanimous will of the people of all classes and of all nationalities. They have elected me, a French Canadian, to the House of Commons, and they have sent an English-speaking citizen to the legislature in Quebec. Those, Sir, are conditions which I should like to see prevail throughout this Dominion. We are now upon the threshold of a new century. If I were to venture to address a word of counsel to the present generation of Canadians who have taken no part in the strife and discord of former times, and who, I know, have no other desire but to see this country happy and prosperous, I would ask them, Mr. Speaker, to pledge themselves now, at the beginning of this parliament, to do their utmost to bring about good-will and a better feeling among all classes of our people. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to appeal to every friend of Britain in this House, and to every friend of Canada, to imitate the example of our departed sovereign, who was to a large degree instrumental in cementing together the various parts of the empire. I would appeal to those friends of Britain and to those friends of Canada to lay aside past dissensions, and to join hand in hand in building up on this continent a great and prosperous nation. Many of our dissensions in Canada have had their origin in Europe, dissensions which have existed for centuries between France and England; and I think I may say that we ourselves have done not a little during the reign of Queen Victoria to bring about a better understanding between France and England. After France and England had been fighting under Bonaparte for nearly twenty years in various parts of Europe, she through her ministers, secured an alliance between England and France, and for the first time we saw the cross of St. George and the tri-colour of France floating side by side in the battlefields of the Crimea. Sir, this is a lesson in itself which should be an example to us in this House, which should be an example to every true lover of Canada.

There has been some talk of difficulty between France and England, and there will probably be more; but let us hope that the dissensions of Europe will be confined to Europe so far as we are concerned. We French Canadians are descendants of France, it is true, but France to us is no more than a remembrance. We are children of the soil of Canada; we have never known any other country than this; this is the country to which we are attached, this is the country in which our fathers lie sleeping, and this is the country in which we ourselves shall sleep.

Mr. Speaker, Her Majesty the Queen, but a little more than a year before her death, performed an act which had a deep meaning, and at a moment which rendered it all the more significant. On a stormy night the British ship, the Drummond Castle, was shipwrecked upon the rocks in the British channel, off the coast of Brittany. A gun was fired, the only gun, I hope, that will ever be fired between France and England. The alarm was given, the French peasants rushed forward to the rescue of the British people who were being shipwrecked in that dark night, saving those who could be saved, and burying those on the morrow who had to be buried. The Queen covered the breasts of those poor peasants with medals which are worn to-day in Brittany in remembrance of her name and of her active mercy. Sir, let us all be imbued with that spirit in Canada, and for my part I ask for no greater honour than this, that later on, if I live long enough, I may be able to tell my children that I first sat in the parliament of Canada which became historical as the parliament of peacemakers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I have to congratulate most heartily both the mover (Mr. Guthrie) and the seconder (Mr. Marcil) on the very excellent manner in which they have addressed the House on this occasion. I was not able to follow as well as I could have desired the portion of the address of the seconder, which was given in his own beautiful language; but if I may judge of that by what he spoke in my own language, I am sure I cannot compliment him too highly on the sentiments which he expressed and the manner in which he expressed them. So far as the race problem, to which he has referred, is concerned, I may say to him, that in the province from which I come, that race problem has been a matter of the past for years. We never even think of it to mention it, and I trust with him that it will become so much a thing of the past in Canada that it will not be necessary even for any hon. gentleman, rising in this House, to suggest that there is such a thing in Canada as a race problem, if there be one to-day. With respect to what has been very eloquently said by the hon. mover of this address, I desire also to congratulate him particularly, because he is, as I understand, a member of the profession to which I have the honour to belong. His speech to-day showed a great grasp of public matters, and I am sure that he, as well as the seconder of the address, will be a very great addition to the debating power of this House. I cannot altogether agree with some of the things which the mover said, and he did not make some of his points altogether clear to me, but possibly I may learn his views more fully at some future stage of this session. He referred to the fact that prosperity dawned upon this country shortly after the present administration came into power. It was a striking tribute to this administration, that not only did prosperity dawn, but that it should have dawned so shortly after this administration came into power, and it is a still more striking tribute to this administration, although the hon. gentleman did not dwell upon it, that the advent of this administration into power brought prosperity to all the world. Of course, I do not know that all hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are in accord with the views which were expressed by the hon. gentleman in respect to that. There is a gentleman sitting in this House, a gentleman who has held an honoured position in this House for a great many years, and who has been recognized as a very high authority in trade matters. Possibly it may be that there is no hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who is better qualified to speak as to the causes of that prosperity than the hon. gentleman to whom I refer, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). That hon. gentleman, in an address which he lately placed before this country, did not seem to take exactly the view which the hon. member for South Wellington took in the remarks which he so forcibly placed before the House. The view of the hon. member for North Norfolk was this, and possibly there may be some small modicum of truth as well as of common sense in the view which he expressed :

> The government was fortunate in assuming office just at the beginning of a period of prosperity, which not only applies to us, but to all commercial nations, and which it is well to realize has been due to the blessings of Providence, and to causes beyond the control of the Canadian government.

I do not know that I have anything to suggest in answer to what the hon. gentleman has said, beyond the words which have fallen so aptly from the hon. member for North Norfolk in regard to that matter. The hon. gentleman also referred to some opportunity which had fallen to the lot of the Conservative party when in power, and of which that party had not seen fit to avail itself. I understood him to rejoice that the present administration had taken some step which has corrected the mistake of the late administration, and has resulted in a marked increase of our trade with the mother country. I did not clearly gather from the hon. gentleman just what step of the present administration he referred to. Possibly when the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) comes to deal with this matter he may be able to supply that omission. As a matter of fact, we know very well what the policy of this government has been with respect to that, and we know what result, if it can be called a result, that policy has produced. If it be possible for this administration to so control trade matters as the hon. gentleman would have us think, how does it happen that this administration has been so remiss in its duty as to permit the imports of this country from Great Britain to rise from $33,000,000 to no more than $37,000,000 in the three years they have been in power, while during the same period the imports from the United States rose from $59,000,000 to $93,000,000 ? If these are matters which can be effectively dealt with by measures placed before the House, by Acts of the parliament of Canada, and if it be true that these are altogether independent of trade conditions throughout the world, it strikes me that the administration of this country is highly remiss in not having corrected that most unfortunate condition of affairs during the past few years.

Now, my hon. friend spoke also of the misfortune of the Liberal-Conservative party in struggling against prosperity in 1900. My hon. friend will permit me to say that the Liberal-Conservative party has no record of struggling against prosperity in this country. The Liberal-Conservative party, from 1896 down to the present time, has been prepared to concede, and all those who have been qualified to speak for it have always conceded, the prosperity of this country and have been thankful for it. It is true that the Conservative party has taken the ground that the prosperity is not due to any change of administration. It is true that the Conservative party has taken the ground, as it still takes the ground, that the prosperity may in no small measure be due to the policy which was advocated through good report and through evil report, and was maintained by the Liberal-Conservative party for eighteen years. I would remark, in passing, with respect to the depression in trade matters, which was referred to by my hon. friend, that with what he said in regard to the resources of Canada, and the possibility of Canada facing a depression more successfully than other portions of the world, I am inclined to agree, in some measure at least, but I desire to remind him and the House of what, I think, he has forgotten, that during the administration of the great party which I have the honour to lead in this House, a depression which prevailed throughout all the world was felt by Canada much less than by any other portion of the world, and much less certainly than by the great country to the south of us, although that country may claim to have resources as great, and possibly more varied, than even the great and varied resources of Canada.

Now, with respect to the other remarks which were so eloquently made by my hon. friend, I do not know that I need refer to them, at any length at least. It has been claimed by the right hon. gentleman, I think, who leads the government, that this is a business administration. I shall endeavour to claim for the opposition in this House that we shall be a business opposition, and, therefore, I do not propose to discuss, except so far as necessary, matters which have been referred to in the speech. With respect to one matter, I desire to say a word or two, and that is a matter which has been referred to so eloquently by the hon. member for South Wellington. I mean the part which has been taken by our Canadian citizen soldiers in fighting the battles of the empire beyond the seas. I believe, Sir, that Canada has every right to be proud of the way in which its men have acquitted themselves. We knew when they left us that they would be brave and true, and we hoped that they would be fortunate. They have fulfilled all these conditions. The opportunity came to them more than once in South Africa, and the opportunity never came to them when they were found wanting. They received the commendation of their superior officers on every occasion on which they were called upon to play a prominent part, and it is well not only for Canada, but for the world to know what Canada and the outlying nations of the empire are capable of doing in that respect.

I would especially like to refer in this connection to the welcome which the Canadian contingents received upon their arrival in my native city of Halifax. It was a day which will long be remembered by those who were in Halifax on that occasion, and I listened with great pleasure to Lt.-Col Pelletier, a compatriot to the hon. seconder of the Address (Mr. Marcil), who as chief in command of the first contingent returned thanks for the reception which was tendered to his regiment. Let me say further, Sir, that Canada is bound to see that those who fought for her and for the empire, and who because of wounds or disease are unable to earn a livelihood, are not left forgotten and unprotected. I regret that some mention was not made of this matter in the Speech from the Throne, and I trust that this omission was rather by inadvertence than by intent. I do not believe that the government of Canada intend to neglect to deal with this matter, especially in view of the fact that the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) used these words in the House last session :

I beg to tell that hon. gentleman that when Canada sends her sons to the front, Canada becomes responsible, and will know how to redeem that responsibility to the widows and the orphans of the brave men who may fall in that struggle.

We do not propose to shift that duty on to the shoulders of any insurance company, and I may remind the House that with the full concurrence of his Council, my right hon. friend ward and care of every honest-minded Canadian.

Further on the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) said :

Sir, I have no fear that the Canadian people will shrink from that duty. I say that the government have chosen the right way, and I say again that the brave men in the front may have no fear if it should please Providence that they should remain on the soil of South Africa, that their widows and little ones will not be the wards and the care of the state, and the ward and care of every honest-minded Canadian.

I have quoted this language because it expresses in more suitable terms than I could do, the views I entertain in regard to this subject, and I trust that the right hon. gentleman may be able to assure the House that the government will deal with this question before the session is over. As to the volunteers who have returned and who are able in some measure to perform the duties of life but who are handicapped in the struggle of life by reason of wounds or disease, provision should be made for them also. Again, the families of those who have fallen have in many cases been deprived of their bread winners, and while it is true that in some cases a provision has been made through the insurance which Sir Charles Tupper announced to the House last year, yet that does not cover all the necessity and it is most desirable that the government should make some further provision.

I regret also that no mention was made in the Speech from the Throne of the present position of negotiations—if any negotiations are pending—with respect to the fast Atlantic service. Upon that question both parties in parliament are united. The government undertook to deal with it in 1897 and we had reports from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, from the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Dobell, and from the right hon. gentleman during the session of 1897 and 1898, but since 1898 we have heard very little about the fast Atlantic service. The government have practically confessed that up to the present time their efforts have been an utter failure, but that is no reason why negotiations should terminate altogether, and so I trust that the Prime Minister will be able to assure us that the matter is still engaging the attention of the government.

Another subject which is not referred to in the Speech from the Throne is the present position of the negotiations which were entered into with the great republic to the south. About two years ago the Joint High Commission met and after several adjournments it finally, some eighteen months ago, ceased further negotiations and the House and the country are entirely in the dark now as to whether that commission proposes to resume, or whether it has absolutely abandoned its functions. It is the right of the House and the country to know from the right hon. gentleman to-day whether or not these negotiations are likely to be resumed at an early date. If they are not to be resumed we should like to know in what position is the Alaskan boundary question. It was intimated that that question stood in the way of adjustment, and if the question is to be dealt with (as was suggested on one occasion) apart from the Joint High Commission altogether, we would like to know what the policy of the government is with regard to that question so far as they are able to control it.

As to the proposed visit of the Duke of Cornwall and York to Canada, I may say, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House shall hail it with loyalty and devotion. The Duke of Cornwall and York is no stranger in my own province, for when he was serving as midshipman in the Royal Navy he spent several months in the city of Halifax and many pleasant recollections of him remain in that city. There is no part of Canada where he will be hailed more warmly and loyally than in that city by the sea. I shall not, Mr. Speaker, trespass on the time of the House further than to express the hope that the right hon. the Prime Minister will give us such information on the matters which I have referred to, as he thinks it is proper for the House to receive.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, it is to me more than the usual pleasure——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the right hon. gentleman will permit me, I understood that the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) desires to say one word.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a matter which I would be considered derelict in my duty if I failed to refer to in the discussion on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. Without saying anything with regard to the general treatment which the Canadian government may extend to the volunteers who went from Canada to serve in South Africa, and to the families of the men who lost their lives there, I wish to refer particularly to the case of Trooper Mulloy, the blind trooper. I may say that he is a native of my county, that he grew up there, that his friends reside there, and I deem it my duty to urge his case upon the consideration of the government. I think we have precedents following the rebellion of 1885, when grants were made to individuals whose circumstances were peculiar; and I believe the country will endorse my suggestion that something ought to be done for this young man. There is no doubt that the personal efforts and sacrifices made by the young man who went to South Africa have reflected glory on every Canadian citizen, and I believe the Canadian government and the Canadian people will willingly extend to those young men the treatment they deserve. There are circumstances connected with this young man's case which will justify the government in doing something for him on a basis altogether different from that on which others may be treated; and I only wish to bring his case to the attention of the right hon. leader of the government so that it may not be overlooked.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, it is to me more than the usual pleasure of such an occasion to extend my hearty congratulations to the hon. gentlemen who have placed in your hands the motion now before us. My hon. friend from the south riding of Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), has once more exemplified on the floor of this House to-day the truth of the saying that blood will tell. The older members of this House perhaps remember that once upon a time, some twenty-four years ago, the reply to the speech from the Throne was moved in this House by a gentleman of the name of Guthrie, who also represented the south riding of Wellington, and who, in the course of a too short parliamentary career, left on this House a deep impression for ability and character—an impression which, after the lapse of twenty years, is renewed in this House by a son of his, who shows that he is indeed a true chip of the old block.

With regard to my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), those who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance in his native province were aware that he was an eminent member of an eminent profession. He has been a journalist all his life. But they were aware also that he was perhaps still more gifted as an orator than as a writer; and the address which he has delivered to us to-day is a revelation to those who did not know him, while to those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance it is a fulfilment of everything they anticipated from him.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has paid to those two hon. gentlemen a due meed of praise, and in this, I beg to say, that I agree entirely with everything he said.

Let me say in passing that whilst my hon. friend was paying to the mover and seconder of the address the very just praise they deserve, he also paid a well-deserved compliment to the province which he has the honour to represent in this House, the province of Nova Scotia, when he stated that the racial problem no longer existed in that province. It is a pleasure to me to bear witness to the good feeling which prevails in the province of Nova Scotia; and if there is any spot in Canada where you never hear the inquiry what a man's creed or race may be, it is in that blessed province. In that respect Nova Scotia is a worthy example to all the other provinces of the Dominion.

I certainly have no fault to find with the manner in which my hon. friend has addressed the House on this occasion. That he was not altogether pleased with the remarks of my hon. friend the mover of the address is not perhaps a matter of surprise. My hon. friend, however, failed to understand the reference and the points which were made by the mover of the address. If my hon. friend was so unfortunate, I am sure he did not do himself justice. He did not exercise his well known legal acumen, for the meaning of those references was not far to seek. For instance, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition did not know what my hon. friend the mover of the address meant when he said that in 1891 nothing had been done by the late government to remedy the condition of things which then existed, and that afterwards, when the new administration came into office, it was prompt to take advantage of the situation and apply a remedy. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition said that he did not understand what had been done by the administration. Well, Sir, the answer is very obvious. Whereas in 1891 the late administration did nothing at all, when our trade was taken away from us by the legislation of the United States Congress in the McKinley Bill, in 1897 the present administration were not slow, when they found that the American market was closed to us, to open a new market in Great Britain. That is the answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The PRIME MINISTER. I see that my hon. friends on the other side do not yet appreciate the answer. Well, Sir, I would like to hear hon. gentlemen opposite say whether they are in favour of, or against the preferential tariff. That is the question I would like them to answer at this moment. We have recently gone through a very severe campaign in which, so far as I know, everything was discussed by hon. gentlemen opposite; but when they came to discuss the question of the preferential tariff, they were neither for nor against it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am against a one-sided one.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is one man on that side of the House who is against it. I understand that my hon. friend had some aspirations for the leadership, and perhaps that is the reason why he is not in favour of the preferential tariff. Perhaps his views were not acceptable to his followers. He has given his explanation why he is sitting in the particular seat he now occupies.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition also referred to some opinions which had been expressed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), as to the causes of the prosperity of this country. My hon. friend from North Norfolk is able at all times to take care of himself, and it would not do for me to offer any explanation of his words. I rely upon him to do so at the proper time. But while my hon. friend was able to quote the opinion expressed by my hon. friend from North Norfolk, he did not favour the House with any opinion of his own on this question; and I may say that we would be more interested to know the opinion of my hon. friend than the opinion of my hon. friend from North Norfolk since he has expressed it. However, we are at the opening of the session, and perhaps at some other time my hon. friend will take the House into his confidence, and will tell us, as frankly as my hon. friend from East York has done, what he thinks of the preferential tariff. My hon. friend from East York, a stalwart of the stalwarts, says : 'I am against the preferential tariff.'

Mr. MACLEAN. No, no—a one-sided preferential tariff.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are some things which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition might have discussed which he did not discuss. My hon. friend never referred, for instance, to the late elections; and in this respect his speech of this afternoon is in marked contrast to the speeches which we heard during the last session and the previous session. Why, during last session, everybody who was in this House will remember that there never was a day when we were not challenged to bring on the elections. We were dared to dissolve parliament, we were told that we had lost the confidence of the country and that as soon as we would dissolve the House and appeal to the country we would be swept out of existence. Well we took these gentlemen at their word, parliament was dissolved, the day of the battle came, but the result was far different from what these hon. gentlemen expected. I shall not speak on that point at any length, but I may be permitted to quote the language which the late Mr. Disraeli used on a somewhat similar occasion. He was speaking of the position of the government of Lord Derby, not after a general election, but after a vote of parliament, and this is how he characterized it :

> It was like a convulsion of nature rather than any ordinary transaction of human life. I can only liken it to one of those earthquakes which take place in Calabria or Peru. There was a rumbling murmur, a groan, a shriek, a sound of distant thunder. No one knew whether it came from the top or the bottom of the House. There was a rent, a fissure in the ground, and then a village disappeared; then a tall tower toppled down; and the whole opposition benches became one great dissolving view of anarchy.

This is a true picture of the last election, but as my hon. friend did not allude to it, I will not discuss it any further.

My hon. friend wanted to have information on some three or four different matters. First of all he wanted to know the intention of the government with regard to pensions to the wounded soldiers who were disabled in South Africa, and afterwards my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) wanted to know what would be done for one of those heroes in particular. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition seemed to think that the omission to refer to this matter in the speech from the Throne was due to inadvertence. No, Sir, it was an intended omission, and this is the reason. We do not know exactly in what position we stand at present with regard to the imperial authorities in this matter. My hon. friend knows that in the despatch sent last October, and on which we acted, the British authorities announced that they themselves would deal with this subject, and I would again call the attention of my hon. friend to that despatch in which he will find his answer. It went on to say :

> The condition of pay, pensions, transport, &c.: Whilst noting the generous offer of the government of New Zealand to furnish pay in addition to transport, Lord Lansdowne is of opinion that the same conditions should be applied in the case of each colony, namely, every colonial force should be landed at the port of debarkation in South Africa fully equipped at the cost of the colonial government or other body furnishing the force; the Imperial government to provide from that date pay at Imperial rates, supplies and ammunition, and to defray the cost of transport back to the colony when the services of the force are no longer required. Wound pensions and compassionate allowances to be paid by the Imperial government at Imperial rates.

Now, it is perhaps doubtful if the pensions which will be paid by the Imperial government will be adequate to meet the views entertained by the Canadian government, but it is meet and proper that we should know exactly where we stand with regard to the action to be taken by the Imperial authorities; and then if in our opinion—and I may say that I doubt, taking the measure of pensions on the other side, if the pensions to be granted by the Imperial authorities will be adequate, in our view, to what should be done to those who have risked their lives in South Africa—if in our view the pensions to be granted by the Imperial authorities are not sufficient, according to what I might call the Canadian standard, I have no doubt that this parliament will be well disposed to supplement them by an extra grant. That is the reason why no mention was made of this in the speech from the Throne.

My hon. friend wanted information upon the fast Atlantic service. I am sorry to say that upon that subject I have none to give. The conditions are not yet so favourable in England that we can undertake to have that service at an early day. But in all probability, as the war is now drawing to a close, normal conditions of trade will be resumed, and then the time will be appropriate to take up that question of a fast Atlantic service, to which both parties in this country are committed.

With regard to the Joint High Commission, the condition is just the same to-day as when we last separated. That commission has not been dissolved, it is still in existence, and we intend at the earliest possible moment to resume negotiations. But my hon. friend is aware that the conditions were not favourable to the resumption of negotiations when we separated. First of all, we had the general election on hand ourselves, and there was also one on the other side of the line, and pending the result, it was impossible to resume negotiations. But when this session has closed and the American Congress has terminated its sittings, I have no reason to doubt that we shall be able to resume negotiations and bring them, I hope, to a satisfactory conclusion.

I shall not touch upon all the topics which have been discussed, for instance, the Alaskan boundary, concerning which I am sorry to say I have no hope of arriving at a settlement further than I had on the former occasion. The Americans have taken such an attitude and such a course, and we have also taken such an attitude, that it seems almost impossible to reconcile the two opposite views. If I were not a member of the commission myself, I would feel more inclined to speak freely, but without venturing to criticise the position taken by the American commissioners, I may say that we can hope that if we cannot reach an honourable settlement of the question between ourselves, we may at least effect an honourable compromise. Between two such countries as the United States on the one hand and Canada and Great Britain on the other, I am sure there is no difficulty that cannot be settled by an honourable compromise or arbitration. If we cannot ourselves arrive at an agreement, certainly we can agree to call in a third party, a friendly power, to arbitrate. In the meantime, we have taken a step which was important to take in a matter of great moment. At any moment, there might be discoveries of gold in that district, and we know from the character of the men who risked their lives in the search for gold, that unless we knew exactly where the gold might be found, whether in the territory of Canada or the United States, great complications might result unless there was a settled boundary. Consequently we have agreed on a provisional boundary, which will serve as a boundary so long as the question remains unsettled, and that provisional boundary has been settled by the geographers of the two countries. In a short time I will be able to lay on the table the report on the commission. But for the present we have a provisional boundary, by which the two countries have agreed to abide, and according to which the rights of the two countries are to be settled in the meantime.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the temporary boundary in the nature of a compromise between the two boundaries which are respectfully contended for, or is it nearer the one than the other?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is in the nature of a compromise between the respective positions taken by the two parties. But, I may say, this was not the idea which inspired us when we agreed to lay out the boundary on the ground. Perhaps the main idea which we had in our mind and which guided us was to fix the boundary at a place where it would be more convenient for the trade on the Dalton trail and also on the Lynn canal, which is the part most frequented. I think I have answered all the questions put to me by my hon. friends. Following the example of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), I shall not enter into any contentious matter now. I may say that I shall be glad, when the hon. gentleman exposes the policy of his party, to consider it more critically. At the present time I have only to say to hon. gentlemen opposite in conclusion, that our policy will be the same as for the last four years—a policy which received such ample endorsation by the people of Canada on the 7th of November.

Motion (Mr. Guthrie) agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved:

That the said address be engrossed and to be presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of the House as are of the hon. the Privy Council.

Motion agreed to.

CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That Peter Macdonald, Esquire, member representing the electoral district of East Huron, be appointed Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—AUDITOR GENERAL'S AND OTHER REPORTS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding) moved :

That this House will, to-morrow, resolve itself into a committee to consider of a Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) when he expects to bring the estimates down ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very shortly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And may I ask when we are to expect the Auditor General's Report ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I shall have to make further inquiry on that point. We are pressing it forward by all possible means, but at my last inquiry the document was not complete. I shall be able to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) at the next sitting.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With the indulgence of the House, I would like to ask whether the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) suggests that we should go into supply before the Auditor General's Report is down. I think it would be very inconvenient to do so—I can hardly see, at present, how it will be possible to do so. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be able to give us to-morrow the date when we may expect the Auditor General's Report.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will do my best to give the hon. gentleman a statement to-morrow. Meantime, the formal steps with respect to supply, taken at the first of the session, are being taken ; and, within a day or two, we will let the hon. gentleman know what further steps will be taken.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I would like to ask the Prime Minister (the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in what state the departmental reports are. The lateness of these reports last year delayed the business of the House for months. It is inconvenient, in fact it is impossible, to properly discuss the estimates and to reach conclusions with regard to the matters that come before us, until we have these reports. If these reports come before the House at an early day, it will be a gratification to us on this side to assist the government to put through the business of the House as promptly as possible.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) will find no cause of complaint on that score.

Motion (Hon. Mr. Fielding) agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding) moved:

That this House will, to-morrow, resolve itself into a committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—THE ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending June 30, 1902, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, February 11, 1901.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved :

That the Message of His Excellency and the estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS.

The public accounts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.—Hon. Mr. Fielding.

The report of the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1900.—Hon. Mr. Mulock.

The report of the Department of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1900.—Hon. Mr. Sifton.

The report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ending June 30, 1900, —Hon. Mr. Sifton.

The report of the Department of Agriculture for the year ending October 31, 1900.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

The report of the Department of Public Works for the year ending June 30, 1900.—Hon. Mr. Tarte.

The report of the Department of Inland Revenue for the year ending June 30, 1900.—Hon. Mr. Bernier.

Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the year ending June 30, 1900.—Hon. Mr. Fielding, for Sir Louis Davies.

Statement of all bonds or securities entered in the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada since last return, February 6, 1900.—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. J. CLANCY (Bothwell). After this little theatrical display perhaps we may receive some information as to when the Auditor General's Report will be down. The most important returns are still left to be brought down, the Auditor General's Report and the Trade and Navigation Returns. Perhaps the Prime Minister will give us some information about that ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I should certainly endeavour to gratify the rather fastidious curiosity of my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy). I should suppose he would have enough reading for one night at least. To-morrow, perhaps, I may be able, after conference with the Auditor General, to tell him when this report may be expected. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before we adjourn, I merely desire to say to the right hon. gentleman that we on this side of the House are delighted at the effect of the admonitions we had to give to the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues last year, when we had to wait for these reports for weeks, and even months, in some cases. The promptitude with which most of them have been brought down this year is very gratifying.

Mr. WALLACE. With these exceptions, that the reports of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), which are so necessary for the discussion of the commercial affairs of the country, are not brought down, and we have no information as to when they will be down. As to the Auditor General's Report, the law of the land compels it to be brought down within fourteen days of the opening of parliament. That law was flagrantly violated by the government at all the previous sessions. I hope the government will realize the fact that they are amenable to the law as well as other citizens of this country, and that they are required to obey the law with respect to the Auditor General's Report.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman is just as well aware as I am that the report of the Auditor General is not at all under the control of the government. The government is not at all answerable for the delay of the Auditor General's Report. With regard to the report of the Minister of Customs, the House I am sure will learn with regret that the Minister of Customs has been called away from Ottawa by sickness in his family. But he will be here to-morrow, I hope.

On motion of the Prime Minister, the House adjourned at 5.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 12, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That a special committee of five members be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed, a list of members to compose the select standing committees ordered by this House, and that the said committee be composed of : Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Borden (Halifax), Sir Richard Cartwright, Hon. Mr. Sutherland and Hon. Mr. Haggart.

Motion agreed to.

THE RAILWAY QUESTION.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the attention of the House to a matter which I consider of supreme importance to this country, and to put myself in order I shall conclude with a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. gentleman will conclude with a motion to adjourn the House ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I will move the adjournment of the House, and to that motion I propose to speak.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member may be absolutely in order in moving the adjournment of the House, but at the same time I would call his attention to the fact that he will doubtless have ample opportunity to discuss the question which he has in view under our ordinary procedure. Unless the question is of really urgent importance, it is harldy regular to bring it up in this form. At the very outset, I wish to direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that it would be much more convenient if questions of ordinary importance were placed upon the Order paper. It would greatly facilitate the business of the House if this course were adopted.

From the year 1867 up to the year 1896, during a period of nearly thirty years, there were about twenty-five motions to adjourn the House made for the purpose of bringing a special subject before the House. However, during the last session of parliament there were no fewer than thirty-four motions of that character. It is only necessary to mention this to the House to show the change that has taken place, and I might be permitted to express the opinion that it would be more regular if these motions to adjourn the House were only made in connection with questions of the most urgent importance.

Mr. MACLEAN. Even under your suggestion, Mr. Speaker, I can still raise the question, because it is a question of the most urgent importance to the people of Canada. I desire to bring before this House, and before the country, the great fact transpiring in the United States to-day as to the control of railways. The railway mileage of that country is now passing into the hands of a most powerful syndicate. This syndicate controls most of the railways of the United States, and there is a dread that within two or three weeks there will not be one line of railway in the neighbouring republic which will not be controlled by Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Harriman, Mr. Hill—whose name we hear a great deal of in Canada—and some others. These men have under their power now over $2,000,000,000 of railway capital, and not only that, but these same men control the banking institutions, they control the coal fields, they control the Standard Oil Company, and only last week they got control of the entire iron production of the United States. Last night there was a statement—and here is where the question comes home to Canada—in the Montreal Star——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh. Where ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Perhaps the statement is reported as coming from a friend of hon. gentleman opposite. That statement is this :

> It would not be very difficult for the powerful financial interests which Mr. Hill represents to secure a majority of the common stock of the great Canadian Pacific Railway.

Now, the point that I want to bring before the people of Canada and this House is this, that these men, who have obtained control of the railways of the United States, are in a position to-day to capture the control of both the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I can go further : I believe that tracers are out to-day after the stock of these two railways, in order that Messrs. Morgan, Rockefeller, and the men associated with them may, if they think it necessary, get the control of these two Canadian roads ; and I call the attention of the people of this country to this fact, that less than $50,000,000 put on the stock market to-day will secure the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Did this country put all the money which it has put into the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway in order to build railroads which might pass any day from the control of this country to the control of the United States ? What do we see happening at this moment ? These Canadian railroads, in connection with which the people of this country have spent so much money under reputed Canadian or English management, are to-day a menace to Canada. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway have announced that they intend to shape their policies to build up American cities, if necessary, at the expense of Canadian cities. There is the great question before the people of this country. We were discussing platitudes yesterday in this House, but here is a definite question. The Grand Trunk to-day is antagonizing the city of Montreal, and I believe the Canadian Pacific is antagonizing the city of St. John. These two railroads tell the people of Canada, openly and above board, that they have no consideration for Canadian interests, but will, if it is in their own interests, direct their traffic to the United States. If that is the case to-day, how much worse will it be when Messrs. Morgan and Rockefeller and their associates go on the stock market and secure control of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway ? I am not dealing in a generality, but am speaking of something that might happen to-morrow. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) occupies a seat on the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he and Mr. Shaughnessy might attend a board meeting to-morrow and have an intimation made to them that the Canadian Pacific Railway had passed from the control of Canadians to the control of these gentlemen in New York.

Mr. DAVIS. How are you going to stop it ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I will tell you how to stop it, and I am going to appeal to history. The most significant thing that has happened in my time was the thing which Benjamin Disraeli accomplished not so many years ago in connection with the Suez canal. He made an arrangement with the bankers of the British government by which he had the necessary money placed at his disposal, and before anybody knew anything about it, the world woke up and learned that England owned the controlling shares of the Suez canal. That was a first-class investment, and one of the things resulting therefrom is that Egypt is to-day one of the most important and growing sections of the British Empire. I say that if we are alive to the danger which seems to overhang our country, this parliament, irrespective of party, will take the bull by the horns, and place Canada in a position, if necessary, to go on the stock market and buy the control of these two great Canadian railroads. Here is the point: the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk, as owned and controlled to-day, actually antagonize our own country, our own ports, our own canals, our own river routes, our own fast Atlantic service—antagonize Canadian interests in every way. But if the state had control of these railways, they would be the complement of our canals, of the Intercolonial Railway, of our rivers and harbours, and they would be, what they are not now, national railways helping to build up this country.

Some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are disposed to make sport of this; but I read only yesterday in an Ottawa paper that the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) proposes to extend the Intercolonial Railway across this continent so as to give the people of Canada some relief from the exorbitant rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I believe in that, if we cannot nationalize the Canadian Pacific; but it will cost more to extend the Intercolonial across the continent to the other seaboard than it would to acquire to-day the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is the present and immediate way of settling the transportation problem of this country; there is the way to get a fast Atlantic service—to use the railways of Canada to build up our Atlantic ports; and it can be done for less than $50,000,000. The country would not have to bear any more expense in connection with the bonds and the various investments of the railway than it bears to-day. It is the traffic that pays all these expenses. In fact, I believe, the capital could be converted to a 2½ or 3 per cent basis instead of having to bear the rather high rates that prevail to-day. The country would benefit in that way and in a thousand other ways from such an action on our part. We should not for a single day longer allow the control of our railways, and it may be the control of our coal areas, to stand in danger of passing over to the capitalists of the United States. And there is something coming in the United States. I believe a revolution is imminent there. What is likely to happen was depicted the other day in a cartoon in a New York paper in which Uncle Sam was watching some boys—Morgan, Rockefeller and others—putting the railways into a bag, and he said to the boys. 'When you get them all into one bag, I intend to take them over.' That is the position of matters in the United States. There are great constitutional difficulties in the United States in the way of the government taking over the railways; but in Canada all that is required is a resolution to be passed by this House, and the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) ought to be able in twenty-four hours afterwards to make arrangements by cable in England to have the necessary money to buy the control of the railways. It is an easy thing for us to do. We have extended the Intercolonial Railway, and it is the best asset Canada has to-day. I am told the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) is in favour of extending the national railway. If he is, he is on good lines. The Intercolonial Railway must not end where it is to-day. The people have substantial grievances, which must be remedied, and the way to remedy them is to stop chartering railways and giving away to railway corporations the lands of the country.

Somebody is going to tell me that there will be corruption and maladministration attending this project. I would be prepared to pay a man like Mr. Hays, who is admitted to-day to be the first railway man in America, $100,000 a year, if necessary, to administer our railways absolutely for the benefit of the people and irrespective of party or political considerations; and we can get such a man. Perhaps we could get three men to do the work for a great deal less money. But what I am talking about is a serious present problem before the people of Canada, which may be forced upon their attention any day—a problem which must be solved, and to which immediate public attention should be directed; and we should have some statement from the government as to what they would do if they should wake up some morning and find that our two great Canadian railways had passed into the hands of that enormous syndicate in the United States which to-day controls nearly every mile of railway in that country, which controls every acre of coal lands, which controls the Standard Oil Company, which controls the iron output of the country, which controls the banks. (Mr. Morgan is besides the greatest banker in the world to-day), and directing its energies against Canada and controlling our railways with the capital behind it, could wipe the name of Canada from off the face of the earth, and that is the only thing that could do it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Mr. Mulock). Oh no.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am glad to hear the hon. the Postmaster General say that even they could not do it. I know of some who tried to do it a few years ago and did not quite succeed. I wish, in all seriousness, to call the attention of this House and the entire country to the situation as it exists to-day and ask, under these circumstances, some information from the government of what they are likely to do under the circumstances.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would not like to be offensive to my hon. friend, but I would suggest to him that if he were serious at all in the policy which he has adopted, he has not chosen the best method of bringing the policy he advocates to the attention of parliament. The suggestion made by him that the government should buy the Canadian Pacific Railway is surely worthy of some notice beforehand so that we should have time to consider such a large question. But he has chosen instead to bring up this question, without a moment's notice, to the attention of the House. I would suggest, at the opening of this session, that we ought, as much as possible, to adhere to the old rule that no question be brought to the attention of the House on a motion to adjourn except one of great urgency.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not see the urgency in this case. This matter can stand until to-morrow. I do not think it is of such a character that twenty-four hours' notice would be too much to give, before proceeding to its discussion. If he is anxious to have the question brought up without a moment's loss of time, he could do so, within the rules, by calling attention to it in a few moments when we move that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply. And even if the House be not ready to go into supply——

Mr. MACLEAN. If.

The PRIME MINISTER. The motion could be moved in order to give my hon friend the opportunity he desires, which I, for my part, would be glad to give him. I therefore have no other course to ask the House to take than to vote his motion down.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I think, Mr. Speaker, that this House is entitled to a little more information from the government than has been given us. The matter brought before our attention by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) is one of momentous importance to the people of Canada. The right hon. the First Minister has either not been seized with its importance, or, for some other reason, is not prepared to make any statement about it.

But take the facts, as we know them, connected with this railroad question. We have had the information give us within the past few days that the Grand Trunk Railway has made the city of Portland its ocean seaport, not only for the winter months, but the whole year round. This magnanimous, generous and beneficent government built a bridge for this company in order to enable it to take its business away from Montreal to Portland, and the Grand Trunk Railway boasts that that bridge has been built without a dollar of cost to that company. I have always said in parliament, and this side of the House always protested that the bargain made with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County deal, was a most improvident one. But leaving the Drummond County Railway aside for the moment and dealing simply with the Grand Trunk Railway, this government gave them sufficient money to enlarge the Victoria Bridge across the St. Lawrence and to carry that product, which we all desire should be shipped from the Canadian ports of Montreal or Quebec in the summer, and Halifax or St. John in the winter, to a foreign port. Now we have the important information from Mr. Reeves that the whole of that business in winter and summer is to be transported to Portland. The Grand Trunk Railway say that they have made enormous investments in Portland and ask: Are we to leave those investments idle? And they have been aided by the generosity—or rather I should say by the extravagance, the unjustifiable extravagance, of this government—to make Portland the winter and summer terminus of their road. Here is a most disastrous position of affairs. We have our Canadian cities down by the sea, Halifax and St. John, of which we are proud, and whose growth and increase we should do our best to develop. Then we have the city of Quebec, which is beginning to show—and we are glad to know it—signs of increased prosperity, and the great city of Montreal, the ocean port of Canada. Yet we are told to-day that the business of this country, so far as the Grand Trunk can do it, is to be carried past our doors into a foreign and hostile country. I protest that the government should have something to say about these matters rather than make the poor plea that it is inconvenient to bring them up, that we should adhere to the old rule and let the motion stand until to-morrow, when the House goes into Committee of Supply. In my opinion that is a most absurd proposition. You cannot move an amendment to the motion to go into supply because the government will then say: This is a want of confidence motion, and will call on all its supporters to vote it down without discussion. My hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) has taken the proper course in bringing this matter to the attention of the House.

Then there is another question, which arises in a distant locality, but is closely connected with the one now before the House. We read from day to day that James J. Hill, of the Northern Pacific Railway, is acquiring possession of Canada's great coal fields, the Crow's Nest coal fields, and that he will apply to parliament for a charter to build a road into that district. It is true that the speech from the Throne gives us no enlightenment or information about this important matter, but we would like to know something about it. We would like to know whether the Crow's Nest coal fields, the greatest perhaps in the world to-day, are to be handed over to this rival corporation beyond the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada or the government, which three or four years ago manipulated them in the interest of its friends.

There is another matter connected with this. We all remember when the right hon. the First Minister, at a banquet in the city of Toronto, was hailed as a great deliverer because he had got a telegram from Mr. Fielding, his Finance Minister, in England, stating that the Fast Atlantic steamship service was an accomplished fact—the business was concluded. Perhaps, I am mistaken in saying that the telegram was from the hon. Minister of Finance; it may have been from the hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell). At any rate, it was from some minister in England—but there are so many ministers in England at different times that we cannot keep track of them. To-day, as I have said, we have a confession that there is to be no fast Atlantic line. And we have it further said that we do not need a fast Atlantic line. Why, of course not. If Portland, New York and Boston are to be the ocean ports for the Dominion of Canada, what do we want with fast steamers from Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, or St. John? All these things seem to be going together; and we have a government in power to-day that, so far as we can see, do not realize their duty in relation to these matters. We wish to rouse the government and to make them realize that these are important questions and that we expect them to do their duty to the country with regard to them.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), possibly, has pursued a line not relevant to the question raised by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), when he attacks the government for its policy in aiding railways in the past. I imagine that the question raised by the hon. member for East York is one that we can discuss with better results if we abstain from partisan attacks upon the government for policy or action not directly bearing upon that question. It is possible that a better course could have been pursued by my hon. friend from East York in presenting this question to the House than that which he has pursued. But the question is before us now for discussion; and it might be well to devote just a little time to it to call the attention not only of the House, but of the country to this important matter. I must confess that the position taken by my hon. friend from East York with regard to the imminence of a great crisis in this country in relation to monopolies and to transportation affairs is a position, perhaps, well taken. The absorption by a few individuals in the United States of the entire railway system of that country is a portentous fact; and the development and present condition of affairs in that country are of a character to challenge our attention. Results are being wrought out there which should be to us a warning as to the course which we shall pursue. Everything in the United States seems to tend to pass the leading business interests into the hands of trusts and rings and monopolies. A few days ago a steel trust was formed with a billion dollars capital.

Some hon. MEMBERS. A thousand millions.

Mr. CHARLTON. A thousand millions are a billion, I understand. The organization of the railway trust follows fast on the steel trust. All the great railway interests of the United States are being absorbed by a few capitalists, and the position of the plutocracy threatens the best interests of the country. Half of the property in the United States is held by about twenty thousand individuals, and every conceivable kind of business seems to be legitimate prey for the trusts. The operation of these trusts must be inimical to the interests of the people at large. Transportation charges in the United States are often enormously beyond what they should be, if based upon the actual cost of operating the transportation lines. The same is true of telegraph charges. A few years ago, I looked up affairs in connection with the Western Union Telegraph Company, and I found that upon the enormous capital of $86,000,000, they were paying dividends at the rate of eight per cent. That capital covered only $16,000,000 of actual cost. That stock represented sixteen millions of money and the balance of water; but upon the whole of it the people of the United States were paying dividends of eight per cent. As to transportation, take the case of the New York Central, for instance. The stock has been watered from time to time, until that road, which is paying six per cent upon its nominal capital, is paying nearly forty per cent upon its actual cost. Things go on in this way, and the people are plundered by the monoplies and by the operations of these trusts and corporations. And now that this question is under discussion in this House, now that the discussion has been precipitated, it is our duty to consider whether we ought not to strive in some way to avert the calamities that are now falling upon the United States—whether we should not take some action in this country that will prevent the establishment of a great plutocracy, that, like a giant octopus will seize everything within its reach.

I rise merely to say as a member on this side of the House, that I think this is a question that deserves the greatest and fullest consideration on the part of the public men of Canada. Whether it is well that the government should absorb the railways, whether it is well to build an independent line and regulate rates by means of roads across the continent, as the government of the state of New York regulated rates by means of the Erie canal from tide-water to the lakes—these are questions deserving consideration; they are questions of a practical character to which we should devote our best energies in order to find a solution that will be in the best interests of the country. I sometimes have had a fear that the government ownership of railways would lead to political corruption and to a condition of things not at all desirable. I do not know that that is necessarily the case. I believe the government might own the telegraphs of the country; and I would be in favour of the assumption by the government of that system at once. I am not sure, but that the government might go further in the interests of the people, and take charge of the transportation of the country as well. I do not give these as my views, but I do say that, with all the developments we see going on around us, with all the evils we see growing up, the time has come for the House to take these matters into serious consideration and to decide whether Canada cannot place herself in a position that shall avert the evils that have shown themselves among our neighbours to the south of us.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the resolution is put, I would like to ask of the Prime Minister (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), if any steps have been taken by the government to ascertain the truth of the reports that have been ventilated in the papers for some time as to the removal of the Grand Trunk Atlantic port from Montreal to Portland. The Dominion line which was largely subsidized by the government, as I understood, carries the mails; and the Grand Trunk is also greatly indebted to the government. As this matter has been before the public for some time I would like to ask the government whether they have taken any steps to ascertain what is being done by these two companies.

The PRIME MINISTER. I wish my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) would put a notice of his question on the Order paper.

Motion (Mr. Maclean) to adjourn, negatived.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding). My purpose, if the House be willing, is to proceed with the order of Supply to-day. But, I would refer to the observation made by the leader of the opposition yesterday, with respect to the Auditor General's Report. Of course, if that hon. gentleman takes the position that it is not expedient to go on with Supply until we have that report, I cannot take exception to his position. But, I ought to explain that the Auditor General, in the performance of what he believes to be his duty, brings his report down to a very late date and endeavours to include in it correspondence almost down to the very day of the meeting of parliament—certainly to a very recent date. The consequence is that his report is completed late and must be hurriedly pushed ahead. We are now informed that the best that can be done is to have the report ready by Friday next. Therefore, if objection be taken, I will not press my motion, because I realize that hon. gentlemen opposite might desire to have the Auditor General's Report before them. We hope to have it here by Friday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose we might make a little progress by taking up some items as to which the Auditor General's Report would not be so necessary as with reference to some others, letting it be understood beforehand that it should not be considered a precedent. I think that course has been pursued on some other occasions. As the formal items with regard to which there will be no discussion would really take a very short time to pass, perhaps it would be as well under the circumstances to await the arrival of the Auditor General's Report, and then proceed as expeditiously as we can. If I thought there would be any great saving of time, I would be glad to fall in with the suggestion of the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding); but I do not think we would save more than an hour or two, and consequently we might as well wait.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I quite concur in the view of the hon. gentleman, and I will not press the motion.

REPORT ON TRADE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Yesterday I asked a question concerning the report on trade and navigation, and the First Minister said that the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) was not here. I see he is in his place to-day, and I would like to ask him when we may expect the report of his department to be down. I might say that last year——

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. member has the right to enter upon a discussion. He may put the question, why the report has not been brought down, but he can not discuss it.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not going to discuss it; but I would just say in one sentence that last session a new era was inaugurated in the Department of Customs by which the statistical branch was transferred from the outside ports of the Dominion to the city of Ottawa for the purpose of having this report down at the earliest possible moment, earlier than formerly. Now we are in the eighth month after the conclusion of the fiscal year, and the report that I thought would be down probably in three or four months, is yet to come. Now, that is a matter which I think is a grievance, because the report on trade and navigation, perhaps above all others, loses its value by being delayed. The business men of the country require——

Mr. SPEAKER. As I have said, the hon. member has a right to ask a question, but I do not think it would be proper, except upon a question of urgency, to enter upon a discussion. He will be quite right in asking the reason for delay in bringing down some report, as he is doing now. I would like to be fair with the House, and I suppose it would be proper that no question should be brought up unless upon notice being given, excepting of course such questions as the hon. gentleman is bringing up now. But he cannot enter upon an argument.

Mr. WALLACE. It has been the universal custom in the House to ask the question and to make a reasonable statement in order to explain it, but not to raise an argument. I am sure that I have not raised any argument on this occasion, because the minister himself will coincide with every word that I have said. I simply ask him now when we may expect the report of his department to be down ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Mr. Paterson). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I would say that the printing of the report is being expedited as much as possible, and I hope to be able to present it to the House on Monday next. I do not promise to do that, nor to say positively when it will be ready. I will not follow the hon. gentleman in the argument he made use of ; but if he will reflect for a moment he will acknowledge, from his acquaintance with the workings of the department, that the advantage sought to be obtained in the change which was made, will only become manifest next year. He will see that we had to begin a new system of getting up monthly reports last July, and we have had to do the work of compiling the tables of the trade and navigation while this is going on, and therefore, it would be impossible the first year to reap the full benefit of the change. But I expect that under this new system we will be able to present the Trade and Navigation returns much more promptly than we have been doing.

QUESTIONS.

SAW-LOGS ON INDIAN RESERVES.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

What quantity of saw-logs was cut on Indian reserves in the province of Ontario in the season 1899-1900?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The quantity of saw-logs cut on Indian reserves in the province of Ontario in the season of 1899-1900 was twenty-four millions three hundred and sixty-five thousand, five hundred and eighty-five feet, board measure.

Mr. WALLACE.

SAW-LOGS EXPORTED.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

What quantity of saw-logs were exported from the province of Ontario to the United States during the season of navigation of 1900?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). The quantity and value of logs exported from the province of Ontario to the United States from April 1 to December 31, 1900, as shown by export returns, are as follows :—

	Quantity.		Value.
Cedar	15	cords	$ 105
Elm	10,857,000	ft. B.M.	86,070
Hemlock	2,638,000	"	12,915
Oak	142,000	"	3,401
Pine	30,672,000	"	270,360
All other	4,835,000	"	27,019

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—GRAVES OF CANADIAN SOLDIERS.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to bring back the remains of all those Canadian soldiers who lost their lives in South Africa?

2. Is it true that the graves of all those who have fallen are located and properly recorded in order that relatives and friends may know where to find them?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). The Canadian soldiers who lost their lives in South Africa were for the time being British soldiers, they received the burial of British soldiers, and it is not proposed to interfere with the traditions and customs of the British army in this respect. I may add that Her late Majesty the Queen expressed a desire, when her grandson died in South Africa, that he should be buried there ; the same is true of the only son of Lord Roberts, who lost his life there while in the British army. In reference to the second part of the question, I am not able to give a full answer. I may say that this matter is under the control of the British army authorities. I believe, however, that in many of the cases the places and graves of the Canadian soldiers who have fallen in South Africa have been properly marked and designated.

REPAIRS TO WABASH ENGINES.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. Upon how many engines have the Wabash Railway Company paid duty on repairs during the year 1900?

2. What were the numbers on each engine repaired, what were the repairs and the amount of duty paid the government on each engine so numbered during the year 1900?

3. What was the total amount of duty paid the government by the said company for the year 1900 on engines repaired?

4. Did the government employ an expert mechanic to value the repairs and new parts supplied to said engines, in order to arrive at the proper amount of duty to be paid? If not, what method was adopted?

5. Did the government, or any member of the government, receive any complaint from any quarter regarding the Wabash Railway Company being allowed to repair their Canadian engines in the United States? If so, what was the nature of said complaints?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). In answer to questions 1, 2, 3 and 4, I would remark that it has not been usual to disclose to the public the details of invoices or of customs duties paid by importers in individual instances, such transactions at the custom house being usually treated as confidential in their nature. Special returns from various ports would in any event be necessary to furnish the information asked for. The Customs Department is advised, however, that the Wabash Railway Company has paid duty on repairs to several engines during 1900. 5. I am informed that no complaint has been received at the Customs Department regarding the Wabash Railway Company being allowed to repair their Canadian engines in the United States, unless the following inquiries, contained in a letter from the hon. member for East Elgin can be so regarded, viz. : Whether the Department of Customs have any agreement with the Wabash Railway Company which would give them the right to take their engines or other rolling stock of their company over to their own shops in the United States for the purpose of repairs, and, if so, how does the Department of Customs arrive at the amount of duty (if any is paid) the company should pay on such repairs ?'

CENSUS COMMISSIONER FOR EAST ELGIN.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. Who is appointed Census Commissioner for the electoral district of East Elgin?
2. How many applicants applied for the position, and what are their names?
3. How many applied for the position of enumerator? What are their names, and how many have been selected up to date?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman's question, I would say that Mr. A. D. McGugan will be the census commissioner for the electoral district of East Elgin. In reply to questions 2 and 3, I would say that there have been no applicants.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fisher) say Mr. McGugan for East Elgin or West Elgin ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A. D. McGugan for East Elgin.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A CANADIAN MINT.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

Is it the intention of the government to establish a Canadian mint? If so, where and when?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram), I would say that a measure respecting the establishing of a mint in Canada will be introduced during the present session.

DEFACED OR MUTILATED COINS.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

Is it the intention of the government to call in all defaced or mutilated coin?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). There has never been any provision in the Currency Act of Canada for the calling in of defaced or mutilated coins, and the government has no authority at present to take such action. Persons who clip or deface current coins, or who utter such clipped or defaced coins, are liable to prosecution and punishment under the provisions of the Criminal Code. Defaced coins, under the Currency Act, cease to be legal tender, and should be refused by everybody. Whether it is expedient to amend the law in respect to mutilated or defaced coins is a question for future consideration.

GRAIN RECEIVED AT INLAND CANADIAN PORTS.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

How many bushels of grain were received at the following ports during the season of navigation of 1900, and the port of shipment from where same was received: Midland, Owen Sound, Parry Sound, Collingwood, Goderich and Sarnia?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett), I would state that as soon as the notice of the question appeared on the paper, the Department of Customs wired to the different ports mentioned in the question for the information. It has not been received yet from all the ports, but the moment it is received, I will communicate the answer to the House.

REVISION OF DOMINION STATUTES.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Will a revision of the Dominion Statutes take place at an early date?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière), I would say that a revision of the Dominion statutes will take place at an early date.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to amend the Dominion Lands Act reducing the rate of interest on the unpaid portion of the price of public lands sold on terms ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Yes. The Act referred to having fixed the standard rate of interest at 5 per cent, it is proposed to ask parliament to adopt that rate in respect of sales of Dominion lands.

LOAN TO MENNONITES IN MANITOBA.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. What was the amount of the loan to or for the Mennonites who settled in Manitoba, and at what rate of interest?
2. What reduction was made subsequently to the rate of interest, and what amount did that reduction represent?
3. Has the whole amount of the loan been paid back, as well as the interest? If not, what amount is still unpaid?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). 1. There were $96,400 loaned to the Mennonites who settled in Manitoba. Interest at the rate of 6 per cent, to be funded four years after date, was charged; repayments afterwards to be annually made in sums calculated at the rate of 6 per cent compound interest. 2. A reduction was made from 6 per cent compound interest to 4 per cent simple interest. The actual amount of the reduction it is impossible to calculate. 3. The whole amount has been paid back, together with interest at 4 per cent. Amount loaned, $96,400; amount paid, $130,381.43; interest, $33,981.43.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Is it the intention of the government to introduce this session legislation respecting the appellate jurisdiction of the Minister of the Interior in connection with mining claims?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). In reply to the question of the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that the jurisdiction referred to is conferred by order in council, and legislation is not required to modify it. The question of altering the method of dealing with appeals is now under consideration.

YUKON—TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Referring to Yukon telegraph construction and to pages 7310 and 7311 Hansard, 1900, where the right hon. the Prime Minister promised to 'find in the department (of Public Works) all the information we could get, intending to bring it down without a motion,' and to page 7514 Hansard, 1900, where the hon. Postmaster General quotes the Prime Minister's request of the Public Works Department as follows :—'That every means be taken to furnish the hon. gentleman at the earliest moment with every bit of information in the possession of the department.'

(a) When will this information be furnished?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte). Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is good enough to make a motion, all the information that he desires will be brought down as speedily as possible.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that these papers will not be brought down unless they are formally moved for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. It will not take any time.

HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS AT SKINNER'S POND, P.E.I.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

What amount of money was expended at Skinner's Pond, Prince County, P.E.I., for harbour improvements at that place during the year 1900?

Was a special appropriation made for this work, and if not, out of what vote was the money taken ?

What engineer recommended the work, and the date of his report?

On what date was the work commenced, and when stopped? The name of foreman, with number of days employed and wages paid him per diem?

Names of men employed, with number of days and wages paid each?

Names of men with teams, giving number of days employed and wages paid?

Has the department settled with and paid Mr. John Doyle, owner of the land taken for this work?

Is it the intention of the department to continue the work this season?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte). 1. $1,462.09. 2. No special appropriation, money taken from general vote, Harbours, P.E.I. 3. Mr. J. B. Hegan, report dated September 30, 1898. 4. Work commenced October 1 and ended December 22, 1900. 5. Name of foreman, Edmond Gallant, employed 72 days at $2.50 a day. 6 and 7. Thirty-five men employed in October, 32 in November, and 20 in December, at $1.35 per day. 8. Nothing has been paid Mr. John Doyle for land. 9. The matter is under consideration.

RURAL POSTAL DELIVERY.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to institute a system of rural postal delivery?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). The subject of a system of rural postal delivery is now receiving the consideration of the department.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT OPENING OF AUSTRALIAN PARLIAMENT.

Mr. BROCK asked :

1. Has any communication been received by the government of Canada inviting the Dominion to be officially represented at the opening of the parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia in May next?
2. If so, has any gentleman been chosen as the representative of Canada ? If not, why not?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There has been an invitation sent by Mr. Edmund Barton, the Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia. It is to the Prime Minister of Canada personally :—

The people of Australia will be overjoyed if you can visit them at the time of the opening of the first parliament of Commonwealth by His Royal Highness the Duke of York.

This is the only invitation that has been received so far, and the acceptance of it will depend on the length of the session.

ALLOTMENT OF ROOMS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin) by Mr. Puttee asked :

1. How many rooms are there in the House of Commons for the use of members during the session?

2. What disposition has been made of each one for the present session and to what members have they been allotted ?

3. Has any provision been made for the accommodation of Independent members of the House this session as was made last session ?

4. If not, why not, and will the government make such provision?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte). There are twenty rooms for the use of ministers and members of the House. The disposal that has been made this year of these rooms is the same that was made up to 1896.

Mr. WALLACE. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Exactly the same as was made in 1896. The rooms have been disposed of as follows: No. 26, Nova Scotia; 27, French Whip's room; 16, Ministerial room. No. 16 is the Ministerial room. No. 6 is very well known as the Opposition room. No. 7 is the room of the Minister of Public Works. No. 7½ is the room of the Postmaster General. No. 33, which was last year occupied by the Hon. Mr. Foster, has been given to the Hon. Mr. Costigan, who belongs to the same province.

Mr. BENNETT. Quite a change though.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, for the better. Room 34 has been given to the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Solicitor General. Room 33A has been given to the Printing Committee, as last year. No. 89 is the Prime Minister's room. No. 90 is the room of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. No. 91 is the room of the Minister of the Interior. No. 92 is the room of the Minister of Railways and Canals. No. 94 is the room of the English Ministerial Whips. No. 93 is the room of the Minister of Customs. No. 95 is the room of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Militia. No. 96 is the room of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. No. 42 is the room of the exministers. No. 4 is the room of the leader of the Opposition. I repeat that the rooms this year are used the same as since 1896.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

VENTILATION ON OCEAN STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth) asked:

1. Has the government taken any steps to induce the ocean steamship companies to ventilate the holds in which apples are carried ? If so, what steps, and with what success ?

2. What steamers, if any, have been induced to ventilate the holds in which apples are carried, and what means do they use to effect the ventilation?

3. Has the government taken any steps, and if so, what steps, to ascertain if the steamers have actually carried out their promises, if any were made, in regard to ventilation of holds for apples?

4. Has the government taken any steps to ascertain the results of the ventilation of holds of vessels for apples in regard to their condition on arrival in Great Britain? If so, what is the result?

5. Does the government intend again to test the value of British markets for Canadian grapes?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher):

1. The Department of Agriculture requested and urged the owners and agents of various steamship lines from Canadian ports to provide ventilation for the holds or other places in which apples were carried, by the use of fans or otherwise. A communication to that effect was sent to them under date September 29, 1897. The matter has been followed up every year since that date; and the various owners and agents were urged to provide ventilated accommodation for cheese also.

2. In July, 1900, the Department of Agriculture offered a bonus of $100 towards the initial expense of fitting up each approved steamship, to be paid after the ventilating equipment had been in use for at least three voyages. Twenty-three steamers were fitted with exhaust fans to ventilate the holds wherein fruit and other perishable cargo was stowed. These were steamers of the Allan, Thomson and Donaldson lines. The steamers of the Dominion Line, the Elder-Dempster Lines and the Manchester Liners (Limited) are reported as being provided with only the ordinary ventilators.

3. Agents of the department were stationed in Montreal and at the ports of London, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester and Glasgow, to observe and report on the loading and discharge of Canadian cargoes. The report indicates that the cargoes were delivered in better condition from the holds ventilated by exhaust fans than from other holds. The government intends to continue trial shipments of grapes.

SCHOOL LANDS, MANITOBA—SALES BY AUCTION.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher) moved for:

List of school lands sold at public auction in Manitoba during last year, place of sale and name of auctioneer and other officials in charge of the sale. The name of the purchaser, with the description and acreage of the respective lots purchased, price of sale per acre and amount paid on account. A list of the lots adjudicated but which were subsequently resold, name of first purchaser, price bid and at which adjudication was made; also, price at which sale of same lot was subsequently made, with name of purchaser.

He said: It is a well-known fact, Mr. Speaker, that the school lands held for the province of Manitoba are managed by the Deparment of the Interior of the Federal government, and from time to time sales of portions of these lands are held. Many such sales have taken place in former years. During the past year several sales have taken place at different points, and it appears that speculators attended, and made bids on these lands although they did not intend to carry out their bargain, but rather expected to get the lands at a lower price when they were offered for sale again, and in some instances they actually did succeed in their expectations. I do not for one moment intend to blame the government for what has occurred, but at the same time there is something further to be done in those cases. An inquiry is now being proceeded with into the matter, and from the evidence adduced before the presiding judge it has been found that the system I have referred to has been carried out so extensively that the province of Manitoba will be at the loss of several thousand dollars. There is another phase of this case which constitutes a serious grievance. Bona fide settlers who intended to purchase these lands either to enlarge their own domain, or as farms for their children, have been ousted out of the opportunity of so purchasing by these speculators over-bidding them, and then after the bona fide intending purchaser had left the place the lands were again put up for sale and sold at a lower price than in the first instance. Evidence is daily being adduced before the presiding judge giving further instances of this kind of thing. I will not undertake to read that evidence, as it is rather long, and indeed as the inquiry has not yet been concluded, it would perhaps be premature to bring the matter before the House. I trust that as soon as this inquiry is completed and as soon as the government is convinced that there have been frauds perpetrated, that all these corrupt and fraudulent sales will be cancelled and that a chance will be given to bona fide settlers to purchase these lands. I am glad to know that an investigation has been ordered, because there undoubtedly has been something wrong going on. When this investigation is completed it will be the further duty of the government to rectify the wrong that has been perpetrated to the detriment of the bona fide settlers who intended to purchase those lands.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). There is no objection whatever on the part of the government to bringing down the information which the hon. gentleman asks for. I can readily understand his desire that full and detailed information should be in his possession and in the possession of the House in regard to this matter, which in the province of Manitoba is a matter of great importance. So soon as my attention was called to the fact that there were charges of irregularities in connection with the sale, steps were taken to order an investigation, and the investigation has been going on for some time past under the direction of His Honour Judge Prendergast, one of the county judges of the province of Manitoba. We have asked Judge Prendergast to complete his report as rapidly as possible, so that it may be laid before parliament. So soon as the report is in my hands, I will have it laid before parliament without any unnecessary delay. I can assure the hon. gentleman that everything that can be done by the department to protect the interests of bona fide buyers will be done. Of course, it would be altogether improper for me to express any opinion until the result of the investigation is known; but I might say that the investigation so far indicates that the first reports regarding the irregularities were very much exaggerated. That may or may not be the case. When the judge's report is here, we shall be able to decide.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON—IMPORTATION OF LIQUORS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved for:

Return showing an itemized statement of the number of gallons of spirituous and malt liquors taken into the Yukon district since the period covered by return (1900), the number of permits issued therefor, names and post office addresses of those persons or companies to whom permits were granted, and the amount paid therefor, and all correspondence connected therewith.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I might remind the hon. Minister of the Interior that the language of the motion is exactly the language of the motion moved last session, which was complied with in the form there suggested. I have followed the same form for the purpose of comparison of the particulars brought down in the return of last session with those which I would like to have continued in this.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON—MR. OGILVIE'S REPORTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved for :

Copies of all reports from Mr. Ogilvie, Commissioner of the Yukon district, not already brought down, together with such information as is available respecting the report referred to on page 5025 Hansard, May 10, 1900, and the delay in sending it forward.

He said : The acting Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) of last session will recollect that the session expired without his having been able to obtain from Mr. Ogilvie the report for which he asked by wire on several occasions ; and the object of this motion is to have that report brought down, if it reached the department, or, if it did not reach the department, to have brought down the explanation, or such papers or correspondence as may exist in regard to those inquiries of which we were advised from time to time. Before the motion is disposed of, I might take this opportunity of asking the hon. the Minister of the Interior whether there is any truth in the report that Mr. Ogilvie has resigned. The reason I bring this rumour to the attention of the House, is that, after it had circulated some days in the press, it was followed by the report that a gentleman—a Mr. Ross, I think —would probably be his successor, and I think this an opportune time to ask the hon. gentleman if there is anything in that report.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that Mr. Ogilvie has not resigned, nor have I received any intimation from him that he intends to resign.

Motion agreed to.

LENGTH OF SPEECHES IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk) moved :

1. That the practice of delivering speeches of great length in the Canadian House of Commons has introduced a discursive and irrelevant style of discussion, is destructive of pertinent debate upon public questions, leads to waste of valuable time, unreasonably increases the length of the sessions of parliament, is in marked contrast to the practice with regard to debate that prevails in the British House of Commons, and tends to repel the people of Canada from a careful and intelligent consideration of the proceedings of parliament.

2. That it is desirable that rules and modes of procedure be adopted limiting, under certain conditions, the length of speeches, and regulating the general conduct of debate in that regard.

3. That a special committee be formed to consider the question of parliamentary debate, length of speeches, general conduct of debate, and proper methods of securing greater promptitude in the despatch of the business of the Canadian House of Commons, so far as they be consistent with parliamentary rights and the general interest of the public; and report its recommendations to this House.

4. That such special committee shall be composed of the following members : Messieurs Britton, Cowan, Haggart, Clarke, Parmalee, Monk, Madore, Fortin, Russell, Costigan, Tupper, LaRivière, Oliver, Prior and the mover.

He said : The motion which I am about to make, Mr. Speaker, was brought under the consideration of the House two sessions ago, and upon that occasion received unfavourable action. It was upon the Order paper last session, but owing to the delays, which this motion aims at, instituting proceedings to prevent, it was never reached. I am glad to have this opportunity, at this early stage of the session, of bringing the matter to the attention of the House again. The feeling, I think, in the House itself, is a pretty general one that some modification of our rules might possibly be made in order to facilitate the despatch of business, and correct some of the evils that have been gradually growing up in the procedure of parliament. The tendency to lengthy speeches has been a growing one, for several sessions past, and the length of the speeches has tended to the prolongation of debates often extending over days and weeks, consuming an enormous amount of time, and with practical results of very little consequence indeed.

The country, so far as my observation goes, looks upon the mode of conducting business in the House of Commons with a good deal of disfavour and dissatisfaction, and the methods which we have drifted into are of a character to repel the country from a proper consideration of the proceedings of parliament. We are gradually reaching a position when the proceedings of the House attract very little public attention, compared to their importance, owing to the prolongation of debates by speeches marked by their irrelevance and want of logical application to the case.

This resolution proposes no specific rules. It merely recites the facts with regard to the operations of this House and the methods we are falling into in the conduct of business. It proposes no line of conduct for the remedying of this evil except the indirect one, which, I trust, will bear direct and positive fruit, namely, the appointing of a committee to examine fully into the case, to take into careful consideration all the facts connected with our procedure, and the results which have flown from the application of these rules, and to consider whether it may not be practical, to some extent, to adopt a modification of these rules which will lead to a more rapid despatch of business and lessening the length of parliament and improve the conduct of business in such a way as will commend the approval of the government and the House, and bring about a more practical method of transacting the affairs of the country.

The United States House of Representatives many years ago were driven, by long discursive speeches and waste of time, to the adoption of rules for the purpose of saving time. Some of these rules we shall have before us if a committee is given for our guidance, as well as the rules and regulations of the English House of Commons. In the United States House of Representatives, for instance, speeches are limited to one hour, a time is fixed for the closing of debate, and after a certain stage of debate speeches are limited to five minutes. Several speakers may, of course, give up their time to one, but all the time that each speaker is entitled to is five minutes. Any amendment made to an original motion, which, in our case, opens the whole field of discussion again, can only be presented in a speech of fifteen minutes, and must be replied to in a speech of ten minutes, and the debate upon it is then closed. It was found imperatively necessary to adopt rules of this character in order to get the business of the country through within a reasonable time. We are reaching the same position which existed in the United States when these rules were adopted. We had a session of six months last year, during which we had thirty-three motions to adjourn, which led to a practical waste of thirty-three days, and an expenditure of that time on questions which did not appear on the Order paper. In the meantime hon. members had to wait from day to day, and from week to week, and from month to month, to reach motions they had on the Order paper. That was the case with myself, and even then I did not reach the motion I had on the paper for final action at all. Without enlarging further on the question, I may say that we are all aware that much valuable time is thus wasted, and that it is desirable to adopt rules for the securing of greater pertinence and brevity in the character of the speeches, and greater speed in the despatch of business.

The committee, if granted, will have this question under its consideration, and will make what suggestions or recommendations to this House it may think fit. These can be dealt with by the House, and the House is not committed, by the granting of this motion, to anything the committee may recommend. Unless this House adopts any recommendation of the committee, of course, there will be no change, but I think, considering the circumstances, considering the methods we have fallen into in the discharge of our duties, it would be wise to adopt a committee to consider what should be done, and then leave the matter in the hands of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN, (Halifax). I would suggest to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) that there hardly seems any occasion for presenting this motion at the present time. It is true that the methods of debate in any deliberative assembly must always demand attention. It is possible that, sometimes, time is wasted in this House. I suppose that the same can be said of any deliberative body. Until we become perfect, it is absolutely impossible to conduct the business without wasting more or less time. But the move which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) proposes is one of a great deal of importance, and I expected to have heard a word from the right hon. gentleman who leads the House in regard to it. It is a matter that does not affect solely this parliament, or this session; it is a matter that will be of very serious moment to future parliaments. There are two things that must be borne in mind in dealing with it—in the first place, to secure the transaction of public business without waste of time, and in the second place, to secure to every man in the House of Commons as great liberty in discussion and criticism as is consistent with the transaction of public business in a legitimate way.

Mr. CHARLTON. The resolution proposes that that shall be secured.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the question is, whether or not, in the House of Commons of Canada at the present time, there is need of any change. If there is to be a change, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has not given us any light as to the particular methods which will be suggested to the committee which he moved. I think that this is a matter in which we shall do well to 'hasten slowly.' We should not take it upon ourselves within a few days of the opening of this first session of a new parliament, to deal with a matter of this kind, which, possibly, in the opinion of a great many members of the House is not a matter that very urgently requires to be dealt with at all.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) has reminded the House that this is not the first time he has introduced a motion similar to this. In fact, if I remember aright, this is the third time that my hon. friend has brought this identical motion to the attention of the House. On previous occasions I did not for my part favour the passing of such a motion; and I see no reason to modify the views I formerly entertained. I agree with my hon. friend that in the last parliament the speeches we listened to, were, perhaps, of a somewhat inordinate length. At that time, I said that I would rely upon the good sense of the House to remedy that evil without taking any formal step to do so. I have reason to believe that this parliament will see, in these matters, a very marked improvement. I suppose that this year, parliament will come back to the old practice of delivering speeches of moderate length, and that there will be no necessity to apply the American system to our procedure. My hon. friend says, very truly, that the practice lately introduced in this House, is in marked contrast to the practice of debate that prevails in the British House of Commons. But the adoption of the rule which my hon. friend suggests, the American rule, would not——

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not suggest that.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps my hon. friend did not suggest that in so many words in his motion, but, as I understood his remarks, he had it in mind to adopt somewhat the American system of limiting speeches——

Mr. CHARLTON. Not at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then I am the better pleased. Still, I cannot see that there is any reason, at this early period of the session, for trying to correct what was, no doubt, an evil. I think we can try this parliament and see how far the evil, which was so marked in last parliament, will prevail in this one. But, I may say to my hon. friend, that it is not out of place for parliament to revise its rules generally. For my part, I am prepared, and, indeed, I intend to see if the rules of the House cannot be modified somewhat. I am a strong believer in the British system of procedure, and I would only suggest that we should see how far we can adopt the rules which prevail in England. If I say, that, at an early date, I intend to call the attention of the House to this subject, perhaps my hon. friend will agree in the meantime, to withdraw his motion.

Motion withdrawn.

SURVEY OF SOUTH-EASTERN MANITOBA.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to have all the unsurveyed public land in the south-eastern portion of the province of Manitoba subdivided during the coming season?

INDIANS ON ROSSEAU RESERVE.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Will the few Indians remaining on the Rosseau River Reserve, in Manitoba, be soon removed to some more convenient and profitable place for them, and will the land now mostly all unoccupied by them be opened for settlement?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) : The Indians referred to cannot be removed, nor can the land be opened for settlement without their consent, the land having been reserved for the use of the Indians by treaty.

SUMMERSIDE HARBOUR SURVEY.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

Was a survey made by a competent engineer of Summerside Harbour during the years 1899 or 1900? If so, what was the engineer's name, and has he reported? What depth of water in the channel does the report show? Did the engineer recommend the deepening of the channel by dredging, or otherwise ? If so, what steps have been taken by the government to carry out his recommendations? What is the depth of the water in the channel by latest surveys and reports?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte) : There has been no survey by the department since 1897.

SUMMERSIDE BREAKWATER.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

Were tenders invited during the years 1899 or 1900 for the building of a breakwater at Summerside Harbour, Prince County, P.E.I.? If so, how many tenders were received, what were the names of the parties tendering, and amounts of their respective tenders? To whom was the contract awarded, and amount of contract? Was any date fixed for the commencement and completion of the contract, and if so, what were the dates? Has the contractor commenced operations, and to what extent?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte) :

1. Yes.
2. Five.

WEST PRINCE ELECTION—THEFT OF BALLOT-BOX.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

Is the government aware that a ballot-box, containing the ballots cast at Greenmount, Poll No. 5, on November 7, 1900, was stolen from the government railway train between Alberton and Summerside, on or about the 10th day of November last, when said ballots were ordered by Judge McLeod to be produced before him for recount in the West Prince election? What action, if any, has been taken by the government to discover the thief and have him brought to justice ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government has received no information on that subject.

TOBACCO DUTIES.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the total amount of duty collected on tobacco for the year ended June 30, 1900 ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) :

1. Total duty collected on tobacco, including license fees, $3,281,639.48.
2. Of this amount $971,977.60 is owing to duty placed on raw leaf in April, 1897.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) :—

1. The total amount of customs duty collected on tobacco for the year ending June 30, 1900, was $140,946.47.
2. The amount due to additional duty imposed in the session of 1897 was $20,017.58.

INDIAN CORN IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

2. How many bushels of Indian corn, not the produce of Canada, were exported from Canada in the years ending June 30, 1899 and 1900, respectively; also, the total value thereof for said years, respectively?

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PAYMENT OF 'C' BATTERY CONTINGENT.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to pay all the men of 'C' Battery, which served in South Africa, the full amount promised them, out of the Canadian treasury?
2. If so, when will such payment be made to the men who did not assign their pay to relatives on leaving the country?

SENDING OF MILITIA TO VALLEYFIELD.

Mr. PUTTEE asked :

1. Who was responsible for the sending of militia from Montreal to Valleyfield, Que., on October 25 last, the arrival of which precipitated a strike by the employees of the cotton mills?
2. Was the Militia Department consulted, or did it give consent to the despatch of further troops two days later?
3. In the riot that followed consequent upon the arrival of these troops, were any of the men seriously injured?
4. At whose expense were these military operations carried out, and have the accounts been settled?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden) :

1. The mayor of the town of Valleyfield, who made requisition upon the officer commanding military district No. 5.
2. The Militia Department was not consulted, nor was it necessary to consult the Militia Department before calling out the troops. (Militia Act, cap. 41, clause 34 (2).
3. Not so far as known at headquarters, Ottawa.
4. At the expense of the town council. It is not known whether the accounts have been settled or not.

TUBERCULIN TEST AT GROSSE ISLE.

Mr. McGOWAN (by Mr. Sproule) asked :

Is the government aware that complaints have been made of the unreliable and injurious effects to cattle imported into Canada for breeding purposes by the use of the tuberculin test at the quarantine station at Grosse Isle?
2. What steps does the government intend to take to remove the evil complained of?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). Some representations have been made to me regarding the matter. I may say that the use of the test is not at the Grosse Isle quarantine station, which is only intended for people, but at the cattle quarantine stations, none of which are at Grosse Isle. As regards the second part of the question, the matter is under the consideration of the department.

GERMAN DISCRIMINATION AGAINST CANADA.

Mr. KEMP asked :

Has there been any correspondence between the government or any member thereof and the Imperial government or any member thereof regarding the discrimination against Canadian products by Germany, and if so, has the government any objection to bringing down the correspondence?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform my hon. friend that there is no correspondence to be brought down at this moment on this subject.

TORONTO JUNCTION PUBLIC BUILDING.

Mr. WALLACE asked :

1. Whether the government has yet examined any sites for the proposed public building in Toronto Junction ?
2. If so, what officer has made the examination ?
3. Has any site been yet selected ?
4. If so, where, and of what area, and at what cost ?
5. If no site has yet been selected, what does the government intend doing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte). No site has yet been examined, and consequently no officer has made an examination. In reply to the fifth paragraph of the question, that is under consideration.

IN THE MATTER OF THE POST OFFICE OF KINNEAR'S MILLS.

Mr. GEORGES TURCOT (Megantic). (Translation.) I move that an address be voted for copies of the evidence, exhibits and report of the inquiry held at Inverness, in the county of Megantic, on August 21, 1900, by Hon. Mr. Justice White, of Sherbrooke, in the matter of the post office of Kinnear's Mills.

I deem it my duty, in my capacity of member for Megantic, to move for those papers, and the reason why I make that motion is to show the interested parties how anxious the government have shown themselves to do justice to whomsoever justice was due. Here are the facts of the case :—

On December 6, 1899, a letter was mailed at the post office of Kinnear's Mills, being supposed to contain $200. As the money had disappeared, the interested parties made a complaint, and an inquiry was held by the post office inspector, Mr. Bolduc, of Quebec. Mr. Bolduc reported that the letter contained no money.

As the interested party was dissatisfied with that report, a second inquiry was held by the post office inspector for the district of Ottawa, Mr. Hawkins. That gentleman made a report exactly similar to the first. As there prevailed a great deal of excitation in the locality, and as the interested parties were not yet satisfied, I obtained from the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) a public inquiry, which was held by Hon. Mr. Justice White, of Sherbrooke. The latter reported in the same sense as the former reports just referred to.

As the interested parties were not yet satisfied, the more so as those reports did not confirm them in their claims, and as they pretend that the evidence given is favourable to them, I move for the production of the evidence, exhibits and report of the inquiry, in order to show that the government is willing to render full justice.—Carried.

RAILWAY BONUSES.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox) moved for a return showing :

1. The amount of the bonuses or subsidies voted by parliament each year to railways during the years 1896-7-8-9 and 1900, inclusive.

2. The names of all railways to which bonuses or subsidies were voted by parliament during each of the said years, and the amount voted to each railway.

3. The amount of such bonuses or subsidies paid to each of the said railways during each of the said years, and the conditions of such payments.

4. On what part or parts of the said bonuses or subsidies voted during the said years was interest payable, and how much of each of the said bonuses or subsidies on which interest is payable has been paid, giving details with reference to each railway.

5. The amount of interest paid during each of the said years by each of the said railways on the bonuses or subsidies they have received.

6. What railways to which bonuses or subsidies have been voted by parliament during each of the said years, and paid wholly or in part with the condition that interest should be payable, have paid interest on the bonuses or subsidies received by them, and how much interest has each railway receiving such bonuses or subsidies paid each year.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the motion is carried, I desire to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) if he would agree to the addition, in the third paragraph of the following words, after the word 'years.' 'Or to each and every company or individual who may have become vested with such bonuses or subsidies, by a transfer, or otherwise.' If my hon. friend has no objection, I will move that his motion be amended in that way. The words will not in any way change the effect of the motion, except to enlarge it.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Mr. TURCOT.

MANITOBA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher) moved for :

Copy of all memorials, petitions, resolutions and correspondence in reference to the transfer to the government of the province of Manitoba of school lands and funds already accumulated from sales thereof.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection whatever to bringing down the correspondence which took place before the present year. But, my hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) may be aware that, during the present year, we have received a new petition on this subject, the correspondence upon which is still pending. We could not well bring down that correspondence. If my hon. friend will restrict his motion to correspondence previous to the year 1901, there will be no objection to it. And, later on, when the correspondence is concluded, there will be no objection, if the hon. gentleman will renew his motion, to bringing down that correspondence also.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I would rather withdraw the motion in the meantime.

Motion withdrawn.

CHARTERED CORPORATIONS.

On the motion for :

List of all corporations now doing business in Canada under charter of the Dominion government. The number receiving subsidies by cash or land grants and the amount of such subsidy attached to each.—Mr. Smith (Vancouver).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I would like to ascertain from the hon. gentleman whether his motion contemplates the inclusion of any other than railway corporations, whether he desires to get information with respect to any other corporate body than such as may be operating a railway.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver). I desire to include every corporation that has a charter from the government, that has a privilege of any kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that he is imposing a very arduous task upon that department of the government which has charge of the records of these corporations. I do not know that it can be ascertained and stated to this House now what corporations are actually doing business in Canada that have actually been chartered under Dominion legislation, and I am quite sure that there are none such which have been receiving bonuses and subsidies, unless it may be some companies that have been perhaps bonused as manufacturing concerns producing steel, or iron, or some such material product. The hon. gentleman must have some definite object in his mind, and I would suggest that he could best attain that object by so framing his resolution as to include it definitely, instead of requiring the return of an immense mass of matter that would simply be useless to him, and that would involve a large amount of labour in its preparation. If he would amend the present resolution by putting the word 'railway' before the word 'corporations,' and say 'now incorporated or being operated in Canada,' he could later introduce another resolution covering the additional ground that he has in his mind.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Possibly the motion as framed does not strictly cover what the hon. gentleman wishes to get at. The words 'charter of the Dominion government' might be restricted to companies formed under the Joint Stock Companies Act, and might not include corporations created by special Act of this parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would include both, would it not ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A charter of the Dominion government would hardly include a company chartered by special Act of this parliament. I mention this, because I thought it possible that the hon. gentleman might desire to include such corporations.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). I will make the necessary amendments to the resolution.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let it stand.

Motion allowed to stand.

MOTION AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Return showing :—

1. The dates of the erection of the Dominion grain elevators at St. John, N.B., and at Halifax, and the cost of each.
2. The amount of grain handled during each year since said elevators were built, giving the amount of each kind of grain handled by each elevator each year, and how much of each kind of grain was received at each elevator each year for export and exported.
3. The number of officials employed at each elevator each year and their salaries.
4. All other expenses paid each year on account of each of the said elevators.
5. The gross cash receipts at each of the said elevators during each year since they have been built.—(Mr. Wilson.)

ADJOURNMENT—HARBOUR AT MIDLAND.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Before the House adjourns, I would like to ask the First Minister to allow me to make an explanation in reference to an item that appeared in the Montreal Gazette this morning. Under the heading 'The Harbour at Midland' there is a statement made that a deputation waited yesterday upon the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and the writer uses these words :

> The representation is that by increasing the present depth of water twenty feet, the grain shipments can be doubled. . . . Many heavy steamships now unloading at Buffalo could and would come to Midland, were there sufficient depth of water.

I wish to take the earliest opportunity of correcting that statement. If such a statement were made to the minister it is entirely incorrect, because there is already at that port considerably over twenty feet of water, and vessels carrying over a quarter of a million bushels of grain are to be seen there at all times. I can only assume that the gentleman who sent the despatch was wrongly informed. I hope the information that was given to the Minister of Public Works as to the requirements of that harbour was more correct than the information given the gentleman who sent this despatch.

THE BUDGET SPEECH.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion to adjourn passes, I wish to say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), that we would like to have as much notice as possible of the day on which he will deliver his budget speech. I do not suggest that the date be fixed now, I merely mention that we would like to have as much notice as possible.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The usual course is to give several days' notice, and I will endeavour to follow that.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 4.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

4. Has the lowest tender been accepted? If not, what is the difference between the amount of the lowest tender and the amount of that which has been accepted?

DISMISSAL OF JOHN CRAIG.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette) asked :

1. Has Mr. John Craig, for many years postmaster at Strathclair, been dismissed?
2. If so, for what reason?
3. Were charges made against him, what was their nature, if any, and was an investigation held?
4. Has a petition been received to retain Mr. Craig in his position? If so, how many names are attached?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

To the fourth question, yes, ninety-five.

To the fifth question, yes, William H. Reed, on the recommendation of the Hon. Mr. Sifton.

PRINTING DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Were all the departmental reports presented to the House on Monday last printed in the government printing office in this city?
2. Are the departmental reports yet to be presented to the House being printed, or to be printed, in the government printing office in this city?
3. If any of the departmental reports have been printed, or are being printed, in outside offices, what are the names of such offices, where are they located, on what terms is the work being done, were tenders called for the work, and why was the work not done in the government office?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. Yes, with one exception, the Department of Public Works Report.
2. Yes, with one exception, the Trade and Navigation Report.

3a. The report of the Department of Public Works has been printed at the office of La Patrie, in Montreal ; the Trade and Navigation Report is being printed at the Herald office in Montreal.

3b. At current commercial rates.

3c. No.

3d. Pressure of urgent work.

THE G. T. R. SHIPPING PORT.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Has the government taken any steps to ascertain exactly whether the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Dominion Steamship Company intend making the city of Portland, in the United States of America, the shipping port of both these companies, to the exclusion of Montreal?
2. What steps has the government taken in regard to said change contemplated by these companies?
3. What information has the government of Canada obtained in reference to said proposed change?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). As soon as the announcement was made in the newspaper press with reference to the transfer of the Dominion Steamship Line to Portland, and of the Grand Trunk Railway business to that port, inquiries were made by correspondence.

That correspondence is still pending, it is unclosed at present, and it would be premature to make any announcement as to what conclusions may be drawn from the correspondence passed between the parties.

LAND SCRIP TO SOUTH AFRICAN CONTINGENTS.

Mr. McCORMACK asked :

Is it the intention of the government to issue scrip for land to each officer, non-commissioned officer and man from Canada who served the empire in South Africa?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform the hon. gentleman that such is not the intention of the government.

MR. OGILVIE, YUKON COMMISSIONER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Has Mr. Ogilvie, Commissioner of the Yukon district, been recalled or dismissed?
2. Has any communication been sent to him respecting in any way his continuance in office or his retirement from office?
3. Has any communication been received from him on this subject?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). In the absence of my hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior, I beg to reply :

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). In the absence of my colleague the Minister of the Interior, I beg to reply :

1. These Indians, like all other Indians in the Dominion, are exempt from paying municipal taxes on lands within a reserve, but they perform statute labour on the roads abutting, as well as those running through the reserve, as required by the provisions of the Indian Act.
2. 2,380 acres.
3. The question of granting assistance to the municipality to maintain the roads in the township of Rama, is under consideration.
4. $52,485.45.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER FOR CHARLOTTE, N. B.

Mr. GANONG asked :

1. Has a census commissioner been appointed for the electoral district of Charlotte, N.B.?
2. How many applications were made for the position, and what were the names of applicants?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). 1. No census commissioner has been appointed for the electoral division of Charlotte. 2. The applications are private.

WATER LEVEL OF THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. LANCASTER asked :

1. Is the government aware that in the Senate of the United States, at the first session of the 56th Congress, in January, 1900, the following resolution was passed, viz.:—

'That the President of the United States invite the government of Great Britain to join in the formation of an international commission, whose duty it shall be from time to time to report upon the conditions and uses of the waters adjacent to the boundary line between the United States and Canada, including all the waters of the lakes and rivers whose waters flow by the River St. Lawrence to the Atlantic Ocean, and also upon the effect upon the shores of these waters and the structures thereon and upon the interests of navigation by reason of their diversion from their natural flow, and further to report upon the necessary measures to regulate such diversions.'

2. Have any representations been made to this government by (1) the government of the United States, or (2) by the Imperial government in reference to the above?
2. If so, will the government state how the matter referred to now stands?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government has not been informed of the matter referred to in the question, either by the Imperial authorities, or by the United States government.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. ANDREW B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I beg leave to move the second reading of Bill (No. 2) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900. I may say that this deals with the form of ballot that was used in the last general election. Hon. gentlemen will remember that, in counting up their votes, they found a number of ballots that were blank—had no mark on them at all.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will ask my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) to allow this to stand. We have not received the Bill yet.

Order allowed to stand.

CHARTERED CORPORATIONS.

On the motion :

Mr. Smith (Vancouver)—List of all corporations now doing business in Canada under charter of the Dominion government. The number receiving subsidies by cash or land grants, and the amount of such subsidy attached to each.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver). In presenting the resolution, that which stands in my name on the Order paper, I would move that it be amended by inserting the word 'railway' before the word 'corporations.' I do this at the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Vancouver), to have the notice of his motion put on the paper, so that the motion may come before us in the regular way on Monday.

Motion dropped.

OTTAWA AND THE C.P.R. STREET CROSSINGS.

Mr. THOS. BIRKETT (Ottawa) moved for :

Copies of all applications, documents, papers and correspondence by or between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the government, or the Minister of Railways and Canals, whereby the Canadian Pacific Railway Company applied for and obtained permission to cross, or continue to cross, certain streets in the western part of the city of Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). There is no objection to the motion passing. But I am not aware that there has been any correspondence on this subject. Applications, I apprehend, would come in the regular course. But any papers there are in the department will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MACLEAN. Before we adjourn, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), whether it is his intention to move the House into Committee of Supply to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Some hon. members requested, and I thought it reasonable, that we should not proceed with supply until the Auditor General's Report was placed on the table. On the assumption that that report would be presented on Friday, I said that on that day we would proceed with supply. I still anticipate that we shall have the report to-morrow. And if it is likely that some matter is to be brought up for discussion on going into supply, we might proceed. If the report be laid on the table after the House opens, perhaps hon. members would not be willing to proceed with business in Committee of Supply. But, as it seems that any discussion might be proceeded with, I would say 'yes' to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Maclean's) question.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding), does not propose to make any progress in supply ? Otherwise, I would ask, what particular portion of the estimates he intends to deal with ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would be pleased to make progress, but possibly objection might be taken to proceeding in supply at the same moment that the Auditor General's Report is laid on the table. Otherwise we might go on with supply, beginning with civil government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then the report will not be laid on the table till after we meet to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps not.

Mr. MONK. If we are to meet to-morrow only to adjourn, I am sure there are a number of members who would prefer to be absent. The report of the Auditor General should be in our hand for a little while before we go into supply. Under the statute, it ought to be before the House the first week of the session——

Mr. FRASER. Fourteen days.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No ; the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is right.

Mr. MONK. I have verified it but recently. If we receive the report of the Auditor General late in the sitting to-morrow, what progress shall we make ? We shall merely meet and adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER. The government is in no way responsible for the fact that the Auditor General's Report has not yet been placed before parliament. I think it would be a bad example, if we wish to have a short session, to commence adjourning. We must adjourn over next Wednesday in any case, as that is Ash Wednesday, and a legal holiday.

Mr. SPROULE. It does seem to me that the contention of the First Minister can hardly be sustained, when he says that the government is in no way responsible for this report. Though the Auditor General may not be an officer under the government, still, he is under the supervision of the government, and this is a departmental report which parliament needs before it can intelligently do its work. It is the duty of the government to see that the House is in possession of these reports before the business to which they relate is gone on with.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It seems to me that we might as well not sit to-morrow, thus allowing many members, even those who live at a considerable distance, to return home. I am willing to sit to-morrow if there is business to be done. But as we see by the Order paper that there is no work that we can go on with, we might as well adjourn until Monday. There is no use in meeting merely to adjourn. I hope the Prime Minister will reconsider the matter.

Mr. WALLACE. Speaking for myself, I am not much in sympathy with the proposal to adjourn over to-morrow. We have met to do business, and we should be ready to do it. But, when the First Minister tells us that the government are not responsible for the Auditor General's Report not being down, I cannot agree with him—and for two reasons. In the first place, the Auditor General's Report will be prepared promptly if the ministers present their documents to the Auditor General in good time to give him the opportunity of going over and revising them. And when the Auditor General's Report is prepared, it is a matter for the printer ; and the printers are under the direct control of the government. If the Auditor General has no control over the printing of the documents that he presents, the ministers have. There must be control somewhere, and where is it ? The Printing Department is in the control of the ministers themselves. We hear today that the government are sending part of their printing down to the city of Montreal ; and I am told by printers who know what it means, that the printing of the Trade and Navigation Returns is most profitable, because it is printed in both languages, and the same figures are retained for both the French and English edition, so that it is a doubly profitable transaction for the printers. That was sent down to the favoured newspapers, giving them enormous profits, though the ministers state at regular rates. Well, the regular rate is double the rate for column work, and it is double rate again for printing in English and French, though as a matter of fact it is printed in the one language only, the figures being the same for both languages. And still we are waiting for the Trade and Navigation Returns that should have been in the hands of the public many months ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As regards the Auditor General's Report, of which alone I care to speak, the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in assuming that it is under the control of the government. The Auditor General is not an officer of the government ; he has been purposely made an officer of this House.

Mr. WALLACE. Nobody said he was an officer of the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, the hon. gentleman says that we are responsible, but if he is not our officer, we cannot be responsible.

Mr. WALLACE. I said the ministers are responsible for the printing, I did not say they are responsible for the work of the Auditor General's Report.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This happens to be a question of the work of the Auditor General, because, as I said a day or two ago, the Auditor General, in the discharge of what he deems to be his duty, includes in his report correspondence which occurs down to the very eve of the meeting of the House. I am not sure that is the wisest possible plan, if we are to get the document promptly. But he desires, and it is a convenience no doubt to the members when the book comes out, that the correspondence should be placed in that part of the book where the particular matter referred to is found, and that keeps a large quantity of printing matter open and undetermined up to the very last day, on the eve of the session.

Mr. WALLACE. When was the copy handed over ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The copy goes down by stages, it is not matter that goes down all at once, that vast volume cannot be all tumbled into the hands of the Auditor General at once, he prepares his report from time to time. I am not prepared to say, I have not heard any complaint from him as to the time when he receives the copy, but I think the difficulty arises from the fact that the Auditor General, in his desire to do his work well and faithfully, tries to include documents covering a period down to the very eve of the meeting of the House. That is my own opinion of it, and while it is convenient for the members to get the document in that shape ultimately, it inevitably leads to some delay.

Mr. WALLACE. But the Auditor General's Report does not come down to any recent date at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman will find, when the report comes down, that it contains correspondence down to within the last few days.

Mr. WALLACE. It may contain the correspondence, but that is not what we most want.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The correspondence is a part of the one and the same book, the document we are talking about ; and if the Auditor General, in his desire to make these very interesting notes and comments, wishes to bring the book down to a very late date, I am sure he only does so for the convenience and information of parliament. But the plan has its disadvantages.

Mr. MONK. Is it in conformity with the law that the Auditor General puts this correspondence in this report ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course the hon. gentleman is aware that the Auditor General's Report includes a large mass of documents. When we speak of the Auditor General's Report we speak of the whole printed book. Merely bringing down any special part of his report without all the details would not be a compliance with the statute.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to call the attention of the premier to this fact, that many members who live west and north of Toronto, owing to the fact that there are no Sunday trains on a great many of the branch lines, are compelled to wait till Monday before they can start for Ottawa. So if there is nothing to be done to-morrow, and we have an opportunity of getting home to-night, we will have a couple of days at home without losing an extra day.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend will look at the Votes and Proceedings to-day he will find that the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has given notice that when the government moves the House into Committee of Supply, he will move a motion of a very important character. We can discuss it to-morrow.

Mr. HAGGART. With reference to the Auditor General's Report, if I remember rightly, there is an order of this House that the report shall be published before the 31st of October. Why is not that done? There is also a provision for its distribution before parliament meets.

The PRIME MINISTER. It may be proper when the Public Accounts Committee is organized to have this subject discussed. With regard to bringing down the Auditor General's Report at the present time, the hon. gentleman knows that we are quite powerless in the matter.

Mr. MACLEAN. If the House will pardon me, after what the First Minister has said I wish to repeat that I am willing to let the discussion on my motion go over until next week if that will suit the convenience of members. My hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Holmes) has just come to me and says that he and others of his friends would like it to go over until Monday.

Mr. HOLMES. I agree with what the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has said with reference to the adjournment. There are quite a number of members from the west who would like to return home, and who will necessarily lose Monday from the cause he stated. If some arrangement could be made whereby we would not lose Monday, it would be an advantage for the members from the west.

Mr. FIELDING.

COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. HACKETT. I desire to call the attention of the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) to the fact that we have had no mails from Prince Edward Island for the last eight days. What steps has he taken to overcome this difficulty ? I know the government has two steamships blocked in the ice, and while these ships are not available, I want to ask the Postmaster General if he is going to have the mails conveyed by ice boat from Cape Traverse to Cape Tormentine, as formerly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). When my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) succeeds in getting across from the island to the mainland and reaches Ottawa, I will consult him, and be then in a much better position to answer the hon. gentleman's question. At present I understand that all communications between the mainland and the island is interrupted by reason of the condition of the ice.

Mr. HACKETT. I want to say in answer to the minister——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, the hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to know what the passage of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries from the island to the capital has got to do with the transmission of the mails. What action has been taken with regard to the transmission of the mails from Prince Edward Island to the mainland ? There are a number of people here who are interested in what is going on down in the island.

Mr. WALLACE. Before that motion is carried——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, the hon. gentleman has already spoken.

THE PARLIAMENTARY MAILS.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I have not yet spoken. I want to ask the Postmaster General if he could not get better service at the post office here. The evening papers from Montreal only reach us on the following morning. They get here at nine o'clock by the mail service and they never come up from the city office until the following day. This is my experience since the opening of the session. It is not the fault of the office in the Commons, but it appears that the distribution office in the city is not carried on as it should be. The same thing takes place in regard to our western mail. The mail from the west arrives at two o'clock in the afternoon, and we do not get our mail in the House until eight or nine o'clock the same evening. I think it is quite too long for us to wait—three or four hours—for the transfer of our mail from the city office to the office in the House of Commons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). Mr. Speaker, I will inquire into this matter that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) has brought to my attention, but, I will say, that there has been no change since I took office four years ago.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Last session the mails were sent up more regularly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been no change made to my knowledge since we took office.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the government to what appears to me to be an extraordinary fact. The only reason given for this House meeting to-morrow is to consider some business that is to be brought forward by hon. gentlemen occupying seats on the opposition benches, and, although we were told in the speech from the Throne that measures would be submitted to us :

—for the better supervision of the export trade in food products, and also in connection with the post office, the Pacific cable and various other subjects

—we have been meeting and adjourning here day after day for want of a single measure introduced on the part of the government. This is the only part of the programme suggested to us in what was expected at the opening to be a business session.

Mr. FRASER. So it is.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We have, on this side of the House, given every assurance that we were ready to go on, but everything has come to a full stop because, as the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) says, one department of the government has for the moment broken down and it is not able to discharge its proper duties. Consequently, not being in a position to ask for supplies, having none of their measures ready for the consideration of the House, they propose that we should take up only such business as the opposition shall bring forward. I think this is a very unfortunate position for the government, and since the business of the government is in our hands they might very well listen to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman who has his business ready and rest over to-morrow before we tackle that.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 15, 1901.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That a select committee composed of Messrs. Borden (Halifax), Bourassa, Brock, Casgrain, Clancy, Clarke, Davies (Sir Louis), Flint, Fraser, Heyd, Hyman, Johnston (Lambton), Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Monk, Roche (Marquette), Scott and Wade, be appointed to assist Mr. Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament so far as the interests of this House are concerned, and to act as members of a joint committee of both Houses on the Library.

Motion agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That a Message be ordered to be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this House will unite with them in the formation of a joint committee of both Houses on the subject of the printing of parliament, and that the members of the Select Standing Committee on Printing, viz. :—Messrs. Bennett, Casgrain, Clarke, Davis, Holmes, Hughes (Victoria), Hyman, Johnston (Cape Breton), Johnston (Lambton), LaRivière, Lavergne, Loy, Maclean, McColl, Marcil (Bonaventure), Oliver, Parmelee, Préfontaine, Richardson (Grey), Scott, Sutherland (Oxford), Taylor, Thompson and Tisdale, will act as members on the part of this House on said Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I beg to lay on the table the report of the Auditor General for the year ending June 30, 1900.

Mr. WALLACE. What date ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the year ending June 30, 1900 ; with various notes and comments of a later date.

Mr. WALLACE. I thought it would be up to the 14th of February.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The correspondence is up to a very recent date.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. EDWARD A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara), moved the first reading of Bill (No. 4) to amend 'The Railway Act.' He said : This Bill relates to the liability of the railway company, in case cattle guards are not kept at highway crossings. At present, the law is that if an animal is at liberty, not controlled by a human being, and gets upon the railway from the highway, even though there is no cattle guard, the company is not liable. The object of the Bill is to make the company liable to keep up cattle guards, on the theory that these guards are needed for the purpose of preventing animals from being killed or injured when they are not in charge of a human being. If the animal is under the control of a human being, cattle guards are not necessary, because the human being will see to it that the animal is kept out of danger.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ORDERS OF THE DAY—DISTRIBUTION OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before we proceed to the Orders of the Day, I would like, for one moment, to call the attention of the House to certain facts connected with the distribution of the Auditor General's Report which was laid on the table a moment ago. Technically, the report cannot be considered before parliament until it is laid on the table. But from the morning papers it is quite clear that the press must have received a copy of this report yesterday ; and to-day, having seen a reference to the Auditor General's Report in a morning paper, I sent, both to the distribution office of this House and to the post office, to obtain a copy. I was informed through a page that the reports were ready and in the possession of the post office of the House, but they could not be distributed to the members, nor could I obtain a copy until the report was laid upon the table of the House. Now, while that may be technically right, there seems to me to be no reason why that rule should not be broken in favour of a member of parliament as well as of a member of the press. I do not in the slightest begrudge the press who have received a copy, but it is as straight a violation of any rule as would be handing it to a member, on application, in the House. I certainly think that the members of the House should receive this public document at least as soon as the members of the press.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). My hon. friend's point seems to me well taken. But I really cannot give him any explanation of how that document was given to the press. I can only say that yesterday afternoon, very soon after the adjournment of the House, the Auditor General sent the report to my office. It had been his purpose to lay it on the table during the afternoon if the House had continued in session, but owing to the early adjournment he was not able to do so. I was as much surprised as my hon. friend when I saw some statement attributed to the Auditor General's Report appearing in a morning paper. I am afraid I will have to look elsewhere for information as to how it was obtained, for I have no knowledge of it. I think the hon. gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. MACLEAN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to say that if the House is moved into supply, I will not go on with the motion of which I have given notice, for the reason that there is a large number of members who wish to take part in that discussion, and they are away from the House to-day. But I let my notice of motion stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is no reason why government business should be delayed, although of course we would be glad to discuss the hon. gentleman's motion. I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the understanding was that we should not proceed with supply to-day for the reason that the Auditor General's Report is not in possession of the members of the House, even at the present time. I have not received a copy of it, nor have the hon. gentlemen around me.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course I understood in our conversation on the subject yesterday that a portion of the afternoon would have been occupied by the motion of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), who has now laid it aside for another day. I supposed, moreover, that the Auditor General's Report would be on the table, if not in the hands of the members, for some time before the motion of supply was made. But if my hon.

friend, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), thinks it would not be convenient to go on with supply, under these circumstances, and as I think there is a fair room for his criticism, I will not press the motion.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 3.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WINNIPEG LETTER CARRIERS.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. Has the following petition been received by the Hon. the Postmaster General :

Winnipeg, Manitoba.

To the Hon. Wm. Mulock,
H.M. Postmaster General.

We, the letter carriers of the city of Winnipeg, respectfully beg leave to request that the present scale of salaries now paid us be considered and revised.

That owing to the continued prosperity of the Dominion during the past six years, the cost of living has been very much increased and wages in all other branches of labour have advanced accordingly.

Also, the reduction in postage rates, together with the expanding trade of the country, has increased the work of our branch of the postal service.

We submit from experience that the increased cost of rents, clothing and provisions generally have absorbed all our earnings, thereby adding largely to the difficulty of maintaining ourselves and families with any degree of respectability.

We respectfully call your attention to the wide difference between the pay of letter carriers and that of other public employees of this city, while the duties performed by us are much more onerous and exacting, and make much greater demands upon our intelligence, honesty and physical endurance than that of civic employees generally.

We also submit that we are the only class of public servants debarred from participating in the growing time, and we therefore ask that 20 per cent be added to present salaries so as to enable us to live with some degree of domestic comfort.

Therefore, your petitioners pray that you may be pleased to take early steps towards the granting of this our reasonable request.

2. Is it the intention of the government to accede to the legitimate request of the petitioners?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Yes, and is receiving the consideration of the department.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—OPINION OF THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. BOURASSA asked :

1. Was the Canadian government or any of its members consulted by the British government on the South African question since the 1st of June last?
2. Did the Canadian government or any of its members offer any opinion or make any suggestion to the British government on the matter?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Canadian government was not consulted, nor was any of its members, by the British government on the South African question since June 1 last. No member of the Canadian government offered any opinion on the matter.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—THE BADEN-POWELL POLICE FORCE.

Mr. BOURASSA asked :

1. Is it true that some Canadian officers are engaged, or are going to be engaged, at recruiting men for the Baden-Powell police force?
2. Who are they?
3. Are they paid for that work by the Canadian government?
4. What is their pay or salary?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden) :

1. Yes.

2. Officers of the headquarters staff, certain district officers commanding, certain officers of the North-west Mounted Police, and probably the services of other officers will be required. The only officers not in permanent employment so far detailed are Capt. F. W. L. Moore, 4th Regt. Canadian Artillery, and 2nd Lieut. G. S. Beer, Nelson Rifle Company.

3. No.

4. No pay or salary has been arranged for. An officer is entitled to the pay of his rank while employed.

OPERATION OF TICKET-OF-LEAVE ACT.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. How many convicts have been conditionally liberated from each of the various penitentiaries, jails and prisons in Canada under 'The Ticket-of-Leave Act' ?

2. How many have since been re-arrested and re-convicted for the same or other offences?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) :

1. Kingston, 55 ; St. Vincent de Paul, 54 ; Dorchester, 35 ; New Westminster, 9 ; Stony Mountain, 6 ; Central prison, Toronto, 28 ; Montreal jail, 9 ; Aylmer jail, 1 ; Sorel jail, 1 ; Halifax County jail, 1 ; New Westminster jail, 1 ; Regina jail, 1 ; Nelson jail, 1 ; Quebec jail, 1 ; Penetanguishene reformatory, 1 ; Dawson jail, 1 ; Andrew reformatory, 1 ; Ottawa jail, 1 ; over 208.

2. So far as the Department of Justice is aware, seven have since been re-arrested and re-convicted for a similar or other offences.

ADVANCES MADE TO SETTLERS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to reduce the rate of interest on the unpaid balance of the loans and advances made to the settlers in Manitoba in about the year 1876, as was done in the case of the Mennonites?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I beg to say that the subject to which the hon. gentleman refers is under consideration at the present time. No definite decision has been arrived at. I hope to be able to say more upon the subject before the session is over.

MANUFACTURE OF BINDER TWINE BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

To whom was the binder twine, manufactured by the government, sold in 1900? At what price was the binder twine, manufactured by the government, sold in 1900? What was the cost of raw material and manufacture of binder twine in 1900?

Mr. BOURASSA.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). As I presume this question refers to the operation of the twine industry during the fiscal year ending June 30 last, my hon. friend will find the answer to the information he asks for at pages M—46, 47 and 48 of the Auditor General's Report. As to the last branch of the question, it has not been the custom nor the policy of the government, since the inception of the binder twine industry, to give the cost of the raw material until such time as the product has been marketed for the season.

PAYMENTS TO GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. What was the total amount contributed by the present government to the reconstruction of the Victoria bridge at Montreal?

2. What is the amount paid annually by the government for the use of the Victoria bridge by the Government railway?

3. What is the amount paid annually by the government for the use of the Grand Trunk Railway from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, for the government railway?

4. What is the amount paid annually by the government for the use made by the Intercolonial Railway of the Grand Trunk Railway terminal facilities at Montreal?

5. Is there anything in the conditions of the grants or arrangements above referred to between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada which restricts the latter from making its shipping port at Portland, to the exclusion of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. The total amount contributed by the present government towards the reconstruction of the Victoria bridge at Montreal was $500,000.

2. The amount paid annually by the government for the use of the Victoria bridge by the government railway is $40,000.

3. The amount paid annually by the government for the use of the Grand Trunk Railway from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert for the government railway is $37,000.

4. The amount paid annually by the government for the use of the Grand Trunk Railway terminal facilities at Montreal is $62,500.

5. There is nothing in the conditions of the grants or arrangements above referred to between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada which restricts the latter from making a shipping port of Portland.

HYDRAULIC MINING LEASES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Referring to the list of hydraulic mining leases on p. 55, Annual Report of the Department of the Interior, 1900—

(a) What is the date of each lease?

(b) What conditions or terms, if any, of these leases respectively have been complied with?

(c) What conditions or terms, if any, of these leases respectively have not been complied with?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to move for a return for the information he is asking for. I cannot satisfactorily or intelligently give it in answer to a question.

ST. CATHARINES, ONT., WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. LANCASTER asked :

1. Was the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, correctly reported in the Evening Journal newspaper of the city of St. Catharines of Tuesday, the 6th day of November last, in reporting his speech delivered at the said city on the day previous in regard to the application of the said city for a supply of water from the old Welland Canal, in the following words :—

'A matter of great interest to you in regard to a water supply was brought to my personal notice some eight or ten days ago, and so busy have we been that the government has not had time or the opportunity to settle the matter, but, my friends, after the election, I will take the matter in hand, and I promise that you shall have justice done to you.'

2. What has been done since the said elections in regard to the matter therein referred to?

3. Does the government intend to grant the said application, and if so, when?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I cannot inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) if the report distributed of my speech on that occasion is accurate or not. I presume, however, it is substantially correct. The question to which it refers is now undergoing the consideration of the government.

LAKE ERIE AND DETROIT RIVER RAILWAY SUBSIDY.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin) asked :

1. Did the government either give or promise to give the sum of $3,200 per mile to the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway extension, and if so, why?

2. Is the government aware of the fact that the said Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway extension runs parallel with and very near to the Michigan Central Railway for about three-fourths of its length?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes ; the government not only promised to give the subsidy, but has entered into a contract with the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company for the payment of a subsidy to them on completion of the line in accordance therewith.

2. Yes ; the government is aware of the fact that, for a limited number of miles, the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway extension does run parallel, or very nearly. to the Michigan Central Railway. This fact was made the subject of discussion in parliament at the time the subsidy proposal was being passed upon. The government, in the Bill providing for this subsidy, reserved the question of the grant for determination, after inquiry, by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, as to whether adequate and efficient running powers should be arranged for by the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway over the Michigan Central line. An objection was taken in parliament by gentlemen in opposition to such qualifying clause being introduced, and it was insisted that the grant should be made without any qualification whatever. This view was pressed strongly, and a motion in amendment was made to strike out the qualifying clause ; it was lost on a division. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council subsequently heard evidence upon the whole question, examined into it carefully, and came to the conclusion that satisfactory arrangements could not be made over the Michigan Central Railway for the running of the Lake Erie and Detroit River trains.

HON. CHARLES BURPEE.

Mr. WILMOT (by Mr. Fowler) asked :

1. What is the date of Hon. Charles Burpee's appointment to the Senate?

2. Is he now a member of that body? If not, why, and when did he resign?

3. In the event of his resignation, was he given a position of emolument under government? If so, what were the duties of the office and the amount of remuneration?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). Hon. Charles Burpee was appointed senator on February 1, 1900. He resigned on July 19, 1900. He was appointed one of the Paris exhibition commissioners on August 9, 1900. He did not go to Paris. His salary was the same as that of the other commissioners, being at the rate of $2,500 per year, with an allowance of $3.50 a day while in Canada and absent from his residence, and actual transportation expenses.

POSTMASTER AT BRANDON, MAN.

Mr. BOYD asked :

1. Is Mr. James Kavanagh now postmaster at Brandon, Man.? If not, did he resign or was he dismissed?

2. How many years did Mr. Kavanagh act as postmaster at Brandon?

3. Was an investigation held by the post office authorities prior to his removal?

4. Who is now postmaster at Brandon, and what is the date of his appointment?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). In the absence of the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock). I beg to say :

1. Mr. J. C. Kavanagh is not now postmaster of Brandon, Manitoba. He has been removed from the postmastership of that office.

2. Mr. Kavanagh had been postmaster of Brandon since August, 1881.

3. In view of the representations made in the matter, a post office investigation was not considered necessary.

4. Mr. Kenneth Campbell is now postmaster of Brandon. He was appointed on December 24 last.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

At what date was the first instalment of 'MS.' of the Auditor General's Report for last fiscal year sent to the government printing office?

Has all the 'MS.' of the report been sent in to the government printing office?

At what date was the last instalment of copy sent to the government printing office?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. September 11, 1900.
2. Yes ; the report is presented.
3. February 6, 1901.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. LIONEL DANSEREAU TO HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Clarke) asked :

1. Has a Mr. Dansereau been appointed to a position on the staff of the House of Commons?
2. If so, what are the duties of the office?
3. What is the salary attached?
4. Is Mr. Dansereau a son of the editor of La Presse newspaper ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. Mr. Lionel Dansereau has been appointed assistant clerk of French journals, to fill the vacancy caused by the demise of the late Mr. G. I. Barthe.

2. His duties are to assist the clerk of French journals in the translation of the journals and the appendices.

3. What the terms of the order in council (briefly stated)?

5. What are the terms of such contract (briefly stated)?

Mr. SIFTON.

Locomotive Works Bought—Hon. Wm. Harty is Kingston's Friend—Has Orders for Thirty-two Locomotives—Twenty for the Government and Twelve for Mackenzie & Mann—Where was the Conservative Help for the City on this Occasion—Read the Government's Contract Below and Thank Liberals for Redeeming a Big Industry.

The correspondence closing the order: Kingston, November 3, 1900.—Hon. James Sutherland, acting Minister of Railways and Canals, Woodstock : Dear Sir,—I expect to be possessor of the locomotive works in this city on Monday next. I now beg to offer you as follows : I will build (20) twenty locomotive engines for the Intercolonial Railway upon any specification the officials of that railway may furnish me, and will guarantee the engines as being as good in every respect as you can buy from any other builder. In order to settle the question of price and to ensure the work being done by Canadian workmen, I will guarantee to make the price per engine $500 less than you can import the same from any foreign locomotive engine builder. Kindly let me have your order by wire. Yours sincerely, (Sgd.) Wm. Harty.

Montreal, November 5, 1900.—Hon. James Sutherland, Woodstock, Ont.—Arrived here this morning, Windsor Hotel, will be here all day. Please answer my letter of Saturday by wire if possible. (Sgd.), William Harty.

Hon. Wm. Harty, Windsor Hotel, Montreal.—Have received no letter from you. (Sgd.), James Sutherland.

Hon. William Harty, Windsor Hotel, Montreal.—Your offer to build twenty locomotive engines for the Intercolonial Railway accepted. Order in council already passed to this effect. (Sgd.), James Sutherland, acting Minister of Railways and Canals.

Montreal, November 5, 1900.—Hon. James Sutherland, Woodstock, Ont.—Thanks for order. (Sgd.), William Harty.

Montreal, November 6, 1900.—Edward J. B. Pense, Kingston, Ont.—Have just completed, at 4 p.m., purchase of locomotive works from liquidators. Have secured contract from government for twenty engines for Intercolonial Railway, and am promised twelve by Mackenzie & Mann. In endeavouring to help myself I rejoice in indirectly being able to do something for my old employees of the locomotive works. Home to-morrow noon. (Sgd.), William Harty.

The Option to Mr. King Ended Monday—Mr. Harty Bought Tuesday—No Delay About That.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I can make no statement as to the publication of the poster referred to in the question, but the correspondence as set forth is substantially correct. The government was attacked by its opponents for placing orders for locomotives in the United States of America, although there was no manufacturing establishment then in operation in Canada capable of executing the orders, and when a company of Canadian capitalists was prepared to revive, enlarge and sufficiently capitalize the Kingston works, which had closed down, the government felt it to be its duty to afford the company all proper assistance and encouragement in its power. In accordance with this policy, an order in council was thereupon passed on October 16, authorizing a contract to be entered into, and later, on December 22 last, the contract was executed between the government and the Canadian company.

YUKON—MINING REGULATIONS.

Mr. MORIN asked :

Have the regulations respecting the size of mining locations been changed since the year 1897?

If so, in what respect have such changes been made, and the date or dates thereof?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). 1. By an order in council, dated the 18th of January, 1898, provision was made that placer mining claims in the Yukon territory be increased to 250 feet in length, the side boundaries to be lines along bed rock three feet above the edge of the creek or lowest general level of the gulch.

2. By an order in council, dated the 21st of March, 1898, quartz mining claims on Dominion lands were increased to 1,500 feet in length by 1,500 feet in breadth.

3. By an order in council, dated the 12th of September, 1898, provision was made for granting entry for copper mining locations in the Yukon territory, having an area of 160 acres in a square block.

4. By an order in council, dated the 20th February, 1899, provision was made that one discoverer of a new mine should receive a claim 1,000 feet long, and a party of two discoverers two claims amounting altogether to 1,500 feet, also that creek or gulch claims should extend 1,000 feet on each side of the creek or gulch, and that river and hill claims should be 1,000 feet in depth.

THE DUTY ON LUMBER.

On the motion :

That in the opinion of this House, duties should be levied upon lumber imported into Canada corresponding with those now existing upon lumber entering the United States.—Mr. Bennett.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Stand.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have no objection that this motion should stand, but I would remind the House that this is the fourth time the order has been called, and if we are to have a short session, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will agree with me that the government will have to ask for another day very shortly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) is not in the House now, and that is the reason the motion cannot be proceeded with to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well, it stands.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GENERAL HUTTON AND LT.-COL. SAM. HUGHES.

On the order being called for return of correspondence, &c., between General Hutton and Lt.-Col. Sam. Hughes.—Mr. Hughes.

Mr. S. HUGHES (North Victoria). I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that this matter should be allowed to stand for some time yet, as there are two letters which I have not now in my possession, and for which I have written to the other side of the water. If the right hon. gentleman allows the motion to stand for a few days more, I shall be prepared to take it up.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It stands for to-day.

He said : In moving for the papers in connection with this matter, one or two words are due by way of explanation, and I think an explanation is also due from the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr.

Tarte), or from some member of the government in regard to the very curious circumstances connected with the attempt to obtain from the government some details of the expenditure of about half a million dollars of public moneys in connection with the two telegraph routes in the northern portion of British Columbia and the Yukon. In the discharge of my duties as a member of parliament last year, I made an effort to obtain information upon some facts, which if they are correct suggest that there has been a scandalous waste of public money, and that there had not been proper supervision over the expenditure. I was immediately met in a spirit far different from that which I would have expected from a self-respecting government. There appears to be a most extraordinary effort, not merely to keep from parliament the information to which it is entitled on this subject, but immediately that a member of this House endeavours to obtain full information on matters coming to his notice touching the expenditure of this money, it would seem that he must be prepared to be the object of attack and slander. Last session Mr. Bergeron, then a member of the House, failed to obtain the information, and I succeeded in getting from the Prime Minister a pledge that the information would be given ; but instead of the information being given to the House, a telegram was read in my absence by the present member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) —read contrary to the rules of this House, and contrary to the practice that should obtain in connection with the discharge of the responsible duties of members of parliament—and in that telegram I was accused of having uttered a false slander, or, with having repeated a falsehood on the floor of the House, although I had taken pains to say that while the information that had reached me was serious, I would take no responsibility whatever in connection with the facts mentioned. The Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) asked me if I was speaking from my own knowledge, and as 'Hansard' shows, I took care to say that Mr. Charleson (whose name is involved) should not be unfairly attacked in the House, that such was not at all my intention ; that this information had been brought to my notice. He occupied a position as a public servant who was given very large powers and a very large discretion in connection with an exceedingly large sum of public money ; and I pressed, both in his interest and in the interest of the public, for the immediate communication of the facts by the government to the House. Not that I wished to pin Mr. Charleson in an unenviable position ; not that I anticipated that his character would not be completely established when the return was brought down ; but for every reason I urged that the return should be brought down. Promises were made from time to time, and those promises were not complied with. Although this subject was brought to the attention of parliament as long ago as February of last session by Mr. Bergeron, what happened ? First of all, he asked a question in detail, which involved reflections on Mr. Charleson and on the Department of Public Works, as many of these questions, if they are not answered or explained satisfactorily, do involve reflections on the responsible head of the department. These questions, instead of being answered, were met by a request on the part of the Minister of Public Works to move for a return, as is often done ; and Mr. Bergeron turned his question into the form of a notice of motion. Time and again in my presence Mr. Bergeron attempted to move that motion, and at the request of the government the motion stood. It stood until so many private members' days were made government days that it became a certainty that the motion could never be put ; and consequently, the motion was dropped in order to comply with another rule of the House, so that when the House was in Committee of Supply or on going into Supply, there could be a discussion on the subject of that notice of motion. Finding, however, that that would be unfair to all, I, in the absence of Mr. Bergeron, asked the Prime Minister in this House if he would permit me to move for these papers summarily, without having to wait till motions were called. As I understood, the government did not object to that, and I said I would allow that to stand as a notice ; but, later on, when I was about to make the motion, the Prime Minister took objection to my making a motion without its going on the Order paper, which, as all those familiar with parliamentary practice will understand, meant that during that session motions could not be moved ; but, although the Prime Minister took the objection, he agreed across the House that he would see that these papers were gathered together and brought down, in order that before we reached the Public Works estimates, in charge of which was the Hon. Postmaster General, the House would have full information on these matters. The papers not coming down, an appeal was again made by myself to the Treasury benches ; and the Postmaster General stated, and in so far exculpated the Prime Minister, that the Prime Minister had, in accordance with his agreement across the floor of the House, sent word to the Department of Public Works to press on the preparation of those papers, and have them laid before the House on the earliest possible day ; and the Postmaster General said he had repeated those directions to the department. Time went on ; the papers were not brought down ; they have not reached the House of Commons yet ; so that on the day that this House met, I put a question to the Minister of Public Works referring to the pledge of the Prime Minister and the pledge of the Postmaster General when acting Minister of Public Works, promising those papers at the earliest possible day, the last promise being in June, 1900 ; and I was more than astounded when the Minister of Public Works began again the tactics of last session, and told me to put my notice on the paper, which I have done. And so it will take time, we do not know how long, if the practice of last session is followed, in order to get these papers brought down. I would not have referred at such length to this matter were it not for the invidious position in which it was attempted, unfairly, to place me. What is to be the rule in this House ? Are hon. gentlemen on either side of you, Sir, to be encouraged or discouraged in bringing to the only place where such matters can be satisfactorily settled, and the facts cleared up, matters involving often the character of public servants, matters whispered at the corners of the streets or published in the newspapers, and which, if true, show that there is something rotten in the state of Denmark ? Or, is every hon. gentleman supposed, before he ventures to inquire how the public money is expended, to be bound to hold a court of investigation off his own bat, to summon before him gentlemen supposed to have knowledge of the matters, and obtain from them solemn declarations ? Though I have been in parliament for some years, I have never yet heard of such a suggestion; and if the House listened to the telegrams which were read here, contrary to the rules of the House, as I have said, it would appear that my idea of the position and the rights and responsibilities of a member of parliament is entirely wrong ; because, while these papers were withheld by the government, their supporters were permitted to read these insulting and improper communications to the House, criticising and reflecting on the position taken by me, whereas, in fact, as I have endeavoured to explain, I made no charge, and I have made no charge now ; but I did bring forward as a formal motion for information in the possession of the government, the facts or the statements which had come to my knowledge, and in regard to which I assumed it to be not merely my duty, but primarily the duty of the government, to give the most immediate and perfect investigation possible under the circumstances ; and I do not think it was just to the officers whose names are covered by my motion, Mr. Charleson, for example, or any of the others connected with the expenditure of that public money under him, that these matters should have been permitted by the government to have stood so long without the House being given the official information which is in the hands of the government. For instance, take this statement in regard to the second branch of Mr. Charleson's work. I referred immediately last year—though my motion now covers both matters—to the telegraph line from Bennett to Dawson, in regard to which statements, which were in everybody's mouth, were made to me, as I stated then, by men in Mr. Charleson's employ ; that is to say, statements touching the contracts for telegraph poles, that while those contracts were let by Mr. Charleson, and the poles were strewn along the route, the trees were used, and very properly used, for stringing the line over a large portion of the route. Nevertheless, the country paid for the poles, which will never be used, but which will rot before they are needed for the line. Things like that suggest not only incompetency, but a great deal more. I do not, however, undertake to vouch for any of those statements, and I ask that immediate light be let into this matter from government sources, to which this gentleman was bound to report. Then, there were matters connected with the charters of one or two tugs or small boats. All of these things were suggested in detail, the fullest exposure of the information in my possession was made, and the Order paper contains those statements without any explanation having been given at the hands of the government during a whole session, from February until July.

Now comes this statement, that with regard to the other contract, involving a large sum of money, for the line from Quesnel in British Columbia to Telegraph Creek at Atlin, so scandalous had been the transaction, and so great the incompetence, an incompetence amounting to wrong-doing, that the line has gone seventy miles beginning at the two termini of the line, and they cross each other with seventy miles of country between them. That may be a myth, but if it be true, the money of the public is being wasted, and we should have the assistance of the government in coming to a conclusion.

It is not sufficient to say that newspapers very often make misstatements. It has been the Imperial practice to bring to the attention of the government rumours in the press that seem to be well sustained, when they affect the expenditure of the people's money, and that such rumours should be promptly and fully investigated and satisfactorily answered by the responsible members of the government.

We have in the Auditor General's Report of this year the items of vouchers for a very large expenditure of this money. These papers ought to be ready now if the ministers have any authority whatever, for we have had the hon. the Postmaster General stating that in June last, in compliance with the Prime Minister's request, he gave directions to have them immediately prepared ; and if they are ready, I would like to have them brought down to the House at the earliest possible moment.

I understand that Mr. Charleson is here. At any rate he was here a few days ago. Last session he was here and disappeared, and no doubt his duties called him away, but it would be a great convenience, in connection with the proper auditing of these items in the Auditor General's Report, touching an expenditure of $300,000 or $400,000, under the direction of Mr. Charleson, that he should be here. He was given —probably necessarily so—the widest possible powers, and he ought to be present, in view of the fact that many of the matters covered by my motion affect him personally. Therefore, in his interest, as well as that of the public, every expedition should be used so that an audit may be made in the most effective manner.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). All the papers that have been asked for will be brought down without any delay, and then my hon. friend will be found to have again made statements to the House for which there is no foundation. If he will permit me to use the word without any offence, I think it is unfair to use such big words as 'scandalous' before the papers are brought down. If anything is wrong, the time will come when that wrong will be shown, but before anything is proved—and nothing will be proved—I say again it is unfair to make statements of the kind the hon. gentleman has indulged in.

Mr. Charleson has directed those two important works very efficiently. He has constructed the line between Bennett and Dawson, a length of 650 miles, and has been complimented all over the country on the diligence he has shown. During last season he had constructed no less than 1,350 miles of telegraph lines under very great difficulties indeed. Every precaution was taken by the department. An accountant of the Department of Public Works was with him all the time, the Auditor General sent one of his officers with him to look over the accounts, and I am quite sure that when the papers are brought down, all the accusations made—because these are accusations—will be found to have no foundation whatever. I do not see that it will serve any good purpose to discuss the question at greater length, but I must say that it is no encouragement to public officers to find that they are treated in the way my hon. friend treats officers who have after all accomplished great things. The construction of these lines is considered a deed of great ability. There is to-day only a small gap of about fifty miles not completed. That gap will be completed as soon as the season permits, and I expect that by the first of July next we will have telegraphic communication from Ottawa to Dawson City.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. the Minister of Public Works will not be permitted to throw across the floor of the House such insulting observations with regard to myself without, at any rate, my resenting his conduct in that regard. By what authority does he state that I will again be found to have made assertions not based on fact.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I challenge the hon. gentleman to point out a single matter concerning which I have made false assertions in this House. If he were familiar with the English language he would have understood—perhaps he did understand me—but if he did he would certainly not have said that I made one charge against Mr. Charleson. If the English language is capable of expressing what I sought to say, all I did say was that if the allegations covered by my motion were true, they involved scandalous reflection, not so much on Mr. Charleson, as on the government for having withheld the information required. I said that it was unfair to Mr. Charleson or to any officer in the employ of any department that these matters should be allowed to stand over their heads. I did not say that Mr. Charleson was on his defence, but simply suggested that it was the duty of the government to bring down the fullest information in their possession, even though that information should involve some reflection on the officers of the government or their political head, and it is the political head who is in a most unenviable position. He it is who is responsible for having withheld this information. If there be any justification for the suggestion that there has been an intentional withholding of the information—and the facts seem to warrant it—then the reflection is entirely, so far as this House is concerned, upon the head of the Public Works Department.

My use of the word 'scandalous,' which seems to have excited the hon. Minister of Public Works, though, I supposed, he should have become accustomed by this time to that word—when I used that word, I did not say that the acts of any man under him were scandalous. I said that in the acts of those under him, if the statements made in the reports were correct, there was a very great scandal. And I want to say this before I sit down, and say it in connection with these acts, as in connection with others that come under review of the House or of the Public Accounts Committee—I shall be delighted to find that there is not the slightest foundation for any of the suggestions in that motion. I have never met Mr. Charleson and never heard of him in connection with anything else than this public business. His character may have been, and may be now, all that his friends claim it to be. But, as I say, under the circumstances, even if his character is white as snow, when he has to do with the expenditure of a large sum of public money, and when the matter comes before a member of the House, it is his bounden duty to press, as I do, for the fullest information, and to inquire into the matter to the very bottom.

Motion agreed to.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PAY OF THE MEN OF 'C' BATTERY.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto) moved for :

Copies of all papers, telegrams, &c., respecting the pay of the men of 'C' Battery, Canadian Artillery, which served in South Africa ; or respecting the deduction of any portion of the pay of the men or any of them.

He said : I make the motion at the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Mr. Borden). I had hoped that it would be possible to get the information by a series of questions which I placed upon the Paper a few days ago ; but it was the hon. minister's wish that the information should be obtained by presenting this motion. I may say, as justification for doing so, that grave dissatisfaction exists among a great number of the members of the battery who allege that they were not treated as generously as they ought to have been treated. They claim that when they volunteered their services to assist Her Majesty's forces in South Africa, they did not haggle over the terms of their engagement, and, consequently, they had a right to expect that the government of Canada would live up to the spirit as well as the letter of the Act of Parliament under which their pay was ordered. The provision for paying them may be found in the schedule of the Act passed last session, making provision for the expenses of the volunteers who were serving with Her Majesty's forces in South Africa. From what I can gather from those who have interviewed me, and who complain of the treatment they have received, a unique condition of affairs exists. It is claimed that a large percentage of the men of the battery assigned their pay, before leaving Canada, to their relatives or friends, and that these have received the full pay to which they were entitled ; while the men who did not make an assignment have received practically nothing from the hands of the government of Canada since they arrived at Cape Town on their way to the front. 'C' Battery was engaged with Col. Plumer's column, and spent a considerable portion of its time in operating in the territory of the colony of Rhodesia. I understand that the climatic conditions existing there are of the worst character, that it is the worst place in Africa for malaria and fever; and that it was difficult for the men, in passing through that territory, to obtain any provisions or any little comforts, more difficult than if they had been on service in any other part of the territory in which the campaign was carried on. The Rhodesian government, from what I have been informed, first proposed to give each man who took part with Col. Plumer's column a grant of land. They afterwards changed their proposition and voted a lump sum to be given to those who operated in Rhodesian territory in that column. No portion of this money was paid to the men of the battery until two or three days before they reached Halifax on their way home. It was then paid to them by the officer whose duty it was to make the disbursement. The sum paid to each gunner or private, I believe, was between $130 and $140. When the men of the battery arrived at Halifax, they were informed that checks for the Canadian pay due them were deposited in their envelopes, together with their discharge, but these checks were removed from the envelopes and the men were requested to give their names and addresses and were told that the money coming to them would be forwarded to them in due course. It was evidently the intention of the government of Canada to pay these men the sum that had accumulated and was standing at their credit, at the time they arrived back from South Africa ; and the men are rather at a loss to understand what was the cause of the change in the determination of the government. I do not desire to take up the time of the House, but these are the facts as I understand them. If I have stated them correctly, the government has been guilty of an ungenerous act—may I use the word, of an picayune act ?—in depriving the men of this sum on the plea that Canada is to pay only the difference between the rate named in the schedule of the Act and that which they received from the British government during their service in South Africa. I hope the government will decide to reverse their order and send the men checks for the amounts coming to them. The men state that, while the volunteers from Australia and New Zealand who formed part of the Plumer column were equally beneficiaries of the Rhodesian government, the governments of Australia and New Zealand made no deduction of their pay when they returned to their own country. If the men have stated the facts correctly, they have made out a strong case ; and I hope the minister will announce the intention of the government, notwithstanding the fact that the Rhodesian government has given the money I have stated, not to withhold from the men a sum equivalent to the difference between Imperial pay and the pay guaranteed to them by the Canadian government.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). I think it is hardly fair of my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) to apply the word 'ungenerous' to the treatment of the South African volunteers by the government, or to speak of the government 'depriving' certain members of the contingent of their proper pay. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the statute of last session prescribed the amount the men who went to South Africa in our various contingents were to be paid, and the manner of that payment. The matter was fully discussed in this House; and in the statute under which $2,000,000 was voted, an order in council was incorporated prescribing a maximum of pay to be given to these men and providing that should the imperial pay fall short of that prescribed amount it should be made up out of the amount voted by parliament. The statute was very clear on the point, it seems to me. Explaining the word expenditure' in this statute it says it includes:

(b) The pay and allowances of each such volunteer (both before and after the date of his debarkation in South Africa) at the rates named in the order in council dated the thirteenth day of March, one thousand nine hundred, set forth in the schedule of this Act, the provisions of which order in council are hereby approved and confirmed.

Now, so far as 'C' Battery, which is immediately under discussion, is concerned, the pay of the men of that battery was limited by clause B of section 1 of the order in council, which is a part of the Act, to 75 cents for each private, and the difference between the Imperial pay and 75 cents was to be paid by this government, either directly to the men after their return, after their service was over, or if they assigned their claim to any of their dependents in this country, it was to be paid as the service progressed. Now it turns out that 'C' Battery served in Rhodesia under Imperial pay. That, I think, is a vital question to this whole argument, whether the pay was, in the sense contemplated by the statute, Imperial pay under the Imperial warrant. I have asked that question of the officials in my department, and they inform me that there is no question but that the pay received by 'C' Battery for their services in South Africa, which was five shillings a day per man, was Imperial pay in the sense mentioned in this section. Now, the fact is that the men of 'C' Battery received five shillings a day; the fact is that the Department of Militia is limited by the statute from which I have just read to 75 cents per day per man. How then is it possible for the government, under the statute, to pay these men additional when they have already received a very large amount in excess of the total amount that they are authorized to receive in Imperial pay and additional pay from Canada, when, in fact, they have already received far more than the amount that we are authorized to give? That is the question which I had to face, and I am advised by the officers of my department, that under this statute we had no authority whatever to pay those men anything additional.

The hon. gentleman has said that a large percentage of the men of 'C' Battery have received more than the others. It is true that about one-third of the men, on going away, as in the case of all the contingents, assigned their additional pay, that is, the pay they were to receive over and above the Imperial pay, to their dependents in this country; and the Militia Department paid them in ignorance of the fact—which should, I think, have been reported to this department by the officers of 'C' Battery—but, at any rate, in ignorance of the fact that the men were already in receipt of more money than we were authorized to pay. The fact is that, in my judgment, and in the judgment of my officers, instead of the government of Canada being under an obligation to pay more money to the two-thirds, the one-third who have received it ought properly to return to the treasury that money which they have improperly received. That is the situation as viewed by my department, and which I endorse. The hon. gentleman says that cheques were made out, and taken down to Halifax to be handed to these men. That is quite true. It was not until these men landed in Halifax that the officers of the department were aware that they had already received more pay than was authorized by statute. Then, of course, the cheques were withheld, and were destroyed. More than that, I may say that the officer in command of the battery, as I am informed by the accountant of my department, who was present at the time, the moment the battery landed at Halifax, told the officers of the Militia Department that the battery had already received more pay than was authorized by statute, that they were perfectly satisfied, that the additional pay was not expected and should not be handed to them. Now, I make that statement here as having been reported to me, I have it from the accountant of my department. So, I think, in view of what I have said, that the government is not fairly chargeable with haggling or with ungenerous treatment, or with having deprived these men of anything which properly belonged to them.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). May I ask the minister if I understand him to say that the men received pay from the Imperial government at the amount of five shillings per day in addition to the Rhodesian bounty?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, there was no Rhodesian bounty, it was daily pay at five shillings, and that pay was, strictly speaking, according to the letter of the law, as I am informed, and was paid within the meaning of the term 'Imperial pay' under the Imperial warrant.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). A few days ago I was induced to place on the Notice paper a question respecting the matter which is referred to in the motion of the member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). I was induced to do so on account of a communication which I had received from a member of 'C' Battery who resided in the county I have the honour to represent. I then discovered that these cases were quite numerous, and I was anxious to ascertain the facts with reference to these men, because I, like others, thought it a hardship to the men who enlisted with an understanding that the very best pay was to be given to those who went to South Africa and suffered all the hardships that they did, and I thought, at the time the Minister of Militia and Defence answered my question, that his answer rather evaded the whole question. However, I have learned to-day more of the drift of the matter, and the grounds which the hon. gentleman takes. Now, I must confess that I cannot for a moment think that the Rhodesian government intended that the five shillings a day they gave these men, under special and peculiar circumstances, was ever intended to be a part of their pay, or that it was in any sense whatever intended to release either the British government or the Canadian government from paying these men what it was originally intended to give them. What object could that governemnt have in doing so? Were they so flush with money, had they such an abundance of gold in that country, or did they think that the British Empire was too poor and that the Dominion of Canada was too poor to pay these men, and therefore they had to come to their rescue and pay them the deficiency? I cannot look at the matter in that way at all. I can only think that the Rhodesian government, in consideration of the services these men rendered for the protection of property in that country, did not give the five shillings a day as any portion of their pay, but as a bounty—we may call it what we like. It was a gift, it was a present, and ought to be treated as such by the government of this country, who, I think, will yet see their way clear to change the decision they have arrived at, and give these men the full sum that was voted by this parliament a year ago. I trust that they will do so, because there will be fairness in doing so. Certainly, if it transpired that sixty men have been paid in full and some one hundred and twenty men are to receive a very much less sum, there would be a very great deal of dissatisfaction. In behalf of my constituents, and of others, I appeal to the hon. Minister of Militia to reverse his decision, and have no breaking of faith with the men who went to South Africa to fight the battles of the empire.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia whether the British government gave any pay to 'C' Battery?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, nothing outside of the 5 shillings.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). Mr. Speaker, there are two points involved; one is whether the amount paid by the Rhodesian government is Imperial pay within the meaning of our statute. The second point is that, assuming it is Imperial pay within the meaning of our statute, whether, under the circumstances, it would not be better for our government to pay the difference treating it as bounty, rather than have the dissatisfaction existing which now exists. I know that it will involve a considerable sum.

Mr. CLARKE. How much?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. About $17,000.

Mr. BRITTON. Of course, I do not know the exact figure. It is somewhat of a surprise that the matter has been practically decided by the government, as I infer it has been from the answer which the hon. minister makes. I suppose it is under consideration practically and that the matter will be dealt with in a way that will be considered fair to all parties. The other point to which I call attention is that, in some way or other, it has been possible that some men in connection with 'C' Battery have got more pay than others. This is an unfortunate state of matters, because, although it has been paid to those dependent upon them by reason of their pay being assigned, the payment to all intents and purposes, was to themselves. They have got the benefit of it. If these men have received pay to a larger extent, treating it as if this Rhodesian pay were not a matter of bounty, or gift, something different from the Imperial pay, and others did not get the same treatment, there is going to be a felt hardship and wrong done to some of these men. Therefore, I sincerely hope that there will be some remedy found so that all many feel that they are treated fairly and generously in this matter. It is better to lose a few thousand dollars to enable these other men to get their pay according to what was really the intention than that there should be any cause of dissatisfaction on the part of any one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. Minister of Militia (Hon. Mr. Borden) that he must be controlled by the terms of the statute, and if, as a matter of fact, the pay which has been received, is pay provided by Her Majesty's government, it would be necessary that we should have a further vote before the Department of Militia could make the payment to these men which has been advocated by the gentlemen who have spoken. But, one thing that the hon. gentleman did not make clear to me was how it is that the pay provided by the government of Rhodesia is pay provided by Her Majesty's government. It is true that the hon. gentleman tells us that the officers of his department instruct him that such is the case, but, the question whether such is the case depends, in the first place, upon the facts, which I do not think we have had very clearly before the House, and in the second place, upon the construction of this statute as to which officers of his department are possibly no more capable of advising him than some hon. gentlemen in this House. If the government of Rhodesia provided the pay for these men, I do not exactly understand for what reason you can say it was pay provided by Her Majesty's government. The words 'Her Majesty's government' are used in this order in council and in the statute in contradistinction to 'The government of the Dominion of Canada.' It was evidently intended by the words 'Her Majesty's government' to refer to the Imperial government. If this pay was not provided by the Imperial government, it seems to me that the case is an open one for the Minister of Militia, and is one as to which he can deal in the way suggested, because it is a case which has not been definitely dealt with by the statute. I must confess that I think the hon. Minister of Militia might enlighten the House a little more fully at some future date as to what the precise facts are in respect to the pay provided by the Rhodesian government, and then the House will perhaps be in a better position to come to a conclusion as to whether these men should not receive their pay. I agree with what has been said as to the unfortunate condition of affairs in having some of these men paid more than others, and I think it would be extremely desirable on the part of the government to have them all paid alike, even if we went a little beyond the statute of last year. I still think that the hon. Minister of Militia might give us, at some future date, information in regard to the exact facts concerning this pay. What I mean by that is this: suppose that the colony of Natal, or the government of Cape Colony, or any municipality——

Mr. CLARKE. Or individual.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Or individual, as my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) suggests, should in consideration of distinguished services rendered to a colony, or city, or municipality, vote a sum of money to any particular battalion of the contingent that we sent to South Africa, it is certainly perfectly clear that that should not be allowed to reduce the pay which that battalion should receive from this government. The question is whether or not the money which these men received from the Rhodesian government is of that character or whether it is within the terms of this statute pay provided by the Imperial government. If it is the latter I think the hon. Minister of Militia is perfectly right, but if the former, I think he should reconsider his decision.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If I might be allowed to say one word here by way of explanation it will be this ; in the first place it is evidently the spirit of our law that all the men who went to South Africa with the second contingent should receive 75 cents a day. It does not seem to me material where they received it from. The idea was that they should receive 75 cents a day and no more.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, no.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, assuming that the Imperial pay would be below that. There was no other pay to these men ; that is the pay which they received, 5 shillings a day, and the information is that this was Imperial pay at Rhodesian rates. All the men received Imperial pay from the Imperial exchequer at Rhodesian rates, 5 shillings a day.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, it seems to me pre-eminently the case that this motion should prevail, because hon. gentlemen seem to be wandering from the point before the House. It is a motion for certain papers. The remarks made by the hon. Minister of Militia (Hon. Mr. Borden) show clearly that if any decision in reference to it is to be arrived at it is desirable that the papers should come down, so that, with the papers before it, this House can come to a conclusion in regard to it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We will bring the papers down.

Mr. NORTHRUP. So far nothing has been said by the hon. minister to indicate that he will bring the papers down. The moment the motion is adopted the papers will come down, and I venture to say that there is nothing to discuss until they are brought down. I venture to suggest that the hon. minister instead of conferring with his subordinate officers should place the matter before the hon. Minister of Justice, because it is pre-eminently a legal question. Perhaps, when the papers are brought down and the matter comes up it may be settled in the House.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, if the government really desire to settle the question and to treat all these men alike, if there is any doubt about the statute, they can bring in a supplementary Bill this session, or the matter may be dealt with by a clause in the Supply Bill. In that way the men can be fairly treated, as the House desires to see them treated.

Mr. S. HUGHES (North Victoria). Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia (Hon. Mr. Borden) to this aspect of the case. When did this Rhodesian pay begin; did it begin the day they left Cape Town, and when did it end? How far south did these men come before that pay ceased, and when did they get it? Who is the paymaster, and was it all on the one paysheet? These are questions which may very well engage the attention of the minister. I would draw attention to the fact that it would be inadvisable if some of 'C' Battery were to get extra pay and others not. I would also point out that a great many men in the other two batteries feel that they did just as good work, and travelled through just as inhospitable a country and unhealthy a climate as did those men, and yet they were limited to the ordinary pay.

Motion agreed to.

THE YUKON MINING REGULATIONS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved for:

Return in tabular form showing the names of all cases in which an appeal has been taken to the hon. the Minister of the Interior (past and present) under the mining regulations, the date when each appeal was perfected, heard and decided.

He said: The other day the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) stated that the question of sending these appeals to the judicial tribunals was under consideration, and I trust that later on the result of that consideration will be announced. I think the time has come when the question should be discussed, and in view of such discussion it would be most convenient to have this information. I have asked for it in the form that would seem to be most useful, and its preparation will not involve a great deal of labour. Up to the time of the development of the Yukon the appeals, I assume, were few and far between, and consequently the table would be most useful if it began from the period of the first appeal. The Department of the Interior under ordinary circumstances taxes the entire time of any capable and industrious minister apart from these appeals. It has always been the testimony of ministers in charge of that department, that the ordinary business fully occupied the time of the minister and the officials, altogether outside of these judicial functions, and as time goes on it will not, I believe, be in the public interest that the Minister of the Interior should be charged with such matters. The order in council which made the minister the final tribunal in these matters no doubt contemplated originally that these appeals would not be very frequent, and it was passed with a view to the expediency, and the cheapness of the disposal of these matters from the unsettled regions of Canada, but the original intent has no application to the Yukon district of to-day, with its judicial tribunals and the opportunities afforded the residents there to bring these legal questions before the courts. It might very well happen, for there is nothing to prevent it, that a gentleman without any legal training might be head of that department, and it would be rather difficult for him to decide on questions of law. The subject is one of exceeding interest and the object of my motion is to have the information before the House when the question is dealt with.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON—DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved for:

Copies of all reports, letters or communications, not already brought down, from Mr. Ogilvie, commissioner for Yukon district, received by the government of Canada or any member thereof, or by any deputy minister or other officer, in any way respecting the administration of public affairs in the Yukon district.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I would suggest to my hon. friend that he amend his motion so as to have it apply to the papers not already brought down. A very large number of papers comprised in this motion have already been laid on the table, and unless the hon. gentleman wants them recopied there is no necessity for including them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall have very great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in agreeing to the amendment which I understand the hon. minister to move, namely, to add the words 'not already brought down.'

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Copies of all correspondence, telegrams, letters, notes and memoranda exchanged between the Canadian Commissioner at the Paris Exhibition, or any member of the Canadian Commission, and Lord Strathcona, or the Royal Commission, or the Colonial Secretary, in relation to the representation of Canada at the exhibition.—Mr. Bourassa.

List of all railway corporations now doing business in Canada under charter of the Dominion parliament which have received subsidies by cash or land grants or are entitled thereto, and the amount of such subsidy attached to each.—Mr. Smith (Vancouver).

Return showing the amount of the rebate paid on agricultural implements exported from Canada for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899 and 1900, specifying amount paid to each firm in each of those years.—Mr. Roche (Marquette).

Copies of all reports, official memoranda and papers dealing with irregularities, mistakes by order in council or otherwise in the administration of the provisions of Dominion Lands Act in the Yukon district.—Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

ADJOURNMENT—TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I suppose the House is not disposed to go on with Government Orders to-day, as members have not been notified in advance, and, therefore, I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, there is a matter contained in a New York paper to which I wish to direct the attention of the House just for two or three minutes ; and, as we have no other business before us, I think this is the best opportunity to raise this question. It is said that it is rather bad parliamentary form to bring up a question of this kind when the Orders of the Day are called. I do not believe that ; but still, to please my hon. friends on the other side of the House, I bring it up on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPEAKER. Well, I may tell the hon. member that on the motion for the adjournment of the House, the only question to be discussed is whether the House shall adjourn now or not. When the Orders of the Day are called, if a formal motion for adjournment is made, not by a member of the cabinet, but by some other hon. member, in order to bring up a question for discussion, he has a right to discuss that special question ; but on the motion for the adjournment of the House, which is the one made now, I do not think there can be any debate except on the question whether the House shall adjourn now or not.

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, what I wish to say is that the House should not adjourn until they discuss the question which I propose to bring before them ; and time after time members of this House have exercised the right of calling the attention of the government and the country to important matters on the motion to adjourn. I will only take up the time of the House for two or three minutes. In the New York Tribune of yesterday, there is the following despatch :—

St. Petersburg, Feb. 15.—M. De Witte, Minister of Finance, has issued a decree regarding the application of an increased tariff to certain imports from the United States. The decree is based upon the first paragraph of Article 628 of the customs statute.

M. De Witte has proved his ability to hit quick and hard. He was evidently prepared for reprisals before Secretary Gage took final action. M. De Witte sent to the Senate on Wednesday for publication an ordinance levying 30 per cent increased duty on the most important American imports into Russia. The ordinance was published to-day in the 'Official Messenger,' and becomes effective on March 1. This action is greatly regretted in American circles, who anticipate much harm therefrom.

In a despatch from Washington dealing with this question, in the same paper, the following admissions are made :—

The decree is issued in retaliation for Secretary Gage's order imposing a countervailing duty of 32 cents on each pood (about thirty-six pounds), of Russian bounty-paid sugar imported into the United States, and it is believed that a grave crisis has been reached in trade relations between the United States and Russia.

The immediate effect of the Russian decree, when it becomes operative on March 1, will be to increase by 50 per cent the duties on American steel and iron goods. These goods already enjoy two separate reductions, 30 per cent and 20 per cent from the conventional duties. The articles referred to in the Russian decree are machinery and tools of every kind, manufactures and products of cast iron and steel. The addition of 50 per cent to the duty will, it is thought, prove practically prohibitory.

Mr. TALBOT. What has all that to do with Canada ?

Mr. MACLEAN. What it has to do with Canada is this. To-day we have grave issues with the United States, and if we follow the example of the Russian government and Mr. De Witte, and give the Americans tariff for tariff, reciprocity of tariffs, we will bring them to time. You will never get the Alaskan boundary question settled satisfactorily unless you do this. The way the Americans will settle the Alaskan boundary question will be the way the United States Senate attempted to settle the question of the Nicaragua canal the other day, unless hon. gentlemen opposite have stiffer backs ; it will be by an Act of the Senate of the United States instead of by negotiation. The point I wish to make is that we must have a little De Witteism in our government. We must have a tariff with a sliding scale, which will be friendly to a friendly government, but will be protective as against an unfriendly government. I do not say that we should go to work and revise our tariff immediately.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. I mean that I cannot bring forward a revised tariff ; that is for the government. But I wish to say that if the government expect to settle the questions that are unsettled to-day between Canada and the United States, there is only one way to do it, and that is by means of the tariff. There is no way in which you can touch the Americans so quickly as through their pocket. If they find their goods barred out of Canada, they will quickly come to time. Why, what would that mean to them ? In 1896 we imported $57,000,000 worth of goods from the United States. That sum has grown to-day to $96,000,000 or more, and it is growing steadily. Canada is the best outside market the United States have. But as long as we are fools enough to let their goods come into this country under the present low tariff, while they put up a high tariff to bar out our goods, we shall never get fair treatment from them. The most important question which can be brought up in this House to-day is the question of some sort of tariff reform which will put us in the same position towards the Americans as the so-called out-of-date government of Russia enjoys. That government has a whip in its hand, and it is using it with great effect. The industrial community of the United States is in such a state of alarm that there will soon be all sorts of representations made to Washington, and the American government will be going down on their knees to Russia. I see my hon. frend the First Minister laughing in a jocular way, and the knight from Oxford is looking rather sad over it. But this is a question worthy of their attention, and they have before them a very good example of the way to settle the Alaskan boundary question and to compel the Americans to respect our fishery rights—by treating them in all respects as they treat us.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN CONTINGENTS.

Mr. WALLACE. Before the House adjourns, I would like to call the attention of the right hon. First Minister to the following paragraph in the Montreal Gazette of last Saturday :

Loyal Australia.

Fifth Victorian Contingent of 1,500 Men Sails.

Melbourne, Feb. 15.—The fifth Victorian contingent, 1,250 men all told, sailed for South Africa to-day.

Is it the intention of the government to send another contingent from Canada to South Africa ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is a rule of parliament not to bring up more than one subject on a motion to adjourn. I would also remind the hon. gentleman on another feature, that if he wants to put a question to the government, there is another rule requiring him to give notice.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 4.45 p.m.

Mr. MACLEAN.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Secretary of State for Canada for the year ending June 30, 1900.—Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

EAST QUEEN'S, P.E.I., ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the Hon. Mr. Justice Hodgson and the Hon. Mr. Justice Fitzgerald, two of the judges selected for the trial of election petitions, pursuant to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, a certificate relating to the electoral district of East Queen's, in the province of Prince Edward Island, by which the said election is declared to be void.

I have further to inform the House that the trial judges having reported :—

(c) That there is reason to believe that corrupt practices, namely, treating, extensively prevailed at the election to which the petitions relate.

(d) We are of opinion that the inquiry into the circumstances of the said election has been rendered incomplete by the action of the parties to the said petitions, and that further inquiry as to the extent such corrupt practices prevailed is desirable.

I have, in conformity with section 48, chap. 9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, withheld the issue of my warrant for a new election pending any action to be taken by the House in the matter.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending June 30, 1901, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, February 19, 1901.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved :

That the Message of His Excellency, together with the supplementary estimates for the current year, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—ASH WEDNESDAY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That when the House adjourns this day, it stand adjourned until Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—THE RAILWAY QUESTION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, before we enter into the consideration of that motion, I desire to bring an amendment before the attention of the House, dealing with the question of the government ownership of railways in this country. I have framed an amendment on the narrowest lines possible in order to elicit the fullest discussion, and in order to present the matter before the House and the public in a wide and clear manner. When, the other day, I brought this question to the attention of the House by moving the adjournment of the House, I was criticised because it was said that I was out of order, and that I was springing the question upon the House and the country. I am here to justify what I did then, because what I did then secured for me a very prompt expression of opinion from one end of the country to the other, and if I am moving to-day in a more regular way, it is because, to-day, I have at my disposal an expression of opinion that comes from one end of Canada to the other, and which proves the gravity and indicates the importance of this question, and which justifies me in bringing it up now on a motion to go into Supply. In the short week which has elapsed since I first made the motion, I have had expressions of opinion from all over the country ; from the press and from the public men of Canada endorsing my course ; and, in the discussion to-day these expressions of opinion will throw a great deal of light upon the subject. What is the question to which I direct the attention of the House and of the country ? It is the gravity of the fact that the great railroads of Canada are liable at any moment to pass into the control of that great monopolistic syndicate which has recently acquired control of the great railways of the United States. The future of Canada is involved in that question, and therefore if I take up a little time of the House in trying to make my position good, I trust hon. gentlemen will pardon me. Let me first give a sketch of these men in the United States who control the railways, and I shall do so by way of illustration. At the head of that combination is Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York, who to-day is the collossus of banking in the world. There is not a proposition that he will not undertake; he frequently puts schemes through which involve from fifty million dollars to a thousand million dollars. He commands almost the entire banking support of the United States, and he has associated with him men of great experience and capacity ; men like the head of the Vanderbilt family, owning thousands of miles of railroads in the United States; men like Mr. George Gould, who controls thousands of miles of railway, as well as the telegraph system of the United States largely ; men like Mr. Rockefeller, the head of the Standard Oil Company, who also controls thousands of miles of railway ; men like Mr. Harriman, also a great railway owner, and these men, along with others, form to-day, the most powerful combination that ever existed in the United States. Within the past few weeks they have consolidated the Vanderbilt lines, the Gould lines, all the Pacific lines, including the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Great Northern, and the Southern Pacific. These men not only control the railroads of the United States, but they control also other great corporations. Within a week they have secured control of the iron and steel production of the United States, capitalized at $950,000,000. They control the oil production of the United States, through the Standard Oil Company; they control the copper production of the United States ; they control all the coal fields in the Eastern States and the Southern States, and the coal fields of Ohio, and they are preparing to control the ship-building of the United States. There is not a single proposition of the first magnitude that these same men do not seek to control.

What is still more significant to the people of this country to-day is the fact that they also control the service of Mr. C. M. Hays, who was the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, and who is to-day to be the manager of the consolidated system—a man whom all the world admits is the greatest administrator of railway in America and who, having been in the service of the Grand Trunk, and knowing the transportation problems of Canada, as no other man in America knows them, is in a position by reason of his connection with this great syndicate and his knowledge of our railway, to lay out a scheme whereby in the twinkling of an eye the two great Canadian railways could pass into the hands of this syndicate. And even if they do not pass into the hands of this syndicate, they could be greatly injured by him.

They also control steamship and river lines of steamers, on the Pacific, on the Atlantic and on many of the inland waters of the United States.

Now, Sir, if they can control the railways of the United States, I am here to-day to argue that they can control the railways of Canada in a very easy manner, and since I raised this question last week, we have had the opinion of Mr. Shaughnessy, the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to show how easy it would be for this powerful United States syndicate to control our Canadian railroads. In an authentic interview given out by Mr. Shaughnessy, he makes this statement :

Mr. T. G. Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was asked by a Herald representative to-day as to what he thought of the possibility of the Canadian Pacific Railway being acquired by a powerful syndicate of United States capitalists, as was stated in the course of the debate on government ownership of railways in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon.

'Oh, it is quite possible,' continued Mr. Shaughnessy; 'there is nothing whatever to prevent American capitalists, if they have got the money, from buying the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is for sale in London and Montreal, and on Berlin and other continental bourses. Having acquired the stock, there is nothing to prevent these gentlemen from controlling the policy of the company, and exercising their control for the advancement of United States interests.'

Now, not only can these men control these railways at a comparatively small cost—as Mr. Shaughnessy has said, of $30,000,000—but they can control these railways by the simple act of leasing them, for which they will only have to pay a very small consideration. We therefore see that these men can any day acquire control of both of our great Canadian roads for a mere nominal sum. And not only that they could ruin the Canadian manufacturer and the Canadian citizen by the local rates which they could impose on our local traffic and by the preferences which they could give to American products and manufactures coming into this country. They could if they liked, in this strong position hold us in the hollow of their hand. We would all be their serfs and their servitors.

And if they once started to gobble up our railways, they could gobble up our great lines of production, just as they have got control of the iron and steel and copper and petroleum production in the United States.

We have been discussing the status of these roads from another point of view, and recently it has been pointed out that their management at the present day is a menace to our country. It has been charged against them, the Grand Trunk Railway particularly, that they were discriminating against Canadian ports, and rendering almost useless the great sums of money we have spent on our canal system, on our harbour improvements, and on the deepening of the St. Lawrence route. If these railroads can do that to-day, how much more injurious would it be to this country were they to pass into the hands of a United States syndicate. To-day the fight is between the American shipping ports as against the St. Lawrence route, and do you think that if these men who have all their interests bound up in the ports of New York, Boston, Baltimore and Philadelphia, could get control of the Canadian railways, that they would not use that power to the detriment of Canada. This question is therefore, to us, one of supreme national importance, and that is why I have thus early availed of the opportunity to bring it before the parliament of Canada. Why, this syndicate could render nugatory the effects of all the money we have spent in building up our canals and in trying to create great shipping ports in Montreal, in Quebec, in St. John, and in Halifax. These men could do all that by spending fifty million dollars in buying the control of our railways, or easier still for them, by leasing the roads. And, Sir, they would have no hesitation in doing it.

My argument in favour of government control of railways is, in the first place, because I wish to stop the unpatriotic management of these roads towards Canada, and in the second place, I wish to try and prevent our railways falling into the hands of United States monopolists. I have two arguments in my favour. First, that these roads on which Canada has spent so much money in the way of subsidies are to-day inimical to the interests of Canada ; and second, that they are liable to fall into the hands of these men in the United States. These, I submit, Sir, are two good reasons in favour of my contention. In order that I may bring the mind of the House clearly to this matter, I propose to read some expressions of public opinion which have been given within the past week on this question. I shall first quote the Hamilton Herald, which says :

Few speeches delivered in the Dominion are more worthy of serious attention than the one which was made yesterday by the member for East York (Mr. Maclean). It was a very bold and radical speech, and a very important one. Mr. Maclean advocated the acquirement by the government of the whole interest in the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway as a means of averting the great danger. The proposition is made not so much as a matter of general national policy as because the nationalization of the railways is the only adequate means of defence against the national danger arising out of new and unexpected conditions. Even more significant and important than Mr. Maclean's advocacy of this policy is Mr. Charlton's tacit endorsation of it. The member for East York has for some years been an advocate of national railways; but Mr. Charlton has never given any hint of favouring such a radical innovation. The member for North Norfolk is a prudent, cautious politician, inclining to conservatism; and the fact that he favours the serious consideration of Mr. Maclean's proposal will go far to save that proposal from ridicule as one of Billy Maclean's fads.

La Patrie on the same day says :

The situation is far from being a desperate one; it is neither dark nor compromising as depicted by fantastic rumours. But the present agitation will open the eyes of those who had refused to see, and will cause those with serious thoughts to give careful attention and efficacious protection to our great natural interests.

Here is an extract from another paper which I think will appeal to the House, namely, the Montreal Witness :

There are few persons who have been observing how the interests that are developing Canada have been falling into few hands, and many of these foreign, who have not wondered what might be the effect of it all on self-government and on Canadian nationality. Whether or not there be anything in the fear expressed by Mr. Maclean of the Canadian Pacific Railway falling into the tentacles of the all-absorbing railway octopus now developing in the United States, the bare mention of such a possibility must awaken serious reflections in the minds of all who remember the nature and extent of the sacrifices made by the country to secure the construction of that great transcontinental railway. If such an extraordinary anti-climax to an undertaking, originally designed to knit the scattered provinces together and make this country independent of the United States in matters of transportation, could have entered the minds of the statesmen who projected the railway, we may be sure they would have provided securely against it in the charter and Act of incorporation. The magnitude of the new power which has come into existence on this continent, however, with its unconcealed intention of controlling transportation between the two oceans, gives colour to the apprehensions expressed in parliament, extravagant though they may appear. The Canadian Pacific Railway is of the nature of an Impreial highway, as it is certainly an alternative route between Britain and the east. Such being the fact, its control by foreign and possibly hostile capitalists is a contingency not to be contemplated. Like the Suez canal, as Mr. Maclean says, it is an Imperial necessity. It has long been boasted as Canada's contribution to the empire's defences. It must remain a national enterprise. Mr. Maclean's proposal that this should be accomplished as Lord Beaconsfield secured the key of the east, is one which, should it be the right one, will not perhaps be facilitated by the public proposal of it. In taking the readiest way to answer the Sphinx's riddle and to unlock the Asian mystery, that Oriental magician did not propose at the same time to solve the great economic problem of the west, nor do we know that the way proposed is the right one. We only know that the question is a live one, full of electricity.

I am not going to read all the press opinions which I have, but I wish to read some extracts from an article in the Toronto Globe of only Friday last. The Globe says :

Mr. Shaughnessy says that there is nothing whatever to prevent American capitalists from buying the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is for sale in London, Montreal, and on the Berlin and other European exchanges. Having acquired the stock, there is nothing to prevent them from controlling the policy of the company and exercising their control for the advancement of United States interests. He might have added that there was nothing to prevent them exercising their power to the positive detriment of Canadian interests without overstating the case. The danger is even more immediate, for there is nothing to prevent the present owners of the road, whether they be Canadians, Americans or Germans, from operating the road in such a way as to favour foreign at the expense of domestic enterprises. In fact, the present management have been convicted of such lines of policy on many occasions, not adopted for the purpose of favouring Americans or hurting Canadians, but that they might augment net receipts regardless of consequences. Such restrictions as have been placed on the transfer of stock in the Canadian Pacific Railway agreement seem rather for the protection of the company than to preserve the national character of the road. But even if there was a specific provision against the sale of stock to foreigners, it would be of no avail, for the exactions of a Canadian company would be quite as onerous as any pressure that could be applied by foreigners. The danger lies in the absence of any defence against discrimination injurious to Canada. This defect has been mentioned by Mr. Shaughnessy, and it should be remedied, as far as possible, by the creation of machinery for controlling services and regulating rates.

Here is what the Globe says on government ownership :

With regard to the agitation for government purchase and operation, Mr. Shaughnessy expressed the view that it would be a far better policy to buy out roads like the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk than to subsidize and construct useless lines. He says emphatically that we have had too much wasting of public money in the past for the building of railways which are not only in themselves useless but are positively injurious, inasmuch as they cripple the lines already built. This, he says, is very pernicious, and it would be far preferable that the government should take over the existing lines than that they should build new ones to compete with them. All who have studied the history of competitive railway building in Canada and the United States will see the wisdom of this position. In every case where two roads have been constructed to do the work of one the result has been the maintenance of rates by agreement and the imposition of a double burden on the community. The people have been required to maintain two equipments instead of one, and the greater cost of management has militated against any reduction of rates. If anything has been established and settled by the experience of the past it is that railway competition is not often an effective means of regulating railway charges. Only an unreasoning and destructive obduracy that no business man would be likely to indulge in would justify the government in paralleling existing railways. We may get an exaggerated idea of the waste of parallel roads through the contemplation of railway maps. Unnecessary duplication of roads by the government would be a great waste of capital, and while it would not cost the government any more than the purchase of existing roads, it would mean the destruction of a great amount of capital already invested in the railways.

That is the opinion of the Toronto Globe of Friday last. Here is an extract from a St. John paper, the Gazette—this is directly the opposite of the wind-up of the Globe article :

Perhaps the best way to meet the combination is by the construction of a government line of railway from Montreal to Parry Sound and another from Montreal to the Detroit river. This would prevent railroad combination from charging excessive rates of freight in the most populous sections of Canada and would furnish means of transportation independent of company railroads to the great west. The Gazette is strongly in favour of fast transcontinental railroad owned and operated by the government of Canada. It has been shown time and again that less than one-half of the proceeds of the sale of stocks and bonds of railroads constructed in Canada has gone into the road-bed or equipment of these lines. . . . . The time is not far distant when Canadians will be compelled to grapple with the question of transportation rates, because if we only paid rates proportionate to the cost of moving the freight and allowing a fair interest on the actual cost of the road-bed and equipment, freight rates in Canada would be cut in two. The question is one which requires great consideration and careful legislation. It is a question which the Minister of Railways has already given great consideration, and he will probably be able at an early date to present legislation which will prevent any further inroad on public rights by railroad corporations or combinations.

Here is a brief extract from the London Advertiser, a prominent Liberal paper :

The question thus raised is a very large one, but not less large and formidable would be the proper handling if any remedy could be proposed. But these are the sort of questions which, before the twentieth century is very old, may compel men to sit up and think.

The London News says :

Mr. Maclean has stated that the government, that is the people of Canada, could secure control of the Canadian Pacific by the expenditure of $50,000,000. That looks like a large sum, and it is a large sum, but the question, to the News' mind, is simply whether that money shall be spent now, and the people of Canada be given a chance to transport their goods and do business on a fair basis, or whether we shall wait until the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the other big Canadian roads pass under the control of the United States railroad trust, and then have to be bought out at an enhanced figure.

There are many problems connected with government ownership of railways, and business methods would have to be strictly adhered to in the event of the government securing control of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but these problems will be no easier of solution in the future than now, and meanwhile the plundering of the country by exorbitant rates will have been going steadily on.

The situation has apparently got to be faced. Why not do as Mr. Maclean suggests and face it now?

The next authority I want to quote is the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), who addressed a letter the other day to the Montreal Board of Trade, in which he made the following remarks :

The American railways are equipping themselves in a most energetic and modern manner in order that they may be able to carry cheaper and cheaper every day the western trade to the ports of the United States. I greatly fear that unless we make an earnest effort on behalf of Canada, we will lose much of the benefits and advantages of the improvements that we have made to the St. Lawrence route.

In my humble opinion, we must not lose one moment. The St. Lawrence route must be overhauled, made deeper and wider, and as safe as possible from one end to the other, in order to provide cheap and quick transportation from the west to the European markets.

The more I study the map of Canada the more I feel convinced that the ports on the Georgian Bay are destined to become splendid reservoirs and recipients of trade. All that trade can be secured to the St. Lawrence route if we make the necessary effort.

The consequence, I believe, of what the hon. minister here says cannot be anything else than government ownership.

Let me read just two more newspaper extracts. The Winnipeg Free Press says :

It behooves the people of Canada to take some notice of symptoms that have lately developed among railway companies controlling the chief railways in Canada, of an effort to coerce this country by threatening to injure Canadian ports by transferring their trade and terminals to United States ports. . . . This practically amounts to an attempt to establish a system of terrorism and to frighten the Canadian people from taking steps which they consider proper. It is, therefore, a reasonable thing that the public should look to the government to exercise all possible control over these roads, and by legislation, if possible, prevent them from injuring what they were subsidized to build up and improve.

The St. Thomas Times says :

If the government has no other means of stopping this anti-Canadian policy on the part of the Canadian railways, it should have no hesitation in putting Mr. McNaught's suggestion into practice.

That suggestion is that a preferential tariff should only be allowed on goods that come in by Canadian ports.

The St. John Telegraph of February 15, says :

But the interests of the country, and particularly of these maritime provinces, demand some such radical cure for the present trouble.

The writer in the above quotation refers to Mr. McNaught's remedy for the discrimination by Canadian railways against Canadian ports.

The St. John Telegraph of February 14, says :

The latter idea [the extension of the Intercolonial to the Georgian Bay] was outlined by the Minister of Railways in his speeches in St. John prior to the general elections. Such a movement will check for ever any possibility of American railway magnates monopolizing the constantly increasing transportation of Canadian products to the eastern seaboard.

I can hardly agree in the opinion that the extension of the Intercolonial Railway by the government will settle the question. That would only aggravate the situation, although I have supported in the past and may, under certain circumstances to-day, defend that proposition.

I have one more letter to read, out of many similar ones which I have received :

Dear Sir,—I am much pleased to read of the stand you have taken with reference to the government ownership of railways. The stand you have taken is well chosen, and it is difficult to imagine any other way to escape from the railways of Canada being absorbed by the gigantic combine that evidently has for one of its objects to get hold of and control our railways. Could they accomplish their design, then the independence of the Canadian people will exist in name only. For it is a self-evident fact that if any corporation can control the means of transportation in Canada, they can then dictate their terms in other directions. So far as I can learn, the system of government ownership in some European countries seems to give general satisfaction to the travelling and commercial public. One of the advantages is, that it for ever shuts out all gambling in stocks, and special rates to favoured localities or individuals. As I am a stranger to you, I will refer you to our member, A. E. Vrooman, or Hon. George McHugh; also will add that I am a lifelong Reformer. But your step is in the right direction, and of my own knowledge, know that a large percentage of the people were looking in the direction of government ownership before this movement was inaugurated. So you can easily see how much more interest will be taken in this matter now. You are at liberty, if you see fit, to use this letter for any purpose that will suit your convenience.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the name ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Minthorne, of Oakwood.

I think, Sir, I have proved to the House that a serious problem is before us. I think I have proved, by quoting the leading newspapers of the country and by a reference to the language used by two members of the government, that we have to grapple with a very serious problem; and having made that point, I think it is incumbent on me to make some practical suggestion. That practical suggestion is that there can be no radical cure of these evils except government ownership. You will says perhaps that government ownership involves a very large financial proposition. I said the other day that it would take $50,000,000 to acquire the Canadian Pacific Railway. I spoke wide of the mark intentionally, and have since found out that less than $30,000,000 invested on the stock exchanges to-day would secure control of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also that for less than $20,000,000 you can secure control of the shares of the Grand Trunk Railway. But, there is a much more simple proposition, which perhaps will surprise the House and the public. I say in all seriousness that the government of Canada, which is controlling the Intercolonial Railway, the national system of railways, can obtain a lease of the Grand Trunk Railway for $1 a year, and the Canadian Pacific Railway for $1 a year, and that is in substance all the financial obligation involved. The government can lease these two great roads for $1 per year each and get a lease for 999 years, if it so desires. Such transactions are going on every day. But the government would have this to do, and I am not concealing that from the House and the country : it would have to assume the liabilities of these roads. But, who is assuming the liabilities to-day ? It is the people of Canada, for it is the traffic that sustains these roads. The bondholders, the shareholders have not assumed them, but the people who use the roads are meeting these liabilities, and there is only one portion of these liabilities concerning which one of these companies is in default, and that is the first shares of the Grand Trunk Railway. So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, however, every dollar of liability in connection with it is being paid, and paid promptly, and yet the shareholders of that road would be willing today to lease that great enterprise, which has about $300,000,000 invested in it, to the people of Canada for $1 per year. That is a very simple proposition.

Mr. BRITTON. Are you authorized to make that offer ?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, but if the hon. the Finance Minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) will authorize my hon. friend to make inquiries, I believe he will find that such an offer would be accepted. That is the way I meet the question. How will you raise the fifty million dollars? I ask the Minister of Finance : Have you two dollars a year to spare? If you have, you can control both the great railway enterprises of this country. I rather prefer the method of purchase to the acquirement of the lines by lease. But, they can be purchased—both of these great lines—for less than $50,000,000 ; and that is no great difficult burden for Canada to assume at this day ; we have faced larger undertakings, and have carried them out successfully. So far as financial questions are concerned, there is very little to prevent the country acquiring both roads. If we acquire the shares of these roads and assume all the responsibilities, the time will soon come when the liabilities can be converted so as to be a much smaller burden upon the people. Five per cent obligations can be converted into three per cent obligations—not all at once, of course, for some of the outstanding bonds have years to run ; and the sub-leases of the smaller sections also will not be renewable for years to come—but, as the bonds and leases mature, they can be converted at much smaller figures, and thus, without confusion the liability can be made to bear a much smaller percentage of interest and the traffic will be relieved of a very considerable burden.

Mr. HEYD. How much liability should we have to assume ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The total liability of the Canadian Pacific, so far as I can make out is $300,000,000. But that rests upon us to-day, and the people are paying the interest upon it in the traffic rates. But, though we bear this burden, we have nothing to say about the management of the road. When we pay the piper we should have the privilege of controlling the road.

Mr. COCHRANE. We have had experience in running railways.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is the point I was coming to, and that is the point of my amendment. And, on this point I expect the support of the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair), and the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), because we have been informed in an official way, that they are prepared to extend the national system that we have to-day. I am prepared to extend that system if necessary, for our national railway is the best asset we have; and I hope the country will extend it and expand it. My amendment is, in substance, that, as we have a national road, the first thing we ought to do is to depoliticalize its administration. We do not want politics in the Intercolonial Railway; we do not want members of this House making appointments in connection with that road, or taking part in fixing its rates. I do not say that these things take place to-day, but I have heard that they do. The first step towards nationalizing the railways is to depoliticalize the railway we have. I do not mean to say that the Minister of Railways shall not sit in the House and be responsible to this House for that road. But what I do say, is that he should turn the administration of the railway over to first-class railway men who will allow no politics in the management. Is that possible? I believe it is; and I am going to quote the opinion of a very prominent railway man on this point. I do not wish to give his name, but nearly all who hear me can guess who he is. He is said to be the biggest railway man we have in Canada. Happening to meet him, I said to him, 'What do you think of nationalizing the Canadian Pacific Railway and also including the Grand Trunk Railway, if necessary?' He said: 'It might be the best way out of it; but you cannot do that if you drag it into politics.' I then asked him, 'Is it possible to administer the railway without dragging it into politics?' His answer was, 'It is.' He is a man of great force and rapidity of thought; and he named over fifteen men, going from the maritime province, across the continent picking them out here and there. They were all first-class men. And he said, 'Take these fifteen men; give them $1,000 a month as pay for going to a meeting once a week; let them appoint a general manager, the best man they can get, and pay him $50,000 a year if necessary; and I believe you might run the Canadian railways with more economy and with better service to the country than by any other possible system.'

Mr. TALBOT. Give us his name.

Mr. MACLEAN. You will have to take my word for it. I am giving you merely a conversation, and would not care to take more liberties with it than to say the gentleman I refer to is a very prominent railway man of this country.

Mr. MACLEAN.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we know who it is as well as if he had been named.

Mr. MACLEAN. I suppose so. It was our friend Sir William Van Horne. In conversation the other night he said that if the road could be taken out of politics and administered by a board of the kind he had suggested, it would be possible to administer it successfully and with the greatest benefit to the people of Canada.

Now, as I pointed out the other day, we in Canada can carry out the proposition I have made, and do it very easily. We do not need any more legislation; we can do it under the legislation we have. We do not even need more money; we can do it with the money we have. In the United States, where there is a great movement in favour of the nationalization of railways, there are serious constitutional difficulties in the way. I have already said that I do not see how the American people could nationalize their railways without a revolution. But we have already started, and have only to continue in our present course, and, in a very short time all the roads can be taken over by the Dominion.

The proposition has been made, and the name of the Minister of Railways and Canals has been connected with it, of curing the railway grievances in this country by extending the Canadian national system—that is by nationalizing the Booth line from Montreal to the Upper Lakes, and making some arrangement for a new government line clear across the continent. I shall feel obliged to support that if my own proposition is not realized. In the meantime I would say it is the most extravagant thing we could do, and, in one respect, only aggravates the situation. If you build another transcontinental line as a means of regulating the Canadian Pacific, you increase the burden that the traffic has to bear. Sooner than see this done, I would make every effort to take over the Canadian Pacific. How much would it cost to build a competing line across the continent? I believe it would cost a hundred millions, and perhaps more; and, when this is done, the country will have two lines to maintain, and, instead of getting lower rates may get higher. The true solution of the difficulty is to nationalize the Canadian Pacific—make it part of the Canadian government system. That can be done at small cost, and without aggravating the situation, while securing immediate relief to the people of this country.

Another thing that the government is committed to, and one that I must endorse if I cannot get government ownership of railways, is to attempt the removal of existing grievances by establishing a railway commission. If better is not done, I hope that commission will be established. But you must face the fact that a commission will be constantly at war with the railways, and that war will be carried on at great expense. If you nationalize the railways, the whole energy of the commission can be given to managing the roads and securing the interests of the people. If you wish to avoid this constant warfare which the establishment of a railway commission would involve, you must have national ownership. In that respect, I wish to read other portions of this interview with Mr. Shaughnessy which bears directly on the point. Now, this is the most serious statement of all, and it is well worth the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals :

> 'So much for the possibility of the control of American capitalists. What do you think, Mr. Shaughnessy, of the suggestion that in order to prevent this the government should itself acquire possession of the Canadian Pacific and other railways material to the prosperity of Canada, which are now owned by companies?'
> 'Well,' observed Mr. Shaughnessy, 'speaking quite frankly, I think it would be infinitely better, if the government intends to take up seriously the business of railroading, that the public money of this country should be invested in the acquisition of such railways as the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk than that it should be wasted in the subsidizing and construction of useless lines. We have had too much wasting of public money in the past for the building of railways which are not only in themselves useless, but are positively injurious, inasmuch as they cripple the lines which are already built. This is very pernicious, and, as I have said, it would be far preferable that the government should take over the existing lines than that they should build new ones to compete with them. You are at perfect liberty to quote me as having said this; I really do not think there is anything more I can say on the subject.'

Now, what are we up to ? We are up to this, that we have got to establish another government line, and maintain a railway commission, and have two great continental roads in the service of the country, or we have got to nationalize the one we have. There is no other way out of it. There is great expenditure ahead of you, and the Minister of Railways and Canals is almost committed by his newspaper friends to another transcontinental line, and to a railway commission in constant warfare with the roads ; either that or you have got to nationalize the road you have. That is what we are up against, and that is another point to which I desire to direct the attention of the country.

Now, can we nationalize railways ? Is it a foolish idea ? What are the facts in regard to that ? Our fellow colonists, as we call them, in the southern hemisphere, in Australia, in New Zealand, have nationalized their railways, and they would not change their policy to-morrow under any circumstances. This is a great fact that comes home to us. In some European countries the railways have nearly all been nationalized. In Germany there are two kinds of railways, state-owned and private-owned ; but the tendency is to take over every private-owned railway there. In Austria and Hungary they have the best transportation for passengers in the world, and the cheapest, and it is because the government controls the railways. It is the same in almost every other European country. They have state-owned railways, and the people do not for a moment think of abandoning the system and going back to private corporations. Public opinion is growing in favour of state-owned railways ; and in England to-day one of the few ways in which the British manufacturer will be able to meet foreign competition is by having lower freight rates, and the way they wish to attain that object is by the state taking over the roads.

Now, Sir, this railway question will never be smaller than it is. Delay only aggravates the situation. Let us never forget that it is the traffic that pays for and maintains the railway, not the shareholders, or the bondholders, or the administration of the road. In other words, the people who use the roads support them ; why should they not control them ? Canada can buy the controlling shares of the Canadian Pacific Railway for less than thirty million dollars, and she can buy the controlling shares of the Grand Trunk Railway for less than twenty million dollars. Canada can own and control both roads, subject to the mortgages on them, for less than fifty million dollars paid for their controlling shares. Canada can lease and secure control of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway for $1 each a year, on undertaking to guarantee the shareholders who now have the control, less than 4 per cent on the face value of the shares. The stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway guaranteed by government at 3 per cent would be above par, and that is what the shareholders desire.

The proposition of public ownership in its simplest form lies in assuming the liabilities, guaranteeing the interest and dividends, and leasing each road at a nominal rental of $1 a year. Surely the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has two $1 bills at his disposal. As a matter of fact, the traffic of the roads is now doing all these things, with the single exception of some shares of the Grand Trunk Railway. But, with government ownership the extravagant competition for traffic would cease, the working expenses incident to rivalry would be reduced, the existing obligations in the way of rents on leases of road would be absorbed, interest on bonds and preferred stock could be gradually reduced, and that very materially, and in a thousand ways savings could be effected in works unnecessary to a co-operative railway and a co-operative rail and water system. Better wages could and would be paid to the smaller number of men, but the wages bill of a consolidated system would be much smaller.

And these railways once consolidated would be the complement of all our other public works, our canals, our harbour improvements, our river improvements. To-day the railways have antagonized the national railway system of this country. I also speak within the truth when I say that the railways of Canada for years did their best to delay the deepening of the canals of this country, and they succeeded in it; and I believe they are trying to interfere to-day in every way possible with the utilization of these canals. But if once the government owned the railways, the canals and the railways would then be complementary of each other, and would work harmoniously for the benefit of the Canadian people.

I have heard it said that if we start out to nationalize the railways by purchase, the shareholders would run up the price. Now, that is not a fact, the converse would actually happen. As soon as it became known that Canada proposed to nationalize the railways, there would be a competition between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway as to who would sell or lease first; and if the majority of the stock of either roads was to be acquired, there would be a rush and a competition between the shareholders to sell to the government. Neither road, nor any of the shareholders of that road, would wish to be left out; and instead of the price of stocks going up they would naturally come down by reason of this competition. No doubt that may seem a peculiar statement, but it is one I am prepared to stand by.

In the supreme struggle which is now going on between the United States and Canada, between New York, Boston and Portland on the one side, and the St. Lawrence route and Canadian ports on the other, can we for one moment allow our great railway system to fall under the control of the great United States combine, which has its centre in the American ports of New York, Boston and Baltimore? Can we afford that as a Canadian people? Can we afford to allow great interests in American ports to control our own railway system on which we have spent so much money? Some gentlemen think they see a great many lions in the way of government ownership. I admit there are difficulties, but I think they can be met and overcome. We have to retrace our steps, but in doing so we will be doing something that I believe the people of Canada desire us to do.

The greatest curse in politics to-day is the corruption wrought and exercised by corporations in the municipal, provincial and federal spheres. The corruption of corporations even threatens our courts. The political corruption of a political administration of a railway is a flea-bite compared to the corruption of the people and legislatures by corporations. A corporation never dies, because it is a past-master in corruption. That is not the case with individuals. People say they are opposed to government railways on account of the political corruption which would exist in their management. Sir, I am not afraid of that. The political corruption that I am afraid of in this country is that which has been exercised by great corporations. There is no comparison between the two. I grant you there will be some corruption and there will be some maladministration, but that is nothing to compare with the greater corruption that threatens this whole country by reason of the power of these great corporations.

An intelligent democracy like ours ought to be equal to cope with any problem that arises. A people who prides themselves on their ability for self-government ought to be equal to the further responsibilities of self-ownership of great franchises. Surely if we are competent to govern ourselves we ought to go forward and put in practice this proposition of assuming control of the great railroads of this country. We are not less able in the solution of our economic problem, not less competent to do what our fellows in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, or what the nations of Europe have done. Here is the next proposition which I wish to submit; you cannot settle a twentieth century problem with nineteenth century ideas. This great problem is a twentieth century problem and the solution of it is in national ownership and not in the practices that have been observed in this House and in the Railway Committee of this House for the past thirty years. What is the problem before the railway manager as the roads are run to-day? The problem before Mr. Hays, or Mr. Shaughnessy is: How can we administer this railway so as to secure the best returns for the men who have invested their money in it? The problem before the manager of a national system of railways is: How can I run this railway in the best interests of the people who have to support it? These propositions are two entirely different ones; the man who is working for the government has much higher work in his hands. All he has to do is to see what he can do for the people, but with Mr. Hays and Mr. Shaughnessy nine-tenths of their time is taken up dealing with questions of competition and finding out how they can make a profit for the shareholders and bondholders of the road. Instead of public ownership of railways tending to demoralize the people, I believe it would compel every man to take a deeper interest in public affairs and to use his ballot more conscientiously. Instead of public ownership entrenching a party in power it would tend to effect more rapid changes in parties. Patronage and responsibility are a source of weakness not of strength to party. This is the way I understand the idea of self-government in this country. If every man has an interest in the railways of the country he would take a greater interest in public questions, and instead of railway administration being a bar to good government I think it would help it. The difference between a private trust controlling all roads of a country and state ownership is this: The trust gets all the benefit of consolidation, economical management and the saving effected in not having to duplicate existing lines and takes the bulk of these benefits to itself. A state-owned system receives all these benefits and economies and gives them to the people. A trust antagonizes or may antagonize a nation ; a state-owned system is bound to be patriotic.

Science, genius, enterprise, public spirit, utilizing the thousand and one imprescriptible legacies of the past, are constantly striving to better the lot of mankind, and up to the present time the wealthy, the ambitious, the trusts, the combines, the corporations have tried to corner and to restrict, have succeeded in cornering, in restricting the use of these discoveries, of these gifts to man made by genius, intellect, enterprise and public spirit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up a good deal of the time of the House, but I do trust that I have brought clearly before the House and the country this question of government ownership. I trust that the question as brought up by me will receive the attention of the House and the government and in doing what I have done I have only discharged my duty. I am one of those who believe in and have every confidence in the Canadian people. I believe they are equal to the task of owning and controlling the railways of this country. I am not one of those who cast a slur upon the honour of my fellow-countrymen in Canada. It is said up and down Canada by the great corporations owning the railways of this country that the Canadian people are unfit to own railways, that they are dishonest, unpatriotic and corruptible. I do not believe that ; I agree with what Senator Hoar of Massachusetts said who, discussing the question of trusts in the United States declared : I believe that the great bulk of the American people are honest, patriotic and incorruptible. I believe the same of the Canadian people, but the men who own these great trusts in Canada to-day have a paid propaganda, a propaganda that is filling the newspapers of this country with the idea that we are a corrupt lot of people, that the government is corrupt and that in no way could a railway be honestly administered by the people. I repudiate that slander on my fellow-countrymen, on the government and legislature of this country. I believe we can do these things. I believe this is the work before us now, and that is the reason why I have brought this question up here to-day. I have not brought it up to embarrass the government, or the House, nor have I brought it up to embarrass my own friends, as has been said, but I have brought it up so as to direct public attention to it and if possible to induce the government, before they go into a system to which they seem to be committed, namely, of extending the Intercolonial Railway, to first try to make a reasonable effort to nationalize all the railway lines of this country. If they do that they will be doing something patriotic ; they will meet with the support of the people of this country, but if they do not do it there will be a party arise in this country and arise in this House that will make the nationalization of the railways in Canada its main plank and if this party and these men do come forth I believe that when they make an appeal to the people of Canada they will receive an overwhelming mandate to nationalize these roads. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move :

That all the words after the word 'That' be left out, and the following added instead thereof: 'in order that the government railway system of Canada may be used to the best possible advantage of the people by being a substantial check on the freight charges of railways owned by private corporations, and in order that the government system may give the public the most efficient service, this House is of the opinion that the administration thereof should be freed of all political influence or interference.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I was in hopes that we would have heard a word or two from the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) in regard to the matter which has been brought before the House by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) who has just taken his seat. I think, in the first place, that the thanks of this House and the country are due to the hon. gentleman for having brought this matter to the attention of the House and the country, because, while there may be some of us who would not go so far as the hon. gentleman has gone in his remarks in regard to this matter, there can be no doubt whatever that this is a subject which should invite the earnest attention of the government. We know that the government of this country is at the present time engaged in carrying on a business which is ordinarily carried on in this country by railway corporations, and we know that it is carrying on that business in competition, to a certain extent, at least, with private corporations. Now, my hon. friend's motion is perhaps not so wide as the remarks which he has addressed to the House in regard to it. His motion is that the administration of our railways should be freed from political influence or interference. If I rightly understand what the hon. gentleman intends by the language which he has used in this motion it seems to me that there could hardly be two opinions in the House in respect to the desirability of the principle which he has laid down. The Intercolonial Railway is run as a department of the government. It is, I presume, and always has been, more or less, subject to the same party political influence which affects other departments of the government in this country. Now, I suppose, that none of us could doubt that if the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, or indeed of any department of the government, were freed from that political influence and interference which are sometimes not conducive to the public interest it would be a distinct gain to the country. The government railways of this country stand in a different position from other departments of government in that respect. For example the Post Office Department deals with the carriage of mails throughout the country, and it is provided by statute that any person undertaking to enter into competition with it shall be guilty of an offence. When you come to deal with railways there is a different condition of affairs. Look at the administration of the Intercolonial Railway. It is more or less subject to what is called political influence and political interference. I am using the language which my hon. friend used in his motion. Let us suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Bank of Montreal, or any great manufacturing concern in this country were to undertake to carry on its business subject to political influence and interference of this kind. Does any one suppose for a moment that the business of such a corporation would not be greatly hindered under such conditions? Does any one suppose that equally good results could be arrived at by any great Canadian corporation if it were hampered in such a way ? Therefore, so far as the motion tends to prevent political influence and interference in connection with the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, we ought all be heartily in accord with and I presume that the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) would be the first person to join in the wish for such a desirable consummation as that.

When you come to go further and to deal with the means by which you shall attain such an end, and with the question of nationalizing the railways of Canada the House perhaps may not be prepared to express an opinion. Since my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) brought this matter to the attention of the House, I have endeavoured to examine in some slight way the mode in which other colonies have dealt with this matter, and I find that in the Australasian colonies and in New Zealand, the railways are for the most part dealt with by a commission, and in these colonies the freedom of the administration of the railways from political influence has been found to be productive of very beneficial results. I am not prepared to say that we should at once follow the example of these colonies. We have a very much larger problem to deal with in Canada than arises in the Australian colonies, because we have about 17,000 miles of railways (of which about 1,500 are government railways) and the paid up capital of the railway lines in Canada runs up to nearly $1,000,000,000. Therefore, when we speak about nationalizing the railways of Canada, or when we speak about dealing with the Intercolonial Railway by means of a commission, we have a pretty large problem to consider, and we possibly have difficulties which were not present in the experience of the colonies to which I have referred. I think, however, that the matter has very properly been brought to the attention of the House, and it is a matter upon which the government of this country should have a policy. There are many matters as to which the government has made investigations during the past five years, and on which the public money of this country has been expended, which are very much less worthy of the consideration of the government and of the country than the matter to which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has drawn the attention of parliament. While it is a matter in which I agree we should not move hastily, a matter which we should take time to consider ; it is nevertheless a matter which the government should take into earnest and prompt consideration. I believe that the country demands that the government should do so. I am prepared to support the motion giving it the meaning which I have attached to it ; not dealing with it as necessarily involving the appointing of a commission, not dealing for the present with the question of the nationalization of our railways or the means by which that will be accomplished, if it is ever accomplished, but dealing with what I understand to be the main proposition laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean), namely : that the administration of government railways in Canada should be free from party political influence and interference.

Mr. HEYD. Is that all there is in the resolution ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is what I understand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. Mr. Blair). I have no desire to cast any reflection upon the procedure of my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean), because I am quite convinced that his disposition is to treat the House in a bona fide spirit on this question. It is, I am sure, not his intention to ask us to vote upon a resolution to which he has not addressed the attention of the House, and in support of which he has made no argument. Indeed, if his remarks has even a remote relation to the subject-matter of the resolution, I am unable to see it, but perhaps that is my misfortune. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) puzzles me. He will, I think, confess that he himself is puzzled because if his argument proves anything it proves that the best policy for this country is that the railways should be absolutely and entirely controlled by the government of the day and become government property. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is a sincere advocate of the nationalization of railways, but does it not occur to him that as he has presented the question to-day it is more an academic question than a practical one. We are met in this parliament as practical men for a practical purpose, but my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has not recognized that fact in the course which he has taken on this question. He has not offered us any suggestion as to the manner in which this policy is to be carried out, and when he tells us that it would cost five thousand millions and two dollars to acquire the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway systems, it would seem to be necessary that he should follow that up by at least giving us some hint as to how we should finance an undertaking of such magnitude.

Mr. MACLEAN. Two dollars will do it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) says that two dollars will do it, his statement is a convincing proof that he is not looking on this question from a practical point of view. Inasmuch as all of his argument has been of that character and as it did not touch the resolution at all, I apprehend that when the matter is duly discussed he will withdraw his motion rather than have the public suppose that we are voting on a motion which might lead those who read his speech to think was the real question before the House, when as a matter of fact it deals with an entirely different matter. The hon. gentleman's motion deals entirely with the government railway system, and on a careful study of its wording he will find that there is involved in it a distinct implication that a government system of railways is not a wise system, that it is attended with disadvantageous results, that there is a tendency that the rates on a government railway will be higher than on another railway, because the government railway is subject to political influence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Mr. Mulock). That the rates will be lower.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, higher; because my hon. friend—his language, if it means anything, implies this—suggests that you ought to get this government system of railways freed from political influence or control in order that rates may not be maintained, but that the tariff of rates may be diminished. I am not, I think, misinterpreting the words of the hon. gentleman's motion, which is distinctly and explicitly pointed against the policy of government ownership and control of railways altogether. If it means anything, it means that. It means that you must not own or control railways, because they will be subject to political influence. Can you imagine a railway owned by a government which is not subject to political influence? Is there a possibility of such a thing existing? I cannot conceive of it, and I am sure my hon. friend cannot conceive of it. Why do I say that it is under political influence? Because, being a property of the people, the trusteeship of it must be in the government of the day supported by the representatives of the people. Its very basis and foundation is that it is under the control and supervision of the people, and that control and supervision can only be exercised in a political way. Will my hon. friend suggest to me how it is conceivable that a government railway system can be managed without the management largely partaking—and I am putting it in the mildest possible form—of a political character?

Now, I am not speaking entirely without having had some opportunity of gathering information as to the experience of others on this question. We can turn, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has done, to the results of the experiment in the various Australasian colonies, and what do we find there? They started out building and owning all their railways. They had probably felt some dissatisfaction with the extent to which political influence was operating in connection with the maintenance and administration of those railways, and they concluded that it would be a wise policy to change the system, and they changed the system. Take the case of New Zealand, for instance, which was largely followed by the other provinces. Down to 1887, the province of New Zealand owned its railways as a government system, controlled and managed exclusively and directly through the administration. In 1887 they changed that system and adopted a commission. Their idea was that they would have all the advantages belonging to government ownership without any of the incidental disadvantages consequent upon political interference or control. After trying that system from 1891, down to 1894, they found that after all they had not overcome the disadvantages which they had hoped to be able to overcome. They found that political influence still existed. They had not found that it was so very harmful under the direct administrative system prior to 1887; but they found that it still prevailed; and in 1894 they made a change in the character of their commission, and tried that change down to 1897. The change did not seem to suit their purpose any better; and in 1897 the policy of the government took a marked advance—or a retrograde step, as some might perhaps regard it. They went back practically to direct government ownership and control through a minister of the Crown; and they did that distinctly on the ground that they had not freed themselves from any of the disadvantages incident to government ownership and control, but had incurred a very great many disadvantages which were injurious to the country as a whole, under the system of a railway commission. One of the things they complained of especially in respect of the management of a railway commission was that the commission was not open to the pressure from the people and from parliament and from the government which it ought to be open to—that there was not the same broad and liberal policy maintained by the commission that would have been maintained if the railways had continued under the direct management and control of the government, and that the commission was not in close touch with the people and ready to yield to the people's wishes. They complained that the rates were maintained against the public interest to the disadvantage of business, prejudicial to the establishment of industries and against the spirit of enterprise which was abroad in the country. So they have practically gone back to direct control through a minister of the Crown.

The same results have attended the experiments of the other provinces in the same directions. In Tasmania up to 1891, the railways were being operated by companies. By an Act of 1891, all government railways were vested in a minister. The Governor in Council appoints the general manager, who acts under the direction of the minister. In Victoria, a system of three independent commissioners was introduced in 1883, but in 1891, there was practically a return to government control, the minister being made the head of the commission, and having a dual vote. By an Act of 1896, the form of the commission was changed from three to one, and a commissioner was obliged to act simply as an adviser to the head of the department. In New South Wales, by an Act of 1858, the commissioners of railways held office during pleasure; but in 1888 three independent commissioners were appointed, as in Queensland and Victoria. This condition of things has since been changed so that the commissioners are unable to take any steps or adopt any policy without the consent of the Governor in Council. In South Australia, by an Act of 1858, a commission was created and commissioners appointed to continue in office during pleasure. In 1887 a change was made, and three independent commissioners were appointed. In 1894 one commissioner was appointed in lieu of the three, and the Minister of Railways in the government was vested with power to decide all questions wherever any differences of opinion arose. So that you see that while all these experiments have been going on in these other provinces, whose conditions to some extent resemble ours, the changes which have been made within the last ten or fifteen years have been all in the direction of revesting in the government the direct control and management of these railways. In the discussions which have taken place upon these various proposals from time to time, I have seen no difference of opinion expressed upon this point, that no matter how the government railways might be managed—whether the control be invested in a commission or remain in a minister—it was impossible to divest the administration from political influences and control. These would make themselves felt under any circumstances. I am quite sure that my hon. friend, when he asks this House to subscribe to the proposition that we should free the administration of these railways from government control—

Mr. MACLEAN. Political.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Political control rather, he practically declares himself in favour of freeing the railways from government control entirely, and divesting the government of the control they now possess, both as owning and as operating the railway system. I think, therefore, as far as I can judge, that the motion of my hon. friend is not one which can commend itself to the House, and I trust he will not press it to a vote.

He must himself admit that it does not reflect the conclusion which one is entitled to draw from the argument he presented to the House. His argument was not in support of the proposal embodied in his motion, but on the contrary directly antagonistic to it.

While I am not prepared to say that the ideal condition, so far as the management of railways in Canada, and possibly in any country is concerned, might not be that these railways should be entirely under the control of the government—be owned and managed by the government or under direct government supervision—while that might well be said to be an ideal condition, we have not this question before us in any such practical shape, it has not been presented to us in any such form, as would justify us in passing upon so large and momentous a question as that at present.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). I listened, Mr. Speaker, with a great deal of interest to the remarks with which my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) introduced his resolution, and I thought he was doing bravely until he read the terms of the resolution itself. I am one of those who believe that the time has come when the people should get a certain portion back of that which belongs to them, and that it is time we should call a halt in the rolling up of these immense fortunes by a few individuals. The number of people who believe that much of the wealth which should go into the hands of the people generally is being diverted by corporations, and particularly by large railway corporations, is increasing largely, and I listened with favour to the remarks of my hon. friend, and would support to the best of my ability any scheme calculated to lessen the burdens that rest upon the producers in this country, and give a larger share of the benefits to the great mass of wage-earners. But the resolution is entirely different from the language in which it was introduced. The question of state ownership does not present itself at all in the resolution, nor do we find in it any condemnation of monopolies. The only thing we find in the resolution is this, that the hon. gentleman took advantage of a sentiment that is strongly growing in this country in order to disseminate the idea that the present government is not successfully carrying on the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway, and that we could only hope for successful management by vesting one-half of it in the hands of Conservatives. That is all there is in the resolution. It does not call on us to approve of government ownership, but simply to condemn the present management of the Intercolonial Railway by the Hon. Mr. Blair, and to declare that everything would be bright and rosy if he would only associate with himself some good red hot Tory. I am not prepared to support that resolution, because there is not the remotest connection between it and the speech with which my hon. friend introduced it. I am with him when he declares himself in favour of bettering the condition of the mass of the people. I am with him when he expresses his desire to prevent millionaires from rolling up fortunes and going to distant lands and seeking honours in distant lands by becoming Sirs and Lords and Dukes ; but I am not prepared to condemn the present management of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not want, nor do the people want, hon. gentlemen opposite, for years to come, to have any share in its management.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I merely wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that while I subscribe entirely to this resolution, which I cannot conceive can be controverted by any one, I am not prepared to accept in their entirety the views expressed by my hon. friend in his very able address, concerning the great danger which by common consent threatens the railways of this country. I cannot understand how it can be possible, after the discussions we have heard in this House, for any man to uphold the principle that the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, or any railway controlled by the government, should not be free from political interference or influence. Why, that doctrine has been accepted on all hands. We have had experience in the province of Quebec of the danger and evils of political influence—not governmental control—but political influence in the management of railways and of how dangerous that influence may become. My hon. friend opposite, the right hon. leader of the government and hon. gentlemen who have followed political events in the province of Quebec, and the results of the ownership by the government of railways there, will surely not fail to subscribe to the proposition advocated by my hon. friend the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) that any such plan as he advocated to-day, under the name of nationalization of railways, must be preceded by the freeing of government railways from that political influence and interference, as he properly terms it, which by the consent of everybody has always been so detrimental.

My hon. friend took occasion to refer to the great danger which threatens us, the existence of which he ably showed by the quotations he made, namely, the danger of the absorption of our railways by foreign capitalists, few in number, who would use those railways, built up largely by us, for the benefit of their own country and for their own selfish ends. That danger is well known. We all know that we are threatened with it, and we had the right to expect some expression of opinion from the government benches upon so momentous a question. Have they not thought it over ? Are they not able, even if they cannot give us a remedy for that dreadful evil, to show us that they have thought it over, or that they intend to think it over ? Apparently they are not. If my hon. friend the leader of the opposition had not risen to express his own views, we would have had no expression at all from the government on this question. Why ? My hon. friend from East York has spoken to us of the project of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) to extend the Intercolonial Railway—which we all know he prolonged from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal at considerable sacrifice to the taxpayers of Canada. He has the project, my hon. friend informs me, of carrying that railway as far as the Pacific. We all know the great weight my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works—and I am pleased to recognize it—has in the councils of the government. We can well understand, if what we have heard in the province of Quebec is true, that the Minister of Railways, clever though he may be, after his experience in Paris last summer, when he went over——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was not in Paris last summer.

Mr. MONK. A strong delegation of the government went over to influence the Minister of Public Works ; but we all know how that hon. gentleman downed them on that occasion. We can understand why they should now hesitate to express an opinion on any subject coming before them until they know what the Minister of Public Works thinks about it. The Minister of Railways and Canals tells us that there is no connection whatever, between the motion which appears upon the paper and the views discussed by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean). He thinks that if we are going to nationalize the railways, it is useless to discuss the proposition, even as a primary proposition, that the government railways should be free—not from political control, he came down to that in closing his remarks, but from that political influence and interference which has always and admittedly been so detrimental to the management of railways. If we are to accept the astounding proposition of the Minister of Railways, that political influence and interference must always exist; there is no remedy. Surely, the hon. minister is a pessimist in that regard; surely, there is some hope that the people of Canada will see to it that, in time, and with patience, that evil is removed. But, No, says the minister, that political influence and interference must be associated with government control. As to that, we know that the railways in those countries in which they are under government control are free from that obnoxious influence and interference. We have only to open the books which treat of that subject to convince ourselves that there is no such thing under European control of railways as political influence and interference, with all the evils that those two words imply; and we have proof that in British dependencies, where railways are owned by the government, efforts have been made, and with success, to obviate this evil. Let me quote a word from Larrabee, a well-known authority on railway questions. On page 65, speaking of the railways in Victoria, he says:

> All lines are under control of a board so constituted as to be entirely removed from political influence. Several roads were originally owned by private companies, but all of them were acquired by the colonial government, the last one in 1878.

Hole, on the nationalization of railways, page 226, says:

> New South Wales has adopted the system of putting its railways under the control of three experienced railway commissioners, of which Mr. Eddy, an expert from England, was the head. The political element in New South Wales proved itself quite as objectionable as in Victoria.

Here, Sir, are two countries similarly situated to our own, where, more hopeful than the Minister of Railways and Canals, they did not start with the idea that political influence and interference in the management of railways, is the inevitable consequence of government ownership, and where they have succeeded. Therefore, I ask, is it not possible to adopt the principle at least, that political interference and influence is totally distinct from government control? That is what my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) is advocating—government control of railways. Even if political interference under government management cannot be done away with at once, at least we should work in that direction; and that is the opinion of the country. Now, I said that, though quite in favour of the proposition of my hon. friend from East York, I did not entirely agree with him as to the means of carrying it out. Of course, if, as the government says, no danger threatens us, if it be true, as the Minister of Railways and Canals tells us, that this is merely an academic question, we are losing our time. But that is not the opinion of the country. Have we no remedy other than the acquisition of these two vast lines? For my part, I am not prepared to suggest another remedy; but I think that the remedy proposed by my hon. friend, and so skilfully defended by him, is fraught with great danger at the present moment. The danger is one to our finances, and I think that the existence of that political influence and interference, which I, for my part, condemn, constitutes another danger, should we carry out the project of acquiring these railways. We are not in the same position as the Congress of the United States. Their powers of legislation, in a case analogous to this one—I imagine, without having gone fully into the question—would be extremely limited by the constitution. Our parliament on the other hand, is supreme. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has referred to the acquisition of Suez canal shares, one of the masterly strokes of Mr. Disraeli's policy. But, in carrying out that policy, the great English statesman was acquiring a property entirely beyond the control of the parliament of Great Britain. I am exposing merely a primary view of the subject before us, but would point out that we are dealing with two immense enterprises that we have built up, I might almost say with our own money, and which we maintain. We have built these railways for what purpose? We have built them in order to develop this immense inheritance with which Providence has blessed us. But now, if I am to accept all that has been stated by my hon. friend, who has so carefully studied the subject, we are in the presence of the danger involved in the possible acquisition of these two great roads by foreigners, by a syndicate composed of a few men who have no interest in Canada, and who desire to make these railways, which, I think, we can fairly consider the railways of the people of Canada, useful in carrying out their own private aims, and to benefit a country which is not our country. Under these circumstances, I ask myself if there is no remedy in legislation? I ask if parliament, being supreme, and having in view what has been done by the people of Canada towards the construction of these lines, and being face to face with a danger which is recognized by all, except, perhaps, by the Minister of Railways and Canals, but realized, I think, by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works—being face to face, I say, with an imminent danger, is it possible that parliament, whose powers are so great, can provide no remedy ? I would be inclined to say that before this imminent evil falls upon us, before the evil of foreign ownership or foreign control of these lines is actually realized, there must be some remedy in legislation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is there not foreign ownership already ? Is not a large portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway stock owned by Germans ?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend seems to be just wakening up to the danger which threatens us. Everybody knows that the capital which built the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway too, so far as I know, was largely furnished by people who live in Europe. But surely there is a difference between that and the ever increasing action, the devouring action, if I may use that expression, of these five, or six, or eight men whom the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) named here the other day, and who are known by all men who take any interest in that subject. We are face to face, I say, with the danger of a few wealthy Americans obtaining control of the great railway lines ; and that is a very different thing from a certain amount of European capital being invested in our railways with no other object than of earning a dividend on that capital. I am not going to take up the time of the House by indicating particularly any legislative remedy. In the first place, I do not know of any ; but I do submit to this House that this parliament is all-powerful. We are in the presence of a great danger, and surely we have the power in this parliament, without being obliged to buy over again these lines which we have built largely with our own money, to discover some legislative remedy which will enable us to ward off that impending danger, and to keep these great railway lines in our own control, for the purpose of developing our own country, instead of allowing them to be used for the development of the neighbouring republic.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). It is to be regretted that the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has brought forward so big a subject, one of such vital concern to the people of Canada at large, on so small a motion. I agree with almost every word that has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) ; but I must say at once that I cannot vote for this motion as it stands, though I fully concur on the main principle that there might be government control without political interference. I cannot agree with the proposition of the Minister of Railways and Canals, that government control of railways and political interference with government control of railways are one and the same thing. They are two things in most civilized countries, and I hope the time is not distant when they will be two things in Canada. But the concrete proposition contained in this motion is not a practicable one at present. The reason is trivial, but it is true all the same. We know that one party who was in power for a great many years never attempted to cure that evil, and used the political advantages of government control of railways to their fullest extent. It is quite natural, therefore, that the other party now being in power would likewise be unwilling to take steps to cure that evil while they have a chance to take their revenge. But when an equilibrium has been established in the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, when the blue blood and the red blood have been mixed up in equal proportions, I think the proposition of the hon. member for East York will likely receive more favourable consideration from the members on this side of the House.

But, to my mind, that is a very small question compared with the greater one which has been so well dealt with by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. I am in total disagreement with the Minister of Railways and Canals when he calls this an academic question. I think it is the most practical and vital question that is before the people of Canada to-day, or is likely to come up for the next few years. It is no argument against the proposition of the hon. member for East York to say that the capital of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or of any other big railway in Canada, is in the hands of foreign shareholders. For my part, and I think I express the opinion of most Canadians. I have no objection to foreign capital coming into this country to build railways, or to establish any other great enterprises, provided such capital, the moment it is invested on Canadian soil and receives the protection of the Canadian government, becomes Canadian capital for the benefit of the Canadian people. I have no objection to as many foreigners as you like being shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway so long as that railway is controlled by the parliament of Canada ; but I have a great objection to Americans coming in here and obtaining the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway and making it a mere branch of an American railway system.

Now, as to what legislation we should adopt, I do not propose to indicate any at this time ; I did not rise to say to the Minister of Railways and Canals that he should do this or that he should do that. I have sufficient confidence in the business ability of that hon. gentleman, as well as in the clear-sightedness of his colleagues, to believe that when they give their earnest attention to this question they will be able to discover a remedy ; I have no doubt that they will look upon it from a Canadian point of view. Sir, I have been for some months past branded as a disloyal citizen ; but as a Canadian, considering this question one of the greatest national problems which has ever been brought before this parliament, I say now to ministers of the Crown and members of parliament, that if they do not give it their serious consideration they will be committing a national crime. The moment the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway become a branch of an American railway system, controlled by an American syndicate whose primary interest will still be in the American republic, that moment will Canada be in danger. Even though this American syndicate had for its whole object a profit on their capital invested in Canadian railways. If they find out that they can increase their revenue and increase their dividends by wiping out the political line which exists at present between the United States and Canada, they will find means to do so. They will find capital enough not only to buy out our railways, but they will find sufficient capital to buy newspapers in Canada ; and, without insulting the members of this House, I may say they will probably find means to incline to their wishes and their schemes some of the representatives of the people of Canada whom they will be able to secure. We have seen other legislatures influenced by capitalists, we have seen other statesmen who have been influenced by foreign money.

Mr. BRITTON. Speak for yourself.

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. gentleman is a little too sensitive ; I meant no personal allusion to him. I have enough respect for the hon. gentleman to tell him that he is wrong in considering my remark as personal. But I wish to say, Sir, that while this parliament is composed of good men, they are no better than the average statesmen of any other country ; and we know that in a legislature it sometimes takes but very few voices to change the balance of power. When strong attention is not given by the representatives of the people to questions of this kind, when they rely simply upon the leaders of their party to frame their policy and then go on blindly and vote as the whip of their party will tell them to vote; it might take no very big amount of money and very few men to put this country into the most dangerous position that it could be put into. Therefore, Sir, whilst I am certainly not going to vote for the proposition of the hon. member of East York (Mr. Maclean) because I think in its concrete form it is not opportune, I say that we have a duty to perform here ; and it is to give warning not only to the members of this government but to all the members of this House, whether Conservative or Liberal, whether friends or opponents of the Canadian Pacific Railway because, after all, these are small questions compared with the real issue. It is our duty as representatives of the Canadian people to look at this big question from the real national point of view, not to have any prejudice about it, not to make up our minds hastily that it will be solved either by government ownership of railways or by some other means but to realize that the question is so important that we should give our personal attention to it. We should think of the future of our country, and of the great sacrifices that have been made in the building of our railways. We would not be equal to our position, we would not fulfil our duties to the people if we did not give to this question the attention which it deserves and I know, or I hope I know, that the government of Canada will give proper attention to it, and that, on some future occasion, we will be able to hear from them an expression of opinion which will resolve itself into a practical result when the danger will really come upon us.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) thinks that we should wait. He says that there is a great danger, that the danger is threatening but that we should wait until that danger has really come upon us and then he is confident that the government will do the right thing.

Mr. BOURASSA. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will allow me : I do not say that we should wait. On the contrary, I say that we should prepare at once and be ready to meet the danger with a practical remedy when it comes.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood the hon. gentleman's last sentence was that we should wait until the danger comes. He also says that one of his objections to the motion made by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) is that when the Conservative party were in power for many years they had the control of affairs, that they had the patronage and that we should wait until the Liberal party have been in power for a number of years more so that they may even up. I think it will be conceded by every one who has watched affairs that they have done remarkably well in that direction during the past five years and have evened up, that they have dismissed officials and appointed others with remarkable facility. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) has the same grievance. He acknowledges that a great evil is threatening this country, that dangers are around us. He says the wealth of the country is being converted into the hands of individuals and corporations and that we should be on the alert, that we should be prepared to defend the interests of the people, yet, he says the same thing as the hon. member for Labelle. He says that some red hot Tory may obtain a position and therefore he will oppose the motion. That is his only argument against it. I suppose he thinks there are a great many red hot Grits hungry still that have not been given an opportunity of feeding at the government trough who will have to be satisfied before the interests of the country can be looked after.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) told us this afternoon that the motion of my hon. friend for East York means that the government must not own railways nor control them. I do not think it could be fairly given that interpretation. The government must always control the larger politics of the country and the policy of the government might be very much different from the policy that would be promulgated by a commission. A commission might be endeavouring to make the road a financial success, on the same lines as the railways that are owned by private corporations are doing. Their managers are attempting to build up business and to get the highest prices possible from the business point of view, to make their road a paying one and a popular one. That would be their object, but the effort of the government in controlling the railways would be higher than that. It might be said that a railway was required through a particular portion of the country. It might not be a financial success at all. The portion of the system going through that country might be a losing road so far as the financial side of it was concerned. It might not pay its way for many years to come but it might be valuable in developing and opening up the country, and therefore the government with political foresight and having regard to the higher politics of the country would control such a road. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that the Australian colonies and New Zealand started out to build railways. Our condition and our circumstances are very widely different because the great railways, the great arteries through the country, are already built. We have them here to-day, we have 16,700 miles of railway in operation in the Dominion of Canada. We have people thickly settled, there is a network of railways, there is every railway accommodation and facility that can fairly be demanded by the people. All we have to do now is not to plan how to build railways but to provide amongst other things against the great evil of unnecessarily duplicating lines of railway. There can be no more wasteful expenditure of public money than the building of parallel lines of railway. Last session there was up in the House the question of running a line of railway parallel to the Michigan Central Railway up in the counties of Essex and Kent and the government took power, then, if I remember correctly, to investigate the matter and give the subsidy if, in their judgment, after full investigation, they should so decide and we heard the other day, I think, from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that the subsidy had been given to a line running side by side with another railway. Now, I object to that use of the money of the people of Canada. The Rainy River Railway case is practically another example. They say that the commercial necessities of the country require that we shall have two lines of railway out of Manitoba and the North-west Territories to carry the freight. If that be the case let the second line be a commercial undertaking because the justification for the second line is that the business has so largely increased as to make its construction necessary. If that be the case, then that railway should be built, not by the enormous subsidies given by the Dominion and by the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba—which we are told would in themselves be nearly sufficient to construct the road—but it should be built as a strictly commercial undertaking. If we had government control of these roads the evils which are pointed out would not exist and the money of the Canadian people would not be diverted from useful enterprises to the wasteful extravagance of duplicating lines of railways. We all remember that a few years ago they had almost a revolution in Manitoba because the Dominion government had refused permission for this railway to enter that province. The pressure brought to bear upon the government of Canada was so great at that time, that the government was compelled to back down from the position they assumed and were forced to allow the Northern Pacific to enter Manitoba. The people of the province were promised that there would be competition and that competition would cheapen rates and prove of an inestimable value to the province. But what occurred ? Why, Sir, we have the fact admitted to-day that the scheme was an absolute failure and that no competition and no cheapening of rates resulted. This railway company took the money of the people of Manitoba and they turned around and made an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the same rates were charged as before. In the province of Ontario there is no competition between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway which tends to cheapen rates. Go to one of these railway companies and they will tell you that they cannot reduce passenger rates or freight rates because they have made an arrangement with the other company, and the stipulated rates must be lived up to by both. They will tell you that they cannot run an excursion even to a competing point without consulting the other railway company and insisting upon the terms mutually agreed upon. These are great evils which exist to-day, and we are threatened with the further great evil that our Canadian railways may at any moment be handed over to individuals foreign and hostile to the interests of Canada ; to individuals who would make the Canadian lines subservient to the lines of the United States, a condition of things which would work ruin to our people. Do we not see to-day that the Grand Trunk Railway has not its summer terminus at Montreal or Quebec, nor its winter terminus at Halifax or St. John ? Do they not announce that their summer and winter services will be at Portland ? I say, Sir, that we should use the powers that the parliament of Canada undoubtedly possesses to look after the interests of our Canadian people, to see that the ports of Quebec and Montreal, of Halifax and St. John, and this new port of Sydney shall get the Canadian business so that the harbours we have built up at vast cost shall not be deserted. We all know that to the point to which the freight is carried, there will the shipping go to take it across the ocean. It is absurd to say that although the Grand Trunk Railway carries its freight to Portland, and the Canadian Pacific Railway may carry its freight to Boston, there will still be a great trade for the port of Montreal. Sir, if our Canadian railways carry the produce of Canada and the United States freight in transit through Canada, to American shipping points, then there will be no trade for our Canadian ports. It is the duty of this parliament to look after the interests of the Canadian people. The railways will not do it. It is true we have had an incompetence in the government ; we have had the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) splurging around doing great things for the port of Montreal in his mind, but actually accomplishing little or nothing for five years. We have had him making great pretensions of what he was going to do at Port Colborne to make it a transhipping point, but we would like to know what he has actually done. He cannot tell us, because he has accomplished but very little. However that may be, it is not the point. The point is that the Canadian people are capable of self government. We surely have the material to properly administer our affairs and to control our business. I have faith in the people of Canada that they will do so, and whether it is done by a commission, or whether it is done by a minister, or whether it is done by a combination of both a minister and a commission, it should be done by ourselves. The Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) told us that in New South Wales they had a commission (independent, I presume, of the minister) but they were not satisfied with it, and so they adopted the new plan of having three commissioners, one the Minister of Railways and the other two railway men of experience, and although the minister did not attend to the details yet if a difference arose he had the veto power. The minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) points to that as a conspicuous instance of the failure of a commission, but if it is the better way to give the minister for the time being a veto power, then let us adopt that system which has to commend it the experience of other colonies. Surely there are means which will remove the control of our railways from the political arena so far as the details are concerned, and still leave the supreme power over them to the parliament of Canada and to the government of Canada which represents parliament. Sir, public opinion is rapidly forming on this question, and as has been said by the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd), thousands of people outside of parliament are eagerly watching the event transpiring to-day, and are coming rapidly to the conclusion that it is the duty of the government to promulgate a policy in this regard. The government of this country is bound to have a policy on all great questions of public interest, and to express it to the people of Canada. Sir, the people of Canada are eagerly watching for the announcement of the policy of the government in this respect. But, Sir, as far as we learn, the government have very little opinion upon it ; and the only one who spoke, the Minister of Railways, has thrown cold water on the proposition for any further government ownership or control of railways. In that, Sir, I venture to say that he and the government for whom he is speaking, do not represent the views of the people of Canada.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Mr. Speaker, as this question presents itself to my mind, there are three issues before us. One is the political control by the government of the Intercolonial Railway, a government railway; another is the non-political control of the Intercolonial Railway by a commission; and the other is the state ownership of all railways. Taking for granted that the motion of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean)—not his speech—refers to the non-political control of the Intercolonial Railway, I shall have pleasure in supporting it. My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) spoke for the motion and is going to vote against it. My hon. friend from East York made the motion and spoke against it. We hear a great deal of discussion about the danger that exists of foreign control of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. To-day, Sir, the stock of both of these railways is controlled by foreigners. The trade of Portland, Boston, and a large portion of the trade of New York is being built up by these railways. For years the freight charges on these railways have been as they are to-day as low to Boston and Portland, as to Montreal, and in some cases lower. This has been going on for many a day, and I presume that it will continue for a considerable period longer. The danger is not coming on; it has been in existence for many a long year, and I am glad that the people are at last waking up to the need of building up Canadian seaport towns and cities, and putting a stop, so far as they can, to the building up of American cities by Canadian railways. The control of the Australian railways by commissions is reported to work very satisfactorily. The railways there are practically all government railways; but there is this peculiarity about them. They run to large cities, and do not intersect the country with branch lines to the same extent as is the case in Canada. In South Africa the railways are all owned by the government, but their control is non-political, and they are, I believe, working remarkably well. The only objection I have heard urged against the non-political control of government roads was that the commissioners do not keep pace with the times in regard to freight rates. That would be corrected, however, by the competition of other roads in this country. In New Zealand and the Australian colonies there is no competition; but in Canada there would be, and the commissioners would be kept up to the mark. I have pleasure in supporting the motion of the hon. member for East York on the understanding that it means the non-political control of the Intercolonial Railway, and not, as his speech indicated, the government ownership of railways.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee.

Charges of management $17,443 80

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). It will be noticed that there are several small increases in the contingent accounts of the different offices throughout the country. The largest item of increase is $5,000 on account of the printing of Dominion notes. That arises from the general expansion of business throughout the country. There is an increase of $650 in the item of expenses in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes. That is made up of small increases of $30, which are contemplated to the young ladies engaged in that branch.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman say why he has increased these salaries?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not mention any particular salaries, but I said there were several votes taken in contemplation of increases. I can give the hon. gentleman the items. The increase of $150 in Winnipeg is explained by the fact that a young lad who has been doing minor clerical work is put on the permanent list at the not very extravagant salary of $350 per annum. At Charlottetown it is contemplated to take authority to give two increases of $100 each. I think these are the only salary increases which are provided for here.

Mr. MACLEAN. I thought the hon. gentleman spoke of general increases to a number of young ladies ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I say there are $30 increases to a number of young ladies engaged in the work of signing notes. These are persons who are poorly paid and they are given their $30 increase.

Mr. MACLEAN. Would the hon. gentleman tell us now whether he is prepared to recognize the claims of the letter carriers of this country in the same way ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When we come to the Post Office Department, that question will be settled.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman has raised the principle of a poorly paid portion of the public service getting an increase, and we are thus within our rights in asking whether he will apply that principle to the poorly paid letter carriers. I would be quite willing to vote for this increase if the hon. gentleman will tell me that when he comes to the Post Office Department he will recognize the claims of the letter carriers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend will show me any letter carrier who receives less money, I will be almost disposed to agree with him.

Mr. MACLEAN. The letter carriers have families to support, and these ladies have no one probably to keep but themselves ; and if one section of the service is to be recognized, the hon. minister ought to be able to tell us whether he proposes to recognize another poorly paid section.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to hand my hon. friend over to the tender mercies of the Postmaster General in respect of the letter carriers, and I do not think he will be found ungenerous. The increases I ask for are very small and are given to the fair sex, and I appeal to my hon. friend's gallantry to allow them to pass.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am not objecting, but would like to see the men getting a fair proportion as well.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the salaries of these employees ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. After these increases are given, the highest salary paid will only be $530, and the salaries of these ladies range down to $430 or thereabouts.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. That is a pretty good salary compared with that given the letter carriers.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask some information as to the details of the item for commissions on the payment of interest on public debt. What bank receives the commission?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Bank of Montreal and the agent of the government in London.

Mr. CLARKE. What commission does it receive ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The arrangement is an old one, made some years ago, and has not been altered. It is quite a small commission, but I could not give the exact fraction from memory.

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. gentleman will find the details on page G-12 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. MONK. I see there is an increase of $5,000 over the sum of $55,000 paid last year for printing Dominion notes. Has the increase of printing been so great as to justify this large increase ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no increase in the rates, which are established by contract, but in the amount of business done on account of these growing times.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount of notes printed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The increase in the circulation is in proportion to the general increase in the volume of business. As the trade of the country expands, you have to provide more notes. Instead of providing too many, we are receiving criticism for not issuing new notes fast enough. The complaint is that many of the notes have been years in circulation, and are not as clean as they should be.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the plates on which these notes are printed still being engraved in the United States?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The system which has obtained for several years continues. All the work of engraving is done in Canada, but the dies on which the plates are made, are, under the terms of the agreement, permitted to be made in the United States.

Mr. MONK. I would like the hon. Minister of Finance to tell us what proportion of notes this increase of $5,000 represents. It is an increase of one-tenth.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is our own estimate of the probable requirements of the year beginning the first of July next, and necessarily it is only an estimate. It is impossible to do more in a general way than indicate the sum of money to be required. We have not figured out the precise number of each kind of notes, but inasmuch as the trade of the country is increasing from year to year, we ask some small increase in the appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. I judge from the remarks of the hon. minister that this increase is intended to meet the requirements of the growing times. I presume he will also say that the same evidence will go to demonstrate the fact that a growing time heretofore did not exist because there was no increase of Dominion notes required. I am not sure that we have any greater reason for believing that there will be an increased demand for those smaller notes in the years to come than there was in the past, though I think it very well to make provision for the calling in of those notes which are soiled and torn, and the replacing of them by a new issue. I am quite sure that the country will hail with delight the promise that a great many of those small notes which have been handled so much are taken out of circulation, and some cleaner ones substituted in their place.

Mr. CLARKE. The last item on page 10 includes printing, advertising, and so on. Is it intended that this printing shall be done in the Government Printing Bureau here, or will it be given out ? I wish to enter an emphatic protest against the practice, which seems to be carried out to a greater extent than heretofore, of sending the government reports and other matter to be printed in various printing offices throughout the country. With all respect, I contend that the aim of the government should be to make the plant here as complete and perfect as possible. The work of printing can be done with a government plant more cheaply and expeditiously than if it is farmed out. Is any of the work covered by this item to be done outside of the Government Printing Bureau ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. None of the printing in my department has been sent out.

Mr. CLARKE. I congratulate the minister on that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The general question is worth discussing, and it can be taken up at another time. The printing of my department has all been done at the Bureau.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the expenditure under this head last year? In the report of the Auditor General, I see that the estimate was $12,000, but the expenditure was $21,000, an excess of nearly 100 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under the items in the Auditor General's Report, a number of the expenditures seem to be grouped. I cannot give the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) the information he asks for, but will try to procure it. I would be willing to reserve the item, or, without that, to give the information at a later period.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not wish to have it reserved.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. minister explain the very rapid increase in the vote for printing Dominion notes ? The estimate for 1899-1900 was $40,000, and it is now increased to $60,000. There may be a good reason for it, but the increase is a large one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is right in his figures. If he will turn to the statements I have made in the budget speeches, he will see that there has been a great increase in the circulation of Dominion notes. I have not a statement of the increase for the current year, but it is very considerable. There is no other explanation, for there has been no increase in the rate.

Mr. CLANCY. Does any of this increase arise through the issue of new denominations, to which we have seen some references in the public press ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE No ; there has been no change in that respect ; we are not issuing new denominations.

Mr. MONK. Can the hon. minister tell us what portion of this item is for printing, and what for advertising, and so on ? It would shorten the work of the committee if the factors making up such an item as this were given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I find that the Auditor General has grouped some of these items, and I cannot at the moment answer the question, which was the same as was asked by my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), but, if it is desired, I shall be glad to procure the information later on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not wish to delay the committee, but it seems to me that it is stretching this item somewhat to include in it this amount of $9,000 odd.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was a special transaction, due to handling a large amount of gold, which was exceptional, and was due to the stringency of the money market.

Civil Government—Governor General's Secretary's Office, including W. H. Walker at $1,700, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $10,410

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that item there is one increase from $1,550 to $1,700, one statutory of $50, and $60 for a messenger ; and there is one new junior second-class clerk at $700 ; making a total increase of $960.

Mr. MONK. What need has arisen for the new clerk ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Instead of having a man as a temporary whose pay is chargeable against the contingent account, one clerk has been given the rank of a junior second-class clerk, and so comes upon the permanent staff.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the contingent account reduced ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is somewhat reduced.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On what account ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is decreased on that item, but increased on another one.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister does not seem to have seen his way clear to so amend the law as to make it unnecessary to have this provision so often in the estimates—' notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' I have brought that to the attention of the hon. gentleman on more than one occasion, and have reasons that seem to me to make it undesirable that items should appear in that form, and have suggested that it would be better to amend the law. I presume the hon. gentleman has not seen his way clear to take that course.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The difficulty of course is that the law deals with matters generally, and these items are necessarily of an exceptional character. It might be difficult to frame a law which would cover all these cases. The theory is that the general outline of the Civil Service Act may be considered right, but in exceptional circumstances, when it is desired to give a larger increase than is authorized by the Act, these words have to be inserted. It may be said they occur often, but in proportion to the total number of officials in the service it will be found that they occur very seldom.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the reason for the inclusion of the words in this particular item ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because the gentleman named in the Governor General's office would receive a larger salary and a larger increase than he would be permitted to receive by the ordinary operation of the Civil Service Act. He would only be entitled to get, by the ordinary method of statutory increase, $50. The proposal is to give him $150. The gentleman's name is Walker.

Mr. CLARKE. Has he received the usual statutory increase during the past two or three years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, this is a special increase.

Mr. CLARKE. Notwithstanding the fact that he received the usual increases during the past two or three years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. What particular service does he render to entitle him to a special increase of $150 while the other clerks are practically not getting any at all ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In all the departments there will be found some officials who are deemed specially worthy of an increase, and the officials who are connected with the Governor General's department have reported this gentleman as especially worthy, and we have accepted the responsibility of recommending the increase.

Mr. WALLACE. How long has he been in the service ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He has been there for quite a long time. He is an old official.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance where he expects this thing to end, of refusing those in the civil service their promotion, or rather the statutory increase to which they seem to be entitled. I am not going to argue the question upon the ground that has been discussed here on many occasions, whether they were legally entitled to it or not. The government have contended from time to time that they were not, while others have taken the opposite ground. But, I want to point out that we are constantly met with difficulties from that system being carried out. There is gross favouritism appearing upon the surface; I will not say that it is so in reality, but, I say the hon. gentlemen expose themselves to fair criticism when they do that kind of thing. Instead of laying down one rule which should be carried out in every instance, we find this exceptional treatment from year to year growing worse. We have estimates filled with that saving clause 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.' I will venture to say in looking over the estimates that it will be found to occur oftener than last year, for the simple reason that hon. gentlemen have taken it into their own hands to set aside the law. The right hon. gentleman seems to be amused at it. It is not a matter of amusement. If he were in the position of these gentlemen who have to live at the beck and nod of their superiors, with their merits no longer an element entitling them to receive what the law allows, he would not be amused. I say it is not fair, it is dealing unfairly with the civil service and putting them in an unfair position. The end can only come when we have adopted a system that the civil service of this country should be entirely independent of any government. We are now entering upon a discussion of the estimates, and we are met with these unsavoury items, I say unsavoury, because they lead to such evils that they will never be rectified until the government go back to the old system.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman will find, as respects the general question of statutory increases, that we rather liberally interpret that declaration this year, and he will not have so much reason to complain as he supposes.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We were asking, in respect to item No. 2, as to what the special qualifications were which necessitated an increase to Mr. Walker.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). It is rather a difficult question to answer, other than that the officials to whom we look for advice in connection with the office reported him as specially worthy. I do not know that I could give my hon. friend any other than a general answer.

Mr. CLARKE. If my memory serves me, when the vote for the Secretary's office in connection with His Excellency the Governor General was up last session, this question of statutory increase occupied a good deal of the time of the committee. May I ask if the minister depends entirely on the recommendations made by the head official in that office as to whether increases shall be given or withheld ? What is the rule that has been adopted ? We find that in this and some other offices some officials are given statutory increases regularly, while in other cases such increases are withheld. Is merit the final and sole guide in giving or withholding these statutory increases ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I need not say that every office is under the control of ministers, and ministers are responsible for them, but there are some offices which come more directly under the personal observation of the minister, and he is able to rely on that. In respect to others, this is not the case, and he has to rely upon information given him. The Governor General's office is one of that kind. We are all responsible for it, and we join in the recommendation, but the officers do not come so closely in touch with us as some others do.

Mr. CLARKE. By whom are the recommendations made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The recommendations are made by the officer in charge, and, of course, we accept them, and endorse them as we do by bringing them before the House.

Department of the Secretary of State, including A. Drouin at $1,500, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $37,730

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The only thing which requires explanation is in regard to the salary of Mr. Drouin, and the explanation given that his salary is increased $100 this year is, that he has received no increase for several years. He is a very competent officer, and does all the engrossing for the Department of the Secretary of State. The minister recommends it.

Mr. CLARKE. This is one of those cases where the head of the department did not recognize the efficiency of the official. I understand the Prime Minister to say that this is a very efficient officer, and notwithstanding that fact he has been deprived of his statutory increase for two or three years. How is that ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) asks how it is that he has not received his statutory increase. It is more than I can say at the present time, because I did not confer with the hon. the Secretary of State upon this subject. I only answer for the increase this year. This year he is given, not $50, but $100.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How did he vote in November ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, if he voted according to his former proclivities, perhaps he voted wrong, but perhaps he has had more light.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the explanation of the decrease ?

Mr. CLARKE. It is inexplicable.

The PRIME MINISTER. One messenger less.

Department of Interior, including A. P. Collier at $1,100, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $109,764

Mr. HENDERSON. This is a very large increase ; I think we should have some explanation of this item.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The increase in this vote amounts to $7,040. The increase is made up as follows : Statutory increases for thirty-nine clerks, at $50, $1,950 ; $25 for one clerk, which comes in because the period of proportion came in the middle of the year ; four statutory increments to messengers, at $30 apiece, making $120. In the amount stated there is an increase of the salary of the deputy minister of $800. This is a matter which the government does not ask to have finally passed upon by the committee at the present sitting. Then, there is an additional second-class clerk, Mr. A. P. Collier, at $1,100, and eight additional junior second-class clerks, at $600 each, making $4,800. The four statutory increases given to mesengers on July 1, 1900, was not provided for last year, the amendment of the Civil Service Act not having passed until after the estimates were framed, but as there was money available, they got the benefit of the Act, and there were three increases of $30 each and one of $10. The total increase is $8,825. There is a decrease against that, of the difference between the salary of $700 of J. Curley, retired, and Mr. B. Scott, appointed junior second-class clerk, at $600 ; the salary of one second-class clerk, whose services were dispensed with, $750, and two messengers promoted to be junior second-class clerks and their places not filled, $980. An increase of $150 for the accountant was placed in the estimates last year, but he was not entitled to it until January 1 of this year. The net increase is $7,040.

Mr. CLANCY. This item stands.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Only as respects one portion of it. The increase in the salary of the deputy will be reserved for further consideration.

Mr. WILSON. Would it not be as well to let the whole item stand ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We propose to reduce the item for the present, so as not to raise the question of the increase in the salary of the deputy minister. If that proposal is made it will be a matter for subsequent consideration.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the event of the government deciding that the salary of the Deputy Minister of the Interior shall be increased, will the government carry out that policy in regard to the other deputy ministers ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the hon. gentleman understands what the Minister of Finance said. The minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) said that he would ask the committee to pass the item less $800, leaving the salary of the deputy at $3,200. If the government should ask the House to increase the salary it will have to be done by another resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand what the Minister of Finance said, but the Minister of the Interior does not understand the question I asked. In the event of the government increasing the salary to $4,000, will it be the policy of the government to increase the salaries of the other deputy ministers to $4,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we proposed to increase the salary to $4,000, that question would be pertinent, and if later on we propose to increase it, the question will come up, but just now it has no bearing.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have the right to know why the government contemplated this change at all, and we should also know the policy of the government on this matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As respects these estimates the policy of the government is not to make any change in the salary of the deputy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why does the minister ask for this increase of $4,880 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is for eight additional junior second-class clerks at $600 each. Legislation was passed last year to provide for junior second-class clerks which would in many ways be the same as the old third-class clerks. The increase of the staff has become necessary owing to the immense increase in the clerical work of the Department of the Interior. If my hon. friend Mr. Borden has time to look at the departmental report he will see that the actual clerical work of the department is more than double what it was three years ago, although the staff has practically remained the same. I might have asked the House to authorize an increase in the writer class who are paid out of contingencies at $400 a year, but it is desired, in some cases at least, to get the services of men rather than of ladies and it is difficult to get male clerks at $400 a year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who is the registration clerk mentioned here ? In the Auditor General's Report there is no such designation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. K. J. Henry.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When was he appointed under that designation ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think he was called by that title in the estimates previously. He was registrar of the official correspondence when I came into the department and there has been no change.

Mr. TAYLOR. You will remember, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), that when you and your friends sat in opposition previous to 1896, the continual cry of the opposition of that day was that there were too many civil servants and too many ministers. This year, however, the Department of the Interior proposes to increase the number of its employees by six, and the number in the Department of Indian Affairs by three. Previous to 1896 these two departments were in one, so the proposal now is to appoint nine extra clerks for that department. In almost every department of government it is the same thing this year. Yet only a few years since these gentlemen opposite proclaimed that the work could be done by half the officials. That goes to prove that every statement they made in opposition was incorrect. The work has not increased in these departments, but the government is constantly increasing the number of officials.

Department of Indian Affairs $51,070

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to have an explanation of the increase of $3,390 in this department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The increases altogether amount to $3,390, and the explanation of them is as follows : Thirty statutory increases at $50 each, $1,500 ; three statutory increases of messengers at $30 each, $90 ; three junior second-class clerks at $600 each, $1,800. I may explain that the three junior second-class clerks are not additions to the staff of the department. They are promotions of persons in the lower class of writers, and the amount of their salaries as paid at present will be taken out of the vote for contingencies. These clerks now receive $515, $430, and $460 respectively. They have all been in the department for some time.

Mr. MONK. How much are the messengers getting now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $480, $510, and one packer at $560.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the clerks now being appointed required to pass any civil service examination ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Oh, yes.

Office of the Auditor General $30,437 50

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the explanation of the increase ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The increases are entirely statutory—twenty at $50, and one which will cover only three-quarters of a year at $37.50, making a total of $1,037.50.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the Auditor General now satisfied with the assistance in the way of clerks which the government affords him ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have heard no complaint of late. All the recommendations he has made in the matter have been confirmed.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board $49,927 50

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is one special increase to Mr. Fraser, who has been twenty-five years in the service, and has very important duties to perform as inspector of savings banks and Assistant Receiver Generals' office and who is a particularly capable officer. There are six statutory increases of $50, and two of messengers at $30. These would make an increase of $560 but there are two messengers less in the list of permanent officials, owing to the fact that two old messengers have passed out of our department, and we shall have to provide for two messengers in the contingencies to supply their places. These are the only changes in the department.

Department of Customs $41,040

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is proposed to advance one officer who is at the maximum of a first-class clerk to a chief clerkship, and to fill his place by promoting a gentleman who is at the maximum of the second class, and whose place will be filled. It is also proposed to take a vote in order that perhaps another officer may be advanced to that class, making one extra clerk in that branch. It is proposed to put into the junior second class three clerks whose salaries have hitherto been paid out of the contingencies.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister any objection to give the names of the clerks who get the increase ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They will not, of course, be granted until the first of the year ; but the promotion proposed of a first-class clerk to a chief clerkship is that of Mr. Farrow, the accountant of the department, who has been there for twenty years. His salary is now $1,800, the maximum of the first class, and it is proposed to make him a chief clerk without increasing his salary. It is proposed that Mr. Bliss, who is at the maximum of the second class, and is the chief of one of the branches, should fill the place of Mr. Farraw, if his promotion takes place.

Department of Inland Revenue $38,200

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any change in this department ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The amount asked for is the same as last year. There are increases for three officers in the first class. One is promoted from the second class to the first class. There are nine $100 increases in the second class. It is proposed to have seven first-class officers instead of six, ten second class instead of eleven, and three junior second-class clerks instead of two. The number of messengers remains the same, with increases of $60 each.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the explanation of the fact that the Commissioner of Inland Revenue receives $3,200, and the Commissioner of Customs $2,800 ? Perhaps the Minister of Finance can tell us.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Both of these gentlemen occupy dual positions and receive payments from two sources. Just why one receives more than the other, I cannot tell. I believe the salaries are the same as before. The Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, I think, receives $800 as Commissioner of Standards. The Commissioner of Customs receives payments in the same way. They do not correspond exactly with those of the Inland Revenue.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The salaries really are the same.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With a slight difference.

Department of Agriculture $59,072 50

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to change this resolution by reducing the amount by $1,000 in the class of third-class clerks.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are you bringing these in too much just for the purpose of striking them out ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it was a mistake.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the explanation of the increase that still remains ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are the statutory increases given to the clerks who are entitled to them.

Department of Marine and Fisheries, including J. F. Fraser at $1,900, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $62,440

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What does the head of the topographical service, Mr. Stewart, get. He had about $1,600 or $1,700. Although I have not had any communication, directly or indirectly, with Mr. Stewart since I left the department, I think that his case has not been considered by the government as it ought to have been. I remember his character in the department and his extreme modesty, and doubt very much if he has ventured to press his case on the attention of the government, and I hope that in bringing his name to the attention of the government, I am at least doing him no injury. It is not encouraging to men of exceptional ability, who graduate in our universities and enter the public service, that their ability should not receive fit acknowledgment. When I was in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, we had a very able and costly officer, so far as our exchequer was concerned, in Commander Boulton, who did very good work indeed, in organizing the Hydrographic service on the lakes. He was borrowed from the Admiralty and we had to give him his imperial pay and what was called a colonial allowance, fixed by the Imperial navy, or something like $5,000 a year. in all. He got the assistance of Mr. Stewart, who came on the staff without any political influence, but solely on his merits, and who was a graduate of the Kingston Royal Military College, especially recommended for his ability. After a year or two of service under Commander Boulton, Commander Boulton was asked what were his qualifications for the work. He came in at a small salary of some $600 or $700, and his salary had risen to $1,000 or $1,100. Notwithstanding the fact that Commander Boulton well knew what would be the result, he gave a very strong certificate in favour of Mr. Stewart. Being not only an able man, but an English officer and gentleman, Captain Boulton gave Mr. Stewart the highest possible recommendation, and said he was quite satisfied that any charts made under Mr. Stewart's supervision, after survey made by him, would be acceptable by the Admiralty as Admiralty charts. Mr. Stewart took Commander Boulton's place. It was my intention to advance Mr. Stewart as rapidly as possible, as such men are very rare in all the colonies. The Admiralty has had to lend men like Commander Boulton, at very high salaries, to other colonies, and I question whether in any of the colonies there is any superior to Mr. Stewart in charge of that high class of work, and I do not believe there is an officer performing similar duties in the Imperial service to-day, under the Admiralty or any colonial government, with such small pay.

I am not personally interested in Mr. Stewart, but simply know his work and press his case on the government, not only in Mr. Stewart's own interest, but in that of the government, as it is certainly in the public interest that when men of that kind can be obtained at home, they should be given every encouragement, and a certain amount of generosity in our dealings with them will in the end be a great saving to the public service "pour encourager les autres."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree with the hon. gentleman that capable scientific men are not too common, and that we should show our appreciation of their services. I have no personal knowledge of Mr. Stewart, but find that he is now receiving a salary, including the small increase in these estimates, of $1,950.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is better than I thought.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is evident therefore that my hon. colleague, the Minister of Marine, has endeavoured to recognize Mr. Stewart, but I will draw his attention to the matter.

Department of Railways and Canals, including S. L. Shannon at $2,200, Gerard G. Ruel at $2,000 and J. W. Pugsley at $1,600, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act	$41,350

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no material increase in the amount. But it has been provided in the case of two or three of the officers who were considered exceptionally entitled that an additional allowance be made to them. We allow the accountant, who is a most excellent officer, an addition of $150. The law clerk, who also is a very efficient and capable man, is given an increase of $200. We allow the clerk of the Railway Committee an addition of $100. Then we promote Mr. Ross from the second to the first class, but without increase in pay.

Civil Government—Department of Public Works	$47,020

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any explanation of the increase here ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The fact that no special increase is mentioned shows that the increase is due simply to statutory increases.

Civil Government—Geological Survey	$55,200

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The increases in this vote amount to $1,300. There are the usual statutory increases of $50 of twenty-one technical officers, and $100 for two technical officers, Messrs. Faribault and J. M. Macoun. There is also $50 for the chief clerk and accountant. The reason for the special increases to Messrs. Faribault and Macoun is this : Last year I asked the House to increase the salaries to some of the officers who were in the same rank as Messrs. Faribault and Macoun. These gentlemen were left out then because they were going to Paris and were getting a little special allowance in connection with that service, which was considered, for that year, equivalent to the increase of $100. I am asking the committee to authorize the same increase of $100 to these gentlemen this year.

Civil Government—Post Office Department, including Miss M. A. Slater at $600, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act	$216,250

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). This vote is increased by $8,045, made up, as follows :

Ninety-nine increases of $50 each	$4,950
Twenty-seven increases of $30 each	810
One increase	20
Nine increases of $50 each, paid in 1900-1901, over and above the number estimated for	450
One additional first-class clerkship	1,600
Proposed transfer of R. P. Taylor, Ottawa Post Office, not carried out and salary not re-estimated	420
One additional packer, which through error in last year's estimates, money was not provided	300
Junior second-class clerk, Miss Slater	600
Provisional allowance, short estimate	5
Difference of salary of J. D. Campbell as a junior second-class clerk ($600) and the amount ($140) specially voted for him last year	460
To provide for the salaries of six third-class clerks, to be transferred from outside service as junior second-class clerks	4,000
	$13,615

Decreases.

Difference between the salaries of six second-class clerkships which became vacant ($7,800) and the salaries of six junior second-class clerks promoted to those vacancies ($6,600)	$1,200

Difference between the salaries of thirteen junior second-class clerkships which became vacant ($11,560) and the salaries of the eleven temporary writers appointed to fill those vacancies ($6,600) and the two vacancies in second class ($2,000)..	2,960
Proposed transfer of two letter carriers, Birtch ($510) and Jeffrey ($500) from Ottawa, not carried out	1,010
Difference between Mr. Harrington ($1,800), promoted from first class to chief clerkship, and that of Mr. Binks ($1,400), promoted to fill vacancy	400
	$5,570
	$13,615
	5,570
Increase	$ 8,045

With special reference to Miss Slater whom it is proposed to appoint as a junior second—she has been in the service in some minor capacity for many years, and has attained an age which makes her ineligible for appointment without special provision of this kind.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Has the hon. minister given the statutory allowance to every clerk in the post office, or has he picked out some whom he considers especially worthy ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Provision is made in these estimates for all who are eligible.

Office of the High Commissioner for Canada, including C. J. Taylor at $1,500 and Thos. Allin at $950, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.....$10,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a statutory increase of $50 and two special increases of $100, as set forth in the estimates.

Civil Government—Contingencies, rent and insurance, &c.—High Commissioner in England $11,200

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention of the government to make any change in the clerks in the high commissioner's office ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not in a position to make any definite statement on the subject at present. In regard to the item for contingencies, &c., the increase is made up of small contingencies, one item, I recollect, being an increase in the income tax, which has been increased in England owing to certain events.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board $6,700

Mr. CLANCY. What is the reason of this increase of $800 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will, perhaps, observe that in the item of Civil Government I explained that two messengers, who were formerly a charge against Civil Government, would now pass to contingencies. There was a reduction in the item of Civil Government for these two messengers, and they had to be provided for in the contingent item instead of in the direct vote. It makes no alteration in the number of officials.

Mr. CLANCY. Does it makes any alteration in the status of the civil servants ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These messengers who went out were men who had been in the service for a long time. One of them was promoted to a clerkship, and the other one has passed to the staff of the House of Commons.

Department of Customs—Clerical and other assistance, including $1,750 to be paid, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $5,625; printing and stationery, $2,000; sundries, $2,730; total $10,355

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The decrease of $1,825 in clerical and other assistance is explained by what I said before, that three extra clerks, who have been paid out of contingencies hitherto, have been granted a vote in the civil service vote. Then, we took last year a vote of $15,000, preparatory to the new plan of compiling statistics. We do not need to ask for that this year, as the staff is under way and in operation. There is a saving of $15,000. When we come to the outside vote you will find I have to ask for this $15,000, and for several thousand more.

Mr. MONK. Then, in reality, there is an increase of about $2,000. You ask for $10,000 this year, and $12,000 last year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is $1,825 taken out of contingencies and put in the civil service vote.

The Department of Inland Revenue—
Clerical and other assistance	$2,000
Printing and stationery	2,800
Sundries	2,200
	$7,000

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. What is this increase ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is an increase of $700 for printing and stationery, and $50 for sundries.

Mr. MONK. How does the hon. minister justify the increase in the item of printing ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have not the explanation, but if it is considered important I will bring the information later on.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps the hon. minister will give us that information upon the reservation which has been made of the item of printing generally.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What we would like the hon. gentleman to explain to us is the occasion for that increase in the cost of printing. Why is it that an increase in the printing is necessary ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I will bring the information.

Item allowed to stand.

Post Office Department—
Clerical and other assistance, including $50 to pay W. Cooch, a packer and sorter for the technical work of inspecting letter carriers' boots, and $120 to pay S. J. Carter, of the dead letter office at Winnipeg, a provisional allowance for excessive cost of living in Manitoba, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act....	$32,355
Printing and stationery	21,000
Sundries	4,000
Balancing and summarizing depositors' accounts at close of year ending June 30,1901	3,425
	$60,780

Mr. CLANCY. I think we had something relating to this same matter last year, in regard to this party, who, I believe, was removed from the city of Ottawa. Perhaps we will have some explanation of this item.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are only two increases in this vote, one an increase of $50 to a man named Cooch. Cooch is a packer, and being on that service could not, without special reference in the vote, be allowed any increase other than the normal one, but he performs some special work, the work of examining the boots. Mr. Sidney Smith, the head of the stores branch, has recommended him, and thinks him very well entitled to be paid for that service. It is a valuable service, and we would either have to pay him or engage some person especially for it.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the boots procured by tender ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, I really do not remember how they are obtained, now, They have been buying them in the same way for many a year.

Mr. CLARKE. No change ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I have made no change in the system ; we change the boots occasionally, that is all. The $150 is what I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has particularly alluded to. His memory is excellent. We did have a reference to this gentleman before. Mr. Carter has been transferred from Ottawa to Winnipeg, although he is still in the inside service technically. The dead letter branch belongs to the inside service, but when we decentralized it and opened up two or three offices, this gentleman was sent up to look after the Winnipeg office. We propose to give him this special grant on account of the extra cost of living in Winnipeg.

Mr. CLANCY. It is not a new thing to have it stated to the House that gentlemen are employed on the ground of being able to do some technical work. This is going pretty far. I am not objecting at all to the party in question, but it never ocurred to me that it required much technical skill to examine boots. What is the nature of the examination that is made and the extent of it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are 1,816 pairs of letter carriers' boots examined per annum, and the estimated time occupied is three weeks.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Is it to see that the union label is on the boots ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the real object is to see that the boots are of good quality.

Mr. CLARKE. Well heeled.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman tell the committee what was the occupation of Mr. Cooch before ? Is he a practical boot maker ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was a shoemaker by trade.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to inquire if Mr. Cooch is the packer referred to in item No. 21 for the Post Office Department. I see one packer is paid $300 a year. If this $50 is additional to that $300 a year, I will gladly support it, for I do not think the hon. Minister of Labour, who happens to be the Postmaster General, would want a man to work for a year as a packer for less than $1 a day. I hope this $50 given for this technical work of inspecting the boots is to the packer who is put down for the small sum of $300 a year.

Mr. ROCHE. Mr. Chairman, I take exception to the wording of this paragraph, which reads :

To pay S. J. Carter of the dead letter office at Winnipeg a provisional allowance for excessive cost of living in Manitoba.

I do not think this is fair to that province. We wish immigrants to come into that province and we do not want to leave the impression that the cost of living there is excessive. In future editions of the estimates that term should be left out ; indeed, it might be struck out now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The point is well taken, and perhaps a better word can be substituted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The words formerly used were 'provisional living allowance.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will find out the words which are used in the other votes and adhere to them.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General did not tell me who this Mr. Cooch is.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Cooch was in receipt of $500, the maximum salary of his class, but last year parliament was good enough to increase the maximum to $600, and Mr. Cooch being an excellent officer, came in for an increase of $30.

Mr. CLARKE. How long has he been in the service ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was appointed on the 5th of August, 1872.

Mr. MONK. What portion of that $21,000 is for printing, and what portion for stationery.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a bulk sum, and it has not been customary to apportion it to each item, so that the officer cannot give me the information.

Mr. MONK. Is that printing done outside the government printing office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is all done in Ottawa.

Mr. MONK. Is it done at the Government Printing Bureau ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is all done by the King's Printer.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I see $300 mentioned here as the salary of a packer. That seems an absurd amount.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no man drawing that salary for this office which is vacant.

Mr. CLARKE. It is likely to remain vacant at that salary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If there were an appointment to be made we could not pay more, but we found that salary on the statute-books when we took office.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If a vacancy can receive a salary of $300 that is a strong argument in favour of the letter carriers.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not be well to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Mulock) to this, so that he can send his officer to make inquiries.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will mention it to the Minister of Labour.

Department of Trade and Commerce—Contingencies $6,500

Mr. CLANCY. Is it the intention in this case as in others that the sum which appears here as a decrease shall appear as an increase in some other vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a transfer from one service to another, but that does not alter the number of officials.

Mr. CLARKE. Nor the amount to be paid each.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If they are employed as temporary writers, and are now made junior second-class clerks, they would of course get increased salaries.

Administration of justice $101,055

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is it necessary that this vote should stand in the absence of the Solicitor General ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not ask that the vote should stand, but when the Solicitor General is here I would like very much on some occasion, possibly when going into supply, to mention a matter in connection with this vote, and I give this as notice to the Solicitor General so that he may be prepared to discuss it. There seems to be a misunderstanding at the bar in Vancouver in regard to the arrangement for the sittings there of judges of the Supreme Court. Some time ago the question was raised as to whether there was a condition in the order in council, or in the commission, or in both, requiring the judge who was appointed at that time to reside in Vancouver. As a matter of fact no judge does reside in that city, although there is an impression that there was an arrangement made at the request of the bar of Vancouver to bring that about. One judge comes over generally on Monday and leaves on Friday or Saturday. That does not mean that there is always a judge from Tuesday to Friday, because for various reasons the judge who generally attends is not always able to keep these appointments. I wish the Solicitor General would refresh his memory on that matter, so that it may be known whether the government is in the position to have the wishes of the bar of Vancouver met, in order that we might have a resident judge in Vancouver.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will see that the matter is mentioned to the Solicitor General, and no doubt at a later stage he will deal with it.

Mr. CLARKE. This vote includes the item of $9,000 for the enforcement of the Alien Labour law. Is there any objection to letting the item stand ? We ought to have some explanations of it from the Solicitor General.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Might I ask for an explanation of the increase of $400 in the salaries of three judges in Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the salaries of these judges are regulated by statute. When the Solicitor General is present, I am sure he will give my hon. friend the explanation.

Item allowed to stand.

Legislation—House of Commons contingencies, including $300 for clerical assistance for the leader of the opposition $25,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the government would do well to take into consideration that item of $300. It is a very small amount for a first-class man.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am quite agreeable, and perhaps when we bring down the supplementary estimates we may have something more.

Publishing debates $40,000

Mr. CLARKE. What does that include ?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is for the publication of the Debates. We expect that this session will be a short one, and next session also, and that is the reason why we are simply asking for the sum of $40,000.

Mr. CLARKE. The question of more expedition being used in issuing 'Hansard' after the House closes has been already before the Debates Committee. It seems to me that an unnecessary delay takes place now, and also that it might be possible to have 'Hansard' supplied to the members of the House at a much earlier hour on the day following the debate. I do not know whether the matter had best be discussed here or in the Debates Committee ; but I would like to ask the minister if any application was made by the Department of Printing for an additional press for the purpose of expediting the printing of 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes—not particularly for the printing of 'Hansard,' but for the several work of the department, there has been a suggestion that we should increase the plant. We did provide some increased plant a little while ago, but it is the kind of department that will always require a little more money.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask if the vote of last year for this service, $60,000, was all expended ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, I understand that the vote of last year was fully expended, owing to the session being so long.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is perhaps not so much complaint with regard to the publication of the bound volume as there is with regard to the issuing of the revised copy. I understand the press throughout the country does not receive 'Hansard' until revised and printed, and there is usually a delay of ten or twelve days before that is done. It seems to me that that time should be shortened at least one-half. There is no reason why the revised 'Hansard' should not be issued say between five days after the unrevised edition is published. This would be a very great convenience to people in the country. We get extra copies of the revised edition to send out, and in the case of important speeches on special subjects, the subject is almost too cold by the time the public receive the debates. I hope those in charge will use every effort possible to have the revised edition published at a much earlier date.

Mr. SPEAKER. The printing of debates is entirely under the control of the Debates Committee, and the subject is one which should be discussed before that committee. I understand that last year this question was brought up several times and that some new scheme was devised in order to secure greater expedition in the distribution of 'Hansard.' I do not know what has been the result, but the Speaker of this House has nothing to do with the printing of the debates, and the members of the Debates Committee are doing their best to render justice in that regard, and I have no doubt will do their best to give the House satisfaction.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am much obliged to Mr. Speaker for his explanation. I have never had the honour of being a member of the Debates Committee and thought this the proper place to draw public attention to the matter. Perhaps the committee will think it proper to take this into their consideration again.

Estimate of Sergeant-at-Arms.. ..... $39,540

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a decrease of $85. A new assistant messenger has been appointed who received $200 less than the former messenger, and on the other hand we are providing for an increase to two messengers at $30 each, one doorkeeper $30, and night watchman at $25.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these all permanent officers.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. There is a reduction of $20,000 in the amount provided for the Debates, because it is expected that this session will not be long, but why is there not a reduction provided in the case of extra sessional clerks, &c.?

Mr. SPEAKER. We have voted the same amount for many years and have never provided for long sessions, but take a supplementary vote when necessary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Some hon. gentlemen are desirous of going home, as tomorrow is a holiday. We have made very substantial progress, and I think we might now adjourn.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree with my hon. friend Mr. Borden (Halifax), that we have made a very fair degree of progress.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the House adjourns I would like to mention the desirability of having the Committee on Public Accounts organized. I understood that this committee was to have been called to-day. But that was not done, for some reason that I do not understand. Notices have been sent out to members of other committees announcing meetings for Thursday; but I, as a member of the Public Accounts Committee, have not received notice of the summoning of that committee for that day. I think it very desirable for the purpose of expediting the business of the session that this committee should be organized as early as possible. It is very natural to suppose that that committee will have business to transact, and business in which a great many members of the House are more or less interested. I would suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister that he or whoever is charged with that duty should see to it that this committee is summoned for Thursday.

The PRIME MINISTER. My instructions were that all committees should be summoned for Thursday. If that has not been done in the case of the Public Accounts Committee it must have been a mistake. I will see to it that the committee is summoned for the following day.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 6) respecting the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters, and to change its name to the Independent Order of Foresters.—Mr. Emmerson.

Bill (No. 7) relating to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion by Mr. Fortin.

Bill (No. 8) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion by Mr. Fortin.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 9) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Explain.

Mr. HENDERSON. The object of the Bill is, first, to remove entirely the white space at the top of the ballot, and also the white space below the black bar at the bottom of the ballot, to prevent voters making the mistake of marking outside, which frequently occurred in the last election. Another object of the Bill is to prevent the misuse of the oath marked 'T,' which permitted persons who were not voters to go and demand a ballot on taking a certain oath and giving reasons which are not provided for by the statute, but which are allowed by the returning officers, such as absence or neglect in the preparation of the list. I hope by these means to remove these difficulties. These are the chief clauses of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

UNIFORM FRUIT PACKAGES.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (South Wentworth) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 10) to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. SMITH (South Wentworth). The object of the Bill is to provide for uniform fruit packages—berry boxes. At present there is no standard, and all sorts and sizes are used.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ALIEN LABOUR.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg)—for Mr. Ralph Smith (Vancouver)—moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 11) to amend the Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. PUTTEE. The Bill is to amend the existing Alien Labour Act in several respects, in order to make it more workable and of more use as an anti-contract labour law.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he makes provision in this Bill so that the enforcement of the Act shall be automatic, and shall be taken out of the hands of the government.

Mr. PUTTEE. That is to a great extent the object of some of the amendments in the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

APPOINTMENTS OF EX-MEMBERS AND CANDIDATES.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. How many members of the last parliament have been appointed to offices of emolument under the Crown by the government since the 15th day of March, 1900?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The following gentlemen have been appointed to offices of emolument under the Crown: Mr. Wm. Hutchison, Commissioner at the Buffalo Exhibition, at $250 a month and $10 a day for living expenses ; Mr. Firman McClure, Census Commissioner for the province of Nova Scotia, at $5 a day and $5 a day for living expenses ; Mr. M. THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. KENDALL asked :

1. Have any representations been made to the government on behalf of Canadian employees of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company to the effect that they are discriminated against in favour of alien labour brought into Canada under contract?

2. If not, will they consider it their duty, if in the future such representations are made, to investigate the matter with a view to removal of discrimination, and also with a view to ascertain to what extent it may be beneficial to Canadian labour to allow the provisions of the Alien Labour law to remain in operation and to what extent it may be beneficial to enforce the provisions of the Act?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. No.

2. Should any such representations be made, they will receive the careful consideration of the government with a view to such action as the public interest appears to demand.

LIGHTHOUSE, SECHELT ISLANDS, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Is it the intention of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to erect a lighthouse on Black Rocks, off the Sechelt Islands, on the coast of British Columbia, this coming summer?

2. If not, why not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) :

1. No application appears to have reached the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for a lighthouse on Black Rocks, and the locality is not known in the department. An application, however, for a day beacon on White Rock, off Sechelt Islands has been received, and is now obtaining the consideration of the department.

RAMA RESERVE MEDICAL OFFICER.

Mr. McLEOD asked :

1. Who is surgeon or medical officer appointed by the government to the Indians on the Rama Reserve?

2. When was he appointed?

1. Has the attention of the government been called to the flooding of certain lands along the Severn river, immediately below the dam at Washago, erected by the government to facilitate the escape of spring floods?
2. Is it the intention of the government to place a sum in the estimates to remove certain obstructions below the dam to facilitate the escape of flood water?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte) :

1. Yes.
2. $2,500 appropriated for use, during present year, on Severn river, and $1,700 for widening outlet of Sparrow lake.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER, EAST SIMCOE.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

Has a census commissioner been appointed for the electoral district of East Simcoe? If an appointment has been made, upon whose recommendation was such appointment made?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), I beg to reply : No.

LARGEST GRAIN CARGO, MONTREAL.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

What was the largest cargo of grain received at the port of Montreal during the season of 1900 from the upper lakes, giving amount in bushels, from whence received, and kind of grain?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

Via Parry Sound and Canada Atlantic Railway. On September 4, 1900, a cargo of 51,000 bushels of wheat passed down to Montreal by water from Coteau Landing. This grain came from Depot Harbour over the Canada Atlantic Railway to Coteau Landing.

Via Welland Canal. On November 14, 1900, a cargo of 45,000 bushels of wheat passed down from Kingston by water to Montreal. This grain was shipped from Fort William.

CANADIAN IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. How many immigrants entered the Dominion of Canada during the year beginning on the 1st day of July, 1899, and ending 30th day of June, 1900?
2. How many of these have settled in Canada?
3. Referring to those who have settled in Canada, from what countries have they come respectively?
4. What information or means of information has the government as to the number or proportion of immigrants arriving in Canada during the year aforesaid who have settled in the United States of America?
5. What number or proportion of the immigrants arriving in Canada during the year aforesaid have gone to reside permanently or have settled in the United States of America?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1. The number of immigrants entering Canada during the period named was 62,515; included in this were 21,016, via ocean ports, who were destined for and ticketed through to the United States.
2. 41,499.

3. United States	14,215
English and Welsh	7,162
Scotch	1,183
Irish	701
Galicians	5,549
Germans	704
Scandinavians	1,191
French and Belgians	427
Doukhobors	2,368
Miscellaneous	7,999
	41,499

4. The government has no information that any immigrants arriving in Canada have settled in the United States, except what is shown by the records at the ocean ports of the number ticketed through to that country.
5. The government has no information on this subject.

RAILWAY BONUSES.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria) asked :

1. What total sums have been voted to railways in Canada in bonuses by municipalities, viz. : counties or groups of counties, townships or groups of townships, towns and villages ?
2. To what roads were such bonuses granted, and to what amount each ?
3. Have any of these bonuses been repaid by the Dominion parliament, either directily or indirectly ?
4. Is it the intention of the government to refund to such municipalities the bonuses so voted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I would refer the hon. gentleman to the report of the Department of Railways and Canals which, I think, contains all the information he desires. If there should be any not to be found in that report, I will bring it down.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the answer to the last paragraph of the question ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will have to ask the hon. gentleman to allow that to stand.

EASTERN EXTENSION RAILWAY AND NOVA SCOTIA GOVERNMENT ARBITRATION.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What is the scope of the arbitration respecting the Eastern Extension Railway and the Nova Scotia government?
2. Have the arbitrators power to hear the claims of the municipalities of Pictou and Antigonish for amount expended for right of way for said railway, or is the reference confined to the claims of the province of Nova Scotia only?
3. Has the scope of the commission or reference been enlarged, and if so, to what extent?
4. Will the government cause to be brought down at an early day all such papers respecting this reference as may properly be brought down at this date?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The scope of the arbitration covers only the claim presented by the government of Nova Scotia, and does not include the claims of the municipality. The scope of the commission of the Lieutenant-Governor has not been enlarged. It would not be advisable to bring down any papers at present.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST BONDS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. What is the amount of bonds of the Montreal Turnpike Trust held at the present time by the government of Canada?
2. Since when has interest been paid upon the said bonds?
3. What is the amount actually due upon said bonds for interest?
4. Did the Minister of Finance oppose the passage of a provincial law or regulation extending to forty-eight hours the time during which a return ticket upon the roads of the Montreal Turnpike Trust would be available? If so, upon what ground was said opposition made?
5. What are the names of the trustees named by the government of Canada to represent the bondholders at the meeting held on February 12, instant?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

1. $195,000.
2. Interest on said bonds has been paid to 1st July, 1896.
3. The amount now due on said bonds for interest is $30,712.50.
4. The Minister of Finance did not oppose the passage of the Bill referred to in question 4. It was one of two Bills with regard to the trust introduced in 1899 in the Quebec legislature by a private member. The Minister of Finance asked the provincial authorities to suspend action on the Bills until he could make inquiries as to their effect, the Dominion government being interested as bondholders of the trust, and the interest on the bonds held by the government being then in default. The matter was referred by his direction to the trust and he was informed by the secretary of the trust that the effect of the Bills would be to diminish the revenues of the trust by some $4,000 or $5,000 a year, and that the trust were opposing the passing of the Bills. In consequence of the representations made by the trust the Bills were dropped and no further action on the part of the Dominion government was necessary.
5. The trustees named by the government of Canada at the meeting of 12th February, were: Messrs. Paul Galibert, Thomas A. Trenholme and Charles Meunier.

OWEN SOUND CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria) asked :

1. Who are the members of the 'Owen Sound Dredge and Construction Company,' referrred to on page V—228, Auditor General's Report, as receiving $9,960 for use of dredge, &c., from May 12, 1899, to December 11, 1899, at $8 per hour?
2. Is Mr. Horsey, now M.P. for Grey, a member of said company ?
3. Were tenders called for, for the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte) :

1. Names of members of company, not known to the department.
2. Not to the knowledge of the department.
3. No; an arrangement was made at $8 per hour for a minimum quantity of dredging of 600 cubic yards, which is in accordance with the practice of the department and has been found very satisfactory.

DREDGE HACKETT.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria) asked :

1. Who are Bowman & Porter, owners of dredge Hackett, mentioned on page V—226, Auditor General's Report, as receiving $5,840 for services of dredge, at $8 an hour, from July 12 to October 18, 1899, at Kincardine?
2. Is Mr. Bowman the Liberal member for the legislature of Ontario from Bruce?
3. If not, is he a relative ?
4. Were tenders asked for the performance of this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte) :

1. They are a firm of experienced contractors of good standing.
2. The department has no information on this subject.
3. No.

An arrangement was made at $8 per hour for a minimum quantity of dredging of 600 cubic yards, which is in accordance with the practice of the department and has been found very satisfactory.

DEPTH OF WATER IN THE ST. LAWRENCE CHANNEL.

Mr. KEMP asked :

When does the government expect that vessels of fourteen feet draught will be able to pass from Lake Ontario through the canals and St. Lawrence channels to Montreal without lightening?

What was the maximum depth, during the last season of navigation, that vessels could draw between the above-named points?

What work still remains to be done in order that vessels drawing fourteen feet may pass from Lake Ontario to Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The form of this question implies that it is doubtful whether we have a through channel of fourteen feet of water in the St. Lawrence canal and lake and river reaches. This would not be and is not a correct statement of the situation. There is, and was, during the past season of navigation, a channel of fourteen feet throughout the entire length of the canal system from Lake Ontario to Montreal—that is to say, there is fourteen feet of water on the mitre sills of all the locks in the St. Lawrence canals, and more than the fourteen-foot channel through the intervening river and lake stretches. This depth of water is available without lightering, and was available during the last season without lightering. Although work has yet to be done, and always will require to be done from time to time, to ease the curves or to straighten and improve the channel, no work remains to be done in order to furnish fourteen feet of water for the purposes of navigation. An organized attempt has been made, I believe, in the interest of competing railways, to create doubts as to this depth being available throughout the entire St. Lawrence route, as also by shippers who are interested in maintaining the old system of transport ; and there is ground to believe that some elevator proprietors have been inclined to create the same impression. The only thing that can be said with truth respecting the route is that, as the channel is a new one, people who are navigating it have been less careful than they should have been, and have disregarded instructions, signals, buoys &c., and have not confined themselves to the channel. The few accidents which have occurred have been due to this cause, and have occurred on shoals and ledges outside of the buoyed channel——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the objection ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) is introducing a debatable subject that is not at all necessary in answering the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These few accidents are believed to be due to carelessness, or want of knowledge of the pilot——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Order. The hon. gentleman is introducing subjects entirely apart from the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the matter with the hon. gentlemen opposite ? One would think that they were disappointed to hear that the canals were in a condition for fourteen-foot navigation.

Mr. SPEAKER. In answering questions, the privilege is allowed members of the government under the rules to make their statements as long as they please. At the same time, I understand that they are not allowed to engage in debate in answering the question. I have not followed the answer closely enough to be able to say whether debatable matter has been introduced or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There will always be more or less trouble, unless people are exceedingly careful—and they rarely are—in making use of an entirely new channel ; and nothing has occurred on the St. Lawrence route that would not have occurred on any route if the like carelessness or want of knowledge were displayed. I may say that last season after the canals were opened, vessels of 12½ up to 13½ feet draught successfully navigated throughout the entire route, without encountering any obstruction whatever or experiencing any difficulty.

SHED, SALMON RIVER WHARF.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) asked :

What is the total cost to date of the shed constructed upon the wharf at Salmon river, Halifax county, N.S.?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). Nothing has yet been paid for the shed referred to.

CHANGES OF LIGHTS, CASCUMPEC HARBOUR.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. What changes have been made in the Cascumpec Harbour lights since 1899? What amount of money was paid in making changes, and to whom paid?

2. Are those lights now supposed to be permanent or are any further changes contemplated in the near future?

3. Is the government aware that such frequent and varied changes of lights have rendered doubly hazardous the lives of fishermen frequenting the harbour, especially from the province of New Brunswick, resulting last year in the loss of many valuable lives and destruction of a large number of fishing craft?

4. Will the government, when making changes in the location of those lights in the future, give full notice of same in local newspapers, in order that all interested may have a knowledge of the different changes?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Before answering the question, I desire to call attention to the objectionable form in which the hon. gentleman has presented the third question. It is not permitted, under the rules, to allege facts or to suggest any improper inferences. However, I will not take advantage of that, but will give answers to the hon. gentleman's questions, as follows :

1. In the spring of 1899 the main lighthouse at Cascumpec was moved from Sandy Island in the harbour to the South Sand Head, at the entrance of the harbour, in consequence of the wasting away of Sandy Island by the sea, and in September, 1899, the range mast lights previously maintained on Savage Island were moved on to the same South Sand Head to indicate the channel through the bar outside of the Sand Head. This work was done under the supervision of Mr. Walsh of the provincial agency, and the total cost of the work was $428.57. In the spring of 1900, the two mast lights above referred to were replaced by inclosed towers so that better lights could be shown from them and so that they would answer as day beacons. At the same time, some slight change was made in the alignment to suit change in the channel. This work was done by Mr. Walsh.

2. Range lights on a low shore, like the north shore of Prince Edward Island, where the channels break through shifting sands, and are continually changing, can never be considered as permanent ; and the department can never be sure for any period in advance that the channel will remain where it is at any time marked. If the channel changes at any time in the near future, it will be necessary to change the alignment of the range lights to suit. At Cascumpec we have been obliged to change the leading marks very often, and have no hope that the present arrangement can be considered as permanent.

3. The government is not aware that such frequent and varied changes of lights can be in any way obviated. Changes in the channel are beyond the control of the department, and a certain amount of danger necessarily attends the use of shifting channels of this kind. The department is not aware that any loss of life or vessels occurred at Cascumpec in consequence of any neglect in the arrangement of the range lights.

4. When the government makes changes in the location of lights, the fact is advertised in notices to mariners, distributed to the whole shipping community. It would be useless to give notice of light changes in local newspapers, because the local seamen are always acquainted with them, and the local newspapers would not reach strangers who are mainly interested in learning of such changes. The present system of circulating Notices to Mariners throughout the Dominion is considered efficient.

CASCUMPEC HARBOUR—IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. What steps, if any, have been taken by the government to improve Cascumpec Harbour, Prince county, P.E.I., which each year becomes less satisfactory to navigators, and which is the main harbour of refuge on the whole north coast of Prince Edward Island?

2. Does the government intend carrying out the deepening of the main channel there according to the plans of the engineers employed by the late government, or have any other plans of operations been decided upon, and if so, what are they?

3. Have any measures been taken to prevent the break in the sand hills which adversely affect the depth of water in the main channel, and if not, why not?

4. From what department of the government was the money granted to provide material to close one of those little channels last winter ? What amount of money was expended, and to whom paid?

5. Is the government aware that the brush and material used was not put properly in place, that the work was not done under proper inspection, and was carried out to sea, to the great detriment and loss to coast fishermen?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) :

1. Resident Engineer Hegan was instructed on July 31 last to expend $1,500 by day labour in closing the opening through the bar. The opening, however, has so changed and increased that it was not advisable to begin work without a further examination.

2. Under consideration.

3. Engineer Hegan has been instructed to make an examination and report on work required.

4. Nothing expended by this department.

5. There is no information in the department of any such work having been done. We are communicating now with the resident engineer who has visited the locality.

BOLSOVER POST OFFICE—REMOVAL.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria) asked :

1. Why was the post office at Bolsover, in North Victoria, removed from its former site to a point about a mile further east?

2. Upon whose recommendation was the change made?

3. Was there any complaint or charge against the late postmaster, Mr. James McGirr?

4. Were petitions presented (1) for retaining the office in the former place, and how many signatures were upon it, (2) for moving it to its present site, and how many signatures were on it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. The location of the Bolsover post office, Victoria county, N. R., was changed in order to remove the post office to a site more convenient for the public.

2. The change was made in conformity with a petition to the department.

3. There does not appear to have been any complaint against the late postmaster.

4. Petitions were received for and against the change of site. The petition for the removal of the office was signed by seventy-two persons. The petition against its removal was signed by 112 persons. It has been represented to the department, however, by a number of signers of the latter petition, that they signed it under a misapprehension and really desired and approved the change.

POSTMASTER AT MILLSTREAM, N.B.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has James A. Fenwick, for many years postmaster at Millstream, King's county, N.B., been dismissed?

2. If so, were charges preferred against him, and if any, by whom preferred, and of what character, and was any investigation held?

3. At whose request was Mr. Fenwick removed, if he has been dismissed?

4. Was any petition received by the Post Office Department asking for a change of postmaster at Millstream aforesaid, and if so, by how many persons residing within a radius of two miles from said post office at Millstream was such petition, if any, signed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. Yes.

2. Mr. Fenwick, as appeared from the statement from Lieut.-Col. Jas. Domville, ex-M.P., was an active political partisan. Under the circumstances, an investigation was not considered necessary.

3. Covered by answers Nos. 1 and 2.

4. No petition for a change in the postmastership of Millstream was received at the department.

NATIONALIZATION OF RAILWAYS—SIR WM. VAN HORNE'S STATEMENT.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like, as a matter of privilege, to set myself right before the House and the public. In this morning's Citizen, in connection with the debate I introduced two days ago, the following statement is made :

And in reply to a further question, I said that a national board of directors entirely beyond political control or influence might succeed in handling the railways of the country ; but I could not see how such a board could be established and maintained on a sufficiently independent footing.

I regard it impossible.

Now, I wish here to accept this statement of Sir William Van Horne. I do not think I contradicted that in anything that I quoted from him the other day, and while I accept this explanation of his, I regret that after his long experience with the Canadian people and with the Dominion parliament, he should think we are incompetent to administer anything that we may have to administer, even if we have to nationalize our railroads. What he says is either a compliment to the hon. gentlemen opposite, signifying that they have foiled him in some of his endeavours in regard to a national railway, or that he does consider them to have administered it in a political fashion.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Clifford Sifton) to a return ordered by the House on February 12, which I do not think it would take a long time to prepare, and which I would like to have as soon as possible. It is a return showing an itemized statement of the number of gallons of liquor taken into the Yukon, with the names of the permits. There cannot be many of them. If that return could be hastened I would be very glad.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give it attention.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to suggest to the hon. gentleman that it is desirable to have brought down at as early a date as possible, any measures which the government propose to introduce. The right hon. gentleman will remember that during past sessions there has been some difficulty experienced in giving to government measures as full consideration as we would like, owing to the late date at which they have been brought down. As some two weeks of the session have now elapsed, I think that the House might reasonably expect that we should have the measures which the government proposes to introduce brought down at an early date.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think that all the Bills will be introduced next week.

THE TRADE AND NAVIGATION RETURNS.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) when we may expect the Trade and Navigation Returns that was tabled some days ago. It is usual that they should be distributed to the members of the House immediately afterwards. I have made inquiries on several occasions, and up to this time I am unaware that they have been distributed to the members.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). A limited number reached the department and have been distributed, and I expected a full supply for the members before this. I will make inquiry with reference to the matter.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 2) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900. He said : The object of the Bill is, first, to relegate to the back of the ballot paper the name of the printer, which is now on the face of the ballot. The Act does not specify as to where the printer's name should appear. I find in some constituencies the printer's name is printed on the face of the ballot, and I think it ought to be printed on the back of the ballot. The next amendment relates to the counterfoil. As the ballot is now made, we have a stub, a counterfoil and a ballot, and as many ballots are found to be blank when they are counted on election night, I think it would be a wise policy to have the face of the counterfoil black, similar to the broad lines running across the ballot. The next object is to transfer the words that now appear on form P, section 48, 'electoral district of . . . 19 . Ballot paper,' and all other words liable to be placed there, to the back of the ballot also. By that means we would have nothing above the black line on the top or below the black line at the bottom. That, I think will make this ballot almost a perfect ballot.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not prepared at this moment to offer any observation on the hon. gentleman's Bill. I would simply call his attention, and the attention of the House, to the fact that we have several Bills introduced this session to amend the Elections Act. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has one on the Order paper, as has also the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). I think it well that all these Bills should be brought before the House in order that they may secure the views of the members regarding them. I propose that we should not discuss this Bill any further at the present time. We will allow the Bill to take its second reading, and the same with all the Bills which are upon the Order paper, so that we may compare notes upon the amendments and see whether they are acceptable.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). That is rather a strange innovation on the order that has been followed in this House, because it is universally admitted that the second reading of a Bill accepts its principle. Now the First Minister proposes to introduce a new rule.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have several times acted as I now suggest. Moreover, I recognize the principle of this Bill in that I think there is room for amendment to the Act, and the government has in contemplation an amendment to the Elections Act. We accept the principle of the Bill that the Act should be amended, but we propose to leave the discussion of the various amendments to another occasion.

Mr. SPROULE. On one or two previous occasions that was done because the government had a Bill on the same subject, and when the government's Bill was about to be considered, then all the other Bills relating to the same subject were considered at the same time. But at the present session I do not understand that the government propose to amend the election law ; therefore, they cannot consider the Bills brought in by private members in connection with theirs.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Before the motion passes, I would like to draw the attention of the First Minister to the fact that a number of very useful machines are being used to facilitate voting. I have seen one of them operating myself, made by a man named Craig, of Kinmount, and it operates perfectly. There is no clock work about it, it never gets out of order, the voter can see how his ballot is punched every time. I would suggest that the question of voting by machine might also be considered, so as to avoid, if possible, the ballot stuffing that so disgraced a number of ridings throughout Canada during the last few years.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Might I suggest to the right hon. premier the desirability of referring all these Bills to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act to a special committee ? I do not know myself what the practice of the House is on such a matter, but I may say that I have already given notice of an amendment to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. I may add that I have been in communication with some of the most prominent judges in the Dominion, and the Bill, of which I have given notice, is the result of suggestions that I have received from them. Now, inasmuch as I believe these amendments will be in the interest of the entire country, would it not be a good idea for the Premier to appoint a special committee to deal with all these amendments, and to make such suggestions to the House as the committee thought wise ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not prepared to give an answer upon this point now.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 4) to amend the Railway Act. He said: The law in regard to cattle guards that this Bill of mine is intended to remedy is in a very bad state as far as the farmers of my section, and I think, of the country, are concerned. It is by no means in the same condition that it was in when we first had legislation upon this subject. As the House will remember probably, or find out by referring to the revised statutes of 1886, the liability of railway companies in regard to cattle guards originally was that the railway company was liable for damages if animals got upon the railways from the highway, irrespective of whether the animals, as regards other questions in law, were at large upon the highway or not. To leave the railway only responsible to the owners when the animals are not at large, would be most impracticable and certainly an imposition upon the inhabitants of the country. To put myself right before the House at the beginning, I beg to state that I am not seeking to interfere with the protection that railways have in regard to killing cattle at the point of intersection of the railway and the highway. There is another branch of the railway statute which provides that if cattle are killed at the point of intersection the railway is in no way responsible for it, and not only that, but if the owner of cattle allows these animals to be at the point of intersection, not in charge of some person to control them, and if damage results to the railway property, to the engines, or anything else that belongs to the railway, the owner is liable for such damage. The part of the statute which this amending Bill is aimed at is the part which says that the railway shall be liable for not keeping up fences along the lines of their railway, and cattle guards at highway crossings. Up to the year 1888 that liability was absolute, but in 1888 there was a new consolidation of the Railway Act, and in that consolidation we find that this provision was taken out of the Act instead of leaving the liability absolute as it had been. The Act, as passed, reads:

> Until such fences and cattle guards are duly made and completed, and if after they are so made and completed they are not duly maintained, the company shall be liable for all damages done by its trains and engines to cattle, horses and other animals, not wrongfully on the railway.

There is a qualification of the obligation of the railway company in the words 'not wrongfully on the railway.' When the judges of the courts began to see what these words meant, they had to decide that if an animal was not in charge of somebody at the time it got upon the railway it was wrongfully upon the highway. What my Bill is intended to meet is this: I say that if a railway company runs its line across a highway, and is required by legislation to keep cattle guards there, in order to make the highway reasonably safe, it cannot be said that it is required for any other purpose except to make it safe for animals which are not in charge of somebody on the highway. It is nonsense to contend that they must have the guards, and to say that if they destroy an animal, which is not properly upon the highway, they are not liable. If the judges decide that an animal must be under the control of a human being in order that the railway may be liable, it is idle to say that they need to have cattle guards at all, because no animal under the control of a human being could possibly get upon the railway whether there were cattle guards or whether there were not. As long as the railways are protected, as they are in other parts of the statute, by not being liable for accidents at the point of intersection, and I submit it is proper they should be so protected, the railways should be bound to keep up cattle guards against animals, whether they are at large or not at that point. There are cases innumerable where an animal escapes from the owner's premises. If there is a cattle guard to stop it, it will go on wandering upon the highway, but, if there is no cattle guard to turn it aside, it will go down the railway in the same way as it would go down the highway. I submit that this is a matter that ought to be remedied, and that the law ought to be so that when these animals, by any accident unknown to the owner, become improperly upon the highway, it should not affect the liability of the railway company for not having cattle guards there. Of course, this is not a matter that is merely problematical. I am sorry to say that in my part of the country we have had a great deal of difficulty over these things, and it is not a matter that I am anticipating at all. It is a matter that has already occasioned a great deal of damage to the inhabitants of the country, and I believe that this is the case with the inhabitants in other parts of the Dominion of Canada wherever these railways are. We find that we are getting along into the 20th century and that railways are being constructed more closely together, that the country is well cut up with railways, and we have to consider that while we are allowing these railways all these privileges, we ought to take care that the people of the country shall not be injuriously affected in an improper or unfair way. The case to which I am alluding has happened in a great many counties. The law reports are full of cases where an animal, without any intention on the part of the owner to allow it to wander, does accidentally get upon the highway. It goes down to the railway, and if there were cattle guards no harm would be done. The statute says that the railway company shall keep up cattle guards, but that if they do not they shall only be liable for damage for animals killed when they get on the railway from a place where they may properly be. My amendment is that animals shall not be held to be improperly there if they get upon the railway where there is no cattle guard. If my amendment is not proper we ought to abolish the law as to cattle guards altogether, because there is no need of a cattle guard at all if the animal is to be under the control of a human being, and if it crosses at the place where the cattle guard is required to be. I will not detain the House any longer; that is the object of the Bill, and it is, I submit, one which should meet with the approval of the House in the interests of the people. The railway is already amply protected by other portions of the statute at the point of intersection. If an animal is killed on the railway between where the cattle guards should be, if it is on that part of the earth which is both railway and highway, that part of the railway which is also highway, and that part of the highway which is also railway, by other sections of the statute the railway is amply protected. The law should be such that if the railway companies are bound to keep up cattle guards at all, they should be obliged to maintain them in such a way that they will prevent cattle getting on the track. At all events there should be some adequate remedy provided for the condition of things which now prevails in this regard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I will not suggest to the House that the motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) should not prevail, nor, that he should be precluded from having his Bill go on to the committee for full discussion. The House labours under the disadvantage of not having been able to study this Bill, as it is only a few moments ago, that it came under my notice. I think it would be well that the matter should go to the Railway Committee, although I must say that the proposal is not so free from difficulty as the hon. gentleman suggests. The law which the hon. gentleman proposes to amend is that sound principle which is to be found in the ordinary common law which casts upon a person who is negligent in the care and protection of his own property a measure of liability and makes him responsible on the ground of contributory negligence for any damage which may result. I take it from the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) that he proposes to deviate from that principle, but, I will not enter into a discussion at this stage. I know that a number of complaints have been made throughout the country in respect to these gates and crossings. Those complaints, however, are not so much, because cattle guards have not been placed upon the highways, as that the character of the modern cattle guard is not of as efficient a character as that of the cattle guards which were formerly used. I have had a good many complaints from different sections of the country from people who claimed to have suffered because of the change made in the construction of the cattle guards, but, I have not heard any complaints made in the direction which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) has now mentioned to the House. I am quite content that the Bill should go to the ordinary committee, when it can be fully discussed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has done justice to what the mover of the Bill (Mr. Lancaster) has suggested. I have not yet considered the provisions of the Bill, but the ground which was put forward was, that railway companies which are guilty of a disregard of the duty imposed upon them by statute should be held liable for that neglect, although cattle may be unlawfully on the highway. In other words, you have to choose between neglect of duty on the part of the railway company on the one hand, and neglect of duty on the part of the owner of the cattle on the other. That is a question which would present itself for the consideration of the Railway Committee, and I am not now prepared to express an opinion as to what the result ought to be. The minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) will see that you might have a neglect of statutory duty on the part of a railway company, and you might have cattle on the highway; unlawfully on the highway it is true, but nevertheless on the highway without any negligence on the part of the owner. They might get on the highway through the negligence of some other person, and then you would have the case of cattle unlawfully on the highway, but without the negligence of the owner, and you would have to choose between the position of such a person and the position of the railway company which had not provided proper cattle guards.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And the cattle guard might be neglected through some carelessness on the part of a third person.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then you would have to take into consideration the extent to which the railway companies are responsible for the negligence of their servants. I rose because I thought the minister had not done full justice to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman who moved the Bill.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I am glad the minister has decided to send this Bill to the Railway Committee, because I think it is perhaps the best place in which to discuss it. I agree with what the minister has said with regard to the kind of cattle guards now used. Since the old wooden guards were done away with and replaced by sheet iron or steel guards, the number of accidents has much increased because the modern cattle guards are no use, as animals can walk right over them as they can on the highway. As the law stands, no cattle can be on a highway unless in charge of some person, within half a mile of a railway without being illegally on the highway, and in villages where you have cattle running at large most of the time they are technically there in violation of the Act. While this Bill seeks to remedy one defect, I believe that parliament should go further and define what a proper cattle guard is. When the law was amended before, I thought it was amended in the wrong direction. I thought it was made worse, instead of better, and I think so still. I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that there have been many complaints in my locality, and I believe that the duty devolves upon parliament to provide a remedy.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Does the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) think that this is such a Bill as should be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals ? The alteration in the law suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) is a very simple one. We have suffered a great deal in the province of Quebec from the legislation which this Bill seeks to change. We had the recent case of Campbell vs. the Grand Trunk Railway, in which a horse during the night leaped over a fence to the highway, then wandered to the railway crossing and on account of the defective state of the cattle guards got upon the track and was killed. The plaintiff obtained judgment in the Superior Court on the ground that the railway company was in default, but in the Court of Appeal (I speak from memory now) it was held that under the law the animal was improperly upon the highway because of it not being accompanied by a human being. Well, it could not possibly be accompanied by a human being under the circumstances I have explained. The owner was not in fault for the animal got on the track and was killed because the cattle guards were defective. I certainly think the law requires to be changed, but I do not see that this Bill requires examination by the Railway Committee.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (South Wentworth). I can corroborate what the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said in regard to the poor character of the cattle guards now in use. They are constructed in such a way that the cattle can pass over them without any difficulty, and they do not at all fulfil the purpose for which they are intended. I wish also to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the fact that either there is no suitable law with regard to level crossings or the railways are violating the law every day. In our part of the country the fences at the railway crossings have been abolished, so that it is no longer possible for one person to drive cattle across the track, but it now requires three people to do so—one standing on each side of the track and another to drive the cattle over. If a railway train comes along, the cattle rush down one side of the track or the other, and some of them are liable to be killed. Whether the law has been changed in regard to this or not, I do not know; but that is the condition of things that exists at the present time, and it is a very great hardship to the farmers through whose lands the railways pass.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman has no objection, I would move that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORT DUTIES ON LUMBER.

On the motion :

That in the opinion of this House, duties should be levied upon lumber imported into Canada corresponding with those now existing upon lumber entering the United States.—Mr. Bennett.

Mr. BENNETT. Stand.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I suppose the hon. gentleman will be prepared to take up the motion at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. BENNETT. I propose to go on with the next one.

Motion allowed to stand.

EXPORT DUTY ON SAW-LOGS.

Mr. WM. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe) moved :

That in the opinion of this House an export duty should be imposed upon all saw-logs cut on Indian reserves in Canada.

He said : Mr. Speaker, the question of the manufacture of our logs, particularly pine logs, in the province of Ontario has been a moot question both in this House and in the local legislature for a number of years ; and I am pleased to be able to say that those who advocated the adoption of ways and means for causing the manufacture of saw-logs in our own country are highly satisfied with the results that have been attained. It is well known, particularly to hon. gentlemen coming from the province of Ontario, that as a result of the change introduced by the local government in 1897, though a large quantity of saw-logs, aggregating probably upwards of 300,000,000 feet in a year, were exported from different points on the Georgian Bay to points in Michigan, that business has been entirely stopped, and we have now the satisfaction of seeing that large quantity of lumber manufactured in the country. I need not say anything as to the advantage of such a change of policy.

In the province of Ontario timber cut on lands which are licensed by the Ontario government is, of course, subject to the control of that government, and subject to any rules and regulations it may adopt. But timber cut on lands known as Indian lands is not under the control of the Ontario government, but of the Federal government. As a consequence most of the logs cut on these so-called Indian lands in the province of Ontario are being exported from year to year to the United States. In answer to a question which was put on the paper the other day by myself, it was stated that no less than 25,000,000 feet of timber cut on Indian lands had been exported from the province of Ontario last year.

Now, if it is good policy to cause the manufacture in the country of timber cut on licensed lands, it is equally good policy to cause every log cut on Indian lands to be manufactured in the country ; and I have put this motion on the paper to-day in the hope that the Minister of Interior will announce a change of policy under which that desirable object shall be accomplished.

In making the motion, I am aware that there is in the American tariff a proviso by which the imposition of an export duty by this government might result detrimentally to the lumber industry as a whole ; for the amount of export duty would be added to the import duty on lumber passing from Canada to the United States. Of course, that export duty would have to be a very considerable amount. I am not prepared to say whether $1 a thousand would result in these logs being manufactured in the country. The probability is that it would have to be increased to $3 or $4. If the import duty on white pine going to the United States, which is $2 a thousand in the American tariff, should be increased to $4, it would be most detrimental to the interests of the province of Ontario and of the whole Dominion. For that reason, I do not propose to press the motion as it stands to a division ; but I do hope to evoke a statement from the Minister of the Interior that it is his intention to follow the line adopted by the Ontario government during the present year, by putting a prohibition on the export of all logs cut on Indian lands. While the amount cut last year was not large, it was sufficient to keep two or three mills of considerable size running. If the minister announces such an intention to-day, it will be fair to say that these people have had fair notice for a number of years that such a change would be brought about. They have had notice for the last ten years of an intention to place an export duty on logs, and they have had the notice in the form of the prohibition of the export of logs from the province of Ontario, adopted by the local government ; and if the minister makes the announcement that the logs cut on Indian lands during the present season must be manufactured in the country, I presume it will result in the manufacture this year of at least an equal quantity of logs to what was cut last year.

I do not propose to make any further remarks, but I shall be pleased to hear the minister make the announcement that he intends to follow the wholesome line of conduct pursued by Mr. Hardy, even if it was a death-bed repentance, and to prohibit the exportation of all logs cut on Indian lands during the present season, whether in the province of Ontario or any other province.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a very few words on this motion. The proposition to impose an export duty on logs going out of the country has been a live question in which I have taken a warm interest for very many years.

There are one or two ways in which we can remedy the evil. One is in the hands of the local government and the other in the hands of the Dominion government. One remedy consists in the changing the regulations, under which timber is allowed to be cut in the province of Ontario, and by this means compel the cutting of it to take place in this country. The other consists in the placing of an export duty on logs, which will accomplish the same purpose.

I have always been of the opinion that the proper remedy is to change the regulations, but we never could get the Indian Department here to do so with regard to the timber cut on our Indian lands, and as the Ontario government refused to change its regulations so as to compel the cutting of the timber in Canada taken off Crown lands, we were obliged to do the next best thing, and press for an export duty on logs to stop them being taken out of the country before being manufactured into lumber.

At last, however, the provincial government did move in the direction desired, and the regulations were changed, so that to-day all pine timber on the Crown lands of Ontario must be sawn in this country. This did away with one of the great evils for which we sought a remedy. But there is a large portion of our lumber still going out of the country not manufactured. Last year over 25,000,000 feet of logs were taken off the Indian reserves in the Algoma and Georgian Bay districts, principally on the Manitoulin Islands, and sawn in the United States, and a vast quantity of lumber in the log is still going out from those districts without restriction. This resolution seeks to have an export duty imposed, but I do not think that is the best way to prevent this evil. I think the Department of Indian Affairs, which has the power to change the regulations, just as the Ontario Crown Lands Department did, should change the regulations in such a way as to compel millowners to saw the logs in this country. The department could do this at any time. It reserves the right to change the regulations in the leases at any time. By changing the regulations, we would avoid the danger anticipated by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), namely, that the Americans might bring into operation that portion of their Customs Act which provides that when any country imposes an export duty on logs going into the United States, that clause of the American Act will at once come into force which doubles the duty on sawn lumber brought into American territory from that country. I would, therefore, urge the government to apply this remedy of changing the departmental regulations as soon as possible, and thus prevent a vast business which ought to be done in this country being transferred to the other side.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I do not suppose that hon. gentlemen opposite who have brought up this important question expect more at present than that they should have the opportunity, as they have had, of pressing it upon the attention of the House.

The general question of levying export duties has been repeatedly considered by the House, and there have been good reasons why it has not been deemed expedient to adopt that policy. Circumstances, however, might arise which would lead the government to adopt such a course, and we have taken the legislative power in certain cases to do so.

My hon. friend from East Simcoe has hardly expressed in his motion all he has in his mind. He proposes that we should levy an export duty on logs cut on Indian reserves, but it may be a question whether we could levy a duty on one section and not apply it universally.

But I fancy that the real purpose of my hon. friend is, not that there should be an export duty, but that there should be regulations of the Indian Department which would effect the same object. That is a matter well worthy of consideration, but for the present the government does not wish to commit itself to any particular course. If the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion, it will be considered in due course, or, if he desires, the debate might be adjourned and the question discussed at a later period.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). I would like to hear from the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Clifford Sifton) in what form licenses are granted by the Indian Department to cut timber, and whether they are renewable from year to year. Has the hon. minister the power to alter, by regulations, after the licenses are granted, the amount of duties to be paid and the conditions under which the duties should be levied? Has he reserved the power, as the Ontario government has done, of renewing the licenses on such altered conditions as he may choose? I do not remember on what conditions the licenses are issued—whether by statute of the Dominion, which gives the Minister of the Interior power to issue licenses, or whether the hon. minister only acts as the ward of the Indians and gives licenses without any special power to do so.

For the proper consideration of the whole question, it is well that the House should know in what form the licenses are granted —whether renewable from year to year, and whether the power is left in the hands of the minister to alter the regulations in the direction suggested by my hon. friend from Simcoe.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The licenses issued to cut timber on Indian lands are issued by the Department of Indian Affairs, under the authority of the Indian Act, which gives the Governor General in Council power to make regulations for the disposal of the timber upon these lands when they have been surrendered by the Indians. First of all, the Indian lands have to be surrendered to the government for the purposes of sale, and then the government disposes of the timber under regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council, and, except in special cases, public tenders are invited. I could not say whether, in respect of the licenses issued, there is such an implied contract as would prevent our altering the terms. There are very extensive timber lands not disposed of at all—Indian lands—and as to them we can make what conditions we please. But, as to lands on which licenses have been issued, my recollection is that there has been no change in the form of license adopted in former years. The hon. gentleman will remember that when the policy now in force in Ontario was first adopted, there was very serious question as to the power of the Ontario government to alter the terms of the licenses. I think the point raised was, that there was an implied contract on the part of the government to renew the licenses annually on the same terms or without substantial change and without looking particularly into the question and examining the licenses, I would not be in a position to express an opinion at present.

I suppose my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) desires the fullest information, and if he wishes I will bring down a full statement on this point, and, if necessary, get the opinion of the Department of Justice on the power of the government to alter the terms, so that the House may be in full possession of the facts.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). The principle adopted in Ontario, namely, the right to change the conditions of the leases, has been vindicated, not only in the courts of Ontario, but before the Privy Council in England. Since that principle has been vindicated, it ought to apply to all the licenses granted by the Indian Department here as well as by the province of Ontario.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). What Privy Council decision does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) refer to ?

Mr. MACLEAN. It went to the Privy Council within the last two years.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course, my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will understand that while the principle may, to some extent, apply under the Ontario leases, it does not follow that it would apply under our leases.

Mr. MACLEAN. The principle having been vindicated now, the government could use it for the protection of the country in these cases.

Mr. BENNETT. As the motion has been on the Order paper for over two weeks—for I believe it was put on the first day of the session—I am surprised that the Minister of the Interior comes down to the House now not able to furnish the least information as to what would be the effect of passing the resolution. I am only speaking from recollection, but I have had something to do in getting these licenses renewed for friends in my own riding, and my recollection is that they stand on all-fours with the Ontario licenses in this—that the Crown reserves to itself the right, at all times, to do as it pleases. That was the ground of interposition by the Ontario government. They took high ground that they had the right to interpose at any time ; and I submit that this government has the same right. However, as the resolution might produce the result I stated at the outset, of causing high duties by way of reprisal, and as there is not a great amount exported, I will not press the motion to a division. But I hope and trust that the government will, during the present session, and at the very earliest opportunity, announce to those who are now taking away these logs, that they cannot take them out of the province as logs, but must manufacture them in Ontario. As they have had notice from year to year that this power was held in reserve, the step might well be taken now. Mills in Michigan are dependent upon these logs to a certain extent ; and, as the Ontario government has intervened and stopped the exportation of the logs of the Ontario licenses, it is humiliating to find that the Dominion government will not follow their lead. I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before the motion is withdrawn, I would observe that the motion which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) debated to-day, and very properly, is not the motion which he gave notice of. The motion of which he gave notice was one in favour of an export duty, which involves a very large question ; but, in the address he delivered, he restricted himself to the subject of a change of regulation, which is a very different question.

Mr. BENNETT. But would have the same result.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I would like to call attention to the fact that the government, in 1897, took power to deal with just such cases—that is, they asked and were given authority to impose duties——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was confined to minerals, was it not ?

Mr. CLANCY. No, it gave the government power to deal with all such cases as my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has brought up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But the question brought before us to-day is one of regulation.

Mr. CLANCY. The question raised simply is whether the government would be taking a proper step in dealing with a portion of the case—that of the logs upon Indian lands—and leaving the other points involved in the same position as before.

Motion withdrawn.

MANUFACTURE OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel) moved:

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient that all binder twine now held by the government, together with all twine that may hereafter be manufactured by them, shall be sold direct to the farmer at a price to cover the actual cost of raw material and manufacture only, with 1 cent per pound added, and that no twine manufactured or paid for out of the Dominion treasury shall be sold or disposed of in any other way.

He said: In rising to make this motion I want to ask the kind indulgence of the House, which is usually extended to new members. I am aware that this is not a new question. It is a question that has been up for consideration in this House for a number of years; but as there are a good many new members in the House, I will give a very brief review of the sale and manufacture of binder twine as carried on by the government in the Kingston penitentiary. In 1894 the late government for the first time introduced the manufacture of binder twine in the Kingston penitentiary, and installed a plant for that purpose. In 1894-5 they adopted the policy of placing a traveller upon the road and selling the twine directly to the retail merchant, and the retail merchant sold it to the farmer. The then government entered into a contract with a Mr. Kelly, of Montreal, which contract ran for five years, and expired on September 1, 1900. But in June, 1896, that government was defeated, and a new government came into power. One of the first acts of the new government was to cancel altogether the agreement made by the former government with Mr. Kelly, and to adopt a new plan for the sale of binder twine. On coming into power they found on hand at the Kingston penitentiary all the twine that had been manufactured by the government the year before, amounting to about one million pounds. They sold that twine to Coll Bros. & Co. for the average price of $4.25 per hundred pounds. That twine had cost the country an average price of $4.66 per hundred pounds, but they sold it to this firm of political friends for 41 cents per hundred pounds less than it cost this country to manufacture it. In the year 1897 they sold the twine that had cost this country an average price of $4.43 per hundred pounds to manufacture, to another firm of their friends, the Hobbs Hardware Manufacturing Co., of the city of London, for the average price of $4.64, or 21 cents per hundred pounds over the cost of the twine during that year. In 1898, continuing the same policy, they sold the twine to H. N. Bate & Sons, another firm composed of their friends; the twine cost an average price of $4.72 per hundred pounds, and they sold it to this firm at a gain of 12 cents per hundred pounds over the cost. In the following year, 1899, the twine cost an average price of $6.25 per hundred pounds to manufacture, and they sold it to Hobbs & Co. for an average price of $6.51, or 26 cents per hundred pounds over the cost. The government then decided to make a change in the manner of disposing of the twine made in the Kingston penitentiary. In looking over the 'Hansard' I find that on May 9, 1900, a question was put to the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister by Mr. Clancy, in these words :

What was the quality and price of each class of hemp or other fibre purchased at the Kingston penitentiary between June 30, 1899, and January 1, 1900?

The PRIME MINISTER. Pending the sale of the output, it never has been the policy of the department to make public the price either of the raw material or the manufactured product.

But that year they decided to advertise the twine, and announced publicly that the farmer could purchase his twine directly from the Kingston penitentiary. Now, I ask the House to notice the kind of advertisement they put in the newspapers. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) asked this question in the House :

Has the government sent out a schedule of prices at which binder twine will be sold at Kingston penitentiary up to March 1, 1900.

The Prime Minister answers :

Yes ; as follows :—

	Per lb.
Lots of fifty tons and upwards—Manila....	12½c.
" " " Mixed.....	9½c.
Car-load lots less than fifty tons—Manila..	13c.
" " " Mixed...	10c.
Lots of one ton—Manila.....	13½c.
Lots of less than one ton—Manila.....	14c.
Mixed.....	11c.

Now, you will notice that the twine that the government advertised could be purchased by the farmers in quantities less than one ton for 14 cents per pound for manilia and 11 cents per pound for mixed, was manufactured by the same government at an average price of $6.25 per 100 pounds. Thus, in their announcement that they were prepared to sell twine direct to the farmer, they asked the farmer to pay, for what cost an average price of $6.25 per 100 pounds, $14 per 100 pounds for manila and $11 per hundred pounds for mixed, which seems to be rather a large percentage, but that was the announcement that was put in the newspaper. In looking over the Auditor General's Report, I notice that the actual output of twine from the Kingston penitentiary, in 1899, was $34,292.45 worth. It was sold, $7,258.63 worth to H. N. Bate & Sons, and $26,085.55 worth to the Hobbs Hardware Co., making a total of $33,344.18 worth. The balance was sold to the farmers, the balance being $948.27, and it cost the government of this country to advertise that $497. In coming forward to the Auditor General's Report for 1900, I notice that the total output of twine at the Kingston penitentiary was $59,481.71. They sold the largest proportion of that to two friends of their own. The Hobbs Company got $35,672.57 worth, and one, John Connor, got $15,753.53 worth, making a total, purchased by these two friends of the government, of $51,426.10 worth, and the farmers just got $8,055.61 worth. It cost them to advertise that to the farmers of this country, according to the Auditor General's Report, $725. Now, the motion that I have before the House has two or three simple requests. One is that the cost of the twine manufactured by the government in the Kingston penitentiary shall first be made out, and that when the cost is made out there shall be 1 cent per pound added for expenses of shipping out the twine to the farmers. If, for illustration, in 1899, the cost of twine being an average of $6.25 per ton, according to their own report, they had added 1 per cent per pound to it and advertised to the farmers that they could buy the total output of the Kingston penitentiary at $7.25 per 100 pounds, instead of $14 per 100 pounds for manila and $11 per hundred pounds for mixed, the government would have sold every pound of it direct to the farmers. Then, of course, as my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) says, Hobbs would not have got it, but we cannot help that. The government promised to sell it direct to the farmer, and we want to find out whether they are fulfilling the pledges they made. In answer to a question the other day, placed upon the Order paper by myself, the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) said they would not tell this parliament the cost of the raw material for the manufacture of the binder twine that was made in the Kingston penitentiary last year. I say that this is not fair to the people of this country. If my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) were the president of a company, and I was a stockholder, and if I went to him as a stockholder and asked him for prices in respect to the purchase of goods he was selling and in which I was interested, if I asked him after one year had expired from the time he purchased the goods and he refused to tell me, I would think that I had a fair grievance against the president of my company. So, I think when the people of this country, through their representatives, ask the government what the raw material cost that was paid for out of the public treasury, the government have a right to give the people a fair and simple answer, and tell them the facts of the case. I notice one or two things in the report of the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Mills) that are worthy of the attention of this House in discussing this matter. A. Ballantyne received for services as arbitrator, $500 in 1899. I suppose that was for arbitrating as to whether an amount ought to be paid or not. If the House would adopt the principle laid down in the motion I have submitted here, there would be no $500 to be paid for arbitration. The price would be so fixed, and it would be so low, that the farmers would willingly take up the full amount of twine manufactured, and there would be no charge of $500 to be paid by the country for arbitrating disputed accounts between the government and those who purchased the twine from them. I have here the statement of a former supporter of the government, Mr. McMillan, as reported in 'Hansard' of 1899, page 7213, Mr. McMillan says :

> I understand that in the state of Michigan, where I have friends living, binder twine is manufactured by the government of that state. The first thing they do is to advertise, and they allow the farmers to send in for a certain quantity and send the money with the order.

Mr. McMillan, on the same page, says :

> I believe the government should advertise and allow the farmers to send in their orders, taking at least 500 pounds of binder twine and sending the money along with the order.

That is a principle laid down by a former supporter of the government, and it seems to be a principle that they were unwilling to adopt and did not adopt. The motion that I submit for the consideration of the House, and I do not wish to detain hon. gentleman longer, is that the government shall sell the twine direct to the farmer for cash. They say, of course, the quantity is small that is manufactured, being only 500 tons each and every year, and that the country consumes a much larger quantity of twine. The government through their representatives have said to the farmers : The quantity of twine we manufacture is so small that we cannot supply all the farmers and therefore it would not be wise to supply any of them. I contend that the policy of the government should be that so far as the twine which they manufacture will supply the wants of the farmers, they should supply it to the farmers direct and abolish the system of first giving it to their political friends ; as for instance once in a while by advertising in the public press, and then advertising through circulars which are sent to the friends of the government who purchase twine throughout the country. I have no disposition to embarrass the government upon this small question, and when I call it a small question I mean that the amount involved is not very large, but at the same time it is of great importance to this country, and the farmers of the province of Ontario expressed themselves upon the question on the seventh of November. It was one of the most important questions for discussion in the late election, and I am quite certain that many of the Ontario electors voted against the government, because the government did not adopt the policy laid down in the resolution now before the House. Although I was elected a supporter of the Conservative party, I made the promise in my county that if the government would adopt the policy of selling the twine direct to the farmers, doing away with middlemen altogether, and giving to the farmers all the advantage that the supply of twine would warrant, that I would support the government upon that question. I am here to repeat that statement in the House as the representative of my constituents, and I am most anxious that that policy should be adopted. It is a policy that will remove altogether whatever suspicion surrounds the government in connection with the sale of this binder twine. I also wish to express my opinion that the government should furnish information to parliament, especially when that information is a year and a half old, when it is required by this House in the public interest. I wish now to refer to the quantity of manila that was purchased by the government in 1899 and 1900, and I refer to it because the Hon. David Mills in a pamphlet which I have here makes the statement that the farmers paid more for their binder twine last year because the government were compelled to pay more for the manila. I take the report of the Minister of Justice ending June 30, 1899, and I find that all the manila they purchased during that year was 125,000 pounds at 5¾ cents a pound. I would call attention to the fact that that is marked 'seconds.' I do not know that that means that the government has been selling pure manila made out of second quality, but it certainly stands there in the report that the Minister of Justice purchased second quality manila and when the government come to sell it they do not sell it as second quality, but as pure manila. It is a problem for the government to solve as to how they accomplish that. Then again I find from the report of the Minister of Justice that in the year 1900, they purchased 140,335 pounds of manila at 5½ cents; 123,344 pounds at 5½ cents, and only 8,320 pounds at 9 cents. In view of these figures I do not think that the people of Canada will agree in the statement that the reason why the farmers had to pay so much for their twine last year was that the government had to pay so much for their manila. I thank the House for their kind attention, and I am most anxious that this motion should be adopted, which I move, seconded by Mr. Johnston, of Cardwell.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The motion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) is one that certainly should not meet with the opposition of any representative of an agricultural constituency, and I think will receive the support of every member representing constituencies in Manitoba and North-west Territories. During the late campaign there were few questions that interested the farmers more or received their closest attention and criticism than the binder twine question, and quite naturally. In that country where population is filling in, where land is being taken up and a greater acreage being brought under cultivation every year, where an increased quantity of binder twine will be required each succeeding season, it is of the utmost importance that our farmers should be placed in a position to secure their twine at the cheapest possible price consistent with a legitimate business profit.

When Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice, it was deemed advisable in order not only to afford labour to our convicts in the Kingston penitentiary, but also to break the power of a combine that was said to exist in the twine industry in Canada, and to afford our farmers cheaper twine, to establish a plant for its manufacture in that institution. This action was taken with the result that twine could be purchased in those days, notwithstanding the outcry of a combine existing, at 6 and 6½ cents a pound. The argument has been used that owing to the limited amount manufactured at Kingston, 500 tons annually, it would have very little effect in lowering the price; but I think when that twine was sold to the farmers direct, as it was at that time, it acted as a great lever on the other manufacturers of twine and did result in preventing them from demanding an exorbitant figure for their output.

When the present government came into power they changed the manner of its disposal, and instead of selling to the farmers direct, they handed it over to their own political friends at a greatly reduced price so that our farmers had to pay for the same twine, only 4½ cents being received for it one year, while the consumers had to pay 10 and 11 cents the same season. The supporters of the government claim that it was owing to the increased price of the raw material consequent upon the American-Philippine war that raised the price of the finished product, but the returns brought down to the House during the last session of parliament explodes that contention; for, while there undoubtedly was a rise in the price of the raw material, it was not at all in keeping with the large price our farmers were compelled to pay for the twine: nor was any explanation forthcoming as to why the contractors were able to secure from the government the penitentiary twine at so comparatively low a figure notwithstanding the increased price of the raw material.

It has been said that tenders were called for, and the twine went to the highest tender, but that was not the case every year. It is true, as has been pointed out, that private circulars had been sent out to a number of the government's political friends inviting tenders; but it was only after considerable agitation had sprung up in the country, because of the government's action, that public advertisements in the press of the country were resorted to. Even then, as evidenced by the disclosures that took place before the Public Accounts Committee, these contractors were permitted to manipulate the tenders in their own interest and in such a manner as to surround the whole affair with great suspicion. Recognizing the justice of the outcry by the farming community, the government last year made a pretense of complying with their wishes and advertised in their party papers that farmers could secure twine direct from the penitentiary up to March 1. This was a practically valueless concession, as those of us who represent rural constituencies are fully aware, and the government seeing this extended the time to May 1. Even this was of very little account, for there is not one farmer in a thousand who will purchase his twine months before he requires it, and, as far as our western farmers are concerned, it was of no value whatever. In that country our crops do not mature before the middle of August, and how unreasonable it would be to expect them to take advantage of this so-called concession and purchase their twine during seeding time, when they are not in a position to know what amount they will require, whether their crops will be a failure or a success, or whether they will require any twine at all or not. Besides, how many of our farmers in a new country have bank accounts that they can afford to speculate by purchasing their twine four months before they will require it.

So, I say, so far as our western farmers are concerned—and I venture to say it is the same in the east—this so-called boon to the farmers is a sham and of no material benefit whatever. Had the government done as this resolution asks them to do, dealt directly with the farmers at any time and at all times during the whole season, at a slightly increased price above the cost of manufacture, the farmers would have been the beneficiaries, and, I believe, the exchequer would have derived more benefit as well; for in some instances in the past the contractors have secured the twine below the cost of manufacture.

The unfair argument made by our opponents during the late campaign in regard to the position we on the opposition benches took on this binder twine question was that owing to the government having taken the duty off, we were called upon to pay a higher price for our twine. This is an entire misrepresentation of our position. When the Conservative government left power, twine only bore a revenue tariff, and the penitentiary twine was sold direct to the farmers if they so desired. After the present government assumed the reins of office, they wiped out the duty. If, in the ordinary course of events, that action would have resulted in giving cheaper twine to our farmers, that was prevented by the government refusing to sell direct to the consumers, and by handing over the government twine to those who were the agents of the American combine, and who held up the farmers to the tune of thousands of dollars over and above what they should have paid had it been handled in a proper business manner.

If the supply at the penitentiary is not sufficient, in the government's opinion, to influence materially the market price, they have the means at their disposal to increase that supply. And while it may be said that it is not the province of the government to embark in commercial enterprises, I think it was quite justifiable for the government, when in such an industry as that, if the removal of the duty merely hands over the business to those who are members of a combine, to utilize every means at their command to afford relief to our farmers.

Without occupying any more of the time of the House, especially as the mover of the motion has gone so thoroughly into his case, I beg to say that it is my intention to support the motion most heartily.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Mr. Speaker, as a disappointed farmer, I wish to say that when the binder twine plant was placed in the Kingston penitentiary, I thought that possibly the farmers would be able to get their binder twine at a somewhat lower price than before ; but in that I have been disappointed. Although I have used some of the penitentiary binder twine, I have had to pay as much for it as I have paid private dealers. Only last year I sent for some of the penitentiary binder twine, and paid 10½ cents a pound for it ; and I could get it for the same price from private dealers. It appears to me that that is hardly fair to the farmers that the government should carry on an establishment of this kind, and dispose of the product to people who do not use it themselves, but take it simply for the purpose of selling it to the farmers and make money out of them. In this case the cheap labour of the penitentiary comes into competition with the labour of the factories of the country ; and this is done at the expense of the ratepayers, especially the farmers, who do more to keep up that plant than any other section of the community. We claim that this manufacture should be carried on for the benefit of the farmers, and yet they have had no benefit from it so far. As the question has been ably discussed by the two gentlemen who have preceded me, I do not intend to take up the time of the House any further ; but I promised the farmers of my constituency that I would do anything I could to have binder twine sold to the farmers at prices as low as the dealers pay, and I hope that the government, without regard to political pulls, and without any feeling towards the opposition, will make an effort to help the farmers in this respect.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the applause which I have received is owing to the members, most of them, knowing that I represent the only organized body of farmers in the Dominion of Canada. It is quite possible that I may not be able to speak for all the farmers ; but when I say that the body which I represent have taken a deep interest in these binder twine organizations throughout the country, and have pronounced themselves strongly upon all monopolies in binder twine, hon. members will see that I have some right to speak on the subject, especially when I hear the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) stating that the government have gone in to assist the monopolies of this country. I hope that is not true. I should be sorry to believe that the government, which promised to assist the farmers, the manufacturers, and all other classes, had gone in to assist the binder twine monopolies. I was told on my way down here that the binder twine manufacturers had held a meeting and had consulted with the minister at Ottawa, who has charge of that particular industry, on the advisability of the government assisting these manufacturers to keep up the prices; but I did not put a question on the Order paper concerning this rumour, because I could not believe possible that the government would lend its countenance to any such attempt. Governments cannot make binder twine for the farmers at less than cost any more than can individuals, but there is nothing to prevent a government which goes into that business, furnishing the twine to the farmers at very little above cost. It seems to me that the government acted wisely when it took the duty off binder twine, but when it assists monopolies, it nullifies any good that might have resulted from its policy.

I fully endorse the resolution before the House, and hope it will carry, and thus teach the manufacturers a lesson by showing them that they cannot hope to approach any government and expect that government to obtain the assistance of its supporters in any scheme to bleed the farmers.

The question has been raised as to what would be the best way to get the binder twine into the hands of the farmers. I am told that the government hesitates to trust the farmers individually, but that difficulty might be met by securing some prominent man in every township and making him the agent of the government for the sale of binder twine.

I have no desire to weary the House by prolonging this discussion, for I desire, and I think we all desire, a short session. For my part, I should wish the Prime Minister of this glorious country to have the opportunity of going over to the sounthern cross and show the people of Australia what confederation has done for this country. And when the Australian confederation has been organized, I would wish to see the right hon. gentleman go to South Africa, and there contribute to establish the great confederation which must take place in that country under the British Crown. For this short digression, I am sure the House will pardon me, and I would just in conclusion urge this point. The government has a very easy way of settling this binder twine question. Let it appoint in every township a first-class man—and it is very easy to find a first-class man among the farmers—who will act as its representative, and let him sell the binder twine at the very cheapest rate, and be responsible to the government for the proper conducting of the business.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). The very able manner in which the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution (Mr. Blain) placed the matter before the House leaves very little to be said by me or those who follow. I do not think that the government realizes the importance of this question to the farmers of this country. It is one much more important than the duty on agricultural implements, because the cost of binder twine is an annual tax for an annual necessity. When you come to realize the fact that an ordinary farmer in Manitoba has to pay annually for his binder twine from $25 to $100, you will understand how important to him is this matter. This article is one of the necessities of the farmer, particularly of the western country. I would like to ask the House, if it were shown that any necessity of the people generally, such as tea or sugar or tobacco, was handled by the government in the way in which my hon. friend has shown that the government has handled this article of binder twine, how long would the people submit to be so treated ? Do you think that any government or any supporter of the government would be proud of the position occupied by the government ? No, Sir ; but because the item in question is one that affects the farmers, only it can be treated here by hon. gentlemen opposite as a fit subject for joking and not for serious discussion. I do not rise for the purpose of making factious opposition, or in any way embarrassing the government, but the proposition of my hon. friend is so very fair, and one which could so easily be adopted and put into effect, and which would bring that relief to the farmer to which he is entitled, that I cannot press it too forcibly on the attention of this House and the government. When the government started the manufacturing of binder twine in the penitentiaries, we expected great results in the interest of the farmer, but that industry has been so managed by this government that we have utterly failed to realize what was expected. As I have said, the expenditure on binder twine of any ordinary farmer in our part of the country averages from $25 to $100 per year, and consequently is a very serious item in his business. This matter, therefore, is one which the government will have to take into its most serious consideration, and I trust that the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Blain), and the able manner in which he has submitted it, will open the eyes of the administration to the vital necessity of dealing satisfactorily with this matter before this session closes.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I happen to be a farmer during two or three months in the year, and, therefore, may claim some right to the indulgence of the House while I speak on this subject. When the government came into power in 1896——

An hon. MEMBER. A long time ago.

Mr. OSLER. Yes, for the country ; they were very anxious that monopolies should be prevented by Act of parliament—perhaps the most difficult thing to accomplish that a government ever attempted to carry out. But here, at least, was a case in which the government had it absolutely in their own power to prevent a monopoly. They have now a manufactory of this binder twine of their own, and, consequently, can sell it to the farmers at a reasonable price, covering the cost, and by doing so keep down the prices of other manufacturers. Instead of doing that, however, they deliberately combine with the other manufacturers to prevent the farmers getting the binder twine readily and cheaply from the government factory. The result of this combine between the government and the other manufacturers has been that the binder twine factories in Ontario have for the last two years divided among their shareholders dividends ranging all the way up from 40 to 100 per cent on their paid up capital. The government had it in their power to remedy that state of affairs. I do not object to a company which risks its money in manufacturing making a very handsome profit, because manufacturing business is uncertain. But binder twine is, perhaps, the simplest form of manufacturing we have in this country, and yet there is no manufacturing concern in Canada that has distributed among its shareholders in the past four years, or since this government has been in power, such enormous dividends as has been paid by the binder twine manufacturers. I think the resolution is a proper one. The government are manufacturers of twine, and they could sell the twine to the farmers at cost price, thereby carrying out in some small measure one of their promises, and showing that they were in earnest when they declared themselves anxious to provide that there should not be any unjust combine of capital against the farmers and artisans of this country.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). During the recent election the supporters of the present government made a sweeping statement to the farmers, regarding what they had done for them in the matter of binder twine, and took credit to themselves for doing the first generous thing for the farmers that had been done for five years, that of selling binder twine to the farmers direct. And at what prices did they sell it ? Take one sample—they issued a sheet announcing that they would sell in less than ton lots to the farmers at 14 cents a pound for one grade, that of manila. And what did they sell it to their own friends for ? They sold it at 7¼ cents a pound.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the same time ?

Mr. SPROULE. At the same time, and the same quality of twine. And they ask the farmers to be grateful for their generous act to them. According to my experience one of the questions that, above all others helped to leave the government in the minority in the province of Ontario, was the way they handled the binder twine. The farmers, very properly reasoned : If, in regard to an article in which we are so directly and so vitally interested, the government have been treating us unfairly, how can we trust them in other things ? Many of the government's friends —I have it from these people privately, and have even heard it stated by them on the public platform—voted against the government on that question. It is only fair that this should be known, for the farmers resented being deceived as well as mulct in a large amount of money. Whether it would be a proper thing to sell to the farmers direct at cost price, I am not prepared to say. I still believe that the true principle was that acted upon by the former government. They sold the twine to an agent, who sold it to the retail dealers throughout the country; but, to guard the farmer against unfair treatment, the government reserved the right to sell direct to the farmer at 10 per cent above the price at which it was sold to the agent. This allowed a profit to all parties, while no injustice could be done. Had this government followed that course, they would have done right. But to sell binder twine at $6.21 to their friends, which was sold to the farmers at $16, was a thing for which they should be condemned. For my part, I made this a subject of attack of the government on every platform on which I spoke during the late election.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government certainly has no right to complain of the manner in which my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) introduced this question. It is a very important question, and the interest evinced in it by all sides of the House shows that that importance is recognized. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) and others who followed him have made statements which the government is not prepared to accept. The question is a large one, and, as it is understood that we are not to sit this evening, I will ask the House to agree to the adjournment of the debate, that we may continue the discussion at another time. As to the policy suggested by my hon. friend, I am not prepared to express an opinion. The arguments are not new to us, but have engaged the attention of the government. Some of the statements made by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and others are liable to be contradicted, and, at the proper time, I am confident, an explanation will be made in rebuttal of those statements. But, at least allow me now to express my satisfaction at the statement made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson), that the government had done a good thing when they put binder twine on the free list. This is the first time I have heard that statement from that side of the House. I agree with the hon. gentleman, and he will find that the government will always be ready to help him against monopolies of every kind. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose it is understood that there will be an opportunity of bringing this matter up again. The right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows that this motion to adjourn the debate sometimes means the end of a question like this.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) knows me too well to have any such suspicion. But, to relieve his mind I may tell him that, according to the rules, this will be one of the first Orders of the Day on Wednesday evening next.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 5.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 22, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 12) respecting the London Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Canada.—Mr. Hyman.

Bill (No. 13) respecting the Canada National Railway and Transport Co.—Mr. Cowan—by Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 14) to incorporate the Century Life Insurance Co.—Mr. Monk.

DEBATES COMMITTEE.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved:

That the name of Mr. R. L. Richardson, member for the electoral divison of Lisgar, be added to the list of members forming the Committee of Debates of this House.

He said : The hon. member for Lisgar was on the committee during the last parliament, and it is desirable that he should be there once more.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection to the motion ; but I will ask that the name of Mr. McCreary be also added to the committee.

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended agreed to.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Annual Report of the Inland Revenue Department, Part III.—Adulteration of Food.—Hon. M. E. Bernier.

The Civil Service List of Canada for the year 1900.—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

INQUIRY FOR REPORT.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) if he can give me any information when the Trade and Commerce Returns will be laid on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid a little delay must occur. The hon. gentleman will understand that the Trade and Commerce Returns are necessarily somewhat posterior to the Trade and Navigation Returns.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the Trade and Navigation Returns I refer to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are down.

Mr. SPROULE. I inquired for them to-day, and did not get them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe the explanation is that the Minister of Customs laid them on the Table and a few copies were brought down, but there was not a sufficient number to distribute to all the members. He said he would attend to that matter.

SUPPLY—THE BUDGET—INQUIRY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MONK. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire when we may expect the budget.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not in a position to give the hon. gentleman any information on the subject to-day. At a later date the information will be given.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee.

Mr. MONK.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose that we take up the Estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I thought the government were going to proceed, as suggested, in the order in which the departments appear in the Estimates. It was mentioned that that course would be very convenient, as members would know what to expect, unless the government said the night before that they would take up something special.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it would be convenient to proceed in that way, and I had anticipated that the Solicitor General would be here to proceed with the Estimates of the Department of Justice, which are next in order ; but, as he is not here, I have asked my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to fill up the gap. Perhaps the Solicitor General will be here later, when we may proceed with the Estimates of the Department of Justice.

Maintenance and repairs to Government steamers $160,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). That is the ordinary amount voted every year. There will be an additional amount in the supplementary estimates as usual.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. gentleman give any information concerning the repairs to the Minto. I understand that when she arrived at Charlottetown she was immediately put into dock and had to be repaired before attempting her season's work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman was incorrectly informed. The Minto, on her voyage out from England, encountered one of the most severe storms her captain said he had ever experienced in the Atlantic. Some parts of her deck fittings were smashed by the ice, and the iron work twisted, but this had nothing to do with the hull or any material part of the vessel, and there never was any complaint against the builder. But certain changes, not very material, and almost always incidental to a new boat, had to be made. After her first winter's experience in the ice, the Minto had to go into dock to be re-riveted, but the same thing occurred when the Stanley was built, after she had a season's experience in the ice. There was, however, a larger number of loose rivets in the Minto than in the Stanley, and I communicated direct to Gourley Bros., asking them whether, considering the number of rivets that had to be re-riveted, they should not bear their share of the expense. They replied, giving in detail the great pains taken in their shipyard to have everything done in first-class order, and asked me, as they could not afford to have the slightest suspicion of negligence attached to their work, what I thought they could do. I instructed my deputy to reply that I thought they should bear at least one-half of the cost of re-riveting.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How much was the cost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $4,900 for re-riveting and putting it up.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How much was the cost at Charlottetown, before the Minto was regularly in commission ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not recollect, but I stated the amount in debate last year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minto, I presume, was built after tender, and a regular contract drawn up ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman ask, as a matter of favour or fair-play or as a matter of law, that the contractor should contribute towards the expense of re-riveting.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no claim as a matter of law at all. I simply submitted the facts to them as first-class shipbuilders. I stated that after one year's experience in the ice, 1,300 rivets had to be re-riveted, and asked them could they afford this. I suggested that they should pay one-half. As a matter of law, she was certified in first-class condition, and the captain of the Minto intimates that he never had as good a boat before, and is thoroughly satisfied with her in every respect. We have no fault to find, except that, as the result of the year's work, more rivets require re-riveting than should be the case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How does the cost of maintenance compare with that of the Stanley ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A little more. The Minto is 25 feet longer and proportionately broader and has a few more men, but the cost is very little more.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who is the commander ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain Finlayson, promoted from the Stanley, and the first officer of the Stanley is the captain.

Mr. MONK. What proportion of expenditure is attributable to repairs and what to maintenance ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing special. Every year we come down with the supplementary estimates whenever the repairs are more than the ordinary.

Mr. CLANCY. Why is this increase from year to year in the maintenance and repairs to government steamers ? In 1900 the amount was $145,000, and in 1901, $160,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can hold out no hope of the expenditure being any less. It will rather be likely to be increased, because there is an additional steamer this winter. We have two steamers on the route trying to keep winter communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

Mr. CLANCY. And not succeeding ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Both were frozen in fourteen days, but are running again. The Stanley got out of the ice yesterday, and the Minto three or four days ago. $160,000 is the ordinary sum voted, and when any special repairs are required we ask for a supplementary estimate.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the amount expended last year, on which this estimate was based ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was $160,000 spent, and $20,000 supplementary voted, or $180,000, including repairs.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why not make it $180,000 this year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because the practice has been to vote the repairs in the supplementary estimates. I think the better plan would be just to bring down the exact sum, but I simply follow the practice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think that is a new practice. The system on which the estimates used to be based a few years ago, took into consideration the total expenditure. Regardless of whether a boat was obtained by original or supplementary estimate. Bringing the estimates down in this way, a steady increase might escape the attention of the Committee. Evidently, $180,000 is the amount the hon. minister will require, for that was the amount last year and the year before; and, as I understand him, he does not hold out any hope that he will require any less this year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Referring to the question put by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), can the hon. minister tell us how much of that is apportioned to maintenance and how much to repairs ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Last year there was a supplementary vote for the Minto of $12,869, and alterations to the Aberdeen, $7,000. I shall propose this year's supplementary estimates for alterations and repairs to the Druid, the Aberdeen and some other steamers. I shall certainly require the whole $180,000. There will be the expense of running the additional steamer this winter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But, what I wished to ascertain is, how much of the expenditure is for maintenance and how much for repairs ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Substantially the whole of this is for maintenance—small ordinary repairs are included. Where there is a special expenditure amounting to five, six or seven thousand dollars, I intend to ask the House for a special vote, naming the amount and the vessel to be repaired.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. minister does not understand me, I take it that his officers have given him in detail the estimated expenditure for the maintenance of each ship, and also for the repairs of each ship. I do not ask for these details, but I desire to know how much is to be spent for repairs and how much for maintenance.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was $21,000 spent last year for repairs; the rest of the $180,000, was for maintenance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many ships has the hon. minister under his charge ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have all that we have had heretofore, with the Stanley in addition this winter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the Aberdeen ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Aberdeen, the Landsdowne, the Druid, the Minto, the Stanley and the Quadra.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Newfield has been lost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes; the Aberdeen takes her place. Otherwise the Aberdeen would be laid up. The expense is the same.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman has one ship less ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nominally, yes. But, formerly, when the Newfield was running in the winter, the Aberdeen was laid up at Quebec. Until we can get a ship built to take the Newfield's place, we have transferred the Aberdeen to the Nova Scotia shore. But the expense goes on the same.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As I understand, this amount is required for the maintenance and repairs for a certain fleet. One of the most expensive and valuable of the ships, the Newfield, has been lost. Yet, the hon. minister says he wants the same amount for maintenance and repairs. Allowing for the time that the Aberdeen is used, the amount required should not be the same, because the Newfield was running from January to December.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But, when the spring comes, I shall have to make other arrangements to supply the Newfield's place either by chartering another vessel or putting the Minto in the Newfield's place. The Minto was tied up in the summer months.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That leads up to the question, whether the minister proposes to charter a vessel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I propose to put the Minto on, after she has done her winter navigation work, in lieu of the Aberdeen, which goes to Quebec.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. minister any vessel that will do the special work, the cable work, that the Minto used to do ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is it proposed to have a vessel for that work ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. The Public Works Department, as I understand, propose to charter a vessel for that work, because the cable has to be laid to Belle Isle in the spring. The Newfield was about proceeding to that work last fall when she was lost.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the Marine Department going to abandon the idea of taking charge of these vessels ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It seems to me a pity to have the Marine Department, which has its special officers, nautical men, men who are acquainted with the repairing and the handling of ships, give up the charge of these vessels, and allow other departments to run vessels on their own account. It would add unnecessary expense. Some years ago a gradual concentration of that work was made under the Marine Department. In old times, for instance, the Customs Department had the management of a ship or two, and the Marine Department took charge of these vessels. Now, it would appear, instead of replacing the Newfield, as ought to be done —for she did good work for the country—it it proposed that the Public Works Department shall provide their own cable ship.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think I mislead the hon. gentleman in that. I am having prepared plans and specifications of a ship for the construction of which I propose to call tenders at an early date. The new ship will take the place of the Newfield.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As a cable and marine ship ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. I have communicated to the Minister of Public Works the fact that I am prepared to build a ship on these lines and with that accommodation, if it is agreeable to him. I am not in a position to say that he has absolutely assented to that, but I have no reason to believe that he will not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That will be a costly ship. In that connection, has the hon. gentleman given attention to the efforts being made at Halifax to establish an iron ship building industry, and has he considered how far the government would be able to go on encouraging that enterprise, even if they have to pay a little more, by having the next large ship required for the use of the government on that coast built in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have given that matter a good deal of consideration and, as much as two months ago, I had the whole matter reported upon by the officers of my department. I appreciate fully the importance of this great industry of building iron and steel ships in this Dominion. So far as the government is concerned, it will be my earnest desire to do what I can to further the initiation of that great industry. I made a report to my colleagues on the subject and suggested the desirability, when tenders are being called for, of calling for tenders in the Dominion of Canada for the construction of these ships. I had obtained beforehand an estimate of the increase in the cost of building in Canada, and submitted that to my colleagues, and although the report has not yet been finally adopted, they viewed the suggestion very favourably, and I think the conclusion will be to call for tenders in the Dominion of Canada for these ships. When I say 'these ships,' I include the Newfield, which is to take her place on the Nova Scotia shore, and also the Druid, which has been reported as worn out and useless, and as too dangerous to undertake another season's navigation, and for which a new ship will have to be substituted. It is my intention to call for tenders for the construction of both these ships in Canada ; and as my hon. friend says, even if it does cost a few thousand more, it will be in the general interest of the country that the money should be spent here, when that can be done, so that we may help along this great national industry.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am delighted to hear the observations of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I hope he will be able to inspire his colleagues with the same spirit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am glad to say that they are of the same opinion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am certain the feeling in Canada would justify the additional expense that would be incurred in patronizing what would certainly be a new industry on the coast, or anything like an attempt to build a seagoing ship, iron or steel, and to assist in that respect. It would be a mere bagatelle so far as the government is concerned. Those enterprising are risking their own capital in an effort to make a test, at any rate, whether the country can sustain such an enterprise ; and I feel sure, without having directly communicated with any one, that the spirit of the country is such to-day the people would be delighted, in every quarter of Canada, not only to see this enterprise successfully started, but to give credit to the government for any share they had in assisting in such a way to develop that industry.

Mr. BENNETT. I notice on page P—144 of the Auditor General's Report, a reference to a steam barge called the Shamrock, purchased at a price of $21,500. May I ask the minister where that craft is, from whom she was purchased, and what use she was put to ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She was purchased for the Montreal buoy service, as I explained last year. Previously to that the Montreal buoy service had been let by contract, and had been carried on by contract. But it did not give satisfaction. The boards of trade and the shipping industries of Montreal insisted that there should be better buoy service, and the government had to take it over and carry it on themselves. A ship was bought from Mr. Kane, I think the name was—the facts are not as fresh in my mind as they were last year when I gave the House all the information about it.

Mr. BENNETT. When was she paid for?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At the time she was bought, over a year ago.

Mr. BENNETT. I call the minister's attetnion to the fact that in the Auditor General's Report it would seem that on the 17th of November, 1900, that gentleman took exception to the fact that the boat had been purchased without a compliance with the Audit Act, section 33. I will use his own words as they occur on page P—144 of the report :

Auditor General's Office,
Ottawa, November 17, 1900.

Sir,—With reference to your letter of February 27 last, informing me that the minister and deputy minister personally examined into the value of the steam barge Shamrock. I beg to say that unless the deputy minister has the necessary technical knowledge in the construction of ships, his certificate would not be such as to fulfil the requirements of section 33 of the Audit Act.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

The Acting Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Now, I am not aware whether last year there was a special vote of this amount of $21,500 for the purchase of this craft. If there was, I have no recollection of it, and if there was not a special grant, then I presume the money which paid for the craft was taken out of the general grant, and if it was taken out of the general grant, what was done in face of this objection on the part of the Auditor General to the payment ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman will recollect that the matter was thoroughly discussed last year, the whole information was brought down, and there was a special vote brought into parliament for the purchase of this very steamer, and everything was discussed and settled. But I will give the hon. gentleman any information he requires now. There was a special vote brought down last year for the purchase of this steamer, and carried after full discussion, and after all the information asked for had been given. If the hon. gentleman desires, I will go over it again.

Mr. BENNETT. If the money was voted it must have been last summer ; then how was it that it was not until November that the money was paid over ? No doubt the vendor was anxious to secure his money. I have no recollection personally whether there was a special grant or not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How does the hon. gentleman make out that it was paid in November, 1900 ? I think he is wrong in that.

Mr. BENNETT. Because the letter of the Auditor General is dated on the 17th of November, and at that time he protested against the payment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But that refers to the deputy's letter of the 17th of February previous, nearly a year before.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. MONK. I must say I do not find the explanation of the minister satisfactory. I think when we vote such a large amount as $160,000 we are entitled to know in a precise manner what is going for repairs and what for maintenance. When I asked the hon. gentleman that, he said : Oh, that is the usual annual vote. As a matter of fact the vote reached the figure of $160,000 in 1900 ; before that it was $145,000. Then the hon. gentleman says : I intend to ask for $20,000 for extraordinary repairs. Then he says further on : It ought to be $180,000 anyway. For his own part he was of the opinion that it was better to make it $180,000 right away. And during all this time the hon. gentleman is not able to tell us, as surely he ought to know, what amount is going for maintenance and purely annual repairs, and what amount is destined for extraordinary repairs, and what amount is destined for the purchase of new ships. I think this is a most unsatisfactory manner of getting through an item of that magnitude. When we have an amount for maintenance and repairs, why have we not for the purchase and building of new ships? why have we not the amounts separated ? It would be much clearer, and we would lose much less time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am sorry my hon. friend does not think the explanation satisfactory, but I made it perfectly plain. The vote for $160,000 for maintenance and repairs refers chiefly to the maintenance of ships, but it also embraces some ordinary small repairs, if there are any. I told the hon. gentleman last year, when I asked for a large amount required for repairs in a special vote in the supplementaries, that I proposed to ask for it this year again. They are not hidden or covered up. This amount is not for the purchase of the ship.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount of the extraordinary repairs ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not brought it down yet. I told the hon. gentleman what it was last year—$12,869 for the Minto and $7,000 for the Aberdeen. I intend to bring down a supplementary estimate of repairs to the boilers of the Druid and the boilers of the Stanley, which were nearly worn out, and a deck was also put forward on the Aberdeen this year. This will be brought down with the supplementary estimates. This item of $160,000 is the ordinary item for the maintenance of the ships.

Mr. MONK. If the hon. gentleman would allow me, why does he then contend that the vote should be $180,000 every year for just these ordinary expenses of maintenance and repairs, and why is it that the hon. gentleman cannot tell us what is the specific amount required ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The $160,000 I now ask for is practically and substantially for the maintenance of the ships. If there are any other sums required for repairs, I propose to bring them down as a supplementary estimate. I have said that I would have to ask for $30,000 this year in addition to this $160,000 for repairs. This $160,000 is for maintenance. Last year the vote was taken in the same way, and I had to bring down an estimate for repairs, and I gave the hon. gentleman the items. It is proposed to do the same thing again this year, so that the House will know what the repairs will amount to besides.

Mr. SPROULE. Why does not the hon. gentleman say in his vote for maintenance and not for maintenance and repairs ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are some repairs always included in it.

Mr. BENNETT. On looking into the matter, I see now that on the 27th of February it would appear that the deputy wrote to the Auditor General in reference to the matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are going back to the Shamrock case.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Perhaps it will be better to proceed with the discussion in reference to this question of repairs. I do not understand the position of the hon. gentleman, from listening to the observations he last made. When answering my question, I gathered from him that $180,000, the amount spent the year before last, and the amount that was being expended this year, is about the amount he will require for maintenance and repairs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That the maintenance itself will come to very nearly the amount of the vote before us—$160,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And that he proposes to bring down later on amounts for repairs which would likely be $20,000, making $180,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well now, I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to two or three things here which seem to indicate that he is mistaken in that estimate, because, on page 12 of the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the amount is given, showing the cost of maintenance, and, although it says the cost of maintaining, it appears to be what we are discussing, maintenance and repairs. His vote in 1899-1900 was $180,000, and the hon. gentleman was apparently of the opinion that that was the normal amount for the last two years, and for this year as estimated, and yet, according to the table it was an extraordinary amount, and an explanation is given in a note. It says that this $180,000, which is $40,000 more than was required the year before, includes outfit and stores to the Minto in Scotland, which properly belongs to construction. There is the explanation, and if this statement of the hon. gentleman be correct, there has a tremendous leap been made in the expenditure. The amount asked for was $111,000 in 1891-92, $146,000 in 1892-93, and then it dropped down to $129,000 in 1894-95, and to $117,000 in 1897-98. Then, in 1898-99, it was $145,000. Then there is this item of $180,000 accompanied by the explanation which I have read. We have the Auditor General's Report, showing that last year it was increased to $180,000. I think the hon. gentleman says that he is going to take $180,000 this year, with one steamer less.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One steamer more.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. One steamer less.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Leaving that out, with one steamer more, it would not make the additional amount up to $160,000 for maintenance. The hon. gentleman will see that it would be a great assistance to the committee if he could give us a statement, steamer by steamer, making up the $160,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not that here with me, but I shall take the Minto, which cost $35,000 for maintenance alone. That steamer was not owned by the government at all in those years to which the hon. gentleman refers, 1897-98. She was not here then and that reduces the expenditure in that year. The Aberdeen's expenditure that year was charged to the fishery service, because she replaced La Canadienne. I can give the hon. gentleman the cost of each ship, although the hon. gentleman will find it in the Auditor General's Report.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would not ask the item to stand, but if the hon. gentleman will bring down a table giving us the comparison of these ships, showing the basis of the estimate, it would be of service to the committee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The estimate is based on the cost of last year exactly. We know exactly what each ship cost then, and this estimate is based upon our experience as to the cost of maintenance for a number of years back. The hon. gentleman knows that we cannot help it. From the amount which appears there, the hon. gentleman must not imagine that it represents an increase in the expenditure of this country. The receipts which come in from the running of these ships are not credited here. They are credited to the consolidated revenue fund. From $12,000 to $20,000 will probably be collected for freight from the Minto and Stanley this year alone. That goes to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund, but the expenditure appears here. The freight carried this year has been larger than anything ever known in the history of the maritime provinces before, and it promises to go on increasing, and form a very large factor. I think we understand it now, as this item is thoroughly specific. This $160,000 is for the maintenance of the ships, which embraces casual repairs, but does not embrace special repairs, and I propose to ask for a vote for special repairs.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman said that he thought my information was wrong in regard to the repairs to the Minto at Charlottetown before she really was in commission. The Auditor General's Report seems to indicate that the information I gave was correct. At pages P—19, 20, 21 and 22, it shows that very large sums had been paid at Charlottetown for articles that one would hardly have expected to be required on a new ship, or a ship just out of the builders' hands. I take page P—22 and I find that $3,236 was paid to Stewart, Bruce & Co., of Charlottetown, for such articles as pumps, closets, pipes, and such matters of construction as that. There are several other items which are not due to the squeezing in the ice or anything like that. She apparently was not fit for service when she reached Charlottetown, or these articles would not have been purchased.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When the captain and the agent go aboard a new ship there are always additional articles found to be required, but I explained that the largest part of that expense was caused by the damage done to the Minto crossing the Atlantic in one of the severest gales that Captain Finlayson says he ever met in his life.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) if he has received any petitions this year from the people of Magdalen Islands asking that the steamer Stanley should make one trip to the islands during the month of December. As the hon. minister knows well, navigation is closed between Magdalen Islands and the main land at the beginning of December, and it is held by the most experienced sea-faring men on the islands that the Stanley can easily make one trip in the month of December. The islands are practically closed to civilization from the beginning of December to the month of April, and every year I am asked by petitions, telegrams, and letters that the steamer Stanley should be sent to the islands in order to carry the Christmas mails to my constituents. As I understand it, the Stanley has practically nothing to do at that season of the year, and I would urge that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should grant this favour to the inhabitants of the Magdalen Islands who number 6,000 people.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) that I will be only too happy to grant the request made by the Magdalen Islands people if it can be done at all. The Stanley was asked for last year at a time when it was impossible to send her there. She was required for her work in maintaining winter communication between Prince Edward Island and the main land. She was not available early in the season because her boilers were very much out of order, and the inspector, Mr. Douglas Stevens, reported that certain repairs were essential before she could be put in a sea-worthy condition. Her boilers had to be repaired and when they were repaired she was required for the winter service at Summerside. Much as I desire to yield to the solicitations of my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) I felt that I could not do an injustice to those who are entitled to the Stanley's service in crossing from Prince Edward Island to the main land. I shall be very glad to bear in mind what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has said, and if at any time that the Stanley is available she is required for a trip to the Magdalen Islands I shall try to meet the wishes of the hon. member for Gaspé.

Mr. HACKETT. I wish to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) why it is that when the Stanley was at Summerside on the 22nd of December no facilities were provided by which she could carry the mails, passengers and freight to Cape Tormentine. The Stanley remained there for ten days without doing any service and she was withdrawn at the very moment when she would be of some utility in keeping up communication. The engineers reported that when the board ice formed at Cape Tormentine it would be available for the handling of freight, and when the board ice did form the Stanley was taken away and was of no possible utility in keeping up communication between Summerside and Cape Tormentine in New Brunswick. I wish to ask the minister (Sir Louis Davies), why that occurred and why arrangements were not made for the maintenance of that communication as we expected it would be.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is true that the Stanley was detailed to make the experiment of crossing from Summerside to Cape Tormentine in the month of December last. She would have gone earlier to her berth at Summerside but for the reason I have explained to the hon. gentleman from Gaspé, her boilers had to be repaired after the summer's work on the fishery service. The very day that the work was finished she proceeded to Pictou, coaled there and went straight to Summerside to make the experiment of keeping open the winter passage between that and Cape Tormentine. I had informed the board of trade of Summerside some time previously that there were no terminal facilities at Cape Tormentine, and that I thought it was inadvisable to make the experiment until these facilities were provided. They, however, pressed upon me very strongly that the attempt should be made and I submitted the matter to Captain Finlayson, of the Minto, who has had some twenty-two years experience, and to Captain Brown, of the Stanley, and they advised that it was possible that if the board ice formed for half a mile outside of Tormentine pier they might be able to land on the board ice, and they advised that the experiment might be made. On their report I sent the vessel there. The board ice did not form; they had to land near the pier. The pier was in such bad condition that the ballast had fallen out and prevented the bow of the vessel getting near it. There was no way therefore to land freight if they had carried it, and until my friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is able to get that pier repaired it would be impossible for the Stanley to utilize it as a terminus. I am in hopes that this season the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) will be able to repair the pier. The Stanley made the experiment of crossing and recrossing every day and successfully for a time, but the smallpox broke out in the district near to Cape Tormentine. Passengers would not travel through the region where the smallpox was supposed to be, and a very large number of people in Prince Edward Island were averse to the service being maintained through an infected district of that kind. The mails were not, and ought not be sent that way, and after the Stanley had made a number of trips without carrying freight, passengers, or mails, there was no use continuing her on the route any longer and she was ordered to go to Pictou. At Pictou there was an enormous congestion of freight which one steamer could not move, and the idea of sending the Stanley to Pictou was to give daily communication with Georgetown, one boat running each way. We were very successful in moving the freight, and until the other day when we got into this terrible storm there never was a time when the winter communication was maintained so admirably as it has been this winter. I am in hopes that next winter the terminal facilities at Tormentine will be so improved that possibly the Stanley will be able to utilize it, and continue the experiment between Summerside and Tormentine.

Mr. BENNETT. I am at a loss to find that there was any special grant available up to July 1, 1900, for the purchase of the Shamrock. I find that there is no mention made of it in 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I find on inquiry from my advisers that I was correct in the statement that there was a grant.

Mr. BENNETT. Then it is unfortunate for the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) that the discussion on it should be entirely eliminated from 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) got the supplementary estimates ?

Mr. BENNETT. I have 'Hansard' in which the discussion would have appeared.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Has the hon. gentleman got the supplementary estimates ?

Mr. BENNETT. I have not under my hand a copy of the supplementary estimates; but there was no discussion on the question in the House at all. It follows that nothing more has been heard of it until we find this reference in the Auditor General's Report of this year ; and of course a member of the House could not know of anything that transpired between the Auditor General and the minister until it did appear in the Auditor General's Report. The Auditor General took exception, it would seem, to the payment of this amount, whether because the boat had not been purchased in open market or by contract or for some other reason ; and I think it is fair to ask for an explanation why, in the face of that letter of November 7, the amount was paid over, assuming that it has been paid.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The amount was paid over, as I think my hon. friend will see, long before that objection was made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why was the objection made ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows why the Auditor General takes exception. It is a matter of faith and duty with him.

Mr. COCHRANE. He was all right when we were in power.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The ex-Minister of Railways said he was not.

Mr. COCHRANE. But you said he was.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Auditor General's objection, as I understand it, is that he did not think the Deputy Minister of Marine had sufficient knowledge to give the certificate required by the 33rd section of the Audit Act. We differed with him, that is all.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the boat purchased in an open sale ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. The purchase is a most excellent one; and I do not think any one would question it.

Mr. BENNETT. The Auditor General did.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, he merely asked if we had a certificate from a technical officer, as required by the 33rd section of the Act.

Mr. HACKETT. I can only express my surprise that the hon. minister would send the Stanley to the route between Cape Tormentine and Summerside without seeing that she had proper facilities for doing the work. The most expert captain on Prince Edward Island in connection with ice breaking, reporting to the minister on November 1, made this statement—the hon. gentleman referred to it, but his explanation was not strictly in accord with the report made by the captain :

> The only thing, in our opinion, that can be done to test the route is this: after the steamer Northumberland stops running, place the Stanley at Summerside and have her all ready and let her remain there until the board ice in the vicinity of Cape Tormentine breakwater is sufficiently strong; then a landing can be made on the ice. This has been done at Souris and Georgetown on several occasions.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. HACKETT. That condition of things arose. The Stanley was held at Summerside for ten days to make daily trips between that port and Cape Tormentine. There were no mails, no passengers, and no facilities at the Tormentine side to advance the communication. About the 1st of Janury, when the Stanley was withdrawn, the very conditions laid down in the captain's report existed : the ice had formed, and there was no difficulty in landing mails and passengers. The hon. gentleman refers to the smallpox scare. We know how important it is to the people of Prince Edward Island to have this communication. There is to-day in Ottawa a case of smallpox ; but must this city on that account be cut off from communication with the outside world ? Some smallpox may have existed in the county of Westmoreland in the vicinity of Cape Tormentine ; but the nearest case was six miles away from the Cape, and there was no danger. Mails and passengers could have been landed at Summerside without difficulty. But through some oversight the boat was taken away—it cannot have been on account of the smallpox scare. I noticed in a paper a day or two ago that when the minister was at Charlottetown, the board of trade of that city waited upon him with a memorial, asking him to leave the steamers Stanley and Minto on the route between Georgetown and Pictou in order to relieve the great congestion of freight at those points. What was the fact ? The two boats were stuck in the ice hard and fast for a week or ten days, and could not relieve the congestion of freight. If one of the boats had been left on the route between Georgetown and Pictou, and the other placed between Summerside and Cape Tourmentine and $1,000 had been spent on improvements at Cape Tormentine, there would not have been any congestion. When the Stanley was at Summerside she had on board a full cargo of coal, and still she was able to come to that port and discharge part of the coal, and make daily trips between there and Cape Tormentine. I think there has been some misunderstanding or bungling, or we would have a service between Summerside and Tormentine to-day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There has been no misunderstanding and no bungling. I promised that an experiment would be made ; but I warned the board of trade when I made the promise that inasmuch that there were no terminal facilities at Tormentine for the landing of the Stanley, the experiment would be made under disadvantageous circumstances, and I doubted that it could be made successfully. But they pressed for it, and the experiment was made. The steamer was released for a variety of reasons which I have stated to the committee. The smallpox may have been one of them ; the absence of terminal facilities at Tormentine was another. While I do not want personally to call in question the opinions of those who believe that a route can be established there, I may state that when I crossed the other day in an open boat from Traverse to Tormentine, I found the pier at Tormentine completely covered with ice to a height of nearly thirty feet ; so that even if the Stanley were running there, it would have been absolutely impossible for her to have gone near that pier. I do not want to throw cold water on the experiment. I promised that it would be made ; and the boat was not taken from Summerside until after the captain had reported to me that he had spent two or three hours in getting out, and that if the frost had become harder he would never have got out. I telegraphed back to him to use the best judgment he could, and to continue the test until he concluded that it was not possible to make the trip. I did not order him away without using the best judgment I could, and I think the hon. gentleman agrees with me.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is asking us to vote $160,000 of the people's money for the maintenance of five or six government steamers, and I want to inquire if it is his intention to spend that money, or at least as much of it as goes for supplies, by calling for tenders; or is he going to continue the bad practice, which he says he followed when he came into power, of dealing it out to his political friends. As to the practice, we contradict his statement, because we say that the late government purchased practically all their supplies by tender. Has the hon. gentleman expended this money in the interests of the country as he promised us when given the vote? Turn to the Auditor General's Report of last year and you will see that the bad practice, to which I drew attention time and time again, and which the hon. minister promised he would remedy, has continued and even become intensified. I find on page 8 that twenty-four bushels of onions were purchased for the steamer Aberdeen at a $1.50 per bushel, and each of the steamers uses the same quantity. I would ask any farmer if $1.50 per bushel for onions is a price this government ought to pay. But that is not all. $1.50 per bushel is paid for turnips and the same price for carrots, and 3½ cents per pound for beans. Would anybody else pay these prices?

Then, take this new steamer Minto, my hon. friend had a political heeler in Montreal to whom he wanted to give $1,000 or more. This was B. J. Coghlin, whom everybody knows as Barney Coghlin. The hon. gentleman sent to Mr. Coghlin's retail hardware store and bought some $1,265 of supplies from him for that steamer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minto never was in Montreal.

Mr. TAYLOR. Look at page P—19 of the Auditor General's Report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minto never was in the province of Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not say she was there, but Mr. Coghlin was, and you wanted to benefit Mr. Coghlin so as to help you in the elections, so you gave him $1,265. You sent your agents to Mr. Coghlin, who does not deal in crockery, and without calling for any tenders at all, you purchased from him $361 worth of crockery, for which there is not one voucher. There is an invoice for four dozen table knives, $26.06. Any gentleman in the House, who is a hardware merchant, may turn up page P—19 of the Auditor General's Report and see the prices there marked for supplies purchased from Mr. Coghlin, amounting altogether to $1,265. There are four teapots of three gills each, $40.87, or $10 apiece for a little teapot. And so the list goes on, every dollar spent without any advertisement for tenders, and every dollar spent on political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. Travel through that book from one end to the other and you cannot find a dollar paid to a Tory storekeeper. Is the hon. minister going to continue that way of doing business, in spending the $160,000 he is asking us to vote, or will he spend it in a business fashion? Why not ask for tenders and give fair open competition, and not give political heelers two or three prices for each article required.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall not quarrel with my hon. friend for calling respectable gentlemen political heelers, but I cannot hold out the hope to him that I will depart from the old system, in practice many years, of seeing that our friends get the patronage and not our opponents. The only question is, are we paying fair and reasonable prices or not? I can tell my hon. friend that the greatest possible care is taken against overcharging. Every account is severely and closely scrutinized before it comes to the department, and the accountants and officers in charge are specially responsible for the examination of the accounts. If they find any overcharge they must at once send back the account. The hon. gentleman singled out one case.

Mr. TAYLOR. I could single out a thousand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But the hon. gentleman did not, and I shall deal with the one he singled out. He referred to Mr. Coghlin, of Montreal, as a political heeler. Well, Mr. Coghlin is a most respectable merchant.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, I know him well.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He is a very large merchant and he happened to be in Glasgow when the Minto was being built. Mr. McElhinney was in charge of its building. Mr. McElhinney was not an appointee of mine, and I suppose the hon. gentleman would call him a Tory heeler. He was an officer of the department, in the discharge of the duty of supervising the building of the Minto, and Mr. Coghlin obtained from Mr. McElhinney an order for these supplies. Would the hon. gentleman like me to dismiss that Tory officer for having given that order? The hon. gentleman may rest perfectly assured that the patronage of the department will go in the future, as it has in the past, to the friends of the government, provided always the latter give good articles at reasonable prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would refer my hon. friend to page P—12 of the Auditor General's Report, and he will find there that Louis Marois, of Quebec, supplied carrots at $1.50 per bushel. I do not object to the government giving its political supporters the preference, but I do think that it should do business on business principles, and not spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on supplies without inviting any competition. Some time when we are going into Supply, I will divide the House on that question. Can my hon. friend justify paying $1.50 per bushel for carrots and three and a half cents per pound for beans, and $1.50 per bushel for onions ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The agent of the government at Quebec is Mr. Gregory, an old and experienced gentleman, who has held that position for many years. He has been cautioned to examine every purchase himself and certify to the charges being reasonable and fair, according to the prices ruling for the goods in the province of Quebec. If the hon. gentleman will move for the accounts, they will be produced before the Public Accounts Committee, certified to by Mr. Gregory. I have no other means of stating that the prices are fair than the certificate of my agent at Quebec.

Mr. OSLER. It was quite refreshing to hear from the government the absolute repudiation of the main plank in their anti-election speeches. There is to be no calling for tenders at all, but they are going to buy fairly from their own men. They are afraid to allow Conservatives to tender, because the Conservatives might tender lower than the friends of the government. It is quite pleasant to hear the frank avowal that contract by tender is a thing of the past.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it usual for any of the agents to make objections to prices as excessive ? Has the hon. minister any cases of that kind ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Numbers of them.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. minister say what takes place then ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the sellers attempt to make an overcharge, payment is refused.

Ocean and River Service—Examination of masters and mates $5,000

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that the expenditure under this head last year was $3,700. Is it necessary to ask for $5,000 this year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In a general way, the work is carried on the same year after year, but the amount expended varies somewhat.

Ocean and River Service—Rewards for saving life, including life-saving stations $9,000

Mr. INGRAM. There are a great many complaints about the loss of life in a wreck at Long Point, on Lake Erie, in August last. I would like to ask if the authorities at Washington have complained to this government or to the Department of Marine and Fisheries of that loss of life ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As far as I know, there has been no complaint, direct or indirect, from the Washington authorities.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is there any particular object in the increase of $1,000 in this vote ? I see by the Auditor General's Report the expenditure last year was a little over $7,000, and the estimate this year is $9,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The increase is to provide a new boat at Point Pelee. The old boat was reported to be out of date.

Mr. SPROULE. What is done with the old boat ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Practically it was of no use. A few dollars may be got for it.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it the intention to improve the life-saving stations on Lake Erie?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the intention to procure a life boat for Port Credit, on Lake Ontario, in accordance with the petition presented a few days ago ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not recollect the presentation of that petition. If it was presented it may be awaiting attention. It will receive my best consideration.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister's answer to me is hardly consistent with this vote. Last year the estimate was $8,000, and this year it is $9,000. The hon. gentleman does not expect to make much improvement for $1,000, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There will be a new boat.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that all ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know if any other special improvements are required except to keep closer inspection of them. Instructions have gone out to keep up inspection of boathouses and boats, and to make the crews perform their drill more regularly than some of them have in the past. Much will be gained, if we make the crews more efficient than they were.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister will observe that Port Stanley and Port Rowan are the only two life-saving stations on that portion of Lake Erie. The dangerous point is at Long Point, where the storms take place. I am aware that the American representative at that place has complained very strongly to the authorities at Washington concerning the sacrifice of life owing, as he believes, to the imperfect life-saving stations on the Canadian side of Lake Erie.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can only say that nothing will give me greater satisfaction than to give the closest and most courteous attention to any suggestion that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) may make as to improvements of the life-saving stations on Lake Erie. If he will make these suggestions to me as head of the department privately, or make them publicly in the House, I can promise him they will receive full consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. This $1,000 increase is to purchase a new boat. How much does a life-boat cost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The deputy minister tells me that the boat will cost about $600.

Mr. SPROULE. And the balance, I suppose, is for some equipment ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Ocean and River Service—Investigation into wrecks $1,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. minister proceed to investigate on the mere report of a wreck, or does he require official recommendation ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I require application to be made by some reputable person.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the investigation is held as a matter of course ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, if a shipowner, or other reputable person, asks for it.

Ocean and River Service—Registration of shipping..... .... $500

Mr. BRITTON. I have a suggestion to make. The registration of shipping is taken care of by officers of the Customs Department, and, I supopse, the expense is counted as part of the expenses of that department. Occasionally a man in the customs is sent from his own place to another for the purpose of examining the books, to see that the registration is uniform. As a matter of fact, I may say, the books are not uniformly kept. Books are provided, as I understand, at the expense of the Department of Marine and Fisheries——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BRITTON. Then, at the expense of the Customs Department. These books are uniform so far as the blanks are concerned, but, in filling in the blanks, there are great differences. Some customs officers are careful and some are careless ; and, in the latter case, beyond the name of the boat, her tonnage and a few essential items, the matter is passed over. My suggestion is that there should be an officer to be called inspector of registrations. No additional expense would be incurred, it seems to me ; for some gentleman now in the Customs Department, who does not have too much to do and who is familiar with the work, would be assigned to this duty. The effect of his work would be to secure uniformity as well as greater care in the registration of vessels. Although the expense would be greater in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, it would be less in the Customs Department, and there would be less money spent than there is to-day. Of course the vote asked here, $500, is not a very large amount ; and, looking at the Auditor General's Report, I see that only about $200 spent last year is properly chargeable to this item of the estimates. But I think that better service would be rendered if it was put under the charge of some man in the employ of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and if it were provided that all the registration, both inland and ocean, were systematized and better kept.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall have to consult my colleague in whose department this legislation is carried on. All we do is to provide books for the registration. As to appointing an inspector, my hon. friend's experience does not accord with mine. If you detail a man to do additional work of that kind you have to assign additional pay. However, we will consider my hon. friend's suggestion.

Tidal service, including salary of assistant clerk beyond $400, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $7,500

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In regard to this, I am sorry that although some progress is being made, the government cannot see their way to expedite this very important work. There seems to me no reason for nibbling at it, as the government are doing, when the coast line of this country is considered. The amount expended is only about $4,000, because the rest of this vote is in salaries, and you have a high class man whose salary is near the appropriation outside the amount spent. This work was long ago completed with the United States, on both the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, and completed in India, and in the British Isles. With iron and steel ships, and with the growth of these steamers in size and all that sort of thing, it is a most necessary work. Take, for instance, the question of the insurance rates. While it is true that the ordinary seaman and the ordinary mariner of the smaller class of vessels have very little concern about the result of these surveys of the tides, the officers in command of all the large ocean-going steamers are required to understand them, and it takes a technical training to understand them. But it seems to me a disgraceful thing that we should proceed so slowly. It is a smaller vote now than I was able to get at the initiation of the work. I know there is very little general interest taken in it—we have discussed that already. Some rough and ready seamen think that because they have got along so well without these tables, which many of them cannot understand, it is merely a scientific fad. But one need only to refer to the Admiralty in England, to the leading men in connection with shipping there, and also to the official hydrographic staff of the United States, and the work in India, to understand that these surveys are of tremendous importance. Now the government is committed to the principle, they are carrying it on, the $4,000 is a mere bagatelle. I am glad to see that assistance is being given, but I would be far more pleased if, in addition to that, the hon. gentleman were to take a substantial increase, which this official and his assistants could spend to advantage. He has no ships, he has no facilities such as are required. I do not think the hon. gentleman will find that the United States, or India, when they were dealing with this work, made such slow progress, or satisfied themselves with so small an appropriation. I would be glad if the hon. gentleman could expedite that work in accordance with its importance.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would be glad if my hon. friend could defer this discussion until the supplementary estimates. I am considering the matter, and perhaps I may be able to make a statement on the supplementaries.

Mr. CLANCY. I agree with what has been stated by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). It would seem that this service is somewhat at a standstill, and that some new departure is proposed to be made. Now I see there is a considerable increase, apparently, in the work to be done in the hon. gentleman's department. In 1900 I find that $4,000 was voted for that service, in 1901 that was increased to $7,200. The hon. gentleman explains a part of it there, as it appears in the estimates, by saying that an extra clerk had $400 of it. Then again there is still another addition of $300 in 1902. Will the hon. gentleman say what new circumstances have grown up in the office requiring this increase? It seems he requires to employ an extra clerk. The hon. gentleman thought that some of those clerks were only employed for a very short portion of the year, yet the vote was taken.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not quite gather that my hon. friend objects to the increase. I went into it in great detail last year when the same question arose, and I pointed out to my hon. friend the data. We have tidal stations at different places on the Bay of Fundy and along the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, for gauging the rise and fall of the tides, and the data ascertained at these different tidal stations are taken and tabulated at the head office here by Mr. Dawson and his assistants. We were some years behind in this work, and Mr. Dawson intimated to me two or three years ago that unless he could get these returns properly tabulated and printed in a book, it was no use collecting them at all. So some additional clerks were given him for the purpose of tabulating these statistics gathered at the different stations, and when they are tabulated they are sent home to the Hydrographic Office in Great Britain, and printed in a book. I think last year I brought down a copy of the book, a very large book, showing the rise and fall of the tides at these different stations. From this data so gathered, tide tables are prepared by Mr. Dawson, showing the tide at different harbours in different ports, so as to be of use to the mariners, showing them when the tide rises, when it falls, when it is half tide, when full tide, with the depth of the tide, and so on. It was necessary to employ these additional clerks in order to utilize the information which was being gathered, and which, until it was tabulated, was useless.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask another question which has been considerably discussed in the newspapers in reference to a proposition to adopt some system of damming to raise the water in Lake Erie for the purpose of counteracting, to some extent, the withdrawal of water from the upper lakes by the Chicago drainage canal. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if any proposition of that nature has been made to the government of Canada by the United States authorities.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will ascertain whether it was ever made in the department in my absence. No such proposition ever came before me personally, and I am almost certain that had it come to the department, it would have come before me. It never came to the department.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would ask the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). I think he had an interview with some of the papers throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I do not think that I ever received any such proposition. There may be some letters; I have a vague remembrance, that some letters were written to us on that question, but not in the way of any proposition.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman in reference to this vote for the hydrographic survey if this work has been carried on in the Georgian Bay.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; we will come later to that.

Winter mail service $8,500

Mr. LEFURGEY. Could the hon. gentleman tell me in what way this $8,500 is to be applied ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be applied as far as it can be for the boat service which is now going on.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Was this service organized so that it would be in readiness ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It seems to me very strange that on February 2, the Minto crossed over to the island with the last mails before being locked up in the ice, and that ten or twelve days elapsed before we had a crossing with the mails at the Capes. If this service was organized, why was it not given. During the late election when I was campaigning in that portion of the district, my opponent was using the mail service to his advantage, saying that it would be duly equipped and organized and ready to perform the service. We find that from February 2, to February 12, there were no mails to or from Prince Edward Island, and the Board of Trade of Summerside, had to ask the post office inspector at Charlottetown, to ascertain if anything could be done to forward their mails by ice boats. They finally came to their senses and allowed this to go on. I cannot understand why this was not done at first. We did not have any mails from the province of Prince Edward Island, until the 13th February, and if this service was organized it is very strange that the mails were not brought over. We asked about this the other day in the House, and the hon. Postmaster General got up and in a very light manner said : You will get information about your mails when the hon. Minister of Marine returns. We know from the papers that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries had a very thrilling time getting across. That may interest the hon. minister and his friends as an adventure, but it has nothing to do with the commercial facilities of Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The explanation is a very simple one, but rather a painful one for me. Nobody understands more clearly than I do, why you did not have mails between Prince Edward Island and the mainland for 12 days. It was for the simple reason that a violent storm was raging during which no boat could cross. I was imprisoned myself. No one could desire to leave the island more earnestly than I did, but I could not get away. I went once or twice to the cape to see if I could get across, but the captain would not start, and the judgment of the captain's was right. They could not start. The boats started out at the earliest possible moment they could cross. The opposition boats crossed one day from New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island. They went during a north-west wind. The next day our boats crossed from the Island.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I know that right here in Ottawa, express matter came two or three days before we received our mail.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I was on the spot.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It was delivered at the hotel to me, and I know it could not have crossed before that time. It came in response to a telegraphic message I sent down. I have reports from people in that section stating that there were several days prior to the time the mails were brought across, when the crossing could have been made. I have information from reliable parties.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am afraid that I shall have to ask the hon. gentleman to accept my statement, that it was not possible having been on the spot myself, and having travelled up and down to the cape trying to get over and being unable to get the captain to start.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps it may be proper to introduce a subject which is of considerable interest to the country. It is that of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think we will have a vote before the estimates are through, specially on that subject.

Marine Biological Station $2,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What are the results of that vote ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The results are very satisfactory so far. They are carrying on the work vigorously, and several distinguished scientists are occupying the laboratory tables in conducting experiments of practical importance. The memoradum supplied to me by Prof. Prince, is as follows :

In order to allow of the completion of certain somewhat lengthened researches, the marine station was not moved from its location on Passamaquoddy Bay, near St. Andrews, N.B., though the proposal to tow the building round the coast, to the Nova Scotia shore, was fully discussed at the meeting of the board of management held in June. The great importance of the fisheries and of complex fishery problems along the eastern shores of Nova Scotia, around the Gut of Canso, and the coast of Cape Breton, weighed with the board in considering the proposal to have this movable station conveyed to a new temporary site. A final decision will be arrived at at the next meeting of the board, early in February.

These scientific gentlemen are prosecuting their investigations into the biology of fish and publishing the results every year. They propose to continue that so long as they are given this assistance. We promised that this vote should be given them for three or four years, and the time is not yet up, during which the assistance is to be given. The work they do may be of the greatest possible importance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where is the station ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is at Passamaquoddy Bay, and it is proposed to move it around to Canso this summer. The scientists decide the place.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that two years ago, in Prince Edward Island, he made a promise that this biological station would be located somewhere about the island. It was just shortly previous to the time that we were to have a by-election, and the hon. gentleman was down there wishing to help his candidate. He said to the fishermen at Charlottetown: I am going to have a biological station established in the Straits of Northumberland, and you will receive great benefit from it. His secretary interjected the remark: I have received a telegram from the captain of the boat that it is going to be stationed at Egmont Bay next week. There is no biological station, but it resulted in carrying the election for his candidate. and the people were deceived. Is it intended that we shall have the use of these scientific gentleman's opinion in the Straits of Northumberland ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The location where these scientific researches are to be carried on is a question that we do not interfere with. It is entirely left to the scientists themselves. They are gentlemen connected with different colleges, and they determine each season where they shall conduct their operations. I believe they will move around the Gut of Canso this season.

Salaries and expenses of cattle inspection. $2,800

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for quarantine ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, this is for the inspectors of cattle in the city of Montreal. Cattle come down to Montreal, and they are inspected when put on board of ships. The inspectors are Mr. Pope and Mr. Morgan.

Mr. SPROULE. There is surely more than this spent in connection with that work ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Quarantine inspection?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is not quarantine; it is cattle inspection.

Unforeseen expenses generally..... $5,000

Mr. MORIN. There is an item here, 'Reward for saving life,' page 35 Auditor General's Report, 'Montreal Watch Case Co., Montreal, 2 gold watches and boxes, $176.' Who received these watches ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not remember the circumstance of the special case to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morin) calls attention. I may say that whenever lives are saved by bravery on the part of our citizens, and the facts are reported to the department, steps are taken to ascertain the accuracy of these facts, and the information is submitted to an officer of the department, who makes a recommendation as to the reward which shall be given. The reward is commensurate with the danger incurred and bravery displayed, and it has always been the practice of the department, endorsed by parliament year after year, to recognize that bravery by giving a watch or a binocular glass or something of that kind to indicate the appreciation of the government.

Mr. MORIN. Does the minister know who received these watches ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot tell just now, but if the hon. gentleman wishes I will bring down the names.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I see an amount here in unforeseen expenses, for the lobster investigation, a charge for travelling expenses to Mr. Gallant. What was the result of that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The commission proposed a series of regulations, which, after great consideration (many days' and many hours' consideration I may say), we adopted. There was one time limit for the Bay of Fundy and another along the coast of Nova Scotia——

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That would be merely changing the lines, because these districts were in existence long ago.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. The whole east coast of Nova Scotia was one district before, but now the regulation divides it by an imaginary line running out from Halifax harbour, and there are different seasons.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How did these regulations work ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would not say more than fairly well. There are always men wishing to have changes made, but so far I have adhered rigidly to the report of the lobster commission and intend to do so until we have further experience.

Mr. CLANCY. I think that last session there was considerable dissatisfaction expressed at the lines laid down by the commissioners and the minister was forced to yield to strong recommendations made to him, and to disregard to some extent the lines laid down. Is that true ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I see that $400 were paid for legal services in connection with the pilotage commission. Who received the money ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was a commission appointed some two years ago to consider the grievances, or the alleged grievances of the pilots, and of the shipping men in the district between Montreal and Quebec. Mr. Justice Lavergne, the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Commander Wakeham constituted the commission. The shipping interests, the insuring interests, and the pilots were represented by counsel. The commission recommended that the counsel retained by the pilots might be paid by the government, and they were paid under this item. The others paid their own expenses.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The minister says there were certain grievances of the pilots.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certain alleged grievances of the pilots, and certain alleged grievances of the shipping men of Montreal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Rumour says that Mr. Langelier the counsel had certain grievances too. May I ask is this the same Mr. Charles Langelier who was sent to Russia at the expense of this country to search the archives for Alaskan documents ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same gentleman. I have no information that he was sent to Russia, but this is Mr. Charles Langelier a member of the bar of Quebec and formerly a member of this House.

Mr. CLANCY. Were these costs taxed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and cut down largely.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the original claim ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that the whole sum paid Mr. Langelier ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. There appears to be another name here ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was paid to Messrs. Jules Tessier & Langelier.

Mr. CLANCY. What was Capt. R. J. Walls paid this $600 for ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was a desperate fight between the pilotage commission of the port of Miramichi and the pilots. It lasted for a long time, was taken into court, and is a very complicated matter, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has any special interest in it I will go into the details This amount was paid in connection with that.

Mr. MORIN. How does Mr. F. Gourdeau come to be paid $600 travelling expenses for going to the Paris Exposition ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This was an amount paid in advance for travelling expenses, but it will be adjusted in the exhibition expenses in time.

Lighthouse and Coast Service—Salaries and allowances to light-keepers $228,000

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister explain the increase of $8,000 in this item ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is caused by the increased number of lighthouses brought into existence.

Hon. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) In connection with this item I would like to make a few observations on the salaries paid to lighthouse keepers in general. I do not think that any system has been adopted in Canada to classify the lighthouse keepers as regards the salaries paid them. In the United States—I am now speaking of Maine and Massachusetts—the lighthouses are classified and the salaries regulated accordingly. With us, the keeper of a revolving light on an island several miles from the shore gets $400 a year. It is impossible for him to keep that light going all the time without assistance, and that assistance must be paid. In the United States these assistants get $600. In our wealthy Dominion the keeper gets $400, and perhaps the next keeper to him, who has a fixed light, gets the same salary. I do not think that there has ever been any regular system or rule applied to the salaries of lighthouse keepers by any government since confederation. If, for instance, a lighthouse is erected at a particular place, and the representative of the county has influence enough with the government, the salary may be fixed at $500, while another place where the representative may not be so influential, the salary may be less. Let this House fancy the condition of a man on an island, keeping a light going all winter, with the assistance of one man, and very often obliged to find his own fuel, and receiving only $400. I think this is a subject which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries should take into his consideration. I was disposed at first to ask for a committee of the House to deal with the whole subject, because as it stands at present it is most unsatisfactory. I have in my hands the resignation of a lighthouse keeper on an island, because it is impossible for him to remain there at the miserable salary he gets. A man in the same position in Maine or Massachusetts gets $1,000. I am bringing this subject to the notice of the minister in the hope that some improvement will be made ; because the present condition of things existed before he took charge of the department, and is likely to continue unless he deals with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am very glad the hon. member has brought this matter to the attention of the House ; but I think he is labouring under an erroneous impression with regard to one fact. He says he has in his hands the resignation of one gentleman who is receiving $400 a year for keeping a lighthouse. All I can say is that that is the only resignation of a lighthouse keeper that has been presented to the department within five years because of insufficient salary. At the present moment there are two vacancies in the maritime provinces, and there are no less than a dozen applicants for each light. A good deal of what my hon. friend says may be true. There may be a case here and there where the salary of a lighthouse keeper is hardly commensurate with the labour he has to perform ; but it must be remembered that these people are free of all taxes, house rent, and expense for fuel and light, and that they get $400 cash in addition. There are not many parts of the country where that would be considered bad payment. I would be sorry to say that in every case it is adequate payment. My hon. friend seems to think that these salaries are fixed in some hap-hazard way. I beg to assure him that that is not the case. The same officer who has advised the Minister of Marine for many years past with regard to the salaries to be attached to these offices, is in the department to-day. You cannot fix the same salary for Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, that we have to pay on the Great Lakes or in British Columbia. What would be considered an adequate salary in the maritime provinces would be considered utterly inadequate in British Columbia and in the far-off parts of the province of Ontario. The chief engineer who advises me in these matters is very careful to consider the circumstances when a new light is established, and to fix the salary with reference to the location and the work that has to be done. Political influence is very rarely, if ever attempted, in connection with the salaries paid. I have no hesitation in saying that a member for a district occasionally seeks to obtain for a lighthouse keeper an increase of salary or a greater salary than the department thinks should be paid; but we cannot give way to these influences. We must remember that there is a large army of these lighthouse keepers, and once you depart from the well-established rule that a certain salary should be attached to a certain light, you get away from your moorings, and every lighthouse keeper in the Dominion would want an increase. The greatest care must be exercised in these matters. I never attempt to shut the door on any member of parliament who wishes to make representations as to the salary paid for any particular light ; and I will say this for the officers in charge, that whenever it is represented to them that a mistake has been made—which will happen to most men at times—and that a particular salary is too low, they are always ready to take the case into consideration. It is all very well to talk of increasing the salaries of the lighthouse keepers of this Dominion; but if you once began, you would have to go through the whole list, and it would become a very serious matter. If my hon. friend represents to me the case of any one lighthouse keeper who for the work he is doing gets less than he ought, his representations will receive the most favourable consideration at my hands. I shall be glad to sit down with him and consider the case he refers to ; but my experience is that it is not prudent to give way to these constant demands that are being made for increases to the salaries of lighthouse keepers throughout the Dominion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I heartily agree with what the hon. gentleman has said. Having given a good deal of attention to that subject, I am satisfied that a revision on the lines suggested by the hon. member for Victoria would land us into an expenditure on annual salaries for light-house keepers of about a million dollars instead of $200,000. The number of lighthouses is, of course, steadily increasing on account of our enormous coast line and lake border, and we could not afford to go into an expenditure on the same scale as the United States. In the United States, besides, the policy is entirely different. They have an unlimited fund to draw on, for the salaries of their lighthouse keepers is a tax on foreign shipping. Our policy, however, is to furnish our lights free and keep our port dues as low as possible and make no invidious distinction against foreign shipping.

We have been very successful in getting the best men for this class of work, and I cannot recollect of any case of a lighthouse keeper having resigned because his salary was not sufficient. No doubt if there was a revision, it would be found that the department could cut down some of the excessive salaries and still get good men, because irregularities, such as those mentioned by the hon. member for Victoria, have crept in, through political pressure mainly, during a long period of years.

I would like to ask the hon. minister whether this practice does not obtain, namely, when a vacancy takes place, of giving the new appointee a smaller salary than his predecessor to begin with.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In the case of the smaller sums ranging from $50 to $100, we could not follow that practice, but in the case of the larger salaries the rule is that the new appointee begins at a lower rate than the man who was in the position eight or ten years. The new man comes in at a salary considerably below that of his predecessor, and after a year or two, when he has proved his fitness, he gets an increase of $50 or perhaps $100 gradually until he reaches the old rate.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I accept the explanation of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. My reference was altogether to the maritime provinces, and, of course, I know of several cases in which the salary paid to the keeper of a fixed light is the same as that paid to the one who keeps a revolving light. Some changes should be made, and I have several cases in which I shall make application to the minister for some improvement before the session is through.

Mr. SPROULE. In answer to my request, the hon. minister said the increase of $8,000 was due to an increase in the number of lighthouses, but he gave no information as to where these lighthouses were.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have here a statement:

Mr. SPROULE. I saw an intimation some time ago, given in an interview with one of the ministers of this government, that it was contemplated to light the St. Lawrence very much better in the coming year between Montreal and Quebec. I understand that one reason given for the very heavy marine insurance is because the channel is not properly lighted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I make no admission of the kind. I do not admit at all that the St. Lawrence route is not properly lighted. I do not mean to say that we cannot spend more money on that route, but I have crossed the Atlantic with five or six of the best sea captains who have ever sailed out of Montreal and have put this question to each one. I told each one that I was putting the question in my official capacity as Minister of Marine, and intended to use his answer, and on the last occasion I had the good fortune of having two of my colleagues present. The question I put was this : Do you know of any aid to navigation between Montreal and Belle Isle which is now wanting, which you would recommend being put there, or any aid to navigation now there which you think ought to be improved. In each case the answer was no. The last gentleman to whom I put the question, the captain of the Parisian, qualified his answer by saying : You know, I think this light at Point D'Amour in the Straits of Belle Isle, has had something coming over it the last few months, and you should send an inspector to see what is the matter. I replied that with a naked eye I could not see anything wrong, but would send an inspector down the first thing in the spring. I do not mean to say that no improvement can be made, and before the supplementaries are through, we may have a special vote on this subject. We spent $40,000 to $45,000 in building a permanent pier at the Traverse and erecting a light there last year, which has been of the greatest possible benefit to the shipping interest. Instead of having a lightship there, we have this permanent light. When the cold came on and the ice formed, the lightship had to be taken away, or it would be carried away by the ice altogether. With a permanent pier and permanent light there we are enabled to prolong the period of navigation for some time with safety. It is now under consideration—and I may say that personally I favour it—to construct a permanent pier at the other end of the Traverse, about two miles and a half further down. It will cost $75,000 or $80,000. If I can get the approval of my colleagues, and if the Finance Minister is able to grant it, I may ask the approval of the House, at a future time for the vote. There may be other large votes for the improvement of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, besides this. Anything that is submitted to me and which I can be satisfied is a real improvement, will be willingly accepted by me. For, I recognize the vast importance of that St. Lawrence river trade, and the absolute necessity of avoiding cheese-paring in our expenditure upon it to put it in the most effective condition. I do not hesitate to say that I am desirous of going as far as anybody else, short of extravagance or useless expenditure, in recommending the use of every dollar that is necessary to place the navigation of that route in the very best condition. If there are aids to navigation still needed, I wish to put them there ; if any that are there are defective, I wish to improve them. I am willing to listen to suggestions from any side of the House. The subject is under consideration, and I may have some additional votes in the supplementary estimates.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the hon. minister please state what arrangements have been made for new lights in New Brunswick.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are to be new lights at Perry's Point, Zephyr Rock Lightship, Gray's Point and Hampstead Wharf. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) knows that we have, in another place, a large vote for a lightship on the Lurcher Rocks in the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I am pleased to hear the minister say that before the session closes he will bring down estimates that will have for their object to give better navigation between Montreal and Quebec. I think there must have been some misapprehension when he asked the captain to whom he refers the question, because a steamship cannot go between Montreal and Quebec during the night at the present time. There are not nearly enough lights to enable that to be done. I am sure that every member in this House will back up the minister in his efforts to provide the best means of navigation between Montreal and the sea. There is hardly a place except Montreal where steamers are confined to daylight in leaving port. On the Sault route there are sufficient lights so that a steamer can see two of them at any time. If we had a similar system of lights between Montreal and Quebec, our shipping would have great advantages, as compared with those they have at the present time.

Mr. INGRAM. When the hon. minister rises to reply to the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), I would like him at the same time to give us some idea of the scheme for winter navigation of the St. Lawrence, concerning which we have heard.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not able to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) any information on the subject to which he referred. As to the remarks concerning lights on the St. Lawrence to make it safe by night, as well as by day, my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) must remember that the St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec, is not like the St. Lawrence below Quebec. It is not as thoroughly dredged as the Minister of Public Works intends to dredge it. When the channel, which is largely an artificial channel, has been widened and deepened, as is intended, there will be no difficulty about obtaining the necessary vote—at least, I shall have no difficulty in recommending it—to light the channel with gas buoys. The importance of the route and the trade carried on will justify any reasonable expenditure for improvement.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister had better settle that with the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), who told us how important it was to have a better lighthouse service, and said that it was the intention of the government to furnish it at the earliest date, and the hon. minister from Quebec without portfolio (Hon. Mr. Dobell) supported him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Were they speaking of the lower St. Lawrence, or between Montreal and Quebec, or above Montreal ?

Mr. SPROULE. The discussion was with regard to the river between Montreal and Quebec. I was surprised to hear the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he had found a sea-captain who was prepared to say that the channel was all that could be desired, because, I thought the impression was that there was a good deal of expenditure yet to take place.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are speaking of two different things. I did not mean to imply that the lighthouse service above Montreal, which was sufficient in former times, is all that is necessary under present conditions. The deepening of the canals has been carried out under the directions of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and they will need to be lighted with gas buoys, because it would be impossible to navigate them unless they were lighted by night as well as day. The remarks of my hon. friend and colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals, had reference to that part of the route. I think I am correct in saying that gas buoys have already been ordered to a large amount, and a great many of them will be in place this summer. I was speaking more of the navigation to the sea below Quebec, traversed by the sea captains.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister is mistaken, because specific information was given us by the Minister of Railways and Canals that it was intended to make a channell 450 feet wide all the way between Montreal and Quebec, and when that was done and the channel better lighted, which was intended to be done at an early day, he hoped that the navigation would be all that was desired, and would reduce the cost of insurance, which was now high.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I approve of every word of that.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The item under discussion, I believe, is salaries and allowances of lighthouse keepers, but we have wandered away from it. I would like to ask what the rules of the government are as to granting retiring allowances to lighthouse keepers when they leave the service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Those that were appointed before 1882 come under the Superannuation Act. Those who have been appointed since did not contribute to the Superannuation Act and are not entitled to the allowance ; those appointed previously to 1892 are.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I desire to call the attention of the minister to the case of one Robert Grey, late lighthouse keeper at Entrance Island. He entered the service in 1876 and did not leave until 1897. The reason he left was that his health gave way. He sent in his resignation, accompanied by certificates of two doctors, stating that his health had given way. He had been paying into the superannuation fund for many years, and after resigning made application for his pension, but from that time up to the present he has never had any word from the department whatever. He was twenty-one years in the service, and I do not believe anything was ever said against him ; I believe he did his duty faithfully and well during the whole of that time. His salary for the first seventeen years of his service was $600, then it was raised to $900 a year, owing to the fact that a fog alarm was added to the light. It seems to me an extraordinary thing that when a man has been in the service as long as that, and has done his duty well, and has been paying into the superannuation fund, that he cannot even get an answer from the department or get his pension. He is a very poor man, he has no money whatever now. He has been kept by relatives, and, as I say, he has not been able, up to the present time, to get any information from the department in regard to the reason why his pension is not paid. I hope the hon. gentleman will look into the case and see that the pension is properly paid to him. I do not know how much it is, but it should be paid to him at once, and paid as long as he lives.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have a recollection of that case, and I do not think my hon. friend has stated it quite accurately. Robert Grey may or may not have been entitled to superannuation. He did not apply for superannuation on resigning his place. After resigning his place an application did come in for superannuation on the ground that he was in ill-health ; but the hon. gentleman knows that before a man can get superannuation on the ground that he is in ill-health, certificates of ill-health must be forwarded and must be satisfactory to the Treasury Board.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I am informed that two doctors' certificates were forwarded.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Those certificates were not satisfactory either to the department or to the Treasury Board, and an officer of the department, very high up in the department, who went to the locality and saw this gentleman, reported to the department that he was not in ill-health and was not entitled to superannuation.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Would you mind saying who this officer was ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would be glad to bring down the papers if the hon. gentleman wishes to call for them ; or, if he likes to see them privately, he can do so. All I can say is, that there were no certificates of the ill-health of this gentleman which were satisfactory to the department or to the Treasury Board ; and that the reports we have are that he was not in ill-health, or in such ill-health as would justify superannuation being granted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did Mr. Balderson produce a doctor's certificate for the Treasury Board, or did Mr. Hayter Reed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Were these gentlemen superannuated on the ground of ill-health ?

Mr. COCHRANE. It was because they wanted the place for somebody else.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would produce the doctors' certificate.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. It seems to me in a case like that, after the man had put in 21 years, the minister might have stretched the point if possible.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not if he had misrepresented the facts to the department.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I do not think he did. Of course, I am not capable of saying whether he did or not, but I would like to see the papers.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that John Sutherland, lighthouse keeper at Port Burwell, has resigned. Is the minister going to make a new appointment ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the minister state the name of the light-keeper at Stag Island ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot now, but I will get it for the hon. gentleman.

Agencies, rents and contingencies $16,560

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The small increase of $250 is owing to a small increase in the salaries of clerks in the agencies at Quebec, Nova Scotia and British Columbia, $50 each for five.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, including the maintenance and pay of crew of lighthouse steamer Brant $250,000

Mr. SPROULE. There is a large increase here of nearly $15,000. Could the minister give us some information ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman will see that we require this increase for the maintenance of new lights, the names of which I read him, those now building and for supplying new buoys. On the face of the vote the hon. gentleman sees it is for maintenance, and for the pay of the crew of the lighthouse steamer Brant, which was built a year or two ago and now has to be provided for. That new steamer supplies the lighthouses on the coast of Prince Edward Island. She is a new steamer just built.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before this item is adopted, I would like to ask the minister whether he has given further consideration to the memorial from the board of trade of the city of Halifax as regards the establishment of a lightship off the harbour of Halifax, During the last session of the last parliament I brought the matter to the attention of the hon. gentleman, and quoted a memorial which, I think, had been forwarded to him previously, and also a letter from Captain Pye, of Halifax, with regard to the difficulty of hearing the bombs fired from Sambro Island during foggy weather. The hon. gentleman at that time said the matter had been investigated by certain officers of his department, and in respect to some matters mentioned in the memorial, they did not agree with the views expressed by the board of trade ; and that with respect to the best place for the location of a lightship, if one were necessary, the views of the board did not agree with the views of the chief engineer of his department. I understood from what the hon. gentleman said on that occasion that he proposed to give his further attention to the matter ; and I also understood him that he would submit to the board of trade of the city of Halifax the report of his officials in order that they might have an opportunity of considering it and of making such reply as they thought desirable.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say to my hon. friend that I have given a great deal of consideration to that matter, in conjunction with the officers of my department, both here and in Halifax, and I have taken advantage of opportunities from time to time of consulting with the captains who enter the port of Halifax and leave it, but I have not yet officially made up my mind upon it. The chief engineer of the department is rather averse to the idea of placing a lightship there, because he does not think it is even necessary. He looks upon the Halifax harbour as one of the finest in the world, with the lights which are there now, and he is backed up by the opinion of Admiral Erskine, which he quotes from time to time, who thinks that there is no difficulty for the largest ships in the world sailing right into Halifax harbour without danger. But there are others who hold a contrary opinion, and I am inclined to think that I did carry out my promise to which he calls attention, and send to the Halifax Board of Trade the opinion of the officers upon their memorial. I may be wrong in that, but my recollection is that I did send it. I will refresh my memory upon it. The matter is not finally closed ; it is still under consideration by Col. Anderson and myself, and I do not want to shut the door one way or the other. I had a consultation with my hon. colleague the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) upon it. It was brought to my attention some time ago, and I took advantage of my presence in Halifax to consult with the officers there. I went over the charts very carefully, and took the opinions of the officers. I met the inspector of lighthouses, Mr. Hutchins, and Capt. Campbell, lately in command of the Newfield and others. But, I have not come to a conclusion which would justify me in making any recommendation to my colleagues, nor do I mean to say that the door is closed one way or the other. I will again take the matter up before the supplementary estimates are brought down.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), who has great practical experience in matters of this kind, and who has had some practical experience in respect to the necessity of a lightship at the entrance of Halifax, when he spoke of this subject, during the past session, said :

> I could easily understand that it would be of very great benefit if a powerful lightship could be anchored in such a way that, in entering a harbour, the mariner could keep the lightship on the one hand and Chebucto Head light on the other.

Further on he says :

> If it is possible to put a lightship there, it should be done.

He went on to express some doubt as to whether there was holding ground at that point, as to which I think, after what we have heard upon that matter during the past two or three years, there is really not much doubt. I understand that so far as the question of holding ground is concerned there is not really any difference of opinion among the hon. gentleman's officers. I did not observe that there was any question of that raised in the report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think there was.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not recall it. I would like the hon. gentleman to ascertain whether the report of his officers has gone to the board of trade. I shall take it as a favour, and I may say the board of trade would take it as a favour, if the hon. gentleman would let them have a copy of it, so that they could make observations upon it, if necessary.

Wages of crew and maintenance of Lurcher Shoal lightship (revote) $10,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why was that not spent ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have not got the lightship yet. This is for maintenance for next year.

Construction of lighthouses $42,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the list ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I read the list.

Mr. BRITTON. I want to say a word or two in reference to this vote.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Let us have the list. These lists are usually handed across the floor of the House. That was the invariable custom some years ago. Strictly speaking, they ought to be in the estimates, and all lighthouses should be mentioned separately. The course was adopted by the minister of leaving out the list and sending a copy across the floor of the House. I would like to hear the list read before we discuss the vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will send it across the floor of the House ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not have it here.

Mr. BRITTON. The reason that I speak is that the hon. minister, in referring to the list, read one or two items for maintenance at a lighthouse at Middle Ground. I assume that no maintenance will be required, unless it is intended to build a lighthouse there. This lighthouse, if built, will be to replace one at Point Pelee, which was burnt a year or so ago. A discussion has arisen in regard to where that lighthouse should be built. I understand that the department has decided that it would be rebuilt at Middle Ground, and I am informed that that is not the best place to have the lighthouse. This is certainly the most important lighthouse of any between Duluth, or Chicago and Kingston. More vessels are interested in this point than any other on the upper lakes. They say that Middle Ground is not the best place at which to build a lighthouse, and I understand that strong representations have been made to the hon. minister in that regard. It is perhaps important that a lighthouse should be put at Middle Ground, but if so there should be two lighthouses at that place. It is called Middle Ground because it is land lying between Pelee Island and Point Pelee itself. If one lighthouse is built there, the other one ought to be built at Point Pelee, on what is called South-east Shoal, which is just near there. That is the one that will best serve the marine interests. I am told that there was a deputation of mariners down, and probably they had an interview with the minister upon that point. If so, it might be very satisfactory, and in the public interest, if the minister could say that he has been convinced that Middle Ground is not the best place to adopt, but that if he intends to build one at Middle Ground, he will have one built at South-east Shoal on Point Pelee itself. This is a very important matter, and I know that a great many people are interested in it and anxious to know at the earliest moment what the department intends to do. I am satisfied that the best interests of navigation will not be served by a lighthouse at Middle Ground, which will not answer the purpose at all. It will be good enough as far as it goes, but it is not the best place. It is not as good a place as to build it exactly on the spot where the one was destroyed. But better still would it be to put it on South-east Shoal, and better still would it be if there were two lighthouses, one on Middle Ground and one on South-east Shoal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not asking for any vote now for the construction of a lighthouse on Middle Ground or Point Pelee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We cannot see what you are asking for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is therefore, hardly fair to ask me to give explanations in as much detail as I would give if I were asking for a vote. Last season when I asked for a vote, I brought down a chart, and the matter was argued and debated. The different locations where it was proposed that this lighthouse should be built were considered, and Middle Ground was preferred. I said in the House that the department had received petitions from a large majority of the captains of the craft in reference to the location, stating their opinion that the proper place to build the lighthouse was in the Middle Ground. I speak under correction, but I think that with two exceptions, they were unanimous in believing that Point Pelee was not the proper place, but that Middle Ground was the proper place. In addition to the opinion of the mariners, the captains of vessels, there was the opinion of the chief engineer, which was thoroughly concurrent, and there was no opinion of any weight or moment advocating the construction of this lighthouse at Point Pelee. There were very serious objections against building it there.

Mr. BRITTON. What about South-east Shoal ?

Mr. BRITTON.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were serious objections to that too. The Middle Ground was the one which was at that time determined upon, and a vote was granted by parliament on the understanding that that was the location where the lighthouse was to be built. The lighthouse has been built and will be ready for the spring. It would have been done last fall but for the storms in October. I beg to assure my hon. friend (Mr. Britton) that if he is under the impression that the majority of the carriers favour the construction of a light on Point Pelee, he is entirely mistaken. I will bring down the petition, which will show that the vast majority are in favour of constructing the lighthouse on the Middle Ground.

At six o'clock the Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Salaries of temporary officers, engineers and draughtsmen at Ottawa, at rates exceeding $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $3,000

Mr. BELL (Pictou). How many officers are there ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Only two at present : Mr. Fosberry and Mr. Roberts, at $600 per annum, but Col. Anderson says that when the rush of work comes on it will be necessary to employ other officers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the difficulty with regard to the Civil Service Act ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Civil Service Act only permits you to employ temporary officers, at $400 per annum, and you cannot get a good draughtsman in the Dominion for that. I pay Messrs. Fosberry and Roberts $600 per annum, and I cannot get any one else at that rate. I hope to get a couple of other good men at about $700.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these two employed at present retained throughout the year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were employed by the chief engineer, and I do not know them personally, but they have been in office only about a year. I was fortunate enough to get one gentleman from the Royal Military College, but he is paid out of the civil service vote.

For the construction and equipment of a lightship for Lurcher's Shoal, supplied with electric light plant, compressed air siren and auxiliary screw power (revote) $80,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Could not a permanent structure be put there as at the Traverse ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never thought it could, nor did Col. Anderson, but there was a memorandum sent to the department by a civil engineer of the city of St. John—I forget his name—in which he urged, that notwithstanding the great depth of water and the rise and fall of the tide, it was possible to erect a permanent structure there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did he give an estimate ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Only in a very rough way, I think. He believed it was feasible, and if so, it would be cheaper in the end. For my own part, I do not propose to incur any part of this expenditure until Col. Anderson has visited the spot and made the necessary investigation. If his report is such as to make it advisable to adopt this course, then the construction of the lightship will have to be postponed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In a place like this, even with the best lightship, she is liable to move, and then the danger is greater than if there never was a ship there at all. That happened off Chebucto, at the time the old lightship was there. She moved from her moorings and was a source of danger, instead of a guide.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But, this proposed lightship will be fitted out in a way which I think would avoid any reasonable possibility of that. Before I proposed the vote last year, Col. Anderson went down to New York, and the engineers there gave him every information as to the improvements made on these lightships, and which are now used very largely along the American coast; and he gives me to understand that with these improvements, there will be no danger at all of the lightship moving.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman's ground for asking this vote is rather slender, especially as this is the second year it has been asked. He tells us that it is asked on a mere surmise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg pardon; I did not say that. The hon. member for Pictou was asking about putting up a permanent structure, instead of a lightship, and I said that I had received a suggestion of that kind from an engineer of St. John, and that before I made any of the proposed expenditure, I would make inquiries and see if there was anything in that suggestion.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this was a revote In fact, it was voted without very much knowledge of the subject, and only on a suggestion thrown out by the chief engineer, Col. Anderson.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is wrong. It was not on account of suggestions made by the chief engineer, but on account of representations made by the board of trade, and on account of the dangers to navigation which we know to exist in the Bay of Fundy. We know that several vessels were lost there, one particularly three years ago; and the investigation with respect to the loss of that vessel, which was pretty thorough, satisfied my mind at all events that if there had been a lightship on the Lurcher shoal, the vessel might not have been lost.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman, in trying to avoid one dilemma, gets into another, because he has given no excuse for not spending the money that was voted last year, if the vote was based on proper information at the time. So that I do not think he made his case very much better. But, what I rose for was to point to a defect in these estimates—that they do not show which items are revotes and which are new.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This does—at the end of the item.

Mr. SPROULE. I see it does. The custom has been to show the revotes in another column, and I think it would be an improvement to follow that custom.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For what particular part of the Bay of Fundy is this lightship ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Near the entrance—about midway between Yarmouth and the Grand Manan.

Construction of lighthouses	$42,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The proposed lights and buoys for next year, are as follows :

Ontario—
Michipicoten Island light	$3,000
Stribbling Point range lights	200
Thornbury range	250
Stag Island range	150
Quebec—
Cap Charles range lights	1,200
Welch Rock, Lake Memphremagog, to rebuild	500
Grand Entry light	500
Gas buoys on Batture Simon	4,000
Nova Scotia—
Low Point, re-establishment fog alarm	2,000
Victoria Beach	600
Port Bickerton	500
Charlo	500
Grand Etang pier light	400
Louisburg fog alarm	4,500
Entrance to Bras d'Or, rearrangement of lights	2,000
New Brunswick—
Perry's Point, pole light	200

British Columbia—
Walker's Rock light	$2,000
Brocton Point Light and dwelling	2,000
Lights and beacons en route to Ladysmith	4,000
Additional bell and whistling buoys, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia	10,000
Not yet allotted	3,500
Total	$42,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the reason for a light at Brocton ? There are two lights there now very close together, and a very good dwelling.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The engineer says there is nothing but a pole light there now. The intention is to put up a dwelling house, and a proper lighthouse.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it intended to put up the range light at Thornbury ? Is it to be put on the shore so as to range with the one at the end of the dock ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At Brocton Point there is already a new light, and a dwelling at the entrance to the harbour; and on the point, not more than 150 yards distant, there is another light—not a pole light, but an ordinary light in a properly-constructed building.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The information I have is that there is a light at Prospect Point, and a light at the entrance. It is proposed to have both lights continued, but to substitute at Brocton Point a good light with a dwelling.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That means that there will be two keepers. Are there two keepers at present ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Though it is not exactly relevant, I would like to say a word with regard to the salary of the light keeper at Thornberry. He has been there for a number of years and his salary has been $80 a year. I think he applied for an increase and, as he is a remarkably capable and efficient man and as he will have more work to do, I hope the minister will see his way clear to give him an increase when the additional light is put there. I think the making of the range light is the proper thing to do and will be appreciated by the people in the locality. Some think that the light on the end of the dock should be raised. I do not know whether it should be raised or not, but I think that the putting in of the range light will be an improvement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall be glad to bear the recommendation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) in mind.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the estimated cost of the house and of the light ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be one building—$2,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. For the house and light ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, that is the total.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What did the light at Prospect Point cost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. About $3,000. That was largely on account of the foundation, which had to be made of concrete.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was very cheap. Was it done by day's labour ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will this be done by day's labour also ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret to see no mention in the list of Ontario lighthouses of a lighthouse at Bronte, a point about midway between Hamilton and Toronto on Lake Ontario. Last year the government received a vote of $17,000 for dredging the harbour and improving the dock at that place, and it was rumoured that a lighthouse would be placed there also. No appropriation was made for this last year, and I am surprised that the minister has overlooked it this year. I hope it is simply an oversight and that the minister does not intend to abandon the idea of erecting the lighthouse there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall be glad to consider carefully what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) has said. I do not recollect having the matter brought to my personal attention.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite understand the minister when he says that the matter has not been brought to his attention. During the election in November last it was stated by the government candidate, I was credibly informed, that a lighthouse would be erected there ; and considerable use was made of that statement to secure his election. My own opinion was that no promise had been made by the Minister of Marine, nor do I think that any such promise had ever been made. I merely draw attention to the fact to show the gross abuse of the expenditure of public money for election purposes. There is no doubt the government candidate gained greatly by announcing the prospect of this expenditure, because he succeeded in getting a larger vote there than was usually obtained by a candidate of that party; I have no doubt the real intention was to mislead the electors. I quite believe that the whole thing was gotten up merely to influence the election. However, if the hon. minister does decide to build a lighthouse there, it will be very much appreciated by the electors of that section.

Lighthouse and Coast Service—Repairs to wharfs $3,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is that in connection with lighthouses ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No—ordinary wharfs. The Marine Department is allowed this amount to spend in small repairs on wharfs without refernce to the Minister of Public Works.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You save a lot of money that way ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We do.

Scientic Institutions and Hydrographic Surveys—Observatory, Toronto..... $2,700

Mr. SPROULE. Who was appointed in the place of the late Mr. Carpmael ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Stupart.

Mr. SPROULE. He does not seem to be as successful in his weather predictions as his predecessor was.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) say that. The feeling in the maritime provinces seems to be one of surprise at the great accuracy of 'Old Probs'' predictions.

Scientific Institutions and Hydrographic Survey—Meteorological Service $77,593

Mr. SPROULE. How is this increase made up ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Salaries, $1,100; telegraphs, $1,000—we have extended our information to a larger number of towns than formerly received 'Old Probs'' prognostications and the cost of telegraphing is greater—instruments, $400; postage, stationery and printing, $1,400; expenses at stations, $783; miscellaneous, $600. The salary increases include $100 to Mr. Stupart, the director; to Mr. Webber, forecast official, $500; to Mr. H. V. Payne, climatologist, and Mr. F. F. Payne, secretary, $50 each; to Mr. F. L. Blake, astronomical assistant, $50; to Mr. Kingsford and Mr. Allan, assistant forecast officials, Mr. Menzies, observer, and Mr. Hutchinson, at St. John, N.B., $100 each. An increase of $50 is allowed also to the following: W. A. Bannon, clerk; D. O'Halloran, telegraph operator; Chas. Ross, telegraph operator; Ross McA. Cameron, clerk; Harold A. Small, clerk; Chas. E. Tweedie, assistant observer; Frank O'Donnell, clerk; and F. N. Dennison, Victoria, B.C., A station in the Yukon will cost $500, and a station on Herschell Island, $50.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us approximately how much of the ground in Georgian Bay has been gone over, and what he proposes to do the coming season ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand from Commander Stewart that they have finished the whole of that district excepting this year's work. When this year's work is finished, they will have finished the survey of Lake Huron. This year they are going down the east coast of Lake Huron toward Goderich.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I to understand they have finished up Georgian Bay entirely ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, they have some work to do on the coast of Lake Huron.

Mr. SPROULE. Has there been any charts published of late which show the survey up to the present time, and that will be available the coming season.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, charts are prepared during the winter months and sent home to the hydrographic office in London to be published, and as soon as they are published they are distributed among the mariners. The moment we get them back from the hydrographer's office they are published. I do not know whether my hon. friend has ever seen one of those charts. They involve an immense deal of accurate labour.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the cost of these charts in Canada is about ten times the cost for corresponding works in the United States, and I do not know that they are any better. The United States charts of our great lakes are infinitely superior to the English charts, and they are purchaseable at a nominal fee. If you buy one here it costs a large sum of money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think not, they are not sold to make money out of them.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). They are sold at 75 cents to $1.50, and you can get them for 25 cents on the other side, and infinitely better.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood these charts could be given out without charge.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, a small charge is made for them. You cannot issue valuable charts of that kind without charging for them, otherwise everybody all over the country would want them. They are charged just enough to cover the cost.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister tell us when the charts will be available and what the price will be for the whole of Georgian Bay and Lake Huron ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This next year we will have charts for Lake Huron and the sheets themselves for distribution. The Georgian Bay sheets are out now and ready for distribution. The whole of Georgian Bay has been surveyed and the charts are all ready for distribution.

Mr. SPROULE. When may we have the charts of the work done last summer ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Next year.

Mr. SPROULE. It is just as requisite for navigators to have charts of Lake Huron as it is of the Georgian Bay.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No time will be lost. We cannot do more than forward the charts the moment after the surveys are made. The officers come back here and prepare the charts, and the moment they finish them they are sent home to the hydrographer's office in order to be properly printed.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not complaining of the length of time, but I want to know approximately when they will be out, because these questions are asked, and I desire to give information when they will be available.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Next year we will have the first two charts, the chief engineer tells me, of Lake Huron, the first two charts only. They are generally about two years behind in getting the sheet charts ; from the time the survey is made until the sheet charts come back will be two years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT. TUPPER. What was the expenditure on the hydrographic survey last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For the year 1899-1900 it was $12,600. I cannot tell what the expenditure will be for the current year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then, why does the hon. gentleman ask $16,000 if $12,600 was all he spent in the regular season before, and he does not know what amount he will require for the current year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows that the vessel we employ on this hydrographic survey, the Bayfield, is a very old and almost worn-out vessel. Last year I tried to get my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) to give me some money to build a new boat, but he could not see his way clear to do it. I want to get a new boat now, but I have not got the money yet. There will be quite a large sum of money, $3,000 or $4,000 at the very least, expended in repairing the boiler and the machinery of the Bayfield to make her seaworthy. It is specially for that ; the whole $16,000, Mr. Stewart tells me, will be required.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). If the minister will inquire into the cost of these maps he will find that the United States charts are infinitely cheaper and better.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will make the necessary inquiries ; but the prices of these charts are fixed by the Admiralty Office, and it is very hard to get out of routine.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Is it the intention of the minister to do any hydrographic surveying on the coast of British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not this year, but I am not without hopes that when we get the new vessel afloat we may be able to do something. We have called for tenders for her construction, although the contract has not been entered into yet. I hope she will be ready for service in a short time.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. If I understand the work these vessels have to do, I do not think they will have time to do any hydrographic work this year. No doubt these vessels are wanted badly, and they are wanted for customs work, and looking after smuggling and lighthouse service. The hon. gentleman will remember that last year a very strong effort was made by boards of trade in British Columbia to have that hydrographic survey carried on. The hon. gentleman must remember there is a tremendously large traffic going on now on that coast up to the Yukon, and also down to San Francisco. I think if he looks into it he will find that he ought to do something this year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Last year my hon. friend brought this matter up and I had it investigated. To a certain extent that coast has been already surveyed by Imperial officers but has not been as completely surveyed as it ought to be. The Quadra is now doing all the work out there, but it is contemplated to have a new ship launched, and the Quadra will be reserved entirely for marine work and the new ship devoted to the protection of the fisheries and customs. That need not necessarily absorb all her time, but neither am I prepared to say that she would have time to devote to the hydrographic service. I have made no preparation for any hydrographic survey on the western coast this year.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. My hon. friend will remember that Captain Walldom, in command of the Quadra, has done considerable work in that regard which does not pertain to his duties.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know he has, and the work he has done is very creditable to him, but I would not say that an officer of one of the Dominion steamers should not, when he discovers a rock, locate it properly on the chart.

Care of sick seamen in Marine Hospital and other hospitals in the maritime provinces $38,000
Shipwrecked and distressed seamen 3,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The increase of $3,000 in the first item is due to the increase of shipping, especially at the port of Montreal, where there is a very large number of seamen admitted to the General Hospital and the Notre Dame Hospital. In Montreal alone 340 seamen receive treatment, and the treatment of sick seamen at outlaying ports has also largely increased.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the charge by the hospital ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So much per diem for each seaman—90 or 95 cents.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. According to the Auditor General's Report $35,000 covered everything.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Last year we spent $35,000, but that included $1,000 voted for the St. John cemetery. We estimate that we will require at least $2,000 more this year, basing our estimate on the increased number of patients in the Montreal hospital and the outlying ports.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this vote available for sick seamen in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, this is strictly speaking a trust fund and does not cost the country anything. To the credit of that fund there is quite a large amount of money. The ships in the maritime provinces and Quebec are liable for the payment of a tonnage fee which goes into this particular fund. Out of this fund this expenditure is made. In Ontario the ships pay no sick mariners fee and consequently are not entitled to any share in this fund.

Steamboat inspection $28,200

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The increase of $1,000 is to provide for increases in the salaries of inspectors granted them a few months ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who is the inspector now at the Yukon ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Robinson.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What became of Russell ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was dismissed.

Inspection of Dominion steamers and fog alarms $1,300

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I would like to call attention to the necessity for more fog alarms on the Pacific coast. The Boards of Trade of Vancouver and Victoria have pointed out the great necessity—a necessity impressed upon them by seafaring men—for fog alarms wherever lighthouses are placed. That means a pretty large order, but the frequency of fogs and the large and increasing traffic demand that fog alarms should be put up. Many more lights are also required, but on this subject I shall speak on some future occasion. I would like the hon. minister to promise that this question of fog alarms will receive his early and favourable consideration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would be happy to promise that it will receive early consideration, but would not like to consent to so large a proposition by promising it favourable consideration. I will give it every consideration possible.

Mr. FRASER. I would impress on the hon. minister the advisability of seeing whether the people to the south of us might not be induced to do their share in the northern part. Our government have done five times as much as the American government have in that direction.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Where is that ?

Mr. FRASER. North, towards Skagway. It would be well if the hon. minister would communicate with the American government so as to draw its attention to the fact in order that it might do its share. I have heard American capitalists say that we did tentimes more in a short time since we have been opening up that country than they did all the time they have had any possessions there.

Salaries and disbursements of fisheries inspectors, overseers and guardians.... $85,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is the reason for this increase ? I thought when we were obliged to give up the fisheries to the provinces there would be a reduction in the expenditure rather than an increase.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So there is a reduction. The amount originally was $95,000, and it was reduced to $70,000 in 1900. At that time it was assumed that we would not have any officers whatever in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, but it was subsequently represented to us that we must have a few inspectors at least to inform us upon the manner in which the regulations, which it is our duty to make and prepare, are carried out by the fishery officers of the provinces. We, therefore, have in new Ontario an inspector, we have an inspector in Ontario, resident in Toronto, whose jurisdiction extends over the whole of Lake Erie and part of Lake Huron, and then we have an inspector in the eastern part of Ontario. We have two inspectors for Quebec, so that, having to pay for the inspectors and their travelling expenses, a matter of $9,000, was incurred more than was at first anticipated. Then, coming to British Columbia, we have had this last year, an additional fishery protection steamer that cost $15,000 last year, and this protection in British Columbia will cost $15,000 this year.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. What steamer was that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We had the Winetta and Tyce.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that we are getting rapidly back to the old figure that the hon. minister says the expenditure originally reached—$90,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $95,000.

Mr. SPROULE. It came down to $70,000, but in one year it jumped up by $15,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In British Columbia our receipts from fisheries are very largely in excess of our expenditure, and I will have to ask the House next year to increase the expenditure there still more to provide fishery boats for the protection of the fisheries there. We are building one now which we will have to maintain, we are building a hatchery at Sicamous on the Fraser river, we are building another at the mouth of the Skeena river, and I have no doubt that we will be obliged to build other hatcheries and incur other large expenditures.

Mr. SPROULE. This is not the item for fish hatcheries at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, but I am pointing out that while you see one side of the account increasing, you do not see the receipts increasing. The receipts from British Columbia, largely exceed the expenditure on the fisheries.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Four times.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The reason is that when the salmon fishing season takes place, there is a matter of a thousand boats congregated at the mouth of the Fraser river. These boats have to be licensed and closely inspected, and we have to charter a steamer and to maintain a crew and officers. That costs $15,000, but the receipts are far in excess of the expenditure.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is that something new ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not complaining of that, but I was referring to the excuse given by the hon. minister for the increase. We thought when the fisheries were taken over by the provinces that we would have no expenditure in that line, but we found afterwards that we required three overseers, and that was given to account for the increase in the expenditure. Now, the increase in the expenditure is in British Columbia, which I think would be perfectly proper, but it would be well to inquire how much of that increase was due to the expenditure in British Columbia, and how much was due to the increase in the number of inspectors in Ontario. Then, we will be able to arrive at a proper estimate as to what we require.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) has mentioned three inspectors as being employed in Ontario. If I understood the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the other day, he mentioned Mr. Hurley, of Hastings, as an inspector. These inspectors, I understand, are to see whether the regulations are being carried out. Have the Dominion government the power to say how much the license shall be ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Have the Dominion government inspectors any control over the local inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, they have no direct control over them. Their duty is to report to the department from week to week how the fishery regulations are observed in the different localities.

Mr. INGRAM. By whom ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By the fishermen.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the duty of the local government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly, it is the duty of the local government, but we make the regulations and fix the times and seasons in which the fish may be taken. The local government have the sole and exclusive right under the Privy Council decision to grant licenses for particular localities, they get the fees and they oppoint officers for that purpose. It is a divided jurisdiction and we appoint three officers in order to keep track of the manner in which our regulations are observed, and report to us whether these regulations are proper or not, and whether they should be amended or not in this direction or in that direction.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend will see that we derive no revenue from any source, and it is strange that we should be so anxious as to employ a squad of inspectors to look after a matter that is solely concerned with provincial interests. My hon. friend behind me very aptly says that they are employed to draw their salaries. Cannot we discover any other reason for it than that ? Some discussion took place on this same question last year. There seems to be some conflict of authority, some difference of opinion as to what is the proper sphere of action to be pursued by the respective governments in regard to the matter. I would like to ask : Has Mr. Hurley taken the place of some other inspector, or is he a new inspector ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We had a gentleman from the department who undertook the duties of inspecting eastern Ontario lying near here, but we came to the conclusion that it would be better to have an officer who would devote his whole time to the work.

Mr. CLANCY. Then Mr. Hurley is a new appointment ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He takes Mr. Cunningham's place.

Mr. CLANCY. What were the duties that Mr. Cunningham performed before ? It is necessary to know what the reasons were that actuated the government in coming to the conclusion which they did.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Cunningham's duties are chiefly in the department, and he was asked to do this work in eastern Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. Why cannot he do it now?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because he would have to be away from his work here.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that his work was neglected here, when he perfomed these other duties ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not prepared to say that his work was neglected, but I advised my colleagues that it would be better to have him in the department to attend to the special work that he is required to do, taking charge of the accounts of the fishery expenditure and superintending the hatcheries of the Dominion. Mr. Cunningham may be required to go to-morrow to inspect the hatchery at Margaree, or at Richibucto, N.B., or at Pictou, in Nova Scotia, and to report upon these hatcheries. It does not seem to me that it would be consistent with these duties to discharge the duty of inspector of fisheries in eastern Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. It is very strange that the hon. gentleman should have made that discovery so suddenly. I am quite sure his friends know perfectly, that there has no such state of things arisen other than the necessity of finding a place for an hon. gentleman who was defeated at the election to call for this appointment. Mr. Hurley is no doubt a very estimable gentleman, but that is not what we are discussing here tonight. But, if the reasons the hon. gentleman gives at the present moment are good now, they were good before. The minister might call upon Mr. Cummings or anybody else to go to the maritime provinces, but it would be more courageous for him to stand up and tell us that he wanted to make an appointment, and that this is the excuse.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are glad to know that you do not object to the appointment.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not objecting to the appointment of any necessary official. Why should we maintain even a small staff of officials for the purpose of maintaining provincial revenues. The minister I am sure will agree with me, that this is a useless service for the Dominion to maintain and that it should be ended as speedily as possible. If this were merely a temporary arrangement pending a decision of the courts, and if we could ever hope to receive any revenue, then I could understand it. Is it the intention of the government to maintain this service and to multiply the officers as the necessity arises ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not the intention of the department, while I preside over it at least, to multiply unnecessary officials. I appeal to the experience and intelligence of my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy)—and I have never appealed to them in vain—for he knows that the Privy Council decision gave rise to certain anomalies which we did not anticipate and cannot overcome. The exclusive power to make regulations in connection with the fisheries is vested in the Dominion government, but the provinces of Ontario and Quebec having been declared by the Privy Council to be the owners of the beds of rivers and lakes, they were held a fortiori to be the owners of the fish in these rivers and lakes, and it was held that the provinces had the exclusive right to grant fishery leases of areas in these lakes. Therefore the revenues which we formerly derived from the issue of licenses are now handed over to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. CLANCY. We all know that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am explaining the anomaly. We must make the regulations, and they grant the licenses. With the constitutional duty cast upon us of making the regulations, are we not to see that the regulations are carried out? Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) suggest that I should withdraw the Petrel from Lakes Erie and Huron? I do not think any one would suggest that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is not the Minister (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) wrong in regard to that decision of the Privy Council, when he says the result of it was that the authority of the Dominion government was gone with regard to the issuing of licenses?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Leases?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman said licenses. We had a system of licenses in the province of Ontario which brought incidentally into the exchequer a very large sum of money. As I understand it, the decision of the Privy Council did not interfere with that system or the right to charge for these licenses because they were not for revenue but for the purpose of restriction, and preventing overfishing.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would not be dogmatic on that question, because there is room for difference of opinion. I have consulted with the Minister of Justice, and the Deputy Minister of Justice and also with Mr. Christopher Robinson as to what that judgment means, and the conclusion I arrived at was that while we may have the power to levy a tax on all fishing we choose, outside of that we have no power to issue a license and charge for it in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is an interesting passage in the judgment in reference to an argument addressed to the court from an opposite point of view. It was said: If the province has the exclusive right to issue the proprietary license and charge therefor, and the Dominion has the right to regulate overfishing by licenses which they would charge, what is to prevent the Dominion practically taking over the proprietary right and getting the revenue out of the fisheries. The court said: We cannot assume that the federal authority would resort to anything in the line of bad faith, but so long as the federal legislation is not for the purpose of exercising a proprietary right and obtaining a revenue it would be intra vires.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I take it, there would be nothing wrong in our passing a regulation that no one should fish without paying, say one dollar a year. What I referred to particularly was the issue of a license for a particular location where a net could be cast, the exclusive right of which belongs to the province and not to us.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Quite so, but the curious thing seems to be that the federal authority has absolutely withdrawn from Ontario in so far as that license system is concerned.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That license system never was founded upon a revenue basis, but upon the necessity of protecting the fisheries so as to preserve them. That was the attitude always taken in this House, and when a comparison was made of the large amount taken from Ontario as compared with the other provinces, the explanation of the policy of the government was that this was a mere incident, the system not being to obtain revenue from the fishermen of Ontario but to preserve to these fishermen the fisheries, and with that end in view a fee was charged for tugs and for nets and so on. That being so, there is not a line in the judgment which says that system is wrong and that the provinces alone should charge a license. The provinces of course exercise proprietary right, but according to the statement of the minister (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) the Ontario government are carrying out that license system and obtaining the incidental revenue from it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the condition of things now.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then it is a great concession from the federal government and it is a concession which causes the federal government to recede from the discharge of their responsibility to regulate the fisheries. If these are the regulations, they get their force from Dominion laws, and not from local.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Ontario government derive a revenue from the fisheries, why should not the Ontario government maintain a fishery protection service?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They do.

Mr. HUGHES. They do not pay for the Dominion boat.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is maintained from a national, or rather international standpoint. It is for the purpose of protecting the fisheries of the inland waters from the inroads of American fishermen, which one would hardly suppose to be a duty properly relegated to the province.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Inasmuch as it is international ; and inasmuch as we maintain the protection of the sea-shore fisheries out of the Dominion treasury, it is equally reasonable to suppose that we should maintain the protection of the inland fisheries from the encroachments of American fishermen.

Mr. HUGHES. Each state of the American union maintains its own fishery officers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are not in the same position as the states of the American union.

Mr. HUGHES. In this case we are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If my hon. friend thinks we should withdraw the Petrel and abandon the protection of the inland waters, I am prepared to discuss that question with him. I hope he will not take that ground.

Mr. INGRAM. As I understand the hon. gentleman, the Ontario government own the fish in the rivers and lakes of the province. I would like to know if the Ontario government endorse the regulations of the Dominion government, and are willing to carry them out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not mean to say that there has been no friction. On the contrary, there has been a disposition on the part of the provincial government to arrogate—if that is not an improper word—powers with regard to these regulations, which I do not think they possess. They undertook to pass regulations supplementary to ours, contending that as the proprietor of the fisheries, they had a right to make supplementary regulations. We challenge that right entirely, pointing to the words in the fishery judgment stating that the sole and exclusive right to make regulations relating to the fisheries is vested in the Dominion. That is our contention. We have taken the opinion of the Justice Department on it once or twice, and we have no reasonable doubt as to the righteousness and legality of the ground we stand upon in that regard. But there has been more or less friction. We pointed out to the Ontario government that in an Act which they passed on the subject, one or two sections went beyond their powers, because in them they took power to pass regulations which we contend is vested exclusively in the Dominion. But generally speaking, I have no complaint at all to make as to the manner in which the Ontario government and their officers administer the regulations which we pass. With certain reservations, I think they are doing fairly well.

Mr. COCHRANE. They get the fees, and you pay the officials.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no ; the hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. They have to pay a very large sum of money for protection. They pay the fishery overseers and guardians.

Mr. COCHRANE. What do you want, then ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want an inspector to report to me whether the regulations are being carried out. A department like the Marine and Fisheries Department has no right to be vested with the exclusive power to make regulations, unless it is posted from time to time with a knowledge of those conditions, and their modification from time to time, which should be known to the man who makes the regulations.

Mr. INGRAM. What I want to know is whether the Ontario government are willing to recognize the Dominion authorities. Is it the policy of the Ontario government to deplete the fisheries they own in the rivers and lakes ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think their policy is to protect them.

Mr. INGRAM. If that is true, and if they endorse the regulations passed by the Dominion government, what is the necessity of their having inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not sure that they will carry that out. The industry is too vast and important and valuable, and the responsibility on my shoulders as Minister of Marine and Fisheries is too great, for me to ignore. Nor would this House justify me if I sat back and ignored my responsibility by saying that inasmuch as the proceeds of the fisheries go to the Ontario government I would do nothing to protect them.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that the Ontario officials are in no sense answerable to the inspectors appointed by the Dominion, but are solely answerable to the province. Let us suppose that they disregard in a large measure the faithful carrying out of the regulations made exclusively by the Dominion ; then, what recourse has the hon. gentleman ? One word more. I quite understand that if the provincial government pass supplementary regulations, the hon. gentleman would have his remedy by disallowing so much of those regulations as conflicted with the authorities of the Dominion. But I would suppose a set of officers who would be wholly unanswerable to the hon. gentleman's inspectors for the faithful carrying out of his regulations, and I ask him what his recourse would be ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The one recourse, if the provincial officers refused to enforce the regulations, would be to appoint officers of our own to enforce them.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman power to do that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, yes ; and so far as the breaches of the regulations come to the knowledge of any of our inspectors, it is part of their duty to punish the wrong-doer.

Mr. INGRAM. The regulations involve the fixing of close seasons ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. The Dominion government have the right to say what shall be the close season ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The exclusive right.

Mr. INGRAM. The fishermen may differ as to the time that ought to be fixed for the close season ; and suppose the inspector of this government found that in a certain district the fishermen were not carrying out the regulations of the Dominion government in that respect. The local inspector takes no action. Has the Dominion inspector authority to have an investigation ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, full power.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose the inspector of the Ontario government is found to be negligent, what authority has this government over him ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has no authority over him ; but I would report to his government. But the wrong-doer himself who transgressed our regulations would be summoned and punished by our inspector.

Mr. INGRAM. In case an inspector of the Ontario government were receiving money and not returning it to the Ontario government, I suppose you would have nothing to do with that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing whatever.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The passage of the decision which I have reference to is not long, and I would like to bring it to the attention of the minister, because it underlay what I suggested—that these regulations under which the license fee was charged, were passed as regulations, and not for the purpose of retaining any money. Passing to the question of fishery and fishery rights :

Mr. CLANCY.

Their lordships are of opinion that the 91st section of the British North America Act did not convey to the Dominion of Canada any proprietary rights in relation to fisheries. Their lordships have already noticed the distinction which must be borne in mind between rights of property and legislative jurisdiction. It was the latter only which was conferred under the heading, 'Sea Coast and Inland Fisheries,' in s. 91. Whatever proprietary rights in relation to fisheries were previously vested in private individuals or in the provinces respectively, remains untouched by that enactment. Whatever rights might previously have been lawfully made by the provinces in virtue of their proprietary rights could lawfully be made after that enactment came into force. At the same time, it must be remembered that the power to legislate in relation to fisheries does necessarily, to a certain extent, enable the legislature so empowered to affect proprietary rights. An enactment, for example, prescribing the time of the year during which fishing is to be allowed, or the instruments which may be employed for the purpose (which it was admitted the Dominion legislature was empowered to pass) might very seriously touch the exercise of proprietary rights, and the extent, character and scope of such legislation is left entirely to the Dominion legislature. The suggestion that the power might be abused so as to amount to a practical confiscation of property, does not warrant the imposition by the courts of any limit upon the absolute power of legislation conferred. The supreme legislative power in relation to any subject-matter is always capable of abuse, but it is not to be assumed that it will be improperly used.

That was brought out much more strongly in the argument on the interruption of the counsel, when Lord Herschell made an observation directly on the illustration which counsel was making on the basis of that license system.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As a matter of policy, we have not attempted to issue general licenses.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I understand the hon. gentleman, he has no advice from the Department of Justice that it would not be possible for this government to issue licenses. It seems to me the language of the Judicial Committee would indicate that you might issue licenses. 'Fishing regulations and restriction are within the province of the Dominion, inasmuch as the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends to sea coasts and Atlantic fisheries.' In the well-known case of the city of Toronto vs. Virgo, it was held that the by-law in question was ultra vires, because it destroyed the trade or right which it purported to regulate. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that regulation could only be consistent with the continued existence of that which is to be regulated. Here you have the power to regulate, why not exercise it by means of licenses as well as anything else ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We might do that and possibly charge for the licenses too, but I would draw a distinction between a general license to fish and a license to fish in a particular locality. The latter would be a matter affecting the proprietary right. For instance, if we should divide off from the shore a certain location, A to Z, and give a license to fish in that location, that would amount to a lease, and should come from the province alone. A general license we might issue, saying that nobody shall fish in the province unless he has a Dominion license, but as a matter of policy we have not adopted that system.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. My hon. friend has said that the Dominion government has given up all claims for the revenue from licenses in the province of Ontario. Why have they not done so in the province of British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is a broad distinction between the two. The reason on which the judgment of the Privy Council was based is that the proprietary rights in the fisheries belong to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, inasmuch as the beds of the rivers and lakes are the property of the provinces.

In the maritime provinces, the question whether the bed of the sea, from low water mark, to the three-mile limit, belongs to the province as a proprietary right, or whether the Dominion has proprietary jurisdiction over it, is a question not absolutely determined. I have frequently expressed my opinion that the Dominion has the right over the sea coast fisheries and that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec have the right only to the inland fisheries, because they own the beds of the lakes and rivers.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. A large number of the licenses collected by the Dominion in British Columbia are licenses to fish in the rivers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not many, but there are some, and an adjustment is being made in the accounts between the province and the Dominion in that regard. I had a lengthy interview with the premier of British Columbia on the matter. I admit that if I were to give exclusive leases of any part of a river and charge for them, the fees would belong to the province ; but if I give a general license to fish and make a regulation that nobody shall fish without that license, that is within my power.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. My hon. friend said some time ago that he would have to make a larger expenditure in British Columbia than he has done in the past. To strengthen his hands with his colleagues, and especially with the hon. the Finance Minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding), of whom he seems to be afraid——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no, you will find the Finance Minister very generous.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Let me draw attention to some figures I have just taken out of the Auditor General's Report. In Ontario the revenue was $794, and the Dominion government expended there $3,704. In Quebec the revenue collected amounted to $2,563, and the expenditure was $5,549, or the expenditure doubled the revenue. In Nova Scotia the revenue was $5,494, and the expenditure $27,461, or there was five times greater expenditure in Nova Scotia than revenue collected. In New Brunswick the revenue was $12,015 and the expenditure $21,459—or the expenditure nearly doubled the revenue. But in British Columbia where the revenue was $53,195, the expenditure was only $13,662, or the expenditure in that province was only one-fourth of what the government received. The revenue collected from British Columbia was four times more than that collected from New Brunswick, and yet the expenditure in New Brunswick was one and three-quarter times that expended in British Columbia. And while the revenue from British Columbia was more than ten times that of Nova Scotia, Nova Scotia had twice as much expended in that province as British Columbia. Those figures show that British Columbia once more came out at the small end of the horn, and I trust that the hon. minister will take those figures into consideration and establish more fish hatcheries in British Columbia and appoint more overseers to look after the lakes and the rivers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I appreciate a great deal of what my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Prior) has said. He will find that the expenditure for the current year is much larger.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. It is the same old thing. Always promising.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, the hon. gentleman will find that the expenditure is larger, and it will necessarily and properly continue to increase.

Mr. HACKETT. I notice a great increase in the expenditure for the protection of fisheries in Prince Edward Island within the last few years. In 1895-6 the expenditure was $3,555, and in 1899, it was $7,264, an increase of one hundred per cent in four years. Will the hon. minister tell us what changes have taken place in Prince Edward Island to warrant such an increase ? I know of none. The fisheries are no better protected than they were. We have had a number of by-elections, it is true and several defeated candidates—and that is the only way I can account for it. Last October, when I was going about soliciting the votes of the people, I went down to Richmond Bay where the oyster beds are, and I found there a regular swarm of men paid by the government, the object being, no doubt, to elect the government candidate. The fishermen were being watched as closely as if they were preparing to steal something that belonged to the government. The object was to secure support for the government, but it did not have that effect. The time when the fishing is going on is not the time to protect the fisheries. The time when watchfulness should be used is during the spawning season. But, when the men are fishing, do not put on a force of camp followers to watch them at their work every day. As I have said, the hon. minister is losing prestige among the fishermen by using the men in this way. Merely that he may hand over the loaves and fishes of government patronage to the men who were wandering in the wilderness for eighteen years hungering for the flesh pots of office. This may be a growing time, but the day may come when the government will require every dollar they are now throwing away in this reckless manner. I had the honour to be inspector of fisheries for Prince Edward Island for a number of years. In 1895 I found the amount placed at my disposal quite sufficient to protect the fisheries. Since then, as I say, the expenditure has increased a hundred per cent and it has been increased for a corrupt purpose, to influence the electors.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett) knows, and as every hon. gentleman knows, it is not a very popular thing to enforce fishery or any other regulations, and, in the attempt to enforce properly the regulations of the department and preserve the great fishing industries of the people, an officer or a minister will not gain, but will lose popularity. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that I have not gained in popularity in my native province, but have lost. But I should be recreant to my duty if I allowed men to break the regulations I have sworn to carry out. The increase of expenditure has been made in an honest effort to protect the lobster and other fisheries. I know it is very unpopular, but I intend to do it, as I have done it in the past.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one point respecting this fishery expenditure to which I wish to call attention. In the report of the Auditor General with respect to overseers or wardens appear sums such as these: Salary 9 months, $45 ; travel, $294.05; salary 9 months, $75, travel $264.49 ; salary 9 months, $75, travel $782.56. It seems to me that the salary is very small in proportion to the travel. There seems to be very little bread, to a monstrous deal of sack in this case. When a man travels to the extent of $782, it seems to me he should be paid more than $75 for it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is very difficult to explain to the hon. gentleman this apparent annomaly, but it is all right. A man is paid a certain sum as guardian or overseer of a certain district. If he sits at home and does nothing, he might as well not have been appointed. If his district is a large one he should travel long distances. He must keep a record of all the travelling he does, where to, and the number of miles. He must make a return, and this is checked by the officers of the department. A man cannot be expected, for $50 a year, to take his horse and carriage out or to travel by rail or boat at his own expense. Therefore, the department allows so much a mile for travelling fees. The law allows payment only for mileage actually travelled bona fide in the discharge of the duties of the office. The question is whether we have a good check upon these returns, and the officers in the department think we have.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The $50 or $75 is in the nature of a retainer then, and the other represents not actual expenses but a mileage allowance really part of the salary ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the minister had any complaints from his inspectors that the Ontario officials have failed to carry out their duties in enforcing the regulations ? If not, the only reason for the expenditure for inspectors is the burning zeal of the hon. minister to carry out a duty that is already well discharged by those who have the greatest interest in discharging it faithfully. If he is prepared to say that cases have come to his notice, that might be a reason, and if he is prepared to say further that he has taken means to remedy the evil complained of, that would be a reason ; but, if the hon. gentleman is not prepared to make a statement of that kind, then, I submit, they are absolutely of no use, and there is no reason for retaining the inspectors to do work that is being well done simply because it is in the interest of the province to do so.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can only tell my hon. friend that he must have failed to follow the statement that I made before, that is, the absolute necessity of retaining some officials in the great province of Ontario to keep the department informed as how their regulations are observed. The hon. gentleman sees it is not a matter of whether the officials of the Ontario government carry out their duties to their superiors that I am concerned with ; they may collect their fees or they may not, they may issue licenses properly or they may not, that is not the point that I am concerned with. The point I am concerned with is this : Are the regulations that this department makes from time to time the proper regulations and, secondly, if they are, how are they observed by the fishermen ? Now, I must have somebody to inform me from time to time whether those regulations which are made by the department as to times, and seasons, and methods of fishing, are proper regulations or whether they should be amended. It is not the duty of the Ontario officials to do that, and if I have not got an official there to do it, it will not be done at all. These officials make reports from week to week, not how the Ontario officials discharge their duties, but how the Ontario fishermen observe our regulations, and whether those regulations are right or whether they ought to be amended. From time to time we receive our information from our inspectors, which we transmit to the Ontario officials for their information, and, therefore, we keep in touch one with the other. It is not our fault if these apparent anomalies exist between the powers of the Ontario government and the powers of the Dominion government ; the Privy Council is responsible for that, for its declaration of what we formerly supposed was not the law. So, I say, it would not be good policy on the part of this government to withdraw altogether from the great province of Ontario the presence of two or three officials, who travel about from week to week and fortnight to fortnight to keep the department here informed as to whether our regulations are good and proper, and whether they are being properly observed. Now, if I found out from the reports of my inspectors that these regulations were not being observed, it would become my duty to appoint officers to enforce them. It is part of the duty of these inspectors to enforce them if they come face to face with any breach of them. On view they could convict and punish any offender against the regulations, and it is their duty to do so ; and if they fail to do so we must appoint others to do it, in case it is reported to us that breaches become numerous. So far we have no material grounds of complaint. Of course complaints are always coming in, being investigated, and disposed of ; and, speaking generally, we are getting along fairly well. There must be some friction existing between the Ontario government and the Dominion government, each not being quite sure where the line of their duty ends and where the duty of the other begins. However, this will adjust itself, it is adjusting itself now from season to season. I think my hon. friend would be well advised not to ask us to withdraw the only officials we have there, but to ask us to keep down the expenditure to the lowest possible notch.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend has still failed to make out his case, as it seems to me. The hon. gentleman bases his case principally upon the fact that he is anxious to know how these regulations act upon the fisheries of the respective provinces. Now, if it is conceded that the hon. gentleman has a right to make the regulations regarding provincial fisheries, it is a fair presumption that he makes them in the best interests of those fisheries, and in the best interests of those who are solely concerned. If that be true, is it not also a fair presumption that if they are not working well, representation will be made to the hon. gentleman's department by the provincial officers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I do not think so.

Mr. CLANCY. It is the most natural thing that if these fishery regulations are harsh and are not working well, the parties concerned will inform the hon. gentleman. He does not require a set of inspectors to inform him if these fishery regulations are not working well and require amendments. I can understand that if a set of regulations made, not in the interest of the Dominion, but in the interest of the provinces, were found to work contrary to the anticipation of those who made the regulations, representation would be made to the department at once. The true test is the fishery officials in the province, and not the inspectors over the inspectors, as the hon. gentleman has them. The provincial officials are better judges, as they report to their principals whether those regulations are working well or not. The province will always communicate to the Dominion in matters of that kind, especially since the hon. gentleman says that they always keep in touch in regard to these matters.

Mr. SPROULE. What objection would there be to imposing those duties upon provincial inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have no power to do so. I would rather be relieved of the necessity of appointing an army of these provincial officials.

Building and maintenance of fish-breeding establishments and lobster hatcheries $50,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is the policy of the government with regard to these fish hatcheries now, since the fisheries are given over to the provinces ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have made no change, we have determined to carry on the fish hatcheries. There is a slight increase here in the amount asked for maintenance of fish hatcheries in Canada. There will be three new hatcheries, one in Margaree, county of Inverness, Cape Breton, one at Gaspé, and one in Sicamous, Granite Creek, B.C., and a small one at the mouth of the Skeena river, in British Columbia also. The hatchery which as been started at Gaspé is a combined lobster and salmon hatchery. Lobster fisheries are entirely under the control of the Dominion, being a deep-sea fish; and salmon may be considerd, while it is in the river, to be a provincial fish, but in the sea it is a Dominion fish. However, the policy in the Dominion has not been altered in respect of fish hatcheries by reason of the Privy Council decision. We have gone on, at all events, and parliament seems very generally to have approved of the fishery expenditure. I think it is money well spent. A large number of those engaged in the lobster fisheries believe that a large number of the small lobsters, innumerable almost, three, four and five inches in size are the result of the Pictou lobster hatcheries. Whether it is so or not, I cannot positively assert, but their presence in very large numbers within a reasonable area from the place where the spawn are deposited by the fish hatchery officer leads to the reasonable conclusion that they are the product of the fish hatchery. Taking it all in all, I think the money is well spent, and unless there is a very strong opinion expressed in parliament against the continuance of the expenditure, I should be disposed to advise its continuance.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to the expenditure; I am only asking whether it is the policy of the government, in view of their abandoning their rights in the fisheries, to continue this work. I approve of this policy, and I want to ask the hon. minister if he would not do justice by establishing one or two more hatcheries in Ontario. There are three in New Brunswick, three in Quebec, and he is asking——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Three in New Brunswick?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes. There is one at Miramichi, one at Newcastle and one at Restigouche.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, you are wrong.

Mr. SPROULE. They are here in the Auditor General's Report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perhaps you are right; I am surprised.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to ask that the Georgian Bay, where the great supply of ova of whitefish and salmon trout for the fish hatcheries of the Dominion is obtained, should be provided with a fish hatchery. There is no fish hatchery on the Georgian Bay at all, right in the locality that supplies the ova for these hatcheries. These waters are being depleted from year to year. A few years ago, I brought this question to the attention of the late government, and I also brought it to the attention of the present government. I regret that I was unable to induce them to establish some hatcheries in that part of the country. It is very important to the people living in that locality, not only to the fishermen, but to those who use the fish, that those waters should be kept as well supplied with fish fry as possible. There are plenty of suitable localities for these hatcheries. I am not objecting to the expenditure at all, but rather approving of it, and I am asking the hon. gentleman to go farther and to do a little more than has been done in the past.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter was brought to my attention a couple of years ago. I think Wiarton was the location suggested where a fish hatchery could with advantage be built. I am not sure it was Wiarton, but I think it was.

Mr. SPROULE. There was Wiarton and also Beaver river valley. The Beaver river empties into the Georgian Bay at Thornbury.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How far is that from Wiarton?

Mr. SPROULE. It is forty or fifty miles.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At the time the matter was presented to me, I was favourably impressed with the suggestion. I think the original location of a hatchery at Newcastle was a mistake, but there were special circumstances arising out of Mr. Wilmot's connection with fish hatching, which I think induced the department to establish a hatchery there. There is no doubt, that it is not a proper site for a fish hatchery. The whitefish hatchery at Sandwich is all right. There is a good deal in the arguments advanced by those who believe that a fish hatchery should be established for the Georgian Bay portion of the Dominion. I have not given it lately very much consideration, but I was very favourably impressed by the representations made. I promise my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) to take it up anew at an early date.

Fisheries protection service, including maintenance of new vessels in British Columbia $120,000

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase of $20,000. What is the explanation?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows that we called for tenders for the construction of a new steamer there; we anticipate she will be ready, and if she is ready, $20,000 will be required for her maintenance.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. As a matter of fact you have let contracts for two vessels.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One is for a small vessel which is more for the protection of the fisheries at the mouth of the Fraser river than anything else, but the large one will be for the protection of the deep sea waters of British Columbia. We are taking a vote of $20,000 for the maintenance of this vessel.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he has done anything in regard to sending out some black bass to British Columbia. I have been urging this upon his attention for three years.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There has nothing been done yet, but I am putting the Commissioner of Fisheries under bonds that they will be forwarded at the very first opportunity after he gets the ova.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Is it not a fact that the department have had some ponds where they have been breeding this ova ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES, Yes.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Has it not been a success ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, I believe it is a success. I saw a letter addressed by the Commissioner of Fisheries to a gentleman in British Columbia, saying that they were being sent forward.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I have had to ask for this for three years.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I tell the hon. gentleman that I will put the commissioner under bonds to do this.

Legal and incidental expenses $2,000

Mr. INGRAM. Explain.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is an item which is taken every year to provide in case there is any litigation. Seven hundred dollars was spent last year. Wo do not expend any more than is necessary. I am very economical in that regard.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. After the election.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Before and after. I am afraid my professional friends think I am too economical.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice an item in the Auditor General's Report : Hon. Edward Blake, legal expenses, $2,452. It is an advance.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have had for years an arbitration pending between the British government and the Russian government in respect to the seizure of certain Canadian sealing ships in Alaskan waters. We have for a long time been trying to arrive at a basis of arbitration. We think we have at last succeeded in agreeing upon a form of reference. We were instructed by the Home Office to retain counsel. We retained Mr. Blake and made up a brief for him. He accepted the retainer and entered upon his work. He has done some work and been paid, not by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but, by the Department of Justice. It arises out of these Behring Sea sealing claims.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman any idea what the total is going to be ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I could not tell that, it is a large international arbitration.

Canadian fishery exhibit $2,000

Mr. SPROULE. Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is at the corner of O'Connor and Queen streets.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for exhibition at home or for some exhibition abroad ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A great many of the exhibits were sent over to Paris. There is no increase in the vote, but during the coming year, the department intends to put in new specimens. About 20,000 people visited that exhibit last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the minister carrying on a hatchery there ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is the finest fishery exhibit in the world.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and we are going to improve it this year, by the introduction of new specimens.

Oyster culture $7,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is this money expended ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In different parts of the maritime provinces. Next year the work will consist in examining the oyster beds already planted. There has been a large area planted in Murray Harbour, P.E.I., and a very successful bed planted in the harbour of Shediac. The oysters taken off the latter bed brought $3.50 a barrel to the fishermen at the wharf. They were remarkably fine, and made a very favourable impression on those who were lucky enough to eat them. Mr. Kent hopes to spend the greater part of the present year in inspecting the beds already planted. The Caraquette beds will be thoroughly looked after. Mr. Kent has to hire a tug anad incur other expenses. He is examining Buctouche to see if there are any beds there that can be planted.

To assist in the establishment, maintenance and inspection of cold storage for bait for deep-sea fishermen, under conditions to be fixed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries $25,000

Mr. CLANCY. Is that service still being carried on ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Who is at the head of it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am happy to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) that Mr. Fraser, the engineer, who has the control of this service has sent me a memorandum, and as the subject is somewhat new, I trust the Committee will pardon me if I shall read it. Mr. Fraser's memorandum is as follows :—

RE COLD STORAGE FOR BAIT FOR DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

The following Bait Freezers were operated during the season of 1900 :—

Freezer.	County.	Province.	Nominal capacity.	No. of tons bait frozen.	Bonus earned.
			Tons.		$ cts.
Ballentyne's Cove	Antigonish	N.S.	20	14	70 00
Frog Pond	Prince	P.E.I.	20	23	100 00
Alberton	"	"	30	10	50 00
Port Hood I.	Inverness	N.S.	20
Neil's Harbour	Victoria	"	20
				47	220 00

RESULTS OBTAINED FROM FREEZING.

Ballentyne's Cove, N.S.—Commenced operations on April 25, 1899, and fourteen tons herring were frozen and stored. The fresh bait season was exceptionally good, better than for many years past. Mackered struck in early and provided an excellent supply of bait. In consequence, the fishermen did not require the frozen supply. Owing to neglect to ice the storage room frequently enough, two tons of herrings were spoiled. The charge was ultimately converted to other uses. The presence of the freezer was, however, a guarantee that bait would at all times be available. This freezer will be operated by the fishermen during the coming season.

Frog Pond, P.E.I.—Commenced operations in April, 1900, and has proved a great boon to this fishing settlement. The president of this association, writing about the middle of the past fishing season, states : 'I am buying most or nearly all of the codfish caught in this vicinity, and am keeping a record of the kind of bait they were caught with. Our fish books show over one-half our total catch has been caught with frozen bait. Furthermore, were it not for the constant supply of bait insured to the fishermen by the bait freezer, not one-half as many people would engage in the busines for the simple reason that it would not pay the men to engage in this business without the certainty of a constant and sure supply of bait. I feel quite certain that we are on the eve of a new era in the codfishing business around our shores since the inauguration of the fishermen's bait associations.'

At the conclusion of the fishing season, in sending in the annual report of the Frog Pond feezer for 1900, Mr. Larkin, the president, further writes :

Permit me now, at the close of our season's business, to enumerate or place before you some of the benefits derived by our people from having a constant supply of fresh bait. Last year (1899) our cove, with the same number of boats and men engaged in hand and 'set' lining, took some 95,000 pounds codfish, hake and haddock. During this season the weather was fine ; we had very few mackerel along our shores, and so the men devoted the greater part of their time to the pursuit of codfish, hake and haddock. A great deal of time was lost trying to procure a supply of bait. During this season (1900) our men in this cove have landed about 210,000 pounds codfish, hake and haddock; 9-10ths of all those fish were caught with frozen bait. Men who in the first season had not any great faith in frozen bait, kept some nets out; sometimes they got a baiting, sometimes only part of a baiting. Those people tested the matter thoroughly, and so satisfied did they become with the frozen bait that they took their nets ashore. We have some very practical and observant fishermen in our cove, and they declare that so long as a supply of frozen bait is to be had they will not set any nets during codfishing season, the supply of bait from nets, they say, is no better when had. Again, there is no certainty of obtaining bait every fine day.

I might say just here that we had twelve shares of stock unsold when we met on the 22nd. During the meeting we offered them for sale ; within two minutes they were all taken—taken by fishermen who had a share each before. This will give you some idea of the faith and estimation which our fishermen have of frozen bait, and the benefits derivable therefrom.

You will observe on looking over the sheets where a record of bait taken and issued appears that our fishermen knocked off fishing early this year. The reason for this is that this has been an unusually stormy season. In all my experience I have never known anything like it. With weather such as we had last year (1899) we would have certainly doubled our catch. Another cause for more fish, codfish, &c., not being taken was that in the month of July and the early part of August mackerel struck in quite plentiful ; our men paid considerable attention to that branch of fishing at the expense of the other.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

I may say for myself that I am more than ever convinced of the benefits derivable from having a bait freezer in our midst.

Alberton, P.E.I.—Commenced operations in May, 1900 ; ten tons of fish were frozen. The directors did not provide sufficient ice to carry the charge until fall, when the Caraquette fleet from New Brunswick make Tignish and Alberton their headquarters. In consequence, no decisive results were obtained. Used locally, the bait gave satisfaction.

Port Hood Island, C.B.—This freezer was finished in October, 1900, and a supply of ice being available, a test charge of one and one-half tons of squid were frozen and used in December. The secretary of this association writs :

'We had our freezer completed about November 20, 1900. As we had some ice left over from last year, we transferred it to the new ice-house, and commenced freezing squid. We froze about 3,000 pounds on trays and in crates and kept them for future use ; the result was that after the middle of December there was no bait on the fishing ground, and the fishermen were glad to use bait from the freezer.

'Some boats caught over $100 worth of fish, using frozen bait, which they would not have caught if they had not bait from the freezer. One fisherman states that he earned his three shares in the freezer on New Year's Day, over and above his neighbours who baited on salt squid, fishing on the same ground and with more trawls than he had ; all were expert fishermen.

'The fishermen here were always doubtful about the value of frozen bait; now they are very favourably inclined towards our freezer, and expect great benefit from it next season. I also have frozen a quantity of haddock and codfish, and expect to supply fresh fish to Port Hood and vicinity during March and April.'

Neil's Harbour, Victoria County, C.B.—A freezer was built at this point by private enterprise from the department's plans, and was not under the supervision of the department's inspectors. Mr. M. G. McLeod, who was principally interested, writes : 'Our Neil's Harbour cold storage did not prove a success owing to the ignorance and carelessness of our men. A lot of squid was packed in it, but in such large quantities that they got red before they froze. Had the squid been properly frozen they would have been worth at least 1,500 quintals of codfish to us.

'When we will get the Neil's Harbour storage to work well, it is sure to pay, and possibly better than any other cold storage in the province of Nova Scotia. It was not the fault of the cold storage that the squid did not keep well. The storage, I believe, is all right, and with some experience, will be worth thousands a year to our fishermen and ourselves. If the squid had kept in our storage last fall we would have more codfish stored away for winter than we could handle for drying next spring. Next year I hope we will be able to give a good report.'

In the report of the Fisheries Intelligence Bureau, under the direction of Commander O. G. V. Spain, for 1900, Messrs. A. N. Whitman & Sons, of Canso, N.S., remark : 'The laudable efforts of the Dominion government to establish bait freezers along the coasts are meeting with gratifying success, and it looks as though in a few years every fishing port of any importance would be supplied with one. Properly managed, they must materially add to the catch of fish.'

The following is a list of the freezers completed, under construction or arranged for up to February 15, 1901, together with data as to cost and capacity :

The inspector in charge of the work has received communications from other points than those mentioned above, and it is expected that at least twenty bait freezers will be in operation during the season of 1901, and that if the success attending the operation is such as is anticipated from past results, a large number of new applications will be received.

J. F. FRASER.

Ottawa, February 16, 1901.

I thought I could not do better than just read to the House the memorandum which the engineer himself wrote, giving this information.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understood that correctly, the government pays half the cost of these establishments ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, where they are built under inspection, at the completion of the work.

Mr. CLANCY. Some discussion on this subject took place last year. The ground of the objection taken then was that this measure interfered with private enterprise which would supply the want now supplied by the government. That is a very rosy report ; and if everything in it is true, there would seem to be no necessity for the government bearing any share of the cost of this undertaking. Another feature that was discussed—I am not attempting to criticise, but merely to state the objection raised in the former debate—was that this bait was sold to American as well as Canadian fishermen. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if that is true, and if so, do the government feel bound to take the place of private enterprise in order to furnish bait to American fishermen ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman will remember my stating last year that the greatest possible care would be taken not to interfere with commercial enterprise. In Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island there are many places where the fishermen congregate in fishing villages, and where there is no great inducement to prompt commercial men to undertake the establishment of freezers. Most of these will be built for the benefit of the fishermen themselves. Few, if any, will enter into competition with the bait freezers established by such men as the Whitman Bros., for commercial purposes ; and I may say that the enterprise which the government have entered into has the warmest encouragement and support from such men as these. It cannot do other than increase largely the supply of fresh fish. I know of nothing which this government have put their hands to on a small scale calculated to produce better results than the assistance we have given to the bait freezers. Everywhere it is appreciated, and everywhere it is doing good. Of course, there are cases in which the licensed American fishermen may purchase bait, where the bait freezers choose voluntarily to sell it to them; but the unlicensed American fishermen cannot buy bait from the bait freezers or from any one else. Therefore, to the extent to which the licensed American fishermen could buy bait, it would be rather harsh, I take it, on our part to intervene and say we ought not to sell it to them.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not putting the objection on that ground, but on the ground of public enterprise supplying what might be supplied by private enterprise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As a rule, I think the bait freezers will supply the bait to the fishermen who are the shareholders in the association itself. Occasionally they may have a surplus to sell to the ships, and in some cases they may sell to licensed American fishermen ; but that will be a very small proportion of the total amount.

Mr. SPROULE. Since the hon. gentleman has adopted the principle of supplying cold storage for the benefit of the fishermen, I hope he will press on his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), the necessity of granting an equally large subsidy for the supply of cold storage to the farmers of the country.

Mr. KENDALL. I take this opportunity of placing before the members of the House, particularly the members from the west, the importance of this industry which the government are endeavouring to foster in this way. The line fishermen of the maritime provinces number about 20,000, and the annual catch of fish known as line-fish amounts to about $8,000,000. We have altogether about 45,000 fishermen in the maritime provinces, who, it is estimated lose from thirty to sixty days each in the season for want of a constant supply of fresh bait. The aggregate loss of the fishermen of the maritime provinces on this account amounts altogether to 800,000 to 1,000,000 days of fishing in the year. The fishing industry is our second most important industry. Agriculture, poor as it is with us, is still our first industry. We hear a great deal of our lumber and mining industries in the east; but our fishing industry is far in advance of these in importance, I think more than equal to both combined. So that the House can readily understand that to make provision for overcoming so great a loss as 800,000 or 1,000,000 days of fishing is a matter of vital importance to the maritime provinces. We hear it frequently stated that the fishing population along our coasts is becoming depleted. I believe it is a fact that for years past the industry has been unremunerative. At the same time, our fishermen are large consumers, and very heavy contributors to the revenues. They use large quantities of imported goods and manufactured goods from the west, and their return from their catch of fish has to depend not on any benefit which the government can give them. They have to send their fish to the West Indies, to South America, to Brazil, and to the Mediterranean, in competition with the fish of the whole world. For these reasons the government were urged, some eighteen months ago, to take this step. We recognized that a cold storage system had been established for the benefit of the farmers of the western provinces and the province of Quebec, not only on shore but on sea—a cold storage system virtually extending from their farms to the consumers' tables in the old country; and we urged that something in the same direction should be done for the fishermen. I happen to have been the promoter of this scheme, and I am entirely gratified at the success which it has achieved in so short a time. If hon. members will give it their support, we will not require a great appropriation to establish a pretty effective system all around the coast, from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the mouth of the St. Croix river. Perhaps from 100 to 110 small freezers will meet the requirements. A considerable number of gentlemen in the maritime provinces, who are well acquainted with the fishing industry, feel sure that this measure will enable our fishermen to realize anywhere from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 per annum more than they do at present. We expect also to establish a better class of cold storage cars, so that we may send our fish in good condition from the maritime provinces to the west, even as far as Chicago.

To-day we have not in Canada a cold storage car equal in construction to many used by the Swift and Armour firms in carrying their freight from Chicago to Portland and Boston. I may say that the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) has employed the expert who made these cars in the western states, to construct two at Moncton on the same plan. What we want is a car that will carry fish, apples and other perishable products without freezing them, and to-day we have not got in Canada a first-class cold storage car.

We may look forward soon to the time when the western part of our country will be populated to a far greater extent than it now is, and furnish a great market for fish, more particularly as the fish of the great lakes, in all probability, will not hold out. We have in our fishermen a large consuming population who are adding to the wealth of the country and contributing very largely to its revenue, and I ask gentlemen from the west, in particular, to take this matter up and give it their best consideration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask the hon. gentleman whether there is any probability of these establishments being built as commercial enterprises which will be self-sustaining.

Mr. KENDALL. I know of three that are to be put up by fish merchants and fishermen, who do not want to be hampered by the restrictions imposed by the government, and I have no doubt quite a number will be put up as commercial enterprises.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the larger districts, that is likely to be the case, but in the smaller I suppose government aid will be required for some time to come.

Mr. CLANCY. It is proposed to give government aid every year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We give a small bonus each year for three years, determined on the quantity of bait in the freezers.

Mr. CLANCY. And after three years the bonus ceases.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice, under the heading of lighthouse and coast service, appropriations not required for 1901-2, $60,000, and also under the heading of fisheries appropriations not required for 1901-2, $78,-790. I would like to have some explanation of these two items amounting to $139,-000. Were these voted for election purposes, and then not required ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend must not imagine that I am animated by such unworthy motives. Nothing but the highest motives directed us to ask this money from the representatives of the people, and political motives had nothing to do with it.

To meet expenses in connection with the superintendent of insurance service, including $2,300 to A. K. Blakadar, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $9,300

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the usual appropriation for the insurance branch of the Finance Department. The appropriation covers the statutory increase of $50, and an increase of $150 in the case of one officer whose services are appreciated. All these expenses are only a nominal charge on the Dominion, as they are entirely repaid from levies made, under the Insurance Act, on insurance companies.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is the $200 increase to Mr. Blakadar ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, $150 above the usual statutory increase.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 25, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS—NORTH BRUCE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the Hon. Sir John Boyd and the Hon. Mr. Justice Street, two of the judges selected for the trial of elections petitions, pursuant to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, a certificate relating to the electoral district of the North Riding of the County of Bruce, in the province of Ontario, by which the election for the said electoral district has been declared void.

In conformity with chapter 9, section 46 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, I have issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 15) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

He said: The object of the Bill is to prevent as far as possible a new sort of intimidation for the purpose of forcing workingmen to vote for a candidate not of their choice. This intimidation consists in telling these men that the Dominion ballot is not a secret ballot. Marked instances of this occurred during the recent election. I am not going to say it was confined to one side more than another, although I am only aware of instances on the one side, but this intimidation may be used on either side. The object of the Bill is to punish by fine or imprisonment any one who declares that the Dominion ballot or mode of voting is not secret. In the Dominion Elections Act, there is provision against a somewhat analogous proceeding, namely, the circulating of a rumour that a candidate has withdrawn from the field. The person circulating such a statement, and knowing it to be false, is liable to be punished. It may be said that everybody knows that the Dominion ballot is secret. Every person who has looked well into the matter knows that; but I venture to say that more than 90 per cent of the electorate of Canada depend upon what they are told with regard to this subject. But on one side they are told that it is a secret ballot, and on the other that it is not. What, then, will the workingman be likely to do ? He will take the course best calculated to protect his own position, and will not expose himself to the chances of dismissal or other punishment that may be visited upon him for having voted as he thinks right. I venture to think that this Bill will commend itself to both sides of the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DRAINAGE ACROSS RAILWAYS.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 16) to amend the Railway Act in respect to drainage across the lands of railway companies. He said: The object of this Bill is to give farmers and others who own land alongside railways the same privileges as the railway corporations. A Bill to this effect was introduced last session; but it seems that it was so changed in the interest of the railways that it was spoiled in the amending. It is no use to introduce a Bill here, it seems to me, unless it helps all classes alike. I do hope that the government, or other parties who have the power to do it, will see to it that the law is so amended that the farmers will have the same chances as the railway corporations.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I would like to call attention to the fact that the object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robinson, West Elgin) is to amend the Railway Act. There is no such Act as the Dominion Drainage Act. The respective provinces, I suppose—certainly the province of Ontario—have their drainage Acts. I simply point out this formal mistake that the hon. gentleman may not fail in his Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LAND GRANT.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 17) respecting the land grant of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The PRIME MINISTER. Explain.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). The Bill is practically the same as the Bill I introduced last session, and which I was unable to bring before the notice of the House because the order of Public Bills and Orders was only reached, according to my recollection, once during the entire session. The hon. member who was going to second my Bill was not present, and I was not able to get the Bill before the House. However, I introduced a resolution with regard to it, which resolution failed to carry. I am in hopes, however, that as the Bill is introduced at this early stage of the session, it will have the fullest and freest discussion. The explanation of the Bill is this : When the Canadian Pacific Railway agreement was made in 1881, as hon. gentlemen are aware, in addition to vast cash subsidies, we gave that company a land grant of 25,000,000 acres. One clause of the contract provided that the appurtenances of the railway, the rolling stock, the road-bed, &c., should be exempt from taxation for ever, and the land grant be exempt from taxation for twenty years from the grant thereof from the Crown. Some differences of opinion seem to have arisen with regard to the expiration of that twenty-year period. Up to the present time, patents for only a small quantity of this land have been issued to the company ; and when the matter was before parliament last session, the First Minister and the then leader of the opposition took the view that it was a legal question, which could only be settled by reference to the courts, whether the exemption from taxation should expire in twenty years from the date of the contract. Last session I was able to satisfy the House, I believe, by extracts from the 'Hansard' report of speeches of public men who discussed the contract when it was going through the House, that the clear intention of parliament was that the twenty-year exemption period should expire twenty years from the date of the contract. I take the view that we should not refer the matter to the courts at all. If it was the intention of parliament that the exemption period should date from the time of entering into the contract, and if the people so understood it, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company so understood it, I take it that this parliament should settle that question and avoid any reference to the courts ; because, if we allow it to go as at present, patents not being issued, the company holds its vast land grant exempt from taxation practically in perpetuity. The object of this Bill, which is very brief, is to declare that the clause in the contract be interpreted to mean that the exemption period expired on the 15th of the present month.

Mr. SPEAKER. By whom is this motion seconded ?

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). By the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. SPEAKER. That hon. gentleman is not in the Chamber.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). But he agreed to second it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I will support it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is seconded by Mr. Maclean.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 18) to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. Explain.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). The object of this Bill, in brief, is to make it difficult to effect saw-offs of election protests. I may say that I have been in consultation, with reference to the object of this Bill, with a number of prominent judges on the bench, and the Bill is the result of suggestions made by them. It provides that an affidavit shall be received from the respondent, and the election agents of both sides before the petition is dismissed, and if, in the opinion of the judge, there has been any collusion, he has it in his power to declare that the deposit of $1,000 is forfeited to the public uses of the Dominion.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

VACANCY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg to inform the House that I have received from the Hon. Sir John A. Boyd and the Hon. Mr. Justice Street, two of the judges selected for the trial of election petitions, pursuant to the Controverted Elections Act, a certificate relating to the electoral district of the north riding of the county of Bruce, as follows :—

Election of a member for the House of Commons of Canada for the electoral district of the north riding of the county of Bruce, holden on the 31st day of October and the 7th day of November, A.D. 1900.

Between James Ernest Campbell, petitioner, and Alexander McNeill, respondent.

The undersigned, two of the justices of the High Court of Justice assigned to try the said petition, do hereby certify that on the 25th and 26th days of January, 1901, at the town of Owen Sound, and on the 12th day of February, 1901, at the town of South Hampton, in the county of Bruce, we held a Court for the trial of and there tried the said petition, whereupon we held and determined, after a scrutiny of the ballots and upon evidence given before us, that an equal number of votes had been cast for each candidate, so that neither had been duly elected ; and it further appearing and being proved that a number of votes had been illegally cast and that others were so ambiguous that they could not be counted for either side, whereby such irregularity and errors had occurred as affected the result of the election, we therefore held that the said election was void and ineffectual, and made an order that each party to the said petition should pay his own costs.

In the said petition charges of corrupt practices were made on both sides, but these were not prosecuted before us owing to our determination as to the effect of the scrutiny and irregularity hereinbefore mentioned.

Given at Osgoode Hall, this twenty-second day of February, 1901.

W. P. R. STREET, J.
J. A. BOYD, J.

To the Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons,
Ottawa.

INSPECTION OF GRAIN.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to inquire whether a commission was issued to Mr. David Horn and others, for the purpose of making an inquiry respecting the exportation of grain; and if so, whetner the commission has reported, and whether the report will be brought down at an early date.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Does the hon. gentleman refer to the inquiry made in Montreal, with respect to grain inspection ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have no knowledge of it except some reference that I saw in the public press, stating that such a report had been made; and, accordingly, I desire to know whether that statement is correct, and whether the report will be brought down.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The report has not been submitted yet.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 6) respecting the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters, and to change its name to the Independent Order of Foresters.—Mr. Emmerson.

Bill (No. 7) relating to the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 8) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 12) respecting the London Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Hyman.

QUESTIONS.

CALLING OUT THE MILITIA AT STEVESTON.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. Was the government aware that the local militia were sent to Steveston, British Columbia, in July last ?
2. If so, was the government consulted before the militia were on that occasion called out ?
3. What was the government's position in regard to the calling out of the militia on that occasion ?
4. At whose expense was the militia called out and maintained at Steveston ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden) :

1. Not at the time.
2. No.
3. The Militia Act provides for the calling out of the militia on requisition of the civil authorities in aid of the civil power, and the senior officer of the acting militia in the locality takes action accordingly.
4. When the militia is called out in aid of the civil power, it is at the expense of the municipality. Circumstances in this case were exceptional, and expenses were defrayed by the Militia Department.

ARRIVALS OF CHINESE AND JAPANESE IN CANADA.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. How many Chinese were allowed to land in the province of British Columbia during each month of the year 1900?
2. How many, if any, are known to have left the province during said year ?
3. What was the total amount of poll tax collected during the said year?
4. How many Japanese landed in the said province each month during the same period?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) :

1. The Chinese paying fees landed in the province of British Columbia during the year 1900, were as follows :

January	154
February	253
March	422
April	752
May	634
June	659
July	462
August	317
September	213
October	73
November	129
December	144
Total paying fees	4,212
Entered as exempt during year	26
Chinese entered in transit inwards	1,591
Total number entering province	5,829

2. The total number registered for leave outwards, during the year, 896. Total number registered for leave in transit outwards, 2,220- 3,116.

Large numbers leave the province going east, of which there is no record.

3. Total poll-tax collected during the year, $210,600.

4. Japanese landed in province of British Columbia, during year 1900 :

January	298
February	416
March	933
April	2,556
May	2,666
June	1,547
July	684
August	282
September	28
October	55
November	39
December	14
Total	9,518
Japanese landed in British Columbia as in transit to other Canadian ports	998
Japanese reported as landed in transit to other than Canadian ports	5,481
Total	15,997

It is, however, to be stated that as there is no law requiring any record of Japanese entering or leaving Canada, the above figures cannot be considered as absolutely reliable ; and it is very evident that large numbers of them have been twice reported as entering Canada, first on the arrival of the vessel at Victoria, and again when landing at Vancouver.

MUNICIPAL BONUSES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, I beg to ask the last two paragraphs of question No. 3, as follows :

(a) What total sums have been voted to railways in Canada in bonuses by municipalities, viz.: counties or group of counties, townships or groups of townships, towns and villages?

(b) To what roads were such bonuses granted, and what amount to each?

(c) Have any of these bonuses been repaid by the Dominion parliament, either directly or indirectly?

(d) Is it the intention of the government to refund to such municipalities the bonuses so voted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

(c) One and only one bonus has been repaid by the government, and that was the one repaid in July, 1883, to the corporation of Pembroke. The amount being $85,250.

(d) No such decision has been arrived at.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER FOR CARDWELL.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell) asked :

Has a census commissioner been appointed for the electoral district of Cardwell? If so, upon whose recommendation?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. No appointment has been made.

I.C.R.—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY AT LEVIS.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Monk—asked :

1. Has the government or the Department of Railways and Canals purchased within the past two years any property at or near Lévis, in the province of Quebec?

2. From whom have such properties been purchased?

3. What is the size of each property, respectively?

4. What price has been or is to be paid to each person from whom such property was purchased?

5. In what way was the price fixed or determined?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes, property has been purchased at or near Lévis, within the past two years.

2. Properties have been purchased from the following owners :

Heirs of D. D. Young.
Heirs of William Rhodes.
Estate of Chapleau or Murphy.
Joseph Turgeon.
Joseph, John and Edouard Goulet.

Corporation of Lévis.
Elizabeth Mary Bennett.

3, 4 and 5. Heirs of D. D. Young—10,497 square feet made ground—80 cents per square foot, paid. Price asked by owners and accepted by the department.

Heirs of William Rhodes—11,583 square feet beach ; 45 cents per square foot. Price asked by owners, accepted by department.

Elizabeth Mary Bennett—4,280 square feet land near Hadlow ; $500 considered reasonable price by railway engineer. Offer not yet accepted.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the total amount paid ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not added the total amount up, but there is the number of square feet and the price per square foot. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can add it up.

I. C. R.—PURCHASE OF LOCOMOTIVES.

Mr. HAGGART—by Mr. Monk—asked :

How many locomotives have been purchased by the Department of Railways and Canals or the government from January 1, 1897, up to the present time, for the Intercolonial Railway?

How many passenger cars have been purchased for the Intercolonial Railway from January 1, 1897, up to the present time?

How many freight cars have been purchased for the Intercolonial Railway from January 1, 1897, up to the present time?

Of the total number of locomotives so purchased, how many have been purchased in Canada and how many in the United States, and from what corporations or persons have such locomotives been purchased, and how many from each, and what is the amount or price paid or payable to each such corporation or person for such locomotives?

Of the total number of passenger cars purchased, how many have been purchased in Canada and how many in the United States, and from what corporations or persons have such passenger cars been purchased, and how many from each, and what is the amount or price paid to each such corporation or firm for such passenger cars?

Of the total number of freight cars purchased, how many have been purchased in Canada and how many in the United States, and from what corporations or persons have such freight cars been purchased, and how many from each, and what is the amount or price paid to each such corporation or person for such freight cars ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). There have been no locomotives purchased by the department since the date mentioned, the 1st of January, 1897, though a number of locomotives and cars have been made as the result of tenders being asked for and of contracts entered into, and delivery has taken place. I am having a statement of them prepared which I can furnish, if desired, but there have been none purchased in the ordinary sense.

MONTREAL ELECTORAL LISTS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Have the electoral lists now completed for the city of Montreal been transmitted to Ottawa, to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery?

2. Has the printing of said lists been completed or begun?

3. Will said lists be printed in the Government Printing Bureau?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The amount thus paid is $1,066.66.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin) asked :

Is it the intention of the government to appoint a committee of all the medical men, of both parties, in this House to act with all the medical men of the Senate to inquire into the prevention and cure of tuberculosis and all prevalent diseases of both man and beast, and all other matters in connection with the health of the people of this Dominion?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is not the intention of the government.

2. What is the decision?

3. Has that decision been communicated to the petitioners who sought relief?

4. When was such decision communicated, and by whom?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). No formal answer was given to the parties, but they have been made aware that it is not the intention of the government to assume responsibility for paying the losses of the depositors of the bank.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND THE DOMINION.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Maclean—asked :

Is any correspondence or negotiations taking place between the Imperial and Canadian authorities, or between the Canadian and Newfoundland authorities, looking to the admission of the Island of Newfoundland into the Canadian confederation?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no correspondence. We have not received any overtures from the government of Newfoundland, and the government of Canada have not found it opportune to approach them.

Mr. WALLACE. Has this government made any overture ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have made none and have received none.

THE 24TH DAY OF MAY.

Mr. BRUCE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to ask the House at its present session to pass legislation making the 24th day of May, the birthday of our late gracious Sovereign Queen Victoria, a statutory holiday?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). No tariff change is necessary for the purpose stated in the question. No goods are entitled to the benefit of the preferential tariff unless they are bona fide of British manufacture or the produce of British countries named in the Tariff Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. The Pearl street sub-post office, in the city of Hamilton, has been removed to what is considered a more convenient and suitable location, and Mr. Wm. Hull has in consequence ceased to be postmaster of that office.

2. There were no complaints against the late postmaster. The inspector stated in his report that Mr. Hull was a man far advanced in years who had the reputation of being somewhat disagreeable and of a fault-finding disposition.

3. See answer to No. 2.

4. The change is not recorded by the department as a case of dismissal, but as involved in the change in the situation of the post office asked for in a petition and recommended by the inspector.

7. Mr. Thomas S. McDonell has been appointed to the postmastership of the office. He was recommended by Mr. J. V. Teetzel, the post office inspector having previously recommended the location of the post office in Mr. McDonell's premises.

8. Inquiry has not been made on this point, no intimation having been received that the new postmaster suffered from any physical incapacity.

AIR BRAKES AND COUPLERS ON I.C.R.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria) asked :

(a) How many cars on each, the Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific, Intercolonial and Canada Atlantic Railways, are fitted with (1) air brakes, (2) standard couplers?

(b) How many cars on each of the above railways are not fitted (1) with air brakes, and (2) with standard couplers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The department has no information with reference to cars fitted with air brakes, etc., on the roads mentioned, except on the Intercolonial Railway, which is as follows : Intercolonial Railway cars fitted with air brakes, 2,643 ; Intercolonial Railway cars not fitted with air brakes, 5,044.

COLD STORAGE—WEST INDIA STEAMERS.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth) asked :

1. What are the names of the Atlantic steamers on which exhaust fans were placed, and for the placing of which the government paid $100 each?

2. Was any effort made last autumn to ascertain if these fans or any of them were continuously in operation during the voyage across the Atlantic?

3. Will the government endeavour to procure the installation of exhaust fans in all steamers carrying apples across the Atlantic from Canadian ports?

4. What steamers plying between Canadian ports and the West Indies are fitted with cold storage chambers, the owners of which receive subventions from the government?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) :

4. The steamer Beta, running between Halifax and Jamaica, and the Orinoco, running between St. John, Halifax, the West Indian Islands, and Demerara, are fitted with cold storage. Questions Nos. 1, 2, and 3 can only be answered by the Minister of Agriculture, who alone has the information.

CENSUS COMMISSIONERS—GREY COUNTY.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

1. Have the census commissioners been appointed for East Grey, North Grey and South Grey?

2. If appointed, what are their names and upon whose recommendation were they respectively appointed?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. No appointment has been made.

FISHERY WARDEN, KING'S COUNTY, N.B.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

1. Has George Myers, fishery warden for King's county, N.B., been dismissed?

2. If so, for what reason, and has any one been appointed in his place?

3. At whose instance was he dismissed, if dismissed, and was any charge made against him or investigation held?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). George Myers was a temporary guardian and not a fishery warden. Because of his active political partisanship at the last general election he was notified his services would not again be required. As his employment was temporary no investigation was necessary. The minister is responsible for the action taken.

IMPORTATION OF FRESH MUTTON.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

Is it true, as stated in the tables of the Trade and Navigation Returns of the Dominion of Canada for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, that fresh mutton and lamb to the value of $14,-194 was imported from Great Britain for home consumption, and that such mutton and lamb were the products of Great Britain?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). The fresh mutton and lamb stated in the Trade and Navigation Returns for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, as imported from Great Britain, were actually imported from Australasia. Owing to a clerical error, the importations were entered as if from Great Britain.

SURVEY AT GRAND BEND.

Mr. SHERRITT asked :

Has a survey been made at Grand Bend, on the east shore of Lake Huron and the electoral district of North Middlesex, with a view of making a harbour there? If so, by whom? If no survey has been made, was a Mr. Stewart, or some other person, sent there in October last to look it over with that object in view? If so, has he made a report thereon ? Does the government intend making any improvements at Grand Bend? If so, when will the work begin?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). A survey was made at Grand Bend, in October last, by Mr. Stewart, who has made a report to the Department of Public Works. The whole subject of the report is under consideration.

CONDITION OF INDIANS AT OXFORD HOUSE MISSION.

Mr. BRITTON—by Mr. Flint—asked :

Did the government receive any report of Indians in the vicinity of 'Oxford House Mission,' N.W.T., dying from starvation during the winter of 1899-1900? If so, how many of such Indians are reported to have died from starvation? Has the government any information of the condition of such Indians during the present winter? Was there any special provision for such Indians to prevent starvation during the present winter?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Statements having been made in newspapers that a number of Indians in the vicinity of Oxford House had died of starvation, inquiries were made of the Indian agent at Beren's River and also of the commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company, but no confirmation of the report could be obtained. These Indians reside outside of treaty limits and no recent report has been received regarding their condition. The department has an arrangement whereby supplies are at once furnished to destitute Indians in this district to enable them to subsist during the winter months.

MANITOBA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. BRITTON—by Mr. Flint—asked :

4. When will the report of the commissioner be brought down?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1. Yes.

2. The investigation is being held.

3. No.

4. As soon as received. I may add that the commissioner has been urged to complete his report, and I am expecting that it will be here in a very short time.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER—SOUTH SIMCOE.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Has the appointment of chief census commissioner for South Simcoe been made?

2. If made, who has been appointed, and upon whose recommendation?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. No.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. WILSON asked :

Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation this session to amend the Canada Temperance Act in accordance with the resolution accepted during the last session of parliament?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) that the government has received no communication whatever from the temperance people upon this question.

GENERAL OFFICER COMMANDING.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria) asked :

Is it the intention of the government to increase the salary attending the position of General Officer Commanding in Canada to $10,000, and thus enable Canada to secure the services of a senior British general?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). It is not the intention of the government at present to ask parliament to vote an increase in the salary of the Major-General Commanding.

3. What was the average cost per volume?
4. Who supplied the paper for the work?
5. Who furnished the cuts and other illustrations?

3. 64 34·35 cents.
4. The Herald Printing Company.
5. The Herald Printing Company.
6. The King's Printer states that the work had to be given out owing to pressure in the Government Printing Bureau.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR BOUNTY.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey) moved :

That, having regard to the large importations of sugar into Canada for home consumption, and that it has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that the cultivation of the sugar beet in the Dominion is not only feasible but is being successfully grown in many parts of the country at present; therefore, in the opinion of this House, in order to stimulate the farmers of Canada to engage in the growth of this valuable product, and also to encourage the establishment of beet-root sugar factories, a bounty should be offered for all beet-root sugar manufactured in the Dominion during the next ten years.

He said : I make this motion, Mr. Speaker, believing that if the government of Canada were alive to the best interests of the people at the present time, they would take action in the direction indicated by the resolution. It has always been my opinion that the policy of our government should be to assist in starting and developing any industry in the country when the conditions are favourable for its success, and when there is a good market in the country for the product. There are two ways in which a government can do this. One is by a protective tariff—by putting a duty on the same kind of product coming from foreign countries. The other is by paying a bounty upon the product in our own country. We have examples of both methods stimulating industries in the country until they have become very important. I take as one example the furniture industry. At one time in the history of Canada most of our furniture factories had gone under owing to the keen competition from the United States. There was not a sufficient duty imposed on furniture coming into the country to prevent its being dumped down here in large quantities. As soon as the national policy was introduced in 1879, and a sufficient customs duty was put upon furniture, men immediately commenced to engage in that industry, and to-day it is one of the important industries of the country. Not only do we manufacture sufficient furniture to supply the needs of our own country, but we are heavy exporters as well. This result is achieved because we have the raw material in our own country in sufficient quantities, and we have the skilled labour necessary to manufacture the product. We have an example of the other method in the iron industry of the country. A few years ago, in order to stimulate the production of iron in Canada the Dominion government offered a bounty on all iron manufactured in the country, and that action was followed by similar action on the part of the Ontario government. So that we have at the present time a bounty of $1 a ton offered by the province of Ontario on all pig iron made in the country from the iron mines of the province ; in addition, we have a bounty of $3 a ton offered by the Dominion government on pig iron made in the country, and from the ore of the country ; and we have still further a bounty of $3 a ton offered on all steel manufactured from the pig iron thus made in the country. We have thus at least $7 a ton bounty offered for the manufacture of steel from iron taken from the mines of the country. I need not say anything as to the success of the industry since that bounty was offered, or the stimulus it has given to the industry; because every one in this House knows as well as I do that within the last few years the greatest activity has been displayed in the iron industry; to-day blast furnaces are springing up all around us, and iron and steel foundries have been started in different parts of the country; and Canada will soon be one of the great steel-making countries of the world.

With that example before us, is it not the part of wisdom for the government to go further and give aid to another valuable industry which may be established in the country by means of a bounty? There is an industry which in my judgment will be equally valuable with the iron industry. It has been much written about and talked about, and experiments have been made to determine whether it can be made a success or otherwise, for the last ten or twelve years; and the data which have been collected on the subject justify the conclusion that this industry could be and would be started in the near future if the government gave it a little assistance by way of bounty, as it did in the case of iron. I refer to the beet-root sugar industry—an industry for which the soil and climatic and other conditions of Canada are well adapted. The requisite raw material is available here in large quantities. Everything is available for the establishment of that industry if the government would only give it a little assistance; and it is for the purpose of ventilating the question and educating public opinion till it becomes so powerful that the government will be induced or persuaded to grant that aid, that I am bringing this question before the House to-day.

The first question is, have we a market for the product, if it were manufactured? My answer is in the affirmative. I take up the Trade and Navigation Returns, and I find that last year we imported no less than 312,626,731 pounds of sugar and molasses for home consumption, representing a value of $8,361,000, which was paid in Canadian money for a product which is consumed in Canada, and which could just as well have been made by the people of Canada. It would require about thirty factories to manufacture that large quantity of sugar. I think it needs no further argument to convince this House and the country that there is a valuable market for the product as soon as it is produced. We have that market at home; we need not look abroad to any other country for it; and it has always been my opinion that the government should direct its efforts towards so varying the pursuits of the people of the country that they would be working for each other, one portion producing and supplying what the other portion consumed. When that is done, I believe our energies will be directed in the best possible channels.

The next question is, could the beets be properly grown in this country by the farmers?—because it would be the farmers who would have to grow the beets if they were grown successfully. Are the climatic conditions and the soil of Canada suitable for the production of the sugar beet? Tests have been carried on along this line for the last twelve or fifteen years, and those tests have resulted in proving conclusively to any one who has taken the trouble to look up the data, that the climatic conditions and the soil of Canada are admirably suited to the growing of the sugar beet. The experiments have proven beyond doubt that we can grow it as well as Germany, Austria, France or any other country in the world, which is to-day largely producing the sugar beet and manufacturing sugar from it. I have here a little return giving the results during the last three years of the cultivation of beets grown in different parts of the country. This return covers the years 1889, 1890 and 1891, during which tests were made by the advice of the then government over the country with regard to the growth of the sugar beet. I may say that those tests were not confined to some favoured localities, but were distributed all over Ontario, and the results are as follows:—

Yield per acre 19·9 tons; percentages of sugar in the beet 16·01; co-efficient of purity 83·27. That test was made by the experimental farm at Guelph, under the supervision of its chemist. But, there were also tests made throughout Ontario in thirty-six different localities, and the result was that the yield per acre amounted to 18·3 tons, with a percentage of sugar 13·56, and co-efficient of purity 80. This shows that in the case of tests made all over the country, the tests were made perhaps not as carefully or intelligently as at the experimental farm. Consequently the yield per acre was a little less, the quality not quite so good, and the percentage of sugar not quite so high, but it all shows what can be done by intelligent cultivation of the beet, and it shows also, that our soil and climate are suited to its cultivation.

In 1900, tests were carried on by instruction from the experimental farm in the various parts of Ontario. These tests were made in different localities, and I have here a copy of the return. There were prizes offered, and the tests were made around the district of Aylmer, Newmarket, in North York and Welland. In each case six returns were made, and six prizes were given. The result was an average yield of 20¾ tons per acre, a percentage of 15·1 sugar, and a co-efficient of purity of 86·5.

I have given these so as to draw a comparison between the results of the experiments here, and the results in those countries where the growth of the sugar beet has been a great success, and the manufacture of sugar very considerable. Take Germany, and for twenty years, the highest average of the sugar beet grown was 11·70 tons to the acre, whereas last year in Ontario, the average was 20¾. The German ton is 2,204½ pounds, while with us a ton weighs 2,000 pounds. The percentage of sugar in the German beet did not quite average 12 per cent, while in ours it averaged 15·1, and in 1889, 1890 and 1891, it averaged 16·01.

Mr. CHARLTON. What was the yield in Germany of tons per acre ?

Mr. SPROULE. 11·70 was the best average in twenty years by their returns. I give these figures to show how valuable is our country for that product, and how successfully we might engage in it, and what advantage we have over those countries that are cultivating the beet successfully to-day.

I need not mention the other countries. I could take Austria, France, Spain, Belgium and Switzerland, and in not one is the percentage of sugar as high as it has been shown to be in the beets grown in Canada and the United States. That proves conclusively that the yield of beets here justifies the belief that the business can be successfully carried on. Take the individual yields. In and around Welland :

1. F. H. Stirzinger, Fenwick—Yield, 14 tons 1,200 lbs.; sugar, 16·1 per cent; purity, 88·5 per cent; cost per acre, $33.40; net profit, $35.95.

2. David Cole, Southend—Yield, 13 tons 334 lbs.; sugar, 16·7 per cent; purity, 87·3 per cent; cost per acre, $25.90; net profit, $37.14.

Mr. MEIGS. How many acres did he grow ?

Mr. SPROULE. This gives the test of one acre.

Mr. MEIGS. Did he cultivate more than one acre ?

Mr. SPROULE. That is not shown. The return simply says per acre.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How does he figure the value of the product ?

Mr. SPROULE. At $4 per ton, which, I understand, is the average price of the beets sold at the factory that yield over 12½ per cent sugar.

3. Chas. Taylor, Fonthill—Yield, 24 tons 83 lbs.; sugar, 12·2 per cent; purity, 81·0 per cent; cost per acre, $25.90; net profit, $64.25.

4. J. C. Sloat, Fenwick—Yield, 12 tons 500 lbs.; sugar, 15·1 per cent; purity, 87·9 per cent; cost per acre, $44.15; net profit, $13.97.

5. S. H. Van Every, Ridgeville—Yield, 11 tons 777 lbs.; sugar, 15·3 per cent; purity, 88·8 per cent; cost per acre,— ; net profit, —.

6. Philip Stirtzinger, Fenwick—Yield, 12 tons 1,000 lbs.; sugar, 15·4 per cent; purity, 88·2 per cent; cost per acre, $26.90; net profit, $29.35.

1. B. Ashley, Newmarket—Yield, 23 tons 1,555 lbs.; sugar, 14·6 per cent; purity, 86 per cent; cost per acre, $33.90; net profit, $67.15.

2. D. C. McDonald, Ravenshoe—Yield, 25 tons 833 lbs.; sugar, 15·7 per cent; purity, 84·3 per cent; cost per acre, $35.50; net profit, $72.52.

3. T. W. Roode, Holland Landing—Yield, 24 tons 500 lbs.; sugar, 15·7 per cent; purity, 84·8 per cent; cost per acre, $28.90; net profit, $80.22.

I need not go over all these, because they are very much the same, but I have given them because they are spread over various parts of the country, and this is the actual experience of the intelligent farmers who grew the sugar beet last year. I have given these figures to show how much more profitable this crop is to the farmer than the other lines he is engaged in.

The question arises whether it would be a profitable crop. I have given the net profit of these parties ; and, now for a moment, I will draw a comparison with what the farmer receives for other crops he grows. The average crop of wheat in Ontario would be less than 20 bushels per acre. But for the purpose of this comparison I allow 25 bushels per acre. Wheat did not average, last season, higher than 65 cents a bushel. That would give the farmers $16.25 for his wheat. Allow $2 an acre for the straw. That gives a total of $18.25 as the product of an acre of wheat. The average crop of peas is 25 bushels to the acre, and the price last year was 60 cents, a total of $15 an acre for peas. In oats, the average crop was 35 bushels, and the average price less than 30 cents a bushel. Allowing the full 30 cents a bushel and you have a return of $10.50 per acre ; adding $2 for straw you get a total of $12.50 per acre to the farmer for growing oats. With an average crop of 15 tons of sugar beets to an acre, at $4 a ton, the farmer would receive $60 an acre for growing sugar beets. But I shall be told that it costs more to grow sugar beets. That is true. I have given the actual experience of men who have grown them to show that if the farmer must pay more, his return is so much greater that there is a larger net profit than from his other crops. With the returns I have stated, the gentlemen whose names I have given did not mind greater expense in raising the crop in consideration of the much larger net return. I have the actual experience of those who have been growing sugar beets in other places ; I have a statement here of deliveries to a sugar factory in Illinois last year, and money returns to the farmers who delivered the beets :—

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether there is any bounty on beet-root sugar in Illinois ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much ?

Mr. SPROULE. Speaking from memory, 1 cent a pound for granulated sugar of not less than 80 per cent. In the little town of Green Valley, Ill., with a population of only 500, the people received from that factory $35,000 for the beets they grew. Tremont, with 700 inhabitants, received $27,000 ; and Pekin, with 8,000 inhabitants, received $10,000 for beets grown. The beets manufactured last season in Michigan yielded 48,000,000 pounds of sugar.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is there any bounty in Michigan ?

Mr. SPROULE. There is a dispute as to that. A law was passed by the legislature of the state giving a bounty of 1 cent a pound. But the courts held that the law was ultra vires of the state legislature. The question is not yet settled. The farmers of Michigan raised about 250,000 tons of beets, for which they received an average of $4 a ton. That is to say, about $1,000,000 was paid to the farmers of Michigan last season for the beets raised and manufactured there. It may be said that we cannot do the same here. But, last year, we had some experience in this line. At one point in Canada sugar beets were grown, though the farmers had no factory to send them to. But they sold them for use in Marine City, Mich. Through the company's agent, Mr. Snider, the farmers sent 9,000 tons of beets. The American duty was 25 per cent, and the freight was 50 cents a ton. The price to the farmers was reduced in consequence. The farmers were at a further disadvantage because they had to sell their beets without a test of as to what percentage of sugar they contained. They sold them on the Canadian bank of the river at $3.20 a ton. Notwithstanding all disadvantages, they sold last year 9,000 tons of beets to the refinery in Marine City. The business paid them so well that, as I am informed by Mr. Snider, he is entering into contract with the same farmers, and, in nearly every instance, the farmers have agreed to grow twice as many acres of beets as they grew last year. The farmers are satisfied with the conditions, if they cannot get a factory at home. But they have organized a company and intend to start a factory, if the government will only give a little assistance by way of bounty on the sugar produced in the factory. These facts show that, even at $3.20 a ton, the business of growing beets can be carried on successfully. Why, some of these farmers got as high as $70 an acre for their beets, which they sold at $3.20 a ton. If they can grow beets successfully at that price, it proves beyond question that we have a country admirably suited for the growth of beets. I have given you what the farmers have already realized last year from the beets that were grown here ; and the result of their own experiments over different parts of the country. I think the facts prove beyond question that we have a country admirably suited for that purpose, not only with regard to the yield per acre, but with respect to the percentage of sugar that the beets contain, and the purity of the sugar produced from them.

Now, what would it mean if all this sugar was made in Canada instead of being imported from other countries ? Let hon. gentlemen consider a moment what it would mean. It would mean, in the first place, that we would have thirty factories built and operating in this country. I say thirty factories, because I think that number would be sufficient to manufacture the product of the sugar beet in quantities sufficient to supply the home market. Each of these thirty factories would use up 500 tons of beets per day, for it is held that a factory ought to consume about 500 tons of beets per day to do a profitable business. Now, it will cost to build each one of those factories about $500,000, and this would mean to begin with an expenditure of $15,000,000 for the construction of those thirty factories. To run one of those factories, including the factory hands, clerks, chemists, experts, &c., about 200 hands are required. Multiply that number by thirty, and you have 6,000 people who would be directly and regularly employed in those factories, besides all the labour of mechanics, artisans and workmen that had been employed in building them. The season for manufacturing the product of beet roots usually lasts about 100 days, and if each one of the thirty factories used up 500 tons a day, that would mean 1,500,000 tons of beets in a year. Now, what would be paid to the farmers who grew those beets ? At an average price of $4 per ton, the farmers would receive $6,000,000 a year, a large sum to be distributed directly to them. I desire to say here that it seems to me that above all classes in the community this industry would benefit the farmers of the country. At least 60 per cent of the money paid out in connection with the industry is paid to the farmer for the beets that he raises. He will realize $6,000,000 a year for the beets that he grows on his farm, and which can be grown as well in Canada as in any other country in the world. These thirty factories would consume about 240,000 tons of coal a year, which would either have to be mined in this country or bought from abroad. That of itself would be an important consideration in the calculation that I am making of the benefit to the country through this industry. These factories would also consume about 150,000 tons of lime a year, of which we have any quantity in the Dominion of Canada in almost any part of it. A great number of people would be employed in manufacturing lime for the use of these factories. The number of cars employed to handle the material necessary to supply these factories would be about 150,000. To supply these factories, from 150,000 to 200,000 acres of land would require to be put under cultivation in sugar beets, and as I remarked before, the farmer would get fully 60 per cent of all the money paid out in connection with the manufacture of beet-root sugar.

Now, I have mentioned several items, showing the very large amount of money would be paid to the people of Canada in the erection of the factories, in the manufacture of lime, in the growth of the beets, in the manual labour that is to be done around the factories, because each factory will require from 150 to 250 hands. I contend that all this money can be expended profitably in this country, instead of being spent in buying sugar made in Germany or France, or some other country.

The by-product of the beet is also an important consideration. Experiments have been carried on during the last few years at Alameda, in California, showing the value of the pulp after the saccharine matter has been extracted from the beet. This pulp is fed to sheep and cattle, and these gentlemen who have conducted the experiment say that the by-product is worth quite as much as ordinary hay. There seems to be no consensus of opinion as to the exact value, but it is held to be one of the most valuable products for feeding dairy cattle, and fattening cattle and sheep for market. There are farmers in California to-day fattening thousands of cattle on the by-products of sugar beet factories. In other states they are following suit. A factory that has used up 50,000 tons of beets per year will supply by-products for 1,000 to 2,000 head of cattle in a season. Each factory would turn out from 30,000 to 40,000 tons of this by-product every year, and that could be distributed amongst the farmers. It could be sold to the farmers in the wet state for 25 cents a ton, and if sold in the dry state it brings a much higher price.

Now, what is being done to-day in this line in the United States ? They, like ourselves, found a few years ago that they could run this industry profitably in their country. They first began by experimenting, as we did, and they found that the climate and soil were suitable. They carried on their experiments for some years, and then commenced building factories ; and so successful has the industry proved that they have to-day forty factories operating in the United States. Last year I told the House where these factories were situated. They have twelve in the state of Michigan, a state adjoining our own country, having a soil and climate no better suited for carrying on that industry than the province of Ontario, and some think not quite as good. There are three factories running in New York, eight in California, three in Colorado ; and in almost every state of the union there is one or more factories in successful operation. So what they have done we may do as well under similar conditions.

Now, other countries have also been carrying on this industry successfully. Germany produces the largest amount of beet-root sugar of any country in the world. What has been their experience in Germany ? A farmer who previously could only rent his land for $3 an acre, as soon as the growth of sugar beets was commenced, could rent his land for $25 an acre, and he is able to do that because of the increased profit that the land yields when devoted to the growth of the sugar beet. Germany is growing a sugar beet that realizes less than 12½ per cent of sugar ; her land yields but twelve tons to the acre, and yet she is carrying on this industry successfully and manufacturing sugar that she sends in large quantities both to the United States and to Canada. Germany is not as well suited for that industry as Canada and the United States, yet she is supplying our people with sugar. Austria is doing the same, Russia is exporting large quantities to-day, France is exporting sugar as well, Belgium has been carrying on the industry successfully for years, Sweden is doing the same, Holland is growing large quantities of sugar beets, Denmark, Servia, Roumania, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Greece, Persia, Egypt, Argentina, Chili and the United States are all successfully manufacturing sugar out of the sugar beet. We should benefit by the experience of these countries. We should benefit by their experience in the manufacture of the product, the class of machinery that should be employed, the improvements that are being made, and the intelligence which they are bringing to bear upon their operations in that line. The question is : Are factories likely to be started without a bounty being given to them in Canada ? I do not think they are, and I give the reason why. We are living alongside of a country with a border line of hundreds of miles, where they are given a bounty in almost every state. I believe there are two or three states where they have stopped giving a bounty, because, after having given it for several years, the industry is now well under way.

Mr. CHARLTON. What states ?

Mr. SPROULE. I think they are not paying a bounty at the present time in California. I have the figures but I do not happen to have them under my hand just now. Speaking from memory, California is one, and in Michigan they cannot give a bounty owing to the decision of the court, but they have set apart an amount of money for the purpose and under that stimulus they have commenced operations in Michigan. I do not think that such an industry is likely to start up in this country without a bounty, because it requires a large amount of capital to build a beet-root sugar factory that would consume 500 tons annually. It would require about $500,000. A party who has $500,000 to invest is not likely to invest it in Canada, where we have a duty of 98 cents per cwt. on sugar coming into the country, and where we have no bounty, while there is a duty of $1.68 on sugar coming into the United States, and a bounty of one cent per pound paid as well. He could go across the line and get a bounty of one cent a pound on the manufacture of granulated sugar. I have been in correspondence for several years with men who contemplated the establishment of factories here if bounties had been given. Three years ago I brought the question up and did my best to induce the government to give a bounty. For several years an effort was made to secure the granting of such a bounty. Up to 1885 and after 1885 a bounty was given and three factories were established in Quebec for the manufacture of beet-root sugar. They continued only for a limited time; the enterprise was not a success, the factories failed and the bounty was stopped.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How long was the bounty to be paid ?

Mr. SPROULE. I think at first five years, but I think it was extended for three years, and after that it expired.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And the industry failed ?

Mr. SPROULE. The industry failed. I was going to say one word in regard to that. A company that proposed establishing a factory here sent over two of their experts who were familiar with the requirements of the industry and everything necessary for the successful prosecution of this industry. They pursued their investigations in the province of Quebec to ascertain whether the failure was due to preventable causes, to causes which could be overcome, and the report which they made to their company was that the causes of failure were all preventable causes. The plant that was used in Quebec is now being successfully operated at Lyons, N.Y. The gentleman who runs that plant states that part of the machinery was perfectly useless, that it was not constructed in such a way as to economize labour and expense, and that this unnecessary expense was such a drain on the industry as to consume more than a reasonable profit from the business. They discarded part of the machinery and replaced it with other machinery which was improved and up to date, and the result is that they have been carrying on the business successfully ever since. He says that the country is suited to the production of the sugar beet, and all that is required is that the farmer shall receive a little education as to how to grow the beet more intelligently. With companies having more capital at their command and factories more up to date in regard to the machinery, the industry should be successful. To give an illustration; my informant says instead of throwing the beets into sluices and having the beets carried along by the current in the sluice and being washed as they go, the companies operating here had men wheeling these beets along for several rods in wheelbarrows and throwing them in. The cost of that operation would be a large item which by the adoption of modern methods would be avoided. He says: We are perfectly satisfied, so much so that we will be prepared, in the event of the bounty being a reasonable one, to go into the province of Quebec, build a factory next year and make our contracts with the farmers for the beets. We feel perfectly satisfied that we will make it a success, because, he says, previous failures were due to preventable causes. Factories will not be started unless something is done. Last year we had a deputation that waited upon the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and some of his colleagues, and I joined that deputation. I regretted to find that the deputation, which came down from the Georgian Bay, in the district where I live or from Wiarton and which represented the Owen Sound Sugar Company, said that they did not want a bounty. I said that I did not believe these people knew exactly what they did want. They were the people who had bought out the old Owen Sound Company. They said: We believe we are going to get a bounty from the provincial government, and all that we want is permission to bring in our machinery free of duty. The Dominion government were good enough to take them at their word. I said: I am quite sure that you will not induce any one who has money to invest to invest it in the erection of a factory unless that bounty is given. They went home and entered into communication with a number of men, who were acting in co-operation with me, and this man said that they would not put a dollar into a factory in Canada unless a bounty was given. Although farmers have grown beets there they have found nobody who would offer to put a dollar into the industry and they have no hopes of securing such investment at the present time. A deputation waited on the provincial government lately and succeeded in getting them to give a bounty. The provincial government will set apart $75,000 every year for three years to give assistance to the sugar beet industry in the event of it being started in the province. What they propose to give is one-half a cent a pound for all sugar turned out of first-class quality to be distributed among all the factories. They will start by giving one-half a cent a pound the first year, one-quarter of a cent a pound the second year, and one-quarter of a cent a pound the third year, but not to amount to more money than $75,000 a year. This will not induce any one to put his money into the industry, because the time is too short and the bounty is too small. I think the Dominion government ought to do what they did in connection with the bounty on iron. The provincial government offered $1 a ton, and the Dominion government, which had previously offered $3 a ton, supplemented this bounty by offering $3 additional on all pig iron made into steel. The result is that the iron and steel industry has been started up almost like magic in the country, and it will be one of our most important industries in future. So it would be with the sugar industry if the Dominion government would consent to give a bounty. If so they would consult the interests of the farmers and of the people generally. It is sometimes said that the industry cannot be carried on successfully here. If that is so the government will not be called upon to pay the bounty. Then, again, others say that it will be carried on to an extent that it would almost bankrupt the treasury. Well, give it for a limited number of years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How many years do you suggest ?

Mr. SPROULE. I suggest five years. Some say ten years, but my information is that if we could have it for five years it would be ample to put the industry on a good footing in Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Are not the European countries still paying a bounty ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, they are paying a bounty on sugar exported from the country. The question is sometimes put: Why do you need a bounty ? My information is that the bounty is needed to induce the farmers to grow the beets, and in order to distribute the seed free for some years. It is necessary to send experts among the farmers periodically to teach them how to prepare the ground, and how to cultivate the beets and finally market them. That means an outlay for several years, which must be borne by the factories, and towards which assistance is required from the Dominion treasury or some such source. Another thing is that at first the factories would be obliged to pay a uniform price of say $4 a ton for the beets without regard to the percentage of sugar, and they propose to do that if assistance is given them for a few years. It is claimed by those interested in the industry, that after a few years the farmers themselves become experts, and then the expense of the educational work ceases. The farmers get to learn how to produce the largest yield of beets with the greatest percentage of sugar obtainable. I am assured by several responsible men, that they are ready to provide the money at any time to build factories and start operations if the bounty is given. They tell me that the bounty would not be required longer than five years, and they are quite satisfied that if it is given, the industry can be successfully established in Canada. In view of these facts, I ask the government to consider this question carefully with a view of so amending the custom law as to grant this bounty. I have here a form of contract that has been entered into already in anticipation of the bounty being given, and it provides that if the bounty should be given, a factory will be built the present year. I have here contracts made by farmers in the province of Ontario for the growth of the sugar beet, and many farmers who grew beets last year and sold them for $3.20 a ton, will grow three times the quantity this year. If the government gives this assistance, I am certain that factories will spring up as if by magic throughout the country. The farmers, perhaps, represent the majority of the population of the Dominion, and if you can benefit them you must benefit every class of the community. The establishment of this industry in Canada would retain in the country millions of dollars, which we send every year to foreign countries to enrich them, and it would promote employment for our own people at home. Why should we send away our means to Germany, Australia, France or any other country, when we can utilize it at home in giving the farmers 60 per cent of the expenditure on this industry, and enabling them to employ their labour to greater profit. In view of these facts the government ought to favourably consider this question. A syndicate has been formed at the present time who are ready to erect and have in operation during the present year a beet factory with an annual capacity of 75,000 tons of beet, producing 12,000,000 pounds of granulated sugar per year. That factory will be started the moment the bounty is given. Hon. gentlemen will readily see the great advantages that will spring from this industry. The railway companies will be benefited. Half a million dollars will be spent immediately in erecting factories. $300,000 a year would be paid to the farmers for the beets to supply the one factory that I referred to; 8,000 tons of coal and coke, 5,000 tons of lime stone, 65,000 barrels and a large quantity of other material would be required for each season's work; 150 factory hands, besides clerks, managers, chemists and expert instructors would be employed; fifty or sixty cars would be required per day for the transport of the product, and all this could be obtained if the government would only render a little assistance to the industry.

In view of all this, will not the government grant the same assistance to this farmers' industry, which they have granted to the iron and steel industry of Canada. Will they not enable the farmer to direct his attention to a product which will realize to him three or four times as much profit as he realizes from his industry at present. Let the government give this assistance to an industry for the product of which we have a home market that will consume all we produce for many years. I sincerely trust that in the interest of the farmers of the country, and in the interests of the country at large the government will grant this bounty, and if they do so they will find many factories erected next year, and they will find also that many other factories will be built throughout Canada year after year.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I can quite sympathize with my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in his desire to see a large industry not now existing in Canada established here. I will concede everything he has said with reference to the advantages which would accrue to this country from the manufacture of beet-root sugar on the scale he proposes, and if I were satisfied that the granting of a bounty by the government was essential to the establishment of this industry, I would cheerfully support the motion of the hon. gentleman. I have followed him closely in the argument he has presented to the House. He has gone into the question very fully, and has laid before the House and the country a vast amount of information that will be of much value in considering this question. In listening to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), I was struck with the evidently not intended result, but the actual result of his arguments which led to the conclusion that this industry, as compared with other industries connected with agriculture was so promising and so profitable that nothing else offers as great an inducement to the agriculturists as the cultivation of beet-root sugar. The hon. gentleman informed us, truthfully no doubt, that the conditions in Canada for the production of beet roots were as favourable as they were in any other country in the world—that they were much more favourable than in Germany, where the industry has attained such vast magnitude, or in any other European country; and the information he gave us as to the results of the experiments made in many parts of Ontario, certainly prove that this industry only lacked a little energy and courage on the part of capitalists to prove a highly successful and remunerative one.

The hon. gentleman asked, is it possible to establish factories for the production of beet-root sugar in this country, without a bounty ? He assumed that it was not—that capitalists could not be induced to embark in this business unless a bounty were granted. Now, in the very district where the hon. gentleman says that last year beets were raised for $3.20 a ton and exported to the United States, at a large profit to the grower, I have heard it reported that it is proposed to build in the town of Wallaceburg a beet-root sugar factory, if the town will grant a bonus of $30,000 ; and this proposal is made without any reference to a Dominion or provincial bounty. And, no doubt, if the ice is once broken, and the experiment is successfully made by the managers of that proposed factory, with due knowledge of the business and proper methods of production, there will be other factories established and a great expansion of this business.

The hon. gentleman tells us that there are forty beet-root sugar factories in the United States. Eight of these are in the state of California, where no bounty is paid. Twelve are in the state of Michigan, where no bounty is paid.

Mr. SPROULE. A bounty was paid in California at first.

Mr. CHARLTON. And several of them are in other states where no bounty is paid. A comparison between the conditions in Michigan and the probable course of this industry in Canada, and especially in Ontario, would be the most reasonable basis on which to form an opinion, because the climatic conditions and the character of the soil in Michigan and in Ontario are very similar. The hon. gentleman tells us that this business was established in the state of Michigan through the passage of a law granting a bounty. It is true that the legislature of Michigan did pass a law granting a bounty of one cent a pound for the production of beet-root sugar, and that two factories were established ; and it was found that the business was so profitable that the law was repealed, and the bounty which had been voted for the first year was never paid, because the courts held, as my hon. friend truthfully states, that the legislature had gone outside of its jurisdiction in passing the law. The repeal of the bounty in that state placed no check upon the production of sugar ; new factories were built a year after the bounty was repealed ; new factories were built last year ; and there is no business in the United States that is more profitable to-day than the production of beet-root sugar in the state of Michigan, without a bounty or government aid of any other character.

The price paid for beets in that state last year was $4.50 per ton—beets that would test 12 per cent ; and the price was proportionately higher or lower for beets that went above or fell short of the standard test. Now, the product of a ton of beets that will test 12 per cent is 200 pounds of sugar, and a quantity of molasses and drips. The sugar from a ton of standard beets, at present prices, is worth between $9 and $10, and in addition to the value of the sugar, there is the value of the pulp, which was considered valueless until recently, but which to-day, evaporated so that it can be transported, commands perhaps $20 a ton in the German market. The hon. gentleman tells us that pulp is equal in value to hay. Well, hay in the United States and Canada is worth at least $6 a ton. So that from the raw material, which costs $4.50, you have the value of the sugar, between $9 and $10, and the value of the pulp as well. It is quite evident that the business must be an enormously profitable one. The cost of converting the ton of beets into sugar and pulp is not more than $1.50 or $2. Thus, you have a total cost of $6.50, as against a selling value of $9 or $10 for the sugar and the value of the pulp besides. There is no bounty required for that business. The only danger is that it will be overdone because the profit is so great.

My hon. friend gives the result of a number of tests in Canada. He tells us that the Ontario experimental farm test gave 19 tons of beets to the acre, and that these beets analysed 16 per cent of saccharine matter; or the 19 tons of beets would produce 275 pounds of sugar to the ton. I do not know what the quotation of sugar is to-day, but at 4½ cents a pound, this would be equivalent to $12.50 worth of sugar from a ton of beets that would cost the factory perhaps $4.50, in addition to the value of the pulp, which would be either fed to stock on the ground or evaporated and exported.

Mr. SPROULE. I might correct the hon. gentleman with regard to the yield of sugar per ton of beets. It is from 190 to 232 pounds.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say that I know that the yield of a ton of beets that analyse 12 per cent of saccharine matter is 200 pounds of sugar, in addition to a certain quantity of molasses and drips. If it analyses more than 12 per cent, the yield is proportionately greater.

Mr. WALLACE. How does the hon. gentleman make that $12.50 a ton?

Mr. CHARLTON. I was taking a test of 19 tons with 16 per cent of saccharine matter.

Mr. WALLACE. But that is not the average.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is not the average, but I was treating that particular instance.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the hon. gentleman made the deduction that only 81 per cent or 82 per cent is saccharine matter, and you have to take 12 per cent of that?

Mr. CHARLTON. I assumed, of course, that the percentage of saccharine matter represented so many pounds of sugar. You can reduce it one-fifth, and you still have over $10 to the ton. The hon. gentleman gave another test of 18·3 tons of beets to the acre, which produced 13·56 per cent of sugar. This is 1·36 higher than the standard on which the American price of $4.50 per ton is given. The hon. gentleman tells us that in Germany the average is 11·70 tons per acre, and the test 12 per cent. The difference between the yield of 11 tons per acre and a yield of 18 or 19 tons, and between a test of 12 and a test of 15 or 16 per cent, in saccharine matter, shows the enormous advantages in favour of the cultivation of sugar beet in Ontario. And if the business can be pursued successfully and profitably in Germany, where the average is 11 tons per acre and the saccharine test 12 per cent, of course it can be prosecuted with much greater chance of a successful return in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. In Germany they use the long ton of 2,240 pounds, while ours is the short ton.

Mr. CHARLTON. Still the disparity is very great in favour of the Ontario beet producer; and it would have been well if the hon. gentleman, in making comparisons, had adopted the same standard of ton in the one case as in the other.

The hon. gentleman has told us that in no country is the yield and the percentage in saccharine matter as high as here, and I believe that as regards European countries his statement is perfectly correct. I doubt also whether in any of the American states the yield, on the whole, is as large and the saccharine test as high as in Ontario.

Then, the hon. gentleman went on to make a comparison between the return a farmer would receive from grains of various kinds and the return he would receive from the sugar beet. From $13 to $20 per acre is, he represents, the return from cereals, oats, wheat, &c., while from sugar beets the farmer may expect an average return of $60 per acre, and the hon. gentleman showed that in the state of Illinois the return was from $39 per acre to $118. So that the difference in favour of the cultivation of the beet root is enormous, and the inducement for the manufacturer to take those beets and convert $4.50 worth of raw material into at least $9 worth of sugar, and perhaps $1.50 worth of pulp, is certainly sufficient to cause men to embark in the business without the intervention of the government in the shape of a subsidy.

Mr. COCHRANE. It has not done it.

Mr. CHARLTON. It has in the various American states.

Mr. COCHRANE. We are not talking of the American states.

Mr. CHARLTON. Why, the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) was drawing comparisons between this country and the American states, and I have pointed out two states in which there are twenty factories running profitably without any government bounty, and where the conditions as to the yield of the beets and the saccharine matter are stated to be less favourable than in Ontario.

My hon. friend tells us that 9,000 tons of sugar beets were raised in the western part of Ontario and exported to Marine City in Michigan, and although these beets paid a duty of 25 per cent and 50 cents freight, yet the business was profitable for the farmers who raised them. Well, if these gentlemen can raise beets for export to Marine City at $3.20 per ton, they can raise them to supply the sugar factories at their own door at the same price. But they are not asked to do it. The business will be profitable without the aid of a bounty at all if the sugar factories can obtain beets, with a test of 12 per cent saccharine matter, for $4.50 per ton. All it requires is a little enterprise and the investment of money in the enterprise.

Mr. CLANCY. In the beets for which $3.20 per ton was paid, there was no consideration of the quantity of sugar contained.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very probably, but there are scarcely any beets in Ontario that do not yield 12 per cent of saccharine matter, and if those beets can be sold for $3.20 a ton on the Canadian side opposite Marine City, they can be sold upon this side for that price and can be manufactured profitably into sugar. And the manufacturer can pay $1 to $1.50 per ton more than that price.

The hon. gentleman tells us that the farmer gets 60 per cent of the gross returns from the manufacture of the beet into sugar. He assumes that if the farmers receive $4.50 for these beets, the product of the beets is 40 per cent higher than the amount he receives. And if the conversion of these beets into sugar cannot be carried on by the manufacturer for 40 per cent of the gross returns from the manipulation of that raw material, that is very singular indeed. I do not say absolutely that I am right about this matter, but I know that the business has been carried on, not only successfully but with enormous profits, about 450 miles west of us, where the soil and climatic conditions are similar to those existing in Ontario. I know that this is the case; and if it can be done there, it can be done equally successfully here. It is only a question of enterprise and the risking of money in an undertaking that will lead to the establishment of a successful business. I believe that we are on the eve of having the sugar beet industry introduced into Canada, and that the gentlemen who contemplate embarking in this business are holding back, in the hope that they may receive from this government a bounty of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. CLANCY. Was the hon. gentleman not solicited to take stock in those enterprises? I think he made that statement to the House last year.

Mr. CHARLTON. If these gentlemen can secure 1 cent bounty, it will pay them to hold off until that is granted, and they can then embark in the business, and make much greater profits than the legitimate and satisfactory profits they would realize if they embarked in it without the bounty.

While I do not say that I am absolutely correct, and while I agree with the hon. member for East Grey as to the desirability of establishing this business in Canada, the question is one we want to consider very carefully and thoroughly, and I would imagine that the first step to take—if the government decided to take the question into serious consideration—would be to appoint a commission of gentlemen, who could thoroughly sift this business. Let them visit the sections of the United States where the beet sugar industry is prosecuted, and there acquire the information and compile the data that would place us in a position to give an intelligent opinion and ask intelligent action upon this very important question.

Mr. J. H. LEGRIS (Maskinongé.) (Translation). Mr. Speaker, the beet-root sugar question is one of paramount importance, connected as it is with one of the most interesting and useful inventions of modern times, a product of the glorious nineteenth century, so fruitful in great discoveries. This question, Sir, has often been agitated in this country. Within the last twenty years, several experiments have been made with regard to the establishment of this industry in various localities of the province of Quebec; but unfortunately, those efforts have proved abortive and resulted in financial failure.

The enormous capital invested in the building of sugar factories and the improvement of the various methods of cultivation; the bounties, either directly or indirectly granted to manufacturers and farmers by various governments, all those expenditures have been of no avail.

Finally, the failure of the Berthier and Farnham factories, the machinery and appliances of which were sold and sent across the line in 1896, has for the present at least, discouraged promoters and capitalists. Still, in spite of the frequently repeated failures of this industry, it would be an egregious mistake to jump to the conclusion that it cannot be introduced and carried on as successfully here as it has been prosecuted in Europe, and especially in the United States, where its success is almost an accomplished fact.

Experts, who have thoroughly mastered the question, or at least those who have written treatises on the subject, have all reached the same conclusion. They are all agreed as to the possibility or the probability, not to say the certainty, of this industry becoming a paying one in this country.

In 1870, the Quebec government sent Mr. Edward Barnard, to Europe, with instructions to make inquiries concerning beet-root cultivation and the manufacture of beet-root sugar.

Early in 1872, Mr. Barnard was sent a second time to Europe by the Department of Agriculture, in Ottawa, in order to prosecute his previous inquiries, and ascertain whether this industry could be successfully established in Canada. That same year, Mr. Barnard published a short treatise on 'Beet-root Sugar.'

In 1875, Mr. Octave Cuisset, of Quebec, industrial chemist and manufacturer of beet-root sugar, also wrote a popular treatise on beet-root culture and beet-sugar manufacture.

In 1892, an appendix to the report of the Quebec Department of Agriculture was published on the same subject.

We have also a report from Mr. William Saunders, Director of the Dominion Experimental Farms, published in 1892, on the production and manufacture of beet sugar.

In 1897, Mr. Alfred Musy, a civil engineer, a graduate of the Paris Polytechnical School, and a former manufacturer, also wrote a book on the same subject.

We have several other interesting essays treating of the cultivation of the sugar beet, and they all come to the same conclusion, namely, that the beet-sugar industry can, in all probability, if not with absolute certainty, be made a success in this country.

But, on the other hand, we have also a record of experiments which proved utter failures. In 1881, a first-class factory was built at Berthier, which ran for two years.

In 1881-82, another factory for the manufacture of beet sugar was built at Farnham. Coaticook followed in the wake of Farnham and started a factory which was operated in 1881, 1882 and 1883. All those experiments, so to say, proved utter failures. A fresh attempt was made at Berthier in 1887, after the sale of that factory at a nominal price, and this experiment proved still more disastrous than the former experiments, but the causes of those failures are now perfectly well understood. Let me quote from what an expert, Mr. Musy, says in this connection: 'Everything was mismanaged in this experiment. At the Berthier factory, in 1887, there was nobody appointed to educate the farmers as to the best methods to be adopted for the raising of a reasonable quantity of beets. The crop did not give two thousand tons, which hardly yielded 2 per cent of sugar, with sugar contents of from 12 to 13 per cent. I need hardly add that everything seemed to have been managed so as to bring about such a result, and that the disastrous failure of 1887 was, so to say, a foregone conclusion.'

From 1890 to 1893, a fresh attempt was made at Farnham. In 1893, 1894 and 1895 operations were resumed at Berthier, with no better results than previously. The men who undertook to resuscitate it were either incompetent or their enterprise was not backed by sufficient capital. It is, perhaps, no exaggeration to say that those experiments were sometimes made by men who were either anxious to make political capital out of these enterprises or had speculation in view. All those experiments at the several points just mentioned proved abortive and disastrous.

Within the last few years we have heard a great deal about fresh efforts made to resuscitate the beet-root sugar industry in this country. The strongest objection invariably raised in this connection is grounded on the difficulty of ascertaining with some probability whether this industry could be successfully carried on here, owing to the difficulty of obtaining raw material, The greatest trouble met with was that of satisfying the men in power that this industry could prove as highly successful and remunerative here as it has proved elsewhere. Sir, I was greatly surprised, when I heard, a little while ago, the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) stating on the floor of this House that this industry needed no encouragement from the government and that it could stand on its own bottom! This industry is so paying, he said, that it needs no government assistance, and the profit realized therefrom is a sufficient inducement to cause capitalists to embark in the business without any bounty. I was quite surprised to hear the hon. gentleman making such an erroneous statement, and repeating it throughout his speech, and in fact grounding upon it his whole argument. As to the data quoted by the hon. gentleman, which he borrowed from the speech of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) we must bear in mind that the tests referred to were made on certain plots of land and not on large areas, which is quite another thing. Those percentages are altogether too high. I do not call in question the accurateness of those data, but I know that similar results could never be obtained from a crop grown over larger areas.

It is all very well to talk of generalizing the cultivation of beet-roots, in order to supply sufficient raw material for the manufacture of sugar; but it must not be lost sight of that the greatest difficulty to overcome in connection with the introduction of this industry is one relating to the education of the farming community and teaching them to improve their methods so as to supply the factory with such a quantity of beet-roots as may profitably be used up.

It is quite clear that farmers are not ready without any previous experience, to supply a factory—no matter where it is located—with a sufficient quantity of beetroots to make it a profitable business. Farmers will have to be educated up to that standard, for several years to come.

Another thing which we must not forget is the considerable amount of capital required for building a factory, varying from $400,000 to $500,000 at least. No capitalist would be anxious to embark in such a business, and sink half a million dollars in an enterprise of that kind, with the prospect of considerable deficits looming up before him for many years to come.

It is all very well to say that capitalists are quite able to take care of themselves, and that, in consideration of the large profits they will be able to realize, it is no business of the government to come to their assistance. Those who embark in that business have to make heavy outlays at the outset. It is necessary to send experts among the farmers, during the summer season, to watch the growth of the beet, and to teach the agriculturists the best methods adapted in European countries for producing the largest yield of beets with the greatest percentage of sugar obtainable, so that the crop may yield a profitable return both to the manufacturer and the farmer. But, as I said, if we expect capitalists to make all those outlays without assisting them in some way, we cannot expect to see this industry introduced into this country.

But there is no reason for feeling alarmed or surprised at the difficulties met with here, and which are the main cause of the failures mentioned. History once more repeats itself in our case, as the rise of this industry in Europe was attended with similar experiences and drawbacks. It was introduced in Europe in 1806 with enormous bounties from the various governments. Up to 1820 it was a bounty-fed industry, enjoying enormous protection, and then only it was that it began to show some practical results. It enjoyed those enormous bounties down to the year 1840. But since 1850, it has yielded considerable revenue to the various states where it is prosecuted. In France, to-day there are 360 sugar factories and over 400 in Germany.

In the United States, the rise of the beet-root sugar industry was attended with the same difficulties as those just referred to. From Bulletin No. 52, published by the Department of Agriculture in Washington, in 1897, I gather that the first attempt to introduce this industry was made in 1830, when the yield was but a few hundred pounds of sugar. From 1831 to 1837, the output was nil.

From 1838 to 1839, 1,300 pounds.
From 1839 to 1862, nil.
From 1863 to 1871, 300 to 500 tons per year.
In 1872, 500 tons.
In 1873, 700 tons.
From 1874 to 1877, less than 100 tons per year.
In 1878, 200 tons.
In 1879, 1,200 tons.
In 1880, 500 tons.
From 1881 to 1882, less than 500 tons.
In 1883, 535 tons.
In 1884, 953 "
In 1885, 600 "
In 1886, 800 "
In 1887, 255 "
In 1888, 1,010 tons.
In 1889, 2,600 "
In 1890, 2,800 "
In 1891, 5,359 "
In 1892, 12,091 tons.
In 1893, 20,453 "
In 1894, 20,443 "
In 1895, 30,000 "
In 1896, 40,000 "

Within the last few years, the yearly output has reached over one hundred thousand tons.

As will be seen, it was as late as 1830 that this industry was started in the United States, and, just as in the case of our own country, it took several years before it yielded any results. It was even on the eve of being altogether abandoned, so unsatisfactory were the results obtained from the first experiments. Therefore we need not wonder if the introduction of the same industry into our country has resulted in so many failures.

That the problem of the manufacture of beet-root sugar is now satisfactory solved is beyond question, from the manufacturer's standpoint. As to whether sugar beets can be successfully grown with a sufficiently high precentage of first-class sugar to permit of their being manufactured with profit is now an indisputable fact. The great trouble with us here is the one I have just referred to, namely, the difficulty of inducing farmers to grow a beet which may prove acceptable as well as profitable to the manufacturer. The roots must also be raised in sufficient quantities to supply the factory for a reasonable period of time.

Now, this educational work is a question of time requiring a practice of several years. Nor can that education be brought up to the right standard, unless factories be started which will induce the farmers to grow the beet and will be willing to buy it from them at paying prices.

I shall not follow the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) in his review of all the advantages which would accrue to a particular locality from the establishment of a beet-sugar factory. All I need add is this: that the government should not view with indifference the unquestionable benefits which would result from the introduction of this industry into the country. If we consider the cost of building a factory, which is estimated at from $400,000 to $500,000 at least; if we consider that the introduction of this industry and the raising of the beets means the cultivation of several thousand acres of land, divided among 700 or 1,000 families; if we bear in mind that it means the employment of several hundred agricultural labourers, in addition to the many employees the sugar factory itself would require, it is easily seen how beneficial this industry would prove to the country.

But I have not yet pointed out all the advantages that would accrue to Canada from the establishment of the beet-sugar industry. For instance, a considerable quantity of pulp would be produced by the factory, and this by-product is known to be a very useful and desirable feed for animals, and it would thus stimulate dairying. It must be borne in mind that the manufacture of beet-root sugar also means the employment of a large amount of labour in the winter season, as well as in the summer season. There is no doubt that this industry would assist our farmers in fattening their stock and improving their farms and bringing them up to a higher state of cultivation, and so it would develop the wealth of the farming community. What happened elsewhere would also happen here. That such were the results obtained in Europe is beyond dispute.

In a special report published by the Department of Agriculture, in Washington, in connection with the beet-sugar industry, the writer points out the improvement of lands as one of the advantages accruing therefrom :

> The writer observed during his inspection of sugar-beet farms this summer that the owners of the land received in many instances as high as $5, in some cases $6, and in a few cases $7 per acre cash rent for land devoted to the raising of sugar beets, and this in localities where $3 per acre would have been the highest possible amount which could have been obtained as rent for similar land used for other farming purposes. Inquiry was particularly made into the value of land on which sugar beets were being raised around Watsonville and Alvarado, Cal., and it was rarely placed lower than $200 per acre. Rents were rated at from $10 to $15 per acre, yet those farmers claimed to be making a good profit raising beets. The sugar-beet lands of Utah were very much enhanced in value, so that the experience of this country up to the present time seems to be that the location of a beet-sugar factory in a district causes a healthy rise in rents and values of land.

I fail to see why the same cause should not produce the same effect here as in the United States. It is a matter of experience —and I have never entertained any doubt on this point—that a considerable increase in value of lands has always resulted from the location of a beet-sugar factory in any district.

Now, if such are the advantages resulting to any particular locality from the establishment of a beet-sugar factory, it is easily understood how beneficial would prove to the country the establishment of from thirty to forty sugar factories, which will be required for manufacturing sugar in quantities sufficient to supply the home market.

Now, in order to reach that end, what means are we to adopt ? It is an uncontroverted fact that the sugar-beet can be successfully grown in this country ; still, there is nothing yet in sight.

The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has referred more particularly to the bounties granted to the iron and steel industry. There are many other industries which could be added to the list.

As we all know, our industries have been developed under the favouring influence of protection and large bounties ; and in my humble opinion, no capitalist could be induced to embark in an industry which requires the outlay of such large capital, without being satisfied that he will be given aid at least for a limited number of years, so as to enable him to face the deficits which will undoubtedly occur at the initial stage of his operations.

What have we not done in the past in favour of the sugar refiners ? What protection did they not enjoy ? For many years they have been highly protected and even to-day they are still receiving indirectly a pretty high protection. But let me add here that such protection goes to benefit the refiner alone. For every ton of sugar manufactured, the refiner hardly shows $5 in the country, while the sugar manufacturer will spend at least $20. In those factories worth from two to three million dollars, the refiner gives employment to about two thousand workingmen. The building of the sugar factories which would entail an expenditure of from fifteen to twenty million dollars, would for a time give employment to mechanics, and once ready for the production of the sugar, they would require over ten thousand labourers, without mentioning the army of farmers and agricultural labourers engaged during the summer season in the cultivation of the beet.

There are many advantages accruing to this country from the beet-root sugar industry, for which the sugar manufacturer might claim credit, such as the high state of cultivation to which the lands are brought in raising sugar beets, which is intensive farming in every sense of the word ; the progressive increase of crops ; the raising of cattle on a large scale ; the increase in the output of milk, and consequently, the erection of dairies and creameries which naturally follow in the wake of factories.

The sugar refiner cannot show anything to his credit favourably comparing with those results. Now, since all governments, without any exception, have realized that it was in the interest of the community to protect sugar refineries, I do not see the reason why we should deny protection to an industry far more beneficial to the farming community than the sugar refining industry.

Should we succeed in introducing this great industry into the country, I have no hesitation in saying that it would prove most beneficial to the people of Canada in general, and that it would give a great stimulus to the farming industry. It is beyond question that whenever this industry is established in a locality it results in an all-round improvement. The culture of the beet, as I said, would have a most excellent effect on the development of farm lands by bringing them up to a higher state of cultivation, while it would give stimulation to corollary industries, such as the raising of dairy cattle, thus increasing the general wealth of the country. Even towns have sprung up in the wake of those sugar-beet factories.

It is stated, in a report published by the United States government, that a small town, Oxnard, owes its existence to no other cause than the introduction of the sugar beet industry into that district.

Why, Sir, within the past few years, have we not seen small towns, like Grand'mère, Shawinigan, Sault Sainte Marie, springing up as if by magic, in the wake of new industries ? History will repeat itself here, and the introduction of this industry into the country will be attended with similar results ; new towns will spring up around those factories, and a new impetus will thus be given to progress in those districts and in the country in general. And once the factory is in full operation, business men, traders, mechanics, workingmen of every description, will be seen flocking thither and settling down in the vicinity of the factory, in order to supply the wants of the people employed in this industry, thus forming the nucleus of a new town. One of the by products, the refuse molasses, might also be converted into first-class alcohol, and manufacturers would no doubt avail themselves of the opportunity for starting this industry. There are many other advantages which would accrue to the country from the introduction of the sugar beet industry ; but, as I do not wish to trespass upon the indulgence of the House, I need not refer to them at any greater length.

With these few remarks which I wished to offer to the House, I hesitate not to say that I can approve the resolution which is now in your hands, Mr. Speaker. When the opinion of this House is known, I hope that the government—and here I appeal more particularly to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who is an expert in such matters and who realizes all the good likely to result to the country from the introduction of such an industry—the government, I say, should not hesitate to grant a reasonable aid, so as to induce capitalists and manufacturers to invest their money in the building of sugar beet factories.

I am quite aware that the greatest care must be experienced in such matters, and that it behooves us to move slowly ; but I do not think there are any unsurmountable obstacles in the way, and I hope the government realizes that the time has come for them to assist this industry ; thus promoting the dearest interests of the country. The government, I have no doubt, will not hesitate to take the means of bringing about the successful establishment of this industry.

Mr. LEGRIS.

In connection with the sale of the Berthier sugar factory, I may say that those who were present when the machinery was being removed, prior to its being shipped across the line, felt, no doubt, very keenly the loss of that industry, but they thought that perhaps it was no such great loss, after all, seeing that the machinery was obsolete and without the required capacity for an output large enough to make it a paying business. It is out of question that a beet sugar factory must be provided with the most approved machinery and labour-saving appliances, with the capacity of turning out an output large enough to make the business paying. Now, this factory could utilize but 220 tons of beets per day, and as is well known, no such operations can be profitable unless a factory has a capacity of 500 tons a day.

The government are conversant enough with what is being done to-day in this line in the United States, to be able to decide upon the course to be adopted by them. Is it not a pity to see eight or nine million dollars yearly flowing out of the country, to pay for our home-consumption of sugar, an article which could be manufactured here ?

I think I have said enough to satisfy the government that they should come to the assistance of an industry which would prove so beneficial not only to the farming community, but to the country in general.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). At this early stage of the session, the government is not expected to make announcement of its policy on subjects of this kind. They are subjects which are properly to be considered, and upon which the government may fairly be expected to mature its policy in time for the presentation of the budget. As I anticipate at an early day being able to make my financial statement, I do not think that I should comment on the very interesting and able addresses to which we have listened, further than to say that we realize that the subject is one of deep interest and great importance, and that, at the proper time, the government will be prepared to declare its views on the subject. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I do not think that we should adjourn the debate, but that the government ought to be able to say whether they do or do not approve of the principle of the resolution. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) brought this matter to the attention of the House, I think, two years ago. I believe the question was brought up again last year, and a full discussion took place. On each of these occasions the government asked for an adjournment of the debate, or sought to shelve the question in some other way. But I think the time has arrived when the government should be ready to say whether they are for or against this motion. It looks as if the old plan were being tried, and that the government, finding it more convenient, are going to have the question stand over. For my part, I am quite willing to express my opinion by voice and vote ; and my opinion is that this parliament should grant a bonus, or subsidy, in whatever form may be considered best, for the promotion of the beet sugar industry in Canada. From the figures given by the hon. member for East Grey we learned that, in the United States, where there is a great production of cane sugar, they are promoting by enormous expenditure the production of beet sugar. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has told us that the state of Michigan has given up the bounties they were paying for the promotion of beet sugar manufacture. I do not know where that hon. gentleman got his information ; but I hold in my hand a copy of an Act 'To provide for the encouragement of the manufacture of beet sugar, and to provide compensation, and to make an appropriation therefor,' passed by the legislature of the state of Michigan. This Act is dated March 26, 1897, and section 8 in it, provides :

> Every person, firm or corporation that shall have in operation in this state a factory for the manufacture of sugar from beets with a capacity of 2,000 pounds of sugar or upwards per day, while this Act is in force, shall be entitled to receive from the state one cent per pound for beet sugar manufactured from beets in said factory for a period of seven years from the taking effect of this Act.

Seven years from March 26, 1897, would bring us to March 26, 1904 ; and we have not arrived at that by three years. I would like to know where the hon. member for North Norfolk got his information, that the Act had been repealed. They could not well repeal it, because it was a contract made with the proprietors of sugar manufactories.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I rather think the governor of Michigan refused to assent to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I am aware that Governor Pingree, besides doing many other things in the same direction, tried to destroy the effect of the Act. But I rather think the governor has disappeared. But whatever else he could do, he could not put a veto upon an Act that had been passed, as I take it, before he came into power.

The PRIME MINISTER. It was vetoed by the governor.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Pingree was not governor at the time the Act was passed. He has been governor since, and tried to cause some trouble about the Act. But there is the Act passed, and no governor could veto it, for, it is not like an ordinary Act, but is a contract with others. I presume that it is the law of the state of Michigan to-day. The hon. member for North Norfolk has been, in times gone by, an ardent admirer of the people of the United States. He tells us to-day that the beet-sugar industry is so enormously profitable that we should be foolish if we gave a subsidy or bounty to these factories. But the people on the other side of the line, whose business acumen the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) so much admires, are giving, so far as the state of Michigan is concerned, one cent a pound bonus for the promotion of this industry, and have undertaken to do so for seven years. They set no limit to the amount they will devote to that bounty. Other states of the Union also are giving large bounties, usually, I believe, one cent a pound, for the manufacture of this sugar. It is true that the hon. member for North Norfolk does not now express that high admiration for the people of the United States that he formerly did. But that is because he thinks they are too sharp in their business practices, too selfish and too much inclined to look after themselves. It is an additional proof of the wisdom of the step proposed by the hon. member for East Grey that these sharp and selfish and wide-awake people see such advantages in carrying on this manuafcture in their country that they give a bonus of one cent per pound to encourage it. Another point of great importance and one that has assisted me in reaching a conclusion is that in any country where this manufacture has been established as a great industry, it has reached large proportions only through the assistance of enormous bounties. In Germany, in France, in Belgium and other European countries, they not only give a subsidy for the manufacture, but they give a bounty for every pound exported. And these export bounties are causing the British government great trouble, because Great Britain's interests in the production of cane sugar in the West Indies and other places are greatly injured by the increase of importation into the British market of beet-root sugar. One fact is certain, and that is that, while the production of beet-root sugar is increasing enormously year after year, the production of cane sugar is almost at a standstill. The total increase in the world's consumption of sugar is increasing enormously, as shown by the figures read here to-day. As against 312,000,000 pounds imported into Canada last year, only about 200,000,000 pounds were imported a few years ago, and I remember that, in 1879, when the Conservative party came into power, the importation of sugar into Canada was only about 104,000,000 pounds. We have trebled our consumption in the last twenty-one or twenty-two years. The consumption of other countries also has enormously increased, one of the reasons being the much lower price at which sugar can be produced. The fact that other countries have become great producers of beet-root sugar through bounties is a strong argument, to my mind, why we should have bounties here. The hon. member for North Norfolk says there are men waiting to see whether we will not give a bounty, but that they are bound to put up sugar refineries here anyhow. Well, all I can say to them is this, we have been going on for twenty years, and during all this time the beet-root sugar industry has been increasing enormously each year, but we have been doing nothing, and we are doing nothing to-day. If we want to promote an industry in this country that will save $6,000,000 of the people's money—yes, $9,000,000, because we can save 312,000,000 pounds at three cents a pound, leaving the cost of manufacture out of the question altogether, we would be saving nine or ten million dollars a year and giving employment in our own country to our farmers, mechanics and carriers and so forth—it appears to me that this is an enterprise that should receive the encouragement and support of the government.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

He said : Mr. Speaker, I make no apology, Sir, for introducing the motion which I have placed on the Order paper, here this evening. The fact that a return ordered by this House one year ago, when brought down, was incomplete, garbled and distorted, is sufficient excuse why a full record should be required to be placed on the Table. There are other reasons, Sir, why I feel that the events in connection with the conduct of the late general officer commanding, the incidents in connection with this matter, and other matters which may properly be ventilated before this House, have not tended to bring about that growth of good feeling which theretofore existed between Canada and the mother land; not that it has materially interfered with it, but that it has more or less, Sir, so to speak, thrown a wet blanket over that growth of good feeling that existed and is still existing between this and the old land. Inasmuch as the late general officer commanding is not in Canada, it is not my intention to enter at any length, other than the mere necessity the motion requires, into his conduct in relation to myself. In other words, I do not purpose to make an attack upon the late general officer commanding in any sense whatever. I merely desire to place the facts as tersely before the House and the country as it is possible for me to do. In this connection it may be well that I should take the opportunity of informing the House, why, in the first place, I volunteered corps for service in South Africa, why thousands and tens of thousands of Canadians throughout the length and breadth of our country were desirous of taking part in assisting the mother land in the struggle, or why they offered to assist her in previous struggles. I may say that for years, Canadians had observed that England was occupying that position of splendid isolation to which reference has been made on previous occasions. We saw that Great Britain, through the growth of her commerce, through the liberties her people enjoyed, and through the great advantages she possessed throughout the world had incurred the enmity of the nations of the earth. Therefore, no better time could arise for the children of the mother land to stand shoulder to shoulder with her than on an occasion of this kind. We also saw that while Canada was of more or less advantage to Great Britain, we Canadians enjoyed very great advantages from being associated with the mother land. We saw ourselves benefited in fiscal matters, we saw ourselves protected by England's armies and navies, we had the prestige in the money markets of the world, and we saw that our consular service was performed for us by the mother land at no cost to Canada. Therefore, viewing it from the aspect of material advantage, Canada being a nation of six million inhabitants, as populous and powerful as was Great Britain at the time of the Spanish Armada, we saw no reason why Canada should not step to the front and bear her fair share in the upbuilding of the empire. And, I may say incidentally, that I believe there is not an hon. gentleman before me to-night, but will cordially agree with me, that, great as the expense and great in some respects as the loss has been to Canada in connection with the war, it has been many times returned by the advertisement which we have had as an immigration scheme alone. Canada is known to-day by the world as she was never known before, and I venture to say that the money that has been expended in this war has been more than returned by the immigration attracted to our shores. More than that, Sir, for years Canadians have observed an attempt being made to disrupt the empire. We saw a movement in this land aiming towards commercial union and closer trade with the United States, but, whatever the promoters of that scheme may have had in view, it could have had but one termination, and that was the annexation of this country to the United States of America. We saw an attempt made, Sir, out in the Australasian colonies to produce the independence of those colonies and the formation of republics, and we have seen for many a long year the attempts of the Boer population in South Africa to establish a Boer republic stretching from the Zambesi to the sea. On this ground also many thousands of Canadians who were favourable to the maintenance of the British Empire, saw that the time had arrived for the colonies to stand shoulder to shoulder with the mother land in seeking to upbuild the empire, and in teaching the foreign nations of the earth that when they touch the mother land they have to account to the colonies as well. We saw an attempt made to bring about the establishment of a Boer republic in South Africa. I may be excused, Sir, for quoting on this subject from Mr. Wessels, himself a prominent Boer in South Africa, who, like many more in that land, I am pleased to say, has been a loyal Boer. Mr. Wessels, in the course of a very interesting review which he has written on this subject, points out that for many years the Boer population in South Africa has aimed at the formation of a Boer republic stretching from the Zambesi to the sea, and driving the English flag, as they term it, into the ocean. Speaking of the aspirations of the Boers and of their party, he says :

> It wants the complete independence of South Africa. The British flag shall no longer protect its shores, or at the most it may obtain the voluntary concession of a right to protect. But do these people realize what the position of the Cape would be if it were not a portion of the British Empire ? Do they know that it would be exposed to the first naval power that came along, and that it is not impossible to conceive that the shrieking members of the bond might become the subjects of some Asiatic sea power like Japan. It was therefore not only an honour ; it was an advantage to be a member of the British Empire. Can you understand how any one could wish to exchange his right of British citizenship for the privilege of being ruled over by President Kruger and his family ? Advisedly I add his family, for any one intimate with political life in the Transvaal, would know that the family of Paul Kruger had a greater influence there than the grandsons of the Queen have in the territories of the British Empire. To many there is a fascination in the word 'republic.' They think you have but to baptise any form of government with the name 'republic,' and then freedom immediately sets her throne there. Unwise men. If they will make themselves acquainted with the history of Venice and the Italian republics, they will soon find that the word 'republic' does not always spell freedom. If by republic we mean political equality, freedom of thought and freedom of language and religion, then the British Empire is verily the greatest republic in the world, and its sovereign its permanent president. But, ladies, if by republic we mean a narrow and selfish oligarchy, then heaven defend us from republics.

This is the view of Mr. Wessels, one of the prominent Africanders in South Africa. This aspiration of the Boers for an independent republic is not of modern growth. The Boers took possession of South Africa many long years ago, about 1651, when the Dutch East India Company made a settlement there. From the very earliest time that people showed a determination not to follow in the footsteps of William the Silent, or his successor, William Prince of Orange, the leader in the great Stadt holdership in Holland, but they were actuated by the opposite spirit which characterized the descendants of the Puritans in the early days of Massachusetts, of the men who had left the old land for liberty of conscience, and who were no sooner settled in their new homes than they embarked themselves upon the same spirit of persecution which they had condemned in the old land. So, these men whose ancestors had fought for liberty for many a long year had no sooner become centered in South Africa than they showed that same tyrannical spirit which characterized the conduct of the Puritans in the United States of America. Towards the close of the seventeeth century, when the French Huguenots, the men who were driven from their country by persecution, sought homes in that far-off clime, they were forced immediately to give up the use of the French language and to take that of the Boers. Therefore, these people have shown a tyrannical spirit from the outset. Prior to this the Britishers who settled in the colony had been forced to leave. In 1795-6, when Britain was at war with France, she lost upwards of 1,500 vessels by French cruisers operating from the Mauritius, and the Boers have in recent years pointed this out as a very material fact ; boasting that one of the surest ways to cripple the British Empire was to deprive her of her naval stations in South Africa. The attack by the Boers on British rule was long premeditated. Britain conquered that country and handed it back in 1802. In 1806 she reconquered it. She acquired it by treaty in 1815, having paid £6,000,000 sterling for it and for Dutch Guiana to the Dutch government. The next step in the history of the Boer government in South Africa is this. In 1815, when by the Treaty of Vienna, Britain was confirmed in her right to South Africa, the Dutch or Boer settlers rebelled, their excuse being that they did so because of the liberal treatment Great Britain had accorded to the native population. They fought the British, and five of their leaders were arrested, and after trial by a Dutch judge and Dutch jury, they were sentenced to death and hanged. To-day we find men in South Africa pointing back to this as a reason why the Boers should now drive the English out of that country. Why, we in this country might as well ask, that on account of the persecution of the Huguenots, and the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, and the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes ; we might as well call on our kinsmen to drive our fellow-countrymen of French Canadian descent out of Canada to-day, were such arguments to hold in the discussion of a question of this kind. From the outset the aim of the Boers was to establish a Boer republic all over South Africa. They quarrelled with the Dutch East India Company, and when in 1820 the British sought to plant 5,000 good Scotch people in that territory, the Boers raised such a row, that from that day until this Britain (pursuing that policy, which I regret to say, has been characteristic of her in recent years, of bowing before these unjust demands)—from that day to this, Britain has made no effort whatever to bring about the settlement of that country.

But there was a greater cause which those Canadians who were desirous of upholding the empire saw at the root of all this, and that was the violation of the principle which was established by the American war of Independence, namely, that taxation carried with it the right of representation. Since that day this principle has been recognized as an essential of proper government throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world. In South Africa our fellow-British subjects were taxed without being represented. They paid, at the very lowest estimate, 80 per cent of the taxes that went into the Transvaal treasury, but neither directly nor indirectly had they a voice or vote in the management of the affairs of that community ; but, Sir, some of those little Englanders, some of those who are always ready to take the side of the enemies of their country, now rise up and say : But why did not these men become citizens of the Transvaal and obtain the franchise ? Well, they could not become citizens of the Transvaal. They had to give notice of their intention of becoming citizens, and that took two years, and they had to record themselves within three weeks of their first entrance into the country, so that if they failed in this they were at the mercy of the field cornets as to whether they could again register their intention to be naturalized. They had to swear allegiance to the Transvaal, and they had to foreswear their allegiance to their native land. Then, after dangling between the devil and the deep sea, for twelve long years——

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I said nothing about the hon. gentleman. These Britishers living in the Transvaal might succeed in becoming citizens of the country after fourteen long years. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, before they were granted citizenship, they had to prove they never attended a public meeting where anything had been said against the Transvaal government ; that they had never written anything against the Transvaal government, and they had to have a two-thirds vote of the burghers of the locality where they resided before they could be enrolled as citizens. Therefore, when these little Englanders in Canada, or the old land, side with the enemies of Britain as they sometimes do, and tell us that these men should have become citizens of the Transvaal, they either know not whereof they speak or else they are deliberately suppressing the facts and talking against the dictates of their conscience. As an additional reason why Canadians were determined to stand firm and loyal by the mother land, I may point out that the Boers had deliberately violated the convention of 1881. Those Canadians who went to the aid of the empire saw that the Boer policy was not a policy of liberty, but a policy to perpetuate the Kruger oligarchy. A Boer said to me in South Africa : The last thing in the world that Kruger and his friends want is an independent republic, either in the Transvaal or the Orange Free State, because a republic would mean that every citizen would have a right to vote, and then the electorate would not be numbered by 15,000, but by 150,000, and the majority of them would be Britishers, who would become Transvaal citizens, and would swamp the Kruger government. That observation of the Boer explains the situation.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, however, that the keynote of the whole cause of Boer antipathy to British rule is to be found in the negro question. We have heard in the press and on the platform, and perhaps in this House, how the Boers were forced by British tyranny to trek from their happy homes on the sea coast, and across the mountains and the Karoo, to settle in the inhospitable regions of the Transvaal and the Free State. We have heard that time and again, but what are the facts ? In 1833 the Wilberforce Act was passed, abolishing slavery in the British dominions. In 1834 the Boers were paid $170 for every man, woman and child slave they held, and which cost them nothing, because all they had to do was to round up a native tribe and get all the slaves they thought they needed. It may be that all this money did not reach the Boers ; it may be that financial agents pocketed a good deal of it, but the fact stands forth that $170 for each slave was voted to them. Following this, in 1835-6 and 1837, began the great trek of the Boers into the Transvaal and the late Orange Free State. Why did they go there ? They were actuated by four motives. The first was that they might hold slaves ; the second, that they might be freed from taxation unless that taxation was levied by themselves on negroes or on foreigners. The third reason was that they might acquire possession of those rich and fertile valleys which, from the reports of missionaries, were for many years known to exist there ; because missionaries had traversed the Orange Free State and the Transvaal long before the Boers settled in those countries. Another reason was that they might establish a little republic of their own, with a seaport where the present Durban is situated. These were the reasons which actuated them in treking away to that remote region.

I shall not discuss any further the causes of the war or the reasons which actuated Canadians in desiring to assist the empire in these troubles. But I might point out that evidence is forthcoming which cannot be contradicted, of the fact that the Boers for a number of years had a deliberate intention of forcing a war on Great Britain and driving her from South Africa in order to establish a Boer republic in that country. A letter is extant from the late Secretary of the Orange Free State, in which he wrote :—

> The only thing we are afraid of is that Chamberlain, with his admitted fitfulness of temper, will cheat us out of a war and consequently out of an opportunity to annex Natal and Cape Colony, and to form a republican United States of South Africa.

Matters went passably well with these people ; their scheme was being carried out ; the Bond had control in South Africa, and everything seemed favourable to their scheme, when, by one of those happy strokes of good fortune, Mr. Chamberlain became colonial minister of Great Britain, and he had the wisdom or good fortune to select as the representative of Great Britain in South Africa Sir Alfred Milner. From that moment the rights of Britishers in South Africa were placed on a better footing. Sir Alfred Milner took hold of the question in a kindly and temperate spirit, and endeavoured to bring about by fair means a settlement of the issues between the two nations. But, unfortunately, the Boers were determined on war in the hope of driving the British out of South Africa, and the war began. I might quote from an article written anterior to the war by a leading citizen of the Swiss republic to show what his theory of the problem was. He said :

> Once more, let it be said, we refuse to draw a parallel between this oligarchy, gorged with the Uitlanders' gold, and our fathers, our ancient magistrates, or the heroic shepherds of Montenegro. But the Transvaal is in existence, and there are good elements in it, and it may reform. In our opinion, no reform will come without freedom. May the Transvaal not present to the world the spectacle of a small country in which liberty can only be established on the ruins of independence. May it accept the proposals offered. May it fashion out of the Uitlanders citizens interested, even as the Boers, in the welfare of the country, and in its prosperity ; and with the undreamt-of material resources at its disposal, it will be in its power to become one of the most flourishing states of the old and new world.

That was written on October 25, 1899, by Edouard Naville, a very prominent Swiss authority.

Now, Sir, Canadians saw another aspect of the case also. We desired to assist the old land, not only for the reasons I have mentioned, but because of certain weaknesses that characterized her. We saw that Great Britain was unprepared for a great war of this kind. As usual, she had been going along in that happy-go-lucky style which has characterized her for the last generation or so. We saw that she was still controlled in trade matters by Cobdenism ; that fad, if I may so term it, was still dominant throughout the length and breadth of the British islands. We saw that at the time of the transition from sail to steam, factories and foundries had sprung up all over the country ; we saw that the transition from oak to iron in British ships had added immensely to the trade and commerce of Great Britain ; and we saw England ascribing her success, not to these two improvements, but to the fact that Mr. Cobden had once preached in favour of free trade. In military matters—I say it with all due respect—we felt that Great Britain was not prepared for a war of that character ; for, powerful as she might be, she was distant from the scene of action 7,000 miles by sea, in addition to 1,500 miles over a narrow gauge railway over which her forces had to travel to meet the enemy in the mountain passes. It is a rule of warfare that one man behind a breastwork four feet high, and provided with a long range rifle, is equal to eight men similarly armed who are advancing against him. We knew the nature of the country, and we knew that the Boers had from 80,000 to 90,000 fighting men whom they could put in the front of battle. According to the rule of Germany, France and other European military powers, how many men would England have to put in the field to meet those men on an equal footing ? She would have to put in from 500,000 to 600,000 men ; and where could she get that number of regulars to take the field ? Canadians were irregulars—men whose individuality and power of initiative was developed, as is always the case with men in a new country ; and we felt, a great many of us, that Canadians could very properly assist the mother land as irregulars, to do what colonial troops have been largely called upon to do in this war, act in the capacity of scouts.

I regret to find on the part of some British military authorities since the war a disposition to criticise adversely the British soldier. I shall refer to one case of this kind ; though I trust this is a false report of a statement attributed to an officer of the name of Sir John Hay MacDonald, who is said to be a celebrated tactician. There was a saying going in Africa that in order to be a first-class failure it was necessary that a man should have written a book on tactics before he went to South Africa, and after he came out he would have the reputation of not being able to apply his own tactics in the field. However, I do not know whether or not this officer was in South Africa, and if it is true that he made this statement, he slanders the British soldier. This is what he says :

> There is a pitiable lack of soldierly initiative in the rank and file of the British army. Instead of feeling himself a live unit, Tommy Atkins is a mere plank glued into a palisade. He is an unintelligent 'look-straight-to-the front' automaton, in whom any natural mode of motion is a crime. He spends in acquiring a chesty front and a fancy swing the time he ought to employ getting acquainted with his rifle. He is taught that his gun is a mere burden, to be lugged about, shouldered, ordered and presented.

Then he adds :

> Our commanding officers also have something to learn. They still shout orders which can be heard a mile off. They do not realize that the new conditions of war demand leading in absolute silence, and signalling not calculated to attract the enemy's attention.

Then, following on this officer, who was slandering the soldiers who had fought so well, I find another, the late general officer commanding in Canada, General Hutton, who has lately returned from Africa—I find him stating :

> Better men would be available for the British army if the pay were bigger, and he cited the higher standing of recruits existing in the United States army, which was due to the increased pay.

I am not responsible for this statement, but it has been said that the British officer is all that his training fits him for. A very eminent English authority has stated that the ordinary British officer is not supposed to devote much attention to war or the subject of war, that his chief function is to parade Piccadilly, practice dancing, and sacrifice the profession of a soldier for that of the society favourite. I am not aware whether that is true or not. The statement is not mine, but has been made by an eminent gentleman in the old land. But what I do say is this, that having seen the British soldier and the British officer in South Africa, and having read a great deal of the history of the British army, I believe that the manhood of the British soldier or officer never came to the front to the same extent as during the present war. They suffered from disadvantages there, which very few people realize, but I also stand here to give my opinion that whatever faults may be found with the British army, are due not to the men or the officers, but to the system under which they are trained. The fact is, as I said in this House ten or eleven sessions ago, and have frequently repeated since, this glueing to the plank idea of discipline is not the way to make soldiers. I have seen officers pass me on the street in Ottawa and other cities, and decline to speak to me in days gone by, because I dared to point out that the permanent corps were run too much on the martinet principle, and there was not enough of the discipline from within, for unless you can govern men from within, government from without is merely the discipline of the prison or the slave.

Having foreseen all this, a number of Canadians determined to do their best in assisting, as far as possible, to stir up the spirit of colonials in favour of assisting Britons in this war. With this object in view, it was my privilege to be commissioned informally to visit Australia and New Zealand. I may state that I was not commissioned by any government, but went on the invitation of friends in 1897, and part of 1898, in order to encourage as far as possible the spirit that I knew to be existent in those lands in favour of the colonies assisting the Imperial troops in time of war. I need not say that Australia and New Zealand have both magnificently come to the front in this war, and it was my privilege to meet a great many officers and soldiers in Africa that I met in Australia and New Zealand.

Having briefly led up to the beginning of this matter, I may say that from the time of the appointment of the late general officer commanding in Canada, I took the question up with him. I wish here to state that among the general officers commanding, who have been in Canada the last ten or fifteen years, only one—and that was General Herbert—directly or indirectly gave any encouragement to the idea that Canadians could be of any service in England in the fighting line. Every one of them pooh-poohed the notion that we could possibly be of any use even in guarding base points. I may say that among those may be classed the late general officer commanding, General Hutton. From the outset to the latter part of July, he persistently repudiated the opinion that Canadians directly or indirectly could be of any service in South Africa, and went so far as to get the opinion from Canadian officers that Canadians would not volunteer, and that if they did, they would not be of much use. However, I shall not follow his example and attack him in his absence. I merely wish to place a concise statement of the case before this House, in order that the legal aspect of the case—and that is the point that I wish specially to bring up—may be clearly presented and discussed if necessary, so that in the future we may not commit any of the mistakes that have been committed in the past.

I find, in glancing through the return brought down to this House, that a number of private and confidential letters have been included. I took the liberty of asking the hon. the Minister of Militia on my return, how this occurred. He pointed to the report of General Hutton in the return, which stated that he had notified me that these were going to be produced, and that I had acquiesced in their production. I never knew directly or indirectly, until a short time before I stepped on board the steamer, that he had prepared his brief. I never glanced at the brief until I was sailing down the St. Lawrence, and in hurriedly glancing over it, I saw that one very important letter was omitted. I did not notice until later that a dozen or two important documents were omitted, and I wired back to the Militia Department from Father Point to that effect. I would not withdraw one line of any private letter I wrote or apologize for any line I ever wrote privately, provided the late general officer commanding had placed before the public the communications from him which drew forth these letters. We had fought this thing out for many a long day, whether the militia of Canada could or could not take part in Imperial wars, and it finally culminated in his stating to me that we might as well try to fly to the moon as to take the field alongside British regulars, short of three years training, and not even then, unless led by Imperial officers. On that occasion I took the liberty of resenting the imputation cast upon me. I failed to see why we Canadians should not be as good soldiers as our kinsmen across the waters. We were trained and accustomed to have our individuality developed as was the case of people in all new countries ; and having this taunt thrown at me for the hundredth time, I repudiated it, possibly in language more forcible than polite. And when I found this sent out all over Africa in printed and typewritten documents, distributed among the officers, to handicap and injure me, I feel I am justified in placing this matter in its proper light before the House.

I wrote to General Hutton :

> It must not be forgotten that we in Canada know of Britain's fossil ways in many things. We are not in love with her because of that, or because of the barnacles and other creatures fastened upon her noble body. We love her in spite of very many characteristics that belong to the dark ages, and because of her noble institutions; her love of individual liberty as presented in her people, the detestation of tyranny in great or small, and her love of laws and obedience thereto so long as they are the laws of the people, and are not arbitrarily administered.

I may say that the letter was written, possibly, in a little hurry, but I would not change much of its language even to-day.

> We love her also for her glorious record in war and in literature; for the noble men and women who have helped to upbuild her in ennobling humanity. But we have no love for those who imagine that Britain's greatness depends on officialdom, nor for those Britishers—'remittance men,' chance offspring and others sent out to the colonies, and too often placed in positions of trust which they are incapable of filling. It is our desire to form part of the great empire; and so far as I am concerned, I am ready now to have Canada assume her direct responsibility and consequent control in the Imperial machine. But such movements must be approached gradually; public opinion must be quietly or at least effectively educated.
> Let me point out that wherever British regulars have fought with Canadian volunteers, side by side, victory has ever been theirs. Wherever disaster occurred in the war of 1812 there were no Canadians. Imagine the Boers catching Canadians as the British were bagged at Brankhurst Spruit, Laing's Nek, Ingogo or Majuba Hill. A few Canadians would have seen the traps laid, and would have endeavoured to catch the enemy instead of being caught.

I admit that it may not have been very palatable to the general officer commanding to have a statement like that made to him. But he had drawn it upon himself by his repeated utterances. I had been assured that we could not march, and could not stand should we get into battle. I had been assured that from a physical or from a drill and discipline viewpoint, we were unfit. I tried to point out to the general officer commanding that the discipline that had been known in the English army, the French army, or the German army was not discipline fit for anything but slavery and the jail. I say that advisedly. Sir, it is the turning point with any army. Point out to me the great British military successes of the past, and I will point out the individuality of her sergeants and her private soldiers, the capacity in them to take advantage of situations as they arose. Individuality—it is the lack of this that will cause any army to be smashed by second-rate powers on any and every occasion. I pointed out, on the same occasion, possibly in language a little warm, but still constitutional and true—and language, used, be it remembered, after

I had been taunted with my desire to serve Her Majesty in the field—

But my anxiety for active service is inspired by the knowledge or the belief that the trend of government to-day, as of societies, is towards centralization and control by the few great powers. Realizing that for years influences operated by foreign powers and aiming at the disintegration of the British Empire were potent, not alone in the colonies, but even in the British Islands themselves, I have striven in my humble capacity to preserve and perpetuate the spirit of patriotism to the mother land, not imperialism in the red tape, narrow sense ; but in that of broad, tolerant, responsible government, that which develops the principles of intelligent personal liberty, to its greatest extent. It is that principle, and not red tape officialdom which has won Britain's battles by land and sea; made her famous in language, literature and learning; given impetus to her mechanical and scientific inventions and discoveries; caused her judges and jurists to be respected ; and developed the highest purity in social life.

Then comes a little point from which considerable capital has been attempted to be made against me :

I say nothing of religion, for religion and so-called 'religion,' which loses in form the spirit, are essentially different—the latter has ever been the foe, implacable and steadfast, to personal liberty and progress.

I do not retract anything from that statement either.

Therefore, my anxiety is not for active service for employment's sake; but the upbuilding of the empire with its many attendant blessings is the motive principle. From a boy, I longed for some one to lead in the movement. All feared to touch it. Finally, when but nineteen years old, I first advocated the question of an Imperial union, military, commercial and political. My views have never changed, other than to broaden. The lesson that time, but more especially instruction, inspiration, education and the overcoming of prejudices in the minds and hearts of a people are essentials to the accomplishment of every great design, has been learned.

Here is a point that, with others, was sent broadcast among British officers in South Africa.

Why should I from personal motives, have 'anxiety' to go to South Africa and probably be placed under some Imperial incompetent, such as have brought dishonour and disgrace on Britain's arms in the past; and by falling in the cause only assist 'to fertilize the soil' of that inhospitable country, merely 'for employment on active service?' I can secure decent burial in Canada, or live respected and honoured by my friends. But I am willing, for the honour and upbuilding of the British Empire and for British humanity, to go and take my chances. With my practical ideas, I feel that I would not be an injury to the cause. At least no ambuscades would be walked into; no atttempts to capture Boer positions as they desired would be made, no fool policy of putting 600 men in a place where 6,000 were necessary, would be adopted, on data or advice furnished by me.

The next paragraph was pointed out in his report to the Minister of Militia or perhaps,

I should not say his report, but his letters, to South Africa—as something henious :

My dear General, that is a lovely sentence, 'Those great qualities of self-effacement,' &c. ; but permit me to inform you that I have for upwards of thirty years been a careful student of history, and have had favoured opportunities of getting 'behind the scenes' re the 'Horse Guards' and 'War Office' methods of influence and appointments. Therefore, your beautiful sentence re self-effacement in great officers is entirely lost on me. I am desirous of learning where any British officer of note has, outside of vacancies caused in actual warfare, been promoted to high command on his merits alone ; Lord Roberts alone excepted. What the 'Horse Guards' and 'War Office' do not know about intrigue and influence, and the absence of self-effacement in one's friends if not directly in one's self, cannot be learned from the most noted body for such in the world.

—and so on. Another point in the letter that was considered a criminal offence almost—was so treated at all events, because I was persecuted as, I believe it has been the luck of no other Canadian officer to be :

I do not profess to be skilful in leading expeditions to the moon——

That had reference to the statement that we might as well attempt to fly to the moon as to take the field alongside the regular British soldier short of three years' training and not then unless led by Imperial officers :

History shows that Britain has had many experts at such and not so many skilled or capable of leading men against fighting men. True, battles have been won by British generals' and minor officers' plans, such as Wellington and his colleagues; Roberts, Kitchner and others, but to the British soldier is due victory again and again, despite the stupidity and blundering of British officers. These, as you know, are not alone my own views. You say I would be incapable to serve alongside British regulars ; why? Could not I retreat or surrender quickly enough to the Boers? History shows that the Yankees, whom Canadians could always defeat, though with great odds against us, repeatedly dressed and combed down British troops, led by British officers ; while the old plugs of Boer farmers wallopped the British though the odds were often against them.

I do know that I was cut out for a prophet, but this seems almost prophetic :

In the coming Boer trouble a similar result will be found to arise if ordinary British tactics be employed. We claim to be as good men and as accurate riflemen as are the Boers who have repeatedly 'licked' your British officers. Therefore, I fail to see wherein I am unfit to serve alongside British troops. Of course, the Boers have no 'Horse Guards' pull.

I am free to admit, on reading it over, that that does seem a little what you might call incisive. But after being turned down as I had been, after having been told, not once but fifty times that we were unfit to take the field alongside these men, and being tauntingly told that we might as well try to fly to the moon as to think of such a thing, I thought I was justified in hitting straight from the shoulder—and it came. Mark you, this was a private letter to General Hutton. Speaking of the use of private letters, I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman very recently, speaking in reference to a letter, not marked private, but an ordinary letter written in friendship, and speaking of the use of that letter, said that a man was unworthy to associate with respectable citizens who would dare make use of a letter so written. What then can be said of a man who would seek to take advantage of such a letter as this, written privately and in all confidence, and in answer to his taunts, and most of the contents of the letter being in reply to invitations from him to give my views on certain questions ? What, Sir, can be said of the use of such a letter ? I am very glad the Minister of Militia and Defence is able to clear himself of what to me looks so strange at first sight, that is, allowing the use of any of those letters in the return brought down. But I see it is clearly intimated in the return that these were all sent to me some time previously. Sir, I never received them, never heard of them until they were handed to me by the quartermaster general shortly prior to my stepping on board the steamer at Quebec. More than that, there is a distinguished officer, Col. Herchmer, who held a telegram and a letter written from the general ordering him to join his corps. When Col. Herchmer presented himself, he was emphatically informed by this same officer that these letters were not official, and he declined directly or indirectly to recognize them.

Now, I will come down briefly to the questions at issue. For many long years, as members of this House know, I have advocated colonial assistance in Imperial wars. I have always got along as well as I possibly could with the general officers commanding ; I never had a quarrel with any of them which could be called a quarrel, until this one. Why did I quarrel with General Hutton ? Was I foolish enough to run up against the general officer commanding without good and sufficient reason ? He was a personal aide de camp to Her Majesty, he was reputed to be immensely wealthy, he stated that he controlled the columns of the London Times. He boasted that he had upset one government in Australia, and that he would upset another in Canada if things did not go his way. It was to my interest to stand in with the general officer commanding. But it was evident from the outset that he was determined no one should hold an opinion different from his own. The militia throughout the country bowed to him in every way. But from the outset he gave us to understand that there was to be no questioning, that he was to be superior and supreme over every one.

My first meeting with him took place in the beginning of 1899. In the fall of 1898 he issued an address, that address is in the department to-day. If it is not in the department I will be pleased to furnish the Minister of Militia and Defence with a copy. In that address he deliberately slanders the officers and men of the rural battalions throughout this country whom he had never seen. More than that, he goes on and lays down what he terms a system of instruction. Then he issues these circulars, and requested criticisms thereon. I gave a criticism, a fair and temperate one, and it is on file in the department to-day, and I stand by that criticism on the question of instruction. His plan was that drill sergeants from the various permanent corps should go and take charge over the officers in the various camps of instruction throughout the country and give instructions in drilling. The ground I took was that the proper place for a drill sergeant to get in his work was in the training of officers in the military schools and I addressed the Minister of Militia and Defence—he has heard of it often, and I hope he will hear of it again —saying that the proper place for the drill sergeant to get in his work is in training the officers at the schools. We want none of them, I will not have them, and I give fair warning that I shall not have a drill sergeant put over my battalion to drill me. When it comes to that I shall resign, and so will every self-respecting colonel in the Dominion of Canada. When it comes to having a drill sergeant from the schools put over the commanding officer to drill him and his battalion in camp, it is humiliating to the man who wears a uniform, and if he has a spark of manhood he will either go and qualify himself or get out of the force. The proper place for the drill sergeant is in training these officers in schools of instruction, and so I told General Hutton, as I had frequently told him. But I was not forgiven for that, I had committed an offence in answering his own request for criticism, and in differing from him.

Then followed a long discussion. As I said he opposed a corps going. I am sorry the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is not in his place. The Minister of Public Works at that time, strange to say, seemed to be on the opposite side from the general. At that time the Minister of Public Works was a staunch advocate of sending a corps to South Africa in case of war. I interviewed him on several occasions before he went to Paris on what he thought might be his last illness—I am glad it was not. At all events he was very loyal ; and pledged himself that he would see to it that his fellow-countrymen, at all events, were represented man for man, according to population with other parts of the Dominion in case a contingent should go to South Africa. At that time the general officer commanding opposed it. Later on they changed sides, the general officer commanding took action, and I think—I have no authority to make the statement, and I am open to correction—but I believe he himself volunteered a corps without consulting either the Minister of Militia and Defence or the Prime Minister, after having opposed it up to the eleventh hour. Then forthwith the quarrel began between the late General Officer Commanding and the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works, I believe, flopped over to the other side, and decided that a contingent could not go except parliament were first consulted. However, I leave that to the two gentlemen concerned to fight it out themselves. It was most interesting to watch the various changes.

Now, I want to draw attention to what was the most important constitutional error, as I think, on the part of the general officer commanding, and I bring this up, not for the purpose of hurting General Hutton at all, but in order that general officers commanding, and the militia men of this country, and members of parliament, may know where they stand. The House will remember that in 1899 I placed a motion on the paper in relation to sending a corps to the Transvaal, or, at all events, in favour of colonial assistance in Imperial wars. I was sent for by General Hutton the morning afterwards, and in telling this House what took place between General Hutton and myself, I mention only what transpired in his office with him in his official capacity. I shall not refer to anything that did not transpire in his office. He sent for me, and I thought when I got the message that he was going to give me some pointers, and I went over to his office as delighted as a child would be with a tin whistle. I thought at last I had got the ear of the general. When I got there, imagine my surprise to be told by the general officer commanding that I could not speak on these motions in the House of Commons without his permission, and that he would not give me his permission.

Mr. BOURASSA. Military rule.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). It was in vain that I cited the history of the British constitution to show that on one occasion a British officer, in the presence of the enemy, had left his force and had returned to take his seat in the British House of Commons, and had exposed the weakness of the ministry of the day. In vain I brought this to his attention, and showed him the British constitution, what the powers of a British regular officer were in this respect. He was unyielding, and positively forbade me to rise on my feet in this House and speak on military questions without his permission, and his permission he would not give. All I need say on that matter is that if hon. gentlemen will turn to the speech that I made on that occasion in the House, they will see that the first third of my speech was devoted to quoting from authorities here and in the old country, the very highest authorities, to show that I was perfectly within my rights in speaking on military questions in the House. I presume that I should have taken different steps at that time, a little more severe, but I was anxious to do things as smoothly as possible, and I think when the whole thing is reviewed, it will be found that I have acted courteously in the matter. I shall not take up the time of the House in referring to a lot of the letters that I have called for, although they were omitted from the last return, but will proceed now with matters that affect the constitution. As incidents in connection with the South African affair gradually got warm, I had repeatedly offered to the Imperial authorities and the general officer commanding here, to raise a corps for active service, and every time I was turned down by the General. Then I wrote officially, as will be found in the return, a letter on July 24, 1899, directly through the official military channel, to the officer commanding, offering my services in the Transvaal. That letter was forwarded to him through the office of the district officer commanding. Therefore, no charge can be brought against me of having ignored the proper military channel. I knew that I was not required by law to do it; except in regard to matters concerning my own battalion. I was not called upon to make an application to the general officer commanding through the district officer commanding, except as a matter of courtesy, but I was determined that not the slightest stone should be left unturned to smooth the way and that I should go to the utmost point to satisfy the general commanding. I therefore officially applied to him. The letter was sent to him and I got a mere acknowledgment of it. It was filed, and I believe, was never forwarded to the minister. I asked the question on several occasions and there is no return that that letter was laid before the minister. On the same day I applied directly to the hon. Minister of Militia, and here is a point. I signed this letter as commanding officer of the 45th Battalion. If I want to keep a Chinese laundry, I can put my sign up and sign my full military title in connection with it. I can use my military title, and not bring myself under the military law in the slightest. I trust my military friends in the country who may not know much about the military law, will note this: that a military officer may sign himself Col. Prior or Major Fowler, as often as he pleases, and not bring himself under the military law of the country. I wrote to the hon. Minister of Militia, the following letter:

House of Commons,
Ottawa, July 24, 1899.

To the Hon. F. W. Borden, M.D., &c., Minister of Militia and Defence.

Sir,—I have the honour to renew my offer made thrice previously in writing, and several times orally, to enroll and lead on active service abroad in the Imperial service a regiment or a brigade of Canadians.

As I had offers from scores of officers and more than 1,500 men on former occasions when my proposal became public, so to-day with the lowering clouds over the Transvaal many offers are renewed. I may merely quote one as an example, Lt.-Col. E. Harrison, of the 49th, as well as many more, is anxious to serve under me in such a contingency.

I am prepared to serve either as leader of a Canadian regiment under pay of Canada, or, which I deem better policy, under pay of the empire.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
SAM. HUGHES, Lt.-Col.,
Commanding 45th Victoria Batt.

This was referred by the hon. Minister of Militia, very properly, to the general officer commanding. It was also referred, and I thank the hon. minister for his very manly conduct throughout all these proceedings, to the Privy Council. I did not know till my return, that it had ever been before the Privy Council. Therefore, so far as the hon. minister could do it, he placed it before the Imperial authorities. What was the conduct of the general officer commanding? He sent a note to the Minister of Militia noting the offer.

July 31, 1899.

The Hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence.

1. I note the offer of Lieut.-Colonel S. Hughes to raise and command Canadian troops in active service.

2. The letter speaks well for that officer's military spirit, and his application will be considered in the event of a contingency arising which would necessitate Canadian troops being raised for active service.

Here is the point which shows that at that time he had animus :

3. I would add that there are many officers with greater experience and an equal zeal to that shown by this officer.

4. I note that Lieut.-Col. S. Hughes has corresponded direct with you in his military capacity as commanding the 45th Battalion, and has, moreover, offered his military services without my sanction or approval. His attention has been directed to this irregularity and breach of military procedure.

EDW. T. H. HUTTON, Major-General.
Commanding Canadian Militia.

But General Hutton's letter to me reprimanding me for writing to the Minister is not published. I want to see a copy of that letter. I have it, but I wired from Father Point to have it included, although it is not included. I see a statement which bears on the face of it a misstatement that the letter is included—'see the preceding.' It is not the same as the preceding. I replied to the letter, which is omitted, as follows :

Headquarters,
45th 'Victoria' Battalion,
August 2, 1899.

From Lt.-Col. Sam. Hughes, C. O. 45th Batt., to Lt.-Col C. E. Montizambert, R.C.A., D.O.C. Mil. Dis. 3 and 4, Kingston.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a letter, No. 69122, July 31, 1899, from the chief staff officer, directing my attention to the fact that I had addressed to the Minister of Militia an offer of my services on active service, and informing me that I have thereby committed a breach of the Queen's Regulations.

Having believed myself possessed of a knowledge of the Queen's Regulations and the superior authority, the Regulations and Orders for the Canadian Militia, I was, and am still, innocent of any knowledge of having violated any regulation. I made my official military application in the regular way through you, sir, and I have yet to read the regulation which deprives me as citizen soldier of Canada from addressing the Minister of Militia on this or any other subject. Further, I have made a direct offer to the Imperial authorities as well, in order that delays might be avoided.

Will you be good enough to inform me the number of the paragraph which I have violated?

Permit me further to state that I am duly qualified to command my corps, and therefore deem the concluding paragraph of the letter of the chief staff officer quite uncalled for.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
SAM. HUGHES, Lt.-Col.,
C.O. 45th 'Victoria' Battalion.

In reference to this matter, as referring to the letter, I may state that on the receipt of the letter in the department, I was waited upon by the chief staff officer and was asked to withdraw the letter. I point-blank declined to do it, though subjected to a great deal of solicitation, but I believe the officer commanding withdrew his letter. I said that I would not withdraw mine, but he could withdraw it if he chose. Yet I find he has withdrawn his letter, which was condemnatory of me, and included mine, which I am not sorry to see printed. That ended the aspect of the case in which I applied to the Minister of Militia. There were three applications : I applied officially, out of pure courtesy, to the general officer commanding. I applied directly to the Minister of Militia, and you have the treatment of that letter. I applied also to the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, at the same time, and almost in the same terms as I applied to the others. The first intimation I had of a letter from Mr. Chamberlain was the following letter, which I received from the chief staff officer.

Headquarters, Aug. 24, 1899.

From the Chief Staff Officer to D.O.C. 3 and 4.

1. The Major General Commanding has received the commands of His Excellency the Governor General, through his military secretary, to inform Lieut.-Col. Hughes, commanding the 45th Battalion, that the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies has received a letter from him containing an offer to raise a Canadian regiment for Imperial service abroad.

His Excellency directs that Mr. Chamberlain's expression of high appreciation of the loyal and patriotic spirit shown by Lieut-.Col. Hughes and those who have volunteered to serve with him may be conveyed to that officer.

2. The Major General Commanding has received the commands of His Excellency to point out to Lieut.-Col. Hughes that such an offer of service should have been made through the General Officer Commanding, and the forwarding of such a communication direct by an officer on the active militia is quite irregular.

3. You will be good enough to call upon Lieut.-Col. Hughes, commanding the 45th Battalion, for his reasons in writing for committing an irregularity which reflects so seriously upon his knowledge of military affairs and the customs of Her Majesty's service.

By order,

H. FOSTER, Colonel,
Chief Staff Officer.

When I received that letter I was amazed. I knew we did not live in a Crown colony. I knew we had responsible government in Canada and when I saw that the general officer commanding was receiving commands from His Excellency, I felt satisfied there must be some mistake. I do not wish to follow up the matter further, but I find that the military secretary has taken upon himself to write two letters to the general officer commanding relating to the matter. Lest this might be taken as a precedent, I wish to enter my protest here and now against any officer of the Militia Department, unauthorized by an order in council or by his minister, receiving a command from His Excellency the Governor General. In England, in 1810, when General Dundas, who was in command of the British forces, undertook to go before the sovereign for consultation, he was distinctly informed that he dare not lift his hat officially to the sovereign without the consent of the First Lord of the Treasury. Time rolled on and we had responsible government in Canada and I knew there must be some blunder in connection with this letter in which General Hutton directed on command of His Excellency that I should apologize for having done my duty. I knew I was not subject to military law at the time ; I knew that if any command could come from His Excellency it could only come by and with the advice of his responsible ministers and through the Secretary of State or Minister of Militia. I knew also that General Hutton determined that he would crush me if he could ; I knew I committed no wrong in applying to the Minister and he found out very quickly that he had no justification under the constitution, and so he withdrew his letter and it has never appeared publicly since, although all the rest of the correspondence in connection with it has. He saw that the command of His Excellency, as set out in that letter, would not make us Canadians bow down and tremble.

It has been said that in the old land—when I speak of the old land, I want you to understand that those people who are sent out to Canada, and to whom I referred a little while ago ; remittance men and so on, do not represent England. I want the House to understand that men who pursue a line of conduct such as was pursued by the late general officer commanding are not types of the British general, because my experience of the British general is that he is a gentleman as well as a soldier. These men do not represent in any sense either British generalship or British generals. The statement often goes in the old land that we in Canada are strange creatures, that we are not English, nor are we aboriginies, and possibly this officer who had experience in banging Egyptians and negroes up the Nile thought all he had to do was to come to Canada and pursue the same course here. At all events, I know that he was very much annoyed that I criticised his address in January, 1899. I knew he was much offended because certain officers of us in the Dominion Rifle Association council would not accept certain suggestions he had intruded upon us. I know he had never forgiven me because I had declined to allow the troops in the third and fourth military districts to be shoved into drill in the fall of the year instead of in June. I need not enter into the details of that, but I will say that it was a scandalous transaction on the part of General Hutton. He afterwards told me that I should have helped him through with that scheme, although I felt personally that I would not be doing justice to the forces if I allowed them to be called out for drill in the fall when the men could not possibly attend camp. I knew that General Hutton was annoyed because I had refused to obey his order not to speak as a member of parliament. I knew also that he was very much annoyed because I refused to obey his reprimand when he ordered me to apologize for having written to the Minister of Militia. I knew that he was annoyed further when I told him that Canadians could take the field alongside any troops in the world in time of war and do no discredit to Canada. I knew all this. Therefore, when I got this letter I determined, come what might, to bring the thing to an issue and insist upon my rights as a citizen of the British Empire. I replied to General Hutton disputing his authority to receive a command from His Excellency the Governor General. I claimed I was acting well within my rights, and asking that the law should be quoted to me which I had violated. I pointed out that I was merely following the custom in vogue for years in Canada of applying direct to the British authorities to raise forces in time of war. The letter is in the correspondence and will speak for itself. I challenge the best constitutional authority in Canada to criticise that letter and to point to one statement in it that is inconsistent with the law in any respect. As General Hutton repeats his reference to this, let me quote what I wrote to him as to why I refused to obey the command :

Headquarters 45th 'Victoria' Batt.,
Lindsay, September 2, 1899.

From Lt.-Col. Sam. Hughes, C.O. 45th 'Victoria' Batt., to Lt.-Col. Montizambert, R.C.A., D.O.C. Mil. Dis. 3 and 4, Kingston.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your order of August 26, 1899, subjoined to copy of a communication to you from the chief staff officer, No. 69122, August 24, regarding :—

1. The command of His Excellency to the General Officer Commanding to inform me of the receipt by the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies of a letter from me to raise a Canadian regiment for Imperial service abroad; and transmitting Mr. Chamberlain's appreciation at the loyal and patriotic spirit shown.

2. Conveying the command of His Excellency to point out to me that such offer should have been made through the General Officer Commanding; and that the forwarding of such communication direct by an officer of the active militia is quite irregular.

3. Directing you to call on me for my reasons in writing for committing an irregularity which reflects so seriously on my knowledge of military affairs and the customs of Her Majesty's service.

While I cannot find from the laws and customs of the Canadian constitution the authority for any one to question my action in volunteering as citizen of the British Empire to enrol a corps; yet inasmuch as a soldier's first duty is to obey, I make haste to furnish my reasons in writing, not 'for committing an irregularity,' for as I read the laws and understand the customs of the Canadian constitution, none has been committed by me; but for having applied direct as a citizen of Canada and the British Empire to the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies to enrol a corps for active service abroad.

The circumstances are :—

1. I made official application as an officer in the Canadian militia through the regular channel of the district officer commanding, to raise a corps for Imperial service abroad.

2. Concurrently therewith I made application direct, as citizen of Canada and the British Empire to the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, for a similar purpose.

3. An application similar to the second was made to the Minister of Militia of Canada.

The reasons are :—

1. The official application was made merely in the hope that the present General Officer Commanding might lend some encouragement to the principle of colonial troops as such being utilized in the Imperial service; and so recommend to the Minister of Militia. It is needless to say here that I have for many years endorsed and encouraged as citizen, parliamentarian and militia officer, such a proposal, and have invariably, with the one exception of General Herbert, been discouraged and rebuffed by General Officers Commanding. Hitherto all such applications were pigeon-holed by General Officers Commanding and were never laid before the Minister of Militia.

2. The application to the Minister of Militia was made so that if the Canadian government should think favourably of such a plan, my wish might be known and it might be communicated with the prestige such endorsation would confer, to the home government, and the enrolment could proceed under direction of Canadian authorities. In short, I provided against the official application being pigeon-holed.

3. That to the right hon. the Secretary of State was made in order that should the plan be favourably considered in Great Britain steps might be taken by the home authorities—of course with the consent and approval, but outside of the Canadian government—to enrol such a corps here. In the event of failure of action in Canada, through the failure of the General Officer Commanding to bring the official military application before the Minister of Militia, or through the Canadian government not deeming it advisable to act in the premises, the Imperial authorities would be aware that whether or not the General Officer Commanding, or the Canadian Government had faith in such plans, yet the Imperial authorities would be made aware of the fact that there are tens of thousands of Canadians ready to assist in the upbuilding of the empire by enrolling for active service abroad.

4. I had on former occasions made similar applications, viz., official military ones for similar purposes through my District Officer Commanding, and learned a few years ago, to my surprise, that such had been pigeon-holed by the then General Officer Commanding, and had never been submitted to the Minister of Militia much less to His Excellency, or to the Imperial government. Of course, the Minister of Militia is the officer through whom the General Officer Commanding must act, therefore, in order that the home as well as the Canadian authorities might be in possession of the facts, and that no officer, be he never so capable, should of his own notion, pigeon-hole applications designed to reach at least the Canadian Minister of Militia, and through him, if deemed proper, the Imperial authorities, I followed the plan for which there are precedents for at least upwards of twenty years, of applying directly to the home government as a citizen of Canada and of the empire.

5. While a Canadian, I am also a British subject, and should Canada try to cut adrift from Britain, I as either soldier or citizen, would not be disloyal in recognizing the home authority rather than the General Officer Commanding in Canada, or the Minister of Militia, or the Secretary of State for Canada. Any citizen of Canada, civilian or militiaman, can properly volunteer to the Imperial authorities direct, to enrol a corps. I cannot find that I am debarred, as an officer of the militia from any privilege, Canadian citizenship confers upon her sons. Any citizen of Canada can enrol himself in the Imperial service independently of the General Officer Commanding or of the Canadian government. In case I, for example, undertook to enrol a corps of Canadians for Imperial service, or enrolled myself alone, I could do so, merely resigning my Canadian commission before accepting the Imperial, i.e., even supposing the Canadian authorities were adversely inclined to such action. Were they friendly they could and would arrange as is now done for Imperial officers in Canada's service, that both commissions be retained.

It is with regret that in defence of my loyal action I am called on to dispute the reference in section 3 of the letter of the chief staff officer, implying that I have departed from the customs of Her Majesty's service. Permit me to say, I have rightly adhered to the custom prevailing since 1878 (though I have differed in applying as citizen), a custom which has on other occasions been recognized in words of loyalty, love and encouragement to the principle of Canadians seeking service in the Imperial army.

In 1878, an officer high in authority in Canada, a then deputy adjutant general, volunteered in his military capacity direct to the Imperial government to raise a Canadian corps. He was courteously thanked and encouraged by the home authorities. On subsequent occasions others made direct application, and I never learned of but one instance before where the procedure was questioned, and that only questioned before action. A Halifax officer made direct application, not as a citizen as I did, but officially as a militia officer of Canada, to enrol a corps for the Imperial service. My information is that the right hon. the present Secretary of State for the Colonies at first deemed the proper course of the application to have been through the Canadian government and His Excellency, it being an official military application. The decision, as I am informed, was that while a Canadian officer, yet the gentleman had the same rights as any English, Scotch or Irish subject in the empire, that any one in Great Britain could volunteer to the right hon. the Secretary of State for War, or to him for the colonies and not through the Home Secretary, so in case of the Halifax officer, it was not deemed necessary for him to apply through the Canadian government and His Excellency. Such is my information from very high sources, and it has the advantage of seeming sensible.

Further, I have on two former occasions made direct application (after finding previous official offers had been suppressed by the then General Officers Commanding), each time as on this occasion as citizen, viz., not signing myself officially, merely stating my qualifications and Canadian positions; and in each instance I was thanked most courteously by the Secretary of State for War. The procedure was not in even the slightest called in question or deemed irregular. Therefore, the custom is all in favour of my action.

Furthermore, I fail to find in the laws and customs of the Canadian constitution anything against my acting as I did, and I respectfully ask to have pointed out the authority which any one in connection with the government of Canada has for catechising me as officer of the militia of Canada for my legal, loyal and honourable conduct as citizen of the British Empire.

May I also inquire, for my information and guidance, to have the authority quoted which permits the General Officer Commanding, as officer directly under the Minister of Militia, to receive and transmit as General Officer Commanding, commands from His Excellency? As citizen and as militia officer, I have ever understood the law and custom of the constitution to require commands in the militia to emanate from the Minister of Militia, directed, it may be, by order in council. Further, where is the authority for communications from His Excellency to come through the General Officer Commanding instead of the Secretary of State?

Therefore, while I am determined to obey those in authority in militia affairs, be the command right or wrong, yet I am equally desirous of becoming familiar with the laws and customs bearing on those matters. May I respectfully request that you will be so good as to quote me the authority—

(a) Which forbids me as citizen of the British Empire, though an officer of the Canadian militia, from offering to the British government to enrol a corps for the Imperial service, especially when I had concurrently made an official military application through my district officer commanding to the same effect.

(b) Which authorizes my being reprimanded as militia officer for my honourable act as citizen of the British Empire.

(c) Which permits the General Officer Commanding to receive and transmit any commands from His Excellency without its being an order in council, and then only by order of the Minister of Militia.

(d) Which enacts that I as militia officer am deprived of any privilege enjoyed by any other citizen of Canada, not a militiaman.

(e) Which sanctions the notion that honourable and loyal acts of one as citizen of Canada who chances to be a militia officer can possibly be subject to the militia authorities just as if the person were in the permanent service.

(f) Which allows an acknowledgment from the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies to me to be forwarded through the General Officer Commanding without the order of the Minister of Militia; and

(g) Which recommends such an acknowledgment to be embodied in the same letter as one calling upon me to give reasons for my conduct and in another paragraph making assertions not consistent with the facts.

Inasmuch as the letter was doubtless dictated without a correct knowledge of the facts of the case, or of the law and custom of the Canadian constitution, I shall be glad to return it if desired; otherwise I must respectfully ask permission, in the absence of authority being shown in support of the position therein taken, to use the letter to test the matter further.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
SAM. HUGHES, Lt.-Col.,
C.O. 45th 'Victoria' Batt.

Later on, the general points out that I had disobeyed the command of His Excellency, and which command, I say with all due deference, His Excellency had no more right to give than that child there. I have already referred to the action of the British government in relation to the commander-in-chief; an officer who holds a much higher position than does the general officer commanding in this country. In reply to that letter I wrote asserting my rights as a citizen. I find a letter from Col. Foster, written to me direct, in which he views the situation and states:

September 19, 1899.

Lieut.-Col. S. Hughes, M.P.,
Commanding 45th Battalion,
Lindsay, Ont.

Dear Colonel Hughes,—Your long official letter of 2nd September regarding your application to raise a Canadian regiment for Imperial service abroad, has reached headquarters and awaits the return of the Major General Commanding next week.

I am writing privately to you to ask if you will not take advantage of the delay before your letter must be laid before the General, to withdraw it, which I would earnestly ask you to do before the General has to take official notice of it. You will remember that in the case of a former letter of a similar description you were good enough to allow me to have a long talk with you about it, after which you withdrew it as likely to cause friction and lead to no good result. I was much relieved by your decision in that case, and I cannot help hoping that on reconsideration you will perhaps allow me to persuade you to take the same action with regard to the present letter. Of course as a citizen you are at liberty to express your views in any way you like and on any subject, but as officer commanding a battalion, it would, I am sure, be quite impossible for any general to overlook the character of your letter, which from a military point of view could only be considered as inconsistent with discipline.

There is no one who has a better appreciation of your value and good points as a commanding officer and as a soldier than the General and myself; and in writing to you privately I am, believe me, entirely actuated by a wish to prevent trouble arising in connection with a matter as to which you have received the appreciation of Mr. Chamberlain, His Excellency and the General. It would seem an infinite pity if the loyalty and patriotism you have shown in your offer should only result in making your military position here untenable, and I sincerely hope that you will not hastily decide to reject my friendly suggestion. Before answering this letter, I would ask you to carefully and patiently consider it. It is indeed prompted only by very friendly feelings, and I trust you will receive it in the spirit in which it is written.

Believe me, dear Colonel Hughes,
Yours very sincerely,
HUBERT FOSTER.

I draw your attention to that letter, Mr. Speaker, merely to show that it was written to me direct. I replied to that letter refusing to withdraw my letter, and stated that I had decided, come what might, to see the matter through. I draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to the fact that only a part of my letter in reply was published. I want the whole of that letter brought down if the House will be good enough to pass an order.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What page is that?

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). Page 10; a letter dated September 22. Now, Mr. Speaker, these were both private letters, and yet I find them brought down to this House, while other letters that were public were suppressed. One explanation of this is that these letters must have been worked in by mistake, as they were brought down after the general had gone. I would like to know how a letter to which the general's name is not signed could possibly be worked in after he had gone unless the brief had been prepared before his departure. Here is the most wonderful letter of the lot, and I will read it:

Headquarters, October 9, 1899.

From the Chief Staff Officer to D.O.C., 3 & 4. (Confidential.)

Sir,—I have the honour to state that the letter of Lt.-Colonel Hughes, commanding the 45th Battalion, dated the 2nd instant, addressed to yourself, in reply to my minute of the 24th ultimo, has been laid before the major general commanding, and I am directed to observe as follows:—

1. The letter in question is, in the opinion of the major general commanding, a highly improper and insubordinate communication for an officer in the position of Lt.-Colonel Hughes to put forward for submission to the major general commanding.

2. Lt.-Colonel Hughes was called upon to give his reasons for committing the irregularity in diverging from the usual routine of conducting correspondence, as laid down in regulations, in that he offered his services by letter direct to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with a view to raising a regiment for service in South Africa in place of through the general officer commanding the militia and the Governor General in Council.

You will notice that I had declined to withdraw that official letter which I had written in reply to the General's demand for apology for applying to the Colonial Secretary.

Lt.-Colonel Hughes's plea for his conduct would appear to be that he acted in his capacity as a citizen.

I may say that was never my plea. He had no military command of me—that was the position I took:

I am directed to observe that Lt.-Colonel Hughes, who is now in command of the 45th Battalion, Canadian militia, offered his military services in his military capacity, to raise a regiment. It cannot be, therefore, considered that his application was made as a citizen, but as an officer of the Canadian militia, serving under the command of the general officer commanding.

It is not within any officer's power to dissassociate himself from his duties and responsibilities as an officer holding Her Majesty's commission, and to plead as an excuse for disregard of regulations and orders that he is a citizen and, therefore, not amenable to discipline.

3. Lt.-Colonel Hughes has received orders which have been conveyed to him through the major general commanding, acting upon instructions of His Excellency the Governor General. No officer has the right to dispute the authority of the major general commanding as his superior officer, or to question his action, still less that of the Governor General, the representative of Her Majesty the Queen in Canada.

4. I am, in conclusion, to observe that the tone of the letter forwarded by Lt.-Colonel Hughes is of such a character that unless it is withdrawn, with a complete apology, it will be the duty of the major general commanding to submit the correspondence in question to the honourable the Minister of Militia for reference to His Excellency the Governor General.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
HUBERT FOSTER, Colonel,
Chief Staff Officer.

Now, Sir, inasmuch as this is a matter which concerns the whole framework of our constitution and our military system, I most emphatically dispute the whole tenor of that letter. When our permanent corps was established, hon. members who were then members of the House will remember that the law had to be amended so as to bring that corps under the Militia Act; otherwise they would have been amenable to the Militia Act for only a small period—sixteen days at the most. If these statements were true, my good friend Col. Prior might have a second lieutenant who would be aggrieved at something in performing drill, and after the drill was over, he would still have to obey Col. Prior on the street; because if the general officer commanding could order a man around at all times, there is not an officer in the force who could not do the same thing. You can easily see how absurd the whole thing would become. Why, Sir, what is the law? The law is that if a commanding officer or any officer happens to offend one of his privates or one of his junior officers, the man offended, when not under military law, can slap the colonel's ears or punish him in some other way, and the only redress the colonel has is in the civil courts. We are citizen soldiers, and once we divest ourselves of our uniform, we are no more under military discipline than any other citizen of the country. In this connection I have taken the liberty of getting an opinion from the highest military authority in the community: I refer to Col. Henry Smith, the late district officer commanding of Toronto; and I may say that Dicey, the famous author of 'The Law of the Constitution,' clearly points out not only where officers may disobey in the regular army, but where privates may disobey their commanding officers when they give them orders which would be contrary to common sense. When I mention the name of Col. Smith, there is not a military man or a legal man who will for a moment hesitate to bow to his opinion. He says:

> When a man accepts a militia commission or enlists into a corps, he takes upon himself two kinds of obligation: the obligation to perform certain services, and the obligation to obey and be governed by a code of laws in addition to that which governs him as a citizen. In order to ascertain what his liability to serve is, he must look to the Militia Act and to nothing else, for no kind of service or duty which is not laid down in that Act can possibly be imposed on him. To ascertain what his duty of obedience is, and what are the penalties to which he has made himself liable, he must look primarily to the Militia Act, and secondarily to the laws and regulations referred to in that Act. These laws and regulations are: The Army Act, the rules of procedure, the King's regulations, and the militia regulations and orders.
> First, as to the services His Majesty may order the officers and men of the several corps of the active militia, or any portion thereof, to drill for a period of not exceeding sixteen days or less than eight days in each year.
> The officer commanding any military district or division, or the officer commanding any corps of active militia, may, upon any sudden emergency of invasion or insurrection, or imminent danger of either, call out the whole or any part of the militia within his command, until the pleasure of His Majesty is known.
> His Majesty may call out the militia, or any part thereof, for active service either within or without Canada, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of war, invasion, or insurrection, or danger of any of them.
> The active militia or any corps thereof, or any part of a corps, shall also be liable to be called out for active service, with their arms and ammunition, under special or general regulations made by the Governor in Council to act as guards of honour, escorts, or as guards and sentries or to fire salutes in the following cases:—
> (a) The opening or closing of any session of the parliament of Canada, or of the legislature of any province of Canada.
> (b) For the purpose of attending the Governor General of Canada, or any member of the Royal Family while in Canada.
> (c) For the purpose of guarding any armoury or other place where arms, guns, ammunition or other military stores are kept.
> The Governor in Council may make regulations for calling out for active service as guards or sentries at the residence of the Governor General, or of any member of the Royal Family while in Canada, any corps or part of a corps of the active militia.
> The active militia, or any corps thereof, shall be liable to be called out for active service, with their arms and ammunition, in aid of the civil power.
>
> Those are the only occasions on which the militia can or may be called up. To call it out on any other occasion or for any other purpose, would not only be unfair to the officers and men called out, but would be unlawful, and they would be justified in refusing to comply. It should be noted that an individual may not be called out for any duty except with his corps, or that part of his corps to which he belongs. For example, when his corps or that part of his corps to which he belongs, is not up on service, an officer may not be ordered on any duty (court-martial or court of inquiry, for instance.)
> When his corps is not up on one of the services mentioned, an officer or man of the active militia is not subject, even to the slightest extent, to the orders of his military superiors. Indeed, they are not then his superiors, for they have not the least authority over him.

If an officer should rob a bank and the fact is brought under the notice of the Minister of Militia, the Minister of Militia—not the general officer commanding—may very properly remove that officer.

I noticed in a Montreal paper the other day, that an officer had stated he was aggrieved because a judgment given by the general officer commanding regarding him had been made public. If it were proven that one of the officers, to whom that official communication was addressed, had violated the code of honour and published that communication, that man could be brought to task, not for having violated the militia law, but for having violated the code of honour. He could be brought to task by the Minister of Militia, but not by the general officer commanding, because the latter had no control over him. I am not speaking now of custom, but of the law. Unfortunately, however, the custom has been to allow people to be trampled on just as the general officer commanding might think fit. Col. Smith continues:

During that period his military status, and their military status as respects him at least, are in abeyance so to speak. Let us suppose, for example, that the commanding officer of the G.G.F.G meets one of his captains when the corps is not on service, and says to him: 'Jones, I want you to come down to the drill hall and show me your stores, I wish to inspect them.' Jones replies : 'I beg your pardon, sir, but I am busy at present and cannot well go.' The officer commanding then says : 'I order you to come at once and show me those stores.' Jones again replies : 'I respectfully refuse to go, sir ; it is not my duty to go.' In the event of the commanding officer reporting the circumstances to superior authority and asking for Jones' removal, it would be the duty of the superior to sustain Jones, and to tell the commanding officer that he had exceeded, or had tried to exceed his rights and his jurisdiction.

Second, as to the obligation to obey, or as to the liability to military law.

The act of accepting a commission or of enlisting into the active militia, does not of itself make a man liable to the military code, and if parliament had never made any provision in the matter, the citizen soldier would not at any time be subject to any other than the civil law of the land. That body has, however, declared :

'That the active militia shall be subject to the King's regulations and orders for the army.'

Before going on it may be as well to say that refusal or neglect to comply with the King's regulations is not punishable as an 'act of disobedience,' even when committed by a regular officer or soldier though it may be punished as an 'act or neglect to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.' The meaning of the words 'subject to' in this connection is a moot point. Like so many other terms in the Act, they require explanation. In the regulations are many things which cannot possibly apply to our militia, such, for example, as 'duties of the commander-in-chief,' 'enlistment, transfer and discharge of soldiers,' and 'army books and forms'; and yet our generals have made use of them without discrimination.

Our parliament has further declared that 'Every officer and man of the militia shall, from the time of being called out for active service, and also during the period of annual drill or training under the provisions of this Act, and also during any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present in the ranks or as a spectator, and also when going to or from the place of drill or parade of his corps, and also at any other time while in the uniform of his corps, be subject to the Army Act passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom, and all other laws then applicable to Her Majesty's troops in Canada, and not inconsistent with this Act ; except that no man shall be subject to any corporal punishment but death or imprisonment for any contravention of such laws ; and except also that Her Majesty may direct that any provisions of the said laws or regulations shall not apply to the militia force.'

Here too the words 'subject to' are doubtful and unsatisfactory. Parliament could never have intended the words to be used in their full and unrestricted sense, for if it did, the militia would be under the jurisdiction of certain officials mentioned in the Act, namely, the Secretary of State for War, the commander-in-chief of the forces, the adjutant-general of the forces, and the general officer commanding His Majesty's forces in British North America; and it would mean, too, that the last named officer has power to convene courts-martial for the trial of militiamen. All of which would be absurd. At all times not mentioned in that 82nd section, not only is the militiaman not subject to his otherwise military superiors, not only is he not commandable, but he cannot then commit an offence against military law. Thus, if an officer goes into the general's office, and, in an altercation, slaps the general's face, the latter has no military remedy; he must content himself with thrashing the offender, or with citing him before a civil court. Indeed, the general himself is not subject to military law, nor can he be unless the whole of the militia is called out for active service. 'Corps enlisted for continuous service' are, under the terms of the statute, 'held to be called out for active service.'

That was the amendment which was made to the law when our permanent corps were formed. They are held to be called out for active service.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. What about city corps ?

Mr. HUGHES. My hon. friend from Victoria asks what about city corps. The city corps are subject to military duty, and while going to or performing their drills every drill evening they are subject to military law, but at other periods they are not.

But that is not the case with the general and other staff officers. There is never any 'period of annual drill or training' for the general, he never can be present at any 'drill or parade of his corps,' and he never can be in 'the uniform of his corps,' for he has not a corps. Strange as it may appear, there is nothing for which the general officer commanding, the adjutant-general, or the quartermaster general may be court-martialed, except they are actually on active service. The adjutant-general may go in and kick the general out; it is not a military offence.

More than that ; the general has not the slightest official connection with officers unless their corps have been ordered to perform their annual drill or have been called out for service. In the meantime the officer, is, in a military sense, dormant, and may not be officially communicated with, until awakened—until 'switched on,' to use a telephone expression—by the general order affecting his corps. And in the same way, and for the same reason, the officer cannot act in a military capacity, he cannot, legally perform a military act, he cannot give a military command which any one is bound to obey.

Colonel Foster, in a letter, dated October 9, 1899, and addressed to the district officer commanding, Nos. 3 and 4, stated : 'I am directed to observe that Lt.-Colonel Hughes, who is now in command of the 45th Battalion Canadian militia, offered his military services in a military capacity to raise a regiment.' That showed ignorance on the part of Col. Foster, or on the part of the general who instructed him, as regards our military constitution. Lt.-Colonel Hughes was not in command, he had nothing to command—but even if he had been in command, he could not offer his services in 'his military capacity,' for his military capacity would be limited to commanding the 45th. As a matter of law, and as a matter of fact, he was then an ordinary citizen and nothing more, no matter how much he might put 'commanding 45th' after his name.

That goes even further than I thought, on looking into the law. I knew that unless we were out in annual camp, we were not amenable to the law. To-morrow morning the Minister of Militia may retire any officer of the force he chooses. My second lieutenant could kick me around the streets of Lindsay, or any officer in Ottawa could do the same to his colonel, and he could not be punished for a military offence. The facts could be brought to the notice of the Minister of Militia, and the minister could say that such a junior officer was not a fit and proper person to be retained in the force, and could retire him ; but that young fellow, if he were dismissed under any so-called construction of military law, could appeal the case and beat the other every time. I think that ended the letter which I addressed to the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain. And, so far as that is concerned, I have not a word to retract. On the contrary, even if I had been subject to military law, that letter might be read and construed in the light of the closest criticism, and it would be found quite within my province. But when I was not subject to military law the letter of the general to me was an outrage. Time wore on. I need not enter into the details ; but the matter at length reached a crisis. I found out that there was a hesitancy on the part of the government in taking action to send a force. They had not been officially asked to do so. But General Hutton, who at first opposed a contingent going from here, suddenly veered round and offered a contingent without consulting his minister. Things were in a mixed condition ; and, in order to bring the matter to a focus, I wrote the following letter to the press of the country. I may say that this letter was omitted from the return brought down last year, although it is referred to, and ought, properly to have been before the department. I quote from the Montreal Star :—

To the Editor of the Star :

Sir,—Inasmuch as war with the Transvaal now seems certain, and as repeated offers and requests from Canadians of prominence in civil as well as in military circles, have been made that I should raise and offer a Canadian corps for service in the Transvaal, with the object of advancing the cause of mankind by assisting to upbuild the British Empire and render justice to one's fellow-countrymen, even at great sacrifices, and in order that as little delay as possible should result, on the outbreak of hostilities, in enrolling such a corps, may I respectfully request the publication of the following:—

I ask hon. members to note carefully what I wrote. Then they will be able to judge the treatment I received with regard to it.

Will those who are desirous of enrolling men and serving with me on active service to assist the Imperial forces in South Africa each be good enough to write me, stating fully:

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

(a) His qualifications.
(b) Age.
(c) Physical condition.
(d) The number and quality of the men each can enrol, and
(e) The number of days required for mobilization after notice.

Before leaving for Europe last spring, Hon. Mr. Tarte gave me the assurance——

I am glad the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is present. He will be able to bear me out that this is true.

—that should war break out he would assist in raising for my command, on active service, a proportionate number of his fellow-countrymen, who would, he felt assured, be second to none. Subsequent incidents have convinced me that each and every province will do its duty in the hour of need.

It is needless here to dwell on the causes of the trouble. One fact overshadows all. The principle advanced in defence of the American war of independence, and almost universally endorsed since, that 'Taxation must bear with it the right of full representation and citizenship,' has been systematically and brutally represented and denied by the Transvaal authorities. There is no freeman or lover of personal liberty but must justify Great Britain in insisting in full redress of every Uitlander grievance.

Two commanding officers of infantry battalions, as well as many majors and captains, one an Imperial guardsman, have already requested me to take in hand the raising of a Canadian corps, and all have expressed the wish to serve under my command—therefore have I taken action.

The newspapers of Canada, always potent in advancing a good cause, are respectfully requested to give this publicity, in order that the best results may be accomplished.

All letters should be addressed to Lindsay, Ont., at the earliest convenience, in order that details may be attended to and official sanction be received as soon as possible, after hostilities begin.

SAM. HUGHES.

Lindsay, September 18, 1899.

I draw attention to this point—I referred in the letter to the fact that official sanction would be sought to the enrolment of a corps as soon as war should begin. I was surprised to received the following telegram :—

Headquarters, Sept. 25, 1899.

From the Chief Staff Officer to D.O.C. M. D. No. 3 & 4.

1. The following telegram was forwarded this day direct to Lt.-Colonel S. Hughes, commanding the 45th Battalion, Lindsay :—

'General officer commanding directs me to inform you that your action in inviting recruits to enrol for service under you is unauthorized, and is in opposition to section 98, Army Act. Further efforts on your part, however well intentioned, are not approved.'

2. Upon the return of the major-general commanding from Nova Scotia on Saturday last, the action of Lt.-Colonel S. Hughes in inviting the enrolment of recruits for special service in a corps under his command in South Africa, through the medium of the press, was brought to his notice. The telegram above quoted was thereupon forwarded to that officer.

3. You will be good enough to direct Lt.-Colonel Hughes' attention to the Army Act, section 98, which is, under section 82 of the Militia Act, equally applicable to Canadian troops. The section in question is as follows :—

'If a person without due authority :—

(1) Publishes or causes to be published notices or advertisements for the purpose of procuring recruits for Her Majesty's regular forces, or in relation to recruits for such forces; or

(2) Opens or keeps any house, place of rendezvous, or office as connected with the recruiting of such forces; or

(3) Receives any person under any such advertisement, as aforesaid; or

(4) Directly or indirectly interferes with the recruiting services of such forces;

He shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds.

4. The action of Lt.-Colonel Hughes, no matter how well intentioned on his part in the interests of the empire, is entirely unauthorized. It is a matter of extreme surprise to the major-general commanding that an officer of Lt.-Colones Hughes' length of service and general knowledge of questions involving constitutional government, should have taken upon himself to assume the functions that alone rests with Her Majesty the Queen. You will, in the latter connection, direct Lt.-Colonel Hughes' attention to Army Act, section 94, as follows :

'For the purpose of the attestation of soldiers in pursuance of this part of this Act :

'In a colony, any person duly authorized in that behalf by the Governor of the colony.'

5. You will, accordingly, direct Lt.-Colonel S. Hughes, commanding the 45th Battalion, to desist from further action in this matter, for which no authority has been given.

By order,

H. FOSTER, Colonel,
Chief Staff Officer.

There was the message that greeted me from the general officer commanding, and for nothing more than if I had asked a man on the street, 'In case of war will you go to the Transvaal ?' I replied to the letter as follows :—

Sir,—I have the honour, in reply to your memo. of September 26 instant, inclosing memo. No. 84,496 (copy) from Chief Staff Officer, to state that I am at a loss to understand the communication directing my attention to section 98 of the Army Act, inasmuch as neither in spirit nor in letter have I violated it.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
SAM. HUGHES, Lt.-Col.,
C.O. 45th 'Victoria' Battn.

I need not take the time of the House in quoting authorities on this subject. I had written a letter to the press actuated by the kindliest spirit and most patriotic motives, and here, from the general officer commanding, an officer of the British service, an officer who was supposed to consider the interests of the whole empire, I received this communication. I had not asked the enrolment of a solitary man, but merely the names of those who, in case I should receive the necessary authority, would be willing to go. I did not ask a man for the British regular army, and neither directly nor indirectly had I left myself open to the reproof of the general officer commanding. If I had violated a law, which I had not done, I was open to the censure of a magistrate, but in no sense had I laid myself open to military censure. I will quote the same high authority on that subject :—

In the Hughes-Hutton correspondence, it appears that a telegram was sent from the C.S.O. to Col. Hughes, in these words :

'G.O.C. directs me to inform you that your action in inviting recruits to enrol for service under you is unauthorized, and is in opposition to section 98, Army Act. Further efforts on your part, however well intentioned, are not approved.'

And, further, the D.O.C. Nos. 3 and 4, was instructed 'to direct Col. Hughes' attention to the Army Act, section 98, which is, under section 82 of the Militia Act, equally applicable to Canadian troops.' What is meant, or intended to be meant by the words 'equally applicable to Canadian troops,' is an enigma. It could be intended to mean only that it is an offence against section 98 to recruit Canadian troops without authority. If so, such construction could be put on the two sections, 98 and 82, by a 'legal idiot' only, and the same must be said if the meaning was that the members of the Canadian force are subject to section 98, for section 98 is in no sense directed against the military, or persons subject to military law, but against 'a person.'

Section 98 forbids the procuring of recruits for 'Her Majesty's regular forces.' 'Her Majesty's regular forces,' according to the definition laid down in the Army Act, means those who are liable to render continuously for a term militia service to Her Majesty in any part of the world,' as distinguished from those who engage to serve in some locality. The corps that Colonel Hughes had in view was certainly not one of that class. It was to be an irregular corps, and so far as his letter showed, it was to have no connection with the Imperial forces, but to assist the Imperial forces in South Africa. It was not to be for service in any part of the world, it was not a force in any way contemplated by section 98. So, if he had published a 'notice or advertisement for the purpose of procuring recruits' for such a corps, he would not offend against the statute. But, he did not publish a notice for the purpose of 'procuring recruits,' he did not ask for recruits, he did not invite a single man to enrol. He merely wrote to the press a letter in which these words occur : 'Will those who are desirous of enrolling men and serving with me on active service to assist the Imperial forces in South Africa, each be good enough to write me stating fully (a) his qualification; (b) age; (c) physical condition; (d) the number and quality of the men each can enrol ; and (e) the number of days required for mobilization after notice.'

Now, that was all Col. H. did. He did not ask a man to enlist, he did not propose to enlist any one, he did not call for recruits, he asked only for the names of those who would be willing to act as enrollers in a great emergency, which was then imminent, and who would be willing to serve with him in the event of his being authorized to raise a force ; and there is not a word about the troops being Imperial, much less 'regular forces.' Even in Britain a call for men to fill the militia or the volunteer force is not against that statute.

Still, the D.O.C. was instructed: 'You will, accordingly, direct Lt.-Col. H., commanding 45th Batt., to desist from further action in this matter, for which no authority has been given, and it was pointed out that the proper person to authorize the attestation of 'soldiers in pursuance of this part of the Act' (regular soldiers) is the governor of the colony.

A more marked exhibition of intense ignorance, more astounding presumption on the part of quasi superior military authority, was never exhibited.

In the first place, the action of Colonel H., even if done in the U. K., was not an offence against the law; in the second place, the better opinion is that no statute of the U. K. like the A. A., extends to the inhabitants of this country, except so far as our own statute has extended it to the militia at certain times; in the third place, an offence against section 98 is not a military one, the section is directed against not officers or soldiers, but 'a person.' If Col. H. could be said in any way to have offended, he would be cited as 'Samuel Hughes,' not as 'Colonel Samuel Hughes,' and he would be cited before a civil tribunal and not a military one, and his puishment, if it could be imposed at all in this country under section 98, would be a fine or summary conviction by a magistrate or magistrates.

In view of these facts, then, and in view of the further fact that Col. Hughes, at the time, was no more under the authority of the Canadian military superiors than he was under the Commander-in-chief in England ; it was nothing less than a piece of downright impertinence for General Hutton to take upon himself the office of calling Col. Hughes to account. Suppose that Col. Hughes had advertised a lottery, contrary to the statutes in that behalf, would General Hutton call on the colonel to desist? Certainly not. Yet it would be quite as legitimate, quite as decorous, and as little impertinent, in the lottery case as in the recruiting case. The officer in military command of the militia is not the 'conscience keeper' of militia officers, especially those who are under him but twelve days in the year. If they choose to run counter to the laws of the land, that is their business not his; their responsibility is not to him or through him; how much worse is his interference when they have not committed any offence whatever.

Of course, under sec. 34, 'Every person subject to military law who . . . . wilfully contravenes any enactments or the regulations of the service in any matter relating to the enlistment of attestation of soldiers of the regular forces, shall on conviction by court martial be liable to suffer imprisonment, but Col. H. was not subject to military law, and he did not, even in seeming to contravene the law ; he could not possibly be tried by a military tribunal.'

Now, Sir, there is the communication on that mater, which I have given at length. I regret to take up so much time of the House in reading these communications, but this is a matter of considerable concern to many members of the House. It is a matter of considerable importance to the country. I venture to think that a great many militia officers, some of them high up, will read this with interest, not only on this side, but on the other side of the water.

Now, I have read you my reply to that letter. I said this :

I have the honour in reply to your memo. of September 26 instant, inclosing memo. No. 84,496 [copy] from chief staff officer, to state that I am at a loss to understand the communication directing my attention to section 98 of the Army Act, inasmuch as neither in spirit nor in letter have I violated it.

Yet, here is the response he gives to that. If any one will tell me how I could have replied to that letter in a more kindly spirit, in a more submissive spirit, I would like to have him do it. I see nothing insubordinate whatever in my letter, yet here is the answer to it. These things do not appear in the return brought down last year in such a way as that they could be understood at all. Here is the letter from General Hutton to me :

Revelstoke, B.C., Oct. 11, 1899.

Chief Staff Officer :

1. I have read the letter of Lieut.-Col. S. Hughes, commanding 45th Battalion, in reply to your minute of the 25th ultimo, with extreme surprise.

2. You will forthwith cause this officer to be informed I am extremely dissatisfied at the highly improper and insubordinate tone of his official communication.

3. You will further cause Lieut.-Col. S. Hughes to be informed through the D. O. C. Nos. 3 and 4 district, that in the event of my orders conveyed through you being disobeyed, he will at once be suspended from the command of his battalion.

EDW. T. H. HUTTON, Major General,
Commanding Canadian Militia.

There was a letter in response to my letter, in which I stated that 'I was at a loss to understand the communication, because neither in letter or in spirit had I violated the law.' I had not violated the law, even though I had been an officer in the British regular army ; but when I was merely an officer of the Canadian militia, even if I had been on active service, I would not have violated the law ; and when I was not on active service, triply had I not violated the law.

Now, about this time, another very interesting incident occurred. In the London Times of September 25, 1899, appears this cablegram :

Ottawa, Sept. 24.

Although there has been no official announcement of the government's intention in the event of an outbreak of hostilities in South Africa, it is understood in ministerial circles that arrangements have been completed promptly to place the service of a Canadian regiment at the disposal of the home government when the hour for action comes.

It was a little anterior to this, I may say, that the general officer commanding was seized with a fit to command a corps himself.

All the details have been carefully worked out. The Canadian contingent will be a composite one, consisting of 1,200 men, regulars and militia, representing the three arms of the service, and drawn from every province of the Dominion. The Canadian forces have just completed their annual training, and as a result of the changes introduced by General Hutton, the militia was never in better shape. While appreciating the patriotic effort of Colonel Hughes to raise a regiment for service in the Transvaal, the Dominion government, of course, could hardly permit a single officer to assume the functions which pertain to the Dominion parliament. Colonel Hughes, therefore, is likely to drop his project.

Mr. Speaker, when I tell you that I traced that cablegram up, and traced it to General Hutton as the author, that I ascertained that General Hutton had dictated that cablegram, that little bit of taffy for himself and condemnation of myself, in much stronger terms than it appears here, but the representative of the press at Ottawa would not send it in the terms in which it was first dictated, then you will understand a little the character of the officer who was commanding our forces. At the same time a similar intimation to that appeared in all the Canadian papers. I will not quote it here, but I will say that it pointed out that Colonel Hughes had usurped the functions of the government; it is stated in that communication that the government felt that I had usurped their functions. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he felt I had usurped the functions of the government in anything that I did at that time. I do not think he ever expressed himself so.

At the same time, as soon as my communication appeared in the press of Canada, I received an offer of $1,000,000 of insurance on 1,000 men. I regret exceedingly that I am not at liberty to make public the name of the gentleman who so kindly placed that insurance at the disposal of the officers and men of the Canadian forces going to South Africa. I may say, however, that I believe the offer came from the same source as the insurance which Sir Charles Tupper managed, and which has done so much to alleviate the sufferings of the families of the volunteers who went to the front in this war. I regret that I am not at liberty to make use of the gentleman's name, but that offer of insurance did the yeomanry, the volunteers of this country, much service, in encouraging them to go to the front. These inspired attacks on myself in the papers came from the general officer commanding. The statement in the Canadian papers I also traced home to General Hutton, as having been dictated to the press reporters. On September 28, three days after the other had appeared in the Canadian papers and the English papers, the following appeared:

Ottawa, September 28.—Major-General Hutton has notified Col. Sam. Hughes that he is not authorized to call for volunteers for service in the Transvaal. Still the gallant colonel evidently has not paid any attention to the gentle hint. He has gone on calling for volunteers. Attention is now drawn to the fact that section 98 of the British Army Act makes it an offence punishable by a fine up to $100 for anybody, without due authority, attempting to procure recruits for the army

This I traced home to General Hutton, it having been directly furnished to the press of this country. I then took the liberty of writing a communication to him drawing his attention to the fact that I had not violated Sec. 98, and asking him to be good enough to place me right before the country. He did not do so; on the contrary he followed it up by a series of threats and letters which were very much aside from his duties as general officer commanding. Previous to this, though I had been spoken to by officers who were friends of General Hutton to say that if I withdrew the controversial matter it would all be settled. Accordingly, at the request of Colonel Foster who, throughout, making all due allowance for his being under the direction and control of Major-General Hutton, has acted the part, to my mind, of a perfect gentleman, I wrote:

October, 17, 1899.

Dear Col. Foster,—I beg to withdraw the letters written by me to General Hutton re application for service and other matters

Yours truly,

SAM. HUGHES.

That was forwarded by Colonel Foster with a very kind note to Major-General Hutton. Major-General Hutton replied, and I want you to note this, Mr. Speaker:

C. S. O.

The foregoing has been received by me this evening. I do not consider that the irregular form which Lt.-Col. S. Hughes, Commanding 45th Battalion, has adopted in treating so grave a breach of military discipline as in any respect whatever adequate to the extreme gravity of the circumstances.

This officer's treatment of the official correspondence, as exemplified by his half private and half official communication to you by name, is sufficient indication in itself of his ignorance of the military fitness of things and of his ignorance of the elements of military discipline.

EDW T. H. HUTTON, M.G.,

Commanding Canadian Militia.

Ottawa, October 26, 1899.

I want hon. gentlemen to note that, and I trust that the hon. Minister of Militia will give this matter his attention. I would thus briefly refer him to the correspondence to see who has been the sinner. This is the first irregular letter I had written, the first one that was not addressed officially except those marked 'private.' On July 31, Colonel Foster wrote a letter to the district officer commanding Militia District No. 3 and 4, in which he says:

Headquarters, July 31, 1900.

From the Chief Staff Officer to D.O.C. 3 & 4.

Herewith for your information is a copy of a letter addressed direct, by direction of the Major-

General Commanding, to Lieut.-Colonel Hughes, Commanding 45th Battalion.

By order,
H. FOSTER, Colonel,
Chief Staff Officer.

(For copy of letter referred to above, see preceding.)

So that, as early as July, General Hutton began himself the half official form of correspondence, because Colonel Foster wrote that letter by direct order of the general officer commanding. Following on we find, on September 19, Colonel Foster, again, by order of General Hutton, writing to me addressing me directly and complimenting me as dear colonel, etc. That letter was written by order of General Hutton, and is a half private half official communication. Then we find the telegram referred to in the letter of September 25, sent to me direct by Colonel Foster, by order of General Hutton. We find also his unofficial correspondence with the London Times of the 25th September, and we find also his correspondence with the Canadian papers. So that, he began it and carried it through. I only wrote one letter, and yet I am held up to the ridicule of the people of this country, because I only wrote one letter and he a dozen of the 'half-private, half-official' class. Now, I have about done with the letters, with this one exception, and I shall read it as being from the general to the minister. I have clearly traced up the whole business. I shall not refer to anything that transpired before the applications for service began. Let me review the incidents as I have stated them. I wrote three letters, one out of mere courtesy through the district officer commanding to the general who paid no attention to it and never laid it before the minister. Then, I wrote direct to the minister, and I may say that I was treated most courteously by the minister. I never knew how my communication was treated until I read the report in 'Hansard.' He seems to have done everything that a soldier, a gentleman and a minister should have done. I speak of him just as I find him. The only thing that I thought he had acted unfairly in was in allowing the private correspondence to be published, until I saw that General Hutton had distinctly stated that he had communicated this to me, a statement which was untrue. I had never heard of such a thing until I saw a copy of the correspondence on the steamer, and I can very well excuse the minister on that point. I wrote that letter to the minister, and I was reprimanded by the general for writing it, but, he withdrew his letter. The third application was a letter to Mr. Chamberlain, which has also been referred to. For that, I was reprimanded by the order of His Excellency. I gave my reply, and they saw that they were wrong. As far as the publishing of this letter in the papers drawing attention to the war is concerned, I may say that I was reprimanded by telegram for having laid myself open to section 98, when a child could have told the general officer commanding that I had not left myself open. Major-General Hutton knows nothing as to why section 98 was drawn up. It was drawn up to prevent soldiers being enlisted in barrooms and over drinking tables, and from being entrapped into taking the shilling, when they did not know they were being enlisted. There is not a man who knows anything of the reason why section 98 was adopted, who could consider my letter as bringing me under the operation of that section. Yet, I was rapped over the knuckles by General Hutton in the London Times and the Canadian papers. Then I was met with the statement that I was liable to a fine and imprisonment; all these things belittleing me before the country. You will see that I put up with a great deal before I wrote back in rather warm language. Here comes the crowning letter of the lot:

October 26, 1899.

The Honourable the Minister
Militia and Defence.

Sir,—

1. Knowing that there is an anxiety on your part and believing that there exists a similar feeling on the part of some of the members of the cabinet, that Lieut.-Colonel Sam. Hughes, M.P., commanding the 45th Battalion, should be employed on active service with the Canadian forces now proceeding to South Africa, I deem it my duty to place on record in an official form my reasons for having declined to recommend this officer's employment with such force in any capacity whatever.

2. I regret the necessity for my action in this matter, as I am well aware of the leading and praiseworthy part which Lieut.-Colonel S. Hughes has taken in bringing the patriotic necessity for military service in the cause of the empire before the Canadian public. I should, however, fail in my duty if I recommended the employment of an officer, however well-intentioned, whom I now know and whose correspondence shows to be, not only devoid of any proper spirit of subordination, but to be also deficient in military judgment. I need hardly remind you that the selection of officers for the command of troops about to engage in a serious campaign is one involving the greatest responsibility. It is a matter in which the lives of our soldiers, the credit of Canada, and the honour of the empire are directly concerned.

3. I therefore submit for your perusal and information the following facts and papers:—

(a.) Minute from Chief Staff Officer to D.O.C., M.D. No. 3 and 4, dated August 24, 1899, re despatch from Secretary of State for the Colonies, and reply of Lieut.-Colonel Hughes thereto. Marked 'A.'

(b.) Minute and telegram from Chief Staff Officer to D.O.C., M.D. No. 3 and 4, dated September 25, 1899, re advertising for recruits in Canada, and reply from Lieut.-Colonel Hughes. Marked 'B.'

4. I have further, with great reluctance, deemed it necessary to submit for your perusal and information the following additional unofficial correspondence sent by Lieut.-Colonel S. Hughes to myself personally. I am impelled to this course from the necessity of proving to you that this officer's want of judgment is conspicuous, and that his reflections upon Imperial officers generally, even those of the highest rank now employed in South Africa, make Lieut.-Colonel Hughes' employment absolutely prohibitive :—

With reference to his communication of the 10th instant, I deem the matter so serious that, in the interests of discipline, I recommend that Lieut.-Colonel Sam. Hughes be removed from the command of his regiment, and be placed on the retired list.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
EDWARD T. H. HUTTON,
Major-General,
Commanding Canadian Militia.

I am glad that he had learned by that time a little constitutional law, and that he cannot place me on the retired list. He admits here for the first time that he has a superior in this country because 'he recommends' to the minister to do certain things. General Hutton talks about insubordination. Why, I have read in the 'Hansard' about his being turned out of this country for insubordination himself, and I need not refer to his record elsewhere. I am going on 35 years a Canadian volunteer ; I have been under a great many men in my time, and I have never been charged directly or indirectly with insubordination. My record as a volunteer and a soldier in Canada or elsewhere I leave to those whom I served under. Not one will say that I ever refused to carry out an order. Although I have received orders given by my seniors in active service for which they had no authority, I nevertheless obeyed them. I carried out every order that General Hutton himself gave me, although I am free to say that many of them were contrary to the drill book and to common sense. General Hutton says further, that I am deficient in military judgment, and he talks as if he knew something about it. He says :

'It is a matter in which the lives of our soldiers, the credit of Canada and the honour of the empire are directly concerned.'

Since that letter was penned, General Hutton and I have had an opportunity of facing the music, and I leave it to the official records of the British Empire to show which of us has best looked after the lives of our soldiers, the credit of Canada and the honour of the empire.

Now, Sir, in all this correspondence I have not one word to retract from any letter I wrote. Possibly, had I known that the private letters were going to be published I might have softened the tone. Possibly, if I had waited 24 hours, I would not have written quite as sharply to him as I did in face of his taunts. Neither directly nor indirectly do I retract one word as untrue. Some of the private letters I can infinitely strengthen, should any gentleman challenge me on the floor of this House. Hon. gentlemen know to what I refer, and I am in a position to give evidence as to it much stronger than anything I have stated in my private letters. I do not wish to do so, but I am ready if I am challenged. The statement in that letter of General Hutton's about my reflections upon imperial officers was written with the direct object of being published and circulated in South Africa and that was done. I have nothing to retract in that respect. I slandered no general in South Africa ; I said nothing about any British general which has not been intensified by British officers themselves. I call the attention of the minister to the fact that one letter dated 'On the train, Oct. 28,' is either intentionally or unintentionally incorrect, as the date should be Oct. 23, and I trust the minister will have that corrected when the return is brought down.

There is another matter to which I wish to refer. As to refusing to permit me to be second in command of the Canadian corps—I say it is all for the best in the end—I had been assured by the Minister of Militia that I would be second in command ; I knew that I had been selected by Col. Otter for the position, and I did not know until I reached Ottawa on the morning of the 26th or 27th of October that I was not second in command. I was determined to go to Africa if I had to swim there. I was determined to go to Africa either by way of England or direct from Canada as I was enabled to do by the kindness of the Minister of Militia. Imagine my being handed the following note through Col. Otter :

October, 1899.

1. The following minute has been forwarded to the O. C. the 2nd (Special Service) Battalion, proceeding to South Africa by ss. Sardinian on Monday, October 30, 1899 :—

'Permission has been granted for Lieut.-Colonel S. Hughes, 45th Battalion, to have passage to South Africa by ss. Sardinian, conveying the Canadian troops.'

'It is to be clearly understood that this officer does not proceed in any military capacity whatever. He will accordingly not wear uniform on board ship.'

2. Leave of absence is granted you from this date with leave to travel abroad.

By order,
H. FOSTER, Colonel,
Chief Staff Officer.

October 29, 1899.

This letter addressed to Col. Otter says leave of absence is granted 'you' ; that is to Col. Otter. In this connection I draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to the fact that I have never been granted leave of absence, and so far as the official records show, I have seen no official notice that I ever returned to Canada. I characterize that letter as one of the most impudent pieces of meddling that any officer ever perpetrated. He had no more authority over me than that child has. Nevertheless, I found that followed by another similar letter to the commanding officer in South Africa. I demand to know why the general officer commanding in Canada dared to write to a general outside of this country. He might as well write to the general commanding the United States troops in the Philippines as to write to General Buller in South Africa. What was it his business or their business. How dare he write that Lt.-Col. Sam Hughes, of the 45th Battalion, was without military status. He had nothing to do with me outside of the three mile limit, and yet he wrote :

I am not prepared to recommend his employment in any capacity in South Africa whatever.

More than that, Sir, he got Col. Otter to do a little bit of meddling on shipboard. Col. Otter, acting on his instructions, thought he had control over me. He did not seem to know that there was one officer only bossing that ship, and that was the captain of the ship. If the captain had wished, he could have put Col. Otter himself in irons, as well as every other man on the ship. He was the one man who was supreme there, and to him alone did I owe allegiance. Col. Otter and I are the best of friends, as we always have been, and as I trust we always shall be ; but in pursuance of this contemptible order, he undertook, of course very politely, to issue instructions to me. I at once informed him that he had nothing whatever to do with me. I was very sorry to find an officer like Col. Otter committing the mistake of following such an order as that of General Hutton.

There is another matter in this correspondence to which I wish to refer ; that is, a cablegram which I received at Cape Town offering me a command in Strathcona's Horse. I wish to say here that I would have been very much pleased to have had the command of a Canadian regiment. I do not hesitate to say that it was my ambition to have such a command, and I wish to say, in all modesty, that I think I have proven that I was and am capable of commanding a Canadian regiment. I would have given a very great deal to have been permitted to command Strathcona's Horse. But when I received an offer of a captaincy in that regiment, signed 'chief staff officer' —I do not know who he may be—I looked on the whole thing as a piece of impudence. The cablegram read as follows :

Col. Sam. Hughes, Canadian Regiment, Cape Town.

General proposes recommend you captain in Strathcona's Horse. Reply if you accept.

Chief Staff Officer.

I need not say that I deemed this one of the greatest insults ever offered me, and I did not reply to it. I find that followed up by a letter from General Hutton to the Minister of Militia, in which he makes this statement :

Lieut-Col. S. Hughes, 45th Battalion, having written a full and complete apology, and expressed regret for his insubordinate and improper conduct, I request that the final paragraph of my letter of October 26, 1899, may be considered as cancelled.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

I may say that bears on its face a deliberate falsehood. From the time I left Canada I never, either directly or indirectly, communicated with General Hutton ; I had nothing to do with him.

That, in brief, is the correspondence. I have brought this matter up, not in order to vindicate myself, and not because I have any objection to the general officer commanding the Canadian forces being a British general. On the contrary, I desire that our general officer commanding should be a British general. I know that a great many of my friends, both on the other side of the House and on this side, in view of the conduct of some of the general officers in recent years, have expressed the wish that a Canadian officer should be appointed to that position. I wish to say, standing here, that it is my desire that the general officer commanding should be an Imperial officer, and I believe that if we paid that officer $10,000 a year, which is the pay of a major-general in England, and is about what little New South Wales pays to her general officer commanding, we would get an officer to come out here to take command of our troops who would be a credit to the position and to the empire. A man would not be sent here to be got rid of because he was cranky in the office in England, or to make use of the position as a stepping-stone to some other position. One reason why I have brought this matter up is to let these men know that we have responsible government in this country, and that no military officer can step outside of the law in dealing with the officers under him. I wish the papers to be brought down in order that the officers throughout the country may know what their powers are. Would you believe it ?—fully one-half the officers of this country think that because I or any officer may command a battalion, the men under the colonel, even when off duty, are subject to his whim in military matters. The idea is childish and absurd, but, nevertheless, it exists, and I would very much like that these men should be disabused of it. I have brought this matter before the House in the hope that any harm which may have resulted from the unconstitutional conduct of that general officer commanding in the whole matter may be wiped out. I have brought it up in the hope that the good which has resulted from the colonies participating in the war in South Africa may continue to grow, and that in the very near future we may find the Imperial parliament divesting itself of parish politics and entering the arena of Imperial politics proper, and that we may soon see Canada represented in an informal council, ultimately to become a formal council, for the promotion of the best interests of the British Empire and the upbuilding of the human race. I must thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for the patient hearing of this rather long and uninteresting legal discussion ; but I felt that the circumstances required that this matter should be clearly placed before the House, in order that there might be a better understanding in the future of the respective duties owing to the various authorities, from the Governor General down, in military matters.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). Mr Speaker, I am sure that neither my hon. friend nor the House expect me to enter into any lengthy discussion of the very many subjects to which our attention has been called this evening. I think, however, that the House, and probably the country, did expect, after what took place last year, after the well-known and well-discussed differences of opinion which occurred between my hon. friend and the general officer commanding, that my hon. friend on his return would make, as he has made, some statement to this House in reference to his conduct ; and I am sure that we have all been very well pleased with the manner in which he has discharged that duty.

I have no doubt that the country will be interested in the statement which the hon. gentleman has made to the House this evening. I do not propose to enter into any discussion. The hon. gentleman has acquitted me as minister, and also, I understand, the government, of any intention to injure him, or of having injured him in any way. The quarrel is one between the hon. gentleman and General Hutton, and the hon. gentleman has stated his side of the case. He did, at the opening, make a reference, which he corrected later on, to the character of the papers brought down in reply to a motion for a return, during last session, and described them as incomplete and garbled. I am quite sure, from the subsequent remarks of my hon. friend, that he did not intend that as a reflection on the officers of my department, and therefore, I have nothing to say on that point. He also took some exceptions to the publishing of private letters, but later on in his speech he disavowed any charge of impropriety against myself and the officers of my department. As a matter of fact, as the hon. gentleman has said, General Hutton did place before me the letters which were brought before the House last session, and stated that he had notified my hon. friend that he had done so, and that those letters must be considered official letters in the future. And I may say in passing, that without those letters his whole discussion would have lost a great deal of its point and interest, and would be very much like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out.

I do not know that I should say anything with reference to the long legal opinion which my hon. friend read to the House, regarding the relations which officers of superior rank in the militia bear to officers of inferior rank, or privates. I am not a lawyer, nor have I studied as much as I ought the military law, but I am bound to say that if the construction which my hon. friend puts upon the military law of Canada be correct, then it is very necessary that law should be changed, because it would be impossible to enforce military discipline, and our militia system would be absolutely a farce. To say that if the officer commanding a district issued an order to have the rifles and equipment of a rural battalion inspected, and the captain, who had control of the armoury, refused to allow the inspection to be made, the officer commanding was powerless to enforce the inspection, is, it seems to me, at variance with common sense, and with everything I have been taught concerning the militia in the past. However, I do not propose to discuss the matter at all, and will do my utmost to bring down every paper to which my hon. friend refers. I am not quite sure whether I can lay my hands on them all, but if he will suggest where I may find any which may be missing, I shall do my utmost to procure and lay them on the table at the earliest possible date.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. the minister says that if the law is as I have stated it to be, it should be changed. Well, I can assure him that when he brings in any change, he will find stern and serious opposition from one seat in this House at all events, if I happen to be a member. I never stated that the district officer commanding had not the right to notify the captain of a rural battalion that he was going to inspect the armoury, but I stated that he had no authority to oblige the captain to submit his armoury to inspection. I was not speaking of the district officer commanding at all, but of the officer commanding a battalion, who has no right, under the law, to inspect the arms of the company. But should the district officer commanding notify a captain that he is going to inspect the arms, and the captain refused then, as the law clearly imposes the duty on the district commanding officer of inspecting the arms, all the latter has to do is to report to the minister and the minister has power to retire that officer from the force. Therefore, there is no necessity for the hon. minister to amend the law. But should he bring in an amendment to provide that, I, as colonel of my battalion, shall have the authority to order any of my fellows, when not subject to military law, to do this or that, I assure the hon. gentleman that I will fight him to a finish. Once my men have done their drill, they are free men, and not subject to military law until they don the uniform again. The hon. the minister brought up the case of a district officer commanding, but I referred to the case of a commanding officer in Ottawa or elsewhere ordering one of his captains to let him into his armoury for the purpose of inspecting the arms. The commanding officer has no military authority to go there.

The hon. gentleman says he will bring down every paper. I assure him that he will not.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All I can find.

Mr. HUGHES. He will not find all. It is currently rumoured that a great many of the papers have been removed from his department. A good deal of this is private correspondence—and I would scorn to bring down private correspondence myself—but inasmuch as the late general officer commanding has placed himself in the unenviable position of producing private correspondence, when it suits his purpose and convenience, I would give him the opportunity of producing such further private correspondence as would speak strongly in my favour, but I have no doubt it will not be forthcoming.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 11 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth) moved :

That the time for receiving petitions for private Bills be extended to Friday, the 15th of March next, and the time for presenting private Bills be extended to Friday, the 29th of March next, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I have repeatedly, for years, brought the disadvantage of such proposals as this to the attention of the House. This is the commencement in a new parliament of an evil which always results in lengthening our sessions. The time for presenting petitions for private Bills and for the introduction of private Bills cannot be unknown to the public, and they ought to be ready with their Bills at the proper time. I think that the beginning of a new parliament is the proper time for us to put our foot down on a custom which has obtained very largely of late, and which is a very inconvenient one for us. I think that if it were given out early in the session, and in this parliament, that these extensions would not be made as easily as they have been heretofore, the people would govern themselves accordingly, and this would assist us greatly in getting through our work in much more reasonable time than is usually done.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I altogether agree with my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule). The practice of extending the time for private Bills became an abuse during the life of the late parliament. At the beginning of this parliament we should insist on the rule being strictly carried out. Though I will not, at the moment, object to this motion, I must say that if any further delay is required, for my part, I shall have to ask the House not to agree to it.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT AND PASSENGER RATES ON RAILWAYS.

Mr. JOHN D. REID (South Grenville) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 28) to regulate freight and passenger rates on railways. He said : I may say, in briefly explaining this Bill, that it is the same Bill that I introduced last session, and also the session previous. It is for the purpose of appointing a commission to regulate freight and passenger rates on railways. The Bill provides that the railway commission shall have power, in case of any difficulty arising between railway companies and shippers, to settle those matters. When the second reading comes up I shall go into the matter more fully. I hope that at this session the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) will kindly give this matter his consideration, and help me to pass it. I believe there is a general desire through the country for the appointment of a railway commission of some kind. This Bill may not be perfect, but if we pass it now we will have an opportunity before next session of seeing exactly what is required, and any defects in it may then be remedied. In preparing this Bill I have taken the Interstate Commerce Act as a guide. On the other side of the line, I understand, that Act is doing a great deal of good, it makes the rates uniform and protects the shippers to a great extent. I hope that my Bill will have the support of the House, and that I shall be able to get it through this session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 29) to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said : I may say in explanation of this Bill, that its various clauses relates more or less to matters of detail in the administration of Dominion lands. The first clause needs no explanation. The second clause is for the purpose of enabling another officer to sign official documents in place of the commissioner of Dominion lands in his absence. The third clause relates to the date at which the settler is required to perfect his homestead entries by going upon the land. It provides that the entry may be declared void at the end of six months in the discretion of the minister of the department. At the present time, and for some years past, that has been the actual practice, and my attention was called to the fact that the practice has not been in accordance with the statute, and I propose to ask the House to amend the statute so as to make it accord with what has been the practice. Strictly to follow the statute at present might work a great injustice, because sometimes settlers are not able to go upon the land within the exact period of six months. The fourth clause enables the settler who comes from the United States to have one year from the time he is making his entry to perfect it. It is found that is necessary in the case of people who come from the western states, who sometimes, after selecting their land, are not able to come back as soon as they intended. Under this clause he may have one year to perfect his entry. The fifth clause relates to an amendment made a year or two ago with respect to the homestead law under which a settler was enabled to perform his residence upon the second homestead by living upon his first homestead. It was the intention that that clause should apply only in cases where homesteads were taken up in the vicinity of the first homestead. But the settlers display considerable ingenuity in interpreting the law, and some have attempted to make it apply where the homesteads were in different parts of the country altogether. The amendment adds these words : 'If the second homestead is in the vicinity of the first homestead.' The sixth clause is for the purpose of removing a provision which was contained in an amendment made at the instance of the then member for Western Assiniboia, Mr. Davin, some three years ago, to enable the homesteader to get his patent for a second homestead by having a certain number of cattle instead of doing cultivation duties. The provision requiring that he shall cultivate at least one acre of land has also been found to be of no practical benefit, and we propose to remove it. The seventh section is for the purpose of removing a clerical error that existed in the amendment made a couple of years ago. The eighth section is for the purpose of removing a doubt in regard to the construction of a clause in the Dominion Lands Act, relating to assignments which settlers might make before they were entitled to their patent. The law does not permit a settler to make an assignment before he is entitled to his patent, but it was found in operation to be very hard, because a settler might make an assignment without knowing the provisions of the law and without intending to violate them. Two or three different provisions were made in regard to this particular subject. This clause is for the purpose of making clear the effect of the last amendment. I will go into it more fully when the Bill is before the Committee and when the legal effect of the amendment may be explained.

The 9th clause is for the purpose of enabling the Department of the Interior to issue a patent to a settler or a company who may have made an advance to a settler under the provisions of the Act which was passed a number of years ago, providing that companies might make advances to settlers upon the security of their homesteads. There have been cases in which settlers have got advances, have complied with the requirements of the law as to residence and cultivation of the soil and have left the country without getting their patents, thinking perhaps that the land was not worth any more than the advance upon it. In such cases it is quite clear that the companies are entitled to the patent for the land so as to realize the security which was provided for under the original Act. A technical difficulty has arisen in this case by reason of the fact that some of these settlers were not British subjects and consequently the department could not issue the patents. The purpose of the amendment is to enable the department to issue a patent when the settler is not a British subject and has not taken out his naturalization papers.

The 10th clause is to enable the Department of the Interior to issue grazing leases under regulations made by the Governor in Council without each individual lease coming before council. It has been found to be extremely troublesome and to cumber the work of council very much, when the requirement of the law is that there should be an order in council for each lease.

The 11th clause is for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of leases of public lands issued by the Department of the Interior being under the Great Seal of the Crown. The Deputy Minister of Justice has lately advised the department that this amendment ought to be made.

Clause 12 is for the purpose of providing that in all cases where interest is accruing upon the sales of Dominion lands the rate of interest from July 7, 1900, when the Act which was passed last session relating to the rate of interest, shall be 5 per cent instead of 6 per cent, as it was before.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to expedite the return of the papers in connection with an order of the House touching any recommendation for reports as to irregularities in the administration of the present Dominion Lands Act, before the second reading of this Bill, so that we will be in possession of whatever material there is on the subject before the hon. minister asks the House to agree to the second reading.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Speaker, I have not the least objection to expediting the return, or in fact, anything that is ordered, but, I may say that I found considerable difficulty, and the officers of the department found difficulty, in knowing what papers the hon. gentleman meant by that motion. If he has any particulars in his mind, if he will write me a note specifying what they are in such a way as to help us to find out what he is referring to, I will be happy to do what he suggests.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the officers of the hon. minister are not more acute in connection with these matters. The order of the House is for :

> Copies of all reports, official memoranda and papers dealing with irregularities, mistakes by order in council or otherwise in the administration of the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act in the Yukon district.

Now, the hon. gentleman has mentioned, as I understood him, in the introduction of this Bill a question with which he proposes to deal, the question of the execution of some leases. They may not relate to this district, although the Act itself does. Touching, for instance, the execution of these leases and the affixing of the Great Seal for the purpose of validity—this is one suggestion, but the order of the House expressly refers to any question of irregularity. When we see the provisions of this Bill there may be some retroactive clauses—I fancy there are, as it has generally been the case, and the effect of these provisions will be to make valid or cure any irregularity that has occurred. I am not in a position to give a definite statement as to any case that has come up. I have no particular case in my mind whatever, but it occurred to me that in the administration of that Act there may have been, and it is a natural supposition that there must have been, irregularities, especially as relates to that far-away district in connection with the operation of that Act. If these reports or memoranda are in the possession of the department this order of the House will, of course, attach to any of them. If, on the other hand, there are none, none will be brought down. But, following the minister to-day, it occurred to me, that one of the provisions that he mentioned of his Bill has reference to some irregularities in the issue of leases. It may not be as confined as this order of the House is, to the Yukon district. That may be, but I am not able to particularize any more than the order of the House has done in regard to such irregularities.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is not the least objection on my part to expedite the return in every possible way. When a general order of that kind is made in connection with the department where the transactions have been very many and the amount of business very extensive, it is, of course, more satisfactory for the minister, if there has been any special transaction in the mind of the hon. gentleman who moves for the return, to know what transaction is referred to, so that he can see what papers there are on the subject. However, I will do everything possible to see that the papers are brought down without delay.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The only case that suggests itself to my mind is in regard to the water front at Dawson. There may be some action in regard to the leasing of the water front where, the hon. minister will remember, there was no formal lease executed and yet the parties went into possession as if a lease had been formally executed. I did not have that in my mind when I made the motion ; still it would cover it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 30) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said : Mr. Speaker, I shall take the liberty of following the example set by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), and acting in accordance with a very wholesome practice in the British House of Commons where it is customary to explain the character and nature of Bills upon their introduction, to offer a few remarks upon the measure that I propose to submit to the House. The Bill which I shall have the honour to place in your hands, Mr. Speaker, provides for certain amendments to the Dominion Lands Act. It provides that subclauses 2, 3, and 4 of clause 29 of the Dominion Lands Act, chap. 54, R.S.C., be repealed, and the following clauses substituted therefor :

Subclause 2. The sale of the public lands of the Dominion suitable for agricultural purposes shall be to actual settlers only upon reasonable terms of settlement and in such areas as can be reasonably occupied and cultivated by the settler.

Subclause 3. No grants of public lands of the Dominion shall in future be made to railway or other corporations.

Subclause 4. Subclause 5 of class 29 aforesaid is hereby amended by substituting the word 'may' for the word 'shall' wherever the same occurs in the third line of the said sub-clause.

The provision of this Bill as embodied in the first subclause with reference to the reservation of the agricultural lands of this Dominion for actual settlers only, is a provision which was adopted by the opposition in the House of Commons in the year 1879, and it formed a portion of the policy which they presented to this country from that time on. It is a provision which was embodied in the platform, adopted by the great Liberal convention which met in this city in June, 1893. It is a provision which I believe, Mr. Speaker, has been practically adhered to and honoured in the observance by the government during the past five years. Still, I think it well that this provision should be placed in explicit terms upon the statute-book, and should not be left as a provision to be carried into effect by departmental regulations, and by the action of the government in a sense, where that action may under certain circumstances be made to vary from the principle laid down. It is unnecessary for me at any length to enlarge upon the justice of this provision, or to enlarge upon the necessity in the public's interest for endorsnig and preserving this principle. The future greatness of this country will depend upon the settlement and the cultivation of its public lands, and any measure or policy which is calculated to lessen the hardships that beset the pioneers in their struggles against the difficulties incident to the task that they undertake in a new country, is a policy which should meet with the approbation of every citizen of Canada. The more rapidly these public lands can be settled and the more favourable the conditions under which the toiler settles these lands, the greater is the benefit that Canada will derive from the extension of civilization and the bringing under cultivation of these waste areas. It is an outrageous thing, Sir, to allow the middleman to step in between the settler and the government, and purchase large areas of land to be doled out by him afterwards to the settler at three times or four times or mayhap five times the price which the government received from him for these lands. The interests of the country are in no sense benefited by such a transaction. The settler is injured; the government receive no greater advantage than would have accrued had it reserved the land for sale direct to the settler, except, possibly a small item of interest upon the sum it received from the speculator in anticipation of the time when it would sell these lands to the actual settler. For reasons, which I might enlarge upon to a great extent, the policy which I propose is one which ought to commend itself to the favourable judgment of every member of this House. It is a policy which the government has practically recognized, and it is a policy which should be placed upon the statute-book as a mandate to this government, and to all future governments in reference to the management of our public domain.

With regard to the second subclause of this Bill, which provides that in future no land grants, whether of agricultural lands or otherwise, shall be made to any railway or any other corporation; I think it is high time that this matter should receive the careful and candid consideration of this House. I have it upon the authority of the Minister of the Interior, that we have at this moment 67,000,000 acres of land locked up in the North-west. Not all of these acres are lands that the railway company will acquire but all of this—an empire in itself—is withheld from settlement till the railway corporations deign to inform us what portion of these lands they will take for their grants. These lands can not be settled; these lands must lie waste; not only are they not susceptible to settlement, but the condition prevailing, that these lands intervene between the railways and the public lands of the Dominion, that are available for settlement, is a condition which is in the highest degree detrimental to the interests of the country. These lands cannot be taxed, and where in some cases these lands are located by railway companies, the settlers are scattered here and there upon alternate sections struggling with the difficulty of having one-third or perhaps one-half the land of a township that can be cultivated, taxed or settled upon, and this one-third or one-half the area of the township must bear the expense of making roads for the whole township, the expense of establishing school sections, and all the expenses incident to civilization in this far western country.

It always causes me a pang to think of our fatuity in the past in granting such enormous areas so recklessly as we have done. Sixty-seven millions acres tied up now, to say nothing of the lands that have been appropriated by the railways. And what are 67,000,000 acres ? Why 67,000,000 acres is an area large enough for two or three provinces, and the holding back from settlement of this vast area is not only a drawback, but positively a disaster to the country. It is time to change our policy. We gave in 1881, 25,000,000 acres of land to one corporation. We gave to that corporation $25,000,000 in money. We gave to that corporation certain sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway constructed by ourselves, and which cost us $30,000,000. We loaned to that corporation $20,000,000. We took back from the corporation at $1.50 an acre, lands for $10,000,000 of this money. We paid for the Canadian Pacific Railway. We paid every dollar that it cost, and if we had built this road as government property we would have had it to-day without expending one dollar more than we have expended, and we would have had all the lands that have been granted to boot. Now, I do not make any attack upon the Canadian Pacific Railway. They coped with gigantic difficulties. That enterprise was put through with brilliant success and energy, and it has been a great work to keep that road open. It was an important national undertaking. It produced important national fruits. We might possibly have built that road and lost a good deal of money in running it. We might have demonstrated our incapacity to run the road as well as this private corporation has done; but, whatever may be said upon this question on one side or the other, I hold that the time has now come when this system of recklessly giving away the public domain of Canada to railway promoters with the intention of developing the country that we give away, is a policy which we had better cease to pursue. The policy of the United States in this respect might furnish us with a wholesome lesson. The same spirit of recklessness prevailed in that country when they had an enormous public domain. They did not realize that this land would be wanted in the near future by the settler. They failed to realize the greatness of the heritage they had in their possession. They failed to recognize the importance of husbanding these resources, and dealing with this vast public domain in a common sense and proper manner, and it was given to railway promoters—given in millions, tens of millions, hundreds of millions of acres ; and one day the United States government woke up to find that they had practically no public land left—that the whole of the public domain was in the hands of corporations ; and these corporations have gone on rolling up their wealth, until now we have a syndicate owning nearly all the railways of the United States and the United States government has, by its land policy, contributed to the result which the whole country deplores to-day. We do not want to follow their example. We want to realize before it is too late, that the entire policy of making land grants to railways, was an ill-conceived and mistaken policy. For these reasons I think the time has come when this parliament should, by legislation, affirm the principle that land grants of this character are not in the public interest, and shall not hereafter be made. These are the leading features of the Bill ; and, without entering more fully at the present time into the discussion of them, I beg to submit the Bill for its first reading.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I beg leave to support this Bill with all my heart. I believe, as the hon. member for North Norfolk has said, that the land of this country belongs to the country for the people who till it ; and if that fundamental principle is kept in view, our country will increase as it never has done before. I will go further than the hon. member. Not only would I prohibit the giving of any land to large corporations, and give it only to those who would become bona fide settlers upon it, but I would to-morrow find some means of estimating the value every acre of land that belongs to the Canadian Pacific and every other corporation, and I would pay them what they are entitled to for their land, and throw it open to actual settlers. We never can succeed in a country like the North-west except by the settlers settling down as near one another as possible, and under the most favourable conditions. Indeed, there are those who think that it might perhaps be a good investment for the government to make it still easier for the settlers by building small houses for them, and in the meantime holding the land as security. I will not go that far, for I think that any man who gets 160 acres of land in that country under the conditions now prevailing will have no difficulty, if he is a diligent and careful man, in making a better living there than he could in the older provinces. But I would not hamper him at all. I would give him the opportunity of getting the land. I would open every district in the country, making it as free as it was before we obtained possession of it, to every good man who wanted to go in and settle there. That country will never become as great as it was destined to be until these restrictions are removed. It is right in principle, and what is right in principle will always work out in practice. This is not the first time that I have declared in this House most emphatically, and I will continue to declare, that any government of this country would do a wise thing for the country if they could again obtain possession of the lands which we have given to various corporations, and throw them open to the people. The effect of this Bill will be that the land will only be given to bona fide settlers. That will have a double effect. In the first place, settlers knowing that they can get land there, and that it will not be tied up, will be more ready to go into that country ; and in the next place, the alternate sections not being held by the corporations, the settlers will come nearer to one another. Their roads, their schoolhouses, and all their material interests, are bound up in this question. I support this Bill, and trust that it will receive the sanction of this parliament.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). We shall perhaps have a better knowledge of what this Bill is when we come to the second reading; but I cannot allow the first reading to take place without referring to the remarks of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), as to the application of the Bill. I do not understand the position they take, in view of the statement which I understood the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to make last session, that all the lands which it was possible to give to railways, had been granted already. He has not any lands to give, and therefore the Bill is of no use.

Mr. CHARLTON. Oh, no; he has not reached the Peace River Valley yet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well, that was the statement made by the Minister of the Interior last session. A sudden change has come over the spirits of the hon. member for North Norfolk and the hon. member for Guysborough. But a short time ago we had introduced into this House the celebrated Yukon Railway Bill, the object of which was to give a large grant of land to a railway company, and, if I remember rightly, both the hon. member for North Norfolk and the hon. member for Guysborough supported that Bill. I congratulate both of these gentlemen on their change of view; but the practical application of this Bill is all nonsense. The lands that have been granted for railroads in fact cover all the lands that are at the disposal of the government. They have no more land to give to railroad companies, and to introduce a Bill to stop the giving of lands when they have none to dispose of, is a perfect absurdity. As to the rest of the lands, the conditions which the hon. member for North Norfolk wishes to impose by the Bill, are already imposed by the Dominion Lands Act, namely, that they are to be given to actual settlers only.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I have no intention of speaking at any length on the Bill; but my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) referred to his understanding of a statement which I made, and it would be hardly proper for me not to put the matter right. The statement I made to the House last session, or the session before, was with regard to the ability of the government to satisfy the demands of a railway company under its contract; and the statement I made was that the government had not been in a position to offer those gentlemen from the odd-numbered sections such lands as they were willing to accept. The statement was not quite so unreserved a one as my hon. friend has said.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I would like to point out for the information of hon. gentlemen opposite, that the way to get all these lands back, is to go in for the scheme of government ownership of railways, which I proposed the other day. That was one of my main reasons, which I forgot in the heat of my argument. I pointed out that we could secure the Canadian Pacific Railway by lease, but I forgot to point out that if we leased that road, we would get back every acre of its land grant. True, I believe the land is pledged for the bonds of the road; but the land would come into the hands of the government again, and we would have it for the people; and I believe there is enough land owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to-day, if taken back into the hands of the government, and used to the best advantage, to pay every bond and every other indebtedness of the Canadian Pacific Railway. If these gentlemen wish to have the land returned to the people, and settled under the best auspices, there is the way to do it: nationalize the railways, get the land back, and use that land to bring settlers into Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I presume it will be better to have the Bill placed in the hands of hon. members before entering upon any extensive discussion of the questions involved, and therefore, I do not rise for that purpose. I rise rather for the purpose of calling attention to the statement which my hon. friend made, who introduced the Bill, and which seems to imply an erroneous idea, and one which I think it would be well to correct. My hon. friend stated that he thought the time had now arrived when we should reverse our policy of giving settlement lands to railways in the form of subsidies or land grants. I take exception to the implication, because I submit that that time has already arrived and that we reserved that policy some years ago. This government reversed that policy, and resolved that it would not give any settlement lands by way of subsidy to any railway, and have adhered to that resolution.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I repeat the government has adhered to that resolution. I am not now speaking of mineral lands, for I think there could be no possible objection at any time to giving mineral lands, if thereby we insure the prospecting of mines and the development of the country as well as the construction of railways. But there is a clear and manifest distinction in the mind of any one who considers the subject, between grants of mineral and grants of settlement lands, and that distinction the government has drawn and adheres to. No legislation therefore is necessary, so far as this government is concerned, in order that the policy we have adopted of not giving settlement lands as railway subsidies shall be adhered to.

At the same time I have not suggested any objection to the Bill itself. I do not know precisely what the Bill is, and when it comes to be closely examined in its details, it may be found desirable to modify it. But so far as regards the general objects which the hon. gentleman states he has in view, I think they will be found to commend themselves to the House generally, as I am sure they commend themselves to the government.

PACIFIC CABLE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House resolve itself to-morrow into Committee of the Whole on the following resolution :

That, whereas by 'The Pacific Cable Act, 1899,' His Excellency in Council is authorized to guarantee payment of five-eighteenths of the principal sum of £1,700,000 sterling to be applied in establishing direct submarine telegraphic communication between Canada and Australia.

And whereas, in lieu of said sum of £1,700,000 it is estimated that for the purpose aforesaid there will be required a sum not exceeding £2,000,000 sterling, which sum of £2,000,000 the government of the United Kingdom is willing to advance.

That the Governor in Council is authorized to guarantee payment of five-eighteenth parts of the principal and interest of and upon the securities to be issued by the government of the United Kingdom for raising the said sum, namely, £2,000,000 to be advanced.

That section 3 of said Act be repealed.

He said : This resolution has received the assent of the Crown.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—THE CORONATION OATH.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. JOHN COSTIGAN (Victoria, N.B.) It was my intention, Mr. Speaker, to move an amendment to that motion, but on consideration, I have decided to pursue a course, the wisdom of which I have already experienced in a former session. I think I would be treating the House more courteously, and also the government, if, instead of availing myself of this opportunity to move the amendment, I put my motion before the House and parliament, in order that parliament and the country may know its nature, and be prepared for it when presented.

I regret to say that my experience convinces me that with regard to the motion I intend to move, and the reasons that impel me to move it, the House would, to some extent, be taken by surprise in entering upon a debate on the question this afternoon. Therefore, I think it is better simply to give notice of my intention on the next occasion on which this House is moved into Committee of Supply, to propose in amendment to the motion to go into Supply, the following resolution. And I wish to declare here that in moving that amendment, I expect the government to receive it as a friendly one—that is, one not inspired by any political reasons, and which should not be received as a vote of want of confidence, because if it is moved as an amendment to going into Supply, that is simply because that is the only way of obtaining a fair expression of opinion on a proposition of this kind.

There are many precedents, which the older members of the House may remember, for the course I am taking, which I might quote. I wish, therefore, to announce now that on the next occasion when the motion is made for this House to go into Committee of Supply, I will move this resolution in amendment.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If my hon. friend would allow me, I would suggest, since he intends to make the motion as a friendly one, that probably it would be just as well, before submitting it to the House, to give us its subject-matter and nature.

Hon. JOHN COSTIGAN. I was going to read the whole motion. My object in postponing it, is to have it before the House before submitting it. It is as follows :—

That an humble address be presented to His Most Gracious Majesty the King, as follows :—

Most Gracious Majesty,—

Your Majesty's most faithful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave most humbly to represent :

That as a token of the civil and religious liberties and of the quality of rights guaranteed to all British subjects in the Canadian confederation as well as under the British constitution, the British sovereign should not be called to make any declaration offensive to the religious belief of any subject of the British Crown.

That by virtue of the Act of Settlement of 1689 the British sovereign, on the first day of the meeting of the first parliament, or at the coronation, is called upon to make the following declaration :—

'I, A. B., by the grace of God, King (or Queen) of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever ; and that the invocation of adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do make this declaration, and each and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope or any other authority or person whatsoever, or without any hope of any such dispensation from any person or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration or any part thereof, although the Pope or any person or persons, or power whatsoever, should dispense with or annul the same or declare that it was null and void from the beginning.'

That such declaration is most offensive to the dearest convictions of all Roman Catholics.

That the staunch loyalty of His Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects in Canada, comprising about 43 per cent of the entire population of this Dominion, and throughout British possessions, should not be rewarded by their being chosen alone amongst believers of all creeds and branded as adolaters by their sovereign.

That in the opinion of this House, the abovementioned Act of Settlement should be amended by abolishing the said declaration, and the British sovereign freed for ever from the obligation of offending the religious principles of any class of his faithful subjects throughout the British Empire.

That is the motion I intend to move as an amendment on going into Supply, on the first occasion I have the opportunity of doing so.

VISIT OF THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CORNWALL AND YORK.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House, and especially of the government, to a matter that I think of considerable moment to Canada, particularly to the Pacific coast. I see in the newspapers an account of the proposed visit of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, and it is as follows :—

In connection with the proposed visit to the colonies of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, the London Times states that it has been decided to commission the Ophir this month, and that their Royal Highnesses will leave England in March. The cruise, which will extend to Canada, will probably occupy about six months; and, according to present arrangements, the following places will be visited: Gibraltar, Malta, Colombo, Singapore, all the Australian colonies and two ports in New Zealand, one in each island. The homeward voyage will probably include Mauritius, the Cape, and possibly one of the West Indian Islands, as well as a Canadian port.

With regard to the escort, two cruisers of the Channel squadron will accompany the Ophir to Gibraltar—— —and so on. From that account and from all the accounts in the newspapers that I have seen, it seems that their Royal Highnesses are not to visit the Pacific coast, and, if they come to Canada, as we trust they will, they will come to Halifax, and probably then come inland a little way, perhaps to Montreal and Toronto, but not further west. I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that, if such is the case, it will be a thousand pities for the good of all concerned. When our present King was here as Prince of Wales in 1860, he did not go any further west than Toronto.

Mr. MACLEAN. He went to Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. But, as in those days the splendid province of Manitoba, and the great North-west and British Columbia, were, to all intents and purposes, a terra incognita to most people, and very sparsely inhabited, they were not visited by our present King. But, see the change that has taken place in the last few years. These provinces and territories are now populated by thousands and thousands of loyal and staunch people, who would give anything to have the same chance of seeing their Royal Highnesses as the people of eastern Canada will have. In the first place, it would strengthen the ties that already so strongly bind the colonies to the mother land, and it would also show our future King and Queen the immense value and immense area of this great country and also the affectionate regard in which they are held by the people. Not only that, Sir, but, coming down to a less important matter, though one of great importance to us, it would draw the attention of the whole world to the great possibilities of this country of ours. We all know that every movement of such distinguished people as the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York are heralded by the press and brought to the notice of the whole world. Nothing that could take place, I think, would bring Canada more to the attention of the world than a trip of these distinguished visitors from one side of the continent to the other. I, therefore, thought it was my duty, as representative of the Pacific coast, to bring this matter forward, and to impress upon the government what I consider the necessity of their doing their best to cause this route, which has already been mapped out, to be altered to some extent, if possible, and to bring about such a change as will allow their Royal Highnesses to come to the Pacific coast, and from there, travel across the continent and take ship on the Atlantic.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may inform my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Prior) that correspondence is now going on between Ottawa and London on this very subject. The correspondence at this moment is confidential, and it is not in my power to give communication of it to the House, or to go into particulars as to the tenor of that correspondence. But I may say that I am altogether with my hon. friend in thinking that it would be most unfortunate if their Royal Highnesses of Cornwall and York have not an opportunity of visiting every province in the Dominion when they come to Canada next summer. The most convenient, and, I believe, the best mode of all, would be for their Royal Highnesses, who are to return from Australia next September, to come by way of the Pacific instead of the Atlantic, landing at Vancouver, visiting British Columbia, the Territories, Manitoba, and so on, down towards Halifax. That is the view, I think we can assume, that is being represented at this moment to their Royal Highnesses. More than this I cannot say at this moment.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). We will take up the Post Office estimates.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What has become of the understanding that we were to proceed with these estimates in the order in which they appear in the book ? We have not begun yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid my hon. friend did not attend late last night. Announcement was made that this would be the business to-day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But that does not answer my question. I thought that when we began this year, for purposes of convenience, a special understanding was reached that we would proceed with the estimates from cover to cover.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would certainly be desirable, but it is not always possible to follow that rule. It may be that the minister in charge of the item which appears next in the book may not be able to be here. I agree that there should be timely notice given of the business of the following day.

Post Office—Outside Service—Salaries and allowances, including James A. MacDonald, London post office, at $720, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.	$1,296,915 39

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) to tell us now to begin with—we might as well have it now—what is the deficit in the management of the Post Office Department this year, to the beginning of the month ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). We have not got it. We do not balance up our accounts except once a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Give it to the 1st of July.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On page 4, of the Postmaster General's Report, you will see the gross revenue was $4,345,826.62 to the end of the 30th of June, last.

Mr. MONK. Can the hon. gentleman tell us exactly what the deficit was on the 30th of June ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That also appears in the Postmaster General's Report, page A—II, $461,661.87.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad the hon. the Postmaster General has given us this information, because I remember not very long ago a speech made by that hon. gentleman in our part of the country. I want to read the Committee a report of his speech that appeared in his own paper, the 'great speech of the Postmaster General at Meaford,' in support of his friend Mr. C. W. Hartman, whom he was bound to elect. He went on to decry what had been done by his predecessor, and said with regard to his own conduct of the Post Office Department :

> Hon. Wm. Mulock stated that he had practically wiped out a deficit of $780,000, and left a million dollars in the pockets of the people.

I denied that statement at my nomination. It was made in my presence by his candidate, Mr. Hartman, and I had with me then the Public Accounts and gave them as my authority. In answer to that, my opponent said: But, these Public Accounts are a year old, and I am authorized to say that that deficit is wiped out. Now, I have the hon. gentleman's report for the last year in my hand, and what does it say :

> The deficit on June 30, 1899, was $398,917.

Just as I gave it to that audience then, and my hon. friend the Postmaster General misled that audience by telling them there was no such deficit. On the 30th of June, 1900, the deficit given in this same return is $461,661, as the Postmaster General has given it now. Yet he had that information in his own department last November, but he told the people of Grey that he had wiped that all out, and he asked the people to vote for his candidate, because of the successful management of the Post Office Department by himself. Now, what does this Committee think of the twaddle dished up to an unsuspecting audience back in our country by the Postmaster General when he misleads them by such a statement ? I want this House to know it, and I want the country to know it, because I said then as I say now, that when that return comes down which I am perfectly satisfied that the deficit will be larger instead of smaller, and instead of being wiped out it will be at least $400,000 if not more. His own report verifies that prediction, and it proves the correctness of what I said, and the incorrectness of what the Postmaster General told the people of the east riding of Grey, when he was up there in the last campaign.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it is only fair to the Postmaster General to remind the Committee that the figures are not down to the present time. While there was last year a deficit of $46,000, that deficit may now be turned the other way, because the Postmaster General gave the assurance that before long the deficit would be wiped out in its entirety. That was the statement made by the premier himself on the authority and on the assurance of the Postmaster General. Now, the premier happened to be in the town of Stratford, and it is a noteworthy circumstance that wherever the premier went in the province of Ontario, devastation followed the Grit candidate. At Stratford, the premier told what the deficit was in 1896, and said that the Postmaster General had reduced that deficit to a nominal amount. And, mark you, at that time the premier must have been aware that there was a deficit of $461,000, because that speech was made subsequent to the 1st day of July. But, the premier was bound to go one better on that occasion, and he said :

> And he had the Postmaster General's authority for further saying that by the end of the present year the revenue and expenditure would balance one another.

Now, I think the premier is to be commiserated in this, that he went out on a public platform and made a statement on the assurance of the Postmaster General that that deficit was wiped out in its entirety. Now, the premier is placed on one of the two horns of a dilemma: Either the Postmaster General made the statement to him or he did not. If the Postmaster General made that statement to the premier, he tried the confidence game on him; and, I say that here, and now is the proper time for the Postmaster General to apologize to the premier for having misled him into making that statement.

Mr. WALLACE. While the Postmaster General is apologizing, I will give the Committee another fact. He told us a few minutes ago, when asked by members on this side of the House to give his statement of the present fiscal year so far as he could, and he said : We do not keep any accounts, we do not balance till the end of the year. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a statement of accounts of the Post Office Department for the five months ending with the month of November, 1900, showing a comparison between November, of 1900, and November, 1899, and it is as follows : In November, 1899, the department expended $260,000; in November, 1900, $309,000 or $49,000 more. That was furnished by the Post Office Department. For the five months ending November 30, 1899, the expenditure was $1,150,000; for the five months ending November 30, 1900, the expenditure was $1,279,237.50, or an increase in these five months of $129,237. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Postmaster General to explain why we have statements made here by the Department of Trade and Commerce which he said could not be given in this House, because they kept no such record. We have the record here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to be bound by the reports of speeches, nor, in saying that, Mr. Chairman, do I desire for one moment to depart in the slightest degree from anything stated by me, or by my authority, publicly or elsewhere, in regard to my administration. Perhaps, when I have made my observations, it will not appear that matters are so far astray as some hon. gentlemen would seem to prove and perhaps desire. On January 1, 1899, the government reduced the rate of postage in Canada from three to two cents, and a week before a reduction of the rate from Canada to the greater part of the empire from five to two cents took place. That necessarily for the moment caused a shrinkage in the revenue of the department. Some gentlemen estimated it at one figure and others at another. The late hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), speaking in 1895, if I remember correctly, estimated the loss at $700,000. That was in his budget speech. The late leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) subsequently, in addressing the public, estimated the loss of revenue at $1,000,000 a year. It is not necessary to ascertain, nor can it be definitely ascertained, what that loss will amount to. It is sufficient to know that if for the moment you reduce the revenue from the domestic letter rate of three cents to two cents you, for the moment, cut down the revenue by one-third, that you do very materially, for the moment, affect the revenue, and when, in the spring of 1898, I asked parliament to authorize us to reduce our rate from three to two cents, I stated that for the time being there would be a substantial shrinkage in our revenue and that for the moment I thought it would necessarily lead to a considerable deficit between revenue and expenditure. Without being bound then or even now as to what would be the time limit when the volume of revenue would attain its former position, I ventured the prophecy in parliament then that the revenue would recover its former volume in about three years. I said that until it recovered we must expect substantial deficits in the working of the department, but that month by month as the people came to appreciate the advantage of cheap postage and took greater advantage of the postal system, there would be a considerable growth of revenue, and in time it would attain its former proportions. I am not here to compare results, because the time has not yet come; the time in which I ventured to say that the revenue would attain its former position has not yet been reached, but I would say that the reduction went into effect on January 1, 1899. It, therefore, only had six months' effect on the public accounts of the department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899. For the fiscal year, during the last half of which the rate of postage was reduced, there was a deficit of $398,000, or we may say $400,000. Twice $400,000 would be $800,000. Of course, the whole of that deficit was not occasioned, I presume, though a large portion of it was, by the reduction in the rates. Now, the next fiscal year closing June 30 last found us with a deficit for the full year of $461,000. For that deficit the country had for one whole year enjoyed the advantage of the reduced rates which hon. gentlemen prophesied would mean a loss of revenue of as much as $700,000, while others said that it would mean a greater loss. If we had had during that year the higher rates that my predecessors enjoyed, or if we had had the same amount of business, there would have been a very considerable surplus, but, when we began the fiscal year on July 1, 1899, we had only six months in which to recover the revenue, and therefore, the fiscal year beginning on July 1, 1899, began with a very largely reduced revenue because of the reduction in the rates, but, Sir, the loss of revenue in July was very much less than it was in the previous January. In January, the first month of 1899, when the country had the reduced rates, there was a large loss of revenue. If that loss had represented the rate of loss throughout the year it would have represented a great shrinkage in revenue for the year, and in that case it would have proved the assertion of the former leader of the opposition, that this change in the rate meant a loss of revenue amounting to the best part of a million dollars. As months went by, our revenue began to increase, and it has steadily increased from that time to this. There is one feature in connection with the revenue that surprised me. Though the revenue grew month by month with varying proportion, but generally growing as compared with the corresponding month of the previous year under higher rates, I assumed that the growth would continue uninterrupted. Our revenue in the month of August, I think, was $4,000 above what it had been in the former August under the higher rates. I did not anticipate any interruption in that steady growth of revenue beginning with a deficit in January, 1899, and that deficit being almost wiped out within a period of less than a year and nine months, but, I found, a short time ago, that there had been an interruption. Hon. gentlemen may draw their own conclusions; I give them these statements and they may explain the cause. For the months of September and November, 1900, we lost revenue, as compared with the corresponding months of the preceding year. What is the cause of that? My theory is that as during the fall of 1900, Canada, Great Britain and the United States were undergoing the struggle of a general election, the volume of our trade must have been affected by these disturbances, and so the extraordinary circumstances happened of a loss of revenue in the post office for September and November, 1900. There was a surplus in the month of October, but taking the three months together the revenue only represented a growth of some $13,000 per month, which was less than we enjoyed from the time we reduced the postage. My calculations have been disturbed to that extent, and to that extent only. What I sought to represent on the platform was, and what I state here is, that having practiced wise economy—not penury, but fair economy—in the administration of the department, this, with the reduced postal rates and the general prosperity, and increased trade that Canada has enjoyed owing to the government of this country, have made their mark upon the post office revenue so that what I prophesied in 1888, has been fully realized, if the experience of the past month is to continue. When we point to a deficit for the year 1900, of $460,000, we must remember that the reduced postal rates had only been in force for six months. We began that fiscal year with a revenue suffering extremely from that cut, but each month it gradually recovered itself. Even if it recoverd its former position at the close of the year, that would still leave us a shortage which would be felt upon our accounts by reason of the loss of revenue for the preceding months. And so it has been a sort of a stern chase; the revenue seeking to overtake the former figure, and now I may say that for the month of January, 1901, that is, two years after we reduced our postage rates, the revenue is $29,000 greater for that month than it was for January two years ago under the higher rates.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will be pleased with that information. We began with a great shrinkage in 1899. I ventured to prophesy that our revenue would attain its former figure within a period of about three years, and now in the twenty-fifth month; in this month of January, 1901, we have a surplus of $29,000 over the revenue which we had under the higher postage rates.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the revenue for that month?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will send for the figures and get them for the hon. gentleman. What I desire to say to the country now is, that if our revenue continues in this buoyant state, the department may in a short time be considered to be on a paying basis. I repeat that statement. Of course, the country is growing, and I would not wish to starve the service. It would be unwise to do so, and if we do not increase the service we might, on the present basis of revenue, let the department pay its own way. When an hon. gentleman gets up and produces the accounts which appear in the official Gazette month by month, I would point out that they by no means represent the net results of the operation of the Post Office Department, or of any other department, up to that moment. There may be receipts and expenditures not fully accounted for, and it is only a month or two after the close of the fiscal year, when you have all the figures in that you can balance up the revenue and expenditure. I have not got the figures for the current year. The current year began in July last, with a loss of revenue as compared with the month of July, at the higher postal rate. We had not attained the volume of revenue we attained in the seven months of the year, and therefore, whilst the expenditure goes on the same throughout the whole twelve months, we did not get the full benefit of the high revenue for the whole year. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) ventured to express the opinion that the deficit this year would exceed the deficit of last year. He may be right.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not make that statement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understood some hon. gentleman opposite to make that statement. I venture to say, at all events, that when the accounts are balanced, there will be no such result. I believe it will be found that for the fiscal year we are now in, our revenue and expenditure will be much closer than they ever were under the preceding government—not than they were under the present government, because in 1898, we had only a deficit of $47,000, as against a deficit of $781,000, the year that I took office. This year we are now in, the deficit will be much less than it was last year, notwithstanding the fact that the public will have reaped whatever advantage there is in having to pay two cents only instead of three cents under a former administration. When we enter upon our next fiscal year ; unless we are compelled to incur large expenditures—and as I have said I would not wish to impair the usefulness of the department by unwise economy—I think that with the fiscal year beginning the 1st of July next, you will find but little difference between the revenue and the expenditure of the Post Office Department. I do not know that I can add anything further, but, I shall be extremely pleased to give any information that I may be asked for.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Postmaster General persists in sticking to the statement, which has been so thoroughly threshed out in this House in the last two sessions, in regard to that deficit of $780,000. I think he ought to know by this time that there was no such deficit. He makes that deficit by including in the accounts for the year accounts which had not matured in that year, but which were paid in the succeeding year, and which his predecessors were accustomed to charge to the year in which they were paid. He charges virtually the accounts for eighteen months against one year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is entirely wrong.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, I am not wrong. Not eighteen months, perhaps, but nearly that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure my hon. friend does not want to misstate the facts. There are included some old accounts, amounting to $600,000 or $700,000 ; but if the accounts he refers to had been included, the deficit would have been nearly $1,400,000 instead of $780,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. My hon. friend knows that I do not mean anything of the kind. What I do mean, is that there were certain contracts running which were payable in July, and it was the habit of the department, as the accounts could not come in before the 1st of July, to pay them in the succeeding year. These accounts the hon. gentleman charges to the preceding year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. My hon. friend is quite mistaken.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am not mistaken at all. We threshed out the question again and again. I took the trouble of going to my old deputy, Colonel White, and getting a statement of all the facts from him, and he showed me conclusively that that was the reason. Why is it that the hon. gentleman shows a deficit of nearly $400,000 more for the year 1896 than for the preceding year ? I am so certain of the matter that there cannot be any doubt about it. The hon. gentleman has charged to the year all the accounts which he thinks ought to be paid before the 1st of July, although they did not come in until a couple of months afterwards, while we had been in the habit of charging them to the year in which they were paid. The consequence is that he cannot now balance his accounts on the 1st of July, but has to wait for two or three months after the expiration of the year to find out all the accounts which he thinks ought to be charged to that year. It may be a better system of book-keeping, but I do not believe it is. I believe the proper system is to charge the accounts to the year in which they are paid. It is impossible to keep the accounts hanging over for three or four months for the purpose of making a balance. But the hon. gentleman, by an alteration in the system of book-keeping, which he introduced when he came into office, made the deficit appear far larger than it really was, in order to show—and the statement was made boldly from one end of the country to the other—not perhaps that the books of the department were falsified, but that they were placed before the public in such a manner as to deceive them—that, in fact, he found that accounts amounting to $300,000 or $400,000, which ought to have been charged to the previous year, were left out altogether. As a consequence, he was able to show a very favourable statement for the next year, because the amounts to be charged to that particular year would be only for nine months of the year, unless he waited for three or four months after the end of the year, in order to give a correct statement of the whole amount accruing to that year; and then, necessarily, the statement for the succeeding year would be a deceptive one. What I mean to say is that the department was managed under its predecessor as economically and as faithfully as it is under the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman may claim credit for a reduction of postage from a three-cent to a two-cent rate. That may be an advantage to the country, and the country may feel gratified at it. I am glad to hear his statement that he expects that at the end of the fiscal year that reduction will be found to involve no loss to the country, and that probably at the end of two years both ends will meet. I made the same recommendation to my colleagues when I was Postmaster General, but they thought the time had not arrived for a reduction to a two-cent rate. The hon. gentleman is perhaps right in saying that we could not continue to charge three cents when a letter could be carried from any part of the United States to any other part for two cents; we had to adopt the same rate that they had, and if a deficit resulted, I believe the people would willingly make it up. But let the statement no longer be made in this House that in the last year of the Conservative government there was a deficit in the Post Office Department of $780,000. There was no such deficit. I see that the right hon. premier, in an address in Toronto, stated that the Postmaster General, by his able administration of the department, besides reducing the rate of postage from three cents to two cents, had so succeeded that there would likely be no deficit in that department, and he compared that condition of things with a deficit of $780,000 under his predecessors, with a three-cent postage rate. The right hon. premier was entirely mistaken in that, and I shall have an opportunity of going into the details of the matter at a later stage.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he accurately stated the deficit of 1900 in the Post Office Department, when he put it at $461,661?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I put it in the book, and am willing to be bound by the book.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the public accounts, he will find that it is not at all correct. He knows perfectly well that he left out the Yukon service, and that instead of the deficit being $461,000 it is $552,479. Why does he conceal that from the public? Perhaps he will explain why he made a statement in his report different from that in the public accounts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hardly think my hon. friend is fair in suggesting that I am trying to conceal anything. We might as well conduct the debate in a more proper and courteous manner. In the Finance Department a day is fixed when accounts are closed. After that date, if any items come in affecting the previous year's accounts, they will not be considered by the Finance Department in balancing the year's accounts. But any other department may, for the purpose of giving a more accurate statement, carry on its balancing of the year's operations so as to include these items which affect that year, but shall have come in after the date fixed by the Finance Department. I was trying to compare the services under this administration with those under former administrations. There was no Yukon under former administrations, and we are not concealing anything. I would refer the hon. gentleman to the Postmaster General's report on page A—XI. Referring to the total financial operations for the year, it states:

> The total net revenue of the Post Office from all sources except that from the Yukon and Atlin districts exceeded that of the previous year by $1,053.25, and the total gross revenue exceeded that of the previous year by $20,391.09. On the other hand, the expenditure of the department, omitting from the comparison the special expenses incurred in the Yukon and Atlin districts, exceeded that of the previous year by $63,797.33, the excess being distributed somewhat evenly over the larger items of Post Office expenditure. It appears therefore that a considerably larger volume of postal business, sufficient to nearly balance the loss arising during the first half of the year as compared with the corresponding period of the previous year from the reduction of the postage, was handled at an increased expense of slightly over one and a half per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. How does the hon. gentleman justify submitting a table from 1896 to 1900, showing each year the net revenue, expenditure and deficit, and excluding the Yukon district ? He took exception to my stating that there was concealment, but I tell the hon. gentleman that no milder language could be used to properly mark the course taken by the hon. gentleman. In his statement he has excluded two items—the item of revenue, $21,550, and expenditure $112,368—which would make an addition to the deficit of $90,818. How does he attempt to explain this ? He said that his department had one way of keeping the accounts, and the Finance Department another. But, Sir, the accounts correspond if you take in these items. Yet the hon. minister professes to give a true statement when he makes the deficit $90,000 less than it really is. But some hon. gentlemen opposite say that we had not the Yukon in former years, and therefore, to make a proper comparison, the Yukon should be left out. Well, if the hon. gentleman had said that there was a deficit of $461,000 in 1900, but that he had not included the Yukon service, which would have increased the deficit $90,000, that might be a frank statement, but he did not. And if his report went to the country without the public accounts, what inference would be drawn ? The only inference that could be drawn would be that there was simply a deficit of $461,000, instead of a deficit nearly $100,000 more.

I see in a campaign sheet that the hon. gentleman boasts that he reduced the deficit in 1898-9 from nearly $800,000.

An hon. MEMBER. What paper ?

Mr. CLANCY. It is marked 'Record of Progress and Prosperity under Liberal Rule.' This is what appears in this paper :

The Hon. Mr. Mulock, by the application of proper business principles and sound economy, cut down the deficit of about $800,000 to $47,602 in two short years—thereby making possible the reduction in the rates which quickly followed.

In the first place let me say that there was not any such deficit. But let us suppose there was, how did he reduce it ? By an act of bad faith and repudiation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CLANCY. Hon. gentlemen opposite may jeer as much as they like, it was an act of repudiation and bad faith to the public. What was it ? Why, the hon. gentleman took advantage of the Queen's jubilee to issue jubilee stamps, and these the public purchased from patriotic motives. Largely actuated by the proper sentiment which prevails in matters of that kind, the public bought these stamps, ranging in value from a half cent up to large figures. But, there was also in the minds of the people the belief that these stamps had a value. The Postmaster General, however, refused to exchange these for other stamps ; and the result is that he has unloaded, practically—beyond a few that were used—nearly half a million dollars on the public, which they hold to-day, and which the Postmaster General will not redeem. That was an act of bad faith. The hon. gentleman stated, on a former occasion in this House, that these stamps were being used. Any one can use a five-dollar stamp to carry a letter from one post office to another if he likes, but only in this manner will the stamps be redeemed. It is not greatly to the credit of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Mulock) to make the statement that there was a very large deficit under the former government. As was pointed out by the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart), that was largely a mere myth, a mere matter of book-keeping. The Postmaster General would have us believe that he reduced that deficit by the economy and wisdom that characterized his management of the department. As a matter of fact, he did it by means which his friends cannot defend. I defy the hon. minister, for instance, to rise in his place and deny that he has been guilty of the act I charged him with a moment ago. With regard to the Yukon postal service, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the mounted police are now performing any service that is not included in the charges made here ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. None.

Mr. MACLEAN. In view of the Postmaster General's statement that the revenue of the post office about meets the expenditure, I would like to ask whether he will take into consideration the unfair taxation put upon some newspapers by way of newspaper postage. The law is not made general, but is so arranged as to impose a special tax upon newspapers in the large cities. It is time to treat all newspapers alike and remedy the grievances that now exist in connection with the hon. gentleman's department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has not indicated in detail the amendment he would suggest. I would be glad to consider any suggestions he may make.

Mr. MACLEAN. What needs to be done is to make a law that will apply to all newspapers that deliver through the post office. As it is, a heavy burden is imposed upon the newspapers of Toronto and Montreal, instead of being distributed over the whole country. This is a tax that men would be justified in refusing to pay, because it is an unequal tax and unjust. If the revenue is in the condition the hon. minister says it is, I hope that he will remove this special tax upon one class of newspapers and subject all newspapers fairly to the incidence of the taxation levied by his department.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the long and rambling statement of the Postmaster General evades the charges brought on this side of the House. It was charged that the First Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made statements which were not supported by the facts. He would not have made those statements, relating as they did to the Post Office Department, without the authority of the Postmaster General. Therefore, the Postmaster General cannot dismiss the matter with a wave of his hand, and the remark that he is not responsible for newspaper reports. He is responsible for the information he gives to the First Minister. Then, with regard to the statements made by the Postmaster General in East Grey. These statements were made, not only at Meaford, but at Thornbury, Singhampton and Feversham. After repeating these things at four different places, it will not do for the Postmaster General to tell us that he would not pay any attention to newspaper reports. He said that he had wiped out the deficit of $780,000, and had left $1,000,000 in the pockets of the Canadian people. He tells us to-day that the deficit is $460,000. But the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has proved that he should add to that $90,000, the receipts from the Yukon having been $21,000 and the expenditure $113,000. Why does he not place that where it belongs, among the expenditures of the Post Office Department ? In 1898, he entered in his report an amount of $48.33 as the post office expenditure in the Yukon. Does not every member of this House know—does not every citizen know—that that is not a correct statement of the expenditure of the Post Office Department in carrying the mails into and out of the Yukon ? The department were simply utilizing the North-west mounted police for the service and not paying them. Therefore, the Postmaster General's statement is misleading and unfair to the people of Canada. It is an untrue statement to make, that the deficit for the past year was $461,000, when, including this $91,000 which ought to be included, it would amount to over $550,000. The hon. Postmaster General says that he does not propose to pay any attention to what was said in the campaign. Does the Postmaster General intend to say to the country : I am going to make speeches on the public platform, but before I begin I warn you not to place the slightest reliance on anything I may say. We are coming to a nice state of things when a minister of the Crown declares before the whole country that he will ignore utterly what he has said upon the public platform. Here is one thing that he said, as reported in a friendly newspaper :—

Mr. Mulock was pleased to say that many independent Conservatives of Grey county had thrown party to the winds, and had decided to vote in their country's interests. This sentiment was not confined to Grey county alone, but the independent vote of Canada was lining up with the Liberal party.

The province of Ontario, where the Postmaster General, the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), and the other ministers from that province, did their fine work, in the last parliament gave hon. gentlemen opposite a majority of a round dozen. To-day there are eighteen or twenty of a majority of independent stalwart members against them. Therefore, the prediction of the Postmaster General was not verified where he had any influence or did any work.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is the leader of that Ontario majority ?

Mr. WALLACE. Their leader, and the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party, is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to my left, who is a credit to the party, and who, judging by appearances, such, for instance, as the division we had last night, will not be long in leading us to victory.

Mr. Mulock then put a poser by asking the electors if they endorsed Dr. Sproule on the present occasion.

Well, Sir, the poser was answered a few days later by the intelligent electors of East Grey, and they said just what the Postmaster General wants them to believe now, that they are not to believe anything said by the Postmaster General. He went on :

Dr. Sproule had never brought the advantages of Meaford before parliament.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think if he had consulted the 'Hansard' he would not have been able to make that statement, because Dr. Sproule, in season and out of season, has not confined his efforts to the county of East Grey ; while he has brought the necessities of that county to the attention of the House, he has been one of the foremost men in parliament in advocating a broad and comprehensive policy that would develop every portion of this Dominion. He said furthermore :

He could build five harbours on the former postal deficit alone. Some time ago he (Hon. Mr. Mulock) asked the town council to send him a plan of the harbour.

How generous and considerate he was.

The request was complied with, but the council had asked too little.

What a generous man! Why does he not pay his officials what is due them ? Why does he not pay the letter carriers what, by law, they are entitled to receive, instead of going up to the electors of the county of East Grey and saying to them : You electors of Meaford, why, you are not asking half as much as I would like to give you. He said :

I want to make a great harbour of Meaford. It might do for the present, but would not answer for the future. The harbour would have to be large enough to accommodate the largest ships.

The Great Eastern must sail into the harbour of Meaford, Mr. Chairman ; Meaford must be made a harbour for every vessel, not only vessels on the lakes of 6,000 tons or 8,000 tons, but a harbour that will accommodate ships of the Atlantic, which will make Meaford their headquarters, according to this generous statement of the Postmaster General, a man who is squandering the public money with bribes, who is not fair enough to give the employees of his own department what the law says they should have. Now we will have to have revised editions from the Postmaster General of the statements that he has made, and of the statements he has put in his report, which are misleading to the extent that he has laid aside that Yukon matter. The Yukon is a part of Canada, it has been opened up in recent years, there is no reason why Yukon expenditures for the post office work should not be treated like any other expenditure, and included in the expenditures of the department, and thereby increased by the amount stated by the member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. BRITTON. I cannot understand the ground of stating that there is any deception or misleading statement in the report of the Postmaster General. The amount of the revenue that we are speaking of is one thing in itself, and the amount of the expenditure is another thing. You are speaking of, or comparing the amount of one year with another, and taking the different items on which comparison is made. But to talk about deception and concealment is entirely beside the mark ; because if hon. gentlemen will look at the report that they have in their hands, on page 3, they will find the whole thing. The Yukon expenditure is there, the Yukon receipts are there, and anybody can add the items of the revenue to each other and the items of expenditure to each other. All that is in the report actually in the hands of hon. members, and they have no ground whatever for talking of deception or of cooking the accounts. Hon. gentlemen will find it on page 3 of Appendix A : Statement of the revenue of the Post Office Department of the Dominion of Canada for the year ended June 30, 1900 (except that from Yukon and Atlin districts). And just below is given the revenue from the Yukon and Atlin districts.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Read what it says about the revenue and returns of the Yukon district.

Mr. BRITTON (reading).

Statement of the revenue of the Post Office Department of the Dominion of Canada for the year ended June 30, 1900, from the Yukon and Atlin districts, not included in above, $20,788.49.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. What is the expenditure ?

Mr. BRITTON. On the fourth page the expenditure is stated in the same way, giving the expenditure of the Post Office Department, but not including the Yukon and Atlin districts. Then it gives the Yukon and Atlin district services, not included in the above, $112,368.57. I am saying that there is an entire absence of deception when the figures are all given in the report in the hands of hon. members.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the items of expenditure, does the hon. gentleman find any amount put down as incurred for the use of the police, or are the police, so far as this service is concerned, paid entirely under other headings ?

Mr. BRITTON. The figures on this page from which I am reading are : Mail service, $80,433.06 ; salaries, $28,885.80 ; miscellaneous, $3,049.71. I am not in a position to know, nor is any one, without looking at the public accounts, whether the mail service, costing the sum I have mentioned, includes something for the police.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As I understand, the Postmaster General explained last session that there is no item in the post office account for the payment of the mounted police for the services they performed as mounted police for carrying the mails, etc., in the Yukon district. They are paid entirely from another department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The mounted police for the fiscal year that is now being discussed, beginning on June 30, 1899 and closing June 30, 1900, performed no mail service that I am aware of for the Post Office Department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Up to 1899 my statement would be correct, that the service they performed up to July, 1899, was not charged by the Police Department against the Post Office Department. I would be obliged if the hon. gentleman would tell me if that is correct.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not brought any figures with me about the previous year. The subject was thoroughly discussed, and my recollection is that in a debate which took place last year upon the subject, I explained what I am trying to explain to-day, that I desired as far as possible to keep the Yukon service apart from the rest of the service in order the better to compare one administration with another. Whilst mail service was performed at the commencement by the police, it was treated as previous governments had done in the case of the North-west Territories. In opening up new territories the late government used the police. They had the North-west Territories fund which covered services that later on were distributed among the various departments. We followed that example.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That practically comes to what I stated. I was not making an argument in the matter at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that the hon. gentleman should assume that I am admitting more than I intend to admit. There were some services which may have been included in the Yukon and some may not; some may have been performed by the police. But, it was not intended at any period to include in the general balance of the department the cost of administering the Yukon service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That leaves the fact as I put it. My information was from memory listening to the hon. Postmaster General's own statement. The expenditure to July, 1899, was of course very extensive in a new and unsettled country, and the police did perform a very large amount, if not the whole, of the postal service, the carriage of mails, and so on. Not all the cost of that service was charged in the public accounts to the Post Office Department; that was charged to the maintenance of the police or the vote out of which they were paid. The argument that you would make out of this is another matter.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Parliament voted money for the Yukon. I first brought in my estimates for a fixed sum, there being an item for the Yukon, and subsequently, when the estimates were being voted, it was included in the Yukon service —I think under the Department of the Interior—and the police were paid that sum, but when it appeared in the Supply Bill it was ear-marked as for the Yukon service, and in my report to parliament I think I gave the figures just as they have been given here in the text accompanying the annual statement.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand exactly what the hon. gentleman has said, but, outside of the questions that have been suggested and argued today and putting aside the tu quoque argument altogether, what the country wants to get at, irrespective of party views, is the real cost of the postal service. I do not understand why the hon. Postmaster General should wish to argue, instead of giving us the exact information at this stage that we are seeking to get. Instead of justifying himself, and saying that he has done exactly as was done before, it seems an easy road to reach as to what the service has cost the country, and it is not an accurate statement, whether it occurs under Liberal or Conservative auspices, to exclude the cost of the service rendered by the police in carrying the mails from any statement as to the cost of the postal service. That was proportionately a very small affair until the Yukon was developed, but, after that, and under the hon. gentleman's regime, it was a very considerable matter. There is no question about that, because we can see what an enormous amount the police have cost. There is this singular coincidence about that, regardless as to whether one or both parties pursued that system of making a statement to this House as to what each service has cost, that it does not appear in regard to other departments. For instance, if the Marine Department, or the Department of Public Works, rendered a service to the Customs Department in connection with their vessels and matters of that kind, we find these charges are made by one department against the other for the service showing what each particular charge was, and what each service cost the country. It is a matter of book-keeping, it all comes out of one purse, but the statement would not be accurate, unless the books were kept in that way. That system obtains between all the departments, I think, but not in the Post Office Department, and the hon. gentleman's boast, a large part of it, perhaps, justifiable today in regard to the buoyant condition of matters in connection with the postal service which he has been able to make, would be materially affected if he had disclosed the whole of the facts, and had not desired to exclude from the cost of the postal service a large amount that was paid out to the police which does not appear in the statement which he has made.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) comes to the rescue of the hon. Postmaster General, and says that any one taking up the report must, after looking over it, see where the discrepancy is, and is not likely to be misled. If any person unfamiliar with the report wished to see whether the Post Office Department was self-sustaining or not, where would he look for it ? Would he not look in the column of figures which the hon. Postmaster General has given us in his own report, and which contains the following :

> The following statement shows the deficit upon the department's operations for the year ended June 30, 1896, and the revenue, expenditure and deficit for each of the succeeding years.

Would he not be likely to look there for it ? If not, then it is certainly misleading the public, because this is the only place that it should be expected to be found. He takes up the report and finds by it that there was a deficit of $461,661, for the last financial year. Any one who contradicts that, is contradicting the blue-book, which is the only official record we can look to for information. I take up the public accounts and find that they give some of the items of expenditure and revenue of the Post Office Department which is not in this list. The report shows that $112,368 are left out, being the expenditure of the Yukon district, and if you add that to the other you have a deficit, not of $461,661, but of $553,000. Yet the hon. Postmaster General says that it is not misleading, and the hon. member for Kingston comes to his recue and says that no person would be misled by it. Surely in private life he would not conduct his book-keeping in that way. That part of the hon. gentleman's remarks was very interesting to me, but there was another part of the hon. Postmaster General's speech which was also interesting, and that was the acknowledgment that he would not stand by any reports of the speeches that he had made in the country during the late election. It will be rather interesting reading to the people of East Grey, who listened to him during the campaign when he told them so positively and when his candidate told them so positively of the marvellous things he had accomplished during the time that he has been in charge of the department. This was said not at one place, but at four different places from the Monitor's report of his and Hoolman's speeches at Meaford :

Mr. Hartman briefly reviewed our postal service, which under the Conservative administration had a yearly deficit of over $700,000, and which, under the able management and wise economy of Mr. Mulock, had been reduced to less than $100,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Hon. gentlemen cheer that, and say hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they mean to say by that cheer that this statement is correct ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they, or what do they mean ? Do they mean to cast ridicule upon the words of the friend who stated it ? Do they mean to say that the hon. Postmaster General was worthy of respect when he misled the people by such a statement ? Is that why they cheer ? If it is, then I can only say they cheer to their own shame.

And it would soon be self-sustaining. All this had been accomplished with the present reduction in the postal rates from 3 to 2 cents.

I do not wish to detract one iota from the credit due to the hon. Postmaster General for anything that he has accomplished. I say that he is entitled to credit for reducing the rate of postage, and for anything he has accomplished in the way of economy or good management I am willing to give him the utmost credit. But I am not willing to allow the Postmaster General to mislead the people of my constituency without trying to set them right. When he tells the House to-day that he will not be bound by that statement he then made, it will be interesting reading to the people of East Grey who listened to him in November last. One of his friends on the platform, speaking against me, said : 'This is only the statement of the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) against the statement of the Postmaster General ; whose statement will you take ?' He followed that up by saying that a minister of the Crown who would stand up on a platform and make that statement, if it was not correct, was unworthy of respect as a public man. But now the Postmaster General stands up here and tells us that in the month of July of that year the revenue was running behind, that it ran more behind in October and November, and yet it was in the month of November that he made this incorrect statement in East Grey. His friends then told us that if they had the report of the last financial year it would show that there was an increase in the revenue of the Post Office Department all the time, and a decrease in expenditure, and it would prove that the Post Office Department was self-sustaining. But now the Postmaster General tells the House that the revenue was decreasing at that very time. As a defence, he tells us that in the month of January of this present year, there is an increase in revenue, and that what he meant to convey to the people of Canada was that if he took into account the present increase of revenue, he would be justified in asserting that the revenue and expenditure would balance in a short time. But does he not see that this increase in revenue took place two months after he made that misleading statement to the people of East Grey ? When he tells us to-day that he is not willing to stand by the statement he made solemnly on the platform, he makes an admission that I do not believe that any other member of his party would be guilty of. I am glad to know that the people of the country have been set right in this matter, because in future they will know just how much weight to attach to any statement made by the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock.)

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). It certainly does seem to me that the statement on the first page of the Postmaster General's Report is, to say the least, somewhat misleading. If any one were sufficiently familiar with the report and should carefully look through it, no doubt he might find out after some research, that the Yukon expenditure is not included, but on the page before me there is not the slightest qualification to show that this expenditure does not include the whole of Canada. The Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) explains that for the purpose of comparison, we should not include the Yukon, because the Yukon was not included in previous years. I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman that his brother Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) is a sinner, if the Postmaster General himself is right, because I notice that the customs revenue for two or three years past has included very large sums from the Yukon, and last year it included no less a sum from this source than $613,-191.97. I desire to point out to the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Mulock) that when the Minister of Customs is comparing one year with another he includes the Yukon, but when the Postmaster General goes on the platform to compare one fiscal year with another, he omits the Yukon. If the Postmaster General thinks it fair to leave out the Yukon with respect to the expenditure in his department, I trust that he will see that his brother ministers will leave out the Yukon when they come to compare the revenue of one year with the revenue of another. The two things are exactly on the same basis, but in the one case the ministers do not charge the expenditures on the Yukon, while in the other they take good care to credit themselves with the revenue from that territory.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) will turn to the report of the auditors who balanced up the account of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1896, he will there find the following results. Over the signatures of the auditors in question, is the following :

> The revenue of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, amounted to $3,957,798.51, which, deducted from the cost of maintenance, $4,985,327.53, leaves a deficit of $1,027,529.02. Heretofore it has not been the practice to treat the amount expended under the head of civil government as a charge against the department, and were such a practice adhered to the deficit of $1,027,529.02 would be reduced by $246,376.83, leaving the outside service shortage $781,152.19.

That audit is purely and simply for services rendered for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1896, and it does not include any disbursement for service prior to that year. That was all carefully eliminated by the auditors, and the sum given represents the gross cost of the service for the year, on the theory that you pay and charge each year for the service rendered in that year. If the old deficit, rolled up year after year, amounting to between $600,000 and $700,000, were to have been added, instead of the auditors reporting a deficit of $781,000, they would have reported a deficit of nearly twice that. This deficit of 1896 does not include any overlapping. It does not include any five quarterly expenses on contracts or anything like that. It is simply for the actual year 1896, and that was the shortage for that year, according to these auditors.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I will take the published accounts of the Post Office Department of revenue and expenditure, and I suppose it will be accepted as a final settlement of our dispute on this matter. In 1896 the gross revenue of the department was $4,005,890.77 ; net revenue, $2,-964,014.13. The deductions from revenue were $1,041,876.54, and paid by check, $3,-593,647. I would like to know what changes were made in the law when we went out—in July, 1896, if I remember rightly—leading to increased receipts in the department in 1897. The gross revenue in that year was $4,311,242 ; the net revenue was $3,-202,938 ; the deductions from revenue amounted to $1,158,840 ; and the amount paid by check was $3,575,411. All the possible economies for which the hon. gentleman can take credit must be in the deductions from revenue. Of course, he did not alter the amount of the receipts of the post offices in the different cities, towns and villages. His reductions must solely be in the amounts paid by check. Was there any alteration in the law or in anything else for which he could take credit by which the revenue would be more buoyant ? If he takes credit for reductions in the payments for carrying mails, these reductions must be found in the gross payments made by check ; and the difference between that year and the preceding year was the difference between $3,789,000 and $3,575,-000. His gross revenue for 1899 is $4,-325,000 and his net revenue $3,182,000, or $400,000 less than that of the preceding year ; the deductions from revenue amount to $142,000, or only $16,000 less than those of the preceding year ; and the amount paid on contracts, notwithstanding the deductions from revenue, is greater by $6,000 than that of the preceding year. The amount paid by check is $3,381,000. Now, we will take the year 1900. The gross revenue is $4,345,822 ; the net revenue is $3,183,984 ; the deductions from revenue are $1,161,000, or more by nearly $20,000 than those of the preceding year, although the rate was nearly the same ; and the amount paid by check was $3,645,646. These are the figures of the hon. gentleman's own report, and I would like him to explain to me where his economies are, and what his alterations in the management of his office have been to cause those economies. What are the reductions made between 1896 and 1897 ? The only possible reductions would be in the amounts paid to contractors for carrying the mails, and these, I will venture to say, could not have been more than $40,-000 or $50,000. Therefore, we have this misleading statement put before the country, that by some act of the Postmaster General since he came into office, a deficit of $780,000 was virtually turned into something that was not a deficit at all. The hon. gentleman admits now a deficit of nearly $500,000, which he says was caused by a reduction from the three-cent to the two-cent rate. Very likely that is so ; but there is a deficit of $500,000 ; and the hon. gentleman promises that three or four years from now the accounts will perhaps balance. I doubt that very much. If they do, it will be entirely owing to the prosperity of the country. It may be that the reduction in the rate of postage does not actually cause a reduction of revenue, as people may send more letters ; but the fact remains that in the payments made by the department, which is the true test of economical management, there is no such saving as the hon. gentleman states.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the hon. Postmaster General tell the House whether he has under consideration an improvement of the parcel delivery system, and also, whether it is his intention to unify the postal notes and the money orders ? Of all the public departments the Post Office Department is the one to which the people are constantly looking for improvements. I believe great improvements can be made in the parcel delivery system, and still further improvements in the transmission of small sums of money by mail, and these are certainly divisions of public service which can constantly be expanded for the benefit of the people. I trust that the post office will go ahead of the express companies and cheapen in every possible way the transmission of parcels and small sums of money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With regard to an improved system of handling parcels, we are now establishing parcel post boxes, and we are endeavouring to make use of the automobile system to facilitate the collection and distribution of mail matter, including, of course, parcels. Last fall we bought two or three locomobiles, and we are having made six quadracycles for the city of Toronto. With reference to postal notes and money orders, I cannot say that we are considering at the present moment the subject of abolishing either one or the other, or amalgamating the two classes of service. They are very different in their character. The postal note is for the transmission of small sums not exceeding $5, and is somewhat in the nature of a check. The money order is a different thing altogether, the name of the payee not appearing on the face of it, and the order not being payable except to the person named in the advice note which is sent by the postmaster who issues the order to the postmaster on whom the order is made. Whether in time they can be united into one document remains to be seen. In the United States, they are getting up an order now that looks very much like a fusion of the postal note and the money order. A few months ago an officer of the United States postal department came to Canada and had an interview with our officers on the subject of a free interchange of money orders, and negotiations are now going on with the view of facilitating that business. They have sent to us a form of order, which looks to me very much like a fusion of the postal note and money order. They have no postal notes, and their money order differs very materially from ours ; and as ours has been in force in its present form so many years, I hesitate to make any material change by abolishing it and adopting instead something like the postal note or check payable to the person named in the face of the document itself.

Mr. MACLEAN. With regard to parcel delivery, there is great room for improvement. I need only point to what has been done in England to-day to show how the public can be accommodated by the parcel delivery system in force there. That system can be extended to Canada, and the people will be willing to see it developed, and, if necessary, have the government take over the business done by the express companies. That business could be done through the Post Office Department, and the country will justify the Postmaster General going fully into the matter and greatly developing the parcel delivery system in connection with the post office.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the government is, perhaps, going too far in the direction indicated by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean). It is carrying parcels of goods to all parts of Canada at rates which are four or five, and sometimes seven or eight, times less than those charged by the express companies. Either the express companies—companies chartered and under the control of the Dominion parliament—are making exorbitant charges or the Post Office Department is carrying parcels for almost nothing. I do not think that the government is doing right in carrying goods all over this country at such reduced rates—less than the cost of carriage. The carriage of letters and newspapers is the purpose for which the Post Office Department was organized, and if the department besides decides to carry parcels of merchandise, it should charge at least the cost of carriage, which it is not doing to-day. The department is allowing the business of this country to be turned into wrong channels. Take those large departmental stores in Toronto, for which this department is carrying goods thousands of miles at utterly ridiculous rates. The government has no right to carry these goods for departmental stores, which enter into competition with country storekeepers who are doing legitimate, proper business. By this policy the government is destroying mercantile industries in all parts of this Dominion.

At six o'clock, the Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. FOWLER. Before this item passes, I would like to ask the Postmaster General by whose advice he is guided in the dismissal of postmasters and in changing post offices. I do not know whether it has been the case in other counties besides that which I have the honour to represent, but, in that county since the election of the 7th of November last, and just previous to the election, a great many changes in post offices were made. Many postmasters, who were very competent officials, and had been for many years discharging their duties with credit to themselves and benefit to the community have been dismissed, and without any charge as far as the public know, without any investigation, having taken place. From my place in the House, I have asked questions with respect to two of these officials, and have received the somewhat curt answer of the minister that it was done upon his own responsibility, and that these men were partisans. Not only have postmasters been dismissed in this manner, but post offices have been moved from one part of a community to another, greatly to the detriment of the service, and post offices have even been closed up. I presume, though I do not know for certain, that the Postmaster General has been guided in the past by the advice of the gentleman who represented the county that I have the honour now to represent. When it became my fortune, whether good or ill, to replace that gentleman in this House, it was greatly to his annoyance, and he has sought to wreak his spite, on these office holders throughout the county; and not only upon the office holders, but upon the people in the county where the post offices have been changed or closed up. I have in mind a small place in a country district, Donegal, a name familiar to many of the gentlemen of this House, situated in the parish of Waterford, another name that is familiar. The post office there has been closed up entirely, and I understand that the government are going to open another post office in a neighbouring district where there is one already. As a matter of fact, this is a mountainous district and a high mountain intervenes between these two places. Therefore, the people of Donegal—and there are ten or twelve heads of families to be served by this office—will be obliged to go two or three miles, and to climb the mountain to reach the other office. That is a great hardship. It seems to me that post offices are not placed for the benefit or the advantage, or the interest of the friends of the party in power, but that the Post Office Department is intended for the benefit of all Canadians irrespective of party. It seems small to gratify spite by taking it out of these poor people in the remote district. Life for them is hard at the best; give them what advantage you can. If they are to be deprived of postal accommodation, it is a very great hardship indeed. I trust, therefore, the minister will take the advice of his responsible officers, especially the post office inspector, who is directly charged with the direction of these matters and not the advice of irresponsible parties, even though they are supporters of the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Though we have lost a good colleague in losing the predecessor of the hon. member of Kings, I have to congratulate the House on having an accession to its members in the person of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler), who has just spoken. I think the case which he has made—perhaps, I may be permitted to say, from very insufficient material—justifies one in assuming that, with a good case, he would make a most powerful argument. The hon. gentleman exclaims against our having closed up Donegal post office, and says it was a great offence against the public. Then he complains because we have opened a post office near it, and in a more convenient place. I cannot pretend to charge my mind with all the details of the removal or change of postmasters. If my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) has any grievance or any particular case which he thinks ought to be explained, I shall only be too pleased if he will direct my attention to it in a way that will enable me to come with the exact information necessary to reply to him. With reference to Donegal. I cannot pretend to give from recollection the circumstances and the reasons connected with changes in postmastership or location of offices. But, I may say that if, for example, a post office happened to be located in a place unsuitable for the public, that would seem a sufficient ground for the change. That may have been the reason for the change in the case of Donegal. My hon. friend says that that closing involved hardship to a number of people. I suppose that the number of patrons of that office, to some extent at least, would be indicated by the revenue of the office. If that affords the Committee any information whatever, I may say that the returns for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1900, indicates a gross revenue from that office of $3, or somewhat less than a cent a day——

Mr. FOWLER. If I did not make myself quite clear to the Postmaster General when I first spoke, it must be accounted for by my youth and inexperience. The hon. gentleman was so good as to congratulate me, and I must return the compliment. It is marvellous that a gentleman at the head of a department so great as this should be able to carry in his mind the petty details of every post office. But, considering that we have had certain statements of the hon. gentleman challenged in this House, I would like to have something a little more definite than the hon. gentleman's ipse dixit as to the revenue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am speaking from the official report.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose that it is true, and that the revenue from this post office is not large, yet the hon. gentleman cannot deny that it served a number of families. And shall it be said that justice is not to be given to these people, that they shall be denied postal accommodation, because the revenue of their office is not so large as some others? It seems to me, that the poor should have as fair treatment as is given to any.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to hear that, applauded by the hon. gentlemen opposite. It is not altogether in accordance with their course, but I am glad to hear them applaud the sentiment. Whether a post office is needed in any particular locality or not should not be decided merely by the question of revenue. I admit that should have something to do with it, but it should not be the only point considered. The number of people to be served should be regarded as a very important point. However, I am glad to know that the Postmaster General will look into these matters, and, in the future, will be more guided by his responsible officer than by those gentlemen who happen to have suffered defeat at the polls.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Referring to the subject we were discussing before the House rose, the deficit of 1895-6, I promised to look into the subject. I have done so, and I think I can make it so clear that the Postmaster General or the Prime Minister will not, after this, make the statement that there was a deficit of $780,000 in 1895-6. From the figures that appear, it must have struck the Postmaster General, if not some of his assistants or deputies, that such a deficit was abnormal. The hon. gentleman, to confirm his statement, read a report of two auditors, experts, who, he thought, proved his case. I am going to base my statement entirely upon their report, and I can prove conclusively to any gentleman who listens to me, that his statement is most fallacious. I do not blame the Postmaster General, because he may have been deceived by the figures, but any officer of his department that furnished such figures to him, ought never after to retain the confidence of the Postmaster General. The report is signed by Mr. W. H. Cross and Mr. W. F. Munro, the two auditors, and this is the conclusion of their report:

> At the beginning of the fiscal year 1895-6, as the result of the deficits of previous years, there were outstanding liabilities of the department in the shape of unpaid accounts to the amount of $616,712.99.

That is not for the year 1895-6, but for the previous years.

> At the close of the fiscal year 1895-6, the liabilities of the department in excess of all parliamentary appropriations applicable thereto amounted to the sum of $685,447.63. Thus the liabilities had increased during the year 1895-6 to the extent of $68,734.04.

Instead of the deficit of that year being $685,447.03, if he will look at the report of his auditors, he will see the deficit that year was only $68,734.04.

> The actual cost of the maintenance of the department in all its branches for the year 1895-6 was $4,985,327.53. The revenue of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, amounted to the sum of $3,957,798.51, which, deducted from the above-named gross cost of maintenance, namely, $4,985,327, leaves a deficit of $1,027,529.

From which has to be deducted, as the auditors put it correctly, the amount which has never been charged to the expenditure of the post office, the amount expended on civil government at headquarters in Ottawa. If the amounts that I had mentioned before dinner as overlapping, had been deducted, that deficit, instead of being $780,000, would be over $1,000,000. It is an amount which he deducts from his returns, and which was not deducted in the post office returns.

> Heretofore it has not been a practice to treat the amount expended under the head of Civil Government as a charge against the department, and were such practice adhered to, the deficit of over $1,027,529.02 would be reduced by $246,376.83, leaving the outside service shortage $781,152.19.

From that deduct the amount which the auditors report, with the amount of the years previous to 1895-6, $616,712.99, and it leaves an actual deficit in 1895-6 of $164,439, instead of $781,152. It is so clear that I wonder the hon. the Postmaster General ventures the statement; I wonder that the hon. the Prime Minister ventured the statement. Is he to include in the expenditure of 1895-6 all these experts say were deficits of the previous years? The only amount to be deducted is, as I stated before, $68,734. The hon. gentleman may laugh, he may try to explain it, but there is no explanation possible, except that the actual deficit of the Post Office Department in that year was $164,439 This is proved conclusively by the report of his auditors, and I hope the hon. gentleman, in making comparisons again—he is very chary of them in this House—in making comparisons in the country, must never say again that there was a deficit of $780,000 in 1895-6 ; because the receipts and expenditures balanced in those years, and show conclusively that instead of the deficit being of that amount, it was really only $164,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend has entirely failed to appreciate the report of the auditors. This report deals with two perfectly distinct transactions. It shows that for many years there had grown up in the Post Office Department a practice of exceeding the appropriation for the year, and if the appropriation was not suffito pay the expenditure for the year, then the shortage was taken out of the appropriation of the succeeding year. This practice went on for many years, and when we took office we found an accumulation of arrears amounting to over $600,000. For example, my hon. friend says that at the commencement of the fiscal year 1895-6 these accumulations amounted to some $600,000, and at the close of the year to $668,000. That is merely the transaction as between a vote of parliament and the expenditure. It is an entirely separate transaction from the question of how much it cost to manage the department for a year, and what the revenue of the department for that year was. Surely, I am not to blame for what happened before we took office. The hon. gentleman admits that for the year 1895-6 they ran behind the appropriation by $68,000. Well, for the fiscal year ending 1st of July, 1895, according to the figures with which I have nothing to do, there was a deficit of $707,000. My hon. friend will find it in the books ; he won't hold me responsible for this book of 1894-5. The book he quoted from shows that he began the fiscal year 1895-6 with a deficit on the previous year of $707,000 ; that is, your revenue was that much short of paying up your expenditure. Will the hon. gentleman explain to me by what process of reform they reconstructed that department in that last sad year of their administration, so that they came out with a deficit of only one hundred thousand odd dollars ? No, he won't do that, but instead of that, he tells me, and tells me truly, that he exceeded the appropriation in the year 1895-6 by $68,000. Add that $68,000 by which he overrun the appropriation in 1895-6, to the rate of shortage amounting to $707,000, for the previous year, and you have got $775,000, or within some $4,000 or $5,000 of the deficit the auditors bring out. Let my hon. friend keep quiet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am quiet.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is one thing to deal with appropriations ; it is another thing to deal with the earning power of a department and the cost of running it. Parliament votes a certain sum of money to carry on the department. The paragraph to which the hon. gentleman has referred has given proof of the vicious system of the late administration, who spent more each year than they disclosed to parliament, and who, instead of coming down frankly to parliament and asking parliament to vote the shortage failed to disclose it. I do not say it was intentional. I think it was very bad book-keeping owing to the loose state of affairs in the department, but there was the fact that year after year they were spending more than they had the courage to ask parliament to vote, and the result was that when the 1st July came each year, they had to pay out of the year's vote, beginning on the 1st July, an enormous sum of money for debts and services of the past which sum should have been available to carry on the services for the current year. That paragraph that the hon. gentleman has alluded to, shows that at the beginning of the fiscal year 1895-6 there was a deficit of $600,000, representing debts which should have been paid out of the provision of the previous year, but for which there was no money, and which they paid out of the service of 1895-6. They went out that year owing $668,000. When I come down here and ask for money to carry on the service from the 1st July next until the end of the fiscal year, it is not right, and it is contrary to constitutional principle, that I should be at liberty to take money voted to carry on the servic from the 1st July next to the end of the year, and expend it in paying for services now being performed, and that paragraph in the Auditor's report is an illustration of the loose practice which had grown up and continued for years. If my hon. friend wants some comfort I will give it to him. He has made a mistake; he does not understand this report, and when he comes to think it over to-morrow, he will be surprised that he committed himself to such a view of it. He and I are excellent friends. I know he is incapable of suggesting a thing that he does not believe to be correct. I know that he is speaking conscientiously of what he believes to be the result of this audit. All the same he is entirely in error. I think he will not contradict me again after he has thought it over. I will ask my hon. friend to take the Auditor General's Report, and to take the previous reports, and I will go over them with him, and if he is wrong he will admit it, and if I am wrong I will admit it. But, there is no way of getting over the fact that we receive so much money from the public for the service we perform, and that we pay so much out for the service performed, and that the balance is so much. That is what the auditors tell us in regard to the year 1895-6. They say that for that year the Receiver General received from the public as revenue $3,957,798.51. That was the gross amount the Receiver General obtained from the public.

They gave us the gross revenue from the public for that year, and the gross cost for carrying on the service for that year, $4,985,327.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, no ; $600,000 of old debt.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman does not understand anything about it. The old debt was paid by a special vote of parliament. The Finance Minister came down to parliament, reported that debt, and parliament voted a special sum of some $680,000 to wipe out the debt. It was voted to clear off the old debt over and above this $4,900,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is the difference between the receipts and the expenditure ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The difference between the receipts and expenditure for that year was $1,027,529.02, and that includes the cost of the inside service. Deducting the cost of the inside service, amounting to $246,376.83, it leaves a shortage between the gross revenue of that year and the gross cost of the service of that year of $781,152.19, the deficit for the year 1895-6.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am sorry that I cannot make the Postmaster General understand what is perhaps the simplest thing in arithmetic. Surely the hon. gentleman has to ask himself what were the receipts of the post office that year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have given them to you.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the expenditure ? In the expenditure is this $616,000 included ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, not a copper of it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is included ; every copper of it is included. The $780,000 is included in the amount, and the way he makes this $780,000 of deficit is by including the $616,000. Let the hon. minister look at the figures and he will tell you at once that you are wrong. The hon. gentleman took a vote to pay off the $616,000 or the $680,000, which was simply to correct the book-keeping. The hon. gentleman talks about an expenditure in the post office more than the amount voted for it. It has always been so. The amount voted for the post office is never fixed exactly at the amount which is required for the service, because the Post Office Act places the whole of the moneys received by the department, along with the amount voted by parliament, at the disposal of the Postmaster General. I cannot understand why it is that the hon. Postmaster General cannot see it. It is impossible that he should not do so if he looks at the figures from 1879 down to 1901. The auditors have included in the amounts to be deducted from that four million odd dollars the deficits of the previous years, $616,000 and $684,000, which leaves a deficit of $780,000, but, if you deduct from that $616,000 which belongs to previous years, the deficit in the post office is only $164,000. I will ask the hon. gentleman to get some expert book-keeper to look into it again, and he will find that my statement is literally and verbally correct to the cent. There is no mystery about it. It is one of the simplest sums in calculation that could be imagined. The simple question which the hon. minister (Sir Louis Davies) asked him is this : In the deductions or in the amount charged for expenditure, is the $616,000 charged ? If it is charged, the deficit of the previous year is included in the year 1895. I stake my reputation on the statement that the $616,000 is the deficit of the previous year entering into the calculations of the years 1895-6.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let me tell the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) how he operated in 1894. His own report shows that in 1894 his expenditure was $3,421,203 ; his revenue, $2,773,507, and the deficit $647,696. If he sends to the library and gets his own report he will find that is correct. Another year went by and I will take his own figures again. The auditors say that the vicious system had been adopted of not getting a large enough vote and carrying a shortage forward and taking the deficit out of the succeeding appropriation. The same thing happened in 1895. Leaving out the appropriations which only appeared to confuse the hon. gentleman, and taking simply the revenue and expenditure, we have in 1894 a shortage of $647,000, and, according to his own figures for 1895, a shortage of $707,000 ; an increased deficit in one year of $60,000, and again the auditors say that the deficit in 1896 was $781,000. The hon. gentleman says that for 1895-6 there was only a deficit of $100,000, if so will he explain how he can justify a deficit of $707,000 in the previous year and $647,000 in the year previous to that again. What reforms did he bring into effect to reduce this deficit which was steadily growing. Surely the hon. gentleman would not discredit the skill of these auditors. One of the auditors, Mr. Cross, is known by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), and the other, Mr. Munro, is also known to gentlemen opposite, and no one will question either their skill or their integrity. They had no object except to bring out the actual results. I have every confidence in the accuracy of their audit, and I am sure when my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) thinks over the matter he will accept it too.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I accept it entirely, and my argument is based altogether on the report of the auditors. If the Postmaster General lets the Minister of Finance express his opinion on the question, I will be perfectly satisfied.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On page XXIII of the Postmaster General's Report of 1894, the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) will find the following : Net revenue, $2,773,507.71, and on page XXIV he will find the total expenditure by check, $3,421,000. Deduct the revenue from the expenditure and you have the deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894. I need not explain to the hon. gentleman, as a former Postmaster General, that our revenue is to some extent always depleted from the fact that postmasters who are paid by way of commission have their salaries deducted from the gross revenue, so what we get is the net revenue and the balance is the same.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see by this vote that the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) asks for an increase of $78,714.55. I wish to ask him if it is his intention to put the post office service in the rural districts—I refer to my own county particularly—in the same state of efficiency as it was before he took office in 1896. In my county where we had a daily mail service through several of the most populous districts before 1896, the Postmaster General immediately on taking office reduced it to a tri-weekly and in some cases to a bi-weekly service. I hear complaints from one end of the county to the other as to the poor mail service at present. An hon. member here complained of a post office being closed in his constituency which served seven or eight families, but in my constituency Marble Rock post office was closed, a post office which for the last twenty years supplied 70 or 80 families. But simply because the postmaster was a Conservative and the mail carrier a Conservative and there were no Liberals living in that part of the country to get the job, Marble Rock post office was closed up and these 70 or 80 families have now to go seven or eight miles to Gananoque to get their mails. I ask him whether it is his intention to restore that office. Another post office in my constituency was closed up, and I put a question on the paper in reference to it, and the Postmaster General gave me the same answer that he gave to my hon. friend, that it was closed because it produced only $6 or $8 of revenue—a statement which I know was not correct ; the revenue was more than the amount stated. As soon as I made the statement in the House, my late opponent, Mr. Fredenburg, came to Ottawa and represented to the Postmaster General that there were a few Grits in that district and that the post office must be restored immediately, and it was restored.

An hon. MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman says that is right, but is it right that 70 or 80 families must go without their postal service because they are Conservatives ? Is the Post Office Department of this country to be run on political lines ? No doubt the Post Office Department ought to make a better showing financially if the service has been reduced in every rural electoral district as it has been in South Leeds. In view of his getting this large amount, I ask the Postmaster General to restore the service there to the same position in which it was when he took office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am most desirous of maintaining the efficiency of the post offices in every part of Canada, even in those parts which have the misfortune to be represented as my hon. friend's constituency is. He has called my attention for the first time to a number of supposed shortcomings in his constituency. He alluded to the case of Soperton. I recall the name of that place, but I do not remember my hon. friend calling my attention to the other deficiencies to which he now refers, and I must rebuke him as an active member of this House for having during past years neglected the interests of his constituents in failing to do so. I assure him that it is only necessary for him to present a good case, and it will receive fair treatment. I remember a case being made out which warranted the closing of a post office of the name of Soperton, though I do not remember it sufficiently to discuss it. My hon. friend says, no doubt correctly, that on the argument of Mr. Fredenburg it was reopened. I presume he made a good case, and it was quite right for me to yield to his argument ; and if my hon. friend makes a good case, he will receive the same treatment. I can only say that each case will be dealt with on its merits. I do not think it will be found that any service has been withheld that should not be withheld or granted that should not be granted for any political reasons. I regard the mail service as something which the people have a right to, apart from political considerations. My hon. friend has only to present a proper case and he will get justice.

Mr. FOWLER. On looking over the report of the Post Office Department, I find that there are over 100 post offices in this Dominion with a revenue of less than $4. When the hon. Postmaster General made the statement he did, I observed that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) was very vociferous in his applause ; and on looking up the report I find that in that hon. gentleman's constituency there is a post office which only had a revenue last year of $1, and that post office is still flourishing. I may say that there are post offices without any revenue at all. In the county of Antigonish alone there are twenty post offices with a revenue under $4. There is one post office in that county with a revenue of $2 in which the postmaster receives $20. It seems to me strange that this doctrine of economy should be applied to the poor people who have the misfortune to live in that part of the county of King's to which I have referred, and the misfortune not to see eye to eye with hon. gentlemen opposite; but from the kindly manner in which the hon. Postmaster General referred to me, I feel satisfied that he will consult his inspector in the province of New Brunswick, who is a very decent man and a competent officer, before he makes such changes in the future as he has made in the past.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Postmaster General, and also the Minister of Finance, who holds the purse strings, if every account connected with the postal service belonging to a particular fiscal year is charged up to that year, and if there are no arrears by reason of overlapping. If they are prepared to say that in no case does that happen, it will greatly simplify this discussion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As the hon. gentleman has referred to me, I may say that it is most desirable that the accounts of one year shall include the payments for that year, and as far as possible that is done in all the departments. I am not prepared to say absolutely that in every case it is done to the last dollar ; but, in order that it may be done, our Audit Act provides that accounts may be kept open for a reasonable period, and we may be able to extend that period for the purpose of getting accounts in from a distance. I think it will not be incorrect to say that that is the practice of the departments generally to-day. My hon. friend the Postmaster General held that view very strongly, and always assured me that he was carrying it out in his department.

Mr. CLANCY. That seems, no doubt, to be the theory, but we happen to have the practice as is disclosed by the Auditor General's Report of last year. On a single page I find half a dozen cases of payments made on contracts performed in 1899. If the hon. gentleman will look on page S—11 he will find one case there, partly made up of services in 1900, and partly of services in 1899. On the next page, he will find six cases. I have not examined the Act very closely, but just glancing over it, I find a half dozen cases on the next page of a similar character. It is perfectly clear that whatever the theory of the hon. gentleman may be, the practice has not been carried out. I am not finding fault with that in any sense, because I can well understand the impossibility of preventing some overlapping from year to year, but when hon. gentlemen pretend to say that they square it all off at the end of the year, and pay every account, the facts are entirely against them. No doubt there were balances in 1896 from 1895, and no doubt there are also balances unpaid belonging to 1899 that were paid in 1900, and in 1900 that were paid in 1901.

Mr. McGOWAN. I find on page 14 of the Postmaster General's Report that A. Gale was paid $122.85 for carrying the mails from the railway station to Alma. Well, Mr. Gale has not been there for several years. At one time he lived there and carried the mails from the station to the post office, but he has not lived there for several years. He lives thirty or forty miles further away. I did not know the hon. gentleman was carrying on business in that way. It looks very much as if this contract was farmed out.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contractors for carrying the mail are not required to personally perform the work nor to live in any particular locality. All that is required of them is to have the work performed to the satisfaction of the inspector of the district. Their case is different altogether from that of persons appointed to positions, the duties of which they are supposed personally to discharge. In such cases there is objection to farming out the work, but that objection does not apply to mail contractors, and I never knew that point to be taken before.

Mr. MONK. Before this item passes, I would like to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to this consideration. I think we have evinced on this side, since the beginning of the session, a desire to advance the work of the session and proceed with the estimates in a business-like way. But if we are put to such straits as we have been this afternoon in order to obtain information, I am afraid our task will be more protracted than we anticipate. The discussion arose greatly out of a question I put as to what the deficit was during the past year in the Post Office Department, and reluctantly the hon. minister admitted that there was a deficit of $461,000. Then it took an hour and a half of discussion before we found out—and it was due in great part to the criticism of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) that we did find out—that to that deficit must necessarily be added the sum of $90,000 on the service in the Yukon district. That is now admitted by the hon. the Postmaster General. But if we take the statements made by him during the last election and spread broadcast through the province of Quebec, there was a deficit in the postal service in 1895-6 of over $700,000. This statement, my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart), has shown this afternoon to be absolutely incorrect. Instead of a deficit of $700,000, my hon. friend has shown that the deficit was $164,439, and not one cent more. Then the hon. the Postmaster General stated at a public meeting in East Grey, not only that the deficit in 1895-6 was $700,000, but that we would soon reach a period when we would have no deficit at all. In the early part of the afternoon, I questioned the hon. gentleman as to how far we were suffering from a deficit at present, and he would give no answer save the general observation that probably this year there would be no deficit at all. I think the hon. gentleman must admit that a great deal of time has been lost in arriving at the facts. And when I saw my hon. friend the member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), with his extremely outwardly virtuous appearance, rising in this House and saying he could not see—just like a man who was exhibiting a juggler—where there was any deception, I must say the lack of frankness displayed was significant of anything but business methods by a business administration. It would have been a great deal better for the hon. the Postmaster General to have come down and told us exactly, at the very inception, what the amount of the deficit really is in a service, in which there must necessarily be a considerable deficit, if it is properly carried on. And the three or four hours that we have taken to find out the facts and place them before the country might have been better occupied in remedying certain individual grievances which have been pointed out by several members and met by the Postmaster General in a very flippant spirit. We had the hon. member for North Leeds (Mr. Taylor) pointing out that a certain post office had been closed and then reopened on the representation of Mr. Fredenburg, and then closed again. Why, we have no explanation from the Postmaster General, who simply got up and smilingly told us that Mr. Fredenburg had made out a good case, and that no doubt if the hon. member for Leeds would come before him again with a certain case decided not long ago, and make out a good claim, he too would have justice. If we are to get through the estimates with expedition, we require a little more frankness on the part of ministers of the Crown. I have confidence in the Minister of Public Works that when we come to the estimates of his department, we will have less trouble in arriving at the basic figures and dealing with those estimates promptly and in a business-like manner.

I find an increase of $49,523.88 in salaries and allowances, outside service. Is the Postmaster General disposed to give us some information as to what that increase consists of ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This increase is arrived at in this manner :—

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Postmaster General charged me with dereliction of duty in not bringing to his attention the matter of the closing of Marble Rock post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not speak of that particularly.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the 'Hansard' of May 17, 1898, page 5713, he will find this :

> I know that the Marble Rock post office in my constituency served fifty families, but the postmaster was a Conservative, and the mail carrier was a Conservative, and the only way the Postmaster General could dispose of them was to close the post office, and he did so. These fifty families have to travel miles to the nearest post office for their mail, and although he gives them a reduction of a cent on their letters, some of them have to spend a whole day going to the post office. I have received two letters from prominent men in my constituency in reference to the postal service the Postmaster General is now giving in that country. Mr. R. Harvey, miller of Lyndhurst, writes as follows:—'George Taylor, Esq., M.P. :
> 'Our people of Ellisville, Long Point and Sweet's Corners are all up in arms about the change of mail routes. It is a shame to withdraw the daily mail from that section. Mail going to these post offices now lays over in Lyndhurst from Friday until Monday. Here are three cheese factories and a well-settled community of intelligent people placed in a worse condition than if they were in the backwoods.'
> For years these people enjoyed a daily mail, but now they have got it only twice a week. On that route there are four cheese factories, and a thickly settled community; they are worse off for mail service now than if they were in the backwoods.

So, it will be seen that I brought this matter to the attention of the Postmaster General over two years ago. Marble Rock post office, which served fifty families, was closed, and no steps have been taken yet to reopen it. The mail route, changed from daily to tri-weekly, remains the same as before. A thickly settled community are served with a tri-weekly mail, and have been for two years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand my hon. friend to enumerate a great many defects in the management of the post office with regard to the mail services and other matters. He mentioned Marble Rock and the change of mail route, but his observations were general enough to cover much more than these two cases. He spoke of reduction of services and discontinuance of services——

Mr. TAYLOR. And I mentioned two cases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Having mentioned two cases, the hon. gentleman has done his duty with regard to these. But, if there are other grievances, has he done his duty with regard to them ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Am I right in understanding that most of the increase of $49,000 is required for the administration of the post office in the Yukon territory, in connection with salaries, &c. ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This has nothing to do with the services mentioned on page 70 of the estimates ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the object of the Post Office Department in making this rather extraordinary division ? For instance, in bringing down the items in the estimates, I notice in the vote we are considering that the items give the offices, ending with Vancouver, and so on, and not including the Yukon. There is a note that on page 70, services in the Yukon are provided for. Turning to page 70, we find this item, which I suppose to be the one covering the postal services :—

Government of the Territory—Salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the territroy	$270,000

Turning to the Auditor General's Report, we find that the post office proportion in 1899-1900 for post office salaries, &c., the same items, and the same services as are given elsewhere, is included under this item of a million dollars. What is the reason, or is there any good reason, for the paying out of this extent for this branch of the post office, and putting it under an entirely different head, such as I have mentioned—the administration of the Yukon territory ? Is there any advantage in this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Yukon is an addition to the territory we have to administer. The government of which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was a member, had to do with it only to a very limited extent. It seems advisable, in order to be able to compare service with service and administration with administration that the clear line of service should be kept intact. You can, if you like, add the shortage of the Yukon to the general shortage for the Dominion. It does not cloud the case, but rather makes it clearer for the purpose of comparing the cost of service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then these estimates, instead of being prepared for business purposes, are prepared for hustings purposes. That argument is the smallest kind of political clap-trap. The facts, when looked at, have to do with the post office service, and so far as bearing the burden goes and finding out what is spent for the service, it matters not whether it is for the Yukon or for the provinces on the Atlantic coast. Surely, business men would expect to find all these services which are managed by the Postmaster General under the head of the post office estimates. The hon. gentleman tells this Committee that he has arranged a heading apart from the post office estimates under which is to be found an item of $100,000—and it will be a growing item, no doubt. And the object is that he may have the satisfaction of making comparisons with his predecessor's figures and showing to his own advantage what would not be to his advantage if he told the whole story instead of telling only half. I do not think that is creditable to the Postmaster General or fair to this Committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman will find his criticism will apply with equal force to other services and to other portions of the estimates. The purpose of putting this on page 70 is to group it with the other items of expense of administrating the Yukon, and so show the total of that service. This administration of the Yukon is a new service, one in which the people are deeply interested, and it was thought convenient to group the Yukon items under one head. When they appear in the public accounts, they will appear charged to the proper departments. There is no danger of anybody failing to notice the division of the vote, for the hon. gentleman's own remarks show that there is a note inserted to call attention to the matter. The object is to show the Yukon estimates together, and I think my hon. friend should see that there is much in that object.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not easy to find those things. For instance, one has to go through three or four books and follow that note out. It gives no suggestion that the item under consideration purports to be complete. 'Salaries and allowances for the outside service of the post office.' These figures are given at $1,000,000 in round figures. Down below there happens to be under all these items 'See also page 70 for services in the Yukon territory.' Taking that book, no one would be able to say for a moment that any of these services on page 70 had to do with the post office, because it says on page 70 that for the government of the territory there is an amount of $270,000 required. One has to take the Auditor General's Report and go into these items of expenditure. Is the hon. gentleman able to say when the other territories were given the advantage of a postal service, when postmasters were appointed in cities and towns ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask another question, which the hon. gentleman can answer at the same time. In regard to the item 223, which we are now considering, how much of that increase of $35,000 is due to the Post Office Department ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is reading the wrong item. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is under the same error, because he spoke of the item as being the government of the Yukon. That is not the item. The item distinctly says it is for post office service of the Yukon.

Mr. MONK. I think with the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that there is, I would not like to use the word 'deception,' but it looks very much as if there were what we call mental reservation in regard to this vote ; because, as pointed out by my hon. friend from Pictou, we have under one item, salaries and allowances for the outside service, but no special reference. It is only when you come to the foot of the page that you see a note : 'See also page 70, services in Yukon territory.' At page 70 there is a whole string of services and nothing to indicate that it is the post office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will look at item 224, on page 70, he will see there an item for the post office.

Mr. MONK. Why, when this note was inserted at the foot of the page, connected with no previous item, were we not referred to the expenditure in connection with the post office, instead of to the services in the Yukon, on page 70 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because he will find the same note applying not only to the post office, but to the railways, to public works and to the Department of Justice, in each of these cases, in order to show that there are appropriations other than those set forth where the note is put in.

Mr. MONK. We have now, at any rate, the certainty that the deficit on last year's operations was $461,661.87, plus this special service of $91,580.08, in all a deficit of $553,-241.95. Now, I asked the Postmaster General early in the afternoon, what he expected the deficit would be this year. So far as I recollect, he stated that he anticipated that there would be no deficit, or a very small one. Now, we are nearly four months from the end of the fiscal year, and I think the post office must be managed in such a way as to give us an approximate idea, when we are voting these large sums, of what this year's deficit will be. I would ask the Postmaster General this general question, if he thinks the deficit this year, from present appearances, will exceed the sum of half a million dollars ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend appears to me, I won't say disappointed, with my illustration, but he seems to be troubled a little as to the way the accounts turned out last year. I am sure it would have been more gratifying to him if I could have reported no deficit whatever. But let me say that when we took office there was a deficit on the years immediately preceding, of $780,000. I take my hon. friend's own statement now, which probably is the worst that can be said, because he has added to the $460,000 deficit, a deficit for a service in a part of the country with which the previous administration had nothing at all to do, which he says is some $90,000 ; he adds that to the $460,000 and makes $550,000. I presume that is the worst my hon. friends can say about the finances of last year. Put that alongside the deficit of $780,000 which existed when we took office, and the net result is that while, under the previous administration, the public paid 5 cents per half ounce on letters from Canada to Great Britain and many other parts of the empire, 3 cents as the domestic rate in Canada and to the United States, for the last fiscal year we enjoyed these services at the reduced rates of 2 cents instead of three ; and in addition to that, instead of costing the taxpayers $781,-000, as before, according to my hon. friend's own showing, it has only cost them $550,000. I won't comment upon that result, I leave these figures to speak for themselves. In answer to his question whether, in view of the fact that we are within four months of the close of the year, the deficit, in my opinion, will exceed half a million dollars, I emphatically say, it will not, I think, amount to anything like half a million dollars.

Mr. CLANCY. I waited for the hon. gentleman to answer the question that I asked him, in view of the statement that was made by the Minister of Finance, how he explains the overlappings, that we deny, by the figures appearing on pages S—11 and 12 of the Auditor General's Report. Turn to S—12, and he will find: 'Clifford Lewis, semi-weekly service to December 31st, 1899, 41 trips, at $28, $1,148.' That is one item, and is a sample of many others which I will not read. That is a service that really belonged to a part of the year. I am only pointing that out to settle the question as to whether there are overlappings or not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that belongs to the year in which it is paid. It belongs to the year 1899-1900.

Mr. CLANCY. It was paid in 1900.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was paid in the year in which it was incurred.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. gentleman does not pretend to say that we are now quoting from the Auditor General's Report for 1899. The Auditor General's Report is for the fiscal year 1900, and has absolutely nothing to do with accounts of former years. The hon. gentleman will not pretend that it is for a service charged in 1899, and which was not paid until the following year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My instructions to the department, since I took office, have been to have every expenditure for the year paid and charged against the appropriation for that year, and I have made a special appeal to the Department of Finance to keep open the accounts for the year until everything can be included. My officers here assure me that my wishes in that respect have been lived up to, and they are not aware of any accounts for the fiscal year having been allowed to be unpaid until the succeeding year.

Mr. CLANCY. How does the hon. gentleman explain that item ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That item, on the face of it, is a statement of service rendered to the 31st December, 1899. It is an account for the year from the 1st July, 1899, to the 1st July, 1900, and I do not see where else it could appear. It is for work done up to December 31, 1899, and the first half of the fiscal year covered by the Auditor General's Report. In what other place should it appear ?

Mr. CLANCY. It commences early in the season, before the 30th June of that year, and, therefore, half of the service had been performed at the end of the fiscal year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is quite unfamiliar with the accounts.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not unfamiliar with the accounts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The service in the Rainy River district is performed during the summer by water and during the winter by stage. This contractor was performing the service by water or stage. I feel sure upon that point. The water service is performed in the summer by steamers. We have a mail service by stage from Wabigoon, and another service from Rat Portage, 160 miles, following the route of the Rainy river to Fort Francis in that district. These were very expensive services. This may not be the water service, but the service after the close of navigation. I may be in error. I cannot recollect the name of the contractor, but the water service was performed by the company owning the steamboat plying between Rat Portage and Fort Francis.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). May I ask the hon. Postmaster General to explain how he provided for the deficit of $781,000 that existed in 1896 ? In 1897, the following year, he claimed that he had a comparatively small deficit. How did he provide for that $781,000 of a deficit which existed and which disappeared apparently in some way in the course of the following year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection is that the hon. Finance Minister applied to parliament for a vote of $680,000, and that parliament voted the money and wiped the deficit out.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). How can the hon. Postmaster General, in the face of that, maintain that he should fairly compare that deficit of $781,000 with the deficit which he had apparently in the next year when he admits that to provide for the deficit he got a sum of money given to him by the hon. Finance Minister, by special grant, and which was charged to capital account ? How can he ask an intelligent House and country to accept his statement ? The Postmaster General here informs us that during the year ending June 30, 1896, there was a deficit of $780,000, and that he had only a deficit of $60,000 the next year. He has, I think, conclusively established the contention made by the hon. the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Haggart), that there was no such deficit for 1896. He has proven that hon. gentleman's contention by the facts and figures given in his own report. There was nothing in the receipts or expenditure of the department in the year 1897, that would account for the disappearance of that alleged deficit, and I think we may accept as a matter now satisfactorily established that the deficit did not at all belong to the year terminating on June 30, 1896, but was the increment of a series of arrearages extending over a number of years. Therefore, I think we must charge the hon. Postmaster General with a lack of ingenuousness when he seeks to put the deficit for 1896 at $780,000, as compared with the deficit that existed in the following year. There are one or two matters to which I want to call the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General. I suppose he is exceedingly anxious to make his department self-sustaining as soon as possible. I know he is claiming a great deal of credit for cutting down the expenditure by refusing to let contracts to mail carriers without tender, and that he has saved a great deal of money, by, in some cases, breaking up contracts and reletting them during the term in which they were to run. I would like to call his attention to the fact that some person is taking liberties with his department in the county of Pictou, in Nova Scotia, that he is taking contracts from men who have efficiently discharged their work, and giving them to others who have not tendered for them. It may be a coincidence, but it is a fact nevertheless, that a man who has been deprived of the privilege of tendering and who has lost two contracts, the requirements of which he has performed in a manner so efficient as to secure the commendation and support of the people of that locality, is a Conservative, and a very active one, and that the gentleman to whom the contract has been given without tender is one, whatever his other qualifications may be, who is a strong supporter of the hon. gentleman and his friends. I am sure the hon. Postmaster General will put that matter right now that I have, in my place, in parliament, brought it to his notice and showed him how seriously some of his officials are departing from that magnificent line of conduct that he marked out for himself when he took office. Mr. Gammon, of River John, was deprived of his contract, and another gentleman, Mr. Ritchie, of River John, received the contract although he did not apparently ask for it. Certainly he did not tender for it. There is another matter. I find, that, like my hon. friend from King's county, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), certain postmasters in Pictou county are marked for destruction or promotion. In many cases, despite largely-signed petitions from those in the neighbourhood, they have been dismissed and the post offices removed to other places for no reason whatever except a political reason. That is a shame. It is a pity that men can be found in our country so small as to covet an office of $10 or $20 a year, and that an administration can be found so contemptible as to listen to the demands of defeated candidates who wish to wreak their vengeance on men who refused to support them, and who stood in a manly fashion by their party. It is a sad thing to know that Canada is governed by a set of men who will lend themselves to such contemptible conduct. Even in cases where Liberal friends asked the post office to be left where it was, at the instance of defeated candidates the whole public service of Canada is being dragged down by the acts of this administration. It is a miserable, petty, picayune piece of business. The government is raising up for itself a fine monument in showing that it is the tool of creatures who are capable of asking the dismissal of men holding these small offices, simply on the ground that they refused to vote Liberal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I beg to associate myself with the observations which have been so well made by my hon. colleague from Pictou (Mr. Bell). In fact, in view of the rules of the House, I would not like to trust myself to express my own opinion of what I think of these transactions, and of the petty vengeance of the government, which has been referred to. I do not believe that the Postmaster General is cognizant of the facts surrounding that small contract from the town of River John to the station which was obtained during his own term of office. If my information be correct, Mr. Gammon got that contract by tender, and has done the work to the satisfaction of every one, including the officers of the department. This gentleman who has cut him out did not get the contract, I am informed, by open competition. I would like the Postmaster General to take a note of it, because it may not be too late to see that the pettiest party politics of that character should not be permitted to prevail. Mr. Gammon, I am glad to know, is not dependent on that small contract, and it should be known that he was not cut out of the contract fairly in open competition. If it is not too late by a day or two, the Postmaster General would do no injury to the service or himself if he gets all the facts before him prior to his making this change.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot recall the circumstances of this particular case——

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We will try to make emphatic representations of them to you.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The officers will take a note of this case, and see to it.

Mr. POPE. I call the attention of the Postmaster General to the dismissal, or rumoured dismissal, of Miss Sanborn, postmistress of Bulwer, which, I understand, is on account of the alleged partisanship displayed by that young lady during the elections which took place in Compton. While we are all accustomed to the peculiar character of vengeance which the present government visits upon those unfortunate gentlemen who have votes and who voted intelligently and independently, I wish to present to the Postmaster General the case of a young lady who has no vote. This post office is in a small community, and the house answers for the Canadian Pacific Railway station as well as for the post office. I understand that the office has not as yet been removed, and I take this early opportunity of calling the attention of the Postmaster General to it. The post office, together with the keeping of the railway station, is the only means of livelihood which this young lady has, and I trust she will not be removed as postmistress. I wish to know if the Postmaster General will grant my request.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Pope) to discuss the question with me later.

Mr. POPE. With the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. CLARE. I wish to ask the Postmaster General why it is that the post office at Freeport, between Berlin and Preston, in the county of Waterloo, has been closed up recently ? That post office has been in existence for some forty years, and the excuse given by the Postmaster General in other cases does not apply here, because the revenue from that office is quite large and the expense small. It is situated in a very populous part of our county, and although the salary attached to it is small, it is considered so important that a number of the farmers around there pay a portion of the expenses of keeping it up. I do not know whether or not the post office has been removed into another riding, because South Waterloo sent a representative to oppose the government, but I do say that it is unjust that this post office should be closed. If the Postmaster General were to investigate, he would find that it is in the interest of the public that this post office should be returned to its previous location.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Clare), I will say that his observations shall not pass unnoticed. I will ascertain why the post office is closed, and will be happy to discuss the question at a later period, if the hon. gentleman desires. I will express the hope that while the constituency of the hon. gentleman may not have sent him as a supporter of the government, it did not send him here absolutely to oppose the government.

Mr. CLARKE. I was not in the House this afternoon when the Committee began the discussion of this item, and I do not know whether the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) made any statement as to his intentions with regard to the petition which reached him some time ago from the letter carriers all over the Dominion. Has the Postmaster General made any provision in the estimates—which I see have been increased—to grant the prayer of that petition, and is it his intention to do so ? I would also ask if the Postmaster General has made any provision to give to the letter carriers of Canada the statutory increase of salaries to which they are entitled ? These are matters of great importance to a number of my constituents, and I would like an explicit statement from the minister (Hon. Mr. Mulock) about them. I would ask, too, if the Postmaster General would vouchsafe us information as to whether he has given any consideration to the question of reducing the drop letter postage ? In large centres of commerce, like the city of Toronto, it costs commercial firms less to distribute their drop letters by messengers than to send them through the post office, and in addition to the reduced cost they get them more expeditiously delivered. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General for more information on these matters. I do not desire to take up the time of the Committee by speaking at length on them. I would rather give the time to the hon. minister to make the necessary explanation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the pay of the letter carriers, I would say that the pay of the officials of the Post Office Department, inside and outside, letter carriers included, is regulated by the Civil Service Act which the previous administration, supported by hon. gentlemen opposite, placed upon the statute-book, and at present we are voting moneys in accordance with that Act. It will be premature, therefore, to provide for salaries not provided for by any existing statute. I am at this moment, however, considering the subject, and have been considering it. I have not yet had an opportunity of discussing it with my colleagues, but I will do so at the earliest moment. I cannot say more than that to-night. My hon. friend will excuse me if I cannot be more explicit, as I have not the power to be. With reference to reducing the rate on drop letters in cities from two cents to one cent, that is a subject which has received a good deal of attention in cities, where there is already free delivery, and where public opinion is altogether in favour of the reduction. But I very much doubt if the same view obtains outside of the cities. The cost of maintaining a free city delivery is very considerable, and until the rest of the country gets free delivery, I fail to see how you could justify giving a special preference to the inhabitants of cities. There are others to be considered who pay largely towards the expenses of the service. If a city is desirous of having a reduction from two cents to one cent, let it pay for the reduction by commuting the amount of the difference at a fixed sum per annum, and obtain the one-cent drop letter rate in that way. But up to the present moment I have not seen my way to discriminate in favour of cities.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the minister tell us what he intends to do for the farmer in the way of a rural mail delivery ? I believe that subject is under consideration, and that an experiment is to be made. Would he mind telling us where he purposes making the experiment ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a very large question. A rural mail delivery has been tried for a short time in the United States, and one of my officers has been there taking observations, and is now preparing a report upon it. Mr. Ross, the assistant postmaster at Toronto, has been specially charged with that duty. I do not know what conclusion he has arrived at, as he has not yet made his report. I would not be right, probably in criticising the United States administration, but I think it will turn out that they are undertaking a much larger project than they contemplated when they began it. As to what it will cost, no one can very well anticipate. I had some conversation with some of the officers charged with the matter, and if I rightly understood them, they view with some alarm the task they have undertaken. It would mean a rural delivery over an area equal to that of Europe, with a population only one-fifth of that of Europe ; and Canada has an area equal to that of the United States. It is a very large problem, and could only be entered upon after the most careful consideration.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I have listened to the discussion to-night with considerable interest. The Postmaster General has laid down the rule that a post office may be cut off on the ground of its small revenue. We have also heard a great deal about the benefit of the two-cent postage rate. Those of us who live in the rural districts are not so much concerned in that reduction as we are to have the post offices at convenient points, where we can get daily mails. An office in a country place may be a very good distributing office, but a very poor receiving office ; and if we should be deprived of our post offices on the ground of their small revenues, while we have now to travel considerable distances to get our mails, we would be compelled to go a great deal further. Then, with regard to the payment of postmasters, I think the postmasters of towns and cities are paid a great deal better than the country postmasters, who have probably to keep their offices open much longer. In the rural districts we want the daily papers—though it would be a good thing for the government if the daily papers did not come—because they inform us of what is going on. A rural postmaster may sometimes be obliged to have his office open as early as six o'clock in the morning, when the stage goes by, and also late at night. I want to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to these points, so that he will consider that while a rural post office may not produce much revenue, it may be a very useful distributing office, and the postmaster may have to keep it open even longer hours than the city offices.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The remuneration of postmasters is a constant subject of discussion in this House. It has been so, I am told, long before any of the present members enjoyed seats here, and it will doubtless continue to be so for years to come. No one will pretend that the allowances made to postmasters of the class to whom my hon. friend refers represents in any respect a remunerative salary. The communities are pressing for an increased number of post offices, and a neighbour is willing to take the office and serve a dozen of neighbours. He has the mail brought to him instead of having to go for it to the post office, and a nominal fee is allowed him. That has been the practice since confederation. If my hon. friend will think for a moment, he will find that if we were to give $50 increase to every postmaster in Canada, there are 10,000 postmasters, and that would involve an increased expenditure of $500,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I think it would be possible to take something off the men in the cities and towns who are getting large salaries and add that to the men in the rural districts who do not get enough. We have in our settlement men getting $10, $15 and $20 for keeping post offices, and they have to keep these offices heated and open longer hours than in the cities or towns, and besides they are responsible and have to furnish security. I say we should put them on a basis somewhat equal to the others, and give them something worth while, even if you have to take it off those who have large salaries.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I hope the hon. the Postmaster General will give careful consideration to some communications he has had from me on the subject of free rural mail delivery. I do not expect that such a system could be started all over this Dominion in one year, but the hon. gentleman could begin in the county of Elgin, and then follow it up in the county of York. He would then find that this service would be so much appreciated that the country would never allow these hon. gentlemen to remain in their seats on that side of the House unless they continued it. There is nothing you can do more calculated to keep the boys and the old men on the farm and make them love the farm as to give them a rural free mail delivery. They would then get their newspapers every evening, and be able to discuss all those questions which come up before this House and know nearly as much as some of the gentlemen—not the gentlemen opposite, of course—in this House.

I cannot refrain from putting in a plea for those postmasters and postmistresses who have to keep these rural post offices open almost day and night, because in the country, when our work is done and we have had our supper, it is often late in the night before we can go for our letters, and these postmasters and postmistresses have to keep their offices open to wait upon us. I think their case is deserving of every consideration, and I hope that when Christmas time comes, the hon. gentleman will have something on the Christmas tree to repay them for the work they are doing.

Let me add just another word. I often come down to the city, and of course, like people from the country visiting the city, am quite an observer, and I see strong, double-fisted fellows—as big as the Postmaster General himself, walking to the post office two or three times a day just to see if there is anything there. It would be economy to have the mails brought to their addresses at least once a day and utilize these big strong fellows in some other kind of work. I think that every city of 10,000 inhabitants or even less, should have a free mail delivery. It would expedite business and in every way be an advantage to the community.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would draw the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to the fact that a petition has been presented from a part of my constituency asking for a post office to be erected in the township of Edwardsburg. The people have been agitating to have a post office there for some years, but although it is a very thickly settled district, they have not been able to get it as yet. Consequently they are obliged to travel quite a distance for their mail, and I understand that an arrangement has been submitted to the Postmaster General by which the route could be changed without any extra expense and give them this post office asked for. A number of people have expressed their willingness to take charge of the post office, and I hope the hon. gentleman will try and accommodate that section. He could do so without any extra expense. It would be a great convenience to the people to be able to get their daily paper and keep in touch with the times.

Mr. SPROULE. The subject was brought up this afternoon as to whether the Postmaster General had considered the question of changing the postage on newspapers, and I am not aware that he made any observations on the matter. I have heard from several rural publishers, who express the opinion that they would much rather have a straight postage on paper without regard to distance, than the present arrangement. The present arrangement occasioned a great deal of trouble and annoyance in separating the papers that must be carried a long distance, from those within the free zone, and the delay often results in their not being able to be mailed at the earliest possible moment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The publishers who enjoy the free zone can very easily get over the difficulty complained of by not taking advantage of the privilege. Some have done so. They find the exemption is so trifling that they voluntarily pay the postage. Last year I introduced a Bill dealing with the subject, which passed this House, but did not meet with favourable assent in the Senate.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have heard numerous attacks made upon the Postmaster General this evening—some, I am afraid, with a tinge of bitterness—and it, therefore, affords me a great deal of pleasure to call the attention of this committee to a little incident which proves conclusively, to my mind at least, that the Post Office Department is not administered in that partisan spirit of which we have heard so much. Shortly after the general election in 1896, a small post office in my constituency of Haldimand was about to be deprived of a daily service, a tri-weekly service to be established. Being somewhat interested in the matter, I wrote as strong a letter as I could to the Postmaster General, asking him to continue the daily service, and, in my letter, I pointed out that in the polling subdivision where the post office was situated, only three Conservative votes had been polled in the general election. This, I told the Postmaster General, was not said to influence his judgment according to lines of political bias, but merely to show him the high grade of intelligence of the people in that neighbourhood, in the hope that such an intelligent people might not be deprived of the daily service and the daily newspaper. The reply came back from the Postmaster General, in terms courteous, but firm : I do not consider it in the public interest to continue this as a daily service ; I must insist on a reduction to a tri-weekly service.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to dispel any doubt that may be in the hon. gentleman's mind with regard to the statement appearing in the Auditor General's Report. If he will turn to that report, page S-13, at the bottom of the page he will see this item :

Dominion Atlantic Railway and Steamship Company, six months, Dec. 31, 1898	$379 27

It seems perfectly obvious, from inquiry into the matter since this discussion began, that there has been, and is now, overlapping which caused what hon. gentlemen are now claiming as the deficit of the past. The same state of things that obtained when the Conservatives were in power, still obtains. I am not laying down the irrevocable rule that the Minister of Finance laid down, that all these amounts will be paid at the end of the fiscal year. I am simply pointing out that they are not, and possibly cannot be. This is not an exceptional case, but is one of many.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I explained some time ago, that, in spite of every effort to include all accounts for the year in the public accounts of the year, that there were at times unsettled accounts that could not be adjusted before the Finance Minister closed the books. That will ever occur. This is an amount of something over three hundred dollars——

Mr. CLANCY. It is only one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection is that in this case questions arose between the department and this company. It would appear that some old system had existed, under which the company were paid a proportion of the postal revenue for carrying the mail. This led to a controversy, and probably made it impossible to close the account within the fiscal year. Isolated cases of this kind must always occur, but, substantially, all the expenditures for carrying on the service of the department for the fiscal year are disposed of in time to be included in the accounts of the year. I have given most explicit instructions to the accountant of the department, and have not the slightest doubt that those instructions are lived up to as far as possible.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. minister know that where there are contracts for the season of navigation, the service must be performed partly in one fiscal year and partly in another? I think I can point to several cases, showing that the case I have given is not an isolated one at all. Of course, these are somewhat exceptional, but it is out of these exceptional cases under the late administration that the hon. minister has tried to make capital. He seeks to lay down one rule for those who preceded him and another for himself. Whether there has been greater laxity in one case or the other, may be open to question, but the same state of affairs that formerly prevailed still prevail.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I desire to ask the Postmaster General if he has taken into serious consideration the application that I understand has been made to him by the H. G. & B. trolley line to carry the mails twice a day to and from Hamilton? At present they are carried by the Grand Trunk, and the people living along the line get their mail from the adjoining offices on the following day. But, if it were carried on the trolley line they would get it the same day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That application, I think, has been forwarded to the officers in Toronto for their report.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I would like to refer to the question of the salaries of rural postmasters. I think the Postmaster General might well discriminate between the class he refers to as farmers, who take the post office merely as an accommodation to their neighbours and distribute the mail matter among them, and the class of postmasters who keep the post offices in villages and small towns. As a matter of fact, these men in many cases, have no revenue except from the post office. Their remuneration, as the Postmaster General will admit—I remember he admitted it a year ago—is very small, ranging sometimes from $200 to $500 a year. Many of these provide a building for the accommodation of a post office and keep the place heated, yet receive no remuneration for doing so. There was a very general complaint a year or two ago that, owing to the reduction of the postal rate from three cents to two cents, the revenue of postmasters was reduced. I brought the subject up in parliament last session, and, if my memory serves me correctly, the Postmaster General observed that he thought the revenue would still be practically the same. I am still informed by postmasters that they suffer on account of the reduction in their revenues. I would re-echo the sentiment expressed by one or two other members here to-night that the Postmaster General might well consider the desirability of reducing the salaries allowed to postmasters in large cities, like Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, where postmasters receive from $3,000 to $5,000, and possibly more, and allow the rural postmasters some extra allowance or increased rate. I feel strongly on this matter, because I have been memorialized in this matter in many cases, and asked to press it on the attention of the Postmaster General.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The Postmaster General has expressed himself as willing to do justice wherever a case presented to him has been made out. There is in my riding a case which was supposed to have been brought up by the member representing the constituency in the last parliament, the case of Abrams Village and Cape Egmont. In that locality there are 400 or 500 voters, and of course a much larger population, and they only have a mail twice a week. These people have been asking for better mail accommodation for some time; I do not know whether the matter has been brought to the attention of the Postmaster General. There are also in this locality a number of factories along the shore, and the population is considerably augmented during the summer months. There are also a number of cheese factories, and in Abrams Village a number of stores. These people have a grievance in being deprived of a daily mail. It is only about five miles to a railway station, and there is every reason why there should not be a daily mail to that locality. The country served by these post offices is fifteen or twenty miles in extent, and I notice the revenue is nearly treble the salaries received by the postmasters. I would like to have some assurance from the Postmaster General that this matter will receive his attention.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the matter will receive careful consideration. If application has been made to the department, I am sure it is now receiving attention. Since I have been in the department there is no instance that I am aware of where such application asking for increased service has not been dealt with on its merits, looked into and disposed of favourably or otherwise. That is the invariable practice, and takes place automatically. With reference to the observations of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richarson) suggesting that the salaries of the city postmasters should be reduced so as to increase the salaries of country postmasters, I fear I should not have the support in such a step of the hon. members for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke and Mr. Osler) and Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), as well as members from other cities.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Following the example of the hon. member for East Prince P.E.I. (Mr. Lefurgey), I desire to bring to the notice of the government, the case of the dismissal of the postmaster of Strathclair in my constituency. A few days ago, I put questions on the Order paper in reference to this gentleman's dismissal, asking if he had been dismissed, and if so, on what ground, who is his successor, and upon whose recommendation was he appointed. The answers of the Postmaster General were to the effect that he had been dismissed for active political partisanship, that it was unnecessary to hold an investigation, and that his successor was a Mr. Reid, appointed upon the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior. Now, I wish to say, in the first place, that a rule was laid down in this House by the Prime Minister himself in the session of 1896, that no employee of the government would be dismissed without having first a fair trial and investigation. How far that rule has been departed from, of course we on this side of the House are very well aware. Another rule laid down by another minister was to the effect that if any member representing a riding at that time was to get up in his place in the House and declare that of his own personal knowledge he knew of certain partisan acts on the part of any official of the government, the minister would consider it sufficient evidence to call for that man's dismissal. Well, if any gentleman can get up on the other side of the House and declare that Mr. Craig, who was the former postmaster at Strathclair, was guilty of partisanship, I will admit that the Postmaster General would be justified in dismissing him. But, I venture to say, that no hon. gentleman will make such a declaration in this House. On the contrary, I can truthfully say of my own personal knowledge that Mr. Craig has not been a partisan in any sense of the term whatever, further than silently casting his vote. Now a petition has been sent in to the Postmaster General signed, as he says, by ninety-five men asking for this gentleman's reinstatement. I had a copy of that petition sent to me, and I find it contained, instead of ninety-five names, one hundred and twenty-nine, a great proportion of them being gentlemen of the Liberal persuasion. The reeve of the municipality himself an ardent Liberal, signed that petition, and as the municipality is largely peopled by members of the Liberal party, this petition received the almost unanimous support of Grit and Tory alike in that municipality. Mr. Craig has been known for many years as a most estimable gentleman, largely dependent upon the revenue he derived from that office. Even if that were not the case, there has been no reason for his dismissal. I therefore state that the gentleman who recommended the dismissal of Mr. Craig took upon himself a great responsibility. I feel confident myself that the gentleman who recommended it in the first place was the defeated candidate in that constituency, a most active partisan who held the office of homestead inspector under the Minister of the Interior, who resigned the office in order to run in the constituency, and who has been reappointed since his defeat. I may say further that I am in receipt of many letters from Liberals as well as Conservatives asking for Mr. Craig's reinstatement. Copies of some of these letters have been sent to the Postmaster General, so I am informed, and the writers state positively of their own knowledge that Mr. Craig has not been a partisan in any sense of the term. He would not allow cartoons to be hung up in his office of either political party, in any election campaign; he simply allowed notices of the meetings to be hung up on behalf of both parties. Having drawn these facts to the attention of the Postmaster General, I feel confident that he will make an investigation and that he will see that justice is done to Mr. Craig.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This item may afford me an occasion for asking a question of the Postmaster General on a subject that I have seen noticed in the papers, I refer to a statement that he is making negotiations for the purchase of the Great North-western Telegraph Company. Is there any intention on the part of the government of acquiring possession of the telegraph lines throughout the country and attaching them to the post office system ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not aware of any negotiations being on foot for the purpose of acquiring the telegraph lines.

Mr. MONK. The Postmaster General, in answer to some observations made a moment ago by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) suggesting that the salaries of city postmasters be reduced, thought that the proposition would be opposed by the city members. I have no objection to voting the salary to the postmaster in the city of Montreal, some $4,000, because I do not consider it excessive. I would like to ask, however, in this connection, the hon. Postmaster General if he has considered particularly the state of the letter carriers in that city. Every one knows that living in the city of Montreal is probably the most expensive living for men of that class to be found in any part of the Dominion. I have made representations on several occasions to the hon. Postmaster General, and I would like to know if he intends to maintain the salary of the postmaster in that city while giving no increase whatever to the letter carriers. I don't see any hon. member representing the city of Montreal here who would corroborate what I have just said in regard to the wants of that class of people, except the hon. member for St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike), and I have no doubt he will bear me out in what I say that there is urgent need in the case of these employees. I am very sorry that I cannot have corroboration from other members from that city.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no doubt that if other hon. members were in the Committee at the present time they would be able to express their views. I would say that none of them has ever asked me to reduce the salary of the postmasters or the letter carriers of that city. The maximum salaries of all these officials are where they were for many a year. I would, however, remind my hon. friend of the position of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), in reference to the reduction of the salaries of city postmen. The hon. member for Lisgar suggested that the reduction of salaries of city postmasters might lead to giving better salaries to other classes in the service, and I said that probably if he were to seek the views of certain hon. gentlemen in the House, for example the hon. members for West Toronto and Centre Toronto, he would probably find that they would not be in harmony with him in that view, therefore, I could not get unanimous support from that side of the House if I were to propose such a reduction of the salaries of postmasters.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General why I should seek the views of other members here or consult with them with reference to any policy. What business have I to seek the views of any hon. gentleman in this House ? I act within my rights as a member of this House, when I get up and state what my views are in regard to this subject. I do not know what he means or what he wants. I want to ask the hon. gentleman right here what he means ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When my hon. friend suggested that we should reduce the salary of the postmasters of Toronto and Winnipeg, I simply sought to point out to him that he would encounter the hostility of the members representing Toronto.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). It has nothing to do with me what other hon. members may do or say.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) refers to the point of increasing the salaries of letter carriers. Probably my hon. friend was absent from the Committee when I answered the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) on that point.

Mr. MONK. No, I was not ; I was speaking for the people of Montreal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then I can only give my hon. friend the same answer that I gave to the hon. member for West Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. So far as I know there has been no application made to the department, nor has there been any demand made on the part of anybody to reduce the salaries of the chief officials in the post office at Toronto. I think these officials receive very small salaries, considering the importance of the positions they hold and the importance of the work they perform. If any hon. gentleman will take the result of the transactions of the post office in Toronto he will find that it is enormous in its magnitude. What we are appealing to the hon. Postmaster General for to-night is not to reduce the salaries of the postmasters, but rather to increase the salaries of the worst paid and the hardest worked officials in the service, the letter carriers. I have not taken up more than a few minutes' time of the Committee, and I must confess that the hon. Postmaster General has not given me a very satisfactory answer to the questions I propounded to him. The answer he made was that the question of making an increase in the salary of the letter carriers was receiving his consideration. I hope that consideration will be favourable, because, from the terms of the petition which has been sent in by the letter carriers, he must see that their plight is a very serious one. They point to the fact, that, notwithstanding the determination of the hon. gentleman to make this a cheap country to live in, their experience has been, since these hon. gentlemen came into power, that the cost of living has increased substantially and that the difficulty of eking out an existence on the salaries they receive in cities and large centres of population has been very much accentuated. The hon. Postmaster General is aware that in violation of the precedent set by his predecessors in the past, in violation of what was originally laid down in the administration of the department, these letter carriers who went in at a minimum salary of $30 a month, or $360 a year, have been deprived of the statutory increase of $30 a year. Some were deprived of it for three years in succession, and these men, by the act of the hon. Postmaster General, were unwillingly compelled to contribute in that time a sum equivalent to $180, to assist the hon. Postmaster General in making both sides of the post office ledger balance. I appeal to the hon. Postmaster General to take the situation that these men find themselves in to-day into his most serious consideration, and I ask the hon. gentleman if, in the item under discussion, he has made provision sufficient to give each letter carrier who is not receiving the maximum provided for under the Act an increase of $30 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. I am very glad to have that information from the hon. gentleman. I hope, in view of the urgency of the petition that has been sent in to him, and in view of the very strong case which these men have been able to make out, the hon. Postmaster General will make provision in the supplementary estimates to give them the whole or the major part of the increase they have asked for.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if he proposes to increase the pay of the Montreal letter carriers as well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Before the item passes, I would like the hon. Postmaster General to give a reply to my question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was going to. I remember answering my hon. friend's question the other day, and I stated that the action of the department was based upon sufficient ground. If such grounds had not existed the action taken would not have been taken. I do not know that I can say anything more than that.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Has the hon. gentleman any objection to telling me what grounds there were for the action, or what evidence there was of partisanship ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Speaking from memory, I am merely giving an elaboration of that answer.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The only answer I received in the House was that this gentleman had been guilty of active political partisanship. Who were the parties who made the charges ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say whether all the details are set forth in the department, but it is very well known that some years ago the department laid it down as a rule that postmasters and other officials might choose between their positions or taking an active part in politics. because it is incompatible with the public service that officials should become active political partisans. That has special force in connection with the postal service. Postmasters occupy a delicate position in the community, and if they keep aloof from party politics, all the better for the public service.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I am afraid that is not a very clear answer to my question. We are just about as far ahead as we were before. Most assuredly when an hon. member gets up and states that to his own personal knowledge no such charge can be truthfully proven, some attention should be paid to his statement. If an hon. gentleman like the Minister of the Interior states that to his own knowledge this gentleman has been guilty of partisanship, then the hon. Postmaster General will be right, but I state that I have received petitions and letters, more particularly from Liberals than Conservatives, who have pooh-poohed the idea of that man being a political partisan. In no way whatever has the gentleman done one single thing in the nature of political partisanship except to go and cast a silent vote. Surely the Postmaster General will not drive him out of his office for that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot from memory say upon whose testimony the change took place, but I will look into the file of papers and ascertain. I do not know any reason why, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) presses for it, the name should not be given, but upon that point I would like to reserve a final answer until I look into the case. I will do so, and the hon. gentleman can bring it up upon another occasion if he desires.

Mr. CARGILL. I would like to know just upon what principle the government proceeds upon this question of dismissing officials for offensive partisanship. I presume that the rule would apply to one offensive partisan as well as to another. I bring to the attention of the Postmaster General a case in my constituency in which a prominent postmaster, a brother-in-law of my opponent, took a very prominent part in the last election. If I can establish that this prominent postmaster acted as a political partisan, I would like to know from the hon. Postmaster General, if he will dispense with the services of that gentleman. I have felt for some time that I have had a grievance against this man, and as this particular subject is now being discussed very thoroughly, I would like to know, in view of the principle laid down by the government in the early part of their regime in 1896, if the principle is applicable to partisan Reformers as well as to partisan Conservatives.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, in public life it is not considered necessary to decide more than the particular case calls for, and it is very unwise for public men to lay down propositions that appear to have no practical applicability.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh ! Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend (Mr. Cargill) will state a case, and if we think that a crime has been committed we will doubtless make the punishment fit the crime. But the hon. gentleman would not ask to have a case adjudicated hypothetically in advance. Let him make the case and it will be dealt with. I do not know that my hon. friend in fairness could ask for anything more than that.

Mr. CARGILL. Would you appoint a commission to have the matter investigated ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps the accused might confess and save all that trouble. The procedure would depend altogether upon the charge and the issue which grows up around that charge. Let my hon. friend (Mr. Cargill) present his case and justice will be done in the premises——

Mr. CARGILL. Do you wish me to give you the name, and upon receiving the name do you promise to make thorough investigation and diligent inquiry and ascertain the facts and adjudicate upon them yourself ; or in what way do you propose to proceed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are many ways in which to do complete justice. If my hon. friend (Mr. Cargill) presents his case it will be dealt with in that spirit.

Mr. CARGILL. I thought I had presented my case. I am complaining that in the election which took place on the 7th November last a very prominent man occupying the position of postmaster in the east riding of Bruce, a very wealthy merchant there, a close relative of my opponent was very anxious to secure the election of his brother-in-law, and upon that occasion he resorted to devious ways and means that I think were very questionable. If I could in any way persuade the Postmaster General to give me his aid and influence in getting at the bottom of this matter, I am quite satisfied that on hearing the evidence he would consider this postmaster an extreme political partisan, and, having ascertained that fact, the Postmaster General —consistent with the policy laid down by himself and his colleagues—would consider it his duty to dispense with the services of that postmaster.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The invariable practice has been for some person to send a communication to the department signed by himself and furnishing particulars of the acts which he charges against the postmaster. To merely say in a general way that the postmaster was anxious to have his brother-in-law elected, and that he resorted to methods to bring that about, is too vague for investigation. Let my hon. friend (Mr. Cargill) follow the general rule : send his statement that he knows these things of his own knowledge, or give his source of information and then we will take up his case and deal with it in some way.

Mr. CARGILL. I do not know why my verbal statement should be any more vague than what my written statement would be. I assert here as a matter of fact that the postmaster to whom I refer had hundreds of dollars put up on the result in a particular polling division. He made it his business to get these bets. He went around that polling division night and day. The amount of money which he had bet on the result of the election in that polling division would when won have enabled him to have paid $5 to $10 for every vote in that polling division and then be money in pocket. The result was that in that particular polling division which had been in the habit of giving me a majority of from 80 to 120, it gave a majority of 10 against me. These are not vague statements. I could not make them any more explicit if I wrote them, and I am prepared to prove them.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to bring a case to the attention of the Postmaster General, and I think that when he knows of it he will certainly take action. I refer to the postmaster at Athens, whose name I think is McNaughton. Mr. Thomas Birney was dismissed from that post office on the ground that he was an offensive partisan, but the only thing against him was that he had voted for myself and for the late Mr. Wood in Brockville. This Mr. McNaughton came to Gananoque the day of nomination and was on the platform and was very offensive in his language. I had a meeting appointed to take place in Athens a few days after nomination and a letter was addressed to me at the post office at Athens. The postmaster, evidently thinking it contained some political matter, gave it to another person living in the same village by the name of Taylor, had it opened and handed back to him open, so that he could read the contents and did read them. He sealed it up and handed it back to me. At the meeting at night I made some reference to the dismissal of Mr. Birney, the previous postmaster. After the meeting McNaughton came to the hotel and abused me for referring to him on the platform. We had some words. The next day he met me on the street and challenged me to go into a yard to fight him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Did you accept ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, I did accept.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What was the result ?

Mr. TAYLOR. He slunk away. If anything could be more offensive than the conduct of that postmaster, I ask hon. members to name it. I demand of the Postmaster General that he hold an inquiry into the conduct of Mr. McNaughton, and I would name as witnesses, Mr. Ross, the late postmaster, Thos. Birney, Samuel Bodie, and others I could name, who heard the offensive remarks made both in the hotel and on the public street, in the village of Athens.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has made one serious charge against the postmaster—a charge that deserves investigation ; that is, that he delivered to another person, a letter addressed to and intended for the hon. gentleman. That, of course, is an unpardonable offence, whether committed by this postmaster or by any other. I would say to the hon. gentleman, and to others, that it would be formally inadvisable to conduct investigations as the result of speeches made here, though, of course, they are entitled to weight ; but as a matter of procedure, it would be much more convenient to have a written statement in the department, which would be a record in the department, of the matter complained of. I do not make that suggestion because I take exception to what my hon. friend has said, or because I belittle his statement in any way ; but rather that we should not depart from a methodical, businesslike way of dealing with such matters. If my hon. friend will make a statement of these matters in writing over his signature, and send it to the department, they will be investigated under oath. With regard to tampering with letters, or delivering letters to the wrong parties, whether accidentally or otherwise, if he says that a letter intended for him was delivered to some one else, that demands an investigation, and the onus will be upon the postmaster to explain his act. As to whether it is an offence for an officer to use improper language towards a candidate, that would depend upon circumstances.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps there was provocation ; perhaps it was not in the discharge of his duties in any way that this dispute arose ; my hon. friend may have provoked it on the street ; and so on. But, at the same time, if he desires that charge investigated, and will include it in his list, it will also receive investigation.

Mr. TAYLOR. In place of writing what I have said, I will clip it out of 'Hansard' and sign my name to it, and send it to the hon. gentleman ; and I will make the further charge that he drove all through the riding with the candidate and canvassed votes.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. Postmaster General contend that the most serious way of making a charge is not by a man on the floor of this House ? Is that not sufficient ? Must an hon. member who makes a charge on the floor of the House, afterwards go to the office of the Postmaster General, and make it in writing, over his signature ? I think the most clear and explicit way of making a charge is to make it here ; and when that is done, we have a right to expect it to be investigated, without any further proceeding.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Would the hon. Postmaster General mind saying whether he regards going on a public platform and making a speech in favour of a party candidate, an evidence of political partisanship, sufficient to warrant the dismissal of a postmaster ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to discuss hypothetical cases. If the hon. gentleman has a case of that nature, it will be investigated and dealt with according to the general rule. I am not going to lay down any rule as to what will be the conclusion in any alleged state of affairs. Political partisanship of an officer is contrary to our views.

Mr. CLANCY. Political partisanship, according to the hon. gentleman's views, is confined to his political opponents. The hon. gentleman knows that there could not be a greater farce entered into than to ask hon. members of this House to make charges and file them in his department. He knows perfectly well that charges of the most indifferent kind are constantly trumped up, and statements made which amount almost to perjury ; and the hon. gentleman, without sufficient investigation, satisfies himself with telling the incumbent of the office that his services are no longer required. That is followed up by a question in this House, and what is the invariable answer of the hon. gentleman ? Sometimes the charge of political partisanship has been made by a member or by a defeated candidate ; but when that answer is not given, the hon. gentleman states that he takes the responsibility himself. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if it has not been the rule that when charges of political partisanship have been made against Conservative office-holders, ninety per cent of them have been dismissed without any inquiry. I challenge him to say whether that is not invariably the case. I believe the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is reputed to be somewhat more fair in that respect. I remember hearing the hon. gentleman state a case of what he called political partisanship ; I believe it commenced during the former parliament. It was a case of an official speaking on a public platform in a harsh and ungentlemanly manner of himself and his leader. I believe that is the kind of case that ought to be punished. It is precisely such a case as the one mentioned to-night by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) ; and yet, the hon. Postmaster General is so hazy over it, that he cannot tell what should be done. He says : 'Perhaps you provoked him ; tell us all the circumstances.' I say that is not a fair way of dealing with both sides of the House. If the hon. gentleman wants to show even the gloss of fairness, he will lay down the same rule for both sides. I believe political partisanship is a great evil ; and if a person holding an office under the Crown, whether he be a Liberal or a Conservative, should make himself offensive politically, he should receive such punishment as may be meted out to him by those in authority. I do not think the Postmaster General has reflected credit upon himself by the way he has answered the question.

Mr. MONK. I think the question of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) is worthy of an answer. The question has arisen more than once in the province of Quebec, whether a postmaster who follows a candidate, who attends a political meeting, and there delivers a speech in favour of the candidate, is guilty of offensive partisanship. We ask the head of the department employing a number of postmasters, and he will not tell us. I think the right hon. Prime Minister might be appealed to to give us his opinion on that subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I may tell the Postmaster General that the case I had in view was not a hypothetical one. I had not made up my mind whether I would make any charge or not. I wanted to know what the position would likely be before I moved.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought it was somewhat refreshing to hear the statement of the hon. Postmaster General to-night, especially in view of the fact that in previous sessions he frequently told us that if any hon. gentleman in this House stated upon his word and honour that a party holding such an office had been a political partisan, he would deem it his duty to dismiss him. That was the rule he applied to his opponents, it is a poor rule which will not work both ways, but he is not willing to apply that rule now with regard to his own friends.

Mr. McEWEN. Judging by the charges our friends opposite are making against the Postmaster General, he certainly must have meted out very different treatment where they live to what he has done in our district. In our district, when the mail contracts were renewed in 1896, after the present government came into power, one of the contracts was re-let to a Conservative. I believe he was the lowest tenderer and entitled to it, but none the less he was a Conservative and got it. That was not all. There was another mail contract to be let a little later on, which an old gentleman, a Reformer, had had for many years, and would you believe it that contract was let to a Conservative, and the poor old Reformer was left out in the cold. That is the way the Postmaster General has treated our people, and it does seem to me very curious that he should have acted so differently elsewhere.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me the debate has drifted from the subject which gave rise to this discussion in the first place, that is the deficit. If we are going to settle that question, we had better drop minor matters, as the hour is getting late, and get back to the main subject, so that hon. members may understand for once and all whether there was a deficit at the end of 1896, or not. I would suggest to the hon. the Postmaster General that the time has now arrived when a change should be made in the system of keeping accounts in his department. I fail to see what there is to be gained by continuing from year to year two separate accounts, one for the Yukon district and another for the Dominion of Canada. I think that four or five years of keeping the two separate accounts is quite sufficient, and that from the beginning of next year all the accounts should be kept under the one head, and the question as to what is the exact deficit would no longer be disputed, but be very readily understood.

It may be said that that would not be fair for the purposes of comparison, but the hon. gentleman must remember that some of his colleagues have changed their methods of book-keeping, notably the Minister of Railways and Canals. We find now that many items are charged by that hon. gentleman to capital account which were not so charged by the previous government, and consequently his report is of very little use for the purpose of comparison. I might take also the Trade and Navigation Returns, in which the imports and exports are entered on a different basis, and it is difficult indeed to make comparisons unless we eliminate those items concerning which the system has been changed.

I think the hon. the Postmaster General would increase the value of his report very much, and make it much clearer if he would just make one account of the whole matter and not have two separate accounts. With reference to the deficit, which he claims existed at the end of 1896, I fail to see, after having looked into this matter very carefully, and after having listened carefully to everything said, why the Postmaster General should persist in claiming there was a deficit. What took place is simply this. At the end of 1895-6, on the 30th June, 1896, payment of a large number of contracts matured. The time for paying these contracts arrived on the night of the 30th June, 1896, but they could not possibly be paid at one o'clock in the morning of the 1st July, 1897. Consequently there was a large sum of money unpaid by the Post Office Department on the morning of the 1st July. That practice had been carried on for years, and I believe dates as far back as the time when Sir Oliver Mowat was Postmaster General of Canada. These contracts were paid after the 1st July, out of the appropriation for the following year. They were not a deficit, but simply items which had matured and were unpaid, but were no evidence that the revenue of the Post Office Department was not equal to the expenditure. It seems to me that the Postmaster General has simply been playing with the House and the country for the last three or four years, treating us as so many novices or children, and expecting us to believe that an account which only matured on the night of the 30th June, and was not settled at one o'clock in the morning of the 1st July, was a deficit. To my mind that is so plain that it would be foolish to waste my further time discussing it.

Mail service $2,227,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is the explanation of this increase of $20,000 compared with last year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is merely an approximate estimate. As the country grows, the service is constantly increasing, and doubtless this estimate will not be sufficient. We have had hon. gentlemen to-night pressing the government to increase the mail service. This is an increase of $20,000. Probably $10,000 will be set apart for land service, stages, &c., and $10,000 for railway service. There are railways approaching completion, and applications are coming in for mail service. With a growing service, an increased vote is necessary.

Post Office—Outside Service—Miscellaneous expenditure $235,000

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. Postmaster General give us some detailed information on this item ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The increases include commission to postmasters for savings bank business, $2,000; manufacture of postage stamps, postal cards, envelopes, &c., $8,000; a total of $10,000. From this must be deducted $809.33, because the vote for 1900-1 for certain miscellaneous post office charges and equipment was more than was required. This leaves a net estimated increase of $9,190.67.

Services in the Yukon Territory—Post office $125,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The following figures will give the state of the Yukon service last year :

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 31) respecting the Orford Mountain Railway Company.—(Mr. Parmelee.)

MARKING AND INSPECTION OF FRUIT PACKAGES.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 32) to provide for the marking and inspection of packages containing fruit for sale.

Mr. HENDERSON. In view of the importance of this Bill, I think we should have some explanations of its nature at this stage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that this Bill, to a large extent, follows the lines of the Bill which was introduced into this House last session. It is introduced on the present occasion in consequence of the complaints that have been made in regard to the contents of closed packages of fruit put upon the markets of Canada and of Great Britain by Canadian fruit dealers. Difficulties have arisen to such an extent as in some measure to have discredited Canadian fruit in the markets of the world, as well as in our home market. Serious complaints have been made by the purchasers of Canadian fruits. The Bill which was introduced last session aimed at establishing grades of fruit, and at placing marks upon the packages that would indicate the quality of the fruit contained therein. This Bill provides a machinery by which packages so marked would be subject to inspection, and for penalties which would be a deterrent to those who are engaged in the fruit packing business in case they wished to pack fruit in a way contrary to the marks placed upon the package. The Bill has been somewhat modified since last session, inasmuch as it is proposed to apply it to the domestic as well as the export trade. It also provides in one section to apply to all packages of fruit which are closed, in this respect not being limited to apples and pears, as was the Bill of last session. These changes have been introduced because of representations made from various sources in the country, especially from the fruit shippers and fruit growers' associations of the various provinces, the Bill being modelled to a large extent upon suggestions made by these interests. An attempt is made in the Bill to harmonize the somewhat divergent views of the different interests, while at the same time interfering as little as possible with the trade so far as consistent with safeguarding the public interests. I do not care to go into the details of the Bill just now, that I think could be better done in committee; therefore, I leave it with this short explanation, which I think will be sufficient to justify the introduction of a measure of this kind.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is the inspection to be made?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no provision stating where the inspection is to be made. The Bill provides for the appointment of inspectors when that is thought necessary, and any fruit which is marked under the provisions of this Bill will be subject to inspection wherever it may be exposed for sale, or in the warehouses of people who are engaged in the trade.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose there will be no difficulty in getting an extra number of copies of this Bill to distribute among those interested?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly, just as soon as the Bill is printed, copies will be available for everybody.

Mr. HENDERSON. Could the hon. minister say whether this inspection is to be compulsory?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The inspection is not compulsory, but it is permissible; that is to say, that every closed package of fruit marked under the provisions of this Act, will be subject to this inspection.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

VICTORIA DAY.

Mr. EDWARD H. HORSEY (North Grey) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 33) respecting Victoria Day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). Explain.

Mr. HORSEY. I may say that the purport and object of this Bill is to make the 24th day of May a permanent public holiday in Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask in connection with this Bill, whether the King's birthday will be a public holiday.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is carried.

Mr. MACLEAN. I will get another chance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The statute provides for that.

QUESTIONS.

I.C.R.—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked:

Is it the intention of the hon. Minister of Railways to appoint, this year, one or more French Canadian commissioners to inquire into cases of injury or damage to property of residents on the line of the Intercolonial Railway between Montreal and Campbellton?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The department has not found it necessary, up to the present time, to make the appointment of commissioners of the character mentioned.

I.C.R.—STATION AT TROIS PISTOLES.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked:

1. Is the government aware that the station house and the old restaurant at Trois Pistoles, on the Intercolonial Railway, were recently destroyed by a fire, which caused the loss of two lives, that of Madame Morin and that of the agent, M. Hudon?

2. Is it the intention of the Department of Railways to build a new station so planned that the dwelling of the agent and his family may be apart from the station proper, instead of being located in the upper story, so as to avoid the possibility of the recurrence of any such deplorable catastrophe as that which has occurred at Trois Pistoles?

3. If so, when will the work begin?

4. Is the work to be done under contract or by day labour?

5. What amount of money does the minister intend to spend for the erection of a station house and dependencies worthy of Trois Pistoles as a watering place and of the travelling public using it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair):

1. Yes.

2. The whole matter is under consideration.

3. The answer to this question will be involved in the answer to No. 2.

4. When the buildings are to be erected they will be erected by tender and under contract.

5. I cannot answer the fifth question.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PAY OF THE MEN OF 'C' BATTERY.

Mr. CLARKE asked:

1. Did any officer or officers of the Canadian Artillery serving in South Africa, who did not take part with Colonel Plummer's column in the operations in Rhodesia, make application to the Rhodesian government, or to any person or authority, for a portion or share of the sum of money given by the Rhodesian government to the men of 'C' Battery, Canadian Artillery?

2. If so, was such application refused, and on what ground or for what reason?
3. What officer or officers, if any, made such application?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden):
1. No.
2. No.
3. None.

EXHAUST FANS ON ATLANTIC STEAMERS.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth) asked:

1. What are the names of the Atlantic steamers on which exhaust fans were placed, and for the placing of which the government paid $100 each?
2. Was any effort made last autumn to ascertain if these fans or any of them were continuously in operation during the voyage across the Atlantic?
3. Will the government endeavour to procure the installation of exhaust fans in all steamers carrying apples across the Atlantic from Canadian ports?
4. What steamers plying between Canadian ports and the West Indies are fitted with cold storage chambers, the owners of which receive subventions from the government?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher):
1. The government has not yet paid any bonus for the placing of exhaust fans on steamships, although the offer of a bonus of one hundred dollars towards the initial expense of fitting up each approved steamship was made in July, 1900. Exhaust fans were placed on the following steamships:
Allan Line: Pomeranian, Brazilian, Buenos Ayrean, Ontarian, Sarmatian.
Thomson Line: Devona, Kildona, Fremona, Hurona, Iona, Escalona, Jacona, Bellona.
Donaldson Line: Alcides, Amarynthia, Concordia, Kastalia, Lakonia, Marina, Salacia, Tritonia.
2. The owners of the steamships reported that the fans were used during the voyages across the Atlantic.
3. The government has been in communication with the owners of steamships, and it is expected that exhaust fans will be provided in all of the steamships for carrying apples across the Atlantic from Canadian ports, during the season of 1901.
4. The owners of the steamship Beta, Messrs. Pickford, Black & Co., Halifax, have received a subvention from the government for providing cold storage between a Canadian port and the West Indies.

ARMOURY AT ST. THOMAS.

1. How many tendered for the contract to build the St. Thomas Armoury?
2. What was the name of each tenderer and the amount of his tender?
3. At what price was the contract let and to whom?
4. Did the department give the contract to the lowest tenderer? If not, why?

2. What amount of rent was due and unpaid by the previous government up to the 30th June, 1896, for the use of said club rooms?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden):
1. The government has paid each year, since 1896, $20 per month for use of a building for 25th Regiment, this building containing store room, band room and officers' quarters.
2. Nine months' rent was due to 30th June, 1896, when present government came into power.

Mr. INGRAM asked:

1. What was the total expenditure by this government on the harbour of Port Burwell since 30th June, 1896, up to 31st December, 1901?
2. What is the amount expended yearly since 30th June, 1896?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte):
1. $98,664.65.
2. 1896-7.....
1897-8.....
1898-9..... $24,864.88

PORT BRUCE HARBOUR.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. Were any applications made to the Department of Public Works since 30th June, 1900, for the improvement of the harbour at Port Bruce? If so, by whom?

2. Is it the intention of the government to improve the harbour at Port Bruce?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte) :

1. No.

2. When application is made, the question will receive due consideration.

ENFORCEMENT OF LAW RESPECTING BINDER TWINE.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin) asked :

Is it the intention of the government to instruct the inspector of weights and measures, or some other competent person, to enforce the law relating to binder twine, which reads as follows :—Section 3, chapter 37, 63-64 Victoria. 'Upon or attached to every ball of binder twine offered for sale there shall be a stamp with the name of the manufacturer or importer, stating the number of feet of twine per pound in each ball.'

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) :

A copy of the Act, Chap. 37, of 63-64 Victoria, was sent to every inspector of weights and measures. A circular directing their attention to its provisions will be sent before the season for distribution of binder twine arrives.

I.C.R. ROUND-HOUSE AT CAMPBELLTON.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

1. What was the cost of repairing or rebuilding the roundhouse on the Intercolonial Railway at Campbellton, N.B.?

2. What is the present condition of the building?

3. After it was repaired or rebuilt, did it leak, and if so, what was the cause of the leaking, has the defect been repaired, and at what cost?

4. Who was the contractor that did the repairing or rebuilding, and was the contract let by tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. The cost of re-modelling and enlarging the engine house at Campbellton, was $21,975.

2. The work has been carried on continuously since the contract was signed, and is now nearing completion.

3. There has been no leak in the building. The plans and specification and contract call for a new roof on the portion of the building to be extended, the existing roof was considered by the Railway Department in good condition. The contract plans and specification call for the repairing and making good of any portion of the existing roof damaged by the carrying on of the new work. The contractor guarantees the new roof for ten years after completion.

4. Contract was let by tender to Messrs. Rhodes, Curry & Co., Amherst, whose tender was the lowest, and afterwards transferred by them to Geo. McArthur, St. John, at the same price.

QUANTITY OF FREIGHT THROUGH CANALS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

The total quantity of freight passed through the several divisions of the canals in Canada during the season of 1900, is as follows :

TARIFF ACT—BRITISH PREFERENTIAL CLAUSE.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to so amend the Tariff Act as to debar from the advantage of the British preferential clause articles partly manufactured in Germany, or manufactured from raw material grown or produced in Germany?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In answer to the question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) I beg to say: No. Such provision would practically destroy the British perference inasmuch as British manufactures are largely produced from foreign raw materials, but if it can be shown that the intention of the British preferential tariff is evaded, we shall be glad to consider the facts when presented to us.

DISMISSAL OF MR. H. D. HENDERSON.

Mr. BROCK asked :

1. Has Mr. H. D. Henderson, who for twenty-five years was postmaster of Whitechurch, been dismissed?

2. Were charges made against him? If so, by whom?

3. At whose request was he dismissed, and on what grounds?

4. Was any inquiry made as to the wishes of those using the office, and what was the result?

5. Has a successor been appointed? If so, on whose recommendation was he appointed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

Mr. H. D. Henderson, postmaster at Whitechurch, was removed from office because, during the last Dominion election, he took an active political part in the elections of West Bruce, West Huron and East Huron. During the campaign, one of the Liberal candidates, the present member for West Bruce, warned him of the consequences of such conduct, and notwithstanding which he still persisted in it, taking the view that he had as much right to appear on the public platform, as had the candidate himself. The truth of the charges appeared fully established, and no further investigation was necessary; accordingly, the postmaster was removed from his position. Mr. Alexander Beaton, was appointed in his place on the recommendation of Mr. Tolmie, M.P.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER FOR ADDINGTON.

Mr. BELL (Addington) asked :

Has a census commissioner been appointed for the electoral district of Addington? If so, who has been appointed and upon whose recommendation?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). No census commissioner has yet been appointed for the electoral district of Addington. Perhaps, it is as well for me to add, that none of the electoral division census commissioners have yet been appointed.

PAYMENT TO MR. RALPH JONES.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

Referring to item No. 30 in the supplementary estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1900, for payment to Mr. Ralph Jones of $847.50—

1. Has this item been paid? If so, when?

2. Has a cheque been given to Mr. Jones or his attorney or agent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair):

1. Yes, item No. 30, in supplementary estimates for year ending 30th June, 1900, for payment to Mr. Ralph Jones, of $847.50, has been paid. It was paid on the 29th of January, 1901.

2. The check was given to his attorney, Mr. Sinclair.

VISIT OF THE DUKE OF CORNWALL AND YORK.

Mr. NORTHRUP—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Has the government any information of the proposed visit of His Royal Highness the Duke of Cornwall and York and the date thereof ? If so, have any arrangements been made for his reception?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have stated to the House on previous occasions, that there is correspondence on the subject now going on between the government and the Imperial authorities. It is still confidential, and the contents of it cannot be given to the House. No definite arrangements have yet been made for the visit of Their Royal Highnesses.

REPORT PRESENTED.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to place on the Table of the House, the report of the North-west Mounted Police. This is the report only so far as the territories are concerned, and the Yukon is not included.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—NEW GOVERNMENT VESSELS.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) moved for :

Copies of all specifications and plans issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries when calling for tenders for the construction of two government vessels in British Columbia. Also copies of all tenders received for construction of same, together with a statement showing the amount of the deposits made by the several tenderers, &c., names of the successful tenderers, and all correspondence and papers connected with the same.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). There can be no objection to these papers being brought down at the proper time, but, I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the order cannot pass now. The contract has not yet been entered into; not yet signed. The department notified the tenderer that his tender had been accepted, and the contract is being prepared, but it is not yet signed. One of the tenderers withdrew.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Which was that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In Victoria. Not a week ago I received notice that they had withdrawn from their tender.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that the lowest tenderer ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. It would not be advisable, nor in the public interest, that I should bring down either the tender or the contract until the parties have signed the contract. There is no possible objection to these papers being brought down at the proper time, but just now I cannot do it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) can move later on.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The two tenders were accepted by the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The lowest tenders were accepted.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. And, I suppose the deposits were put up by the tenderers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were no deposits.

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall this motion pass ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hon. gentlemen see that I cannot allow the motion to be carried now.

Mr. MONK. The minister says the tender was accepted, and the contract is only a matter of detail.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not by any means a matter of detail. So far from being a matter of detail, one of the parties whose tender had been accepted has already withdrawn. If I bring down the papers, and the whole world is informed who the tenderers were, and the amounts before the contracts are signed, possibly some of them might withdraw. This information is never given to the public, until the contract is signed.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. It is not the intention of the minister to call for fresh tenders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know what will be my intention if they all withdraw. Unless the House compels me to, I am not going to make public the tenders, and amounts until the parties have accepted and signed the contract. I am quite sure that has been the practice heretofore.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the tenderers know all about these matters. I have no doubt that after they put their tenders in, they have communicated to each other, as I am told they usually do, what their tenders are. Now, Sir, a job may be on foot, and if the people know the facts of the case a job can be prevented from being carried out. I am not speaking of a job implicating the minister, but a job in which the tenderers drop out one after another in order to get a higher price for the building of the ship. There is too much secrecy. My opinion with regard to public tenders is that the whole public should know all about them right from the start. What is the object of secrecy ? The government will not tell us what binder twine costs ; they will not tell us anything. What is the object of hiding the facts ? The true way is to give the utmost publicity to all these matters. Let everything be done in the open, and then everybody will know exactly how the matter stands, and we shall have lower tenders, less jobbery, and no deals. The minister tells us that he will not give the information now, because if he does he is afraid it will assist in the carrying out of these deals against the government. But the fact that the people have full information in regard to these matters will prevent deals, if anything can be done in that direction. Therefore, we are entitled to have this motion passed, and to have the minister give full information to parliament. The plan that has been pursued in the past must stop—that of the government, on their own sweet will, without giving sufficient reasons, saying, We cannot bring down the papers about this or that. Parliament is entitled to receive full information on all these matters, and should not be satisfied without having the fullest information in the papers asked for by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As I understand it, the only thing that, in the opinion of the hon. minister, should be kept secret is the prices of the various competitors, in the event of his asking for further tenders. I would not wish to urge the government to divulge a matter of business which it would be in the public interest to keep private. Still, when that feature is considered, what is there in it ? These tenderers, whoever they may be, have that information. Each one can give the amount of his tender to another ; they can impart that information to any one they please ; the minister cannot prevent them. That is the only reason advanced for withholding the papers. It seems to me, in listening to the discussion, that the interests of the department would be served by the amounts of these tenders being known, should the department have to resort to fresh tenders. There has been no argument at all to support the hon. minister in his determination to keep these papers back. As I understand it, he has these gentlemen in his hands, if they are responsible parties. One safeguard, however, seems to have been overlooked altogether in order to secure bona fide tenderers ; that is, the usual deposit has not been required. A very large amount of money is involved in the construction of these boats, and the ordinary course followed in all the departments is to require a deposit with each tender. That is done for the very purpose of preventing the withdrawing of tenders. The hon. gentleman says that one of the tenders which has been accepted has been withdrawn. But the tenderer cannot withdraw under the law, and, if he is responsible, it seems to me that it would be the duty of the department to hold him to his contract. The House being in session, and there being now an actual contract, it seems to me, unless some other reason is given, that the minister is unduly cautious in withholding the information asked for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman knows that there has never been a case in the history of the government when tenders have been communicated to the House before the contract has been entered into. There are six or eight of these tenderers, and if I published the names the lower one would withdraw altogether. In this case the lowest tender has been accepted, the contract has been made out, it will be executed in a short time, and the moment it is executed the information will be given to my hon. friend. There is no disposition to withhold the information ; but I could not undertake to advise the House to make a new departure and publish the tenders which have been received before the contract is entered into. It is only a question of time, and if the hon. gentleman renews his motion at the proper time, I will tell him when the contract is entered into, and bring down the information.

Mr. COCHRANE. Has the hon. gentleman not introduced a new departure by calling for tenders without a deposit ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will explain that when the papers are brought down.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I feel disposed to support the position taken by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). I think the only papers to be withheld from parliament are papers which are withheld by ministers of the Crown for grave reasons of state. Papers relating to anything done by the departments when parliament is sitting, the House has a right to see.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, no.

Mr. MONK. I differ from the hon. gentleman. What difference does it make that certain contractors have sent in tenders, and have failed to comply with those tenders ? The House of Commons has a right to see these papers—in fact, all documents having reference to public business except documents which the Crown sees fit to withhold for grave reasons of state. No doubt the minister will have to call for new tenders even if the names of the tenderers are divulged ; but the tenderers who will tender afterwards will all do so under the same conditions, and it is possible that they will tender at lower figures than before. But I lay my claim on the broad principle that except documents which are withheld by the Crown for grave reasons of state we have a right to see all documents.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The question involved is one of principle, applying not to this particular department alone, but to all departments which invite public tenders. I have to dissent entirely from the principle laid down by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) as to the right of parliament to control these documents in that broad and unqualified way that he states. He admits that ministers may withhold documents for reasons of state. If we accept that definition, the minister of this department says that for reasons of state he does not deem it proper to bring these papers down. No one disputes the authority of parliament; but the public business could not be carried on in the departments if the principle which the hon. gentleman has laid down were adopted. Take the Department of Railways, the Department of Public Works, or the Post Office Department, which make many contracts ; if, the moment a number of tenders were received, the list were produced in the House of Commons, there would be an end to all competition. It is said that in this particular case the tenderers themselves have probably a knowledge of one another's tenders. That is only a matter of guess work ; they may or may not. But it is positive that if we bring the papers down, every one of them will have that information, and they will have an invitation to put their heads together and make a combination against the public interest. Those who are in the habit of inviting tenders know perfectly well that when you have a list of tenders before you, it is absolutely necessary, in the public interest, to treat that list as confidential until the contract has been signed, sealed and delivered. The adoption of any policy at variance with that would not be in the public interest, and no self-respecting government should allow such a policy to be adopted.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). If I remember rightly, in nearly every state of the union one of the conditions in the letting of contracts for public works is that the tenders shall be opened in public, and this condition is insisted on in the cities and municipalities in nearly every part of America. It is looked upon as one of the guarantees also of proper administration to the public. It is true that a different principle is adopted by the present government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And the previous government and all governments in Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but that does not make the principle laid down by the Minister of Finance the correct one. The time must arrive when, in order to assure the parties tendering that they shall have fair-play and to protect the interests of the public, a day will be fixed in every case for the reception and opening of tenders, and all tenders will be opened in public. That is the proper practice, and the sooner we adopt it the better.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How long has the hon. gentleman been of that opinion ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I never opened a tender in my life.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not the question. We do not open them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The tenders in my department were always opened by the officers and a report given to me by them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So they are now.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I never opened a tender, and I defy the hon. gentleman to state that I have done so. No tender for anything in my department was ever opened by me nor was I present at the opening.

Everything done was done in public and above board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me ? I did not ask him whether he had ever opened the tenders, but I did ask him to tell this House how long he has entertained the opinion he has now expressed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am coming to that particular question. I freely admit that the principle I advocate now, I did not practise when I was administering the affairs of the country, and I admit that the present government is simply following up the practice followed by us. But there is this difference to be taken into account. There is a stranger at present ruling on the throne of the Stuart, and therefore it is perhaps time now that a system, which might not have been used when we were in power, should now be changed and a different principle adopted. But I was simply answering the statement of the Minister of Finance, that all governments would have to follow the policy adopted by this one and that to adopt any other would put an end almost to constitutional government. I wanted simply to point out that in nearly every country in the world—I do not know about Great Britain, but in all the states of the union—the contractor, before he tenders, insists that the day of opening of tenders should be published and that he should be given the opportunity of being present when the tenders are opened. I think perhaps that a principle which might have been worked honestly in our time, when there was a fair and honest administration in office, would be opened to suspicion at present and another should be adopted.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I hope that the doctrine is not being laid down now by the Liberal party that a new and progressive principle should not be adopted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A pernicious principle.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is a pernicious principle which the hon. gentleman is advocating, because it leads to log rolling. It is when the tenders are not made public that the people get the worst of it.

The principle of publishing the tenders is adopted, the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says, in all municipal corporations. That system prevents log rolling, but if you keep the tenders dark, log rolling is bound to continue.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me that a deposit should have been insisted on as a guarantee that the party tendering is prepared to go on with the work, if his tender be accepted. Had that been done in this case, the successful tenderer would have been bound to carry out the contract. The hon. minister said that the lowest tenderers had dropped out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were two distinct tenders one for a small ship and the other for a large one. The lowest tenderer for the small ship dropped out. I cannot tell you why he dropped out, but the lowest tenderer for the large ship accepted the contract and it is about to be signed. When it is signed I will bring it down.

Mr. SPROULE. It does not make any difference whether the tender was for a small ship or a large one. Had the party tendering been compelled to put up a deposit, he would not now back out. There is a strong suspicion that he may have consulted with others and have dropped out for reasons.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The question is not, as suggested by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) whether the system is right or wrong or susceptible of improvement. The question is whether or not those papers should be laid on the Table at this moment. No doubt all transactions of the government have to be communicated to parliament to whom the government is responsible, but my hon. friend knows very well, and so does my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that it is against all rules of constitutional government to bring down any papers before the transaction they relate to is completed. The reasons are obvious. There are private interests which might be placed in jeopardy if communicated to the public before hand, and the position taken by my hon. friend on my right is a proper one, namely, that as soon as the transaction is completed the papers will be brought down. But it stands to reason that, at this moment, when the government is engaged in a private transaction with private parties, the interest of those parties may be put in jeopardy if communicated to the public. The public interest is not the only thing to be considered ; the private interest involved must be considered also. Private parties having transactions with the government may fairly say : We do not want our business to go to the country at large ; we do not want the nation to be taken into our confidence. But, when the business is settled, the matter will be ready for the public. This is the rule which has been invariably followed in this House. I could cite instances without number in which that rule has been strictly adhered to.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The reason I put this motion on the paper is that there is a very strong suspicion in British Columbia that the letting of these contracts has not been straight and square. This feeling exists, not only amongst the men in the firms that tendered, but amongst others who have been watching what has been going on. I was told by two, aye, by three, of the tenderers that the specifications for these two ships were the most extraordinary they had ever had put into their hands. For one thing, I believe, though tenders were called for the steamers, yet no specification for engines was included. Then, again, no deposit was asked on any of the tenders, and that, in itself, was a very suspicious circumstance, according to our idea. These contracts must have involved about $100,000 for the two vessels——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Very nearly. One was for about $75,000, and the other about $15,000. Anyhow, we know how these things go. There would be extras probably, if a friend of the government got the contract.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It happened that the successful tenderer was a very strong Conservative.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. And what do we find now? That the successful tenderer has been let out scot free—there was no deposit, and he has been allowed to resign; and, no doubt, we shall see a friend of the government get the contract——

Mr. SPROULE. At a higher price.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Yes, at a higher price. That is the worst feature of it—that the lowest tenderer, owing to the neglect of the department in not asking for a deposit, is allowed to throw up the contract, and the country will have to pay more for the steamer than if the business had been properly carried out. The hon. minister said he was willing to bring down the papers as soon as the contract was signed. He will have to call for new tenders, or give the contract to another, and two contracts will have to be signed—and we do not know how long it will be before this is done. As for the argument that, in former times, papers were not brought down under the circumstance now existing, I will read what Bourinot says :

> Whilst members have every facility afforded them to obtain all the information they require on matters of public concern, occasions may arise when the government will feel constrained to refuse certain papers on the ground that their production would be inconvenient or injurious to the public interest. A high authority writes on this point : 'Considerations of public policy, and a due regard to the interests of the state, occasionally demand that information sought for by members of the legislature should be withheld, at the discretion and upon the general responsibility of the ministers. This principle is systematically recognized in all parliamentary transactions ; were it otherwise it would be impossible to carry on the government with safety and honour.' Consequently, there are frequent cases in which the ministers refuse information, especially at some delicate stage of an investigation or negotiation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. It seems to amuse hon. gentlemen opposite, that I should have a little assistance from a legal friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). Bourinot says further :

> Mr. Mackenzie expressed his opinion that everything that referred to the giving out of contracts of a technical and public nature, everything except the moral and personal reasons why any persons had been passed over, should be laid before the House.

Now, I contend that there is no delicate situation in this case. There is no reason that I can see why the papers should not be brought down.

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. minister should give a reason why they asked for tenders without making a deposit necessary. That has been the principle heretofore, and it ought to be the principle now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have stated that I would explain when the papers were brought down.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. minister please state how he knows that the successful tenderer was a Conservative ?

Motion negatived.

CANADA AND ITALY—IMPROVEMENT OF TRADE RELATIONS.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for :

> Copies of all correspondence between the Italian consul for Canada and the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, respecting proposed improvement of the trade relations between Canada and Italy, and of all correspondence leading up to the placing of Canadian goods by Italy upon its general tariff.

He said: I believe that this correspondence, when it is brought down, will go a great way to show what is the attitude taken by the different countries of Europe with regard to ourselves since the preferential tariff has been put in force. On a previous occasion I urged in this House that the adoption of that tariff would place the countries of Europe in a situation of hostility and offence toward Canada, and would contribute greatly to the diminution of our commercial relations with those countries ; while, on the other hand, the adoption of a preferential tariff without any negotiations tending to give us a really preferred position upon the British market, would not give us that advantageous position in that market which we have a fair right, I think, to look forward to. Speaking particularly in regard to Italy, I may say, for the information of hon. members, that a movement has been on foot, in the province of Quebec at any rate, and in the city of Montreal, more particularly, for many years, to improve our commercial relations with that great country. The object of those who, in years past, have laboured in that direction, has been to give us such commercial relations with Italy as would lead to a favoured interchange of goods between Italy and Canada. There are many products of ours which would find a market in Italy, and many of their products which we require. There is a great demand in Italy, and has been for years, for lumber. Though I find it impossible to get absolutely reliable statistics, because most of our business with Italy has been through French channels, and most of our shipping with Italy, been done through French ports, still there is no doubt, and statistics will show it, that we have in the past, through the ports of Bordeaux and Marseilles, carried on a commerce in lumber with Italy. We would find also in that country a very profitable market for much of the mineral wealth of this country. There is also a demand in Italy that would afford a profitable market for our Canadian pork. On the other hand, we take from Italy at the present moment, olives, olive oil, wines of different kinds, most of them coming through France, or many of them, Italian pastes, canned fish and other products of that country.

As I stated a moment ago, earnest efforts were made in the city of Montreal by men interested in that trade to establish favourable commercial relations with Italy. I might mention Mr. C. H. Cattelier, a well-known manufacturer of Montreal, an Italian, who laboured for a long time in that direction, and Mr. Cressy, advocate, and others. But we were under the disadvantage up to within a few years of having in Montreal no regular consular agent from Italy. There was a consul resident in Montreal, but he was an unpaid consul, and his situation was such that he took no part in that movement beyond a certain general interest, because it was impossible for him to deal with the government with that authority which belongs to a regular consular agent sent from a foreign government, and being to a certain extent in the diplomatic commercial service of that country. For four or five years back we have had in Canada a consul general from Italy, a gentleman thoroughly conversant with the commercial wants of that coutnry, and who, upon his arrival here, gave the subject his particular consideration, and applied himself in a special manner to the negotiation of commercial arrangements between Canada and that country, under the sanction, of course, of the British authorities. Now, Sir, I hold information, though not obtained from that gentleman, that in the prosecution of that object he had several interviews with the members of this government, and I believe correspondence with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and with the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) as well. I am under the impression, though I do not feel justified in formulating any judgment until that correspondence is before us, that the correspondence will reveal the fact that the government of this country, instead of seizing this opportunity of improving our commercial relations with Italy, were deplorably remiss in giving the subject that attention which it is claimed by many it deserves. At any rate, there have been no successful negotiations, so far as I have been able to ascertain, to secure a conclusion of some arrangements which would increase our commerce with Italy, nothing whatever has been concluded, no arrangement has been arrived at. So far as I have been able to ascertain, our position in regard to that matter has been altered. We occupy now the same position that we did before under the commercial treaties that country had made with Great Britain. We were not upon what is called there the general tariff, we were upon a special tariff, according to which the duty upon such articles as we sent to Italy was far less than it is according to the general tariff. There are two tariffs in Italy; there is the special tariff which is favourable to some countries, and there is the general tariff which is far higher, and which applies to all other countries. As I understand it, we are now upon the general tariff of that country, and consequently in a more unfavourable position than we were before.

As I said a moment ago, it is impossible to have accurate data as to what our commerce with Italy is at the present time. But I have ascertained that during last year, in spite of these unfavourable circumstances, our exports to Italy amounted in value to $260,458, and our imports from that country during the past year were only $144,573 ; that is to say, there was a decrease, so far as these statistics are reliable, in our imports of $250,000. As I stated, the object of this motion is to procure this correspondence. Of course I will suspend judgment myself and ask the House to suspend judgment until we see it ; but I think it is in the interest of the House and of the country that we should know whether these negotiations are going on, and what has been the result so far.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that his motion not only calls for correspondence exchanged between the Italian consul and the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but it also calls for correspondence regarding the placing of Canada by Italy upon its general tariff. On that phase of the question there might be some correspondence of a diplomatic nature, and to procure it the hon. gentleman ought to move for an address instead of simply moving for an order of the House. I would call his attention to Bourinot upon the subject, who says that correspondence between the Dominion, British and foreign governments is moved for by an address. I do not know whether there is any correspondence with foreign governments in relation to this question, but as the motion calls for such correspondence, I think it is better to call for it by an address.

Mr. MONK. I will change the terms of the motion in the sense indicated by Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). There can be no objection, of course, to the hon. gentleman's motion for an address passing, and such correspondence as we have in our possession which is not of a confidential character, we will certainly bring down. But, I desire to mention to him that at the express request of the gentleman to whom he referred, the Italian consul, a very large portion of this correspondence was regarded as informal and strictly confidential. That, we will not be able to bring down, as the hon. gentleman will no doubt understand. With respect to the question of trade with Italy, he is right in stating that it is probable that a considerable portion of that does not come from Italian ports, but through French ports, and possibly, to some extent from those of one or two other countries, and it may be, therefore, that our trade returns do not very accurately show the actual amount of our trade with that country. That, he will notice, would apply rather more particularly to the question of importations. There has been a great drop in the importations, and I think it is not unlikely that it will be found that a considerable part of that drop arose from the very circumstances to which he has alluded. On the other hand, the hon. gentleman is, perhaps, aware that while the importations diminished our exports to Italy considerably increased. Our exports rose, I think in very nearly the same proportion, certainly as large a proportion, though perhaps not to the same amount, that our imports appear to have diminished. However, I can just say to the hon. gentleman, that we are very desirous of extending our trade and commerce with the Mediterranean nations as well as with any other countries with which we are likely to be able to open trade relations. As I had the opportunity of pointing out last session, one of the really important objects that we hoped to attain by the display of Canadian products at Paris, was the calling of the attention of the Latin nations more particularly to the resources of Canada, and explaining to them how they might be utilized for profitable exchange. The hon. gentleman, I believe, is right, in stating, as regards a considerable number of articles, although, if my memory serves me, not as regards all, the Italian government did accord us some more favourable terms. Personally, I should be very glad indeed to discuss the question with the hon. gentleman when the correspondence is brought down, but he will see that it is hardly expedient at this present moment, pending the production of such correspondence as we can lay on the Table, to proceed further with the discussion.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, of course, I would not ask for any confidential communications. I may say, to put myself right, and also in justification of the Italian consul, that I am in no way in communication with him. In fact, I have only met him once or twice, and upon inquiry in Montreal, before I made this motion I found that he had left for Italy. It is merely upon the rumours on the street that I have made this demand for this correspondence. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce will understand that we would like to see anything that is not confidential.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Certainly.

Mr. MONK. I would also take this occasion to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, if it is true or not, that the government has been notified of this change to which I alluded; that is to say, of the change resulting in Canada being removed from the former list or special tariff of Italy, and being placed now upon the general or less favourable tariff.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think the hon. gentleman is correct, but I will make a special inquiry.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, this debate, short as it is, has brought up one of the most important issues in this country, and the sooner the government of this country come to a new idea in regard to our tariff, the better will they be able to deal with questions of this kind. There is a new doctrine in Europe, and this is the doctrine of tariff for tariff, reciprocity for reciprocity. Every nation there is adopting that principle, and introducing it in the shape of having a maximum and a minimum tariff. By that they are enabled to maintain friendly relations with countries friendly to them, and by it they are in a position to retaliate on a nation that treats them unfavourably in regard to trade. Italy has such a tariff to-day; Russia has such a tariff to-day, and Russia is using it with great effect upon the United States. The sooner we in Canada come to recognize that principle, and have in our tariff maximum and minimum figures the better we will be able to deal with other nations. I go further. I was taxed on the floor of this House the other day by the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) as to what my opinion might be in regard to preferential trade. I do not believe in one-sided trade, even if it is with the mother land. The preference we have to-day is a preference not given to Great Britain, but given to the manufacturers and workingmen of Great Britain at the expense of the manufacturers and workingmen here in Canada. I am against that out and out. I believe that the Conservative party, as a party, is against it out and out, and I believe the Canadian people are against it. The sooner we adopt this plan of a maximum and a minimum tariff, or, as I prefer to put it, of preference for preference, tariff for tariff, the sooner will we be able to extend our trade in different directions and upbuild this country. In connection with the old land, I believe that if proper representations were made to them, they will give a preference to us in consideration of the preference given by us to them, and the government made a great mistake the day they gave to the British manufacturers and the British workmen a preference in this market without getting one for ourselves. The opportunity is now coming in connection with the new Commonwealth of Australia, where they are adopting, as I believe they will adopt, the principle of protection, and a tariff for the encouragement of their own trade—the opportunity will present itself if the government is alive and up to date, to make some kind of a preferential arrangement with the Australian Commonwealth. The idea was brought out at the Toronto Board of Trade by a prominent merchant of that city, Mr. Hees, it was supported by the merchants of Toronto, and I believe, it will be supported by the people of this country. It is in line with what I have laid down already in my few remarks, tariff for tariff, preference for preference, and unless we frame our tariff in that way, and unless large powers are given to the Governor in Council to administer that tariff, we will not be able to hold our own with other countries. To-day the nations of Europe are being organized on that principle as against the United States, and they will be organized on that principle as against us. That is the coming principle, that is the rule that is demanded by the commerce of the different nations, and we must come to that in this country. I have believed in that principle ever since I have been taking any interest in our affairs, and the people of Canada are coming to that. The Conservative party has long ago come to that.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Why don't you abolish the preferential tariff ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I am ready to abolish a preferential tariff to-day that is unfair to the Canadian manufacturer and the Canadian workman.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Why don't you do it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Why don't you vote against it in this parliament ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I declare myself against it now. We will vote against it, and we will have it up in this House, and if the people are consulted, we will be sustained in it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hon. gentlemen claim great credit for what they have done in adopting that tariff, but they have done something not for the benefit of the empire. The way to do something for the benefit of the empire is to do something for the empire as a whole. If we wish to support the empire as we did by sending our soldiers to South Africa, present the empire with a great warship as Cape Colony is doing to-day, and as Australia is proposing to do, but do not do something at the expense of the Canadian manufacturer and the Canadian workmen. Now, I would like to have an expression of opinion from the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), or rather the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) on this particular question, and let him tell us, to-day, if he wishes to build up our trade, whether he is prepared to adopt this new principle, a principle that is being recognized all over the world which will enable Canada to make headway, the principle of the maximum and minimum tariff, administering it on a line that will produce trade between two countries with benefit to both.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Mr. Speaker, I think that we may congratulate ourselves upon the fact, that, before a great while, we shall be able to ascertain what the opinion of the Conservative party upon the preferential tariff is. We on this side declared that we believed that was sound policy, and we asked the support of the people upon that ground, and were successful. We asked the Conservative party to say what their policy was upon the question. The hon. gentleman who at that time acted as the financial leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Geo. E. Foster—a gentleman who is not apparently dictating the financial policy of the Conservative party at the present time, but who was the recognized mouthpiece of the party upon financial questions at that time—Mr. Foster very carefully refrained from taking any such position as that taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) just now, and for which he received the plaudits of his friends on that side of the House. These gentlemen opposite were very careful when they went before the country a few months ago, not to declare themselves as opposed to the principle of the preferential tariff. And, Sir, the success which the hon. gentlemen attained in only one province of this Dominion would not have been attained if they had declared the sentiment which they have declared in the House this afternoon. They succeeded in convincing perhaps the majority of the people of Ontario that they were the truly loyal people, but my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) says to-day that that is not true, and that he is opposed to any preferences whatever being given to the manufacturer or the workingmen of Great Britain.

Mr. MACLEAN. As against ourselves.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At the expense of the Canadian manufacturer or workingman.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain at whose expense he would give a preference. Are we going to take the tariff off the goods coming in to some other country ? We do not regulate the tariffs which protect manufacturers and workmen in other countries, and when we give a preference if it is to be at any one's expense, it is at the expense of the manufacturer and workingman of Canada. We go a little further and we say, that it is the policy of the Liberal party of Canada to reduce the duties and to remove to some extent the burdens of the excessive tariff which was imposed upon imported goods by the late Conservative government.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Is that the opinion you expressed during the last election with regard to the tariff on agricultural implements in Manitoba ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question of agricultural implements was discussed very fully in the elections in the province of Manitoba, and we took our stand upon the duty on agricultural implements as it is to-day, and if my hon. friend will count the number of members who were returned from the western portion of Canada he will see that a considerable majority of the different constituencies recorded themselves in favour of the policy of the government. I have not risen for the purpose of making a speech upon the general fiscal policy of the government, but for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has made a clear and distinct declaration of the attitude of the Conservative party upon the question of the preferential tariff ; that he apparently received the unanimous applause of his friends on that side of the House when he made that declaration, and that the people of Canada now know, what they perhaps never had any official statement of before, namely : that the Conservative party is opposed as a party to the preferential clause in our tariff.

Mr. MACLEAN. A one-sided preference.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). The Minister of the Interior (Hon. Clifford Sifton) would have been wiser if he had refrained from making such remarks in this House. He says he is glad to know that the Conservatives have now declared their policy. He knows that we have never been afraid to declare our policy, and that we have adhered to the policy of protection which he and his friends opposed for twenty years, and which, when they came into power, they dare not remove from the statute-book of Canada although they were hostile to it. These gentlemen opposite have adopted a two-faced policy, professing on one hand to be free traders, while on the other hand they continue the protective policy of the Conservative party. I call that a dishonest political proceeding on the part of the members of the government.

Mr. DAVIS. What about Hugh John in Manitoba ?

Mr. WALLACE. Well, what about Hugh John. What about the Minister of Interior who came out for free agricultural implements and declared to the people of Manitoba that he would never rest until the duty on agricultural implements was totally abolished.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is wholly incorrect.

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. WALLACE. Take what back ; I do not take orders from over there. I read the minister's speeches when he bitterly attacked the duty on agricultural implements, and when he pledged himself to do what he could to remove the duty. I would like to ask him if he justifies the duty on agricultural implements as it is to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Answer.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I went before my constituents and I justified the tariff as it stands to-day upon agricultural implements, and Mr. Hugh John Macdonald——

Mr. WALLACE. Never mind about Hugh John Macdonald. I am not asking you about him. I did not ask you to make a speech.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, the candidate of these gentlemen that are for protection, declared that he was for free inmplements.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of the Interior says he justified the 20 per cent duty that the Conservatives imposed upon agricultural implements. He pledged himself that he would oppose it in parliament, but now he turns around without any justification and defends the 20 per cent duty that he previously attacked when it was the policy of the Conservatives. That is the miserable position that the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) places himself in to-day. He tells us also that his party has removed the burdens of the people. How much have they removed the burdens of the people by their present tariff? Not more than one-quarter of 1 per cent on the dollar, which makes it in round figures precisely the same duty so far as the burden of the people for each dollar is concerned, but it makes an increase of more than $1.30 per head on the population of Ontario, or largely more than $6,000,000 of burdens placed upon the people of all Canada. That is the policy the Minister of the Interior defends to-day. The Liberals for twenty years proclaimed themselves free traders, but the moment they came into power they increased the burdens of the people—if custom taxation is a burden on the people, and it is—very largely. They increased it last year by $7,000,000 over previous years, and I suppose that the Minister of Finance will at an early day get up and glorify the great Liberal party because they have placed this further burden upon our people. The Minister of the Interior speaks about the members from western Canada. Well, I do not think he had very much to do with the members from western Canada outside his own province of Manitoba, and I would like to ask him what was the result in Manitoba? The Minister of the Interior was elected by a large majority, but pretty nearly all his colleagues in the province of Manitoba were defeated. The whole resources of the empire were evidently centred upon the Minister of the Interior and he let his colleagues from that province go to the dogs. He did not care anything about them so long as he himself was elected. So far as his sneer at the province of Ontario is concerned, that we were only successful in one province, that is not true, because we were more successful than he was in his own province. We are proud of the record made by the Conservative party in the province of Ontario. We are proud of the members——

Mr. BOURASSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I think we are very far from the question of trade relations with the Kingdom of Italy.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the specific question before the House is for correspondence respecting trade relations between Canada and Italy; but the discussion has become more general, and I think the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is quite in order.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is a very wide subject, and I am not surprised at the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) squealing out; because every time his party's indiscretions and want of fealty to their former professions are shown up, so much the worse for that party. I was saying, when interrupted, that we were proud of the representation from the province of Ontario, and it does not very well become the Minister of the Interior to throw out his sneers at the great province of Ontario, which, we have often been told from that side of the House, pays three-fifths of the taxes and contributes three-fifths of the wealth of the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a few words with regard to the Minister of the Interior. He said: We stood by our policy in Manitoba, and look at the result. Now, I remember very distinctly reading a report of his speech in Manitoba, and it was to the following effect: It is true, I was against the duty on agricultural implements; I was a free trader in that respect; but you must remember that I am only one of the members of the cabinet, and the rule there is that the will of the majority must prevail, and the minority fall in with it; I still hold the same view, but since the majority of the cabinet decided that the other was the better policy, I had to fall in with it. And now the hon. gentleman takes credit to himself for having stood by that policy in Manitoba, when the reverse was the case. The whole tenor of his speech was that he could not get his own view to prevail and had to accept the view that was not acceptable to the people of Manitoba.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—FREE TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin) moved:

That inasmuch as almost every mile of railway in Canada has been aided, to a greater or lesser extent, by the Dominion government, the local legislatures and the numerous municipalities through which they run; and large sums of money have been given, as well as charters, conferring upon these railways a valuable franchise.

That inasmuch as the railways of the country are continuously seeking legislation for the advancement of some particular interest, or for securing some specific object; which legislation occupies the time of this House at a considerable cost to the country.

That inasmuch as such legislation, in order to be effective for the purposes intended, should be well considered, both by evidence and personal inspection of the location affected, by the members of this House, to the end that the best interests of all parties concerned may be safeguarded.

That, in order that these ends may be satisfactorily attained, the different railway companies for many years past, have given free transportation to all the members of parliament;

And inasmuch as such free transportation, coming, as it does, from railway corporations, no doubt with a view of affording every facility to the members for obtaining the fullest information as to the needs and requirements, both of the railway corporations and the country, and, notwithstanding such free transportation is uniform to all the members of this House, the object and intention is largely misunderstood by the people, and construed into corrupt intentions on the part of the railway corporations, thereby subjecting both the railway corporations and the members of this House to an unjust and unfair criticism, which they are not always in a position to defend.

Therefore, in the opinion of this House, the present system of free transportation is unwise and undesirable, and should be discontinued, and a system substituted which would be free from the charges of corrupt intention or from adverse criticism.

That inasmuch as the railway corporations receive more than adequate compensation for that service as now rendered, this House is of the opinion that an Act should be placed on the statute-book making it incumbent on all railway corporations receiving a franchise or government aid, either in money or lands, to furnish free transportation to all members of this House, upon the certificate of the Clerk of the House; and that no mileage indemnity be hereafter paid by the government to the members while in attendance upon their parliamentary duties.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the 'Hansard' of this House for May 2, 1895, and I find that on that day a number of the prominent members of this House who are present to-day expressed themselves upon the subject with which I am dealing, although not exactly on the same lines. My hon. friend from North York (Hon. Mr. Mulock) who is now Postmaster General, introduced a bill on the subject. On the same occasion the Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright also expressed himself upon it; the hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, also expressed himself on the question, as well as a number of other prominent members of the House. These gentlemen all admitted the correctness of the principle of the resolution which I have moved. All they required was to have it put into shape, and I have arrived here to put it into shape. I have no desire to prolong discussion, but simply wish to say that the railway companies have no reason to complain should this resolution pass. The people of this country have established a portfolio almost entirely in the interests of these companies. That department costs us, taking into account the minister's salary and the salaries of deputies and those of the clerks, about $20,000 per annum, expended in the interests of these railway companies, and we have a perfect right to ask that they should in return give us something towards the expenses of the members of this House coming to attend their public duty.

I could refer to the debate on the 2nd May, 1895, for arguments in support of this resolution, advanced by gentlemen now holding office under the Crown. I believe that in that debate the Minister of Marine (then Mr. Davies), said that the Canadian Pacific Railway had received some $62,000,000 from this country, and the Grand Trunk Railway $25,000,000, and neither had paid one cent back. If we obliged these companies to carry members to and from this House once a year, that would not begin to pay the interest. It is about time that the railway companies should pay something to this country for the benefits they have received. The city of Toronto has an electric system which contributes to the corporation some $80,000 per annum.

Mr. CLARKE. Nearly double that.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Well, I always like to keep within the mark. It is high time that the railway companies should be asked to do this small measure of justice, and thus relieve members from the criticism and the charge, that having railway passes in their pockets, they are bound to vote just as the railway companies ask them. I want to relieve hon. members from the suspicion of becoming tools of the railway companies by the acceptance of railway passes. I am satisfied that such a suspicion is absolutely without foundation, but none the less it rankles in the public mind, and ought to be removed. I was told here a few days ago by a gentleman who occupies a seat in the Senate, at one time a member of this House was refused a pass owing to the stand he took, that for several years the railway companies had refused to grant him a pass, simply because he opposed some legislation they desired, and there are members of this House who pay their railway fares simply because their constituents are somewhat jealous on this matter. It would be much better that we should come here with passes rightly given to us, and not receive any mileage indemnity. There are hon. gentlemen who come here on passes, and then are paid $200 or $300 mileage because they happen to live a long distance from the capital. That is not properly understood throughout this country, or these gentlemen would not be elected to the position of being able to receive that favour during more than one parliament.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I heartily concur, Mr. Speaker, in the object of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson), in moving this resolution. I have noticed with some curiosity the different positions taken by some hon. members in the debate in this House in 1895, when a Bill was introduced dealing with this question, and that taken by them in 1898 when a Bill dealing with the same question was introduced by the former member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock). I was somewhat surprised to find that many gentlemen, who spoke heartily on the first occasion in favour of the Bill, found reason on the second occasion to recant their former position, or else were absent from their seats. I must say, in my opinion, it hardly becomes the dignity of a member of this House to travel on favours granted by a railway company, especially when we consider that these companies must necessarily apply to parliament frequently for legislation in their interests. Undoubtedly a well-defined suspicion exists in the public mind that the complimentary tickets which these companies bestow, are no small factor in putting through legislation in their favour; and that to this cause is attributable the very easy manner in which such legislation is frequently put through. I do not for one moment question the sincerity of any hon. gentleman when he tells me that the acceptance of a pass makes no difference whatever in his attitude towards the railway companies in this House, but I do think that there is cause for the suspicion that, taking it in the aggregate, this House is rather more lenient and less circumspect in dealing with railway legislation than it would otherwise be.

It is hardly fair that we should draw mileage from the government and at the same time accept railway passes from the companies. I do not pretend to be supersensitive in the matter, but I must say that the two seem incompatible. I think it only right, in fact I think it imperative, that members elected to this House should have the opportunity of travelling free over all the railway lines in the country if they see fit. They should have every opportunity and facility to visit various parts of the country and the public works there constructed; and should the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution not have taken the proper method of reaching and attaining the object he has in view, I hope we will have a promise from the government that hereafter, in all Bills coming before us for the granting of favours to railway companies, a clause will be introduced compelling these companies to give members of the House of Commons the privilege of travelling free over their lines. That would meet the case exactly, but in the meantime, I propose to support the motion as it stands.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). While I have seconded the motion in the absence of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith), I wish to say that I do not quite agree with the resolution in its entirety.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). If these hon. gentlemen who interrupt will have a little patience, I will explain my position. My view as regards the mileage allowance is that it is given, not only for the purpose of covering the cost of railway tickets, but the pullman fares and board while travelling, and also as an allowance for the time occupied in travel. I would have preferred had the resolution of the hon. gentleman simply been that the cost of the ticket be deducted from the mileage allowance, but inasmuch as he has not seen fit to make that provision, I am quite willing to second the resolution, and vote for it as it stands. Will those hon. gentlemen who laughed a while ago, smile now?

An hon. MEMBER. Where is the joke?

Mr. PUTTEE.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). If the hon. gentleman is too obtuse to see it, I am afraid it would be useless for me to try and make it clear to him. You will recollect, Sir, that the former member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock) introduced a Bill some two sessions ago for the purpose of regulating this very matter, and if my memory serves me correctly, a number of hon. members supported that Bill. I myself was in accord with its provisions, but I do not think I was present when the vote was taken, and because I was not present, I was accused in a western paper which supports the government of not being in favour of it. I may say that I myself have been frequently vilified because I accepted a pass from a railway company, and I feel strongly that this matter ought not to be left in its present position. The opportunity should not be allowed any one of accusing any hon. member of being favourable to a railway company because he accepts a pass from it, and for that reason, if no other, I would support this motion. But I believe further, that it is in the interests of the country that all members of parliament should be free to travel throughout the country and visit the various public works, if they so desire, without having to pay their railway fares. They would then be able to inspect the public works themselves, and satisfy themselves as to the utility of these works, and the desirability of carrying them on. I am not one of those who think that hon. members are influenced in their conduct by the acceptance of a pass, and I do not think it should be left in the mouth of any one to question the motive of any hon. member who accepts a railway pass. For these reasons I propose to vote for the resolution of my hon. friend from West Elgin.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I recollect very well the discussion referred to by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) this afternoon. In that discussion the present Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock), and, I believe, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies), all pledged themselves on the floor of this House to this extent, namely, that the practice of taking passes and mileage indemnity was an improper one, and one which put hon. members in a bad light before the public. And they all agreed that something should be done to remedy the evil. If these hon. gentlemen will look up the record, they will find that they pledged themselves to do something in this sense. It is a public scandal that members of parliament should accept passes from the railway companies, travel free, and then go into our accountant's office and draw mileage for expenses they never paid.

There is an agitation in this House to-day for an increase in the indemnity of members of parliament, and one justification given for the taking of mileage by members who travel on railway passes, is that the sessional indemnity is not sufficient. I hope that a reform will take place, and declare myself in favour of an increased indemnity. But I am opposed to the taking of mileage, as we take it now, and the use of passes. These gentlemen who are responsible for the conduct of this House, and who have pledged themselves to effect a reform in this matter—the Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the Postmaster General—are bound to express their opinion on this resolution, and are bound by the promise they gave, to wipe out this scandal. The people do not like it, the public press have spoken against it, and the proper thing to do is either to make the railways carry members free or increase the indemnity, and give a larger mileage allowance. The mileage allowance now given is not simply intended to cover the travelling expenses of a member on the one trip to Ottawa and return. I know of three or four members to whom it costs as much as $300 and $400 a session in railway fares to and from their homes during the session, and it is needless to add that these hon. gentlemen pay their own fares. The thing as it stands to-day, is all wrong. It lowers the dignity of this House in the eyes of the people and ought to be abolished. As regards the question of railway fares, the railway companies should be obliged to carry the people's representatives free. There are countries where that is the law. In France, Italy and some other European countries, and in a good many states of the Union, that is the law. It is high time this scandal should be abolished. I am quite willing to vote for the resolution of my hon. friend from Elgin, and I do so mainly as a protest against the present condition of things. I say it here now, and have said it before in my own constituency, that I am in favour of an increase in the sessional indemnity to hon. members.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). The question brought up by this resolution is not a new one. A couple of sessions ago it was brought before this House by the then member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock), and it provoked a discussion of several hours. On that occasion the former leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) took Mr. Bostock to task for having brought up his resolution, and twitted him with being a young member, and like many other young members, a faddist—anxious to bring up something in order to satisfy his constituents he was doing something. I do not say that the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson), is moved by any motive of that kind, because I have no doubt he could do something in his riding without having to come here and do it in the House. As no doubt the hon. gentleman belongs to the patrons or the grangers, I presume he does not accept railway passes. No doubt, then, he would be able to get a pass and use it. We all know the fable of the fox who lost his tail. After suffering that loss he went around among the other foxes trying to persuade them that it was the proper thing for them to do without their tails also. There may possibly be some resemblance in this to the case of my hon. friend. I suppose this is a subject that should be treated somewhat seriously, but the first thing we should consider is whether this government or this House are in position to compel the railways to issue free passes to members. That is not decided, and I think it should be decided before action is taken in the matter. The question was discussed here two years ago for three or four hours, and I believe that other discussions of a similar kind have taken place in years gone by. It never seems to have occurred to those who brought up the subject that the government may not have power to compel railway companies to grant passes to members of parliament. If members of the House wish to accept these passes. I do not think there is any member of this parliament that would be influenced by the granting of such a pass. It is simply given as a matter of courtesy. I do not think such an imputation should be cast upon members as to say that it would influence any of them, one way or the other, in dealing with proposed legislation coming before the House. Before wasting time in discussing this question, I would like to understand what power the government has over railway companies in this matter. If they have no power at all, there is no reason why we should spend time in discussing it. In the meantime, if any hon. member wishes to accept a pass, that is a matter between himself and the railway corporation, and something as I understand it, that no other person has anything to do with.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). It has been often said that bad company will have a certain effect upon men. My association with members of the House has not been so very long that, when riding on a free pass given to me as a member of the House, I have felt quite as comfortable as I should have felt if I held that pass as a matter of right. I have ridden more or less on railway passes given in connection with business, but I have always felt that I had given value to the railway from which I had received the pass. I do not have the same feeling when I ride on a pass under present circumstances. If there was some way to compel the railways to give a pass that we could accept as a matter of right I should feel more at home. If the government should think it best to make it incumbent—as the resolution says—upon railway companies to grant passes to members, that would accomplish what is desired in one way. But I believe there is a better plan. If this proposal is gone on with I shall ask for an amendment under which it will be the duty of the government to furnish passes to all the members. Put the responsibility upon the government, removing it from the individuals members. In that case, members who accept a pass will do so knowing that they have a right to it. There is a feeling in favour of an increased indemnity to members of this House. If that is granted, it should be made obligatory upon the members not to accept passes. Members who come here to attend to the business of the country have a right to feel that they are not under favour to a private corporation, and they also have a right to fair remuneration for their services as labourers here for the people. I do not vote for the resolution as it stands though I am in sympathy with the sentiment that dictates it. If the matter comes up, I shall, as I say, propose an amendment that the government shall furnish passes to members or that the members' indemnity shall be increased as recompense in lieu of the passes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it might be desirable to have a word or two from the government with regard to this question. So far as concerns the argument that members of parliament who receive these passes are influenced by them, I, for one, do not attach any importance to it. I do not think that argument is of more weight that would be the argument that as the government issues passes on the Intercolonial Railway, to members of parliament, therefore members of parliament are inclined to support the government. I do not think that has been the experience of hon. gentlemen on either side of the House. Still there has been more or less discussion throughout the country with regard to this question of railway passes. I am bound to say that I do not like the language of this resolution on the subject. I do not think that any member of parliament is influenced in the slightest degree by these passes, for I have seen members who, undoubtedly used passes given by railway companies, fight with the utmost possible persistence against legislation introduced by the railways that granted those passes. Nevertheless, we must have some regard for public opinion in matters of this kind. Now, the Intercolonial—we might as well begin with that—issues passes to members of parliament. I suppose it issues passes also to certain officials of the government. I am not quite clear, from looking at the Acts relating to the Intercolonial Railway, under what particular power the Minister of Railways has exercised that privilege. I am not speaking of the present Minister of Railways in that respect more than of his predecessors, for I believe that in this matter, he has only gone a step beyond the position of his predecessor. Formerly the Intercolonial granted half-rate tickets or something of that kind——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To whom ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To members of parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman's predecessor had granted to members of parliament tickets entitling them to half-rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not. When I came into the department, the practice was to grant passes to members of parliament.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, I am in error, and accept the hon. minister's correction so far as concerns the time at which the change was made. But I know that at one time certificates were issued entitling members to half-fare on the Intercolonial and, at some subsequent time, which, I thought, was under the administration of the present Minister of Railways and Canals that was changed to the system of giving passes. I would like to suggest, in the first place, that it would be well to have the duties of the Minister of Railways and Canals with respect to that matter defined by an Act of parliament. I think it would be well to have the matter made certain, so that we should know, if we are to have these passes over the Intercolonial, just what our rights under the law are, and not have a matter of that kind dependent upon the practice of one administration or another. So far as passes on railway companies throughout the country are concerned, I think, perhaps, it would be a better thing if we did not have these passes, it would be better if some other system were provided. I have not considered the subject very much, but I suppose it could be accomplished by a prohibition to members of parliament against accepting these passes. I think, probably, it would be better to deal with it in that way than in the way suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robinson, Elgin) who brought the motion before the House. It seems to me that, perhaps, it would be more in the public interest that members of parliament, travelling on private railways, railways owned by corporations which have business before this House, should pay their fare in the ordinary way and that any saving of the cost of fares or anything of that kind should be dealt with openly and above board and in some other way than in the manner of receiving passes from the corporations. I do not know that I would have the sympathy of many gentlemen in the House with regard to that, I am giving my own individual opinion alone. I think it is possibly a matter which might well engage the attention of the right hon. leader of the government and the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), as it certainly does engage the attention of the country, to some extent, from time to time. As I said before, I do not attach much importance to some of the reasons which have been urged against the present system yet it may be that the subject is one which could be better dealt with in the interest of the country by some other mode than by the system now prevailing.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry that I was not in the House when this subject was brought up by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Robinson). I understand that he has cited some opinions of my own in favour of the resolution he has just submitted to the House. I have looked up my words, as they are reported in the Hansard of 1895, and I do not find that I said anything very favourable to his contention. This is what I am reported to have said on that occasion :

> This question has taken a wider range than I supposed at first sight it would, when the Bill was introduced by the hon. member for West York. For my part, I am bound to say that the Bill goes much further than I supposed, from a hasty glance at it. I had supposed the intention of my hon. friend was to prevent any member who travels on a pass from drawing mileage under the statute, which would seem natural enough. But the Bill goes much further than that, and forbids a practice which is now universal in this House, I may say. Well, this is a question of public interest, and may be discussed upon its merits, but if I may judge from the temper of the House at this moment, the Bill is not likely to be discussed in that spirit.

I expressed no opinion upon the question which is now before the House. The question, as now proposed, involves a somewhat drastic measure, that is to say, that we should impose upon the railways of the country a service for which they had not bargained, and a service for which they should receive no compensation. It is true, as my hon. friend states in his resolution, and no one denies it, that the railways have received from the government, from all governments, from the nation at large, substantial subsidies ever since the beginning of railway history. But I would call the attention of the House to the fact that he proposes a new principle in British legislation, an addition to British legislation, in that, no matter what we have been doing previously, we should compel any corporation or any body in this country to give a service without compensation whatever. I think this is altogether against the traditions of British legislation. If there is anything sacred in British legislation, it is that ownership of any kind, property of any kind, is sacred, and should not be invaded, even in the public interest, without adequate compensation. In virtue of what principle would you impose upon the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway, for instance, even though they had been heavily subsidized by the nation, the obligation of carrying persons or merchandise without compensating them therefor, saying to them : You shall carry certain members of the community free ? It seems to me unfair to impose such a burden upon any one, not only upon railways, but upon any individual in Canada. The argument that the railways have been heavily subsidized is of no force whatever. They have been subsidized for good and valid reasons at the time, they have been subsidized in order to enable them to carry on certain business, the business of conveying goods and passengers. It was not certainly contemplated at the time these subsidies were given to impose upon them any additional burden than those which were specified at the time. Therefore, for my part, I am not prepared to assent to the views contained in this motion. On the other hand, there is no doubt that there may be an evil in the system now prevailing of members of parliament accepting passes. I do not ask anybody to make a confession in this respect, but if a confession were required, I think there are very few members of this House who would not have to plead guilty to such a charge, if there be any guilt in it. Whether such a practice leads or could lead to the evils which are suggested, or asserted in the motion of my hon. friend, I am not prepared to say. I quite agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, that it is not possible to say that any member of parliament has ever been influenced by passes, or that legislation has been affected thereby.

Moreover, if the motion of the hon. gentleman were to be accepted, the Act regulating the indemnity of members of parliament would have to be recast. My hon. friend suggests this himself, but this is not the way to do it. If it is necessary to change the Act regulating the indemnity, it should be recast on other lines than those suggested. The whole subject would have to be discussed de novo, rather than dealt with in this way. For these reasons I think that, though the subject is one which requires consideration, before parliament comes to a final conclusion, it is better not to proceed hastily, but to adjourn the debate to some future occasion when the matter may receive more careful consideration than it can at this moment. I, therefore, move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Before the motion is put I wish to make a few remarks, because this is a question which affects every member in the House of Commons. The First Minister tells us that the mover of this motion is proposing an unheard-of thing in proposing to put a burden upon the railways without any compensation. Sir, I contend that it will impose no burden upon the railways. We ask them to carry freight and passengers. Carrying freight may be a burden and require labour on the part of the railway company ; carrying a passenger from one point to another on a train imposes no burden upon the railway company.

An hon. MEMBER. What about his baggage ?

Mr. WALLACE. I am only speaking of carrying a passenger, not of carrying his baggage. I say that it is no burden upon the railway company, because the passenger walks on the train, and when he reaches the end of his journey, he walks off it, so that he imposes no labour on any railway official. More than that, as has been stated here to-day, these railways provide every member with a pass of their own accord. They furnish that pass either from a proper or an improper motive. I propose that that pass be furnished from a proper motive, whatever may be the case to-day, and I am not going to inquire into that question. The First Minister tells us one of the things sacred in British legislation is to recognise vested rights. Well, I contend that we do not interfere, practically or theoretically, with any vested rights. Lawyers, especially, are apt to attach great importance to the question of vested rights, and to suppose that when they bring that up no further argument can be made. It is a question of vested rights, and therefore vested rights are as sacred as the British constitution. I do not place so much stress upon vested rights myself, when they interfere with the interests of the people. Vested rights in all cases have to disappear when the people's interests are paramount. You give a man the deed of 100 acres of land, he has the fee simple of it, his house is his castle, but, when you give a railway company a charter which will authorize it to go through his house, and deprive him of his vested rights in the house and the land, the house and the land have to disappear so far as that owner is concerned in the interest of the whole people. So, I say, that vested rights are not so sacred as these hon. gentlemen are apt to try to make us believe. Now, the right hon. First Minister says to-day, that we want more consideration, and that he would like to have this motion adjourned until some future occasion. This question was up in 1895, we have heard. No conclusion was reached then. I have a distinct recollection of the former hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock), last year getting up and proposing a resolution somewhat on the same lines providing for the abolition of passes and advocating it on the floor of the House. I remember another hon. member of this House, at that time, who is not a member to-day, getting up and leading the then hon. member for Yale and Cariboo, out by the ear, taking him out by a back entrance, because it was a troublesome and embarrassing question for the government, and they wanted time for further consideration. Here, we have the old story repeated again. The arduous duties of the Prime Minister and his cabinet have prevented them from giving consideration to a question upon which they had fully made up their minds in 1895, and if they did not they have had ample time since then to come to a conclusion upon this subject. Yet, to-day, the Prime Minister proposes that they should have further time to consider the question. I object to all these postponements of the question. We have seen it from year to year. When a question comes up, and when the government are not prepared to come to a decision upon it they say: We want more time for consideration, we will move the adjournment of the debate, and the debate is adjourned accordingly. I believe that parliament should be able to come to a conclusion upon those matters that have engaged its attention for years past, that have been discussed upon the public platforms of the country, and that have been before the people during all these years. For my part, although I do not like the wording of the resolution in its entirety, I intend to support it. Some of the clauses are all right, but some I object to, for instance, the one which says :

That inasmuch as the railways of the country are continuously seeking legislation for the advancement of some particular interest, or for securing some specific object; which legislation occupies the time of this House at a considerable cost to the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the point of order ?

Mr. FRASER. There are two hon. gentlemen standing up at the same time.

Mr. WALLACE. I say that while that clause is one that would not be an argument for the carrying out of the resolution, and that I object to the wording of it——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. WALLACE. Railways come before the country for legislation, and they have to prove to the country——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WALLACE. I have to congratulate the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) in having the most rapid promotion of any hon. minister in this House.

An hon. MEMBER. The wrong man in the right place.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not approve of the wording of that clause, but, while I object to it I do approve of the principle of the resolution, and, therefore, I shall vote for the resolution, if the House is to divide upon the question, and to adopt the principle which I think is a correct one that its provisions should apply to all railway companies in Canada receiving a charter from the Dominion. As to receiving any subsidy or bonus, I do not care for that so much as receiving their charter. The charter of a railway company confers enormous rights and privileges upon the recipient. It is the duty of members of parliament to be able to go over the country, to travel over this Dominion, and to see what an immense domain and heritage we have. There is no burden placed on the railway companies, and I repeat that this is not legislation, which, in my opinion, interferes with vested rights at all. The government railway, the Intercolonial Railway, sends passes to the members of parliament representing the people. That is the rule to-day. It is a very good rule, whether inaugurated by the present hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) or by his predecessor I do not care. It is a very good rule, and the other railway companies of the Dominion should provide members of parliament, while they are members, with passes. This would impose no onerous conditions. The granting of a pass is no burden to the railway company, it imposes no onerous conditions, it does not call for any more labour on their part for a member of parliament to step on a train and go from one point to another. It does not impose any additional obligation upon the railway company, and does not add to the cost of running trains one cent. I therefore am in favour of this proposal of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) and shall give it my support.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am in order; it is a motion to adjourn. I am sorry that the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is not in his place here to-day. As a member of the opposition of this House he introduced a Bill to regulate this scandal, if it is a scandal, but the moment the proposition comes up he is out of his place, and not here to defend his former record. The Rt. Hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has delivered, here, to-day, something of a defence of vested rights, but he has not had one word to say for the honour and reputation of this House. He places the vested rights of railway companies before the honour, and standing of this House in the country, and in that connection I wish to contrast his conduct with the conduct of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), who is not afraid to tell the House that he thinks the time has come for the abolition of the pass scandal. Are passes given for a consideration or not, and if they are given to members of parliament, are they given for a consideration or not? I know what the rule is in the general manager's office. As soon as he finds a man antagonistic to the interests of his road who is in the enjoyment of a pass, he cuts off his head and calls in the pass.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MACLEAN. I know of a case where a black list is made for the general manager.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, I am not going to give the names of people outside of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MACLEAN. Oh, yes; hon. gentlemen do not like to listen to the truth. The general manager, in the course of the year, keeps a black list of the men outside of this House who have been against the interests of the company, and when the time for the renewal of passes comes round he consults the black list, and a new pass does not go out. The newspaper men of this country get passes, and a consideration is always implied. When the newspaper becomes hostile, the newspapers are put on the black list, and no passes are issued. That is a fact, and the people of this country think to-day, that some how the legislation that they do not like, and which is supposed to be against the interests of the people, has a connection with the free passes. If the hon. gentleman is up against a dilemma, now it comes back to my panacea, and what would cure it? Government ownership of railways. That is the only thing that will let you out. The railway question will come up in this House every day; it will come up between the conscience of hon. gentlemen and their conduct in parliament. There is only one way to get around it; government ownership, and that will cure almost every evil we have in this country so far as railways are concerned.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. These hon. gentlemen may laugh, but watch how rapidly public opinion is growing in this country. I am sorry the member for North York (Hon. Mr. Mulock) is not here now. I am sorry the First Minister expressed himself as he did, and I am sorry nothing has been said in regard to the question of members drawing their mileage while using passes over the railways. It is not right, and the public are against it. Gentlemen may say that the custom has been condoned in the past, but it is wrong and it must be stopped. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), a man for whom I have the highest respect, is on record as saying some years ago, that this system is a scandal, and that something ought to be done to remove it. Nothing has been done yet, and as the member for West York (Mr.

Wallace) said, the question is being jollied along from session to session, and from parliament to parliament. Surely, the Prime Minister can to-day state that he will consider how to remove this scandal and cause it to disappear for ever. The right hon. gentleman told us that he would adjourn the debate, and that later on, when the House has had a chance to consider the case, there will be something done to abate the scandal. Well, I accept for the present the idea that the right hon. gentleman has thrown out.

Mr. ANDREW B. INGRAM (East Elgin). As the hon. the mover of the motion (Mr. Robinson), is one of the representatives of Elgin, and as I am the other representative of that constituency, I take this opportunity of differing from my hon. friend (Mr. Robinson). I do not view the granting of passes as a scandal, and in proof of that, I may state that in the county I represent, that question was to some extent an issue in the various elections I have fought. I told my electors that I accepted passes on the different lines of railway, and that if elected I would again accept them. I have the happy satisfaction of knowing, Mr. Speaker, that my majority was increased on every succeeding occasion, and therefore, as far as the granting of passes is concerned, I do not really think that it amounts to very much. I understand that the object of giving ten cents a mile to members, for travelling expenses was, when the indemnity was first fixed, for the purpose of granting some consideration to those who lived long distances from the capital, and depriving those who resided in the capital of receiving mileage. A member residing in the capital can attend here at three o'clock in the afternoon, and he sacrifices no personal interest in the management of his business down town, while a member from Halifax, or Winnipeg, or British Columbia, must come here at the opening of parliament, remain here the whole time and neglect his private business. That is particularly the case with the British Columbia members. In my judgment, while it may be wrong to accept passes to some extent, the object seems to be, at the time the indemnity was framed, for the purpose of giving some indemnity at least to those who sacrifice their business in coming long distances. On account of the agitation in the press of this country, as to whether the members shall have their indemnity increased or not, that has become a very public question, and before any change is made, it should be well thought out. I believe that those who live at certain distances from the capital should have their indemnity fixed at such a rate and no mileage added to it at all. A man residing in Ottawa should have his indemnity fixed at so and so, and the indemnity should be increased in proportion to the distance the member lives from the capital. By that means we would to some extent indemnify the members who live at long distances for their loss of time, in neglecting their business, and on the other hand, those who live near the capital would be fairly indemnified also. To my mind, that is the only proper method of granting indemnity to members of parliament. Since I have been a member of this House—and I am here now for twelve sessions—I have listened to charges made against the Conservative government, and I have listened to charges made against the Liberal government as to certain scandals in their administration. Whether these charges were correct or not, I have heard them made repeatedly, but I have yet to hear one hon. gentleman in any parliament I have had the honour of sitting in, make a charge against any member of parliament, that owing to his having accepted a pass he voted on any particular occasion for or against a Bill. And when some gentlemen come into this House for the purpose of making a little cheap capital to promote their personal interests, I demand of them to bring proof of anything in the shape of a scandal caused by the acceptance of these passes. Why, Sir, I look upon it as an insult to every member of this House, when the charge is made that we are tools in the hands of any corporation. I have never yet been asked by any railway corporation to sacrifice my principles to support any Bill I did not wish to support. I have had perfect freedom, as I am sure every member of this House has had. I have always found, so far as I know, that railway companies, in promoting legislation in this House, endeavour to promote the legislation on the merits of the legislation itself, and if the merits of the legislation did not commend itself to me, and other hon. members, we were at perfect liberty to oppose it. So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to any change in the arrangements as we have had them for years. Until the government sees their way clear to say that they are not in favour of an increased indemnity, or that they are in favour of an increased indemnity, and that the way they propose to increase it will be by the plan I have suggested, namely, to do away with the mileage entirely, and to have a sliding scale for the indemnity, paid to members of this House in proportion to the distance they have to come to attend their parliamentary duties at Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THE GOVERNMENT STEAMER STANLEY.

On the motion :

Mr. Lefurgey—Copies of all reports, letters or other correspondence between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the boards of trade of Summerside and Charlottetown or with any other person or persons acting in regard to the subject-matter of the motion during the years 1899-1900 and 1901, regarding the placing of the government winter steamer Stanley on the route between Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine, N.B., for the conveyance of mails, passengers and freight.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (East Prince, P. E.I.). As there are only a few ministers left before six o'clock, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) is not in his seat, and as we require him present when the subject-matter of this motion is discussed, I would request that it be allowed to stand until to-morrow.

Motion allowed to stand.

THE MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST.

Mr. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation) moved for :

Return showing the receipts and expenditure of the Montreal Turnpike Trust, and a copy of the annual statement furnished the bondholders of the said corporation by the Montreal Turnpike Trust for the past ten years.

Mr. Speaker, this motion gives rise to a question which interests the city of Montreal and in a more particular manner the population in the neighbourhood of that great centre. This question, if I may say so, is one of paramount importance to the farming community throughout the island of Montreal and the neighbouring counties. And I believe that if the government are willing to lend an attentive ear to the few suggestions which I intend to make in submitting this motion to the House, they will understand that it is in their power to remedy what I may call the deplorable state of things in connection with the roads on the island of Montreal.

I am happy to see that the right hon. prime minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is in his seat, and I may tell him that should he consent to use in solving this question the great influence he is enjoying now——

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) What is the remedy ?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) He will raise to his own memory a monument more lasting than brass in the hearts of the farmers of the island of Montreal.

The PRIME MINISTER. (Translation.) What remedy do you suggest ?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I shall come to that by and by. As all the members of this House who are acquainted with the section of the country referred to are no doubt aware of the early legislation affecting the roads in the vicinity of Montreal, dates from a pretty remote period. I even believe that prior to 1840, laws were passed with a view to the improvement and maintenance of the great thoroughfares running from the parishes in the neighbourhood of Montreal towards the city. At any rate, I find in a hand-bood which I have in my hands, a statute of 1840 to such effect.

Without wishing to enter, at any length, into the details of such legislation, it will answer my purpose to say that it aimed at facilitating to the rural population of the island of Montreal the access to that city, and enabling the people from the city to travel in carriages on roads kept in good repair.

But this legislation, which was never consolidated or improved as it should have been, did not participate of the character of more modern legislation. It lacks concision and clearness, and, what is more, it does not provide for state or municipal control, such as is to be found in more modern legislation.

Allow me, Sir, to say a few words as to the roads referred to here. There is the main road leading to Lachine, which runs along the St. Lawrence. There is another road connecting with the Lachine road and which crosses the hills, known under the names of Côte Ste. Catherine and Côte St. Luc.

There is the road to the westward of Montreal, running from St. Laurent to the River des Prairies.

There is also the Sault-au-Recollet road which runs from Montreal to the River des Prairies. We have also the Sault road by which the people from the counties of Laval, Terrebonne and the north reach Montreal.

There is another road leading in a northwesterly direction to the Victoria road, namely, Côte St. Michel road, connecting with that great thoroughfare which runs along the St. Lawrence river and leads to Pointe aux Trembles. Those roads are under the control of the Turnpike Trust, an organization which is devoid of any municipal character. The trustees have absolute control over these roads, and have the rights of levying and collecting tolls. Owing to the increased traffic, and to the fact that the resources at the disposal of the trustees entrusted with the management of those roads were quite inadequate, the roads were left in a bad state.

From the statutes passed as early as 1840 down to 1895, it appears that these trustees secured the power of issuing debentures and that they extensively used that power.

Without going into details, it is sufficient to my purpose to say that, up to 1890, the debt of the trust reached in the aggregate to over $200,000.

The trustees had kept paying interest on those debentures ; but in 1895 or about that time, realising that all hope of repaying those bonds and all hope of being able to raise an adequate sum to the redemption of those debentures was lost, they deemed it necessary to repudiate a portion of the debt so as to be able to pay the interest on the rest and, if necessary, to pay off the principal. New debentures were issued in virtue of an Act passed by the provincial legislature to the amount of $195,000. Those debentures are now in the hands of the Dominion government. But at the time when this new arrangement was made it was deemed advisable and fair to the holders of debentures to provide that they should be given some control over the management of the Turnpike Trust. It was enacted by the provincial legislature that every year or every second year there should be held an election of trustees, as the representatives of the holders of the newly issued debentures. The Act provides that three representatives of the Montreal Turnpike Trust shall be elected to watch over the interests of their mandataries in the Turnpike Trust, so that to-day we have a kind of joint trust. It is composed of two trustees who directly represent the corporation entrusted with the management of the roads, and as the statutes passed from 1841 to 1867 by the Quebec legislature and by the old legislature of United Canada stand, these trustees are appointed by the provincial government.

On the other hand, in virtue of the above amendment and the readjustment of the debt of the Trust under statute 58 Vic., chap. 14, passed by the Quebec legislature in 1895, the bearers of debentures select, as their representatives, three shareholders whose duty it is to attend to the management of the roads and to watch over the interests of the holders of debentures.

Now, Sir, having explained how this administration operates, I may be allowed to call your attention to this fact: that, as the various statutes governing this trust stand, the trustees are not called upon, as is the case with any other municipal or administrative body, to transmit annual returns to the authorities from whom they hold their appointment. We find to-day in our municipal administration in the province of Quebec, that every municipality is bound to transmit to the provincial government annual statements showing their management of municipal affairs, as also the financial standing of such municipality as is thus placed under the control of the provincial government.

In another sphere, the banks are called upon to furnish statements to the Dominion government; and it is now-a-days the acknowledged policy of the law that corporations of every description should transmit such returns to the government, when they are invested with powers enabling them to manage a portion of the commonwealth.

Nothing of the kind exists in the case of the Turnpike Trust. There is nothing in the statutes which makes it binding upon them to furnish statements to the holders of debentures. It is quite true that a general provision under which the Turnpike Trust may be called upon to send returns to the provincial government.

MANUFACTURE OF BINDER TWINE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Blain:

That, in the opinion of this House it is expedient that all binder twine now held by the government, together with all twine that may hereafter be manufactured by them, shall be sold direct to the farmer at a price to cover the actual cost of raw material and manufacture only, with one cent per pound added, and that no twine manufactured or paid for out of the Dominion treasury shall be sold or disposed of in any other way.

Mr. EDWARD HACKETT (West Prince, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, this question of the binder twine industry is a matter of such importance that I feel that I would scarcely be doing my duty to my constituents were I not to offer a few remarks upon it on this occasion. In the province of Prince Edward Island the farmers use large numbers of self-binders, in order that they may gather in their harvests with despatch, and the cost of binder twine is a heavy tax upon them. Some years ago, when a duty was placed on binder twine, the farmers had a grievance, and when that duty was removed it was supposed that they would be benefited. The result, however, has been quite different. Instead of being benefited by a repeal of the duty the farmers of late years have been paying very much more for their binder twine than they were formerly called upon to pay. It may be said that the government is not responsible for this, that it was due to the war in the Philippine Islands, which caused an increase in the cost of the raw material. We know from the statement made by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) the other evening, that such a statemtnt is not warranted by the facts. Some small increase has taken place in the cost of the raw material; but as a matter of fact, there is no increase to warrant the high price which has been paid by the farmers for binder twine during the last four years.

This question was fully discussed during the last election in Prince Edward Island; it was a burning question with us. The opposition held that the increase in the price of binder twine was due to the way in which the government had managed the output of the penitentiary at Kingston, where the labour of the convicts was utilized in producing it—that the product was sold to favourites of the government at a slight advance on the cost of production, and then sold by these government favourites to the farmers of the country at a very largely increased price. The hon. member for Peel the other afternoon entered so fully into this phase of the question that it is not necessary for me to discuss it now at great length. We find that in 1896 the government made a sale of 1,000,000 pounds or thereabouts of binder twine to friends of the government, Coll Bros., at $4.35 per 100 pounds. It had cost the people of Canada for its manufacture at the penitentiary $4.60, or a trifle over, or a loss on the transactions of that year of 41 cents per 100 pounds. In the same year binder twine was sold to the farmers of the country at 100 per cent advance on the price at which it was sold to these friends of the government. In 1897 the output of the penitentiary was sold to the Hobbs Hardware Co. for $4.64 per 100 pounds; and that product cost the people of the country $4.84 per 100 pounds. It may be said that it is impossible for the government to regulate the price of binder twine. There is one thing they can do—they can regulate the price of the article produced in the penitentiary; that is certainly under the control of the government; and if they supplied the farmers direct at cost, with one cent per pound added to pay expenses, as proposed in this resolution, they would give the farmers of this country binder twine for about eight cents per pound or thereabouts. Coming down to 1900, we find that the Hobbs Hardware Co. and John Connor purchased about $51,000 worth of binder twine at an average of 7½ cents a pound. Last year it was said that a great change had taken place and that the government were going to sell direct to the farmers and give them the full benefit of the manufacture of this article in the penitentiary. We were met by our opponents with that statement on every platform; yet we find that last year the farmers were supplied by the government with about $8,000 worth at 14 cents a pound, or double the price at which it was sold to friends of the government. I say that is an outrage. This statement was made here the other evening by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and it was not contradicted. The right hon. First Minister said that on a future occasion it would be contradicted, but I say that it cannot be contradicted. Although it is perhaps impossible for the government to produce sufficient binder twine to supply all the farmers of Canda, yet they should sell that material to the farmers at the same price at which they sell it to their friends.

The hon. member for Peel says this is a small question. It is, so far as the amount of money involved is concerned; but it is a matter of vital importance to the farmers of the country that they should get their binder twine at the cost of production. It was supposed when this government came into power that they would be benefactors of the farmers in every way. It was supposed that machinery would be placed on the free list, that has not been done. It was supposed that binder twine would be sold to the farmers at the cost of production, but that has not been done. The government are evidently standing in with the combines; they are supplying this material to the friends of the government, who are the agents of the combines, and as a result the farmers are paying 100 per cent more for their twine than they should pay under honest and fair administration.

My hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) made a proposition the other evening that an agent of the government should be appointed in each of the townships to sell the product of the penitentiary to the farmers at cost. It may be impossible to carry that out; but surely this business government can devise some scheme by which the product of the penitentiaries which is so vital to the interests of the farmers may be sold to them at cost and charges.

It is not my intention to take up any more time on this occasion; but I see that the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is in his place, and I would like him to contradict, if he can, the statement made the other day, that this product is supplied at 7½ cents a pound to the friends of the government, while the farmers of the country are compelled to pay 14 cents a pound for it.

Mr. ERNEST D. SMITH (South Wentworth). Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to discuss this question, and would not now, but that it seems to me the time has arrived when the government should take us into their confidence and say what position they intend to take on this question. I waited during the discussion the other evening to hear the government state their position, and I have waited to-night so far; but we have heard nothing from them. This is a question which, while not the most important before the country, is yet of such importance that the members of the government ought to give us a definite statement as to the stand they propose to take upon it in the future. The farmer and all those who think about the matter regarded this question as one of the most important that came before them in the last campaign. I know that on every platform throughout my county, where almost every question was thoroughly threshed out, this was the one question, above all others, that attracted the most attention, and the one question in relation to which the government received the greatest condemnation by those composing the audience we addressed. I had opposed to me, not only a very astute gentleman, who met me on every platform, but, along with him, the late Speaker of the House, who, as every one who was in the last parliament knows, can place any matter in which he takes an interest before an audience in the most plausible form. However, when this question came up—and it came up at every meeting—he could not defend the action of the government sufficiently well to raise any cry of assent from his followers ; on the other hand the people by their expressions, made clear their opinion that the government had been guilty of great wrong in the way they had handled the binder twine made in the Kingston penitentiary in the last four years. A government that had come into power with great professions of being a business government, ought to have managed an institution which required only good business ability in a manner that would have carried out, to some extent at least, the pledges they made to the people during the years preceding the year 1896. We all know that if there was one thing for which the members of the government took credit, one ground upon which they appealed to the people, it was that, if returned to power, they would do all they could to crush the combine. We all know, that for twenty years, that was one of the principal cries of the hon. gentlemen when in opposition. I can well remember speeches made by leading Liberal members of this House, as well as speeches of their prominent supporters throughout the country, denouncing combines in the strongest terms. One would naturally expect that, when returned to power, they would take every opportunity to carry out their promises, not only on this point, but others as well. There were many of these promises made that everybody knew to be incapable of fulfilment. But this question of binder twine was one over which they had full control. Here was an opportunity to smash a combine, an opportunity to carry out at least one of the many pledges they had made. They had it in their power, in selling this binder twine, to regulate to a large extent the price at which this commodity was sold to the farmers. Some hon. gentlemen may say that the government control only one-tenth of the quantity used in Canada, and that by reducing the price of that small percentage, they could not keep down the price of the whole product. Any man who has been engaged in business will know very well that if one-tenth of a given product is placed upon the market in a judicious manner, it will have a tendency to bring down the price of the whole. If this five hundred tons that the government manufacture annually had been placed upon the market in a judicious manner, it would have influenced the price of all the twine sold to the farmers. But, instead of that, they sold it in such a manner—taking no precautions—that those who purchased it, were enabled to make a profit evidently of about one hundred per cent. We have the proof of that in the fact that the Brantford binder twine factory were enabled to pay a dividend of 100 per cent one year and of half that on an average for two other years, besides that the price at which the twine was sold each year was not more than half the average selling price throughout the country. The government knowing, as they ought to have known, that they had it in their power to implement, even in a small degree, the pledges they had made, they ought to receive—as they did receive in the province of Ontario—the condemnation of the people for their management of the binder twine factory in Kingston. But the past is gone ; the future is before us. What action do the government intend to take in the future ? The motion of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is that the government should sell this twine to the farmers at an advance of one cent per pound on the cost. I am not one of those who believe in revolutionary measures or undue interference with trade. I think it is not the province of the government, under ordinary circumstances, to interfere to any great extent with trade. But, during the past four years, there has been an extraordinary occasion, an occasion when it was evident there was a strong combination amongst the twine manufacturers to raise the price of twine unduly. Here was the opportunity ; and it seems to me that it would have been proper for the government to have adopted what might be called even a revolutionary measure. I would not ask them to do that in the future, but I would ask them to place the twine on the market as any business corporation would, to sell it as the large manufacturers of twine would sell it, either direct to the farmers or to the retail merchants. And, in order to prevent the charging of extortinate prices to the farmers, let them make an agreement with the retail dealers that, if they sell it, it shall not be in excess of a certain price. The Brantford binder twine people claim that, though they have made these large profits, they have never sold the twine at more than 1 cent per pound advance on the cost. Whether that is true or not, I do not know. But, in any case, let the government sell the twine to the retail dealers or farmers at such an advance on the cost as will enable the government to have a small profit, say of 10 per cent. That would be a fair profit for any manufacturer, and I think that any manufacturer would be satisfied with it. I know that the government will say that they offered this twine to the farmers, and that the effort was not a success, that it cost the government a good deal to advertise, and that the farmers bought only a small quantity. Well, there are ways and there are ways. It is easy for a government or a corporation, if they wish to take a certain course, to put obstacles in the way of every course that might otherwise be adopted. The government ought to form its plans as a corporation would form theirs. Any corporation could find ways and means of placing this twine upon the market and getting it in the hands of farmers and retail merchants without this high percentage of expense.

I notice in the first year the government offered it to the farmers it cost 50 per cent of what was sold to them for advertising the offer and the next year, last year, it cost 10 per cent of the total sale for the same item. There are ways that the government can easily find if they wish to place this twine in the hands of the farmers without an extraordinary cost for selling. It is not my duty nor the duty of any gentleman of the opposition to dictate to the government the method that they should follow in disposing of the twine, any business corporation can do it, and any business government ought to be able to do it. It seems to me that this article so commonly in use by the farmers ought to be sold in such a way that they would not be pillaged, as I am bound to say they have been pillaged during the past four years through the binder twine combination in this country. I maintain that the electors were right in condemning the government for their course in this matter. The government had it in their power to prevent this combination, they had their hands on the lever, and could have used that lever to prevent this condition of things arising. They did not do it, and they received the condemnation of the electors in Ontario for their course upon this subject, and I am bound to say this question had more to do with their defeat in that province than any other question.

Now, it may be said, I know it will be said, that the government did all that any government could do when they took the duty off twine. It will be said, as it was said in the campaign preceding November 7, that the government took the duty off twine, and what more could they do ? Well, it is true they took the duty off twine, and I am obliged to condemn them for doing that, as I did all through the campaign. I maintain it was a great injury to the people of this country. Surely 10 per cent was not too high a protective duty on twine. Hon. gentlemen opposite believe in a revenue tariff, so I am told ; well, 10 per cent is surely not more than a revenue tariff. The farmers of the country never asked this duty to be taken off entirely ; the farmers of this country are not beggars and paupers that they desire to be placed in a different position from any others of their fellow citizens. They were quite willing and are always willing to bear their fair share of the taxation of this country. Ten per cent is not an excessive taxation, even if the farmers paid the whole of it, which I deny. But if the farmers paid a portion of that 10 per cent in 1898 and of the 12½ per cent in 1896, they were quite willing to do so, and to bear their fair share of taxation. But they did not ask for this duty to be taken off. Who did ask for it ? Why, the government simply took it off to catch their votes. It was not taken off because there was any demand for it, the duty was a small duty, and it was taken off to catch the farmers' votes. Now, what was the result ? While that duty was on, the twine we used was mostly manufactured in this country. We imported last year under the 10 per cent tariff, 3,364,000 pounds of twine. Even the ten per cent duty, small as it was, was sufficient to enable the manufacturers of twine in this country to live and to make most of the twine we used, giving employment to a large number of men and to a certain amount of capital. These manufacturers in turn afforded a market for a considerable portion of the perishable products of this country that cannot be conveniently exported. Now what was the result of taking off the duty ? The twine factories were closed up all but one or two of them, and in 1899, instead of importing 3,000,000 pounds, we imported over 10,000,000 pounds of twine, that is to say, a large portion of what was previously made in this country was thus made on the other side of the line, giving employment to men and capital there instead of to our own people and to our own capital. Now what was the result ? Was it to reduce the price of twine ? I presume the hon. gentlemen who proposed and carried out that measure believed it would have that result, but the result was quite the opposite, and naturally so. Similar results often flow from such legislation. The removal of the duty caused the downfall of certain factories that had been in operation in Canada, and the handling of the twine fell into the hands of the large combines that exist in almost every article on the other side of the line. As soon as they obtained control of the manufacture here, and our factories were mostly closed, they raised the price of twine, and have kept it up ever since. I am sorry to say that apparently this government has been acting in collusion with them in creating a condition of things under which they could pillage the farmers to the extent of 3, 4 and 5 cents a pound on their twine. This amounts to a considerable sum in the aggregate each year. We import 10,000,000 pounds of twine ; I do not know how much was made in this country by the Brantford people. There was a million pounds made in Kingston, and probably fifteen or sixteen million pounds of twine are used in this country altogether. Four cents per pound upon that quantity would be a matter of $600,000, and I am bound to say the farmers of this country during the past three years have lost at least two million dollars on the binder twine they have bought in consequence of the action of this government. I think it is the duty of the government at once to declare their intention with regard to what they propose to do in the manufacture and sale of binder twine the coming year. It is a matter which cannot long be delayed, and if they intend to take a certain course they should take it immediately. The agents of the Brantford factory and of the United States factories are already taking orders throughout the country, and if the government intend the coming season to offer this twine to the farmers in a way that will enable them to purchase it in quantities according to their needs, they should announce their policy at once. This is an important question to the farmers of this country, and they are anxious to know what the government proposes to do.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). No doubt, Mr. Speaker, you wish to collect the opinions of the members from various parts of the House. Those hon. gentlemen who speak from the front benches speak so frequently and debate so keenly the subjects which are brought to your attention that no doubt you are often puzzled to ascertain the true sense of the House and of the country. From the serener atmosphere which we occupy on the rear benches we can look down upon the troubled arena below us, and form our opinions in a more judicial and in a calmer manner. Indeed, those gentlemen before us, from the heat of their arguments, would almost appear to us as partisans. I was interested in the first discussion that took place on this subject to hear from gentlemen of the opposition the remark reiterated with a good deal of fervour that they did not wish in the slightest degree to embarrass the government. I propose to return the compliment, and to say that in the few remarks which I intend to offer to my brother farmers in the House, I do not desire in any way to embarrass the opposition. In the part of the country from which I come we have not the advantage of living near the penitentiary, which some hon. gentlemen opposite have. Nor am I like that periodical, fair weather farmer, who announced that he farmed two months in summer only, and went far from the 'maddening crowd' in that season only, to revel in the cool airs and quiet of the country. We and my brother farmers in Nova Scotia, have to farm summer and winter for a livelihood. I have said that I did not wish in the slightest degree to embarrass the opposition. We have, in our part of the country, Sir, one of those odious combines which manufactures cordage and incidentally also manufactures binder twine. I do not have any wish to embarrass the opposition in this, but I would say that the learned leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), out of his hundred odd majority, had a hundred of his majority from that institution which manufactures binder twine. We heard from him how the sentiment of this House operates upon the degree of profit which they hope to get from the country by the manufacture of this twine. I opine that the gentlemen who have advocated this measure have no doubt done so with the desire that their fellow-farmers in the country shall participate in the benefits derived from the decrease in the price of this article, to the amount that the government manufactures at its factory at Kingston. To the extent that they partake in that consumption, they reduce the sum which these combinesters and others can extract from the horny-handed sons of toil in the country. I have said that I think the farmers benefit, certainly to some extent, by the amount which the government factory reduces the price of the binder twine supplied to the farmers. Well, now, I believe it is a fact, and I believe it is the sentiment of the hon. gentleman who supported this measure, and who addressed us yesterday afternoon. Let us see how he has carried out that idea. In this resolution, he has said that this binder twine is to be sold in the manner prescribed in this resolution, and in no other manner. I think, without revealing state secrets, that I may declare that some of the binder twine factories obtained their dividends during the past year by borrowing money. We all know that the price of the raw commodity has increased twofold, if not fourfold. It is the intention of the combines and the operators of factories, as the prices of the raw commodity decrease, to place that upon the market, no matter what price it obtains. If the government have laid in a supply of raw material, either of the manila hemp, or sisal, to manufacture this article, they have it laid in at the high prices of the present time. Not only is the price of the raw material double, or fourfold what it was previously, but the rate of freight is about double that which obtains under ordinary circumstances. When the government factory supplies my brother farmers with that commodity, it is to be remembered that they have had the raw material laid in at a high rate, and that they have had to pay a higher rate of freight, and they are bound, in addition, to charge a specific sum, increasing the cost of the article to the consumers of the country. If the combinesters put their heads together, finding that this resolution has been passed, they will sell their commodity a little cheaper than the rate at which the government can manufacture it, they will hold the market and grind my fellow-farmers in the west and east by high prices, and the government cannot sell their commodity unless they lose money upon it. If they did lose money upon it, would not the Argus eyes of the opposition be turned upon them, and would not they inveigh against the loss of the public money? It would be like a thunderstorm among a flock of young turkeys, It would smell to high heaven just like that $1.50 barrel of onions that an hon. gentleman referred to the other evening. Then, the government factory would be bound to sell its own twine. Here is the House putting a specific sum upon that binder twine, the combinesters would reduce the price to secure control of the market, and my fellow-farmers would be ground between the upper and nether millstones, exposed to all the ex-actions which this unprincipled combination could put upon them in the shape of raising the price of their binder twine. That is something that should be avoided. I do not believe the hon. gentlemen meant to ask the House to adopt what is contained in their resolution, and in order that we may come to their rescue, I propose this amendment. The combinsters will set the price of their article at 5 or 10 per cent profit, because they have 10 or 20 per cent profit upon the raw material, and they are prepared for twelve or twenty-four months to sell below cost, in order to obtain the market. They will have a sliding scale to go upon, and the government, being bound hand and foot, will not be able to aid the farmers by competition. I will move in amendment, if it is the desire of the farmers to have competition between the government factory and the private operator, to add these three words after the word 'with,' in the 5th line: 'not more than,' so that it will read: 'with not more than one cent per pound added.' That will give an opportunity to the government to act upon the good old rule of trade, to supply the article according to the demand, and regulate the price by the competition which will take place throughout the country. If this is to be the desire, honestly expressed, with no intention to embarrass the government, or to produce any political effect, with a sliding scale by which the government can compete with others, the price of binder twine, before twelve months have passed, will be reduced one-half to the farmers of the country, and they will reap all the benefit.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). Mr. Speaker, it would be hardly expected that I should remain quiet while a subject of so much magnitude was being discussed in this House. Representing, as I do, a constituency in which there are two binder twine factories, you would naturally suppose that I should know something about the subject of binder twine.

Mr. GANONG. Are you a shareholder also?

Mr. HEYD. I am sorry to say that the hon. gentlemen who have discussed this question, have discussed it without that intimate knowledge of the binder twine business that is absolutely necessary in order to have an intelligent comprehension of the subject that is now before us. In order to relieve the mind of my hon. friend (Mr. Ganong), who fancies that I may have a financial object in view, I may tell him that I have not a five-cent piece of interest in any binder twine establishment in this country, but, while I have no personal interest in binder twine, I have the interest in the binder twine industry that every Canadian citizen should have, and I am free to confess that the only words that appeal to my mind that were addressed by the speaker from the other side, were those in which he condemned the government for taking off the duty on binder twine. With those words I sincerely agree. I think it was a mistake. I believe that the binder twine industry, like every other industry in this country, should be protected from undue competition from outside, and that it, like every other industry, should have the right to live in this country of ours. I believe that this industry, like every other, should be made to pay a duty on every pound of twine that comes into this country. I agree with our friends on the other side in that. Now, then, I approach the subject not as a politician, not with a desire to embarrass the government, not with a desire to contradict a truthful word that may have been spoken by hon. gentlemen opposite, but I approach it as a business proposition. We are manufacturing twine at the Kingston penitentiary, and how are we going to handle that product in such a way as to result in the greatest benefit to the consumers of binder twine, and at the same time to produce it at the least cost to the taxpayers of this country. I propose to approach that business question as a business man, and I shall try to put myself in the position of a man who is going to invest his money in that concern with the expectation of realizing a reasonable dividend out of his investment. The speeches made by gentlemen on the other side of the House have been apparently made for the purpose of discrediting the government, and of appealing to the prejudices, and sometimes to the parsimony of our farming friends. The question arises here as to what consuming power we have in this country for binder twine. The Trade and Navigation Returns show that last year there was entered for consumption in Ontario 3,900,000 pounds of binder twine, at 12 cents a pound; in the province of Manitoba 3,400,000 pounds at 10 cents a pound, and in the whole Dominion there were 8,000,000 pounds of twine entered at 11 cents a pound. The prices given are from the invoices of the merchants, who swore to them when the twine was entered. Let us deal with a proposition which represents an importation of 8,000,000 pounds of binder twine, or 4,000 tons. Now, according to the calculations of those familiar with the subject that 4,000 tons is about five-tenths of the total quantity consumed in Canada, or in other words, we import about half the actual quantity used. Eight million pounds of binder twine are imported from the United States, and that comes into direct competition with the twine that is manufactured in this country, which amounts to another 4,000 tons, including the product of the Kingston and Toronto prisons. Let us realize that the government manufacture of twine would represent about 5 per cent of the total consumption. Last year we produced 408 tons, not 500 tons—and in the discussion of this question there has been a looseness which shows that the gentlemen who spoke have not carefully considered the various phases of this problem. With a producing capacity of about 5 per cent of the quantity needed, it is proposed here that we should proceed to regulate the price of binder twine in Canada. I appeal to any business man in this House if it is feasible, in view of this fact, that we could obtain the results which we are asked to achieve. Are we likely to bring down the price of binder twine because we, the Dominion of Canada, inject into a consumption of 8,000 tons, about 5 per cent. I say that from the standpoint of a business man, who is going to invest his money in that business, that I would not put a dollar into an undertaking that could only control 5 per cent of the total consumption.

Then when we have solved this problem, the question presents itself: How are we going to sell this twine which we produce at Kingston. We have gone into the business for various reasons, but I shall not now deal with the history of our connection with it. The Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Mills) says that we went into the business for the purpose of giving these young prisoners who are not wicked by inheritance an opportunity to learn a trade whereby, in after life, they might make an honest livelihood. I can tell the Minister of Justice that the man who works on a twine machine in the Kingston penitentiary is no better qualified to earn a living when he gets out than he was the day he went into the penitentiary, because the clumsy fingers of the prisoner who has been accustomed to wheeling bricks and carrying mortar, will never be able to compete with the deft fingers of the Canadian girls, who can produce twine better in quality, and in twice the quantity, that these prisoners can. There is no justification in that argument of the Minister of Justice, because the convict can never earn his living by making twine when he gets out of the penitentiary. It would be a legitimate argument to say that we have gone into the business in order to provide occupation for the prisoners. It is the duty of the government to give these prisoners; these forsaken ones; these men who have inherited the evil tendencies of their progenitors, an opportunity in this world to employ the faculties with which God has endowed them. To that extent I sympathize with the attempt to provide employment for these prisoners in their leisure hours. It is, however, a great fallacy to expect that these men will be able to earn a living by making binder twine from the knowledge of the trade they acquire in the penitentiary.

I desire to say one or two words with reference to the remarks which have been made by gentlemen on the other side of the House, in order to show the unfairness of the motives that apparently animate these hon. gentlemen. If they were honest they would at least be truthful. In a question of this kind we want facts. We do not want imagination; we do not want talk about combines; we do not want the experience of these so-called farmers, who for only three months in the year vegetate upon the land. We want something you can rely upon when you begin to add up figures and declare a dividend on the business you have done in the past year. The hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution says we will overcome the whole difficulty by simply adopting his motion which says that we shall sell to the farmers the binder twine at the actual cost of production plus 1 cent a pound. That is a business proposition, but let us look into it and see if it is feasible. We can find that out by ascertaining what other people pay for the labour involved in distributing 400 tons of twine. What have we to compete with in the selling of this twine? Do not make the mistake of supposing that we are going to run against people who do not understand their business. Much has been said about the Farmers' Binder Twine Industry of Brantford, and the mere fect that they have been enabled to pay the large dividends that have been referred to here, indicates that the Brantford factory is in the hands of men who thoroughly understand their business. The Farmers' Binder Twine Company has 4,000 stockholders, and it has about 600 agents, the qualifications of every one being thoroughly known. These men are out in the field to-day competing with us. How are we going to compete with an organization managed by the keenest business men of this country? The product of these mills is sold by the most skilful salesmen in the country at one cent per pound. The Farmers' Binder Twine Company pay their agents who are stockholders a commission of one cent a pound; they prepay the freight, assume all risk of loss, and trust the men who buy from them for five or six months or even a year. How are you going to get hard cash, and sell your binder twine at one cent a pound? There is the proposition. I guarantee that my hon. friend from West Toronto, who is a farmer for three months in the year, would not take stock at 2 cents on the dollar in such an undertaking. Leaving that aside, you find that the Deerings, the McCormacks and the Plymouth concern in the United States, have factories equipped with appliances to which ours in Kingston are as a rush light to the sun. If our people were wise, they would take every machine that is at Kingston and destroy it, and put in its place something that would be able to compete with the developments which have taken place in the past ten years. At the present time we have free trade with the United States in binder twine. We have not a little preserve within which we can say: Here is the Kingston twine; come, farmers, buy it. They are not going to buy it unless they can get it cheaper than they can get binder twine anywhere else; and we cannot produce it cheaper than these men do. Notwithstanding that they pay the full cost of the raw material and pay dividends to their shareholders, these companies can sell their twine to the consumer cheaper than the Kingston penitentiary under whatever devices we manage it. That is one of the peculiar features of this binder twine business. My hon. friend says that we are going to overcome that by simply selling the twine to the farmers at one cent above cost. When was that twine sold to the farmers at more than one cent above cost? We have heard a great deal about combines. There has been no combine in binder twine in Canada for years. We have heard gentlemen say that these companies have been able to divide 100 per cent dividends through the action of the government. What companies in Canada have done that? You would think there were fifty or sixty companies each dividing from 50 per cent in 100 per cent dividends among their shareholders. We have only two operating companies in Canada to-day: the Consumers' Company of Montreal, and the Farmers' Company of Brantford. These gentlemen talk about combines. What combine could you get up in Canada, which would be able to compete against the Deerings and the McCormacks and the Plymouth Companies? If it were not for the silliness of the proposition, and the serious consequences involved, and the attempt to make political capital out of it, it would be laughed out of court. There are not five business men on the other side of the House, who believe that the proposition now before us is practicable. It will not do what its friends propose to do. If they say, let the government make binder twine, and sell it to the farmers direct without the intervention of a middleman, I am with them. As a political move that would be the best thing the government could undertake. It would give us an opportunity to shout and say: See what the government are doing for the farmers; we are trying to kill out these great combinations, these great monopolies, and produce binder twine, and sell it to the farmers at cost. It would be a political move that anybody might adopt. But is it feasible? I say it is not. You cannot sell binder twine for one cent a pound, when the Brantford people are paying one and a half cents. I predict that if this resolution carries, and the attempt is made to sell the twine at one cent a pound, and only to farmers, it will have this result: in famine years, when binder twine is scarce, our agents will have at their side in distant parts of the country, men who are a good deal sharper than the farmers, and long before they know it, the twine will be bought up, and there will be an advance in the price. In years of plenty, when we have more twine than we know what to do with, it will not be sold, and we know how binder twine deteriorates in the process of keeping.

My opinion is that the government should consider this question seriously, and try to sell binder twine to the consumers at the least possible expense, doing away with the intervention of middlemen when possible. I hold as a business man that up to the present time the management of the sale of the product of the Kingston penitentiary has been a dead failure. It was worse under the old regime, because we lost money. Under the present regime, with all its imperfections, it has at least been able to declare a slight dividend. This is an important question, when you come to realize that the binder twine industry has had expended in its development a large sum of money. Those who are not familiar with what is going on do not realize that an attempt is being made to drive the Canadian companies out of the business. The Plymouth concern, which produces twenty times as much as the Brantford concern, the Deerings, the McCormacks, and the other great American binder twine producing concerns are trying to capture the Canadian market, and the one thing that has prevented the farmers of Canada during the last few years paying more for their binder twine has been this very company, the Brantford Binder Twine Company, and hon. gentlemen appear to be under the impression that they have made their money in an illegitimate way. I do not for a moment suppose that the conditions existing in the past two years are going to be permanent. There has been a condition of great fluctuation in prices, and business men, with business training and unlimited capital, have had opportunities to buy cheaply, have been able to make large sums of money. I said a year ago in this House that had the Brantford Binder Twine Co. sold their raw material and never made a pound of binder twine, they would have cleared $225,000. On an investment of that kind with a capital of only $65,000, it is easy to declare dividends of 90 per cent, 100 per cent and 60 per cent. When you come to realize that that company does a business of $300,000 a year on a capital of only $65,000, and with a dividend of only $6,500 a year, you see how easy it is to pile up and accumulate funds which at last must be divided. That accounts for these immense dividends, which are now inviting a competition in the binder twine industry that will end ultimately in the loss of every dollar invested, because I do not believe we can ever compete, in the circumstances in which we are placed, with the great manufacturers of the United States. My opinion is—and it is the opinion of a business man—that every dollar put into binder twine in Canada will ultimately be lost, no matter what action this government may take, unless they restore the duty ; and ultimately the manufacturers of the United States will do the binder twine trade business of this country no matter what efforts we may put forth at Kingston and at Toronto.

I want to impress upon the minds of our farmer friends here that the influence which has regulated the price of binder twine in this country for the past four or five years has never been any combine. There has never been a combine in this country in binder twine for ten years, and all those statements made by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) to the effect that the government have been conspiring with the binder twine companies and thus enabling them to declare 100 per cent dividends, are purely imaginative. The hon. gentleman has the reputation of being a business man, whose opinions on financial subjects are worthy of consideration ; but with all deference to his gigantic ability as a business man, his statements with respect to the connection of the government with these various binder twine industries, I would describe, if I did not know him so well, as the imaginations of a mind diseased. The hon. gentleman went on to say that by means of the conspiracy between this government and these great manufacturing industries, this great combine had declared dividends of 100 per cent. But who is this great combine ? Where are the factories that make it up ? Why, there are only two firms in the whole country—the Farmers Binder Twine Company and the Consumers Cordage Company—and they are diametrically opposed to each other. They are as opposite as the poles. The object of the hon. gentleman in making that statement was evidently to try and show that this government has been derelict in its duty and had conspired to advance the interests of its political friends.

But how could the government advance the interests of its political friends ? Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the Plymouths and the Deerings and the McCormacks, and the other great manufacturing establishments on the other side, are all a party to this combine ? To show how absurd is the statement, all you have to do is to look at what it actually costs to produce twine in the prison and then see what it was sold at. The figures given by the hon. gentleman are purely imaginary. It costs a great deal more to produce the binder twine than he stated. One gentleman says it costs 6¼ cents. That statement is not true. By referring to the Auditor General's Report and taking last year's purchase of supplies and dividing it into the amount that they actually cost, you will find that the raw material costs 7 cents per pound. And if you will take the 400 tons that were produced and divide them into the entire cost, you will find that it costs 8¾ cents per pound, and yet the hon. gentlemen who supported this resolution for the purpose of injuring the government, tell us that binder twine, which it costs 6¼ cents to produce, was sold to the farmers at 14 cents. Why did these hon. gentlemen take the highest figure ? But when hon. gentlemen have a political object to serve, they are not deterred by any little obstacles of that kind.

Up to the present the only sensible utterance pronounced was that of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson), who said that it is the duty of the government to put selling agents in the various townships of this country and sell, at the lowest possible cost of distribution, the output of the Kingston penitentiary to the actual consumers and do away with the middleman. That is a sensible proposition, which I commend to the judgment of the government. I hope the time will come when the government will be able to sell its binder twine direct to the farmer, so that if we are only able to supply one farmer out of twenty, he will get his binder twine at the lowest cost price. But what are you going to do with the other nineteen farmers ? How will you sell this twine so that there will be an equal distribution ? It is easy to get up and make academic speeches, but the moment you begin to sift every proposition from a business standpoint and see how you can make this thing operative, difficulties stare you in the face on every hand, and it is evident that since the Kingston penitentiary makes only 5 per cent of the binder twine consumed in this country, we cannot hope to make any impression on the price, and all these promises made are bound to result in failure. I intend to oppose this resolution because one cent per pound will not sell our manufacture of binder twine, because we will be fighting competitors who pay twice as much for selling and who have at their disposal more skilled binder twine salesmen than we can hope to secure. We will be bound, if that resolution carries, to meet failure the very first time we come into competition with these men. At the same time, I hope that this discussion will induce the government to consider the question and devise some means of removing this binder twine matter from the realm of politics and thus give our hon. friends opposite no excuse for saying that we are using that industry for the benefit of our friends. If the government are bound to sell the twine to the wholesalers, let them advertise in the public markets and sell to the highest bidder, whether he be Grit or Tory and thus remove the stigma these men are attempting to fasten on us. I have not the slightest doubt that the government can overcome the difficulty. There have been fabulous jumps in the market in the last two or three years and great opportunities to make money, but I have not the slightest doubt that when the industry assumes its ordinary condition, the government will be able to devise a scheme of disposing of the product of the Kingston penitentiary to the people who want it at the least possible expense to the country.

Mr. GEORGE STEPHENS (Kent, Ont.) I notice that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) said that when the Liberal government came into office, in August, 1896, they found all the twine on hand that had been made the previous year. I would like the hon. gentleman to tell me why this twine had not been sold for the harvest of 1896? Was it because the previous government had entered into a combine with the Consumers' Cordage Company, in order to allow that company to sell their whole output at 7½ cents per pound, which they did. The raw material had fallen from about 6 cents per pound to a little less than 4 cents. The twine could surely have been sold to the farmers in 1896. But the government did not sell any twine whatever that year. They had in the neighbourhood of 500 tons on hand. Twine had gone down from 16½ cents to 7½ cents, and was still declining, but the government held the twine, though it was manufactured and ready to go into the market. When the Liberal government took office on the 6th August, 1896, it was too late to sell that twine for the harvest of 1896. The hon. gentleman complains that this binder twine was kept over and sold at too cheap a price. I want to show him that some merchants in his county bought twine in 1897. And what did they pay for it? Mr. S. A. McCartney, of Alton, bought twine at 5½ cents; Messrs. Peaker & Son, Brampton, at 5½ cents; Mr. R. Hewson, Malton, 5½ cents; Mr. J. E. Harris, Cheltenham, 5½ cents and 6½ cents; Geo. McClellan, Cooksville, 5⅝ cents, and Messrs. Kelley & Marshall, Orangeville, 5⅝ and 6 cents. Now, this twine, the hon. gentleman says, was sold to Coll Bros. at 4¼ cents a pound. That, I believe, is a fact. But hon. members should bear in mind that the twine was a year old, and not of as good quality as that which was bought at 5½ cents. Any one who has handled binder twine knows that when it is carried over a length of time the quality depreciates. Twine that was sold at 4¼ cents at the penitentiary, allowing for freight and interest on the money for one year, was a good sale, as compared with twine delivered at the merchant's storehouse at 5½ cents per pound. I would like the hon. member for Peel to answer the question why this twine was not sold and used in the harvest of 1896.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). It is not my intention to prolong this debate a great length, but I cannot allow some of the statements made by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) to pass without some notice. He seeks to convey the impression to the House, and through the House, to the country, that the twine made in the Kingston penitentiary last year cost 8¾ cents per pound, instead of about 6 cents or 6½ cents per pound, as stated by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain); and, by that means he seeks to justify the government in placing that twine upon the market and selling it to the farmers of this country in quantities of less than one ton, at 14 cents per pound. Now, there need not be any question as to the actual cost of this twine to the government. We do not require to examine the cordage journals or any other journals, or to ascertain the price of manila in New York or any other place, to find just what the government had to pay for their raw material. We can go to the Auditor General's Report or the report of the Minister of Justice, and take the items under the head of Kingston Penitentiary. There we find exactly the figure the government paid for the raw material from which the twine sold to the farmer during the summer of 1900 was made. I find that these figures were correctly stated by the hon. member for Peel, who, by the way, I must say, made not only a very excellent speech, but a very carefully prepared speech, showing that he desired not to mislead the House or to misstate the case in any way. The hon. member for Peel stated that the government bought in 1899-1900, or the year preceding the 30th June, 1900, 140,335 pounds of manila hemp, at 5½ cents per pound, 123,344 pounds of manila hemp at 5½ cents, and 8,320 pounds at 9 cents. These were the only purchases made by the government during the whole twelve months preceding the 30th June last, and this is the raw material out of which the twine was made that was offered to the farmers of this country at 14 cents per pound. The average price of these 272,000 pounds, or 136 tons, of raw material, was $5.60 per hundred pounds. We all know that there is not a pound of raw manila in a pound of twine; at the most, there would not be more than 85 per cent of fibre in a pound even of pure manila twine. At that rate, the price of the raw material in a pound of twine would be 4·76 cents. To this, we will add the price of the cordage oil, which would not be more than 15 cents per hundred pounds of twine. In all, the cost of the raw material for a hundred pounds of manila twine would be $4.91. We are credibly informed by the Minister of Justice that this raw material can be converted into twine in the Kingston penitentiary at the rate of 75 cents per hundred pounds, or ¾ cent per pound. This makes the total cost of binder twine in Kingston penitentiary $5.96 per 100 pounds, or, say 6 cents per pound. Yet, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd), without giving us any data upon which to make the calculation, makes the assertion that it costs 8¾ cents per pound. I need not, and do not intend to prolong the debate by giving the average prices of the sisal, because that has not been brought very prominently into question. But, I do say that if the government offered to the farmers of this country the output of the Kingston penitentiary last year in quantities of less than one ton at 14 cents per pound, they were seeking to get too large a profit from the farmers, seeing that the cost to them was 6 cents per pound, the profit thus being over 125 per cent. Now, the hon. member for South Brant tells us, by way of excuse for the Brantford company, making such an enormous profit on the output of their factory, that they made that profit from the sale of raw material. But he does not tell us that they sold the raw material. He says had they sold the raw material without making it up they might have made a profit of $225,000. But there is an 'if' in it, they probably could not find a purchaser. It may be that in the late part of the season, for a few days or a few weeks, the price of the raw material rose rapidly to a high figure, but we have no assurance that the Brantford people could have sold the large quantity of raw material which they had at that large price, and no assurance that they could have realized the $225,000 out of their raw material because they had no purchasers for it. His plan of making a sale of binder twine in the Kingston penitentiary is one, I am sure, which this House will condemn. He says it should be put up at auction and sold to the highest bidder. Now, that is just what we do not approve of. You can rest assured that if the Kingston penitentiary output of binder twine was put up at auction to be sold to the highest bidder, a very good price indeed would be realized for it. American buyers would come in, I have no doubt, and purchase the whole output at a high price, knowing by that means they would destroy all competition and be able to get a high price for every pound of twine required by the farmers of this country. What we want is to retain in our own hands the entire output of the Kingston penitentiary, to keep it as a lever for the purpose of maintaining a level of prices. The hon. gentleman from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) says that 5 per cent is all that the Kingston penitentiary can turn out of the total requirements of Canada, and that 5 per cent of the total quantity would never control the price. But I think he destroys the whole force of his argument when he shows that the twine imported into this country last year cost 11 cents per pound. It appears from his statement that this 5 per cent, produced in this country, when put on the market by the government at 14 cents per pound, had the effect of enabling the American manufacturers of twine to raise their price up to 11 cents. I think that is clearly the case, and if the government, by inflating the price and holding back the twine from the farmers of this country, unless a very high price was paid for it, had the effect of enabling the American manufacturers to sell the twine required by the people of this country at an enormously increased price over its actual cost, I think that fact destroys the whole force of his argument. To my mind if we could judiciously manage the sale of this small quantity of twine, sell it only in small quantities, it would be quite sufficient to maintain a level of prices, and I know that was all that was expected by the late Sir John Thompson when the plant was installed in the Kingston penitentiary. It never was intended that the government should make money out of that twine business, that idea was entirely foreign to those who began this industry there. The sole intention was to use it for the purpose of preventing an undue inflation of price, and so long as we carefully guard the sale of this twine I believe that it is quite sufficient to maintain a control over the price of the entire requirements of the country. I repeat again, if putting the price of that twine at 14 cents a pound is sufficient to enable the American manufacturers to increase their price far beyond its value, on the other hand, retaining the control of the twine in our own hands and keeping it at a low price, will in the same manner affect favourably to the farmers the price of the remaining quantity of that twine which we are unable to produce in this country. I need not say that I should support the resolution of the hon. member for Peel. I think it is a motion in the right direction, and I hope the government will accept the resolution and be guided by its terms. I pay no attention to what the hon. member for South Brant says when he contends that the increase of 1 cent to cover the cost of selling the twine is not at all sufficient. I fear the hon. gentleman is putting in a word for his own constituents who are large manufacturers of twine, and that, although he pretends to be a friend of the farmer, he is desirous of enabling his constituents to obtain as big a price for their output as they possibly can, notwithstanding that the farming community will suffer in consequence.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Hon. Mr. Charles Fitzpatrick). I was unfortunately absent when this debate originated the other night, but I have read carefully the speeches that were made, and the conclusion to which I have come is that there is a great deal of inaccurate information in reference to the binder twine industry, either on the opposition benches or in the Department of Justice. The member for Grey made a specific statement which I think it necessary at the outset of my remarks to contradict; he made the statement that in 1900 the government sold binder twine to their own friends at 7¼ cents per pound, and that they sold it to the farmers at 14 cents a pound. The question as put to him directly by the Minister of Railways and Canals whether he intended to give to the House the information that they were selling the same twine at the same time at these different figures. The answer he made was : 'Yes, at the same time and the same quality of twine.' Now that is a serious statement, an extremely serious statement to make, because it necessarily implies dishonesty on the part of the officers of the government charged with the administration of this industry. To that statement I wish to give an absolute, unqualified, positive denial. What the hon. gentleman no doubt meant to say, because I would be loath to insinuate for a moment that a gentleman occupying the position he does in this House would attempt deliberately to mislead the House and the country—what no doubt the hon. gentleman intended to say was that in the year 1899 the output of the Kingston penitentiary was sold to Hobbs Hardware Co. by public tender, and sold to them without competition for 7¼ cents a pound; and that that twine, so sold in 1899 by public tender was delivered to them in 1900, and the delivery took place in 1900 at the price stipulated and paid in 1899. Their basis of comparison fails absolutely. In one instance you have got the twine that was sold in 1899, as I said a moment ago, by public competition at 7¼ cents a pound, at a time when the raw material was sold at 5½ cents a pound ; and on the other hand you have the twine that was sold at 14 cents a pound in 1900 at a time when raw material had actually gone from 5½ cents a pound up to 16 cents a pound, at certain dates in that year. Now it seems to me that in discussing a matter of this sort, and especially in discussing it in the interest of that important element of the community which is called the farming class, the least that element has a right to expect is an honest and fair statement.

I will now proceed to deal with the motion, and in speaking of that motion, I would state immediately that we have no quarrel with a portion of it. With a portion of it we cannot have a quarrel, because, since August 1899, we have been doing what that motion says we ought to do. Since August 1899, it has been open to the farming class of this country, who apply to the Kingston penitentiary direct to get binder twine in lots to suit them from the penitentiary, and at what price ? At the price of the raw material to which is added the cost of manufacture, and when the purchase is for less than ten pound lots, one cent a pound is added for profit. That has been the system since August 1899. It was in existence from August 1899, for the balance of that season, it was in existence throughout the whole of the season 1900, and it is well known to hon. gentlemen opposite, those who were here during the course of last session, and those who took cognizance of it but who were not here, that the information was given publicly in this House that the twine was disposed of in this fashion. I therefore say that we have no quarrel with that portion of my hon. friend's motion which asks that the government should go that far, because it is merely giving effect to that which we have been doing since August 1899. But, when it goes farther than that, and asks us to pass a motion that we should dispose of binder twine to the farmer at a price to cover the actual cost of the raw material and manufacture with one cent per pound added, and goes on to say that—

> No twine manufactured or paid for out of the Dominion treasury shall be sold or disposed of in any other way.

It is asking us to do a thing which, when my hon. friend comes to consider it, he will see is almost, I was going to say, absurd. Let us not deal with generalities, but with concrete facts. I said a moment ago, that we disposed of our binder twine to the farmer. What happened last year ? At the end of the season, the 1st of August, 1900, we had not disposed of more than half of the whole output for the year. We had half of the output still on hand. What are we going to do with that—keep it over until next year, when it will become practically valueless, and then dispose of it to the farmer, because, if this motion is adopted, we are not free to dispose of it in any other way ? This motion goes too far, as my hon. friend must see at a glance. It is all very fine to ask that we should dispose of this to the farmer, but, why is it that we cannot get the farmer to deal with us ?

Mr. MACLEAN. You hay forked the farmer once ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He was hay forked once no doubt. Probably my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) knows when and under what circumstances. He has no doubt a knowledge of the transaction. How is it that we cannot get the farmer to deal with us ? We have offered this twine to him on the conditions specified by my hon. friend in his motion. Last year half of the output of the penitentiary was left on our hands. I think my hon. friend might go further; when he says that we shall be obliged to give all the twine to the farmer and no one else, he should adopt the other branch of the argument, and so be strictly logical, and say that so long as we have to dispose of the twine to the farmer, the farmer must deal with us, or that he shall find us a purchaser. I said that we disposed of this twine at the cost of the raw material, adding to it the cost of manufacture, and adding one cent a pound. Hon. gentlemen opposite undertook to tell us that the farming class were practically buncoed, to use an expression which I would borrow from the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), by the government in connection with the sale of binder twine; that is to say that they paid much more for their twine than should have been legitimately asked of them. My hon. friend ought to bear in mind that binder twine is a marketable commodity like any other. When you put it on the market, the price has to be regulated by the law of supply and demand, and in order that the House may determine whether or not the farming community paid more for their twine than they ought to have paid, it is necessary to examine the prices at which others dealing in the same commodity in the same market disposed of their article. Let me point out how that applied. The government had no monopoly of this twine. They were competing in the market with others. What did we find? We found this circular was issued at the time we were disposing of our twine to the farmers, issued by a concern that sells what they call the Plymouth Binder Twine. These gentlemen are dealing with the Kingston output:

In the hope of moving the accumulated stock of twine at Kingston penitentiary, the warden has again reduced prices, but thus far there has been no visible increase in their orders. With few exceptions, the farmers of Ontario, remembering past experiences, are apparently not willing to take chances with convict-made twine, or they do not consider the penitentiary article as a bargain, no matter how low the price; otherwise, that twine should have been disposed of as rapidly as made, as the government's price has been, all season, from 1 to 2 cents per pound below the market quotations for twine of reputation.

That is what has taken place, and that is evidence of those who are competing with us in the same market. It is that we are selling this twine from one to two cents per pound less than our competitors, and yet we are told that we are endeavouring to impose on the farmers.

Mr. BLAIN. At what date was that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The date marked on it here in writing is August, 1900. My hon. friends have referred to the origin of this industry at Kingston. They have told us that the intention was to start this industry for the purpose of regulating the price of binder twine in Canada. Bear in mind that the output of Kingston penitentiary is 500 tons a year, and that the amount of binder twine used in Canada, is about 8,000 tons. We import over ten million pounds free of duty. How far are you going to regulate the price of binder twine with the amount we have at our disposal, it is impossible for me to see. But, we are also told that the intention of the government, when this binder twine factory was started in 1894, was that it should be used exclusively for that purpose, that it was not to be looked upon as a business industry to be dealt with on business principles. Let me draw the attention of my hon. friend to what took place in July, 1894, when this question was under discussion. At that time Mr. Davin asked that the government should pay the freight on the binder twine up to the North-west, and Sir John Thompson, then Minister of Justice, said:

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should very much like to be able to do so, but I am afraid I cannot make such a promise. Companies already engaged in the binding twine business are in the habit of paying the freight as far west as Owen Sound, but we would not be able, without involving loss and without calling on parliament to make good that loss, to pay the freight on binding twine sent to the North-west Territories.

There is no suggestion there that this is to be dealt with on any other principle but a business principle.

Mr. MULOCK. I should like to ask if binding twine is being sold under cost?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, it is not. I mentioned the rates the other day, and I forget them for a moment, but binding twine is not being manufactured under cost—the price covers the cost, and an allowance for the labour of the prisoners.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that calculated as free labour, or as convict labour?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As convict labour, 50 cents per day, because their hours are shorter and work lighter than free labour. The product is sold at a price covering the cost of the material, also interest on the expenditure for plant, allowance for deterioration, and everything that enters into the calculation of a private manufacturer.

Mr. MULOCK. Except the labour.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not excepting the labour, but excepting free labour prices. We charge for the labour, but less than free labour prices.

Mr. MULOCK. A question here arises with respect to goods manufactured by convict labour, and the prices at which they are put upon the market. The government are calculating the price at convict rates, and are placing convict labour in competition with free labour. There is a large question involved; and I do not wish to enter into it now, but I want to be sure as to what is the practice of the government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That question does not arise in this instance. The labour is computed at 50 cents per day, and it is w rth no more than that. Convict labour terminates in winter at four or five o'clock in the afternoon; the prisoners are also later in beginning work, and the work is lighter than with free labour. In addition, I may say that we are selling the product at the same prices as the Central Prison in Toronto, the firm at Brantford, and the Consumers' Cordage Company, although I have not made an agreement with any of them.

That does not look as if Sir John Thompson was regulating the price of the output. He was selling it at the same price that these competitors were seling their product at, and we forsooth are blamed because we are selling it at one or two cents a pound less than our competitors. Now, since 1886, how have we dealt with this output of binder twine? It has been not only suggested, but it has been made a matter of positive statement that in 1896 the output of the Kingston penitentiary was disposed of to friends of the government at a figure less than it cost to produce it. That is charged against us. Let us look how this twine industry was dealt with previous to 1896. Let us see how those who charge us to-day with dereliction of duty acted themselves, and how many of these gentlemen protested against the action of the Conservative government.

This industry was started at Kingston in 1894. It first began by installing the plant and the people of this country were made to pay $40,000 for a plant that cost the contractor in the vicinity of $18,000.

Mr. FRASER. They were preparing for the elections of 1896 then.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, this was previous to the elections of 1896. Not only did the people of Canada pay the figure I have mentioned, but they paid it notwithstanding that the government had called for tenders and that they had a tender for a plant of the same sort for $20,000.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure that the hon. gentleman will do himself the justice to produce the evidence of the statement he has made. The Solicitor General made a similar statement last session and he expected the House to accept it without giving any proof beyond the mere statement itself.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Last session I made the statement and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) did not contradict me, but some one on the other side suggested that perhaps my statement was incorrect. What did I answer? I said the public accounts are there open to you.

Mr. CLANCY. No.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to be allowed to proceed. This system of interruption I am not going to stand just at the present time. Last session, when a similar objection was made, I suggested that this matter should be referred to the Public Accounts Committee, and I challenged the hon. gentleman to bring it before the committee. I then said that I would produce Mr. Mackey, the auditor, from Toronto, who was specially charged in connection with the suit—to which I shall have occasion to refer later on—with the examination of these accounts, and who would produce the invoices to prove the statement I made. The challenge I made then I repeat now. I say that this matter would be better dealt with before either the Public Accounts Committee or the Committee on Agriculture, where we would have an opportunity to bring witnesses and to prove the statements I have made. That is the place to deal with this question, and not here where we have all sorts of vague statements made by gentlemen on the other side of the House, arising from what I must at least call imperfect knowledge.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It is very kind of you to call it that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The very same year that this twine industry was inaugurated in Kingston let us see what became of the output. Was it sold to the farmers of this country or was it sold to the combine? I charge that in 1894, when the industry was first started, the output of that year was sold to Mr. John Connor, who at that time was the moving spirit in the binder twine combine in Canada. Mr. Connor was the man who controlled the whole of the twine industry in Canada. It was sold to him, and he entered into possession of it. He sold it as he thought best throughout the country in the interest of the combine. And then, what occurred? At the end of the year after he had got possession of our twine he owed us for the output of 1894 something like $6,000.

Mr. CLANCY. You once said it was $20,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Oh, I am going to show you in a few minutes that it was $53,000. There is no use in confuting these facts with me to-night. That was in 1894, and 1895 what happened? The output of the penitentiary in 1895 was sold to the same Mr. John Connor, notwithstanding that in the previous year he was indebted in the sum I have mentioned. In the month of June, 1895, he had received on account of sales made of this twine which belonged to us and for which he had not paid us one farthing; he had received $28,000. In August he got another $5,000, making it $33,000, and when the month of December of that year came around he was indebted to the government for the twine he had actually received during that season in a sum amounting to something like $40,000. And how did the government settle with him? Notwithstanding that he had received the money and put it in his pocket in the interval, he was settled with by taking notes from him. All that in the interests of the farmers of course. But that is not all. That goes on until the month of March, 1896. In that month it is found that there is such a thing as a Public Accounts Committee in the House of Commons. It is discovered that perhaps a question can be put with reference to the industry, and what happens? Then Mr. Connor makes an assignment of certain claims which he has, in order to refund the government apparently the amount of money he had received during the year for the binder twine output of the Kingston penitentiary.

Then what happened? You see that up to that time we were dealing with Connor, who had sold the output of 1894, and that of 1895, and had paid something on the output of 1894, and for 1895 had paid out $174, on an output of $153,000. These gentlemen, who had the interest of the farmers so much at heart, could not deal with Connor any more; that would be too barefaced; and in 1896 what do they do? They look around, and in place of Connor, they take Patrick Kelly, the chief clerk of the Brantford industry, and constitute him the agent for the sale of the binder twine output of that year. What does Kelly do ? He makes a bargain in March. Then March goes by ; April, May, June, and July go by. Up to the change of government in July, Mr. Kelly never thought proper to carry out his contract, and the binder twine of that year was all stored at Kingston. The season went by ; the combine had accomplished their purpose ; our twine was bound up ; and the market was free to them. And yet these gentlemen talk about combines.

But that is not all. They were not content with tying up the product of 1896 in the manner I have described, and keeping it out of the market for the benefit of their friends of the combine by storing it away in the storehouse of the Kingston penitentiary. They then deliberately rise up and tell us that that twine which they had arranged to dispose of in the fashion I have described, remained on our hands to become practically valueless. We sold it at less than it cost, and they make that a crime in us. Assurance has limits at times, but it does not appear to have many in the present instance. Do you realize what it means? You have this binder twine stored in the spring of 1896 ; we come in in July, 1896 ; we find a million pounds of this binder twine in the Kingston penitentiary, stored away ; the time had gone by to dispose of the output of the season. August was not the time to dispose of it. We then endeavoured to force upon Kelly the execution of his contract. He had promised to give security that he would faithfully perform his obligations under the contract, and so forth. The next thing we heard was that this clerk of the combines had disappeared and left the country. We were left in September or October with this binder twine ; and then what did we do ? Our opponents say that we sold it to friends of ours. We advertised publicly in the newspapers for tenders for the purchase of the output. We disposed of it by competition. Coll Bros. were the highest tenderers. There were three tenderers : Wood, Vallance & Co., the Hobbs Hardware Co., and Coll Bros., who were the highest, and who got the twine. And from that time up to the first of August, 1899, the output of each year was disposed of in the same fashion, that is to say, by public competition, tenders being called for.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him if the output of 1898 was disposed of in that way ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. MONK. There were public tenders invited, or was it sold to Bate & Co. without tender ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Tenders were called for.

Mr. MONK. By circular or by public advertisement ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. By circular.

Mr. NORTHRUP. By private circular ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. By private circular.

Mr. NORTHRUP. And that is the government's conception of public advertisement ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In 1898 circulars were issued, and the product was sold to Bate & Son. Competition took place between Bate & Son, the Hobbs Hardware Co., and Coll Bros. again. These were the only persons, besides Wood, Vallance & Co., who tendered in the previous year in answer to the public advertisement. But perhaps my hon. friend would be interested to know that when we came into power in 1896 about $50,000 was due us in connection with the output of two years previous, and it took us four years to collect the money. We had to sue for it and carry it through the courts for four years.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask another question ? I would like to know if the invoices in connection with the disposal of the output of 1898 were not made out to the Hobbs Hardware Co., and if the Hobbs Hardware Co. did not pay for the output ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not aware of that. I am not concerned with the private dealings of Bate & Son, or with how they disposed of the product.

Mr. MONK. That was not my question. I am speaking of the dealing with the department.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know any further than I have stated.

Mr. MONK. The information we have is that it was so disposed of.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It may be. I do not say that the information the hon. gentleman has is not correct. The output was sold and the money paid. The output was not given to an agent to collect the money, and the money carried in his pocket for twelve months, a note taken for the amount, and the money never paid.

These are in general terms the condition of this binder twine industry. Hon. gentlemen opposite took it in hand, they burdened it at its inception by paying for the installation of the plant 100 per cent more than it ought to have cost. They added to that their mismanagement of the output of 1894, 1895 and 1896. Then, after we came in, we disposed of the output of each year by public tender until August, 1899, when we made it a condition that the farmers should have the right to come in and make their purchases in lots to suit themselves. This has been continued during the present year, and it is now a question to determine what shall be done next year. Notwithstanding the facilities given to the farmers to make these purchases in the manner I have described, half the output or thereabouts remained on our hands on the 1st of August last. How shall that be disposed of at the end of the year ? Shall it be disposed of at a sacrifice ; and, if the farmers will not buy the twine themselves, are we to keep it there or force it upon them in spite of themselves ?

I have stated all the facts in connection with this matter, and I repeat that the place to investigate this question, as it is one of facts and figures, is either the Public Accounts Committee, the Committee on Agriculture or a special committee. Establish the facts once and for all, and settle the position of the government with respect to their dealings with this industry, and it will be found that the only object the government have had has been that for which the industry was originally created, that is to say, to give employment to the inmates of the Kingston penitentiary, and then to dispose of the product at an honest, fair price, so that the public of this country shall not be burdened with any portion of the cost.

It seems to me, and I am sure that the farming community agree with the others in this respect, that no one class can be burdened in order that another may be benefited. It is not the desire of the farming community that we should run this at a loss to the public generally in order that they may be benefited. What they ask is that they should have an opportunity to buy the product at the cost of the raw material, plus the cost of manufacture, and something in the way of an addition to cover a reasonable remuneration in return.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I was a little surprised at the remarks which fell from the lips of my hon. and eloquent friend the Solicitor General, as although in one sense strictly professional, in another they were hardly such as I would expect to hear from a gentleman so quite up to date as he is. It is an old rule—so old that I thought it had become obsolete—that when the facts and the evidence are against you, be sure and oppose the attorney opposite. But, it seems to me that when a deliberative body such as this is asked to consider a simple proposition, which in no way reflects on the administration, but which simply suggests, in the interests of the people, a wiser way of conducting a certain industry, a gentleman occupying the position of the Solicitor General would have endeavoured to contribute something to assist the House in arriving at an intelligent conclusion as to whether the system proposed was better than that hitherto followed. I venture to say that at present we might just as well discuss the events of a hundred years ago, as those of five or six years ago, even when these touch the binder twine industry.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem amused, but, perhaps, they do not care to have the events of the last four or five years discussed. But even admitting their contention that the system now followed is that which they inherited from their predecessors, that is no answer to the argument that the plan now proposed is an improvement on that which has been in vogue in the past.

We owe the hon. the Solicitor General thanks for telling us that from the time the present administration came into power the whole output of the penitentiary was put up to public competition. But this public competition was invited, not by means of advertisements in the newspapers, but by private circulars, and this is the hon. gentleman's idea of public competition. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how many of these private circulars were sent out, and who were the parties that were favoured with them.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give the exact number.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Would the number be two or three or four ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. About five or six.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Here again we have an interesting piece of information and it shows what a different meaning may be attached by the hon. gentleman to certain words, compared with that ordinarily given them. I should have thought that the word 'circular' was a word, the use of which would depend a good deal upon the number that had been sent out. Supposing only one had been sent out it would be perfectly clear, it would be more properly called a letter. If it was only two that were sent out it would still be clear that it was only a letter, and that the word 'circular' would be out of place as applied to it. And I venture to say that the great majority of people would think that if five or six letters were sent out privately to friends of the government, it would be hardly a fair description of the action of the government to say that this was advertising for public competition. But I rose mainly because a question was asked that I thought I could, in some part, answer. The Solicitor General asked why the farmers declined to deal with the government. A suggestion with regard to this was given by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). I venture to give another. Last year—I cannot give the exact month, but it was several months before the general elections and, I think, in August or September—I was shown a letter received from the warden of the penitentiary by one of the farmers who had written to that official for the price of binder twine. The receiver of the letter brought it to me. It was somewhat similar in its general effect to the statement of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), giving different figures for different quantities of binder twine delivered on the train at Kingston. But the farmer, being dissatisfied with the figures quoted, had gone to a dealer in Belleville—a good Reformer—and had bought twine at a much lower cost than the price he was asked by the government for twine delivered on board the train at Kingston. The Solicitor General asked a perfectly fair question when he wished to know why the farmers would not deal with the government, and I think I have given a fair answer—the reason being that the government, while professing to be interested in the farmer's welfare actually proposed to charge him more for binder twine on board the cars at Kingston than the dealer would sell it for delivered at his door. A large number of people are interested in the binder twine industry and in what becomes of the product of the government factory at Kingston ; and the hon. gentleman who brought this question before the House felt, as I judge from the line of his remarks in which he referred to the disposal of the binder twine from 1896 down to this date, that the people who were interested were not fairly treated. Ascertaining from such facts as those brought before us by the hon. member for South Brant that in the sale of binder twine there were enormous profits, he naturally said that if private binder twine works are making large profits, and if the government, composed of men of great ability, carries on a similar industry, there must naturally be large profits for that industry ; and the question naturally arises where those profits go. No one can look at the prices paid by friends of the government—and no one can deny that those who were fortunate enough to obtain this binder twine were friends of the government—and see also the prices at which the material was sold to the people and fail to see that not only was a profit made but that it went in a direction in which it should not go. The simple issue before the House is, whether the profits that have been made will continue to go to those who have handled the binder twine for the last four or five years, or to the farmers. The hon. member for Peel objects to the present plan, and the appeals to the House to adopt a better way, one by which the profits will go to the farmer rather than to the friends of the government. I would have thought that the hon. member for South Brant would have given some arguments to show that the course adopted by the government was that best calculated to promote the interest of the majority of the people or else would have adopted the course suggested by the hon. member for Peel. But, if this debate has had no other advantages it has had two. It has had the advantage of teaching us the meaning attached to certain words by the Solicitor General, who, no doubt, speaks for the government ; and it has given us the pleasure of hearing a speech from the member for South Brant as thoroughly protectionist as any ever delivered on this side of the House. I wonder if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) also attached a different meaning to the words he used from those that we attach to them and is prepared to call himself, in certain quarters, a protectionist, meaning thereby, protection to that in which he is interested and free trade for the rest of the world. I hope that the government will consider the proposition made by the hon. member for Peel. It is possible it may not be the best means of dealing with the question. I am not certain that a better plan may not be suggested ; but I shall support it because it is incomparably superior to the course followed by the government for the last four years, and I consider it to be my duty on this floor to support the best measure proposed, even though it may not be in every respect perfect.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have received a memorandum which enables me to give the information with reference to tenders asked for by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup). Tenders were advertised for in all the years except 1898, and in that year tenders were called for by circular. Then the leading wholesale dealers, without respect to politics, had circulars sent to them on the recommendation of the inspector, Mr. Stewart, who was instructed to send them to all such. At least one dozen were sent to various parts of the country in 1898.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I am glad the hon. Solicitor General made that statement before I spoke, because the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) will now see that there is no need for a new dictionary. If for two years there was advertisement in the public press, and if, in the third year, knowing just the parties who took advantage of the opportunity offered, circulars were sent out to them under the direction of a well-known Conservative at the head of the business, a gentleman appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite, I think the government have done everything they ought to be called upon to do. There is one thing that the hon. member who has made this resolution should do. In fairness he should stand up now and offer to do it. He should offer that if the farmers do not take all the binder twine manufactured at Kingston he will purchase the balance. He wants the government to carry on this business. He should desire the government not to lose in doing so. If, in response to the government's advertisements all the parties who might have done so, did not send in tenders for the product of the factory at Kingston, it may have been for one of two reasons.

Mr. MONK. They did not get a chance.

Mr. FRASER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) think it fair, when advertisements were inserted in the newspapers for two successive years calling upon people to tender and only certain people did tender, to say, that, because in the third year, all the parties who did tender were asked to tender again, they did not have a chance ?

Mr. MONK. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) wishes me to answer his question, and I shall do so. I do not think it is fair to sell 1,429,635 pounds of binder twine at $66,883.27 to parties who can sell it again for $199,750.72, making a profit of $133,167.15.

Mr. FRASER. Is that from the Public Accounts ? Now, if the hon. gentleman thinks that that is smart, I venture to say this House does not think so. If he reads from an article got up specially in the interests of his own party, he will not find that a sufficient answer. What was the hon. gentleman reading from ?

Mr. MONK. Do you deny the figures ?

Mr. FRASER. I do deny them. I rather think that the Tycoon of the opposition leadership would have appeared to better advantage if he did not attempt to answer in that way. The dual capacity in which the party finds its leadership will not be strengthened by efforts of that kind. I was about to say that, for myself, I think the late government entered into this business on purpose to fool the farmers ; I have no more doubt of that than I have that I am talking. For the last ten or twelve years I have heard men in this parliament who wanted to get the farmers' vote, talking about binder twine It has been a continual subject of discussion.

Mr. CLANCY. On your side, too.

Mr. FRASER. I do not deny that. But with the exposure made by the Solicitor General, and the challenges made to hon. gentlemen opposite to call for a committee and examine witnesses under oath, I do not think we will have as much trouble in the future in relation to this question. For myself, I think the government should never have entered into the business. We have paid twice as much for the machinery as it ought to cost. I do not believe it is the business of the government to enter into the manufacture of binder twine at Kingston, any more than it would be to enter into any other manufacturing business. There is plenty of other work the convicts could do. I think, now that the duty is off binder twine, that the case is quite clear. What would any business man do to-day ? Let the government, now that the duty has been taken off, put up at competition the manufactured product, and every bit of raw material that they have on hand, together with this machinery that has cost twice as much as it should cost, and let them sell it all and go out of the business. At least, by that means we would avoid all the trouble of these discussions. Then, if binder twine is an absolute necessity to the existence of the farmers, they could get it without duty from the outside, in case it could not be manufactured within this country. Here is a way in which the whole problem could be clearly solved. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has a panacea for everything that comes up, namely, to take the railways over, and then all difficulties would be solved. But I think he will admit that this Kingston penitentiary difficulty would not be solved except by the government going out of the business altogether. I may say that this is a question that does not affect us so much in Nova Scotia as it appears to affect the people of Ontario. But if, as has been clearly shown, the government have sold an article at the lowest price, if these people who are in the same business are to be believed, and I would trust them to tell the facts more than I would that single individual farmer that the hon. member for Hastings has told us about, if the evidence of the Solicitor General is to be taken, the government have sold the twine at a less price than it was sold elsewhere ; and having taken the duty off binder twine, I think they have done all that they should do. Now, I would suggest to them that they should clear the decks of this question altogether, sell out everything ; and that would prevent a number of hon. gentlemen from talking for ever about this question of binder twine. It would give an opportunity to the manufacturers of the country to compete with each other in manufacturing a good article for the farmers, that they could get at the lowest price. I offer the suggestion in all modesty, and I trust it will be accepted ; and I have no doubt hon. gentlemen opposite will join with me in endeavouring to relieve this wicked government, as they consider it to be, from the necessity of dealing in binder twine to the disadvantage of the farmers.

Mr. JOHN SHERRITT (North Middlesex). I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussion that has been in progress to-night. I may say that this is a question of considerable interest to the farmers in North Middlesex, the riding which I have the honour to represent. I may say also that I am a farmer, and I never was more proud of being so than I have been to-night, when I heard the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche), getting up and calling himself a farmer, whom I am informed on good authority is one of those wealthy coal merchants down in Nova Scotia. This binder twine question is one of considerable importance to the agricultural community. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Fraser) proposes that the government should go out of the business altogether. That hon. gentleman, and some others who have spoken on that side of the House, have had a good deal to say, but they have all failed to suggest any way by which the business could be carried on on business lines. The hon. member for Guysborough started out to draw comparisons. I do not think that is the proper course to pursue on this question. It would be just about as fair to argue that, because a man has had his hat stolen at some time, another man would be justified in going and taking his boots. The hon. gentleman states that it costs 7¼ cents to produce this twine. I have not heard any argument put forth that would show this House that the government ever offered this twine at a time when it was possible for the farmers to obtain it, at any such figure, or at any figure that would be a fair price, as their advertised price to farmers was 11 cents to 14 cents per pound. Some wild suggestions have been made from the other side of the House, but there has been no proof that binder twine had ever been offered to the farmers, as I said before, at less than 14 cents for best quality.

Now, it seems to me this is a state of affairs which should not exist. The motion before the House, I approve of in the main, though I do not believe exactly in that one-cent proposition. I think it possible that some way could be devised by which this twine could be sold to the farmers at a less price than nearly double what it costs to produce. I was thinking, when listening to some hon. gentlemen opposite that if they had been in my riding previous to the 7th of November last, they would have had some difficulty, notwithstanding the talent they exhibited here to-night, in convincing the farmers that they have been properly dealt with in this matter. The result of the election in my riding shows that the policy of the government in reference to this binder twine question as well as other matters, had been distasteful to the farmers. Ontario has spoken out against the government on this matter, and I believe, amongst all the bad things that have been done by the government, no action that has been taken has promoted the interests of the opposition more in that province than the action of the government upon this very question. It was not on account of the unpopularity of our late member, or on account of my own popularity that the campaign in my constituency resulted as it did, but it was the action of the government on this and other questions that placed me in this House. I do not wish to detain the House or to enter upon a lengthy discussion of the matter, but my idea is that this binder twine was offered at a time when the farmers could not avail themselves of the offer. The offer was made so much in advance of the time that they actually needed it, the time that many farmers were not prepared to purchase it. I think if the government desired to assist the farmers they would leave the offer open until the 1st of July. That would give them ample time, and if they then found that orders were not coming in from the farmers they would have an opportunity of sending men out and in some way disposing of the twine throughout the country. I believe the matter has been very badly handled in the past. When the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) referred to the question the other day he stated that he was an independent man. We should show, on both sides of the House, that we are all independent men. It does seem to me that we should show our independence on these lines, notwithstanding the fact that we may be sitting on one side of the House or the other. I know what I am speaking about when I say that if any hon. gentlemen, sitting on the other side of the House, representing a farming community, who votes against this motion will be giving a vote contrary to his own opinion, and which, apart from political considerations, he would not give.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, this question of binder twine is a most important one to the agricultural constituencies of this country. I am very sorry that the motion and the mover of the motion have not been paid a greater compliment by the hon. members who have spoken, supposedly to the motion, but really not to it at all. I think there has seldom been a motion presented to this House which has been less discussed than this motion now before us. We have heard a rehash of certain pages of the Conservative literature of the last election, which most of us have all heard for hour after hour, given with the utmost gravity and good faith, as if it were something original and something that no one had ever heard before. I did not suppose, when I read that literature first, or when I heard it delivered from platform after platform during the election, that the men who used it believed it. I did not suppose that they were so lacking in ordinary knowledge and common sense, but now I am bound to believe that they talked it so long that they not only have come to believe it themselves, but they think they can make other people believe it by continuing to talk it. What is the purpose of all this talk about binder twine? What was the purpose of the literature that was circulated through the country, and what was the purpose of the campaign that was made in regard to binder twine in the late election? I am at a loss to understand what the purpose is of the greater part of this debate, but the purpose of the attack upon the policy of the government in regard to binder twine during the election was to blind the eyes of the farming community if possible to the wise action of the government in abolishing the duty on binder twine, and making that product, at any rate, free to the farmers as far as the tariff was concerned. Whatever pledge in regard to the reduction of the tariff the government may have failed in, it did not fail on the article of binder twine. Therefore, as binder twine is an article of the highest importance to that part of the community which forms the largest part of the electorate, it was necessary to deceive, if possible, the farmers as to the value of the action of the government to them. It was for that reason and that alone that the campaign of misrepresentation, of slander and falsehood, which has seldom or never been equalled in any country, was carried on on the basis of binder twine during the late election, and the fact that in that part of the country where binder twine is more important than in any other, the government's policy was sustained by a vote of four to nothing, is a sufficient answer to it. The government abolished the duty upon binder twine ; they fulfilled to the utmost limit their pledge in regard to the tariff on that article, they benefited the farmers by doing so, and then the charge was made that they had used the output of the Kingston penitentiary to unduly increase the price of the article to the farmers. A case was built up in regard to the misuse of the binder twine of the penitentiary which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sherritt), who preceded me in this debate, declared was the cause of his return to this House and the defeat of his opponent. So successful were the opposition in that campaign of misrepresentation that they made a majority of the electors of North Middlesex believe that the government, by manipulating one-tenth of the binder twine used in this country, had increased the price by 100 per cent. I will admit that you can manipulate the output of the Kingston penitentiary so as to affect the price of binder twine to a proportionate degree, but that was not the contention that was put up. The contention was exactly what I say, that the government had so manipulated the output of the Kingston penitentiary, being one-tenth of the total consumption of the binder twine of this country, that they had doubled the price of twine to the farmers, an utterly preposterous proposition. The idea has been held out to the farmers that they depended on the output of the Kingston penitentiary for their binder twine. My opponent said to the farmers in one section of the country, where I had the pleasure of meeting him : You do not use American binder twine : 'It makes no difference to you that the duty has been taken off twine. As long as the government hold up the price of twine manufactured at the Kingston penitentiary, so long will you have to pay that price. That is what interests you.' I made inquiries and I found that there never had been a pound of Kingston penitentiary twine sold in that part of the country. The point I want to make is this : That the idea has been attempted to be implanted in the minds of the people of this country that something has been done, or attempted to be done with the twine output of the Kingston penitentiary that never was done or attempted to be done by this government or by the late government, and that never could be done by any government. However that is in regard to the last election and having fought through that campaign. Having heard the slanders that were hurled against the policy of the government; it is certainly a pleasure for me now to come to this House and find a member of the Conservative party coming forward with a resolution endorsing the policy of the government in regard to binder twine. That disposes effectually of all the slanders uttered during that campaign and puts them exactly where they belong. We need not consider them any more. As the Solicitor General said : The government did during the past year offer the twine direct to the farmers at a fixed price. The charge was that the government had sold the twine to a combine, whereas as a matter of fact they had offered the twine to the farmers and part of it they were unsuccessful in selling to any one. The motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) endorses the principle pursued by the government last year. I do not know that it is a principle of universal application. I do not know just how well it will work out in practice. It may be that sometime we shall attempt to sell twine direct to the farmers on the basis of the cost of the raw material. In the meantime the raw material may go down in price and the farmer can buy his twine cheaper from the other manufacturers. Another feature is that if the raw material maintains its price or if it increases in price, it is possible for the government to make a very considerable difference between the price of the penitentiary twine and the market price of twine, and then I am afraid we will have our friends opposite charging that the output of the Kingston penitentiary is being used as a bribe to the farmers of the country, by giving a preference to the friends of the government on this low priced twine. I am perfectly satisfied that so long as the present government is in power there is no danger of that taking place, but I am not at all satisfied that should the opposition come to power they will not carry out the traditions of their Conservative predecessors. These features are worthy of consideration, but they are questions of the future. The question of the present is, that for some reason or other, whether on account of the combine or whether it is an accident of the market; the binder twine of this country has been sold at abnormally high prices during the past year or two. We do know that the government of Canada controls the output of the Kingston penitentiary, and I am entirely in accord with the hon. gentleman's motion —which I distinguish entirely from his remarks—that at the present time it is the duty of the government to use the output of the Kingston penitentiary to check, so far as that output can, any possible combine whereby the price of binder twine is increased to the farmers. That being the case I would have been very glad to accept the motion, but it contains a feature which is a very great weakness and which is not necessary to its principle. That is that in the case of the farmers not purchasing the total output (which occurred this year) no provision is made as to what is to be done with the residue. Is it to be carried over to another year when possibly the price of the raw material having gone down it will be unsaleable except at a loss. The suggestion made by the hon. member for North Middlesex (Mr. Sherritt) was that the twine should be offered to the farmers up to a certain date, and that after that date it should be offered for sale to the highest bidder. That is a fair proposition and I will take the liberty of moving an amendment along that line, I do not exactly agree however that the government should be entitled to a cent a pound over the cost of manufacture. The government having control of the penitentiary and having to find work for the convicts, it is right that they should sell that twine at its fair cost. But then comes the question of the cost of twine manufactured by prison labour, and I do not wish to conflict with our friends in the House who are here in the interests of labour, and who have a very natural deep rooted objection against the competition of prison labour. I would like to have their support for any motion I put before the House, because I believe that the true interests of the labouring men of Canada are exactly the same as the interests of the farmers. I propose to amend the motion by striking out the cent a pound extra over cost, and placing the cost as if the twine were produced by free labour. My amendment is this :

> That so long as the government continues to manufacture twine, the same shall be offered for sale directly to farmers up to July the 1st of each year at cost of material and manufacture, calculating wages on the basis of fair wages for free labour ; and that the twine unsold and on hand on July 1st of each year be sold by tender to the highest bidder, after advertisement.

That is entirely in line with the policy pursued by the government during the past year, except that it carries it a little further and makes it more definite. It is also in line with the motion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). As the representative of an agricultural constituency, I would ask the members representing agricultural constituencies in this House to vote for that amendment without respect to politics or arguments in respect to past transactions either by one government or the other.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, I am sure the tone of the hon. gentleman's speech was such that he might ask hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to vote for the proposal that he has made; for those who followed him somewhat closely could see that he spoke entirely from a non-partisan standpoint. The hon. gentleman was very moderate, I fancy he thought himself. He commenced his speech by declaring that the whole country were fools, that no man of ordinary intelligence could have believed a single word contained in certain campaign literatures which was circulated in the country. I desire to remind that hon. gentleman that he sat in this House, and his leader sat in this House when those statements were made here, and that up to this moment not an hon. gentleman has challenged one of those statements. I do not think the hon. gentleman intended to reflect upon his leaders, but he has not shown that knowledge of the question one would expect from a gentleman who assumed such a lofty tone as he assumed a few moments ago. If he will take his pencil, and go to his room, and spend a few hours there, he will never again make such an exhibition in this House as he has made this evening. I venture to repeat the statements which were made here on former occasions, and made in what the hon. gentleman rather opprobriously called campaign literature, and which have remained to this moment uncontradicted.

What is the position of the Solictor General to-night ? He set forth as a proper answer to the charges that the machinery at the Kingston penitentiary had been purchased at an exorbitant price; but he sat down without giving a single particle of evidence in support of that bald statement. He simply said that one Mr. Munro would be able to present the evidence at the Public Accounts Committee. Well, the Solicitor General made the statement, and it devolves upon him to bring the matter before the Public Accounts Committee and there present the evidence to prove it. It does not devolve upon this side of the House to do that. The first thing the hon. gentleman said was that in August, 1899, the twine had been sold to the farmers of this country on precisely the terms proposed by the motion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). Now, I have here an advertisement that appeared during last session in the public press. It is dated the 26th of February, and I believe this House met last year on the 1st of February. An advertisement appeared in the public press some time before that; but, public attention was called to it during the session, and the hon. gentleman saw fit to amend the notice with regard to the sale of twine; and what does it say ?

Orders from farmers in pursuance of the advertisement dated January 22nd will be received and filed until the 20th of March, instead of the 1st of March, as stipulated in the former advertisement.

Now, what were the stipulations sent out to the farmers ? Let it be remembered that this twine with one cent added for manufacture was sold at 7·51 cents a pound. What is the farmer asked to pay ? In lots of fifty tons and upwards—for manila 12½ cents, for mixed 9½ cents, and for New Zealand 8½ cents. No farmers are likely to buy twine in fifty ton lots, as the hon. gentleman knew perfectly well, and it was idle to put such a notice before them. The price to the farmers in carload lots, which is less than fifty tons, is for manila 13 cents, for mixed 10 cents, and for New Zealand 9 cents. In lots of one ton up to a carload, the price was—for manila 13½ cents, for mixed 10½ cents, and for New Zealand 9½ cents. For smaller quantities, such quantities as my hon. friend knows the farmers will purchase, what was the price to them ? Bearing in mind that the cost price of this twine, including manufacture, was an average of 7·51, what was the great inducement offered to the farmers ? Why, in lots of less than one ton, they were paying for manila 14 cents, mixed 11 cents, and New Zealand 10 cents. After that advertisement had appeared on the 25th February of last session, this is what the hon. gentleman gave out, and yet he does not hesitate to rise in his place and declare that the twine from 1899, up to the present was sold at a slight advance on the cost of producing. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is prepared to withdraw the statements made in this House last session, of which I gave him a sample a moment ago? I do not say that he intended to mislead the House, but he made statements by which the House was misled.

Another statement which the hon. gentleman made was that if the twine were held over it would be a loss. In other words, that if the twine were held over more than a year it would have to be sold at a loss.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I shall not ask this House to rely entirely on any statement I make in this matter, but we had an investigation, and had witnesses examined. Mr. Hughes was examined, and the hon. gentleman tried to make it appear that twine would be deteriorated by being held over, but Mr. Hughes stated that being held over one year would not matter, but it would not do to hold it over two years, so that there is nothing in the hon. gentleman's plea that he was justified in forcing a sale because it would not do to hold over the twine.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am instructed by the warden of the penitentiary to that effect.

Mr. CLANCY. The warden is a man new to the office, and his opinion cannot be taken against that of Mr. Hughes, who has had many years experience in the business.

Then the hon. gentleman said : Well, the farmers will not deal with us. I think I gave the reasons a moment ago. The farmers were led to believe by the hon. gentleman's friends that they would get the twine at a price slightly above cost. But they had to pay very exorbitant prices. My hon. friend replied that some dealers in twine had said : You are selling twine much less than the price manufacturers ought to get. But naturally the very men who wished to put up the price could not be expected to say anything else.

The hon. gentleman made some statement with regard to Mr. Connor to which I desire to call particular attention. One was that Mr. Connor had sold twine in 1894 at excessive prices.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He bought it from the department and retailed it to the public. I never was aware of the prices at which he sold it, and it did not concern us.

Mr. CLANCY. Yet the hon. gentleman stated that Connor was in the combine, and was selling at combine prices.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. In 1894 he purchased the output outright and disposed of it in the market himself. In 1895, he sold it as agent of the government, and received 10 per cent commission on the sales, but simply forgot to pay for it. That is all.

Mr. CLANCY. That is what Connor has to say on that subject when brought before the Public Accounts Committee.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not care what he says, I have the contract.

Mr. CLANCY. That is what he says with regard to the prices at which he sold it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The statement I made was that Mr. Connor was the chief factor in the combine that existed at that time, which combine had closed up all the factories in Canada except the ones at Brantford and at Montreal, and that, in that capacity, he secured the agency for the sale of the government twine at a commission of 10 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. Connor swears that he was under special instructions in 1895. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) asked him : 'What did you sell the twine at in 1895?' And Connor replied : 'The average price for mixed was 5½ cents.' The member for Leeds then asked him : 'The government gave you a limit to sell at?' And Connor replied : 'Yes, from time to time I was to advise with the warden and be governed by him.' Now the hon. gentleman has made the charge, first, that Connor in 1894 secured the binder twine and fleeced the people.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman offered a tittle of evidence to prove that? He has utterly failed to do so. We come to 1895, and we have the fact that Connor, who sold the twine for the government, was under special instructions, and sold the twine at 5½ cents.

Then the hon. gentleman said that in 1896 Mr. Kelly had the contract, and the government tried to get him to give security. But if the hon. gentleman has told the whole story, he would have been more frank. What was it? It was that the late government exacted that Kelly should give security for the twine, and Kelly having failed to give security, they would not give him the twine. I ask my hon. friend if he did not find that state of things when he came into office. Mr. Kelly was unable to furnish the secruity, and the result was that the twine was held over and not sold that season. But, did the hon. gentleman wait till next season? No, he sold the twine in September of that year, after he had been only a few months in office to Coll Bros.

Mr. TAYLOR. Connor.

Mr. CLANCY. Connor was acting for Coll Bros. Are they twine dealers? No, they are soap manufacturers in St. John. Yet the hon. gentleman made the sale on the plea that the twine would deteriorate if left over, although we have the evidence of an expert that it was without a tittle of foundation. And who is this man Connor? Has not the hon. gentleman had dealings with him during last year? Did he not sell Mr. Connor a good deal of the twine of 1900? And why did he do that if Mr. Connor is not in favour with the government? I take it that he is the same man who went to the county of Victoria, N.B., and helped to buy out the opposition candidate. Mr. Connor is a friend of the hon. gentleman opposite, though the hon. gentleman assumes to blame him here tonight. Mr. Connor gave evidence in the presence of the hon. gentleman himself and swore that, from 1896 to 1898, three successive years there was collusion in regard to the binder twine, and that the ministers of the Crown were aware of it—they knew that there was a combine. The hon. gentleman asked how the price could be affected by the small quantity of twine produced in the Kingston penitentiary. The hon. gentleman has political friends in Toronto who were clamouring as lustily as hon. gentlemen opposite did for years to have factories started in the Kingston penitentiary and the Central prison for the purpose of compelling manufacturers to accept fair prices. I will call one of the most respectable witnesses on this point, the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), who is always moderate and thoughtful in his statements. If hon. gentlemen will turn to 'Hansard' of 1893, page 3433, they will find that, in the course of a discussion on the desirability of establishing a binder twine factory in Kingston, the hon. Minister of Customs says :

> The government is taking this action with a view to employ prison labour and at the same time keep the manufacturers at Halifax from obtaining too high a price for their product.

Then, we have Mr. Dryden, the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario. In a speech made on January 24, 1894, at Columbus, in his own riding, he said :

> Another reason why this industry was established was that the farmers laboured under the burden of a monopoly, and it was thought desirable that the product of the prisoners' labour would be used in the interest of the farmer. He showed how the farmers had paid monopolists for the ropes, wrappings, &c., at the twine price, but in future——

This is a pledge to the people——

> —they would have a guarantee that the prison twine would be all right in quality and weight. He intended to use his influence in future to supply the farmers with the twine at first cost. Business must of necessity be done on a cash basis. But as a good many farmers cannot pay cash, some means will have to be devised to give them the benefit of this industry.

He is not only to sell it at cost but he is going to trust the purchasers. And how did it turn out? Precisely as the professions of the hon. gentlemen opposite turned out who, for years, clamoured to have this industry established but who, the moment they came into power was shown by sworn evidence, while knowing there was collusion, allowed the combine to be formed. And how was it formed? By Mr. Connor and the Coll Bros. going up to Toronto, purchasing the twine there and getting the two years' output of the Kingston penitentiary—making a large quantity of twine—and then combining with the American Cordage Company. And who are the agents of that company? Why, Hobbs Bros. of London. So that all that was necessary was to call in Hobbs Bros. and the combine was formed. And the result was that the twine that was purchased from the government at 4 cents was sold to the farmers at 10, 12 and 14 cents. It is well enough for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that there was no combine ; but I would like any hon. gentleman who is disposed to look at the question fairly to account for the great disparity between the prices at which the twine was sold by the government from year to year and the price at which it was sold to the consumer. No attempt has ever been made to do that. I will not pursue this subject any further. I have to say to the Solicitor General that he is bound, after the statement he has made this evening, to call his auditor, Mr. Munro, and to make his case good. As for Mr. Connor, that gentleman is a friend of his own, and we have no concern with him. As regards the motion in amendment, I do not think it is in order. It simply reaffirms what is affirmed in the original motion, it does not substantially contain new matter, as it must do in order to be an amendment. It simply repeats, by the variation of dates, the substance of the motion of my hon. friend. I consider it to be entirely harmless, but not in order. I wish to point out to hon. gentlemen that if they accept that motion they bind themselves by the dates; and I ask the First Minister if he is prepared to bind himself in the sense of that amendment as to the dates. I desire to say to the Solicitor General that I do not think he was quite fair in his mode of dealing with this question to-night. There was really no need for the heat he displayed in the discussion. In the first place he utterly failed in making a single statement good. His statement with regard to the cost of the machinery may be true, I do not offer any opinion upon it, I have no information on the subject; but if it be true, it does not affect the case in the slightest, it has nothing to do with the sale of twine. Now there is twine enough manufactured in the Central prison and in the Kingston penitentiary, if the hon. gentlemen can control their friends there, they too affect materially the price of binder twine in Canada. It has been stated here to-night that the consumption of twine is something like sixteen million pounds, and that a considerable share of it is manufactured in those two institutions, and the others will be governed to some extent by the price at which this is sold. I know there is always a difficulty in dealing with so many persons in a business of this kind, I grant it is not an easy thing for the government to sell twine in a satisfactory manner. But, I agree with the hon. gentleman's motion that if we are going to employ prison labour in Canada it ought to be employed for the benefit of the people of Canada. The object of the motion is to secure that the twine should be sold in the best possible way to the farmer, and in order to do that hon. gentlemen will hardly pursue the course of asking as high as 12 and 14 cents a pound for twine when it is sold to dealers at an average of $7.51 per hundred.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). I wish to say to the House that I see very little difference between the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and the resolution I submitted to the House a few days ago. I have to say that I am willing to accept the motion in amendment because I see very little difference between that and my own. Now, I wish to say a word as to the motive I had in introducing this resolution; and to show that I had no political motive, and had no desire to catch any special vote in this country, I want to read the words of the Prime Minister at the close of the debate the other day :

> The government certainly has no right to complain of the manner in which my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has introduced this motion.

I think that is good proof from the leader of the government that what I said upon the question is not open to the criticism that has been made by some hon. gentlemen opposite. I want also to draw attention to the fact that no farmer, no gentleman engaed in agricultural pursuits speaking from the other side of the House, has said one word against my motion. The first gentleman who spoke upon the question was the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd), but he represents a constituency that contains a binder twine manufactory. Then the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) ventured to state that the leader of the opposition received a very large vote from the binder twine manufactory in the county of Halifax. I thought we had a secret vote in this country. How can any man say how people voted in that county on the 7th of November ? Then we have the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Stephens) speaking in defence of the twine industry in this country, but, I believe he is a large seller of binder twine himself, and, therefore, he wants a little protection upon that point, not having the interest of the farmer in view at all. Then we had the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who is a lawyer, I believe, and not a farmer, who spoke in defence of the government. Therefore, the House will see that no gentleman representing the agricultural interests of the country attempted to say anything against the motion that I had the honour to introduce. Then, I think I ought to get some credit from the House, because my motion has brought into the House, the hon. Solicitor General, who is not often in his place. I was only sorry that he was not in better temper after being away so long.

In my resolution I ask that two things should be done; first, that these middlemen should disappear. If the terms of the amendment of the member for Alberta be adopted by this House, then Coll Bros. will be no more in the transaction, because they are not farmers. They bought the twine in 1896. In 1897, the Hobbs Co. bought it, and they will be no more in the business because they are not farmers. The twine was sold to H. N. Bate & Sons in 1898, and as they are grocers they will not come in under the new deal. Therefore, I willingly accept the terms of the amendment, because all these middlemen, who the farmers claim have been making large profits out of the binder twine industry, will disappear, and that is what I want. There is one other point, and that is as to what the profits should be. My motion says that the profits should be one cent; the amendment says that the profit should be based upon a calculation of paid labour in this country. I am not quite sure what difference there would be in the calculation, but I am sure there could not be much. Therefore, upon that point I am willing to accept the amendment of the member for Alberta. I am glad to know that hon. gentlemen opposite, including the Solicitor General, I presume, are willing that there should be a change. The member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) said that the transaction was altogether unsatisfactory to himself as a supporter of the government; so of course I should have his support. I am delighted to see that the government are willing to change their plan, and that they are now willing to adopt the terms of the resolution; therefore, I presume it will pass unanimously.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding). As we are about to vote upon these propositions we had better have it clearly understood what they are. When the hon. gentleman says the two propositions are the same, he is certainly labouring under a misapprehension. There are two radical differences between the two motions. First, in relation to the cost of producing the binder twine. So far as that is an element in the motion of the member for Peel (Mr. Blain), he proposes that no regard should be had to the distinction between prison labour and free labour. We propose, or the member for Alberta proposes——

Mr. MONK. Who are we ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am going to vote for it.

Mr. WALLACE. Then it is a put up job.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then it is a very good job, because it is common sense, and the hon. gentleman is going to vote for it too, and will set a very good example, because sometimes he votes for propositions which are not sensible. So far as the cost of labour is concerned, the hon. mover of this motion makes no distinction between free labour and prison labour.

Mr. MONK. A cent a pound.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from Peel says that he has no conception whether that represents the cost of labour at all. He says that he has made no calculation upon that basis. Inasmuch as it is unavoidable from our operations at the Kingston penitentiary binder twine factory that we must enter into competition with the legitimate industries of the country, it is only fair and reasonable and right, under conditions of free trade, there being no duty, that we should not put prison labour in competition with free labour, and that while we are competing with outside factories, whether it is the combine in Halifax, which elects the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax)——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is wrong ? I speak that which I know. I say that if it were not for the combine votes, I doubt if the hon. gentleman would have a seat in this House, and then we would only have three leaders on that side of the House instead of four, as at the present time. I say that when we have to compete with the legitimate industries of the country, even though you may call them combines, it is not fair in competing to place prison labour against free labour, and therefore the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says that in any calculation that can be made in respect to labour, that calculation must be on the basis of free labour, and not prison labour.

Mr. BLAIN. We are willing to do so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has come to that. I hope he will continue to accept useful suggestions from this side of the House.

Mr. INGRAM. How long is it since the hon. gentleman has come to these views ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What are the views that the hon. gentleman refers to ?

Mr. INGRAM. How long is it since the hon. gentleman has entertained the view that the labour employed in the Kingston penitentiary in the manufacture of binder twine should be equal to that of free labour ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend will find that has always been held. His complaint is that we have been charging too much, and that clearly shows that we have not been putting it on a basis of prison labour, which would make the price less. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) says that we have been charging too much for prison-made twine.

Mr. CLANCY. You entered into a combine.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen talk of combines ; why, they flourished on combines for eighteen years.

Mr. COCHRANE. And you are following that up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I want to call the attention of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), having mentioned this one important difference, to the other material difference between his proposition and that of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). The hon. member for Peel proposes that we shall sell this binder twine to the farmers at a certain price, regardless of whether the farmer is willing to buy it from us or not, and he then says distinctly that even if the farmer does not buy it you shall not be at liberty to sell it in any other way, and therefore you can keep it and let it rot if you like. That does not strike us as a very reasonable proposition. The hon. member for Alberta says that you shall offer this to the farmers at a fair price up to a certain date, and if the farmers take it at that price, well and good, but if the farmers do not take it at that price, then instead of allowing it to rot, as it would under the proposal of the hon. member for Peel, you shall advertise in the public press for tenders, and sell the balance of it in the open market at the best price.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman what they are going to do with the amount of binder twine now in the Kingston penitentiary ? Are they going to allow that to rot ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is one thing certain ; if it rots now it does not rot through any lack of effort on the part of the government to sell it, but the hon. member for Peel is proposing a scheme, which, no matter how many buyers we might find, would not permit us to sell the surplus at all.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Mr. Speaker, when I asked the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) the question, how long it is since he entertained these views, I was surprised that the hon. gentleman did not answer. I have always found him courteous and all that sort of thing. Since hon. gentlemen have controlled the affairs of this country, I do not know any case where they have been prevented from selling binder twine at the actual cost, that is to say, charging what would be equal to free labour in the manufacture of twine in other factories. Therefore, the hon. gentleman had it right in his own hands if he entertained these views, ever since he came into power. In respect to the motion moved by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), it strikes me that the hon. gentleman must have had this motion placed in his hands, because he possesses the faculty of speaking one way and moving a resolution in an entirely different direction. The hon. gentleman's speech was not the speech of an independent man. I doubt very much, whether, in his election in Alberta, the issue was really on the question of binder twine. I had the opportunity of passing through that hon. gentleman's district, and it struck me that he represented a grazing country. I read the papers pretty closely during the last campaign, and it occurred to me that the question of scrip had more effect in his election than the question of binder twine. I remember crossing the river at Edmonton, in his constituency, and there was no bridge at the time of my crossing. It strikes me that this was another very important issue in his constituency. So, I say, that instead of charging the electors of other portions of the Dominion with being ignorant on this question and not capable of arriving at a proper conclusion as to whether binder twine was properly dealt with by his government or not, he should have been more frank in his statements, and they should have been more in keeping with the actions of an independent member. Therefore, for that reason, while I support the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman, I entirely differ from the remarks he made in moving his resolution.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIS. If hon. gentlemen will possess their souls in patience, I can assure them that I am not going to take up the time of the House. I may just say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) who moved the original motion, complained that there were no hon. gentlemen on this side of the House representing agricultural constituencies who had taken any exception to the motion he had moved.

Mr. WALLACE. That is not what he said.

Mr. DAVIS. That is how I understood the hon. gentleman. However, I am not going to take up very much time. I am sure the farmers of the North-west Territories will be very much pleased to learn that they have the sympathy of hon. gentlemen on the opposition side of the House who sympathize so much with the farmers of the North-west Territories and other parts of the Dominion. I was amused the other afternoon to see one of the hon. members from West Toronto get up in this House and sweat in every pore for the poor farmers of the North-west Territories. He wanted to get them cheap binder twine. If the same hon. gentleman and some other hon. gentleman associated with him would arrange to give the farmers of the North-west Territories cheap freight rates, it would be an advantage to the farmers in that part of the country. I am sure that the farmers must be laughing, if they have read the speech of the hon. member for West Toronto. I sympathize with the hon. gentlemen opposite because this was an important plank in the last election ; in fact, they only had two planks, one was binder twine and the other the Minister of Public Works. I do not know on which they got the most votes, but I fancy it was on the Minister of Public Works. We had this question of binder twine discussed in the North-west Territories. The last hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) mentioned the question of scrip. As far as scrip was concerned, if there was any kudos to be got for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House out of scrip they went us one better because they offered to give scrip to children born up to date if their parents would only vote for the Conservative candidates. They then came down to the question of binder twine and we heard about the sale to Bate & Co. and others from one end of the North-west to the other, until a gentleman in my constituency suggested that they should get it set to music and play it on a brass band. The farmers in the North-west Territories took little stock in that, for we all know that they returned four Liberals with very large majorities. The hon. gentleman for East Hastings, (Mr. Northrup) tried to make a point against the Solicitor General by saying that a farmer in his constituency told him that the government offered to sell twine for 14 cents when he could buy it in the village for 10 cents. Well, there is twine and twine. A man may buy a pair of boots for fifty cents and another man may pay $3.50 for a pair. There are different qualities of twine as well as of boots, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) took care not to say that the ten cent twine was as good quality as the fourteen cent twine. I know personally that the government did offer the twine to the farmers, because they offered to send a car-load to my district and sell it at a great deal less price than the farmers were paying to the implement dealers. I took a good deal of trouble to find what the farmers wanted, and I found that the farmers did not want the Kingston twine because they said it was not as good as the other, for which they preferred paying the higher price.

Som hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. DAVIS. I see the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) shaking his head, but if the advice of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) were carried out and the government were to dispose of the Kingston plant it would be in the interest of the people of Canada. It ill-becomes gentlemen on the other side to talk about binder twine in view of their record in the past. We know they bolstered up a combine by their protective tariff which made the farmers pay thirteen cents a pound for twine when the raw material was worth only four and one-half cents. These gentlemen talk about binder twine all the time, but they never mention any other kind of twine, although they know very well that rope is three times the price it was three years ago on account of the increase in the price of the raw material. These hon. gentlemen opposite never mention that, because they want to leave the impression that the government by some manipulation has been robbing the farmers and not allowing them to get cheap binder twine. The farmers are too intelligent to take any stock in that. As a matter of fact the twine was sold in the proper way by tenders being called and were sold to the highest bidder. The purchaser sold at a small margin of profit and when the twine passed into the hands of gentlemen like the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), who, I understand, keeps a general store, they took advantage of the rise to sell it to the farmers at a good fat profit. I do not see why they should not do so, because we all know that a business man has to take advantage in the rise in the markets as he has to suffer by a decline in prices. I have known dealers to buy wheat at seventy-five cents and sell it for fifty cents, and have known them again to buy it at seventy-five cents and sell it at a dollar. These people got the twine in a legitimate way and they paid for it, whereas the late government never got paid for the twine at all. We know that in one case in the province of Manitoba a leading politician belonging to the Conservative party got a large amount of binder twine from the government and did not pay for it, although I understand that he has lately done so. Since he became Minister of Public Works in the province of Manitoba, he seems to have got rich all of a sudden, and he was able to pay his debts. I sympathize with the new members on the other side of the House, because they have studied the campaign literature of the Conservative party which is largely drawn from the imagination, and as they now feel it necessary to fire off their campaign speeches they might as well do so now as at any other time. I hope they have satisfied themselves on that score, and that we will be now able to proceed to business.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), and I always notice that when he gets up that beautiful falsetto treble which distinguishes him, he is always very angry and he is always very incorrect in his statements, and this evening was no exception to the rule. He told us that we on this side had to adopt their amendment. Before that we did not know the government had an amendment, but now we see that they had not the courage to propose their own amendment and so they handed it back to the independent member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), to be seconded by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who is always ready to do such work for the government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We never heard of anything of that kind before.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has not spent much of his time in the House for the last four years, or he would see it and hear of it every day. The Minister of Finance told us that our motion was based on the cost of prison labour, and did not provide for the cost of free labour. The contrary is the fact, because the motion of the member for Peel (Mr. Blain) proposed to add one cent per pound to the cost of labour and raw material, and that would have more than provided for the difference between free labour and prison labour, because the whole cost of manufacture is only about three-quarters of a cent per pound. But when did the government adopt this new policy ? Last year, and the year before, this twine was not sold to the farmers, but it was sold to the Hobbs and the Colls and the Connors and the Bates to speculate in it and double the price to the farmers. As has been pointed out, the American agent of the Hobbs Hardware Company is in the combine, and it was the easiest thing in the world when they got hold of the Canadian product, including that of the two prisons, for them to make a combine and sell at whatever price they pleased. The fact is and cannot be disputed, that binder twine that was bought for about 7 cents a pound by these people was sold to the farmers for 14 cents. There is the whole thing, and I think the country will realize that there are no thanks to be given to the government for the fact, that they will be forced to sell the product of the prison to the farmers of this country at a price that is pretty closely fixed, but that the gratitude for that will be given where it belongs to—His Majesty's loyal opposition. I think we may give our thanks to our worthy colleague from the county of Peel, who has brought this matter to the attention of the House, and has forced the government to their knees, and to follow out the lines of his resolution.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, it is really remarkable to observe the affection which our friends of the opposition have suddenly worked up for the amendment to the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). It must be pleasing to every member of this House who has the interest of the agriculturists at heart to see the unanimity that prevails at the present time on this very important question. That unanimity of feeling as to the proper method to pursue, renders it entirely unnecessary for any person to occupy the time of the House at any length on the question.

For my part, I have simply to say that while I was quite in sympathy with the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Peel, so far as it went, and while I am in more hearty sympathy with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Alberta, still I should have been pleased —coming from the North-west Territories, hundreds of miles from Kingston, the place where this binder twine is manufactured—had the resolution or the amendment gone just a little further, and assured the farmers in all parts of the country that they would have been able to participate in whatever benefit will accrue from the sale of the output of the Kingston penitentiary; and I would be very glad to have from the government an expression of intention or a promise that they will see to it that the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories are allowed to participate along with the farmers of Ontario in those benefits, be they small or great.

As I said, I do not propose to take up the time of the House discussing the question, because the matter is practically settled. But on behalf of the hon. member for Alberta, and the district he represents, I would make just one remark, which is called forth by a reference which was made by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram). I was very glad to hear that that hon. gentleman had been out through the North-west Territories ; but I regret that he did not remain there long enough to gain some appreciation of the extent of the district of Alberta. He seemed to have come away from that part of the country with the idea that grazing was its sole industry. I may state for his information, and for the information of any other gentlemen who are not familiar with the North-west Territories, that there are many industries and many interests in each of the constituencies of the territories. My hon. friend from Alberta does represent the grazing industry, but he also represents the agricultural industry ; and I will venture to say that there is as much agricultural country in the district of Alberta devoted entirely to that industry as would contain possibly half a dozen or ten constituencies like that represented by the hon. member for East Elgin. In the riding from which I come, the binder twine industry was a matter of interest in the election, and I have no doubt it was also in the district of Alberta. Possibly there was also some interest in the issue referred to by the hon. member for East Elgin—the scrip issue. But if he had remained in the district during the campaign he would have found that the gentleman running in the interest of the opposition was ready to go a greater length than the Liberal candidate, who is now the member for Alberta. That was the state of affairs, I know, in Western Assiniboia, Eastern Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. The Conservative candidates were ready to make and did make very much stronger promises to the people respecting the half-breed scrip than the candidates running in the interest of the government found it necessary to make. I have simply to say in conclusion that I was quite in sympathy with the resolution of the hon. member for Peel so far as it went ; but I am certainly more in sympathy with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Alberta.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 34) to incorporate the Canadian Patriotic Fund Association.—Mr. Costigan.

QUESTIONS.

I.C.R.—LEASE OF MONTREAL HERALD PREMISES.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Has the Intercolonial Railway taken over the premises until lately occupied by the Montreal Herald newspaper, corner of St. James and François-Xavier streets, in Montreal?

2. Has the lease of the Herald newspaper of said premises been transferred to the Intercolonial Railway?

3. Has any sum or indemnity, or otherwise, been paid to the Montreal Herald newspaper for vacating said offices in favour of the Intercolonial Railway?

4. What sum has been so paid?

5. Why was the Intercolonial office removed to the office in question?

6. What rent did the Intercolonial Railway pay for its former office, and what rent does it pay now, and to whom ?

7. What was the rent paid for said offices by the Montreal Herald newspaper, and when does the Herald lease expire?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes.

2. No, the lease of the Herald newspaper of said premises has not been transferred. We are sub-tenants of the Herald Publishing Co.

3. Nothing whatever.

4. No sum has been paid.

5. The original freight office of the Intercolonial Railway was destroyed in the Board of Trade fire on January 23, 1901, and it was impossible for our officers to secure suitable premises with the necessary accommodation on the ground floor elsewhere.

6. The rent paid for the former office in the Board of Trade building was $1,500 a year. The rent payable to the Herald Publishing Company for offices, now occupied, is $2,750 a year.

7. The rent paid by the Montreal Herald Publishing Co. is $3,150 a year. Cannot say when the Herald lease will expire, but the Intercolonial Railway has a lease of its offices for three years from the 1st of May next.

POSTMASTERS IN PICTOU COUNTY.

Mr. BELL (Pictou) asked :

1. What postmasters in the county of Pictou have been dismissed since November 6th, 1900, and who have been appointed to fill vacancies so created?

2. What contracts for carriage of mails, to or from points in the county of Pictou, have been made since November 6th, 1900?

3. In how many cases and for what sums have these been made without advertising for tenders?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. Since the 6th of November, 1900, the postmasters of Barney's River, Sunnybrae, Burnside, Scotsburn Station, West Branch, River John and Greenvale, in Pictou county, have been removed and have been replaced, with the exception of the last mentioned, by the following persons respectively : Daniel Cameron, Thos. M. Chisholm, Wm. Matheson, Jno. G. Proudfoot, Daniel Campbell. No appointment has yet been made to the Greenvale office. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Bell, Pictou) to allow the balance of the question to stand. The answer is being prepared.

FREE ADMISSION OF BINDER TWINE MACHINERY.

Mr. CARGILL asked :

Was any machinery admitted free from duty for use in a binder twine factory during the years 1898, 1899, 1900, or were there any refunds of duty in connection with binder twine machinery during said years?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). Machinery has been admitted free for use in binder twine factories, during the period mentioned, under item No. 620 of the free list of the tariff, which provides for the admission free of duty, after the 1st January, 1898, of all articles which enter into the cost of the manufacture of binder twine.

SURVEY BETWEEN RICE LAKE AND PORT HOPE.

Mr. WARD asked :

1. Has any survey been made by the Department of Railways and Canals between a point on Rice Lake and the town of Port Hope, with the view of connecting these two points as part of the Trent Valley system? If so, when?

2. What amounts have been expended by the government in repairing the superstructure of the Port Hope harbour works in each year since 1885?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes, a survey was made during the summer of 1900.

2. The information will be obtainable from the Department of Public Works.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee to the fact that there are no notices issued, as is usually the case, for Friday, to-morrow. There are several members who would be very glad if the committee were convened for to-morrow, and notice might be given to-day.

Mr. FRASER. There were so many papers asked for that I thought it would be well to put the meeting off until the first of the week so that they might all be down.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The chairman will remember that the time of the last meeting was taken up in moving for papers, and quite a number were ordered, but the committee rose rather abruptly before the organization of the committee was completed, and without authority to appoint stenographers to take down the evidence. Perhaps that is the only business that could be expedited, and that should be done as soon as possible.

Mr. FRASER. I will see that it is done as soon as we can call a meeting.

MONEY-LENDERS.

Mr. J. A. C. MADORE (Hochelaga). (Translation) moves the second reading of Bill (No. 3) respecting money-lenders. He said : Mr. Speaker, the evil of usury, which this Bill—the second reading of which I now move—purports to remedy, is by no means of recent date. In fact, it traces its origin back to the remotest antiquity, and so to say, to the very cradle of mankind, and writers who deal with the philosophy of history hold that Jacob himself, on the day when he bought his brother's birthright for a mess of pottage, became guilty of extortion and usury. From the very rise of Christianity and throughout the succeeding ages, it is on record that legislators, in the different countries of the world, have grappled with the evil of usury and have framed anti-usury laws. But such legislative reforms did always occur periodically so that, between the abolition of a former law and the promulgation of a new statute, intervals of more or less duration invariably elapsed. Whenever usury was received in a country, and whenever the shylocks of those times, having multiplied with impunity, were seen unblushingly parading in the broad daylight their nefarious monopoly and hovering, like so many vultures, over the victims of their rapacity, then it was that public opinion being stirred up and roused from its lethargy, statesmen and law-makers in all civilized countries framed numberless laws against usury. And when the usurer thus put under the ban of society and branded as an enemy of mankind and a vulgar criminal, no longer dared to show his face, and when hydra of usury, chained as it were, and kept within reasonable bounds by drastic laws and inexorable tribunals, was afraid to hold up its head, then it was that the advocates of commercial freedom stood up and demanded in their turn the repeal of those laws under the pretense that they interfered with the expansion of trade and the progress of the country. When the English parliament in its wisdom, deemed it its duty to enforce an anti-usury law, such legislation had, beyond doubt, became a necessity and was a long-felt want. Under the beneficient influence of such legislation, the ruins heaped up by usury and the disasters which ever follow in its wake, gradually decreased, and finally, in 1853, the British parliament, having come to the conclusion that it was more expedient to foster freedom of trade than to protect the few victims of usury, the statute regulating the rate of interest was repealed. So it was with our own country and it became free to money-lenders and all other persons to stipulate any rate of interest whatsoever.

Later on, the many-headed monster of usury began again to show signs of life and in our young country, forty years had scarcely elapsed when lo ! usury was rampant again and had become the great curse of our community.

In Great Britain usury has become at the present day as great an evil as it was formerly, and so disastrous did the results prove that in England, the very home of commercial freedom, they have not hesitated to brush away as irrelevant the objection taken to the adoption of an anti-usury law as likely to interfere with freedom of trade. They did, in fact, pass and turn into law a Bill, which, in its main features at least, is similar to the measure which I now ask this House to put on our statute-book.

In order to show, Sir, that the need of an anti-usury law is seriously felt in this country, I do not deem it necessary to enter into any lengthy details ; but, were I not afraid to trespass upon the indulgence of the House, I could give quite a long list of young lawyers, young notaries, young clerks, young professional men, young bank clerks, who after having occupied positions of trust which enabled them to handle the money of others, and who, having had the misfortune of falling into the hands of usurers, were induced to use other people's money to satisfy the exigencies of those money-lenders, and are now within the walls of penitentiaries or fugitives from justice in the United States.

The usurers nowadays, I dare say, have emboldened to the point of stipulating rates of interest as high as from 5 to 10 per cent per month, which represents an interest of from 60 to 120 per cent a year. Nay, more, they are bold enough to go before the courts and in the sacred name of justice, ask the tribunals to sanction such exorbitant rates of interest.

I now call to mind the case of a money-lender having lent a small sum at the rate of 12 per cent a day, sued his debtor, and obtained judgment at the rate of the stipulated interest, and why ? Because, Sir, as the judge indignantly declared, the law left him no option, because he had no discretion in the matter, and his hands were tied ; but he did not hesitate to say that it was the duty of the legislature to grapple with the evil and remedy such a serious state of things.

It was after such judgments rendered by the courts and also in consequence of the remarks fallen from the Bench, that public opinion being stirred up, the press advocated drastic legislation against such abuses Then it was that the Bill, which I now bring forward, was introduced in the other House by Senator Dandurand. Last year, the Bill passed in the Senate, but came up for discussion in this House at too late a stage of the session to allow of its being passed into law. This year, I deemed it my duty to take charge of the Bill in this House, and it was in order to discharge such duty that I introduced this Bill.

From the reports published by various commissions organized in Great Britain, with a view to the passing of the Bill I have referred to, and also from the expression of opinion given by competent men in the matter, I gather that there are two means which may be adopted, if not for suppressing usury altogether, at least for remedying in some measure the evils attendant upon it. The first consists in giving the courts power to go back to the origin of the transaction, to inquire into all the circumstances surrounding the loan, and to determine, as it appears to the judge, what amount should be legitimately charged in each case. The second means consists in determining, by statute, a maximum rate of interest, debarring the money-lender from recovering in justice any amount in excess of that maximum rate, and enabling the debtor to recover the amount so paid in excess.

The Bill now before the House follows the lines of the latter proposition. To leave to the judge the power to determine, in his discretion what rate of interest should be charged in each case would tend to destroy uniformity in the enforcement of the law. In fact, I know judges who would look upon a rate of 20 per cent in certain cases as reasonable and fair, while others under similar circumstances, would look upon the same as outrageous.

So far as the province of Quebec in particular is concerned, I must confess that such a system, in my opinion, is apparently impracticable. I am not familiar with the procedure followed in the other provinces, but in the province of Quebec when a debtor is sued by the lender for the amount claimed to be due, even if he acknowledged his indebtedness as to a portion only of the amount claimed, he must, in order to throw the costs of the contestation on the shoulders of the opposite party, tender and deposit the amount which he owes.

Were it left to the court to determine the rate of interest to be charged, the debtor would never be able to make a tender to the plaintiff, because he could not know what rate of interest the judge looks upon as reasonable and fair that is the reason why it is necessary to determine the rate of interest which the lender may collect ; because it would be ridiculous to give such protection to the debtor, were he forced to pay additional costs instead of the interest. Under such circumstances, believing that the system of giving such powers to the courts would prove unworkable at least in our province, we deemed it preferable in framing the Bill, to fix a reasonable rate of interest as a maximum rate beyond which any amount exacted by the lender should be looked upon as usurious.

In the Bill now before this House the maximum rate is fixed at 20 per cent for loans below $500 ; and in the case of business transactions above that amount, the Bill does not apply. Those who are opposed to this Bill take objection to the fixing of a maximum rate of interest at 20 per cent on grounds which are diametrically opposed to each other. The first objection, and it is one which has been invariably taken to anti-usury laws in the past—goes to say that such legislation interferes with freedom of trade. The second objection is that, if you fix a rate of interest at 20 per cent, you thereby encourage a rise in the rate of interest in general in all business transactions to that maximum, which would be too high a rate.

I quite agree that, nowadays more than ever before, money has become a commodity, the value of which fluctuates on the market just as much as any other commodity; but I may remark here that I have incorporated in the Bill two provisions which obviate this difficulty. Thus, to meet the objection of those who think that the Bill is encroaching upon freedom of trade, it is enacted that in the case of larger loans, above that amount, in which greater risks are incurred and from which greater benefits are expected, the Bill does not apply.

As to great financial transactions and enterprises, such as railway construction, deepening of canals, mining operations and other similar operations for which considerable loans are made, and where the money-lender incurs great risks, the law governing the rate of interest remains as it stands today. This Bill aims at protecting those who borrow small sums without incurring any great risks or expecting to reap any large benefits; in short, men who go to the money-lender, just to meet certain expenditures in the ordinary course of their business, or in the practice of their profession, and who would be exposed to fall into the clutches of a Shylock, without any hope of ever succeeding to recover their freedom. In short, by limiting to 20 per cent the maximum rate of interest that can be legally charged on small loans below $500, there is a sufficient margin left for all reasonable business transactions.

Besides, in this matter of freedom of trade, it should be borne in mind that, the objection taken to the Bill in that regard has already been solved. Parliament did not believe that it was an infringement upon the liberty of commerce to pass laws against the organization of compacts or combines, by which certain parties control the sale of some products or commodities or raise the price of those articles at their sweet will. It never occurred to parliament that, when called upon to pass such legislation against combines, that they were interfering with or laying a sacrilegious hand upon the sacred principle of commercial freedom. So again, should parliament pass an Act prohibiting usurers' rates of interest, I am of the opinion that far from being an encroachment upon that great principle, the limitation of the rate of interest would result in preventing money-lenders from giving money a fictitious and exhorbitant value.

Objection is taken to the fixing of a maximum rate of interest, say 20 per cent, as likely to bring about a rise in the rate of interest up to that figure in all business transactions; but such objection, to my mind, is groundless. As a matter of fact, the money-lenders who now charge 60 per cent, 100 per cent and even 200 per cent, would undoubtedly exact the maximum of 20 per cent. But as to loans on which money-lenders, under the statute as it now stands, charge only 10, 12 or 15 per cent, it would not be fair to say that they would be induced to raise their rate of interest owing to a limitation having been fixed by the Bill, beyond which, the rate would be extortionate and usurious. They would very likely, under such circumstances, keep within reasonable bounds, and charge only a moderate interest.

Besides, we know from experience that the fixing of a rate of interest does not necessarily bring about such results. The Banking Act fixes a maximum rate, for the banks, of 7 per cent, for all current business transactions. But, as is well known, the banks, for loans of five thousand dollars and more, charge 5 per cent and even less, notwithstanding the fact that they are allowed under the statute to charge 7 per cent.

This Bill also provides that if a money-lender sues his creditor and obtains judgment against him, the rate of interest shall be reduced to the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of said judgment. In this connection, I may say that it was at the special request of the judicature of the province of Quebec and particularly of the district of Montreal that such provision was incorporated in this Bill. On two different occasions, I heard from the bench remarks to the effect that it was greatly to be deplored that the courts were not given the power, when rendering judgment, to reduce the rate of interest. Mr. Justice Gill, when rendering judgment in the case I referred to a little while ago, which condemned the defendant to pay 12 per cent interest per diem, complained bitterly and indignantly that the legislature had not yet grappled with this question and remedied the existing evil.

The Bill contains also a provision respecting existing contracts. From the time of the coming into force of this Bill, no rate of interest, stipulated in contracts or agreements entered into before such date and exceeding 20 per cent, shall bear a rate of interest greater than that maximum rate. Moreover, from the date of the coming into force of this Bill, no rate of interest greater than 6 per cent per annum shall be recovered upon any judgment rendered under the operation of the old Act, just as in the case of judgments rendered subsequent to the passage of this Bill. Of course, the Bill contains a provision for the protection of the rights of third parties, in the case of a money-lender having conveyed a note of hand drawn prior to the passage of this Act. Such third person may recover the amount thereof, but the party discharging such instrument may reclaim from the money-lender any amount paid thereon for interest or discount in excess of the amount allowed by this Act.

Then, we have incorporated in the Bill a penal clause which makes the money-lender who infringes this Act guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding one year, or to a penalty not exceeding one thousand dollars.

The intention, in providing imprisonment was not only to frame a drastic law, but to attach opprobium to the business of the usurer.

We do not claim absolute perfection for the Bill, and the draft which is now before the House may, no doubt, be recast and improved. For my part, I shall be happy to receive from members of experience in this House, any suggestion they may think proper. I am confident that, with the assistance of the hon. gentlemen, we can, if necessary, amend the Bill so as to render it more acceptable. There are portions of this Bill which can be discussed more practically in committee, when each clause is up for consideration, and when amendments may be suggested and considered. I believe that if it is remodelled in committee in that spirit, it may prove a very useful measure.

But irrespective of any amendment that may be made to this Bill, I appeal in a particular manner to the members of this House to spare no efforts in waging war against usury and removing the evils attendant upon it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Madore) proposes some very radical changes in this Bill, and it contains provisions which have never yet been investigated by a committee. I would ask him if he would state to the House briefly in English, the reasons he thinks would justify the House in adopting the measure.

Mr. MADORE. Mr. Speaker, as I have stated in French, it has become necessary periodically to introduce a measure against Shylocks in different civilized countries during the past centuries. We have had in Canada, as there was in England, a law against usury. This law worked fairly well in England, until about 1853, when it was thought it was not necessary to keep it in force, and for the sake of what was called commercial liberty, the law was repealed. So it was in Canada. Since then, however, it has been found that money-lenders have multiplied everywhere, and that usury has become as great an evil at the present day, as it was when the usury law of England was first passed. Last year, a law was passed in the British House of Commons, containing about the same provisions as the Bill which I now have the honour to submit to this House. In Canada, usury has been the ruin of many young men in the province of Quebec, and, I presume, in other provinces as well. I could mention many and many names of young lawyers, young notaries, young professional men, young bank clerks who handle the money of others, and who having put themselves into the hands of a money-lender without a soul, have been obliged to use other people's money to satisfy the demands of the usurer, and are now either in our penitentiaries or fugitives from justice in foreign countries. It is well, therefore, that we should pass a law to restrict the rate of interest that can legally be charged on a loan. In this Bill, I have limited to 20 per cent per annum, the amount of interest that can legally be charged on loans under the sum of $500. In the case of large loans in which greater risks are incurred, and from which greater benefits are expected, this Bill does not apply. It only applies to loans made to young men for short periods in the general course of their own business. I think that 20 per cent under these circumstances is quite a reasonable rate, and should not be considered as an infringement of the liberty of commerce. These are the principal reasons which I have urged in French in favour of the Bill. The Bill also provides that if a money-lender sues and obtains judgment, a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent should not be allowed from the date of judgment. There is another class which says that for all previous loans which are still undue, from the time of the coming into force of this law, the rate of interest would be reduced to 12 per cent, and on all judgments rendered previously to the effect that the defendant should pay a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent, the rate would be reduced to 6 per cent from the very moment that this law comes into force. Then there is a penal clause which makes the money-lender guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding one year, or to a penalty not exceeding $1,000, who lends money at a higher rate of interest than that authorized by the Act. It has been thought well to provide for imprisonment, with a view of casting a stigma on the business of the usurer.

Mr. THOMAS FORTIN (Laval). The question of regulating the rate of interest has in most civilized countries excited very much discussion and, at various times, provoked some legislation. From the very earliest period in the Roman state there were laws regulating the rate of interest. In the Middle Ages, as is well known, no interest whatever for the use of money was deemed to be legitimate; and the word 'usury' derives its etymology from that period. Coming down later, we find various statutes passed in England regulating the rate of interest. I believe the first English statute on the subject was 37 Henry VIII., chapter 9, which fixed the rate at 10 per cent per annum. This statute was subsequently repealed and again re-enacted; and finally, the last statute regulating the rate of interest, and declaring an excess of the rate to be usury was passed in 12 Queen Anne, chap. 16. By that statute the rate of interest was fixed at 5 per cent, and any rate stipulated in excess of that amount was declared to be usury, to which offence a penalty was attached. This law was repealed by 17-18 Vic., c. 90. We have had similar legislation in our own country. The first was 17 George III., chap. 3, which fixed the rate of interest at 6 per cent per annum, and declared null and void all contracts and obligations wherein a rate in excess of 6 per cent was stipulated ; and in addition a penalty was attached to this offence. In 1853 the first step was taken to repeal that statute. By 16 Victoria, chapter 80, the nullity of an obligation or contract whereby a rate of interest in excess of 6 per cent was stipulated, was repealed. Finally, in 1858, by 22 Vict., chap. 85, the statute regulating the rate of interest was repealed, and it became free to money-lenders and all other persons, to stipulate any rate of interest whatsoever. That law has been embodied in our civil code in the province of Quebec, and it is the law to-day. The legal rate of interest, in the absence of any stipulation, is 6 per cent per annum. In France, in the early part of this century, the law merely regulated the legal rate of interest in the absence of any stipulation ; but subsequent to the Code Napoleon, I think in 1807, a law was passed by which a legal rate of interest was established. I think in France to-day the rate is 5 per cent for ordinary transactions and 6 per cent for commercial transactions.

If the Bill before the House were intended to restrict the practice of stipulating the rate of interest in ordinary transactions, I must tell you very candidly that I would be radically opposed to it. I am in favour of liberty in all its forms, particularly in ordinary business transactions. The time when money was regarded as something special, distinct from other commodities in life, has passed. Money is now recognized by all civilized countries as an ordinary commodity the value of which may vary according to time and circumstances. A contract which provides for a rate of interest amounting to 200 per cent or 300 per cent, or even 500 per cent per annum, may look very bad ; but it is well known that at times of commercial crisis such rates of interest are not looked upon as exorbitant, and moreover they are sometimes the only means of avoiding more complete disaster. It is well known that on such days as the Black Friday of Wall Street, interest was stipulated at 2 per cent or 3 per cent per day, and the rate was not looked upon as excessive. What would have happened if the banks had been restricted by law to a certain rate of interest ? The money would simply have been left in the vaults, and instead of one or two big firms going to the wall, perhaps hundreds or thousands would have been ruined. Though I am entirely opposed to any law restricting the ordinary liberty of trade and commerce on this subject, I am not very sure that something ought not to be done for a particular class of people. I am not at all sure that there are enough of those victims described by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) to justify legislation of this character. Of course, the cases that come to light do not present a very agreeable appearance ; but I am happy to say that there are only very few cases, and the question to consider is whether there are a sufficient number of victims of usury to warrant parliament in passing a special measure on the subject. To my mind this is very doubtful. It is well known that paper, whether negotiable or otherwise, is sold to-day, in all centres where money is loaned, for what it is supposed to be worth. A man whose signature is worth something can go to almost any bank and obtain money at a fair rate of interest. How is it, then, that people have to stipulate 50, 60 or 100 per cent per annum ? Because the signature of the man to whom it is loaned is hardly worth anything. The money-lenders in many cases know that they will never recover the amount they lend. Their only hope of recovering anything and making any profit is in stipulating a high rate of interest, and when they have received the interest for twelve months or so, they have recovered their capital, and they run a chance of recovering the remainder. My hon. friend has cited cases that have come before the courts and have called forth remarks from the bench as to the necessity of such a law. But to have an accurate idea of the evil, we should have information as to how much is on the average recovered upon the judgments in such cases. It may be scandalous upon the face of it to find judgments giving 200 per cent or 300 per cent, on the original loan—giving sometimes $2,000 on a loan of $100 or $200. But in 99 out of 100 such cases, I venture to say, the plaintiffs get nothing but the judgments themselves. It may be embarrassing to a defendant to have a judgment registered against him, but as a rule nothing is recovered by the money-lender.

However, I would not take the responsibility of opposing a measure of this kind. I have already said I have very serious doubts whether there is a sufficient number of victims to call for this legislation, but the fact that the proposed statute is not what is called a usury law constitutes its redeeming feature. It is not a law against usury, but intended merely to apply to the transactions of those commonly known as Shylocks or shavers. But is this measure the proper way of dealing with these people ? Would it not be preferable to make a special section in the Criminal Code declaring that parties guilty of such practices shall be liable to criminal prosecution. I am inclined to believe that that would be the best course, but in default of any such course being adopted I think the present Bill should be at least very carefully considered. It is restricted to money-lenders, and I take it to be almost a copy of the Imperial statute which was passed last year, and it is a matter for regret that this Imperial statute was not passed before, as we then would have had the benefit of the experience of its working in England. But as it has only been in force since the 1st of November, 1900, we are not in a position to judge by experience of the working of that Act. Such an Act might be not only useful, but absolutely necessary in England and yet not necessary in this country, because in England large fortunes are transmitted by the mere effect of the law from one generation to another, and the young men, who are awaiting their inheritance, are liable to fall into the toils of those money-lenders who will discount their expectations. But in this country we have no such law, but are perfectly free to dispose of property by will, and consequently no such evils can arise here as are felt in England.

There is one fault I find and that is in section 3, limiting the rate of interest upon small loans to 20 per cent. I am of the opinion that the legal rate of interest on any amount should be kept within reasonable bounds. In all the laws previously in force in any country, limiting or regulating the rate of interest, such rate never exceeded 10 per cent, and in England that rate was only allowed in the case of maritime hazards. It is very much to be feared that by embodying 20 per cent in this Bill, people will be led to believe that 20 per cent is the legal rate of interest on amounts below $500, so that in avoiding one danger, we may fall into another. Perhaps the simplest way would be to limit the rate of interest after maturity. This, I believe, would do away in a very large measure with the evil existing to-day.

A note is a negotiable instrument and its value is decided by the responsibility of the persons whose names are affixed to it. When a note is negotiated before maturity, the party who takes that note gives for it what he thinks it is worth, and there can be no question of usury in that transaction. The trouble comes after maturity. Take, for instance, a note for $50 at 5 per cent per month. The maker anticipates only paying 5 per cent interest, but if not paid at maturity, then the interest accumulates, and he finds himself under an obligation to pay an amount much in excess of what he anticipated when he made the note.

I simply offer these few remarks as indicating my views on a first perusal of the Bill and not in any spirit of hostile criticism. I believe the measure well worthy of serious consideration, but I doubt whether there is a sufficient number of victims to warrant this parliament interfering with the law and passing this special legislation. However, this Bill is intended specially for the Shylocks, who lend at excessive rates of interest, and will not interfere with legitimate business; and if we cannot make any provision in the Criminal Code that will punish these men, legislation of the kind now submitted may have a beneficial effect.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I regret that I was unable to follow the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill (Mr. Madore), but I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman's object is to remedy what he considers a very great evil. I wish to point out that the hon. gentleman is endeavouring to protect those who come under the exception rather than under the rule that prevails throughout the country. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) very aptly asked the promoter to state in English what the main objects of his Bill were. And the objects as the hon. gentleman gave them resolved themselves into this, to protect young men who live rather extravagantly—though he did not say that, nor am I going to say it, but young men who live beyond their means, properly or improperly—and become indebted to money-lenders, and become discredited and disgraced, and many of whom he says are now fugitives from justice. There may be such cases, but I am sure the House is not prepared to disturb a business useful to the country for the purpose of meeting cases of that kind. I should be glad to see young men protected from the evils the hon. gentleman has referred to; but, we must not injure the great mass of the people for the benefit of the few. If the hon. gentleman has given the slightest attention to usury laws, he knows that, as a rule they have not done what was expected of them. I do not mean to say that we should not restrain money-lenders at all, but it should be done with great care. You cannot lay down an arbitrary rule on this subject without interfering with a perfectly legitimate business in this country. Under the present law, where there is no contract, the borrower is always protected against extortionate rates. But, we must take care not to injure the large class of legitimate borrowers in this country. Take, for instance, the farmers who borrow money at short dates. I will suppose that the hon. gentleman is in the position of a money-lender, carrying on a private bank. No one will pretend to say that private bankers do not perform an important function in the business of the country. Chartered banks do not care for small loans at short dates. The class of borrowers dealt with give a security also that the chartered banks do not care for. Suppose that the hon. gentleman were in the habit of making loans at 20 per cent, which is the maximum allowed under this Bill. A farmer comes in, and desiring to borrow $50 for fifteen days. For that loan the hon. gentleman would be allowed to charge only about forty cents. He has to look after the money, and see to its collection; and when it comes back, it may remain for fifteen or twenty days before being loaned again. What appears, when stated as a percentage, to be a very high rate, is really not a high rate when the circumstances are all considered. My own experience and observation is that in attempting such regulations as is here proposed, you are very apt to strike a severe blow at the class of people who, though they borrow money in small sums pay it back, and are not disgraced or brought into court. Who is the dependent person in these transactions? The man with the money is not dependent, he can make his own terms—if he cannot make them one way he can in another. These small short date loans would not be made upon negotiable security, but the lender would insist upon a chattel mortgage. So, if a man wished to borrow twenty-five or thirty dollars, it would cost him two or three dollars for drawing and registration. Such a transaction would be a mere evasion of this law; but the man who most needs money will be driven to seek the loan even upon these onerous terms. Suppose a farmer wishes to hold his grain for twenty days, and goes to a private banker to borrow fifty or a hundred dollars. He does not object to paying twenty-five per cent. If, without it, he might be compelled to dispose of his grain at a time when the market was unfavourable, the loss would be far greater than the interest on the money. I would ask the hon. gentleman if there is any general demand for this Bill. Is there any general outery against the sharks and Shylocks whom we have heard of here. There are some, no doubt, but there are men of great respectability carrying on private banks, men who do not charge such exorbitant rates as has been spoken of. The cases against which the hon. gentleman desires to direct legislation, I fancy occur mainly in great centres, where young men are in need of more money than others require. But these cases are comparatively few, and to injure the many in order to protect that few would be a great mistake. I do not think this Bill should go to a committee; the House should have no difficulty in rejecting it at this stage, for it has not a single good feature in it.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I have not had the advantage of hearing the whole of the discussion on this Bill, but I am bound to say I am in favour of giving the measure a fair trial. I do agree with my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) as to there not being a general demand for such a law as this. I did not gather from the remarks of the promoter of the Bill, that the evil which is attempted to be cured is confined to a few young men who have led lives involving too much expense. It is well known in the city of Montreal that the evils of usury are not confined to this class of young men, but are general. The expense of living in Montreal is considerable, and the revenues of a great many people—not young men only, but of many others of a diversified class—are far below what they ought to be to meet these expenses. Many are obliged to have a resort to the money-lenders, and the evil pointed out by my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) arises. Nor is this state of affairs, I believe, confined to the city of Montreal. I believe we shall hear from members of this House that in many other large centres the same thing exists. It exists in England, as is evidenced by the fact that last year a Bill such as this, in fact a Bill after which this seems to have been drafted was passed by the British parliament, and is now on the statute-book, and known as 63-64 Vic., cap. 51, 'The Money-lenders Act.' I have not given this British Act very careful study, but it seems to be exactly the same as the Bill now before us, allowing for some changes made necessary by the difference of circumstances. It is stated that this interferes with liberty. In the first place, let me point out that this Bill is aimed at the Shylocks only. Section 2, defines what a money-lender is. If a man chooses, under the circumstances pointed out by the hon. member for Bothwell, to come to the relief of a farmer, he does not come under the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

Mr. MONK. No, not as I understand it, because he is not a money-lender, a man who habitually lends money at a higher rate than 10 per cent; so I say the Bill is restricted to that class of people who make a habit of profiting by the misfortunes of others. As to the other clauses, I think that the limit fixed of 20 per cent is a very reasonable one. Even as in the case spoken of by the member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), I think the man who lends a sum only for a few days ought to be satisfied with 20 per cent interest. The great difficulty, I think, is that laws of this kind have been passed time and again and have failed to meet the evil. I question very much whether this law, carefully framed though it has been, and in view of the experience of a great number of years with the operations of these money-lenders, will attain the object aimed at. I would ask the hon. member for Hochelaga how he would solve, for instance, a case such as was submitted a moment ago by the hon. member for Lanark. Supposing the hon. member for Hochelaga gives me his note of hand for $100 for one month, and I go to you, Mr. Speaker, and sell it to you for $70; how will this Bill operate to relieve the member for Hochelaga ? I do not think it is possible to meet a case such as that, although I find in section 4 that extraordinary power is given to the court to examine all the circumstances of the transaction, and the court can give relief if the circumstances appear to justify it. I think the fact that this remedy has been tried in England, where they have adopted an Act to give relief to a large class of people who suffer from the exactions of these money-lenders, would dispose me to give this law a fair trial. It was discussed thoroughly in the Senate last year, and adopted by that body, and I think we should give it a trial.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS St. John and Iberville.) (Translation). Mr. Speaker, the measure brought forward by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) deals with one of the most important and the most intricate problems which can engross the attention of a deliberative body. The trouble is, how to observe the golden means in dealing with a problem with regard to which there has always been such a broad divergence of opinion among men. The old axiom that money is barren and unproductive, no longer holds good nowadays. I believe that my hon. friend, in introducing this Bill, had in his mind the axiom which says that 'virtue is removed from extremes' and that 'you will go with the greatest safety in a middle path'; for, he has chosen a middle path between the extremes of absolute commercial freedom, as it exists now, and absolute restriction as it existed of old.

It is next to impossible to draft a Bill which is not open to some objection or other. It is very seldom that you find a legislation, which does not admit of some exception unforeseen by those who framed it. I think this Bill is entitled to our most serious consideration.

Now, coming to the principle of this Bill, I say that in order to determine whether it should be accepted, we have only to inquire whether there exists such an evil as usury in this country. The Bill now before us is an anti-usury legislation. Usury is the taking of more for the use of money than the law allows, or the extortion of a sum beyond what is legal. Under this Bill the maximum rate of interest is fixed at 20 per cent, and it is an indictable offence to charge a higher rate than that.

That, in the great centres particularly usurers are found who charge extortionate rates of interest is beyond question. The leading newspapers in this country have been denouncing that crying evil for years and years.

Under the circumstances, parliament, I believe, should not hesitate to grapple with this problem, and to give its best consideration to the Bill, which was framed with a view to remedying this evil. The principle of this Bill is excellent, and the committee to which it is to be referred, will, no doubt, give it their best consideration.

They say that such legislation interferes with freedom of trade; but far from encroaching upon the liberty of commerce, it simply aims at checking the rapacity of usurers and protecting our brothers and our children, and all those who are exposed, to be victimized by those Shylocks. It must be borne in mind that liberty is not freedom to do wrong.

Although I agree in principle with this Bill, I reserve to myself the same rights as other hon. gentlemen have to discuss some of the details in committee, and assist the hon. gentleman (Mr. Madore) in making a workable measure out of the Bill he has brought forward. I believe that all usurious contracts and obligations should be declared null and void under common law, for, a contract which contains unlawful or immoral stipulations is ipso facto null and void. Such is the principle of contracts such as laid down in our Civil Code, and such is the legislation in force in all countries which have adopted the principles of roman law.

That usurious contracts should be set aside is beyond question. But, I may be told : Are you not afraid of giving the sanction of the law to another immorality, I mean, the risk which the lender would incur of not being paid back ? No, Sir, I entertain no such fear, because the lender may have his recourse by means of another action, that is to say, the lender may recover only to the extent of the amount by which the borrower has benefited.

We could well adopt section 11 of chap. 127 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, which deals with such cases.

I do not intend going at any greater length into the details of the Bill now before the House. I approve of the principle of the measure, and to my mind, the whole question may thus be summed up : Does there exist an evil which calls for such a remedy ?

We owe protection to the weak, and the argument put forward by those who say that the evil is not general enough to call for such drastic legislation, is unfounded. The evil exists, and it is the duty of parliament to grapple with it. In conclusion, I may say that the measure now under discussion is one which deserves our best consideration, and one which commends itself to the approbation of the House.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). While most of those who are supporting the Bill speak from an urban standpoint, I may say that in the western part of Canada and in the new provinces, we need such legislation as that more, perhaps, than it is needed in older provinces. In the new provinces we have men who have failed, to some extent, to succeed in their former places of residence, and have moved out west with the view of bettering their condition. They are not always provided with the means to start an establishment, and are therefore compelled, in many instances, to borrow money, and unfortunately they have to borrow it of those Shylocks, as they have been well described by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin). We have too many of those money-lenders who take advantage of poor men who are trying to improve their condition, and are compelled to resort to men who make a business of lending money at a high rate of interest. Speaking from my own experience, I know many cases where farmers were improving their position, but were compelled to have recourse to these Shylocks, have been in consequence completely ruined; their properties for which they had paid have been in a short time taken from them, and they have been thrown upon the road and ruined through having been compelled to pay as high as, not 20 per cent, not 50 per cent, but 300 or 400 per cent. I say it is time this House should take this monstrous evil into consideration, and adopt some such measure as that presented by my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore). It is high time that we should put a stop to the doings of these money sharks, because there is absolute need of legislation such as this in the newer provinces of Canada at least, if not in the older provinces.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). The old battle over free trade in money and attempts to restrict rates of interest, is now being fought over again to a certain extent in the discussion on this Bill. No doubt a great deal can be said from a practical standpoint as to the advantages of free trade in money, that is, leaving men at perfect liberty to hire or lend money. Under many aspects legislative efforts to restrict the rate of interest in matters of business are necessarily very difficult to enforce; but that there have been such efforts made in the past is evident from a study of history. Principles against taking excessive interest have always prevailed in the mother legislature, as well as in the various legislatures of Canada. The only question that can arise upon that point is whether these restrictions can be made available for the purpose of preventing extortion, and as to the effect of these efforts to protect certain persons that the legislature desires to protect. Those who have perused the reports upon the subject of litigation where excessive interest has been exacted, and where judges have been compelled by law to render judgments for large amounts of interest, have been shocked and wounded in their sense of justice. We must admit that the parties who have fallen into these traps are to be pitied, but in the main it is very difficult to protect them, even with the passage of such a measure as this. There are, unfortunately, persons who have no appreciation whatever of the significance of the contract which they have signed. They are, of course, severely pressed for the use of money, like many others, but they are unfortunately unqualified by education or knowledge of financial transactions to know the real nature of the contract which they signed and the obligations under which they are placed, and that the legislature should step in and protect this class of people from extortion I think no one can dispute. As to whether the provisions of this Bill will remedy these evils may be open to question. There are, no doubt, portions of the Bill which can be discussed more practically in committee when each clause is up for consideration and when amendments may be suggested and considered. I notice that this Bill is divided into two parts, to one of which only shall I allude in the few remarks that I propose to make. Clause 9 proposes to add an offence to the Criminal Code and to make persons liable to indictment who charge excessive interest over the rates provided for in this Bill. I question whether the general sense of the committee and the feeling of indignation which people have against those charging excessive interest have gone sufficiently far to declare that a contract which is voluntarily entered into by the supposed victim, and as to which there is necessarily no fraud, should involve a criminal offence. I question whether it is not stretching the powers of this parliament in its jurisdiction over indictable offences too far to make a criminal offence of that which heretofore has not been deemed a criminal offence and which has been deemed a venial offence even from the criminal standpoint. I think there may be discussion as to the advisability of adopting such a course. As to the other questions arising out of the Bill, I think, when we observe that it applies only to contracts where the sum involved is under $500, it is easily perceived that large financial transactions are not affected and that it is only parties who are requiring the use of small sums of money that this Bill is designed to reach. Another question which may arise in committee is as to the definition of the term 'money-lender,' and as to whether the law, professedly operating for the benefit of practically the whole public, should not provide that one class of money-lenders should be placed entirely on the same basis as all other money-lenders. I think it would be found very difficult in practice, as a matter of litigation, to ascertain the real practical meaning of this term 'money-lender.' If the present practices operate so grievously against the poorer classes of the citizens as to require this drastic legislation, I think it would be only proper that it should apply to all persons who lend money, whether they are regular money-lenders or not. With these exceptions, I think the principle of the Bill, as it has commended itself to the British parliament and as it has commended itself to a number of legislatures on this continent, might well be accepted by the parliament of Canada and the details worked out in committee in order to carry out the design of the hon. gentleman who has brought this measure forward. As far as I am personally acquainted with business transactions in the maritime provinces I am not aware that extortion or that the evils which have been so graphically and picturesquely described by the hon. gentleman have resulted. The evils seem to be rather particular to the city of Montreal and to some of the larger centres of population in the country, and as my hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière), who preceded me, remarked, perhaps in some of the districts of the great west where farmers might find themselves unfortunately involved owing to their ignorance of the contracts they were entering into and owing to their necessities at certain seasons of the year. In the maritime provinces the matter has not been pressed to any great extent on the attention of public men, but with the evidence we have had from the hon. gentlemen who represent these two extremes, I think parliament is honestly bound to endeavour to provide a remedy for that state of affairs which appears to have pressed so grievously upon large classes of the people. I, therefore, while approving of the principle of the Bill, reserve the same right as other hon. gentlemen have to discuss some of the details in committee and endeavour, if possible, to assist my hon. friend in making a workable measure out of the Bill he has brought forward.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty to offer my congratulations to my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) for having introduced his measure in such eloquent terms. I also congratulate the hon. Senator Dandurand who, upon two different occasions, has brought this Bill before the Senate and has succeeded in having it endorsed by his colleagues. This is a measure of public policy, and although an hon. member has expressed the opinion that the victims of usury were not very numerous after all in this country, I may tell him this : that it is not the consideration of the amount at stake or of the number of victims which should induce us to support the Bill introduced by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Madore), but the serious character and the extent of the evil which we are called upon to grapple with.

Alongside with the freedom of doing good, there is also found the liberty of doing wrong, and it is the latter liberty which calls for a restrictive law. We are told that to pass this measure would constitute an infringement upon the freedom of trade. For my part, I confess that I harbour in my breast the highest respect for commercial freedom ; but is it not a matter of fact that every day this principle is being infringed upon, and that commercial liberty is being curtailed ? Are not the customs and excise duties as many limitations of commercial liberty ? And still, handicapped as trade and commerce are by these necessary restrictions, nobody dreams of complaining about it. Therefore I say that parliament is empowered and is in duty bound to restrict the freedom which money-lenders enjoy of charging extortionate rates of interest. To my mind, the rate of interest stipulated by the present Bill is quite reasonable.

We have drifted very far from the doctrine of Christ. We claim to be a Christian people. Both the Imperial parliament and the Dominion parliament are said to be actuated by the most sincere Christian feelings. Now, Sir, without going back very far in the past, I perfectly remember the words of the Divine Master to his disciples : Mutuum date nihil inde sperantes, ' Lend, hoping for nothing again.' But, I ask, can it be said that we are living up to this divine precept when we, in a civilized country, are tolerating the exaction of such exorbitant rates of interest by money-lenders ? It is a well-known fact that money-lenders, particularly in the city of Montreal, despoil their victims of everything and even of their honour. I speak with a full knowledge of the facts, and the hon. member for Hochelaga could give the names of money-lenders who charge as high as 200 per cent interest. During my professional career, I have been called upon to occupy in cases before the court of assize where it was shown that young men had been led to the penitentiary by those Shylocks whom my hon. friend has just denounced with so much vigour. Take for instance the case at the 'Banque Ville Marie,' when two young accountants were arrested, after having completely wrecked an institution which had so far been looked upon as perfectly solvent. One of them was sentenced to the penitentiary and the other discharged by reason of his youth. Those two young men had been brought before the court, in consequence of their relations with usurers.

All this goes to show that the existing evil calls for parliamentary interference, and the limitation of the rate of interest when, for instance, you prevent people from taking their money to the lotteries, do you not restrict their freedom ? And yet, parliament did not hesitate to pass legislation for doing away with these lotteries. Again, was it not, on the part of parliament an encroachment upon the liberty of commerce to incorporate in our criminal code clauses making it an indictable offence to form trade combines or trusts, having for their object the undue enhancement of prices. Now, if it is lawful to restrict freedom of trade, with a view to preventing the creation of trusts and combines, and the running of lotteries ; if it is lawful to impose customs and excise duties, I think it is still more lawful to adopt a legislation framed with a view to protect weak or necessitous men from being overreached or oppressed by usurers.

On these several grounds, I intend to give my support to the Bill introduced by my hon. friend (Mr. Madore), and I hope it will be carried into law.

Mr. F. B. WADE (Annapolis). The question of interest is regulated by chap. 127 R.S.C. and amending Acts. The law is not uniform for all the provinces, certain provisions applying to certain provinces only, and do not have general application. Some of its provisions relate to the province of Nova Scotia only. I refer particularly to section 13, chap. 127 as amended, which provides that at the present time interest upon real estate securities cannot exceed 7 per cent per annum, and on all other contracts, if there is not a stipulation, the rate is 5 per cent and there cannot be an agreement for over 10 per cent. Now, the Bill which we are considering deals with transactions under $500, and legalizes the exacting of interest up to 20 per cent, and so would alter the law as it is in Nova Scotia by increasing the maximum rate of interest upon sums under $500 to 20 per cent. For that reason I object to the Bill. It does seem that the difficulty which is contemplated by the preamble of the Bill exists only in the province of Quebec and therefore it would be well to exempt the province of Nova Scotia from its provisions, or let the same apply only to the province of Ontario and Quebec. If it is desirable that the law should apply to the province of Quebec I am sure I have no objection. We are not troubled with very many money-lenders in the province of Nova Scotia. The great worry with us is to find somebody to lend money to us.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WADE. I was filled with envy when I learned that the young men of Quebec were able to borrow money even at 20 per cent. We in Nova Scotia never found anyone who would favour us thus. I would therefore suggest that the province of Nova Scotia should be omitted from the provisions of this Bill, or if it goes to a committee, I trust that these matters may be considered so that the law may not be affected as it is in our province at the present time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). There is evidently a broad divergence of opinion amongst hon. members with regard to this Bill, and I am glad to say that the cleavage of opinion is not upon political lines. I was not aware until it had been stated here that a similar Bill had been passed by the Senate last year. I knew it was introduced, but I was surprised to hear that it had received the sanction of the Senate. The policy of the government of Canada (not of the existing administration, but of the government of Canada) has always been to permit the utmost freedom of trade in the matter of lending and borrowing money. Many years ago the Usury laws so called, which prohibited the charging of more than a fixed rate of interest, were abolished, and the general opinion will be that since then money has become cheaper and cheaper year after year. I can remember very well when 10 per cent, or even 1 per cent per month was not considered a very inconsiderable charge to make for money on note of hand. That has all passed by now. In the maritime provinces on good security money can be freely borrowed at 5 per cent, and 6 per cent, 7 per cent, and 8 per cent is considered a good interest to pay on note of hand. My hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin) stated the case in a nutshell when he said that while the principle of free trade in regard to the rate of interest is a good one, that possibly there might be exceptional circumstances which would justify a deviation from that good rule. The hon. gentleman from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) told us that this Bill is based largely upon the Act which passed the Imperial House of Commons last year. I have given some attention to that English legislation and I read the report of the committee upon it and the debate in the House. It must be remembered that the law as it ultimately passed the British House of Commons is not at all of the same nature as the Bill now before us. There are special circumstances existing in England, particularly in London, which do not exist in Canada. Every one knows of the great scandals which resulted from the publication of the transactions of the celebrated usurer Isaac Gordon who died last year.

An hon. MEMBER. Lewis.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No ; I refer to Isaac Gordon; Lewis was another. There is a class of money-lenders in England who carry on their business by means of circulars containing more or less misrepresentations, which class does not exist in this community at all. It was against that class alone that the English legislation was directed. But they did not pass that legislation hurriedly. The matter was brought before the British parliament some years ago, and a special committee, the members of which were selected for their peculiar qualification, was appointed to investigate. They heard a great many witnesses, including some of the most distinguished jurists of the High Court in England ; Mr. Justice Mathew, Mr. Justice Hawkins, and that celebrated solitor, Mr. George Lewis. And, after hearing the evidence of these witnesses as to the existence of the peculiar evil which required remedy, the government introduced the Bill. There was a report made by the committee to which I have referred and upon which the legislation was subsequently based, and that report contains the following :

After carefully considering the evidence which has been given in regard to particular transactions and the general expressions of opinion of persons so well qualified to form a judgment as Sir Henry Hawkins, Sir James Charles Mathew, Sir George Lewis, the inspector general in bankruptcy and the county court judges, your committee have unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that the system of money-lending by professional money-lenders at high rates of interest is productive of crime, bankruptcy, unfair advantage over the creditors of the borrower, extortion from the borrower's family and friends, and other serious injuries to the community.

And although your committee are satisfied that the system is sometimes honestly conducted, they are of the opinion that only in rare cases is a person benefited by loan obtained from a professional money-lender, and that the evil attendant upon the system far outweighs the good.

They therefore consider that there is urgent need for the interposition of the legislature with a view to removing the evil.

I take it that if any facts were given to this House to show a condition of affairs in Canada similar to those that exists in England there would be little hesitation in passing the necessary legislation. But, who has contended in this House that the present system of lending at higher than 6 per cent, or 10 per cent, or perhaps higher than 20 per cent in exceptional cases ; who in this House has pretended to cite facts showing that that system has been productive of 'crime, bankruptcy, unfair advantage over other creditors of the borrower and extortion from the borrower's family and others.' These things may exist in Canada, but we have not heard of them. Speaking for the part of the Dominion I have the honour to come from, I do not know that any such things exist. I have spoken with some of my maritime province friends and we are pretty well agreed that the evil does not exist to any great extent in these provinces. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), who is a distinguished member of the legal profession living in Montreal, is not able to state that in his judgment a very serious state of affairs exists there, and I understand it is largely upon the conditions said to exist in Montreal that this Bill is introduced.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the whole province.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. While I do not challenge the statement which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) makes——

Mr. LEMIEUX. And amongst the farmers too.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far as I can gather from statements of gentlemen on the other side of the House, there is no evil in the province of Ontario calling for this legislation. I know the evil does not exist in the maritime provinces, but on the statement of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) and the statement of the hon. gentleman from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), the evil may exist in the provinces of Manitoba and Quebec. If it does exist to any great extent, I have no doubt the House will be prepared to grapple with it.

Let us just see what the Bill is which my hon. friend proposes. He does not propose as a rule to remedy the extortion, which he states sometimes exists, of undue interest. His Bill is intended to apply only to a particular class of cases, that is, in the first place, to loans below $500. Under his Bill you could charge 40, 60 or 70 per cent on a loan of $501 or above that. There is no attempt to limit the rate of interest on such loans. Therefore, he has to show a special condition of circumstances existing which justifies us in adopting the arbitrary limit of $500, and making illegal a rate of interest on sums below $500 which we are willing should be legal on sums above that amount. But the hon. gentleman says also, and says properly, that we must confine the legislation also to a particular class, that is, money-lenders. In defining this class he has tried to give definiteness to that which otherwise would be entirely vague. He proposes that the Bill shall apply only to one who makes a practice of lending money at a higher rate than 10 per cent per annum. That in itself is not very definite. It would be difficut to prove, before the benefits of the law could be invoked, that any particular money-lender came within that category. The English law, of which this purports to be more or less a copy, provides that the money-lender shall be registered, both by name and by place of business, and that he shall only do business under the registered name, and at the registered place. He is thus made a special class set apart, and is registered under one of the departments of the state and receives a license. If he attempts to do business at any other place or under any other name than that registered, he is liable to a criminal prosecution and punishment.

My hon. friend will see further that it would be absolutely essential to do in this Act what is done in the English Act—exempt from its operation all friendly societies. The hon. gentleman in his definition exempts pawnbrokers, and very properly. But that would not be sufficient. There are companies, such as building societies, loan companies and friendly societies, authorized by parliament to carry on business, and they might very well under some circumstances come within the operation of this Act. I take it that they would have to be exempted, as also all banking and insurance companies, who also might come under the operation of this Act, if left as it is now.

But assuming that we got on that far and agreed as to the class of people who should come within the purview of the Act, and those who should be exempted, what would be the next step ? My hon. friend undertakes in the third section to make the contract illegal, and then he goes on to give power, in case a suit is brought under the contract, to the judges to intervene in certain cases. I venture to suggest to him that if his Bill goes to a committee, it would be better to follow the English Act, and not declare that the transaction in itself shall be illegal at all, but confine our legislation to two things—to refusing to permit the machinery of the courts to be used to give effect to an improper transaction when we define what an improper transaction is, and, if necessary, giving power to the borrower to have the transaction opened up in court.

The hon. gentleman proposes to make, as a criterion of what would be a rascally and unconscionable transaction, a fixed rate of interest. Now, I agree thoroughly with what the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) said. The mere mention of a rate of interest is no test of the bona fides or mala fides of a transaction. I can well conceive that under certain circumstances 20 per cent would be a most rascally rate of interest, while under other circumstances it would be nothing but fair. Every hon. gentleman knows that if a man were borrowing $1,000 or $2,000 on the security of a good farm, 20 per cent would be rascally extortion ; but if a man wanted to borrow $1,000 when his credit would not enable him to get it at a bank at the bank rate, when he had no security to deposit, nothing except his own name, it may well be that his credit would be so bad and the circumstances surrounding the transaction such that 20 per cent would be charged, and would be no evidence of mala fides at all. He might perhaps want the loan only for a day or for a week. My hon. friend from Laval cited the case of the celebrated Black Friday in New York, when as much as this prohibited rate of interest was charged for a week, let alone for a year ; and there are circumstances that occur from time to time in the lives of commercial men, particularly in large cities, when it is absolutely essential that they must have large sums of money ; and they must pay large rates of interest for it, because they do not happen to have, at the moment, the necessary security.

Therefore, I would venture to suggest to my hon. friend that he should follow the principle adopted in the English Act. What is that principle ? It is one which may not commend itself to every member of the House. It does not accept the rate of interest as the test, but the whole transaction as it will appear to the court, and it is left entirely to the court to be determined on the evidence, whether the transaction is an unconscionable one which ought to be set aside, or whether it is not. Many men will say, that is a very poor test, because some judges would take an ethical view of the facts, and others a very different view. I agree to that. I know judges who would look upon more than 10 per cent as outrageous under any conceivable circumstances, while others would look on 20 per cent as quite reasonable and fair. Therefore, to leave the matter absolutely to the courts to determine the character of each transaction, is very much like the test of the length of a judge's foot, or how far he will stretch his conscience ; but I know of no other, and that was the one adopted in the English Act eventually. As the Act was introduced, it contained a schedule with a fixed rate of interest beyond which it was illegal for the lender to charge ; but before the Bill passed through parliament that was eliminated, and it simply provided :

1.—(1.) Where proceedings are taken in any court by a money-lender for the recovery of any money lent after this Act comes into operation, or the enforcement of any agreement or security made or taken after the commencement of this Act in respect of money lent either before or after the commencement of this Act, and there is evidence which satisfies the court that the interest charged in respect of the sum actually lent is excessive, or that the amounts charged for expenses, inquiries, fines, bonus premium, renewals, or any other charges, are excessive, and that, in either case, the transaction is harsh and unconscionable, the court may re-open the transaction, and take an account between the money-lender and the person sued, and may, notwithstanding any statement or settlement of account or any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and create a new obligation, reopen any account already taken between them, and relieve the person sued from payment of any sum in excess of the sum adjudged by the court to be fairly due in respect of such principal, interest and charges as the court, having regard to the risk and all the circumstances, may adjudge to be reasonable ; and if any such excess has been paid, or allowed in account, by the debtor, may order the creditor to repay it ; and may set aside, either wholly or in part, or revise, or alter, any security given or agreement made in respect of money lent by the money-lender, and if the money-lender has parted with the security may order him to indemnify the borrower or other person sued.

In the evidence taken before the House of Commons in England, it was shown that cases were brought before the courts of such an excessively cruel and harsh nature that the county court judges had either to evade the law or else be a party to a gross injustice. In England the courts have the power to make judgments payable by instalments, and in some cases they made the instalments so ridiculously low that the amount could never be recovered by the lender. In that way the courts evaded the law and protected the borrower against gross injustice. To put an end to this condition of affairs, the English Act provided that the judges dealing with such cases could inquire into all the circumstances, and give a judgment decreeing what they thought reasonable and fair. If a judge came to the conclusion that the transaction was a harsh and unconscionable transaction, he had power to open it up again, but not otherwise. That provision I suggest to the hon. member for consideration, as one which he might incorporate in his Bill, but he has taken an entirely different line by establishing an arbitrary rate of interest, without taking into consideration the circumstances under which the loan may have been made or the person to whom it was given.

I would draw my hon. friend's attention to what may have been unintentional on his part, and that is, that he has made the section retroactive. The provisions of his Bill extend to transactions which are legal under the law as it stands. I do not suppose he intended to make his measure retroactive and apply it to transactions which were perfectly legal under the present law.

There is another feature of the English law which commends itself to my mind, and that is, that not only can the court reopen the whole case when the suit is brought by the lender, but the borrower himself has the right to initiate proceedings to have the transaction declared harsh and unconscionable. Suppose a money-lender chooses to lay upon his oars and say : This young man has prospects in the future, I will not sue him now, my note is bearing 2 per cent a month, and I can afford to put it by in the safe and let it lie there until I can collect it. Well, under the English law, the borrower would have the right to initiate proceedings himself in order to have the transaction set aside and a fair agreement come to.

Therefore, I submit to my hon. friend that the principle adopted in England is entirely different from that he asks us to adopt, and that instead of fixing the rate of interest he should leave that entirely to the judgment of the courts.

Then, provisions should be made to protect the bona fide assignee of a note.

Mr. MADORE. Section 5 does this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think it goes far enough. This section provides :

> The bona fide holder, before maturity of a negotiable instrument discounted by a preceding holder at a rate of interest exceeding that authorized by this Act, may nevertheless recover the amount thereof?

From whom ?

Mr. MADORE. From the lender.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The English legislature very properly protected the bona fide holder for value without notice. It provides that nothing in the Act shall affect the rights of any bona fide assignee or holder for value without notice.

Then, there is a very objectionable principle in the Bill referred to by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), and that is, you are, in a partial way at least, giving legislative sanction to an exorbitant rate of interest. One part of the Bill provides for an interest of 20 per cent, and that rate would be accepted by the whole community as the legal rate of interest up to $500. I do not think we should give legislative sanction to a 20 per cent rate of interest, because we would be thereby re-enacting the usury law to that extent. We have hitherto let the lending and borrowing of money depend upon the contract the parties might make between them, and if you determine to interfere with that policy, you should only do so to a very limited extent, and only where you have evidence of very serious evils which call for interference.

Section 9, in my opinion, would have to be remodelled, because it is certainly retroactive and unfair. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) seemed to doubt whether we had the power to pass legislation of this kind, but no doubt we have the power, whatever may be our view of the policy, of incorporating criminal and civil legislation in the one Bill. Our power to make the practice a criminal one is unquestionable.

In my opinion the frame of the Bill will have to be largely recast before it can be accepted by this House. We should drop the fixing of any special rate in the Bill as evidence that the transaction is bona fide or malâ fide; and, if we attempt to proceed at all, we must proceed on the lines of only prohibiting the forms and the powers of the court from being used to enforce an unrighteous contract ; let the judge determine on all the facts of the case, whether the transaction brought before him comes within that definition or not; and, if it is a harsh, and unconscionable, and unjust contract, give the judge the power to open it up, and let him determine on the facts of the case. I think, also, we shall have to agree upon defining what a money-lender is. We must exempt the societies and corporations to which I referred, otherwise they would be brought within the purview of the Act, and we would have to decide whether the money-lenders we are striking at ought not to be registered, and have their business governed by the law as under the English Act.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Speaking for Toronto, and from what I know of Ontario, I do not think there is any need for this Bill. I have heard very little complaint, certainly of late years, of any great hardship in connection with usury. When times are hard, it is quite natural that cases will happen of very high rates of interest being charged. But, I do not think many such cases prevail, at any rate, in the older communities. I dare say that in Manitoba things may be different, and that there, money being scarce, very high rates will be charged. I think it would be a mistake to enact such a law as this, for it is not required now, and it would have a very bad effect as interfering with freedom of trade in this regard. If a man is desparately hard up, he will borrow money from a money-lender if he can, no matter what laws you make to prevent him doing so; and, often the more difficult you make the borrowing of money under these circumstances, the higher the rate the borrower has to pay, because of the greater risk the lender runs; and yet the lending and borrowing will go on where men are bound to have money, and other men will lend it at a very high rate taking risks. I fail to see how any good can come of this Bill, even if it is passed by the House.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

(In Committee.)

Mr. BRITTON. There is a great deal of opposition to this Bill in the country. I express now no opinion on the merits of the measure; but those who are opposing it and making representations to this House with reference to it, expect that the Bill will go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and that they can state their wishes there. It seems to me that putting the Bill through the different stages now, would only invite the opposition to it which, perhaps, will not tend to such calm and fair discussion of it as would result if the Bill were referred, and further time taken for the discussion of its provision.

Mr. TISDALE. I beg to move that the Committee rise.

Mr. FLINT. I think there is a great deal of force in the recommendation of my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), if he desires further consideration. But the effect of that motion would be that the Bill would be practically destroyed.

Mr. TISDALE. That is what I moved for.

Mr. FLINT. If the motion were that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again——

Mr. TISDALE. No, we want to get a vote on the Bill.

Mr. FLINT. The effect of the motion I speak of would be to continue the Bill on the Order paper. As one favourable to the principle, but objecting to some of the details, I would not object to the Committee reporting, that we might have further time for discussion. The contention of my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) that this Bill should go before the Banking and Commerce Committee has much force in. Though this is a public Bill, and does not necessarily go to the Banking and Commerce Committee, the House has always recognized that in the case of any Bills of an exceptional character it is well to have them discussed either before a standing committee of the House or before a special committee. The Banking and Commerce Committee would have the advantage not only of the opinions of very able members representing the legal and commercial classes, but there would be a full hearing from gentlemen outside who could give valuable evidence as to some of the questions of fact that have come up in this discussion. The questions of fact raised are as to the necessity for the Bill in, say, the maritime provinces or the province of Ontario, or whether certain provinces might not well be exempt from its operations. My hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Wade) has raised the question whether, if this Bill should be adopted, there would not be a necessity for amending some of the laws relating to usury in the province of Nova Scotia. I have not looked into that question, but it is well worthy of consideration. If it is in accordance with the rules of the House, I would move in amendment that this Bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. SPEAKER. That would be irregular; it could not be done.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want the gentleman who introduced the Bill, which certainly received some support from both sides of the House, to have something like fair-play in the matter. I stated my objections to the Bill very frankly and fully, and suggested lines on which I thought he might redraft it. For one, I am not prepared to kill the Bill right off without giving some time, at any rate, for him to consider the suggestions made on both sides of the House. I recognize that this Bill is not an ordinary Bill, it is a matter of grave importance, affecting the commercial transactions of our people from one end of Canada to the other, and, therefore, it is not to be treated hastily. I do not think it is a fair way to treat the Bill to move that the Committee rise, at any rate, until after my hon. friend tells me that he will not consider the suggestions. If he says he will not consider the suggestions made on the second reading at all, or consider the propriety of redrafting his Bill, why, that would be another thing. But I understand that he is prepared to consider the suggestions made, and, therefore, I thought that we ought not to rise, but that we ought to report progress.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I have no such desire, but I gathered from the expressions of opinion that were made that we were simply wasting the time of the House, because the feeling is against the Bill. I have no desire whatever to interfere with the Bill or be unfair to the Bill. If there is any such suggestion as that, I beg to withdraw my motion. I thought the members had sufficiently expressed themselves, and I wanted to go on with the Bill.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. MADORE. I need not say to the Committee that I am quite prepared to receive any suggestions that may be made from either side of the House, or from a committee to which that Bill may be referred later on. The draft I have just submitted contains the principle of the Bill, and provided that principle is admitted, I am quite willing to go either to a Committee of the whole House or to a special committee, there to consider any suggestions that may be made. For instance, the suggestions made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are certainly deserving of discussion and consideration. We did not follow the lines of the English Bill because we considered that the circumstances in this country are not the same as in England, especially those in the province of Quebec. We did not propose to give to the judge the power to reopen the case, to go back to the beginning of the transaction, in order to ascertain whether the rate of interest charged is too high or not, and to leave that question altogether to his discretion. We thought that according to our procedure in the province of Quebec such a provision would be almost impracticable. When the borrower was sued by the lender for the amount claimed to be due, capital and interest, if the rate of interest was too high, and if it was left entirely to the judge to decide what amount should be charged, the defendant, even if he admitted his indebtedness, could not know the exact amount he would have to pay, and he could not make a tender to the plaintiff because in order to do so he must tender the amount that he really owes. If he does not tender the full amount of his debt, even if he succeeded in having the rate of interest claimed from him reduced, the whole cost of the contestation would fall on his shoulders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not necessarily ; a judge has discretion.

Mr. MADORE. A judge has discretion, no doubt, but this is the general principle followed in the province of Quebec, and it requires extraordinary circumstances before a judge can change that almost universal principle. Then the debtor would succeed in having the rate of interest reduced, and would have to pay the costs, perhaps more costs than if he had paid the whole amount demanded from him by the action. This is one of the objections we discussed when we framed the Bill, and this is one of the considerations that determined us to take other means, that is, fixing the maximum rate of interest, and that is why we have put it in the draft. Now, after discussion, we might come to the conclusion that the means adopted by the English parliament are better than those incorporated in the draft. But I think we should be given an opportunity of discussing the various provisions, and it is for that reason, now that the motion of my hon. friend has been withdrawn, that I move that this committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as any question of fairness in the motion of my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Tisdale) is concerned, I do not think that will arise at all, because if it is the opinion of the House that the Bill should not proceed further, it is perfectly proper for my hon. friend to make the motion that he did. So far as the object of the Bill is concerned, I have no doubt it is intended to redress what may have been an evil. It may be a question, however, whether it is an evil that can be redressed by legislation, because the complexity of business matters is such, and there are so many degrees of improvidence in the manner in which people conduct their business, that it is absolutely impossible to cover every case of the kind by legislation. If parliament is to deal with this matter at all, I would much prefer it should deal with it on the lines of the English legislation, for reasons which have been set forth by many hon. gentlemen in the House, and which I need not repeat. The idea of the English legislation seems to be this : There are contracts which the courts will set aside on account of the situation of the parties, for example, by reason of duress, or by reason of certain relations existing between the parties, such as those of solicitor and client, or guardian and ward. Now, what the English parliament has done is simply to add to the grounds upon which the courts can set aside contracts, the circumstances that an excessive rate of interest has been taken. One disadvantage attending that mode of dealing with it is, of course, that it may involve a long and protracted inquiry, and involve a large amount of costs with respect to a comparatively small sum. Still, on the whole, I should think, if we are to deal with this matter at all by legislation, that would be better than the way proposed in the Bill before the committee. I would think that a better course to take with regard to this Bill would be to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. We understand that last year, in the Senate, a Bill of a somewhat similar character was referred to a special committee, and that committee made a very exhaustive inquiry. For my part, I would think that if this Bill is to be proceeded with, it would be better to discharge the order and to move to have it committed to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and then that committee could make such amendments to it as might be suggested by the hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill or by any other hon. gentleman. Under such circumstances, we could deal with the Bill more effectively than we can at present.

Mr. MONK. I am favourable, as my hon. friend knows, to his Bill, but it occurs to me that the feeling of the House at the present time is against it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. In its present form. I think the best way to deal with the Bill would be to refer it, as was done in the Senate, to a special committee, upon which there would be representatives from each province, who could confer and also compare with it the English legislation which in many details differs from those of this Bill. When that has been done the House will be better able to appreciate the Bill than it is to-day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The motion made by my hon. friend is that the Committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. The only reason that I for one did not press the motion to go into Committee was that there had been a good deal of discussion on the second reading, half finished discussion, which really ought to have been a discussion in Committee, and I thought when we got here and commenced to discuss the details, we would proceed a certain distance, and if the feeling of the House was against the Bill, we could report progress, or dispose of it in Committee the way we pleased. It is quite evident that the Bill will either have to go to a select committee named for the purpose, or to one of the standing committees of the House, such as the Banking and Commerce Committee. My hon. friend in moving that the committee rise and report progress, is taking a step in that direction. He will consider afterwards which course he will take, refer the Bill to a special committee, or refer it to a standing committee.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the House ought to know now the course that the hon. gentleman proposes to adopt. This is a very important Bill, and a great many valuable suggestions have been thrown out on the assumption that the Bill shall be passed in some form or another. There are a very large number of hon. gentlemen in this House who think that the Bill should not pass in any form. The House ought to know what course the hon. gentleman proposes to take.

Mr. MADORE. Mr. Chairman, the course I intend to take is to ask that this Bill be referred either to the Banking and Commerce Committee or to a special committee, formed as suggested by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). As I have had no time to think over that last proposal, and as I would like the committee to be as equal and impartial as possible, between both sides of the House, and to be representative of the different provinces, I ask that the committee rise, so that between now and the next sitting, we will have an opportunity of agreeing together.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I have formed an opinion of this Bill, and before voting upon it, I think I have a right to demand the fullest information which can be given in regard to a measure of this character. It is very evident that the circumstances which have occasioned it, and the scope and application of the Bill, are largely confined to one province, and are not applicable to the other provinces of the Dominion. Therefore, I, an inhabitant of another portion of the country than that which is the subject of this Bill, ask for some better reasons than those which have been given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Madore), who has brought this Bill forward and who is appealing to the judgment of those from other provinces in order to influence their opinions, and to induce them to give their sanction to a Bill of a very severe character. If I read correctly this Bill, and I do not profess to be a lawyer, the court has to come in and nullify, if necessary, an agreement entered upon in good faith. Further on in this Bill, if I understand it, there is a very severe penalty imposed upon any one who violates its provisions, and who, by one inducement or another, is prevailed upon to lend money at a rate of interest in excess of that stipulated in the Bill. I consider, although the object of the Bill may be a good one, although the hon. gentleman may aim, in the principle of his Bill, at putting down an improper practice which may prevail in his portion of the country, especially where this Bill will have application to one of the provinces in the country, and where the conditions complained of do not exist, that the measure is one of a very harmful character. I see in the 9th clause that every money-lender who lends money at a rate in excess of the rate set down in the Bill, is guilty of an indictable offence, and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or to a penalty not exceeding $1,000. I consider that provision one which should demand the fullest attention of hon. gentlemen in this House, and also that hon. gentlemen from other provinces in the Dominion should consider whether the situation of the country demands the passage of such a severe measure as this, imposing such restrictions and penalties. I know, Sir, that a money-lender is a very odious object in this country, I know that a man who has money is sometimes an object of opprobium, and I know a great many people are willing to inveigh against people who have money, to declare that they are an injury to the community, and that as speedily as possible, either by Act of parliament, or by act of the persons themselves, this money shall be got away from those who have it and distributed amongst those who have none. I know that to stand up and defend money-lenders, or bankers, or any of that objectionable class, is sometimes a work of supererogation, and that the person who does so renders himself an object of suspicion to all sorts of people. Now, Sir, it may be that the person who lends money, under precisely the circumstances set out in this Bill, may do the individual who has accepted the loan a life-long benefit. I know that young men who, under certain distressing circumstances, would have given 100 per cent, afterwards to be paid, if they could have got a loan which would have saved them from disgrace and utter ruin when their prospects were such that a kindly loan of a little money would have relieved them perhaps from the severe strain through which they had to pass. If a person would come forward and make a loan under those circumstances, a borrower would look upon him as a life-long benefactor. There are other situations like that which I have disclosed, but there are also circumstances in which a man might become involved commercially. A man also may have a speculation in hand which may return him a large amount of profit, but, he is unable to embark upon it, simply from the fact that he has not the fulcrum upon which to place the lever. In my experience I have often helped people with small loans of money, and I will give a little suggestion to some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who, on some occasions, may be disposed to be benevolent. I find that in some cases it was not safe to charge any rate of interest at all, but to place the thing simply upon the honour of the individual, because, if you charged 10 per cent, or 25 per cent, or 50 per cent, the borrower would say : That man paid himself out of the money he extorted from me out of my necessities, and I will not pay him back again. If you stand upon a man's honour and give him a timely loan, he is very far down in the scale of manhood, if he has the money, if he does not come forward and pay you for the loan. There is another case ; there are a great many gentlemen who come to you for a small loan for a very short time, and it is always safe to lend such a one a small amount, because in a great many cases he will never come back to see you, and if he does come back, perhaps he will pay that loan and want to borrow more from you. Now, this Bill is to a great extent founded in reprobation of the practices of the Jews. We know the history of the Jews. Some hon. gentlemen opposite know the history of the Jews. Some do not.

I am not going to refer to the history of Jews as set down in the sacred books, because I know every gentleman opposite is familiar with that ; but, I am going to refer briefly to the history of the Jews in the Dark Ages. You will remember that from A.D. 600 to the time of the Reformation, the Jews were very prevalent in Spain and Portugal and Germany. They did not deal in real estate nor in tangible securities ; they usually looked to the good faith of the individual, and they were keen judges of character, but they had a uniform rate of 5 per cent per month interest. The interest for two years ate up the principal, and if there were any mortgage attached to the loan, the Jew got the property. That condition continued until the Jews had secured a very large portion of the real estate in those countries. It, therefore, became an object for all those who were debtors of the Jews, or those who hated the Jews, to unite in those frightful persecutions which took place in the Dark Ages so called. Now, Sir, I think there is something of the spirit of that persecution in this Bill. Perhaps the hon. gentleman himself or some of his friends have suffered from the exactions of the Jews in the province of Quebec. In that happy portion of the Dominion whence I come, and from which the hon. leader of the opposition comes, the great difficulty there is to obtain a reliable person to whom to lend any money. In fact, if one bank obtains a good loan all the directors and the manager and the clerks of the rival banks set out to say to the borrower : Oh, the bank over there has charged you 5½ per cent, and we have lots of money that we lend out to railway corporations—sometimes on pretty good security and sometimes on pretty bad security—come over to our bank and we will treat you well. And if the borrower has good responsibles and security, and if it be an undertaking which, in addition to its own inherent merit, has something of popular favour to commend it, why, all the directors of that bank unite to use their personal influence, and sometimes their political influence, to induce the corporation or individual to take the loan from them, which starts the undertaking on its way and which undertaking may ultimately prove a benefit to the individual as well as to the people of the country. In my portion of the country, not only were the banks content to lend to all customers who could bring forward good security, but they came up to the city of Montreal, this pest district that has been referred to. They entered into rivalry with the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of Toronto and the bank of everywhere else, and they loaned money to all good customers who had proper securities at lower rates than the Bank of Montreal or the Bank of Toronto, or any of those protected institutions could afford to. Why, these banks were driven to the state of New York to lend their money, and the Bank of Nova Scotia, and the other banks in my province have come up to Canada to stay. They have opened up there benevolent institutions in other provinces ; they have gone to the extreme verge of civilization on the Pacific coast to open branches ; they have gone to the West Indies ; they have gone to Trinidad, and they have gone to all parts of the earth from that little city of Halifax to lend money to every one who needed it, and who could bring forward good security. The good security is the thing, gentlemen. These banking institutions from Nova Scotia have gone to other nationalities ; they have gone to Brazil, and they have loaned money there to build railways, and they have loaned money to build railways in Jamaica, and if any person came forward with a good and matured scheme for completing the Panama canal or building the Nicaragua canal, there is plenty of capital in this country which enterprising men would lend to construct these great public works which carry on the commerce of the world. That brings me home to the subject of this Bill, and I say that the Bill has running through it the negative to the main essential of every Bill of a sumptuary character, which is, that the loaning of money is dependent upon good security, and that the money will follow the good security. Without asking for proof or without any general corroboration of the statements made by hon. gentlemen, I will assume it to be a fact that there is usury in the city of Montreal. Those money-lenders always scrutinize carefully the quality of the security, and it is because there is a risk in the security, and the man is afraid that he will neither get his principal or his interest, that he charges a high rate. The money-lender ought to be paid for that risk, and he also ought to be paid for the opprobrium that a man in his business experiences. The fact that he first of all possesses the money, and secondly, that he has not yielded to the solicitation of the borrower sooner but has put him off from day to day, is also to be considered. Now, what remedy is suggested ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Madore) has told us that his province is suffering under the exactions of these money-lenders, and he has disclosed a situation which is alarming. But I would like to know what would be the situation if the money-lenders were not there ? Has the hon. gentleman ever contemplated the condition of people in desperate circumstances where there is no money-lender to relieve them at 10 per cent or 20 per cent or 50 per cent ? Does he not know that there are extreme cases of poverty and want occurring from day to day where a man wishes only to obtain a temporary loan, where a little ready money would be a great relief to families, and when those men who have money to lend are hailed as benefactors ?

Now, Sir, I set out with these two essentials: the security, and the money that is to be loaned upon the security. But, I would say this, that if this money-lending is so profitable in that portion of the country, under the ordinary law of supply and demand would not capital flow in ? Would not there be many money-lenders ? Would they not preponderate in the community until they would outnumber the borrowers? Would not those men who are ready to embark in precarious enterprises, who are willing to risk a good deal with the object of making a good deal, go and open in Montreal their pawnbroking shops, and their money-lending shops, in order to lend money to needy people ? And would not they, among them, reduce the rate of interest to ordinary commercial limits ?

I have not at all referred to those risks which are specially precarious—those which are speculative, like the stock exchange, like lotteries, like other operations which may be termed gambling. I have not gone into anything of that kind—into cases where perhaps a young gentleman has contracted a debt of honour, or those cases where a person has assumed a personal obligation, under circumstances which demand of him the discharge of his obligation. But, I have used ordinary commercial transactions, and I have hinted at remedies which can be brought forward in the ordinary commercial way.

Now, if the hon. gentleman would be content to take one provision of his Bill, and make the forfeiture of the loan the penalty for charging an excessive rate of interest, perhaps there would be many in this House who would be disposed to give their support to his measure. His intentions are benevolent and right. I have no doubt he has been shocked to see how many persons in the community have perhaps been beggared, or deprived to a large extent of their means, by the excessive rates charged by these money-lenders. To me, the thing was quite a novelty. I did not know that it existed in the community. My poor wits have been exercised for a long time in money institutions in endeavouring to find profitable modes of investment for money—to procure good customers who would take loans, and who, the security being good, would be able to pay a fair rate of interest. In other provinces of the Dominion the rate of interest is speedily diminishing, and people who have capital to embark, and who obtain their livelihood from the interest derivable from their capital, are seeking for places of investment. I think the remedy for the evil aimed at by this Bill would be to strike out the clause which calls for fine and imprisonment, and make the loan unlawful when an excessive rate of interest is charged.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Hon. gentlemen opposite may think that I have been arguing merely to consume the time until six o'clock; but that is not the case, because I stood up immediately after the hon. gentleman proposed his Bill to ask from him information which would guide me as to the proper course to pursue. I was a little startled by the clauses of this Bill when I read them, because of their severe punitive nature. We tried in Nova Scotia at one time such an Act as this, and it was ordained by the legislature that a loan contracted in that way would be forfeited if the rate of interest were above 6 per cent; and afterwards that law was repealed.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at 8 o'clock.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) was addressing the House on the Bill now before the committee, and I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not now present, as some of the remarks I intend to make have special reference to what he said. Many of the clauses of this Bill have my support because they are intended to relieve the habitants in the province of Quebec from the exactions of the money-lenders, and judging from the enthusiasm thrown into the debate by the hon. gentlemen who support this measure, the Quebec habitant must be suffering severely. My hon. friend from Halifax undertook to show us that the money-lenders ought to have the sympathy of this House, but for my part my sympathies are all drawn to the poor habitant of Lower Canada. We all know how difficult it is for men who have settled on the soil to make both ends meet, especially when blest with the large families which are one of the characteristics of our French Canadian compatriots. In old France I believe there is a premium offered for large families, and I think it would be a better policy on the part of this government to pay a premium for a similar purpose here rather than spend the money in bringing out immigrants from the old world.

The hon. member for Halifax, I am told, is a farmer, but he is also one of the wealthiest men in this House. In fact, I believe he is a millionaire. Let me say here that the hon. gentleman is a personal friend of mine, whom I hold in very high esteem, and I am sorry he is not now in the House. He is, I believe, a philosopher, a thoughtful man, and do yon know, Mr. Chairman, I have an invitation to visit him in Halifax. He is the first millionaire I ever had an invitation to visit, and I expect he will be the last.

I am satisfied that it would be impossible for the Lower Canadian habitant, if he lived in the province of Ontario, to pay 20 per cent interest on money, and I do not think that the soil in the province of Quebec is any better than it is in Ontario. And these Shylocks—I am not introducing the name—who are stripping the agriculturists of this country of everything they can earn, will no doubt have a great deal to answer for, if there is another world. Six per cent, in my opinion, is ample interest to charge for advances, and I do not believe that the men who ask that rate should go to jail. I do not believe in sending any man to jail, because then the country has to keep him, for he does not earn anything like enough to pay the cost of his living, even when he is employed making binder twine.

In my opinion, this Bill should be recast. It should be submitted to a special committee composed of some of the best men in this House, and in which the farming element will be represented, and then we may have a Bill which will protect the habitant in the province of Quebec from being imposed upon and robbed of his home, as we are told he is to-day. Just fancy a poor habitant, with ten or a dozen children, and only 100 acres of land. Of course the children may be of considerable help to him, but when they grow up, only one of the boys can have the farm and the others have to leave, and unfortunately many of them go to the southern republic. We are trying to provide homes for them in the North-west and many are going there, but in any case only one of the boys remains on the farm, and he has to work day and night until he has paid off their share to the others. Then when he marries and his family grows up the same process takes place again. Consequently each farmer has to go to the loan company and mortgage his little farm to pay off his brothers and sisters; and if he is a hard-working man, and is blest with a good and industrious wife, he may succeed in paying off the debt, but by that time there will be another family of ten to provide for. This is why the farmers have to go to the money-lenders and Shylocks and build up a class of millionaires in this country.

We do not want only two sets of men in this country, millionaires and paupers, but we are coming to that as fast as we can and it is time we should pass some legislation to give the poor habitant a chance.

Progress reported.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW AMENDMENT.

Mr. GEORGE A. CLARE (South Waterloo) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 5) to amend the 'Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens.' He said: The object of this Bill is to provide a simple way to carry out the law now in force, which was passed in 1897. I do not believe that the mechanics and labourers of this country wish to have high-salaried officers to carry out the Act, if a more simple, efficient and economical way can be found to enforce that law. As it is at present, the Act is entirely in the hands of the government to enforce it, and I do not believe that the government has enforced it in the interest of the labouring class and mechanics of this country. On the other hand, I believe that the officers who were appointed to enforce the law were engaged more for the purpose of keeping the government and the members of the government party out of trouble than of assisting the mechanics and labouring class. The Finance Minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding), the other evening, in discussing the question of the ownership of railways, stated that he believed that it was impossible for the government to manage the railways without political interference; and, I believe, he was correct so far as this government goes. And, I believe that, in the same way, they have enforced the Alien Labour law for their own interest and to assist themselves politically. To prove this, I wish to refer to what happened last year in this House. The Alien Labour law was passed in 1897; and three years later, in this House the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) asked the following question :

> Since the Alien Labour law was enacted in 1897 has one conviction been secured by any agent or officer of the government under the law?

And the Prime Minister replied :

> I am informed by the Department of Justice that no prosecutions have taken place under this Act.

This, as I say, was three years after the Act had been placed on the statute-book. A few years later the same gentleman asked the government what amount of money had been expended under the Act, and the reply by the Solicitor General was that up to that time $2,556 had been expended. Up to June 30th, 1900, some $600 or $700, more had been spent; and we have the statement by the premier that, since that, $1,066 have been spent. And we find in the estimates for next year an appropriation of $9,000. But of this money, $2,556 was spent, and not even a single prosecution had been carried out. I believe that if the Bill I am now discussing were enacted, the law would be more strictly carried out, and with not one cent of expense. My Bill provides that any person, for instance, any labouring man or mechanic who is interested, should have the power to lay information before two magistrates and so enforce the law. That would not cost the country one cent, for those who are most interested, the mechanics and labouring men, will see that the law is strictly enforced. I myself have quite a number of men in my employ. In my own business I am protected from foreign competition, and I see no reason why the labouring class and mechanics in my employ and in the employ of other manufacturers of this country should not be as well protected from foreign competition as I am, especially as the people to the south of us have a law to the same effect.

Mr. CLARE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will have to ask my hon. friend not to object if I ask him to agree to a suspension of the consideration of this Bill until another day. The reason is that there are one or two Bills—one at any rate—of a similar character on the Order paper, which will come up at the next sitting when this order of business is taken up. I have also to inform my hon. friend and the House that the government is contemplating the introduction of a measure to amend the existing law. I am not in a position to say whether a Bill will be introduced, but the subject is engaging the attention of the government at this moment. I shall, therefore, have to move that the debate be adjourned. It will be taken up again on Wednesday next, and then the government will be in a position to declare to my hon. friend what policy they intend to pursue with regard to this Bill.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I merely wished to lay before the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister this consideration—if I mistake not the other Bills on this subject if not textually the same as this one, seek to amend the law in the same direction. I have here Bill No. 11, introduced by the hon. member from Vancouver (Mr. Smith), and I find that there is practically no difference between it and the Bill now before the House, except in certain minor details. A further consideration I would lay before the House is this—the Bill before us seeks to remedy an evil which has been in existence for a very long time, and I think the non-enforcement of the law against the employment of aliens as it is now is largely due to the fact that we have not this machinery which my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) seeks to provide. As the right hon. premier knows, in the province of Quebec, we have, in respect of most laws of this nature, exactly this kind of machinery—that is to say, we allow the individual, in case of violation of the law, to intervene and recover the penalty. The consequence is a considerable economy for the provincial government, and also a closer observance of the law. To give an instance which is quite recent, I am informed, though I have not yet confirmation of the fact, that in the town of Lachine, within the last few days, eleven or twelve employees of the factory were dismissed summarily because they asked for what they thought a legitimate increase in their wages, and a like number of men were imported from the United States to take their places. There is no question whatever, knowing the feeling that exists in the town of Lachine, that if we had such machinery as this, some individuals in the town of Lachine would have seen to the application of a law, the principle of which has been admitted by parliament. Now, in the United States they have exactly such a machinery as is provided in this Bill. The House will find that disposition in the supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, volume 1, page 479, second edition :

That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this Act the person, partnership, company or corporation violating the same, by knowingly assisting, encouraging or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its territories, or the district of Columbia, to perform labour or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States; the proceeds to be paid into the treasury of the United States ; and separate suits may be brought for each alien or foreigner being a party to such contract or agreement aforesaid. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit at the expense of the United States.

Now, if these other Bills have the same object, and if the evil which has been so often mentioned in this House exists at the present moment, why should we not proceed with the examination of this Bill at once, and have it passed into law so that it may afford relief in such cases as I have just indicated ? There are, of course, certain points of detail which would have to be modified when the House goes into Committee on the Bill ; but I think the matter is so urgent that the leader of the House ought to let us go into Committee on this Bill without delay.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I have two Bills before me on the same subject. This question has engaged the attention of parliament year after year for many years past. With the law on the statutes to-day, chap. 11, 60 and 61 Victoria, we might reasonably ask why it is that we have so many of these Bills introduced at the present time. It is simply because, when the government took charge of the Bill before, after handling it very discreetly for their own purposes for a few years, when they found they could not shift it off any longer, they passed a Bill that was of very little use in preventing the importation of aliens. In that Bill, who is to act ? The Attorney General of Canada. Aliens are imported under contract of labour, the Attorney General has appointed no person to look after that. The Attorney General is communicated with, the Attorney General is slow to act, the Attorney General will appoint one of his own friends, and that friend will be an instrument in the hands of the government, and the parties cannot get redress. That is why we need another Bill, that is the reason why we have these two Bills before us at the present time. Now the government contemplates staving it off a little longer, and say that they are considering the question at the present time. They said that five years ago, they said it four years ago, they said it three years ago, they are still considering the question, and the trouble is going on as it has been in the past. Unless there is some specific measure put on the statute-book that will work automatically, under which any person can take action when aliens are imported, this evil will continue. Now, if the government prevent the hon. member from Waterloo from going on with his Bill until they bring down their own, and then make some other amendments in the law that will make it practically inoperative, they will be able to stave off the matter a year or two longer, and we will be standing a year hence, perhaps, very much in the position we are in to-day. It seems to me the premier ought to give this House some assurance that whatever Bill they may pass, it will be one that can be put into operation at any time by any private individual or any corporation, instead of leaving it in the hands of the government, or in the power of the government to act at their own discretion in setting the law in motion. I think the premier ought to give us some assurance to that effect.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not prepared to give such an assurance to the hon. gentleman, but I am prepared to say to the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Clare) that he will have every opportunity to discuss his Bill. The government are seriously contemplating whether it is advisable to amend the statute which is now on our books. We are not prepared to give any opinion to the House at this moment, but we will be prepared to do so when the Bill comes up again, and I can assure my hon. friend that he will have every opportunity to have his Bill discussed again.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I desire to take this opportunity of impressing upon the Prime Minister and upon the House that this is a matter that ought not to be delayed for one minute. I come from a border county and know what is happening in the neighbouring city of Buffalo and along the Niagara frontier, and know how badly the citizens of Canada are being treated under the alien labour laws of the United States, which have just been read by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). Knowing how the honest labourers and workingmen of this country are now being treated on the other side of the line, I cannot urge too strongly upon the hon. premier that he should take back what he has just said, and immediately comply with the request which has been made by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), and give us the assurance that private individuals will be allowed to put this law in motion, as they are allowed to do with regard to any other law. I say to the hon. premier that we should stop trafficking in a sort of bureaucracy, we should stop dealing politically when we come to the enforcement of the criminal law. We heard from the Postmaster General the other night that the government still go on cutting off the heads of the postmasters for political purposes; do they propose also to stop the administration of justice in this country? It seems that they are only willing to enforce the criminal law when it suits their convenience. It is my duty to urge the government to consider the rights of the people of this country, the rights of our workingmen in regard to the importation of alien labour. Can they give any sound reason why a law that applies for the protection of the workingmen of this country should not be enforced in the same manner as any other law upon the statute-books? What good or sound reason can there be for not enforcing it, or for refusing to say that they are going to enforce it? Why should they not be willing to assure us at once that this law will be enforced in exactly the same way as any other, so that a person who is aggrieved can go to the nearest magistrate and lay his complaint, and secure redress in the same way as he can do with regard to any other law?

This matter, being one that affects my constituency as much, and perhaps more than other constituencies in this country, I think it is my duty to submit with all the force I can, to this House and the government, that this matter must be, in the interests of Canada, attended to, and attended to at once, so that we cannot have it said, as it is said, and I am sorry to say, said truly, that young men from St. Catharines or Merritton, who are skilled artisans, who have learned their trade well, cannot go over to Buffalo if they are thrown out of work without being turned back. We had an instance not long ago when one of our largest factories in St. Catharines by fire was shut down. Axe makers, saw makers and agricultural implement makers, 300 and odd of them, were thrown out of employment, who were as able to do good work as any men in the Dominion of Canada. Some of them went over to Buffalo seeking in every way they could for work. They were turned back at once, unless they would swear allegiance to the United States. They were turned back without going to Washington to find out whether they should be turned back or not. Canadians are sent back because they are considered to be aliens and must not be allowed to get employment until they have made themselves citizens of the United States. If we are going to have reciprocity in tariffs or anything else, let us have reciprocity also in protecting our workingmen the same as the United States protect their workingmen. Let us say, that, if our young men are to be turned back, we shall turn back theirs. If this law, now on the statute-book, is a good one, enforce it and enforce it the same as you would any other law. I do not think that I am called upon to argue in this case upon the question as to whether we should protect our workingmen or not. It seems to me that the law as it stands on the statute-book does protect them; at least it is supposed to do so, and the people will insist upon enforcing it in the amplest and fullest manner as soon as possible. I urge upon the House and upon the government that this is a matter which ought to be attended to, and we ought to have an assurance that it will be attended to as expeditiously as possible upon the lines proposed by the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill.

Mr. WILLIAM F. McCREARY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to say anything in connection with this Bill, but a statement has been made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster), who has just sat down, that I think conflicts with what are the facts. He says that certain young men went over from St. Catharines to Buffalo and were returned to Canada under the provisions of the United States Alien Labour Laws. As I understand the meaning of the American law, it is that when they go under an agreement made in the United States, capable of being enforced in the United States by both parties, it is then the object and purpose of the law to keep aliens from securing employment in the United States, and to deport them. The American Act, up to 1897 could not be enforced in that country, and if my hon. friend will look up the records of the litigation that has taken place under the American Alien Labour Act up to and including 1897, he will not find one case in the American reports, including those of the state of New York, but will show that the Act was defeated when it went to court. I had something to do with the enforcement of this Act in 1897 in Winnipeg, and I ascertained this to be the fact. I have had considerable correspondence with Mr. Powderly, the Commissioner of Immigration at Washington and his subordinate officials, and I found, that, although they have been amending their Act from 1890 up to the present time, it is still inoperative. I saw a good deal of their Alien Labour officer at Winnipeg, and he made the statement that while they might stop one, nine hundred would go across, because they could not stop the balance. A more flagrant case of the violation of any Alien Labour law could not have happened than that which took place last year under my own eyes. An agent from California came to the North-west Territories to get labour to work in the mill. He went amongst the Doukhobors and took away from the North-west Territories 150 of them, under a contract which I proved to have been made to perform work in the United States. I had detectives put on the case, and I got the actual contract in the Russian and English language. I produced that before the commissioner at Pembina. I proved that these men were going to the United States under contract, and I wished to stop them. I went with a Canadian Pacific official to the customs officer at Pembina, and he said that their Act was no good. If this Bill is referred to a committee I will have before this committee the various amendments made to the United States Alien Labour law and the correspondence and contracts for the removal of these Doukhobors, and I will convince this hon. gentleman that the United States Act was inoperative. I submit that if these young men came back it was because they were afraid of Mr. De Barry, and what he would do, but, had they remained there and appealed against his decision, they would have been in the United States yet. There is nothing in that Act that can prevent these people taking employment there. I submit that in enforcing the Act the greatest difficulty is experienced in procuring evidence. United States attorneys will tell you that when the Act is really tested in the court they have no means of procuring evidence, and, I think, before any amendments are made to the Canadian law, they will have to be thoroughly considered, and that every one of the cases in which the American Act has been tried in the American courts should be brought to the notice of a committee and of the legal gentlemen who are members of it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). The hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) forgets something. He forgets in his righteous indignation that the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has, as le grand jongleur, undertaken with his sunny ways to correct all the troubles that exist between Canada and the United States, and that with his sunny ways to prevail upon the Americans to agree to a treaty fixing the boundary between Canada and Alaska, to give us a reciprocity treaty, and to settle a number of other questions. He has been doing that for quite a number of years, he is doing that to-day, and he believes that ultimately he will succeed. I do not think he is going to succeed at all. I think he has found out that sunny ways will not succeed in regard to the United States. That comes down to what my hon. friend has said here to-night ; the only way to deal with the United States is to give them law for law, tariff for tariff, and reciprocity for reciprocity. The country is sick of this postponing everything for consideration, and saying : Oh, do not do anything ; just wait until we can negotiate with the Americans. Just wait until our sunny ways succeed. Sunny ways will not succeed. The country expects the government to quit talking sunny ways and to treat the United States as they do us. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) says that the American law is not enforced. It is enforced, and Canadians are deported every day, and sent back from Buffalo to Toronto. We have lots of cases. Young men who have been sent back to Toronto come into my office and tell me about it. The only way to maintain our position as a nation, is to hold our own, enforce the law, and give them law for law, tariff for tariff, every day in the week, and every day in the year.

The PRIME MINISTER. And own the railways ?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, we will not give them the railways ; we will keep the railways for our own country. I will take the right hon. gentleman at his word again to-night, as I took him at it last night, that he is going to do something but it will be a long time ahead, I think. I trust now that we have heard the last of what sunny ways will do with our friends to the south, and that instead of sunny ways we will have something that is substantial and something that will maintain the national dignity of the Canadian people. So long as we lie down and let them whale us with their laws so long will they continue to do so. If we followed the example of M. De Witte with regard to the counter-vailing duty on sugar, we would bring them to time in twenty-four hours. That is the only way to deal with them. I trust that when the right hon. gentleman takes the matter into consideration and submits his proposal to the House, it will be on the line of law for law, and not based on the idea he has advocated for so many years of treating the Americans by sunny ways.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I am sorry that the right hon. gentleman proposes to treat this Bill in a different manner from that in which he has treated other Bills on the Order paper, which he has consented to being read the second time without committing the government to the principles contained in them. The Bill of the hon. gentleman from Vancouver (Mr. Smith) deals also with the subject under consideration, and if the government intends to amend the Act now on the statute-book, they should deal with these two Bills, which are the only ones before us relating to the subject of alien law. To my mind the present law is too severe in some cases, and it is a step in the right direction for my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) to propose in his Bill to reduce the penalty of $1,000 to not more than $200 nor less than $50. Let me point out an objection to the present Act. Suppose a man comes from Buffalo to St. Catharines and the authorities know quite well that he is an American citizen coming to Canada under contract, the Act introduced by my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) will make the law so simple that the justice of the peace in St. Catharines, or to whomsoever is delegated the power, would deal with it at once and if it were necessary to impose a penalty of $200, well and good. There is too much red tape and too much machinery about the present law. Why should it be necessary to first communicate with and obtain the consent of the Attorney General of Canada before proceeding with a case? Section 8 of the present Act says:

> No proceedings under this Act or prosecutions for violation thereof shall be instituted without the consent of the Attorney General of Canada, or some person duly authorized by him.

Section 3 of the Act already provides for that, and therefore the proposal of my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) to repeal section 8 is in the right direction. If a manufacturer in Canada imports a man to perform certain labour, and if that man is competing with any class of skilled or unskilled Canadian labour, then the sooner that case is dealt with the better it will be for Canadian labour. I have heard the Canadian Alien Labour law discussed for a good many sessions in this House, and I formerly took the ground, with other hon. gentlemen, that we should not be harsh with our American neighbours in passing legislation of this kind, even though the Americans had been harsh with us. For years that was the policy of a great many hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. In 1890 a special committee was appointed to investigate this question, and it was only in 1897 that an Alien Labour Act was passed; an Act which has never since been carried out, and an Act that has not given satisfaction to the people of this country. Perhaps I am going too far in saying that the Act has never been put in operation, but I am perfectly safe in saying that it has not been administered in a way which meets the approval of the workingmen of Canada. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) talks about the American law being inoperative, and he says it only deals with persons who only go to the United States under contract. I live in a city situated between Detroit and Buffalo where we have skilled labour and unskilled labour passing through from the state of Michigan to the state of New York. It is on the highway of what we term an American railway, and I can state that several cases have come under my own observation in which Canadians, who have gone into the state of Michigan and the state of New York, not under contract, but to visit their relatives, and if they came across a better position than they had in Canada intending to remain in the United States; but the very moment they cross the line they were met by Mr. DeBarry or some similar person and were at once told that they must return to Canada. These men did not complain to the Attorney General of Canada and furnish the information that they were sent back improperly, because that was too much trouble and bother, but they simply returned to this country and were disgusted because the Canadian government did not pass a similar law, so that American workmen coming to Canada could be dealt with in the same way as Canadian workmen going to the United States are dealt with. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) says that a committee should be appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the United States law, but what have we got to do with the United States law. We cannot amend it; we cannot add one word to it or take one word from it, and that being so it is idle nonsense to talk of remaining any longer quietly submitting to the treatment we have received. I have no hard feeling towards the government or the people of the United States. If they think it is in their interests to have legislation of that kind well and good, but when that legislation interferes with Canadian subjects it is my duty and it is the duty of every hon. gentleman in this House to support legislation which will protect the workingmen of Canada.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) has proven the wisdom of the Canadian statute as it now stands. He will agree that those Canadians who went to visit their friends and were sent back were not properly treated under the United States law as it exists to-day.

Mr. INGRAM. But they were sent back.

Mr. FRASER. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) would want a Canadian law to make it possible for evil-disposed persons to treat Americans in the same harsh way when they did not come here under contract. Does he think that that kind of legislation would promote harmonious feeling between the two countries? If some official in the United States violates the law of his country because of over-zeal, or perhaps in a desire to become popular, is that any reason why we should follow the bad example?

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) know what was the answer of the Washington government when their attention was called to the manner in which Canadians were treated when they entered the United States?

Mr. FRASER. I do not know what answer was made.

Mr. INGRAM. Then ask your leader.

Mr. FRASER. I shall be glad to have the information, but at any rate I feel sure from the statements made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) himself, that it is a very wise provision of our law to have some one in authority to authorize a prosecution against those who come from the United States under contract. I do not think we should undertake to impose penalties when we have no law for it. I have not very much sympathy with legislation of this kind. I believe it was adopted in both countries to fool the workingmen and try to get their votes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER. Hon. gentlemen opposite started it, and I am not going to exonerate those who keep it up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What do you wish to continue that state of things for ?

Mr. FRASER. It is here because hon. gentlemen opposite started it, and I suppose that like many other things it takes a while to get it off the statute-books. But, I do not think it is becoming in two great peoples to act like that. I may be told that the Americans began it. No doubt they did. Fancy Great Britain passing such legislation as we do; and yet if any person from Great Britain went under a contract to the United States he would be treated exactly as Canadians are. The British nation is too big for a small thing like that; and I think that if we treated it wisely, and did not make it appear to be a tremendous thing, it would in the end die a natural death. I do not deny that it appeals to very much in a man's nature, and I do not blame the people of Canada very much for taking the position that when the people of the United States act like that, we should act in the same way. I can understand that feeling very well; but, after all, is it not just like the school boy who has been struck by another boy, and who says : Because you struck me, I will strike back. Is that wisdom ? The Act may have to be amended; but, I think the suggestion made is the correct one. A week's consideration by the gentlemen who introduced this Bill, and by the government, who say they are going to inquire into the subject, is after all the wisest way to deal with it. I think we are agreed that if it is necessary to have legislation of this kind, we should have the wisest and best, and it should be so framed as to be effective. I am only expressing my own view, when I say that I do not think very much wisdom underlay the action of the United States Congress when to suit certain parties they passed that legislation. It may be very natural for us to retaliate; but there may be a wiser and better way, by which we can understand each other; and I think the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), who, as a labouring man, I am bound to say speaks with a breadth which does him credit, when he comes to think of it, will understand and appreciate what I say, that it would not be well for us to put upon the statute-book a law that would enable Canadians to do the very thing that he says was done in the state of Michigan. I admit that our friends to the south are neither wise nor considerate very often; but such as they are they are there, and I think that by putting this question off for a week we are likely to arrive at a better conclusion.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) advises Canadians to continue to suffer the indignities which they have been suffering for a great many years past. I hope the Bill of my hon. friend from South Waterloo (Mr. Clare) will not, if referred to a special committee, meet with the same fate as the Bill which I had the honour to introduce into this House year after year. In 1896, the Prime Minister gave me the distinct promise that if I withdrew the Bill, and brought it in the following year, the Canadian parliament would pass an Act, letter for letter and word for word like the American law. The next year I did introduce that Bill, but previous to my doing so, the Prime Minister put up one of his own supporters to get a Bill on the paper ahead of mine. We then had the two Bills—the one presented by one of the members for Essex, and the Bill which I had introduced year after year. I may say that when I first introduced my Bill, the government granted a special committee to consider it. That committee called witnesses before it, and brought in a report stating that it had been proved that Canadians had year after year suffered indignities from the enforcement of the Alien Labour law by the United States. On the strength of that, I introduced my Bill in 1896. It was then that I received the promise of the Prime Minister that in the following year we would pass a law, word for word like the American law. In 1897, the Bill introduced by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) and my Bill were referred to a special committee. What did the special committee do ? Bring in a Bill, word for word and letter for letter like the American Bill ? No; they mutilated the Bill in such a way that it has been ineffective ever since. Last year I brought a case before the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) said he had not heard of more than one case in which a Canadian has been deported.

Mr. McCREARY. Pardon me. That is not the statement I made. I said, of those cases contested in the courts in only one had the Act been held good. In all the others the parties succeeded.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask my hon. friend, who has had some experience of immigration, if a poor Canadian goes to the other side to work, and Mr. DeBarry tells him : If you don't go back, I will prosecute you, and says to his employer, if you do not send this man back I will sue you for $200 or $300, what happens ? The man probably has not the money to contest the case, and he sends him back. I brought a case before the Prime Minister last year. I read the following letter :

Prescott, May 8, 1900.

Dear Sir,—I am mailing you under a separate cover a Prescott 'Messenger' of May 4, 1900, marked on last page where one of our citizens was ordered back to Canada. I am well acquainted with Mr. White. He is one of our best men, and I had an interview with him to-day relative to this matter. He says that while at work in the store in Ogdensburg he was served with papers to return to Canada at once or be imprisoned. He had moved his wife and family to Ogdensburg, N.Y., and was practically a citizen of New York. There are now, and have been, citizens of Ogdensburg working in our town in defiance of the Alien Labour law.

Here is the case of a gentleman who went from Prescott to work in a store in Ogdensburg. He worked a few days, and then moved his family over. Some person made a complaint, and he was served with papers calling upon him to go back to Canada. The storekeeper was also notified that if he kept this man, an action would be brought against him, and the man was sent back to Prescott. I brought that case to the attention of the Prime Minister last year, and he made this reply :

In answer to the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), I beg to say that the case he has brought to the attention of the House, judging from the letter he has read, is not a case of violation of the American Alien Labour law. Mr. White had not gone from Canada to the United States in violation of that law, and if he was deported, that was an abuse of the law. This is the second instance of the kind, however, which has been brought to my attention. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, brought to my attention the case of another Canadian who appears to have been deported from the United States under the pretense of a violation of the American Labour law, when in fact there was none. This is a case which calls for diplomatic representation by this government to the American authorities that some of their officials, under colour of the Alien Labour law, were going outside that law.

He says this was a case to bring before the attention of the American authorities, and I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if he has done so. But the case of Mr. White is not the only one. Here is a letter dated Gananoque, July 16, of which my hon. friend from Kingston will know something :

Gananoque, Ont., July 16, 1900.

Dear Sir,—The oarsmen of this neighbourhood consider that they have a substantial grievance against the authorities of the country in the non-enforcement of the Alien Labour law. Instances are occurring here of the bringing in of oarsmen from the American side to row fishing parties who are stopping here and fishing in Canadian waters, the result being that we who have to provide and maintain expensive outfits are left idle, and without the means of earning our livelihood. This is all the more unsatisfactory when we find the American authorities opposite us strictly enforcing the Alien Labour Act on the American side of the line, in the interests of their own citizens. Only last week a number of Queen's College students were sent from the American side, and were not permitted to act as waiters. We would bespeak on our behalf a similar enforcement of the Act, which you were largely instrumental in having introduced, but which, it is to be regretted, is not, at any rate in this locality, attempted to be enforced.

Faithfully yours,

BENJAMIN LONGUEUIL,
FRANK LATTIMORE,

On behalf of the Gananoque Oarsmen.

A lot of students went down from Kingston during the vacation and engaged to work as waiters in one of the hotels at a watering place in the United States, but the American officer entrusted with the enforcement of the Alien Labour law notified these young men and the hotelkeeper who was employing them, that he would bring an action, and these students had to pack up their kits and return. Yet the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) says that our young men must be content to suffer these indignities.

My hon. friend asked how much money was spent in enforcing this law since 1897. I find by the Auditor General's Report that this is what it cost the government for the whole year, from June 1, 1899, to June 1, 1900 :

E. P. Bremner, agent New Denver, B.C., salary from June 7th to June 30th, 1900, $100 ; travel, $65.55 ; to account for $34.45	$200 00
William Keys, Montreal, services as agent between July 3rd, 1899, and May 31, 1900, ninety-one days at $5	455 00
W. B. McMurrich, Toronto, legal services	23 02
	$678 02

This amount was spent for the enforcement of the Alien Labour law, and yet the government never deported anybody.

But I find another gentleman who, I presume, was enforcing the Alien Labour law, Mr. R. C. Clute, of Toronto, who is down for remuneration from November 10, 1899, to May 5, 1900, 116½ days, at $40 per day, or $4,660 paid to this Mr. Clute, who goes around stuffing ballot boxes and fighting the battles of the party in the country. That is not all. Besides that $40 per day, he was paid travelling expenses and sundry disbursements, amounting to $1,526.78.

That is the way these gentlemen are enforcing the Alien Labour law. I brought the two matters I have mentioned to the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister last year and expected there would have been correspondence between this government and the government at Washington, and that we would have obtained some reparation for the indignity to which Mr. White had been subjected, and the Queen's College students. But not a bit of it. These people were driven back, and the hon. member for Guysborough says they have to put up with these indignities.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From what page of the Auditor General's Report is the hon. gentleman quoting the payments to Mr. Clute ? Is he quoting under the heading of 'enforcement of the Alien Labour law ?'

Mr. TAYLOR. No ; 'inquiry into labour troubles.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows that that has nothing to do with the Alien Labour law.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not know what the government paid Mr. Clute $40 per day for. My hon. friend beside me says he was out stumping in his county.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If I had not turned this up, the hon. gentleman would have left the Committee under the impression that Mr. Clute was paid for enforcing the Alien Labour law.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said that he was paid $40 a day with reference to labour troubles.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And he earned his money well by effecting a settlement of the labour disputes in British Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am quoting to prove that this government have broken their pledge to the workingman that they would pass a labour law, word for word, similar to that in force in the United States, and would enforce it. But when the Bill came before the committee, of which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was a member, I predicted that it would never pass, and it did not. It was so mutilated that it became a dead letter, although our workingmen have been driven back from the United States, all along the line from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Should my hon. friend allow his Bill to be sent to a subcommittee, it will be altered beyond recognition by government supporters, just as was the Bill I presented, although we had the distinct understanding from the right hon. the Prime Minister that he would give us a Bill, word for word, similar to the American law, which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier read here to-night.

The law we have is worthless, and the workingmen of this country know it, and this government must assume the responsibility of coming to the rescue and allowing the Bill of the hon. member for South Waterloo to pass, or so amend the present statute as to make it just as workable as is the American law.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I am sure the House is in accord with the view that this matter should be dealt with in a very temperate manner. But this is no new measure, it is one that has been before the House a long time, so that there is no excuse for delaying its consideration. We have had experience after experience of very harsh treatment from the American people, and have borne with it patiently for years. Year after year we hoped that the government might succeed in carrying out some of its promises. But not only have we failure on the part of the government to do this, but we have had the spectacle of a Canadian official going to the United States in order to have the American labour law enforced against people leaving Canada. We have had the hon. member for Selkirk stating that when he was immigration commissioner, he went to the United States and did this. That was a most extraordinary procedure. And what does the hon. gentleman say now ? He says that the law is entirely ineffective, because he was not able to succeed in his object. I do not wonder that these hon. gentlemen should fail to sympathize with any movement for the purpose of protecting our Canadian workingmen when they not only refuse to do anything, but send their own officials to assist the American officials in preventing people from leaving their homes.

Mr. CLARKE. The exodus had not stopped.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems that the exodus continued, and it was necessary to send an agent to the American border to get the Americans to stop it. And what does the hon. gentleman advise us to do ? He advises us to wait patiently and find out if the American labour law is effective against our Canadians going to that country. Is it not perfectly idle to enter upon a course of that kind ? It is plain that the American people have exhausted in every way the reasonable patience of the Canadian people. If this is not a harsh law for the Americans to enforce against us, it is certainly not harsh for us to have the same law against them. It is a question merely of putting brick for brick on the wall. We are not seeking to irritate the Americans. No one can reasonably say that we seek to irritate them if we take the same course toward them as they have taken towards us. No one can say that we have been the aggressors, or have committed any offence, if we simply follow the course they have laid out. But it may well be said that we have lost the sense of dignity that should characterize an independent people if we allow them to subject Canadians to such indignities as they do, and take no action on our own part. We are told that the American law is not effective. But case after case has been given here, so that it is idle to make such a pretense. It is even said that there is no such law. But we see all the effects of a law, for the officers tap a man on the shoulder and order him back to Canada lest worse befall him. The officials threaten the employers, and the employers rather than go to court to test the validity of the law, find the easier way is to tell their Canadian employees to return to Canada. I think we have now come to the end of the string ; and there is but one course left for us consistant with national dignity, and that is to pass such legislation as will meet the Americans precisely on their own ground, and give them the same treatment that they are meting out to the Canadian people.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). In rising to address this House for the first time, for a few moments, I desire to express at the outset my entire dissent from the opinion expressed by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), when he said it was time that the sunny ways of the government were discontinued. If the sunny ways and the practical common sense applied to the business of the country for four years have caused an increase of the trade of the country, as it never increased before, have advertised the country as it never was advertised before, have removed from politics questions very dangerous as they were not removed before, I think the people of this country will say, as they did on the 7th of November last, that they have confidence in the government, and will continue it in power for many years to come. Among the practical pieces of legislation that this government placed on the statute-book was the Act that is under discussion to-night. For years, this question had been trifled with by their predecessors in office. The hon. member from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who spoke a moment ago with such assumed indignation, had been trifling with this matter for years prior to this government coming into power ; and it was only when the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) introduced this practical piece of legislation that the hon. member for South Leeds became anxious to press the matter to an issue, which he had never been before. It was only when a member of the Liberal party, supporting the new government, was proceeding to put a practical piece of legislation upon the statute-book, that he became anxious to do what he had been pretending to do for years before. This is not a matter to be dealt with in any rash or reckless way. I happen to come from a constituency where we are brought face to face with this question in a most practical way. In the city of Windsor, which is part of the constituency I represent, and in the towns of Walkerville and Sandwich, there are four or five hundred people who take the ferry and cross to the city of Detroit, where they are employed. Every time this question comes up for discussion, every time there is a rumour that there is to be hostile action between Canada and the United States, there is a threat held out by their employers in Detroit that in a few days they will be told they cannot continue to have employment in Detroit unless they remove to the American side. And every time it comes up, the citizens of Windsor are concerned lest the result be that, instead of Windsor increasing as few other cities have—as it has been doing in the past few years—its progress may be retarded. Therefore, hon. gentlemen should not treat this question in any hasty or flippant way. It is a matter to be dealt with most soberly and with a great deal of caution. In view of the facts I have stated, I think every hon. gentleman should accede to the reasonable request that this should be sent to the committee, and there discussed soberly and carefully. Hon. gentlemen will notice that in the amendment which is proposed it is suggested that the information may be laid by any person before two justices of the peace of the county. Is that not pretty radical and pretty far-reaching ? Any person, perhaps some man who has applied for a position, and not got it, or some man who has been discharged for cause and wishes to wreak his vengeance upon somebody else, some merely irresponsible person, may launch into motion that which will place difficulties in the way of these places in my own riding, and of the two countries at large. Is that a rational thing to put on the statute-book ? Until I have had time to consider the question further, I think not. I think the Bill now on the statute-book is a more reasonable one and ought to commend itself to the members of this House. The existing law says :

> For every violation of the provisions of section 1 of this Act the person, partnership, company or corporation violating it . . . shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by Her Majesty's Attorney General of Canada, or the person duly authorized thereto by him.

Now, is it not a matter of sufficient importance, before an action of this kind is set on foot, that some person of reputation and standing should have the facts laid before him, in order that he may determine whether it is a proper case, in dealing with these difficult questions, to set the law in motion ? I submit to this House, very respectfully, that it is, and that to say that any person, however irresponsible, for whatever cause or motive, can be able, by merely laying information before a couple of justices of the peace, to set the law in motion, is placing a power in his hands which we ought not to do without considering it fully. Therefore, while most anxious to protect the rights of the working man in every practical way, I would urge upon this House that, in a matter of this importance, there can not possibly be a more reasonable thing than the suggestion of the Prime Minister that the matter shall be left over for a week, sent to the committee, and carefully considered before we place this amendment upon the statute-book.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I quite agree with a part of the careful and deliberate speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland, Essex), who has just taken his seat. I too think this is a matter which we should approach with due deliberation, and that the House should take sufficient time to consider the case in all its aspects, so as to enact such a measure as will redound to the benefit of the class mainly to be affected, and incidentally to the benefit of the whole Dominion. But, that being the case, is it not all the more incumbent upon this House to get to work now ? It is understood that this will probably be a short session. Should we not, without delay, and without regard to any political bias or any question except the best interest of the country, consider what we should do to assert ourselves fairly and squarely before the people we represent, and before the people of the United States, as to how we shall protect ourselves within the limits of the constitution ?

Now, we are not at the threshold of this matter. The principle has been affirmed, the Act has been passed, and we are now taking stock to see exactly where we stand. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has told us, if I understood him aright, that every time this matter has come up in the House difficulties arise over at the border. If that is the case the proper time to consider it was when the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) introduced his Bill. Now, I submit to the House this proposition, that the Act passed a few years ago was either right or wrong. If it is right, keep it and enforce it like men; if it is wrong, then repeal it and be done with it. But instead of that, we are met with a plea for delay, we are met with the persuasive words of some hon. gentlemen, some of them almost get down on their knees and beg of us to be very careful, to go very cautiously in this matter. We have been very considerate so far, and I must say that it is no credit to Canada that a law should be put upon our statute-book and allowed to remain a dead letter. Britons have always been able to hold their own. I do not say this in any aggressive spirit whatever, but I say it because, if it is right for the United States to have a law upon their statute-books to protect their labourers, it is right for us to have a law on our statute-books to protect our labourers. Our labourers are as good, are as honest, are as able man for man, as are the labourers of the United States, and we should be just as ready to protect them as the United States are ready to protect theirs.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is a sturdy class of men in this country who deserve protection at our hands, who deserve that their interests should be conserved by their representatives in parliament. Last night, through the effort of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, we were able to protect the farmers of this Dominion, and I think we will be taking a wise step if to-night we improve this opportunity to pass another bit of legislation that would protect the labouring classes of this country as well. From what class do we draw some of our best soldiers—soldiers that we count upon to defend this country and to defend Britain ? Why, we draw them from the ranks of these same labouring men—it is to them we look to a large extent to protect us in the hour of need.

Now, I have great deference of course for any suggestions thrown out in such a nice way by the premier; and for the moment, inexperienced as I am, I was almost led away by his suggestions to leave the matter over for a little while longer. I have noticed, however, that he makes that request of us pretty often. In the matter of the sugar-beet discussion, I understood that he would have been very glad to have it left over indefinitely, or for another season. If I understood him and the members of the government aright yesterday, when we were discussing the binder twine question——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Order, the hon. gentleman is referring to a previous discussion.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, it seems to me, at all events, to be the general policy of the government, whenever measures are introduced from time to time, to delay their progress as much as possible. Therefore, when it is suggested to-night that this matter be held over, I want to know if there is any good and substantial reason for it ? One hon. gentleman said to-night that a week or so would make no difference. I do not understand that it is proposed to pass this Bill into law to-night, we are only discussing the second reading of the Bill, as we have done with several other Bills that have been introduced this session. I have not yet heard any valid reason given by hon. gentlemen opposite why this Bill should not receive its second reading.

We had a very eloquent speech from the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary). One of the arguments which he stated very strongly was that the American Act is inoperative, that it had not been framed in such a way as that it could be carried out by the courts of the country. I am not going to enter into a wordy argument with him or with any other hon. gentleman as to whether this is the case. I do feel, however, that in the parliament of this Dominion we are able to frame an Act that will be legal and that can be enforced. If the government have any doubt as to the validity of their Act they have not taken the people into their confidence, they have not told us that they have a doubt as to its validity. If they have, they should let the country know it. I understand that they profess to have an Act upon the statute-book, and to have officials for the purpose of enforcing it to some extent, but that they have not been enforcing it. The object of this amendment is to put this Act in the same position as other statutes, so that it can be enforced by the ordinary machinery employed for the administration of justice, so that we may have in every county, in every riding, in every municipality, at our own doors, and in our own courts, machinery by which we can enforce this Act instead of being obliged to appeal to the government to secure our rights.

Now, the other argument the hon. member for Selkirk advanced was one which I confess is the most extraordinary argument I ever heard. Of course, I have not had much parliamentary experience yet, and perhaps, after I have heard some more speeches from hon. gentlemen opposite I shall not be surprised at anything. But, I was very much surprised to hear that hon. gentleman say that we would have to collect all the American cases, refer them to a committee or something of that kind, consider them, pass an opinion upon them, be governed by them, and after we have done all this, we, the representatives of the people of Canada, could then begin to act. That is a most extraordinary proposition. It may be right, it may be wrong ; but speaking for myself and the people whom I represent, I will never consent by my vote to such a course, never, never, never.

I just want to refer to the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). I understand he is out of the House, so I will hit him lightly, although I cannot perhaps hit him very hard in any case. He points out the great danger that we are in. It may be so, but I do not so understand the temper of the American people. I understand them as a kindred race with ourselves. I understand that they are fair-minded and that they will, instead of retaliating if we protect ourselves, begin to appreciate us and understand that we are a self-reliant people prepared to vindicate our rights. But, if there is danger, I am prepared to meet the danger. The hon. member for Guysborough gives us his illustration of children, and says that it seems something like a couple of school boys wanting to hit each other, that it is a case of blow for blow. I am unable to follow his argument. It is a 'childish' illustration, and association sometimes breeds things of that kind. I urge my view upon this House from no party feeling at all; I urge it because I believe hon. gentlemen on the government side ought to be as much interested as we are. I urge it because I understand, that, more than upon this side of the House, it is the province of the government to devise the best measures for meeting these questions as they arise. It is for them to be prepared to meet the varied wants of Canada or to give place to other men. If we pass this Bill we are just acting fairly and honestly by a large and deserving class of the community. We are doing what we pretended to do in 1897 when this Act was passed. We are no longer perpetrating a false pretense upon the country ; we no longer proclaim ourselves to the people of the United States as people who have not the courage of their convictions and are afraid to enforce that which they pretend to enact. I would do justice to our own people, and in doing justice we will never be visited with anything that will do us harm. I understand this to be a fair measure of protection ; and not because there are a great many of these men in my own riding, but, because it is fair to the whole Dominion of Canada, and for this reason I will support the measure introduced by my hon. friend.

Mr. JOHN D. REID (South Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow this matter to pass without entering my protest against the manner in which the Alien Labour law has been enforced since it was put upon the statute-book. My hon. friend the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has mentioned the case of Mr. White. Mr. White resided in my constituency and kept a store there for a number of years. He gave up his business and moved his family to Ogdensburg, but he was sent back again, as my hon. friend has stated, after he had secured a position in Ogdensburg. He complained to me as well as to my hon. friend. I told him there was no use, that nothing could be done, because, while the Alien Labour law was on the statute-book, it was an impossibility to make it work. In the town of Prescott we have a number of Americans ; they are coming there day after day and securing employment in that town. Canadians cannot go into Ogdensburg. I think this is most unfair, and after this one example no Canadians have sought employment in the bordering town. I notice that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) was very indignant at my hon. friend the member for South Leeds when he stated that Mr. Clute had received $40 a day, and when he insinuated that it should be placed to the credit of the Alien Labour law. I suppose that was for legal services in the case of strikes or something of that kind, and that is the reason why the hon. minister objected to that item.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). I did not object to the item. I was quite aware of the item existing and of the money having been paid. What I objected to was that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), having before him the Auditor General's Report showing the exact amounts paid for the enforcement of the law, and having before him the Auditor General's Report showing, in so many words, that this money, paid to Mr. Clute, was not paid in connection with the Alien Labour law at all, but in connection, as the report said, and which he had right before his eyes, with the inquiry into the labour troubles in the British Columbia mines, should have suppressed that information and tried to mislead the younger members of this House who said that they desired to form an honest opinion upon the question.

Mr. REID (South Grenville). Well, I did not understand it in that way. The point I wish to make is, that I claim that every strike we have had in this Dominion has been on account of Americans coming over and taking the places of Canadians. I will give an instance. In Valleyfield the great strike was due to so many American spinners coming to that town, being employed and working up the strike that took place and caused so much trouble there. The same thing has taken place in British Columbia on account of the aliens there. Americans come in, cut down the price of labour and cause the strikes. I was very much amused at the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) giving us an account of the state of affairs as it existed in the town of Windsor. I just looked up 'Hansard' to see what the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) said when he introduced his Bill in 1897. At that time, in his speech he said :

A short time ago I picked up the Windsor Record, and I found the following article :

'Another outrage was committed on a young Canadian this morning by Detroit customs officials.

'W. J. Sutherland, a young man of about twenty years, from Wallacetown, Elgin county, came through on the Michigan Central Railway this morning to visit his uncle, Mr. F. Offer, at Detroit.

'He was met on the other side by one of the immigration agents of the United States, and asked to explain himself. The young man said he was going to visit his uncle. This did not satisfy the officers, and they proceeded to overhaul his baggage and open his letters found in his valise. Among them was one received some time ago from a firm in Detroit to whom Mr. Sutherland had applied for a situation. The letter was a refusal. The officers then assumed that he was again looking for a situation, and, after the usual compliments to Canada and Canadians, the young man was fired back over the river.'

After reading that article, and being desirous of securing information on the subject, and the true circumstances of the case, I sought out the young man and took from him a declaration, which I will read to the House. It is as follows :—

Dominion of Canada,
County of Essex,
To wit :

In the matter of W. J. Sutherland and his return to Canada under order from American customs.

I, William J. Sutherland, of the hamlet of Wallacetown, in the county of Elgin, do solemnly declare that on the 11th day of January, A.D. 1897, I was on a M. C. R. train, travelling on a ticket purchased at Dutton station, where I took the train for Detroit. My baggage was examined, and the officer asked me my age, where my home was, and how much money I had. I gave him the information, and had about $8.50. He then asked me what I was going to Detroit for. I replied, to visit my uncle in Detroit, and gave him his address. I had some private letters in my valise. He opened them, and one was an answer to an application I had made for a situation several months before, stating they had no opening. And I was ordered back to Canada, and they refused to permit me to enter the United States. I had no contract with any person to enter into or engage in any employment in the United States, but was on my way to a friend's. I after crossed on another ferry and went to my friend's, and am to-day on my return to my home in Canada.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of 'The Canada Evidence Act, 1893.'

W. J. SUTHERLAND.

Declared before me at the city of Windsor, in the county of Essex, this 19th day of January, A.D. 1897.

M. K. COWAN,
A Commissioner.

Then, again, there is another long letter which the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Cowan) places on record with regard to the case of Mr. D. Llewellyn Irvine, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan), in the course of his speech, makes this statement :

Coming, as I do, from a frontier city and a border county, representing, as I do, a constituency whose shores are washed by the international waters that divide both countries, I know whereof I speak when I say that constituents of mine have had indignities heaped upon them, their private correspondence searched, their breeches pockets gone through, as in the case of young Sutherland, to see what money they possessed, as if they were moral lepers or Chinese highbinders. I say that the initiation, the inauguration, the enforcement and the perpetuation of that policy is an insult to the citizens of the country initiating and enforcing it.

That is from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) who resides in the same city of Windsor with the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland). It is hard for me to understand how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) can make the statement he made to-night. It looks as if he does not know what is going on in his own city, and it is quite evident that he has nothing to do with the labouring classes, or that he does not take any interest in them. I feel, Sir, that I would not be doing my duty when a question of this kind comes before parliament if I did not strenuously urge upon the government to put the Canadian labour law in such shape that it may be workable, and that the labouring men can have a case tested before the ordinary tribunals of the country. Why, the gravest criminal case is first tried before a justice of the peace. Is there any good reason against the infractions of this law being tried before a justice of the peace with the right of appeal ? I believe that the government should not hesitate about giving our working classes a chance of enforcing this law with the least possible trouble and expense to them, so as to protect their interests.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). The discussion has wandered a long way from the Bill before the House, and from the Alien Labour Act of 1897. The instances which have been cited to the House have no bearing upon the actual Act itself. If these occurrences are correctly stated, they simply show a highhanded proceeding on the part of the United States officials in reference to Canadians who have gone there, and no law which we could pass would in any way be applicable. The whole point of citing the case mentioned by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) ; the declaration of the man upon whom the indignity was cast, tends to prove the fact that he was not going over there in violation of the United States Act, but that, nevertheless, he was sent back. The grievance there is that instead of the United States officials enforcing their law, they went a long way outside of it. I am sure that the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) will not contend that the action of his constituent, Mr. White, of Prescott, who took some member of his family to Ogdensburg to work, was a violation of the Alien Labour Act of the United States.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The customs official made him return, family and all.

Mr. BRITTON. I am not disputing what the hon. gentleman says, but his own statement shows that Mr. White did not violate the American Alien Act, and if he did not, then the officials were wrong in interfering with him. The Bill introduced by the hon. member (Mr. Clare) does not profess to redress a grievance of that kind. Take the case of the students from Kingston who went to Alexandria Bay, with the very laudable and praiseworthy intention of earning money by acting as waiters at the summer hotel. It is not pretended that they were engaged in Kingston for that work, and the sending of them back was a highhanded act on the part of the United States official ; but this Bill does not touch that.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) what all that shows ?

Mr. BRITTON. Let me answer that question by asking another. If these people were not in violation of the United States Act, how are we to remedy that, either by the present Act or by the Bill now proposed ?

Mr. CLARKE. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) that these cases show the extreme vigilance exercised by the United States officials to enforce their Alien Labour law.

Mr. BRITTON. It does not show an extreme vigilance to enforce the law, but it shows an extreme vigilance to go outside of the law.

Mr. COCHRANE. And, therefore, we should do nothing ?

Mr. BRITTON. We should.

Mr. MACLEAN. We should lie down.

Mr. BRITTON. We should stand up.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, stand up.

Mr. BRITTON. I am standing up, but we should not attempt to do anything that is contrary to the law ourselves. We should be careful not to do what we have no authority in law to do.

Mr. COCHRANE. We are not doing what we have authority to do.

Mr. TALBOT. Stand up.

Mr. COCHRANE. Shut up.

Mr. BRITTON. I do not pay much attention to the hon. gentleman from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane).

Mr. COCHRANE. I was not referring to you. I was talking to that coon behind you.

Mr. BRITTON. I hope I can proceed without interruption. The first section of the Act which the hon. gentleman from Waterloo (Mr. Clare) does not desire to repeal has reference simply to the employment in the United States of persons who come over here to work, and he does not seek in any way to change that provision in our Act of 1897. The amending Bill only deals with the enforcing of the Act. A penalty can be enforced in any way ; but before anything can be recovered for a violation of the law, we have to establish that there has been a violation of it. I do not say that there has not been a violation, or if there has, that we should not attempt to enforce it. We should enforce it if there has been a violation, because if there has been in the United States, as our hon. friends say, such extreme vigilance to enforce their law that they have gone beyond the law, then we, at least, ought to go the length of enforcing the law as we have it on the statute-book.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRITTON. But I venture to say that if hon. gentlemen opposite cannot find better cases than those they have given to-night, there has been no violation of it. The cases given have not been violations of the law, and any attempt to enforce such cases as if they were violations of the law, would bring us into contempt, because we would necessarily fail.

The hon. gentleman seeks to amend the Act, in the first place, by reducing the penalty. I dare say that is wise, because it would perhaps have the effect desired, of having the Act enforced for the recovery of the penalty, as it is easier to collect $200 than $1,000, and there is no doubt that in some cases a large penalty is a disadvantage in the enforcement of a law. But when we come to the hon. gentleman's mode of recovering the penalty, we come to the principal objection, and I think the acting leader of the opposition admitted that. I do not know what else he could refer to when he said that the Bill as introduced, was not workable, but would have to be amended in committee.

Mr. MONK. I said there were certain details.

Mr. BRITTON. It is the details I am talking about.

Mr. MONK. Every Bill is like that.

Mr. BRITTON. No, not every Bill. Some Bills are so nearly perfect at the beginning that everybody appreciates the fact. But this is so imperfect, that I do not see what objection any one could have to delaying it for further consideration. The hon. gentleman seeks to amend the method of enforcing the Act by providing that instead of the Attorney General or somebody under him having charge of its enforcement, as at present, any one may go before two justices of the peace of the county into which such alien or foreigner is imported and lay the information ; and he also provides that the penalty may be recovered in the same manner as debts of like amount are now recovered in any competent court in Canada. Now, I do not pretend to speak as a lawyer, but simply as any one would speak who would read this section. I do not know but that it might be held that the last part of the section killed the first part, so far as the recovery of the penalty is concerned, and that the only way to recover it would be to bring an action in those courts where debts of that amount would be recoverable. Perhaps, in addition to going before two justices of the peace, a person could sue in the division court for an infraction of the Act which may have occurred in the United States. Any lawyer will see the difficulty of a position of that kind, and will see that this is an ill-considered measure as it stands at present, and is therefore one that ought to have a good deal of consideration given to it before it or anything like it becomes law.

Then, another point. The complaint of hon. gentlemen to-night has been as to the enforcement of the American labour law by the deportation of our people who have gone over there, and they ask that retaliatory measures be adopted by us in reference to Americans who come over here. Now, what authority is there on the part of this government or any other individual in Canada to report an American who comes to Canada and does anything in violation of this Act ? That is provided for by another section of the Act, which the hon. gentleman does not propose to touch at all. Section 6 of the Act of 1897 provides for that, but he does not propose to repeal that. There is nothing in this Bill at all except that it reduces the penalty and provides another way of recovering it. The Bill does not touch the offence in any way.

Before I sit down I wish to say that I do not yield to any of the hon. gentlemen opposite, although they may parade so much every session their deep, devoted interest in the workingman, and their desire at all times and places to protect him who is so much oppressed by this government and those who support it. I do not use any such arguments as that ; but I do not yield to any hon. gentleman on either side of the House in my desire to do what is right by those men ; and where the law has been violated I think the law ought to be enforced. But I am satisfied that there has been, from the time this law was passed, an honest desire on the part of the government to enforce it, but in such a way that international relations might not be strained. There is no use of making a fuss where there is no evidence to show that an offence has been committed. You ought not to try to make international trouble by taking up cases such as those that have been talked about from time to time, like the case of Mr. White who went to Ogdensburg, and the case of those students. But where there has been a clear violation of the law it ought to be applied, and I believe that the persons whom this government have employed from time to time to enforce the Alien Labour Act, if they had found a case which they had evidence to support, would have prosecuted it and obtained justice.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton). I do not rise, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the merits of an Alien Labour law. It is sufficient for me that I find such a law on the statute-book of this Dominion, and I assume, as I think every member of this House has a right to assume, that that law being there, was put there with a purpose and an object. It is of no use, I think, for the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) to tell us that the statute law of the United States is almost as bad as ours. If that means anything it means that our law wants improving, and I think the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Clare) is making an effort to improve it. If I had any doubt upon the merits of the Bill which we are discussing, I think that doubt would have been removed by the language which I find in 'Hansard,' uttered by the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, when addressing the House in regard to the particular statute which the hon. member for South Waterloo now seeks to amend. At page 658 of 'Hansard' of 1897, the right hon. gentleman is reported as having used these words with reference to it :

> There cannot be any doubt as to the position of the government upon this Bill. In fact, I do not know that it is at all advisable to prolong the debate any longer, because, so far as I can interpret the sentiment of the House, there is a unanimous feeling at this moment, whatever may have been the opinions held by members in the past, that the persistence of the American Congress in keeping upon the statute-book these very obnoxious clauses, leaves no alternative to the Canadian people but to apply the same law themselves. The course adopted by our neighbours seems to leave no option to us but to apply to them the same measure of justice or injustice as they apply to us.

I would like to know if, in the last four years during which this statute has been upon our statute-books, any attempt has been made on the part of the Dominion to apply to the citizens of the United States, the same law that they apply to us.

Mr. BRITTON. Give an instance of any demand on our government to that effect.

Mr. BARKER. I will tell the hon. gentleman in a moment what I have to say upon this subject. I am not here to be cross-examined by him. I assume, when I find a statute upon the books of this Dominion, that it was put there for a particular purpose, and it seems to me that the only purpose for which this statute could have been enacted was the protection of Canadian workingmen. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) has argued that there is nothing to be done under this statute. Well, after what the right hon. the leader of the government said in 1897, as to the necessity for this law, I do not think it is necessary for me to say anything in reply to the hon. gentleman. But, I ask if there are no cases to which this statute can be applied, what harm can there be in our complying with the request of the hon. member for South Waterloo, by striking out of the statute the string that has prevented its enforcement during the last four years ? On the other hand, if there are cases to which this law may be applied, surely in common justice to the workingmen, in whom the hon. member for Kingston seems to take such particular interest, we should amend it in such a way as to enable it to be enforced. I do not want to take up time discussing the merits of a question that has been fully discussed and determined by a previous parliament. The statute is there, and it is the duty of the government either to see that it is enforced or else remove it from the statute-books altogether. Are these hon. gentlemen prepared to say that the law is not only inoperative and a nulity, but of no use ? If so, let them introduce a Bill to wipe it out. But, so long as it remains, it is evidence that necessity exists to protect our workingmen, and it should be made workable.

As to the particular section objected to, section No. 8, the insertion of such a clause in a law of this kind—a clause leaving the enforcement of the law completely in the hands of the Attorney General—seems to me an utter absurdity. Let us suppose an alien labourer infringes this Act when entering this Dominion at Halifax or Vancouver. Under the present statute no action can be taken against him at either of these places, but the complainant must come or write or telegraph to Ottawa and ask the Attorney General of the Dominion to investigate the case and for permission to prosecute the offender, and if the right hon. the leader of the government thinks as he did in 1897, he should favour the amending of the statute so as to make it really effective.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat quoted the remarks made by the right hon. the First Minister in 1897, and rather tried to leave the impression on the House that the First Minister had not carried out the promise he then made. Well, I happened to be on the committee to which was referred the Alien Labour Bill of that session, and which reported to the House. That committee acted on the promise made by the right hon. the First Minister in the remarks which my hon. friend has quoted. We took the Alien Labour law of the United States and copied it verbatim, and the Bill we reported to the House, and which passed is an exact copy of that law.

Mr. BARKER. Did the United States tie up their Acts as you did yours ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The clause to which the hon. gentleman refers was introduced by us because this was not a domestic measure alone, but an international measure, and it was deemed desirable and proper that the government should take the responsibility of enforcing the law in a matter that affected our international relations. I shall not discuss that point now as the First Minister has intimated that the matter will come up when the government policy is announced.

There has been a great deal of talking to the galleries to-night. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has sought to impress upon the new members of the House the idea that he is really in earnest, and is advocating the passage of such a law in the interest of the workingmen rather than of the party to which he belongs. That may deceive some of the new members, but not any one who has been here the last ten or twelve years. Why ? Because we know such is not the object of the hon. gentleman. I remember well his introducing a Bill of this kind every session for years when his own party was in power, but never attempting to pass it into law. He made a great flourish about introducing an Alien Labour law, but when the leader of his party told him to subside he quietly withdrew the Bill. This farce he regularly went through every session for years.

When my right hon. friend came into office, he said that inasmuch as an Alien Labour law seemed to be desired by a portion of the community, because our cousins to the south had one in their statute-book, he would advocate our adopting one in identically the same terms. But the committee to which the matter was referred thought that, inasmuch as it affected our international relations with the United States, it was desirable that the responsibility of taking action should be upon the government, and that the government should initiate any prosecutions under the Act. I am not yet convinced that it is desirable to hand these prosecutions over to any man in the community who may choose to initiate proceedings. I think there is considerable force in the argument made use of by my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton), who pointed out that to allow, for instance, a dismissed employee to prosecute the company which dismissed him, without any responsibility whatever, would be going very far.

I merely rise to point out to my hon. friend this fact, that the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Waterloo is one which, I venture to say, not a legal gentleman on the other side will assert can be carried out in its present shape. I do not know what it means, and I would like to know if anybody can tell me what it means. I know the hon. gentleman's object, but it is not expressed in the Bill. But the law at present is clear and definite and capable of being enforced, and I have not heard it stated that the Attorney General has refused to prosecute in any case brought before him. I heard the hon. member for Grenville say that there were some breaches of the law in his constituency. Did he ever bring them before the Attorney General, and ask him to prosecute these Americans who had come to Prescott? Does he desire that they should be prosecuted and driven out of the town? I ask him, did he lay an information before the Attorney General, and ask him to prosecute?

Mr. REID (South Grenville). When this matter was brought before the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) as minister of the Crown was it not his duty, and the duty of the government, and the duty of the Attorney General of the Dominion to take action? It was brought up by the hon. member for Leeds, and the record given.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend (Mr. Reid, South Grenville) complained that there were some instances within his knowledge where the law was not enforced. I understood him to say that there were a number of Americans in Prescott in violation of this law.

Mr. REID (South Grenville). So there are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Are they there against the wish of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. REID (South Grenville). Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Has the hon. gentleman reported the fact to the Attorney General of Canada, that prosecution may take place?

Mr. REID (South Grenville). No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How is the Attorney General to know of the case then?

Mr. REID (South Grenville). I did not report the cases, because other cases have been brought before the Attorney General and no prosecution has followed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman name a case.

Mr. REID (South Grenville). I have read a case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman, on his responsibility as a member of this House, name one case and let it go on record in 'Hansard'? So far as I know, the Attorney General has prosecuted all cases that were brought before him where there was sufficient evidence.

Mr. CLARKE. How many prosecutions have there been?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That has nothing to do with it. The law may not have been violated, the law is sufficient as it stands, and the Attorney General has not been neglectful of his duty. And I have merely been pointing out that the hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Reid) who stated, in a casual way, that the law was being violated at Prescott admits that he has never brought the case to the notice of the Attorney General.

Mr. REID (South Grenville). Was a case ever brought before the Attorney General, to the knowledge of the hon. gentleman, since this became law?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know. I do not recall a case in the maritime provinces that has ever been reported.

Mr. REID (South Grenville). Then, the hon. minister is in the same position as I am. I would like to ask him if he could name a case where the government has taken action?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As I am informed, the Attorney General has taken action in every case where the facts have been represented to him. But it appears that those who make an outcry in this House do not desire to enforce the law. One hon. gentleman took half an hour inveighing against the government because certain people are in his constituency in violation of the law. But when I asked him : Did you give that information to the Attorney General to be made the basis of a prosecution ? he says : No, I never did. How is the law to be put in force if hon. gentlemen like this who know that it is being violated secrete that information ? There is no difficulty about the law. But it is like other laws, for instance, the Scott Act. It will not enforce itself. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not enforce it or lend themselves to the enforcement of it, but will play to the galleries and make out that the law is not being enforced. My hon. friend (Mr. Clare) who introduced the Bill, has been met in a very proper way by the leader of the House. And I am glad to say also that he met the leader in a frank and straightforward way and said : I accept fully and frankly the statement of the leader of the House and I am well satisfied. The government asked to lay the matter over for a week, when they will be ready to announce what course they will take, and the promoter of the Bill is perfectly satisfied. But the politicians, who have been playing with this question for political purposes for the last ten or twelve years—at the head of whom is the hon. member for Leeds—are not satisfied ; and they have wasted the whole night talking about the enforcement of this Bill which the promoter knows, cannot be passed in the way in which it is introduced—it is not English and not law, and no lawyer would seek to put it upon the statute-book until it was revised and corrected.

Mr. MACLEAN. Must not a man who is not a lawyer draft the Bill for this House ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not understand the relevancy of the question. It does not require a man to be a lawyer to draft a Bill. Sometimes laymen draft Bills better than lawyers do, and write better English. What I am saying is that if we do proceed with this Bill, let us make that Bill——

Mr. COCHRANE. Unworkable.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am willing to accept that as the official announcement by the party opposite. There is no man better qualified to speak for his party than my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) ; and on reading the Bill, it seems to me that it is drawn up just to carry out his idea.

Mr. REID (Grenville).

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question, if he has no objection.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. None whatever.

Mr. MONK. There is this Bill and a similar one standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith). We have discussed this question since eight o'clock, that is for two hours and a half. In this measure is there anything contrary to the principle of these two Bills. Because, if there is nothing of that kind, then, after two hours and a half of discussion, should we not decide to either adopt or reject the principle of the Bill ? Because, at this stage, we are not dealing with the details but with the principle of the measure.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As it happened, the right hon. Prime Minister did not announce the introduction of a measure. He said that there were several Bills on the paper and that the government wished to consider the matter as one that had engaged their attention, and said that the conclusion reached would be announced on Wednesday next when the Bill came up again.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I think that hon. members on both sides will agree with me that it is deeply to be regretted that, when a question of such vital importance to the working people of this country is under consideration, we had not the presence of the Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Mulock) to assist in our deliberations. I am glad, however, that before the discussion closes, we may have the advantage and pleasure of hearing what he has to say upon this important matter. I think hon. members will agree with me, too, when I say that the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Clare) has placed the working classes of the Dominion under lasting obligations to him. The workingmen in his own constituency are especially under obligation to him because of the frank, manly statement he made in moving the second reading of his Bill this evening. The hon. gentleman is a self-made man, he has grown up from the ranks, a man who, by his indomitable industry, by his integrity, by his great ability, has achieved the honourable position which he occupies as one of the largest, one of the most progressive manufacturers in Ontario west. And when a gentleman who knows the wants, the requirements, the wishes of the working classes of this country as well as he does, takes the trouble at the earliest opportunity to rectify an Act which has been found to be unworkable, which has been upon the statutes of this country for nearly four years, and which has been practically a dead letter, he is entitled to the sympathy and the support of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. It is not fair to meet him with that carping criticism to which he has been subjected to-night. If there are some minor defects in the amendments which he proposes to make to the Alien Labour Act, those defects could have been remedied in committee. But until the hon. gentleman gave notice of his intention to introduce this Bill, no other hon. member of this House had given any intimation of an intention to amend the Alien Labour law and make it workable, and it is only this evening that we are informed for the first time by the premier that the government are considering this matter, and may possibly bring down a measure amending the present unworkable law. Why, Mr. Speaker, statements have been made across the floor of the House for the past four years that the government have been considering this matter ; but I think I am within the judgment of the House in saying that the consideration which the government has been giving to this matter has for its object how to avoid their plain duty in the matter of enforcing an Act which was intended to be of some benefit to the people in whose interests it was passed. The hon. member for Hamilton read a statement made by the premier some three or four years ago when the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) proposed to introduce his Bill. I need not repeat the statement made by the premier on that occasion, but taking those words at their plain meaning, there is no hon. member in this House but will confess that they lead to the conviction that the intention of the government at that time was to put a workable measure upon the statute-book and to enforce it up to the hilt, as the United States authorities have persistently enforced their measure up to the hilt from 1897 to the present time.

Sir, I was amused, if that is a parliamentary expression, to hear the statement in the House to-night that the American Alien Labour law is not a workable measure. What appropriations have Congress made year after year for the enforcement of that law ? What reports have been made by the Alien Labour law commissioner as to the success which has attended his efforts in the enforcement of that law ? What figures has he given as to the number of men who have been deported, sent back from the frontier ? This information can all be obtained in the library, or from the authorities at Washington, by any hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House, and if they take the trouble to look for that information they will find that every year a large appropriation has been made by the United States authorities for the enforcement of that law, and that every year that law has been vigorously enforced. It is only within the past two or three weeks that a statement has appeared in the press as to the action taken at Buffalo with regard to the deportation of Canadian workmen who were engaged in repairing one of the international bridges. So vigilant were the Alien Labour law officers of the United States that they actually deported these men who had been employed along with American workmen in repairing that bridge from the Canadian to the United States side of the river. Sir, the conduct and action of the United States Alien Labour law commissioner are in striking contrast with the conduct of the so-called labour commissioners that have been appointed from year to year to enforce the Alien Labour law here. American workmen were permitted to come over to the Canadian side of the river and assist in repairs on the Canadian side of that bridge, but when the repairs were completed on this side, and when it was necessary that Canadian workmen along with the Americans should go to the United States side of the bridge, they were deported, they were prohibited from going on with their work, they were sent back by the Alien Labour law commissioner ; and he proved by that act alone the Alien Labour law of the United States was capable of being enforced and was being enforced every day in the year. I have in my hand here a statement from the annual report of the secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and in speaking with regard to immigration and the number of people deported, he says :

> In addition to the foregoing, there were excluded at the Mexican and Canadian borders a total of 1,616 aliens.

We will be told by and by that the great majority of them were sent back from the Mexican border, we will not be given information as to how many were sent back from the Canadian border, prohibited from entering the United States. I find further on in the same report :

> Co-operation with organized labour in this country has been found useful in detecting violations of the contract labour law.

Instead of ridiculing the idea of invoking the aid and assurance of the workingmen to enable them to enforce the Alien Labour law, as was done by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and others to-night, the Alien Labour law commissioners of the United States solicited the assistance and co-operation of the officers of the organized unions on the other side to assist them in enforcing that law.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in imputing such a motive to me, I used no such language. I did not ridicule the aid of the workingmen ; on the contrary, I stated explicitly that whenever information had been given to the Attorney General of a breach of the law, he had given instructions to enforce it.

Mr. CLARKE. Why, Mr. Speaker, the echoes of the voice of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries have hardly died away in this Chamber, he said only a few minutes ago that to allow an employee to prosecute a company from which he had been dismissed, and to take action against it would have been outrageous, and still he challenges the accuracy of the statement that I have just made. The minister will find out that the statement he made a few minutes afterwards, that we had wasted the time of the House in discussing this matter, is not a statement that will be accepted by the workingmen of the country, who asked the hon. gentlemen opposite three or four years ago for fair-play, and have got but scant and cold justice from them up to the present time. We have another statement here from the annual report of the Treasurer of the United States. He says :

For the enforcement of the alien contract labour laws there was expended during the year——

That is during the year ending June 30, 1900.

—the sum of $99,598.51, leaving a balance of the annual appropriation of $401.49.

$100,000 had been appropriated by the Congress of the United States for the enforcement of the Alien Labour law, and the commissioners were so active and diligent that they expended every dollar of that amount, less $400.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain that that $100,000 voted by Congress is not only for the enforcement of the Alien Labour law, but also of the pauper immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman will have to go to the library and get these books, they are as available for him as for myself, and lest he should not understand, I will read again the statement that I have just read :

For the enforcement of the alien contract labour laws there was expended during the year the sum of $99,598.51, leaving a balance of the annual appropriation of $401.49.

I am giving the House the information contained in the annual report of the secretary of the Treasury of the United States. If the hon. gentleman wants further information I would advise him to refer to that gentleman, or to the Alien Labour law commissioner of the United States. I am not an authority on this matter, I prefer to quote the gentleman who occupies the distinguished position of the secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

Sir, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries let some further light into the reasons, or gave some further information of the reasons which caused the government to insert clause 8 in the Bill passed in 1897. He says that this was an international matter, that they had to proceed very carefully, that therefore every safeguard had to be thrown about the Bill so that it would work no prejudice to the amicable international relations existing between the two countries. Now, Sir, I do not doubt but that may have been in the mind of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries at that time, and that was the reason why clause 8 was inserted in this Bill. But may I ask the permission of the House to give the reasons of one of his colleagues as to why this Bill was framed and passed in the shape in which we find it ? Am I within my rights in quoting from a statement made by the colleague of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Secretary of State, as to what his opinion of this measure was, and what he thought the prospects were of the enforcement of this Act after it was passed ? If so, I would like to read a few sentences from a statement which the hon. the Secretary of State made in another place :

I do not think the Act is likely to be enforced, and when it is not enforced it is a pity to place it on the statute-books, because it is not on a line with the views of the people of Canada. I should be sorry to see it on the statute-books because I know it would be an idle Act.

That is the opinion of the Secretary of State. He told another branch of the legislature of this country that it was not the intention to enforce the Act, that it would be an idle Act, and that it should not, for these reasons, be placed upon the statute-books. What does the hon. gentleman say to that explanation ? The hon. Secretary of State goes on further to deal with this very clause 8 that the hon. gentleman has discussed and explained at such great length. He says :

Under this Act persons can come in by thousands, and it is only when a report is sent to the Attorney General, and he makes inquiry that any action will be taken, and of course the party would by that time be absorbed in the community, and that would be an end of it. It is something we do not propose to carry out.

Now, I need not proceed any further to show he marked divergence of opinion that existed between the hon. gentlemen themselves in regard to this measure. Whether the intention of the government was as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has stated it, and I am bound to accept his explanation, or whether the hon. Secretary of State was speaking wide of the mark in the remarks which he made upon this measure, the hon. gentleman in the other Chamber was the better prophet of the two. The Act has been a dead letter, no honest attempt has been made to enforce it from the time it was put on the statute-book up to about six weeks before November 7 last, when the elections were held. Then, a little spurt was made, then a little flash in the pan was seen, and hon. gentlemen opposite endeavoured to persuade the workingmen of Ontario that they were honest in their determination to enforce this Act. But, the workingmen of Ontario have had experience of these hon. gentlemen, and when the opportunity was afforded them in November of expressing their opinion upon the conduct of the government, they had not the slightest hesitation in expressing that opinion. But, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries asks : Has any case been brought before the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice, and has he refused to prosecute upon any occasion when the facts were laid before him ? If the hon. gentleman wants any information upon this subject let me quote to him the letter written by the hon. Minister of Justice in reply to an appeal made to that hon. gentleman by the mayor of the city of Hamilton, the mayor of the city of which my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) sitting behind me, is one of the worthy representatives. This is what the hon. gentleman's colleague said :

Ottawa, May 27, 1899.

J. V. Teetzel, Mayor, Hamilton, Ont.:

The Attorney General is not at liberty to give his assent to the prosecution for the infraction of the Alien Labour law to which you refer, an understanding having been reached last summer by the international commissioners that the Alien Labour law, until the negotiations were concluded, should remain in abeyance in Canada in respect to persons coming from the United States and in the United States in respect to persons going thither from Canada. Until it is shown that this understanding is not observed by the United States officers, no action can be taken here.

DAVID MILLS.

Is that sufficient answer to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to show that there is a case where the hon. Minister of Justice was invited to do justice to the operatives of the city of Hamilton, and that he refused to allow any action to be taken ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was perfectly right.

Mr. CLARKE. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), or no member of the government, has yet been frank enough to take the House into his confidence and tell us when the understanding so reached between the Canadian and American commissioners came to an end. We have a right to know, if such an agreement did exist, when it was abrogated, and what were the causes of its abrogation, and if the abrogation of that agreement is the cause of an appropriation of $9,000 being asked in the estimates for the enforcement of the Alien Labour law during the coming year. We have had no information of that kind vouchsafed to us, but we have had statements made again and again, and oft repeated by the alien labour commissioner at Buffalo and the collector of customs at Port Huron, that so far as they knew there was no arrangement or understanding made for the non-enforcement of the United States Alien Labour law, but that, on the contrary, at all times and under all circumstances, the law has been vigorously enforced. This is the answer made to the allegations which we have heard again and again, but is it a sufficient reason why the Canadian Alien Labour law was not enforced ? I do not think I shall take up any more of the time of the House discussing this matter, because it seems to me that the proposition of my hon. friend (Mr. Clare), coming from a gentleman of his experience, coming from a gentleman who is a large employer of labour, is such a reasonable proposition, is such a conservative proposition, is such a just proposition, that it should not have been treated as the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) proposes to treat it, of being shelved for a week or ten days. The hon. gentleman has given great attention to this matter, he has seen the disabilities under which his own and other workmen labour by the non-enforcement of this Alien Labour law, he has seen that strikes have been engendered, that bad feeling has been fostered because of the facilities which have been given through the non-enforcement of this law to employers of labour on this side of the line when they had a disagreement with their operatives to bring American operatives from the other side without let or hindrance to take their places. It has caused a great deal of bitterness between employers and their employees. If there had been an honest, straightforward enforcement of the law the disputes which take place from time to time between employers and employees would have been settled in a more amicable and satisfactory way, and the friction which has resulted would not have ensued. I hope that the proposition of my hon. friend, so fair and so reasonable, will be accepted by the majority in this House, and that at the earliest possible moment the Alien Labour law will be put into a workable condition and will be enforced fairly and reasonably from one end of this Dominion to the other. The workmen of this country have a right to that measure of justice and protection from the government. Sneers were made by an hon. gentleman opposite at my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) because he had not been successful from year to year in securing the passage of an alien labour law by the House of Commons. Sir, whatever credit is due for the passage of a measure of that kind cannot be wrested from the hon. member for South Leeds. Year in and year out he persisted, whether his friends were in office or whether his opponents were in office, in introducing this measure for the protection of Canadian workmen into the parliament of Canada. He drew public attention to the matter, he aroused and cultivated public opinion as to the necessity of a measure of that kind, and if he was not succesful up to the year 1896, it was not his fault. The hon. gentleman opposite who has sneered at him to-night must share the responsibility of that failure, because neither that hon. gentleman nor any of his supporters, from the first time my hon. friend introduced his measure in 1890, or 1891, up to 1896, uttered one word in favour of a motion of that kind, or in favour of the adoption of the Bill which my hon. friend placed before the parliament of Canada.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) withdrew his Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. The man who insisted upon forcing that measure upon the attention of the people got little or no support from hon. gentlemen opposite. If they had been as anxious before 1896 as they were professedly since then, to do justice to the workingmen, they would have given the hon. member for South Leeds their assistance and co-operation in providing a law that would be workable, instead of one that is practically a dead letter. I hope that this measure will be passed to its second reading to-night, that the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, that any imperfections that may be found will be struck out, and that it will be improved, with the assistance of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Mulock). We look to the hon. Minister of Labour, as a matter of course, to come to the assistance of the workingmen in perfecting this measure. With the assistance of these two ministers, and with the assistance of other hon. gentlemen, we will have a measure that will be of some advantage to the workingmen of the country, and they will appreciate the action of parliament if it completes that work to-night.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland). It is to me somewhat amusing to hear hon. gentlemen opposite prate so loudly and so long in the interests of the labouring men of this country, when for eighteen years they supported a government which absolutely and positively refused to pass an Alien Labour law in Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) says that if the Liberal party, when in opposition, had supported the hon. gentleman for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in his proposal yearly brought up in the House, that possibly the government of that day might have been forced to enact an Alien Labour law. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) desires to take his policy from the Liberal party. He is getting his policy from the Liberal party now; he will get it from the Liberal party for many years to come.

Mr. CLARKE. Oh, no.

Mr. GERMAN. Sir, there have been several statements made to the House to-night, as to whether or not the Attorney General of Canada has ever enforced the Alien Labour law since it was placed upon the statute-book. I am inclined to think that if hon. gentlemen opposite had more fully desired the actual enforcement of that law, rather than desiring to make political capital against the government, it would be found that the Alien Labour law would be enforced every time they sought to enforce it. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has never on one single occasion endeavoured to have the Alien Labour law enforced in this country. I ask him now, if he ever approached the Attorney General of Canada with the suggestion that the Alien Labour law should be enforced.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman desires an answer, I will give it to him. I have gone to the superior of the Minister of Justice; I have gone to the Prime Minister again and again from my place in this House, and I have appealed to him to have that Alien Labour law enforced.

Mr. GERMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) cannot get out of it in that kind of way. The statute distinctly says that it shall be enforced on an application to the Attorney General of Canada, and not to the premier of Canada. I will venture to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has never gone to the Attorney General, notwithstanding the redundancy of feeling which he tries to exhibit in the interest of the workingmen. He has a large number of them in West Toronto, and he endeavours to get their votes.

Mr. CLARKE. I am proud to say I get them.

Mr. GERMAN. Yes, he usually gets them. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that I have been more energetic in the interest of the constituency I have the honour to represent than has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke), because I have seen that the law was enforced, and enforced promptly and effectively. We had in the town of Welland in which I live, contractors bringing Italians from the United States to do work on our public streets. I wired the Attorney General of Canada that the Alien Labour law was being violated, and I at once received a wire in reply authorizing me to see that the law was enforced, and in twelve hours from that time these men were deported from Canada.

Mr. PUTTEE. Does the hon. gentleman wish us to understand that Italians were deported to the United States?

Mr. GERMAN. They certainly were. We have Italians in Canada who are Canadian subjects, and there are Italians in the United States who are American citizens, and these Italians who were American citizens and aliens had no right to come to Canada and do work which Canadians could and would do, and they were deported immediately. The same thing happened along the shore of Lake Erie, where American citizens were building summer residences.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. gentleman tell the House the date of that deportation ?

Mr. GERMAN. It was about May of last year; it was early in the spring of last year. The contractors were building a granolithic sidewalk in the town of Welland.

Mr. WALLACE. About the time you got your nomination.

Mr. GERMAN. No, sir; it was very much earlier than the time I got my nomination, and whether I had got my nomination or not I would try and see that the Alien Labour law was enforced, because I take a greater interest in the workingmen than do the hon. gentlemen opposite. These men prate of their Canadian loyalty in this House, but outside of this House they are meek and mild as lambs. The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) spoke about the work being done on the international bridge. I happen to know something about that. The International Bridge Company brought expert workmen from the United States; men that they could not get here, and there never was a complaint from any person in Canada. I challenge the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) to say that any Canadian expert workman who worked on that bridge on the American side of the Niagara river was ever deported. I defy him to mention the name of one.

Mr. LANCASTER. I say they were. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. German) that I know they were.

Mr. GERMAN. Give us the names, if you please.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have not the names here.

Mr. GERMAN. The hon. gentleman cannot mention the name of an expert workman from Canada working on the international bridge who was deported. Why, they have only begun to work on the American side of that bridge within the last month. This all shows that hon. gentlemen opposite in order to make a point if possible against the government, will endeavour to garble the facts. I happen to know that the international bridge has not been built to the international channel until the last month. It is not all completed yet. They have just begun at the drawbridge there lately. There has never been an expert Canadian who worked on the international bridge deported even by Mr. DeBarry, who has been the most effective officer in the United States service so far as deporting aliens is concerned. The Canadian Alien Labour law is, with slight exceptions, a verbatim copy of the United States Alien Labour law. The greatest difficulty that has arisen hitherto in regard to the enforcement of the Canadian Alien Labour law has been by reason of the very active operations of Mr. DeBarry, of Buffalo. We do not hear any complaint about it between Detroit and Windsor. We do not hear any complaint about it between the town of Niagara Falls on the Canadian side, and the city of Niagara Falls on the American side. I have heard something to-night about Prescott. I know nothing about the St. Lawrence district, but I venture to say that east of British Columbia, Mr. DeBarry the United States official has created more difficulty in regard to the operation of the Alien Labour law than any other one man either in the United States or Canada, by reason of his very great industry. He appears to be supported by the labour unions in the city of Buffalo, and he has continually and deliberately violated the Alien Labour law of the United States. He has exceeded the duty imposed upon him by the law of the United States. I know that he has taken Canadians who have gone to the United States and sent them back, just as illegally as he would take me or any other hon. member of this House by the shoulder and send us back. He has done it in violation of the Act, by reason of the pressure brought to bear upon him by the labour unions of the city of Buffalo. However, it has been done, in the county I have the honour to represent, it has created a good deal of friction. It was used as a political influence against me in the last election. It was said that I was not doing my duty to the labouring men, although I showed the people that I had been doing my duty. My opponent endeavoured to convince the public that the government had not been doing its duty—that it had put a law on the statute-book, and had not been endeavouring to enforce it. So far as I am concerned, I desire to see the Alien Labour law of this country enforced, and enforced properly in the interest of the public.

There are cases when it is in the interest of the Canadian people themselves that aliens should be employed in this country. There are occasions when you cannot get in this country the labouring men to do the work which you want done. There are occasions arising continually when you need employees whom you cannot get here, and it is necessary to get them in another country. Consequently, we have to be exceedingly careful in placing a law on the statute-book which will affect the rights of the public, as an Alien Labour law will affect those rights if improperly drawn and improperly carried out.

I am inclined to think the law as it at present stands will bear amendment. I had intended to propose an amendment myself, and I am not certain that before this session is over I shall not do so, except that I hear from the government to-night that they desire that these matters shall stand over for a time, as they contemplate proposing a policy which they think may be satisfactory to the House. I am willing to bide my time and see what the proposition of the government is. If they bring down a Bill which is satisfactory, I shall be prepared to support it. If they bring down a Bill which is not satisfactory, I will rise in my place and to the best of my ability endeavour to make it satisfactory, at any rate, to me and the people whom I have the honour to represent. There is one respect in which, I think, the Alien Labour law can very properly be amended. The law at present is that you cannot contract outside the country ; that is, you cannot bring into this country aliens under contract made outside of the country. Men attempt to violate that law by telling employees to come to Canada and they will employ them here. If that objection can be got over, the law as it stands is as perfect as any Alien Labour law you can have. We have officers throughout the country with intelligence to enforce the law. I think possibly it might be made a little more elastic than it is ; it probably will be ; but I can say that the Alien Labour law as it stands to-day on the statute-book has been effective. It has been enforced wherever any gentleman has endeavoured to enforce it, and it has been a great benefit to the people of the country wherever they desired to take the benefit of it. It can be improved, but without improvement it is exceedingly better than anything hon. gentlemen opposite ever gave to the people of this country.

Mr. A. S. KENDALL (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I will not yield to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) in his zeal for the workingmen. I happened to have been, along with my hon. colleague, elected for the county of Cape Breton by a majority of the votes of the workingmen of that county ; and we were elected, Sir, because during the time we served in the local legislature of Nova Scotia, we put on the statute-book of that province a considerable amount of legislation for the benefit of the miners. We can, I think, claim it as some tribute to that legislation that when a few months ago 140,000 American miners went out on strike, they struck for the very same concessions from the capitalists which we in Nova Scotia had secured by statute, chiefly at the request of the workingmen themselves. So that I have some authority to speak for the workingmen in the constituency which I have the honour to represent.

Now, I cannot support this Bill, for two reasons. In the first place, it will prohibit the importation of skilled labour from another country into this country, no matter how much we may require it. If the great iron works in Cape Breton and the contemplated iron works at Sault Ste. Marie are not to be allowed to import alien labour, it will be impossible for us to get those great industries started in this country. Further, if the importation of such labour is prohibited, it will cut off the labour from the coal miners of this country and even the ordinary labourers, and diminish the market of the agriculturists. We have everything to lose by making an inflexible law on this question.

For one, I do not care to submit the interpretation of this law to the judgment of any two magistrates. I think we must recognize that only some man or body of men with a due sense of their responsibility can be properly entrusted with the enforcement of this Act. I know magistrates, numbers of them, who no doubt would put this Act into operation with prudence ; but we all know that there are scores of magistrates in almost every constituency who could not be trusted to adjudicate upon it with discretion and prudence.

I believe I am speaking in the interest of a great many thousands of workingmen in Cape Breton and the eastern part of Nova Scotia when I say that I oppose this Bill for the reasons I have given. At the same time, it may be possible before very long to introduce some machinery for the carrying out of this law without the difficulty of approaching the Minister of Labour or the Attorney General of Canada. But, for the reasons given, I cannot see my way clear to support the Bill.

Motion of the Prime Minister agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not promise it a year ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Prime Minister did. He promised to have it immediately prepared. I ask now whether the Minister of Public Works will be able to lay it on the Table before his estimates are taken up.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All I can say is that my deputy told me to-day that this return would be ready to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. So we shall have it before the hon. gentleman's estimates are taken up ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

SUPPLY—THE CORONATION OATH.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Hon. JOHN COSTIGAN (Victoria, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a few days ago, I now rise to perform a duty which I feel incumbent upon me, and a duty which I have postponed the discharge of until the present occasion for the reasons which I stated to the House when I had the honour to give notice of the resolution. In rising to move this resolution, which I hold in my hand, and which I intend to place in your hands, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am assuming some responsibility, but I feel at the same time that I am discharging a duty and a conscientious one, and that I can appeal to the good sense and the intelligence of the Canadian parliament to receive and consider this question in the spirit in which it is introduced. I am afraid that outside of parliament a misapprehension exists in the minds of a portion of the people with regard to the meaning of this movement and the complaint covered by the resolution which I hold in my hand. If such a misapprehension exists, I hope that every member of this parliament will feel it a duty, no matter what his views on this question may be, to assist in removing that misapprehension and in having the question fairly understood.

The motion which I am speaking to will explain itself. We are entering upon a new century ; we are beginning to discharge the duties of a new parliament. We have welcomed home from a foreign and distant land our brave soldiers who went to defend the honour and the glory of the British Empire. There is no divergence of opinion in the hearty welcome we give to those soldiers. They fought upon the same battlefield in the same cause. There was no question as to what altar they worshipped before, or what their differences of creed might be. They were brothers in arms, discharging the same duty, maintaining the dignity of the British Crown, fighting the battles of the empire, and gaining fresh laurels for that empire, the greatest that exists in the civilized world. With that feeling evinced on so many occasions by the most intelligent and the best people in this country and in the empire, is it too much to expect that we should wish to give further force and meaning to the sentiment that we are all British subjects, and that there is no necessity for any cause to divide us, but that we may join together and shoulder to shoulder perform all the duties of citizenship notwithstanding any differences of race or creed that may exist among us.

In moving the resolution which I intend to move, for an address to His Most Gracious Majesty, I do so because I feel impelled, on behalf of those I represent, to ask this parliament to sympathize with the demand we make that we be relieved from certain expressions connected with the coronation ceremony—not with the coronation oath, as has been said outside of this House, and also, I understand, inside it. We do not complain of the coronation oath. I do not and would not propose to touch it to the extent of the crossing of a 't' or the dotting of an 'i'. The coronation oath remains intact. It provides for the succession of Protestant sovereigns in the British Empire. Every sovereign who ascends the Throne is bound to take and subscribe to that oath, by which he is sworn to maintain the Protestant religion as established by law. What I am dealing with is not the coronation oath at all ; it is a declaration beyond and beside the coronation oath. It is one as useless, so far as any practical purpose is concerned, as a fifth wheel to a coach. It is useless for all good purposes. If any hon. gentleman in this Chamber will show me that in asking for the removal of this declaration, which I consider perfectly useless, except for the purpose of wounding the susceptibilities of a portion of His Majesty's subjects—if any hon. gentleman will satisfy me that in the carrying out of this request any injury is done, or that we are impairing the strength of the Crown, or interfering with the permanence of the succession of the Crown as now arranged, I shall be willing to withdraw my resolution. But surely, when I appeal to the good sense of the House, and ask them to take the same view of the matter as prominent Protestant writers and public men, they will come to the conclusion that this declaration is entirely unnecessary, and might be done away with.

This is the object I have in view, and it it on these grounds that I ask the House to accept this resolution. I may give a few reasons why I think the House ought to accept it. I do not propose to make a lengthy speech or a lengthy appeal to the intelligence of the House on this question. I think that all it requires it to put the simple facts before the House, and leave the House calmly to use its own judgment upon them. But I must make one or two quotations and refer to one or two incidents to show how strongly the Protestant mind feels on this subject. When the question was discussed in 1867, I think in the British House of Commons, Earl Kimberley, who had formerly been Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and as such had been obliged by the law to make this declaration, just as His Majesty is obliged by the law to make it—because the King is obliged to obey the law as well as the subject—Earl Kimberley said—I give his own words :

> He had himself been called to make this declaration before the Irish Privy Council in the presence of a large number of persons of the Roman Catholic faith, and he must say that he had never in his life made a declaration with more pain than when he was required, before men holding high office, and for whom he had the greatest respect, to declare the tenets of their religion to be superstitious and idolatrous.

Now, I take the issue of a newspaper of a later day, the Guardian, which I am credibly informed is one of the most respectable Protestant organs published in England. It gives over a column to the question of the coronation oath, the declaration, and the attendant ceremonies ; but I will read the closing paragraph as bearing most directly on this question :

> However unreasonable and objectionable in its terms the declaration may be, it is satisfactory to know that it cannot, under any circumstances, with the long-established custom of deferring the coronation, be uttered in Westminster Abbey. But it will be highly unfortunate if the necessary legal steps cannot at once be taken to relieve Edward VII. from the necessity of uttering, even in Westminster Palace, words which cannot but be singularly offensive to millions of his subjects, not only in the United Kingdom, but throughout his great dominions across the sea. Christian charity has made great strides in two and a half centuries, and if this declaration of the time of Charles II. has long ago become too offensive to be used by any of His Majesty's subjects, why is the studied insult of calling all his Roman Catholic subjects idolaters to be maintained as a part of the King's accession duties ?
> A quiet and dignified declaration of personal loyalty to the Church of England is all that is necessary. If unhappily the law officers of the Crown see no way out of the difficulty in the short interval before the King meets his first parliament, the deliberate use of such a string of offensive terms cannot fail to produce mischievous heartburnings and dangerous misunderstandings. International notice is nowadays far more keenly awake to royal declarations than it was in the early times of the Hanoverian dynasty. We shall be heartily sorry if Edward VII. is obliged to use words which will brand the King of Portugal, the King of the Belgians and many other royal mourners by the good Queen's grave as superstitious idolaters.

This is the opinion of one of the most prominent Protestant journals published in England. I might quote a good many other authorities, but do not think it necessary. I do not think it would be paying a compliment to the intelligence of the members of this House, with the opportunities they enjoy of making themselves acquainted with the subject, with the records in the library at their disposal, with all the information available to them, to undertake to argue a case to which, it seems to me, there cannot be two sides.

Therefore, I beg to move :

That a humble address be presented to His Most Gracious Majesty the King, as follows :—

Most Gracious Majesty :

Your Majesty's most faithful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave most humbly to represent :

That as a token of the civil and religious liberties and of the equality of rights guaranteed to all British subjects in the Canadian confederation, as well as under the British constitution, the British sovereign should not be called to make any declaration offensive to the religious belief of any subject of the British Crown.

That by virtue of the Act of Settlement of 1689, the British sovereign, on the first day of the meeting of the first parliament, or at the coronation, is called upon to make the following declaration :—

'I, A. B., by the grace of God, King (or Queen) of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever ; and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare, that I do make this declaration, and each and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope or any other authority or person whatsoever, and without any hope of such dispensation from any person or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration or any part thereof, although the Pope or any other person or persons or power whatsoever, should dispense with or annul the same or declare that it was null and void from the beginning.'

That such declaration is offensive to the convictions of all Roman Catholics.

That the staunch loyalty of Your Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects in Canada and throughout British possessions should exempt them from any offensive reference to the religion by their sovereign.

That, in the opinion of this House, the abovementioned Act of Settlement should be amended by abolishing the said declaration.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to quote from the Act of Settlement which requires such a declaration, so as to make it clear that it is required by law ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I have quoted it in the resolution.

Mr. ARTHUR S. KENDALL (Cape Breton). On any occasion I would consider it an honour to have the opportunity of seconding this resolution, but I appreciate the distinction all the more since I have the honour of representing a constituency which formerly formed part of that which in 1820 secured, for the first time in the nineteenth century to a Roman Catholic a seat in a British legislature. It may be of some interest to the House that I should state the circumstances. In 1820, Mr. Richard John Uniacke, a Protestant, and Mr. Kavanagh, a Roman Catholic, were returned by the constituency of the county of Cape Breton to the legislature of Nova Scotia. Mr. Kavanagh was willing to take the oath of allegiance to the King, but he declined to violate his religious belief by subscribing to a declaration against the doctrine of transubstantiation, and he was consequently not permitted to take his seat. His colleague, Mr. Uniacke, took up the battle in his behalf, and by means of the great influence which he wielded, had a petition adopted by the legislature addressed to the King, with the result that on April 3, 1823, when the next session of the legislature took place, Mr. Kavanagh was allowed to take his seat without subscribing to the objectionable declaration.

But the legislature of Nova Scotia did not stop there. A few years later, this same Mr. Uniacke, with the assistance of Mr. Haliburton, caused the following resolution to be adopted by the House :

That a committee be appointed to prepare a humble address to His Majesty, requesting that His Majesty would be graciously pleased to dispense with the declaration and test oath against Popery which His Majesty's subjects in this colony are called upon to take.

And let me say, Sir, that in a House of forty representatives—only one of whom was a Roman Catholic, the remaining thirty-nine being Protestants—this resolution passed unanimously. And in accordance with this resolution, a petition was forwarded a few days later. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall read a few paragraphs from the petition :

We have already, under the sanction of Your Majesty's government, removed every restrictive law upon Your Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects of this province, which has been followed by their gratitude; unwilling to pause, we would now solicit the gracious exercise of Your Majesty's prerogative for their additional benefit, and in compliance with the unanimous voice of your faithful Commons. We solicit that you would be graciously pleased to dispense with the 'declarations against Popery and transubstantiation,' as inapplicable to the present situation of this country, and tending to create invidious distinctions among Your Majesty's loyal subjects.

Devoted to our duties as the representatives of Your Majesty's faithful Commons, we feel confident Your Majesty will accept this address. And when Your Majesty considers that we appeal to heaven for the due fulfilment of our duties, and that we consecrate, by the sanctions of religion, our natural attachment to Your Majesty's person and government, Your Majesty will accept these our solemn pledges as adequate securities.

Confident of Your Majesty's favourable consideration of this address, your faithful Commons hope, eventually, that though at our several altars we may practice our several faiths, yet at that public altar where the spirit of our country presides, the only creed will be that of Christianity.

You will observe, Sir, that this petition sent some seventy-four years ago to the home government, was, in substance, the resolution now before the House. For my own part, I regret to say that my thoughts do not flow with sufficient ease, and I have not the resource in language to enable me adequately to express my conviction and sentiment on this matter—conviction and sentiments which, I believe, are shared by the overwhelming majority of the enlightened Protestants of this country. On the occasion to which I refer, Uniacke made the following exclamation :

When I look around, I think I scarce can discern the countenance of a bigot. Not one is there within these walls whose voice will not gladly concur in the prayer of this petition.

And, Sir, may we not hope that, in this boasted Canada of ours, three-quarters of a century after that resolution was passed in the legislature of Nova Scotia, the glorious nineteen century which has for its greatest boast that it has dissipated the ignorance of the dark places of the world with the lamp of knowledge and the teachings of the Prophet of Nazareth, a similar unanimity may be found to prevail ? May we not hope that in this Canadian parliament not one constituency in Canada has sent here a man who will not concur with the prayer of this petition. Sir, we do not ask for our Catholic citizens a favour, we only demand that a right which has been too long denied them shall be restored. For myself, I may say, I am a Protestant of the Protestants, and I know I can say to my Roman Catholic citizens, without fear of offence, that not under any conditions would I subscribe to many of the tenets of their faith. Yet, I would be unworthy of the position I occupy in this House, if I could not cheerfully stand up and demand for my fellow-citizens of another faith the right which, under similar circumstances, I should demand for myself. Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, the House may, not unnaturally perhaps, expect from me, since it has fallen to my lot to be the first adviser of the Crown in this country, and to be entrusted with leadership of the House in its deliberations, that I should at once express the view which, in my opinion, ought to prevail upon the resolution moved by my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan). Let me say at once—and to this I am sure—there will be no dissenting voice—this is not a question as to which there can be any party feeling; it is altogether apart from and beyond the scope of party controversies. Let me say also that it is not the intention of the government to make it a ministerial question. This is one of those matters which had better be left altogether to the judgment of every individual member to be voted upon, to be acted upon, either one way or the other according to his conception of what is best for the country and for the empire of which we form a part. Personally, I may say, I favour the resolution of my hon. friend, though, if I had had the drafting of it, perhaps, I should have expressed the prayer of it in somewhat different language. But, even with this, such as it is, I favour the motion ; and I have no doubt—that if this motion were accepted unanimously by this House, it would have a most beneficial effect for the peace and harmony of all creeds and all races not in this country only but though the whole British Empire. But the question will be asked : Why should this resolution be introduced in this House ? It is not within our jurisdiction; it is not within our competence; we have no power to affect it one way or the other; at all events we have no power to affect it directly; and, whatever may be our judgment or even our action upon it, it cannot have any effect as to its abiding force, for this is altogether within the purview of the parliament of Great Britain. Such an objection, if it had been made some twenty years ago would have had, no doubt, great force, and, perhaps, it would have been found to be valid. But, I submit that, in this year 1901, when Canada has attained the development she now has, such an objection has very little force, if it has any force at all. We have, on more than one occasion, affirmed our authority, affirmed our right and privilege to act beyond our legislative sphere, and to offer to the Imperial authorities our views, and to make our representations upon questions which were not within our immediate domain, but which affected British subjects in whole or in part. Thus, on one, two, and if I mistake not, three different occasions, this House passed resolutions in favour of home rule being granted to Ireland. Thus, at a later day, not yet twenty months ago, we passed a resolution of sympathy in favour of the Outlanders in the Transvaal. I am bound to say that, as a matter of history, at the outset, our representations were not accepted with any very great favour in England. I have a distinct recollection, which is shared, I am sure, by many of the members of this House that, we were told, in polite though frank language that we should confine our deliberations within our own sphere. That was years ago. Times have changed since then. Canada has progressed and developed since that time; and of late years, when we have chosen to offer to the Imperial authorities our views affecting, not Canadians, but British subjects in whole or in part, I am pleased to say that our representations have been met with favour and with courtesy. In order to make this point clear, let me recall what took place when we last offered our views to the Imperial authorities in 1899. The occasion was the unfortunate condition of things which then prevailed in the Transvaal, and on the 31st of July, in that year both Houses of this parliament passed the following resolution :

Resolved, that this House, representing a people which has largely succeeded by the adoption of the principle of conceding equal political rights to every portion of the population, in harmonizing estrangements and introducing general contempt with the existing system of government, desires to express its sympathy with the efforts of Her Majesty's Imperial authorities to obtain for the subjects of Her Majesty who have taken up their abode in the Transvaal such a measure of justice and political recognition as may be found necessary to secure them in the full possession of equal rights and liberties.

This resolution did not meet with the disfavour which similar resolutions had received in former years ; it was accepted, not only as an act within our scope, within the sphere of our legitimate aspirations, but it was accepted with great favour, and the following reply was sent :

London, Aug. 22, 1899.

To the Governor General of Canada,
Ottawa.

I have received from the Speaker of the Senate and the House of Commons, Canada, copies of resolutions unanimously adopted by those Houses on August 1 and July 31, respectively, with regard to the present situation in South Africa.

Her Majesty's government will be glad if you will convey, on their behalf, acknowledgments of those resolutions, together with an expression of their appreciation of the support thus afforded to them in their efforts to secure equal rights and liberties for all the white inhabitants of the Transvaal.

This came directly from Her Majesty and was transmitted through the instrumentality of the Colonial Secretary. Now, Sir, I would like, if possible, to approach this subject in a spirit wholly uncontroversial, and I put it in the sense of justice and of fairness on both sides of this House, that if our resolutions were thus appreciated in England, if we were not only permitted, but as it were, encouraged, to give an expression of our opinion and our sympathy in the efforts which were then being made by the Imperial authorities to secure justice and equal rights to a section of Her Majesty's subjects in a very distant land, why should not our efforts this day be accepted when they tend to relieve the conscience of at least twelve millions of His Majesty's most loyal subjects ? Only a few days ago Lord Salisbury had to speak upon the subject, and is reported by the Associated Press to have expressed himself in this way :

Lord Salisbury, in the House of Commons today, referring to the anti-Catholic declaration contained in the oath which King Edward took at the opening of parliament, said that though he deplored the language in which the declaration was couched, it must be remembered that the enactment represented the views and feelings of the period when it was adopted. The passions of the people now were not so strong, but there were undoubtedly parts of the country where the controversy which the declaration represented still flourished, and where the emotions which it produced had not died out.

I have no doubt whatever that these words of Lord Salisbury are true. I have have no doubt whatever that there are still portions of our fellow-countrymen in the old country and in parts of this country where these emotions of two centuries ago still exist. The best reforms are always slow to come. Nobody expects that prejudices will disappear in one day, or even in one generation ; but if such a resolution as is now before you were adopted by this House, even if it had no other effect than to do away with such prejudices in the mind only of one of His Majesty's subjects, still I think this resolution would not have been adopted in vain.

With regard to the legislation which is mentioned in the motion in our hands, Mr. Speaker, and which is now almost two centuries old, I have to say no more than has been said by Lord Salisbury, that to say the least, it is deplorable. Such legislation would not be adopted now. It is repugnant to the spirit of this age, it is a remnant of those intolerant ages which for many centuries desolated Europe. It is a sad commentary upon our Christianity that for three centuries two of the leading denominations of Christians, Roman Catholics and Protestants, fought one another with a fury unparalleled. It is a sad commentary upon our Christianity that for three centuries Roman Catholics and Protestants assailed each other in the most enlightened countries of Europe, wherever Roman Catholics had a superiority over Protestants, or Protestants had a superiority over Roman Catholics. In 1685 the King of France, Louis XIV., revoked the edict of Nantes, which had been granted by his grandfather to the Protestants of France, and which gave them religious toleration and civil rights. By that act he expelled from his kingdom no less than half a million of the best artisans and mechanics of France, who carried over to England, to Hollond and to Germany, the arts and industries of their native country. Four years after that, in 1689, the legislation which we now have before us was adopted by the parliament of Great Britain. Let me recall the painful circumstances under which it was adopted. The year before had taken place the revolution of 1688, which was caused undoubtedly by the duplicity of King James II., whose tyrannous conduct alienated from himself the sympathies of his English subjects, and inspired them with deep distrust for himself and for the church to which he belonged. In 1689 the oath in question was passed.

But before I proceed any further, let me illustrate and make some comment upon the point which was made by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Costigan) in his opening speech. The object of this motion does not at all affect the Protestant succession, or the supremacy of the established Church in England, or of the Protestant religion. There are two oaths to be taken by the King. In 1688, after the accession of William and Mary, the following form of oath was prescribed by parliament, in a statute passed the very year of the revolution, in 1688. The sovereigns, William and Mary, took the following oath :

> The Bishop or Archbishop shall say :
> Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this Kingdom of England, and the dominions thereto belonging, according to the statutes in parliament agreed on and the laws and customs of the same.

I need not go any further ; this is the test oath which has been taken, and the answer of the King and Queen to this is : ' All this I promise to do.' Now, the motion of my hon. friend does not in any way propose to do away with that oath. If the motion of my hon. friend were to carry in this House, and if it were to be accepted by the parliament of Great Britain, the sovereign would still be forced to take the oath which I have now read. But, in the following year, 1689, another statute was passed which extended to the King a statute which had been for some time on the statute-book, and which was to apply to the subjects of the King. In the reign of Charles II., in 1677, a statute had been passed which compelled all the members of the House of Lords, all the members of the House of Commons, and all the servants of the Crown, that is to say, all those who held commissions under the Crown, to take the following oath. I will recite it in order to make it clear, though it is familiar to all the members of this House, because it is the very oath that is embodied in the motion of my hon. friend from Victoria :

> I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever : And that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary, or any other Saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous. And I do solemnly in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare, that I do make this declaration and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope or any other authority or person whatsoever, or without any hope of any such dispensation from any person or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration, or any part thereof, although the Pope, or any other person or persons, or power whatsoever, should dispense with or annul the same, or declare that it was null or void from the beginning.

This oath is contained in the statute entitled ' An Act for the more effectual preserving the King's person and government by disabling Papists from sitting in either House of Parliament.' In 1689, this statute was extended to the King in these words :

> And that every King and Queen of this Realm, who at any time hereafter shall come to and succeed in the Imperial Crown of this Kingdom, shall on the first day of the meeting of the first parliament, next after his or her coming to the Crown, sitting in his or her throne in the House of Peers, in the presence of the Lords and Commons therein assembled, or at his or her coronation, before such person or persons who shall administer the coronation oath to him or her——

Mark the distinction.

> —at the time of his or her taking the said oath (which shall first happen), make, subscribe, and audibly repeat the declaration mentioned in the Statute made in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of King Charles the Second, intituled 'An Act for the more effectual preserving the King's Person and Government, by disabling Papists from sitting in either House of Parliament.'

You see there that this declaration, which was enjoined upon the subjects of the King who happened to sit in the House of Lords, who happened to sit in the House of Commons, and who happened to be servants of the Crown, was extended to the King, and had to be taken as well by his subjects. Now, it is a matter of history that this oath, in so far as it applies to subjects of the King, has been long ago abolished. No peer of the realm, no member of the House of Commons, no servant of the Crown, is bound to take the oath, but it is still enjoined upon the King, and it has been found quite consistent with the security of England to dispense the subjects of the King from taking that oath. It is still enjoined upon the King, and the object of my hon. friend from Victoria is to represent to the British Imperial authorities that this oath should be dispensed with by the King as well as it has been dispensed with by his subjects. Let this be acted upon, and there is nothing which guarantees the Protestant supremacy in England which will not still be in existence. I may be permitted to say, as a Roman Catholic subject, that this legislation in England is not altogether according to my views, but I know too well the temper of my fellow-countrymen, I know too well the necessity in which they are in England, to even offer the slightest objection, and for my part, I am quite content to be a subject of the Protestant King of England. All the disabilities which at one time affected Roman Catholics have been removed from the laws of England; they have been removed, and let me call the attention of the House of Commons to the severe struggle to achieve that result, and, against the objection, I am free to say, of many and many a man who thought that if Roman Catholics were admitted to civil and political rights, perhaps the liberties of England would be endangered. It is a well-known fact, for instance, that William Pitt long entertained the hope and wish to give Roman Catholics emancipation, but it is also a matter of history that George III. would not agree to it, and that Pitt died before he carried out this wish of his heart. In 1856, the ministry of Lord Granville, in which Charles Fox was, took the matter up and attempted to bring in legislation for the emancipation of the Catholics, but the King, who, as we know, and as history tells us, was a good man, a pious man and a moral man, thought that the dignity of his Crown, and the liberties of his subjects would be endangered thereby, and he promptly dismissed his ministers. The matter was taken up again later on, and in 1829, at last, an Act was consummated, Catholics were emancipated, they were given civil rights, they were given political rights, and they were placed on the same footing as their fellow-subjects, but, we know that George IV., who was then sovereign, hesitated a long time before he signed the Act. We know that he was not like his father, either a good man, or a pious man, or a moral man; still, he held the same views upon the subject, and it was only upon the strong remonstrances of the Duke of Wellington and Sir Robert Peel that he finally agreed. Now, I would ask: Is there, amongst our fellow-countrymen of the Protestant religion, let him be ever so strong in his convictions, a man who would not say to-day that it was a happy day for England when the Roman Catholics were granted emancipation? Is there a man who would go back to the condition of things that prevailed up to that time? Look at the services, which, in this country, and in this age, since 1829, have been rendered to the Crown and people of England by Roman Catholics, and you have the answer. Had not the Act of Catholic Emancipation been passed in 1829, England would not have had the services of the late Chief Justice of England, who was a Roman Catholic. And if there is one man to-day who has done more than, perhaps, any other during the last twenty years for the prestige of England in the Orient, that man is Lord Cromer, who, by his services in Egypt, has rendered imperishable services to his country, and Lord Cromer is a Roman Catholic.

Let us look at the cause of all this exceptional legislation against Catholics, apart from the prejudices which existed at the time; prejudices which were just as common then to Roman Catholics as to Protestants, and to Protestants as to Catholics. In the European civilization of that day these prejudices were common to both religions. Wherever Catholics had the power they persecuted Protestants; wherever Protestants had the power they persecuted Catholics, but if you go to the bottom of this legislation in England, there is one thing which the English people had in their mind in passing all these laws, and that was that they would not have the Pope to rule in England. We need not mince matters; it is just as well to go to the bottom of things. That was the thought in the minds of English Protestants. Time has dispelled many of the misconceptions as to the power of the Pope, and let me say here as a Roman Catholic of the twentieth century that the Pope has no authority or jurisdiction whatever in secular matters. His power and jurisdiction and authority are exclusively in spiritual matters, and we Catholics accept him as the power which has the final authority to pronounce upon all controversy in matters of faith and morals. Beyond that the Pope has no more authority than any member of this House. He has no jurisdiction over secular matters in any shape or form, and Catholics do not claim that he has. Then, Sir, if these views are well understood and do prevail, it seems to me that there can be no reason whatever to maintain this legislation upon the statute-books of England.

I may be asked : Why should this declaration be removed from the law. It is simply because it is offensive. It is simply because it is painful to Roman Catholic subjects who honour their King, and are loyal to him; who are ready to fight and need be to die for his Crown ; it is painful to them that their King should take such an oath against dogmas which are dear and sacred to them. That is the reason ; the only reason. Sir, I do not desire to approach the subject in any controversial spirit. Whether this motion pass or does not pass ; whether if it is passed it is heeded or not heeded in England ; whether this oath is maintained or not maintained in the law ; the loyalty of Roman Catholics will not be affected thereby. They will continue to be as they are to-day, willing and cheerful subjects of His Majesty King Edward VII. and of his successors. But, Sir, it can be well admitted that the pride and devotion which we all take in this great empire which was the first refuge of liberty of conscience when liberty of conscience was still banished from the rest of the world ; would be enhanced and would be more enthusiastic if that legislation, the last remnant of persecuting ages, the last vestige of these ages of which I have spoken ; were to be blotted out for ever from the statute-books of free England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, in view of the discussion which has taken place in the press of the United Kingdom, and in view of what has been said by men eminent in public life in the mother country, it seems to me highly probable that without any action on the part of this House the offensive portion of this declaration would probably be eliminated therefrom at a very early date. Therefore, I question very much the wisdom of the hon. gentlemen who have introduced this motion here, because the discussion of matters of this kind among men who have strong opinions either one way or the other is sometimes productive of more harm than good. As has been well said by the right hon. gentleman, this is a matter into which party consideration should not enter. This is a matter which should be above all party considerations and I, for one, as long as I have any voice in this House or in this country shall protest against any question of race or creed being introduced into the party politics of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what I am saying ; in what I am about to say I speak entirely for myself, and I recognize that every hon. member of this House, whether he be on the one side or the other, must vote on this matter, according to his judgment and to his conscience.

The declaration is one which at first was not applied to the Sovereign of England at all. It was applied in the first place to peers and members of parliament, and the object of it was to prevent persons professing the Roman Catholic religion from sitting or voting in either House of Parliament in England. In the first place by the statute which is known as the Bill of Rights which was passed in 1689, it was set forth that this declaration should be taken and subscribed to by the King or Queen of the realm ; and by a further statute which is known as the Act of Settlement which was passed in the year 1700, it was provided :

> That every King and Queen of this realm, who shall come to and succeed in the Imperial Crown of this kingdom by virtue of this Act shall have the coronation oath administered to him, her or them at their respective coronations according to the Act of parliament made in the first year of the reign of His Majesty and the said late Queen Mary, entitled an Act for Establishing the Coronation Oath ; and shall make, subscribe and repeat the declaration in the Act first above recited, mentioned or referred to in the manner and form thereby prescribed.

That brought into operation the words of this declaration as contained in the Act of 1662, passed the thirteenth year of Charles II.

As has been well said by the right hon. the Prime Minister, this is one of a series of statutes which two centuries ago imposed many disabilities upon Roman Catholics in Great Britain. These statutes have one after one been repealed, except in respect to one or two matters. In 1774, by an Act of the Irish parliament, Catholics were allowed to take a special oath of loyalty to the King. In 1778 an Act was passed for the relief of Catholic bishops and priests with respect to schools and with respect to the holding of property. In 1791 an Act was passed with respect to the necessity of taking the oath of supremacy and making a declaration against transubstantiation. In 1793 an Act was passed for the relief of Scotch Catholics with regard to the holding of property. In 1817 an Act was passed for the relief of officers of the army and navy, making it unnecessary for them to take oaths that were offensive to their religious belief ; and in 1829 was passed the Catholic Relief Act, which is well known to all the members of this House. The result is that this declaration remains as a declaration to be taken by the sovereign, that the sovereign of this country must under the law be a Protestant, and that two officers at least—the Lord Chancellor, who is supposed to be the keeper of the King's conscience, and I think the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—are still by virtue of the constitution required to be Protestants.

Now, the question I first ask myself with regard to this declaration is, in case it should be amended or abolished, whether the constitution establishing the Protestant succession to the Crown is in any way in danger. Looking, in the first place, at the Bill of Rights, and in the next place at the Act of Settlement, which recites the Bill of Rights, it seems to me that all those securities which are dear to the convictions of a great many people of this country are sufficiently safeguarded without this declaration. The Protestant succession to the Crown is affirmed and declared throughout both these Acts. By section 2 of the Act of Settlement, which recites the Bill of Rights, containing somewhat similar provisions, it is provided that the succession to the Crown must devolve upon persons of the Protestant faith. Section 9 of the Bill of Rights deals with the possibility that a person otherwise entitled to succeed to the Crown might be in communion with or become reconciled to the Church of Rome, and in such case it provides that :

> The Crown and government shall from time to time descend to and be enjoyed by such person or persons, being Protestants, as should have inherited and enjoyed the same in case the said person or persons so reconciled, holding communion, or professing, or marrying as aforesaid, were naturally dead.

That is to say, if the Crown should descend to any person or persons to whom it should belong, and that person should enter into communion with the Roman Catholic church, or marry a Roman Catholic, the Crown should descend to the next in descent, who should be a Protestant. The same is affirmed in the Act of Settlement, which also provides :

> That whosoever shall hereafter come to the possession of this Crown shall join in communion with the Church of England as by law established.

It is therefore clear that without this declaration the succession to the Crown is by the two statutes I have quoted absolutely secured. Then it seems to me that it is a right thing and a proper thing, so far as this declaration contains matter which is offensive to the religious belief of any British subject, that it should be abolished or amended ; and I for one am prepared to state that in this House or before my constituents, or upon any public platform in this country.

The coronation oath which has been referred to by the right hon. leader of the government is another safeguard, and I also desire briefly to refer to that. The coronation oath, as adopted upon the accession of George II., and four successive sovereigns, and also, I believe, as used upon the accession of his present Gracious Majesty, is as follows :

> Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this Kingdom of Great Britain, and the dominions thereunto belonging, according to the statutes in parliament agreed on, and the respective laws and customs of the same ?
>
> I solemnly promise so to do.
>
> Will you to your power cause law, and justice, and mercy, to be executed in all your judgments ?
>
> I will.
> Will you to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant Reformed religion established by law ?

And so forth, and the King answers : ' All this I promise to do.'

Now, it is desirable that those of us in this country who are Protestants should look at this declaration from the standpoint which would be presented to us if the Roman Catholic faith were the established faith of this country, and if the 12,000,000 people who are now in the minority were Protestants. Would we not feel a sense of injustice if a King whom we loyally served, whom we were ready on all occasions loyally to serve, should be obliged on his accession to the Crown to make a declaration with respect to the Protestant faith which contained matter so offensive as that which is found in this declaration ? I ask my hon. friends all over this House who are of the same religious belief as myself to take that into consideration, and to say whether they would not feel like making some effort to have an injustice of that kind redressed ? And the feelings which would animate us in the case which I have supposed are those which animate our Catholic friends throughout Canada. Therefore, although we may question the wisdom of introducing this matter into this House at this time, nevertheless we can well understand the feelings which animate hon. gentlemen in making this motion, and we can better appreciate the standpoint from which we should regard their action.

I do not desire to say very much further except with respect to the right of this House to pass any motion or tender any suggestion with regard to a subject of this kind which properly appertains to the Imperial parliament. The way that matter presents itself to me is that this parliament has, as has very truly been said, offered suggestions with regard to Imperial matters in the past. But, irrespective of all considerations of that kind, let us look at the question from another standpoint. No King, from William the Conqueror down, has ever become truly a King of England until he has taken the coronation oath, and made the declaration, if any, prescribed by law. He becomes King in the true sense of the word when he has done those two things. These are part of the compact between the Crown and the people. We are a portion of the British Empire. The compact which the King makes with his people when he ascends the throne is a compact which he makes with us as well as with the people of the mother country ; and it seems to me that it might be competent for us in this House, without its being regarded as going beyond our legitimate sphere, to respectfully make a suggestion that that compact should not be expressed in terms which are offensive to a large body of the citizens of this country. It seems to me that in that way we might justify this resolution, although I do not disguise from myself the fact that it is a question upon which there may be a legitimate division of opinion in the House.

We all know how very slowly and painfully the world has learned the lesson of toleration in religious belief. We have seen how slowly even the institutions of our own country have permitted themselves to progress in that respect. I trust and believe that there is in Canada at present very little intolerance in respert of such matters, and that in the future there will be still less. We know that we have men in this House and country who hold strong opinions on one side or the other with regard to such matters. May I venture to express the hope that whatever views are advanced, whatever opinions are expressed on this question, they will be advanced and expressed in a generous and moderate spirit so as not to arouse any religious animosity which we all so much deprecate.

May I be allowed to make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution, and the hon. gentleman who has seconded it. I venture to think that the conclusion is a little inconsequent, having regard to what proceeds. The resolution sets out, in the first place, that :

> As a token of the civil and religious liberties and of the equality of rights guaranteed to all British subjects in the Canadian confederation, as well as under the British constitution, a British sovereign should not be called upon to make any declaration offensive to the religious belief of any subject of the British Crown.

Then the resolution sets out the declaration referred to and proceeds as follows :

> That such declaration is offensive to the convictions of all Roman Catholics.

I am glad that the hon. the mover of the resolution has seen fit to alter his proposed motion with respect to the next paragraph, because he has amended the language of it at first presented. He proceeds to say :

> That the staunch loyalty of His Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects in Canada and other British possessions should exempt them from any offensive reference to their religion by their sovereign.

It seems to me that we all might agree in the resolution so far, but what the motion proceeds to say is this :

> That in the opinion of this House the Act of Settlement should be amended by abolishing the said declaration.

Would it not be better for my hon. friends to consider whether that particular paragraph should not rather be amended in some way. If you logically follow the language that precedes this paragraph, all you would require to say would be this :

> That, in the opinion of this House, from this declaration should be eliminated anything offensive to the religious belief of any subject of Her Majesty.

In all sincerity, and with every desire to prevent this matter becoming the subject of controversy, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he might very well consider this change, and, I hope, adopt it. He will remember that he has introduced his motion in such a manner that it is impossible to offer any amendment, and he thus handicaps gentlemen in this House who are extremely anxious that this should not become a matter of controversy. He handicaps them by introducing his resolution in this particular way so that it cannot be amended. Therefore, it seems to me, that my hon. friends who moved and seconded the motion should be all the more ready to adopt some suggestion of this kind, which might express the views of hon. gentlemen who cannot bring their consciences to vote for the resolution exactly in the way in which it is framed. If my hon. friend should entertain that suggestion, and desires a little delay to consider it, I am sure there will be no objection in this House to concede him the delay he requires; but, I would trust and hope that he would not require much time to consider the suggestion I have made, and which I have made in the utmost possible good faith and sincerity.

I regret that I have trespassed so long on the attention of the House, and, as I have said before, I sincerely hope that this will not become a matter which will arouse any controversy in this House.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). I have listened with pleasure to the temperate and dispassionate address of the hon. the leader of the opposition, and I find in his remarks very little to criticise. The hon. gentleman has expressed a doubt—and I am free to confess that the same doubt has existed in my own mind—as to the propriety of introducing a resolution in a colonial legislature dealing with an Imperial question. We have, however, precedents for this course, and, I suppose that we have, as individuals, and in our collective legislative capacity, the right of competition.

The resolution offered by the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) is simply a petition to the Throne asking for the redress of an alleged grievance; and even with the views I entertain on the propriety of keeping strictly within our own sphere of action, I still do not realize that there is any particular incongruity or impropriety in the proposed action with regard to the declaration to be taken by the British sovereign that we are now considering.

The hon. the leader of the opposition informs us that this declaration dates back from the year 1689, and prior to that time was required from peers, and members of the House of Commons, and that upon the occasion of the inauguration of William and Mary, it was, for the first time, required of a British sovereign. The hon. gentleman went on to inform us that from time to time these declarations and laws and other requirements of a similar character have been modified, and various individuals and officials and collections of individuals in the United Kingdom relieved of the obligation of making such declaration. This of course is an argument leading directly in the line suggested by the hon. member for Victoria, that the change should go further, the modification be made greater, and that as peers and members of the House of Commons, and other officials have been relieved from the necessity of making this declaration, the time has properly come to relieve the sovereigns of the British Empire from the same necessity.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the conditions which existed when the obligation to take this declaration became law, if we consider them carefully and with a due degree of charity, will lead us to the conclusion that the step taken was, under the circumstances, a natural one. We must remember that when this declaration was taken by William and Mary, in 1689, it was at the end of eighty-six years of strife in England, eighty-six years of turmoil and internal dissension, eighty-six years of attempts on the part of rulers to break down and override constitutional government and to destroy the liberties of the people, eighty-six years of persecution and the violation of human rights in almost every sense and particular. We must recollect the occurrences in the reign of James I., of Charles I., of Charles II., and James II.—who was the mere pensioner of the King of France, who was the tool of the Papacy, who was determined to override the constitution and to destroy civil and religious liberty in the Kingdom of England. This condition of things led to the calling in of William and Mary and the passing of this drastic legislation that seems to us in this age so severe, so unnatural, so uncalled for and so unjustified. But, Sir, our forefathers who established these precedents in legislation are deserving a degree of consideration as to the circumstances under which they were led to take the action we are discussing to-day. The coming of William and Mary introduced a new order of things in England ; and in the 220 years since then, great changes have taken place. England at once assumed again under William and Mary the position she had occupied for a brief period under Cromwell, when she commanded the respect of the world and was a factor in human affairs. She became a great power and has continued to be a great power, disseminating the blessings of civilization, enlightenment and religion not only over the British Isles, but over vast territories of the earth. And the curse of things in these 220 years has brought us an evolution of conditions which leaves us hardly able to realize the state of public sentiment that existed at the time the legislation that we have under consideration was placed upon the statute-book. As evidence of this change in public sentiment among the English-speaking people we have the Treaty of Paris to secure to the inhabitants of French Canada their rights under the Napoleon code, their rights as Catholics, their rights as a French Canadian people. We have the erection of the great republic of the United States, where all recognition of religion is carefully avoided, and where it required a decision of the United States Supreme Court to establish the fact that it was a Christian nation. It is a nation where no oath with regard to religious belief, no conditions with regard to religious belief are possible ; where the Christian, the Jew, the agnostic, the Mohommedan, the Pagan, all stand on the same footing before the law and receive the same protection from the law. And we have this condition of things which has gone on from year to year, from generation to generation, so that it resulted, in 1829, in the Emancipation Act which removed the disabilities from Catholics. And the last relic of the condition of things that existed at that time is this very declaration that we now have under consideration. We can hardly realize the intense bitterness, the animosity that existed between various classes in the days to which I have referred. The Catholic persecuted the Protestant ; the Protestant persecuted the Catholic ; the Protestant persecuted the Protestant—Claverhouse, the envoy and agent of the papacy of England harried with fire and sword the covenanters of Scotland, the Puritans fled from the persecution that went on in the old land, and established their institutions in New England and they, in their turn, persecuted the Baptists and burned witches—all sects, all nationalities, all classes were imbued with the spirit of bitterness, of vindictiveness and animosity that could make no allowances for differences of opinion, but must make the world pronounce its own shibboleth and conform to its own views.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come, as I said a moment ago, for taking a step in Canada that will, at least, place upon record the views of the Canadian House of Commons as to the propriety of removing the last relic of the condition of things that existed at the time to which I refer. Of course, I wish to define my position as a Protestant. In making this declaration I do not wish it to be understood that I subscribe to any doctrine that is denounced in this coronation declaration. I do not wish it to be understood that I believe in the doctrine of transubstantiation, for I hold to the old declaration of the Puritan Divine, who defined the Lord's Supper as being a sacrament established by Christ in which the use of the bread and wine set forth his death, and that these elements were partaken of not in a carnal manner, but by faith, and the use of these elements was made to represent the death of Christ. I believe that that beautiful simple ceremony that was established by our Master at the end of the last Passover Feast he celebrated, when he commanded his disciples to take the bread and wine and use them in remembrance of him, did not warrant the doctrine of transubstantiation, for he was there to dispense the elements. I do not subscribe to the doctrine of the worship of saints or the Virgin, for I remember the words of Christ, 'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only thou shalt serve.' And I remember Paul at Lystra who refused adoration from those upon whom he had exercised miraculous power. But these are matters of differences in doctrine. The belief in transubstantiation does not deny the divinity of Christ. The belief in the worship of the Virgin does not deny the sovereignty of Christ and the existence of an overruling Providence. But it is a far-fetched conclusion and unjustifiable to characterize those who believe in these doctrines as idolators. While, as a Protestant, I do not believe in them, I say that the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan) has a right to believe in them—and he may as well be right as I, for neither of us is infallible. I have no right, nor has the government any right, to stamp him with the odious name of idolater because he happens to differ from me in matters of doctrinal belief. Therefore, I say, sweep these things away. As a Protestant, I do not say I believe these things are true, but I say that the hon. gentleman has as good a right to believe them as I have a right to believe the doctrines which I hold.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the existence of religious and civil liberty is the basis upon which our institutions rest. The existence of religious liberty is incompatible with stating any conditions, or denouncing any belief on the part of the law or on the part of the rulers of the country. If we are to have religious liberty, we shall find such a declaration as the one we have under consideration entirely incompatible with the exercise of that right. If we are to build up the institutions of this country upon a foundation of religious liberty, we must eliminate from our laws all conditions, all declarations, all statutes that are inconsistent with that principle; and it is proper, it is necessary, it is imperative, if we are to hold to the doctrines of religious liberty, that a declaration which requires the sovereign of Great Britain to declare that the man who believes in transubstantiation and in the worship of the Virgin Mary, is an idolater, should be swept away, or we have no claim to possess institutions which rest upon civil and religious liberty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is always a good idea to 'put yourself in his place,' if you are going to arrive at a conclusion as to whether your antagonist is right or wrong. I have asked myself the question: What would be my feelings if the conditions were reversed? What would be my feelings, if as a Presbyterian or as a Protestant, my co-religionists were in the minority and the Church of Rome was in the majority, and a clause was put into the coronation declaration of the sovereign of the realm which declared me, and those believing as I do, to be idolaters? Would it be relished by me? Would it be relished by those who believe as I do? Would it be just? Would it be warranted under the circumstances and under the institutions and laws of this country? It would not be warranted, it would be unjust, it would be trampling upon my rights, it would be a declaration that I would resent, it would be a declaration that I would fight to remove.

I do not look upon this question from my own standpoint alone. I turn to the hon. member for Victoria and I say, that while his belief is different from mine, while this odious designation of idolater does not rest upon me and does rest upon him, it would be equally unjust if the case were reversed, and he was placed in a position relieved from the odious declaration, and I was subjected to it. For this reason I believe in giving others that which we would claim for ourselves; I believe in giving to our Catholic fellow-citizens that justice which we ourselves would claim if we were placed in the position which they occupy. I do not believe in pressing a cup of bitterness to the lips of any of His Majesty's loyal subjects.

I believe, Sir, that the existence of this declaration has very much to do with the unrest that exists in Ireland, and that the removal of this declaration, the removal of the last remnant of those ages of hatred, of refusal to respect religious rights, of refusal to tolerate differences of opinion, of refusal to listen to anything but our own shibboleth—I say I believe the removal of this last relic of those old intolerant ages would have a most beneficial effect upon the pacification of Ireland, and would have a good effect upon our French Canadian fellow-citizens, who must feel themselves aggrieved in consequence of their sovereign being required to take the declaration under discussion. As a Protestant who would stand to the utmost and to the last for the vindication of his principles, I do not ask for the retention of a condition with regard to others which I would spurn and resist with regard to myself. For this reason, I believe that the motion of my hon. friend amended in any way that he should choose to amend it, should pass.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by referring to the point which I spoke of at the opening of my remarks, and that is the only difficulty I feel in relation to this matter. I approve of the resolution per se; I have some doubts yet as to the propriety of this legislative body presuming to pronounce an opinion upon a matter pertaining to Imperial interest, Imperial legislation and Imperial affairs. As I said at the outset, I think we may be justified in doing this upon the ground that we have the right of petition, upon the ground that we are British subjects, subjects of a King whom we petition, that we are British subjects who are affected by this condition as much as if we were living in England; and the expression of our opinion on this matter surely will not be considered an impertinence, and surely will do no harm in the ultimate settlement of the matter which we have under our consideration to-day.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I have always regretted that questions of religion should be brought to the attention of this House of Commons. There is no reason, in my judgment, why it should be so. We have enormous questions to deal with. We have the business of building up a great nation in the British possessions on this North American continent, a work which taxes the resources of the ablest minds in the Dominion of Canada. But, from time to time, we have these religious or racial questions thrust upon the attention of the House of Comomns, calculated to provoke strife and discord and those feelings which we know by experience produce no good results.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the mover of the resolution (Mr. Costigan). He has, during my experience, never made a speech in this House of Commons calculated to promote the advancement and prosperity of this Dominion. Every speech, during the long period that I have been here, made by him has been on racial or religious lines, and calculated to provoke that very strife which we should seek to avoid, and to avoid which he tells us that he has in view in bringing up this question. Why, Sir, from the earliest days when the hon. member for Victoria was a member of this House of Commons, he brought in religious questions which disturbed the House of Commons, but which were relegated, as they should have been, to the province of New Brunswick, where they were settled amicably, because they belonged to the province of the New Brunswick legislature. At a later period, in 1882, I remember, the hon. member for Victoria brought in a resolution about Home Rule. In a few observations that I made upon that occasion, I ventured to say that the member for Victoria was trying to boom himself for position, and force himself into the government of the day. He got up and with the greatest vehemence denied the imputation; but the result was that within a very few weeks afterwards he was made a minister of the government of Canada. Is he afraid to-day that the mantle of oblivion is falling upon him again, and is it because he wants the people to know that he is still alive and a member of the House of Commons, that he has brought up another religious question for our consideration?

I listened with a good deal of interest, also, to the right hon. the First Minister, the supposed beneficiary, the intended beneficiary, if any beneficiary there be outside the member for Victoria himself, of the proposition made to-day. The right hon. First Minister had cuteness enough and power enough to prevent this question coming before the House of Commons in 1900, because an election was pending at that time, and the First Minister did not want this question brought up then.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the matter? He had, I say, sufficient influence and authority then to prevent that question coming up for consideration in the House of Commons, because an election was coming on at that period. To-day he is not satisfied with the power that he has, and the solidarity that he has acquired in the province of Quebec, and he feels that he requires something more to strengthen his position in that province. I think he should be satisfied, and more than satisfied, with his handy-work, and the handy-work of his colleagues in the province of Quebec. In reference to myself, I have always protested against questions of this kind coming up for consideration in the House of Commons. Even when my own political friends in recent years, thought it the proper thing, I protested against their course. I do so to-day. I believe that when we review all the circumstances we should carefully and cautiously proceed in a matter of this kind, and better still, I think we should take no position at all. If a wrong has been inflicted, the British government and the British parliament are strong enough, fair enough and generous enough, and have the instinct of doing right sufficiently to remove any wrong that may exist in that regard. They tell us that the language of this declaration is very strong. So it is, Mr. Speaker. It deals in very strong language with the question that is now before the House for discussion; it deals with it very straight-

ly. The language is strong in the declaration that the King of England has to make, and which he has to make, either on the first day of the first session of the parliament, after he comes to the Throne, or upon taking the coronation oath. He has, I presume, with the advice of his government, chosen to have that declaration made upon the first day, and not to wait for the coronation which will take place some time in the future. He has made that declaration. There is no question to-day as to how it will affect the present King of England. The only person it will affect will be his successor in office, and we all pray that another occasion for making this declaration may not arise for a long long time to come. I have said that the declaration to be made by the King of England is a very strong one. Well, Sir, it is not the only strong expression that obtains to-day. I listened to our good friend the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who in his vigorous language said that if you must call them idolaters, referring to our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, it is unfair, and that if he were one he would resent it, and fight to have it removed. He did not believe in pressing the cup of bitterness to his neighbour's lips. Our good friend tells us this afternoon that he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. We know that he is a distinguished dignitary of that church ; he not only performs the duties of the layman, but, I believe, he gets into the pulpit too, and preaches the gospel. We admire him for it, and we hope that he practices what he preaches. The church of which he is such a distinguished member have also views upon this question. The views held by the Presbyterian Church upon this question are in the Westminster Confession of Faith. In the Westminster Confession of Faith, page 109——

Mr. MACLEAN. Which edition ?

Mr. WALLACE. The edition that my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) does not know very much about. The distinguished gentleman who has just spoken in this House, and who is such an ornament of the church to which he belongs, will find on page 109 of the Westminster Confession of Faith, endorsed by two parliaments, one of the articles of the doctrine that he has to subscribe to before he gets into that pulpit. The hon. gentleman speaks of calling them idolaters ; I may be mistaken, I speak subject to correction, but I submit that the oath does not call any class idolaters, but it calls certain things idolatrous and superstitious. Here is what the hon. member for North Norfolk and that great and distinguished body of ministers of this country, belonging to the Presbyterian Church of Canada, say in regard to this question :

Mr. WALLACE.

There is no other head of the church but the Lord Jesus Christ; nor can the Pope of Rome in any sense be head thereof; but is that anti-Christ, that man of sin and son of perdition, that exhalted himself in the church against Christ and all that is called God.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WALLACE. I was waiting to hear the hon. member for North Norfolk get up and say that that was the doctrine of his church, and that he would stand by it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will get up, and I will inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) that the Westminster Confession of Faith is under discussion in the Presbyterian Church, that there is a very large proportion of members who are in favour of its modification, and that I belong to that wing.

Mr. WALLACE. The Westminster Confession of Faith, I presume, being a statement of the faith of intelligent men, of men of education and learning, has been under discussion and criticism from the first day it was adopted, 300 years ago, down to the present day, and when the hon. member tells us that it is under discussion to-day, he is not telling us anything we do not know. Why, of course it is. He is not giving us any information by telling us what we all knew before. That is one of the beliefs of the Presbyterian Church ; they have not amended it. Our good friend tells us that they have it under discussion ; it may be under discussion for 100 years, and it may be made still stronger, and still more positive than it is stated here. I do not know, and our good friend does not know either. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) what this has to do with a political question—the creed of a church or the tenets of the Presbyterian Church, on the Westminster Confession of Faith.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is a very proper question to ask, and I say 'hear, hear,' too. To-day the King of England is head of the Presbyterian Established Church of Scotland, and he is head of that church which accepts the doctrine which I have just read. That is the reason why my statement has something to do with the question, because the King of England has to subscribe to that doctrine as well as the hon. member for North Norfolk. You will notice that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is in quite distinguished company.

Mr. CHARLTON. He does that in his private capacity as an humble member of the church.

Mr. WALLACE. He does it in his public capacity as head of the Established Church of Scotland. Here again the Westminster Confession of Faith, says :

Private masses, or receiving the sacrament by a priest, or any other, alone, is likewise the denial of the cup to the people; worshipping the elements, the lifting them up, or carrying them about for adoration, and reserving them for any pretended religious use, are all contrary to the nature of the sacrament, and to the institution of Christ.

Further on article 6, page 119, says :

Transubstantiation or the changing of bread and wine into the substance of Christ's body and blood by consecration of the priest or by any other way, is repugnant, not to Scripture alone, but even to common sense and reason, overthroweth the nature of the sacrament ; and hath been and is the cause of manifold superstitions, yea, of gross idolatries.

Here we have things more offensive and more objectionable to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) in the Westminster Confession of Faith, than there is in the coronation oath, and the Westminster confession has to be made by the King of England. And this gentleman who is going to go over to England, and present his humble petition at the foot of the Throne, we never heard his eloquent voice from one end of the Dominion to the other raised—to say that these things should be changed in the Westminster Confession of Faith, until this afternoon, when he said that there was going to be a conference sometime in the future to consider the subject.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) evidently did not notice that I professed to some extent the same views in my speech.

Mr. WALLACE. What is that ?

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman evidently did not understand me in my speech, as endorsing to some extent these views, as my own views, as a private individual and member of the church. That has nothing to do with the question however. I stated that the views of the hon. gentleman from Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) were divergent from mine, but neither of us had the right to make these views the criterion by which the King shall be governed in his declaration of office as ruler of an empire which is composed of subjects of different religious views.

Mr. WALLACE. That does not answer the statement I have made. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), said :

To call them idolaters would be unfair, would be unjust, would be odious. He would resent it, and he would fight to the death to remove it.

That is what he has told us in a few minutes as his own confession of faith, and he said he did not believe in pressing the cup of bitterness to his neighbour's lips. But where is he now ? He tells us that he had stated that he shared the views which I have expressed. If he did say so, I must apologize to him, because I caught the very opposite meaning from his remarks. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is something else in regard to this matter. There is another church, the glorious old Church of England; that church which has done so much to evangelize the world, and to spread the belief of its own religion, without being open to the accusation of being partisan, or without being unjust to those other churches that have clustered around it in Great Britain and other countries as well. There are thirty-nine articles of faith. Mr Speaker, I shall not read you the thirty-nine articles.

Some hon. MEMBERS. 'Hear, hear.' 'Dispense.' 'Thank you.'

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) thanks me very much, but I think if I did refresh his memory with the thirty-nine articles, he ought to thank me very much more, because I do not know any gentleman of my acquaintance who seems to have so utterly forgotten the essence of so many of these articles as the Minister of Railways and Canals has. The twenty-second article is the one to which I would call his attention on page 492, and that article is subscribed to by King Edward VII., our glorious monarch, as the head of the Church of England. The English church is established by law in England, not in Canada, because we have no established church in Canada except the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec, and we read in the papers that they are trying down there to override the civil power in some cases.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. WALLACE. But this is one side of the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. I say that in Great Britain the King of England is the head of the Church of England. He has to subscribe to the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England; he has to take communion in the Church of England. Article 22, reads as follows :

The Romish doctrine concerning purgatory, pardons, worshipping and adoration as well of images as of reliques, and also invocation of saints, is a fond thing, vainly invented and grounded upon no warranty of Scripture, but rather repugnant to the word of God.

That is the declaration the King has to make. I will not read article 28, because it is a long one, and it might tire out the Minister of Railways and Canals, but it is something to the same effect. Article 19, page 444, reads as follows :

The visible church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men in which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments being duly ministered, according to Christ's ordinance in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same.

As the church of Jerusalem, Alexandria and Antioch have erred, so also the Church of Rome hath erred, not only in their living and manner of ceremonies, but also in matters of faith.

These are the articles that the King of England has to declare to even if you abolish the declaration which the member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Costigan) complains of. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have other questions with reference to the King's temporal power. I quote :

The Queen's Majesty [referring to Queen Elizabeth] hath the chief power in this realm of England, and other of her dominions, unto whom the chief government of all estates of this realm, whether they be ecclesiastical or civil, in all causes doth appertain, and is not, nor ought to be, subject to any foreign jurisdiction.

Where we attribute to the Queen's Majesty the chief government, by which titles we understand the minds of some slanderous folks to be offended; we give not to our princes the ministering either of God's word, or of the sacraments, the which thing the injunctions also lately set forth by Elizabeth our Queen, do most plainly testify; but that only prerogative, which we see to have been given always to all godly princes in Holy Scriptures by God himself ; that is that they should rule all estates and degrees committed to their charge by God, whether they be ecclesiastical or temporal, and restrain with the civil sword the stubborn and evildoers.

The Bishop of Rome hath no jurisdiction in this realm of England

The laws of this realm may punish Christian men with death, for heinous and grievous offences.

It is lawful for Christian men, at the command of the magistrates, to wear weapons and serve in the wars.

These are the articles of the Church of England. These are the articles which the King of England has to subscribe to as the head of that church ; and if you abolish that declaration, which troubles our friend the member for Victoria, you will have to abolish all the objectionable articles of the Church of England. Would it not be a nice spectacle, Mr. Speaker, to see the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England revised by the Hon. John Costigan ? As a humble member of that church myself, I shall protest——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should not refer to an hon. member by name.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not speaking of him as a member. I am speaking of him as the reviser of the Thirty-nine Articles.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. SPEAKER. By the rules of the House—and the hon. member knows them very well—it is not parliamentary to refer to an hon. member by name.

Mr. WALLACE. I know, Mr. Speaker, that a member is not to refer to another member by name in connection with the business of the House ; but I was referring to him in another capacity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order. Chair. Take it back.

Mr. WALLACE. I would not for a moment break any of the rules of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member knows very well that it is not parliamentary to refer to another member by name, either in his private capacity or otherwise.

Mr. WALLACE. Of course, I submit to your decision, Mr. Speaker. I say I will protest in the most vigorous way I can against the member for Victoria, N.B., revising the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, or the Westminster Confession ; and I am sure that in this way I shall secure the cordial assistance of the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

Now, Sir, I referred to these matters to show that even if the declaration which is complained of were abolished, the King of England would still have to make declarations which are stronger and more vigorous in language, both as the head of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland and the Established Church of England in England. So that the proposal made by the hon. member does not remove the difficulty he complains of.

You may say this language is too strong and too vigorous. Well, Sir, it may be ; that is a matter of opinion. But these churches are to be the judges in these matters themselves, and the House of Commons cannot interfere with the churches in this country—less even with the churches in England and Scotland—as to what their beliefs may be. What did the Pope of Rome say the other day in that celebrated interview with the Duke of Norfolk ? He said that under the British flag the Roman Catholic Church had rights and privileges and a freedom such as it had in no other country in the world. It is true, and, for my part, as a citizen of Canada I rejoice to know that that is the case. I am proud to live in a country where it may be said of any citizen, that so far as his religious beliefs are concerned, no man dare make him afraid, but he has the full, free privilege of worshipping his God in any manner he chooses. I have done my part throughout this country in preaching and promulgating that doctrine——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WALLACE. The jeers from the opposite side of the House come from those who know nothing about it, and I challenge them to point to a speech of mine in the House of Commons or out of the House of Commons—and I have spoken freely everywhere on these matters—where a contradiction has been given to the statement I am making to-day, or a line to justify a contradiction to it. They cannot do it, Mr. Speaker, and I challenge them to give us the proof before they use their sneers. A sneer is not a reply or a contradiction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what about the Church of Rome ? I have spoken of the Church of England. I have read its declarations, made in the strongest and most vigorous language, of the beliefs that it holds. I have read the declarations of the Presbyterian Church. And what I say of those two churches, I think I can safely say of all the other Protestant churches, that their beliefs are founded on the same lines as those of the Presbyterian Church and the Church of England in that regard ; so that the statement I make about those two churches in a general way applies to all Protestant churches. Now, about the Roman Catholic Church I do not wish to say anything, because I am not a Roman Catholic. I could read you a mass of evidence ; but I will just read the oath which is taken by the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church when they are consecrated to the bishopric. In the Roman Pontifical, printed at Rome by authority in the year 1818, and on page 62 of that volume, will be found this form of oath to be taken by every Roman Catholic bishop at his consecration. In it he swears :

> To be faithful and obedient to his lord the Pope and his successors ; to assist them in maintaining the Roman Papacy and the royalties of St. Peter against all men; to preserve, defend, augment and promote its rights, honours and privileges; to persecute and impugn, with all his might, heretics and schismatics, and rebels against his said lord.

That has never been repealed ; that is the law to-day. Our good friend the First Minister said to us to-day that they would not tolerate the interference of ecclesiastical authorities in civil matters. I read in the London Times as follows :—

> What is going on in Austria at present ought to serve as a warning to those Englishmen who have failed to understand that the interference of the Vatican can have none but evil consequences. The spirit of even such a Catholic people as the Austrians has at last been aroused against the political priest.

And we know, Mr. Speaker, that in Spain and Portgual there are rebellions to-day against the interference of the clergy and the various religious societies of that church in civil affairs ; and we know that the same state of affairs is prevailing in Italy and France. In the face of these facts, we have the evidence, as I have read, of what the practice is in the Church of Rome. I am not going to refer to past history, because I do not think it is necessary, though it is provoked by the resolution which is proposed here to-day. But I can say this, that the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., would be much better employed in curing those evils in his own church than in coming here and proposing to revolutionize the Church of England and the Presbyterian Church or the other Protestant churches. He will find, as every one of us will find, I am sure, ample work to do in that regard in the churches to which we individually belong.

The British people have decided that their King shall be of the Protestant faith. They have endeavoured to surround that with all the safeguards and provisos that they think necessary. Those safeguards and provisos are mainly the declaration and the oath, and the fact that the King is the head of the Church of England and the head of the Church of Scotland—the Presbyterian Church as well—the fact that he is head of those two churches, and has to subscribe to their doctrines and make the declaration, is a guarantee that the will of the people will be carried out.

There is another point which, to my mind, is of great importance. We are told that the Roman Catholic conscience is outraged by the declaration. And the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall), who seconded the motion, has told us that in the old days in Nova Scotia there was a member of the legislature who refused to take the oath with regard to transubstantiation, which had to be taken at that time, and that shortly afterwards that oath was repealed. I am delighted that it was repealed, and that throughout the British Empire no man's religion is a bar to his attaining civil power, except in the case of the King of England and the keeper of his conscience, the Lord Chancellor, and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. So far as the King of England is concerned, he has to make that declaration, but none of his subjects, save the exceptions I have mentioned, have. In the old days, members of parliament and judges and others had to make it, but that has been abolished, and there is no grievance in any domain under the British Crown to-day in that regard. British subjects may be Brahmins or Hindoos or Mohammedans, or belong to any of the Christian churches, or be Jews, there is no disability on that account attached to them. That, in my opinion, is right, but the people of England, who have the say in the matter, have declared—and they continue to declare, I assume, because otherwise they would change the law—that they will have a Protestant King on the Throne of England.

The history of the past they consider, and I consider, justifies them in taking that position. So that, if the King of England has to make that declaration, not one of his subjects, barring the two I have mentioned—the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—has to take it, no matter what position he may occupy. We have an illustration before us to-day. The right hon. gentleman who occupies the honourable position of First Minister of the great Dominion of Canada is, he tells us, of the Roman Catholic faith. That does not place him under any disability, and there was no disability against his predecessor, Sir John Thompson, who was also of the same faith, and whom I individually supported with all the vigour I possessed constantly, from the hour of his accession to the day of his lamented decease. Listening to the speeches this afternoon, one would come to the conclusion that hon. members of this House were under some personal grievance and were required to make some declaration which was opposed to their conscience and their judgment or both. But they are not required to do so.

Since the British people have not seen fit to change this declaration in all those years, we must assume that they hold as strongly to their beliefs in this regard as they did before. But we are living in this country side by side with men of all religious beliefs. We live together in amity, each one practicing his own religion any way he chooses, and each one being a good citizen. We are of different political party. Our neigbours on the one side are Grits and on the other Tories, and we do not refuse to live with our neighbours because of difference in politics, nor do we refuse to live with our neighbours who are Roman Catholics. In the county I represent, where we have a large Roman Catholic population, I never knew a place where Roman Catholics and Protestants live together in greater amity, but when we bring up those question with which we have nothing to do, we are likely to disturb that harmony.

The right hon. the First Minister said the justification for the course proposed was two-fold. First, we had interfered in the past when we offered our opinion, on two or three different occasions, on home rule. Well, Mr. Speaker, we did, and from Mr. Gladstone, the head of the government of that day, as the right hon. the Prime Minister has told us, we got a polite intimation to mind our own business and the British parliament would attend to theirs. And home rule has not been advanced, it has not become an accomplished fact, though Canada, on two or three occasions, appealed to the British parliament to pass a measure of home rule. They are better acquainted with the circumstances and conditions than we are. Those home rule petitions were intended for political effect, and I cannot get rid of the impression that the present movement is intended to give a little assistance to our good friend the First Minister, as well as to lift the non. member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) from that obscurity into which he has deservedly fallen. The right hon. the First Minister told us that last year we interfered in Imperial matters by passing a resolution proffering assistance to Great Britain in the case of difficulties in South Africa. He said we had passed a resolution of sympathy with the Uitlanders, and more than sympathy, because it could only be interpreted to mean active assistance. But the right hon. gentleman knows full well that in the middle of the summer we had passed that resolution, and when hostilities began, when the whole empire, Australia, New Zealand, and other portions of the empire had a call to arms and recognized their duty to show the hostile nations of Europe that if they should attack Great Britain they would have to deal with the whelps of the lion as well, where was the right hon. the First Minister of this great and loyal Dominion ? He was issuing a proclamation, on the 3rd or 4th of October, saying that we could not or would not render any substantial assistance to the empire in South Africa. I think his refernce to these things was unfortunate. However, these are the two reasons that the hon. minister gives us for the interference proposed to-day. I do not think they justify that interference ; I do not think we should be called upon to interfere. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has suggested changes ; and the chief beneficiary-expectant sitting opposite to me accepts the motion in amendment to going into Supply as a friendly motion which he believes, as I understand him, should pass, and he will give it his assistance, though he says that the wording of it does not suit him. If the hon. member for Victoria were as desirous as he says he is of having this resolution freely discussed and fairly disposed of, he would bring it up in the proper way and not as an amendment on going into Supply. For, the leader of the opposition has pointed out that amendments would make it much more acceptable to the people of this country, but he has no power to move these amendments thanks to the arrangement made between the hon. member for Victoria and the right hon. First Minister. In that regard an unfairness has been done to the House. This is one of those great questions upon which we should be permitted to express our views by word, or by vote, or by amendment. But that has not been permitted. And we have the spectacle to-day of the hon. member for Victoria by bringing in a motion in amendment to Supply—which is considered, in almost every case except in some cases of urgency, a motion of want of confidence—and that being accepted and helped along by the First Minister, thus preventing the presentation of those amendments which hon. members should be at liberty to bring forward upon questions so important as this.

I have no more to say, except this—I think that in dealing with this matter as is proposed we open up a vista of difficulties for the future. As I have already pointed out you may abolish every line of that declaration, and yet the same words stand before the public, declared by the King of England, whoever he may be, as the head of the two great Protestant churches in Britain. The proposal of the hon. member for Victoria will not cure the difficulty. Great Britain has the matter in hand ; and Great Britain is not going to belie her record, to belie her past ; she will not be less liberal and generous to every citizen than she has been in years gone by. On the contrary, recent events, such as our men going out to fight side by side with British regular soldiers, the battles of the empire, will make the parliament and people of Great Britain, if they see any injustice or unfairness to any portion of His Majesty's citizens, more ready than ever before to remedy it, more ready than ever before to mete out justice to every citizen of the great British Empire.

Mr. HENRY R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). Mr. Speaker, I come from a constituency where there live side by side the French and the English, the Protestant and the Catholic, with a degree of harmony and with an amity that should be emulated throughout this country and in every country. For that reason I regret that the very first occasion when I raise my voice in this parliament should be one when the subject before us is one of a controversial character with respect to religion and race. I would have had it otherwise. But I cannot allow the occasion, now that it has arisen, to pass without making some references to the matter under discussion. At the very outset I wish to refer to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I followed his remarks with care, with watchfulness, for I was anxious, owing to his place in his profession and his position in the House, to learn the opinions he held with respect to this matter. And I have to congratulate my hon. friend upon his utterance. I certainly can subscribe in every particular to the sentiments he expressed. But I had a certain amount of sympathy for him in the utterance of his sentiments. He seemed to stand alone, so far as any applause from those behind him was concerned. As he uttered sentiment after sentiment that was to be admired, as he announced principle after principle that could not be gainsaid, there was not a word of approval from those who surrounded him. Indeed, I thought that my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) who has just resumed his seat was in a more fortunate position in that respect. I noticed that my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who sits directly behind the leader, occasionally interrupted with a 'hear, hear' the remarks of the hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace). The hon. leader of the opposition states that he takes exception to the resolution in its phraseology and that he would be willing, if the hon. member from Victoria (Mr. Costigan) would consent to an amendment, to support the resolution with his whole heart. He felt that if these amendments suggested by him were made there would be left no matter of controversy in the resolution. I have read the declaration carefully, and I am of the opinion that if what has been suggested by the leader of the opposition were done, if, as I understood him to desire, all offensive portions of that declaration were eliminated, then does he think there would be anything left substantial and necessary in the interest of the constitution, or to the coronation oath ? I would ask my hon. friend if he thinks there would be anything left in the declaration if there were eliminated from it all the words which are alleged to be offensive ? Sir, I would invite hon. members carefully to read over that declaration. It has been suggested that the first portion of it contains words which are offensive, that portion ending with the words 'superstitious and idolatrous' ; and I understood my hon. friend from Halifax to say that after all that portion were eliminated the remainder would be quite satisfactory.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. I did not venture to state which portion of the declaration was offensive, and which was not offensive. My suggestion was made merely for the purpose of logically following out in the resolution what had been stated in the preamble, merely that. I did not attempt to deal with details in making the suggestion that I did.

Mr. EMMERSON. I accept my hon. friend's statement, but if his suggestion were carried out, there would be nothing left in the declaration, and there would be no necessity for any declaration at all in connection with the coronation oath. It has been said that this motion has been introduced in such a way as to prevent any amendment being moved, but it will be seen that there is no necessity, there cannot be any necessity, for any amendment, because the question is simply one as to whether this declaration should not stand as it is with respect to those features in it which are complained of, or whether we should say to His Majesty that it is quite proper that the declaration should remain as it has stood for upwards of 200 years.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 13) respecting the Canada National Railway and Transport Company.—Mr. Cowan.

Bill (No. 19) an Act respecting the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company (Limited).—Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Bill (No. 20) an Act respecting the Nakusp and Slocan Railway Company.—Mr. Prior.

Bill (No. 21) an Act respecting the British Columbia Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Prior.

Bill (No. 22) an Act respecting the Columbia and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Morrison.

Bill (No. 23) an Act respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 24) an Act respecting the South Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 25) an Act to incorporate the Ottawa and Hull Power and Manufacturing Company (Limited).—Mr. Champagne.

Bill (No. 26) an Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Fortin.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to call your attention to the fact that Bill No. 14, to incorporate the Century Life Insurance Company, is now printed and distributed.

Mr. SPEAKER. We have established the rule, and I will call the attention of hon. members to the fact that all the Bills which are not mentioned on the Order paper as being printed will not be called in future in order to avoid any misunderstandings. The reason for this is that there may be opposition to some Bills, and as they are not mentioned on the Order paper as having been printed, perhaps, an hon. member would be under the impression that it would not be necessary for him to be present, and to avoid any misunderstanding, after consultation with a certain number of persons, I have come to the conclusion that in future we will simply call Bills which are mentioned on the Order paper as having been printed.

ATLANTIC AND LAKE SUPERIOR RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. TALBOT moved second reading of Bill (No. 27), respecting the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company.

Mr. FORTIN. I would ask that the second reading of this Bill be deferred as there may be some objection to the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to obstruct this Bill in any way, but I think it would be well to explain to the House that this Bill, No. 27, is printed while Bill No. 14, to incorporate the Century Life Insurance Company, is not printed. I think these Bills should be printed consecutively.

Mr. SPEAKER. I could not give any explanation to the hon. member (Mr. Henderson), but I suppose it is due to the fact that, perhaps, one Bill is longer than the other. They are all sent at the same time, and I do not see any reason why they should not be printed.

Mr. HENDERSON. A Bill of this kind might be kept standing for an indefinite period simply for the purpose of keeping it back in the Bureau. I do not think the reason that a Bill is a long one is a good reason.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is always necessary, at all events, that a Bill shall be printed. I understand this one is printed. The rule I laid down a few minutes ago is for the purpose of avoiding any misunderstanding, because in the past I am informed that there have been misunderstandings about these Bills. A Bill will not be called unless it is marked printed on the Order paper.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not finding any fault with your rule, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot understand why Bill No. 14 should not be printed, when Bill No. 27 has been printed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY—THE CORONATION OATH.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Speaker, before the House rose for recess, I was endeavouring to show what the object of this motion was, and that its amendment, if amendment were permissible, could in no sense change its terms, providing it is admitted as I understand it to be admitted, by at least the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), that all the objectionable and offensive features of the declaration which attends the coronation of the sovereign of the empire should be eliminated. It is not necessary to discuss the question of the amendment if it is merely a technical feature which does not in any way affect the merits involved in the resolution. And, Mr. Speaker, the very first thing we have to inquire is: What is the object of the resolution? As read, it proposes to ask His Majesty to amend the Test Act by eliminating the declaration which is attendant upon the ceremony of the coronation of the sovereign of the empire, and for the reason: that that declaration takes exception to the dogma of a particular church, and it becomes a question for us to consider as to what a dogma is.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh!

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman may say 'Oh,' but that consideration is relevant in a discussion of this kind, because, as I understand it, a dogma is an opinion or theory derived from the gospels, and formulated as a doctrine by the church ; or, it is an opinion or theory of men founded on the words of Christ. Without going into a discussion of dogma, or without considering at all the religious opinions that may be held, it must be apparent that we, as citizens of the empire, interested in the sovereign, interested in all that appertains to his kingly office, should be anxious to see that there is nothing surrounding his high estate which could in any way transgress that liberty of conscience which is enjoyed by all those living in the British Empire. I for one am willing to subscribe to the proposition, that we as citizens of the empire should respectfully suggest and pray that there shall be eliminated from the coronation ceremony anything that could be considered as offensive to the religious convictions of any subject of His Majesty.

The hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace) referred to the fact that His Majesty, as King of England, was obliged to subscribe to the Westminster Confession of Faith, and also to the Thirty-nine Articles. While that may be so, it would seem to me that His Majesty does not do so as an individual, or as a King, but that he does it under the law as head of the church. If His Majesty subscribes to the Thirty-nine Articles, I hold that he does not in any sense subscribe to the Westminster Confession, for it stands to reason that he cannot subscribe to both, because for many reasons they are diametrically opposed to each other. Therefore, while the law recognizes him as head of the Established Church in Scotland, and also as head of the Established Church in England, yet the law does not require of him that he shall personally subscribe to any of the doctrines or dogmas contained either in the Thirty-nine Articles or in the Westminster Confession of Faith.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. At all events a discussion as to whether His Majesty does or does not do so is not relevant to the proposition involved in the resolution before the House. After listening to the utterances of the hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace), one is at a loss to know whether or not that gentleman is conversant with the occurrences which have transpired within the last twelve months. If there is one idea more than another which has grown and developed in Canada during this past year, it is the idea of empire. On every occasion, from every platform, among all classes and creeds we hear utterances in this Dominion as to the growth of the idea of empire. It is not germane to the subject that we should view the inception of this idea of empire from an historical standpoint. It is not even necessary for us to attempt to discover how the idea got lodgment in the minds of British subjects everywhere in all lands. We have only to recognize the fact that in Canada this idea has grown, and we have evidences of it on every hand. In all the public speeches of leading statesmen, in all the opinions ventilated by publicists and men of affairs, the idea is promulgated that we are beyond and above what we were a few years ago ; that we have developed from the mere citizenship of Canada, grand as that is, into the broader and grander citizenship of the British Empire. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into detail of the origin of those British institutions of which we are all so proud. That, I will leave to the historian, but I may recall the fact that in the early history of the United Kingdom originated those grand British institutions at a time when England was Catholic, at a time when there was no test oaths ; at a time when the religious convictions of Englishmen were far different from what they are to-day. Take the glorious Magna Charta ; take the right of trial by jury ; take the idea in our municipal affairs of magistrates and sheriffs and such officers, and you will find that their inception was at a time when England was wholly and solely and exclusively Catholic. Therefore, Sir, if we take pride to-day in the idea of empire, we must not forget what we are and whence we sprung ; we must not shut our eyes to the past. Bearing this in mind, I am sure that we will all be prepared to view this question dispassionately and calmly, recognizing the changed conditions, and recognizing too, that we in Canada are a different people to-day from what we were even a few years ago. I am sure that our neighbours to the south of us take pride in the idea and in the history of the Pilgrim Fathers. They take pride in the fact that they came from that ancestry—and there are many in Canada who had the same origin, and who came here by way of New England. If they take pride in that fact, it is because there was implanted upon the shores of New England, when their little bark arrived, the principles of religious liberty and freedom of conscience, and the right to worship God at whatever shrine their consciences dictated. This idea has been beautifully described by Mrs. Hemans in her poem on the Pilgrim Fathers :

What sought they thus afar ?
Bright jewels of the mine ?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war ?—
They sought a faith's pure shrine !

Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod !
They have left unstain'd what there they found—
Freedom to worship God !

And while our neighbours to the south rejoice in that freedom and claim it as a proud heritage, I am sure there is no portion of this American continent where the people can take greater pride in the same freedom than we in Canada. If our neighbours have that freedom, I am sure that we have it in its very essence, and enjoy it to the fullest extent. That being the case, we surely must recognize that under the law this privilege belongs to every man living in Canada and having the rights of Canadian citizenship. If, then, it is acknowledged as a right which the citizens of the empire may enjoy to the fullest extent, it must surely be acknowledged as a right that should be enjoyed without offence, and without anything that would in any way reflect upon or mar the enjoyment of that right. If that is the case, surely there can be no objection on the part of Canadians to approach the Throne and ask that there shall be eliminated from that test oath the objectionable features that have been referred to, as embodied in the declaration which has been under discussion this afternoon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not refer to myself with any idea of wishing to invite personal attention; but I do think that it is permissible to me to refer to the position which I hold with respect to these matters. I am not in any sense in sympathy with the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church. My origin and my ancestry were such that I came from one of the Protestant denominations, and I owe allegiance and give adherence to one of the Protestant denominations of this Dominion. I recognize that at one time in the history of this empire that denomination suffered under legal and civil disabilities. I recognize that there was a time, even in Canada, at least in the province from which I come, when those who enjoyed the same ideas of religion that I do were under the ban—under disabilities with respect to public offices—when they were not in the enjoyment of the fullest civil and religious freedom which they enjoy to-day.

If this were a question involving the adoption of some particular dogma or creed, if it were a question which in a way involved the acceptance of doctrines which I as a Protestant do not hold, I could not in any sense approve of or support the motion of my hon. friend from Victoria. But I do not understand the question to be that at all. I understand the motion in no sense diminishes or restricts the religious freedom which every man in Canada enjoys to the fullest extent. It in no sense modifies the religious opinions of any one supporting it. It simply says that there shall be no reflections cast upon the religious convictions which any citizen of the British Empire may hold. With these ideas dominant in my mind, and with the idea that I would wish to enjoy my own religious convictions to the fullest extent without any reflection being cast upon them, I grant to those whose religious views differ from my own the same right; and I would not ask that there should be anything, either on the statute-books of this country or in any ceremonial connected with parliamentary proceedings, that would in any way reflect upon the conscience, the judgment or the religious conviction of any citizen of the empire, whoever he may be. I go farther, perhaps, than some hon. members of the Protestant faith; I believe in the entire severance of church and state; and I belong to a denomination which has that idea for its guiding principle, and which, through good report and ill report, has always stood up for that principle. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has stated that there are a number of Protestant denominations clustering around the Church of England. I want to say to him that I belong to a denomination that is in no sense clustering around the feet of the Church of England, or around it in any way. I belong to a church holding the faith which, in my judgment, had its origin long before the Church of England was ever thought of.

An hon. MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend says that is right. It is right, because sacred history will prove it to be right. And, that being so, I would be untrue to the tenets of that faith if I were in any way to subscribe to a doctrine at variance with them. I have the deepest sympathy with those who are in any way brought under the ban from a religious standpoint. If my reading of history teaches me aright, there have been offences of a serious character committed by Protestants and Catholics alike in the history of the past. And if there is one blot upon the history of our young Canada, it is the expulsion of the French Acadians from the soil of Nova Scotia, in 1755. Was it because they were disloyal? If my memory be correct, from 1735, down to 1755, the French Canadians of the province of Nova Scotia suffered untold hardships, were deprived of privileges, and in every way placed in an unenviable position. This state of things finally culminated in their expulsion. I ask, were they expelled because they were not loyal or not willing to be loyal subjects of His Majesty? No, Mr. Speaker, they were willing to take the oath of allegiance, but refused to subscribe to the declaration involved in that test oath; and because they were not willing to become apostates to their faith, because they were true to the religious convictions which they learned at their mother's knee, they were sent out wanderers and outcasts over the continent of America. And their story, as you all know, has been beautifully told by Longfellow. If, 150 years ago those people were unwilling to subscribe to that declaration and suffered by reason of their refusal, surely hon. members must admit that since then we have made advances in the direction of civil and religious liberty, which we should not ignore by voting against this resolution.

I cannot believe that our Christianity has been so ineffective, so futile during that period, that there have not been advances in mutual toleration and self-respect, and I cannot believe that the people of this country would be unwilling to subscribe, every one of them if it were brought to their notice, to the principle in the resolution before us.

My hon. friend who resumed his seat last belongs to an order which has given him great prominence, and I desire to say to my hon. friend, that I am an humble member of that order also. But when I profess allegiance to that order, I do so upon the well-recognized fact that the principles of that institution are based on equal rights for all, and while that order upholds the maintenance of the Protestant religion, at the same time it requires its members to give liberty of conscience to those who do not see eye to eye with them. And if it be true that the cardinal principle of that order, to which my hon. friend owes very much, be equal rights to all, then I ask those who are of the Protestant faith how would they like it, if some cherished tenet of their faith were denounced in any declaration by the sovereign of this empire, under the form of law. I think I need only appeal to the fair Canadian citizenship of this country for an answer to that question. Equal rights to all and the full freedom and enjoyment of all our religious convictions, but a condemnation under the law of none should be our guiding principle.

I shall, therefore, have much pleasure in voting, because of the faith to which I subscribe, and the allegiance I owe to that faith, in favour of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Victoria.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Before giving my vote on this question, I would like to offer a few remarks to the House. I listened with pleasure to the speech of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) in introducing his resolution. He introduced it in a modest manner, and a style which was not in the slightest degree objectionable. I also listened with pleasure to the speech of the right hon. leader of the government, and to the sentiments he expressed, I could scarcely find any objection. I listened also with a good deal of interest to the remarks of my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace), and was particularly pleased to hear him read from the Confession of Faith. Perhaps it is a long time since I have read it, and it reminded me of my early days when, between my meals of oatmeal porridge, I was brought up principally on the shorter catechism and the confession of faith. I am not like my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who states that that faith is under the process of revision at present, and consequently is uncertain in his views. I stick to it in its entirety. And I must remind my hon. friend from West York, that there are no dignitaries in the Presbyterian Church, and when he asserts that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is a dignitary in that church, I must take objection to his statement. It is a church which sticks to its faith, and I hold to the confession of faith and the short catechism on which I was bred and educated. With reference to the question before the House and the sentiments expressed by the hon. gentleman who introduced it, although perfectly agreeing with him, I must draw his attention to the resolution, which is entirely a different thing. I must remind him that in all the debates in the House of Lords, and in the House of Commons, I never heard of any fault found with the declaration of the King.

The debate turned simply upon a criticism of the coronation oath, as to how it affected the legislative and executive action of the King himself ; because the declaration does not affect it in any way. There are two things required by the Settlement Act. The first of these is the coronation oath. If it were confined to that, any man, even a Roman Catholic could take that oath and be the sovereign of Great Britain. There is a pre-requisite declaration besides the oath. I agree with the right hon. the premier, that the declaration consists of two parts, one in reference to transubstantiation, the other in reference to the worship of the Virgin Mary, and the saints—two parts that are contrary to the belief, and objectionable to the feelings of every Roman Catholic. But he must remember that, in the clause of the petition he proposes to send to the old country, in seeking to eliminate these two objectionable parts, he does not substitute any declaration at all. And I venture to say that there is not any other person who does not believe and maintain that the sovereign of the British Empire should make a declaration that he belongs to the Protestant religion. That is a pre-requisite along with the coronation oath. You do away with that declaration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that declaration made in the abjuration oath ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The declaration belongs to the test oath, which was required by the Act of Mary. That Act was repealed by the Act of William and Mary, the only part that was retained being the declaration. The declaration was included in the test oath which was required, as the Prime Minister said, of every member of parliament, of every member of the House of Lords, and of every subject of the sovereign when he accepted office. But that test oath was abolished in regard to all the subjects of the sovereign and retained solely in the case of the sovereign himself. That declaration is a pre-requisite under the Settlement Act, when the sovereign must declare that he is a believer in the Protestant religion——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would like to follow the hon. gentleman, but I am not sure that I understand him. Does he say that there are other declarations than the two to which he referred, about disbelief in the worship of the Virgin and of transubstantiation ? Does he say that there is a third declaration required ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not at all. The Settlement Act requires a declaration that the sovereign belongs to the Protestant religion. That declaration is embodied in the only declaration which the sovereign takes——

Mr. BOURASSA. That is in the Bill of Rights.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is required under Act of parliament that the sovereign should be a Protestant, and that he should take the coronation oath. You do away with that declaration about his being a Protestant under this petition of yours, about his declaration.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is my opinion upon the subject, because it says in the resolution :

In the opinion of this House, the above-mentioned Act of Settlement should be amended by abolishing the said declaration.

You abolish the declaration altogether. There is no requirement in the coronation oath itself that the sovereign should declare himself a Protestant. Here is the coronation oath :

Archbishop.—Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the dominions thereunto belonging according to the statutes in parliament agreed on and the respective laws and customs of the same?

King.—I solemnly promise so to do.

Archbishop.—Will you, to the extent of your power, cause law and justice and mercy to be executed in all your judgments?

King.—I will.

Archbishop.—Will you, to the utmost of your power, maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel and the Protestant Reformed religion established by law——

It does not say that he shall be a believer in the Protestant religion—there is no requirement of that kind.

And will you maintain and preserve inviolable the settlement of the Church of England and the doctrine, discipline and government thereof——

And so on. There is nothing in the coronation oath making it necessary for the sovereign to declare he is a Protestant.

The PRIME MINISTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Does he pretend that the test oath which is referred to in the declaration makes the King swear that he is a Protestant ? That oath which is impugned to-day—does it make the King swear that he is a Protestant ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. To the extent of the oath——

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all. That oath could be taken by an infidel.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It could be taken by a Buddhist or a Mohammedan, or any other.

The PRIME MINISTER. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to point out where, in the declaration, the sovereign declares he is a Protestant ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The declaration, of course, to a certain extent, declares that he is a Protestant. But what I say is that the Settlement Act requires that the sovereign of Great Britain shall be a Protestant, and that besides the test oath it is a pre-requisite that there should be a declaration that he is a Protestant. According to this petition you would abolish all declaration whatever.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You petition the Crown to abolish the declaration, unless I mistake the meaning of the words in this resolution.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish to be clear in my understanding of the hon. gentleman's argument. Is not the test oath, which is objected to by the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Hon. Mr. Costigan) set out at length verbatim in the petition which it is proposed to send ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not a word of it is set out in the petition.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is set out in the motion given by the hon. member for Victoria.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, he has made a mistake in the notice which he gave. He supposed that this declaration was the test oath.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In the oath of abjuration, or whatever you wish to call it——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is not an oath at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is not the objectionable declaration that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Costigan) is attacking not set out in the motion of the hon. gentleman ?

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And is it necessary that the person that is taking that shall declare that he is a Protestant ? As I understand it, it only makes two declarations, one with reference to the doctrine of transubstantiation, and the other with reference to the worship of the Virgin.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It shows one thing, which must be clear to the hon. gentleman—that the person taking the declaration is not a Roman Catholic.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is, it shows that he does not believe in these two doctrines.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not read the amendment proposed here. He has taken the notice as given, covering the idea that this declaration was part of the oath. It does not belong to the oath at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish to be clear as to this point. When the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Costigan) put the notice on the paper he did not refer to this as part of the oath at all. He says :

> That by virtue of the Act of Settlement of 1689 the British sovereign, on the first day of the meeting of the first parliament, or at the coronation, is called upon to make the following declaration.

Then he sets out the declaration verbatim. He does not alter that in one syllable or letter, as I understand. Well, that is the declaration which he asks should be amended.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Where is the hon. gentleman reading from ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Page 432 of the 'Hansard.' That declaration makes no statement that he is a Protestant, it has no reference to that whatever. It simply says that he does not believe in the doctrine of transubstantiation and does not believe in the doctrine of the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary. Those are the only two declarations which are attacked and asked to be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no other declaration than that. The minister must remember that a prerequisite to the sovereign taking the Throne is an abjuration of the Catholic religion, if you do away with that declaration, there is none required of the sovereign. There is only the test oath which any Catholic can take, in which he does not abjure his religion, he does not say anything contrary to it. What I say is that the hon. gentleman in proposing his amendment ought to have been careful to see that the Settlement Act, and that the Bill of Rights are conformed with in every particular, for in them the sovereign has to abjure the Catholic religion. Now, I do not think there is any person in this House, be he Catholic or Protestant, who does not know the absurdity of proposing to the people of the British Empire that the sovereign of that mighty empire should be relieved of the necessity of declaring that he is a Protestant before he can ascend the Throne. I am perfectly in accord with my hon. friend in the objection he takes to those objectionable parts of the declaration which he has pointed out. But the declaration has been made and we cannot alter it at present. We cannot introduce an Act of parliament to relieve him from his declaration. The only power I know of which can do that, is the power which is vested in the Church of Rome. I do not know whether I am right or wrong in thinking that the Pope might relieve him from that necessity. But I know of no Protestant power that can relieve him from it. It is, after all, a question of sentiment that is before the House. It is a sentiment which the hon. gentleman, professing the religion that he does, and the right hon. gentleman also, have a perfect right to hold ; and we as Protestants in every portion of this empire are willing to agree to that change in the declaration which is required of the sovereign and which the hon. gentleman asks us to propose. But in his proposition he asks more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does he ask for ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He asks us to abolish a declaration altogether.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The declaration referred to in the resolution, nothing more.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no other declaration, if you abolish that declaration, there is none left for the sovereign to take.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What, then, is your objection to abolishing that declaration ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Change the wording of it so that the declaration required from the sovereign should not have any such sentiments as those expressed in the resolution. That would cover my view of the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is there anything more in it ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Point it out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to read anything in the declaration which he would like to retain ? It is time to draw a distinction.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, I did not say anything of the kind ; that is not the question at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought it was.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. After all, there are but two propositions in the declaration, one of them in reference to transubstantiation, the other in reference to the worship of the Virgin Mary, or some of the saints.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Which of these do you want to keep ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I stated that these two statements are obnoxious to all Catholics. The declaration as a whole is objectionable to them. The proposition of the hon. gentleman who introduced the resolution is perfectly logical. He says that the declaration as a whole is wrong, but he does not substitute anything which the Test Act requires. What we require is a declaration of the sovereign that he or she belongs to the Protestant religion, besides the test oath that is required of them. That is a simple doctrine.

Then, as to the expediency of introducing this resolution at the present time. There is no doubt that every subject and every parliament have a right to petition, there is only the question of expediency and opportuneness. Lord Salisbury has made a statement which, read between the lines, means that he thinks that the declaration required of the sovereign upon ascending the Throne is an objectionable one. Several members of the Imperial parliament, it appears, have followed in the same direction. That great organ of public opinion in England, the London Times, states further that it is the intention to change the declaration. In view of this fact, in view of the statement of Lord Salisbury, in view of the treatment which we received on a former occasion when we suggested legislation to the empire, is it advisable at the present moment to pass this resolution ? Had we not better wait a while and see whether Lord Salisbury's suggestion, as promised in the Times, is carried out ? The question of principle which comes up in the discussion of this motion of the hon. member for Victoria, is the real one after all. Perhaps we do not need to discuss the opportuneness of it. Certainly we have a right to petition if we like, and whether we do so now or at another time will be determined by a vote upon this question. But I would suggest to the mover, if he desires entire unanimity, to consider the several parts of his motion. The first clause is not objectionable ; the second clause is not objectionable ; the third clause, the one which I object to, could be modified in such a form that the declaration as now made by the King or Queen, as the case may be, would no longer be objectionable. Those objectionable parts should be omitted and a declaration should be framed in which those objectionable parts would not appear. The latter clause of it, I think, perhaps the hon. member who moved the resolution might agree to, as was suggested by the leader.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he were sitting down and proposing now to eliminate from this declaration what he considers the objectionable parts, what part would he eliminate and what part would he permit to remain ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not propose at the present to recast the declaration, but I say that any declaration required of the sovereign should not contain these objectionable parts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then if you take those out you leave nothing.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You would have to substitute another. The Minister of Railways and Canals is not so quick and apt as he usually is. He does not seem to follow the requirements of the British constitution which requires of the sovereign an abjuration of the Roman Catholic religion as a prerequisite to his ascending the Throne. You do not make any proposition to attack that. I do not believe that Canada intends to do anything of the kind. They are perfectly willing that a declaration of some kind or other which would not be so offensive in its terms as the present one should be made, because it is a prerequisite, before the soveregin shall ascend the Throne, that not only shall a test oath be taken, but that this declaration shall be required. This resolution would be stronger without the last portion of it. We should simply state the facts and give the opinion of the House in reference to the matter leaving to the parliament of Great Britain to determine in what manner the Act should be amended. I have, perhaps, a few compliments to pay to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) who last adressed the House. His remarks were refreshing because we had not had for a long time, that florid style of oratory in this House. It is the child's first night, and we must deal gently with him. The first speech is always received graciously by the House, but I will remind the hon. gentleman that perhaps it is pardonable to get off a lecture upon one occasion in the House, or perhaps one stump speech, but do not repeat it again. In regard to the remark of the hon. gentleman that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) received no applause when he sat down, I would state to the hon. gentleman that the hon. leader of the opposition voiced the sentiments of this side of the House, and when we consider the amount of applause that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson), coming with a reputation from his province, received from his followers in this House, I would tell him that he must not be so bold in his criticisms as to our opinions in reference to our leader. Perhaps, I have spoken longer than I intended to on the subject, I would like to support the motion of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan), but I would like to see it amended in the direction I have suggested. If it is amended in that direction, I think it will receive nearly unanimous support in this House.
