Mr. MACLEAN. In view of what has been said, it is evident that a mistake has been made. That being the case, is it not the intention of the leader of the government and of this House to tell us that it is their intention to withdraw this note from circulation ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I would like to put a question to the patriotic member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale). What were the loyal feelings of these gentlemen, who would not support the government in having a picture of an American canal on a Canadian bill, when the government that they supported voted a great deal of Canadian money to build a railway in the state of Maine.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) evidently has information that I have not gained from the study of the public accounts. If he will show me reasons to believe that his information is correct, I shall be glad to give him an answer.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). If one were to judge from the speech of the Minister of Finance he would come to the conclusion that the statement made by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was incorrect, and that there was no picture of the United States Soo canal on the Canadian four-dollar bill. But he cannot deny that such is the case. He says that there is a Canadian steamer going through the canal, therefore he is justified in supposing it to be a Canadian canal. But if he went down to Portland and saw the Grand Trunk Railway unloading their thousands of cars at the wharfs of that city, would he conclude that he was in the city of Montreal? That would be just as reasonable as to suppose that a picture of the American Soo canal is a representation of the Canadian Soo canal. The answer of the Minister of Finance was unworthy of him, because he is endeavouring to leave an impression on the minds of hon. members that is not true. I would ask the minister squarely: Is the picture of the canal on the four-dollar bill a picture of the Canadian canal or of the United States canal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I never had the pleasure of seeing the two and cannot give personal testimony.

Mr. WALLACE. That is no answer at all. Nobody requires the hon. minister to see the canal—that is not the question. The question is whether, now that the matter has been called to his attention by the public press and by the hon. member for East Simcoe, he is going to rise in his place and attempt to mislead the House and the country with the statement that, as it is a Canadian vessel that is going through, it is presumably a Canadian canal that it is traversing. He has heard the statement of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) who, holding the bill in his hand and knowing the place represented in this engraving, tells him that it is a picture of the American canal. The hon. minister now has the information and does not need to go to the spot to verify the statement. Having the information, what is he going to do about it? Is he going to withdraw the bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will consider that.

Mr. WALLACE. I think they had better consider it and pretty quickly too, and come to a conclusion quickly. And the only conclusion that will suit the people of Canada is that the bill be withdrawn from circulation. It is true that the Canadian people will lose some money by the printing of a bill that cannot be used, but this is only another evidence of the reckless disregard of the interests of the people shown by this government else their subserviency to the people of the United States. In either case it is to be condemned.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if these bills were not submitted to some person for examination and approval before they were allowed to be printed; and, if so, to whom?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, the whole thing is submitted to me for approval before it is printed.

Mr. SPROULE. Of course, the hon. minister may have been innocently deceived—that may happen to any person. But, now that the matter has been brought to his attention, is he still going to allow our money to be made an advertising medium for the United States? I do not think he should do so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The plan has been adopted of printing upon our notes scenes illustrating our various industries. One scene shows a wheat field. I am not prepared to guarantee that it is a Canadian wheat field. Another gives an illustration of the lumber industry. An American log, does not differ very much, I fancy, from a Canadian log, and I am not prepared to speak as to the log in that picture. And so on through the whole range of our industries. I desired that the great canal works of Canada should be represented, and that, for that purpose, a canal scene should be obtained. One lock is so much like another that hon. gentlemen may have discovered in this picture some likeness to a lock on the American side.

An hon. MEMBER. Why not take the Trent canal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One hon. gentleman suggests that we might take the Trent canal. I think the Tay canal would suit hon. gentlemen better. But if, to please hon. gentlemen opposite, we were to withdraw the bill and substitute one with a scene on the Tay canal, after it was issued, perhaps there might be difficulty in proving that it was not a representation of some other canal.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). The Minister of Finance is very kind in offering to alter the vignette on his bill to one of the Tay canal. A picture of that canal might have been published long before that hon. gentleman was born. He seems to think that he can raise some imputation by merely mentioning this canal. I have heard the same thing throughout the country, as if there was something wonderful or wrong about it, or something to be laughed at or sneered at about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not charge anything.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Tay canal is a work that was undertaken by a private company and built before the hon. gentleman was born. The charter contained a condition that the government could take the work over at any time. The government did take it over before I was a minister of the Crown and finished it, and it is one of the most important works ever built in Canada. It will compare favourably with thirteen or fourteen schemes we voted for last session in the shape of wharfs and buildings for the county of Shelburne. The Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) who ought to be the watch dog of this administration asked us last session to grant money for fifteen or——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes; last session——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member must not forget that we are now discussing simply the question which has been brought before the House by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is discussing some other question. The subject under discussion by the House is the printing of the four dollar Dominion bills.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the Speaker had allowed me, before giving his ruling, I would have put myself perfectly in order. I was going to point out that instead of putting the Tay canal or the Soo canal on these bills, there are fourteen or fifteen public works which are being constructed in the constituency of the Minister of Finance, which could have been selected for the honour, better than either the Tay canal or the Soo canal. If you rule me out of order, Mr. Speaker, I have simply to say that with all due deference to your ruling, I was as much in order as was the Minister of Finance. I could proceed to show the reasons why these works in Shelburne county should be used as a vignette on the four dollar bills and circulated from one end of the country to the other. The Minister of Finance talked about the letting of contracts. He is the last man in the House who should refer to that matter. He is the spokesman of a government whose administration of the affairs of this country has been notorious; a government that does not pay the slightest attention either to the law or to their own orders in council in the letting of contracts. He is the last man who should rise in this House to taunt us in reference to contract letting. What has he to say to any contract that has been let in this country by the Conservative government? They were always let above broad——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, they were always given to the lowest tenderer, and there was none of that manipulating about them that we see every day under this government, and which is a disgrace to the name of the public men of this country. We see hundreds of thousands of dollars given to favourites——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Question.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not even certificates required——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If I happen to be out of order, I am merely replying to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Finance. In deference to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, which I believe to be right, I shall say no more.

Mr. BENNETT. As ten thousand dollars is the standard amount now in vogue with this government, I hope and trust that this issue of four dollar bills will not exceed that amount. And as the Minister of Finance is like the burglar, that all locks look alike to him I suppose it makes little difference so far as he is concerned which lock is on the bill. I trust that the minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) will immediately withdraw the circulation of these bills, and that he will see the last of his advertisement of the American locks on Dominion notes. After the explanation of the Minister of Finance, I shall withdraw the motion to adjourn the House.

Motion withdrawn.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Hon. Mr. Fielding:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. ONESIPHORE TURGEON (Gloucester, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence, and the indulgence of this House, in my attempt, in the discharge of my duty to my constituents, to raise my feeble voice, after the eloquent addresses, strong in argument and lofty in sentiments, which have on different occasions, been delivered in this sanctuary of the people. Truly, from the very opening of this parliament, we have been brought under the influence of noble thoughts, reaching our mind and our heart with a magnetism, as though the great orators of the nineteenth century of Christian civilization, which have come and gone, had told us nothing of the noble virtues which have elevated mankind in the different portions of the globe, in which great nations have founded their existence for the expansion of the sentiments of equality, fraternity, justice and charity; sentiments which are above the wealth of trade, above the ambition of commerce, and without which, commerce, trade and industry can never reach the greatness, can never possess the stability they require for the true, and permanent happiness of the people.

We admired the hon. gentleman who moved the address (Mr. Guthrie) and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Marcil), the seconder; the former in his able statement of the true position of the country under a beneficent prosperity which has settled steadfast in our midst, opening new industries, new avenues of trade, and in the sequel of gigantic financial and commercial operations, procuring the comfort required for domestic happiness in steady employment and increase of wages to our industrial classes. We admired the hon. gentleman for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) in his honest declaration of the true feelings of his people, nursing a sincere patriotism, permeated with generous loyalty to all races who, inspired by the sense of gratitude, cherish the one common ambition to live in harmony with other people, for the glory and the expansion of the British nation and of British liberty. That hon. gentleman has, no doubt, heard in his travels on the opposite shores of the bay which separates us, the Acadian fisherman, when the storm has abated, and he feels that he will once more reach his harbour and his fireside, after having sung his cherished hymn, 'Ave Maris Stella,' sing also, in the strain of the same emotion 'God Save the Queen.' We were then, with scarcely any notice, brought to witness the most gratifying spectacle of men of different creeds from all parts of the country, rising from their seats on both sides of this House, rising above party lines, solemnly to express their urgent desire that the only vestige of the bitterness of centuries gone by, should be eliminated from British statutes.

It was then that we admired the bright, generous leader of the opposition who followed the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall), both gentlemen from that happy province where harmony, restored in past centuries, has ever since reigned undisturbed. Their common sentiments, generous feelings are a glorious effect of a long-lived peace and harmony; their mingled aspirations the guarantee of the future. The rich and noble sentiments expressed on that occasion, recalled the days of a great epoch when the appeals, the pathetic appeals to liberty and justice, of Grattan and Curran, of Burke and Pitt, had already softened the heart of the British nation, which was only awaiting the showers of the powerful eloquence of Daniel O'Connell, to melt in a wealthy fusion of the noble sentiments of fraternity, equality, justice, liberty and charity—to the honour of the British nation, and the comfort of the rest of the Christian world, and of Canada in particular.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that I should have ere this made special mention of the eulogy of our most beloved and regretted Queen Victoria, by the right hon. leader of the government. My reticence, Mr. Speaker, is owing to the fact that it is a monument which, in the depth of my admiration, a sense of delicacy forbids me to touch. It is a monument which we are better able to contemplate than to describe. Nevertheless, one particular popular passion is stimulated by the consideration of that great speech.

It is the jealousy of the Canadian people, in the depth of their affection, of their admiration of the great sovereign who has been called away, a jealousy which forbids one to believe that another loved her more, admired her more than he did; that one can be more grateful than he for the immense benefactions she has been pleased to pour upon Canada during the happy days of her long and glorious reign. Upon him—the orator of the Canadian people—upon him alone was bestowed the providential gift of a language adequate to his feelings of appreciation of her great virtues and noble deeds. To each and every one of us belongs the just, undeniable claim to nurse in silence and modesty, the same sentiments of love, of loyalty, of gratitude—the same wishes for the welfare of her empire under the sovereignty of her worthy son and his successors. Oh, Victoria! you have prayed for your subjects on the day of your coronation, and your prayers have complacently brought down divine blessings upon your territories. Pray yet further from a higher throne, and from this continent of America, from this soil of Canada, the prayers of your French Catholic subjects will meet yours in heaven.

It was under such favourable conditions of peace, harmony, and prosperity, with opening industries, and with trade extending with gigantic strides, that the hon. Minister of Finance was called upon the other day to reveal to the Canadian people the true state of their public affairs. Great things had already been achieved by the hon. gentleman upon whom the duty devolved of looking after our home requirements, and our fiscal and trade relations with other countries. He had reached unprecedented results by his inspired combination of loyalty with figures, by his mingled gratitude and generosity in his compounding of dollars and cents, of pounds, shillings and pence, which was to establish our commercial and trade relations with the mother country.

It has been the good fortune of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when the voice of the people placed in his hands the care of our destinies, realizing his situation, and the expectations of our mingled community, finding that he had to form a government strong in upright and honest diplomacy, able to cope with the exigencies of the hour, and the requirements of the country, to have called to his assistance men whose well-known talent and ability were already a guarantee to the people, and to have been in a position to distribute to each of them the branch of the administration for which he was particularly well qualified.

It is owing to his intelligent distribution of offices to his colleagues that the country has been in the happy position of contemplating during the last three or four years, a series of eloquent surpluses of revenue over expenditure. I say eloquent surpluses, because they do not give us a mere mathematical subtraction of the amount of expenditure from the larger amount of revenue, but because his figures give us also, in their infallible language, the story of the great prosperity of the country, coupled with an unprecedented increase of trade.

In his budget speech, delivered on the 14th of the month, the hon. Minister of Finance was able to show a surplus of $8,054,714.51, which, added to the two previous surpluses of 1898 and 1899, form a total of surpluses since 1896 of $14,615,075. Deducting from this amount a deficit of $519,981 for the year 1896, partly due to the Conservative administration, we have a net amount of surpluses of $14,095,144 over the ordinary expenditure of the government.

During the last year the government have had to meet large expenses on capital account. They have had to provide for an amount of $7,468,843 for public works, government railways, railway subsidies, subsidy to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Notwithstanding all this expenditure, the public debt, instead of being increased, has been decreased by $779,639. The net debt of Canada on June 30, 1899, was $266,273,446, while the net debt on June 30, 1900, was $265,493,806.

Besides this extraordinary state of affairs for the past years during the administration of the present government, the Minister of Finance also declares to us that in his calculations for the current year, he expects a revenue of $52,750,000, and a probable expenditure of $46,400,000. He is, therefore, in a position to expect, at the end of the current exercise, another surplus of $6,350,000. His happy calculations of the past are a guarantee for his future expectations.

Now, having considered the history of the revenues and the expenditures during the term of the administration, the intelligent citizen of Canada naturally turns his attention to the state of the public debt under the same administration. This administration has only been in existence for four fiscal years, and here is what the intelligent citizen finds. He finds that the increase of the national debt has been :

" 1898-9	2,317,047

In 1899-1900, the public debt has been reduced by $779,000. So, the total increase during the four years has been $6,986,373, which is an average yearly increase of $1,749,000 for the four years.

Our intelligent citizen will then turn his attention to the trade of the country, to the growth of this trade, and the increase which he anticipates to a certain extent by the happy methods of our farmers, the happy turn of our mechanics, the jubilant feelings of our traders. He looks at the amount of the trade in 1897, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier established his tariff for revenue, after having lowered the tariff on 157 articles of importation. He finds that the volume of our trade in 1896 was $239,000,000, and he finds that four years later, at the end of the last fiscal year, it had reached the amount of $381,000,000, an increase of $142,000,000 in four years only, or an average yearly increase of $35,500,000.

He finds that our farmers are doing more business and making more money. For he finds also by the budget speech that during the last three years the exportations of the products of our farms to foreign markets have increased by $54,000,000.

The intelligent Canadian citizen will go further in his investigations, and he will inquire into the rate of taxation. The Hon. Minister of Finance by his budget speech shows that, taking as a basis the importations for consumption and duties imposed upon them, the proportion of duties collected in 1896 was 19·28 per cent, while the proportion of duties collected in 1900, was only 15·98 per cent, or a difference of 2·30 per cent, or one-eighth of all taxes.

But, Mr. Speaker, our opponents claim that if we have surpluses, we also have increased the public debt, and that the Conservative party, in the first years of their administration, likewise had surpluses. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), speaking on this subject the other night, referred in eulogistic terms, to the Conservative administration under the late Sir Leonard Tilley. Sir Leonard Tilley, he said, had in 1883 a surplus of $6,316,000, and in 1884 had come before parliament with another surplus of $7,064,492, or, as the hon. member for Pictou makes it, a total of $8,073,492. That achievement, said the hon. gentleman, had eclipsed the brilliant record which our present Finance Minister was able to lay before parliament on the 14th instant.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not behind the hon. gentleman in my admiration of the late Sir Leonard Tilley, for I know well the patriotic sentiments and tender feelings of this distinguished statesman, of whom the province of New Brunswick is proud. But for all that, I can hardly believe that had Sir Leonard Tilley continued in office he would have been able to repeat these surpluses. On the contrary, I do not believe that he could have avoided the deficits which his successors had to face, unless perhaps he could have shown himself possessed of a stronger power of resistance to the clamours and pressure of the manufacturers.

But, Mr. Speaker, surpluses of similar amounts may have been produced under dissimilar circumstances. Surpluses may be produced by different causes, and with different effects.

We have seen the circumstances under which the surpluses of our present Minister of Finance have been arrived at. Under a state of unexampled prosperity, and unexampled increase of trade, an increase of trade which has leaped in four years from $239,000,000 to $381,000,000. Our present surpluses have been brought about by an immense increase of trade following a general decrease of tariff. Our present tariff is so framed as to open new markets, foreign markets to the products of the country, and above all to the products of the farmer which have proved an increase in the foreign markets only of $54,000,000 during the last four years. In a state of prosperity, and with plenty of money, our people have imported more largely. An immense amount of importation of goods has followed, producing a corresponding increase of revenue, while the percentage of taxation has been decreased by one-eighth, or more, as I have already stated.

But, Mr. Speaker, under what circumstances did the Conservative party raise their surpluses? Were their surpluses the sequel of a large increase of trade in the country? Decidedly no. For we find that during the eighteen years of Conservative administration the volume of our trade, which was $203,000,000 in 1880, had only reached $239,000,000 in 1896, a total increase in sixteen years of thirty-six millions, or an average yearly increase of $2,250,000. Whereas our trade increased by $142,000,000 in four years, their trade increased by thirty-six millions in sixteen years.

What then was the cause of their surpluses? Their surpluses were due, therefore, to an increase of taxation upon the same amount of trade. They were due to an increase of tariff upon the same amount of imports. The taxable power of the country was drained, and the surpluses of the first few years were necessarily followed by a series of deficits, which their financiers were impotent to redeem or to stop.

But our adversaries will tell us again: 'You have increased the public debt.' Our reply is simple. The public debt during the four years of the administration of our friends has received a total increase of $6,986,373, or an average yearly increase of $1,746,593, while the returns of the Conservative administration show an average yearly increase of over $6,500,000 during the sixteen years of their administration.

Our hon. friends opposite lay considerable stress on the government continuing, instead of decreasing expenditure, and reducing the public debt. Well, we all know that while there is no desire on the part of our people to see the public debt increase, they are too intelligent not to understand that we must first see that the commerce of the country, our avenues of commerce, and our facilities for expansion, are improved as much as possible. I have the honour to represent the constituency of Gloucester in which there is a mixed population. In 1896 the people of that county had not yet gained confidence in the Liberal party, but after four years experience of the administration of this government, they gave expression to their confidence in the present policy and administration, by returning me by a majority of 1,000 votes but four, although I had been defeated in 1896. This is proof positive of the satisfaction of the people of that county, at any rate, with the present order of things, and I am convinced that it is not their desire that the government should neglect the wants of the country in order to reduce the public debt. We believe in a policy of opening up new avenues of trade, of improving our facilities for the transportation of grain from the west, and I have seen with pleasure, during the last few days, hon. members opposite, joining with the supporters of the government in voting millions of dollars for the improvements of the great harbours and lakes and seaports of this country. We have voted and are prepared to vote liberally for such improvements.

The Department of Fisheries is one which has also been well looked after by the present government. I say it in all sincerity that the present government has shown every interest in the requirements of the fisheries and in looking after the wants of our fishermen, engaged in that most arduous of pursuits, and who contribute so largely to the revenues of the country.

I have been in a position to see the results of some of the expenditures for the improvement of our harbours and to provide protection for the fishermen of my own and neighbouring counties. But the further attention of the government is required in that direction. The chief pursuit of my constituents is in the deep-sea fishery. The government cannot pay too serious attention to the requirements of that hardy and industrious class. We have seen with pleasure the introduction by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in various counties of the maritime provinces of the system of bait refrigeration. I hope that the hon. minister will not slacken in his efforts until that system is established along the whole coast of the maritime provinces and in the counties of Gaspe and Bonaventure, in the neighbouring province of Quebec. The system will prove of great benefit, not merely to the fishermen, by saving their time, but to the country at large, through the increased catch the fishermen will be able to procure during the season. Much time is now lost in looking after bait. Our fishermen, returning at the end of the week, must occupy a great part of Monday in securing fresh bait. With the new system, they will be able to attend to the fishing alone, while their sons will be able to look after the procuring of the bait and seasoning it ready for the use of the fishermen when they are ready to start out on Monday morning. I should be derelict in my duty if I did not commend this improvement with the strongest words at my command, on this first occasion of my addressing this honourable House, or, indeed, addressing any audience except my own people, among whom I have lived for thirty years, and whom I am accustomed to address in the language of my heart and without the difficulty I find in using the English tongue. I hope the government will continue to have at heart the interests of our fishermen. During the four years of their administration, this government has done much by the construction of break-waters and wharfs to protect not only the property but the lives of our fishermen. While speaking on this subject, I cannot but refer to the great storm of the 13th of September last, when thirty-seven of our most useful citizens, noble, generous sons, and faithful husbands and worthy fathers, whose sole ambition was to work for the Christian education of their children, true representatives of that simple spirit of Christianity which has always prevailed in that community, fell victims to the fury of the waves. But, while we were compelled to witness a spectacle, which, perhaps, a man could not endure to see twice in a lifetime, we had the consolation of knowing that, owing to the improvements made by the government, owing to the deepening of the channel, instead of being compelled to go twenty-five or fifty miles around Miscou Island, many fishermen were able to make the harbour and so find shelter and safety, where otherwise they must inevitably have shared the death of their comrades. Some sixty or seventy-five men who would have lost their lives on that memorable day were able to enter the harbour. Fifteen minutes later and they must have perished. While I ask the government to continue their attention to the interests of the fishermen of the maritime provinces, I should fail in my duty if I did not express the thanks of my people to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and also to the Minister of Public Works for the construction of break-waters and other improvements to facilitate the work of our fishermen and protect their lives and property.

Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to claim so long the attention of this honourable House. But I feel that I have one more duty to perform before I can take my seat and before I can return to my constituents. As the first French-speaking member who has had the honour to raise his voice in this parliament since the noble utterance of the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) the other evening as to the position of the French Canadians and the Liberal party and his splendid eulogy of our beloved leader. I cannot but express my sincere thanks, my appreciation and admiration of his noble words for the encouragement of the French Canadian population. I shall not attempt to speak for the French Canadians of the province of Quebec. They will, no doubt, express their views at the first opportunity. But, as the only French-speaking member from the maritime provinces who will address the House in this debate—as my hon. friend from Kent, N.B. (Mr. LeBlanc), I understand, will not have the opportunity, as the debate must close in a few hours—I must speak on behalf of my fellow-French Acadians. Knowing their sentiments, knowing their gratitude for British institutions and the treatment they have received under those institutions, I must thank the Minister of Customs for his eloquent expression of the feeling which I know he entertains and to assure him that the good feeling which has so long existed will be improved and strengthened by his noble and eloquent words. He has, I am sure, by those words, endeared himself to every French Acadian. The harmony that was restored centuries ago still remains undisturbed, and the sentiments expressed by the Minister of Customs are cherished in the hearts of my people. From this day, I know, we shall be able to contemplate with joy and hope the fact that we have six millions of souls from the Atlantic to the Pacific, French Canadian, French Acadian, English, Scotch, and Irish—Catholics and Protestants—working together for the welfare of the community, devoted to the prosperity of the country, united by a spirit of Christian brotherhood and with faith in the future of Canada under British institutions. I must say also that the words of the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) are greatly appreciated by the French Acadians of the maritime provinces, and that owing to the sentiments expressed by that hon. gentleman and by the Minister of Customs, the French Acadians will be more essentially British in the future than in the past. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members of this House for the patient hearing that has been accorded me.

Mr. JAMES KENDRY (West Peterborough). Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I have not been able to follow the hon. gentleman

(Mr. Turgeon) as closely as I would like. In the few remarks that I am about to make I intend to confine myself almost exclusively to the effects of the preferential tariff on the woollen industry of this country. As a practical woollen manufacturer of over thirty-five years, I may be supposed to know something about the conditions governing that industry in this country.

The capital employed in the woollen mills of Canada amounts to about $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, and employ over 12,000 hands, and has at least 60,000 people directly dependent upon it. Now, who are these people ? They are the sons and daughters of our hardy industrious pioneers, their fathers have helped to build up this great Dominion, they have been taxed for its development, they have struggled to provide schools for their children and fit them for good citizenship ; and I contend that they have been successful, for in no country under the sun, not even in the United States, can we find a more intelligent, more industrious, more progressive class of people than the woollen and cotton operatives of Canada. These are the citizens that this government, with the preferential tariff, is surely and certainly going to drive out of our borders to seek homes and a livelihood in the United States —a country that at least knows the value of protecting its markets for its own people.

Last session the woollen manufacturers had an interview with the government, and we pointed out exactly what is happening to-day. We pointed out that a large number of our best operatives were leaving, and would continue to leave for the United States. Within the last seven weeks I know of seven mills in this country, in one of which I am interested myself, who have had to discharge 50 hands, and within the next three or four weeks they are liable to be shut up altogether for some time. On the floor of this House on March 30th, 1900, the Minister of Customs pointed with pride to the increased importation of goods under the preferential tariff ; he gave a list of the imports of eighteen of the largest industries of Great Britain to Canada. Had the hon. gentleman stopped for a moment to consider, or had he cared to consider, he would have seen in that statement of his a very startling fact. He would have seen, Sir, that 56 per cent of the whole increase was made up of woollens and cottons, woollens alone furnishing 38 per cent of the total increase, thus leaving the remaining 44 per cent to be divided amongst sixteen other industries. He would also have found that it took thirteen of the industries to make up the value of the importation in woollens alone. But I will put these figures a little plainer. Of all the goods imported in 1900 under the preferential tariff, about 30 per cent were woollen goods. In round numbers, about $7,000,000 worth of woollens were imported out of the whole $26,000,000. Now, is it any wonder that men who have invested capital in woollen manufactures are very much discontented with the operation of the preferential tariff ? As I have already mentioned, it is driving a large number of our best employees out of this country to the United States. Would it not seem to be a wiser policy, Mr. Speaker, for this government to endeavour to keep at home our own Canadians instead of letting them go away to the south ; instead of spending large sums of money to bring in Doukhobors and other people of that class ? Our government spend half a million dollars a year to bring in immigrants, and still pursue a policy that drives away our own native born Canadians. I have a letter saying that last week some 80 or 90 left the village of Hespeler alone, they have gone to the United States, and in a short time they will probably send for their families. Now, we must say for the United States that they are careful to look after their own people, and in that respect we might take a lesson from them. I want to show you exactly what this policy will do in so far as the labouring men are concerned. I have always wanted to see the workingmen well paid, but we do not want to see them put on the same level as the workingmen of Great Britain. No man in this country wants to see our employees treated as they are in England.

Now, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I had better name to you those thirteen industries which I mentioned a moment ago. They are : Drugs, dyes and chemicals ; flax, hemp and jute manufactures ; glass and its manufactures ; machinery and other iron and steel manufactures ; soaps, oils, paints and colours ; paper and its manufactures ; pickles, sauces and capers ; earthenware and chinaware ; fancy goods, hats and caps ; leather and its manufactures. Now, out of these thirteen industries, woollens alone are affected, that is the industry that this preference is especially going to strike.

Now, I claim that it not only affects the woollen industry but it affects wool. In the North-west they are beginning to grow as fine a quality of wool as is to be found in any part of the world, and we are now brought under a policy which compels us to close our mills to their wool. Just when they are getting to the point where they can produce any quantity of wool for their own market, they find their own market being shut to them. This preferential tariff policy also affects the towns all over the country where woollen industries are established. Some of these towns have given bonuses to the woollen factories, and possibly exemption from taxation. Let me state here that four years ago I condemned in the strongest terms the policy of giving a preference to any other country but Canada. I stand in this House as a Canadian, and support Canadian interests. I was born and brought up in Canada, and I say that we have no right to give any other country a preference to the detriment of our own people. If you want to build up this country you have got to do it on broader lines than the government are pursuing, we must build it up on the lines of our own interests. Surely our workingmen have vested rights in this country as well as capitalists. Those operating in our woollen mills usually occupy their own houses, they have social, pecuniary and political interests in this country, which the government ought to respect. Some time ago, when I was mayor of the town of Peterborough, I remember that many manufacturers were talking of locating there, but they were always afraid of the Liberals getting into power, knowing that if they did a Liberal government would probably pass legislation that would jeopardize their capital.

In 1896, the right hon. the Prime Minister came to Peterborough and stated on the public platform that the manufacturer of this country would not be disturbed, and that vested rights had no cause to fear the advent of the Liberals to power. Let me ask this House, if the Prime Minister has been true to his promise. What position does he occupy to-day ? I have been nearly five years a member of this House, and never heard the policy of the Liberal party defined until the last ten days, when the Prime Minister and his supporters told us what they thought about it. I had always believed that the policy of this government was on the principal of the old national policy, and for my part I found it hard to discover where the line was drawn. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has also spoken, and he has announced what he thinks the Liberal policy is. Well, Sir, we know what his opinions on fiscal questions were in former years, we know that he stated that if he got into power he would remove the last vestige of protection from the manufactures of Canada. We did not expect much from that hon. gentleman, and, at least to some extent, we have not been disappointed. The Prime Minister, in the course of his speech, said :

> If we impose a duty of 25 per cent on articles of any kind, it is manifest that the manufacturers of similar goods in this country must have the benefit of that 25 per cent.

That statement shows how very little the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows about the trade of this country. It is well known that in countries where goods are manufactured, certain goods are sold cheaper for export than they are sold in the country of manufacture. I myself know some gentlemen in this House who buy machinery in the United States, and they can buy for export to Canada cheaper than the people of the United States can buy exactly the same goods in their own country. It is the same way in England, and, therefore, although we may have 25 per cent, it is not 25 per cent on the real value of the goods. As a matter of fact, we do not even get our old protection to-day, simply because they sell job goods, or 'seconds,' for this country. Therefore, we have not the protection we should have. This government should take means to appoint some competent authority to adjust the value of the goods imported into Canada. As a matter of fact, we do not know what the duty is to-day, because at one port they collect one duty and at another port another duty. There should be appraisers in each town, as is the case in the United States, and no matter whether they are job goods or seconds or anything else, they should pay duty under the regular tariff and at their full proper price.

Now, the provinces most directly affected by the preferential tariff are the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which are the largest manufacturing provinces in the Dominion. And while I speak with particular reference to the woollen industry, I wish to say, that although other industries are less affected by the preference, yet, all our industries must be injured to a greater or less extent. The great question with us in the woollen industry is the question of labour, and the more labour we put on our goods the further we get away from competition with England. We pay our workmen in Canada from 50 to 75 per cent higher wages than they pay them in England, and hon. gentlemen will see at once to what extent we are handicapped in this respect. I believe that it is impossible for us to reduce our wages in Canada, because we have a high protectionist country to the south of us, and high class labour will not stay in Canada unless it is paid about the current wages in the United States. We, therefore, cannot get as cheap labour in Canada as they have in England. I have some experience in this matter, Sir, because I visited some large manufacturing establishments in England, and I state here that I, as a Canadian manufacturer, never wish to see Canadian workmen in as poorly paid a position as are the workmen of England. Therefore, if we have to compete with English goods under this preferential tariff, it is absolutely certain that we will have to reduce the wages of our workmen, or else close up our manufacturing establisments. As a matter of fact, I do not see anything else for it than to close our places up. This, of course, would be a hard blow to Canadians who have their money invested in the woollen industry, but it will bear harder still on the thousands of workingmen who are engaged in Canadian woollen factories. The importation of low woollen goods is going on by leaps and bounds since the total preferential tariff came into force in July last. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have argued time and again that a tariff was not made to suit one class of individuals above another, but, Sir, in face of the above facts, can you not see that this preferential clause is aimed directly and almost entirely against the woollen operatives and manufacturers of this country, and directly and largely in favour of the woollen manufacturers of Great Britain. Just consider, $8,933,000 worth of woollen goods imported in one year into a market of something less than 6,000,000 of a population, or nearly one dollar and a half's worth for every man, woman and child in the whole Dominion.

I would ask what share can there be left for our own woollen mills, or what prospect can there be of this industry holding out against such a competition? During the last election, the hon. the Minister of Labour went up and down this country proclaiming himself to be the apostle of labour, the friend of the workingman. He was introduced as such at a public meeting held in Peterborough, and the workingman's vote was solicited on the strength of this new portfolio in the interests of labour. Where is he now? Is he to speak on behalf of the 12,000 operatives? Is there one member on the government side of this House who is independent enough to speak a word in favour of so arranging this fatal tariff that this industry may be saved for the country?

We have a Minister of Labour in Canada —at least I heard we had such a minister during the last election—but I have heard little about him since, and I wonder where he is to-day. I assume that he is on his way to Australia, but nobody seems to have been appointed to take his place in the cabinet. I wonder the Minister of Labour did not interfere when the government decided to embark in this policy of giving this preference to England, because there is no doubt that labour in Canada will be greatly injured by it. This preference will undoubtedly be the means of injuring not only the woollen industry, but other industries throughout Canada, because you cannot injuriously affect one without injuring all. There are other considerations which enter into the woollen industry of Canada which, perhaps, the government do not pay heed to. Let us take the plant which is required for carrying on that industry. We will say that the plant of a mill cost $130,000 in Canada. That plant in England would be worth only $100,000, because we have to pay the duty and freight here. There is $30,000 more that a Canadian woollen mill has to invest in its industry at the start, and besides that, our coal costs more in Canada, the interest on our money is more, and the cost of our labour is higher than in England. I believe, Sir, that there are any number of manufacturers who will bear me out in the statement, that if we could put down the cost of labour in Canada to what it is in England, we could compete with the English manufacturers to-day. But, Sir, I never want to see labour in Canada as poorly paid as it is in England. However, this preferential tariff is bound to militate against the interests of labour in Canada, and I have no doubt that when the next four years come around the government will have some trouble with their own supporters to keep them in line on this question. I understood the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) to say that he had a hosiery concern in his constituency, and that they were perfectly satisfied with the present conditions. I hardly think the hon. gentleman is right in that. But, was it not inconsistent on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) to announce that he was a free trader all his life, and at the same time to tell us that he is in favour of the bounty system, which is about the most drastic form of protection that can be imagined. I, for my part, Mr. Speaker, am in favour of giving a bounty or adopting any other fiscal policy which will tend to strengthen the industries of this country, but I do not believe in helping out one industry at the expense of another. I often think that if we had our woollen mills located in Nova Scotia we would be a good deal better off than we are, and that, perhaps, if we moved down in the neighbourhood of Sydney, this government might give us a bounty, the same as they have done to the iron and steel men.

There has been a good deal of talk in this House about the beet-root sugar industry. The Ontario government have granted a bonus to that industry, but when the farmers of Ontario, who can grow beet roots as well as in any other part of the world, asked this government to grant them a bounty, the government declined to come to their assistance. I always understood from gentlemen opposite that the farmers were their special care, but now we see that the government allow the farmers to get out of their difficulties as well as they can, while they render all the assistance in their power to the iron and steel manufacturers.

Now in reference to the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), we all know that in 1896 those of us who were candidates in Ontario never heard of that hon. gentleman then. I understood that the Liberal party repudiated him altogether in my riding. They said they did not want to have anything to do with him, and he was not seen in any of the constituencies.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, yes, he was in Lincoln.

Mr. KENDRY. I did not know he was in Lincoln. I may say that that hon. gentleman visited the town of Peterborough, where I live, and he got there the same kind of reception that he gets all over the country. His friends had engaged the opera house and hired a brass band, and I think all they could muster to meet him was about seventy-five. He thought it was a cold place, and he left it for other parts.

The Minister of Customs the other evening said this :

> I may state here that when we introduced the preferential tariff, it was entirely out of love to Great Britain, and losing sight of every other consideration.

The hon. gentleman was satisfied to give the capital and the labour of this country to England, for that is exactly what this government are doing with their preferential tariff. They are willing that our employees should leave the country, and that the labour on the goods which come in should be done in Huddersfield, Birmingham, and the woollen centres of England. That is exactly our condition to-day. I understand that this parliament is here to legislate in the interest of the people of Canada, and not in the interest of the manufacturers of England.

I think we were told by the Minister of Customs the other evening that the woollen manufacturers should go home and work harder and eat less, and that they should be more alive. Well, I consider that the woollen manufacturers of this country are just about as much alive as the man who makes biscuits. The biscuit manufacturer has double the protection that the woollen manufacturer has. The hon. gentleman made the statement that there was only 25 per cent on biscuits, but the fact is that there is 27½ per cent. Besides, he gets his raw material, his flour, in this country, and his labour is largely wind, or something of that kind, while the woollen manufacturer has to import his raw material from other countries. I did not intend to allude to any personal matter, but it was brought on by the Minister of Customs himself. I want to say, so far as that gentleman is concerned, that he is looking after the biscuit industry of this country, if he is not looking after the woollen industry.

So far as the preferential tariff is concerned, I hold that this government are doing a great injustice to the towns of Canada. In the town of Peterborough, as in other towns, we have done everything we could, in the way of exemption from taxes and otherwise, to have manufactories located there. The object was to build up our town. And after the people of this country, both in Ontario and Quebec, have given all the encouragement they could, in exemption from taxation, in buildings and lands in some cases, for the promotion of manufacturing, this government comes forward and takes it all away. In my place in this House, I want to denounce in the strongest terms the preferential tariff of this government.

We had the minister without portfolio from Quebec (Mr. Dobell), saying the other day that the people of Quebec were perfectly satisfied with the tariff. I understood him to say that the shoe industry of Quebec was perfectly satisfied with it. Did he say that ?

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. KENDRY. Well, I will read what the hon. gentleman did say. I want to show his position, because I understand that in Quebec there is an industry suffering greatly under this tariff, and I want to get him right. He said :

> I claim for the present government of Canada that they have passed a resolution by which the products of Great Britain are admitted in the rate of their tariff at 12½ per cent, and next year at 25 per cent reduction. This we have done, not asking any compensation. There is a class of our fellow-citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for a quid pro quo. The Canadian government has ignored such sentiments. We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain. We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade which has done so much for England.

I understand that the hon. gentleman is a free trader. We want to know where he stands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to put myself right so far as the preferential tariff is concerned. I do not speak for my leader in this House; I am quite satisfied with his resolution; but in what I say, I am speaking for myself, and I condemn in the strongest terms any preference to any other country. That is my position to-day.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. May I say a word in explanation ? What the hon. gentleman quoted a few moments ago was what Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated on his arrival in Liverpool. I gave it as a quotation, and I was very proud of it as coming from the lips of a Canadian.

Mr. KENDRY. And you agreed with it ?

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. Entirely.

Mr. KENDRY. That is the same thing. Now, I want to say to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the premier of this country that I consider that these gentlemen have done a great injustice to this country. In 1876 and 1877 I was in the manufacturing business. We all remember the deputations which came here to interview the government at that time; we know how those deputations were received; and I want to say that the deputations of manufacturers who come here to-day to wait on this government are received in exactly the same way. It has been said in this House that we do not want any tinkering with the tariff; but these gentlemen, ever since they came into office, have been tinkering with the tariff. They first gave a preference of 12½ per cent, then they altered it to 25 per cent, and afterwards they altered it to one-third. What is that but tinkering with the tariff? I want to say that no man is warranted in going into manufacturing in this country to-day under this tariff. I would not invest one dollar in manufacturing in this country, with such a preference against me. If we owe England anything, let us pay it, no matter what it is—whether it is one million or two million dollars. But I say it is not fair to this country that the government should give this preference, not to England—we are not giving it to England—but to the manufacturers of Yorkshire. I say it is a matter of vested rights in this country; but it seems that we have no vested rights in this country which this government is not willing to legislate away.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a letter, part of which I intend to read to the House. I understand that the Prime Minister has received a copy of it. I may say that it comes from the manufacturers of this country as a whole, and not from any individual manufacturer. It is as follows:

Hon. W. S. Fielding,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith a paragraph taken from last week's Journal of Fabrics, showing the imports of woollen and worsted fabrics as compared with last year. You will notice a startling increase for the month of January, nearly 40 per cent, in woollen fabrics, and over 35 per cent in worsted fabrics. You will note also that there is a falling off in all other textile exports from Great Britain to Canada, except carpets, which is slightly increased, about 10 per cent.

When we interviewed you in Ottawa we told you that the 33⅓ preferential rate had not fully gotten into operation, and that we should feel it when the spring imports were received. Our worst fears are more than realized. Our future looks desperate. Surely there is some way in which you can afford relief. There were over fifty employees discharged at the Auburn mills, Peterboro', last week. Fifty more will be laid off this week, as the orders are being completed and no new orders coming in. During the past month we have discharged over 200 employees at Hespeler alone. Lomas's mill at Almonte, has completely closed down, and other mills are running on short time. The repeat orders for spring are of such small character, and coming in so slowly that it looks as though there would not be in six months from now 25 per cent of the woollen machinery in operation that there was in July of last year. I cannot think that you will allow that condition of affairs to continue. It is a case of life and death with us, and matters should not be allowed to drift along until next year. Our help will be scattered. I am informed by Mr. Brodie that forty-seven men left Hespeler last week for the United States. They left their families behind until they obtained work, when they propose to send for them. Our machinery will be lying idle, and getting out of condition. Fixed charges will be running on, and there will be a very ruinous loss of capital before the end of this year. Our general manager informs us that owing to the state of his orders he will be obliged to discharge over 200 more persons by the 10th April, which will leave only 400 at the mill, where we employed up to quite recently 800. I fear you do not realize the serious condition of the woollen industry and the danger it is in of being completely extinguished.

Woollen machinery is only fit for making woollen goods, and buildings are erected especially for the convenience of manufacturing woollens. It is all very well for people who have no practical knowledge of these things to say with a light heart—as many members of parliament do in their speeches—'why not turn your attention to something else?' Well, when everything one has got is invested in an enterprise, what can he turn his attention to? It requires capital and experience to embark in any manufacturing enterprise. Our capital is invested in the woollen industry, and our experience is in the manufacturing of woollen goods. I venture to say that you do realize that the woollen industry is the only one that has been hit, and hit hard, and I may say, without the slightest exaggeration, is on the brink of ruin by the operation of the preferential tariff.

We do not object to the preference to Great Britain, we are prepared to support it, but the tariff should be so arranged that we should be put on an equality with the Lancashire manufacturers.

I can assure you that the situation is really serious, and the financial institutions who are supporting the various large woollen industries—what I mean by supporting is discounting their paper and making them advances—are becoming seriously alarmed. If they withdraw their confidence and refuse to continue to make advances, the mills will have to close down, and that is just what is in sight, I fear.

It looks to us, and to a great many of the members of the House, that the woollen industry has been singled out for the severest competition, not only by reason of the peculiar advantage of British manufacturers of woollens, but by reason of the extent to which German goods are smuggled into Canada through Great Britain under pretense of partial manufacture in England. You will note that the several departments of the textile trade are relatively untouched by the preferential tariff. The silk trade, the linen trade, the jute trade, and the cotton trade all appear to be exempt from the severe competition suffered by the woollen mills.

I greatly regret to say that many members of the House I have spoken with do not vote as they talk, as I have been assured by many of them, including some members of the cabinet, that they were protectionists, and that we ought to have some relief; but they vote the other way when relief is asked for. I hate to put it in that way, but it is a true statement of the case.

In making this appeal I do so in the hope that the facts already before you, and the additional information contained therein will be fully and fairly considered by the government and that something will be done for us this session.

I have nothing more to say, Mr. Speaker, on this question except to express again the hope that the government will see its way to afford some relief to this very important industry.

Mr. R. SMITH (Vancouver). Mr. Speaker, as a new member in this House, I deemed it more fitting that I should, during this, my first session, sit very quietly in the House and take in all that was happening around me. And therefore, on this occasion, I shall not take up the time of hon. members except for a very few moments.

Indeed I should not have risen were it not for certain arguments presented by some hon. gentlemen opposite on the question under discussion, on which I considered it necessary that, on account of the position I occupy, I should say a few words. The position is taken by these hon. gentlemen to whom I have referred, that the protection of the manufacturing industries of this country necessarily implies the prosperity of the labouring classes—that to have, for instance, the wheels of the woollen factories constantly revolving is always an evidence of the prosperity of the industrial classes. That proposition was started very strongly by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), the hon member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Kendry). These hon. gentlemen all strove hard to impress this House and country with the idea that they are supporters of a high protective tariff, not merely on account of the manufacturers themselves, but more especially on account of the labouring men. That, Mr. Speaker, is the same old argument that was set up against the principles of Cobden and Bright. The argument set up in England, when the repeal of the principle of protection was brought about in that country, was the same that these hon. gentlemen have advanced, and as a representative, interested more particularly in the industrial classes from an organized standpoint, I wish to state that I do not believe at all in the principle which these hon. gentlemen have enunciated.

With reference to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), I desire to say that I have taken a very great interest in that hon. gentleman. I have sat very quietly in this House, being anxious to learn, and to make haste slowly and see my way ahead, and have been very much interested, particularly in the hon. gentleman from East York. I was interested more particularly in what he said on the question before the House, and I will tell you why? I thought that the position which he then took is very different to the strong and persistent one which he has hitherto taken. The hon. gentleman, previous to this debate, constantly advocated the claims of the people, as opposed to corporations and trusts, and took every occasion to bring to our attention the importance of guarding the interests of the people against these institutions, and I had come to the conclusion that the position which the hon. gentleman took, so far as it could be made practicable, was deserving of my support. But what do we find in this debate? I find that he is just taking the opposite course, and is doing his best to apply the principles of protection in favour of those very corporations and trusts, whose existence he had hitherto considered a menace.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am working on behalf of the manufacturers and the Canadian workingmen.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). I will prove before I get through that the hon. gentleman never mentioned the producers at all, but that the whole of his plea was for the manufacturers. On the one hand, he comes repeatedly before this House, advocating the interests of the people, in the shape of government ownership and control of industries. On the other hand, he comes on the floor of this House and asks the people of this coutnry to tax themselves in favour of that same class.

Mr. MACLEAN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. I wish to put the hon. gentleman right, and I hope he will allow me to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman does not want to be put right.

Mr. SMITH. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) described himself as an out-and-out protectionist.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear—for Canadian labour.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). The hon. gentleman never mentioned labour. He said he was a strong believer in government interference and in the authority of government. I believe—and I am glad to say it—that I also believe in the control of government. I believe that the political tendency of our time is to place greater authority in the hands of the government and to make greater demands upon the government. But I take a different view of that question from that taken by the hon. member for East York. I believe in government interference for the weak against the strong, for the poor against the rich, for the masses against the few. And when the hon. gentleman advocates so persistently the principle of protection for the manufacturers, in my opinion it is not possible for him to render the best service to the workers of this country. There can be nothing in common between the call for high protection to the manufacturers and the demand for benefit for industrial classes.

The two principles are altogether opposite. The man who works for wages in the factory does not sell the products of the factory. If the competition is lessened in favour of the owners of the factory, and they are thus enabled to raise prices, how can the industrial classes be benefited ? The article produced by the labourer must be bought by the labourer as well as by others, and, if the price of the article is raised and the price of labour is not raised, by what course of reasoning is it to be shown that he is benefited ?

The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) took the same position as the hon. member for East York, and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) put up a strong plea in favour of the same position as that taken by the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Kendry)—in fact, both those gentlemen read the self same letters. All these hon. members put in a strong plea in favour of the industrial classes of this country, and have tried to show that if no greater protection is given to the manufacturers, the labouring men will have to move to the other side of the line. As I say, that is the old argument. But I do not at all believe that, when hon. gentlemen come to this House and seek special favour in the way of protecting their industries, the position of the industrial labourer is present to their minds at all. It is not with them a question how much the labourer should get ; it is a question how large the profit of their particular industry should be. The whole history of the agitation of capital for the benefits of protection is a history of benefit to the capitalists themselves, without any reference to the condition of the labourer. Let us look for a few moments at the history of the case and consider some of the countries that are most highly protected. And here again, I wish to make some reference to the hon. member for East York, because he spoke on this line. Take the case of the United States. There you have an ideal country for the working of a protection system. If ever the principle of high protection could work out beneficially to a people, it would work out in favour of the people of the United States. You have there a country containing within its borders the greatest variety of natural wealth in the world—a country that produces everything necessary for the sustenance of life. That is a country where, if anywhere, they could afford to build a wall around their industries. And what is the condition of labour in the United States ? Has the protective principle, which has so greatly benefited certain capitalists, benefited correspondingly the producers and industrial labourers ? Mr. Speaker, the condition of the labour market in the United States in the most aggravated of any country in the world. It is beyond dispute that there are more strikes, more disturbances, greater difficulties in the way of industrial labour demanding a fair share of the product, there is more trouble and labour agitation in the United States, that highly protected country, than in any other country in the world. There is a greater combination of capital on the part of the workingmen, there is a stronger and more powerful organization of trades unionism than elsewhere, and there is constant agitation amongst the industrial labourers of that country to secure something like a reasonable share of the produce of their labour. In the United States they have an ideal condition for protection ; in the United States they have strikes, they have bloodshed, they have constant trouble and agitation, they have the militia sent to put down men, and women, and sometimes, even the children, as against the honest agitator who goes out to claim his rights. Can it be said that protection has benefited the American labourer or that he gets a greater share of the produce of his industry on account of protection ? Not at all. Now, let us take the converse of all this—let us take the case of England. There you have a free trade country. Now, I am not advocating free trade for this country. I came from England a few years ago. I am glad to say that while I was there, I always found myself on the side of the reform movement of that country. However, I have observed conditions sufficiently to discover that it is not possible to carry out that free trade principle in this new and undeveloped country. I think that the government has the right ideal—a tariff for revenue. There is in that a tremendous force of protection. What is the condition of the labouring man in England ? A great deal has been said by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) about the labourer in England—and I am going to deal with that subject a little later on. The labouring men in England have greater numbers in their organizations and have greater benefits by legislation than they have in the United States. The legislation in favour of the industrial classes in England has some permanency. The factories in England today are better under the supervision of the government than are the American factories. And the factory operatives to-day have a better standard of wages—considerably better—than they have had for many years. Now, the hon. member for Centre Toronto mentioned the other evening, that one of the difficulties of the manufacturers in this country was the dearness of the fuel they had to import from the eastern states, as compared with the cheapness of the fuel necessary for the operation of the factories in England. Not a single argument that has been put before this House affords a stronger condemnation of the principle of protection than that. I wish to ask the hon. member for Centre Toronto how it is that they have to pay more for the fuel than the manufacturers in England have to pay ? Is it difference in the labour ? Does the man who digs the coal in England get less than the man who digs the coal in Pennsylvania ? As a matter of fact, the coal miner in England to-day has a larger wage than the coal miner in Pennsylvania. Then the dearness of the article is not because the labourer has benefited, but because of the intermediate agencies that handle this product.

Mr. BROCK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him ? How many months in the year do they require to heat their factories in England, and how many months in a year do they require to heat their factories in Canada ? Quantity as well as price has got to be taken into consideration.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). If I were to answer the question and give the exact proportions it would not alter the principle at all. I said that one of the reasons given by the hon. member for Centre Toronto why Canadian mills could not compete with the cotton mills of the other colonies and of England, was that they had to pay so much for their fuel in this country. Now I ask you why ? Remember I am not contending against the position that protection gives a benefit to industrial labour, what I contend is that the difference between the price of fuel in Canada and the price in England does not affect the difference in the actual benefit to the workingmen because the miners of Pennsylvania have much less wages than the miners of England, showing that in this highly protective country the benefits simply go into the hands of the few and are no advantage at all to the men.

I have a letter here written by a responsible gentleman concerning the condition of the industrial classes in the woollen factories of the southern states. I have not time to read it, but I am quite sure that if it was read in the hearing of a few hon. gentlemen opposite who have taken such a strong stand for high protection, it would be very refreshing to them. The tenor of the article is that there is no protection at all for the men working in the woollen factories of the States ; that they are positively working for starvation wages, and under the worst conditions. All acts of parliament which have been made for their protection have operated to the benefit of the manufacturers and not of the workingmen. I contend that in England to-day, taking the value of the money earned by the industrial classes, taking the reasonable protection they have, taking the reasonable laws of labour that have been made for them, taking the minimum education that has been given to them, taking everything into consideration, I contend that the labourers in the woollen factories of England to-day are better off than the labourers are in the woollen factories of the southern states of America, very much so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Kendry) had put up a tremendous wail as to the condition of the woollen operatives which he said was brought about. The same argument was used by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) the other evening. Well, I sat for two hours taking in the whole of his arguments, and from that time until now I have been busy making myself acquainted with the facts connected with the hon. member for Peterborough. I want to state these facts on the floor of the House, and I hope in the presence of that hon. member. I was down in Peterborough three weeks ago interesting myself to some extent in the operatives of these mills, and in the labouring men generally ; and after this statement made about the condition of the mills in Peterborough and the discharge of these men, and after hearing the letter read by the hon. member for Grey, the same letter which was read by the hon. member for Peterborough this afternoon, I thought it was absolutely necessary that I should at least strive to get some information in this matter. My position was that if it were true that the preferential tariff was going to result in the ruin of the woollen industry and to the great injury of the woollen operatives, it was time for me to consider the question carefully and seek to prevent such a catastrophe. In looking into the facts connected with the Auburn woollen mills, owned by the member for Peterborough, I acquired some information which I wish to give to the House. Since the preferential tariff came into force these mills have been running full time and at times night and day. I make these statements boldly, and I expect that some hon. member will be in a position to answer them. It has been stated that this company has paid more for lighting the last four years than for many years before. This statement was made by the Hon. Mr. Stratton in the Dominion elections. I have been looking over the Conservative papers in the reading-room, and I expected to see this statement challenged, but as it has not been challenged I take it to be correct. During the elections I looked over the files of the Peterborough papers, and I could not find any statement, editorial or otherwise, contradicting the position taken by that hon. gentleman. Is it not a fact that on account of running so fully they have employed a larger number of hands these last four years than in the four years previously ? Now if these things are true, there is no calamity about them. If it is a fact that these mills are operating night and day and employing more labourers, then they must be paying a larger wage-bill, and if that is done under the operation of the preferential tariff I do not see any argument against the position of the government and in favour of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Is it not a fact also that the men are paid now more than they were in 1895-6 ? That is an important question, and I would like to have an answer. Are these signs of depression or of prosperity ? There are evidences to show that since the preferential tariff came into force the energies of this company have been stimulated ; as a matter of fact they have equipped their factory thoroughly with up-to-date machinery—that has all been done, mind you, since 1897. The machinery itself was said to have cost $50,000, and it is an undoubted fact that during these last few years they have turned out a much higher and finer class of goods than at any time in their history.

Let me mention that in British Columbia five or six years ago the people would not go into the stores and purchase Canadian manufactures, but to-day there is a growing disposition in favour of them, people are going into the stores and demanding Canadian woollens. I say there is a stronger demand for Canadian manufactured articles than ever before, showing that the articles are of higher value. I state that these mills have doubled their output, they are paying fair wages to their employees and they have made an average dividend of at least 6 per cent. Now these are very strong statements made on the floor of this House and hon. gentlemen must be in a position to answer them one way or another. If they are true, then where is the argument about the ruination of their property and of their business ? If they are not true, then we are driven to the conclusion that the hon. gentleman is prepared to take a position that is not correct. I am credibly informed that this company did not pay any dividend at all in 1895-6 before the preferential tariff, but they were closed down entirely for intervals of weeks at a time. Remember, Mr. Speaker, at that particular time there was a Dominion election going on, and the hon. member for Peterborough was running in that election, and I want you to know that the mills were closed down at that particular time. And when protection is sought for by these hon. gentlemen the mills are very likely to be closed down again. But this is an old trick, we are used to that. Any one who knows anything at all about the history of labour is well aware that this is a trick often resorted to. Now, at that time the hon. member for Peterborough, speaking on a platform, said this :

If Sir Wilfrid Laurier was returned to power his factories at Peterborough that were closed at that time would never be opened again.

Now I want the hon. members of this House to remember what I have already stated. They have made large profits, they have employed more men, they have doubled their output, they have enhanced the value of their productions since the preferential tariff came into operation ; and yet at that very time the hon. gentleman stated that if the Liberal government came into power it would ruin his business.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver).

Now, Sir, I did more than that. When I heard the statement read about the discharge of these men, I wanted to know if the hon. gentleman was saying exactly what was true, and I put myself to the trouble of having some very rapid correspondence with responsible men in Peterborough, and I am prepared to read the answers of those men in this House. I was anxious to know if the workingmen of this country were going to be driven out of employment, as the hon. gentleman had stated ; I was very anxious about that question, because I was desirous of preventing a calamity of that kind. But I wanted to know what the facts were before I did anything. Now, this is the answer I received to questions as to the men being discharged and as to the possibilities of the mill being closed down :

Ralph Smith, House of Commons.

Auburn woollen mills have been continually running night and day during these last four years——

Now, these are the mills belonging to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendry), who has just taken his seat.

—they have employed twice as many hands and have over twice as large a pay-roll as before, and turn out more than twice as much goods and of better quality than they did before.

This is a telegram that I am prepared to put on the records of this House, and when I am done reading it, I shall give the name of the sender.

They have improved their machinery out of their earnings at least $50,000, and have for three years been too busy to partly close down to accurately take stock, and as this is the period——

I would like to remark that this is an explanation of very many things that have been said by hon. gentlemen opposite.

—as this is the period that they change from summer to winter goods, they now take stock and are extensively repairing their machinery and have laid off a very few hands temporarily for that purpose, as stock cannot be taken and machinery repaired with the mill running full capacity. They regularly pay good dividends to shareholders for five years, and are making money. Close and private corporation.

The name of this gentleman is to the telegram, and the telegram is sent by R. F. McGregor, chairman of the Associated Labourmen of the city of Peterborough. Now, Mr. Speaker, my experience with the strong plea in favour of protection has always been this : That the men who seek for special favours in the way of protection are always the men that object to protection when it comes down to the interests of the labouring classes.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) excuse me for a minute. Before he drops that subject, would he tell us has he any information from the Hespeler mills?

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). I have not; I have not had time to look into it.

Mr. BROCK. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) attack any statement I made in connection with the woollen mills? What I stated referred to fifty mills in this country and not to one.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). Special mention has been made of the mills at Peterborough. The hon. gentleman from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) read a most serious letter setting out that these mills had actually discharged their men and would be likely to shut down, and the proprietor of these mills himself read that same letter on the floor of this House to-day. What I am doing is to prove to this House that there is no importance to be attached to that statement, as this telegram sets out.

Mr. KENDRY. I would like the hon. gentleman to read the telegram.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He has read it.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). I think the demand made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendry) is fair, and I will read it again:

Auburn woollen mills have been continually running night and day during this last four years, have employed twice as many hands, and have over twice as large pay-roll as before, and turn out more than twice as much goods, and of better quality. They have improved their machinery out of their earnings at least $50,000, and have for three years been too busy to partly close down to accurately take stock. As this is the period they change from summer to winter goods, they now take stock, and are extensively repairing their machinery, and have laid off very few hands temporarily for that purpose, as stock cannot be taken and machinery repaired with mill running at full capacity. Have regularly paid good dividends to shareholders for five years and are making money.

Mr. KENDRY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain, I will explain exactly the position. Mr. Speaker, so far as that telegram is concerned, the whole statement is incorrect. We are to-day not doing any repairs at all, and we are closed on account of having no orders in the mill. Whoever gave that information to Mr. McGregor, the whole thing is incorrect.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What about the dividends?

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). I have no disposition to dispute the word of an hon. member of this House. That is not my practice. But what I say is this: That I consider the authority of a disinterested man in Peterborough is of as much importance and far more likely to be correct than the statement of an hon. member of this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). Especially that of an hon. gentleman who has a direct interest in making a statement like this.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. KENDRY. Mr. Speaker, I may say that I am one of the proprietors of that establishment, and surely I ought to know the position better than any outsider.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). Well, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to take the full responsibility of what is stated in that telegram. I will be perfectly fair with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendry). I am prepared to meet him under any proper conditions and to discuss this question with him, and if it is demonstrated by the hon. gentleman that this is incorrect, then of course, that view of the case can be presented.

Mr. RUSSELL. He does not say it is incorrect.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). Mr. Speaker, it is almost six o'clock, and I think I should be allowed to finish my remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). No; I want to speak for another five minutes, and then I shall finish. I wish to refer now to my hon. and genial friend the member for Victoria, and I want to do so because I want to mention a matter which illustrates the importance of the principle under discussion.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. There are so many constituencies named Victoria, that I wish to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) which he refers to.

Some hon. MEMBERS. The genial one.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Which is that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. You.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). The senior member for Victoria, B.C. A few days ago we were discussing in this House the necessity of placing an import duty on lumber, and that is a question which very materially affects my interests as the representative of Vancouver Island. I may say, Sir, that I had telegrams from important bodies at that particular time asking me to support this resolution, but I disagreed with the resolution entirely. What I want to get at is this: In discussing that resolution the senior member for Victoria, B.C. (Hon. Mr. Prior) stated that the reason why the lumbermen of British Columbia at the present time had to employ Chinese and Japanese labour was because they were not able to compete with the American lumber manufacturers. This, Sir, is a matter which bears directly upon this discussion. I have been contending that the high protective tariff did not protect the labourer, but protected the manufacturer. The statement of the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Hon. Mr. Prior) was a very bold statement to make on the floor of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) is referring to a past debate.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). I am sure that the hon. gentleman from Victoria will not take any umbrage at what I am stating now. I will illustrate the point under discussion if I get time. That was a bold statement for the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Prior) to make, because the Chinese and Japanese were employed before the tariff was taken off by the Conservatives, and I want to ask my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Prior) can he give the House a guarantee that if the government impose a duty upon lumber coming into British Columbia corresponding with the duty on Canadian lumber : That Chinese and Japanese labour will be dispensed with. If the labourmen are protected by this protective tariff then we ought to be able to have a positive guarantee that that will be brought about. I want to tell my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Prior) that if he can give me that guarantee on the floor of this House then I will abandon my principles for once and support protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman an easier question than that still. I ask him: Suppose that this duty is imposed, can we have any guarantee that the white labourers of British Columbia would receive any more wages than they do now ? That is the great question. Does protection protect the industrial classes ? Decidedly not. You put $2 per thousand upon lumber coming into British Columbia ; you advance the price of lumber ; you lessen the competition, but, Mr. Speaker, they have all the Chinese and Japanese they want in the labour market of that country to manufacture that lumber. I want to know if the lumbermen are going to take the high moral position of discharging the Chinese and Japanese because they get a benefit from the government by the imposition of this duty ?

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman has asked me a question, and surely I may be allowed to say a word in reply. The hon. gentleman asked me if I would guarantee that the lumbermen would do away with Chinese and Japanese labour if the duty was put on. Of course, I cannot guarantee for them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Hon. gentlemen laugh, but it is a very foolish laugh. I cannot give a guarantee for them, but I can say that I stood up in this House and advocated a Chinese tax of five times the amount the government was willing to put on.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to deal with the position of the hon. gentleman, because he was a member of this government for many years and had an opportunity of putting on a Chinese tax.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. We were the first to put the tax on.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). In concluding my remarks, I want to say that when it can be demonstrated to me, when subsidies are granted to railway corporations, and high protective duties are placed upon manufacturers, that corresponding protection is given to the industrial labourers, then I am prepared to support the granting of those privileges. But that is not the condition of things that exists to-day. As I said before, the men who seek protection are the last men who want protection to be given to the industrial classes; but they are the very men, as their history shows, to forward petitions and requests to this House and to every other parliament in this country, against any law likely to provide for any restriction or protection on behalf of the labouring man. That is the position I take. The amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition, speaks of protection to labour; and if he is serious, he will seek to bring about corresponding legislation to protect the industrial classes. When you impose a tariff to protect the manufacturer, you want to have some guarantee that the labourer who makes the article protected shall be paid a minimum living wage. Until that is done, you may introduce all the protective tariffs you please, but you will have no assurance that the labourer is going to receive a share of the protection or be benefited by it in any way.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHN R. LAVELL (Leeds and Grenville). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who spoke just before recess, gave us another example of the many different attitudes adopted by gentlemen who support the government of the day on questions which are directly involved in the debate now going on in this House. Starting out as only a free trader could start out, and comparing the condition of affairs in a country which is most decidedly a country of protection, the United States, with the conditions in a country which is recognized as the ideal free trade country, that is, Great Britain, he drew a distinction very strongly in favour of the mechanic or labourer in Great Britain; but then, realizing that he was somewhat of an anachronism in this House, in dealing with the question in that way, he took the precaution to say that he was not a free trader. Then, proceeding along some other lines which I shall deal with shortly, he wound up with what may possibly be termed the most ultra doctrine of protection which we have yet heard in this House. He said he would support the opposition's policy of protection if we would add to that protection, legislation fixing a minimum wage for the mechanic. Such legislation, it is needless to say, is not within the province of this House, nor has it been undertaken, so far as I am aware, by any legislature which has authority to enact laws relating to such a subject. While he was giving us these different samples of his financial creed, he told us, possibly with a desire to make it clearer to us, that his ideal of a trade policy was the ideal of the present government. It may be that others who are more familiar with the views that have been enunciated in this House in the past can form a clearer opinion than myself as to what is the ideal of the present government; but, speaking as one who has only heard this present budget debate, I must confess that I am still in very great doubt on that point. There was one keynote struck by the hon. member, perhaps inadvertently, which may indicate more clearly than he did in any other words, just what the policy of the present government is. When he rose, he said he had come here to take in all he could; and, if I am not mistaken, the present policy of the Liberal party can only be reconciled with those of past years on the assumption that they were all intended to take in all they could.

It is too late now in this debate to make any attempt to review the various policies which the Liberal party of this country have put forward. They include the different policies which have been put forward in this debate. The hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) declared in most vehement tones that he was a free trader, and as such he supported this government. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said he was a protectionist, and as such he supported this government; and it is a matter of discussion whether the present government, after having come into power, did not, as has been repeatedly said, steal the clothes of their opponents. But I submit that that question is put too broadly. When the Liberal party are accused of having stolen the clothes of their opponents, it has led to some differences of opinion, and it has also led to some criticism of the opposition for making that charge in one breath, and asserting in the next breath that there ought to be more stringent protection in this country. The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is this, that when the Liberal party stole the clothes of their opponents, they did not steal them all, they only stole, as it were, their upper garments, and the species of protection which they have put in force may be called a kind of kilted protection, that is, a protection which protects part of the Canadian body, and leaves the other part as minus the 'breeks' as a Highlander. We have had very good examples of this in the course of the present debate. For example, the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) described in most glowing terms the prosperity of the principal town in his riding, the town of Oshawa, the great advance which had taken place in the industries of that town, and the consequent prosperity of the country around, declaring that this was entirely due to the fiscal policy of the present government; and he also stated, if I am not very much mistaken, that it was the result of the change from the national policy to the present policy. I wonder if the hon. member took the trouble to ascertain the facts before he spoke. Going over the industries of the town of Oshawa, one by one, I find that every industry in that town is a protected industry, not in any technical sense, in which the term may be used in this House, but protected under the national policy.

The various industries similar to those in Oshawa received a certain amount of protection. Under that protection they prospered and grew, setting their roots deep and wide, and when this government came in and changed the tariff in part in 1897, the tariff, so far as it affected the interests of that town, was left severely alone. That is a part of the stolen clothes absolutely appropriated in full by the Liberal party, and the preferential tariff, of which so much has been said, practically in no way affects any one of the industries in Oshawa. It is no wonder then the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) should have dilated as he did on the prosperity of Oshawa. That town is prosperous, and I am glad to know it, and the country in its neighbourhood is prosperous, largely because of the wages paid the artisans.

But, the hon. gentleman must go a little further back to find the cause of that prosperity. So far as it is due to any fiscal policy, it is due to the policy of the Conservative party inaugurated in 1878-9, and not to any change made since. This is a matter of which I have personal knowledge, because in the riding which I have the honour to represent, we also have a prosperous town, and prosperous for exactly the same reason. In the largest town of that riding, there is not a single industry affected by the fiscal policy of this government. The government left every industry in that town undisturbed, and it was most interesting in the last election contest to hear the former member for that riding, largely interested in one of its particular industries, getting up on platform after platform and declaring that in 1897 his party had wiped out the national policy with a stroke of the pen, and then raising his hands in holy horror at the suggestion of one of the members of the Conservative party in Manitoba, that the duty on agricultural implements should be wiped out. That, however, is simply in line with all that has been said by these hon. gentlemen in connection with the fiscal policy of this administration. To the extent this government has retained protection, the country has prospered, and I challenge any supporter of the government to show that in any case where they have retained the duties on manufactured articles, which were in the tariff prior to 1896, there has not been prosperity. In fact, I go still further, and challenge any one to show any case in which a reduction of the duties has not reduced prosperity. The government removed the duties on some articles to show their affection for free trade. They took the duty off binder twine, for example, and barbed wire, and it is interesting to know that the prices of these articles have increased in larger proportion than the prices of any manufactured articles on which the duty was maintained. The price of binder twine increased very largely because of the trust, and the removal of the duty made the forming of a trust all the easier. The manufacture of barbed wire has been entirely destroyed in the country, but the prices have increased. Every man who buys barbed wire now has to pay a good fair toll to the freight carriers and others who bring it into the country.

The hon. gentleman who spoke just before recess, the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith), made some rather vigorous statements about the evils caused by protection, which he described as class legislation, or legislation in favour of the manufacturers. He said, in language that I cannot hope to imitate, that it was an injury to the industrial classes. Why, Sir, the whole foundation of the national policy is the retaining of work in this country for our workingmen. The whole argument, from beginning to end, in favour of the national policy, from the time it was first introduced, was that it would enable us to manufacture in our own country the articles that we use, and thus give employment to our industrial classes. And never before has the contention been so openly made that protection could possibly be an injury to the industrial classes, though it has often been said that protection was class legislation, not so much because it was for the benefit of the manufacturers, as because it was for the benefit of those who labour in the factories. This question was treated in that way in the elections that took place a short time ago on the other side of the line. The people of the United States are essentially protectionists, and the free traders, who are making an attack on protection there, have to do it in the veiled way as that which the free traders in this country have to adopt. The question was whether protection should be maintained, and what was taken as the type of protection ? The full dinner pail, nor was the propriety of that being taken as the type for one moment questioned. Surely it is too late in the day, with the many years' experience we have had, to intimate for one moment that protection is not a benefit to the industrial classes who work in our shops and factories. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) spoke about the men working in the coal mines, and compared their lot with that of the coal miners of England. But, the members of this House must have noticed that when the hon. gentleman wanted to pick out a class in the United States, which may not be benefited by protection, he picked out a class that is notoriously drawn from the lowest populations of Europe—not skilled labourers, not the men who work in protected factories, but the men who went into that country from various European countries and worked there in sets and gangs, and even then I question if, looking at the subject from the widest standpoint, his statement would bear examination for a moment. If he had taken as an example the men who work in the factories, if he had taken the men who work in the woollen mills, about which there has been so much discussion, he would have found a vast difference between their status and the status of the same class of men in a free trade country. And it is because such a difference was noticed years ago by the great leader of the Conservatives, under whom the national policy was inaugurated, that the national policy was adopted by the Canadian people and put so successfully in force.

The hon. gentleman confined himself to the example of labourers in the mines of the United States, trusting to his sweeping statement, that protection must of necessity injure those who are working in the factories, and who come under the heading of industrial classes. I say that our experience under the present fiscal tariff proves the contrary. The instances I have just mentioned, given us by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross), prove the contrary. In those factories, which have been properly protected, the men are working at good wages, and the towns they inhabit are prosperous. In those where the duties have been reduced, the men are without work, or are working at lower wages, and the towns are not prosperous. I regret to say that in the riding I represent, there is a woollen mill which has been seriously affected from the causes mentioned by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Kendry). But, there is another result that I might mention. At the time when this preferential tariff came into force, affecting as it did principally our woollen and cotton mills, the farmers of this country found a very large home market for their wool, and prices ruled from 20 to 25 cents per pound. But gradually, as the preferential tariff went into operation, our woollen mills had to reduce the prices, and to-day our farmers are only getting 15 cents and 16 cents for their wool, as compared with 22 cents and 25 cents. This shows how incidentally protection to one class of men equally protects a large number of other classes.

One interesting result of this debate is that we have had from the leaders of the Liberal party another statement of what their policy is. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs stated in very vigorous language that this tariff now in force is not a protective, but a revenue tariff, and, so far as there was any protection in it, it was purely incidental. And it has been repeatedly said by hon. gentlemen on the other side, that protection is almost impossible so far as certain classes are concerned. They have mentioned especially, over and over again, that the protection was impossible for this class. Now, if this is a revenue tariff and is not intended to give any protection whatever, it is an interesting question to ask how it comes that duties that were protective prior to 1896 are no longer protective, though they remain exactly the same. The right hon. the premier (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) implied in his speech that this was a revenue tariff, because imports increased under it. It becomes an interesting question to ask whether the tariffs of the United States and Germany are also revenue tariffs and not protective, because in those countries imports have increased. These are questions that I will not attempt to answer, but I would suggest that they possibly show some weakness in the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite. But, if this is in part a revenue tariff, and if any credit is to be obtained for the reduction of duties—and I presume that none of all those items that are put on the free list can be included under the head of revenue tariff—we have to deal with the dutiable goods only; and, as I said, the great bulk of these dutiable goods bear the same duties that they did under the former tariff, save so far as the preferential tariff is concerned and so far as these reductions have been made year after year on the imports of Great Britain. Part of the policy as declared, was that there should be no change one way or the other. That must be looked upon as a new policy, because, so far as this tariff differs from the old tariff, it differs from it practically in no other way than by these preferential duties, and these have been changed for several successive years—in fact, I think it was last year that the last change was made. If there is no change further to be made, that is something brand new this year. Judging from the words we heard in sonorous tones from the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), one would suppose that it was reprehensible for a party not to have a new policy every year. He spoke with scorn of a policy which he said was old. If it was more than two years old, I do not wonder at it coming under his displeasure. It does seem as though in the minds of some men in this country it is impossible to retain the same policy for more than a few years in succession. But we have now a statement which I hope will last a few years, of just exactly what the present tariff policy is. If I might be permitted, I think I would say that when we review the tariff policy of the Liberal party for the last few years, we find that though it has had many forms, though they have placed themselves on many platforms, possibly it is not right for us to say that they have changed completely. I question if they have changed. I think, as I said, that the hon. member for Vancouver expressed it when he intimated that he would take in what he could while he was here. All these policies, from the time when they advocated commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity, and so on, were undoubtedly policies that the Liberal party took up because they thought they would please the country, feeling that when they came into power the fact that they had made strong protests against protection would not prevent them hanging on to protection if they thought that to do so would help them to remain in office. It was a change of policy, but not of spirit. It suggests the case of the doctor in a country village, who, going into a corner grocery was met with a request from a somewhat loquacious German to be told what this new religion was that they were bringing from China. The doctor wished to know what it was he referred to, whether it was buddhism or theosophy. 'No, not that, doctor,' said the German, and he attempted to give a description of what he meant. The doctor at last understood, and said, 'Oh, you meant the doctrine of transmigration of souls.' 'Yes,' was the reply, 'vot vos dot?' The doctor attempted to explain, and at last said, 'Well, it is easier to give you an illustration.' He drew the attention of the German to the fact that death must come to every man, which the German admitted with a regretful sigh. 'Now, Strauss,' said he, 'suppose that when you die, your soul, when it left your body, instead of going to some unknown region, went into the body of a little canary hanging in a gilded cage, in a lady's boudoir, and fed from her delicate fingers.' The German thought that would be very nice. 'But, one day the door of your cage is left open; the cat comes in and kills the canary. Of course, your soul must leave the body of the canary and flies out of the window and takes refuge in a beautiful lily blooming in the garden and shedding its fragrance on the air.' 'Yes,' said the German, 'dot is goot.' 'But, your soul cannot stay in the lily, because a careless servant leaves the gate open, a donkey comes in and bites off your head, and your soul passes into the donkey. You are driven out of the garden, and as you go out some old friend meets you and looks you in the face and strokes your long ears and says, "Oh, Strauss, mein old friend, how leedle you haf changed."' Having listened to the speeches here and to the speeches on various platforms in this country, the only conclusion that one can come to is that though the form has changed, there is very little change in the true inner soul of the policy held by the Liberal party or their leader. They are prepared for any change, and now they have grown so used to changes that they cannot understand how a party can maintain the same principle for a dozen years. It is a bad condition of affairs in this country when it is possible for a great party not only to change its views when any occasion of party exigencies seems to requre it, but to speak words of scorn against another party which, having tried a great principle and found it to be in the best interests of the country, retains it and backs it up. Seeing the criticism to which the Conservative party is subjected by the hon. gentlemen opposite, this is all the more remarkable inasmuch as, in some lines, hon. gentlemen opposite have really gone further in the line of protection than have the Conservative party when in power, although still maintaining that the fiscal policy is one of a revenue tariff. No attempt has been made to answer the questions thrown across the floor of the House: How can bounties on iron be part of a revenue tariff? How is the maintenance of duties of 30 and 35 per cent on articles imported into this country, part of a revenue tariff? How is even the maintenance of a duty of 27½ per cent on biscuits part of a revenue tariff? The hon. Minister of Customs referred to that the other day, and, in very vigorous language called attention to the tremendous reduction caused not by his tariff, but by the preferential duties, showing that it was down really to 25½ per cent, only ½ per cent higher than it was for most of the time when the national policy was in force under the Conservative government. And that reduction was not due to the tariff policy as enunciated in 1897, but was due almost entirely to the preferential tariff. Now, incidentally, before I sit down, I wish to say something about the line that has been taken over and over again by hon. gentlemen opposite, when they said it was simply impossible to give protection to the farming community or to the industrial class. Until the hon. member for Vancouver spoke, I was under the impression that that class meant the industrial class of this country so far as they worked in manufacturing. But the hon. gentleman seemed to confine himself to an attack on capitalists. Now, as to that, it must be recognized by every person in this country that capital and labour are so indissolubly united that they cannot be separated—it is impossible to get a divorce. I would refer the hon. gentleman to his friend the Liberal leader of Ontario, who, when he was asked that in granting certain franchises it should be provided that only home labour should be employed, distinctly refused on the ground that capitalists should be free to select their own labour. That, possibly, is going further than the Conservative party offered to go before. But that is the principle of the leader of the Liberals in the Ontario House.

He said that this was simply legislation for a class; it has been said over and over again, and I presume the hon. gentleman meant the industrial class. They have insisted that the farmers were not benefited. If the farmers were not benefited, it would be interesting to see some hon. gentlemen opposite analyse the tariff so far as it affects agricultural products. If this is only a revenue tariff and if the farmers cannot be protected, why is there three cents a dozen on eggs? If it is not there for revenue, and if the farmers cannot be protected, was it put there to blind their eyes? Was it put there hypocritically? Was it put there as a species of farce? If the farmers cannot be protected in any way, why are duties maintained on these agricultural products, when they practically got no revenue, when it means nothing in the way of revenue? It would be interesting to have an explanation of that. I maintain that the farming community can be protected, they are not protected simply by duties on agricultural implements, but by the growth of our home markets.

Some hon. members on this side of the House have already referred to the fact that it is impossible for a country purely agricultural to prosper and fulfil its destiny, and that manufacturing countries, on the other hand, are always strong and prosperous. When manufacturing and agricultural industries are closely allied a country reaches its highest development. We have had examples of that truth in Canada. In the lean years when industries were stagnant in Canada, our agricultural population prospered so far as good crops could make them prosperous, but they felt the depression as well as others did. But with the improvement in manufactures, under the operation of the national policy, the farmers prospered as did all other classes of the country. When there is a good home market the farmer must feel the advantage exactly the same as any other citizen will feel it. But no country can have a good home market unless it has prosperous manufacturing industries.

Considerable stress has been laid on the prosperity of the last four years. I am glad to know that the country has been prosperous during the last four years. I am glad that Canada has been able to share with the rest of the world in the unexampled prosperity that has prevailed everywhere. But when hon. gentlemen opposite get up and tell us that our prosperity is due to their fiscal policy, they ask us to assume something that is incapable of proof. As well might a man who goes into a wheat field for the first time, shortly before the wheat is ripe, and when he has gathered the harvest, say: Look, at the harvest I have gathered in. You people who have simply sowed the grain have no credit whatever for this glorious harvest. A country's growth is not of a few days or of a few years. A mushroom will spring up in a night, but not so the maple. Canada is not a mushroom country by any means, and no such industrial development as we have enjoyed during the last four years can be produced simply by the stroke of a pen or within a few hours after the passing of a statute in parliament. The fiscal policy was changed by this government in 1897, but the prosperity of this country began prior to 1897. Our prosperity had been preparing for years, owing to the fact that the previous Conservative government had fostered trade, had fostered the industries and commerce of Canada, and when, by the favour of Providence, good times came, Canada was in a position to take advantage of them. Surely it is recognized as a great general principle that there is a time of quiet growth, a time of underground sprouting, so to speak, before anything appears on the surface. We will, perhaps, during the next month, pass through one of the most disagreeable seasons of our climate, one of the months when possibly nature takes on its most forbidding appearance; but will any person say that we can have the development of vegetation during the summer months without the preparation of these previous disagreeable months? In the same way the prosperity of the last four years is not due to the almost imperceptible change in the fiscal policy of the country that took place in 1897. As to that particular feature of the tariff on which hon. gentlemen pride themselves most, the preferential feature, I say without hesitation that it has done infinitely more harm than good, in view of the conditions in which this country found itself when it went into force. It has, in fact, only been in force twelve or fifteen months, with any activity. If you deduct this period and look at the country as it was in 1897, such credit as may be due to any one from legislation must be given to the predecessors in office of hon. gentlemen opposite, to the men who for so many years led the fortunes of the Conservative party.

There are a number of other matters on which I intended to speak, but at this hour it is desirable that the speeches should not be long. I will close by emphasizing the point I made, that where there has been prosperity there has been no interfence by the present government with our fiscal arrangements, and wherever the present government has interfered, it has done so to the absolute loss and injury of Canada.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Hon. gentlemen opposite are much troubled in their minds about the differences of opinion that they say exists on this side of the House. Well, they put me in mind of the sea birds that come close to the shore in the fall and spring of the year, when the weather is calm, they swim backwards and forwards with the greatest ease; but when the storm begins, then they cluster together. Wait, gentlemen, till the vote is taken, and then you will see the difference of opinion that exists. Our friends opposite speak much of broken pledges, they are horrified that pledges have been broken before the public of this great Dominion. Well, if a man breaks his pledge to me once I never trust him. You have heard of the Scotch proverb; Man cheat me once, deil fa him, man cheat me twice, deil fa me. The people of this Dominion have passed their verdict on the action of the government twice, and they have approved of their policy. The majority of the people of this Dominion have shown that they have confidence in the men who occupy the Treasury benches.

Reference has been made to the preparation of the late tariff for protective purposes, and it has been said that a master mind had prepared that tariff. Now, if my memory serves me right, the government of that day had to send to Washington to get a man to prepare that tariff, and when it was prepared it was something that nobody in this Dominion could interpret or understand. It was the American tariff pure and simple, except, of course, as to the figures of the duties. The meaning and principle of the tariff was exactly the same. Down in Halifax we found the appraisers and importers quarrelling all the time. The importers said they had to hire one of their clerks all the time to do nothing else but to prepare their entries for the customs-house. One part of an article would be so much a square yard, and you had to make a calculation as to how many square yards would be in a piece. Another article you had to put on your scales and weigh it. Then merchants would send to Ottawa samples of the goods on which they paid a certain rate of duty, and there would be a different interpretation made, and a rebate of duty would have to be ordered. I do not know if there are any importers within the sound of my voice in this House, but I am sure that there is not an importer in Canada to-day who desires to go back to the protective tariff of the Conservative government. It was like nothing in heaven above or in the earth beneath, it was confusion from start to finish.

One thing that the present government have done is to simplify the tariff, they have made it plain, it is easily understood.

I have it here before me, and there is not an item in it where you do not know exactly the duty that is to be paid on it. I may differ from the government as to the rates of duty that are still levied in certain instances, but anyway there has been a reduction in the duties and the tariff is easily understood, and no person can make any mistake about it. I felt sorry to hear the speech delivered by my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Charlton), and if he continues to make such speeches, I doubt very much that this is the right side of the House for him to sit on.

Mr. MACLEAN. What will you do with him ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I will tell you what you did with him last fall. He wrote a letter and by that letter he imposed on the Conservative party so much that they allowed him to be elected by acclamation so that the Conservatives have been beguiled by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton). Now, every member here should desire this country to be settled, and that we should have immigration—I would qualify that by saying that we should have immigration of the proper sort.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Highland Scotch.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) You want the right kind of immigrants in this country, and you want them to build residences and out-houses and such things as are necessary for permanent settlement. Some hon. gentlemen have proposed here that you should put a duty on cheap American lumber which would be used by the settlers, and thus make it harder for them to get along. One of the things that surprises me, and I may say disgusts me, is the way that some members of this House have come here to advocate their own personal interests. I sat in a parliament for eight years, and at that time a member would be ashamed to advocate any principle in which he was personally interested. It is highly improper for men to come here and day after day plead for their own personal affairs. If we look at ourselves what are we ? We are selfish animals at best, and when a man begins to advocate his personal interests in this House, you can always begin to doubt his sincerity and his honesty. The member for Peterborough (Mr. Kendry) in the course of his speech today, said : I speak for myself. When a man speaks for himself, and for himself alone, this is not the proper place for him to speak at all. He has a right to speak for his constituents, but when he comes here to speak for his own selfish ends he should be ashamed of himself. I am glad to know that in all the divergent opinions that have been expressed on this side of the House no man has so far forgotten himself as to plead for his own personal interests.

Mr. MACLEAN. What about your friend there ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Speaking of my friend on my right, sometimes I am afraid that I am sitting too close to him. I heard the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) quoting Scripture the other day, and I congratulate him on his knowledge of it, but I would say to my friend beside me here in the words of the prophet : How long will you halt between two opinions ? If protection be his God, then let him worship that, but if revenue tariff be what is right, then let him vote for revenue tariff.

Mr. MACLEAN. What is your god ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I will go back in sacred history further than did my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean). When the great patriarch Jacob found that he could not get corn in his own country, he sent his sons to Egypt, and he got free corn, and the present government have so changed the tariff that we have free corn in Canada to-day, and therefore they follow the old free trade principles that were practiced in those early days.

Mr. MACLEAN. You are a few thousand years out.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) There are several other things that I hope their supporters will be able to teach them in that line before the present term of parliament will expire. I am glad to see my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) smiling, and I would remind him that he condemned free trade and said that the people of Britain are ashamed of the ghosts of John Stuart Mill, and Cobden and Bright. Well, he will get few to agree with him in that respect. Gentlemen in this House have the habit of speaking of England as if it meant Great Britain, but to my mind it includes Ireland and Scotland as well as England, and when you come to deal with these trade questions on broad lines it is well to bear in mind that it includes the whole empire. I have no objection to Englishmen, but I like Irishmen better, and I like Scotchmen best of all. The hon. gentleman from East York (Mr. Maclean) stated that free trade has been a failure. Let me point out to him that New South Wales is the colony which has adopted the nearest approach to British free trade, and New South Wales has prospered in a greater measure by far than any other of the Australian colonies. The hon. leader of the opposition stated that in the commonwealth of Australia they would likely have a moderate protective policy. I read the speech of Mr. Barton, the new premier of the commonwealth, and he stated that there were two parties in Australia, one advocating a protective tariff and the other advocating free trade. He mentioned that several of the premiers of the different colonies were in favour of free trade, but that the policy that would be adopted would be a revenue tariff, and he indicated that it would take a year or two after the commonwealth was properly established, before they could arrive at what would be a proper revenue tariff. I want to point out the fallacy of thinking that Great Britain will give a preferential market to Canada and to Canada alone. That is out of the question. If anything comes out of that matter it must be by the commonwealth of Australia, and New Zealand, and the other British colonies combining with Canada. When that will be done, and we place ourselves properly before the British government you may get a hearing whatever the result may be; but it is very doubtful if Great Britain will depart from her present free trade policy.

The great grievance of hon. gentlemen opposite appears to be about the woollen trade of this country. I remember the time when the woollen manufacturers prospered under a 10 per cent tariff. When I first came to this House there was only a 15 per cent tariff, and there were woollen industries in the country prospering at that time. The tariff was increased to 17½ per cent under the Mackenzie government, and there was no complaint in those days of the failure of the woollen industry. Perhaps the most outrageous part of the tariff of the late government was that imposed upon woollen goods. In some instances it ranged as high as from 60 per cent to 70 per cent. Under the preferential arrangement made by the present government with Great Britain, there is a protection of from 21 per cent to 23½ per cent on woollen goods, and if the woollen mills cannot thrive and prosper under such protection as that, it would be better for the country to let them go down.

I was amused at the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), speaking of the preferential tariff, he shook his head, and said there is nothing in it—it is not of the slightest importance. But, then he took up his paper again, and said, there are $13,000,000 of woollen goods imported into this country; and he almost cried at such a calamity. What became of those goods? Why, the fashionable ladies of Canada used some of them, which they were enabled to get at cheaper rates than before, the working classes used them, the farmers and fishermen used them, and they were of benefit to the country. The great complaint in this country is, that it is too dear a country to live in. The great object is to induce people to come into the country, and we can only do that by making their supplies as cheap as possible. I was amused at hearing the hon. member for Lanark, the other evening, complain of the absence of ministers from their places in the House, instead of being here to listen to his eloquence. He forgot to say that the benches on his own side, including that of his leader, were also vacant; so that, the inattention paid to him was as much on his own side of the House as on this side. He made a speech in which, without considering it from an intellectual standpoint, he worked himself up into a high state of excitement, reminding one of a chief who was preparing his tribe for a war dance; and speaking of the surplus of the hon. Minister of Finance, he declared that there was no surplus, but a deficit of $1,000,000. Some of the gentlemen opposite say there should be no surplus—that it is an unfortunate thing for this country that there is a surplus. Another one wants the harbour of Collingwood deepened and improved; another one wants a harbour at some other place made; and probably another one wants the channel of the St. Lawrence made deeper and straighter. This shows the difference of opinion that exists on that side of the House. How can they expect to get all these things done without plunging the country into deeper debt than it is in at present, unless the Minister of Finance has a surplus with which to make these improvements? I think it will be a sad day for the country when there will be no surplus. If the Minister of Finance finds that he has a diminished revenue at any time—and I want to impress this upon him—all he has to do is to reduce his tariff——

Mr. MACLEAN. And cut off the bounties on iron.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.)—and then there will be larger importations, and an increase in the revenue accordingly.

Mr. ROSAMOND. What about the bounties on iron?

Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Now, I am going to tell something to the hon. member for West Prince.

Mr. WALLACE. What about the bounties on iron?

Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) That is something in the future. We will speak of things as they appear. They say it is time enough to fight the devil when you meet him.

Mr. WALLACE. The devil is here now.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman propose to raise the devil with the iron bounties?

Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) The hon. gentleman from Peterborough (Mr. Kendry) spoke about the 15,000 people who are engaged in the woollen industry. Well, I belong to a province where there are 32,741 men engaged in the fishing industry, and all we want for those people is that everything they consume shall be made as cheap as possible, because they have to buy everything, and I do not want them to be compelled to buy their ready-made clothing from the shoddy manufacturers of Ontario. I say shoddy, because there have been some very shoddy speeches made in that interest on the other side of the House. When I tell you that there are six mills in Ontario preparing shoddy for the manufacture of woollen goods, you can form your own idea of the kind of goods they would compel us to wear under their high tariff. We regard it as a great privilege to be enabled to buy goods of good quality. If you buy a coat made of the shoddy stuff that comes down from Ontario, the colour all goes out of it in a very short time. We have woollen mills in Nova Scotia, and in Cape Breton, and every one of them will exist and prosper under the present tariff. If any of those mills go down, it will be because they expect too high a price for their goods or, perhaps, it may be from another reason—over-production ; they may manufacture too much for the consumption of the Dominion. Let them make goods of good quality, and they will always find a market for them, even in this Dominion. People are getting more enlightened in this age. I am glad to find that even a minority of our friends from the province of Ontario are getting more enlightened. We hear hon. gentlemen say to us : 'Look at Ontario,' as if Ontario were the whole of the Dominion. Thank heaven, it is not. And, after all these great bombastic speeches about what Ontario has accomplished, these hon. gentlemen had to go down to little Nova Scotia, and out of the five members of the opposition returned from that province, select their leader. They had not a man among themselves capable of leading them or keeping them together. Our hon. friends opposite tell us what Ontario and the people of Ontario are going to do at the next general election. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that there will be a progress of enlightenment even in that province before another election takes place.

We were told that before we had a protective tariff, we had to eat Canadian pork. All I have to say in reply to that statement is that under the protective tariff we collected $113,748 of duty on American pork consumed in the provinces for the use of the fisheries, which does not show that, even with a high tariff, we were compelled to use Canadian pork.

I am not going to weary the House with figures. The resolution of my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, is so broad that it may mean anything. You can put any construction on it you like. In that respect it resembles some passages in the Book of Revelations, on which commentators have been giving different interpretations for the last 500 years, and are still as far from the correct meaning as when they began. If this resolution is satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite, then it is very pleasing to us, and it reminds me of a story told about the early settlement of Dakota. A man of rather shabby appearance and riding a poor-looking horse came to a settler's house one evening. The settler asked him whether he was a lawyer or a doctor or a vendor of medicine or what he was. And at last the newcomer said : I am a follower of the Lord. Well, my friend, said the settler, you will be a long time before you will catch up to him with that horse. So it will be a long time before the policy propounded in the resolution of hon. gentlemen opposite will bring them to the Treasury benches.

I was glad to find by the high tone taken by the leader of the opposition and one or two of his followers that they have no aspirations to occupy this side of the House in the near future. They are aiming at something higher, they are to be a band of brethren, who would teach the people everything almost necessary for salvation, and they put me in mind of an incident which happened at a Methodist camp-meeting. At that meeting there was a very attractive young lady, and five nice young men from New York, such as sometimes stray to those meetings, went over to attend this one. One by one they related their Christian experience, and in each case that experience was that they had a call from the Lord to marry this beautiful young lady. The old deacon said : I thought I knew something of the mind of the Lord, but this is the first instance in which I have found that there was a call from the Lord to five young men to marry the one girl at the one time. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been fifteen years continuously in public life, and this is the first instance in which I have found the Conservative party not working to occupy the Treasury benches, and I am pleased to see that they have a higher aim just now. No doubt their desire will be gratified, and they will continue to occupy the position which they now fill so acceptably to hon. gentlemen on this side.

The hon. gentleman for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) said the other day that race and religion was the stock-in-trade by which this government gained power. I can, from my experience, characterize that charge as a slander, at least so far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned. In my own constituency, composed of a few men of French origin, a good many Irishmen and a large number of Scotch Catholics, and of course a larger number of blue banner Presbyterians, I never heard any expression used which conveyed any reflection on the race or creed of the Prime Minister of Canada or the party that supports him from the province of Quebec. But I remember the time, which must be in the recollection of the right hon. the First Minister, when it was not so easy for the Liberals of the province of Quebec to assert their principles as it is to-day. I remember when a pronounced Liberal principle was considered a crime in some instances in that province. I had the pleasure of supporting a government which had for Minister of Justice a gentleman who was afterwards promoted to be Chief Justice of the province of Quebec. I refer to my departed friend, Sir A. A. Dorion. A more pure, a more perfect and a more capable man I never met. I am a Scotchman but I never knew a Scotchman in public or private life outside my own family, that I held so dear as that pure-minded man. He was as nearly perfect as humanity could be. Of him it could be truly said, in the word of the Psalmist, 'Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace.' I consider it a privilege to be even at this late day able to pay this tribute of respect to my dear departed friend.

One word more. We must not forget even in this country that there is a Providence over us—that there is an overruling Providence in the lives of individuals and families and communities and provinces and particularly in the life of the Dominion. And Providence, in His anger, thought wise to punish this Dominion with an unjust government for eighteen years. But hearing the groanings of the people when they were in bondage, as the Israelites of old in Egypt, he came down and relieved them of that bondage. And I want to say to my friends in the government, that, so long as they continue to do what is right, so long as they continue to do what is just and honest and upright, there is a discerning public opinion growing in this country that will continue them in power. One thing I wished to say before I finished. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) said the other evening he was proud of the Conservative party, and was anxious that their history should be published. I think, for the sake of his own friends, they had better allow the present century to pass away before that is done, because there are certain things in connection with that party from 1872 until the recent defeat that had better not be written. If the hon. gentleman were in his place, I might enumerate these things, but——

Mr. EDWARDS. Enumerate them.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Oh, no. I do not want to hurt the feelings of my hon. friends opposite. I only advise them not to be in a hurry in writing the history of the Conservative party from 1872 until their defeat in 1896.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). At this late hour of the night, and at this late stage of the debate, I do not intend to detain the House long. I think I had better commence with some reference to the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ross, Victoria, N.S.) who has just taken his seat. He is a sort of Rip Van Winkle, who appears to have been asleep ever since the honest Liberalism of 1873. He has not wakened up to the condition of the new Liberalism of this country, or he would not make the statements he has with reference to the Conservative party. His treatment of the sacred word and his effort to weave it in with the conduct and policy of the Liberal party to-day, certainly does not result in a very harmonious production. You could no more apply the sacred word to their conduct—why, there comes in the Rip Van Winkle again. He is thinking of the honest Liberals, of the Dorions and Mackenzies. He said that they had free trade in corn and spoke of Joseph going down into Egypt. It was not Joseph, but Joseph's brethren, the rascals who sold him there.

Hon. Mr. ROSS. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I said that the patriarch Jacob, when he found he could not get corn in his own country, sent his sons to Egypt for corn.

Mr. BRODER. He had to send to Joseph, who was in Egypt.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, B.C.) I know the whole history.

Mr. BRODER. I am sorry that, if the hon. gentleman knows it, he has not profited more by it. They had free corn long before Christianity was introduced, and we had to come back to that when these hon. gentlemen came into power. And we have it now. My hon. friend—I was going to call him our reverend friend—is not very happy in his allusions to the sacred Scripture and to free corn. But there is this point with regard to free corn. If there was one argument more than another that the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite used as an argument in favour of free corn in Canada, it was that it would give the farmer who wished to fatten his cattle for the English market an opportunity to do so—so that we would not be obliged to send our cattle to the United States market as stockers or unfed cattle. And what are the conditions to-day? I will quote from a paper that there will be no dispute about, because hon. gentlemen opposite will believe the paper, and my friends on this side will believe me—so there will be no dispute. I will quote the Globe, showing the figures it gave on the 30th October last, just on the eve of the people going to the polls. The Globe says:

During four and a half years ending 31st December, 1896——

That is previous to the Conservatives going out of power.

—Canada shipped to the United States 3,762 cattle, receiving therefor $52,606. Since December 31st, 1896——

That is, while hon. gentlemen opposite were in power——

—the shipments have reached 301,073, valued at $4,377,852. The Laurier government secured the removal of the United States quarantine restrictions.

Now, I want to say that that was a very mistaken policy in the interests of the country. What was the value of those cattle? You would think, to hear hon. gentlemen opposite talking on the platform, that the effect of it had been to enhance the value of our cattle by $10 a head. I have heard that statement made myself. But what are the figures given by the Globe? These figures show that the value of the cattle sent to the United States during the Conservative regime was $13.98 on the average, while during the four and one-half years of Liberal regime, the value was $14.54—just 56 cents per head additional. And, if you take into account the four years previous to 1896, there is no comparison at all in their favour, but rather the reverse. But consider the effect of this upon the interests of the country and the prospective interests of the cattle shippers of Canada. It has put beyond possibility of chance the removal of the embargo upon Canadian cattle in the English market. But, have hon. gentlemen opposite attempted to do anything in that respect? They boast wonderfully because they have got the cattle quarantine regulation changed as between this country and the United States. But this affects us injuriously in the English market, and in every other market where it is proposed to ship cattle. Now, it always happens when I address the House that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is not in his place. I wish to make reference to him, and I may call him the ager-minded Minister of Agriculture, who thinks of nobody but the tillers of the soil. To hear what is said of him one would suppose that his tender hands are blistered holding out blessings to the farmers of this country. But what market has the Minister of Agriculture opened up for the farmer that the farmer did not have when this government came into power. From the premier down to the smallest man that sings his praises, not one of them can point to a single market that has been opened by them for the products of the farmers of Canada. But one thing that they did do was to close the German market against the Canadian grain. They gave the West Indies some privileges that had not been given when they came into power; and, since then the West Indies have raised their tariffs against Canada. The Minister of Agriculture is heralded throughout this country as a practical farmer. I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that he never ploughed a furrow or hoed a row of corn in his life.

Mr. MACLEAN. He cut his corn.

Mr. BRODER. Yes, but it was on his toe. I wish to make reference to some things said by the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ross) who has just taken his seat. He stated that the woollen industry was prosperous during the Mackenzie regime under a tariff of 17½ per cent. If the hon. gentleman will recall the history of that time, I think he will find that it was by no means prosperous in many parts of this country. He has spoken of the poor Canadian with the faded coat made of goods of Canadian manufacture. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the class of goods made in some of the factories in this country are a credit to any man to wear; and I do not wish to deprecate home manufacture in favour of the labour of any other country. The hon. gentleman was good enough to refer to the fact that the representatives of the great Conservative party of Ontario had to select as their leader a man from Nova Scotia. So far as that is concerned, Ontario is not provincial. The Conservative party is a national party, not a provincial party, and it would be well for this country, if hon. gentlemen opposite could say that they were not a provincial party. More than that, we lay our hands upon an able man wherever we can find him. And still more, when we select an hon. gentleman to be our leader, we select a man who is ready to stand by his guns and keep confederation intact against the machinations and efforts of a man like the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), who, when he was premier of Nova Scotia, tried to take his province out of the Dominion; and when he came down to the conference in Quebec to sit in solemn council with Mr. Mercier and Sir Oliver Mowat and the premiers of this Dominion—only one Conservative premier among them—the only condition upon which he would confer with them was that they should put upon the minutes the statement that nothing that conference might do, should hinder Nova Scotia from seceding from the Dominion. That is the kind of men hon. gentlemen opposite follow. I do not intend to follow such a man, no matter where he comes from. We will take a man that is national wherever we find him. We are a national party, we are not provincial. It would be well for our hon. friends opposite to wake up and get a little bigger than the province of Nova Scotia, get a little bigger than the province of Quebec. It is high time. The people who govern this country were larger in their outlook than the mere province in which they live. It is a mistake for Canada, and unless her public men can take a broad national view they will not succeed in governing this country.

Mr. McLENNAN. Nova Scotia received better terms from this Dominion as a result of this protest from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. BRODER. The hon. gentleman must take his medicine. Now this preference they talk so much about, this preference without any quid pro quo, what has it done? Now, I am going to use a homely simile which every man can understand. Our old friend, the Rev—I beg his pardon, I mean the hon. gentleman who just took his seat, referred to our policy as something like what you saw in Revelation, you could not tell what it meant, you could make it mean one thing or another. Well, it will be a happy day for those hon. gentlemen if they ever get as near Revelation as that. Their conduct and their policy is like Revelation because nobody can understand it, you cannot even put two meanings on it, you cannot even put one. It is all out of joint like the hon. gentleman's speech, and I would advise him either to read the Scripture over again, or to leave it alone, in the House. Now, what have these hon. gentlemen done? They are living in the good old Tory House, and they have simply put a bay window to the House. Just like the bad boy running away from justice, he runs into the bay window, and thinks he is out of danger. They have merely put up a bay window to this building, but it will never stand the storm, because the roof is not good, it will leak, and they will be driven out. The opinion is looming up all over this country that this English preference is a mistake. They say they have a revenue tariff. Supposing it is a revenue tariff so far as England is concerned. Is it a revenue tariff to any other country in the world? No, Sir, and they cannot claim it is. The most they can claim for it is that it might be a revenue tariff so far as English goods are concerned. But when they apply it to any other country it is a highly protective tariff, and the principle of protection is as much embodied in it as it ever was in this country before, and in some instances more.

When you come to consider the farmers, do mowing machine, reapers, binding machines and all the heavy articles farmers are obliged to purchase—does one single article come into this country under the English preference? The farmers' interests have been totally overlooked. So they need not claim so much for their English preference. But what does the mutual preference mean? Hon. gentlemen say: Oh, you need not ask for it. Is that a position for a public man to take? Is that what the followers of hon. gentlemen opposite do when they want anything? No, they are knocking at the door every day of the week, Sunday included, for something they want. They believe in that principle when they are after the public chest, they ought to believe in that principle when they are after the markets of the world. But no, you must not ask for it, you can never get it. Now there is just this question to be looked at: We have got to come to some different conditions in this country from what hon. gentlemen opposite propose. I say seriously that the economic conditions of this country are in danger under the present regime. We are standing to-day in this position: Chinese labour, one-third of the world's population, knocking at our western gate for admission. What does that mean? Five cents a day, ten cents a day, fifteen cents a day for labour. If hon. gentlemen admit that free trade is the policy of Canada, then they have got to open these western gates and let this horde of cheap labour into this country in order to enable us to compete with other manufacturing countries. You have got to decide either for high protection in this country or taking care of Canadians, or opening your gates and letting this cheap labour come in, in order that Canada may compete with foreign manufacturers. That is a question worth considering, and ought to be considered. What do we see to-day in that wonderful country? Every commercial country in the world in arms out there watching the great interests that are at stake. If the country is divided up, no doubt England will be a great factor in the ultimate decision, and who then can compete with England in that country, with her money and with her cheap labour? Canada is not in a position to do so. We wish to have the closest possible relations with the mother country, but we want to protect our interests in the future; and hon. gentlemen opposite are derelict in their duty if they do not take up that subject and deal with it before complications arise that they will be unable to cope with.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few things that ought to be said, and this cold storage business is one matter that I wish to refer to. After all the boasting that we have had with reference to what these hon. gentlemen have accomplished I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that cold storage, so far as fruits are concerned, is but in its experimental stage. They don't know to-day what policy is best to adopt, they do not know under what conditions it is safest to ship fruit; and I fancy that one of the causes of failure is that they have sent out to England their camp followers who know as much about the conditions that should govern the shipment of fruit as about those that govern the shipment of swine, and no more. They boast about their cold storage for shipments of butter and cheese to England; how is it then that these articles stand several shillings, in the English market, under the products of Denmark and of Australia? They say that butter reaches there under the conditions it ought to be in, yet it has to take a back seat in the English market so far as prices are concerned. The quality is right, and if it was shipped there under proper conditions the price would be higher than it is. But in order to get good prices something more must be done. What are they boasting about? There is another matter they have got to learn, and that is that you cannot take butter, or cheese, or any other perishable article out of a low temperature and put it into a higher temperature, with safety to that article. That has been one of the great difficulties in shipments of our fowls over there. After all the boasting of hon. gentlemen, there is no place over there for a man to put his articles into cold storage by government provision? There is for his butter and cheese, but there is not for his fowls, and he has got to go to the Englishman who makes a business of cold storage, and he puts his fowl in there—at what price? From two and a half cents to three cents per pound for thirty days. That means that the Canadian shipper of fowl makes that much less profit on it. These gentlemen are not looking after the interests of the farmers as they ought. Shippers may stuff their chicken as much as they like here, but if they do not put it in proper condition on the English market the chicken won't bring a proper return. If you look up the records you will find all the shipments that have been made. Now, they cannot surely ask businessmen to ship goods under the condition of things that they have brought about themselves. I was looking up the articles of shipment going over to the old country, and it is a losing game, according to their own reports. Then why do they expect private individuals to invest their capital in such enterprises? It is about time we had somebody running this concern that knew what he was doing. It is time for them to quit singing this song: See what we have done for the farmers, look at the cold storage we have given them. What was the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite in reference to cold storage in 1896 when it was almost in its inception? Why, when the Conservative government had an item of $60,000 in the estimates of 1896, and when Mr. Foster, who was then acting Minister of Agriculture, asked hon. gentlemen opposite to allow the item to pass in order that he might keep up the continuity of the system, they refused point black to allow it to pass. Still, they go around this country boasting of what they are doing for the farmer. They are not willing to do for the farmer what they profess, they are now after something else. He is the last man in the account. They try to make him believe that their bowels of compassion are as warm as ever for him. Sir, they are as dry as a ram's horn.

Now if hon. gentlemen opposite were honest, were sincere in attempting to get a revenue tariff for this country, no government had a better opportunity. They had a buoyant revenue, a surplus of millions. They claimed to have made a reduction in the tariff, although they have a surplus of eight millions. No attempt to carry out what they professed to think this country wanted. They claimed that the country wanted a revenue tariff. Why, Sir, we never had such a revenue in this country. That is the sense in which it is a revenue tariff. A revenue tariff properly speaking should only meet the requiremnts and just demands of the country, but hon. gentlemen opposite have a revenue tariff that meets more than the just demands of the country and $8,000,000 to boot, according to their story.

I say that the mutual preference which is proposed in the amendment before the House, means a great deal more than many people may see upon the face of it. It does not mean that because England may put 5 cents a bushel on wheat or may put a very nominal duty on cattle and the products of other agricultural countries entering the British market, that therefore we will get a trifle more for our agricultural products; but it means the first place for us Canadians in the English market, and it means an unlimited market for the products of Canada. It means a great deal more than hon. gentlemen opposite assume; it means an unlimited market for the products of this country for years and years to come. It puts the Canadian farmer in the position of the man who drives down to the Ottawa market with a load of produce and has an hour to sell his goods before any one else is allowed to get there. It means that his load is sold whether other people's loads are sold or not. If there is one thing more than another that England is interested in, and if there is one thing more than another that the government ought to represent to the authorities in England, it is that we in Canada have the land and we ought to have the energy and the population to produce all the bread and meat that England wants. We have got the broad acres to do it, thanks to the Conservatives who opened up our country, and the moment it would dawn on England that we would be able in a few short years to give her all the food products she wants, then there would be no difficulty in bringing about this mutual preferential trade which is advocated on this side of the House. Hon. gentlemen opposite say it is impossible to do it. Sir, it is worth the trial, and any public man who is not willing to make the effort, is not honest to the interests of Canada.

Now, Sir, I want to speak of a matter which has often been referred to by gentlemen on the Liberal benches. They will get up there and talk about the race cry, and the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ross), was good enough to say that there was no race cry in Nova Scotia. Well, that is to the credit of the Conservative party in that province. The Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) waxed loud and eloquent—loud, whether eloquent or not—about some little paper away up north saying something about Laurier-Tarte & Co., and so on. If there is one thing more than another that these hon. gentlemen, from the premier down, persist in, it is in refusing to be held by the opinions expressed in newspapers. They repudiated their organs from the Globe down to the smallest sheet—I do not want the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) to leave the House until I tell him something. There was another cry in North Bruce, and what was it? It was the harbour cry and the dock cry. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was up there wading through the snow up to his waist—and that is not far—and skating on the ice to inspect the harbours to see what the people wanted, just two days before the election. I am very glad he went up there, because I think he helped to elect a good Tory.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We only had fifty votes more there.

Mr. BRODER. Well, with all the trouble you had in your special car and all that, they were a pretty expensive lot. I am not finding fault with that, because I think the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) ought to be used well—when he goes away.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. It is very significant that two ministers of the Crown should be in the neighbourhood of North Bruce. The hon. member (Hon. Mr. Ross) told us that Providence has been kind to the Liberals, but Providence did not favour these two ministers because the storm stayed them and snowed them in. Providence is beginning to leave you fellows over there. There is a good deal said by gentlemen opposite about the race cry, but I state here fearlessly that they are in power to-day because of the race cry. The race cry is not the product of a few months nor of a few years even, but you can go back to 1885 and 1886 and you find the right hon. the Prime Minister on the Champ de Mars in Montreal backed up by the Hon. Mr. Mercier trying to unite his people in one phalanx irrespective of party. There is the crop across the House to-day: fifty-eight members from the province of Quebec in a solid phalanx supporting the government, and seven Conservatives. Talk about the race cry. Can you find a single instance in the history of the country parallel to that. They have now the crop from the seed they have sown, and the moment you speak of the fine crop that they have grown on this soil that they have cultivated so long, they answer back: Oh, you are raising the race cry. I say that there is no honest man who should stand up and endeavor to make capital out of a race cry in this country. I have never done it, and I have stood up for the minority when my political interests would have been better served by taking the other side. That is known all over this country. I say that the men from the leader down who have attempted to unite the people because of their race and religion irrespective of party, have not worked in the interest of Canada. Is not this a significant thing? I have here a quotation from speeches of the First Minister and the Hon. Mr. Mercier on the Champ de Mars as published on the 26th November, 1885, in La Patrie, and that speech of the Prime Minister is not to be found in the volume of speeches which the friend of the right hon. gentleman has published to be read by the people of Canada. Was that speech intended for Quebec? It was not intended for the rest of the world, because it is not published. That is rather significant. It is time hon. gentlemen opposite should cease harping on the race question. Why, you can scarcely mention the name of the Prime Minister or of the Hon. Mr. Tarte without being accused of raising the race cry. Have we not the right to deal with the conduct of public men no matter who they are or what they are? The Conservative party is the party that has stood up for the rights of minorities in every respect. If you want authority for the statement that the Liberals have raised the race cry, you can read your own newspaper. You can turn back to the Montreal Herald of the 28th March, 1885, and you will find that it refers to the present Prime Minister and to the Hon. Edward Blake as endeavouring to make capital out of the condition of things in the North-west, and it speaks of the Globe newspaper as having for two years attempted to bring about disturbances in the North-west. I can quote from the documents of the Liberal party to prove that they are the party who live on racial cries. But, Sir, I say with pride that while the Conservative party stands here with a small phalnax from the province of Quebec, they stand as representing the best element in that province; the best element among the French Canadian people of the province of Quebec. Sir, the best element of the people, English and French, in the province of Quebec, stand behind the Conservative party in this parliament, and to-day we hear the rumblings of discontent of certain men who want to follow the lines laid down in 1885 and 1887. They stand up here and they say: Whist, whist, we have got all the advantage in Quebec that we can get out of that condition of things, and now we want to talk to Ontario a while. I do not believe that any honest public man should make use of such a weapon in political warfare. These gentlemen opposite cannot hurl taunts across the floor of the House without expecting a retort, and if they get a retort they have brought it upon themselves. I say, Sir, that the people of Canada irrespective of race or creed are willing to stand side by side in the great national interests of this country, and they should be allowed to do so without interference from the Liberal party.

Our old friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) spoke about the iron bounties. I think he was hardly fair in his argument, because at the present time we are paying more for iron bounties than was ever paid before in this country, and that is a condition of things he is willing to support. He told us it was time enough to bid good morning to the devil when you met him, but the hon. gentleman was between the devil and the deep sea, and he did not wish to answer that question. He has been too long in public life not to know what that question meant. He himself tells us he has been fifteen years in public life and he knows very well that was a fair question put in a fair way, and he should answer it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I will answer it if you wish.

Mr. BRODER. I am going to answer it, perhaps better than you can. The hon. gentleman's province is much interested now in the iron bounties, and he did not want to say anything about it. Provincial interests came in again, and he is a provincial man. He is not a Dominion man at all, and if he is true to his province, he should support our leader here. If he is a free trader, I do not know how in the world he can sleep in that House over there.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria). We have a leader from our province on this side of the House.

Mr. BRODER. I only wish to say that consistency is a jewel which you will never find over there, and we need not look for it. Men who have talked free trade for twenty years are there now, declaring themselves to be tariff revenue men or free traders in principle, who cannot apply free trade to this country. If there is anything at all in the free trade argument, the sooner you apply it to a young country, the easier it is to apply it. Hon. gentlemen opposite are not honest when they make that statement, because they try to shelter themselves for not applying their policy to the country behind the statement that this is a new country and it cannot be applied. If they cannot apply their policy to the country, the honest, straightforward course is for them to go out of office and give others a chance to apply another policy. There is no danger of that, however, in this case. If the country is too young for a free trade policy, I suppose it is because the patient is not strong enough to stand the medicine. The fact is, that hon. gentlemen opposite are afraid of public opinion. They never announced to the country their British preference as a part of their policy. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) put a small motion of about three lines on this subject on 'Hansard' some years ago, but it was never discussed on the public platform. They never attempted to put forward that policy until they got here among their friends who had been fighting for free trade for many years, and who said to them : You must do something in the direction of free trade ; and then the ingenious brain of the Finance Minister conjured up a preference to England, and they threw it to their followers as you might throw a plank to a drowning man ; and on that plank they got ashore. Is that what you talked about to this country for eighteen years ? In all that time it never was mentioned, and hon. gentlemen have not been honest in adopting it. They adopted it merely as an emergency food for their friends ; but it is very weak, and they will not live on it long, and they know it.

Now, the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) made some reference to the condition of labour in the United States. Does it not occur to that hon. gentleman and to the House that his argument was not pertinent at all ? Because you find in Europe that the manufactured products of the United States, such as iron, are disturbing the economic conditions of all Europe. Yet, this hon. gentleman talks about protection being a failure to the labourer in the United States. Where are the labourers who are shut out of our mills going to-day ? They are going to the United States, a highly protected country. Hon. gentlemen could not use an argument more detrimental to their own interest than a comparison of the United States with any free trade country. American iron is displacing English iron in the world's market, and even our own Minister of Railways has to go to the United States to buy engines and cars. When we look over the history of the United States we find that their difficulty only came when they receded from a high tariff, and in every instance they have had to go back to a high tariff in order to keep their labour for their labouring men, and in order to keep pace with the great requirements of the country. There is no country in the world to compare with it, for the enormous success it has had as a commercial country, in the few years, nationally speaking, of its existence. Another thing I wish to refer to is the great increase in the value of the agricultural products of that country under high protection. The increase in the value of agricultural products last year over that of the previous year was no less than four billions of dollars. Yet hon. gentlemen talk about the condition of things in this country. When they make these comparisons, they must expect to be met with the facts.

These are things which every public man should understand before he atempts to legislate for the requirements of this young country. With its enormous resources and the great energy of its people, all it wants is proper management and the proper investing of capital to attain the position it ought to attain as a prosperous and growing country.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, with the customary respect which I bear to the constitutional usages of parliament, you will allow me to return to the question which is before the House, that is, the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition. So many arguments in this debate have been devoted to several questions which are not at issue, like the race question, the religious question, and other questions which I fail to see covered by this motion, that the House will pardon me if I do not discuss these issues. When they are before the House, let us talk about them ; but when the budget of the country is before us, and when we are called upon to decide either for the policy of the government or the policy of the opposition, we should discuss the finances of the country, and consider whether we should approve or disapprove of the policy of one party or the other.

For my part, I would not have taken any part in this debate if my reasons for opposing the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition were not slightly different from those that have been given by most members on this side of the House. It may be due to the fact that most of the members of the ministerialist party are free traders on principle, whilst, as I have told this House very frankly, and as I told my own electors when I went before them in 1896, and again last year, I am a moderate protectionist. The right hon. leader of this government has defined the difference between the two parties, or rather between the government and the opposition, thus : On your left, Mr. Speaker, the principle of protection to manufacturers, and on this side of the House a tariff for revenue, with incidental protection contained therein. Of course, that is a very clear distinction ; but when we have a surplus of $8,000,000 out of a total customs revenue of $28,000,000—I speak in round figures—following a year when we had a surplus of $5,000,000 out of total customs revenue of $25,000,000, it seems to me that the incident is becoming very near the principal, and that, instead of having protection as the eventual consequence of a tariff revenue, we are getting a very swollen revenue from a protective tariff. This reminds me of an incident in one of the most charming stories of Merimee. A Huguenot soldier, disguised in a monk's garb, fleeing from the massacre of St. Bartholomew, stopped one morning at a country inn and called for breakfast. It was a Friday morning. He happened to catch two fat chickens in the yard, and asked the hostess to prepare them. She was scandalized, and said to him : ' Don't you know this is Friday morning ? ' To which he replied : ' Oh ! don't worry yourself : I baptize them carp and perch.' When I heard the old fighters who stood for so many years against surpluses gathered from the sweat of the farmers and the workingmen of this country, applauding the announcement of a surplus of $8,000,000, it seemed to me a little strange. Of course, I am no authority, and pretend to be no authority, on trade matters ; but it seems to me that a tariff capable of such results is a tariff for revenue and for something else. The question is, what is that something else ? I leave it to the free traders on principle to baptize it with a very mild name, which will cover their past scruples. For myself, I call it protection. Of course, if I were a free trader on principle, it would be very easy for me to swallow that kind of protection ; but being only a moderate protectionist, I begin to feel a little uneasy about it. And when I heard the hon. Minister of Finance giving a warning to the manufacturers of this country, and telling them : Do not dare to come and tempt our virtue, for no change in the tariff will be made in your favour by this government, for some years to come, it seemed to me that the same warning applied to the consumers and farmers of the country. To these, it meant : Do not expect any alleviation of your burdens.

Of course—I might as well confess now—on this, as on most political matters, I am a man of very few principles. I envy those rich men who can afford to abandon a few principles at every corner of their public life and still keep an ample supply. My poverty forces me to stand for what I believe. On these matters, my confession of faith is a very short one. I have no theory. I believe in a tariff framed, kept and modified according to the natural circumstances of the country for which it is framed, and according to the developments that may take place in the national life of that country. And I admire the frankness of speech of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith), who told us that, though born and brought up in a country where free trade was not only a principle, but the declared policy of all public men, yet, having come to this country, and having found here different circumstances, though he still believed in the principle upon which he had been brought up, yet, he avowed that we needed some protection in this country. And I think it would have been far better and more courageous on the part of the government to tell us, when they came into power, or in the first year when they were called upon to frame a tariff, and every year when they were called upon to modify or maintain it, that, though they believed in free trade, yet, finding it impossible to adopt free trade in this country, finding it necessary to keep a certain degree of protection, they would keep it as long as necessary, instead of trying to make us believe that this was a tariff for revenue. The longer I am in public life, the more I believe it is as well to speak of things as they are, instead of trying to find some fine names to make ourselves seem in accord with declarations made twenty-five years ago. The Canadian people is broadminded ; it does not ask its public men to show that their action to-day is copied from a dictum a quarter of a century old, so long as their action is a right one, and one in the interests of the country. I believe that, as a general rule, the taxation of this country should be proportioned to the requirements of the government, meaning that there should be a high rate when the total revenue is not up to the required expenditure, and a lower rate when the total revenue is too high. This is a general principle, which, I admit, must be applied with some care. It does apply indeed, and has been applied for several years in France. Now, I am free to admit that I am not a great admirer of the French system of government, so far as politics are concerned. I have never made any bones about it. I think it will be admitted that I am not moved by a desire to flatter anybody—I am not a flatterer, I think I may be granted that much—if I say I am a great admirer of the British system of government, so far as politics are concerned, so far as the balance of power is concerned, so far as concerns the granting of individual liberty and the keeping up of social liberty. But, so far as economic policy is concerned, I may be granted leave to say that the French nation is the best-ruled nation in the world. It may be said that under the French system of economy the trade of France has not expanded, while the trade of England, the trade of Germany, the trade of the United States have expanded. To my mind, the end of government is not so much to help the manufacturers and tradesmen of a country to make and sell more goods, but to see that, through a sound economical policy, each class of the people shall share in the benefits of industry. The richest country in the world, to my mind, is not the country which manufactures and sells the most, but in which there is an equal proportion of wealth amongst all classes of people. And, so far as that is concerned, there is no nation that equals the French nation to-day. And why ? Because their economical questions are outside of politics. There are free traders and there are protectionists in France ; but there is no party of free trade and no party of protection. There is a non-political commission which, every year, looks into the production of the country, considers the industrial condition of the country ; and, if it is found that the prices charged by the producers of goods are too high, the duties are lowered and foreign goods are allowed to come in to compete—not to crush the national industries—but to force the producers to sell their products to the people of France at a fair profit. Now, I admit that in Canada, it would be harder to apply that system, because this is a new country ; new industries are developing, new natural resources are found which change every year the conditions of industry. But, I say that we should move towards this end. A tariff should not be prepared and maintained forever simply to protect this industry or that industry, simply to flatter the farming community on one hand or to favour the manufacturing community on the other hand. The tariff should be framed free from political aim, so that all classes of the people should get a legitimate profit by it, and no class should be allowed to make profit at the expense of another. I say that we need some kind of protection in this country. Even in 1896, before I knew exactly what would be the tariff framed, should my party get into power, I told the electors of the county in which I ran, that I was a protectionist, my reason being, I believe, that of the hon. member for Vancouver. The hon. gentleman did not get to the point of telling us why, having come to Canada, he had changed his mind or rather found that a policy which he admired in England could not be applied in Canada. To my mind, the reason is a simple one. As I said, I believe in the tariff being framed, not upon theory, but upon actual and real facts with which we have to deal. What is our position ? Here, on the northern part of the North American continent, are two nations. One is a nation of seventy-five millions of people, separated commercially from the rest of the world by the highest protective wall that exists on the globe. The other is a young rising nation of six millions of people. My reason for saying that we need that, and for some years yet to come, and, perhaps, for many years to come, we shall need a protective tariff in this country, is not merely to give revenue to the government, but to protect ourselves against undue competition from the Americans. I would have no objection to the American goods coming into this country and competing on a fair basis with the Canadian goods ; but I have, and I shall continue to have, objections to the American manufacturers, having made up their enormous profits in a protected market of seventy-five millions of people, coming and competing with the Canadian industries and slaughtering prices in Canada. I may be told by my free trade friends : But the Canadian consumer will get the benefit of it, for he will buy cheaper ; and why should you tax all the people of this country for the benefit of a few manufacturers ? I find my reply in the very words of the hon. member for Vancouver this afternoon. As he told us, the manufacturer is the most tyrannical monopolist in the world. It may be that the Canadian consumer, for a short time after the barrier was lowered or removed, would benefit by the low prices of American goods coming into this country, slaughtering our markets and destroying our manufactures. The consumer might get American goods for two or three years at cheaper rates and so make money. But once the Canadian manufactories were closed and competition in Canada was no longer possible, the prices would go up, as we have seen the price of coal oil go up. And, as against the profit we should make for two or three years, the consumer would pay tenfold in the following years when the Canadian manufacturer was crushed and the American manufacturer had control of the market. I would be a free trader as much as any man on this side of the House, if there could be fair competition from other nations with the American manufacturer. If the conditions were such that the German or English product could come in and compete with the American product, I would say : Let the Canadian manufacturers be driven out, and let the Canadian consumer profit by the cheaper market. But what do we see now : the steel king of the United States sells his goods, not merely in British possessions, not merely in the competitive markets of the world, but in England, at the very door of the English manufacturer, competing in an industry which has been for years in the hands of England. He forces the English railways to buy American steel rails manufactured in a protective country, after they have been transported to the seaboard on American railways, carried across the Atlantic, taken to the very door of the English steel manufacturer and sold at cheaper prices than the Englishman can make them.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) allow me to ask him a question ? Does he pretend that it is as a result of protection that these steel rails were manufactured more cheaply in the United States and sold in the British markets ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Then, the hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) passes judgment on my knowledge, let me answer his question by saying : No, I do not pretend so. But, I take the facts as they are. Whether it be on account of protection or on account of more skilful labour, or better means of production, I find that the manufactures of free trade England are driven, not merely out of the markets of the world, but out of the British market as well, by the products of the United States. Therefore, I say, before we open our doors, let us consider these facts. I do not say, however, let us nail up our doors. And it is for that reason that I cannot adopt the first paragraph of the declaration of the leader of the opposition, which says :

That, in the opinion of this House, the welfare of this country requires a pronounced policy of adequate protection and encouragement at all times to the labour, agricultural, manufacturing, mining and other industrial interests of Canada.

I simply say that so long as we cannot find better means of preventing American manufacturers slaughtering their goods in foreign markets, after they have made an honest profit in their own ;—so long as we cannot otherwise prevent their killing our own industries in this way—we need some protection for some time to come. But when we come down to the details, then we should find out the difference between protectionists on principle and protectionists by accident. The difference should be this : Instead of abiding by the straight rule laid down by the leader of the opposition, men who have fought all their lives for the doctrine of free trade, should carry their principles into practice by at least giving the lowest protection possible and concentrating that protection upon those industries which make the most use of the natural products of this country. That protection should also be administered in favour of those industries which are liable to be killed by the competition of foreign monopolists, and should be applied more particularly to Canadian manufactures that are not under the control of monopolies and trusts. In other words, we should fight, not only against foreign but against domestic trusts as well. Of course, I know that in the tariff of 1897 there is a special provision giving power to the Minister of Customs to discriminate against trusts and combines. But how is that law applied ? I shall not go into the details of the tariff, not only because I do not pretend to be an authority, but also because I do not believe that a great accumulation of figures implies a great deal of science. But I shall simply take the three industries of sugar, cotton and wool. These three, I would, in my ignorance, classify under the heading of artificial industries, and what I mean by an artificial industry is one which does not use any national product, but imports the foreign product and then converts that product into something else. The three industries I have mentioned, I refer to more particularly because their products are those most required by the mass of the people, especially sugar and cotton. Woollens perhaps are not so totally required by the poor, because they include the more expensive articles of clothing.

What about sugar ? We are told by the Minister of Finance that he does not propose to encourage the manufacture of beetroot sugar. I am not a believer in bounties on principle, but if under a free trade government bounties are to be given to capitalists, to owners of iron mines and iron smelters, why should not a similar favour be extended to the Canadian farmer, especially when that would encourage competition against one of the largest and best known trusts of this country. If there is an artificial industry in the world, as far as Canada is concerned, it is that of sugar. We do not produce one cent's worth of the raw material required by the refiners, but thanks to our tariff—not only the tariff framed four years ago, but the present tariff—the sugar refiner has ample protection. According to the statement of the Minister of Customs the other night, our revised tariff of to-day gives 8 cents more per 100 pounds of protection to the refiner, which means the swelling of the dividends of the sugar trust and an increase of revenue to the government at the cost of the Canadian consumer. Yet, when the Canadian farmer asks a little bounty, he is told in reply : Oh ! no, this is a free trade government.

Let us take cotton and wool. Here are two industries which are most directly affected by the preference accorded to Great Britain. We had the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) telling us this afternoon that the woollen industry had not suffered from English competition. But on the other hand, we had the declaration of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Kendry) telling us that it had. In this matter, I do not profess to be a judge, but I know that last week I met one of the representatives of the biggest woollen concerns of Canada, and was told by him of the efforts which the woollen manufacturers had made to meet English competition. He said that when the 25 per cent reduction was made in the tariff of 1897, they got new implements and improved machinery, and were prepared to fight the English competition. And even when the further reduction of 8⅓ per cent was made, they did not cease their efforts ; but they were very much afraid that when the trade, which was now very brisk, became slack, they would not be able to stand the pressure. They were afraid that at first the smaller manufacturers would have to shut down and then the others would have to follow suit. I voted heartily in favour of the reduction of 25 per cent in the tariff of 1897, not for the reason, given three years later, that it was going to create a stronger bond of unity between England and the colony, but because it meant a reduction of duty to the Canadian consumer. For the same reason, I supported the further reduction last year, but at that time I made a reservation. I said : I am in favour of this reduction because I believe that industries, which cannot hold their own with two-thirds of the actual duty in their favour and the cost of transportation, are not worthy of existing on Canadian soil, and the Canadian people should not be taxed for their maintenance.

I expected that this year the question would be looked at with a little more care by the government. I would be disposed to say that these industries which cannot exist under the present preferential tariff of England, should not exist. But then let the law be the same for all. How is it that previous to the reduction that was made in favour of British goods, the duties on woollen articles remained the same but the duties on cotton fabrics went up ? We had a letter from the most important cotton manufacturer of this country, Mr. Gault, congratulating this government on the way they had framed their tariff. The Minister of Customs says to the woollen manufacturers : Go on, display skill, and the Almighty will help you ! But when the cotton industries were concerned, perhaps the government said the same thing : Display skill, help yourselves and the Almighty will help you,—and perhaps they added : We will help you a little too, and we will raise the duty. Why this different treatment ? Is it because the woollen industries are not combined and the cotton industries are combined ? I would be very much surprised, though not being a free trader on principle, if, under a government elected to power by free traders, combined industries should receive special protection, while industries who are striving to live separately receive no consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the second paragraph of the amendment of the leader of the opposition, the paragraph in favour of mutual preference throughout the British Empire. To my mind that paragraph is a direct contradiction to the first one. Hon. gentlemen opposite have complained that Canadian industries are hurt by the preferential tariff, and they say they want a preference in the British market as a compensation for the preference we give. I have followed pretty closely the declarations of hon. gentlemen opposite, from the leader of the opposition to the last speaker, and I have not yet been able to catch their idea. I would like to put this question to the leader of the opposition : Are we to understand by this paragraph in favour of mutual reciprocity between Great Britain and her colonies that, if the leader of the opposition should come to power, he would protect the industries which his party claim are hurt by preferential trade, by raising the duties on foreign articles to the rate that existed before, in order to make up for that preference in favour of British goods ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see that there is any difficulty at all in what the hon. gentleman suggests. It is perfectly easy adequately to protect Canadian industries, and at the same time, so far as we have to import from foreign countries, to give a preference to Great Britain.

Mr. BOURASSA. I think the reply is very indefinite. These gentlemen are attacking the preferential policy of the government on the ground that it hurts some Canadian industries. I do not think they would go so far as to say that, should they come to power, they would first raise the duty on those article by 33⅓ per cent of the old duty, and then raise the duty on all other articles except British so as to make up for the preference. Therefore, should they leave things as they are, and simply ask for compensation by a protection on colonial goods in the British market, that would not afford any help to the woollen industry. The fact that we would sell more cheese, more flour, more butter, and that we might sell them at a higher price in the British market, would not be any compensation to the woollen manufacturers. Therefore, I say that from the point of view laid down in the first paragraph of the amendment that there should be ample protection to certain industries, the kind of preference which they suggest would not be in accordance with their promises to those industries.

Now the question is, what advantage would be derived from mutual protection? To my mind—and that is especially where I differ from the government—I do not oppose this motion simply on the ground that mutual protection cannot be obtained from England, I oppose it on principle. But the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance say that we cannot get that preference, while the hon. gentlemen opposite say we can. The evidence given by hon. gentlemen on this side that we cannot get the mutual preference, is especially drawn from the deliberations of the congress of the Chambers of Commerce in London last summer. I am one of the first men in this country who read that report. It was sent to me directly from London by an English friend of mine, who is like myself an anti-Imperialist, only that he is free to say in England what I am not free to say here. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs have referred to that report, but only to that part of it which relates to commercial preference. But the question was not presented to the congress of the Chambers of Commerce in London, it was not presented to the British people, it was not presented to the Prime Minister of England, it was not presented to Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, upon the ground that it was simply a matter of trade; therefore I may be allowed to complete the record made by the Prime Minister and his colleagues. The document is a very interesting one, and is illustrative of the present state of mind throughout the empire—of the juvenile colonial enthusiasm in comparison with that stern common sense and sound British spirit of which we have had such a good example in the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith). And I may say to that hon. gentleman that I would be pleased one of these days if he would come down to the province of Quebec, and I would help to elect him in one of our French constituencies; we need Englishmen like him in this country. The first question that was presented to that congress was not the question of mutual preference, it was the question of a consultative Imperial council. Gentlemen who are familar with this congress know that all the resolutions discussed in it are framed previously in all the Chambers of Commerce throughout the empire, and then sent to the Secretary of the Association in London, and therefore are printed long before they are discussed. A motion in favour of an Imperial council was proposed by a delegate from Birmingham, Mr. Tonks, and in order to give the House the spirit of his motion I will just read a word or two from his speech:

> It might be better in this matter of the Imperial council to begin with consultation with the idea that we might end with federation.

Later on:

> I believe one of the most important questions which we have to consider at this congress is this question. But if we are willing to take the first step, I feel sure, from what I know of the feelings and views of the Secretary of State for the Colonies that he is only anxious to take such a step if the colonies themselves are united in desiring it.

Well, the colonial representatives were so united that they were not satisfied with the suggestion of the representative from Birmingham: he was not expecting enough from the colonies, he was not opening wide enough the doors of the Council Chamber in favour of the colonies. The representative of the Ottawa Chamber, a civil servant of this government, Mr. Macfarlane, came there and seconded an amendment which was moved by the representative of the Cape Town Chamber, to the effect that not only did the colonies want to be represented, but they wanted to be taxed. The Englishmen said: No, you go too far, we do not want your money. But the colonials, full of pride and enthusiasm, insisted: We want to pay, we want to tax ourselves! And Mr. Macfarlane, a civil servant of this government, was offering the money of the Canadian people to the Englishmen who did not want to take it. Sir, I will read the amendment that was proposed by the Cape Town delegate:

> The time has arrived when a serious effort should be made to formulate a scheme of Imperial federation, whereby the self-governing colonies shall be represented in the councils of the empire; that as a means to this end, all the self-governing colonies should contribute a percentage (to be decided by the representatives in conference)——

Not even by their parliaments. Oh, no; parliaments are a small thing under the new system.

> That representation in any federal council should be in proportion to the respective contributions of the several states;
> That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Lord Salisbury and the premiers of the self-governing colonies for their consideration.

References were made to the war in South Africa, and to the display of devotion by the colonies, and, therefore, it was said, that we should not stop these devoted colonies from paying a little more. The representative from Ottawa arraigned Lord Salisbury, who, to his mind, was not Tory enough. He said that the policy for England should be Lord Beaconsfield's policy, and he quoted some words from Lord Beaconsfield, regretting that autonomy had been given to the colonies without some restriction, so that the colonies could be ruled from London. Some very distinguished Englishmen protested. Lord Avebury, delegate from the association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, said : Do not go too fast ; we may come to that but wait a little. Here are his words :

In voting for the original resolution, we desire it to be understood that we so vote because we believe that the resolution of the Birmingham chamber will carry us as far as we are prepared to go. Many of us, in supporting what is proposed by the Birmingham chamber today, believe that the time is not far distant when we shall see carried what is suggested by the Cape Town chamber.

Again, the colonies protested. Senator Drummond, one of the representatives of Canada, arraigned the mild language of the Birmingham resolution on the ground that the Englishmen did not want us to be English enough. He said :

I maintain that the language of this resolution of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce is entirely insufficient and disappointing. I can assure this assembly that the people of Canada who sent their sons to South Africa were not influenced by any such milk-and-water sentiment as 'increased cordiality and sense of union' —increased cordiality—to the extent of inviting you to an afternoon tea, or something of that sort, and to any social function.

Finally, a compromise resolution was arrived at in order to make up for the sentiment of the English people who did not want to take too much from us, and for the sentiment of the colonials who wanted to make us pay more. It was found that in the wording of the compromise resolution, the consultive chamber was to arrange for all this, and thereupon a common-sensed Englishman said : You are making a legislature of this council ; it should be made to consider and advise and not to legislate. Again, a Canadian delegate said : No, no ; we want it to legislate for and govern and rule Canada. But, finally, the common sense of the English people prevailed, and the resolution which was carried was some kind of a resolution which leaves us yet the right to say that we can select to be taxed or not by Mr. Macfarlane, just as we please.

Then, the question of commercial relations came up. As has been said in this House, the matter was introduced by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp), who gave a great display of colonial sentiment. Mr. Macfarlane came to the rescue, stating that we had sent our sons to Africa, and, therefore, we wanted to be united and blended with England, and so on. In fact, the only colonist to talk a little common sense was Mr. Cockshutt, one of the Brantford delegates. He said that the British Empire was a commercial empire, and that if it wanted to last it should continue to act on business principles. There was an amendment brought in by the Manchester Chamber, which has not been referred to in this House ; it said.

This congress, rejoicing in the growing evidences of unity between the mother country and the colonies, and recognizing the material and political advantages of the largest possible exchange of commodities between the various portions of the empire, is of opinion that all measures for the promotion of this end should respect the liberty of each portion to purchase in the cheapest market wherever it may exist.

Again the colonials protested. Dr. Parkin spoke of the display of Imperial sentiment in Toronto, Montreal and elsewhere. Mr. Scott protested, that even if we would not be granted any favour by England we were still willing to give our money and our blood for England. That did not disturb the British common sense, and Mr. Thompson replied, speaking of the colonies :

Their trade is of great value to us, but we esteem their friendship even more highly than their trade. The events of the past year have brought home to every Englishman the immense moral and material support which our colonial kinsmen can and do render to the mother country in the defence of the empire. This is far better than any mere community of interests, it is emphatically a union of hearts.

The delegate from the Edinburg chamber, Mr. Anderson, was still shorter and clearer, for he simply said :

Sentiment is one thing and business is another.

Well, the result was that the colonies, in spite of all their display of sentiment, had to come back to accept a compromise resolution, which meant simply that a delegation would interview the Prime Minister of England and ask his opinion, in order to know if some possible favour could be granted to the colonies. We know what was the result of that. The Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) has told us the result of that with much wit and eloquence. The Prime Minister of England, who had been so glad to accept our soldiers, who had been so glad to have our blood shed, who had been so glad to have our moral support in Africa, did not want to receive the Canadian delegates, because it might hurt him in his elections. And though Dr. Parkin, when that compromise motion was adopted, received it as a 'nunc dimittis,' and said it was the opening of a new era for the empire, yet, the Prime Minister of England, and Mr. Chamberlain, reduced it to nothing in a few days.

There was a third question brought up, and it is a question which was coupled intimately with the question of the Imperial council and the preference in the British market. It was the question of Imperial defence. Again, of course, it was moved by a colonial. The man who moved it was Mr. Hadrill, of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. Macfarlane, who must have much time to prepare his speeches when he is not analysing for the Dominion government, said the motion did not go far enough for him. He wanted Canada to be taxed 5 per cent on all its imports in favour of the British army and navy. This year that would have meant $6,000,000. It is a fine thing for a Dominion civil servant to go to London and to say in our name, without consulting the government of this country, without consulting the Prime Minister of this country : That Canada is ready to tax herself $6,000,000 a year as a contribution to the English army and navy. But, Sir, what is most peculiar of all is this : Among the three hundred delegates present, one delegate, Mr. Geoffrion, of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, had probably read the eloquent words of the Prime Minister last session on the question of the South African war, when the right hon. gentleman said : That Canada was keeping her liberty; that Canada would judge of each case according to its merits, and would interfere in British wars only when she thought fit to do so. Imbued undoubtedly with the eloquence of the Prime Minister, Mr. Geoffrion stated that the contribution of Canada towards the South African war, in sending 3,000 men, and in expending several million dollars without being obliged to do so, should be a proof of the devotion of the colony, and, therefore, he moved as an amendment :

> That the colonies be not asked to contribute to the defence of the empire unless they do so willingly, and without coercion or written law.

We have heard, Mr. Speaker, of the great influence of the words of the Prime Minister of Canada in Great Britain and throughout the empire. Here Mr. Geoffrion uses words taken almost literally from the right hon. gentleman's speeches, but they did not find one seconder in that assembly. Mr. Geoffrion could not find one man to second his motion, and he had to sit down, and the motion which prevailed was not the one inspired by the Prime Minister of this country, but it was the one supported by a Dominion civil servant, and proposed by the Montreal delegate of the chamber of commerce. To sum up, the result of that congress in London, which is far more important than some imagine, is this : When it was a question of giving some representation to the colonies in the Imperial council, there was a division of opinion pro and con ; when it was a question of getting some favour of the colonies from the mother land, it was set aside ; but, when it was a question of taxing the colonies entirely and solely for the benefit of England, it was carried unanimously ; not a word of protest from the English delegates—not even a word of thanks.

Mr. Speaker, I do not utter these words as a reproach to the distinguished representatives of English trade and politics who were there. No, Sir, they were up to their duty. British statesmen and British tradesmen understand that their first duty belongs to the British nation ; and therefore when the colonies go there and offer favours which they are not asked for and not obliged to give, British statesmen and British tradesmen would be very foolish not to accept them. But, I am sufficient an admirer of Great Britain to say that we should be the worthy sons of that great nation and look first after our own interests ; because if we wait for her to look after our interests, we may be left in the dark. The whole problem of political, military and economic Imperialism was summed up by no less an authority than Lord Selborne, Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, in his opening address at that congress, when he said :

> A century and a quarter ago it was this question of Imperial defence which lay at the root of that quarrel with our American colonies which finally lost them to us. To-day it is the same question operating more than any other to draw the different parts of the empire together.

I cannot but echo the words of Lord Selborne. The question of to-day is no new one. It is not the development of a new Imperial policy. It is the same old question which took from England the finest part of her empire. It is the question whether the colonies are to be ruled from London or at home. Sir, the present system is finer, I admit ; it is better framed ; sentiment is better developed in the colonies. Good governors and good majors-general are sent to the colonies ; there is a press which was not in existence 120 years ago ; and the press of this country is influenced to work up sentiment. The eyes of the colonies are veiled by sentiments of loyalty which are not at stake, and politicians are scared. We are proud to compromise the liberty of the colonies and their autonomy under the new name. The representative of the Ottawa Board of Trade, at the London Congress of the Chambers of Commerce, eulogized the policy of Lord Beaconsfield, and I do not think we shall have to wait very long before we shall have some apologists telling us that the best rule that existed for the colonies was that of Lord North and George III. We are coming to it very fast.

It may be answered that the parliaments of the colonies are free, that they can object to anything sought to be imposed upon them by the British government. Yes, but do not forget that the Irish parliament was free not to sell the liberties of Ireland, and they were sold just the same. I admit that the operation was very quickly done; but I do not think that it was more surely done than it is being done now in Canada. You may say that there is a good deal of politics in all these things. Yes, there has been a good deal of politics in the way the question of Imperialism has been treated in this country. No doubt it was politics when one party in Ontario was telling the people that love to the mother country was the only inspiration of its policy, and in Quebec was saying that they had only done it for the sake of Canada; and when the other party was saying in Ontario that their opponents had not done enough for England, and was saying in Quebec that they had done too much. But the men who were gathered together at the conference of the Chambers of Commerce in London, were not politicians, but representatives of British capital and industry. Not only was the trade and commerce of the whole empire represented there, but also the bankers, the large navigation companies and the railway companies; and the influence of British capital is very strong in all these institutions. When a Canadian or Australian or Cape Colony company has debentures to float or money to borrow, where do they go? They go to London. You may say they go to London for business and not for politics. I may be allowed to mention a little incident to show how the London capitalist can influence politics in other countries. It may scandalize very much the loyalists of this House to hear it, but in England it would not do harm to any man; so I will speak as if I were in England. I met last year in New York the chief secretary of the pro-Boer committee, who told me that he had gathered funds, not to help the Boers, but to send help for their wounded and sick soldiers, just as another committee in New York had been organized to send help to wounded and sick British soldiers; and he said he had tried to place his funds in fourteen American banks, and he was refused permission to do so, because he was told that it would hurt their business in London. When we see that the influence of English capitalists is strong enough to prevent a banker in New York accepting money which was to be devoted, not to military purposes, but to charity, we may be sure that the English capitalists can influence capital in Montreal, Halifax, Toronto, and elsewhere in Canada, and can also influence Canadian politicians. I do not mean to influence them corruptly, but I mean to influence public opinion. How was this influence of the Chambers of Commerce carried to the politics of the colonies? In a very simple way: through the British Empire League, a branch of which exists in Canada, and to which belong ministers of the Crown, members of both sides of the House, and senators—Conservative and Liberals, French and English. Two or three members of this cabinet were there; and what did you see? At the meeting of that league held in Ottawa, during this very session, the same resolutions were passed which had been adopted by the Chambers of Commerce, and it was very skilfully done. These resolutions are always moved by a Conservative and seconded by a Liberal, or moved by a Liberal and seconded by a Conservative. The president of that league read an address, which has been scattered all over the country in pamphlet form, and in which the very idea dominant at the congress of the Chambers of Commerce in London was set forth, namely, that all the colonists should be taxed to contribute to Imperial defence, meaning, in the very words of the president, a contribution of over six millions of dollars from Canada, for this year alone.

Now, with regard to getting an Imperial preference for Canada, I do not see that it is a very remote possibility. It is true, Mr. Chamberlain has said that it will not come. But Mr. Chamberlain is not there for ever, and he has changed his mind on a few subjects, from home rule down. We know that Mr. Chamberlain is not only the master, but the prophet of this government and of this country; but, Sir, there is something more powerful than even Mr. Chamberlain; there is British capital, and there are British interests. British trade is suffering to-day. The British manufacturers are finding that their products are coming more and more into competition with foreign products in foreign markets, and foreign products are coming into competition with their products even in their own market. At the same time they see that the trade of their colonies is increasing and that their purchasing as well as their producing capacity is growing every day; and they may come to the conclusion before long that something might be done with the colonies to the exclusion of the rest of the world. Of course, the British capitalists will not act as long as they can pay us with declarations and sentiments. John Bull is a practical fellow, and he will pay us with compliments and medals as long as we accept them, like the savages who exchange gold and ivory for glass pearls. But the time will come when the colonies will not accept such things as sufficient compensation for their blood and money, and what will then be offered? Then we shall be offered an Imperial council, first to consult, and afterwards to federate and deal. I need not say that such an Imperial council does not mean representation for the colonies. I do not mean to say that there may not be two or three men in it from Canada, and two or three men from Australia, New Zealand and other British colonies; but that does not mean representation for the colonies. Of course, I may presume that these men will always be the best we can send ; but after all they will always be, as far as each colony is concerned, a small minority in the whole council ; and moreover, they will always be under the direct influence of the London government. I say the Canadian people can have proper representation only in a chamber which is on Canadian soil, and over which they have exclusive and direct influence. You may say that this is not becoming, but our Canadian representative, Lord Strathcona, has already approved the idea. Addressing a Scotch audience some months ago, at some festival in the Aberdeen University, he said he was in favour of the organization of an Imperial council, on which each colony would be represented by one, two or three men, and which would deal with Imperial affairs.

The next step would be commercial preference, and I would not be surprised if it should come. But when it does come, it will mean that the amount of taxation which the British people will impose on themselves in order to give a preference to colonial products, would be more than compensated to them by the sacrifices of money and men required of the colonies to keep up the Imperial army and navy. There is some talk of reorganizing the army in England and the word 'conscription' which, six months ago, could not have been uttered before an English audience, has been pronounced by a minister of the Crown in England. On this question of preference, on which we are told that Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain have made up their mind, it is true there is no public declaration ; but, according to all the reports, the English cabinet are divided, and while Sir Michael Hicks-Beach still stands by the old principle of free trade, Mr. Chamberlain is inclined to give some kind of preference to the colonies. But as far as I am concerned, I shall vote against the resolution of the leader of the opposition, not because I think we cannot get this preference or because it may not come for a long time, but because I do not want it. And I do not want it for the reason that it would cost us a great deal of our liberty and commit us to Imperial federation. My position to-night is exactly the same as that taken by the right hon. the Prime Minister in 1891, when he said in Boston that Canada would never consent to Imperial federation because that would mean contribution to England's wars. The right hon. gentleman may have changed his ideas since, but I may be permitted to stand on the same ground as he did then, and refuse English preference because I believe that the price we would have to pay, namely, the obligation to contribute to England's wars, would be entirely too costly.

I now come to the third paragraph of the amendment, but evidently any reason for that third paragraph has disappeared since the hon. gentleman has told us that it does not apply to the United States. If the policy of discriminating in favour of or against foreign countries according to the advantages they give or refuse us, were to apply to any country, it would apply to the United States, and therefore if the hon. gentleman is not in favour of applying it to the United States there is no reason for its existence in the resolution at all. On this point I fully agree with the First Minister, when he says that our tariff should not be framed with regard to Germany or the United States but with regard to Canada. I believe with him that we should not impose a high duty, which would mean higher taxation on our own people, simply because a low duty might be of some advantage to American or German manufactures. On the contrary, we should frame our duties to meet the needs of Canadian consumers. The same remark applies to British goods. In this question we should treat all countries on the same principle. I have never preferred the American dollar to the British shilling, and I now worship the British shilling no more than I do the American dollar. The one principle upon which we should stand in our political, economical and military matters should be the devotion to Canadian interests in preference to American, British, German or any other. You may say that this is a policy of egotism. It may be, but egotism is the only law of nations. I do not say that we should disinterest ourselves completely from the welfare of other people, but our first duty is to Canada before every other country.

As regards our relations with the United States, I am a little embarrassed as to the treatment of that question. But my connection with the International Commission is now sufficiently distant to allow me to interpret the events that have succeeded, I may say this much, that if that International Commission did not come to any satisfactory conclusion, no blame can be cast upon the representatives of Canada. They did their duty to Canada. They asked what they should have asked for. They showed sufficient spirit of conciliation and at the same time retained their dignity. But I will venture the opinion that if we did not succeed in getting better and fairer treatment from the Americans, the fault lies at the hands of the British government. That commission sat during six months—three in Quebec and three in Washington. After it was over, one of the British commissioners, who was at the same time a member of this cabinet, Sir Louis Davies, went to England and passed a few months there. And on his return he told us that he had found such prejudices in the minds of English statesmen that he had been obliged to write a big volume in order to make them understand that Canada was right. Yet for six months the British government was represented on that commission by Lord Herschell, one of the ablest of English public men, and who was in correspondence with his government during all that time. Lord Herschell passed several weeks in Canada, and discussed the question with this government as well as with the American delegates, and was besides in correspondence all the time with the British authorities, and yet we had to send a delegate to London to persuade our dear cousins, the employees of Mr. Chamberlain, that they should look a little more to the interests of Canada and a little less to those of the United States. How is it that the British government succeeded in getting from the United States a settlement by arbitration of the Venezuela question ? Yet when we, under the same British flag, invoking the same law, ask the Washington authorities to apply the same principle of arbitration to the interpretation of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States, as successors of Russia's rights, they replied : No, the same principle no longer applies. In the war with Spain, the United States had the friendship of England and it has even been claimed that that friendship was the cause of the United States not having been disturbed by European interference. In the war between England and the Transvaal, the first nation to acknowledge the annexation by England of the Dutch republics was the United States. How is it, then, that, with all these friendly relations between the two countries, the Canadian case has received no attention ? How is it that the Washington authorities have been induced to agree with the British authorities on every question but the Canadian one ? I think it arises from the fact that as long as the British authorities are convinced that the Canadians are simple-minded enough to give their money, blood, and assistance and to send over a representative to declare to the English people 'Even if you do not give us any return, we will still be always ready to help you,' they will take our money, blood and help, but when it comes to settling our difficulties with the United States they will only give us a faint-hearted support. So long as we do not make ourselves respected we shall not be respected.

Out of that great friendship between England and the United States, I had hoped for much. I had hoped that a country like Great Britain, which has done so much for the benefit of humanity, and the United States, which has done so much for the development of the world, would have agreed together upon a prompt and peaceful settlement of any dispute. But it seems that the spirit of grab is the basis of that friendship and cannot be fruitful of peaceable results. And perhaps the United States are not so much afraid of Great Britain as they were before this South African war. Of that we have had evidence by the way they have treated the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Upon this question of the financial policy of the country, I wish to be clearly understood. Whether I may have a future or not in Canadian politics, I intend voting against the whole motion of the leader of the opposition, on account of its spirit. The principle enunciated in the first paragraph, I cannot accept. And I cannot accept it, not because I am a free trader, but because I am a moderate protectionist. The second paragraph also meets with my disapproval, not because we cannot get the preference asked for from England, but because we cannot get it without sacrificing a good deal of Canadian liberty and self-autonomy. And the third paragraph I am opposed to because, as matter of fact, we have no interest in applying the policy indicated to the United States or to other countries.

For many years, parties in this country have been divided on questions of political economy. The aim we should have, the end towards which we should move, is to secure the gradual control of our trade relations with all the countries of the world. I say that the adoption of the principle laid down by the leader of the opposition would have for its practical consequence the framing and control of our tariff policy by some kind of a board in London. It would be a check on our control of our own tariff not only with Great Britain but with the nations of the world. Therefore, Sir, as a Liberal, as a Canadian, attached to the interests of Canada, and wishing that the interests of the Canadian people should be looked after by the Canadian parliament, rather than those of any other country in the world, I shall vote against the three propositions of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention at this late hour to offer any criticism of the speech which has been so ably delivered by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). In fact, even if time permitted, I do not feel that I should be justified in offering any adverse criticism of the discussion he has given to the fiscal policy of the country, for the reason that there seems to be much in common between that hon. gentleman and those sitting on this side of the House. I shall, therefore, follow what I intended to say without reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, knowing that he will not regard it as in any way discourteous on my part if I do not offer that criticism which, perhaps, a speech of such ability would be entitled to.

We have been told again and again during this debate that we are living in prosperous times, in fact, that has been the burden of nearly all the speeches that have been delivered by hon. gentlemen sitting on your right. And I may say that it has been well responded to by hon. gentlemen sitting on this side of the House. We are glad we do live in a time of very considerable prosperity. Hon. gentlemen to your right, however, I think, unfairly claim too much credit for the government now in power for the prosperous times that we now enjoy. They believe that all the large exports and imports of our country have been brought about by reason of the fact that a change of government took place in the year 1896. But, Sir, I see that even in far off China the gross trade of the country has doubled within the last ten years ; and I do not suppose, for one moment, that it will be claimed that the Prime Minister of this country had anything to do with the large increase in the trade of China. It is said that in the United States last year the gross trade was $319,000,000 more than that of any preceding year in the country's history. Surely it will not be contended that the government of this country had anything to do with the increase of the trade of the United States during the past year. We must look elsewhere for the reasons of the prosperity of this country. I think we shall be obliged to go a little further back in order to find who really is responsible for the wave of prosperity that is passing over the country, so far as it can be brought about by any governmental action. Thirty years ago, the government then in power, led by the late Rt. Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, acquired the great North-west country, about which so much has been said. I question if there is any one single act of the government of this country from confederation down to the present time that has tended more to add to our prosperity than that. The acquirement of the territories of the great North-west, that vast domain now dotted with cities, towns and villages, and filling up with prosperous farms sending forth its millions of bushels of grain year after year for export and bringing back millions upon millions of money into the country, to swell the prosperity of Canada—there is something that a government did that has had the effect of adding to our prosperity. Then, Sir, we had the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, an act that was brought about by the Conservative party long before the advent of the Liberals to power. This great undertaking has undoubtedly done much to add to the prosperity of the country. It enabled the great North-west to be opened up, it enabled the products of that country, the grain and cattle of the plains, the products of the mines of British Columbia——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I would like to say one word. The first staff of surveyors sent out to survey that road was organized by Mackenzie when he was premier of the Dominion. And he continued the survey.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, the first surveyors who went out to survey the water stretches on the line attempted to be built by the friends of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ross), were sent out by Mackenzie. But I refer to the construction of the great transcontinental road, the road which has opened up that vast country and brought about the prosperity of Canada by making a highway for the products of the North-west to the sea, that they might be transported to the old country, a return being made in the gold which helps to make this country prosperous. Had we remained contented with the amphibious route of ancient days, which has been referred to by my hon. friend, there would not have been very much prosperity brought to Canada by it. Then, Sir, the Conservative government inaugurated the construction and deepening of the canals and in that way assisted transportation, facilitating thus the sending of our products to the foreign market and securing for us a better return, and thus again bringing prosperity to Canada. And then, what legislative act has ever done more to bring prosperity to the country than the great national policy inaugurated by our old chieftain, Sir John Macdonald—a policy that is not only revered by hon. gentlemen sitting on this side of the House, but is respected and admired by hon. gentlemen who sit to your right, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) sneered at the national policy because it was twenty-five years old. Twenty-five years old ! Why, it was a surprise to the hon. minister that we should stand by a policy for twenty-five years. How many policies have the Liberal party had in the last ten years ? Continental free trade, commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity, free trade as they have it in England, preferential tariff, tariff for revenue only—they are constantly changing. An average of about a year and two-thirds is as long as they can endure any one policy. How long has free trade been the policy of Great Britain ? Three score years or more. And do hon. gentlemen opposite say that the British people should change their policy because it is getting old ? Is it not a fact that in England there was a system of protection for two hundred years prior to the advent of free trade ?—a protection that made England what it is to-day, what it never would have been had they adopted a policy such as is approved by many hon. gentlemen opposite.

Speaking very briefly of the national policy and of the great advantages it has brought to this country, I propose to give one single instance. I will take, for the purpose of illustration, one industry that is being carried on at the present time, I refer to the hog industry. In 1889, we had very low duties on hogs and hog products. It was found the farmers of this country could not secure or retain the home market. The government of the day came to their rescue by increasing the duty upon hogs, mess pork, fresh pork, bacon and hams, in such a way as to give the farmers confidence that if they entered heartily in the production of hogs they would at least have the home market for their product. Well, Sir, in 1890, we imported from the United States nearly 36,000,000 pounds of hog product. In 1900, so effectually had the system of protecting that industry been that we imported only 12,000,000 pounds of hogs and hog products. Thus, in ten years we secured for the farmers of this country a market of some 24,000,000 pounds of hogs and hog products—something, I am sure, that adds to the prosperity of the country, and something that must be attributed to the national policy. But, Sir, that was not all—that was only a small part of it. Not only did we secure the home market; but, when the farmers of this country felt secure in their position, they commenced to develop the industry, so that, while, in 1889, before the duties were increased, we only exported about 4,000,000 pounds of hams and bacon, last year we exported from this country the immense quantity of 135,000,000 of pounds of hams and bacon. Year by year from 1890 the export of hog products has increased. As I said, in 1889, it was but 4,000,000 pounds. In 1890 it had reached 7,000,000 pounds. In 1892, it was 12,000,000 pounds—I omit the odd thousands of pounds. In 1894, 28,000,000 pounds; in 1896, 53,000,000 pounds; in 1898, 85,000,000 pounds; in 1900, 135,000,000 pounds.

Year by year has this industry gone on, year by year stimulated by the protection given to it in 1890 under the national policy, this industry has gone on and has become a source of immense wealth to the people of this country, not only supplying an increased home market of 24,000,000 lbs., but an increased foreign market in hams and bacon alone of 131,000,000 lbs., bringing back into this country $12,000,000 in one year. There is the foundation of Canada's prosperity, and that alone can be credited to the national policy of the conservative party.

Now, the Liberals have claimed that this policy, this large increase that has been shown to have taken place since 1896, is chiefly due to the administration that we have in power at the present time. As I have already mentioned, the Liberals have had various policies, they have had commercial union, they have had unrestricted reciprocity, they have had continental free trade, and tariff for revenue only. They have been shouting all these policies during the last ten years. They remind me of the story of a man who went into the backwoods and hewed out a home for himself, and put up a little house. One day a bear came round, and the good man became frightened, just as the Liberals did in 1897. The man climbed on top of the house, and allowed his wife to use the axe until she had killed the bear. Seeing the bear was dead, he came down, and after making a thorough examination, said: Yes, wife, we have killed the bear. That is what the Liberals are saying. They were shouting all these different policies during the last ten years, and when prosperous times came they said: We have killed the bear—when as a matter of fact they did nothing more than come in and help consume the carcass.

Now, one word with reference to the expenditure of this country. When the Liberals were in opposition, if there was one thing they talked about more than another it was the necessity of reducing the expenditure. One of them promised that he would reduce it by $1,000,000, another one promised to reduce it by $2,000,000, another one by $3,000,000, another one by $4,000,000, another one by $5,000,000, and so on. We had immense promises of reduction of expenditure, but I fail to see that these pledges have been implemented by these gentlemen since they came into power. I think it well, even at the close of this debate, just to call attention to the fact that these promises have not been implemented. When they came into power the expenditure on consolidated fund account was $36,949,000; in 1900 it has reached the enormous sum of $42,975,000, showing an increase of $6,026,000. In 1896 we find the expenditure on capital account was $3,781,311; in 1900 it had reached $7,468,843, an increase of $3,687,532. I ask, where is the evidence of the promises made by the Liberal party when in opposition, having been carried out that the expenditure of the country has been reduced? The total expenditure in 1896 was $44,096,000; in 1900 it was $52,717,000, or an increase of $8,621,000 in the short space of four years. The same can be said with reference to net public debt. From 1896 to 1900 the increase has been $6,996,374. Now, is this what the Liberal party throughout the country expected? Is this what hon. gentlemen were sent here to approve of by their votes? Is this what they were told to vote for to-night?

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the finances of this country are not thoroughly understood by the people, and I think the time has arrived when some change in the system of our book-keeping ought to be adopted by which the idea that we have a surplus of $8,000,000 will be entirely dissipated. I dare say there are many people who actually believe that the government last year met all the wants of the country and had a surplus of $8,000,000. Now let us see how the account stood. We find that there was expended on consolidated revenue account, as follows: Charges of debt, $10,873,673; subsidies to provinces, $4,250,608; sinking fund,—about which I shall have more to say—$2,465,640; collection of revenue, $11,044,526; other expenditure, $14,340,832, making a total expenditure on consolidated fund account of $42,975,279. Besides this there was an expenditure on capital account of $7,468,843, railway subsidies, $725,720, other charges amounting to $1,547,624 ; or a total expenditure of $52,717,466. Now, how much money did we realize last year for the purpose of meeting this expenditure ? We are told there was a surplus of $8,000,000. If there was that surplus, the general public would understand that we must have had a revenue of $8,000,000 in excess of that, but that is not the fact. Our total consolidated fund receipts only amounted to $51,029,994, with other small receipts, making altogether $51,031,466, or an excess of expenditure over all our revenue of $1,686,000. Yet the Minister of Finance comes down and tells the people of this country that he has a surplus of $8,000,000. So great a change has been made in the public accounts in the manner of dealing with capital account, that I think the time has now arrived when the consolidated fund account and the capital account should be merged in one, so that a full and complete statement of the finances of this country would be given to us, by the Minister of Finance, and we should know exactly whether there is a surplus or a deficit, I trust that will be done, I think we are nearing the time when it ought to be done, and I am quite sure that only then will the people come to realize the fact that instead of having a surplus at the end of the year, we are gradually getting deeper and deeper into debt.

Now the government say that they reduced the debt last year by $779,640. It does seem a very strange thing how a government that spent $1,686,000 more than its revenue, could possibly have something to apply in the way of reducing the national debt. Well, it is simply a matter of bookkeeping. The Finance Minister paid the sinking fund which he was compelled by law to provide for, $2,465,640, he paid that over, and when he found he was short $1,686,000, of meeting the expenditure, he borrowed back the sinking fund again, not only enough to pay his deficit, but he actually borrowed the whole sinking fund back, and then he was able to show a reduction in what he calls the net debt of $779,640, although the gross debt of the country is larger in 1900 than it was in 1899.

We are constantly met with the statement that the Conservative party when in power also increased the national debt. We never denied it. The Conservative party were justified in doing it because they had great public works to construct. We constructed the Canadian Pacific Railway at an expenditure of $65,000,000. We spent $36,000,000 on the canals. We spent $20,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway. When the provinces were hard run for funds we gave them $10,000,000, and there were other items amounting to $11,000,000, making a total of $142,000,000 spent on capital account by the Conservative government from 1878 to 1896. Of that amount $24,000,000 was met out of revenue, leaving the increase of debt only $118,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite taunt us with this. The hon. Finance Minister taunted us with it in his budget speech, but I ask any gentleman in this House to rise and say if he can, that we should not have expended money on any single item I have enumerated. Do hon. gentlemen opposite object to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway ? I had occasion once before to read the opinion of the Hon. G. W. Ross with respect to that, and I need not repeat it now, but I can point to the fact that that expenditure is approved of by all classes of the people of Canada today. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has ventured to apologize for the $7,000,000 increase in the national debt during the regime of the Liberal government. The Conservatives have no apology to offer because every dollar of their expenditure was justified. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) told us in explanation that the Crow's Nest Pass Railway had to be built and that it cost $3,500,000. He ought to have selected something that would have better justified the increase of the national debt than the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. He should have omitted that apology because I believe that had the subsidy originally granted by the government of British Columbia been used solely for the purpose of constructing that road, only a very small subsidy indeed would have been required from the Federal government. The South African appropriation of a million and a half dollars had the hearty endorsement of the people of Canada and the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) need not have apologized for that. There is another item of one million dollars loss sustained in the sale of our bonds at a low rate of interest last year, which the Minister of Finance charges to capital account, and that is another reason why the two accounts should be merged in one. While we realize a million dollars less on our 2½ per cent bonds than if we had placed them at a higher rate of interest, I do not say but that we will get a return for that million dollars—yet when the saving in the payment of interest comes back to the people of Canada it will be credited to consolidated revenue account, whereas the loss itself is now charged to capital account.

The question was discussed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to what became of the large surpluses which he claimed the government had during the past two or three years. He told us they had a surplus of $12,000,000 for the past two years, and his explanation of how that money had disappeared was in my opinion very unfair, as I intend to prove. He said that when the Conservative party went out of power it had left large undischarged liabilities amounting in the case of the railway subsidies to several million dollars, but he failed to show that one single dollar of these subsidies had been earned. Consequently they were not a charge upon the country at that time and therefore should not be considered as a liability of the late government. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) said that some $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 had been spent to complete the canals, and this he charged back as a debt of the Conservative government. Well, Sir, just to find out how much of this ten or twelve million dollars was due to contracts of the late government, my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) put a question on the Order paper the other day asking what amount was paid by the government for the construction or improvement of the canals in each of the years 1897, 1898, 1899 and 1900, and how much was paid on account of contracts entered into by the late government and not re-let. To my surprise the government answered that of the sum of $12,095,087 paid on canal construction during the last four years, only $4,132,251 was paid on account of contracts let by the late government, and not re-let. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright, therefore, was misleading the House when he accounted for the disappearance of the surplus by saying that the present government were compelled to assume the liabilities of the late government on canal construction to the extent of ten or twelve million dollars.

Well, Sir, another of the promises of the Liberal party was that they were to reduce taxation. Instead of that we find as usual the very reverse. The gross taxation from customs duties which was $20,219,000 in 1896 had risen to $28,889,000 in 1900, and the total taxation of the country has risen from $27,759,000 in 1896 up to $38,242,000 in 1900. The Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), in his very able speech the other night told us that the government could not help it and he led us to understand that they were perfectly powerless in the matter. He said there were more goods coming into the country and that that was the reason why there was a larger revenue. But, if a proper fiscal system were adopted by the government, even that would not cause such an enormous increase in taxation. In 1899 they had a surplus of $4,837,000; in 1900 they had a surplus of $8,054,000, and we are told that next year there is to be a surplus of $6,500,000. In the face of this no effort is being made by the government to stop the growing taxation. It means taxation which they say is not necessary, but unfortunately at the end of the year we find that this money is used to meet the expenditure of the country. No man ever condemned in stronger language than did the Minister of Customs the surplus of Sir Leonard Tilley in 1883. On that occasion he said:

> When the government find that they have beyond a doubt a surplus, when they can calculate with certainty on having one, it is their bounden duty to reduce taxation. It is no part of the duty of a Finance Minister to extract more money out of the pockets of the people than is absolutely wanted to carry on public affairs.
> What would be said of a Chancellor of the Exchequer in England if he could not estimate the requirements of the public service nearer than $82,000,000? He would be ridiculed as being unable to grasp the financial conditions of the country.

And yet $82,000,000 compared with the immense revenue of Great Britain is not more than $8,000,000 as compared with the revenue of Canada. We must therefore conclude that it is the opinion of the Minister of Customs, that the present Finance Minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has not a proper grasp of the financial conditions of the country. Sir Leonard Tilley in 1883 found no difficulty in disposing of the surplus. He did not allow it to grow from year to year. He did not desire to take more money out of the pockets of the people than was necessary to meet the ordinary affairs of the country. He struck the duty off tea and coffee and in that way disposed of a large part of this excessive revenue, the same as Mr. Foster did in 1891 when he found he had more revenue than was necessary to meet the current expenses, he drew his pen across the duty on raw sugar and gave back to the people of Canada during the next five years about $20,000,000, thus helping them to tide over the depression of these years. But the present government say: Oh, we cannot help it; we are powerless; there are more goods coming into the country. Can they not adopt the policy of their predecessors in this matter as they have adopted the policy of their predecessors in many other matters? Would it not be possible to-day to reduce the enormous taxation of this country which they tell us is not required to meet the ordinary expenditure? What is to prevent the Finance Minister wiping out the total duty on raw sugar which amounts to $1,828,084? Let him strike that item off and he will find that he has a very considerable reduction in taxation. There are many other articles which might be dealt with in the same way, such as dried fruits, nuts, oranges, lemons, and so on. Then, there was the enormous increase in the tobacco duties of about $1,000,000 a year, which might be removed. You could also take off the duty on rice. In this way three or four million dollars of duties might be taken off, and the taxation reduced. It seems to me there is a great deal of truth in what the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) said in 1883, that the Finance Minister evidently had not a grasp upon the financial condition of the country.

Before leaving the question of the sugar duties, I desire to draw attention to some statements which were made a couple of evenings ago. In the year 1900 we paid an increased duty on raw sugar of $489,966, and on refined sugar $35,819, or a total increase of duty on raw and refined sugar of $525,785, more than we would have paid if the policy of the Conservative party had been still in force. Yet the hon. gentleman claimed great credit the other night for having reduced the protection on sugar. Now, what was done ? Mr. Foster left the duty on raw sugar at 50 cents per 100 pounds, and the duty on refined at $1.14 per 100 pounds, giving a protection of 64 cents per 100 pounds to the refiners. Had Mr. Foster continued to be Finance Minister I do not suppose for a moment that he would have allowed that duty to continue. As soon as the revenues of the country did not require the duty, I have no doubt that he would have removed it, and given back to the people from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 a year in the shape of sugar duties. But the other night the Minister of Customs, while claiming credit for having reduced the protection on sugar, had to admit that he had increased the duty on raw sugar by 18 cents per 100 pounds, which amounts to an increase of nearly half a million dollars of taxation, all of which goes into the treasury. In 1897 the government placed a duty on raw sugar of 50 cents per 100 pounds and on refined sugar of $1 per 100 pounds, leaving a protection to the refiners of 50 cents per 100 pounds. The other night the Minister of Customs charged that the Conservative party had given too much protection because they had given a protection of 80 cents per 100 pounds in 1891, and in 1895 had brought that down to 64 cents ; and he said that if the sugar manufactories could live with 64 cents per 100 pounds protection in 1895, why could they not do so in 1891 ? Yet we find the hon. gentlemen pursuing a course of very much the same kind. Although the refiners had a protection of 50 cents per 100 pounds, we find the hon. gentleman in 1898 increasing that protection to 56 cents per 100 pounds for the benefit of the sugar barons whom we used to hear so much about. In 1900 the duty on raw sugar was 68 cents per 100 pounds, and the duty on refined sugar $1.24, or a difference of 56 cents per 100 pounds, being six cents more than in 1897. And yet the hon. gentleman skimmed over that part of his address very nicely, and tried to leave the impression on the minds of the people that he had kept the protection down, when he knew that he had given these sugar lords $150,000 more protection than they had in 1897, on an imports of 250,000,000 pounds. I am very glad to see the hon. gentleman in his seat.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. As he is in his seat, might he ask you if the protection is as great now as it was under Mr. Foster ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I should decidedly think not ; but what I mean to say is that you have not followed out your own policy. The hon. gentleman came down the other night and in language as loud as thunder, blamed Mr. Foster for giving protection to the sugar refiners of 80 cents in the early nineties, which he reduced to 64 cents in 1895, although the hon. gentleman himself did in 1898 increase the protection from 50 to 56 cents.

With regard to the rate of taxation, which is perhaps the most disputed question we have before us at the present time, the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs differ, one saying that it is one thing, and the other saying that it is something else. I do not believe either is right. The rate of taxation is a simple problem which any schoolboy of ten years of age can solve for himself. If he has the figures before him, there is nothing difficult about it. The hon. gentleman says he did not make up the figures, that they were made up in his department. I am saying nothing against the officers of his department ; but I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman told his officers what data they should take to make up the rate of taxation. That is the way the country was misled. The Minister of Finance says the average rate of taxation last year was 16·41 per cent. while the Minister of Customs puts it at 15·98 per cent. Then the Minister of Finance, in order to show how much better off we are now in that respect than we were under the Conservative regime, takes the highest year during the last four years of the Conservative regime, and compares that with the lowest year of the Liberal regime, and makes out a reduction of something like 2 per cent. He says that if the Conservative party had remained in power, notwithstanding the immense revenue that was raised last year from customs, we would have taken out of the pockets of the people last year $3,292,230 more than we actually did. The statement is an absurd one, because if the Conservative party had remained in power they would not have allowed these customs duties to remain as they were when the money was not required. Mr. Foster, I have no doubt, would have again struck off the duty on raw sugar. He should have done, as Sir Leonard Tilley did in 1883, when he struck the duty off tea and coffee, and as Mr. Foster did in 1891, when he took the duty off raw sugar. Yes, as Mr. Foster did in 1894, when he put on the free list from 175 to 200 articles and reduced the duty on many others, particularly agricultural implements. Why the Conservative party found no difficulty in managing the finances of the country so as to prevent millions of money being taken from the pockets of the people from year to year, which were not required for the purpose of the government.

Hon. gentlemen opposite, when out of power, promised that if returned to office they would reduce taxation. We have seen, however, the Finance Minister getting up deliberately and saying he did not intend to reduce taxation. And we had the Minister of Customs saying the other night that they had reduced the rate of taxation. Where are we to find these hon. gentlemen ? Let me read an extract from a speech delivered by the hon. the Finance Minister, in which he said :

When we reduced the tariff in 1897 we made a large number of changes which, in the main, were in the direction of lower taxation. We reduced the duties on many articles, we added a number of articles to the free list, we made large changes in the way of reduced taxation. It was of the utmost importance that we should maintain a strong financial position, and in view of the uncertainties as to the amount of revenue that might be produced by the lower rate of taxation, it became necessary that we should take some steps to make good any possible loss that might result. It was thought that it might fairly be met by providing for the raising of some additional taxation in order to balance, or make good, the loss occasioned by the reduction of duties.

Again, he said :

It was necessary to have an increased revenue in certain directions when we were to lose revenue in other directions.

There we have a direct declaration by the Finance Minister that, notwithstanding all their promises and pledges to reduce taxation, they did not intend doing so. The government simply intended to play the game of taking a little off on the one hand and adding as much more on the other, and thus, in the language of the hon. gentleman, prevent any reduction in the revenue of the country, and maintain a firm financial position.

With reference to the actual rate of taxation, let us see what it really is. In 1899, the total imports of this country, dutiable and free, amounted to $154,051,593, but in that year there was imported into this country and entered for home consumption, $6,362,683 of corn, which never entered into home consumption at all, but passed through the country. It entered at one port and passed out at another, although it appears under the heading of goods brought into this country for actual consumption. We are, therefore, justified, and the Finance Minister says we are, in deducting that amount from the gross imports. This leaves a net import for home consumption of $147,688,910.

Total imports in 1900..	$180,804,316
Less Indian corn exported	4,757,595
Net imports	$176,046,721
Total customs collected	$25,559,110
Increased tobacco duty	991,995
Total.....	$29,551,105

Making a total taxation of $29,181,185, or an average rate of 16·98 instead of 15·98, as entered in the blue-book by the Minister of Customs, which the Minister of Finance said was all wrong.

We have no difficulty, then, in finding out whether we have now a higher or a lower rate of taxation than before. I am not going to take one year, because the fairer way is to take the full four yeas 1897, 1898, 1899 and 1900, and compare them with the last four years of the late Conservative government. Taking the Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that the rates of taxation were as follows, for last four years of Conservative rule :—

1894.....	17 13
1895.....	16 99
1896.....	18 28

or an average of 17·45 for the four years.

Compare that with four years of Liberal rule :

1899.....	18 20
1900.....	16 98

or an average of 17·50 per year.

Thus, the average of the last four years of Conservative rule was 17·45, and of the first four years of Liberal rule 17·50, showing an increased rate of taxation of 1-20th of 1 per cent.

But the hon. the Finance Minister said that in order to maintain a strong financial position, when he was compelled to take the duty off one article he had to put it on another. If he had done that fairly, perhaps no great exception could be taken. But, in all these shifts of duty from one article to another, a great deal of unfairness has been dealt out to the people. Let me give you a few illustrations. For example, the duty on pianos was reduced by 5 per cent, but, in order to maintain a firm financial position in the country, it was necessary that the loss should be made up from some other source, and, consequently, the hon. gentleman added 5 per cent to the farmer's cutter. Why transfer 5 per cent from pianos and put it on a cutter ?

Then, they took the duty off corn for the benefit of the farmers of the western states, and they did this without asking the Americans permission to send our barley into their country free of duty. They also took the duty off binder twine and made it free, and then, in order to maintain a strong financial position, which the Finance Minister said he was compelled to do, they made every man who uses tobacco contribute to make up the loss sustained by the reduction on corn. On what principle is every workingman on a farm compelled to contribute to the revenue in order to please the farmers of the western states ?

And here again, I say the government made another blunder. They did not ask that twine should be admitted free into the United States. They gave free twine to the United States, and allowed the Americans to retain the duty of 20 per cent on manila twine going into that country. We have manufactures springing up all over the country for the production of manila binder twine, and I say it is not fair to these people who are putting their money into that industry that the United States should be allowed to send their product here free of duty and our manufacturers, if they have a surplus, if they want to ship a few tons of manila twine into the United States should be met with a duty of 20 per cent. If we were willing to give free twine, we should have exacted free twine—no preference should be given to the United States manufacturers that was not given to the Canadian manufacturers. I do not believe in a one-sided policy. Then, they reduced the duty on iron and steel. But, in order to maintain a strong financial stand, they put over half a million dollars of increased duty on sugar. Thus, whilst the bloated manufacturer who makes all these agricultural implements about which we heard in the past is given a reduced duty on iron and steel, the man who wields the sledge for him, who works at the forge or the bench is compelled to pay more for his sugar in order that his master may get his iron cheaper. Where is the fairness of that ? Well, then they go to the farmers and tell them what they are going to do for them. The hon. Minister of Finance in his magnanimity says : We will reduce the duty on scythes. Scythes—that went out of use forty years ago. But, in order to maintain a strong financial stand, he doubles the duty on grindstones. Then, we come to cotton goods. They reduced the duty on white cottons, but, in order to maintain a strong financial stand, they increase the duty on coloured cottons. The man who wears a white shirt, such as the hon. Minister of Customs or the Minister of Finance is protected all right. The duty on their goods is a little less than 17 per cent. But the farmer, the toiler, the man who works in the foundry or the shop, who cannot, by reason of his occupation wear a white shirt is compelled to pay 35 per cent. Where is the fairness in that ? These hon. gentlemen say : Why does not he buy it in England, for the preferential tariff reduced white cotton from 25 per cent to 17½ per cent. But the duty on the coloured shirt is not reduced by the preference, for the simple reason that we do not bring these goods from England. The heavy coloured cotton goods, the ducks, the denims, the cottonades, the heavy cotton shirtings, do not come from the old country, but from the United States, because the American goods are better in quality. What I am saying I saw in the presence of a gentleman who is a large importer and who knows whether the statement I make is correct or not. I did not consult him before making it. I make it from personal knowledge that these goods are not, to any extent, imported from England. The English goods of that class are not what our people want. The fine cotton wool is used in England for making the muslins, the lawns, the laces, &c., that come to us from that country, while the coarse cotton fibre is allowed to go into the coloured goods, and so an inferior article is produced. The Canadian consumers want either the Canadian goods made out of the genreal run of cotton, or the American goods, and they will pay higher prices for them rather than take the inferior goods that come from England. So, there is no competition between the heavy coloured cotton goods coming from England and those coming from the United States—one has no effect whatever upon the other. We were told the other night that because there was a reduction on goods coming from England, therefore,—this is what the Minister of Customs said—every dollar's worth of the same class of goods coming from the United States would come in at a reduced price. But in this case there is no competition, and so the workingman, the toiler, is compelled to pay the higher duty on these heavy coloured cotton goods—100 per cent more than that on the white goods. Is that fair treatment ? The duty on silks is reduced, but the poor man's rice is taxed to make up for it, so that the government may maintain a strong financial stand. And look at the unfairness of the matter even with regard to silks. The lady wants a nice silk dress—we will not say even the finest article, but take goods at about $2 a yard in the old country.

That is brought in at a duty of 30 per cent making a duty of 60 cents a yard. Under the preference, this is reduced one-third, so that the lady who wears a dress at $2 a yard gets a reduction of 20 cents a yard. But the domestic, or the wife of the workingman, who cannot afford to buy silk at $2 a yard, but is satisfied with a dress costing originally 40 cents a yard and sold here, with profit, duty, and other charges added at about 75 cents a yard, instead of getting a reduction of 20 cents a yard, must be satisfied with a reduction of 4 cents a yard. And all the way through this tariff, there is the same unfairness. The poor man, the poor woman, the toiler is compelled to bear the burden, the benefit going to those who are better able to pay. The government reduced the duty on coal by 7 cents a ton to help the great railway corporations. But, to maintain a strong financial position, they increased the duty on furs by 5 per cent. So, if a farmer wants a fur coat to wear when driving into town, he must pay more for it. If he wants to buy a fur coat for his wife, he must pay 5 per cent more for it. If he wants a pair of mitts, if he wants a sleigh robe, he must pay 5 per cent more. Go through the country and many of the farmers you meet have good fur coats. The increase of duty on their furs goes to pay the duty on the rich man's coal—that is the effect of the tariff. Then, they reduced the duty on salad oil, which was 30 per cent, but which was brought down to 20 per cent. This was for the benefit of the rich man, because the poor man has not salad oil on his table every day. Then, in order to maintain a firm financial stand, they increased the duty on batts and wadding. They reduced the duty on flowers and feathers, and, to maintain a firm financial stand, they looked around to see something that could be taxed. Here, they say are a fine lot of fellows going up to Muskoka hunting ; these are sportsmen and do not mind a few dollars; we can bleed them—and so they raised the duty on guns from 20 per cent to 30 per cent ; and not a gun comes in under the preferential tariff. Then they considered the case of the farmer building a new house. He is putting the windows into it and the government increases the duty on the putty he has to use—they could not allow the farmers even to have that. They take the duty off mushroom spawn—for whose benefit I do not know ; but, to maintain a firm financial stand they increased the duty on putty by 33⅓ per cent. Then they took up the case of the farmer's wheat, and said to the farmer : You are getting too much protection on your wheat. And so, they reduced the duty on wheat and flour, but they were very careful to maintain a firm financial stand by leaving the old wagon to pay 25 per cent. Then, in their magnanimous way, they reduced the duty on scythes, snathes and reaping hooks, hay rakes, and even on the old fashioned flails,—two sticks tied together with a string—all these old things that became obsolete, thirty, forty and even fifty years ago—they reduced the duty 10 per cent on every one of these. But desiring to maintain a firm financial stand, they were careful not to give a dollar of reduction on the plough, the harrow, the sulky rake, the mower or the binder. That is the policy of the present government with regard to the tariff, and that is how it is that they managed to tax the people and how they maintain a firm financial stand while still declaring that they have made enormous reductions. They make reductions on the one hand and then make up by increases in some other way.

Now I desire to say something with reference to the preferential tariff. The manufacture of woollens has been spoken of as an illustration of the injurious effect of the preferential tariff. Why was this preferential tariff ever introduced ? It was long a puzzle to me to know why the government had introduced a preferential tariff until the Minister of Customs disclosed the secret the other night, and in his own words, he said it was entirely out of love for Great Britain. Well, I am thankful, Mr. Speaker, that I belong to a party that does not require to pass an Act of parliament to show our love to Great Britain. We never required to pass any specific legislation to show that we were loyal to Great Britain. I am not going to accuse those on your right of disloyalty, but when we look back for ten years and see their various policies —continental free trade, unrestricted reciprocity, commercial union, and all those other policies, it is no wonder, I say, that when they came into power they felt it necessary to pass an Act of parliament and do something to show that they were as loyal, at least, as the Conservative party. Now with reference to woollen goods, of which complaint has been made, I apprehend that there are very strong grounds for the complaint. I realize that fact, because I am personally acquainted with woollen manufacturers in my own county, and from the accounts that I get from them the condition of that industry is a very serious one. This afternoon we had the statement made by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Kendry), and we had that statement flatly contradicted by the hon. gentleman from Vancouver (Mr. Smith). Now, the member for Peterborough knew what he was talking about, he had a personal knowledge of the facts ; the member for Vancouver had no information except what he had got from some outside source, and which he was unable to verify. However, I give the hon. member for Vancouver the full benefit of his contention. He said that the Auburn mills had been running for the past four years ; whether he was playing on words and meant that they had been running behind, I do not know. But I will give him the credit for having the information that the mills had been running night and day for the past four years, although that is a strong statement. Now I do not doubt the fact that during the past three or four years those mills have been very busy. I know the same thing occurs in my own county. There is a firm that manufactures yarn and blankets, and until last fall they had been busy, running full time, although they told me they were not making money. But you know that every manufacturer in this country has a barometer, and that barometer tells him exactly how his trade is extending. He sends out his agents all over the country to get orders, and these gentlemen come back or report back ; they are not getting orders, they are getting nothing ; orders are not coming in. The manufacturer at this season of the year ought to know exactly how many dollar's worth of goods he is going to sell during the next six months. The man who manages the Auburn mills knows now what his trade is going to be for the next six months, and he knows whereof he speaks. The member for Vancouver knew nothing about it, and consequently was not able to give information. I am sorry to say that there is too much ground for the complaint that has been made, and I do hope in the interest of the people of this country that the appeal of this large industry will be listened to by the Minister of Customs and by the Minister of Finance. To show the condition of affairs I will make this statement : In the year 1898 there were $7,985,847 worth of woollen goods entered for consumption into this country ; in 1900 that had increased to $9,809,565, or an increase of $1,823,719, an increase of 22½ per cent over the importations of two years ago. What would that be in four years at the same rate ? An increase of 45 per cent. Where will the woollen industry be if this state of affairs continues for five or six years ? We can expect to find it exactly where the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) told us the other night we would find this industry. He said there were only three alternatives ; one was to close down, the second one to run on half time, the third to reduce wages, and he feared the latter one would be followed. We know what the consequences would be. Men would not accept half wages in this country, they would go where they can get paid for full time. Now, 22½ per cent of a reduction in the output of a factory certainly means at least 22½ per cent in the profits of manufacture alone ; it means 30 or 35 per cent in my opinion, and to the workingman it means a reduction in his wages of from 25 to 30 per cent. I say the condition demands the most careful attention on the part of those who control public affairs.

I wish to make a reference to another industry, the manufacture of gloves and mitts. In 1898 we imported $564,081 worth ; in 1900 we imported $703,009, an increase in only two years of $138,928, or an increase of almost 25 per cent. You see that in four years half the output of the glove factories of this country would be captured by the foreign trade, and what would be the result ? But this is perhaps not the worst feature in the matter. The glove manufacturers are not only met by competition, but they are met by an article produced by cheaper labour, with cheaper fuel, with cheaper money, and their raw material is taxed in order to maintain a firm financial standing in this country. Take the raw material of a glove manufacturer, take the fur goods ; the amount of imported fur, goods which come from France, Germany, Russia and the United States, was 64 per cent of the entire import, so that only about 36 per cent came in under the preference. Of sewing silk and twist, 38 per cent came in from the United States, only a fraction of the silk came in under the preference. Take wool felt, at 35 per cent, used by glove manufacturers as lining, there came in from the United States 90 per cent of the whole import ; and of glove leather which forms the foundation of the whole business, out of which the glove is made, 99 per cent came in, not under the preference but from countries with which there is no preference ; only 1 per cent of the glove leather coming into this country under the preferential tariff. So that practically the man who makes gloves in this country—and it is a very large industry—is subjected to a very heavy competition under the preferential tariff ; and when he comes to buy the raw material he is not permitted to buy it under the same favourable terms. How is a man going to compete and pay living wages to workingmen under circumstances such as these ?

The Minister of Customs said the other night when addressing this House that we are buying woollens cheaper because of the preferential tariff. Now, I speak as a business man of twenty-five or thirty years' standing. I do not believe the people of this country on the whole are buying, quality for quality, woollen goods any cheaper than they were buying them five years ago. We never had better woollen goods, better tweeds, or cheaper tweeds, than we had under the reign of the national policy. We never had cheaper agricultural implements than under the national policy. With regard to these woollen goods, I say the preference affects the Canadian manufacturer because there are more goods coming in. And how is it that there are more of these goods coming in if they are not being sold cheaper ? There are reasons for that. There is a quality of English goods with a fine finish but not possessing the wearing qualities of the Canadian tweeds, and that captures the eyes of those who are not judges. They are not cheaper goods, but if you take them quality for quality at the same price they are the dearer goods of the two. The preference given on woollen goods is equal to about $600,000, and that $600,000 is simply a bonus given by the government of Canada to the manufacturers of Great Britain ; a bonus which they use for their own benefit. They devote a large part of that money towards the employment of agents who go through Canada pressing the manufactures of Yorkshire and Lancashire on the people. The Minister of Customs told us that the woollen manufacturers should use more energy in the business and they would succeed, just as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) told the manufacturers twenty-two years ago to go home and eat less and work more. The government is giving to these English manufacturers a bonus equal to $600,000, and that $600,000 is being made use of by these men to pay their agents and push their wares in this country, not at a cheaper rate, but every one knows how a business can be increased if it is pushed. That explains how it is that the manufacturers of this country are not keeping the trade of the country. If we gave our own manufacturers a fraction of this $600,000 to enable them to push their wares in the country, they could meet the competition to a certain extent, but the Canadian manufacturers have to do that out of their own pocket, while the Canadian government actually furnishes the English manufacturers' money to do so.

The total imports under the preferential tariff last year amounted to $27,095,791, and on that there was a duty paid of $5,639,035, and 25 per cent preference would amount to $1,879,676. That is what was lost to the revenue of this country last year, and the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) says that was saved to the people of this country. Why, Sir, it has to be made up in some way. The duty on raw sugar just simply balances it in order to maintain our firm financial standing. If you take the duty off raw sugar you would save to the people of this country just as much as you would save to them if they got every cent of the preferential duty. You have your choice. Take the duty off raw sugar, the total of which was $1,863,903, or on the other hand, take 25 per cent off the duties on goods coming from England, which amounts to $1,879,676, but I contend that the latter is not saved to the peolple of Canada. I do not believe that more than a small fraction of that goes into the pockets of the people of Canada. I wonder if the Minister of Customs will stand up to-day and say that we buy all our goods cheaper because of the preferential tariff. I hold in my hand a small article which costs the people of this country over $2,000,000 a year. It is a small article which enters into every household of the Dominion of Canada, and cannot be done without. I tell you that for that small article the people of this country under the present tariff pay $1,000,000 more than they did in 1895. There is the article. It is a common spool of thread. Any lady will tell you that in 1895 she bought two of these spools for five cents, but go down Sparks street to-day and you can only get one for five cents. The price has increased 100 per cent. Why is this so ? The government tinkered with the tariff. If they had let the tariff alone it possibly would not be so. Under the old regime spool thread came in at a duty of 25 per cent, but thread in hanks not spooled came in at 12½ per cent, and the difference of 12½ per cent protected the man who spooled the thread, and that was enough to enable him to make a profitable living and to sell cheap thread. But this government said : We will leave the 25 per cent on spool thread, but we must maintain a firm financial standing, because we have lost it on something else, and they raised the duty on hank thread up to 15 per cent, and then the preferential tariff was applied. As it stands now, there is one-third off the 25 per cent, or about 16½ per cent duty on the spool thread, and 10 per cent on the hank thread, or a difference of 6½ per cent now as against 12½ per cent formerly. The government cut the protection in two until the men who spooled the thread in Canada had to go out of business or do what men in desperation will do, join the combine, one of the largest in the world to-day, namely, the great English and American Trust of Spool Thread. By joining the combine, they get their price for spool thread, and instead of 2½ cents, a spool of thread costs 5 cents to-day. If you take the quantity of thread that is imported in hanks to this country and convert it into spools, you would find that it would make about 32,000,000 spools, and as there are about 18,000,000 spools imported, this would give a total of 50,000,000 spools, or a consumption of about fifty to each family. The former price was 2½ cents. They are now sold in some places at 4 cents and in other places at 5 cents, or an average of 4½ cents, an increase of 2 cents, and 2 cents per spool on the 50,000,000 spools means exactly one million dollars more than the people of Canada have to pay for that little spool of thread to-day than they did five years ago. They have to pay that in order that a firm financial standing should be maintained in the country.

Let us consider why this preferential tariff was introduced at all. The Minister of Customs told us it was love for Great Britain, but I have often thought it was hatred to Germany—not so much love of the mother land as dislike to the father land. I shall not discuss that to-night, however, but I do say that whatever was the cause of the preferential tariff being introduced, it has proved a very disastrous thing for the people of Canada, as we are beginning to realize now. Let me ask : do the farmers get any benefit from it ? Why, our cattle to-day in the British market have no preference, although we give millions of dollars to help the manufacturers and workmen of Great Britain. They took from us last years some 7,000 head of cattle less than they did two years before. In the last three years of the Conservative regime fat cattle in Great Britain realized an average of $75.94 each, and for the first four years of Liberal rule they only realized an average of $60.57, or a decrease of $15.36 per head, notwithstanding the preference we gave to the people of Great Britain. Now, Sir, notwithstanding the fact that we open our doors to Great Britain, she is closing her doors to us. Two or three articles were mentioned the other evening in which there was a decreased export to Great Britain, and the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) complained that only a few were mentioned. At his request I shall name a few more and I shall make them of a diversified charter. Great Britain in 1900 took less from Canada than she did in 1898 of the following articles, and to the amount stated:

Leather, sole and upper	$ 2,750
Sewing machines	3,170
Agricultural implements	12,000
Carriages	42,000
Wood pulp	114,000
Pine deals	565,000
Wood and manufactures of	740,000
Beans	37,000
Oatmeal	69,000
Hams	466,000
Horses	643,000
Oats	586,000
Animals (all kinds)	398,000
Fish all kinds	922,000
Flour	2,289,000
Wheat	5,127,000
Total breadstuffs	7,273,000

Of corn we sent none to Great Britain in 1900, although in the same year Great Britain took from the United States 5,413,000 bushels more than it took in the previous year, notwithstanding the fact that the United States gives no preference to Great Britain at all. Of cattle we sent to Great Britain 7,600 less; of cheese, 10,000,000 pounds less, and of eggs 171,000 dozen less. We sent more bacon, butter and apples, because we produced a great deal more.

Now, let us see how Great Britain treated the United States. She took from the United States large increases in 1900 over 1898, notwithstanding the fact that the United States gives no preference. She took from the United States in 1900 the following increased amounts over 1898:

Corn	$5,413,000
Canned beef	1,224,000
Beef, fresh	6,252,000
Pork, fresh	1,154,000
Tallow	565,000
Lard	101,000
Hams	2,861,000
Cheese	1,185,000
Horses	1,133,000

Now, let us see for one moment what we have lost in addition to all this. It has been stated over and over again that the present government have not secured for the great agricultural classes of this country a single market. Not only have they not secured a new market, but unfortunately they have lost an old one. The wheat exports of Canada to Germany in 1898 amounted to 199,747 bushels, and in 1900 to 92,839 bushels, a decrease of 106,908 bushels. Of peas we sent to Germany in 1898 44,425 bushels, and in 1900 22,902 bushels, a decrease of 21,503 bushels. Of oats we sent in 1898 637,400 bushels, and in 1900 28,727 bushels, a decrease of 608,673 bushels. Of rye we sent in 1898 505,738 bushels, and in 1900 none. Why did we send in Germany in 1900 smaller quantities of these articles than in 1898? The United States sent to Germany of wheat in 1898 3,218,401 bushels, and in 1900 9,065,713 bushels, an increase of nearly threefold, whereas we sent a great deal less. Of wheat flour the United States sent to Germany in 1898 190,039 barrels, and in 1900 691,782 barrels, an increase of 501,743 barrels. Of corn the United States sent to Germany in 1898 39,263,528 bushels, and in 1900 46,256,978, an increase of close on 7,000,000 bushels. Why is that market closed to us and open to the people of the United States? Just because of the preference we gave to England. You know how the trade arrangements between England and Germany were disturbed and how the German government took offence at our action because we insisted on the denunciation of the treaty between England and Germany. Was it to be expected that Germany would treat us as it had treated us before? Human nature in Germany is much the same, I suppose, as human nature in Canada. So Germany turned round and passed a discriminating law against Canada, placing a discriminating duty of 9·7c. a bushel on wheat, 3·3c. on pease, 4·4c. a bushel on rye—duties which are actually prohibitive, because they are more than the duties charged against similar products from the United States. The farmers in Ontario have been asking how it is that in Buffalo No. 2 spring wheat was selling last week at 77½c. a bushel, whereas in Toronto wheat of a like quality was selling at the same time at only 68½c. a bushel, or 9c. less than at Buffalo. The solution of the problem is simple. The man who buys wheat in Buffalo can send it to the German market and sell it there at 10c. a bushel more than the Canadian buyer who buys in Canada. In that way he can give to the farmer in Buffalo 10c. a bushel more than the Toronto buyer can give to the farmer in West York. That is one of the dire consequences of this tariff, which was intended, I dare say, as a preference to England, but which turns out to be a very disagreeable thing for Canada. Wheat sold in Canada in 1895 for 20c. a bushel more than the Liverpool price. To-day wheat of the same quality is selling in the city of Toronto at 16c. a bushel below the Liverpool price. See how our farmers are handicapped by the action which the government took, I hope unwittingly, under which they are actually selling their wheat, rye and oats for less than they otherwise would and under which the British market is taking smaller quantities of the other articles which we have to export, such as eggs and cheese.

Now, I realize that one o'clock having arrived, I have exhausted the reasonable time allowed to me, and I desire to bring my remarks to a close. I hope and trust that when the House comes to a vote on this question, it will weigh every argument well and give a fair verdict according to the evidence. If it does so, apart from all prejudice, I am sure that the motion of my hon. friend who leads the opposition will receive the hearty endorsement of the members of this House; because I am convinced as one who has listened to this debate carefully during the last ten days, that the arguments have been almost solely in favour of the contention of the opposition.

Before I sit down, I want to emphasize something which the Finance Minister drew our attention to a few days ago. In his budget speech he told us that we were on the crest of the wave, and sounded a note of alarm. While he did not anticipate reverses, that was simply a matter of speculation, he said there was going to be a check on the prosperity of the country. He said the country was going to take a rest in order to get ready for another spring, and that it would go on again with leaps and bounds. It has occurred to me that we had better not take a rest. Let the government help those men who are engaged in the woollen industry, in the glove industry, and in all the other industries of the country. What is the use of closing up these factories? Let the government amend their fiscal policy. From 1891 to 1896 was there any country in the world that stood the depression of those years better than Canada? There was not, because we had a sound fiscal policy which protected the industries of this country and our financial institutions. When in the United States the banks were going down by the hundred, in Canada they withstood everything and came through all right.

I do hope that the government will reverse its decision and give us a policy that will enable us to tide over those lean years which the Finance Minister says are approaching in the near future—those years in which the pendulum will swing the other way, and thus enable the people to prepare for the crisis when it comes.

Mr. THOMAS MURRAY (Pontiac). I am here, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the advice of my physician, in order that I may give my vote in the division which, I understand, is to be reached to-night and while I do not propose to take up the time of the House at any length, I am unable to cast a silent vote on this occasion. I have taken a pretty active part in the political history of this country, and have always strongly opposed the so-called national policy, and intend opposing, with all my power, the resolution now before the House. I have always believed that the national policy was conceived and born and nourished in iniquity, and died as it lived, and should be left at rest.

In 1867 I was a candidate. I was a pretty young man then, and am not a very old man yet—not quite old enough to be shelved in the Senate—and I have a pretty fair knowledge of the history of this country since confederation. Neither in 1867, nor in 1872, did we hear anything of protection or the national policy. It was only when the late Sir John Macdonald was hurled from power, and when suffering penal servitude for his political offences, that that wily politician found it necessary to inaugurate some scheme by which he would get back into office. It was then that he conceived the idea of the national policy. I was a candidate in 1878, and my opponent then, Mr. Poupore, who was a strong man in the county, said to me: Murray, if you will only support Sir John and the national policy, I will retire from the contest and allow you to be elected by acclamation. Why, I said, what is it anyway? What does it mean? But, Mr. Poupore could not tell me the first thing about it. He, like many others, went it blind, and the country followed suit. The people of the county of Pontiac were told that if we only had protection, they would have home markets for all the products of their farms, and would get so much more for their butter and their eggs. Every little water power was to be utilized, and manufacturing industries were to spring up on every hand. The people allowed themselves to be seduced and charmed by all these promises, and returned the Conservative party to office. What followed? We have not a single manufacturing industry in the county of Pontiac today, although between here and Pembroke is the finest water power to be found in the world. The people were deceived and lost faith in the national policy. Did Sir John Macdonald ever appeal to the people fairly and squarely on the merits of that policy, after it had been inaugurated? No, but he introduced the infamous gerrymander Bill, and resorted to the system of appointing partisan revising barristers to fix up the lists, and it was by such means that he succeeded in retaining office.

In 1891 I happened to have the honour of representing the county, for which I now have a seat in the House. We know what then took place. We know that this very bad man Tarte—who was a very good man then in the Conservative ranks—made certain grave charges against the administration, which charges were proven, and we know that those charges and the failure of the national policy brought about the downfall of the late government in 1896. Was the country then in a state of prosperity? Not a bit of it. I have had an experience of forty years as a general trader, and I know that never was the country in a more perilous condition. Was it any wonder then that the Conservative party was hurled from office? And is it to be wondered at that the present government should have been sustained at the last general election. At that election, the fiscal policy of this government was submitted to the severest scrutiny and discussed in every detail, and I venture to say that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), who has just addressed the House, has simply being going over all the ground which he went over on the stump at the last election. All these arguments which we have heard in this debate were then put before the people, but the people gave their verdict, and that verdict was in favour of the present administration.

I was pleased to see the opposition elect their present leader (Mr. Borden, Halifax), because I think he is a very honest man, and disposed to do what is right. I was pleased with his utterances, but I think he made a mistake in introducing the resolution now before the House. I think we might well have given our attention to more important and practical matters. I was in hopes that this House would have got down at once to practical business and taken up questions in the general interests of the country. I expected that we would have grappled with some of the great enterprises before the country, for instance, the construction of the Ottawa and Georgian Bay canal. That is a work which should receive the attention of this House and government. The government, I believe, are doing something in the way of making surveys along the Ottawa and the French rivers, and I understand, from some statements made by the Minister of Public Works, that the government propose to construct a canal at French river which will be a part of the general system. The construction of the Georgian Bay canal, however, is a national enterprise, the importance of which we cannot overlook. We have along the Ottawa river, dividing two great provinces, a water communication that to-day lies dormant. And the enterprise of building this canal, whether it be taken up by a company or by the government, should be entered upon at an early day, so as to develop the great resources of that northern country. I represent a county twice as large as England—a county which is to-day practically undeveloped, which has only fifty miles of railway, and which is rich in agricultural and mineral wealth and in timber. Yet, although within a stone's throw almost of these parliament buildings, that county is still undeveloped, and I am sure I will have the sympathy and support of both sides of the House in my efforts to have the great resources of that northern country made productive. When northern Ontario is being developed, should northern Quebec be left to lie dormant?

I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the House, but before concluding, I might say a word on this racial question which has been discussed in this debate. That question was used in my county at the last election. At the upper end of the county of Pontiac, which is occupied by Frenchmen, we had the right hon. the Prime Minister stigmatized as a traitor to his creed and race, and Sir Charles Tupper, forsooth, held up as the great champion of separate schools, and through these appeals I lost some votes. Then, in the lower end of the county, which is largely Protestant, the people were asked to vote against Sir Wilfrid Laurier because he was a Frenchman, and against Murray because he was a Catholic.

There is no question at all about it—these appeals were made. Some hon. members have stated that these things were not done in Ontario, that Ontario acted from national motive. But we know better than that. I know better than that as one who has been in the local legislature of Ontario. I know what the Conservatives did there, when they appealed to race and creed prejudices of the province on the question of separate schools and the use of the French language. I know all about it, and the country knows about it too. And my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) was in that legislature also; and he knows it as well as I do, and he was a party to the business when I was there. Nothing more should be necessary to convince hon. members of the truth of what I say than the vote that took place on the motion of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan) the other day. Fifteen Conservatives from the province of Ontario voted against that motion, and why? Because they dreaded their constituents. I do not accuse these men of being bigots themselves. And two hon. gentlemen, one from one of the Yorks and one from Toronto, had the courage of their convictions and voted for the motion. And how do we find a certain society in Ontario acting towards these men? They pass resolutions denouncing them because they voted as their consciences dictated. Is that an evidence of the liberty of conscience or equal rights that these men talk about so much, or does it show that these prejudices exist? These prejudices do exist in Ontario. The fact that fifty-eight members from the province of Quebec support the Liberal government is not due to the fact that the Prime Minister is a Frenchman. It is because he is an honest and an able man and because he has been successful in the administration of the government of this country. Talking about Frenchmen, Irishmen, Englishmen or Scotchmen in this country—why it is ridiculous; it is time these cries were done away with. But it is not to be wondered at, human nature being what it is, if some did vote for the Prime Minister because of the recklessness with which he was abused on account of his race by the Conservative press of Ontario. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) said that the premier had appealed to the French Canadians and said: I am a Frenchman; the same blood that runs in my veins runs in yours. When he was attacked in the manner I have shown, attacked on account of his race and creed, was he to say nothing in his own defence? I will venture to say that he never asked a man to vote for him on account of his race or creed. I know that I have never done it, and I have been through more elections, probably, than any other man in this House. I defy any man to say that I have ever appealed for support on grounds of race and creed.

Mr. CLANCY. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Murray) a question?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly.

Mr. CLANCY. Is not the hon. gentleman conscious that he is making a disgraceful appeal at this moment?

Mr. MURRAY. No, Sir, I am not; I want to disabuse your mind of that. When I was running in Pontiac, my opponent was an English Protestant. I said to the people: Mr. Levecque—who was speaking on my behalf—has appealed to your sympathies on account of the school question and Sir Charles Tupper's action in that connection: Mr. Brabazon, my opponent, is an English Protestant: do not vote against him on account of his religion: vote for him or against him on the merits of the question before you—on the merits of the national policy if you like—but do not vote against him on account of his religion. I have never appealed to my co-religionists on the ground of faith. Why, I would not put myself in the power of any elector to say that I appealed to him for sympathy or support on such grounds. I am a Canadian and I want to meet all men on equal grounds and to do away with these prejudices to fight them down—and I think if any man in Canada has done his part in fighting them down, I have. I have been elected in a constituency in Ontario which is largely Protestant. My opponent tried to take advantage of me on account of my belief. When he was nominated for the next election, I said to him: You have endeavoured to prejudice the electors against me in a former election, and this time I had hoped to avoid a contest with you: do you object to me yourself on these grounds? When I cornered him thus, he had to say: Yes; it was born in my bones. Do you see the point?—if he had said that he did not object to me, on these grounds, he could not have appealed to the electors to vote against me on those grounds, because the answer would at once have been that he himself, when asked, had not objected to me. But when I met him before an audience that was largely Catholic, I said: This gentleman has made certain statements against me, but, so far as religion is concerned, your interests are as safe in his hands as in mine. That is the way I dealt with him. I need not tell the House who the man was, I merely cite the case as showing the course I have taken in trying, as a public man, to put down these prejudices.

My hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) who is smiling at me now and with whom I had the pleasure of sitting in a council of the united counties, stated in his speech the other evening that he stood by the national policy and was going to appeal to the country on that policy; and he said that all enlightened countries favoured protection. That was paying but a poor compliment to free trade in England. For my part, I have fought the national policy. And I will fight this motion. I want to see it buried, never to be resurrected. I am in favour of a revenue tariff as it was in Mackenzie's time. I do not take any stock in protection at all. Some of our hon. friends, even on this side of the House, talk protection. But I do not believe that there is a single man who listens to me now but will say that had Mackenzie's revenue tariff still been in force in this country, we should have enjoyed as much prosperity, perhaps more than we have had. But, Sir, the death knell of protection has been sounded. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) may appeal to the country as he has done time and again. But I say as I have already said that the friends of the national policy never appealed to the country on the merits of the national policy. They appealed to the country in the last two elections on all sorts of issues. But the verdict of the people has been given, and they ought to be satisfied. Let us get down to business. There should be less party animus than there has been. Hon. gentlemen will not allow that anything good can emanate from the present government, but would have us believe that prosperity and every good thing came from the national policy and the great Conservative party. And yet when they last appealed to the country, they could not agree among themselves but were fighting like the Kilkenny cats. I say again, let us get down to business, let us get down to work. Let my hon. friend the leader of the opposition propose the abolition of the Senate, let him propose to reduce the representations of this House, and I will join him. Let us have cheap government, let us have honest government; let us have men who will look to country before party; let us do something for our common country.

Mr. ROBERT A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). Mr. Speaker, at this very early hour in the morning, I do not think it will be at all becoming in me to take up very much of the time of the House. I did not intend until this afternoon, speaking on this motion. But, representing as I do the electoral district of Cornwall and Stormont in which is situated the town of Cornwall, known in eastern Ontario as 'the factory town,' I felt that it was incumbent upon me, even if I only said a few words, to give my reasons for supporting the amendment so ably spoken to by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), and the other hon. gentlemen who have supported it. I listened attentively to the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Murray). He says he is not a very old man, but he has been in politics for a great number of years. He says that in 1878, when the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald went through the country advocating the national policy, he did not know what it was and had to ask his opponent what it meant, because he had never heard of protection. Well, if the hon. gentleman, in 1878, had never heard of protection, he had not followed the political history of the different countries. He complains that no manufacturing industries have reached the county of Pontiac, and then he tells us that the county is entirely undeveloped and that they have no railway communications. I have no doubt that manufacturing industries will reach the county of Pontiac within a very short time, if the national policy is adhered to, and that these valuable waterpowers will be used to drive the wheels of manufactories. He refers to the Conservative party having been hurled from power in 1896. It is quite true that they were defeated in 1896, and they were defeated upon pledges given by the hon. gentlemen opposite, not one of which they have fulfilled to the present day. He referred to the speech of the non. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) in which the latter had made some statement about the enlightened countries favouring protection. I would like the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Murray) to name one country which has not framed and which is not now framing its commercial regulations in such a manner as to guard its own interests against the encroachments of its rivals. He cannot name one that is not adopting such a policy. The only statement a free trader can make is that Great Britain to-day is a free trade country. But they do not tell you of the years and years of protection in Great Britain which built up the industries of that country until they felt they were able to control the markets of the world, and then they threw down the walls of protection.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the race question, and I for one hope it will be the last time that it is referred to in this House. I cannot understand why hon. gentlemen opposite are continually getting up and talking race and creed. You do not hear it on this side of the House, we don't want to hear it in this House, and we don't want to hear it in the country. When a motion is made in this House in favour of a policy of adequate protection, and encouragement to the labouring, agricultural, manufacturing, mining and other interests of Canada, why should a gentleman speaking on that motion give us a long tirade about race and creed ? Why should he get up and say to hon. members who did not see fit to vote as he voted on some motion in this House, that the constituents which elected these men were fanatics and bigots?

Mr. MURRAY. Why do hon. gentlemen on your side of the House introduce this question ?

Mr. PRINGLE. I have not heard it on this side.

Mr. MURRAY. The member for West York (Mr. Wallace).

Mr. PRINGLE. The first thing that the leader of the opposition said was that he did not desire to hear anything of that sort discussed in this House.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) stated that it was race and religion that brought the Liberal party into power.

Mr. PRINGLE. Well, the hon. gentleman may rest assured that he is not able to drag me into a controversy on the race and creed cry. I think, Mr. Speaker, among the greatest questions of legislation, there is probably not one which bears more directly on our future welfare than that of the national policy, and the tariff which we adopt in this country. To all theories and all reasonings against protection stands opposed the unanswerable fact that experience has been always and everywhere is in its favour. Our government is made for all. We are not asking for any special protection for any one class in this broad Dominion ; we are asking for ample protection to be given to every class, and the class that requires it most is the labouring class. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the speech delivered the other evening by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), and I was a little struck at some of the remarks that he made. One of his remarks especially attracted my attention, in which he said that Sir John A. Macdonald, for the purpose of obtaining power, did not hesitate to introduce a tariff which was anti-British. Sir John A. Macdonald gave fifty years of his life towards building up the empire of which we form so important a part. You never heard Sir John A. Macdonald advocating unrestricted reciprocity, or commercial union ; but you did hear him, in that manifesto which he published just prior to that election, use these words :

> As for myself, my course is clear. A British subject I was born, a British subject I will die. With my utmost efforts, with my latest breath, will I oppose the veiled treason which attempts by sordid means and mercenary proffers to allure our people from their allegiance.

The people of Canada responded to that appeal, and they buried for all time to come that policy which was so strongly advocated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and by other ministers who sit before me to-night ; and we did not hear any more of commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Since the hon. member has mentioned my name, will he allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman who has the floor is willing.

Mr. PRINGLE. All right.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure) I want to ask the hon. gentleman if he has taken cognizance of the cablegram which is published in this evening's papers containing a declaration from the Chancellor of the Exchequer in England that the policy which is now advocated by the opposition will not be countenanced in England ?

Mr. PRINGLE. I am not accustomed to pay much attention to all these telegraphic despatches that we find in promiscuous newspapers. Now, the hon. memebr for Bonaventure says that this tariff is nothing more than a repetition of the old policy. But I will do him the credit to say that he stands up in this House and says that he is in favour of protection. He is on record in the 'Hansard' as saying that he is in favour of moderate protection. But he goes on to say that this country has made no progress during the regime of the late Conservative administration, that it remains stationary. I would like to take him down to that little factory town of Cornwall, where, in 1881, we had a population of 4,468, and, according to the census of 1891, we had a population of 6,805, an increase of 2,337 in ten years, or about 52 per cent. I want to tell him that from 1891 to 1896 our population increased until, counting the town and the suburbs, built up largely by the manufacturing industries established under the national policy, we have a population now of between 9,000 and 10,000. Without going into a number of items that I could mention, showing the great prosperity of the country between 1878 and 1896, I will only take the deposits in the savings banks. In 1877 there were 24,074 depositors, and the amount deposited was $2,639,937 ; in 1896 the number had increased to 126,442 and the amount to $28,932,930, or an increase of $26,292,993 during the term of the Conservative administration.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). May I ask the hon. gentleman what was the increase in the population of Cornwall under the Liberal administration ?

Mr. PRINGLE. Under the Liberal administration the grass grew in the streets of Cornwall, from 1873 to 1878.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I mean during the last five years.

Mr. PRINGLE. The increase has been practically nothing from 1896, because the manufacturers of this country had no confidence in the administration of the hon. gentlemen. I do not hear of any new manufacturing industries started in that town since 1896. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) says that the United States have not prospered under a protective tariff. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) said that the protective tariff is injurious to the labourers of any country in which it is enforced ; that it creates strikes, and he cited the United States as an example. But he did not say anything about the strikes in free trade England, and I could point him to the town of Valleyfield and other places in Canada where strikes have occurred during the regime of the present Liberal government. If protection injures the United States and if the labourer is not successful in that country, why should we find that 448,572 immigrants went into the United States in 1900 with the expectation of having their labour rewarded, and we know that the United States never had a higher protective tariff than it had that year. I am glad that the hon. gentleman referred to the United States because there is no country that gives to Canada the object lesson that that country does. Let me glance for just a moment at the commercial history of the United States. We can go back to the report which that great statesman, Alex. Hamilton, made in 1789, in favour of a protective tariff ; we can go back to 1813, after the protective tariff had come into force, and we can see how in that time the manufacturing industries of the United States took root. We find that in 1815 there were 140 cotton manufactures in the vicinity of Rhode Island, operating 130,000 spindles, and that many places such as Pittsburg sprang into existence as manufacturing centres. Five years after the protective tariff had been introduced into the United States the number of cotton spindles in operation was estimated at 500,000, employing 100,000 men, having a capital of $40,000,000 and paying about $15,000,000 in wages. That was the inception of protection there. We find that every time a party opposed to protection has been elected in the United States that country has gone backward ; business has become demoralized, and we find that when the people got a chance they returned to a protective tariff as the only safeguard of that great country. In 1888 the policy advocated by the Republican party was :

We are uncompromisingly in favour of the American system of protection. We protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interest of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue and confidently appeal to the people for their judgment. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.

The Republicans denounced the Mills Bill introduced during the administration of President Cleveland. The people had had four years of tinkering with the tariff and they returned the Republican party by an overwhelming majority. In 1892 the Republicans were returned on the same policy of protection. In 1896 they appealed again and were returned on the policy of protection to American industries. In October, 1890, President Harrison gave his assent to what was known as the McKinley Bill which advanced duties on many articles, and the object of which was to reduce the revenue and increase protection. I freely admit that if you increase the protection you will reduce the revenue; but who will benefit by that? Is it not the workmen and the people generally whom you are protecting ? In the fiscal year of 1890 the customs of the United States amounted to $230,000,000 and in the year 1891, part of which year the McKinley tariff was in force, it was reduced to $220,000,000 while in the following year, in which the McKinley tariff was in full force, the customs revenue was reduced to $177,000,000. But they had all the revenue they wanted and they protected the artisans and mechanics of their own country. I again tell the hon. gentleman from Vancouver (Mr. Smith) that the United States to-day are more prosperous than they have ever been in their history. There are 18,500,000 spindles going night and day in that country while there are 45,400,000 spindles in Great Britain and 33,000,000 spindles in all the rest of Europe.

Let me refer for a moment to the iron trade of the United States. In 1840 the United States had not entered the field of international competition in the iron trade, but in 1897 the United States undersold the English manufacturers in London, and her products for 1898 equalled that for Great Britain and France combined. Every great industry was built up under a protective tariff in the United States and now she is in a position to compete with any country in the world. I quote from the Economist, the well known English financial paper, the following in regard to the iron trade of the United States :

The fact that the United States is now able to produce pig iron and some forms of steel cheaper than this country is a serious menace to our foreign trade in the future.

I may say that I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) come out squarely in favour of protection. In fact I have listened very carefully to this debate and it puzzles me to know just where these gentlemen opposite are. The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) is in favour of protection ; the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is in favour of protection; the hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Mr. Ross) is an out-and-out free trader ; the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Murray) is a tariff for revenue man, and they all seem to have a different view as to the proper fiscal policy for this country. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word with regard to the preferential tariff. I may say that I have never been able to understand why this preferential clause was put in the tariff. The Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) told us that it was done out of love for Great Britain, but I have never heard that Great Britain asked that any preferential treatment should be given to her. I did understand that the Right Hon. the Prime Minister in 1896 gave a solemn assurance that if he were returned to power he would appoint a commission to take this matter up, and see if some mutual preferential arrangement could not be made. The preferential tariff as it stands is a direct injury to the manufacturers and the artisans of the Dominion of Canada.

I have not time to go over many articles which are covered by that preferential tariff. I will merely mention one article—linseed oil. Under the preferential tariff there is only a small duty upon linseed oil, and we imported in 1899 some $300,083 worth. There are in this country a large number of agriculturists who are engaged in the raising of flaxseed, which is used by the manufacturers of linseed oil. These agriculturists have no protection at all, for flaxseed is admitted free of duty, and Great Britain can import flaxseed from some of the southern countries, take it to England, manufacture linseed oil from it, and bring that linseed oil to Canada, to the detriment of our agriculturists and the men who are manufacturing linseed oil here. There are factories in Winnipeg and Waterloo, and it is a very great hardship to these men.

I find also that there has been an immense increase in the importations of cottons from Great Britain in 1899. I believe we have men in Canada who are just as competent to manufacture cotton as the British manufacturers, and the preferential tariff is a great injustice to our manufacturers without securing to the public cotton goods at any less price. In 1900 there were imported from the United States, $1,520,655 of cotton goods.

An industry in which I feel a deep interest is the woollen industry of Canada. No man concedes more readily than I do that the great and important industry of the Dominion of Canada is agriculture; but after that we should see that our manufacturers are taken care of by a proper regulation of the tariff. Of all the lines of home manufacture which are adversely affected by the preferential tariff, the woollen manufactures are singled out for the severest competition, not only by reason of the peculiar advantages of the British manufacturer in this line, but by reason of the extent to which German goods can be smuggled into Canada through Great Britain under the pretense of being partially manufactured in England. Now, that does not affect the woollen mill only, but it affects all the other industries. It affects the ready-made clothing industry, and a number of other industries which depend on the woollen manufactures of this country. To this government, who, I understand, have turned down the deputation from the woollen manufacturers, and have told them that they could have no relief, I want to say, why not pass a Bill providing that no goods imported into this country shall get the benefit of the preferential tariff unless they come through a Canadian port? In that way we would build up our ports of Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal, instead of building up Portland, Boston and New York. If the government cannot see their way to grant relief to the woollen manufacturers of this country, I think they should do that. The woollen industry at the present time in Canada is in a most precarious condition, and the prospects of the future are most discouraging. I say that advisedly. In the town in which I reside there is one of the largest woollen factories in the Dominion of Canada; and those people have come to me and asked me to urge on this government the advisability of giving them some relief as against this preferential tariff. I am not at all familiar with the position of the mill in the town of Peterborough. I understand that the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) has received some information in regard to that mill running night and day. The information which I have received from a thoroughly reliable source, is that the orders are falling off, and that in a very short time that mill will either have to shut down or run on half time. We find that the total imports of woollen goods in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, were $9,968,899, and in 1891, $7,116,097, an increase of 40 per cent, or $2,852,802. The increase has been greater and more marked during the few months that have passed of the present fiscal year. I have not the exact figures for that period, but I have the figures for July, August and September, as shown by the monthly returns, and the imports for those months amount to $3,669,000. I am free to admit that the consumption may have increased to a slight extent, but not to a very large extent. The total imports of all classes of dutiable goods exclusive of woollens, in 1897, was $59,925,608, whereas in the three months of July, August and September, 1900, they amounted to $24,715,609. Now, if the imports of woollen goods had increased in the same proportion, they would have approximated for the three months $2,525,000, making a surplus of the imports of woollen goods for the three months of $719,000. That means a great deal to the manufacturers of woollens in the Dominion of Canada. It means work for at least twenty-eight factories, each turning out $100,000 worth of goods. One-third of this amount would go in wages. I am not going to discuss the reasons why the woollen industry of this country should receive a moderate protection—at least 30 per cent. That ground has been fully and amply covered by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock). But I say this, that that industry is a large one, it is distributed throughout the Dominion, and it has a far-reaching effect. If hon. gentlemen will look at the newspapers of to-day, they will find that there is a larger amount of wool unsold on the Canadian market than there has been for some time, and I understand that only 15 or 16 cents a pound is offered for it. That means a great deal to the farmers of this country, and I believe it means a great deal to the great North-west, which I believe can raise a quality of wool which would be almost universally used by our woollen manufacturers throughout the country.

Now, as I said from the start, I did not intend to take part in this debate; but as I come from a manufacturing town, and the manufacturing interests of that town are very seriously affected by the attitude of the government in regard to the tariff, I felt it incumbent upon me to say a few words in support of the amendment.

Mr. A. McLENNAN (Inverness). Mr. Speaker. While we must admit that it is now difficult to bring into this debate anything new, interesting or original, I feel that, representing as I do, a very important constituency and coming from a portion of this Dominion which has prospered to so great an extent under the policy of the present government, I feel I would be recreant to my duty if I did not offer a few observations on the subject before the House. I was somewhat surprised, coming from the same province as the hon. leader of the opposition, to find that hon. gentleman submitting to us a resolution in opposition to that policy which has brought such an unprecedented degree of prosperity to that province. As an indication of the improvement which has taken place during the past four years, I might point out that that portion of the government railway, which runs through the province of Nova Scotia, and which formerly moved very slowly and leisurely along during the daytime, is to-day and has been for the past two or three years utilizing every hour of the twenty-four, so great is the demand on its resources for the carriage of freight. Some idea may be formed of the immense improvement in traffic when I state that over that portion of the Intercolonial Railway which runs through the Island of Cape Breton, the revenue for the year 1900 was $500,000 in round numbers, as compared with $125,000 in 1899, and that a small sleepy town in eastern Nova Scotia, which four years ago had a population of 3,000 or 4,000, is to-day a city of 10,000 or 12,000.

There are many points to which I could call the attention of the House, but as we are all anxious to have this debate brought to a close, I shall limit myself to very few. Referring more particularly to the county I have the honour to represent, let me inform the House that it possesses the only undeveloped coal properties east of the Rocky Mountains, and these properties remained undeveloped until the present government came into office and furnished an opportunity for capital to take hold of and develop them. The present administration voted a very handsome subsidy to that enterprising firm, Messrs. McKenzie & Mann, who have constructed a railway from the Strait of Canso to the Inverness coal properties, four in number, and I would ask the attention of the House while I submit a few figures showing the extent of these properties. These figures are taken from the report of an expert mining engineer sent out by an English company, and this is what Mr. Ross has to say with regard to them :

> One hundred and eighty million tons of coal at Port Hood, twenty million tons of coal at Mabou, over one hundred million at Broad Cove, and two hundred and forty million tons at Chimney Corner.

All these properties are about being touched by the railway built by McKenzie & Mann, and thus prosperity is not only brought to the working people of Inverness, but a market to the farmers as well, for the county of Inverness is one of the finest agricultural counties in this Dominion. In view of these facts, I cannot understand how any representative of Nova Scotia should show any disposition to go back from the present era of prosperity to that era of paralysis of trade and of every line of industry which prevailed in that province during the eighteen years of the so-called national policy.

It has been charged that the present administration is expending money beyond its means. But these hon. gentlemen who make that charge forget the policy of their late honoured leader, Sir John A. Macdonald. In the year 1890, Sir John A. Macdonald addressed a large meeting near the city of Halifax, at a place called Prince's Lodge, and at which were present delegates from all parts of the maritime provinces. The elections of 1891 were then approaching, and the Conservative leader was gathering his friends from all parts of the provinces. He there declared that his policy was to give the people their own money to expend upon their own public works. As an instance of the wisdom of this policy, he cited the fate of John Sanfield Macdonald, once premier of Ontario, and the success of Sir Oliver Mowat who had succeeded him. Premier Macdonald, he told his audience, thought he was doing wonders when he husbanded the people's resources and locked up the people's money in a strong box, but the people grew restless and wanted their money. While they admired that characteristic of Mr. Sanfield Macdonald, which induced him to thus husband the resources of the province, yet they found that their public works were being starved out, and they rose in their might and hurled him from power and elected Sir Oliver Mowat in his place. And from that day, for twenty years, Sir Oliver Mowat went on expending the people's money upon the people's public works, and by this means kept himself in office by meeting the public requirements of his province. That policy, Sir John Macdonald declared he approved and intended to follow. This country, he said, was a comparatively new country and our public works needed money, and so long as he led the party the people of the Dominion would get their own money to expend on their own public works. And then, he said, 'when my successors come to power, they will find very little after me to spend.' This was the language of the late Sir John Macdonald, the leader of the Conservative party, and this was the policy he advocated in his palmy days.

And while, as Sir John Macdonald truly said, this is a comparatively new country, with various and pressing wants, a progressive government certainly could not fail to apply the people's money to the people's wants. It would not, indeed, be a matter of surprise to see a resolution of the character of this which has been introduced by the leader of the opposition brought into this House, if this parliament had been here for years, with the trade of the country paralyzed, with revenues falling and the public works of the country starved out. If we had had a condition of that kind year after year for several years, then, indeed, it would not be a matter of surprise if the leader of the opposition and his party should suggest an alternative policy. But, at a time when the present government and parliament are fresh from the people, when the people of Canada have pronounced their judgment as to the government's policy of the past four years, and that only four months ago, it is difficult to understand why hon. gentlemen opposite find it advisable, or even justifiable, to bring in a resolution condemning a policy which the people of Canada have approved in a manner not to be mistaken by the opposition or anybody else. There was a time when the majority of the people of Canada approved of a somewhat high tariff. Indeed, I was one of those who thought that, while the industries of Canada were in their infancy, while they were under severe competition from the older industries to the south of the line, a fair amount of protection was necessary until those industries should be, as it were, self-sustaining. And, as is well known throughout the country, the original intention of the national policy was, that it should be a temporary affair, that these heavy duties should not be maintained beyond the period during which these industries might fairly be called infant industries. But, the trouble was that the high tariff was kept up to such an extent and for such a time as to render the manufacturers of the Dominion almost independent of the government, in fact the masters of the government at last, so that they could defy that government to touch their interests by the threat of swooping down upon them at an election. I compare the mistaken policy in that regard with the mistake which this government would make if they continued the bounties on iron and steel. The iron and steel manufacturers would, like other pampered manufacturers, become masters of the situation. Suppose that plants like that at Sydney and Sault Ste. Marie were established at Montreal, Halifax, St. John, Toronto, and other places, and the present bounties on iron and steel were continued until these institutions became so well planted that they would actually become the masters of the situation, the administration would then learn their mistake, and so would the country. But, the present administration evidently saw this danger, and they drew the line at seven years. We will back you, say the administration to the manufacturer of iron and steel, for seven years; if you are then able to walk without support, you can walk, but if you cannot, we are through with you anyway. This encourages the manufacturer of iron and steel in the meantime, but, when these establishments are self-sustaining, the people will be relieved from further supporting them. I heard it stated by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) that the present government made no effort to secure trade, that they had not opened any new channel of trade. Well, there is one thing to their credit, and that is, that if they have not opened up any new channels of trade, they have clearly demonstrated to the people that they were capable of developing, widening and deepening the channels that already exist. To demonstrate this, let me quote a report from an American consul reporting to his government. This is a quotation from the report of Mr. James Boyle, American consul at Liverpool:

The statistics of the British blue-book on trade for 1898 presents two striking facts—that the notable increase in American imports last year was chiefly in manufactures, and that Canada is the leading competitor of the United States in forest and farm products. This Canadian competition in the British market is now keener than it ever was, and American farmers and shippers would be wise to appreciate the fact that the outlook is that it will increase. That there should be competition is inevitable, owing to the similarity of the natural and farm productions of the United States and Canada and the equidistance of the two countries from this market. But during the past two years——

That is two years of Liberal administration.

—the Canadian trade has been given a great impetus through the operation of a system of government supervision and subsidies. Possibly influenced by the Canadian example, Russia is shortly to introduce the experiment of subsidizing sold storage service on ships bringing dairy produce to Great Britain, and already Russia sends enormous quantities of these products to this market (Liverpool).

In the annual for 1899 of the British Co-operative Wholesale Societies (which do a yearly business of $60,000,000) there is a long article on Canada and its productions, from which is taken the following statement of the official efforts that are being made to increase the sale of Canadian products in Great Britain.

Government Enterprise.

It is a government enterprise, and is unique in the history of governmental connection with trade. The plant for two years past has been worked from the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. Its object is not only to increase the demand in Great Britain for Canadian cheese, butter, eggs, poultry and fruit, but to so improve the means of transportation by rail and sea that these Canadian products shall be sent into market in the best possible condition and in the most attractive form. The scheme even goes beyond this, for another of its aims is to steadily improve the grade of all produce sent to Great Britain, and thus secure for Canadian produce a good and abiding reputation.

To secure these advantages, the Department of Agriculture, in the first place, sent out its experts to aid in the establishment of creameries.

It goes on to give figures with regard to the exports of Canada to Great Britain during the same years. It starts in this way:

The exportation of Canadian butter to Great Britain has greatly fluctuated. It reached its highest figures in 1881, when the value was $3,333,419; from then, against European competition (particularly Danish), it gradually declined until 1889, when the value was only $174,027; after 1889 the trade revived, but has not had a regular growth. Its present development dates from 1897, when, under the stimulus of governmental instruction in manufacture, shipment, &c., and subsidized cold storage steamers, it jumped up to $1,912,389, as compared with $893,053 in 1896. In 1898, the value was $1,915,550.

The Canadian cheese trade has been one of steady growth. In 1868 the value of the exportation to Great Britain was only $548,574; in 1880, $3,772,769; in 1897, $14,645,859, and in 1898, $17,522,681. These figures, both as to butter and cheese, are taken from the last report of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture, covering the fiscal year ended June 30, 1898.

From the same authority is taken the following table, showing the rapid growth of Canadian farm products exported, and, speaking roundly, over 90 per cent of these exportations were to Great Britain:—

Articles.	1896.	1898.	Inc. p.c.
Wheat	$ 5,771,521	$17,313,916	200
Flour	718,435	5,425,760	655
Oats	273,861	3,041,578	1,010
Oatmeal	364,655	554,757	52
Pease	1,299,491	1,813,792	39
Cattle	7,082,542	8,723,292	23
Cheese	13,956,571	17,572,763	25
Butter	1,052,089	2,046,686	94
Pork, bacon and hams.	4,446,884	8,092,930	82
Eggs	807,086	1,225,304	55

Following is a table which shows the value of the leading Canadian importations into Great Britain, with the value of the same kind of products from the United States, for the years 1894, 1897 and 1898.

He then gives a comparative statement for the two countries, Canada and the United States, by which it will be observed that just as American exports decrease Canadian exports increase :

VALUE OF IMPORTS INTO GREAT BRITAIN.

Articles and whence imported.	1894.	1897.	1898.
Apples, raw—
From United States	$ 2,129,234	$ 2,443,228	$ 1,954,298
From Canada	1,541.368	1,355,643	2,179,782
Butter—
From United States	612,102	3,079,048	1,386,601
From Canada	437,988	2,162,029	3,217,004
Cheese—
From United States	7,816,848	6,867,563	4,892,007
From Canada	13,068,277	16,278,574	14,306,503
Eggs—
From United States	126,034	205,806	325,717
From Canada	450,249	942,830	1,223,310
Fish—
From United States	2,000,079	3,482,593	2,983,276
From Canada	3,074,844	3,571,448	4,278,695

Other farm products are in the same ratio; just as American exports to Great Britain decline, Canadian exports increase. These figures furnish satisfactory testimony in favour of the improvement of the trade of Canada with Great Britain, as compared with that of our neighbours in the United States. This is an index pointing out that the present government stands for encouragement to the marketing of agricultural products. There was an item passed in this House not long ago for the encouragement of fishing, that is an item of $25,000 beyond the ordinary grant. I will give the House a few figures that were handed to me a few days ago from the official in charge of this department, and they go to show the value of this appropriation to the various parts of the country. I will give the statement for January, 1901, because it is short :

Shipments of Fresh and Frozen Fish from Mulgrave, January, 1901.

To	No. of pounds.
Montreal	578,550
Quebec	81,160
Points west Montreal	209,350
Points east Quebec	65,550
United States via Halifax and St. John	74,590
By express	36,250
Total	1,045,450

I give this as a justification for the appropriation made by the government on behalf of the fisheries in the maritime provinces. I will also refer for a moment to the favourable condition of trade in this country, which fully justifies the government in continuing the even tenor of its course. In 1900 the trade of the Dominion was $60,000,000 over the year 1899, thus showing an improvement in the trade of this country in one year closely approaching that in the trade of the country for the eighteen years of this so-called national policy was in force. I ask my hon. friend the leader of the opposition then, coming as he does from the same province as myself, how can he justify fighting this order of things in his province by his resolution ? We see an improvement in the trade of this country of $60,000,000 in one year as compared with the improvement for eighteen years under the very policy that he wishes this country to revert to.

I need scarcely call the attention of the House to the revenue of the country. For the past year it has been $51,000,000, the expenditure has been $43,000,000, leaving a surplus of $8,000,000. Let me say in this connection that while hon. gentlemen opposite clamour against what they call the useless expenditures made by the present government, the present government at least is living within its means ; whereas when they, the opposition, were governing this Dominion and receiving $38,000,000 of revenue, they had to go to the money markets of the world and borrow by the million. For eighteen years their borrowings averaged $6,000,000 a year. I am stating this fact chiefly to show the unreasonableness of offering a resolution that is calculated to combat this most satisfactory order of things in the administration of the public affairs of this country.

Having thus briefly referred to some of the points which I feel justify me in voting against the resolution submitted by the leader of the opposition, I shall not weary the House further than to say that while the trade of this country flourishes as it does, while the revenues of this country are ample, while public matters are attended to without an increase in the public debt, while all industries in Canada are prospering, the policy of the present government is good enough for me and I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. H. A. CALVIN (Frontenac). Mr. Speaker, I wish that I could give a silent vote on this question, and I wish so because it is not very pleasing for me to hear the sound of my own voice in this Chamber, and it would save you the infliction of any extra words at such an early hour in the morning. I feel that I cannot give a silent vote on this question. I am not a strict protectionist and this amendment is a protectionist amendment. I am in favour of the preferential tariff, and although this amendment does not very distinctly ask for the abolition of that preference, yet many of the speeches on this side of the House have tended very decidedly in that direction, and to that extent I am not in accord with them. We must have a revenue. That goes without saying. That revenue must come largely from customs duties. These customs duties may be arranged in such a way as that they may be incidentally protective, and that seems to me to be not much out of the way. I am not a protectionist for protection's sake, and I rise to make this explanation in order that I may stand clearly before the House and before my constituents on this point. I hardly go as far in the matter of absolute free trade as my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) who certainly is consistent. I cannot help but admire the manner in which he stood up for free trade even against a proposal to put a duty on lumber, he being a large lumberman himself. I cannot say that I admire so much the stand taken by his neighbour (Mr. Charlton) who, professing to be a free trader, and sitting amongst those who profess free trade, yet when his own trade is attacked, comes out a strong protectionist, and speaks in favour of the motion of the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). If there is any trade in which this country should be impregnable, and I think is, without fear of being successfully assailed, it is in the lumber trade. You have a country carpeted with forests ; you have a population who are quite capable of developing that great national resource to the very best possible advantage, and in that trade, if in any trade, I believe we are unassailable.

I am much interested in the attempt—I call it only an attempt—to show that it is possible to protect agriculturists, the prices of whose products are fixed in a foreign market. I am not going to argue that ; it does not seem to me to be necessary. The price is fixed by the foreign market, and it just means that the farmers who produce these goods should be able to produce them under the most favourable circumstances possible. That does not mean a high protective tariff. Further, I would say this : That the professions of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are not quite consistent with their practices. They profess to be free traders ; they really are protectionists. The practices of the two sides of the House, it seems to me, do not differ very materially, and I may say while on this subject, that it will be a happy day for Canada when they do not differ at all When the tariff will cease to be a football in this House, and in the country, and when the business of the country will not be continuously disturbed for fear of tariff revision or lowering or raising—and if there is anything which disturbs business it is the uncertainty attending what may be done at any particular session by any particular party that may be in power—I repeat, it will be a happy day for the country when the tariff ceases to be the football of parties, and when the two parties will divide on the general administration of the affairs of the country ; for I suppose it must be that the country will be governed by either one party or the other. Right here I think that the government are very fair candidates for condemnation now. They have an abundant revenue; the most abundant revenue the country has ever had, but there is no suggestion of the lessening of taxation to the extent of one solitary cent. It is a case of spend, spend, spend. Collect every dollar that we can from the people and spend it all. I do not think that is a sort of thing that can go on in this country for ever. The government claim a surplus of $8,000,000. If that is so, why not lessen some of the taxes ? Why not take some of the duty off coal, or why not take the duty off sugar, as has been suggested by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) ? But what is the use of going through the list ; the government know just as well as I do where duties can be knocked off and where the burdens of the people can be lightened. In spite of all the revenue that comes in every dollar of it goes out and the public debt is growing. I rose, Sir, not to make a speech, but to put myself right in this matter, because on this amendment I intend to vote with the government. Though that is technically voting confidence in the government, and perhaps it is, I want to say that I do not wish my vote to be taken as a vote of confidence in the government. I have not confidence in the government. I do not think their general administration is such as should commend itself to me or to any other—I won't say 'other'—but to any fair-minded person. May I be permitted to go back some years in the history of the neighbouring republic, at a time when their position as to population and unoccupied territory fairly nearly resembled ours. I refer to this to illustrate what I mean by a wasteful administration of public funds. Let me read a sentence or two from the fourth annual message of President Munroe. It looks like ancient history, but it will illustrate my point :

On the 30th of September, 1815, the funded and floating debt of the United States was estimated at $119,635,558. If to this sum be added the amount of 5 per cent stock subscribed to the Bank of the United States, the amount of Mississippi stock, and of the stock which was issued subsequently to that date, the balances ascertained to be due to certain states for military services, and to individuals for supplies furnished and services rendered during the late war, the public debt may be estimated as amounting at that date, and as afterwards liquidated, to $158,713,049. On the 30th of September, 1820, it amounted to $91,193,883, having been reduced, in that interval, by payments of $66,879,165.

Here is the United States after coming through a costly war with a debt of nearly $160,000,000, with a population of seven or eight millions, and with a large unexplored and unoccupied country. Except as regards their war experience their condition was pretty nearly akin to ours at present. Having come through a war which called for a debt of $160,000,000 ; in five years they paid off $60,000,000, and just let us go along a few years further to see where they landed in the latter part of President Jackson's term. In his seventh annual message in 1835, he said :

The condition of the public finances was never more flattering than at the present period.

Since my last annual communication, all the remains of the public debt have been redeemed, or money has been placed in deposit for this purpose, whenever the creditors choose to receive it. All the other pecuniary engagements of the government have been honourably and promptly fulfilled, and there will be a balance in the treasury at the close of the present year of about $19,000,000. It is believed that, after meeting all outstanding and unexpended appropriations, there will remain nearly $11,000,000 to be applied to any new objects which congress may designate, or to the more rapid execution of the works already in progress.

Now, I call that good finance; I call it pretty common sense kind of work, and it is not the kind of thing we are accustomed to in this country. In about twenty years they extinguished a debt of $160,000,000, and in 1835 they had it all clear, and had something like $1,000,000 in the treasury. Is that the kind of road we are on in this country? What is the end of this road? Are hon. gentlemen opposite never going to say to company promoters: No, we are not going to give you any bonus, we are done with that; we are guardians of the public money, and we have stopped the bonusing of railways. I am afraid that time has not come yet, but I hope it will come soon. Must we spend, spend, spend, without any end to this sort of thing ? Must we be face to face with repudiation before we think it is time to call a halt ? Must money be thrown away, as it has been in the Galops cut, where $1,000,000 has been thrown away. I do not say that it has been thrown away by hon. gentlemen opposite; but they condemned that work when they were on this side of the House, and yet they themselves have spent $200,000 on what is an absolutely worthless undertaking. It is a channel that is never going to be used. I do not know how many expenditures have been made in the country of the same sort, but I do know of that one. I say it is time to call a halt on these heavy expenditures. We cannot go on the way we are going for ever, and I think I have given a fair sample of what I mean by reasonable, fair, and correct finance.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, I had wished to speak on this subject, as I think every member has a perfect right to do; but at this time of the morning, for the sake not only of the feelings of the House, but my own feelings, I will refrain from so doing. I think every member of this House, especially a member who claims to be independent, should express his views on this first vital question that has divided this House this session, and I had expected to speak somewhat lengthily in expounding my views upon it. But, Sir, I feel more like protesting against what I consider the unparliamentary procedure followed in this House in the carrying on of its debates, rather on what I regard as debating society lines, making it necessary for a member to call in the services of an intermediary before he can get a place in the line of speakers. I do not think a member should be expected to speak at this hour of the morning. The system that is followed has this result, that some members can drop into this House in the course of a debate that lasts for days, deliver their speeches, and be gone. This has the effect of lengthening the debates. I have also proved that a member can sit in the House, and try for hours and even days to get the floor without succeeding in getting it. However, Mr. Speaker, I can well be content to dispense with my speech on this subject this morning, because I had the pleasure, as we all had to-day, of hearing my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Smith) in an eloquent and forcible speech, give expression to very similar views to what I hold on this question. I am totally opposed to the claim that has been made time and again in this House in the last few days, that we want more protection, and want it for the sake of the workingmen of this country. I believe that is wrong. I am absolutely sure that high protection has nothing whatever to do with wages. When I hear gentlemen in this House or on the platform in the country, talk in this way, I always think of Ruskin's remarks about the make-believe of the Russian court. He said that in the Court of Russia, with all its pomposity and all its make-believes and its cringing, servile officers, it always struck him that surely the leading men there must wink at one another when their followers were not looking. So when these gentlemen, especially the manufacturers, those who have worked the national policy for all it is worth, are telling the workingmen of this country that this is what they want to make them rich, I think, they must wink at one another. I regard high protection as a double tax on industry, and the people employed in industrial pursuits, the producers of this country, are the people who have to pay these taxes. I am sorry I have not a fair opportunity to go more fully into this subject; but at this time, it would be, as I say, not only an infliction on the House, but on the member who tries to deliver a speech.

Mr. A. S. KENDALL (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I regret that at this late hour it is incumbent upon me to make a few remarks, particularly on the resolution of the hon. leader of the opposition. But representing as I do one of the leading constituencies of the Dominion, the county of Cape Breton, the greatest coal mining county in the Dominion, and the site of the new iron works, and representing as I do a large labouring element in that constituency, I feel that I should not give a silent vote. Let me say that I am a free trader. From the day I first took the hustings five years ago, to this day. I have never ceased to preach that doctrine. The resolution of the hon. leader of the opposition calls for more protection. I regret that to-night I have to curtail the remarks that I had hoped to address to the House, so I shall at once come to the subject of which I wish particularly to speak. Away back in the seventies the coal trade of the county of Cape Breton was no doubt in a desperate condition. Hon. gentlemen opposite appealed to the country on protection, and a duty of 60 cents a ton was put on coal. Following the imposition of that duty came a rapid increase of the coal trade of the country. I admit that; but I want hon. gentlemen opposite also to admit this, that coincident with the introduction of that duty came a rapid lowering of the freight rates. In the seventies the rate on coal from Cape Breton to Montreal was $2.50, $2.75, $3.00, and $3.50 a ton. Soon after the introduction of the national policy came a rapid lowering of the freight rates down to $2.00 and $1.50 and $1.00 until in 1897 the rate fell to from 65 cents to 90 cents a ton. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, if the imposition of the duty of 60 cents a ton was of value to the establishment of that trade, how much more beneficial was this great reduction of the freight rates ? I claim that the coal barons of Cape Breton took the whole advantage of the duty and put it in their pockets. I claim that they overcharged the consumers of coal in Montreal and other places, and kept the labouring men of Cape Breton and other parts of Nova Scotia labouring for from 80 cents to 90 cents and $1 a day. These are facts. Now, Sir, I wish the record of the Conservative party on the coal trade in the province of Nova Scotia to be well known in this House. We found in 1890 and 1891 that the home market was no longer able to absorb the output of our collieries. We were told on the hustings in 1891 that what we proposed was a fatuous policy—that it was impossible to send coal to any other market than the home market. In this House in 1889, Mr. McKeen, now senator, quoted letters from a gentleman in Boston stating that our coal was so sulphurous that the Americans would not take it; at any rate, the commercial conditions were such that no matter how good the coal was it could not be got in there. Some Liberals took a different view, notably the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), and the Prime Minister of Nova Scotia (Mr. Murray). Which policy was to prevail ? The one based on the ideas that only a restricted market was available for the coal trade of Nova Scotia or the policy of expansion ? In 1893 the Minister of Finance brought a resolution into the Nova Scotia legislature providing for the equipment of the collieries of Nova Scotia, in a way they had never been equipped before, and with the object of forcing our coal into other markets.

Mr. MACLEAN. Was not that the national policy.

Mr. KENDALL. No, it was not. The national policy is a policy of restriction Ours is a policy of expansion. What happened ? In 1893 the measure brought down by the Minister of Finance was fought by the Halifax Herald, and by every Tory influence that could be brought to bear against it. Even in Cape Breton, which would be most benefited by the policy, the candidates of the government were defeated by the opponents to the measure.

We were told that the coal would not go abroad. Well, mark the results. In 1896 some 200,000 tons went into the United States. Last week from the port of Louisburg some 29,000 tons went into Boston. And this year, in all probability, we will send between 800,000 and 1,000,000 tons into that country.

I wish to point to another fact. The great difficulty years ago in the Cape Breton collieries was the fact that they only had work during seven or eight months of the year. The restricted home market did not require a sufficient output to work our mines all the year round, but with the policy of expansion since adopted, we have work for every miner, not only throughout the summer months, but every day in the year, and we could employ a thousand more miners if we could get them.

Let me remind hon. gentlemen also that the Conservative party in Nova Scotia sent demonstrations to Ottawa to endeavour to thwart this movement of the Finance Minister who was then premier of Nova Scotia. We therefore have the records of the two parties before us, and we find that while the country was depressed under this great protective policy, called the national policy, it is to-day thriving under the policy of expansion.

Mr. MACLEAN. And iron bounties.

Mr. KENDALL. I am speaking now of coal. Last year there was more money expended in the equipment of the collieries, independent of the iron business, than was ever expended in former years. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) the other night, intimated that my colleague and I and several others of the maritime provinces were sent here through the money furnished by the Dominion Steel Company. I am going to refute that charge. We are not here by the help of the corporations, but in spite of them, and I think I can convince the House that the statement I am making is absolutely correct. My colleagues and I were elected in 1897 to the local legislature of Nova Scotia. We then made certain pledges and carried them out. We determined, from the day we entered public life, that our main effort would be to destroy the hold which the corporations had on the people of our country. We curtailed the powers of the coal companies, and when the new Dominion Iron and Steel Company came looking for a charter, we said to them: So far you shall go and no further. We had certain restrictions put on their charter which aroused their displeasure, and even Liberals in connection with that concern were anxious that we should not be elected to this House. If they had no other reason, they probably judged it advisable, in view of the possibility of the government being defeated, that the county should be represented by Conservatives. I wish once more to reassert that we are here to-day in spite of the corporations and not by their favour.

I shall not speak entirely from the Nova Scotian standpoint, because no man is worthy of being a member of this House who does not measure the interest of his province by those of others. But I shall now refer to the industries of Nova Scotia, and in doing so I will only be following the lead set by hon. gentlemen from the other provinces. I wish to bring a few facts to the notice to the hon. the leader of the opposition. Down in that hon. gentleman's province, there is an apple industry worth from $800,000 to $1,000,000 a year. Can he show us how a protective tariff is going to benefit that business? In what way would such a tariff help the apple grower to grow or sell his apples. There is also a gold mining business down there, worth from $600,000 to $800,000 a year. How is protection going to assist the gold miner to get and sell his gold. There is a large pulp business and deal business in that province, the products of which find their way into the French, American and English markets, where they have to fight against the products from Norway and other parts of the world. How will protection benefit those industries? Then there is the fishing industry, worth from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000 per year. How can protection help the fishermen, who have to send their fish to the United States, to the West Indies, South America, the Argentine Republic, the Mediterranean, and there compete against the fish from Norway and Sweden, from Newfoundland, and the bounty-fed fish of St. Pierre. Will he show us how a protective policy is going to benefit the 27,000 fishermen of his province? I would also point out that the very first cargo of iron manufactured in Sydney went to the United States, and that the next goes to Europe. Our main trade connections must be over the sea. Protection can only hinder, not promote our trade.

Let me congratulate the hon. the leader of the opposition on certain statements he has made. He has stated that questions of race and religion will never be raised by any one in his party with his sanction or approval. He has stated also that it is in the interests of the Dominion and of the British Empire and the advancement and enlightenment of humanity that our relations with the great republic to the south should be of the very best and every effort should be made to strengthen the good relations that now exist. But I commiserate him on this one fact, that the hon. gentleman put up to speak for him as the financial critic of the opposition took the ground that no further subsidies should be granted in Nova Scotia or any of the older provinces. I can well understand the difficult position in which he would be placed if he were to announce such a policy in the counties of Queen's, Shelburne or Lunenburg. I can well understand the difficulties that the leader of a political party has in meeting the constituents along the line from Shelburne to Louisburg.

One word more, and I shall sit down. I say that the policy for the maritime provinces—and I have heard the same policy propounded in the lower part of Quebec, in parts of Ontario and the North-west—should be a policy of expansion rather than a policy of restriction. Hon. gentlemen opposite should recollect also that Sir John Thompson stated on one occasion that, in the development of industries under the national policy, there were certain mouldering branches which should be lopped away. Have we not instances of mouldering branches that require to be lopped away now? I think that during the last few days instances have been produced showing that there are one or two industries of this country that cannot survive except at the expense of the other industries. That has become apparent. Now, speaking for the county I have the honour to represent, I wish to say that our labouring men will rely on their strong arms and the gifts that God has given them to operate upon. And, having the opportunity to operate upon those gifts and the opportunity to freely exchange their products, whether with their next door neighbours or with people ten thousand miles away is the best way to protect them. They want opportunity to freely exert their energies and to exchange their products for the products of other labour, and this they think will be the best protection that parliament could give them ; and as far as parliament is concerned it can best exert itself in the interest of labour by favouring measures that have for their effect a fair division of the profits of industry.

Kidd,

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). At this hour of the night, I presume there will be no desire to proceed with the business in committee, and I beg to move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the right hon. gentleman tell us what business the government propose to take up to-morrow ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We will take concurrence upon some items of supply with regard to the St. Maurice, then Bills, and then supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What items of supply will be taken up ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 4.10 a.m.—Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 29, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

MANITOBA RAILWAYS AGREEMENT.

Mr. McISAAC moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 102) respecting a lease of certain railways in Manitoba.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. McISAAC moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 103) an Act relating to an agreement between the government of Manitoba and the Canadian Northern Railway Company respecting certain railways.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Is that entirely in conformity with the rules, Mr. Speaker ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes. There has been a report of the Committee on Standing Orders.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand the committee reported yesterday.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I have been led to believe that the Bill would be referred back to the Standing Orders Committee.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but I was not aware that the committee had reported yesterday.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Nor was I.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will watch it in future.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Eternal vigilance——

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GREAT NORTHERN TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. OLIVER moved :

That that portion of the sixth report of the Select Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, reporting the preamble of Bill No. 38, respecting the Hudson Bay and Northwest Railways Company, and to change its name to the Great Northern Transit Company, 'not proven,' be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would ask my hon. friend not to press this motion, but to withdraw it until we have a fuller House. This is a matter of great importance and we have a thin House, and no one has had an opportunity of looking into the case.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Motion withdrawn.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (Renfrew) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 113) in further amendment of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.

He said : This is practically the old Act of 1900 with this addition, that the ballot paper is entirely different from anything we have had hitherto. Each ballot paper has the portrait of the candidate with his name printed underneath in large legible type. A ballot will be provided for each candidate, and on the back will be the initials of the deputy returning officer. When the voter comes in to the polling booth, these ballots are handed to him, and he goes into an ante-room and there selects the ballot bearing the portrait of the candidate for whom he desires to vote. This ballot he folds up and gives to the returning officer, who places it in the ballot box, after verifying the initials to make sure that it is one of the ballots handed to the voter. The other ballot the voter hands to the deputy returning officer, who examines it to see that it has his initials, and then destroys it in the presence of the agents of the candidates. This will prevent the spoiling of ballots, because the voter does not require to mark any of them, and the ballot is just as secret as any ballot can be. Any one who can read may vote in the same manner as heretofore, but a man who cannot read can easily see, by the portrait of the candidate for whom he wishes to vote, which ballot he should cast.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE PRIME MINISTER.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the right hon. the Prime Minister whether the title of Privy Council of England which, according to the press of the last few days, has been conferred on him, is a renewal of the same title which had been already given the right hon. gentleman, and which renewal was rendered necessary by the death of the Queen ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say to my hon. friend that I have no more information than he has himself. I only know of this through the newspapers.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT TO BUDGET RESOLUTION.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). I would like to draw attention to the record of last night's vote in the 'Hansard.' I am credited with having voted for the amendment. This is a mistake. I was not present, Mr. Speaker, and if I had been, I would not have voted for the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend refers to the fact that his name appears as having been paired with Mr. Galliher. The pair should read Robinson (Northumberland), in place of Robinson (Elgin).

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider certain resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In the earlier days of the session we brought down a special supplementary estimate, consisting of two or three items of urgency. These were adopted and passed through their various stages, but we were unable to submit them in the form of a Bill, owing to the fact that such procedure was blocked by the motion for Ways and Means. That motion being now out of the way, we are in a position to proceed, and after mentioning the matter to the hon. the leader of the opposition, I propose that we take the different stages in the case of these small items and introduce a Bill. These items are $10,000 for public buildings at Ottawa, $50,000 for St. Maurice slides and booms, and two items of $30,000 each in the Department of Agriculture, one for the Paris and one for the Buffalo exhibition.

Resolutions read the first and the second time and agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—EMPLOYMENT OF CHINESE AND JAPANESE.

The Minister of Finance moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means to consider the following resolution :

Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1901, the sum of one hundred and twenty thousand dollars be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before you leave the Chair, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) to a matter to which my attention has been called from the city of Victoria, B. C. On the 18th of this month I asked a question in this House as follows :

1. Has the government issued orders to their agents in British Columbia not to employ Chinese or Japanese on any public works or government steamers?

2. Is the government aware whether Chinese are employed as cooks on any government vessels in British Columbia?

3. If they are so employed, is it the intention of the government to continue their services?

4. Is the government aware that there are plenty of white cooks obtainable for such employment?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). No special instructions have been given, but it is understood that Canadian labour is to be employed on the government steamers where it can be obtained, and we are not aware of any departure from the rule.

Yesterday I got the following telegram :

E. G. Prior, Ottawa :

Chinese all signed on steamer Quadra's Commission.

This refers to the government steamer Quadra, that is now going into commission for the year. If it is true that the officers of the government have signed on Chinese—it does not say how many, but I presume it must be two or three at least, I think it is much to be deplored, for the government is aware of the strong feeling in British Columbia against the employment of Chinese or Japanese, especially on government works. Time and again for years past the British Columbia members in this House and also the local government have brought to the attention of this government the strong feeling that exists against the employment of these men. It seems to me after this answer that was given to me in this House, the government might have found out whether they were employing these men or not. Certainly they should send special instructions to their officials that under no circumstances should they give employment to Chinese or Japanese on public steamers or on public works. I believe that the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) had some correspondence in regard to the employment of Chinese in his department, and he very properly put a stop to it, as I am informed. I hope the minister will telegraph to see if this statement is correct. I have not the slightest doubt it is, because the gentleman who sent it to me is a well-known gentleman of veracity and good standing in Victoria. I hope the minister will give instructions that if these men are employed they will be discharged at once, and that white men be put in their places. I do not believe there is the slightest difficulty in getting white cooks, if it is cooks that are employed, because I was informed some time ago that several were to be got if they were only asked.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). I have no special information with respect to the particular complaint the hon. gentleman makes that a Chinese cook has been taken on board the Quadra. I do know that for many years back under the late government as well as under the previous government, there was a Chinese cook on board the Quadra. I rather understand that a change was made in that respect last year, because instructions were given to prefer Canadian labour to Chinese in all cases where it could be done. I will make inquiries and ascertain how far the hon. gentleman's statement is correct.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Is the hon. gentleman certain about his facts when he says that under the late government there were only Chinamen employed on the Quadra ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I believe so.

NON-PAYMENT OF ELECTION OFFICIALS.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, there is a matter I wish to bring to the attention of the House, and that is with reference to the payment of election officials in the North-west Territories during the election on the 7th of November last. I may say it is now some five months since the election was held, and the people who were employed by the government as enumerators, returning officers and deputy returning officers, have not up to the present time been paid. I do not know who is accountable for this. I was told it was on account of the Auditor General not being able to pass the accounts. If the Auditor General has got so much work on his hands that he cannot attend to business of that kind, I think the government should provide him with a larger staff. He informed me that he had his report to get out. While I do not know whether it is necessary that the Auditor General should have so large a report, it appears to me that if it keeps on growing, we will have to have a horse and cart to carry it about with us when we want to use it. In the meantime the fact that the Auditor General is busy should not be an excuse for allowing so many people in my section of the country, and I presume it is the same all over the Dominion, to remain unpaid simply because he appears to be too busy. I may say that in my riding some very long trips have to be taken, and it entails a good deal of expense, because the men who were appointed enumerators and deputy returning officers had to go to out-of-the-way places, in some cases they had to go to the bank and borrow money in order to carry out the work which was entrusted to them. They had to pay for that money something like 10 per cent, and some of these men had to borrow $200, and here they are paying 10 per cent on that money for fifteen months after this money has been earned by them. This is a fact that the government should take up and look into, and if the Auditor General is to blame he should be censured. It appears to me that the Auditor General passes a good deal of his time in trying to pare down small accounts of this kind that he might very well allow to pass. For instance, if a man makes a trip to the North-west Territories for 200 or 300 miles, when he puts in his account, the Auditor General gets down with his rule on the map and starts to figure how much this man could have travelled by the distance he figures on the map. Now, Sir, you cannot arrive at the distance a man has to travel in the North-west Territories by a rule on the map, because there are lakes and muskegs that he has to go round. In my experience, a man might be inside a house half a mile away, and the enumerator would have to travel ten miles to get to it. Evidently the Auditor General is not posted in North-west matters, and he gets down with his rule and starts paring down these accounts. That is one of the reasons these accounts have not been paid. The Auditor General has to go through each one of them and keep paring them down, and in the meantime these poor people are kept out of their money for ten months. I do not think the Auditor General should assume that he and his staff are the only honest people in this country, and if he would show a little more judgment in these matters it would be better for all concerned. I would ask the government to take this matter up and see that these people get justice. They may be kept out of that money for three or four months yet. I believe in some cases the Auditor General has not done anything with these accounts, and he should be spurred up. If he would cut off a few pages of that book he presents to the country every year, I think it would be well for all parties concerned.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). I want to corroborate the statements made by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). Since I have been in this House, I have received probably seventy-five or one hundred letters about the great delay in paying these election accounts. I do not think it is necessary for the Auditor General to pare down the accounts in the manner in which he does. Take, for instance, my section of the county, if a man is living along the Red river and has to report to the town of Selkirk, he has to go to a bridge or ferry to cross the Red river to get down to the town of Selkirk, yet he is only allowed mileage from the polling booth to the town of Selkirk, in a direct line. As one man said : I don't know how he expects me to go in a straight line unless I swim the river. The result has been that some of those same parties who have acted as returning officers or deputies and have been requested recently to act as enumerators, have refused to do so on two grounds : first, because their accounts are pared down to almost nothing, and secondly, because they have not been paid the small amounts to which they were entitled. I understand also that some of the enumerators in British Columbia have refused to act on account of the great delay in paying the small accounts they were entitled to.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I wish to add my testimony to that of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary). In the district which I represent there are cases where accounts which were earned in the early part of November are unpaid yet, and, so far as I know, may lie for four months more before they are paid. The result is that the credit of the government is below par because of the non-payment, and the government is already being compelled to pay higher prices and to make payments in advance for census work that they would not have if these election accounts were paid in proper time. I wish to emphasize the fact that the people of this country do not know anything about the intricacies of the methods of payment out of the treasury. They know they do certain work, they know that the government of Canada is responsible for the payment, and they look to the government and to their representatives in parliament to see that they are paid honestly. I say that when payment is delayed for four months it is absolute dishonesty, and the people will hold to account those who are responsible for that dishonesty. If the routine is such that these payments cannot be made more promptly, then the routine ought to be changed. If the fault can be located in the person rather than in the system, then certainly the person should either be changed or reformed. It is intolerable that the representatives of the people in this parliament and that the government should be put in such a disgraceful position before the electors of this country, as to seem to be defrauding honest men out of their honestly earned money, and deferring payment for a period extending from four months to an interminable time.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia). What these hon. gentlemen have said in reference to the Saskatchewan, Lisgar and Alberta is equally true of the constituency that I have the honour to represent. Day after day I have received complaints in reference to this matter. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House further than to insist strongly that something should be done to facilitate the public business. If the Auditor General has not time to do the work he ought to have an increase in his staff, so as to enable him to overtake the work of the country in proper time.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). Lest the House should think that this grievance is entirely confined to the North-west Territories, I wish to say that my constituents are suffering similarly. I had a letter the other day from one of them in which he asked the very pertinent question as to whether or not the government had become bankrupt, and I was glad to be able to write back to him and assure him that we had a surplus of $8,000,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Tell him to draw on it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I asked my constituent to have patience for a little while longer, but I would point out to the government that the grievance is a real one, and should be removed.

Mr. J. McGOWAN (Centre Wellington). I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) to some complaints sent to me in connection with the tuberculine test of cattle going into the United States. I understand that the minister has been informed of these complaints by letter. Formerly the test was applied by local veterinary surgeons in different parts of the province, but now Mr. Stubbs has been appointed veterinary surgeon for the whole province, and he is located, or supposed to be located, in Toronto. My informants state that it takes about four days to make the test, and those gentlemen who live in my constituency, Messrs. Watts, Groff, Richardson, Armstrong, Lindsay and others, who are men of what I might call continental reputation as shorthorn breeders, are put to great inconvenience. They sent their cattle to the World's Fair, and to other places, and they wish to have local veterinary surgeons apppointed to make the test. They are sending cattle every day to the United States, and the present system is most inconvenient to them. I will send this letter over to the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) so that he will see the nature of the complaint.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). There has been a misapprehension in the country in regard to this matter of the testing of cattle for export to the United States with tuberculine. It will not be out of place for me to explain in a few words what has occurred. Some years ago an arrangement was made with the veterinary authorities of the Department of Agriculture at Washington in regard to the quarantine between the two countries. At that time it was decided that animals would have to be tested with tuberculine when passing across the frontier either way, for breeding or dairy purposes. It is only these animals that are subjected to this test.

Mr. McGOWAN. It is these they complain about.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Washington authorities accepted the test made by veterinarians not named by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. Difficulties arose, and complaints were made in regard to some of these certificates. Further complications arose as between the Washington authorities and the Imperial authorities in regard to the importation from the old country, both direct and through Canada, and the Washington authorities made a new regulation of their own department, by which all animals coming into the United States from Europe or Canada for breeding or dairy purposes, had to be tested by a United States veterinary official. They refused any longer to accept the certificates of the English or Canadian veterinaries. This was evidently going to largely block the trade, and an effort was made to secure some mitigation or improvement in regard to that regulation. After some communication with the Washington authorities, I was invited to go to Washington to discuss the matter personally. About three weeks ago I did so, and I came to an agreement with the American authorities by which they would accept certificates of the permanent officials of the Department of Agriculture of Canada, but no other Canadian veterinarians. As a consequence of that, I have been naming to them the official veterinarians of my department. In order to facilitate the export trade and to enable the breeders in Ontario to secure the test of their cattle, when sold to the United States, as promptly as possible, I have added one or two names to the former official list of our permanent officers. Should it be necessary to add more, I shall be glad to do so, but as this test has just commenced, at the present moment there is undoubtedly a little congestion, and there are a larger number of demands at the present time than will likely to be the average in the future, because a large number of men were waiting to ship animals to the United States until this arrangement was completed, and the United States customs officials were ordered to accept the certificates of our veterinaries. In addition to Mr. Stubbs, I have sent two officials of my department into western Ontario to take up this work, and they are to-day doing the work as rapidly as possible. I am satisfied that when the congestion which has occurred in consequence of the block has passed away, the officials of the department will be able to overtake the work, and do it as rapidly as the breeders require. If not, I shall be happy to name one or two more veterinaries, so as to accomplish the object of the arrangement, and to facilitate the trade in our throughbred cattle with the United States as much as possible; a trade which is of the utmost importance to the farmers of this country.

Mr. McGOWAN. Would the hon. minister not appoint some local veterinaries ? These gentlemen ask for the appointment of Mr. Armstrong, a veterinary surgeon of Fergus. He is a good Reformer, and there should be no objection on that account.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only appoint the permanent officials of my department, and by the arrangement with the United States, I am not permitted to appoint men at random throughout the country.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Coming back to the subject that occupied our attention before the hon. member for Centre Wellington spoke, I wish to emphasize the protest that has been made respecting the cutting down of these election accounts by the Auditor General. The injustice perpetrated with reference to the cutting down of the accounts for travelling expenses must be clear to every member of the House when the rule is applied to men travelling in a country like the North-west, or indeed any part of Canada, because men passing through the country cannot possibly follow the lines set down by the rule. The cutting down of the other expenses connected with the elections by the Auditor General works considerable injustice, I believe. Several protests have reached me, not so much from my own district, but from other constituencies in the Territories, and also from Manitoba. The gentlemen in the printing business, who worked for the government in connection with the elections, allege that their accounts have been pared down to the extent of 30 per cent, or 40 per cent in some cases. The Auditor General holds that he is not responsible for this, because he is guided by the schedule which has been fixed by the King's Printer. If that be so, then I have to say that the schedule stands in need of revision. Ever since elections have been held there have been many complaints on this score in western Canada. A few days ago, at a meeting of the Western Canada Press Association, held in the city of Winnipeg, this matter was taken up. The meeting was a very representative one of the press of Manitoba and the North-west Territories ; and it was found that all the printers who had to do with the last election had reason to complain on this account, and the association unanimously passed a resolution, strongly protesting. I would ask the members of this House, and the government, to take cognizance of the matter, and endeavour to see if there is no possible way to bring influence to bear upon the Auditor General, or upon the King's Printer, or upon the person who is responsible for these delays in the payment of the accounts, and for the improper and unjust paring down of the accounts.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say a few words in reference to the question before the House——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. DAVIS. But I wish to speak on a different matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The only question before the Chair is the motion, that I do leave the Chair, and as the hon. gentleman has spoken to that motion, he has exhausted his right to speak again.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). A very remarkable state of affairs is threatened in this country. We are told by the hon. members who have spoken that the government will not be able to procure officers to carry out the census enumeration, the supporters of the government in those constituencies having apparently lost all confidence in the government, and therefore the work which is to be started on the 1st of April, will be indefinitely postponed, if it is ever done at all. We will have to inquire what the government are going to do about the matter. It has just been suggested to me, and I think it is a very good suggestion, that there is an army which was recently in North Bruce, and if it is impossible to get census enumerators otherwise, those artists might be very easily induced to go out there and undertake any kind of duties which the government may require of them.

Mr. SCOTT. Is the hon. gentleman at present in communication with any of the members of that army ?

Mr. WALLACE. I am not in communication with any of them, but I know their public history very well, and I know that when any kind of work for the government requires to be done, they are at the service of the government to an unlimited extent.

An hon. MEMBER. They do not count very well. They did not in North Bruce.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I would like the hon. member——

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member can have the floor when I get through.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I merely want to ask a question.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the question ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). The question is whether in the township of Arran, in North Bruce, the sole question discussed was not the vote which was given in this House on the coronation oath ?

Mr. WALLACE. That is a conundrum, and I give it up. The hon. member has evidently been sleeping for a week or two, and has not kept track of affairs. Now, Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that this strike of proposed government officials is a most serious matter. We are told that these gentlemen, who, we will assume, performed services for the country last November, are not yet paid. The Auditor General is, I understand, the watch-dog of the treasury. When he finds crooked accounts, he does not pass them. If an account is straight, it goes straight through, but when there is any crookedness in an account, the Auditor General lays it aside, so that he may first dispose of those that are straight. These people were appointed deputy returning officers and returning officers. They thought they were going to have the whole public chest at their command, and that all they had to do was to dip in, and put in enormous bills for services supposed to have been rendered. There is a law regulating what returning officers shall be paid, and what deputy returning officers shall be paid. The Auditor General is bound by that law.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. If he holds that the Auditor General is paring down those accounts because they are crooked, I would draw his attention to the statement made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), that he said he would pay what was right. If he disputes the accounts, let him pay such amounts as are not disputed. That is all we are asking for.

Mr. WALLACE. I would suggest that the hon. member for Saskatchewan should buy up the claims. He might find it as profitable as dealing in scrip.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not get any scrip myself. The hon. member for West Toronto has it all corraled.

Mr. WALLACE. We know that the Auditor General is performing his duties conscientiously. He has an able and competent staff, who will not be hoodwinked by any bogus accounts which may be sent in, but who will protect the treasury of the country. That is what the Auditor General is there for, and he is doing his duty ably and well, and his course should be endorsed by this House.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the hon. member say that he is doing his duty in not seeing that these parties have been paid for five months ?

Mr. WALLACE. It is as well to be accurate. These accounts have been made up and sent in; but they have not been paid, for the reason that they were wrong. The Auditor General sends them back and says that under the regulations they are entitled to be paid for services rendered, and nothing more; but these men were out as electioneering agents. They were the same class of men as those who were gyrating in North Bruce in the recent election, and they thought that they would be paid for services as electioneers in North Bruce.

Mr. DAVIS. Chamberlain was not there.

Mr. WALLACE. And now they discover their mistake. Parliament has no money to recoup them, and now they come to the House with a grievance and ask that the House shall punish the Auditor General, who is performing his duty by protecting the treasury and trying to deal fairly by every man who has performed services for the government. If these gentlemen were anxious to have the business settled properly, they would not come to the House and air their grievances here, but they would go to the Public Accounts Committee, where the Auditor General would be present, and where they could make any charge, and have it fully explained by the Auditor General in a proper business way. But that is not what they undertook to do, and in that regard they are not looking after the interests of the country. The Auditor General must be ready to defend any account of his or his department, and I have no doubt that if the matter is brought up before the Public Accounts Committee, he will defend and explain his course, and justify whatever may have been done or whatever may have been left undone. So that, if these hon. gentlemen have a grievance, let them go to the Public Accounts Committee and have it fully investigated. These men have not apparently full confidence in that government surplus of $8,000,000. They think the treasury is about empty and that they may never see their money. I think we might reassure them on that point, that the government will always pay its honest debts.

Motion agreed to, resolution considered in committee, reported, read the first and the second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 114) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th of June, 1901, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not wish to delay my hon. friend's Bill, but there is certain correspondence with reference to some items of the public works and some papers with respect to the building of the Canadian exhibition at Paris, which will have to be discussed. I presume there will be no objection to our discussing these matters on other items.

The PRIME MINISTER. There can be no objection to any question being raised with regard to these matters when the other estimates are before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the $30,000 complete the expenditure for the Paris exhibition ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think so.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLACE.

INSPECTION OF FRUIT PACKAGES.

Bill (No. 32) to provide for the marking and inspection of packages containing fruit for sale (Hon. Mr. Fisher) read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that it would be a great mistake to bring a Bill of this character into operation on the first of July next. Not only the men who pack the apples, but the men who make the barrels, should have sufficient time to make themselves acquainted with the provisions of this Bill before it comes into operation. I would suggest that 1901 be changed to 1902.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think I could accept that amendment. This Bill does not deal at all with the making of the barrels, but applies only to the packing and the making of the packages. Even supposing it did somewhat interfere with the character of the packages, it would be necessary to make the Bill law this session. Practically the same kind of Bill was introduced in this House last year and pretty thoroughly discussed, and the people were warned that legislation of this kind was required. The people interested in the trade have asked that some Bill of this kind to protect the trade and the reputation of our fruit should be introduced.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest that this clause be allowed to stand until we have gone through the other clauses, and then decide whether or not the Bill should go into operation the first of July next.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am quite willing, but in my judgment the proposition to suspend action for another year would be hurtful to the trade, and prevent the advantages resulting which we expect to flow from this Bill.

On section 3,

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I think it was intended that the term 'closed package' should only refer to fruit in barrels and boxes, and this definition might include fruit in baskets. I would suggest that it be made clear that the term 'close package' means a barrel, keg or box, the contents of which cannot be seen when the package is closed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The suggestion is one I would have to consider a little before I accept it. This question of the definition of a closed package has been found one very difficult to solve. The intention of the Bill is that this should apply to packages in which the public purchasing the goods cannot fairly see and judge of the contents without opening the package. The difficulty which my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) refers to arises from the fact that grapes are sometimes packed in baskets, which, if not opened, hardly show the quality of their contents. That is a point on which I am not able, on the spur of the moment, to give an opinion. But I thought that the whole intent and purpose of the Bill is covered by the definition here given of a closed package. The object of the Bill is to regulate the contents of a closed package, being a package in which the purchaser cannot examine for himself as he purchases, without turning it out or opening it, the character of the contents. I think the words here used fairly cover the definition.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I might point out that in case of a basket with a wooden cover the contents would not be visible, but the cover can easily be removed, so that the purchaser need not be in doubt as to the quality of the grapes.

Mr. WALLACE. I think, perhaps, the hon. member for Wentworth has given an accurate description in the form of words he has suggested. Baskets with wooden covers, or mere temporary packages, should not be included under the Bill, because they cannot be stamped and otherwise treated as is provided by the Bill, and it would not be desirable in any case.

Mr. BRITTON. I am inclined to think the objection is well taken, to some extent at all events, because it will be seen that according to the definition under clause 3, a closed package 'means a package of which the contents cannot be seen or inspected when such package is closed.' The whole question is as to the definition of the word 'package,' and some form of words such as that suggested by the hon. member for Wentworth seems to me to cover all that is required. Unless something of that kind is put in, it seems to me difficulties will arise in the attempt to enforce the law.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I would support the contention of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith). I am accustomed to handling such packages as he speaks of—baskets of grapes and other fruit covered with a wooden cover and so arranged as to be easily detached. It would be a great hardship in the fall of the year when we are getting hundreds—and still more in large centres where they get thousands and tens of thousands of baskets—to have them called closed packages under this law, and to be made responsible for their contents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The suggestion of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) is on record in 'Hansard' and we can look at it a little more carefully. In the meantime, I would suggest that this clause be allowed to stand. We can return to it a little later on.

On section 4,

Mr. PUTTEE. When this Bill was introduced, as I understood the hon. minister's explanation, it was the intention to have it apply to the domestic or North-west trade, and I would like to know how far this is being provided for under this clause. It seems to me that clause 4 provided only for the marking of packages with the initials, the variety and the grade, the same as is done now in our domestic trade, while clause 6, which calls for the grading, is limited to the export trade.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. PUTTEE. Then I would like to have the matter explained.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention certainly is that this Bill should apply to the internal trade, but the grades which are defined in clauses 6 and 7 were intended to apply to the export trade and not to the internal trade. We have found by experience that the marking of grades or definition of the class of fruit contained in packages is very difficult. Different packers use words to designate or grade their fruit. For instance, one gentleman who was present when this Bill was discussed by the fruit growers and shippers, said he always marked his fruit 'Imperial' and 'selected,' 'Imperial' being the best and 'selected' being the next best. Other gentlemen use other names. It was understood that it would be impracticable, without serious injury to the present trade, to require that certain definite marks or brands should be put upon all packages. But, for export, the two definite brands contained in clauses 6 and 7 are suggested. Even these are not compulsory for export, and if one chooses to export under another brand than these, he can do so. Clause 8 will cover this and all other packages, as it provides that the interior of the package shall be of the same quality as the ends or faces shown. It was thought to be unnecessary to define the grades otherwise than in that way. But, for the purpose of encouraging our exporters and to establish definite Canadian grades which shall be known in the foreign markets in the future, we have introduced into this Bill clauses 6 and 7 to give a definite grade with the name 'Canadian.' This explanation, I trust, will show my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) that the internal trade is dealt with by this Bill practically in the same way as the export trade—that is, the package must contain a uniform and even quality of fruit similar to that in the exposed portion of the package.

Mr. WADE. I would like to point out that subsection b of this section 4 provides that the name of the 'variety or varieties' shall be stamped on the package. Under section 7 it is provided that there shall be only one variety of apples in a package. I think, therefore, we should strike out the words 'or varieties' in subsection b. I may say that I would object to making it compulsory to put the word 'Canadian' upon the packages. I think that it would be objectionable to the growers and the shippers of Nova Scotia, because they have, so far—and they think for good reason—retained the name 'Nova Scotia Apples,' and their fruit is so known in the English market. They seem to think—and it appears with good cause—that the Nova Scotia fruit is superior. Certainly it reaches the market in superior condition to the Ontario fruit. That can be understood because the Ontario fruit has a long railway carriage, and as fruit is apt to sweat, by the time of its arrival at Montreal, the port of shipment, it is in bad condition. On the other hand the Nova Scotia fruit has only a short railway haul, and is put on board steamers in better condition than the Ontario fruit. Be that as it may, I cannot see any reason why Nova Scotia shippers should be compelled to change the name of their fruit and call it Canadian.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think my hon. friend caught what I said in regard to sections 6 and 7. These sections are not compulsory, they are simply a definition of the grades which we would like to encourage exporters to put on their fruit. If they do not wish to use them, they can put any other brand they choose upon their packages. But, even supposing this grade is put on, there is no reason that the word 'N.S.' should not be put along with it, and have it shown that the fruit comes from Nova Scotia, just in the same way as a Quebec or an Ontario man might put the words 'Ont.' or 'Que.' along with their definition of 'A No. 1 Cndn.' Then, in regard to the other point which the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) brought forward, pointing out that the word 'varieties' was used in subsection b of section 4, and in sections 6 and 7, where they are required to have only one variety, here again clauses 6 and 7 are not compulsory. But, we wish to encourage people who are exporting fruit in large quantities not to mix up varieties of fruit in the same package for the export trade. If a man is sending a considerable number of packages for shipment abroad, it is hardly likely that he would want to put more than one variety in the same package. Therefore, in the definition of what I hope to call national brands or grades, it is required that only one variety shall be put in a package. I may say in this connection, that amongst many arguments which have been urged, both from the old country and in our home markets, the desirability of putting only one variety of fruit in a package has been strongly impressed upon us. I would not, therefore, like to see that qualification in sections 6 and 7 struck out. While in other markets and for other purposes it is necessary that if there are two or three varieties in the barrel, the names of those varieties should be put on the packages.

Mr. WADE. Would the minister consider it necessary that words should be added to these two sections 6 and 7 so that in addition to the mark 'A No. 1 Canadian,' parties can add the province in which the fruit is shipped ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that is necessary at all ; providing there is nothing to prohibit it being done, it could be done.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) There is objection to having too many brands on each barrel. I think it is better to confine the Ontario packing to Ontario, and the Quebec packing to Quebec, and in the same way with Nova Scotia. You will then keep the shipping separately.

Mr. GOURLEY. I agree with the hon. member for Annapolis, that it is essential that we should put on the barrel the place of growth of the apples, and we need not interfere in the slightest degree with the standard. Let the standard be the same for all the provinces. I have heard, and I will take the opportunity of bringing it before this House, that last summer the Nova Scotia apples at the Paris exhibition were mixed up with Quebec apples, and the prizes that went to Quebec were owing to the superior excellence of the apples of Nova Scotia. We want to avoid that difficulty in future.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would remind the committee that we should discuss section 4 instead of sections 6 and 7.

Mr. McCREARY. I have already spoken in the Committee of Agriculture on this matter. My attention has been called to it by the Winnipeg Board of Trade, and also by several merchants in my own county. A great deal of attention is paid in this Bill to the export trade. I submit that one of the most important localities for the consumption of applies from the eastern provinces are the territories west of Lake Superior. As a matter of fact, most families up there use from one to ten barrels of apples every season, and we find that the first two or three rows of apples on the top of the barrel are all right, while the apples below are useless. There are some very unkind remarks made up there against the fruit-growers of the east on account of the way in which they pack their apples. We supposed they all came from Ontario, but I am surprised to know that a large quantity comes from Nova Scotia. I trust for the sake of Nova Scotia, they are not guilty of the charge that we lay at the door of the Ontario people. Great care should be taken in passing this Bill. I am sorry I had not sufficient time to send a copy to the various wholesale men in Manitoba and the Territories, in order to get their opinion upon it. I want strongly to impress upon the committee the importance of passing this Bill in such a way that it will be of some use to us. I do not see why a rule somewhat similar to that which we have established for wheat may not be applied to fruit. As you know, wheat is graded, not only for Manitoba, but for the entire Territories ; it is graded No. 1 hard. No. 2 hard, No. 1 Northern, No. 1 rejected, and so on, and I do not see why apples should not be graded in the same way, without designating the province that they come from.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am glad that the minister has introduced this measure, because I believe it is a step in the right direction. I agree with the remarks of my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), when he says that in the west we are made the victims of men without conscience in the east with regard to the way they pack fruit. I have in my hand a letter dated March 7, which was sent to me by the Winnipeg Board of Trade on this very question, and which I will read :

Winnipeg, March 7th, 1901.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRivière, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of this board, to ask if you will kindly, on their behalf, urge upon the government, and the Minister of Agriculture in particular, in whose department we understand the matter rests, to, if necessary, enact such legislation as will secure the public from fraud in connection with the packing of apples in barrels for sale by the barrel.

There is probably no article of consumption in Manitoba in connection with the sale of which such fraudulence prevails, as in connection with the apples shipped to Manitoba, from Ontario principally. It is well within the mark to say that it is the rule rather than the exception when a consumer purchases a barrel of apples to find dishonesty exhibited in the packing, and there appears to be no recourse against the fraud perpetrated by the ordinary packer. It is extremely rare that the apples in the middle of the barrels are anything like those placed at either end, with the evident intent of deceiving the consumer. The necessarily high freight paid on apples from Ontario to Manitoba adds greatly to their cost to the consumer, and the latter pays high prices for apples which, through the fraudulent packing, he does not actually receive.

This board suggests that there should be either an inspection of apples barrelled for sale, or that a penalty should be imposed on any packer who does not brand the barrel at the time of packing with the class of apples so barrelled, and his name and address, and such packer should also be open to severe penalties in case he brands the barrels as containing a higher grade of apples than they actually contain, or with the intent to defraud.

Thousands of dollars are lost to the people of Manitoba in connection with the sale of apples in this province, and this board considers that it is the duty of the government to protect the people in this matter.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) C. N. BELL,
Secretary.

Although provisions are made here whereby the barrel should be stamped, I think the law is not yet stringent enough to put a stop to other frauds that are committed, not by the packers, but by middlemen. After a barrel has been stamped and after the proper brands of apples that it contains have been removed, there is nothing to prevent parties from replacing those brands with fruits of an inferior quality while the stamp remains on the barrel. With regard to tobacco, there is a provision whereby the moment a box that is stamped is opened the box has to be destroyed. I would not go to such an extreme with regard to the barrels containing apples, but at the same time I think the law should be much more severe than is here proposed against those who commit this fraud which to my mind is equal to a straight robbery. A mere fine of from 25 cents to $1 is ridiculously low to punish such a fraud. It is an ordinary case of robbery, and I believe should be punished as such. I hope that the Bill will be so amended later on as to make more stringent provisions against such frauds. This Bill is a step in the right direction, and I hope that the minister will see that it is made more perfect and more complete in order to attain the object in view.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I am glad to hear from hon. gentlemen commendations in regard to the principle of this Bill. I think that perhaps the most important clause is section a of clause 4 : that the initials of the Christian name and the full surname and address of the packer shall be given. That makes the packer responsible. A man cannot put his name on a package of fruit unless the contents are just what they are represented to be. I believe that the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. LaRivière) is a good one. When tobacco is sold, the packages have to be destroyed, and would it not be well to provide that after the contents are taken out of a barrel of apples all the marks on the barrels should be obliterated so that they cannot be used again. That would be a further protection to the public. The moment a barrel of coal oil is emptied we have to scrape off the marks of the inspector, and I think the same rules should be applied to apple barrels. I believe that this Bill will prevent a good deal of fraud, and I am glad the minister (Hon. Mr. Fisher) has introduced it. I represent a number of shippers in my riding, and have had letters from them in regard to this Bill. I am informed by one of the largest shippers that when the apples come to be sold in Liverpool, for all quantities over twenty barrels a sample barrel is turned up, but for all quantities under twenty barrels the head is just taken off the barrel and they are sold by the sample of the top of the barrel. Consequently the cull apples are shipped in quantities of less than twenty barrels, and the top of the barrel only being seen, numerous frauds have been perpetrated upon the English buyers. If the number of barrels is over twenty, the whole of the fruit in one barrel has to be exposed and the rest are guaranteed like the sample. On quantities less than twenty barrels, no name is necessary, and the shipper himself does not put the brand on them, so that fraud results. I think the pith of this whole Bill lies in the fact that the man becomes responsible for the fruit he puts in the package.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as I understand the scope of the Bill, I do not think there is any necessity for a provision that the marks should be erased, because they are not put on the barrel by the inspector, but by the man himself, and therefore if you compel him to erase the marks he can put them back again the next moment. If the marks were put on by the inspector the suggestion of the hon. gentleman would be in point.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) is quite right. There are no marks intended to be put upon the packages by the inspector except where the packages are found to be fraudulently marked, and then the inspector stamps it 'falsely marked' and erases the original marks. In the case of coal oil barrels the marks are put on by the inspector, and of course they must be erased, but in this Bill there is no provision of that kind, and I do not think it is necessary. I do not think this Bill can deal with the use of packages over again. It would be a straight case of fraud without regard to the marks at all, and the package would be liable to the penalties under section 5. Although the person may not be himself a packer, still if he offers a barrel falsely marked for sale he is liable, and I think that clause covers the case. In reply to my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), I may say that I received the resolution of the Winnipeg Board of Trade after this Bill had been printed and distributed, and I was very glad to know that the Winnipeg Board of Trade entirely endorsed the principle of the Bill. A Bill of a similar character last year was pretty thoroughly discussed, and so I did not think it necessary to go into details when I moved the second reading. I shall be very happy to receive any suggestions which may tend to improve the Bill.

Mr. WADE. It appears to me from a perusal of the Bill, that if the packer or shipper puts upon the package the designation of the fruit and calls them 'A No. 1,' and it turns out they are inferior, that there is no penalty.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is under clause 5.

Mr. WADE. I do not think that would cover it. Subsection c of section 4 says that you should put the designation of the grade of fruit; section 6 says that if he is going to mark 'A No. 1' or 'A No. 1 for Canadian export,' they must be of a certain quality, and the description is given of that quality. The same provision is made in section 7. Then, under section 8 there is a penalty for the violation of any of these sections.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 8 applies to the whole Bill.

Mr. WADE. It does, but all section 4 requires him to do is to put the designation of the grade, and it does not say anything as to what the grade shall be. There are two classes of people we wish to protect by this Bill. One class is the honest packer and shipper, a very important class and the class that I am interested in; the other is the purchaser. Now, the dishonest packer can comply with the provisions of section 4, and ninety-nine purchasers out of one hundred would not know that it made the slightest difference in a barrel of apples being marked 'A No. 1' or 'A No. 1 Canadian.' The Bill does not go far enough in that respect. I believe that every man who ships a barrel of fruit should not only put the designation of the grade of fruit, but that we should also designate by this Bill what shall be 'A No. 1' and 'No. 2,' and so on. Then there is some protection to the shipper and some protection to the purchaser. I trust the minister will see his way clear to amend the Bill in that direction.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am pleased that the Minister of Agriculture has introduced a Bill of this character because it will be a protection to the fruit-grower, a protection to the packer, and a protection to the purchaser. Clause 4, which seeks to guard against fraud, is a very important one. I was sorry to learn from the hon. member from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) that a poor quality of apples was shipped from the east to the west, and I think he said that these apples were of Nova Scotia production.

Mr. WADE. He was only joking.

Mr. KAULBACH. Well, he included Ontario, but he may have referred more particularly to Nova Scotia. Now, I am correct in saying that Nova Scotia is renowned throughout the world as having the very best character of fruit; and I will corroborate that statement by informing this House that at an exhibition in the city of London some years ago, among the many varieties of fruit there exhibited, the Lunenburg fruit took the first and gold prize, and Nova Scotia fruit has continued to maintain its reputation ever since. The county I have the honour to represent is engaged very largely in fruit-growing, and its soil and climate are well adapted to produce fruit such as I have described. Annapolis is also known as a fruit-growing county, the fruit of the Annapolis valley being particularly renowned, though it does not surpass the fruit produced in the county which I have the honour to represent. I think it is well, as the hon. member for Annapolis says, that we should mark the grade of apple on the barrel, giving the kind of apple and the name of the packer, so that if any fraud is committed by anybody, the packer will be the person who will be looked to for redress. I feel that every safeguard should be thrown around the fruit-grower, and this clause should not pass until every part of it is carefully considered.

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to point out that the grading of an apple does not depend on the mere name of the apple. Thus, a No. 1 Gravenstein of Ontario is not the same fruit as a No. 1 Gravenstein of Nova Scotia. I come from an apple-growing district myself, though it is not so extensive as the Annapolis valley; and I think we ought to listen to each other with respect in regard to these matters, in order to learn the capabilities of Canada. In the Annapolis valley there are two ranges of mountains, one on either side, which in the day time protect the fruit from winds, and secures great heat, which is essential to give growth and colour to the fruit; and the nights are cool, which give the apple flavour and juice. In Nova Scotia there is an ideal climate for growing apples of the finest quality. In Ontario you have hot days, in which the apple stews to death, and hot nights which dry it up; so that in the morning you have an apple without a particle of flavour or juice. Therefore, if I went into the London market and asked for a No. 1 Gravenstein apple, and if it were not a Nova Scotia apple, I would be imposed upon. The apple should be distinctly branded 'Gravenstein No. 1, Nova Scotia,' so that the Londoner will know when he buys it that he is getting a beautiful, highly flavoured apple, which is an ornament to any table in the world. I want to differentiate the apples of Nova Scotia from the apples of Ontario; for the two are as different from each other as daylight is from darkness. If you want to grade the apples, you must make your standard honest and just; but you will not be doing so, if you call them all Canadian alike. Call them apples No. 1 Nova Scotia, and apples No. 1 Ontario, and then a fool in London will know which to buy.

Mr. KAULBACH. The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has taken this House quite by surprise by showing himself to be a fruit scientist. I fully endorse what he has said, for a very great deal is to be said for mild days and cool nights in producing flavour and colour in apples. If those points could be carefully considered by those who profess to be scientists in the matter, and a record kept with regard to the proper growth and care of apples, I think it would be very valuable, and an educator to fruit growers.

Mr. McEWEN. I think our friends from Nova Scotia should have one end of the barrel labelled Nova Scotia, and leave the other end for the rest of Canada. I would like to ask what will be done in the case of apples of the same variety which are differently named by different people.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is well known that there are certain varieties of apples which pass under one name in one place and under another name in other places. Two or three names are sometimes applied indifferently to the same variety. But where we require the name of the variety to be given, there could be no exception taken to a name being used which is generally known in the locality. As a matter of fact, I understand fully the situation which the hon. gentleman mentions, and the fruit-growers and shippers who discussed this matter thoroughly, did not consider that there would be any difficulty in that respect.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I understand that nearly all apples are bought by men who have their storage warehouses, where they select and repack the apples. I know that is the case with apples for export; I do not know how it is with regard to the local trade. But in case hon. members should get the impression, from the discussion which we have had, that it is only in Nova Scotia that good apples are grown, I beg to say that Ontario holds the palm for apples, especially the county which I have the honour to represent, and more particularly the southern part of it. There we grow the choicest and finest apples it is possible to produce. I think it is important that we should have a regular Canadian brand, whether the apples come from Ontario or Nova Scotia, or any other province, and let them be required to come up to a high standard. I cannot see any objection to have included in the brand, in smaller letters, the name of the province from which the apples come, which would serve all practical purposes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know very much about the apple trade, and I do not profess to know anything about the relative merits of Nova Scotia apples and Ontario apples. But I happened to notice in the report of Prof. Robertson of last year or the year before, the statement that apples from Nova Scotia are sold by the name of Nova Scotia apples in London, although they are, of course, just as much Canadian apples as apples from Ontario or Quebec, which are sold as Canadian apples. If the apples from my own province have a reputation by that name, I think it is well that the advantage of that fact, whether it is little or great, should be preserved. Would the Minister of Agriculture permit me to bring to his attention a matter which does not seem to be very definitely dealt with in his Bill, though I am perhaps mentioning it a little out of its order? By sections 6 and 7 it is provided that the apples of grade A No. 1 Canadian shall have certain characteristics; and then by section 8 it is provided that 'no person shall sell or offer, expose, or have in his possession for sale, any fruit packed in any package upon which is marked any designation of size, grade or variety which falsely represents such fruit.' The difficulty I see about the Bill is this. The hon. gentleman has defined what No. 1 Canadian shall be, but he does not make it necessary that the brand No. 1 Canadian shall be used by any person. Suppose the apple-growers of Ontario see fit to mark their apples No. 1 Ontario, and the Nova Scotia growers No. 1 Nova Scotia, you have not any provision stating what apples so marked shall be. Would it not be desirable to have in this Bill a general definition of No. 1 apples, such as is given of No. 1 Canadian in clause 6? Unless you have such a clause, it will be easy for any one to avoid the provisions of the Act without exposing himself to any penalty.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the Bill introduced last session, it was intended to have a definition of a grade, which should be made compulsory for the export trade. When, however, the scope of the Bill was enlarged, and made to embrace the internal as well as the export trade, it was found difficult to give a definition on account of the number of brands used in the internal trade. Some fruit-growers have brands which they wish to continue using, and which it would be impossible to define. Were the trade and the public to consent to the wiping out of all the present brands, and the adoption of a new standard, which would apply to fruit in the same way as the standard brands apply to grain, that might be a good thing, but the trade at large is determinedly opposed to it. It would be too great an interference with the established usages of the trade to be practicable.

Mr. GOURLEY. Could you not pass a law and make it applicable in two years from now?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that such a law would be acceptable to the trade. There are certain men in the trade who have to-day established brands worth thousands of dollars to them, because they have been honest in their trading and packing, and the people have confidence in those brands. And it would be absolute robbery to prevent these people from using those brands. It might take years for the traders, who were compelled to give up their established brands, to re-establish their reputation and character under a general brand. Sections 6 and 7 are not compulsory. They are simply suggestions, in the hope that in time—and the sooner the better—our export trade will, as much as possible, be covered by some such brand. I am not particular as to the character of the brand, but I should be glad to see our export trade carried on under brands of which the name 'Canadian' formed an integral and important part. It was in this view that I suggested the word 'Canadian' in preference to 'N.S.,' 'Ont.' or 'Que.' I do not want to enter into any controversy as to the quality of the apples in Ontario and Nova Scotia. My own opinion is, that the province of Quebec, coming between the two, furnishes the best fruit.

I do not think it would be practicable to define what should be first quality grade and second quality grade, but I do think that section 8 covers the point, as far as any general provision possibly can. If there is a designation put upon a closed package, which would indicate superior excellence, and the fruit was found inferior, I believe the packer would be liable to the penalties under section 9 for having violated the provisions of section 8. It is just as necessary that section 8 shall be complied with as section 4. If any of the provisions of these two sections are evaded, the parties guilty would be liable to the penalties in section 9.

This Bill has been in the hands of the Justice Department and been carefully examined, and the impression which I certainly had is, that the penalties under section 9 applied to the provisions of sections 4 and 8.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The difficulty is, that it would be almost impossible to convict any one of an offence against section 8. You would require expert evidence, and would have half a dozen saying a particular barrel was No. 1 and others saying it was not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman may notice that in the eleventh line of section 8 there is this provision:

> —and it shall be considered a false representation when more than 15 per cent of such fruit is substantially smaller in size than, or inferior in grade to, or different in variety from, the marks on such package or the faced or shown surface of such package.

That does not quite cover the point, but it would be very difficult indeed for a packer to act as my hon. friend thinks he might, and not come under this particular section.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that the Bill is lacking in everything that could make it an efficient Bill. The apple-growers and exporters are not willing to give up their particular brands, and this Bill gives every man a perfect right to export apples under any brand he may chose to give them, and there is absolutely no grade fixed. It will never do to give the force of law to a measure which would allow the flooding of the British market with all kinds of grades without fixing any standard. One man may grade apples No. 1 which another would grade as No. 3, and no penalty can be imposed. Although that is covered, in a sense, in clause 8, there is nothing in that clause more than this, that there shall be, first the initials of the packer then the variety and words to fix the grade. But no grade is fixed, each individual making a grade to suit himself. It seems to me that until these gentlemen are able to come together, and instead of making a compromise Bill, to have one under which all our apples exported shall have one reasonable uniform grade, we cannot hope to have our apples reach the English market in the best shape to build up this trade. The experience of the Minister of Agriculture, I need hardly point out, has shown that attempts in the other direction have been an absolute failure. There is general complaint that bad fruit is going into the market, which is constantly lessening our chances of building up a trade. A standard should be fixed and a Bill introduced to compel all packers to comply with it.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). If we are to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) should be adopted with it, that all the packers should be allowed two or three years for the adoption of this 'A No. 1 Canadian' brand. I was speaking recently with a member of the firm of J. O. Henry & Sons, of Oshawa, who are among the largest shippers of apples, who said—and this view is confirmed by the statement of other shippers with whom I have had correspondence—that they have a registered brand of apples with which they have been doing business in the old country for about a quarter of a century. The brand is well established, the goods are exactly as represented, and they sell on their merits. Hon. members can easily see that this firm have built up a business, and that this brand is a valuable asset which they cannot afford to part with at short notice. I plead for that class of people. If the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell is taken, time should be allowed to the shippers to accommodate themselves to the new order of things. To take any other course would be to subject individuals to great hardship.

Mr. WADE. There is a good deal of force in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross, Ontario) says. I do not think that anybody wishes to subject any of the shippers to hardship. In fact, the minister gives that as his reason for not making the suggested change. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Colchester as to not bringing this Bill into force at once but deferring it for three years——

Mr. GOURLEY. I did not refer to the whole Bill, I referred to this part of it.

Mr. WADE. Yes, this part of the Bill. But there has been great clamour for some legislation in this direction; and, while I am opposing this feature of it, I wish to state that the producers and shippers feel themselves under a debt of gratitude to the hon. minister for the interest he has taken in this matter.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) did not understand what I said. What I desired was that if there are people who are ready to co-operate in this matter they should be given three years to put themselves under the general rule.

Mr. WADE. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley). I am informed that in Ontario they are using such grades as 'selected,' 'choice selected' and so on. In the province of Nova Scotia, these are not the designations used. We used the terms 'No. 1,' 'A No. 1' and so on. This national grade that we are trying to establish by this Act is really taking our grading and tacking to it the word 'Canadian.' That is the thing we object to, because we have—as I said before for good reasons—kept the name of our apples distinct from the Canadian, because we claim they are better, and the reports of the department shows they are better. It would be a hardship to the producers of Nova Scotia to lose a portion of their distinctive mark, just as it would be in the case of the private shippers of Ontario. These honest packers have used the name honestly and have made it valuable, and I desire to retain for them the distinctive mark which they have thus made valuable. There may be only 1 per cent or half of 1 per cent of the packers dishonest, but their dishonesty will affect the whole trade. To bear out my argument, I might refer to the evidence given before the Agricultural Committee in 1899. I find it there stated that apples were shipped from Ontario by the ss. Castilian, which was wrecked on the shore of Nova Scotia. These apples were purchased in Yarmouth. The packages were marked 'selected' and 'choice selected,' but the purchasers were disgusted at the gross deception practised for the apples were, for the most part, mere windfalls. Three or four layers on top were fair, but the rest were windfalls and nubbins. The man who used this brand 'choice selected' did not make it of much value to himself. The report shows that Nova Scotia apples are better than those from Ontario. I do not care whether they are or not. The people think they are better, and the purchasing public on the other side think so. Therefore, our mark has a distinct value, and if we wish to put the highest grade on our barrels, we ought not to be compelled to change the distinct mark.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not understand that it is the purpose of the Bill to deprive the Nova Scotians of the use of the word 'Nova Scotia.' There is only one Nova Scotia, and these packers retain the full benefit of the name.

Mr. WADE. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy). If he will look at clause 6, he will see that if we wish to use the highest mark, what is called the national mark, we must put upon the barrel 'A No. 1 Canadian.'

Mr. CLANCY. Then, add 'Nova Scotia.'

Mr. WADE. But that would not be to retain our distinctive grade marking. This is something new and something different. We should be dropping out the prominent feature of our mark which is 'Nova Scotia,' and putting in the place of it 'Canadian.' I would like to see this Bill acceptable to the parties interested so that it might be generally adopted, but, if we change our grade mark to 'Canadian' it would not be generally adopted.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). If the grade called 'Nova Scotia' is so much superior to the grade called 'Canadian,' all you have to do is to brand your barrel with the word 'Nova Scotia' and leave out the other.

Mr. WADE. No, because the mark is 'A No. 1 Canadian.' The purchaser seeing that says: I won't buy that, because it is from Ontario, but I will look for something marked 'Nova Scotia.' If there is any virtue in the fact of apples being grown in Nova Scotia, we have a right to retain that distinctive mark.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I think the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) will see when we come to section 6 that, if these apples are marked 'A No. 1 Canadian' they can be marked also 'Nova Scotia' or 'Quebec' or by any other name underneath.

Mr. WADE. But we want 'Nova Scotia' on top.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). It is entirely unnecessary to put on the word 'Canadian.' The barrels can be branded 'A No. 1 Nova Scotia.'

Mr. WADE. Then, we cannot take advantage of the national brand.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). But the hon. gentleman says that it is of no advantage—that the Nova Scotia apples are better.

Mr. WADE. I say it is an advantage to have a mark on the barrel to show that the apples come under this law and are in accordance with the provision of section 6. But there are two classes of apples going into the English market—the Nova Scotian and the Canadian. You should not ask us to lose the benefit of our distinctive trade mark under which we have been selling.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the apple exporters of Nova Scotia want to retain their distinctive mark, there is nothing in this Bill to prevent it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade), it seems to me, wants to have Nova Scotia apples marked 'A No. 1 Canadian' and so get the benefit of that, and then sell them as Nova Scotian. I got the information from Prof. Robertson in the Agriculture Committee this year that the Nova Scotia apples that they blow about so much were not as good last year as the Ontario apples. The season before last was a very peculiar season for apples in Ontario, and our apples were not up to the usual quality. The hon. gentleman must not think that all the apples grown in Canada are grown in Nova Scotia.

Mr. WADE. I did not hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane).

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not blaming you because you don't hear; the trouble with some men is that they do not want to hear anything, because they are so conceited in their own opinion that it would not make any difference if they did hear. The hon. gentleman's argument is that he wants Nova Scotia apples to go into the British market as such, because they are of better quality than any others in Canada. There is nothing in this Bill to prevent him from doing that if he wants to. I am above the idea of saying that the Ontario apples are better or inferior to the Nova Scotia apples.

Mr. GOURLEY. What we want is the truth.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the hon. gentleman does not know more about law than he does about apples, I would not wish to have him defend me. I might be hung.

Mr. GOURLEY. You might deserve it.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not see why we should pass any paternal legislation here to protect the British consumer. I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourlay) that I represent a riding that has more cold storage capacity in it than all Nova Scotia put together. The villages of Brighton and Colborne, in my constituency, can store 300,000 barrels of apples, and therefore I know what I am talking about. Why should we do anything more than put our apples on the British market in a fair shape. The manufacturers of Great Britain do not take us under their paternal legislation, but they make us look out for ourselves when we are buying their wares. The dealers and shippers in my section of the country say that it will protect the trade sufficiently if a man is compelled to put his name and address upon the barrel. That was brought out very forcibly by the shippers and packers of apples in my village. I tell the Minister of Agriculture that I admire him because he has taken the advice of men who know something about this matter. The apple packers and shippers should have a better idea of what they want than gentlemen in this House, who know nothing but hearsay of the trade. So far as my part of the country is concerned, I repudiate the idea that the farmers are responsible for the frauds perpetrated in that trade. The farmers do not pack the apples. The shippers buy the apples in the orchards, put them up themselves, take them to the storehouse and repack them, and therefore the farmers are not responsible for any frauds on the British consumer. There was a young man who was starting out and he bought some apples from a farmer, and I suppose he got them cheap. The farmer had nothing to do with it, but the buyer found that the apples were not up to the mark, and instead of repacking them and sending them in his own name, he put on a fictitious name and sent them forward. The farmer was not responsible for that. I repeat that the apple-packers and exporters in my section think that all that is required is to compel the shipper to put his name on the barrels.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. After careful investigation, I have found that the practice is quite different in different sections of the country. There are some parts where the farmers do pack the apples; there are some parts where the shippers have agents, and there are other parts where there are local buyers who put the apples in cold storage and pack them afterwards. It is therefore difficult to lay down a definite rule in regard to the practice of the trade. It is as difficult and perhaps as unfair as to make comparisons between the quality of the fruit in different parts of the country. One season the fruit from one section is exceptionally fine, and gets a higher price than from another section, while that condition may be reversed the next year. I may tell my hon. friend (Mr. Wade) that last season the Nova Scotia fruit did not do as well in England as the Ontario fruit did, although the year before the Nova Scotia fruit was far and away ahead of the Ontario fruit.

Mr. WADE. What about the other years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not gone into that, but the assertion made by my hon. friend was rather sweeping. The 6th and 7th clauses of the Bill are so purely suggestive that I am afraid they have interfered with the discussion of the Bill.

Mr. SCHELL. This Bill establishes a rule by which you shall sell these apples. Who is going to determine that these apples are up to the standard ? For a number of years I was a shipper of apples and along with those interested with me in the western part of Ontario we shipped probably more than any other firm in that part of the country. Are the Canadian people going to ship to the old country, guaranteeing the grade upon opening the barrels in England ? Have we to follow those apples all the way to the old country to establish that grade, or will the grade be finally established here ? I am afraid you will put the apple dealers of this country in the conditon of the lumbermen, who sell lumber as No. 1 and No. 2 in New York, but very often when it arrives there a dishonest dealer will say it is not No. 1 or No. 2, and that you have got to take it away or he will sell it as culls. If we are to establish this grade for apples, will we not have the same conditons prevailing in that trade ? I am afraid that if so it will not only ruin the dealers but it will ruin the apple industry of Canada. I am afraid you will be putting the whole apple trade in a worse conditon than it is at present. I think we should consider that very carefully before we establish a tribunal by which we will try all the apple shippers of this country, and then not have any control whatever over the goods of the shipper when they arrive in England.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman does not quite grasp the intention of the Bill, or else his fears are unfounded. This grade is to be judged in Canada, and the Bill provides regulations for the enforcement of the Act. The intention is that some inspectors shall be appointed. The inspection is not compulsory. It is not intended that every package of fruit marked should be inspected, but at the same time the Bill provides that any package of fruit which is marked in a certain way and does not come up to the definition, will lay the packer open to a penalty. The intention is to appoint as many inspectors as may be necessary to carry out the intentions of the Act, and they will be authorized by the Act and by the rules and regulations laid down by order in council to at any time they see fit inspect the fruit which comes under the operation of this Act, and condemn it or not, according to its quality and packing. So far as the reception of the fruit on the other side is concerned, this Act makes no practical difference. No doubt to-day our Canadian shippers as a rule consign to be sold at auction, their fruit is judged there and is sold on its merits. But unfortunately during the last few years such a large amount of fraudulent packing has been found in Canadian fruit that the simple fact that fruit in closed packages comes from Canada, hurts its market value in the old land unless it is marked by a brand which is known there to the trade to be honest. That being the case, we wish to establish a brand, or grade, or a reputation for the Canadian fruit. I suppose in future as in the past Canadian fruit will go forward by the same trade methods. This Bill does not deal with trade methods at all, and if it goes forward by the present trade methods, we hope that the people of Canada who pack fraudulently will be so deterred by the provisions of this Act that they will cease to pack fraudulently. I am sorry to say that the condition of affairs is such to-day that it will take some time for our Canadian fruit to recover its reputation. The reputation of an article once destroyed is hard to re-establish, and I regret to say that to-day the reputation of the exported fruit of Canada is destroyed. Therefore, our people will have to submit to the disadvantages which some of them have brought upon the whole country for a time, until the honest and reputable men of the fruit trade have so established its reputation again that it will be popular in the foreign market.

Mr. SCHELL. There is one thing that I think should be put in the Bill more definitely. I agree with the necessity for some legislation in this direction. As to whether the barrels be branded Nova Scotia fruit, or Quebec fruit, or Ontario fruit, is not material. As the minister says, the fruit will be dealt with on its merits in the old country. But I think there should be a declaratory clause in the Bill stating that this Act refers to the branding or the quality, or stating that it does not extend any further than Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No Act of ours could make it extend any further than Canada.

Mr. SCHELL. This is a point that I have noticed. Suppose I am in a section of country where the fruit is not up to the grade, and I may know it, still I may brand that fruit No. 1 Canadian. I may sell that in the old country as No. 1 Canadian, and they may claim that it is not No. 1 Canadian. There should be some way of providing that an impostor would not be able to use that brand for his own benefit at the expense of the honest shipper.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Of course the Bill can only apply to Canada. Take for instance the cheese trade. We have a well-known brand called the 'Finest Canadian cheese,' branded or stencilled on a great many cheese sent out of Canada, and even those that are not stencilled are sold as finest Canadian. It is a well-known grade in the trade, and when a man buys by cable Canadian cheese he expects to get what is known as finest Canadian, and if, when the cheese arrives in England, it is not up to the grade, he complains and cuts on the price. That must obtain in regard to fruit or anything else. Our grain trade is in the same way; what we consign to England has certain brands upon it, and when it arrives in England, if it is not up to the quality which is understood in the trade by that brand or grade, there is a complaint and difficulty about payment. I do not think it is possible to overcome that difficulty. It is the universal law of trade, and I do not believe that we can make any provision in a Bill which can overcome difficulties that may arise in that way. But by creating certain definitions of grades we may facilitate the trade, and prevent misunderstandings which, in the past, have been more frequent than they would be under the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. SCHELL. There is this difference. In this Bill there are penalties provided.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those only apply to Canada.

Mr. SCHELL. Suppose they do, the fraud cannot be followed back in the old country. Now, in the brand, 'Finest Canadian cheese,' the minister speaks of, there is no government measure in reference to it. These matters are established usages of trade. But in this Bill you propose to impose pains and penalties and create a criminal offence, whereas the other way is the usual custom of trade.

Mr. CLANCY. I was going to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he cannot see his way to fixing some standard. Clause 4, I think, is meaningless as to attaching any penalties to a Canadian who sends fraudulent packages to England. There is no punishment for inferior apples in section 4.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 9 provides for punishment.

Mr. CLANCY. For instance, a man puts up apples under section 4, according to the grades which may be marked. But there is something still lacking. When the variety is stated there is no provision that the apples should be a good class belonging to that variety, they may be wanting in size, because the size does not require to be stated. Therefore, no punishment is provided for packing wrongfully apples in any other manner than is provided for in section 4. Section 8 does not provide a penalty, because there is no provision as to the size required. I am told that the majority of the whole bulk of the fruit shipped from Canada must go under section 4.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 8 applies to it also.

Mr. CLANCY. Section 8 applies so far as the class of fruit is designated. No size is mentioned in section 4, no standard is fixed. If you fix a standard of one, two or three, then that will mean something.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would say that while there is no definition of grade in section 8, the words 'or in which the faced or shown surface gives a false representation of the contents of such package,' cover all cases of fraud.

Mr. CLANCY. There may not be fraud at all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Improper packing ?

Mr. CLANCY. It may not be improper packing according to clause 4.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not agree with my hon. friend. The point of this Bill is to see that in a closed packing the package is marked so as to avoid those cases in which large fine apples are put at the ends of the barrel, while the middle is filled with poor and inferior fruit.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose the fruit is uniformly of an inferior grade, and is marked X ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a different case. Then it would be for the inspector to say, or in case of a suit it would be decided by the evidence of witnesses, whether the brand was fairly indicative of the contents of the package. I grant, frankly, that there is a certain looseness in the provision, and that it would be better to have sections 6 and 7 applied to the whole trade ; but, I have felt very strongly the representations of the men engaged in the trade, and I did not feel that it was advisable to insert in this Bill provisions which might operate unjustly, or hamper the trade unfairly. My hon. friend from South Wentworth (Mr. Smith), who was a member of the committee of fruit-growers who were consulted in regard to the drawing of this Bill, and who was present when I met a large representative gathering of fruit-growers and shippers in Toronto, and discussed the whole matter with them, understands why it is that the Bill to-day does not contain the requirements which it contained last year, when I introduced it first, and when I undertook to propose such a law as my hon. friend is now indicating, but which, after further consultation with those engaged in the trade, I believe now, would be unnecessary and inadvisable.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I submit that the supposititious case proposed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) will never occur. He assumes that a man would ship apples to the old country marked X, representing nothing. No man would ship apples expecting to receive a reasonable price for them, if they had no mark or a mark representing nothing. He would naturally use some mark indicative of the contents of the barrel.

Mr. GILMOUR. If there were any known grades of apples, we could understand that it would be possible to designate those grades. But there are no known grades.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no doubt there is that looseness in the Bill, which is entirely due to the requirements of the trade. If my hon. friend would move that there should be a definite legal grade, and that no other mark should be put on the packages, no doubt the committee would consider that ; but, I am not prepared to move it at this stage.

Mr. GILMOUR. I am speaking of what might be considered a grade, but the use of which would not render a man liable under section 8.

Mr. WADE. Could not a clause be inserted providing that when any brand is put on the barrel indicating that the apples were of the highest character, it should be in accordance with these two sections ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is evident that we cannot pass this Bill through the committee at this sitting ; and as I understand that it is not desired that there should be a sitting of the House this evening, I would suggest that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business is to be taken up on Monday ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We shall take up this Bill again on Monday, and afterwards go into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 1, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant) moved that that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for receiving petitions for private Bills be suspended with reference to the petition of the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters of the Dominion of Canada, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the tenth report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Explain.

Mr. HEYD. A Bill recently went through the House relating to the Independent Order of Foresters. That order had discovered a defect in their legislation whereby the rights of those who belonged to the order in days gone by were jeopardized, and a Bill was introduced in the House within the last few weeks to remedy that defect. The attention of the Ancient Order of Foresters was directed to their Act of incorporation, and they found that it contained the same defect. In order that those who belonged to the provincial order should have the rights intended under the Bill that passed in 1898, this petition is presented for an amending Bill. It is exactly the same Bill as is contained in the first four clauses of the Independent Order of Foresters' Bill, which has passed the House.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON—CONSTITUTION OF THE COURTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I understand that an order in council—and in the right direction, I think, If I nay say so—has been passed, constituting the court of the Yukon district an appellate tribunal from the decisions of the Gold Commissioner there. But, in this direction I wish to draw the attention of the government to a point that has been raised, in case there may be something in it. I confess that I have not had an opportunity of examining the order in council in question. The point is this : At present the cases before the court of the Yukon district are subject to an appeal at the option of the appellant, either to the Supreme Court of British Columbia or the Supreme Court of Canada, and from the Supreme Court of British Columbia to the Supreme Court of Canada. As a matter of fact, the litigants bring a great many of their cases before the Supreme Court of British Columbia, and, there they have been, in large part, finally disposed of. Now, the question has been raised by members of the bar, that there seems to be a difference in connection with these cases. That is to say, the decision of the Supreme Court in the district—I have forgotten whether it is called by that name or not—is declared to be final ; that would leave the appeal from that court only to the Supreme Court of Canada. It may be the intention of the government that that should be the case, and there may be reason for making this change. I must say that it seems to me that it would be much better to have the cases in these decisions just as the others, giving the parties the option of going to the Supreme Court of British Columbia or the Supreme Court of Canada, and ultimately to the Supreme Court of Canada in any event. At any rate, that point was mentioned to me, and, if there is anything in it, I hope the government will look into it, and will have it made clear. Or, if the amendment is required, it should not be left to the parties interested to raise technical questions of that kind as to the real significance or effect of this new order in council.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The order in council to which the hon. gentleman refers to, or rather the ordinance——

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. —constitutes the two judges of the territorial court, together with the gold commissioner, an appellate court. Heretofore, under the mining regulations, the appeal from the decision of the gold commissioner has been to the Minister of the Interior. The change is, that instead of the decision being appealed from the gold commissioner to the Minister of the Interior, the decision is appealed from the gold commissioner to the appellate court as it is constituted. The ordinance clearly declares that the decision of the appellate court is final ; so, I do not think there will be any question as to what the meaning and intention of the ordinance is. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) desires I will bring down a copy of the ordinance, so that he may have an opportunity of perusing it. The question whether, from the appellate court thus constituted, there should be an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, is a question of policy which is a fair question for discussion.

CANADA NATIONAL RAILWAY AND TRANSPORT COMPANY.

Mr. COWAN moved third reading of Bill (No. 13) to incorporate the Canada National Railway and Transport Company.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood that an arrangement was reached by the Whips the other day that this Bill was not to be read the third time until Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may say that when the matter was under discussion I intimated that probably an understanding might be reached between the promoters of this Bill and those who opposed it. I have communicated with them and have received a very strong protest against any change. I thought it was only fair to take this the first opportunity of mentioning that my efforts in that direction had not been successful, for fear any member might be misled by the statement I made the other evening.

Mr. DAVIS moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 27) respecting the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company.—Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure).

GUELPH JUNCTION RAILWAY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 23) respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

On section 2,

Section 7 of the Act to incorporate the Guelph Junction Railway Company is repealed, and the following section is submitted therefor :

7. No person shall be a director of the company unless he be the holder of at least one share in the stock of the company, and has paid up all calls thereon ; but so long as the city of Guelph shall hold $20,000 of the capital stock of the said company, and shall be the holder of the bonds of said company, any bona fide ratepayer of the city of Guelph who is assessed for $1,000 or upwards on the assessment roll of the city of Guelph shall be eligible to be elected a director of the company.

(a.) The council of the corporation of the city of Guelph may, by by-law empower the mayor or any member of the council or other person to represent the corporation and vote at any meeting of the shareholders of the company, and to vote for such corporation in respect of its shares in the company, and in default of any such by-law the mayor of the city for the time being shall be entitled and authorized to represent the city at any such meeting of shareholders, and vote thereat, in respect of the shares of the company held by the said city.

(b.) The directors of the said company may and shall, upon the request of any of the present shareholders of the company upon whose shares 10 per cent only has been paid, issue a fully paid-up share or shares to such person or persons in exchange for and to the extent of the aggregate amount paid by him or them upon his or their present shares.

(c.) It shall be lawful for the corporation of the city of Guelph, subject to the laws of the province of Ontario, to acquire any fully paid-up share or shares in the said company, and to hold the same as well as those now held by the said city.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I do not feel that I would be justified in allowing this clause to go through the committee at the present time without entering my protest. So far as I am aware, the city of Guelph, as a municipal corporation, has never pronounced upon this amendment. An amendment was introduced by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) to the Bill entitled An Act respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company. That hon. gentleman supported that amendment by a petition from the city council of Guelph purporting to be passed by the city council and attested by their seal. That amendment the hon. gentleman withdrew, and, so far as I am aware, without the consent of the corporation of the city of Guelph, and without the consent of the directors of this railway company, he has submitted another amendment which I contend ought not to receive the sanction of this House until all the parties interested have been heard from. Certainly, we have not heard from the municipal corporation of the city of Guelph. Now, I want to say a few words in respect to this matter further, and I shall endeavour to give the committee something of the history of this legislation. A short time ago a resolution was brought down to the council by the railway committee of the city council of Guelph, in which the matter of a change in regard to the directorate of the Guelph Junction Railway was referred to. I desire to say that that report, when presented to the committee, was vouched for by the chairman of the committee, who informed his colleagues on the committee as to the nature of its contents, but carefully kept back all the salient points contained in the report, leaving them to understand that it was a matter of very minor importance. The members of this railway committee of the city council, having confidence in the chairman of the committee, signed the report of the committee, and allowed it to pass without investigating for themselves. Just to show the truthfulness of this, I desire to refer the committee to a letter which I think fully bears out all I have said upon the matter. The letter is signed by Mr. James Anderson, alderman of the South Ward of the city of Guelph, and it is addressed to the editor of the Guelph Mercury, a paper which supports the hon. gentleman who has introduced this resolution. It says :

Dear Sir,—As I signed the report of the Railway Committee and also voted in the Council authorizing His Worship the mayor and Alderman Dunbar to proceed to Ottawa to look after our interests in the Guelph Junction Railway question, and as I subsequently signed a petition with, I understand, nine other aldermen, requesting the Committee on Railways, etc., to ignore the request of the Council, I think some explanation is necessary to the ratepayers of the Sounth Ward whose interests I represent at the Council board. When Alderman Dunbar called the committee together to consider the question, I, as well as two others of the committee, understood, as he certainly represented to us, that it was to appoint an auditor and other matters regarding the city's interests in the Guelph Junction Railway, but not until I read Col. McCrae's letter and the Guelph Junction Railway directors' statement in the Mercury did I comprehend that the scheme was to oust the old directors of the road and appoint fresh ones in their place. Now, if Alderman Dunbar had the interests of the city and the Guelph Junction Railway at heart, as he says he has, he would have explained things a little better to the committee. I am confident there were not more than two or three in the Council understood the question they were voting on, as subsequent revelations have proved, when ten of the aldermen have since signed a petition to let things remain as they are. Now, Sir, as the poet Burns says, 'The best laid schemes of mice and men gang aft aglee,' I think Alderman Dunbar's little schemes will meet the same fate, which it richly deserves. I spoke to Aldermen Taylor and Hamilton and they said they never understood, when signing the report, the object was to elect directors from the ratepayers of the city and throw the old ones overboard. I, for the future, will sign no report until I am perfectly satisfied that I understand what I am doing, and will not take Alderman Dunbar's or any man's word for it.

Thanking you for inserting this explanation, I am,

Yours, etc.,
JAS. ANDERSON,
Alderman, S. Ward.

Homewood Cottage, Guelph, Mar. 29.

We endorse the above statement of the facts.

John H. Hamilton,
W. M. Taylor.

Who I understand are also members of the committee. Now, hon. gentlemen can see the value that can be placed upon the report which was presented by the Railway Committee to the city council of Guelph to induce them to pass the resolution that came on here to the Railway Committee of the House of Commons. It was alleged at the meeting of the Railway Committee on Friday last, in support of the contention of the hon. member for South Wellington, that the present shareholders of the Guelph Junction Railway had made an offer, some twelve years ago, to assign their stock to the city of Guelph, or to hold it in trust for the city of Guelph if the city of Guelph would pass a by-law to raise $18,000 to meet the outstanding liabilities of the railway company. I desire to say, first, that a by-law was submitted before this offer was made, and that by-law was rejected, only 511 electors of the city of Guelph voting for it. In order to secure the passage of a by-law and make provision for the outstanding indebtedness of the line, or to pay off the outstanding indebtedness of this railway, a second by-law was submitted. It was on this occasion that the directors, or the shareholders, published the letter that was read in the Railway Committee on Friday last, offering to assign their stock to the city of Guelph or to hold it in trust for the city of Guelph if this by-law was passed. What was the result? Did the electors accept this proposition? Were they satisfied that the directors should step down and out, should assign their stock and relieve themselves of the control of the road? The question went to the people, and the letter having been published, and being in the minds of the electors of the city when the voting occurred, the electors refused to accept the proposition. They refused to accept the offer made by the shareholders of the Guelph Junction Railway Company, they refused to place that road under municipal control, and they rejected the by-law by a large majority, only 484 voting for it. Here we have the direct vote of the people of the city against the municipal control of the road, and if that was the opinion of the people of the city of Guelph at that time, it may be the opinion of the people of Guelph now. We have no evidence whatever that the people of Guelph have changed their minds since 1889. It is true that subsequently, that at the beginning of the following year, at the time when the municipal elections were on, at a time when it was more easy to secure votes for a scheme of this kind, when other issues were pending, that a by-law to raise $18,000 was carried for the purpose of paying off the liabilities of the company, but we have no assurance that the letter signed by the shareholders of this company, in which they offered to assign their stock, or to hold it in trust, formed any factor in the arguments in favour of the third by-law which was passed in the beginning of January. We are rather to suppose that the case was the contrary as the electors in July had pronounced against municipal control by refusing to ratify the by-law to raise $18,000, and hand over the control to the city of Guelph. In the January following, when the by-law was ratified, we have every reason to believe that the letter from the shareholders formed no factor in the arguments placed before the people.

Another evidence that the people of Guelph did not expect, or did not intend that that offer should be considered, after it had been rejected by the people; is the fact that for twelve long years no action has been taken by the city of Guelph. The matter has just been allowed to lie where it was then, showing that without any doubt whatever, the city of Guelph did not intend to accept the offer made by the shareholders, and which the ratepayers of the city had by a large majority at the polls declared emphatically against by rejecting the by-law in the month of July, 1889, previous to the time that they had actually passed the by-law to raise the money. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of all the facts, I think it is only fair that the promoter of the Bill (Mr. Guthrie) should not press the matter further. As I have said, the corporation of the city of Guelph did send a petition, and as to the value of that petition I have a word to say. They sent a petition here signed by the mayor and attested by the seal of the corporation, asking that certain things be done, but in opposition to that, after members of the city council had fully understood what had been done, ten of the members of the council, which is a majority of the aldermen, also sent a counter petition, and I will place this counter petition on 'Hansard,' in order that hon. gentlemen can study the matter for themselves. It is as follows:

To the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines of the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada.

The petition of the undersigned aldermen and members of the council of the city of Guelph, humbly showeth:—

1. That your petitioners have seen a report of the amendments to the Bill No. 23, intituled 'An Act respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company,' proposed to your honourable committee on the 20th instant, and are informed that the said Bill has been referred back to have such amendments reconsidered.

2. That such amendments were never presented to or considered by the council of the city of Guelph, and that the undersigned do not approve of such amendments.

Your petitioners, therefore, pray that such amendments be not approved, but that you will be pleased to strike the same out.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

JAMES RYAN,
J. A. SCOTT,
W. W. WHITE,

JOHN H. HAMILTON,

WM. SLATER,
SAMUEL CARTER.

Dated March 23, A.D. 1901.

Here we have ten aldermen of the city of Guelph stating emphatically that the petition which was sent on by the mayor did not voice the sentiments of the city council of Guelph, and that these ten aldermen—who are a majority of the city council—did not approve of it. The number of aldermen in the city of Guelph is eighteen, I understand, and possibly the mayor may make nineteen, but these ten aldermen are certainly a majority of the whole city council. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is about all that I have to say in connection with this matter. I have entered my strong protest. I have done my duty, I think, towards the city of Guelph, and my own constituents, who are interested in this mater, inasmuch as the road passes through a portion of the county of Halton. I desire to say here that all the money put into this railway was not contributed by the city of Guelph. The government gave a bonus of $46,000, and surely, people outside the city of Guelph might have something to say in the matter. Apart from this question, there is another principle involved; a principle which has been discussed in this House; namely, the government ownership of railways. At the present time there is a large deputation down here from the province of Manitoba strongly protesting against government ownership of railways in that province; and why? Because they consider it would be financial ruin to the province of Manitoba.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Would the hon. gentleman permit me to say that the deputation is not here to protest against government ownership. They are here to protest against government ownership of railway debts; not of railways.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will accept the hon. gentleman's correction, but it makes very little difference which way it is, because these gentlemen are here from Manitoba to oppose the scheme of government ownership of railways proposed by the province of Manitoba, because they consider it would be financial ruin to that province. Are we, in the face of all these facts, and with such an example as this before us, are we going to place in the hands of the corporation of the city of Guelph a large railway corporation, because although only sixteen miles have been constructed, it is proposed to extend this road seventy miles further. Have we reached that period when we are prepared to endorse municipal ownership of railways. Are we prepared to endorse the principle of allowing municipal corporations throughout this country to engage in extensive railway construction. Are we prepared, I say, to permit the council of any city or county in this country, to invest its funds in the construction of railways, or the extension of railways. I think this is a very important step, and before we adopt it—because we will practically adopt it if we pass this amendment—we ought to pause. Just one other point and it is this: I appeal to the promoter of this Bill not to press this resolution further just now and for this reason; It has been stated, and I see it referred to in the public press, that the municipal council of the city of Guelph is likely to deal with this very matter to-night. Heretofore they have not pronounced upon this amendment. They pronounced in a peculiar way on the former amendment, which has been withdrawn, but they have never been heard on the amendment which is before the House at the present time. The city council of Guelph meets to-night, and in all probability will declare either in favour of this amendment or against it. I say it would be unfair to the ratepayers of the city of Guelph to pass legislation of this kind and force municipal ownership upon them, involving them in liabilities, without their consent. Nothing will be lost by delaying the Bill for the present. There will be abundant time to pass the Bill through both Houses, if it should go that far. The Senate is now taking a recess, so that if the Bill is postponed for a few days, no delay in its final passage will result. I would prefer that the city of Guelph should be heard from, and I have no doubt we will hear from them in the form of a petition either in favour of or against the amendment. If they petition in favour of it, of course the promoter of the Bill will have strong ground upon which to appeal to the House to pass the legislation, and if they are against it, I believe he will take a wise course in asking that the amendment be withdrawn. There was a statement in the Guelph Mercury to the effect that I had stated to the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) a few days ago, after leaving the Railway Committee room, that the city council would pass a resolution on Monday night. I desire to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) is mistaken in reporting that to the Guelph Mercury. It was not I who made the statement; the statement was made by a ratepayer of the city of Guelph in his presence. I do not wish to be made so prominent in this matter as to have it said that I was going to anticipate what action the city of Guelph would take. When the representatives of the city do take action, and I think their action is in the right direction, I will endeavour to carry out their vews, but I shall not anticipate what they may do. In view of the fact that the city corporation of Guelph is more than likely to deal with the matter to-night, I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) would do well to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question. Vote.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). In view of the circumstances that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has stated to the House, I do think that the hon. member in charge of the Bill (Mr. Guthrie) should let it stand. While I am desirous of facilitating any reasonable legislation, yet, to my mind, it seems fair that there should be delay for consideration in this matter. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) has shown us this is a question between a municipality and certain individuals jointly interested in an arrangement that did not give the city of Guelph the control of the project, and they are proposing to take charge of it by Act of parliament. That being so, surely we do not wish a city or a town or any municipality to take charge until we are satisfied that the council, by a majority, has declared itself in favour of the legislation. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is a new proposition. At all events, I am within the mark when I say that I know of no case in the province of Ontario in which a city or a town has the exclusive control or ownership of a railway. This legislation will give control to the city of Guelph, and I can well understand that at the time the arrangement was made other gentlemen were associated with it. Even supposing we were willing to go that far in a special case, we have not yet had the approval of the city; because, while it is true that at the beginning a petition was presented to us from the city vouched for by the signature of the mayor and the corporate seal, that petition has been superseded by another one in its place. The Bill that was introduced into this House and was referred to the Railway Committee in the first instance had no legislation of this sort in it, and there was no notice given of it. When the Bill went before the Railway Committee, there was no idea or notice that it was anything more than a single proposition to extend the time for the construction of the road, on which all parties would have agreed without discussion. The Bill passed the Railway Committee on the petition of the city. Now, two things have happened since—two things without which, for my part, I would not be willing, without a protest, to vote for it. First of all, the new amendments have not been confirmed by the city council. More than that, we have from a majority of that council since a petition asking this House to interfere and prevent being passed what the petition of the city council as presented to us asks. That is a very serious state of affairs. Two very serious propositions are involved in this legislation. First, if anybody is entitled to the legislation, it is the city; because, mind you, we are changing an Act of Parliament. We are changing the arrangement under which the road was controlled and managed before. Secondly, there may be a question, and a serious one, whether we have power to pass this Bill, or some clauses of it, authorizing what may be only within the legislative authority of the province of Ontario. But, lastly, on the merits, we have a distinct petition by a majority of the city council. Then, here is the further responsibility: Who is it that ought to speak to us in matters of this kind? Not the city council, but the ratepayers of Guelph. These people could not incur the ownership of this road without the approval of the ratepayers, because, under the law of the province of Ontario, as is well known, the city council cannot incur such liabilities without first submitting the question to the vote of the ratepayers, and we have not heard at all from the ratepayers, the actual owners. There will not be an hour's delay to the legislation by putting the matter off, because the Senate happens to be adjourned, and I think the action of the House and the feeling of all of us would be better for a short stay of proceedings. The hon. gentleman, I think, would do well to satisfy everybody that there was nothing in the suggestion made in the Railway Committee that this legislation was being, to a certain extent, railroaded through in the interest of certain parties. Whatever we may think of the legislation, we shall have a chance of getting a further expression of opinion, and ascertaining whether the city by a majority of the council are in favour of it.

Bill reported.

On the question, that the Bill be now read the third time,

Mr. HENDERSON. I think, Sir, that those who are opposed to this amendment have a very strong case on which to appeal to you to protect the minority in this House. The city council of Guelph, whose interests are very much at stake in this whole matter, meets to-night, and will in all probability pass a resolution either approving or condemning this amendment, and we ask that the third reading be deferred until we have an opportunity of hearing from the city council.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. In all my recollection of private legislation, unless it could be shown that the session was so near its end that the passage of any measure would be endangered by delay, a request for the third reading to stand over has never been refused. We do not object to the passing of this Bill, but wish to hear first whether the majority of the city council of Guelph are in its favour or not. The hon. gentleman who is promoting this measure was no doubt within his rights in pressing it through its various stages, but I am surprised that he should wish to railroad the third reading through in this manner.

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. I hardly think my hon. friends are fair in charging any want of courtesy to the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). This Bill has been dealt with in a very unusual way. It was before the committee twice, and each time had a full and long discussion, and I appeal to my hon. friend from Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) whether in his recollection any Bill of so little importance has taken up so much of the time of parliament. On both occasions when this Bill was before the committee the ablest advocates and counsel on both sides were present and laid their views before the committee.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I do not think I made any charge of discourtesy against the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill. I said that he was quite within his rights in pressing the measure through this far, but in view of the fact that came out at the last hearing before the committee, namely, that ten aldermen were against the measure, I think we ought to let the third reading stand until we hear from the council.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. This Bill was passed by the committee, but when it came before the House, the Minister of Railways suggested that, as the statement was made that there were some matters in connection with the measure perhaps not fully known, the Bill should be referred back to the committee. It went before the committee again and both sides were heard, and by an overwhelming majority the Bill was adopted in its present shape. I do not think therefore it is fair to suggest that it has not had the fullest consideration. We are simply putting the city of Guelph in the position in which it wishes to be placed. There is a little local squabble, but having heard both sides I do not think any hon. member can say this is legislation we ought not to pass in the general public interest.

Mr. HENRY CARGILL (East Bruce). The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) who has just taken his seat said that if one single good reason were given why this Bill should be postponed, he would willingly consent to the postponement. I rise for the purpose of giving him that reason—and I think it is a very good one. In the first place, this Bill was passed through the committee because of a petition presented signed by a minority of the city council of Guelph, but purporting to be signed by a majority. At the next meeting of the committee a petition was presented, signed by a majority of the city council, protesting against the passing of the Bill. Now, it has been alleged here, and by good authority, that the city council of the city of Guelph meets to-night, and it is proposed to discuss this matter on its merits. If the city council of Guelph declare themselves in favour of the passing of this Bill, I would be quite willing to vote for it; if they decide against it, I should feel it my duty to oppose it. I may say that I do not believe that the city of Guelph would have had the Guelph unction Railway, had not these ten men who are protesting against the passing of this Bill, come to the front at the time the raiload was proposed to be built. They were prominent business men in the city of Guelph, all of whom were anxious for a connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of getting competing rates. The city of Guelph alone could not have undertaken the construction of that railroad without the assistance of these men, who voluntarily came forward and subscribed stock and enabled the city to secure the construction of the line. Now, I do think—and I believe the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) thinks with me—that it is an injustice to the city of Guelph, to take away from these ten men who assisted in the construction of that road the rights which they have in it. I do think that, in justice to these men, the city of Guelph should have their consent to the passage of this Bill—they should not be ignored. In consequence of the adjournment of the Senate for ten or twelve days and the pending meeting of the Guelph city council tonight at which they will, no doubt, reach a decision on this subject, we should not press forward the third reading of this Bill, but should leave the matter over until tomorrow. To do so will not retard the passage of the measure, as it must go through the Senate, and it will be two weeks before that can be effected. I hope that not only in the interest of the city of Guelph, but in the interest of these directors who are protesting against the passage of the Bill, the hon. member for South Wellington will not press the third reading until to-morrow. It is not an enviable position for the hon. member to put himself in—that of hostility toward these ten prominent men in his own city. I cannot believe that he desires to take that position. I think that in the interest of all concerned the hon. member should not press the third reading now.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron). All these points have been threshed out very fully before the Railway Committee. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is himself a resident of Guelph, and ought to know whether the people are hostile to this Bill or not as well as anybody else. I fail to see where there is any object to be gained by allowing this Bill to stand over. This House has no evidence that the city of Guelph is hostile to the measure. We have the statement of members of the council, but nothing has been offered, although there has been plenty of time, to show that the city council is hostile to the Bill. It seems to me to be plainly in the interests of the people of Guelph that the Bill should pass.

Mr. SPEAKER. The contention has bee made that it should remain, to a certain extent in my hands to decide whether this Bill should receive its third reading today or be left over for some future day. On reading the rules, I cannot easily reach that conclusion. Rule 47 says :

All amendments made in committee shall be reported by the chairman to the House, which shall receive the same forthwith. After report, the Bill shall be open to debate and amendment, before it is ordered for a third reading. But when a Bill is reported without amendment, it is forthwith ordered to be read a third time at such time as may be appointed by the House.

As hon. gentlemen will see, when the Bill is reported without amendment, the question as to the third reading is left entirely to the discretion of the House and not to the decision of the Speaker.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, what has been the practice ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The practice has been in accordance with the rule that I have laid down just now. You will find that in 1898, I think, Sir James Edgar decided a case similar to this one. Objection was raised to the third reading of a Bill, and he decided that the matter was to be left in the hands of the House. The motion that was then moved was as follows : 'Whether the Bill should be ordered for a third reading forthwith.' The motion in that instance, perhaps, is not in form similar to this, but it is the same idea. It is for the House to decide whether the Bill shall receive its third reading forthwith or whether it shall be deferred to a future day.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it not a fact that the precedent you have read is the only one on record ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I have looked over the decisions in England, and find that they are similar to those rendered by Sir James Edgar in 1898. Therefore, the House will be called upon to vote on the motion in my hands.

House divided on motion of Mr. Guthrie :

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) :

1. Yes.
2. No conclusion will be arrived at until the views of the other provinces are obtained. They have been asked their views in order that a uniform regulation can be framed if it is decided to do so.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TORONTO JUNCTION.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the statement made by the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is not an answer to question No. 8, asked by me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order ; there can be no discussion on the answer that has been given.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall move the adjournment of the House to put myself in order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). It has been answered ; it is engaging the attention of the government.

Mr. WALLACE. The question is :

Has the government abandoned its intention, declared last year, of proceeding with its construction?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the answer.

Mr. WALLACE. No, it is not the answer. It is not a satisfactory answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. WALLACE. I am quite in order. I move the adjournment of the House. The government have not dealt fairly with me. In the English parliament and in this parliament, up to a recent period, the government have recognized the right of private members to ask proper and pertinent questions and to receive answers for the information of the House and the public. This way of disposing of a question, is not, I am sure, satisfactory to the House, or to the country. It is not an answer at all. The government, last year, in their estimates, proposed a vote of $5,000 for the purpose of procuring land and proceeding with the erection of a public building in Toronto Junction. I asked a question in the early part of the session, and was informed by the hon. Minister of Public Works just what I am informed to-day, that the matter was engaging the attention of the government. Nearly a year has elapsed, and nothing has been done according to the answer given to the first question on the Order paper. Nothing whatever has been done. Now, I want to know, whether anything is going to be done, whether the money that was voted is going to be used, or whether a single thing has been done towards supplementing their proposal last year, or whether there simply was a vote of money made in order to influence the electors of the town of Toronto Junction, immediately before an election, or whether, because the town of Toronto Junction did not choose to vote confidence in the government, they are going to be punished now, and that the government after pledging themselves in that way, are not going to erect that public building. The hon. Minister of Public Works, when he is asked, the question :

Has the government abandoned its intention, declared last year, of proceeding with its construction?

Says the question is engaging the attention of the government. It cannot engage the attention of the government unless the government say : We made a pledge last year to the citizens of Toronto Junction, and we are considering to-day whether we will violate that solemn pledge that we made. That is the position, and that is the statement made by the hon. Minister of Public Works. I do not believe in that kind of way of doing business. I believe in a straightforward way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. If the government have made up their minds that they are going to abandon the project of putting up a public building in Toronto Junction let them get up and say so like men in answer to this question of mine. Instead of saying, when asked a question, it is still receiving the attention of the government. That is not the way to do business, and it is not the way that parliament should be treated in these matters.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair to the House that when an hon. member asks a question he should not be treated in the cavalier manner in which the Minister of Public Works takes it upon himself to treat the House. It was, in the last parliament, a matter of comment and complaint that that parliament, as compared with former parliaments, was a very cheap one, but, if the last parliament was a cheap one compared with former parliaments, I would like to ask what the present parliament is compared with the last one. It is going lower and lower every day, and this is because of such action as the action of the hon. Minister of Public Works. When questions are asked in the House, and when they are allowed to stand over day after day owing to the fact that ministers are not in their places, when the House is almost deserted, when out of 130 government representatives there are rarely ever more than twenty-five or thirty in their places, public business is being treated in a most flippant manner, and so long as ministers will treat it as flippantly as the hon. Minister of Public Works treats it, by refusing point blank to answer questions, so long must this cheapening of the House go on. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is surprised. I am not at all surprised at the way in which the government treated him. Prior to the last general election in East Simcoe, the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) was asked to do what ? In a part of the country where there was no necessity whatever of granting a daily mail, and where there had never been a daily mail before, a daily mail, on the eve of the election, was granted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) says order. No doubt the hon. gentleman does not like me to speak of such things. It was a most shamefaced thing, and when the election was over the daily mail service was withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has only a right to refer to the point raised by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who moved the adjournment.

Mr. BENNETT. I was just referring to this incident, Mr. Speaker, by way of illustration. All I can say is that if hon. gentlemen wish to expedite the business of the House it would be much better that ministers should answer questions when they are placed upon the Order paper, and if they are not answered, the only course left open will be to move the adjournment, and in that way to provoke discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, it is undesirable that we should have any difficulty over this question. When we come to look at the questions which the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) answered in a general way, we shall see that they were capable of a distinct answer. They do not seem to be questions which were improper or offensive in any respect whatever.

If no site has yet been selected, what steps have been taken to do so.

That is a definite question, a perfectly proper question and an answer to it, it seems to me, would furnish information which the House is entitled to receive.

If nothing has been done, why not?

Is it the intention of the government to place a sum in the estimates for 1901-2 for the construction of said building ?

Unless there is some technical objection to that, I do not see any reason why it should not be answered.

Has the government abandoned its intention, declared last year, of proceeding with its construction?

Surely the House is entitled to know what the intention of the government is with regard to that. Their intention was announced last year, and when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) inquires whether or not the government has abandoned that intention, the only answer received to that and to all these questions, is, that these matters are engaging the attention of the government. That is an extremely vague answer; it is, in fact, no answer at all. I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman who leads the House that it is desirable in the interest of expediting public business, that answers of a somewhat more definite nature, in cases of this kind, might very well be given by ministers having charge of the departments.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) knows that very great latitude is given ministers in answering questions, and when a minister states his judgment it is not open to any hon. gentleman to criticise it. If the answer is deemed insufficient the question might be repeated at another date.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the good of asking the question again, if the answer is not given?

The PRIME MINISTER. Sometimes there is a disagreement between the hon. gentleman who asks the question and the minister, and an understanding may perhaps be come to and the answer given.

Mr. WALLACE. I might mention to the right hon. gentleman that this is virtually the second time that I have put this question on the Order paper; at the beginning of the session, and now.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very good; and the answer given is that the matter is under consideration. We are asked if it is the intention of the government to place a sum in the estimates for 1901, and the hon. leader of the opposition knows that the answer to such a question always is: You will have to wait until the estimates are brought down. The question again is put: If the government has abandoned its intention, and the minister very frankly says that the matter is under consideration. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) does not see an item in the estimates for this, it will be open for him to take any recourse he thinks proper.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Surely there should be some definite answer given to question No. 5.

The PRIME MINISTER. The answer to questions 5, 6, 7 and 8 is, that the whole matter is under consideration. The minister is considering as to the site and as to the policy and everything else, and the question is as fully answered as it should be.

Mr. WALLACE. The policy was declared last year.

The PRIME MINISTER. The policy to have a site was declared last year. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows that when he was a member of the government the same item was put in the estimates year after year, and yet nothing was done. Does the hon. gentleman remember the case of Peterborough, where the item was in the estimates for five consecutive years and no action was taken.

Mr. WALLACE. The action taken was that the member resigned his seat in parliament on the head of it, because there was a difference about the selection of a site.

The PRIME MINISTER. If this case has the same ending and if it should drive my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) from parliament, I would be very sorry indeed, but I would try to console myself.

Mr. WALLACE. It was the other chap who ran against me who got out of parliament.

The PRIME MINISTER. I submit that it is abusing the privilege to move the adjournment of the House on a matter like this.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Question No. 5 relates to something that is supposed to have taken place in the past, and with all due deference to the right hon. gentleman, the answer, that the matter is under the consideration of the government, does not seem to me to be a sufficient answer.

The PRIME MINISTER. It seems to me that the minister is considering about the site.

Motion to adjourn the House (Mr. Wallace) negatived.

A MINISTER OF MINES.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR asked:

1. Did the government receive a copy of a resolution passed at a numerously attended meeting of the British Columbia Mining Association, held at Nelson, B.C., praying for the creation and establishment by the government of a portfolio or bureau of mines with a responsible minister of the Crown in charge of such department?

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to make such an appointment forthwith?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government has received the resolution, I think, from the association mentioned in the question, and several representations on the same subject. The government has come to no conclusion yet upon this matter.

LIGHTHOUSE ON GREEN ISLET, B.C.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to erect a lighthouse this season on Green Islet, Chatham Sound, B.C.?

2. Is it not a fact that this island is considered one of the most dangerous points in the navigation of northern waters on the Pacific coast?

3. Is it the intention of the government to place a fog signal on Brotchie's Ledge; also distinguishing lights on Sehl Point and Hospital Point, Victoria Harbour?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) :

1. A petition asking for such a lighthouse was received in my department on the 22nd of March, 1901. This is the first request made for a lighthouse at that point, and is now receiving consideration.

2. No.

3. A fog signal was put in operation on Brotchie's Ledge on the 19th of March, 1901. The question of placing lights on Sehl Point and Hospital Point will be considered, there are harbour lights already maintained near both points.

STRAITS OF JUAN DE FUCA—SAILING DIRECTIONS.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the government received a letter from the British Columbia Board of Trade inclosing copy of a letter from Capt. Chas. E. Clarke, harbour master of the port of Victoria, B.C., to Capt. J. G. Cox, chairman of the committee on harbours and navigation of that board of trade, setting forth sundry alterations necessary to be made in the sailing directions, &c., for ships entering the Straits of Juan de Fuca, as contained in the 'British Columbia Pilot'?

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to have Capt. Clarke's suggestions carried out at once?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) :

1. The letter referred to was received in this department on the 22nd of March, 1901.

2. The sailing directions referred to are a publication of the Imperial Admiralty. Captain Clarke's letter has, consequently, been forwarded to the Hydrographers of the Admiralty.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That from this date to the end of the session, Government Orders have precedence immediately after questions put by members on Wednesdays.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). This will leave no opportunity for making any motions, and that might result very awkwardly. For example, the Minister of Railways did not answer the first question on the Order paper to-day, but suggested that the hon. member should give notice of motion. If this motion is passed there will be no opportunity to get the information. There are some notices on the Order paper which have not been moved, owing to the necessary absence of members. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has a motion to which he would have spoken were it not for his absence on account of domestic affliction. I would suggest to my right hon. friend that perhaps it might be as well not to include the first Wednesday in this motion, but to make it apply after that.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT FOR EASTER HOLIDAYS.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That when the House adjourns on Thursday next, it stands adjourned until Tuesday, the 9th of April.

He said : Several members on both sides of the House have conveyed to me their view that it would be more convenient if the House were to adjourn from Wednesday.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, if that be the wish of the House, the government has no objection to meet it.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I would enter a protest on behalf of the members from the west, who never get home. I protest against lengthening the session by even a day.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry I cannot accommodate my hon. friend——

Mr. LaRIVIERE. To make up for it, I will protest against the protest.

The PRIME MINISTER. That settles it.

Mr. HACKETT. Will the adjournment be at six o'clock ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think it may be considered at six o'clock, for the last two Wednesdays we did nothing after six o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

INSPECTION OF FRUIT PACKAGES.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 32) to provide for the marking and inspection of packages containing fruit for sale.—The Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Sydney Fisher).

On section 4,

Mr. CLARKE. I may say, for the information of the minister, that I took the liberty of sending several copies of this Bill to gentlemen engaged in the fruit export business ; and, as I have received no acknowledgment even of the receipt of those copies of the Bill, I take it that it must be reasonably satisfactory to them. I think it due to the minister to say that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say, for the hon. gentleman's information, that after having introduced a somewhat similar Bill last session, I was in constant communication, not only with fruit-growers, but with fruit shippers and packers, and last winter I had a meeting with a large number of them in the city of Toronto, and went over the Bill with them, and there was a pretty general concurrence in its details, although there was a slight difference of opinion among themselves. The Bill, as it stands to-day, is a pretty close adherence to the consensus of opinion at that meeting. I may tell the hon. gentleman, however, that in consequence of the discussion here on Friday afternoon, I propose to submit one or two slight amendments, which we will discuss when we come to the different clauses.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has considered the advisability of adopting some uniform standard ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have an amendment which I think will cover that, and which I think will satisfy the hon. gentleman.

On section 6.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to insert in this clause certain words, in deference to the objections which were raised by certain members of the House from the province of Nova Scotia. It was pointed out that in the English market to-day 'Canadian apples' is a well-known phrase or brand, and means apples which come from the central part of this Dominion, and not from the maritime provinces, while Nova Scotia apples are known there, and are branded as such. I appreciate that to oblige Nova Scotia apples to be marked with a designation in that market which would be not a national designation, but a designation of apples from a certain part of Canada, might be a hardship to the Nova Scotia shipper. I, therefore, suggest inserting after the words 'A No. 1 Canadian,' the following : '(or A No. 1, followed by the name of the province in which the fruit was grown)'. That is, instead of using 'A No. 1 Canadian,' packers can use 'A No. 1 Ontario,' 'A No. 1, Nova Scotia,' 'A No. 1 Quebec,' or 'A No. 1 British Columbia.'

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman proposes to retain 'A No. 1 Canadian' as well ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Shippers can use either 'A No. 1 Canadian,' or 'A No. 1 Nova Scotia,' or 'A No. 1 Ontario.'

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that will lead to extreme confusion. I have no disposition, nor do I think the committee has any, to deprive Nova Scotia of the enjoyment of any advantages which it may have earned in the past ; but, I think it would be quite confusing if we adopted the plan proposed without doing away with the brand 'A No. 1 Canadian.' We are practically adopting two standards. Suppose the other provinces adopted 'A No. 1 Canadian,' while Nova Scotia refused to adopt that and used 'A No. 1 Nova Scotia'? I think the simplest way would be to abandon 'A No. 1 Canadian,' and brand with the names of the different provinces. I think that would meet the views of the gentlemen from Nova Scotia.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I agree with my hon. friend, who suggests that we should drop 'A No. 1 Canadian'; but, I would suggest that we say 'A No. 1 Nova Scotia, Canada,' 'A No. 1 Ontario, Canada,' 'A No. 1 Quebec, Canada,' &c. With the word 'Canada' added, everybody would know that those are Canadian apples, and would also know from what particular province of Canada each package came. But, if simply the name of the province is marked on the package, for instance Nova Scotia, people might not know that Nova Scotia was a part of Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I quite sympathize with hon. gentlemen in their desire to have the word 'Canadian' added, but we cannot ignore certain facts. There are to-day two known brands of apples from this Dominion on the English market—one is Canadian and the other is Nova Scotian. If we were to insist that all apples from the Dominion, should be branded 'Canadian,' we would destroy the Nova Scotian brand, which is as well known on the market as the Tasmanian or any other. If we were to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), we would destroy the distinctive character of the Canadian brand—which to-day is understood to mean the apples from Ontario and Quebec. The English people well understand that the different provinces are Canadian. So much is this the case that the English law, which provides that all articles of food coming from a foreign country must be marked with the name of that country, is so administered that the English officials accept the names 'Nova Scotia,' 'British Columbia,' 'Quebec' and so on as sufficient compliance with the law and sufficiently indicating that the apples are from Canada.

Mr. CLANCY. I protest against any province setting up a standard at the expense of all Canada. While not at all disposed to deprive Nova Scotia or any other province of any particular reputation it may have earned for the quality of its fruit, I think there ought to be no objection to our adding the word 'Canada' to the provincial brand. Surely no one would propose to exclude the word 'Canada' for fear of injuring the reputation of any fruit. Nova Scotia sometimes sends bad apples.

Mr. WADE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows well that the Commissioner of Agriculture stated a few days ago in the committee that the worst apples sent from Canada to the English market came from Nova Scotia.

Mr. KAULBACH. That is a mistake.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, the statement was made, whether well-founded or not. While we are all agreed that Nova Scotia should not lose any advantage which she may have gained by sending a superior class of fruit, it would not be advisable, when making a standard brand, not to make one which would apply to all the provinces.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would suggest that if Nova Scotia wishes to add its name below the brand, that could very easily be done. For instance, 'Brand No. 1 Canadian' might be shown to indicate Nova Scotia by adding 'Nova Scotia' to the brand. Let it be 'No. 1 Canadian,' and, if a Nova Scotia dealer likes to put the name of his province below that, he is free to do so. In that way he retains his brand. That will meet the view of the hon. member for Bothwell, it should satisfy the Nova Scotia dealer, and it will retain the word 'Canadian.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman does not understand the present market brands.

Mr. MACLEAN. The object is to protect the Nova Scotia apples.

Mr. WADE. But 'No. 1 Canadian' is a special brand.

Mr. MACLEAN. But, if the Nova Scotians wish to keep the name 'Nova Scotia' before the public they can put it below the other.

Mr. WADE. It is not a matter of keeping Nova Scotia before the public. The brand 'No. 1 Nova Scotia' or 'A No. 1 Nova Scotia has a special significance. There are two brands of apples, as I understand it, going to the English market. One is known as 'Nova Scotia,' and the other as 'Canadian.' And what we in Nova Scotia wish is the right to retain our distinctive brand. We are not taking anything from Ontario or any other province by doing that.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, you are.

Mr. WADE. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain in what way we are taking anything from any other province. This clause provides that no person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any apples or pears packed in a closed package and intended for export upon which is marked the grade 'A No. 1 Canadian,' unless such fruit consists of well-grown specimens of one variety—and so on. That would cover the case of the Ontario or Quebec apples as they are shipped to-day, and the minister proposes to add in parenthesis the words 'A No. 1 Nova Scotia.' or the name of any other province in which the fruit is produced. In other words, it will enable us to put upon our barrels 'A No. 1 Nova Scotia,' the same as we are doing to-day. Ontario shippers can brand their barrels 'A No. 1 Canadian,' or 'A No. 1 Ontario.' We do Ontario no injury, we are only seeking to retain our distinctive brand. If you put upon one barrel both 'Canadian,' and 'Nova Scotia,' it would signify nothing to the purchaser upon the London market except that the barrel contained a mixture of two kinds. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) raise a question as to the superiority of Nova Scotia fruit, for that has been admitted long ago.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) was present and heard the statement made——

Mr. WADE. I heard the statement made, which was in accordance with the fact, that the fruit from Nova Scotia last season was inferior.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then what are you grumbling about?

Mr. WADE. Your fruit is always inferior to ours, and, though we suffered once, we do not want to lower our reputation for all time. Why, here is the proof of our superiority—if our fruit is not superior, why is it that these gentlemen are so anxious not to allow us to use our own brand? All we want is to get credit for our honest packing and superior quality of fruit. We do not want to disturb their brand but to retain our own. I think that the fruit-growers and shippers of Nova Scotia will be most grateful to the minister for being willing to insert in this measure provision that will prevent their trade mark being taken away, thus securing them the just reward of their carefulness in producing and honesty in packing.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think that if the packers have the privilege of using 'Nova Scotia' or 'Canadian,' they might use it to the disadvantage of other provinces than Nova Scotia—that is, they would ship their best fruit as 'Nova Scotia,' and the poorer quality as 'Canadian.'

Mr. WADE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stephens) allow me a word?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WADE. I will await another opportunity, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stephens) objects to my speaking now. This Bill provides that the fruit must be branded, if with the name of a province, with the name of a province in which it is produced—we cannot ship apples in the name of another province.

Mr. MACLEAN. Where does that appear ?

Mr. WADE. That is to be put in.

Mr. STEPHENS. If, as I understand, they can use the brand 'Nova Scotia' or 'Canadian' they certainly could use it to the disadvantage of other provinces. It would be much better if they were compelled to use the word 'Nova Scotia' only. If they are restricted to the use of the name of the province, Ontario has nothing to fear, for she can hold her own with any province in the Dominion. The Bill should provide either that the brand 'Canadian' is to be used or else the name of the province, no choice being allowed.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I am opposed to taking the word 'Canadian' out of that Bill. The people of Europe, those of Great Britain particularly, know us as Canadians. I do not think they know as much about Nova Scotia. But, if the people of Nova Scotia are allowed to put the name of their province upon their package of fruit, the people of England will soon find out which is the best fruit and, if Nova Scotia should have an inferior crop as she had last year the people there might be glad to ship their fruit under the name 'Canadian.' But I for one, would object to the word 'Canadian' being taken out of the Bill in favour of the name of any province. If I am allowed to discuss other clauses of the Bill——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like the hon. gentleman to stick to this clause until we get it through.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I have no province to defend in this matter, because my province does not produce apples to such an extent that we can export them. On the other hand, we are the victims of those provinces that do export them. We have to buy their apples and pay pretty high prices for them too. The other day, I drew the attention of the hon. minister to the frauds that had been practised in packing apples. If I understand the clause as proposed to be amended, it will be optional with the packers to use 'Canadian' or 'Nova Scotia.' In that case, the frauds suggested by my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Stephens) will be practised.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it will not be possible. The clause provides that :

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any apples or pears packed in a closed package and intended for export upon which is marked the grade 'A No. 1 Canadian,' unless such fruit consists of well-grown specimens of one variety, sound, of nearly uniform size, of good colour for the variety, of normal shape and not less than 90 per cent free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects, properly packed.

They cannot put this brand upon inferior fruit.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. But, if it is optional you will find that when Nova Scotia has a bad year they will be careful not to brand their fruit as Nova Scotian, but as Canadian.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But they cannot put the brand on at all unless the fruit comes up to the standard provided.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Where is the inspector to prevent them from doing so ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The clause here provides penalties for doing so. This whole Act is for the purpose of preventing people putting this brand upon the barrel unless the fruit comes up to a certain standard of quality. They can put Nova Scotia upon it as easy as they can Canadian, but they cannot put Canadian upon anything they would not desire to put Nova Scotia upon. The danger the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Stephens) fears is impossible under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am particularly anxious that the well-earned reputation of the fruit of Nova Scotia should be retained, and I cannot see any better way of retaining it than the proposal that has been made by the Minister of Agriculture. We then have the option if we wish to compete with them, and the Ontario people have the same option to compete with Nova Scotia. We claim that we rival any other province in the Dominion in fruit-growing.

Mr. CLANCY. And other things too.

Mr. KAULBACH. I concede that readily. This spirit of rivalry as to who is growing the best fruit is to be encouraged. Let them try and compete with us if they can. If they can do so we will be well satisfied. If we grow a better description of fruit than they do, then we are entitled to have the brand Nova Scotia put on the barrel in the way suggested by the Minister of Agriculture, that is, A No. 1 Nova Scotia. And if it is thought proper to put the word Canadian after that, I do not see any objection.

Mr. CLANCY. I cannot learn that there is any distinctive brand that leads all others in Canada as Canadian No. 1. I understand there are individual shippers whose apples bear a better reputation than Canadian No. 1.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It happens that in the province of Ontario there are a large number of individual shippers who have individual brands which have a fixed value for those people. Nova Scotia shippers have another brand called Nova Scotia which has a fixed value to them. It sometimes happens, as in Nova Scotia, that a whole locality use the same brand and that brand has a fixed value to them. The Bill as it stands to-day cuts Nova Scotia people out of that brand. It asks them to put on their apples a brand which is known in another sense, and in a limited sense, in the English market. But under the proposal that I have made in the amendment I would allow these people to put Nova Scotia on and also to put Canadian on if they choose. But in any case, no matter what the brand, whether Canadian, Nova Scotia, Ontario or any other province, the apples branded in that way must come up to a certain character or standard. It is idle to pretend that the Nova Scotia people can put the brand of Nova Scotia on some of their apples and put the brand Canadian on other and inferior apples. It is only the very highest quality which can have this brand put upon them.

Mr. COCHRANE. My hon. friend's point was that 'No. 1 Nova Scotia' may be up to the mark, and they might pack the balance of the apples that was not up to the mark and mark them Canadian.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They cannot mark them 'No. 1 Canadian,' but they are welcome to mark them 'No. 2.'

Mr. COCHRANE. If they put Nova Scotia on any of their apples they should put it on all their apples, and not be allowed to mark 'No. 2 Nova Scotia,' because that would be just bearing out the point my hon. friend raised.

Mr. WADE. The word Canadian can only be used in this Bill in conjunction with A. No. 1.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not see that there is any objection to be raised to people placing Nova Scotia, or Ontario, or any other province on their own brand of apples. We in the trade know full well that when we get prunes coming from California they are stamped California, and when they come from Oregon they are stamped Oregon, and every dealer knows that the Oregon prunes have an entirely different flavour from prunes coming from California. It is a desirable thing to know where they come from. Customers get acquainted with a certain brand of tea and they want that brand continually. When they get acquainted with a certain brand of prunes they want that continually. When they get Valencia raisins from Spain, the district from which they come is marked on the box. Every dealer knows that a certain brand coming from one section of Spain is better than the same brand coming from another section of Spain. Dealers get to know this very readily. I cannot see where there is any objection at all; if any section of the country, or any province, wishes to stamp the name of that section or province on that particular brand, it should be stamped there.

Mr. BRODER. It seems to me that the difficulty being brought into this proposition is, that you are having two standards instead of one. You are having a standard of No. 1 apples, in Nova Scotia, separate from No. 1 from anywhere else. Why do you want to put a Nova Scotian brand on? If the standard is exactly the same, why designate it differently? Are you taking as the standard of the Nova Scotia No. 1 your present standard?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The standard is defined in the section.

Mr. BRODER. I know that. Why do you accept No. 1 Nova Scotia as a certain brand of apple, and provide for a different brand for every other part of the country? The difficulty of this is, that you are having two brands for a No. 1 apple, one of which is called 'Nova Scotia No. 1.' Are you pretending to say that an apple branded 'Nova Scotia No. 1' would be exactly the same in standard as an apple branded 'Canadian No. 1'?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. BRODER. Then, why do you not use the word 'Canadian' and stop there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because Nova Scotia happens to be known in the market of Great Britain.

Mr. BRODER. That is no reason at all. If the standard is exactly the same, how can they suffer?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because the markets know what the standard is.

Mr. BRODER. If you put that on for one province, every other province has the right to its own standard.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. BRODER. Then, you are dealing with a federal question in a provincial way.

Mr. STEPHENS. If these gentlemen want to have their apples branded 'Nova Scotia,' why not brand them in this way: 'A No. 1, Nova Scotia, Canadian'; 'A No. 1, Ontario, Canadian'; or 'A No. 1, Quebec, Canadian'? If they want to keep their apples separate, let them put their own names on them, while having one standard instead of putting on one barrel of apples 'A No. 1 Canadian,' and on another barrel of apples of a better quality 'A No. 1, Nova Scotia'? I am sure that the Ontario people are perfectly satisfied to have their Ontario brands. I know that we can compete with every other part of the Dominion in raising apples, but we do not want to be placed at a disadvantage in the old country market. If the people of Nova Scotia think so much of their apples, let them be branded 'A No. 1, Nova Scotia, Canadian.' Let us brand ours 'A No. 1, Ontario, Canadian,' and then, I am sure, no one can be hurt. This would be fair to all the provinces.

Mr. WADE. Nova Scotia does not wish to use the mark that is provided for here. We have been asking not to be compelled to use that mark, but, on the contrary, to be allowed to use the mark that is used to-day. We are not asking to use that mark, but we are being forced to use it. Our apples have a reputation on the other side, and there are certain people who prefer to buy Nova Scotian fruit rather than to buy Canadian fruit. There are some people on the other side who are not aware of the fact that Nova Scotia is within Canada. When they see the word 'Canadian' on a barrel of apples, they will naturally conclude that this is Canadian fruit as distinguished from Nova Scotia fruit. The hon. gentleman at my left (Mr. Stephens) proposes that apples shall be branded 'A No. 1, Nova Scotia, Canadian,' or 'A No. 1, Ontario, Canadian,' or 'A No. 1, Quebec, Canadian,' but if we do not wish to adopt the word 'Canadian,' why should we be forced to use it any more than Ontario should be forced to use it? It does not seem to me to be a very strong argument, to say that if a shipper had good fruit he would brand it 'Nova Scotian,' while if he had bad fruit he would call it 'Canadian.' I do not think we should be required to use the word 'Canadian,' because it would be dangerous to our trade.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture if there is anything in this Bill to prevent a man in New Brunswick branding his apples 'A No. 1, Nova Scotia,' or is it to be left exclusively to people living in the province of Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The amendment is, that instead of 'A No. 1, Canadian' following 'A No. 1,' the name of the province in which the fruit is produced may be put in. That would prevent such a circumstance as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) alludes to. I would like to say that we have found that the markets are very jealous, and that they are slow to take up new brands. It is one of the greatest difficulties that merchants or shippers have to contend with. In the English fruit market, the brands which are well known are 'Canadian,' Nova Scotian,' 'American' and 'Tasmanian' in apples. Now, the word 'Canadian' put upon any fruit going into that market will be taken to mean the present Canadian brand, which is applied only to fruit coming from the St. Lawrence ports, and from Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. CLANCY. How many prominent shippers are using the brand 'Canadian No. 1.'?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think they use it at all, but the Canadian brand is known there, and if that brand is put on an apple barrel, it will be supposed to be that kind of fruit and no other. You cannot have a change accepted by the market there until after a long time, and without going through a period of difficulty. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain, there is a certain class of fruit on the English market know as Canadian. A great deal of it is not branded as Canadian, but it is known and sold as Canadian, while it may be branded by the packer's name, or by a fancy name.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say that the fruit known on the British market to-day as 'Canadian No. 1,' stands highest of all fruit coming from Canada, excluding Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say that. It varies in its reputation. There are some special brands of fruit put upon the market. The fruit that is sold there to-day is Canadian, but a great deal of it is not branded 'Canadian.' I do not know that any of it is branded 'Canadian.' The name of a packer is put on, fancy names are put on, and fancy brands are used, and in some instances it comes from certain sections of Ontario or Quebec, but it all goes to market under the name of Canadian apples, and if it were to go there with the name 'Canadian' branded upon it, it would be taken to mean that kind of fruit, and it would sell as that kind of fruit.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, why use the word 'Canadian' at all, then?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because I wish to have all our fruit go into the English market under our name.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, stick to it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand that perfectly well, but, all changes of this kind must necessarily be of the nature of a compromise. I find that you cannot take a market by the throat and force it into new lines which it has not been accustomed to. You may be able to coax it into new lines, especially if those lines are advantageous to it, but, if you undertake to force the market, you will hurt the people in whose behalf you are trying to work. I do not wish to do that. I have just got a note from Professor Robertson, saying that practically all the Ontario and Quebec fruit is advertised at public sales as Canadian, although the brand 'Canadian' is not necessarily on it. The individual shippers have their individual brands, whatever that might be. There is no objection under this Bill to individual shippers putting their brand on if they chose. Sections 6 and 7 are permissive. No shipper need use the brands if he does not choose, but if he does choose his fruits must be up to the standard defined by these sections, and that is a safeguard which will enable our Canadian fruit in the future to get a reputation. At present fruit advertised as Canadian fruit in England may be anything and everything, but if we pass this Bill we will be able to prevent any fruit going forward and marked Canadian, except it comes up to the standard.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Is it permissive whether Nova Scotia may use this brand or not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. If they do not choose to avail themselves of it, they need not use it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Nova Scotia people want to have an established definition of their grade, as well as our grades, and still they do not want to put their fruit under a name which is a different designation from that which they now use. I venture to think that when our brands are used it will enhance the reputation of our fruit in the English market. Commerce is shy, and if we force people to change the brands they are at present using, it will surely be an injury to them.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. We are introducing new brands by this Bill.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But not compulsory.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It is acknowledged by law that if apples are of a certain size and quality they will be branded 'No. 1 Canadian.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That may be.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. That is introducing a new brand in the market.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To that extent.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. If you do that, why not accept my suggestion that the name of the province and the word 'Canada' should be added. For instance, 'No. 1 Nova Scotia, Canada,' 'No. 1 Ontario, Canada,' 'No. 1 Quebec, Canada,' and then every one would be satisfied and every province would be represented, Under this Bill you simply have the option of branding 'No. 1 Nova Scotia,' or 'No. 1, Canadian,' and that option should not be allowed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the gentlemen who represent the fruit interests of Nova Scotia accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) I would be only too glad. What might be done would be to use the words 'No. 1' with the name of the province, and then underneath, in letters of equal size, the word 'Canada.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. That is right.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not want to introduce anything into the Bill which would hurt the Nova Scotia trade, but if they accept that suggestion I would be glad.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. If there is any objection to using the word 'Canadian' in Nova Scotia they can use the word 'Canada.'

Mr. STEPHENS. If they are fair and do not want to get any advantage over any of the other provinces, they should be satisfied with the brand 'Nova Scotia, Canada,' and let the other provinces put on 'Quebec, Canada,' or 'Ontario, Canada.' If the Nova Scotia people do not want to do that, it seems to me that they want an unfair advantage. I do not think that all the rest of Canada should have to submit to Nova Scotia, and give them whatever they ask whether it is in the interests of the other provinces or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot acknowledge it is any discrimination against any of the other provinces, because Nova Scotia would be the only province that would be hurt if they were forced to put the word 'Canadian' on, because they happen to be the only province that now have a special designation in the English market.

Mr. STEPHENS. If each province is allowed to put its name on with the word 'Canada' beneath, I do not see how Nova Scotia can be hurt. They will have 'Nova Scotia' on all their fruit, and we will have 'Ontario' on all ours, and the people of Ontario will be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. KAULBACH. How can you detect fraudulent packing if the name of the packer is not put on the package ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The 4th section of the Act provides for that.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock we were discussing the desirability of placing the word 'Canada' after the name of the province in the proposed mark. I wish to make myself clearly understood in my advocacy of the rights and interests of the people of Nova Scotia. Hon. gentlemen will remember that in the first instance, when this discussion arose, I asked to have the word 'Canadian' struck out, so that the mark would read 'A No. 1' or 'No. 1.' That was objected to. I next asked, in case that should not be agreed to, that the name of the province be put after 'No. 1' or 'A No. 1.' That is the question now under discussion. I believe the shippers of apples in Nova Scotia are so sensitive about the word 'Canada' that if they were not free to use the name of the province, they would not avail themselves of section 6. But I do not wish to prolong the discussion, and I will not say a word more if a grade can be fixed, so that we can enforce a penalty under this Act, by providing something like this—I am not wedded to the particular words; add the following to section 4 or insert it as a new section:

No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any fruit packed in a closed package, on which package is marked anything which indicates that the fruit contained in such package is of first or best or extra good quality, unless such fruit consists of well-grown specimens of one variety.

And so forth, the same as we have it now in sections 6 and 7. I am satisfied that if section 6 is left as it is desired to leave it by gentlemen from Ontario, our people in Nova Scotia will not avail themselves of it; but they are anxious to have a clause in the Act which will establish a grade. With this clause, they can call their fruit 'A No. 1' or 'No. 1,' or 'A No. 1, Nova Scotia,' if they like. It is something which will allow them to have a distinctive grade for their fruit, and will not offend their sensitiveness with regard to the use of the word 'Canada.' I suppose we should feel flattered because gentlemen coming from the west are anxious to have that word tacked on to Nova Scotia, so that they can have the advantage of her fair reputation. The fruit-growers of Nova Scotia, while they feel flattered, are more concerned about their own interests.

Mr. CLANCY. I fancy that the hon. gentleman has flattered himself much more than Canada in the expressions to which he has given utterance. We in Ontario are fair enough to recognize what is good in Nova Scotia; but I am sorry I cannot pay that compliment to the hon. gentleman for what he has just said. He took occasion this afternoon to speak of the honesty of the people of Nova Scotia. I have not a doubt that they are honest, but I have less doubt that they are any more honest than other people. I think they would be no less liable than other people to send bad fruit to market. I wish to point out to the Minister of Agriculture that it is important that we should maintain as our first object in the English market the interests of Canada. Any departure from that would be a false step. Any apples packed for the British market should be known as coming from Canada, no matter whether they come from Nova Scotia, from Ontario, or from elsewhere. We in Ontario desire to be perfectly fair to the other provinces. If Nova Scotia is able to send a superior class of fruit to market, let it do so by all means; but let it be understood that the fruit comes from Canada. If the shippers of Nova Scotia have been able to earn a reputation there for their apples, surely they will be able to retain it. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman means a repetition in a sense of sections 6 and 7. If you fix a standard such as the hon. gentleman suggests, let that be a governing one for the whole Dominion. The question comes back to making it permissive for one province to step out and omit the word 'Canada.' If we are going to build up Canada, we must always understand that our fruit must be known as Canadian fruit. If each province desires to designate the fruit from that province, that is a proper thing to do. But anything short of that will not, I think, meet the views of this House.

Mr. FRASER. No person feels aggrieved because in Manitoba they speak of No. 1 Manitoba hard wheat.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not a parallel case.

Mr. FRASER. That is to say, a cereal is not a parallel case with fruit.

Mr. CLANCY. Because we do not grow such wheat anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. FRASER. Therefore, I could understand that the people of Manitoba would feel very much aggrieved if their wheat were marked No. 1 Canadian, because then inferior wheat from Ontario, and still more inferior wheat from Nova Scotia, would be alowed to rank with it. If a particular province excels in a certain product, why should the fact not be indicated by the name of the province from which the product comes? We cannot compete with Ontario in beef, and if all beef were marked as Canadian beef, it would be a great injustice to Ontario. So in a hundred other cases. Nova Scotia apples have made for themselves a reputation in Great Britain before Ontario or Quebec apples had any reputation there, and that reputation will continue; and I think it would be a great injustice to Nova Scotia to enable the apples of the other provinces to rank with its apples. Take another case. In Prince Edward Island they produce the best potatoes grown in this Dominion. Owing to differences of soil and climate, certain articles grow better in one part of the country than they do in another, and it would be very unfair to grade them all alike. As I understand, all that the hon. member for Annapolis is claiming is that as a reputation has been made for Nova Scotia apples, shippers should have the liberty of taking advantage of that fact.

Mr. CLANCY. Is Nova Scotia Canada ?

Mr. WADE. No.

Mr. FRASER. Nova Scotia was known before Canada was.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman say that the word 'Nova Scotia' was known before the word 'Canada'?

Mr. FRASER. No, but I can tell the hon. gentleman that long before the word 'Ontario' was known, the word 'Nova Scotia' was known.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will not go into the history either of names or provinces, but I think my hon. friend from Annapolis has perhaps given a solution of this difficulty which will be satisfactory to him and still leave the Bill very much as it was originally. On Friday last, the hon. member for Bothwell pointed out that section No. 8 was vague, because there was no standard described as in sections 6 and 7. I see the force of his objection, and have drawn up an amendment to cover that point. I would suggest that the following be substituted for section 8 :

No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale any fruit packed in a closed package, upon which package is marked any designation which represents such fruit as of first, best or extra good quality, unless such fruit consists of well-grown specimens of one variety, sound, of nearly uniform size, of good colour for the variety, of normal shape, and not less than 90 per cent free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects, and properly packed.

This is practically the same as clause No. 6, the only change being this description in place of the brand there indicated : 'Any designation which represents such fruit as of first, best or extra good quality.'

If any one should brand his fruit 'Nova Scotia No. 1' or 'A No. 1,' that fruit would still come under the definition I have just given. If the insertion of such a clause will prevent any desire to amend clause No. 6, we can leave that clause as it is, in the hope that the people at large will gradually adopt the national brand described in clause 6, with its standard definition or description.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is carrying out the suggestion I made on Friday. I suggested that it would be desirable to have a general definition of No. 1 apple, such as is given to No. 1 Canadian in clause 6. The difficulty I saw in the Bill as originally drafted was that a Nova Scotian need not use the brand 'No. 1 Canadian,' but none the less the apple-growers of that province desire that there should be some standard.

Mr. WADE. If this amendment be adopted, I shall withdraw the objection to clauses 6 and 7.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman willing that there should be one standard for all Canada ? According to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) the description of a standard as 'Canadian' would discredit Canadian apples.

Mr. WADE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Then why does the hon. gentleman say that if the Nova Scotians were to adopt a Canadian standard, that would throw discredit on their apples ? Nova Scotia would, in no sense be lost in the word 'Canada.' As Canadians, and legislating for the whole country, it is our duty to do all we can to place the name of Canada in the best light before the purchasers of our goods in England. If there are portions of Canada that are able to stand out and maintain a reputation of their own, I have no objection; but I do object to having an inferior standard for Canada and giving a special standard to Nova Scotia.

Mr. REID. Is there anything in the Bill that would prevent growers in other provinces marking their apples 'N. S.' ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I do not think it is necessary to discuss the merits of the apples in the several provinces. Owing to climatic reasons, the crop may be better in Nova Scotia than in Ontario, but last year it was better in Ontario than in Nova Scotia. But what has been more particularly considered in Nova Scotia than in Ontario is honesty in packing. The Nova Scotia shippers have realized that to obtain a good market there must be honest packing ; and that is the secret of our apple trade. Let the inferior qualities be disposed of for what they will bring, but let the best qualities only be shipped. The packers in Nova Scotia are very anxious to retain the advantage of the good name they have won on the London market, and I think they will not be satisfied unless there is a distinguishing mark by which their apples shall be known in that market.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I object, equally with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) to this Bill passing without the provision that the word 'Canada' shall be on each barrel.

Mr. WADE. I have withdrawn my objection to the word 'Canadian' staying on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As this Bill is not intended to provide compulsory branding for the barrels, it seems to me we are spending more time on it than it is worth.

We have spent two whole afternoons on it, and when it is passed it may not amount to a wave of your hand with respect to the branding of the barrels. The gist of the Bill is to provide that when the barrel is branded 'A No. 1 Canadian,' the apples in the barrel shall conform to a certain standard. So long as the Bill is not compulsory, it seems to me that the use of names such as 'Canadian,' 'Nova Scotia,' 'Ontario,' and others indicating locality will have to be left with the growers and exporters themselves. You do not compel them to put on any one of these words, but the intention is to compel them, if they put the words 'A No. 1' on the barrel, to put a certain class of apples in the barrel. If you leave out these words indicating locality, you will accomplish the result, for when the words 'A No. 1' appear on the barrel, we shall know that the contents of the barrel are up to a certain standard. That being the case, why not confine it to that, and deal with it in that sense in which the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fisher) proposed to deal with it in his amendment? All you need to do is to provide that the words 'A No. 1' or 'extra quality' or certain other words shall indicate a certain standard. If this is provided, you have the gist of the Bill, and you can leave out the consideration of such words as 'Canadian' and 'Nova Scotia.' I make this suggestion to hon. gentlemen who have been discussing the merits of the fruits of the different provinces. There is no objection to Nova Scotians putting the words 'Nova Scotia' on their barrels if they see fit, and the same liberty will be allowed to other provinces. All we need to provide is that a certain mark on the barrel shall mean a certain quality of contents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has spoken far too strongly in saying that that is the gist of the whole Bill. There are several parts of the Bill to which he has not alluded.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I was referring to this feature of the Bill.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As to this feature, I stated frankly that sections 6 and 7 were a suggestion of what I hoped would be a national brand of Canadian fruit, which, I trusted, in the course of time would become a well known brand with a reputation which would be a matter of pride for all Canadians. These clauses are not compulsory, for the reasons which I have already given, I shall be sorry, however, to eliminate these two clauses from the Bill, because I think in so doing we should throw away the opportunity we have of establishing that important feature of a national brand. A clause which has been suggested will cover the cases where these words are not used, and, that being the case, I think the whole field is covered. And, if the committee will accept Nos. 6 and 7 I would like to move the insertion of No. 8 which I have proposed.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Before accepting section 6, I would suggest the addition of the words 'for home market and export.' I do not see why we should exclude the home market and provide these amendments for the export trade alone. The home market needs protection as much as does the export market.

Mr. HOLMES. It seems to me there is a good deal of hair-splitting in connection with this Bill in order to adapt it to the peculiar conditions of Nova Scotia. The people of Ontario are as jealous of the reputation of their fruit as are the people of Nova Scotia of theirs. It seems to me that sections 6 and 7, as originally drafted, provide for the export business of the whole Dominion, and that there is no more reason for putting in a special clause to adapt the measure to the peculiar circumstances of Nova Scotia than there is for us to adapt it to the circumstances of Ontario or Quebec.

Mr. GILMOUR. Before sections 6 and 7 and the proposed new clause are carried, I wish to call attention to one feature of the matter. The packer may sell his apples to a second person, and that second person to a third person, who may never have seen them. This occurs often in the trade. Yet the purchaser is held responsible for the packing, though it is the packer who has done wrong in the first place. I think that is severe. I would not like to buy apples in that way. I have bought apples myself, and I have never seen the barrels, and would not like to be called upon and be fined for something that I did not know anything about, to be fined, in fact, for having been duped, as it were. I suggest that these words be added in clause 6: 'No person shall with his knowledge sell or offer.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hardly think it possible to accept that amendment. These clauses were thoroughly discussed by the shippers, packers and fruit-growers, and they asked especially that they should appear in this form in the Bill. No such difficulties were felt to be likely by them. The innocent party would have recourse against the person who had deceived him. It is the packer who is liable, and the packer can be prosecuted by anybody who is aggrieved.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) is a very good one, with reference to inserting the statement that they are for export and home consumption. When we buy apples from the west we have great difficulty in getting as good fruit as the fruit which is exported. The fruit-growers wish to send their finest fruit to the old country, and they think anything is good enough for the rest of us Canadians. Now, we think we are entitled to have just as good fruit as people in the old country.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). There is one point which I think has been overlooked by the Minister of Agriculture. Apples grown in Nova Scotia, or in Ontario, or in any other part of Canada, will have to find, the majority of them, a foreign market. We have been told that the North-west will become a great market for apples grown in Ontario. Now, the person who purchases the apples either in England or the North-west will discover, in opening the barrels, that they are not up to the standard. The person discovering this will perhaps be a thousand miles distant from the packer, and in order to lodge an information and bring the packer to justice it seems to me he will be labouring under great difficulties. I think a clause should be added in the Bill something like this :

> Whenever any barrel or package of apples shall be found to be in violation of this Act or any of its clauses, on information being laid before a justice of the peace or a judge in the district in which the apples are found to be bad in any country, an affidavit shall be made by not less than three persons of the fact, when such affidavit shall be forwarded under seal to the judge of the county or district in which the apple-packers reside; and said judge or magistrate shall have power to proceed under this Act, and a conviction may follow.

I think that clause should be introduced in this Bill, because I am satisfied that otherwise you will scarcely ever get a conviction. No man will come from Manitoba here to prosecute these gentlemen, it will cost him more than a cart-load of apples : and no one will come from England. So the law will be a dead letter unless you make some arrangement to prosecute these men.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not wish to take exception to clause 6 as standing by itself, but it needs to be considered along with other clauses. Now, there is nothing compulsory in the Bill, as I understand it, but the fourth clause. Clause 4 makes it imperative that the initials of the Christian name and surname and the address of the packer be put on the package, with the name and variety, and with the designation of the grade of fruit. That designation of the grade is also optional as I understand it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 4 is imperative.

Mr. CLANCY. I am now discussing that part of clause 4 which is entirely optional, namely, with regard to the grade. With regard to the grade, any person may fix his own grade, because there is no grade fixed in the Bill. It is therefore optional, and every person may fix just such grade by way of mark as he thinks proper. Then clause 6 and 7 are optional. Then we come to clause 8, which provides the penalties, It seems to me there is not much encouragement for a national standard, because a national standard is entirely optional. I think the Minister of Agriculture will concede that if we are to attempt a national standard we ought to adopt some moderate means of enforcing it. If we cannot hope to enforce a reasonable national standard, let us not deceive ourselves, and abandon the attempt. Otherwise I think it is mere child's play to put that in an Act of parliament when we know perfectly well that whenever it suits any person to abandon it they will do so. Now, we are putting a standard upon the statute-book with which nobody is compelled to comply. I still think that before we pass this clause 6 we should understand what the purpose of this Bill is. If the word 'Canadian' is to be maintained at all, let it be maintained for all of the provinces, each being compelled to use that to designate the national standard. 'Nova Scotia No. 1, Canada,' would comply with the national standard, but it shows that the fruit came from a particular province. Fruit that is branded 'No. 1 Quebec, Canada,' is also of national standard. I mention this because it seems to be so necessary if we ever hope to maintain the Canadian position that we ought to take that course. It does seem to leave it optional and fix the standard as easily as one could well imagine. I hope the hon. Minister of Agriculture will insist on not multiplying clauses to overcome the difficulty, because, although I am not a lawyer, and therefore perhaps unable to clearly grasp the meaning of the section, it does seem to me that a multiplication of sections simply has a tendency to confuse matters. I would be willing to adopt the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the opposition, namely, that if it were necessary to mark apples 'No. 1,' let each province mark their own apples under the standard of No. 1, and make it compulsory to live up to that standard. I think that would meet the difficulty to a large extent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. Minister of Agriculture does not make the use of the word 'Canadian' compulsory, what office does section 6 fill, which is not filled by the section which he proposes to add ? It fills no office at all. If you add that section but do not make the use of the word 'Canadian' compulsory, section 6 fills no office which would not be filled by the section which the hon. gentleman proposes to add, because, having regard to the section, if any person used the word 'Canadian,' which he might or might not, as he saw fit, he would be liable to any penalty under the proposed section, which he would be liable to under section 6. It does not seem to be necessary to have the two sections in the Bill. You might as well eliminate section 6 and rely on the section which you propose to add.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I simply propose this to encourage the establishment of the national brand. I may say that this section and the words in it were proposed by the fruit-growers and shippers, and they have been asked for by every fruit-growers' association in this Dominion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But it is rather a new idea to make suggestions by legislation. Legislation is supposed to mean something, and the hon. gentleman's legislation will mean something, namely, that the fruit inside a barrel must correspond with the brand on the outside of the barrel. Section 6 adds nothing at all to that beyond suggestion. I do not know whether I make myself clear to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade).

Mr. WADE. I could not quite hear you.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I say that the hon. Minister of Agriculture proposes to add a section which says that fruit marked 'No. 1,' or designating other marks which he suggests, must be up to a certain standard, namely, the standard set forth in section 6. If you have that section, and do not make the use of the word 'Canadian' compulsory, there is nothing in section 6 which is not carried out by the proposed section. Do I make myself clear to the hon. member for Annapolis ?

Mr. WADE. I understand you.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Therefore, it seems to me that section 6 is absolutely useless except as the hon. Minister of Agriculture says, it may be a suggestion to the fruit-growers throughout the country that they had better proceed to use the word 'Canadian.' Whether it is worth while to insert a section simply to make a suggestion is another question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that I consider it educational in leading up to a point which we all acknowledge is desirable. If we made it compulsory it would seriously interfere with and hamper trade, and therefore, I do not wish to make it compulsory, although I think it desirable.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the hon. Minister of Agriculture intend to appoint inspectors to inspect the apples ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Did you take out the words 'intended for export.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Would you propose that ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Yes, I would suggest that the minister erase the words 'intended for export.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, strike out the words 'intended for export.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In respect to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour), I think there is a good deal in it, but its consideration will come up perhaps more properly under section 12. I think it will then require serious consideration.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I would propose that the words 'intended for export' be struck out.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 8 is entirely different. I wish to substitute for this clause the following :

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale any fruit packed in a closed package, upon which package is marked any designation which represents such fruit as of first, best or extra good quality, unless such fruit consists of well-grown specimens of one variety, sound, of nearly uniform size, of good colour for the variety, of normal shape, and not less than 90 per cent free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects, properly packed.

This is the designation of clause No. 6, except in the designation which represents the fruit as being of first, best, or extra good quality.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I wish to insert here another clause which will cover part of clause 8. It is as follows :

No person shall sell, or offer, or expose, or have in his possession for sale any fruit packed in any package in which the face or shown surface gives a false representation of the conditions of such package, and it shall be considered false representation when more than 15 per cent of such fruit is substantially smaller in size than, or inferior in grade to, or different in variety from the face or shown surface of such package.

That is with reference to the portion of clause 8 which does not deal with the grade but applies to the requirements which forces the packer to put his good fruit in the middle of the package as he does at the ends.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. There is a fraud often committed by the middlemen by which barrels are sometimes opened and an inferior fruit is substituted. As it is now, the packer is responsible, but if the middleman interferes the packer should be protected against him and a heavy penalty should be inflicted.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The person who offers it for sale is equally liable with the packer.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. That is if the article is inferior, but suppose he sells it just as he got it from the packer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is still apparently liable.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The packer ought to be protected against the middleman who would substitute inferior fruit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We can deal with that in another clause.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. That will be satisfactory.

On section 9,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the intention of the minister with respect to the suggestion of the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour), who referred to the supposed case of a barrel of apples packed in violation of this Act, they being properly No. 3, whereas they were packed and branded as No. 1, and that barrel passing into the hands of an innocent person who believes it is all right and sells it without any guilty intention. Do you propose by this Act to render him liable to a fine or imprisonment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Fine.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He could be imprisoned if he did not pay the fine. There are many statutes which are applicable only to persons who wilfully and knowingly violate the law. What is the intention with regard to this Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) who is a lawyer and who would know more about it than I do, that the intention was to make the person who sold the package liable. Take the conditions in the province of Manitoba, which my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) has so ably represented here. The merchant in Winnipeg who buys fruit from Ontario would be held responsible by his customers, and he would have recourse against the person from whom he bought in Ontario. The ordinary purchaser would be powerless against the original packer, but the merchant engaged in the trade would be sufficiently interested to follow him up. If we were to make only the original packer responsible we would practically destroy the value of the Act for the protection of the ordinary purchaser.

Mr. GILMOUR. I see a very strong objection to punishing a person under the law for an act which he does not wilfully do, and for which he is not responsible.

Mr. LARIVIERE.

Mr. McEWEN. Grain is sold subject to inspection, and these apples should be inspected before you buy them from the first party. If you buy them subject to inspection you take no risk.

Mr. STEPHENS. If this law makes the second handler of the apples responsible it will drive men out of the business. They cannot look into every barrel of apples they buy to see that it is all right. I do not think it is fair to punish men for what they may not be responsible for.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Some statutes impose a penalty upon persons who have no guilty intention, and some statutes require the guilty intention. You should have it made perfectly plain in this Act as to which is intended. My own view is that the person subject to the provisions of this statute should be a person who wilfully violates the provisions of the Act, and you should not make it applicable to the case suggested by my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour).

Mr. WADE. You might say negligently or wilfully.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If you like you may put the burden of proof on the person who sells the apples to show that he was not guilty of fraud. But to impose a penalty of this character upon a person who is guilty of no intention to violate the Act or of negligence which might amount to an intention, seems to me to be going beyond any necessity in the public interest, and might lead to very grave injustice ; and for my part I would oppose carrying this Act that far. I am prepared to support the framing of the Act so that a person selling such apples must prove that he did so innocently, and that he was not guilty of negligence or recklessness in doing so. Without that the Act might become inoperative ; but to say that a person who was absolutely innocent of any intention or negligence in such a matter, should be liable to this penalty, would be going beyond what is usual in statutes of this kind.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It seems to me that if a man undertakes to buy and sell again, it is his duty to see that the goods which he undertakes to sell are up to the standard of the marks upon them ; and if he sells the goods in ignorance of their quality, it is a dereliction of duty to his customer, for which he should be punished. If the word 'knowingly' or 'intentionally' were inserted in this section, it would nullify the whole Act, and the public whom we are trying to protect would be open to the same frauds as they have been in times past.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Take the case of fish, which are branded No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. The inspector is held responsible in every instance; and if the fish turn out, even in the market of the United States, not to be as represented, he is subject to a penalty. If you are going to appoint an inspector, I think he is the man who should be held responsible for the quality of the apples, and no one else.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How can an inspector inspect a hundred barrels of apples? He simply puts his mark on them, and he cannot tell whether they are up to the standard without examining each barrel.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not intended to attempt to have a universal inspection of fruit. Inspectors will be appointed who may possibly inspect; and should they inspect any apples and find them wrongly marked, it will be their duty to prosecute the people so marking them. But there is going to be no attempt to make a universal inspection.

Mr. STEPHENS. I cannot understand what good the inspector would be at all. In the county of Kent it would take twenty-five inspectors to inspect the fruit shipped out of one township. A thousand barrels are packed in a day.

Mr. MACLEAN. In regard to the inspection of fruit, the system that prevails in California will have to be adopted in this country. You will have to have smaller packages and hand-pack your fruit; and it will have to be packed in boxes in such a way that every single piece of fruit can be seen. The apple barrel will have to go, and the sooner our Canadian fruit shippers understand that the better it will be for the fruit trade. The fruit-growers of California have a market all over the continent, which has been built up by giving the greatest attention to the packing of the fruit and the maintaining of its quality. We shall have to come to the same thing in Canada, whether by law or otherwise. I would like to know how that is secured in California—whether by the interference of the state law or by the people who are engaged in the trade coming to see that it is the only way to get and maintain a market.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When the apples cannot all be inspected, I cannot see of what use the inspection will be. An inspector will brand a lot of barrels without having inspected them at all. I would like to have it provided that every barrel shall be inspected by the inspector before he puts his name on it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no intention that the inspector shall put his name on any of them.

Mr. WRIGHT. With respect to the inspection of fruit in the United States, prunes, for instance, are not inspected by a government inspector, but by the person who packs them. The prunes put up by Giffen & Skelly are put up in packages of uniform size, and marked from 60 to 70, from 70 to 80, from 80 to 90, and from 90 to 100. That means that there are that many prunes in a pound; so that you know exactly what you are buying. In the same way oranges are put up in packages marked 400, 500 or 600, according to the number in each package; and the name of the packer is put on the package, so that the purchaser knows against whom he has recourse.

On section 10,

Mr. CLANCY. I think the House should have some expression from the Minister of Agriculture as to how far he intends to saddle inspectors upon the public service. It seems to me that the inspection will be a farce unless we have some defined limits placed upon it; for it would be utterly impossible to warrant the expense of a complete inspection in a matter of this kind. I would like the minister to state how many inspectors he intends to appoint, where they will be stationed, and generally what will be expected of them. The hon. gentleman increased his difficulties when he assented to the proposition made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), namely, that all apples packed, whether for export or for domestic use, will come under the same rules and require the same inspection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. While the Bill permits inspection, there is no expectation or intention that any attempt shall be made to inspect all the fruit packed for trade in Canada or for export. I have investigated that matter pretty fully, I have discussed it with exporters, shippers and fruit-growers in all parts of the country, and I believe it would be a physical impossibility for any number of inspectors who could be appointed by a government or called for by this House to accomplish that result. When a Bill of this kind becomes law, it will be necessary to appoint some inspector. Otherwise we would throw upon the purchaser the necessity for protecting himself. In the interior trade, he can do that very well. If a purchaser finds he is being defrauded, he can, under the provisions of this Act, attack the seller. But in the export trade the case is different, and in order to protect the good name of Canada and improve the reputation of our fruit abroad, I think we should have a few inspectors at the ports of export. This is purely a deterrent provision, and not one which we expect to be exercised in every instance or even in the majority of instances. But the shippers and packers will know that their goods are liable to be inspected at any time. It will be necessary to have two or three men at Montreal, who will proceed against any shipper whom they may find violating this Act. In Nova Scotia it will also be necessary to have two or three inspectors. There is a large amount of fruit packed in the different parts of Ontario and Quebec which is shipped to Montreal. A good many packers would like to have their fruit inspected before shipping, so that it would not be opened at Montreal, and it may be necessary to have a certain number of men on call who could go to the warehouses of the packers and inspect the fruit and mark it before it leaves. I could not give the exact number of inspectors required, but I suppose there would be ten or a dozen appointed this coming fall, and if necessary to appoint more, they could be appointed later.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not see any objection to having inspectors at the points of shipment because we must protect the good name of Canada as far as possible, but I do see serious objection to appointing emergency inspectors—men who may be called on at any moment to inspect at the warehouses. To give any government the power of appointing as many inspectors as it chooses would be very dangerous and open to abuse. The hon. gentleman knows the pressure that will always be used by shippers and others, who will not want their fruit disturbed at Montreal, to have it inspected before shipment, and this will give ample opportunity for the exercise of favouritism.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). I do not see why inspectors should be appointed all over the Dominion. I would move that clause 10 be amended by adding thereto :

Inspectors may be appointed at the ports of export.

These words will begin the clause and the rest of the clause will be the same as in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that would work. The fruit-growers themselves are very earnestly requesting that all the inspection should not be done at the port of export. There is no danger that the large number of inspectors will be appointed which the hon. member for Bothwell seems to anticipate. It will be physically impossible to meet the view of all shippers, and therefore it is not at all likely that certain favoured ones will be picked out and be given the privilege of having their fruit inspected before shipment to the ports of export. At the same time, there is an internal trade to be more or less watched and guarded, though not to the same extent as the export trade. Further, if the inspectors are to do their work at the port of Montreal only, they cannot do it as effectively as they should. The hon. gentleman may not have been at the port of Montreal during the apple shipping season, but there are sometimes a hundred thousand barrels in the port being shipped and awaiting shipment. It would be quite impossible, under that condition of affairs for even three or four inspectors in the port to do their work in such a way as to be really deterrent to the packer. I think we must count upon occasionally dropping on a shipment of fruit elsewhere than in the port of shipment. And, if we have not inspectors available for that purpose, we would, to a certain extent, not fulfil the expectations of the shippers, the growers or the public.

Mr. MACLEAN. These inspectors are only to be temporarily employed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. During the fruit season, yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There are other ports besides Montreal, such as Halifax, St. John, Toronto and Niagara—for fruit goes by way of New York as well as by Montreal. Even though there were a hundred thousand barrels, additional inspectors could be appointed to meet the case. As to the terminal trade, if the barrels are marked falsely, the person who has them for sale is liable to a fine. Therefore, I cannot see the object of having inspectors in any other place than the points where the apples leave this country. If a Canadian has his barrels marked wrongly, he deserves to suffer the loss of freight or even to have the fruit confiscated at Montreal. The port of export, where the barrels are all collected, is the proper place for inspection, and I cannot see the object of having inspection elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot accept the amendment, because I think it can only hamper the working of the Act. I think it is desirable and necessary to have inspectors available to do work at such points as may be desired.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How do you propose to pay the inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By salary—monthly payments. As the inspection is permissive, I do not think it would be wise to have a fee, in fact, I think it would be impossible.

Amendment negatived.

On section 15,

Mr. GILMOUR. This section refers to an appeal from conviction under this Act. If, upon appeal, the apples were held during the consideration of the case, damage would naturally result. If the appeal should be sustained is there any provision for indemnifying the man who has thus suffered from damage ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not say whether it is usual for perishable goods to be held during such a trial or not.

Mr. GILMOUR. But I would ask the minister to consider that point.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should suppose that evidence would be taken as to the condition of the fruit and that evidence would have to be submitted on appeal. But, not being a lawyer I cannot give an opinion on such a matter.

On section 16,

Mr. CLANCY. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will not insist on this clause as it stands. If there is anything more dangerous than another, it is to encourage the class of men who live on blood-money. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will see how a crop of abuses would arise if you offer inducement to men who inform for the money alone. In order to close the discussion, I move that all the words after the words 'be payable to His Majesty' be struck out, and that the clause should read this way: 'Any fine or penalty imposed under this Act shall, when recovered, be payable to His Majesty.' I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will concur in the statement that to encourage, in matters of that kind, persons to become informers by giving them one-half the fine, is a mistaken policy. The hon. gentleman will find that the Act will be better observed by making it a common interest, than to hold out inducements to a class of persons by offering them a share of the fine. Paying fines to any persons as informers is to my mind an unsound principle.

Mr. GILMOUR. I am in entire accord with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). It is the most objectionable clause in the whole Bill, and I hope the minister will see his way to amend it. I can imagine that much wrong will be done under this clause.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This clause is simply following the principle adopted in many other Acts. For instance, in the license law there is a clause of this kind, in the Scott Act there is a clause of this kind, in the law regarding the seizure of tobacco there is a clause of this kind, as well as in many other laws. I do not think it would be worth while now to change this principle, because it is an admitted principle in our legislation. It may have objectionable features, and in certain instances may be abused; still on the whole it has worked fairly well during a long term of jurisprudence.

Mr. CLANCY. The cases the hon. gentleman has cited are not parallel. The case regarding infractions of the revenue is entirely different. I could picture a man going about the country making case after case. The hon. gentleman knows that under the Scott Act and under our license system we have found the greatest evils arising from men endeavouring to make a living from fines. A class of professional informers has arisen that go about the country. If a man informs for the purpose of getting a fine he is not informing in the public interest, he is bound to hunt up and to trump up some charge for the purpose of making money out of it. I hope the hon. gentleman will not import that objectionable feature into his Bill. If he makes that law, he will find it one of the most objectionable laws that has ever been passed by this House. The Bill has been made wider by adopting the proposal of the hon. member for Provencher, and will expose the whole farming community of Canada to these penalties and to these penalty hunters.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) has pointed out section 25 of the General Inspection Act, which has been in existence for a great many years, over a hundred I think. It is an admitted principle of our jurisprudence.

Mr. CLANCY. I tell the hon. gentleman that when the proper stage arrives I shall divide the House on this feature of the Bill.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We will have to go back to section 3, which I was asked to allow to stand on Friday. My hon. friend from South Wentworth (Mr. Smith) requested me to make some modification in the definition of a closed package. After carefully considering the matter and discussing it with my officers, I have decided to propose this change in the lines of the hon. gentleman's request:

Closed package means a box or barrel, of which the contents cannot be seen or inspected when such package is closed.

It was not intended that this word 'closed package' should apply to small baskets used for selling small fruit, because they are really open packages in the sense that the cover is so easily removed.

Mr. WALLACE. What about a crate?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A crate, I think, would not be a closed package under the definition I have suggested. The hon. member for South Wentworth did not wish a crate to be included.

Section as amended, agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister, perhaps, has forgotten that section 2 has not been passed yet.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think there is no question about the date. I think it would be a great misfortune if we did not put the law into operation for the fruit season of the present year. I must ask that the clause be adopted.

Bill reported.

INLAND WATERS SEAMEN'S ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) moved second reading of Bill (No. 91) to amend the Inland Waters Seamen's Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time; and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This Bill is one simply to define more accurately the expression 'Inland waters of Canada' which, as the statute now stands, are defined to be the inland waters above the harbour of Quebec. That has been found to be too vague. The intention is to make the definition embrace what are really the inland waters of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It does not seem that it is quite definite enough in regard to the sea coast. For example, what would the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) think about the Bras d'Or lakes which are arms of the sea really ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are defined clearly in the main Act. There is no doubt about those.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What about the arms of the sea ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are all defined to be the sea coast.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman the statute there which defines that ? I would like to see it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. BRITTON. While the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is looking that up, I would like to ask him what his views are on this point :

> The expression 'inland waters of Canada' includes all the rivers, lakes and other navigable waters within Canada.

Of course that implies that this section only includes the navigable rivers and lakes. Is that the meaning that the hon. minister puts upon it ? It would hardly be intended to apply to those inland waters and lakes that are now navigable.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Revised Statutes, chap. 75, which relates to the shipping of seamen on inland waters, defines inland waters in subsection f of section 2 as follows :

> The expression 'ship subject to the provisions of this Act' includes every ship registered in Canada propelled by steam and of more than twenty tons registered tonnage, or propelled otherwise than by steam and of more than fifty tons registered tonnage, and employed in navigating the inland waters of Canada above the harbour of Quebec.

Now, the question was, what were the inland waters above the harbour of Quebec ? Did they extend to the great lakes and rivers ? In order to relieve the ambiguity we define the words 'inland waters' to include all the——

> Rivers, lakes and other navigable waters within Canada, except salt water bays and gulfs on the sea coast, and includes the River St. Lawrence so far seaward as a line drawn from Cape Chatte on the south shore to Point des Monts on the north shore.

The reason that point was selected was, that in the reciprocity treaty between Great Britain and the United States, that was the point selected internationally as the mouth of the River St. Lawrence, and so we took that international definition as a reasonable one to import into this Bill, defining all within that point to be inland waters.

Mr. CALVIN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) if this makes any difference in the provisions or working of the Act relating to shipping through the St. Lawrence and on the great lakes ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It only makes clear that the upper waters of the great lakes are the inland waters of Canada, which was in doubt before.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There would be a question about the so-called lakes, Bras d'Or lakes, for instance, which are really arms of the sea. There might also be a question about arms of the sea on the coast of Nova Scotia. They might not technically be called bays or gulfs. Would it not be better to insert 'Salt water arms of the sea.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall be glad to insert 'arms of the sea' if necessary.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE SAFETY OF SHIPS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved second reading of Bill (No. 92) further to amend the Act respecting the safety of ships.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This Bill simply makes an alteration in the present law to bring it into conformity with the British statute. I propose to re-enact the whole section, putting in the alteration which is confined to subsection d. Since the original Act was passed large steel steamships having much permanently covered in space have been introduced, and by our statute you are only allowed to place deals in this covered in space to a height of three feet from the deck, the rest of the space remaining vacant. By the Imperial law they are allowed to place a light class of goods in this space which is now left vacant according to our law. The shipping interests are under a disadvantage in this. They consider it is a serious grievance, and it is proposed to amend the Act by permitting the carriage in covered in spaces of :

Any deals, battens or other lightwood goods, of any description to a height not exceeding three feet above the deck in any space where the deck of such ship is closed in.

Mr. KAULBACH. This restricts them from filling in the remaining part of the space with deals.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It does and for this reason. I proposed to allow them to fill in all the covered in space with deals, but I found that would be worse than useless, because on their arrival in England the law was against that, and it would subject the owners to a fine of £200. I am sure the House will agree with me that it is better for us to conform with the English law. I corresponded with the British Board of Trade and urged them to allow the entire space to be filled up with deals, but they would not consent. As soon as they do so we will gladly follow their example.

Mr. KAULBACH. This does not interfere with the shipping of deals to South America or coast wise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not alter the law in that respect at all. This refers simply to deals going to Great Britain.

Mr. CALVIN. Does it change the law as regards the three-feet limit on the open deck ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not in any respect.

Mr. CALVIN. Has the hon. minister any opinion on that point ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have a very strong opinion. After consulting with the trade and getting the opinion of the best expert officers, I came to the conclusion that it was safer in every respect to allow vessels to fill with deal flush to the bulwark. I urged that very strongly upon the board of trade in England, and the Hon. Mr. Dobell personally urged them to agree to that, but they did not see their way clear to do it, and therefore there is no use in our doing it. I pointed out to the board of trade the reasons why our shippers thought it would be better not to limit it to three feet from the deck, because a kind of well was formed in which the water moved backward and forward, whereas if the cargo was flush with the deck it would wash off. The English Board of Trade is very slow and conservative, and they did not see their way to adopt the suggestion. My hon. friend (Mr. Calvin) will see that it is absolutely essential we should bring our law into exact conformity with the English law.

Mr. CALVIN. I quite see that. I would like to read a statement I received from a firm of very long standing with regard to this matter. The letter is of considerable length, but I shall only read a short extract from it which is in line with what the hon. minister has said. It is from Messrs. Henry Fry & Co. of Quebec. They say :

Having been connected with the management of ships for over forty years, we are aware that when the deck-load law was inaugurated it principally applied to sailing vessels carrying such cargo on open decks; but we were always of opinion that limiting the deck-load to a height of three feet was a mistake, when connected with sailing vessels or steamers having bulwarks. These should be allowed to carry deck-load level with their rail, as this would constitute equal to a flush deck, over which the sea would readily pass, whereas with only three feet deck cargo, it is frequently below the level of rail and forms a well for the reception of seas, which float and dislodge the cargo at great risk of life and property.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I thoroughly agree with that, and in point of fact I drafted a Bill in that sense, and intimated to the Board of Trade of England that I wished to bring in a Bill in that sense; but they did not see their way to agree to it, and there is no use of our doing it until they do agree.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the word 'enacted' in the third line of section 1 must be meant for the word 'amended.' Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to tell me what his idea is of the office of these words in the section as it originally appears in the revised statutes : 'and during the voyage while within Canadian jurisdiction.' Taking these words in connection with the context, either I do not understand them, or else there should be a change.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, I am not responsible for the phraseology; and, as the Act has been a long time on the statute-book, I did not care to amend it. The object is this. A vessel sailing from a port in Canada might have the cargo all right when she started; but before she left the jurisdiction of Canada, she might alter it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That was my own idea of the meaning, and it seemed to me that the word 'or' should be used instead of the word 'and.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will be glad to accept those suggestions of the hon. gentleman.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the word 'and' is correct.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Suppose a vessel started from Montreal all right, and put on some more cargo at Quebec. If the word 'and' was there, she would not necessarily break the law, because she did not do it from the port of starting. It seems to me that the word 'or' carries out the intention of the Act—that a vessel shall not do it either at the port from which she starts, or at any time after she starts and while she is in Canadian jurisdiction.

Mr. BARKER. I think the language is quite correct as it is. The intention of the section is, while a ship sailing from one place to another and while within Canadian jurisdiction. Therefore the word 'and' is the only proper word.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As there is a difference among lawyers, we will stand by the old law.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INVESTIGATIONS INTO SHIPPING CASUALTIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved second reading of Bill (No. 93) respecting inquiries and investigations into shipping casualties.

He said: The object of this Bill is to meet a number of objections to the present system raised by the British government. At present the inquiries are undertaken at the request of merchants, shippers or others, and there are two kinds of inquiry. One is a preliminary inquiry to find out the cause of the disaster, and I do not propose to alter the character of that inquiry at all. Then a formal inquiry may be made, either after a preliminary inquiry or without one. In the old statute, the formal investigation is made at the instance of the Minister of Marine, who appoints a commissioner to investigate. The commissioner need not be a judicial officer, and generally is a sea captain supposed to be an expert on nautical matters. But it by no means follows that such an expert is a good judicial officer capable of holding legal investigation. Our law enables us to hold investigations into casualties and punish officers holding certificates who are found guilty of laches or neglect, whether they hold British or Canadian certificates. Such certificates may be taken from the officers convicted, either for a term or entirely cancelled. The construction placed on the old statute by the Department of Justice was that the reports of these investigations could be revised on appeal by the Minister of Marine himself, who might lengthen the term of suspension of the certificate or entirely cancel the certificate. The British government, however, held that the Minister of Marine here had no power to cancel any certificate granted to a British officer. My predecessor and myself have always exercised that power and consequently there was a clash of jurisdiction. After a good deal of correspondence, I advised my colleagues that I thought it better to yield to the representations of the British government and not attempt to cancel the certificate of a British officer, even though the casualty happened to the ship in Canadian waters. An investigation is held by an officer appointed by us, and the evidence and the report of that officer are forwarded to the British Board of Trade.

Mr. MACLEAN. Would the British authorities try and punish a Canadian captain for a casualty that happened in British waters?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They claim jurisdiction in that regard over all officers.

Mr. MACLEAN. There ought to be reciprocity.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are some things you cannot help. For instance, in the case of a ship lost in the Bay of Fundy, I cancelled, sitting as a court of appeal, the certificate of the captain, in conformity with the opinion of the Minister of Justice that I had the power to do so. But the British Crown officers held I had not.

Mr. MACLEAN. Could you not argue that before the Privy Council?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not see how I could. They contended strongly that our investigations should be made to partake of a judicial character the same as the British investigation, and where a man's position was at stake, they should be held as far as possible by a judicial officer. I propose to make a change in the selection of persons to hold such investigation by declaring that 'The minister may appoint any officer of the government of Canada, or any judge of the county court, or any judge of the superior court of the province of Quebec, or any stipendiary magistrate, to be a commissioner for the purpose of such investigation, and such commissioner shall be deemed a court for such purpose.' Along with the commissioner two nautical experts will be appointed to advise him. I will point out in each section where the amendments are made. This Bill is the outcome of consultation with the British Board of Trade and the Department of Justice. It is satisfactory to the British Board of Trade and approved by the Department of Justice; and sections are inserted to provide for the recovery of penalties under the code. With this general information I would suggest that we go through the sections in committee, and as we come to each one, I will explain what the proposed changes are.

Mr. KAULBACH. Should not the cancellation of a master's certificate here be under the jurisdiction or judgment of a nautical expert instead of the department itself ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would suggest that we should deal with that point in committee. I can explain more fully when we come to the section covering that point.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. GOURLEY. Just one question, and if that is all right, I have no objection to the Bill. Supposing that we conform to the English practice and procedure, and appoint a judicial officer, will they acknowledge our right to cancel their certificates or not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not like the indication from what the minister has said that he has surrendered a Canadian right without making a fight for it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I did not.

Mr. MACLEAN. Practicaly, that is what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. COWAN. Wrong again.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, I am not wrong. The hon. minister has surrendered a Canadian right without any proper effort to maintain it. This government has claimed that on several occasions they have vindicated Canadian rights, and they have claimed credit for it. Here is a very important matter affecting our shipping. I have known, in an off-hand kind of way, that the British authorities claimed jurisdiction over our shipping, and that we had not full control of it. I should be sorry if that is the case. But I would not be a party to surrendering any right possessed by Canada without fighting to the last ditch to retain it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Solicitor General evidently approves what I say. I have been trying to find out in what respect we come under their jurisdiction and law and are not in supreme control of our own affairs. If this is one of those cases, I, as a Canadian, object to a surrender being made until after every means has been exhausted to vindicate our rights in this matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is merely a construction of the old statute. We held that that statute gave the minister power to deal with matter coming on appeal to him and relating to the certificates of the officers of vessels on which a casuality has occurred, and to deal with the officer holding a British certificate as well as with the officer holding a Canadian certificate. The Department of Justice held the view held by myself and my predecessor. But the Board of Trade of Great Britain decided that they would not hold our Act valid, and the British Crown law officers supported them in that. So, what could I do ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Has Canada no head of appeal from an arbitrary action of the British Board of Trade ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not suppose that we were desirous of doing it.

Mr. MACLEAN. We do not want to surrender anything.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But here is the position—we grant certificates to officers on ships, as captains, as first officers, second officers and engineers. Nobody questions our right to cancel the certificate of any officer holding our certificate who commits an offence or is guilty of negligence. But if a British officer comes here and a casualty occurs to his ship, our statutes allows us to hold an investigation. We hold it, the court recommend that the captain's certificate be cancelled. Then you must send the evidence home, with a report of the court, and they say : If we concur in it, we will cancel the certificate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Is not that reasonable ?

Mr. MACLEAN. But take the converse of that. Suppose a Canadian officer is sailing in British waters and an accident happened, and the matter is tried by the officers of the British Admiralty—do they take away his certificate ? Or do they send back their finding for the confirmation or revision of the minister—have they admitted that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then, they have put Canada in an inferior position.

Mr. COWAN. What clause is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) discussing ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I am discussing the principle of the Bill.

Mr. COWAN. I rise to a point of order—no clause of the Bill has been read.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am perfectly in order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COWAN. I want a ruling on that point.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint). I think that on the first clause the hon. gentleman can discuss that.

Mr. MACLEAN. From what I gathered from the hon. minister's statement a Canadian officer can be disciplined in British waters, but a British officer cannot be disciplined in Canadian waters. Is that a fact or not ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to point out to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that it would be well to make subsection e conform to the definition of 'inland waters' in the Bill already passed, would it not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that the word 'coast' should be defined in a manner to conform to the Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The phraseology is not the same, and if the hon. gentleman thinks we have expressions that are not equivalent we may change it. But I think the expression will be found all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was going to suggest that the word should be added 'as defined by——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would rather make it complete in that Act. The question is : Have we embraced in the two expressions 'inland waters' and 'coast' all the waters in which a casualty might take place.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think it is important only except for conformity.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am willing to consider any suggestion, but it struck me that the two definitions in the Bill covered all that was necessary :

(e) The expression 'inland waters' includes all the rivers, lakes and other navigable waters within Canada ;

(f) The expression 'coasts' includes the sea coast and the salt water bays, gulfs and harbours on the sea coast.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In this section the new part is in subsections e and f.

(e) When any loss of life occurs by reason of any casualty happening to or on board any boat belonging to a fishing or other vessel registered in Canada;

(f) When any British ship is lost or supposed to have been lost and any evidence is obtainable in Canada as to the circumstances under which she proceeded to sea or was last heard of.

It does not matter where the casualty has occurred, if the evidence is obtainable in Canada by the Merchant's Shipping Act of 1894, they have power to investigate. But they suggest that we should take it up here, the evidence being obtainable here.

Mr. CALVIN. I would like to know whether, in this list of casualties is included damage to the canals of the Dominion. I think that the method employed at present of dealing with that sort of damage is most unfair to those using the canals. Now, the canals are built by the government. They may be good canals like the Soulanges canal, which was built by our friend Mr. Munro, or it may be a work with glaring defects, such as the Welland canal. I need not go into particulars, they may be shown by competent men who are using the canals. That is the condition as regards the construction of the works. Now as to the craft that use them. A steamer that goes through that canal, before she is allowed to turn a wheel, must have her hull inspected and her machinery inspected, and the same government that builds those canals makes her owners pay for the inspection. Then before she is allowed to proceed on her voyage she must be manned by a captain who has to receive and pay for a certificate of competency from this government, by a mate, who likewise has to obtain a certificate from the government and to pay for it, by an engineer and an assistant engineer who likewise have to receive certificates from the government and to pay for them; though indirectly it is, the owner of the vessel that has to pay for all that expense. The employees of the canal are the servants of the government. I do not know that they have to pass any examination or to pay any fee before they are appointed, I do not think they do. Those are the circumstances. Now a vessel damages a lock, or bridge, or some other portion of the government's property in the canal, the owner of that vessel is obliged to pay every dollar of expense at such prices as the government may name. He has nothing to do with the naming of the prices, he cannot go on and repair the work himself. He has to pay the government for every dollar of that work at their own prices, and without having an investigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I dare say the hon. gentleman may have some ground of complaint as to the stringency of the law in that respect; but the present Act does not touch those cases at all.

Mr. CALVIN. It ought to.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That may be, but it does not come within the scope of the Marine Inquiries Act at all. The hon. gentleman speaks of a case where a ship going through the canal does some damage. I do not know what takes place there. An investigation is held in a court of law, I suppose. That does not come up here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose if a vessel happened to be damaged in passing through the canal, that would be another thing.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under the old law you could appoint any commissioner or body corporate to hold an investigation. Now the minister may appoint any officer of the government of Canada, or any judge of the county court, or any judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, or any stipendiary magistrate, to be commissioner. The object is to make the commissioner a judicial officer instead of a merely nautical expert. Subsection 2 of this section is new. It has been suggested by the Board of Trade so as to be in accord with the Merchant's Shipping Act. These are the exact words of the Merchant's Shipping Act which they advise us to incorporate in our own.

Mr. BARKER. The minister has omitted the new offence that he has put in section 8, that is, 'or has failed to render assistance and to give information.' That is not carried into subsection 2.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Subsection 1 gives authority to the minister to authorize this investigation to be held where he believes that any master, mate or engineer is from incompetency or misconduct unfit to discharge his duties, or has failed to render assistance, and to give any information in case of collision. Then the court so appointed is authorized to hold a formal investigation.

Mr. BARKER. In section 2 is there any power to inquire into a failure to render assistance and to give information ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In order to make it conform with section 1, it would be better to add the words 'where the minister has reason to believe.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Subsection (e) meets the first suggestion my hon. friend made as to failing to render assistance or to give information. The first part of the section states the conditions under which you are authorized to initiate the inquiry, where you have reason to believe so and so. The other part follows the Merchant's Shipping Act, I would not like to alter that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see why the hon. minister uses the same expression in one case and an entirely different expression in another case. In subsection 2 you say :

> A court so appointed as aforesaid is authorized to hold a formal investigation.

Where a master has been charged with incompetency or misconduct. When you come down to subsections d and e you do not say where he is charged, but you say where he 'fails.' You do not say where he is charged with failing, but where he does fail.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would suggest that I do not think this is so important as to desire a change, inasmuch as it follows the exact phraseology of the British Act.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to understand from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, what would be the meaning of the word 'incompetency.' For instance, if an engineer were to make a mistake in the bell and if the vessel ran ashore that would be incompetency and his certificate would be taken away. Am I right in that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would not like to enter upon a judicial interpretation of these words. The object of the Bill is to appoint a judicial officer to listen to the evidence and to decide such points after being advised by two experts.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Would the provisions of the Bill not apply to an accident in a canal as well as to one elsewhere ? If the engineer takes the wrong bell and an accident happens in a canal, or, if the captain is not doing his duty, or is under the influence of liquor, and an accident happens in the Welland, or in some other canal, would there be an investigation held and the certificate of the engineer or captain be taken away ? Why should the Bill not apply to this case ? You have never had any investigation yet into any accident that has happened on the Welland canal, and there are more accidents happening in the Welland canal than on any of the inland waters.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It may be a subject-matter deserving of consideration whether these merchant shipping inquiries should not apply to the navigation of the canals as well as to the navigable waters of Canada. So far it has not been deemed advisable to apply the provisions of the law to the canals. However, I shall take note of what the hon. gentleman suggests and talk it over with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair).

Mr. REID (Grenville). If these accidents were included it would perhaps make——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perhaps it might get us into more difficulties ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, no—it might make captains more careful, and in addition it would result in putting the blame where it really belongs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will consider that point.

Mr. KAULBACH. The owners of ships are placed in a peculiar position. When an investigation takes place there should be a marine expert appointed who is thoroughly versed in marine matters, and in that way the owner of the ship would have justice which he would not have otherwise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) will wait until the next section is read he will see that the point which he mentions is covered.

On section 9,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is a new section taken from the Imperial Act, and it meets the views of my hon. friend, that there should be skilled assessors to advise the court.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are these sections from the Merchant's Shipping Act, 1894 ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The first part of section 10, down to line 21, ending with the word 'publicity,' is old, and the words added are new :

And such court shall have all the powers conferred by section 478 of the (Imperial) Merchant's Shipping Act, 1894, on any court authorized by the legislature of any British possession to make inquiries as to shipwrecks or other casualties affecting ships or as to charges of incompetency or misconduct on the part of masters, mates or engineers of ships.

Subsection 4, relating to penalties is new. The others are old.

On section 12,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is new and in conformity with the Merchant's Shipping Act, 1894.

On section 13,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is based on the Merchant's Shipping Act, 1894, and is at the suggestion of the Imperial Board of Trade.

On section 14,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is suggested by the board of trade and is in conformity with the Merchant's Shipping Act, 1894.

On section 15,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the same.

On section 16,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is from the Merchant's Shipping Act, 1894.

On section 17,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Section 17 is old, excepting the three lines relating to the penalties which are new.

On section 18,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is substantially the old law, but more concisely stated. There is really no change. That has reference to cancelling or suspending the certificate. Complaints were made by the captains, mates and others implicated that when the court held an investigation it did not render its decision in open court but perhaps delivered it in Halifax or some other place a fortnight afterwards. The captain or mate was not present and had no means of knowing what the decision was. It is claimed that the decision should be rendered in open court so that they may know what the decision is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where a certificate has been issued by the Dominion of Canada it may be dealt with by the minister, where it has been issued by the board of trade, it has to be forwarded with a report of the evidence to the board of trade, and where it has been issued by any British possession other than Canada it shall be sent to the Governor of such British possession. I suppose that other British possessions have similar enactments. What is the practice between ourselves and other British possessions in respect to the cancellation of such certificates ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Other British possesions are governed by the provisions of the Imperial Act. That is most of them are—the Crown colonies. I do not remember that we have ever had any cases from Australia or the Cape. The British government will not accept our Canadian certificates unless we give them control over them, and as it is of greater importance that our certificates should be accepted than that we should retain exclusive control, we give them control.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The information I desire to obtain is : When an inquiry of this kind takes place in Australia for instance, does Australia send the evidence to the Governor General of Canada to be dealt with by this government, or does Australia send it to the Imperial government to be dealt with by them? I am speaking of course of a certificate granted by this government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Magee tells me that he is not able to state positively what the practice is in Australia, but he believes from the correspondence that he has had with the Imperial Board of Trade that that is the form of practice laid down here. They would send it to us. As stated in the correspondence that is the practice.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agree entirely with the hon. gentleman that it is most desirable for us to have our certificates recognized by the board of trade, but I would like to know, if, in such a case, the evidence would be sent here to be dealt with by us instead of to the Imperial government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is believed by my officers to be the practice and it is so stated in the correspondence with the Imperial government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give us that information at a later stage.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall look into it.

Mr. MACLEAN. And insist on our rights.

On section 24,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This section was suggested by the board of trade. It is copied from the Imperial statute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is not the section rather too comprehensive in its terms. An investigation may be commenced in the United Kingdom and may prove to be absolutely inoperative, because the witnesses may have come to Canada. Under this section you could not proceed with the inquiry in Canada.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not like to interfere with the phraseology of the Merchant's Shipping Act of which this is an exact copy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me to be very loosely drawn.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you mean the language of the Imperial Act?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, I do, because it seems to preclude an inquiry in Canada in the case I suggested, and where it may be proper to hold an inquiry. Take the case of a steamer which sinks another steamer and afterwards arrives in Great Britain. She then leaves the United Kingdom and she comes to Canada. It might be possible to hold this inquiry in Canada as the witnesses are here, but this section would preclude that. The hon. gentleman will remember the case of the steamer La Bourgogne. She was sunk by another steamer, which came to Halifax. An inquiry was directed by the hon. gentleman. If we had to depend, as we might have had to depend upon the evidence of the sailors who were saved from that ship, no inquiry could have been held in Canada, but as it turned out there were persons within Canada who belonged to the other colliding ship, which had not been sunk. That might happen in the United Kingdom. It seems to me that we should have an opportunity to hold the inquiry here.

Mr. GOURLEY. I should like to agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), but I think he misconceives the force of the word 'seized.' It means that if the courts in England becomes possessed of the case they hold it. If they abandon it, any other jurisdiction can assume it. The first magistrate who is seized with the jurisdiction in a criminal case excludes all others, but in case he abandons it all other jurisdictions are open to deal with. It is the same in this?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) is right. The idea is to prevent two conflicting inquiries going on at the same time. What my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) would suggest is: to add the words 'unless and until such investigation or inquiry in the United Kingdom has been abandoned or proved inoperative.'

Mr. GOURLEY. That is the common law.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the section means that without some such words as the minister suggests.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The section might be allowed to pass as it is now and before the third reading we will consider it.

Mr. BRITTON. Is it conceded that in the case of a vessel damaged in a canal it may properly be a case of inquiry? That is rather important. In many cases, while the lock or the wall of the canal has been damaged the vessel herself has been very seriously damaged, and in one case that I know of, there was loss of life. These two points make it a casualty within the meaning of the Act; and in that case an inquiry should be made.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the question—whether a canal is a navigable water within the meaning of the Act?

Mr. BRITTON. I understand that a canal is a navigable water. A vessel may be damaged in a canal, and in one case there was loss of life resulting from a collision.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I see no reason why the Act should not apply in such a case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be inclined to think that if a vessel took ground in a canal, this Act would apply. I think it would also apply if she struck the side of a canal, and were damaged in that way.

Bill reported.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT.

Bill (No. 66) further to amend the Canada Evidence Act, 1893 (the Solicitor General), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the proviso in this section that the answer of a witness may not be used against him ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The statute now makes provision that the answer of a witness shall not be available against him in inquiries over which this parliament has jurisdiction. The intention is to extend this proviso to inquiries under a statute of a province.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think it a very proper amendment.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business may we expect to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There may be a few of the Bills on the Order paper taken first, after which we will go into supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What supply ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Public Works, if my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is well enough, as he is to-day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And if not. what ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If he is not well, we will go on with justice.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 2, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENTS.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 115) to amend the General Inspection Act. He said : There are two changes which I propose to make in the present Act. They are suggested, or rather, recommended by the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange, with the view of bringing the grades more within the composition of those of Manitoba and Dakota.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CULLING OF LUMBER AND INSPECTION OF STAPLES.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 116) respecting the culling of lumber and the inspection of staples. He said : This measure contains no new enactment. Its object is to transfer the inspection to the Department of Trade and Commerce by a separate Act. Inspection which is established for the protection of the public and for the security of trade, has plainly nothing to do with the collection of the revenue, and should be under the supervision of the Department of Commerce.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PACKING OR SALE OF STAPLE COMMODITIES.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 117) respecting the packing or sale of certain staple commodities. He said : This measure contains no new enactment. Its object is to remove from the Weights and Measures Act a number of amendments which should not have been incorporated therein, and which, in fact, have nothing to do with the Weights and Measures Act and the administration thereof. As originally drafted, the Weights and Measures Act was fairly scientific and clear. The amendments now eliminated rendered it unscientific and self-contradictory. All these amendments, which deal severally with the sale of cereals, hay, fruit, eggs, salt, binder twine, soft coal, &c., are incorporated in the present Act.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 47) to amend the Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens. He said : There are three principal ideas in this amendment which I now offer to the House. The first is in connection with the penalties. By the Act of 1897 it is made an offence to import alien labour from a foreign country, practically from the United States, under contract. The penalty attached to this offence is $1,000, neither more nor less. There was no elasticity in the penalty, and if a party was convicted under the Act, the judge had no option but to impose a penalty of $1,000. This has been found in practice to be inconvenient, and not unnaturally, because it has been found better in all matters of this kind to leave some discretion to the judge and to graduate the penalty to the nature and character of the offence. So the first object we have is to modify that penalty and to make it not more than $1,000, but not less than $50, to give a margin to the judge to impose a penalty at his discretion from $50 up to $1,000. The second point relates to the recovery of this penalty. Under the law passed in 1897 no suits can be brought for the recovery of this penalty, or practically, for the enforcement of the Act, except upon the authority of the Minister of Justice, or the Attorney General of Canada. In practice it has been found very inconvenient, and after a good deal of observation and consideration of this subject, it was thought advisable to amend the law in this particular, that suits could be authorized, not by the Attorney General of Canada, but by the Attorney General of any province in which the offence is committed, or by a judge of a court which has jurisdiction in the matter.

Mr. WALLACE. Not by the Minister of Justice at all ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, only on the authority, either of the Attorney General of a province or of a judge of a court which has jurisdiction in the matter. The third amendment is an addition of a pretty sweeping character, but which we thought advisable to bring to the attention of the House. It is to prevent employers of labour from advertising for labour in the United States so as to be able at any moment to flood the labour market with importations from the neighbouring country. Since this measure has been introduced representations have been made to the government by several manufacturers and employers of labour generally, to the effect that this clause is too drastic, that some exception should be made, and that the employer should be permitted in certain cases to import labour from the United States, that is, labour of a certain kind which cannot be found here, special labour, or labour of a very high class, and even sometimes when there is a scarcity of that kind of labour in Canada. We have had conferences with the labour organizations and I must say that we have found them very reasonable. So far as I understand them, and I think that I do understand them, they have no objection whatever that there should be a provision in the Bill introduced so as to make it possible for an employer in Canada, if he cannot get the kind of labour he must have in this country, to bring it from a foreign country, or from the United States, without any violation of the Act, but, they would insist, and this is a proposition which I think is perfectly reasonable, that the Act should be so framed, so construed and so interpreted, as to make it impossible, when there is a dispute between employers of labour and their employees, when there is a strike on, for instance, or any difficulty of that kind, to advertise in the United States and thereby get a supply of labour for the market here while the dispute is going on. That is a position which, I think, is very reasonable. I understand that some amendment may be proposed to the last clause of the Bill when the Bill comes before the committee. Of course, the government would be prepared to consider any such amendment as may be offered. I beg to move the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. If this clause is not amended will it permit what the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says he desires to leave within the provisions of the law, that is to leave it open to any person to bring in labour of a technical sort, persons specially fitted for doing some particular kind of work, fitting up machinery, or running certain kinds of machinery ? If this clause is left as it is, the importation of labour of any kind will be prohibited. I take it that if this clause is left as it is and if a new clause is put in, it would be in conflict with this one.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Chairman, there may be something in the objection of the hon. member for East Gray (Mr. Sproule). If that clause is allowed to stand we may come back to it when we have passed the other sections of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister would state the principle upon which he leaves the question of taking action under this Act to the Attorneys General of the different provinces. I do not quite see the principle of that myself inasmuch as the provincial government, or the Attorney General, as the executive law officer, may entertain entirely different views from those of this government in respect to the enforcement of this statute. It is true that it does throw the responsibility on the Attorney General of the province, but I would rather be inclined to think that a responsibility of that kind which deals, to a certain extent, with matters of an international import, in so far as it is confided to an Attorney General in this country, should rather be confided to the Attorney General of Canada. It is with this government that responsibility of that kind usually rests. It seems to me that it is with the Attorney General of this government that such responsibility should rest if it is to be committed to an officer of that kind at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. The criticism of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) would not, I think, apply. Of course, the principle of our confederation is that the administration of justice lies with the provinces. We pass all criminal laws; that is our jurisdiction, but the application of these laws is within the jurisdiction of the provinces and it is the Attorney General of every province who has to enforce them. When, in 1897, we took the power to ourselves to authorize the enforcement of the Act it was in derogation of the well-known principle which pervades our whole system. We are going back to it now. I see the force of the hon. gentleman's contention that if the troubles which are contemplated are of an international character it should be preferable to leave the law as it is and that the discretion which is vested in an officer of the law should be vested in the Attorney General of Canada rather than in the Attorneys General of the provinces. We have considered all that, but since we propose to make it an offence to import under contract alien labour, we have thought, after the experience we have had, that we had better leave the administration, as far as possible, with the officers of the provinces rather than with the Attorney General of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the remarks of the right hon. gentleman are concerned, it seems to me that in respect to the considerations which I have mentioned, the law should be left to its operation without the intervention of the Attorney General or any one else. If certain responsibilities are to be thrown, in the first place, upon the Attorney General, it seems to me, notwithstanding what the right hon. gentleman says, that the Attorney General of Canada is the one who should take that responsibility and not the Attorney General of any province. However, I will not take up any more time with that. There is another matter in connection with this section which I would like to mention. Proceedings can be taken under this section not only with the written consent of the Attorney General of the province, but with the written consent of any judge of the court in which the proposed action as to the penalty is intended to be brought. The penalty is a sum of not less than $50, and not more than $1,000. Has the right hon. gentleman considered the advisability of a proceeding of this kind being brought before two justices of the peace or the small debt courts in the different provinces? It is thought that questions involving responsibility such as I have mentioned may arise in connection with the enforcement of this Act, and it seems to me that it would be better to confer this jurisdiction upon courts of a higher jurisdiction such as the county court or the Supreme Court of the different provinces. To allow proceedings of this kind to be taken before a small debts court or before two justices of the peace will not give us very much safeguard in the way of responsibility, in some cases at least. If it is the intention of the right hon. gentleman to create by this enactment some safeguard against the enforcement of the Act it seems to me that it might very well merit the attention of the First Minister and his government, as to whether he has got the proper courts for enforcing the provisions of this statute.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no departure from the Act of 1897, so far as the court is concerned.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman will remember that then the proceeding could not be taken except by the consent of the Attorney General of Canada.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but the consent of the Attorney General of Canada had nothing to do with the competence of the court.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am afraid I have not made myself clear. The right hon. gentleman is transferring from the Attorney General of Canada in the first place, to the Attorney General of a province; or, in the alternative to a judge of one of these courts, the responsibility of saying that this Act should be enforced. If that responsibility amounts to anything, I should think it might be better to place it upon the Superior Court instead of upon a small debts court, or upon two justices of the peace.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think the question arises at all. It is a debt of $1,000 which has to be recovered, and, therefore, in most of the provinces it is a matter for the Superior Courts and not for the justices of the peace.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps my right hon. friend has considered it more carefully than I have, but, it seems to me possible that an action might be brought to claim the minimum penalty of $50.

The PRIME MINISTER. The penalty of $1,000 is the maximum, and as the discretion as to the amount is with the judge, a party would have to sue in a court of jurisdiction for $1,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention that any one who desires to enforce the provisions of the Act would have to go to the Attorney General of the province, or to a judge of the Superior Court?

The PRIME MINISTER. A court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. CLARKE. What would be a court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of this section ?

The PRIME MINISTER. A court of competent jurisdiction is a court that has power to try an action for $1,000.

Mr. CLARKE. That would be a Superior Court.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. In Ontario the county court would have jurisdiction for $200. Now, if you sue for $1,000, and not recover that amount, you would be liable for all the costs, and you would, therefore, run quite a risk. I suppose the intention is that the Act should be enforced, and this would not be a very good means. In Ontario, if you sue in the Superior Court, and do not recover more than the jurisdiction of the inferior court, you have to pay the extra costs unless the judge certified, which he would not be likely to do in this case. It seems to me that this section is very confused. It is not likely any one would seek to enforce the law if he incurred the risk of having to pay the costs of a Superior Court action, when he failed to recover the full amount.

Mr. SPROULE. You put the onus on the party who enforces the Act of proving a prima facie case before the Attorney General, or before some judge, instead of leaving it open to any one to make an allegation on his own affidavit and set the machinery in motion. I think the latter course is the one which should be allowed. It seems to me that the law is just as objectionable now as it was before. Under the Act of 1897, you had to apply to the Attorney General of Canada, and because of the red tape necessary, people did not take advantage of the law. I do not think that the amendment renders the Act any more easy to work.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The question is very clear to my mind. For every violation of this Act, the person who violates it is liable to pay a sum not less than $50 and not more than $1,000. That necessarily confers exclusive jurisdiction upon those courts which are competent to try cases for $1,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Why ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Because the limit of the forfeit is $1,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Suppose the man chooses to sue for $50, surely that action could be tried before the circuit court in the province of Quebec ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If he did, then I think his action would be dismissed on demurrer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think so.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend has evidently not read the statute.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, I have.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The forfeiture is a sum not exceeding $1,000, and the judge trying the case can fix any amount between that and $50.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This section has evidently not been drafted with the ordinary care which the government usually exercises in drafting its measures. In chapter 11, section 3, which it is sought to amend, there could be no doubt at all, because the penalty was fixed at $1,000, and, therefore, within the jurisdiction of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec, and, I fancy, the Superior Courts of the other provinces. But, in the section which we are now discussing, you say, in so many words, that the prosecutor can sue for $1,000, or for any less sum down to $50. It is not essential to the putting of the law in motion that one should sue for the full penalty. If a person thinks he is aggrieved only to a certain extent, and he does not want to take upon himself the risk of paying heavy costs in a court of superior jurisdiction, he will simply take an action for a part of the penalty as the statute authorizes him, and it may be for $50. I think the Solicitor General is a little in error when he says that upon demurrer such an action taken in the circuit court in the province of Quebec would be dismissed. The informer is dominus litius. I cannot see any reason why it would not be competent for him to take recourse in a court which he thought fit to take his action before, and the jurisdiction of that court would be determined by the amount for which he would sue. The Solicitor General knows very well that in a great many instances the whole penalty is not sued for. Under divers other laws, only a part of the penalty is sued for, because the parties who sue under these laws do not want to incur the risk of heavy costs in a court of superior jurisdiction. It seems to me it would be making the law much clearer if it were said in section 1 : That the court in which this action would be brought would be a court of superior jurisdiction, or, on the other hand, you could determine the jurisdiction of the court by the amount which is sued for.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The informer is never dominus litus. The informer had never absolute control over the penalty. All the informer can do is to move the court in a particular direction, and then the court has control over the whole issue between the parties, and the court determines whether or not the penalty shall be $1,000, or any sum down to $50. You cannot separate the penalties. You have simply to do that which the statute empowers you to do, and all the informer has to do is to move the court.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the learned Solicitor General, though he is usually right, is not right in this case. He overlooks the fact that the penalty is to be sued for as a private debt. It is not a prosecution on the part of any person acting for the Crown.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Will my hon. friend tell me how he would distinguish between a forfeiture and a penalty ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what I am saying I do not require to make any distinction between them. If this were a proceeding by any person acting for the Crown, I would agree with the hon. Solicitor General, but it is not so. As my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) says, in such a case the person who brings the suit is dominus litius, and it is competent for him to bring an action for the sum of $50. He need not in his action demand more than the smallest penalty, and, if so, I venture to think that the inferior courts to which I have referred would have jurisdiction. But why is it necessary to waste time over this ? We all agree as to what we want, and why not amend the statute and say that any court which has jurisdiction to the extent of $1,000 shall have jurisdiction in this case ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Will my hon. friend allow me to draw his attention to the fact that the person who is to receive the proceeds of the judgment is the Receiver General, and section 7 provides that the Receiver General may pay to any informer a certain share of the penalty, not exceeding 50 per cent ; showing that the informer has absolutely no interest in the matter beyond setting the law in motion. The debt is due to the Receiver General and may be recovered as a result of an action instituted by the informer.

Mr. MONK. The informer is liable for the costs.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. How far would he be liable for the costs in view of the preliminary proceedings which he would be obliged to adopt, such as getting the consent of the judge or the Attorney General, and in view of the fact that the proceeds of the judgment go to the Receiver General ?

Mr. MONK. Surely he would be liable if after evidence adduced the action were dismissed, even if it were taken with the consent of the Attorney General.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What the Solicitor General has suggested is only another illustration of what my hon. friend from Montmorency stated, that this statute was drafted with an absolute disregard of what was the intention at first. It is true, the language which the Solicitor General refers to is here, but there is not the slightest machinery in the statute for carrying it out. It could be carried out by the court directing that the proceeds of the judgment should be paid, not to the informer, but to the Receiver General of Canada ; but no person who is a party to the suit has the slightest control over the suit in the way the section is drafted at present. This incongruity has arisen by reason of the fact that the language which was applicable when the Attorney General of Canada was to bring the action has been left in the statute after it was amended to enable a private individual to bring the action. It is an illustration that the original object of the statute was overlooked when this amendment was made.

Mr. CLARKE. If it is not intended that this amended Alien Labour law shall be just as dead a letter as the one it proposes to amend, it will have to be altered. Just imagine two or three persons who feel aggrieved by reason of being thrown out of employment in consequence of the employment of aliens to take their places, having to go before a judge and get his written consent before they can take any action. The proceeding is too cumbrous and expensive. What is required in the province of Ontario, if the Act is to be worth the paper it is written on, is a more simple and convenient machinery for enforcing it. I would suggest that in cities and towns where there are police magistrates, it should be sufficient for those who feel aggrieved to go before the police magistrate and lay an information, upon which the law would be put in motion by the intervention of the County Crown Attorney or other proper officer. That would be a more simple, efficient and less expensive method than the one under discussion. I appeal to the Prime Minister to take this into consideration, because if the law passes in its present shape, it will be practically a dead letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if, when the amendments now proposed are adopted, the Alien Labour law will be a duplicate of the American law ; because he and the House will remember that he stated that if Canada passed an Alien Labour law, it should be word for word and line for line a copy of the American law. I ask him whether that will be the case, and whether it will be as workable as the American law ; because, as the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) says, the law that has been adopted has been unworkable, and will continue to be so if it is left simply to the option of the government to enforce it. Unless power is given to any person who feels himself aggrieved to go before a police magistrate and set the law in motion, as the American law is put in motion by a private individual, it will to my mind be ineffective and unworkable.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would suggest to my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that it is not desirable to bring the machinery for putting this law into operation down to such a point that ordinary magistrates can initiate proceedings.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not ?

Mr. CHARLTON. My experience has been that the majority of these complaints are ill founded, vexatious and require careful scrutiny before proceedings are taken. I am cognizant of one case where a person who was establishing a manufacturing industry in Canada and was obliged to import skilled labour, had a complaint entered against him, and among the counts in that complaint was the charge made by one individual that he had applied for and been denied employment and an American had been taken on in his place. When the charge came to be examined, it was found that the individual who made the complaint was a drunkard whom nobody would employ, but whom this manufacturer had employed, and that it had taken three months to get him out of the boarding house where he had implanted himself. These proceedings are liable to be of a most vexatious and damaging character. It is in the interest of Canada to encourage the investment of money in the starting of enterprises and the immigration to Canada of a desirable class of operatives and skilled mechanics, and I do not know of any manufacturer who has attempted to import any labour except that which could not be obtained in Canada, because it would be cheaper for him to employ labour obtainable at home. This law is simply copying a piece of barbarism from the laws of the United States.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that a manufacturer was establishing a business in Canada and bringing skilled labour from the other side, and that the law was put in motion against the importation of such skilled labour.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am referring to a case of a general character, and am partly supposing a case that might arise and am instancing one that did arise.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is that ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not feel at liberty to mention where, but I state on my own responsibility as a member of this House that such a case did arise and the complaint was made by a common drunkard.

Mr. CLARKE. Under what statute did he lay the complaint ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Under the Alien Labour law, and the complaint was investigated by the Labour Bureau. When the hon. gentleman interrupted me I was proceeding to say that we are seeking, and will be more in the future, to transfer manufacturing operations from the United States to Canada and will find it necessary to bring a certain class of mechanics and skilled operatives to this country to put these enterprises into operation. But wherever this is done, that will lead to the employment of a large amount of Canadian labour of a character that could not be used in initiating the industry but could be utilized after the industry was started.

This law is a copy of one which is a disgrace to the statute-book of any civilized nation and is simply a piece of retaliation, and while I have no objection, for the sake of retaliation, to adopting such a law, yet I say the government are perfectly justified in hedging it with such safeguards as will make its operation not a hardship upon men investing money in Canada and increasing the business of the country. I do not believe that we would be justified in allowing proceedings to be initiated by a complaint made before a police magistrate or justice of the peace, but let some jurist who has sufficient knowledge to enable him to judge justly and correctly between the parties and act with prudence and sagacity, receive the complaint.

Mr. PUTTEE. My hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) says that a law—which, by the way, has not been enforced—has proved vexatious and damaging to the parties interested. I am afraid that he takes very little note of the number of vexatious and damaging operations against the very men who are asking for the amendment of this law. During last session I presented over a score of petitions from all parts of Canada calling attention to the operations of some of the mine-owners of British Columbia and the vexatious and damaging practices resorted to in that country against the Canadian miner. I will just read the first clause in one of these petitions so as to give an idea of what was going on at the time :

That aliens and foreigners have within the two months last past been, and are now being, imported in large and small companies from the state of Minnesota to the Slocan district in British Columbia, to work in, and are being employed in, the mines in that district, to the exclusion of the citizens of this country, and that amongst such importations were the following : One on January 14th of twenty-eight men; January the 28th, of twenty-three men; February 4th, of six men; and February 18th, of twenty-five men, to the Payne mine near Slandon, B.C. On February 26th, twenty-five men having lost their way to the Slocan, arrived at Rossland, and none of said named company of men, and the majority of all other such aliens and foreigners, some being imported, cannot speak or read the language, and are, as a rule, undesirable citizens and inferior miners ; and that all of such importations have been, and are being induced, solicited and assisted by mine-owners of the Slocan district, or their agents in this country and in different parts of the United States, with the definite purpose in view, as your petitioners do believe, or wrongfully forcing from this country the Canadian miners belonging to Canadian organized labour; and that 90 per cent of such miners belong to such organizations.

That is my position exactly on this Bill. If this were moved as an Alien Labour Bill pure and simple, if it were simply a copy of a barbarous law on the United States satutes, I would be against our going any further in this matter. But what is wanted is an anti-contract law, so that any of our own labourers will not be liable to be driven not only from employment but from the country by the importation of contract labour. And these contracts are entered into by foreigners to their own damage. These foreigners are brought in from Minnesota and the Dakotas and Montana, their railway fares are paid, and when they come into this country they are not given work but turned loose at the mouth of the mine, so that they will be forced in a few days to work for lower wages and our men must follow suit or be deprived of employment, and all this is done with the object of breaking up the organized labour unions throughout the country. In my opinion the anti-contract labour law should be put into operation in the ordinary way by the laying of information. I understand there is some force in the contention that it would not do to expose some industries to the caprices of irresponsible persons. But my idea of the amendment that is proposed in this Bill certainly was that it gave a choice of the courts to the person who wished to proceed, that the complaint had not to be laid in a court whose jurisdiction went up to $1,000, but that if it was desired to proceed in order to collect $50, the action could be taken in a minor court. If that is not so, it seems to me the object of this clause has been missed, and I think it should be re-drafted so as to meet that case.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). I have before me the most recent edition of the United States Alien Labour law, that of 1900. I find that the clause in reference to utilizing the law is this :

That the circuit and district courts of the United States are hereby invested with full and concurrent jurisdiction of all causes, civil and criminal, arising under any of the provisions of this Act; and this Act shall go into effect on the 1st day of April, 1891.

I think that the machinery of our law should be made as simple as possible, if we are going to make the Act operative. I made a few remarks when this subject was up before, and I see that what I said was construed to mean that I thought this Act should remain as at present. My only object in speaking this afternoon is to make my position clear. If this law is put on the statute-book, I want to make it workable, so that the ordinary workingman can get the benefit of it. If a man is going to sue to recover a penalty, he should be allowed to go to the nearest and cheapest court. We should have sufficient confidence in our judiciary to believe that they will administer the law with discretion, and will not allow anybody to conduct a malicious prosecution. Another point is that there is no provision here for deporting aliens who come in in contravention of this Act. That is one of the clauses that should be amended. The United States have amended this part of their law, since 1882, four times, and now they have it in pretty fair shape. Here is the amendment of 1891 :

Any alien immigrant who shall come into the United States in violation of law may be returned, as by law provided, at any time within one year from the date of his arrival, at the expense of the person or persons, vessel, transportation company or corporation bringing in such alien; and any alien immigrant who shall become a public charge within one year after his arrival from causes existing prior to his landing may be returned at the expense of said above-named parties.

It is also provided that they are to have an inspector at each custom-house under the Act. The same machinery for enforcing the law in the United States should be established under this Act. Suppose an alien labourer comes into the city of Winnipeg. At present there are no means of deporting him. But, if we had power to send him back at the expense of the railroad that brought him, there would not be so many of these aliens coming in in contravention of the law. In 1897, when this Act was brought into force, some hon. gentlemen said that it would have no effect. But, as a matter of fact, it had a wonderful effect. But for this law there would have arrived for work on the Crow's Nest Pass road about two thousand Italians. These people were hired by labour agents in Minneapolis, Duluth, Chicago, and some were actually on the train to come to Canada ; but, when it was known that this Act was in force they were stopped. My authority for that is Foley Bros. & Doherty, who said that, not being able to bring these people in, they had lost money on their contract. They were skilled Italian labourers on dump work. There was really nothing to prevent them coming in, because the Act was a dead letter. If we are to make the Act worth anything we must take time to consider and make whatever amendments are necessary.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). In reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), I thought it would be of service to the committee to place before it certain information as to the practical hardships caused by the operation of this Act. I have in my hand a letter from the Michigan Land and Lumber Company, a firm that are establishing a large industry at Blind River, at the north shore of Lake Huron. They bought the old Blind River property. and are reconstructing it and making out of it a modern mill, and investing in that mill, I understand, some $200,000. A complaint was laid against the company recently, and Mr. Williams the labour agent of the bureau here, visited Blind River, and made investigation. The course pursued by Mr. Williams was very satisfactory. So far as he was able to do so, he carried the law into effect in a way to injure their interests as little as possible. Mr. Fisher, whose respectability is guaranteed by the fact that he was candidate for Governor of the state of Michigan two years ago, writes as follows :—

Our company regrets keenly that we have made any investments in Canada for manufacturing. The scarcity of labour and the high price we had to pay, so increased the cost of our product that no money was made on our last year's business. We have been tearing our mill all to pieces this winter, and when done, will have practically a new mill, the latest and best of its kind. We supposed that we were conducting ourselves properly in building an industry at this point, benefiting the locality by increasing its population, enhancing the value of the property and in every way benefiting our Canadian friends.

It is not possible to go on with this mill and have it ready for business, depending on Canada for the skilled labour, nor is it possible for us to operate the mill when completed if we depend altogether upon Canadian help, as our machinery is different from that in Canada and needs experienced help to operate it.

If this law is to be strictly enforced against us, we may as well abandon it where we are. Our only source for securing labour of any kind is Sudbury, 102 miles east of us, or the Canadian 'Soo,' eighty miles west of us, while to the north is an unbroken wilderness. At the two points mentioned no millmen are to be had, simply woodsmen and common labourers. These we cannot employ without the mill being in operation, and the mill can only be operated by experienced men. The operation of the mill will give employment to a large number of Canadians.

I have another letter from Messrs. Eddy Bros., who have acquired large limits on the Mississagua River, and are transferring their milling operations from Bay City to Canada, building a mill costing $250,000, and digging a canal from the Mississagua River to good logging and booming ground near Blind River—establishing an industry that will turn out 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 feet of lumber a year, and will employ a large number of men. Mr. Eddy was one of the parties against whom charges were preferred. He was the gentleman who ascertained the name of one of the complainants, and it turned out that the man was a drunken scallawag, whom it had taken two months to get out of his boarding house. The charges were explained satisfactorily. Another man felt himself aggrieved and gave notice that he would complain. Mr. Eddy attempted to get an interview with him, and went so far as to follow him to the station to explain the circumstances that was the cause of the grievance and get the man to go back to his work. But he failed to find the man, who went away and afterwards entered a complaint. Complaint was made, nominally by sixty-five persons, but many of the names were afterwards found to be fictitious. Under the operation of the law it is impossible for the party complained against to learn who the complainants are, he cannot get their names, they are kept private. That is a sort of proceeding which, it strikes me, is irregular, that a man cannot confront his accusers and meet the charges. Mr. Eddy writes :

We are situated seventy-seven miles from the Canadian 'Soo,' and 102 miles from Sudbury.

That is a stretch of country, I may say, along the North Shore where the population is very sparse. Large milling industries have been started recently : The two mills already referred to, one at John's Island opposite Cutler, one at Cutler, and another at Little Current. Five new mills have been constructed, besides the old mills that are now standing idle. There is a great scarcity of labour. Mr. Eddy informed me that he had sent a party to Ottawa to attempt to hire men, and after he had been here two weeks he had only been able to find five men, when he needed a couple of hundred. He writes :

We are situated about seventy-seven miles from the Canadian 'Soo,' and 102 miles from Sudbury. In this stretch of 179 miles, the country is very sparsely settled, and there is no place to secure labour. It must be generally understood that one has to go to some thickly populated centre to secure a large crew of men for a large industry to get it once started. On account of the boom at the Canadian 'Soo,' there being no mills in that locality, we have no outlet that way through which to secure a class of men such as we need; and the most easy place for us to get men of this class would be at Ottawa, 420 miles east of Blind river, which you will readily understand is a serious task, as they want all the skilled labour they have at Ottawa themselves. To give you a little more definite idea of the settlements in the neighbourhood of Blind river, there is only one wagon road out of that place, which runs north-westerly, following the Mississaga river, and there are very few settlers on the road. Thessalon, twenty-seven miles west of us, is the only town entitled to the name of a village along the whole Canadian Pacific Railway road between Sudbury and the 'Soo,' and this whole district can scarcely supply any number of men towards our wants. You understand that three years ago there were no saw-mills in that part of the country running; now there are eight mills between there and Little Current, and all the labour these eight mills may need (coming by rail) must come to Blind river, Spargge or Cutler; and we cannot see how we are going to supply skilled labour to run these mills except by getting them there by some inducement. Common labour we can probably secure all right, but as there are no skilled mill men around there, some inducement must be held out to get them there. Now, there are abandoned mills all along the line from Canadian 'Soo' to Bay City, Michigan (points most convenient for us to reach from there), and experienced labour in this line could be readily obtained from this locality. This applies strictly to skilled labour required in lumber mills.

Under the construction of the Alien Labour Act, I cannot conceive any way for us to get these men to Canada that would not be construed as a violation of the law if strictly enforced, and we do not know where we can secure this class of men in Canada. We have taken this matter up with Mr. Williams, and there are two very essential points in the law that might be amended, and we think the department inclines to recommend them.

Then he goes on to explain the points. The suggestions he makes are:

The clause that refers to a new industry and reads, 'a new manufacturing plant or factory.' Our plant, as it reads now, will not be classed as a new industry; under such an amendment we would get the benefit for at least the first year. The next and probably the most important amendment would be that the officers of the department should have some power to suspend the law in the interests of new factories or mills, as in their judgment it will be to the interest of Canadians to encourage these industries by allowing the importation of skilled labour.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here are two cases where the establishment of industries are matters of great importance to Canada, two establishments that will give employment to probably 450 or 500 men; but a strict construction of the provisions of this law would prevent these industries from being started, because the owners would be unable to procure the skilled labour that would put these establishments in operation, and by that means afford employment for common labour. They can get, as they say, common labour, but they cannot get skilled men for running band saws, and for caring for the delicate machinery in these modern and highly improved mills. To say that they should not by some means be permitted to introduce that class of labour which is absolutely essential to the successful working of their plant, is simply to say that these industries shall not be started, and that employment shall not be furnished to the hundreds of common labourers that would otherwise be employed if they were allowed facilities for putting these establishments into operation. I merely put these facts before the committee in order that it may realize some phases of this matter which are not probably understood, and have not been brought to the attention of the members of the committee generally. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the introduction into this country of large amounts of capital, the starting in this country of manufacturing establishments of any kind, and the introduction of skilled labour that is necessary to make these investments a success, and would furnish employment to our own people—I cannot conceive in what way this can be looked upon as a class of operations that should be impeded or prevented by the operation of Canadian law.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the law on the other side?

Mr. CHARLTON. It is utterly absurd; and if my hon. friend wants to be an ass because somebody else is, why of course——

Mr. CLARKE. I ask if there is not a similar provision in the Act on the other side?

Mr. CHARLTON. It does not matter whether there is or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. The discussion which has taken place has brought to the front two questions: first of all, the question of jurisdiction which is contemplated under the Bill, and then the suggestion that the jurisdiction itself ought to be vested in some court, and what court it should be. As to the first question, I may say that the intention of the Bill was to place the jurisdiction where it was before, that is to say, in a Superior Court. The hon. leader of the opposition has taken exception to this, not perhaps to the policy, but to the phraseology of the Bill. He is of the opinion that as the Bill is worded the jurisdiction might be in one of the Superior Courts and it might be in inferior courts, division courts, or courts of justices of the peace, which have jurisdiction for debts of $50. That was not the intention of the Bill. The Bill was drafted with some care, and the intention was to vest the jurisdiction in the Superior Court. Such being the intention, is the wording of the Bill sufficient to prevent any possibility of doubt? The section is framed in these terms:

For every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this Act, the person, partnership, company or corporation violating it by knowingly, assisting, encouraging or soliciting the immigration or importation of any alien or foreigner into Canada to perform labour or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parole or special, with such alien or foreigner, previous to his becoming a resident in or a citizen of Canada, shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $1,000, nor less than $50.

Now, the offence itself carries the penalty with it, and there is a forfeiture of $1,000 imposed by the law itself, and at the discretion, not of the complainant, but of the judge. If it can be contended under this Act that the discretion is left with the complainant, then I can understand the argument of the leader of the opposition; but if it be made clear that the discretion is not with the complainant, but with the court itself, that the judge may say whether the penalty should be $50, $100 or $1,000, it seems to me that the objection of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition falls to the ground.

Mr. MACLEAN. Why not make the jurisdiction clear as it is in the American Bill, as it has been quoted here ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That would serve no purpose, because our Bill differs from the American Bill. At all events I am explaining the objects of the Bill, I am simply answering the criticism of the leader of the opposition, that we do not carry out the intention which was in our minds, and leave a doubt. I think there can be no doubt, at all events, that what we had in our minds was to leave the jurisdiction in the Superior Courts competent to deal with questions affecting a sum of $1,000.

So much for this first point. Now I come to the criticism which has been made by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), that the jurisdiction ought to be, not in the Superior Court, but in the minor courts, the police court, the division court, and so on. His criticism has been taken up by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), and the argument that has been adduced has been this : Why not allow any complainant under this Act to go to the nearest court and have his redress ? The objection to that is this : the experience that I have had in the working of this Act has been, that any complaint as to the violation of the law has been taken up by the labour organizations and not by individuals. If ever there has been cause to invoke the aid of the law, if there has been alien labour imported into this country against the provisions of the Act, invariably the complaint was taken up by the labour organizations themselves, and in no case so far as I know, has it been left to individuals to bring action under this Act. I will say that it is very much to the credit of the labour organizations—and I am proud to say, at this moment, that when drafting the Bill, we drafted it after a conference with the labour organizations—that ever since the Act has been in force since 1897, the labour organizations have been very moderate in their demands, and have never tried to abuse the powers of the law, but have tried simply to have the law faithfully carried out. They have never left it to an individual to rush to the Minister of Justice to ask for the enforcement of the law, but they have investigated the complaints themselves and brought them to the Minister of Justice. In these cases, the labour organizations have never had any intention, so far as I know, beyond the fair enforcement of the law. I know there have been complaints, sometimes, that, perhaps, strictly speaking, the law had been violated ; but, they recognized that there may be some justification for the importation of labour under certain circumstances, and they do not ask for the application of the law to such circumstances. If the enforcement of the law is to be undertaken by the labour organizations themselves, and they want, I think, no violent enforcement of the Act, but simply its enforcement when there is cause for it, there is no harm in proposing that the remedy should be left in the court of highest jurisdiction. If you leave it in the power of any one to rush to the neighbouring court, or to go to the neighbouring justice of the peace, to lay his case before him, very probably you will have a good deal of heartburning somewhere. For instance, take the complaint laid down by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He mentions the case of a man who is a large employer of labour, who has introduced capital into this country, and that man would feel very much aggrieved if it were in the power of any workmen to rush to a neighbouring justice of the peace and commence action against him. We want to preserve for Canadian labour the Canadian market. As to that we are all agreed, and while that is the policy which we want to adopt, and which we are willing to enforce, it is not unfair to ask that the court should deal cautiously with all such matters, and should not interfere except when there is due cause shown ; not the primary court, but the highest court of jurisdiction. That is what has been conceived to be the principle of the law, and in this respect, I understood that the Bill would be acceptable to the labour organizations of the land.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the right hon. gentleman submitted the Bill to the labour organizations, and has it received their assent ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have submitted the Bill to the labour organizations of the country.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I agree with the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) in the view he has taken on this question. I quite agree with the right hon. Prime Minister that it would be utterly out of the question to have these matters dealt with by the police magistrates in the country, because it would not be expected that the magistrates of the country would be conversant with the law, and would be prepared, owing to local prejudices, to deal fairly with the subject ; but, owing to the fact that you must have some simple method of enforcing the law, I would suggest that some method should be adopted along the lines suggested by the hon. member for West Toronto. In the towns most of the police magistrates are members of the bar, and they bring a legal mind to bear on the adjudication of the cases entrusted to them. But, one might go farther than these police magistrates and have the cases dealt with altogether by the county court judges. Take the statute as it is, and as it is proposed to be amended ; of necessity these cases must be dealt with in the Superior Court. Any man who is possessed of any property, or who has any standing in the community, would not feel it incumbent upon himself to commence an action of this kind to vindicate a principle, because, in the event of being defeated in his case, his property would be available for the costs, and there would be a deterrent factor against actions being brought. Then, assuming that such a case as that suggested by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should arise ; a person may come over from the United States under contract to fit up a mill, or to erect a mill. That might happen in the spring of the year ; assuming that the Superior Court for the district had held its sittings, because, in the province of Ontario we have a spring and a fall court of assize, and if action were brought against a person after the spring assizes were over, it would not come to trial until late in the fall. Before that the work would all have been completed, and these alien employees might have returned to their homes. Furthermore, the action would be defeated by reason of the fact that the man who was figuring as defendant would have no goods in the country out of which costs could be realized. I quite agree that it would be utterly unfair to have these actions relegated to country magistrates, but I think they should be dealt with either by county court judges, or, in large towns, in towns of over 5,000, by the police magistrates. There are some other things in the Bill that are objectionable. In the event of any damages being recovered, the amount is payable to the Receiver General. Why not make that amount payable to the party instituting the action rather than to the Receiver General ? I trust, before the Bill becomes law, that a change may be made in this direction, and that provision may be made so that some summary proceedings may be taken before a county court judge, or a police magistrate in a town of over 5,000 population. There is a great deal of complaint, since the matter has been introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk, in reference to the mills on the north shore of the Georgian Bay. The case of Fisher & Co. I have heard mentioned in my own town. Labour was openly advertised for in the newspapers of Bay City, and these men came over. I think that the hon. member for North Norfolk unwittingly did an injustice to the skilled labour employed in the mills. We have in this country just as modern mills as they have in Michigan. We have men who are accustomed to working band saws and all kinds of advanced machinery in the saw-mills, and it is rather humiliating to young men in the country, after working for years in the mills, that, while there are only one or two superior positions in these mills, they cannot obtain them, by reason of the fact that these positions are filled by men coming from the other side. Not only that, but I was assured by a reputable gentleman that this very firm of Fisher & Co., of Blind River, openly advertised in the Bay City newspapers for skilled labour to come over to Canada to work in these very mills. I trust that some less cumbersome measure than this will be passed.

Mr. CHARLTON. It would be well to produce that advertisement so that we may not go on hearsay evidence, because I am informed that nothing of the kind was done.

Mr. MACLEAN. What can be the objection to clearly defining what court shall have jurisdiction in this matter ? It is very easy to say that the jurisdiction shall be in the Superior Court and also in the county courts, and also with magistrates in cities of over 5,000 population.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I wish to add a few words with reference to the necessity of making this Bill as workable as possible, while yet retaining the necessary safeguards. I would urge on the Prime Minister the advisability of allowing the application to be made to the county court judges in Ontario, and to corresponding judges in the other provinces. If parties in Ontario are compelled to apply to the Superior Court judges in all instances, it would be a matter of great expense and difficulty and probably would altogether prevent redress being obtained. The right hon. gentleman spoke of the procedure being conducted by labour organizations, but I am inclined to think that there are many portions of the Dominion where labour organizations do not exist, and where action would have to be taken by an individual, as the section permits. If the application could be made to a judge of the county court it would be an improvement on the clause as now framed. We should also make the question of jurisdiction perfectly clear. It has been argued on both sides of the House that this is simply an action for $1,000, and it has been argued with equal force that under this section an action can be instituted for $50 or any sum up to $1,000. I suggest to the Prime Minister that it is advisable to make that point perfectly clear. I would ask the right hon. gentleman to consider whether it would not be well to provide, that when the application is made to the Attorney General or to one of the judges named in the statute, the official to whom the application is made, being then seized of all the circumstances which would enable him to determine, prima facia, the magnitude of the offence, should be empowered to say whether the action should be taken for $1,000 or any less sum. If a person sues for a large sum in damages or otherwise, and if he recovers a smaller sum, in the end the costs are awarded according to the scale in the court which has jurisdiction over that sum. If the official directs in what court the action should be taken, then we should relieve the party putting the law in motion from any responsibility for costs in case he does not obtain the full sum sued for. I presume that we are all anxious to make this law workable, and we can all see that should a labouring man sue, in good faith, for a penalty of $1,000 and only recover $50, it would be a great hardship on him if he had to pay the costs of a Superior Court action. If we provide that the officer to whom the application in the first instance is made shall determine in what court the action shall be brought, and relieve the plaintiff of responsibility for costs, a greater measure of justice would be done under this law.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). The First Minister stated that it was the intention of this clause that the case should be dealt with in the Superior Courts. I presume that the government have been mindful of all the provinces in drafting this measure, and it would be well for them to consider that in the province of British Columbia the jurisdiction of the county court extends to $1,000. In regard to the section as a whole, I am in very great sympathy with the views expressed by the member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) and in some respects by the leader of the opposition. If there is one matter more than another in respect of which there should be the greatest clearness and simplicity it is in a matter of this kind, and, in my opinion, section 3 as it stands is susceptible of very great difference of opinion and controversy. I believe jurisdiction should be given to the county courts and probably also to stipendiary magistrates, who, I presume, are only appointed in towns. The jurisdiction of a stipendiary magistrate, as we all know, is equal to that of two ordinary magistrates, and as the maximum penalty is $1,000, magistrates would have no jurisdiction. It is my opinion that stipendiary magistrates, and county courts, as well as Superior Courts should have jurisdiction in this matter. All reasonable facilities should be given to initiate an action under this section. The very reading of the lines fixing the amount presupposes that more than one court is considered; for this section says: 'With the written consent of any judge of the court in which the proposed action is intended to be brought.' Having regard to these words and the amount involved, one might presuppose the county court to be meant. If it is intended to be the Superior Court, and the section is susceptible of that reading, you have at once a contest. If the action were laid in the county court, the objection might be raised that it should be laid in the Superior Court. I think it is a matter of the greatest ease to make the meaning clear, even if you have to mention a certain court for each province. Moreover, I believe that in Ontario at present the question of extending the jurisdiction of the inferior courts is being considered. Taking merely a casual construction of section 3, and with all respect to the gentleman who drafted it, I think it is somewhat vague and loosely drawn. It should be a little more explicit as to the courts in which these actions are to be brought. I should like to refer to the remarks made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He has given one or two isolated instances in which hardship might be caused to employers of labour. But, as the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has stated, you must look at the other side of the picture. For instance, in the province of British Columbia, on the Fraser river, where there are probably some 12,000 or 15,000 engaged in connection with the salmon fisheries for a very short time each year, a great many people come from Puget Sound ports—Seattle, Tacoma and Port Townsend—in their scow houses and large boats, and live in British Columbia waters. They are aliens, they have absolutely no interest in the province except to fish there, and many bring their supplies. They take away the fruits of that Canadian industry and go back to American territory, and neither the province nor the Dominion of Canada gets any advantage at all from their advent. If there is any law to prevent that sort of thing, it has not yet been enforced. I could give a number of instances of that kind. Although I will go as far as the hon. member for North Norfolk to safeguard the interests of our manufacturers and manufacturing industries, at the same time we must not be unmindful of the inroads of alien labour, in the western parts of the Dominion in particular. It would not be so bad if those aliens were coming here with a view of remaining permanently; but they come to stay only four or five weeks or two months at the outside, and then they go carrying the fruits of their labours with them. When this Alien Labour Act is being amended, I think it should be amended so as to cover every conceivable case of hardship on the part of the labouring people of this country. At present I do not think it does. If it can be shown to extend to the people I have referred to, then it is not enforced. Who is to blame for that I am not prepared to say. It is well enough for the government to consult labour organizations; but the practice I have spoken of goes on year after year, and I intend to refer to it in the future on every occasion that I have an opportunity, publicly and personally. Now that the Alien Labour Act is being amended, I trust that the government will listen to suggestions made from either side of the House, in regard to restricting in the strongest way these aliens who are coming in and taking the fruits of labour out of the hands and the mouths of our own people.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I think hon. gentlemen have overlooked the fact that we have under our control at present one of the greatest forces in the country for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Act and the settlement of labour disputes; I refer to the Department of Labour in this government. We had a dispute in the riding which I have the honour to represent, and it was so satisfactorily settled by the Department of Labour that I went to see what sort of an institution it was. There I found an issue of the Labour Gagette for January, 1901, by which I saw that not only had that department settled labour troubles, but it had also enforced the Alien Labour Act. I will read from the Gazette for January, at page 240 :

During the month of December, six complaints were made to the department of alleged infractions of the Alien Labour Act, and five, of six complaints partially inquired into in the month of November, were dealt with. Four of the six complaints laid during December were fully investigated by the special officer of the department for the enforcement of the Act. The evidence was sufficient in one case to warrant the ordering of the deportation of two alien workmen ; in the second and third cases, the alleged aliens proved to be British subjects, and in the fourth case the evidence showed that the Act had not been wilfully or unnecessarily violated. Of the six complaints received during the month, five were in the province of Ontario and one in Quebec, as follows :—three in the city of Hamilton, one in Dundas, one in Bruce Mines, and one in Montreal, Que.

The following is a detailed statement of the complaints made or dealt with during the month, and of the action taken in regard to each :—

Then it goes on to give a list of the complaints made before the month of December, and dealt with during that month. There were several persons deported. Then it gives a list of the complaints made during the month of December. I will just read this, because it has not yet come up in this discussion, and I find that our own government is doing the very thing we are asking to be done :

COMPLAINTS MADE DURING MONTH OF DECEMBER.

Dundas, O....	Machinery and tools ...	Dec.	3..	Alleged employment of alien workman.	Proved to be a British subject, no action taken.
Bruce Mines, O	Copper mining industry.	"	4..	Importing and employing alien workmen.	Act not wilfully violated. Insufficient supply copper miners.
Hamilton, O..	Fire extinguishing plant	"	4..	Employing and importing alien workmen.	Two alien workmen ordered to be deported.
" ..	Jewellery trade.....	"	4..	Importing and employing alien jewellery auctioneer.	Proved to be a British subject.
Montreal, Q...	Electric light plant.....	"	15..	Importing and employing alien workmen.	Under investigation.
Hamilton, O..	Railway transportation.		20..	Importing and employing alien workmen.	"

There you see our government is active in enforcing its own law. Some information was given to me regarding the number of people who were deported under this law, and I find that from the 20th of August, 1900, to the 4th of March, 1901, the Department of Labour has deported forty-five people for infraction of the Alien Labour law.

Mr. CLARKE. Have you got the list ?

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I have the list here, and will read it :

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR STATING NUMBER OF ALIENS DEPORTED BETWEEN AUGUST 20TH, 1900, AND MARCH 4TH, 1901.

* Employer deported six persons shortly before arrival of officer at Dunnville, and a similar number deported by employer at St. Catharines during investigation, making the total number of aliens deported during the above dates, forty-five (45).

Mr. CHARLTON. Add to that the eleven deported from Blind river during the week to whom I have referred. That was done by the Department of Labour.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). If hon. gentlemen who are interested in the labour question would procure the Gazette they would find much interesting information therein in connection with the labour problem. I visited the Labour Bureau and was very much surprised to find that our government was doing so much for the interests of labour, and I would appeal to hon. members to lay aside their party prejudices, and where they find the government doing good work, encourage that work all they can, and help the labour industry in every possible way. In my opinion, we should have a similar law to that of the United States, in order to properly look after the interests of labour. The government has been active in connection with the enforcement of this law, and I was just wondering whether in discussing the section we have been considering, hon. gentlemen have taken into account the fact that the Department of Labour has assumed the position of undertaking to see that this Act is enforced.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It seems to me that there is unanimity on both sides to make the Act as perfect as possible. Certain considerations suggest themselves. One is that the Act should provide speedy justice as much as possible, and another is that such justice should be as inexpensive as possible. In the province of Ontario, the right hon. gentleman can find a precedent that perhaps would be of use. Under our criminal law, we have provided for speedy trials before county court justices. If we would refer the cases under this law to these courts, we would be met with the same difficulty as in the Superior Court, and that is that they only meet at rare intervals. If there be no provision that the cases may be tried without jury, as our county courts sit only twice a year with juries, the same objection applies to them as to the Superior Courts. But if power were given to have these cases tried by police magistrates in the cities and towns where there are such officials, and by county court judges, in places where there are no police magistrates, and give these officials the same power as is given county court justices in the speedy trial cases under the Criminal Code, a cheap and inexpensive way would be provided for dealing with such cases.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, there is a fact that should not be lost sight of, when dealing with this question, namely, that there are two interested parties to the trial, the defendant as well as the party aggrieved. The hon. gentlemen who have so far taken part in this debate seem to have taken into consideration but the interests of the aggrieved party or the prosecutor; but the interests of the defendants must not be lost sight of. These men are also citizens of this country, and they are entitled to a fair and just treatment at the hands of Parliament. The workingmen of this country are no doubt entitled to protection at our hands, but they cannot fairly claim any exclusive privilege. Now, what is the purport of the Bill now under discussion? This Bill provides for the recovery of certain penalties. Under this Act, the responsibility for taking action should rest with the attorneys general of the provinces. There is no question here of allowing proceedings of this kind to be taken either before the Superior Court or the County Court judges, but this penalty, like any other penalty recoverable under other statutes, shall be recovered in the ordinary way.

In the province of Quebec, under section 16 of our civil code, the case shall have to be dealt with in the Superior Courts, because the penalty to be sued for is $1,000. The party aggrieved brings a suit for $1,000 and may recover any sum from $1,000 down to $50. Therefore, it is an action for $1,000.

I object to referring cases of this kind to a magistrates' court, from which there is no appeal. Besides, you should not forget that there are as many penalties as there are offences, each offence involving a penalty which may amount to $1,000. You could easily ruin a man; it would all depend on the view a judge would take of the case. That man might be ruined, and he would have no right of appeal to a higher court.

As I said, this Bill tends to create a privilege in favour of the working classes; but the workingmen of this country want no such privilege; all they ask for is equal rights and to be put on a footing of equality with the other classes of the community.

I am opposed to the proposed amendment, because it does not involve the right of appeal. When I am sued by a labour organization or by a private citizen, I have the right to be tried before a court of ordinary jurisdiction, and moreover I have the right of appeal from that court to a higher court.

Now, I think there is a very simple way out of the difficulty. Since you provide that summary proceedings shall be taken under this Act, you ought also to decrease the penalty, and make it, say $50.

But as to imposing a penalty of $1,000, as provided by this Bill, with a summary trial, I say that the House should not accept such a proposition. Let us make the maximum of the penalty $50; or if not, allow the case to be tried by a court vested with ordinary jurisdiction.

Mr. GALLIHER. It seems to me that this is one of these Bills which are of a quasi criminal nature, and therefore we should be careful not to cause expense to the labourer or party aggrieved. I have not looked into the legal aspect very closely, but I would suggest that proceedings should be taken on sworn information laid before a justice of the peace or stipendiary or police magistrate. Such official would, in the first instance, try the case, and then the party deeming himself aggrieved by the decision should have the right of appeal to a Superior Court. In the province of British Columbia the judges of our Superior Court all reside at the coast, and if we had to go before a Superior Court judge to lay our complaint, we would have to travel a long distance in some cases—say from Kootenay or other portions of the interior—which would render it impossible for the persons aggrieved to proceed. I see no reason why we should not treat this as a quasi criminal act and make the burden of expense as light as possible on those who are not the offenders.

Mr. BRITTON. No doubt the fact of the Act being on our statutes has a considerable deterrent effect, and probably the effect will be still greater if this amendment be passed. I agree in the desirability of making the law as workable and simple as possible. But so long as the maximum penalty is made $1,000, I do not see how there can be any difference of opinion as to the courts in which the cases must be brought. They must be brought in the court which has jurisdiction over cases of that amount and cannot be brought in any other. I do not know whether there is any virtue in having the maximum penalty $1,000. Just as much could be accomplished by having a smaller amount, and in that case such cases could be tried by a court of inferior jurisdiction.

There is another point that should receive consideration. If this action for penalty is brought in the high court in the province of Ontario, it may be triable by a jury as well as by a judge. The question arises, whether such an action ought to be tried by a jury or whether it is not something that ought to be tried only by a judge. There is another point. It is true that the action is to be brought by an individual. An individual, perhaps, may not undertake such an action at his own expense, but only when he is backed by a labour organization of the district or when he feels that he is fulfilling, to some extent, a public duty in bringing action of this kind. Still, it is an individual who must bring the action. He would naturally be liable for costs if he failed. But it is provided in Ontario that the individual who brings an action for a penalty must give security for costs. It may be well for the House to consider whether a man should be placed in such a position that before he continues an action under these circumstances he would have to give security for costs, as he does in an ordinary case where suit is brought for a penalty. Then, there are a good many matters of detail that have to be considered. What is true in regard to British Columbia is true—to a less extent, I suppose—in every other province. In the province of Ontario all the high court judges reside in Toronto, and application would have to be made there to get the consent of the Attorney General or a high court judge before bringing an action. The county court judges are local judges of the high court; but they do not come, it seems to me, within this section and would not have power to give consent to bring such an action. This would leave it to the individual to seek the consent of the Attorney General or the judge in Toronto, before he could bring an action. These are points to be considered in order to make the working of the Act as easy and as effective as possible. Under the Customs Act, severe penalties are provided for the infraction of the law, and yet the penalties, to a very considerable amount—certainly to the amount of $200—are recoverable before two justices of the peace or before a stipendiary magistrate or police magistrate, who has the power of two justices of the peace. If the penalty is $1,000, there is no help for it, it must be recoverable in a court having jurisdiction for that amount. If it is thought to be in the interest of the labouring classes that the penalty should be reduced, some simple mode of recovering it and bringing an action to enforce the penalty might be provided, it seems to me, with all the safeguards that are necessarily thrown about it.

Mr. CLARKE. I desire, to propose an amendment to this section 1. The right hon. leader of the House told us that this Bill had been submitted to the labour organizations, and that those bodies approved of it. It would be interesting if the right hon. gentleman would tell us to what organizations it had been submitted. I confess that if those bodies are satisfied that this provision is workable, it might modify my views respecting it and the advisability of making changes. I move in amendment:

That all the words after 'fifty dollars,' in section 1, be omitted and be replaced by the following: 'Recoverable in the name of His Majesty in a summary manner with costs, under the provisions of article 58 of the Criminal Code of 1892, before any police magistrate, stipendiary magistrate, judge of session or county court judge having jurisdiction where the offender is to be found or where the offence was committed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). Just before this amendment was moved, I was about to say that I thought the best course to take was to reduce the amount so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a county court judge. As I said when this subject was under discussion, this is a law which, under the existing conditions, must be very carefully enforced. For instance, in the city of Windsor, the ferry to Detroit takes over every morning five or six hundred people who cross to their daily occupation in the city of Detroit. Every time we have an agitation about the enforcing of the Alien Labour law, these people are told—this has been done repeatedly—that the effect will be that they must be given the choice of taking up their residence in Detroit or losing their employment. The result would be that we would not only lose three or four hundred people who are thus employed, but also their families—within a month the city of Windsor might lose a thousand people. Therefore, every time this agitation is raised, we are very much concerned about the matter. I agree, on the other hand, that we should have a speedy and effective remedy under it. I think the proper course is to give jurisdiction for trials and actions of this sort to a county court judge, reducing the penalty from $1,000 to a less sum. I think $400 is the limit of the present jurisdiction of the county court. That may be increased at the present session of the local legislature, as a Bill for that purpose is under discussion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not necessary to decrease the penalty. This parliament can give jurisdiction to the county court without that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). Yes, that is true—this parliament could confer jurisdiction in express terms, leaving the amount as it is. I disagree with another view expressed some time ago, to the effect that the informer should recover the penalty. The obvious objection to that is that a man who has been discharged or who has been refused employment might, out of mere ugliness or to seek revenge, lay information and make a great deal of unnecessary trouble. No doubt, that feature of the Act is commendable which provides that some competent person must pass judgment on the question whether action shall be taken or not. Whether this authority should be the Attorney General or the county court judge, is for us to settle. I would suggest that either the Attorney General or the county court judge should be made competent authority on this matter.

The PRIME MINISTER. There has been a good deal of valuable information imparted by this discussion, and on both sides of the House there is a consensus of opinion that the jurisdiction of the courts should be more definitely settled than it is now. If I understand correctly the sentiment of the committee it is that the jurisdiction should be vested in the county courts. I am not prepared at this moment to accept the amendment nor to reject it, and I would ask that the whole clause be allowed to stand that we may take further advice on the matter.

Mr. CHARLTON. There are one or two points in connection with this matter that have occurred to me, and without unduly detaining the committee I wish to dwell upon them. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Ross, Ontario) informed the committee that the Labour Bureau was doing efficient service in enforcing this law. I wish to endorse that assertion. He gave us a list of some 45 deportations that had taken place under the operations of the Labour Bureau, and I have added to that a list of eleven more operatives which were deported from Blind River, and were employed by the two firms that I have mentioned. There are 56 deportations that have taken place under the operation of the Labour Bureau. I venture to say that this is ten times as many deportations as have taken place through Mr. De Barry under the American Alien Labour law. I venture to say that the enforcement of this law is more efficient at the present moment, under the supervision of the Labour Bureau, than the operation of the American law is made to be. I do not believe that there is any necessity for changing the provisions of the law or increasing the efficiency of its enforcement above what is being done at the present moment. I believe that the operations of the Labour Bureau are efficient, are simple, are ample, and cover the ground.

I wish to say in addition to this that we want to bear in mind that in this case we are playing with edged tools. The hon. gentleman who spoke last informed us that some 500 residents of Canada find employment in Detroit, and cross the river daily. That is permitted, the fact is well known by the American authorities; no attempt is made to prevent it, no attempt will be made to prevent it until bad feeling is engendered by some act of our own. But some bright morning every one of these men could be stopped, and they would be left with the alternative of staying at home and seeking other employment, or moving with their families into the city of Detroit. On the borders of Lower Canada hundreds of French Canadians have what they call four harvests. They have the sugar harvest at home; then they cross the border into Maine and have the harvest of driving logs on the streams; then they have the oat harvest; then they come back home and have their own harvest. These men go back and forth finding employment in Quebec, and finding employment in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, and they are not interfered with. It is a great blessing to these men to be permitted to find this employment. It doubles the amount they receive in the shape of returns for their labour. Rouse a feeling of animosity by the enforcement of this law, and the employment that these men secure in the United States will at once be cut off, and they will have the choice of losing what they make or of emigrating to New England.

Talk about the importation of labour! Why, it is impossible to start many new industries in Canada without importing skilled labour. Here are boot and shoe establishments down in the city of Quebec, and at other points in the province of Quebec; it is necessary to import American machinery and it is necessary to import American mechanics to put that machinery up, and set it in operation, and learn the French Canadians how to run it. You have got to do it, you cannot start the industry without doing that very thing. With regard to electrical apparatus, we cannot set up establishments with electricity as a motive power for running manufacturing operations without bringing the apparatus from the United States, and the men to set the apparatus up, and to educate skilled labourers in Canada for that business.

Mr. OSLER. I think we have first-class skilled electricians in Canada. We have in the Peterborough factory men who are quite capable of erecting the largest electrical establishments in Canada, and they are now erecting some of the largest electrical works on the continent.

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon. friend from Toronto is mistaken in one respect. We may have skilled electricians in Canada, and establishments for making electrical apparatus, but we have not enough of them. My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) told us awhile ago that the saw-mills could find skilled labour in Canada. But for the class of mills that are being built here you cannot find skilled labour, because the mills that are in operation have no skilled labour to spare, and these men have to bring their skilled labour with them, knowing the men, knowing their capabilities, knowing what they can do, knowing that they are making no mistake, and that their mills will be put into operation without any breaks, or without any loss of time, or any proceeding to make up for mistakes. With regard to electrical business, while we may have an establishment at Peterborough and while we may have skilled electricians, yet the business of putting in electrical plants and introducing electricity as a motive power is so extensive that we have not enough of them, and we must introduce American machinery and American men to learn our own people and educate them as skilled electricians. Then with regard to the pulp business, and the paper business, one of the great industries looming up in the future, you cannot establish a pulp business in this country without introducing pulp machinery and without bringing in men to set that machinery up, and run it, and to learn our own people to run that machinery. The same with woollen mills. The trouble with our woollen mills is that their machinery is antiquated, out of date, and it is necessary, if they are to succeed in keen competition, to put in improved machinery, and they must bring the men that can set up that machinery, that can run that machinery until such time as they have educated Canadians to do the work. The whole of this thing is an absurdity. The law is a barbarism, and its operation will be disastrous to ourselves, will be a boomerang that will come back and will hit us on the head, if we desire to grow in this country. I have sat in this House year after year and have heard how Canadians were departing for the United States, we have a million and a half Canadians in that country ; yet here is a law which says that we shall not import men, that while we invite people to come into this country we meet them with a club at the border and say they shall not come in. Of course I am desirous that we should protect our own labourers, and I have nothing to say against adopting a course that will prevent the making of contracts for the importation of common labour. But we have got to guard our own interests carefully in this matter of skilled labour, or we shall inflict upon ourselves a most serious damage in this matter.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to correct an impression which I fear will go abroad by what has been stated by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that we have not skilled labour, that we have not skilled electricians, that we have not efficient workshops to turn out the electrical apparatus that we require in Canada without going to the United States. Now I wish to correct that error. We have just as good skilled labour, just as efficient and able electricians in the Dominion of Canada as they have in any country in the world. I wish to inform the hon. gentleman that within one year six of our foremost electricians have been taken from Toronto to England to learn the English people how to put up the apparatus and run their factories. We have factories at Peterborough and at Montreal that turn out just as good material as can be found anywhere in the world. I wish that fact to be thoroughly understood.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 2,

The PRIME MINISTER. Section 5 of the present Act reads as follows :

Provided, that nothing in this Act shall be construed as prohibiting any person from assisting any member of his family, or any relative or personal friend, to migrate from any foreign country to Canada for the purpose of settlement here.

We have found that these words 'personal friend' are very elastic and we have thought it better to strike them out. There will be no objection to that.

On section 3,

Mr. CLARKE. What is the object of that ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The object is simply to make the wording clearer. We can deport at the present time. Section 6 of the Act reads :

The Attorney General of Canada, in case he shall be satisfied that an immigrant has been allowed to land in Canada contrary to the prohibition of this Act, may cause such immigrant, within the period of one year after landing or entry, to be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came at the expense of the owner of the importing vessel, or, if he entered from an adjoining country, at the expense of the person previously contracting for the services.

We propose to take out these words in order to make the intention of the law more explicit.

On section 4,

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). Mr. Chairman, complaint has been made that in the event of starting certain new industries in this country, skilled labour cannot be obtainable. So far as I am concerned, and I believe so far as the labour unions are concerned, they have no intention of bringing about any embarrassment of that kind. It is not the spirit or intention of the Bill, or of any labour Bill, to interfere with the industries of the country. The workingmen of this country are sensible enough to know that if such a condition of things were brought about by any action of theirs, they would be working against their own best interests. If there is a necessity of providing, after proper precaution has been taken, that men from the other side may be brought in to assist in the establishment of certain new industries, I am certain there will be no objection on the part of organized labour to such provision being made. However, we are anxious that every precaution should be taken to demonstrate that the party desiring to introduce this labour has done everything possible to prove that such labour cannot be obtained in this country. I am sorry if anything that has been said by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has reflected upon the skilled labour of this country. So far as Ontario is concerned I do not know how far this matter may go, but I do know that in British Columbia they have initiated electric works and they have had to bring, for the operation of these works, one, two, or three skilled labouring men from the other side. There is no doubt about that, and I do not think it is casting any reflection upon the skilled labourers of this country, when necessary, for the introduction of a new industry, to bring in new men with the operating machinery. However, generally speaking, I think the hon. member for North Norfolk is wrong. I think the labour of this country is just as efficient as that of the other side. I do see how it might be necessary to bring in one, two or three skilled labourers with certain operating machinery who cannot be obtained in this country. I think this amendment to section 8 would meet the case. I propose to add the following clause to this Act :

Provided that this section shall not apply to skilled labour not obtainable in Canada, as provided by section 5 of this Act.

Hon. members will notice that section 5 provides that when this labour cannot be obtained there is authority to import skilled labour. I propose that this section shall not apply to skilled labour not obtainable in Canada as provided by section 5 of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. You mean section 5 of the old Act.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). Section 8 of the new Act and section 5 of the old Act. It is supposed by some hon. gentlemen that the present section of the old Act covers the matter entirely. If that is so, I have no disposition to amend the law. I am only trying to bring about a modification that may meet the case mentioned by the hon. member for North Norfolk. I want to make it clear that the provision of this section shall not apply to skilled labour not obtainable in Canada, as provided by section 5 of this Act.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is to determine that point ? The intimation we have had from the hon. member for North Norfolk was the first intimation, I think, since this Alien Labour law was placed upon the statute-book, that any difficulty existed in the direction which he has indicated. There has been no complaint made in the public press of the harsh operation of the Alien Labour law. The first time we have heard of it has been from the lips of the hon. member from North Norfolk to-day, and before we adopt the amendment which has been suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith), we ought to know what steps are to be taken to ascertain whether this skilled labour can be had in the Dominion of Canada or not. Who is to judge as to whether the labour can be obtained ? What precautions are to be taken to ascertain whether this labour can be obtained when advertisements are published in the newspapers of the United States ? Some explanation will be necessary before that amendment should be added.

The PRIME MINISTER. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) is simply a consequence of the amendment which has been made already to this Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. What amendment is that ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will come to that presently. Let us see how the law is at the present time. Section 5 of the Act reads as follows :

Nothing in this Act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen or subject of any foreign country, temporarily residing in Canada, either in private or official capacity, from engaging, under contract or otherwise, persons not residents or citizens of Canada, to act as private secretaries, servants or domestics for such foreigner temporarily residing in Canada; nor shall this Act be so construed as to prevent any person, partnership or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labour in Canada in or upon any new industry not at present established in Canada, provided that skilled labour for that purpose cannot be otherwise obtained.

That is the law and has been the law from the time the Act was passed in 1897. My hon. friend put a question a moment ago. It was: Who is to judge whether or not this skilled labour can be obtained in this country? Why, the court is. That has been the law since 1897, but, under this Bill that we are introducing to-day, we are going a step further even than the American law. We make it an offence to advertise for labour, and the section reads thus:

Section 8 of the said Act is repealed, and the following section is substituted therefor:—

It shall be deemed a violation of this Act for any person, partnership, company or corporation to assist or encourage the importation or immigration of any person who resides in, or is a citizen of, any foreign country to which this Act applies, by promise of employment through advertisements printed or published in such foreign country; and any such person coming to this country in consequence of such an advertisement shall be treated as coming under a contract as contemplated by this Act, and the penalties by this Act imposed shall be applicable in such case.

After this Bill was introduced, and since it has been before the public, the employers of labour have come to us and said: Under the law as it stands, we have the power to bring in skilled workmen to perform labour on a new industry not at present established, provided that skilled labour for that purpose cannot otherwise be obtained; but, under this amendment you prevent us advertising for that labour which we are allowed to import. The question does not arise as to who is to judge whether or not the labour can be obtained in Canada; at all events, it has not arisen for the three years that the law has been in operation. It is now proposed to move in amendment the following words:

Provided, however, that this section shall not apply to skilled labour not obtainable in Canada, as provided by section 5 of this Act.

We make it an offence for an employer of labour to advertise in the United States for labour suppose he has a strike, but if the employer advertises for skilled mechanics whom he has a right to employ under section 5, then, we give him permission under this amendment to advertise for that labour. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will agree with me that that is reasonable.

Mr. CLARKE. With that explanation, I must say that I see the matter in a different light.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 5,

Mr. CLARKE. Has the government considered the question of applying the provisions of this Act to the citizens of the German Empire. The German tariff is a particularly harsh one in its operation against Canada, and it might be a good idea to enforce the provisions of this law against Germany.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Germans come here they stay.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think the Germans are very good immigrants, and when they come here they come to settle. The idea is to apply this law only to such countries as have an alien labour law against us. The German Empire have a very high tariff against us I admit, but it has no alien labour law. There is only one country in the world that has an alien labour law against us, and this law at present only applies to that country. If any other country were to adopt a similar law to the American law, our law would apply to that country ipso facto. The object is that this section shall apply, not only to the citizens of the United States, but to Italians, Poles, or others, who hapepn to be living in the United States, and who are imported into this country.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—THE CONTRACT WITH THE CANADIAN PACIFC RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the House into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Douglas, the following resolution, of which I gave notice some time ago:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take such steps that may be open to it under the law to obtain authoritative interpretation from the Supreme Court of Canada of the meaning of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in relation to the exemption of lands from taxation; and

That the patenting of lands earned by railroad companies should be proceeded with all practicable speed.

He said: This matter has been so thoroughly discussed in the House by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and others, that the House must be well seized of the question, so that it is not necessary for me to deal with it at any great length. The question has reference to the interpretation of that portion of the contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the government with regard to the time when the lands granted to the company shall become taxable. As to this, a difference of opinion exists. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) last year brought in a Bill on which there was a good deal of discussion; and he took the ground then, as he does this year, that the land was granted to the company at the time the contract was signed. Other members of this House take a different view, believing, as I do myself, that the land was granted when it was earned. However, in view of the difference of opinion that exists on the question, we would like to have a judicial decision on the subject, so that the people of the west would know exactly where they stand. I need not go into an argument on the merits of the case. We know that the settlers have been suffering in this matter for a good many years, and they have been looking forward to the expiration of the twenty years, on the 15th of February of last year, as the time when the exemption would cease and the lands would became taxable.

I want to say that this is not a motion of hostility to the Canadian Pacific Railway. We entertain no feelings of hostility to the Canadian Pacific Railway whatever. We think that if the company were wise, they would consider this matter and acknowledge that the time has expired and that the lands should be taxable. There is no doubt in my mind that that is the spirit of the contract, and I think they would be acting in the interest of the company as well as in the interest of the people of the Northwest, if they took that view of the matter. The exemption of these lands from taxation has a serious effect on immigration. There are other countries looking for immigration as well as this country; and when the people are coming in to look up locations, no doubt they are told by interested parties, who perhaps meet them at the boundary line, that half the lands in the country are held by railway corporations, and are exempt from taxation and will perhaps continue to be so for thirty years, so that the settlers have to tax themselves to maintain the roads, bridges, and schools, at the same time increasing the value of the lands of the railway corporations, and are not likely to get any relief.

The resolution I have to move asks the government to have the question submitted to the courts, so that we shall know exactly what position we are in. If the meaning of the contract is that the lands were granted when earned, we should know it; if the meaning is that the lands are not granted until the patents are issued, we should know that. In the second part of the resolution I ask the government to issue patents for all those lands, whether granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway or to other railways. There are something like 60,000,000 acres tied up in the hands of different corporations, and we think it is pretty near time that patents should be issued for all these lands, so that they may become taxable. I believe there are large blocks of land belonging to railway corporations that have not even been located. I think the different corporations should be required to locate their lands, and the government should issue the patents for them. With regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, I think the proper place to get it interpreted is the courts, and not this House. I therefore take much pleasure in moving the resolution.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I desire to say just one or two words with regard to issuing patents for the railway land grants, which is referred to in the last clause of my hon. friend's resolution. There has been from time to time a good deal of discussion in regard to the issuing of these patents, and on some occasions statements have been made which have not, I think, been warranted by the facts. For instance, I have seen the statement made that there was an understanding between the railway companies and the late government that these patents should not be issued, for the purpose of delaying the time when the lands should become liable for taxation. It has also been said that the railway companies had brought about a similar understanding with the present government. I desire to say that no information has ever come to me from any officer of the department that there was any understanding of that kind with the late government, and there has certainly not been any understanding of that kind with the present government, nor has any member or officer of any railway company interested in these lands at any time, so far as I am aware, suggested that the issue of patents should be delayed either for that or any other reason. The reasons why the patents have not been issued have simply been these—that the great growth of the work in connection with the Department of the Interior, and the difficulties of overtaking it have simply caused the work to fall behind. Two sessions ago my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) brought this question before the House, and I then stated that the volume of work in the department had been such that I had not been able to give that particular subject the attention I would have liked—that the question of railway land grants was one of the most difficult questions that had to be dealt with by the department; and I then promised that I would endeavour to put the department in such a position that the question could be dealt with as soon as possible. But I explained to the House at the time that there was an enormous amount of detail work connected with putting the department in a position to patent an enormous quantity of land such as we would have to deal with in this case. Members of the House, especially those who have any experience in departmental matters, will recognize the amount of work involved in dealing with questions of land where it has to be dealt with in such enormous quantities, and the danger of difficulty and confusion arising in case of any mistake being made.

Immediately after the session I gave instructions to the officer of the department most competent to deal with the subject, to take it up and devote his time to it. About the end of last summer he reported that he was in a position to report that the work of patenting might proceed with very little delay. In the early part of the present season, just about the beginning of the year, I was able to take the matter up. A staff of officers was employed and the work of patenting the land grants has been proceeded with as rapidly as possible. We took the most expeditious and satisfactory course of having the land carefully and thoroughly reported upon, the lists carefully checked, so that the work of patenting could be proceeded with rapidly. I expect that before the close of the session all the land in the main line belt of Manitoba will be patented, and inside of six months all the land in the main line belt between the Red river and the Rocky Mountains will be patented, together with probably the lands along the Calgary and Edmonton line and other lands selected. I am speaking of lands selected with regard to which there is no dispute between the department and the different railway companies. These patents can certainly, I think, be issued in the next nine months and will cover the great bulk of the railway land grants.

The position taken by the government is precisely what it was when the question was raised by the hon. member for Alberta two sessions ago. We were not a party in any way to unduly or intentionally delaying the issuing of the patents, but our desire was to issue them as rapidly as possible, and it would be satisfactory to my hon. friends, particularly from the North-west, to know that practically all the railway land patents will be issued in the course of the next nine months.

At different times when the subject has been up before the country, I have stated what I have just now said, namely, that it was the intention of the government to issue the patents as rapidly as possible. The motion of my hon. friend embodies that intention and desire. I think I repeated in response to a motion of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) for the second reading of a Bill which he had before the House a short time ago, what I had said, when the question of the interpretation of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract upon the subject of exemption was discussed at public meetings, that while I was not able to adopt the view which the hon member for Lisgar had advocated, yet I was willing to ask my colleagues to take this position. As soon as a municipality or school district or statute labour district was in a position to levy a tax on any Canadian Pacific Railway land, and thus bring about a test case before the courts, I was prepared to ask my colleagues to come to the assistance of such municipal body and pay the expense necessary for the purpose of bringing a test case. The motion of my hon friend conveys accurately the idea of the statement I then made, and the government is perfectly willing to adopt that position. So soon as a municipal body is in a position to levy a tax on any lands, we are prepared to come to its financial assistance and bring about the submission of a test case which will give us the opinion of the courts on the meaning of the clause. That is the only way a proper decision can be got on the question at issue. Lawyers will agree that the submission of a question to the court under the Act is not a satisfactory method of getting a final decision on the meaning of the contract, because it might be held that the decision was not of a binding nature, and did not cover the exact question at issue. That has been the experience in similar cases. It is desirable, if a case is to be brought before the court, that it should be brought in such a way that the exact point at issue will be decided. I have no objection to the terms of my hon. friend's motion and am quite willing that a test case should be brought before the courts and to ask parliament to authorize us to spend the necessary money.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I am not going to discuss the tactics of the hon. gentleman who got the question before the House on the present occasion. But I intend when next the government move to go into supply to bring forward the motion, notice of which I gave before anybody else, in connection with this question. I intend to take quite the contrary view from that expressed by the hon. minister. He is not going the right way to establish the date when the exemption ceases, and I propose to bring forward a motion which will define the rights of the settlers and go directly against the submission of this question to any court of law. The parliament of Canada is the proper tribunal to settle this question, as it has done similar questions in connection with this contract on previous occasions. In 1894 parliament was asked to interpret this contract and did interpret it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What was the occasion ?

Mr. MACLEAN. In 1894 the then government introduced a Bill to construe that contract.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In regard to what particulars ?

Mr. MACLEAN. In regard to the drawback on the iron bridges.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) That was a customs question.

Mr. MACLEAN. That makes no difference. It was settled by this House. I could cite twelve occasions when parliament has modified that contract and the legislation concerning it. I will go a great deal further and say that the only place where justice can be done is in this parliament. But you will only get a bald decision if you refer it to the courts. In parliament, on the other hand, you have the law as it is, you can discuss the intention of the makers of the laws. You can have all the equities of the case before you. If there is a conflict of interests and if injustice has been done, parliament can rectify it and do justice.

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) does not believe, then, that it takes two to make a bargain ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I do. I will argue the question fully, and I think I shall have a number of hon. gentlemen on the other side taking my view and standing up with me when I come to divide the House. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) jumped up and addressed the Speaker after I had risen, he did not take the cleverest way, I think, of getting this question before the House, but I can wait, and I will wait for another opportunity on going into Supply. The hon. Minister of the Interior is rushing to get the patents through. This is something new. But there is a steam engine going over his department and patents are being rushed out. Still the question remains as to the date of the patents and when the exemptions cease. I think the term of exemption is up, as I shall prove when the matter comes up again. The only place where you can settle the rights of the settlers of the North-west as against this great corporation the Canadian Pacific Railway is in the parliament of Canada and not in the courts of this country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the amendment is adopted, I would like to understand what the hon. Minister of the Interior meant by saying that he would have a final decision better this way than by a test case referred to the courts. Is it intended to proceed with a test case between a particular municipality and the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What I said upon the subject was that I did not think a satisfactory submission of the question at issue could be got except upon a case arising between the parties. In the North-west we have had similar cases in which railway companies have been involved, and the method we have followed there was this : Where the question of taxation was at issue, the municipality was told to go ahead and levy taxes upon the railway company's land and advertise the land for sale, and put the railway company in the position of either bringing an action to set aside the sale or paying the money under protest, in which case, they would sue to get their money back. In either case, the case would come before the court on the direct question of the liability of the land to taxation. The government would tell the municipality that, as soon as they were ready to proceed, the government would appoint counsel to take charge of the case. That is the only way to get the case before the court and to get a decision.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The plan that the hon. minister suggests may work out in the way he says, or it may not. For example, you get the Canadian Pacific Railway to enter into a stated case, and, if it is carried to the last court of appeal, it will work out as the hon. gentleman says. But, if the last court is not reached the object desired is not attained. Such a case as he suggests may go off on some technicality——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is always that possibility.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may not be carried beyond the first court. And, of course, a question like this determined between a municipality and the Canadian Pacific Railway would not in any way operate as an estoppel as between the Canadian Pacific Railway and any other municipality. Therefore, its only value would be the decision of the court, which might not be a court of first instance. The case will not necessarily work out as the hon. gentleman suggests.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It generally works out that both parties are willing that there should be a test case, and that the matter should be argued on the ground specified.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I conceded that if you could accomplish that and carry it to the ultimate court of appeal, there could be no further question about it. But if that is not done it would not settle the question at all.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to argue this question, but as it is now six o'clock, I will continue after recess.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). A very unusual thing happened in the House to-night in connection with the proposal to go into Committee of Supply. An amendment to that motion was submitted to the House and it carried ; and while I intended myself to offer an amendment to that motion, I failed to catch the eye of the Speaker, and the amendment carrying, the Minister of Finance had to make his motion to go into Committee of Supply. Therefore, I am now in order in moving an amendment, which I intended to do, and which deals with the question of the exemption of the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway. To put myself straight before the country, I wish to say that while I claim no privilege, I have been the first to put a notice on the paper of an amendment dealing with this question, but an hon. gentleman from the North-west Territories saw fit, after I had given notice, to put in a similar notice.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that I gave a verbal notice before his notice appeared on the Order paper at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I filed my notice early in the morning, long before the House met, and it appears on the journals of the House, though he thought it was a clever thing this afternoon to do as he did, and some friends of his in the House thought it was a clever thing. Well, they are welcome to think so. But I am before the House, and I am going to argue this question, which I think will command some attention in this House, and will certainly receive a good deal of attention from the people of the North-west Territories who have a grievance in connection with this matter. I propose to contend that this parliament is the proper place to interpret the time when the exemption of these lands dates from. It has been contended in the House, and a motion not long ago was passed in this House, that the question ought to be submitted to the courts. My argument to-night will be that it ought not to be submitted to the courts, because justice cannot be obtained in the House.

Mr. DAVIS. This is very hard on the courts.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is not hard on the courts, because the courts are not in a position to be seized of all the facts. My argument here to-night will present all the facts and allow the equities in the case to be fully judged. Now, I say that parliament is the proper place to settle this question, first of all, because parliament is in possession of the law on the question, whatever that is. Parliament is also in possession of the intention of the parliament that made this law. Parliament also is in a position to judge of the equities in the case; and if there are conflicting interests and conflicting claims, parliament is the one place where an adjustment can be effected. If you go to the courts for a settlement of this question you get nothing but a bare interpretation of the law, but in parliament you can get a full consideration, you can bring into play the principle of equity, and you can also, as I said before, get a readjustment of conflicting interests if any should be shown, as between the settler and the company. But in a court of law we can get nothing but a bare interpretation of the letter of the law on a question submitted to the courts.

Now, has parliament ever interpreted its own Act? I have been told here by the Prime Minister and by a number of members, that parliament has never interpreted its own Acts or interfered with any contract it has made; and further, that it should not do so. Now, in connection with this very Canadian Pacific Railway contract, I am prepared to show here to-night that parliament has interpreted that original Act and contract a number of times; I am prepared to show that the rights conferred upon the company and the obligations placed upon the company under that contract have been interfered with in this House from time to time. The Canadian Pacific Railway Act was passed in 1881. That very session an Act was introduced here to provide for drawbacks; and in the next year, that Act dealing with drawbacks, not being clear, a second Act was introduced dealing with the drawbacks and interpreting the contract.

Mr. DAVIS. Interpreting the contract in what way?

Mr. MACLEAN. In connection with the drawbacks. In 1882 another Act was introduced authorizing the road to use a pass other than the Yellowhead Pass, which was defined in the contract, and this interference with the contract begins in these terms: 'Whereas, it may be in the public interest, therefore parliament resolves so and so.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). What was the effect? What did it do?

Mr. MACLEAN. It allowed them to use the Yellowhead Pass, though not designated in the contract. Parliament had full charge of the contract, and could then have refused this privilege, and said: No, you shall do something else. True, it gave them a privilege, but it interfered with the contract. In 1884 there was an Act passed to amend the Act of 1881, and this Act is described as for the purpose of the earlier completion of the road, and the preamble begins thus: 'Whereas, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have represented, &c., &c., therefore Her Majesty enacts.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Therefore, it was at the request of the company.

Mr. MACLEAN. I grant it. Now, at the request of the other party to this contract, the people——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be much more satisfactory if the hon. gentleman would give us clearly the effect of the different Acts to which he has referred.

Mr. MACLEAN. These are only preliminary, I am coming to the substantial one.

In this Act, section 5, are these words: 'Giving security by way of lien on its property and also upon the land grant of the company earned and to be earned hereafter.' That is in 1884. Then in 1885 there was an Act passed relating to the mortgage bonds, and this Act begins as follows: 'Whereas, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have represented, &c., &c., therefore it is enacted.' In 1888 was passed the Act to remove the restrictions as to competing lines, and this Act begins with these words:

Whereas, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have agreed to relinquish, upon conditions herein, &c.

A readjustment was made upon the terms—I will argue that later on—but there was another amending Act. In 1892 there was a short Act passed, but a very significant Act, and now I am going to quote chapter and verse for the special edification of the Minister of the Interior. 57 and 58 Vic., chap. 34:

An Act to amend the Act to provide for the allowance of a drawback on certain articles manufactured in Canada for use in the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The words 'original construction' in section 1, chapter 7, of the statutes of 1882, intituled: An Act to provide for the allowance of a drawback on certain articles manufactured in Canada, for use in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, shall be construed to extend to and include the first iron or steel bridge erected in a locality, but not to any renewal or repair thereof.

Here is parliament construing the contract, and the very words 'construing' is used.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is that not with the consent of the company?

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not say it was not. The company came here and asked to have the Act construed. There are two parties to an Act, I hope, the people and the company. The settlers of the North-west are coming here to-day for the very same purpose, I am speaking for them, and I ask parliament to construe the meaning of the original charter as to when these exemptions begin.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Has the hon. gentleman any case in which the contract was valid without the consent of the company? If he has, that will help us.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have got so far in my argument, that parliament, in 1894, at the request of the Canadian Pacific Railway, had this Act construed; and there were two parties to the contract, the government representing the people and the company itself. In a word my contention is that if the company can come here and have the Act construed in its interest, the settlers of the North-west Territories, who have a vital interest in the contract, may also come here and have the Act construed. Now, I do not know whether that is bad doctrine, whether it is socialism, whether it is trifling with contracts, or not. I do not think it is, and I think it is all in line with what I said before, that the only place where you can get a full hearing of the case, where you can get the whole Act and the intention and meaning of the Act, and those who were parties to it, where the equities concerned can be taken into consideration, and where, if there are conflicting interests, there may be an adjustment, is here, and we are not far wrong in coming here.

Mr. DAVIS. You would not let the company construe the Act for themselves?

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) is very anxious about the company. I am trying to put in a word for the people of the North-west Territories, and I hope I will have some support from him.

Mr. DAVIS. I am afraid you are not doing them much good.

Mr. MACLEAN. In 1894, hon. gentlemen opposite were very much opposed to the company coming here and asking to have the Act construed. The right hon. leader of the government is on record as opposing it, but he opposed it because he contended, as others contended, that the company were coming here and asking for something additional, something not provided for in the contract. He opposed it in the public interest, as he set out. I state again what I said before, that if the company come here and ask to have the Act construed, why cannot the people come here also and ask to have it construed and have their rights, whatever they may be in the premises, protected? Now, I want to make my argument clear by reading my amendment which I have here. If any hon. gentleman wishes to know what I am driving at, if he will send over, he may get a copy of my amendment. I have reproduced in my amendment those clauses of the Act which deal with this exemption, and I shall read it to the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. What page is it to be found on?

Mr. MACLEAN. I have printed it on a special slip.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not the one on the Notice paper?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, the one on the Notice paper does not hold. That proposes a reference to the courts. I have abandoned that.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) take the pains to tell us how this argument bears on that proposition?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I am going to deal with that. Now, the contract made by the government contained the following clause —clause 9. I hope I shall have the attention of the House when I read the law on the case :

In consideration of the premises, the government agree to grant to the company a subsidy in money of $25,000,000, and in land of 25,000,000 acres, for which subsidies the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be completed, and the same shall be equipped, maintained and operated, the said subsidies respectively to be paid and granted as the work of construction shall proceed in manner and upon the conditions following, that is to say :—

(a) The said subsidy in money is hereby divided and appropriated as follows, namely:—

* * * * * * * *

And the said subsidy in land is hereby divided and appropriated as follows, subject to the reserve hereinafter provided for :—

* * * * * * * *

(b) Upon the construction of any portion of the railway hereby contracted for, not less than twenty miles in length, and the completion thereof, so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon, together with such equipment thereof as shall be required for the traffic thereon, the government shall pay and grant to the company the money and land subsidies applicable thereto. . . .

16. The Canadian Pacific Railway and all station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion or by any province hereafter to be established, or by any municipal corporation therein; and the lands of the company, in the North-west Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

My conclusion is :

This House is of the opinion that the twenty years' exemption provided for the land subsidy in clause 16, begins as of a date even with the payment of the money subsidy provided for in section 9.

Now, there is the agreement, and throughout the agreement the land subsidy and the cash subsidy come always together. If you will notice in clause 9, it says : In consideration of the premises, the government agree to grant to the company a subsidy in money and in land. They are called the same thing ; they are brought under the word 'subsidies.' The clause proceeds :

The said subsidies respectively to be paid and granted as the work of construction shall proceed.

Then, in b, it says :

Upon the construction of any portion of the railway . . . and the completion thereof . . . the government shall pay and grant to the company the money and land subsidies applicable thereto.

The two things come together ; the payment of the money and the granting of the land subsidy must be performed by this country in the carrying out of its contract with the company. The two things come together, and my contention is, that when the money was earned it was paid, and that as the money was earned, so also was the land earned, and these have been granted. If these were not granted in one patent, it is not the fault of the people, it is not the fault of this parliament, but it is the fault of some one else, and the people should not suffer because of the neglect that occurred, if such did occur. I just cite one legal authority in this matter, and it is a man whose name is respected in this House, the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy. The hon. gentleman who occupies his seat in this House today undertook to lecture me the other evening in reference to this question, but all I have to say to him is, let him turn to his uncle's opinion, as delivered in this House in 1894, when this case was up. The late Mr. Dalton McCarthy said :

I think the House should perfectly understand that this alteration in the contract will mean, before we are done with it, probably up in the millions. I think we had better realize and understand what we are doing. Of course, that ought to make no difference if the railway company were entitled to the change—because change it is—in the contract which is sought to be made now at the instance of the hon. the Minister of Railways. But, for my part, I do not look upon it by any means as a technicality. I look upon it as a substantial change in the contract, and let me tell the committee why.

That is Dalton McCarthy's opinion of this contract, and when the land grant and the money subsidy were earned.

This company were entitled to get certain grants of money and certain subventions in land only upon the completion of the road, as the road was completed from time to time and certified as being completed under the contract.

Mr. McCarthy held in this House, and it was held also in this House by others at the time, that the company had earned certain money subventions and certain land grants, that the two went together, and that they were payable at a certain time. It is my contention, and it is the contention of the settlers of the North-west, that as soon as the road was completed in its various sections, and when the money grant was due, so also was the land grant, and it should have been taken when the money was taken. If the government did not grant these lands it was not the fault of the settlers of the North-west, and, therefore, the settlers should not be made to suffer.

The PRIME MINISTER. On what question did Mr. McCarthy speak ?

Mr. MACLEAN. On the Act which was introduced in 1894, to construe the contract in connection with the drawback on the bridges.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is another question.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is quite clear that these two things go together, the payment of the money and the granting of the land. But hon. gentlemen who raise the company's contention and who take the lawyer's position rely on this thing here : That the twenty year exemption shall date from the grant thereof from the Crown. Sir, I am taking the position of the ordinary man of this country. I am talking to the farmer, to the man in the street, and I ask : What will happen if this exemption is to date from 'the grant thereof' ? We are told to-day that the patents are going through now and that it will be a year before they will be all finished. For some unknown cause they are going through to-day at a threshing machine rate, but according to the contention of the lawyers here, if the matter is referred to the courts all the courts will have to do is to declare that this exemption dates twenty years after the grants are made to-day. Is that justice, is that equity, is that in the interest of the farmers of the North-west ? Because somebody has been negligent in issuing these patents, or because somebody has been negligent in applying for them, these land grants shall be exempt from local taxation for twenty years from this date. Is there any justice in that, is there any equity in it ? We are told that they will get nothing but a cold interpretation of this bargain if we go to the courts. Sir, parliament is higher and greater than the courts. Parliament can do justice. Parliament can be seized of every consideration in connection with the matter, and if there are conflicting interests parliament can make a proper compensation or readjustment. But there is no justice for the settler in the North-west if he goes to the courts and the courts say : When was the patent granted ; when was the grant thereof from the Crown ; and they will send for the Minister of the Interior or one of his officers and find that the grant thereof from the Crown was in the year 1901, sixteen years after the contract was completed. A great deal of this land was grantable in 1883 ; more was grantable when blocks of twenty miles of the road had been completed, and all should have been granted before 1885 ; but because it was not granted the lawyers have come here to tell us that the exemption must date from the time the patents issue. That may be law and that may be cold justice, but I do not think it is equity, and I do not think it is the policy this parliament should pursue, if we ever hope to settle that country.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) to tell the House how his argument bears upon his proposition. He has made an argument in favour of parliament construing the contract and he has also argued against allowing the question to go to the courts. If his proposition is unanimously adopted by this House, will that keep it out of the courts ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes. Parliament can pass an Interpretation Act, and it is to furnish the government with an argument for doing so that I have brought down this resolution. They can even do it in the way they did it before when the Canadian Pacific Railway abandoned its right to the monopoly clause in the North-west for a consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose every member in this House agreed that in our opinion the exemption should be terminated on such a date, and the Canadian Pacific Railway refused to abide by it and appealed to the courts ; does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) think that the opinion of this House would influence the courts ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not ; but I propose to give the government an opinion of this House upon which they can found a Bill which will settle this question.

The PRIME MINISTER. How ?

Mr. MACLEAN. You can bring in a Declaratory Act, as was done in 1894, which will read thus : The word so and so shall be construed to mean, &c. Then you have settled it.

The PRIME MINISTER. What is your answer to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) ? If the Canadian Pacific Railway objects, what will you say ?

Mr. MACLEAN. They can make their objection and that is all there is to it.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) entered into a contract with the government and a dispute arose as to the wording of the contract, would he like the government to interpret that from their own point of view without a reference to the courts ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) is raising a side wind.

Mr. DAVIS. There is no side wind about it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am talking about things as they are. Suppose I owed the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) a hundred dollars twenty years ago, and I had the hundred dollars in my desk for him, and he never came for it, could he claim interest from me because he never asked for his money ? And if the Canadian Pacific Railway did not get its land grant or did not apply for it are the settlers to be held responsible for the loss they sustained because of that ? If the previous government for ten years failed to do its duty, and if this government and this Minister of the Interior for five years have failed to do their duty to issue these patents, are the settlers of the Northwest to suffer therefor ? Now, what is the duty of a parliament ; what is the duty of a premier ; what is the duty of a government in connection with the public rights of this country ? That is the most important issue in Canada to-day, and for a few minutes I shall direct the attention of the country and of the House to it. It is the duty of a government ; more especially the duty of the Prime Minister and of the Attorney General of Canada, and of the Attorneys General of the provinces to protect the rights of the people against the aggression of corporations and against the mistakes of officials whether they be ministers of the Crown or otherwise. That is the fundamental duty of the government in this country and of every country in the world. If the public rights suffer through neglect of the officials, it is the duty of a parliament to rectify the wrong. We have premiers and we have Attorneys General in this parliament and in the different provinces of Canada, and the significant thing is the way public rights are being raided, and the way Attorneys General in Quebec and Toronto, and here, are neglecting their duty to protect the public. I shall refer in this connection to what happened in the province of Quebec, and I shall read from the Montreal Herald, a leading Liberal paper, of Saturday last, an article dealing with the legislation obtained by the Water, Heat and Power Company, of Montreal, in the Quebec legislature.

The company has obtained possession of property to which it has no title in justice, whatever it may have in law, and it may depend on having to fight for every step of its corporate progress. The legislature will, no doubt, be asked to revoke the powers conferred on this company, and if the legislators do their duty they will not allow any claim of vested rights to stand in their way. The legislature is practically omnipotent, and if it was within its rights when it voted the property of the citizens of Montreal to the Light, Heat and Power Company, it would be equally within its rights if it undertook to undo the wrong which has been done and withdraw from this company the special privileges of which the people of Montreal complain.

Only in the recent session of the Quebec legislature the city of Montreal was raided of its rights. The Attorney General of that province, who should have been the guardian of the rights of that city and every other municipality, allowed those rights to be invaded in such a way that the leading organ of the Liberal party of Montreal says that the legislature must undo that wrong. The premier of the province is reported in the same paper three or four days before that as having made a deliverance on this question which is worthy of the attention of the people of Canada. Mr. Parent is reported as follows :

Mr. MACLEAN.

The premier, in his answer, took the following grounds :

First, that the protests had been too late. If the citizens of Montreal had taken the question in time and done one-half of what they have accomplished since the Bill passed both Houses, it is very doubtful if the privileges asked for would have been granted to the company. Personally, the premier had opposed the Bill, and was not yet in favour of it, but it is a constitutional principle that the government as a government must not act officially in regard to private Bills unless they are ultra vires. It is also a constitutional principle that the lieut.-governor must be advised by his government as to the disallowance of any Bill that has passed both Houses. It is, therefore, beyond the constitutional rights of the government to advise the disallowance of the Bill in question.

Further, he says :

If by this legislation the company infringes on the rights of the people, or goes too far in the exercise of its privileges, the question would then be taken up by the government, and the legislature would then be called upon to repeal these privileges, which were used unwisely and arbitrarily.

This would be a government measure, and of course would command the support of the Liberal party. If that support was not accorded, why there would be nothing left for the government but to resign.

The premier wished it to be thoroughly understood that the actions of the company will be carefully watched, and if the interests either of the municipalities or of the people in general are endangered in any way, the matter will be carefully looked into by the government, and prompt action will be taken to safeguard those rights, even if it were necessary to call a special session to repeal the company's Bill.

Here the Prime Minister of the province of Quebec says that if the public interest has been injured, he will call a special session of his legislature to repeal the Bill. But I charge the Prime Minister of Quebec and his Attorney General with having been negligent of their duties. If they were there for any purpose, it was to guard the municipal rights of the people of Quebec ; but they allowed those rights to be raided. And his leading newspaper supporter in the province calls upon him to do what he says he will do if a wrong has been committed, call a special meeting of the legislature and rectify the wrong.

What is happening in the province of Ontario to-day ? I come from that province, and we are all cognizant of what is going on there. The Attorney General and the premier of that province are every day allowing the municipal rights of the people of Ontario to be raided, and are not fulfilling their duty as guardians of the rights of the people. The city of Toronto was threatened the other day with having its control of its streets taken away from it by the corporation raiders in the Queen's Park.

My doctrine is—and I am applying it to the government here, as I will apply it to my friends on this side if they are ever in power—that parliament is here to do justice to everybody ; and if a wrong has been committed or a right has been denied, if somebody has been negligent and the public interest suffers, it is the duty of parliament to rectify the wrong. I do not know whether that is a bad doctrine or not, whether it is a Tory doctrine or not ; but I hope it is based on English constitutional practice, and I believe it is the only doctrine by which progress in government can be achieved. It is a well-known dictum that for every grievance, for every wrong, a legal right or a parliamentary right may be found. Now, these people in the North-west have a grievance ; they say that the company have not patented their lands. They should have patented them fifteen years ago ; but having failed to patent them, there is no reason why parliament should not now say : You should have patented your lands in 1885, and if you claim exemption from taxation, that exemption must date from 1885. It is well within the power of parliament to say that ; and if there is an issue as to whose rights are concerned, as between the poor settler and the rich corporation, which side is parliament going to take ? Is it always going to take the side of the rich corporation, and give it the benefit of the law, and never give the poor settler the benefit of it ? If there are conflicting interests, why not adjust them ? We are told : 'Oh, you are going to do an injustice to the Canadian Pacific Railway.' But the doing of an injustice is not as bad as the continuing of an injustice.

Mr. SCOTT. Is the hon. gentleman not proposing to do an injustice to the people ?

Mr. MACLEAN. In what way ?

Mr. SCOTT. Did he not express the opinion a few nights ago that the exemption period should have commenced on the 15th February, 1881 ?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, I did not express that opinion.

Mr. SCOTT. Did he not vote for a Bill which expressed that ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I voted for the Bill, certainly. I came into this House that night, and heard this question under discussion for the first time. After it had been threshed out—and I think I contributed a little to the merits of the discussion by taking a hand in it—I went away with the idea that the question could probably be settled in the courts. From that day to this I have been reading it up and studying it.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the hon. gentleman's real opinion as to the date of the exemption period ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The period of exemption is twenty years from the day that the land grants were grantable.

Mr. SCOTT. Then he does not stand by the opinion he expressed when he voted for the Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN. Grant that I do not stand by that opinion, where will you stand to-night on this question ? I will take full responsibility for where I stand, and whether I am consistent or not.

Mr. SCOTT. We would like to have that clear—whether the hon. gentleman does stand by it or not.

Mr. DAVIS. He has a license ; he has a privilege.

Mr. MACLEAN. These hon. gentlemen from the North-west do not like what happened this afternoon. I would have liked to have taken no partisan view of this question, but to have helped them to secure the rights of the people of the North-west. But, because I happen to be a Conservative, they want to repudiate me as talking buncombe in this House. I wish now to devote a little attention to the right hon. the First Minister. The right hon. gentleman has laid down the doctrine of vested rights, and proclaims himself a Liberal, and a great admirer of the late Mr. Gladstone. But, when he raised the question of vested rights and the sanctity of contracts, he must have forgotten that the whole record of British constitutional progress is, in a great measure, made up of the abrogation of vested rights and the denial of the sanctity of certain contracts. There is no British constitutional progress that is not based on the opposite of the doctrine laid down by the right hon. gentleman. One after the other, vested rights have had to disappear in favour of the public interest. When the right hon. gentleman says he is such an admirer of William Ewart Gladstone, does he forget the land laws which that hon. gentleman had caused to be passed through the House of Commons ? They were nothing else but confiscation of vested rights.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the Irish land laws ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, introduced by Mr. Gladstone.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How did they do away with vested rights ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I hope the hon. gentleman is not going to argue that they did not. These land laws practically wiped out the Irish landlords.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In what respect ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The landlords were compelled to sell whether they wished or not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By what law ? Surely the hon. gentleman has not posted himself ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I have. The whole principle at the bottom of Mr. Gladstone's land law was the interfering with vested rights. All the reforms in the land laws were based on confiscation in one shape or another. Then, there was the Irish Church question. Was there not confiscation in that case ? Take in this country the settlement of the seigniorial tenure in Lower Canada. Was there no confiscation there ? Did not a Canadian parliament secularize the church lands in the interest of the people ? But, these things were nearly all done in this country by the Tories, and we have the Prime Minister telling us that he stands up for vested rights and the sanctity of contracts, no matter how injuriously they may affect the public interest. But, when he takes that stand, he is not a true Liberal, or a student of history, but simply an advocate of the most reactionary proposition ever set before any civilized community.

Should we not do something for the settler ? The settler is the other party to this contract. Is it fair that he should have to pay municipal taxes for roads and school and other improvements, and that this great corporation, the Canadian Pacific Railway, should, through the negligence of the government, go scot free for twenty years to come ? Will such a policy as that build up our country ? I am in favour of giving the settler his right share in the unearned increment, his fair proportion of the increased value which comes to unoccupied lands through the settlement and cultivation of the country, and of not allowing a great corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway to reap all the advantage. These alternate sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which are not paying any taxes, are increasing yearly in value through the labour of the poor settler, who builds the roads and pays for the schools and these lands, which originally were worth a dollar an acre, are to-day worth from five to ten dollars per acre. Where is the equity, where is the justice of making the settler do all the work and giving the Canadian Pacific Railway all the profit ? I maintain that this parliament is bound in duty to come to the rescue of the people and settle this question, and would be derelict in its duty if it were to send the poor settler to the courts, where he will only get cold justice and not the equitable treatment to which he is entitled. This question can only be settled on principles of equity, and not by a cold interpretation of the letter of the contract.

My resolution will enable the government to negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Hon. gentlemen opposite are on record as having laid down the doctrine that when there is a public grievance in connection with any contract, some effort ought to be made to secure its removal. They admitted that there was a great grievance in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract with regard to freights, and some years ago they gave that company a charter and a large subsidy to build the Crow's Nest Pass line, but upon condition that the company made certain concessions to the people. My resolution is in a line with that precedent, because it will give the government something on which they can negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway, just as Sir John A. Macdonald did when he found the monopoly clause would have to be abandoned.

I lay down the doctrine that parliament is supreme and the only competent body to protect the rights of the people and do justice in this matter. Am I saying anything not in accord with English precedent when I declare that it is the duty of the government and of parliament to protect the people's rights, whenever these rights are impeached upon ? That, I do not think is bad doctrine. I do not think it is good doctrine to send the settler to the courts. He will not get justice there, but will simply get an interpretation of the exemption clause. The decision will turn on the wording of the grant from the Crown, and everybody knows that the grant of land from the Crown dates this year, when the machine is at work making out the patents. But the land should have been patented when the money was paid, and if the grant was not then made, that was not the fault of the settler, and the settler should not suffer.

I was reading an item the other day in the Montreal Witness about a remarkable exodus of people from the state of Kansas. People leave countries when they find the conditions are not satisfactory, and county after county, municipal organization after municipal organization has disappeared from the map of Kansas because the people have had to leave.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. On account of dry weather.

Mr. MACLEAN. Partly on account of dry weather and partly on account of the treatment of the railways. But those people are looking for a country to settle in, and some of them are coming to Canada. But if they find out that this is a country where a huge land corporation is exempt from municipal taxation and the poor settler has to bear the whole burden, they are not likely to think it a very desirable place in which to cast their lines.

There has been a good deal of disappointment in this country that our North-west has not been settled so rapidly or so extensively as it ought to have been ; and there is a good class of settlers who are said to be avoiding the North-west who would really like to go there. Now, our Canadian Northwest, at its best, is not a Garden of Eden. It is rather a hard place to live in. And it is the duty of this parliament to make life in the North-west as endurable as possible. It is far away, there are long distances, it has a severe climate. And, if to that you add this curse of municipal exemption from taxation—which is a curse in other places as well—if you add that to the hardships of the settlers, you are not going to get the best class of settlers in there, and you are not going to get the country rapidly settled. But if these people see that they are coming to a country where there is a government that will protect them in their rights, a government that does justice to every man of the community, you will get that country settled much more rapidly. You are not going to get the settlers to go there if it is given out that all that this parliament will do is to give them mere cold justice, a bare interpretation of the law, but will not give them their rights nor treat them fairly and equitably. If we wish to settle that country, we have no way to gain the public confidence but by this parliament settling the question of these exemptions. And it can be settled, as I said, by negotiation. That is the only way. I am ready to go the whole length of saying that there ought to be no negotiation but the declaration by this parliament that the period for these exemptions dated from the time the land grant was earned. But I am willing that the government should take advantage of my resolution to found negotiation upon it. But I am not going further than I have to go. If hon. gentlemen opposite like to open negotiations they may. But, if they are going to do nothing but refer it to a court, as the hon. member from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) wishes, they will do very little for the settler. What does the settler of the North-west want? Above all, he wants neighbours.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. Who is the hon. member who is laughing? How would he like to live out on the prairie and have every alternate block a vacant space growing in value to his own detriment and to the advantage of the Canadian Pacific Railway corporation?

Mr. DAVIS. It is the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Maclean's) own political friends who did that.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Davis') friends have delayed for five years issuing these patents, and have not issued them yet. My political friends are responsible for ten years' neglect of their duty, and I hold them responsible for that. I hope the hon. gentleman will hold his friends responsible for their neglect. But that does not mend the wrong. The wrong has to be mended by legislation in this House, and that is to be gained by men from the North-west standing up in this House and fighting for the rights of the settlers, not by interfering with those who are doing something for the rights of the settlers. I know that my voice is a feeble voice, but it is at the service of the settler. I have never tried to interfere with hon. gentlemen opposite when they have tried here or in committee to uphold the rights of the settler. But they think it a proper thing to sneer at one who is upholding the settlers' rights. And the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) laughed at the clever little ruse by which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) caught your eye, Mr. Speaker, when I tried to speak. There was nothing clever about it; there was nothing in the interest of the public about it—I hope the settler in the North-west will remember it. I am going to see that settler in the North-west—I have said that before—and I am going to tell him who were the men who had something to say when his interests were up before the House for discussion. I am glad that I have the attention of the farmers of Ontario—and there are a lot of them here. The farmers of Ontario had a little lesson read to them the other day, and all the new members had a little lesson read to them by a newspaper called the Weekly Sun. I believe that it is an honest newspaper and that it is trying in its own way to do what it can for the benefit of the farming community of this country. This is the lesson it read to the new members of this House:

> They will find, however, that there are all kinds of influences at work at Ottawa to turn them aside from the path of duty and to enlist their support on behalf of corporate interests and of the raiders of the treasury. Let them be true to their constituents and to their constituents' interests. If they are they will find that the great obstacles which are represented to them as being in the way of just legislation will soon disappear. The voters are watching the course of their members this year, as they have not done for some time, and will soon find out who have been serving them and who have been betraying them.

Now, there is a feeling in Ontario that the corporations have had too much, that they have had everything in the way of legislation in the Ontario legislature and that they are having too much in this parliament. As this paper says, the farmers of Ontario are watching as they never watched before, the conduct of their representatives in relation to these questions where great corporations are concerned, and they will hold those representatives responsible. I hope I have some support from the Liberals of the province of Ontario who are farmers and who take the view that these settlers, these farmers of the North-west must not be left out of consideration because either the past government or the present government have been negligent of their duty or have failed to issue these patents as they should have done.

Now, my contention is—and I am finishing my remarks—that the only place where justice can be done in this matter is in this House; because, this House is seized of the law and the whole law; this House is seized of the intention of the men who framed the law ; this House is possessed of jurisdiction that will secure equity as well as law ; this House, if there is a conflict of interests, can secure a readjustment. You cannot get that in a court of law. Hon. gentlemen opposite propose to send the settlers to a court of law for the righting of their grievances. There is only one way to settle these grievances, and it is for that reason I move this amendment to the motion for the House to go into Committee of Supply :

In the contract made between the company and the government for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, are the following clauses :—

Chap. 1, 44 Vic.

9. In consideration of the premises, the government agree to grant to the company a subsidy in money of $25,000,000, and in land of 25,000,000 acres, for which subsidies the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be completed, and the same shall be equipped, maintained and operated, the said subsidies respectively to be paid and granted as the work of construction shall proceed, in manner and upon the conditions following, that is to say :—

(a) The said subsidy in money is hereby divided and appropriated as follows, namely :—

Central Section.

Assumed at 1,350 miles—
1st. 900 miles at $10,000 per mile	$9,000,000
2nd. 450 miles at $13,333 per mile	6,000,000
		$15,000,000

Eastern Section.

Assumed at 650 miles, subsidy equal to $15,384.61 per mile	10,000,000
	$25,000,000

And the said subsidy in land is hereby divided and appropriated as follows, subject to the reserve hereinafter provided for :—

Central Section.

1st. 900 miles at 12,500 acres per mile	11,250,000
2nd. 450 miles at 16,666·63 acres per mile	7,500,000
		18,750,000

Eastern Section.

Assumed at 650 miles, subsidy equal to 9,615·35 acres per mile	6,250,000

(b) Upon the construction of any portion of the railway hereby contracted for, not less than twenty miles in length, and the completion thereof, so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon, together with such equipment thereof as shall be required for the traffic thereon, the government shall pay and grant to the company the money and land subsidies applicable thereto. . . . .

16. The Canadian Pacific Railway and all station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion or by any province hereafter to be established, or by any municipal corporation therein ; and the lands of the company in the North-west Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

This House is of the opinion that the twenty years' exemption provided for the land subsidy in clause 16, begins as of a date even with the payment of the money subsidy provided for in section 9.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). When I learned that my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) was going to make the motion which he has just made, I took particular pains to be back at eight o'clock for the purpose of hearing all that he had to say in support of his proposition. Now, I have followed my hon. friend as closely as I am capable of following anybody, and I have endeavoured to understand and give due weight to the arguments which he has advanced. And I must admit that, considering my hon. friend's ability and the vigour with which he applies himself to questions which he deems worthy of discussion, I am somewhat disappointed with the arguments he has addressed to the House. In almost every case in which he has attempted to make a point he has totally failed, I think, to connect his argument with the proposition upon which he has asked us to vote. We will all admit that my hon. friend displays considerable ability and considerable energy in the discussion of any question he takes up. I think if my hon. friend had been able to find a coherent and valid argument in favour of his proposition he would have put it before the House in such a way that we could have understood it. But when we refer to various points which he attempted to make for the purpose of proving his proposition, it will be seen at once that his arguments utterly failed to prove the conclusion which he is asking the House to draw.

Before touching upon his argument let me refer briefly to the general situation in regard to this important subject. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not find my hon. friend's speech a novel speech, because I think I remember making a speech myself very much to the same effect although not addressed exactly to the same point about twelve or fifteen years ago ; and most of us who have been in the North-west have had occasion to draw attention in public utterances to the disadvantages under which the settlers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories labour as the result of the contract which was made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. My hon. friend will readily admit that when he devotes his attention so vigorously to the representatives of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, he is hardly fair in assigning any portion of blame for this state of affairs to those gentlemen who now represent the western portion of the country, whether they be Liberals or Conservatives. Parliament as it was constituted in the year 1881, is responsible for the state of affairs as it now exists. There is no particular object in discussing at the present time the good features or the bad features of that contract. We have enough to do in dealing with the present conditon of affairs without indulging in useless recriminations with regard to the responsibility of this or that political party for this state or that state of affairs. We have before us at the present time a certain position of affairs. Everybody will admit that it is an unfortunte thing that the condition of affairs is such that there is a possibility of the period of exemption being extended to twenty years from the time when the patents are actually issued. Every person will admit everything the hon. gentleman has said in that respect; and therefore, the one-half of his speech which was devoted to lamentations over the position of affairs in the North-west adds nothing to the discussion, because it is devoted to elucidating or emphasizing that which every one of us will admit without any discussion whatever.

Now, I am not prepared to say that the last word has been said, I do not desire that the House should understand me as holding that the last word has been said with regard to this subject; nor even when, as I expect will be the case, having regard to the position which the House took upon the Bill that was before us a short time ago, this resolution meets with a negative voice from the House. I do not think that the last word has been said upon the subject. I think that these subjects, difficult as they are, if we look at the history of legislation, generally find a solution of one kind or another. But I think I will be within the judgment of the House when I say that the solutions of these difficulties that arise from time to time in regard to public affairs, which are sound solutions, and which bear the test of experience and prove to be satisfactory, are not the solutions which are made by taking a short cut through contracts and through national obligations. We may have to deal with such matters in such a manner as to place us under imputations which we feel to be unfair. When my hon. friend suggested the idea that because members of this House may take a certain view in regard to an important matter of this kind, that, therefore, they are taking a mere lawyer's view and are leaning in favour of the interests of corporations as against the interests of the people, I, for my part, think that he is placing an unfair imputation upon members of the House upon one side as well as the other. Now, we hear a good deal in this discussion, particularly in a certain class of newspapers, of which my hon. friend's paper is sometimes a pretty strong example, we hear very broad statements made about the lack of good faith of legislators, members of legislative assemblies and members of parliament, in dealing with the rights of corporations and with the rights of the people as against corporations. Well, I am not a very old man, but I have been some ten or twelve years engaged more or less in drawing and assisting to draw and pass Acts of parliament, and I am bound to say that upon both sides of politics I have generally found that legislators were desirous of doing the fair and right thing by all parties. That has been my experience, and I have not been led to the conclusion that there was any just ground for broad general charges of lack of good faith in dealing with matters of this kind.

Now, so far as the people of the North-west are concerned, no person could be more anxious than I am, no person could be more anxious than the members of this House on both sides who come from the North-west and from Manitoba, to find a solution of this difficulty that would enable this burden to be taken from the people of that section of the country. It would be contrary to all reason that we should not feel in that way. We sympathize with the position of our constituents, we are much more fully and completely aware of all the facts and circumstances of the case than my hon. friend can possibly be. Therefore, feeling as we do upon this subject, surely it is reasonable to suppose that we should be just as anxious, in reality much more anxious, than my hon. friend, to find some solution of this difficulty. I do not say that a solution of it will not be found, I trust that a solution will be found, and I desire, therefore, to make myself clear as by no means saying that there is to be no further consideration of this subject because I find myself unable to support the hon. gentleman's proposition at this particular time.

Now, the hon. gentleman's motion is declaratory, it is declaratory in regard to the effect of a contract that has been entered into by this parliament with a corporation. My hon. friend might perhaps say: It is not an Act of parliament, it does not interpret the contract, and therefore when the contract comes before the court, inasmuch as this is not an Act of parliament and therefore does not modify the contract, but is only the opinion of one branch of parliament, therefore, it may be passed as our opinion in order that the court should have the benefit of our opinion upon the subject. He might present that argument. I think, however, that would not be an argument that would commend itself to the responsible members of this House, because I fancy that we would all feel that if we passed this resolution, and if to-morrow any one of the members of this House brought in an Act of parliament for the purpose of giving effect to the terms of this resolution, every man supporting the resolution would feel bound to vote for the Act of parliament. We are not here for the purpose of merely passing academic resolutions; and when we assert a principle in a resolution, and we commit ourselves to it, we bind ourselves in so far as we can to follow it out with consistency, to support it when it comes in the shape of legislation before us. Therefore, what my hon. friend argues for to-day, in effect and reality, is to interpret a contract.

Now, my hon. friend said a number of things that seem to me to be inconsequent and if I may presume to criticise his remarks, I would say that his description of what he was going to prove was not generally borne out by what he actually did prove in the course of his remarks. For instance, my hon. friend strayed off just at the last, by departing altogether from the principle of the resolution, if I understood him correctly, which he had placed before us; and he suggested that at the time when disallowance was an active question, and immediately after that when the policy of disallowance respecting western railway charters was abandoned by the Federal government, Sir John A. Macdonald had found a solution for that difficulty. True, Mr. Speaker, Sir John A. Macdonald and parliament did find a solution for that, but how? They went to the company and made a contract with the company——

Mr. MACLEAN. But they did not go to the courts.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Whereby they bought for a valuable consideration a privilege which was in that contract. If my hon. friend has a suggestion to make in that respect, if he places before parliament some proposition whereby parliament would suggest to the government that an amendment of this kind should be made, then, we would be prepared to discuss that on its merits. I do not say that we would be prepared to support it, because I would not consider it wise to support a proposition to buy a privilege before the court had decided that such a privilege existed. But, what he wants is a solution by way of compensation. He is working in favour of something that is directly opposite to the principle of the resolution which is placed before the House.

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not argue that. I said it was open to the government to do that. I said that I took the contrary position myself, but let them pass this resolution or let them negotiate with the company as Sir John Macdonald did.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Well then, I misunderstood what the hon. gentleman said. I prefaced my remarks by saying that I understood the hon. gentleman to say so, and the hon. gentleman did not correct me at the time. I took what I understood him to say, but of course, I accept what the hon. gentleman says as to his intended meaning.

Mr. SIFTON.

The hon. gentleman spoke of the progress of the British constitution, which he says, is simply walking from one attack on vested rights to another. He was well corrected by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies), who pointed out, that when an attack is made by the British parliament upon vested rights, it is provided that by due form of law there shall be compensation. That is a principle which, I fancy, is invariably followed in all British legislatures. It is true that British legislatures have the power, the bare legal power to override contracts, to violate contracts and destroy vested rights without compensation. We have that power, but we have not that right and we cannot rightfully exercise that power. Before I pass from that point, I desire to quote an authority which seems to be absolutely clear in regard to it, and to show in exactly what position we stand in relation to a contract of this kind. Under our constitution as I said, we have the power to violate a contract. We have the power to override vested rights. I say that we have not the right to do that, and we cannot rightfully exercise that power which is vested in us. We strive carefully not to override contracts and vested rights. In the neighbouring states, they have a different kind of constitution, and I think without exception in the constitution of every state in the American union, there is a clause which provides that vested rights, or rights under a contract, cannot without compensation be interfered with by any legislation passed by the state. Therefore, inasmuch as that provision of their constitution which the courts have the power to construe, exists, there are constantly cases arising in which it is clearly and distinctly laid down as to what is a contract which the legislature cannot override. Therefore, when we have in our minds any difficulty as to any legislative Act of the parliament of Canada, or as to a contract which ought not to be interfered with, except in the sense and upon the understanding that it is a private contract and must be dealt with in that way, we can look usefully to the decisions which are given in the courts of the United States, because they have a long line of decisions there upon that very point. Let me quote to the House a short statement founded upon the decisions which have been given upon this point, and which my hon. friend will find in Cooley's 'Constitutional Limitations,' page 147. There I find this statement, which the House will see, and which my hon. friends who are members of the bar especially will see, is directly applicable to the discussion which is taking place at the present time. Speaking of irrepealable laws, the author goes on to say:

There is a modification of the principle, however, by an important provision of the constitution of the United States, forbidding the states passing any laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Legislative Acts are sometimes, in substance, contracts between the state and the party who is to derive some rights under them.

Exactly what we have in this case.

Mr. MACLEAN. But not under the same constitution.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (reading).

And they are not the less under the protection of the clause quoted——

That is to say that the constitution which prevents the state from deviating from the obligation of a contract is none the less effective because the contract may have assumed the form of a legislative act.

And they are not the less under the protection of the clause quoted because of having assumed this form. Charters of incorporation, except those of a municipal character—and which, as we have already seen, create mere agencies of government—are held to be contracts between the state and the corporators, and not subject to modification or change by the act of the state alone, except as may be authorized by the terms of the charters themselves. And it now seems to be settled, by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, that a state, by a contract to that effect, based upon a consideration, may exempt the property of an individual or corporation from taxation for any specified period, or even permanently. And it is also settled by the same decisions, that where a charter containing an exemption from taxes or an agreement that the taxes shall be to a specified amount only, is accepted by the corporators, the exemption is presumed to be upon sufficient consideration, and consequently binding upon the state.

That deals with a question upon which there is an abundance of legal decisions, and I should perhaps apologize to the lawyers of the House for quoting an authority upon a matter which is elementary to every lawyer. But, the short reference which I have given from this work shows that the decisions have gone in the United States clearly and distinctly upon this very point. It is not a new point by any means that where a state has made a contract there is a clause in the constitution which provides that the state shall not interfere with that contract even by its own acts, and which prevents it from violating any of the provisions of the contract. My hon. friend was unfortunate in some of the precedents which he quoted. He said that parliament had already assumed the right to deal with, to modify and to interpret this contract, and he quoted the opinion of the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy. He said that Mr. Dalton McCarthy adhered to that view, and he rather undertook to lecture the present bearer of that honoured name, for having expressed an opinion contrary to his own opinion a short time ago. But, Mr. Speaker, the statement of Mr. Dalton McCarthy bears no such construction. Mr. McCarthy never expressed any such opinion; at least not here. If he did so anywhere else, my hon. friend ought to quote it, as it is not here. What was said was this: Sir John Thompson was speaking in this House on behalf of the Bill introduced by the government which was for the purpose of extending a privilege to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MACLEAN. To construe the contract.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not fancy that anybody in this House contends that if we wanted to extend the time of the exemption there would be any violation of the contract in that. They might accept the extension or not, if they saw fit. The government in enacting a provision relating to the introduction of material for the construction of Canadian Pacific Railway bridges had some difficulty in regard to the construction, and Mr. McCarthy raised the point that the legislation was giving a privilege to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Sir John Thompson to some extent argued against the view of Mr. McCarthy in respect to that, but only by endeavouring to show that in interpreting the contract they were not giving the Canadian Pacific Railway an undue extension of the contract. There was no suggestion that they were taking away anything that had been given to the Canadian Pacific Railway before. If they did, I can imagine how Mr. Dalton McCarthy and Sir John Thompson would have joined in condemning the proposition as one that could not have been entertained for a moment. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) was not fortunate in that reference. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) referred to the Act itself, 57 and 58 Victoria, chapter 34, in which parliament enacts the interpretation of the words 'original construction.' It interprets the words 'original construction' not in the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, but in another Act.

Mr. MACLEAN. But, another Act which is interpreting the contract. Follow it back and you will see.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It says:

The words 'original construction' in section 1 of chapter 7 of the statutes of 1882—

Mr. MACLEAN. And 1882 is interpreting 1881.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (reading):

—intituled an Act to provide for the allowance of drawbacks on certain articles manufactured in Canada for use in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, shall be construed to extend to and include the first iron or steel bridge erected in a locality, but not to any renewal or repair thereof.

That is not an amendment to the Canadian Pacific Railway charter at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon ; it is an amendment to the contract.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) listen to what I say. I say that is not an amendment to the Canadian Pacific Railway charter at all. It is an amendment to chap. 7 of 45 Vic., the statutes of 1882. It is a public Act, not a private Act ; not a charter of incorporation, but a public Act, introduced to parliament for the purpose of defining what the duties of the government should be in respect to certain things, and which parliament has the right to change every hour in the day, if it thinks fit. There is nothing of the nature of a contract in it at all, and no lawyer would suggest for a minute that there is. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) produced the Act passed in 1885, and upon being questioned he had to admit that it was for the purpose of extending a privilege to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Another, the Act of 1894, was also for the purpose of extending a privilege to the Canadian Pacific Railway. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has quoted a number of enactments which in no single case would bear the inference of being unfavourable interpretations of the charter of incorporation of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is not the slightest shadow of a precedent in anything to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I was surprised and somewhat disappointed at the hon. gentleman's argument. He said he had a number of precedents, and I expected he would have something that would at least bear the appearance of being a precedent. I do not know, Sir, that I need to extend my observations very much further. All I intended to do was to answer to some extent what was suggested by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), and in doing so, I desire to say that I sympathize with his idea and his anxiety to do something for the people of the west, who are labouring under a serious disadvantage in that respect. But, I submit with all confidence, that a great majority of members on both sides of the House will find themselves wholly and entirely unable to follow him in his reasoning, and wholly and entirely unable to assent to the proposition that this House should interpret a contract which it has made with a private individual or with a company.

Mr. MONK. Before the minister resumes his seat, I would like to ask him a question upon a matter which I expected he would touch in the course of his remarks. I refer to the issuing of patents. In these two resolutions there is abundant reference to the necessity of issuing the patents. The land grant has been earned a long time ago, and I have heard very often in this House reference to the delay in issuing the patents. That is a point upon which I would like some information from the minister, because it is, perhaps, there that legislation would be of use.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I spoke with reference to that matter for fifteen or twenty minutes this afternoon.

Mr. MONK. I will read what the minister said.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will see my remarks in 'Hansard' just before six o'clock.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish, Mr. Speaker, to offer a reason for the vote which I intend to give upon this question. While I agree with the aim of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), and with some of his arguments, as well as some of the precedents which he quoted to justify interference by parliament in the direction which he sugegsts, still there are many points of his contention with which I cannot agree. This resolution simply says :

> That the twenty years' exemption provided for the land subsidy in clause 16 begins as of a date even with the payment of the money subsidy provided for in section 9.

The law does not say that it begins when the payment of the money subsidy was made, but, when the payment of the money subsidy was made and the land granted and handed over. It was contingent on the two things. The fulfilment of the one was not a complete fulfilment of the contract, which required the fulfilment of the two. Then, the contract goes on to say :

> The government shall pay and shall grant.

That was the provision of the contract Act, but although the government did pay they did not grant, and until they did both, I cannot see how we could interpret the law as being fulfilled so far as the contract went, because while the government paid the money they did not grant the land by giving a patent for it. If this motion were carried, it seems to me that it could in no way settle the question as to the date from which we should commence to count the twenty years. If we pass the motion it would only at best be the individual opinion of every member of this House who voted for it. I put the question to the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) : that even suppose we did pass the resolution and the Canadian Pacific Railway refused to be bound by it, and went to the courts to secure their rights, even then we would have to be guided by the interpretation put upon the law by the courts. The individual opinion of members of parliament might or might not count for anything in the estimation of the judges. They are charged with the responsibility, according to their own judgment and wisdom and legal acumen, of properly interpreting the law, and when they come to interpret that law they might differ entirely from what the majority of the members of this House think. While we might express ourselves here as individually being of a certain opinion, it would make no difference to the parties who were claiming their rights under the contract. It might be that the majority of members of this House honestly believe that the correct interpretation of the law is that set out by the hon. member (Mr. Maclean), but that would make no difference in the view which might be entertained by the courts. The contract sets out that when each twenty miles of the road has been built, the company is entitled to land and money, but, although the law says the money shall be paid and the land shall be granted, I am told that the money was not paid in every case, and whether it was or not, the patents of the land were not handed to the company. I take it that one of three things had to be done before the twenty years would commence. The land must be passed over by patent, or it must be sold ; or it must be occupied. It could only be occupied by a sale from the company, or occupied by the company itself. If it was neither patented to the company, nor sold or occupied by the company, I cannot see how we can come to the conclusion that the twenty years can commence to count.

For my part I hold that the twenty years' period could not begin to count until some one of these conditions was fulfilled—either that the land was granted by deed to the company or sold by the company, or occupied by the company. For this reason I shall be obliged to vote against the motion. While saying that, I must confess that I admire the conduct of the hon. member for East York in his desire to relieve the settlers of the North-west of a very onerous burden. I know from experience in my own part of the county what the pioneer settlers had to endure on account of the operations of the Canada Company. There was a great deal of land owned by the Canada Company in the county of Grey, and the pioneer settlers were obliged to make roads, clear up the land, build schools, and tax themselves heavily, while the land owned by the Canada Company went on increasing in value all the time ; and when the company came to sell any of their land, they sold it at a little above the cost of the land around. In other words, they benefited by the labour of the pioneer settlers, who had no redress. It is just the same with the settler in the North-west ; and I thought that while the hon. member for East York was advocating the interest of the settlers, it came with very bad grace from the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), and other North-west members to jeer at him when he was honestly trying to find some way of relieving the settlers of the very onerous burden that rested upon them, in consequence, it may be, of negligence of parliament or the negligence of the government—I mean the Conservative government as well as the Reform government. In the same way, in the past, when the ex-member for Western Assiniboia was working honestly and earnestly as any one could on behalf of the settlers, other members from the North-west tried to thwart and decry and turn into ridicule his efforts, and did everything they could to make it appear that he was not acting honestly. I think the hon. member for East York is entitled to every credit for his efforts to relieve the settler of that burden, even though we cannot agree with what he proposes as a remedy. For the reasons I have stated, I cannot vote for the motion. I think the twenty years should commence to count either when the land is sold by the company, or when it is patented, or when it is occupied by the company itself.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote for the motion of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), who has certainly shown a most energetic interest in the cause of the western settlers. It seems to be the difficulty of the western settlers that this House is full of sympathy for them, but is very scarce of actions in their favour ; and when a member comes forward with a practical proposition favouring those settlers, it certainly is my place to vote for it. My difficulty, however, is that having voted a few days ago that the date of exemption ended on the 14th of February last, I am not able to-night to vote that it does not end till five years from to-night. Therefore, while the hon. member has my fullest sympathy in his efforts, I am in the unfortunate position that I cannot support his motion.

The question I would like to discuss for a moment is as to the right of this House to deal with this question in any way. I will not discuss the date of the termination of the exemption. Other members who voted against the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), and who, I presume, are going to vote against this resolution to-night, have not discussed the date of termination. They have taken what they are pleased to call the broad ground of the sanctity of contracts. I will take that broad ground too. I claim that if a clear contract is shown, that contract must be submitted to. We are not asking to break a contract ; I refuse to be put in that position. I object to the stand taken by the hon. member for East York, that the settlers of the west are afraid of cold justice at the hands of the courts. All we want is justice at the hands of the courts, and at the hands of parliament. Give us a straight contract, and we abide by that contract. We do not want any interpretation of a contract if the contract does not require any interpretation. But our claim is this: That a contract was made at a certain time, under certain then existing conditions, and in view of certain expected conditions, and that the conditions which were in view at the time that contract was made have not eventuated. It was expected when that contract was made that those lands would have been patented as soon as they were earned. It was not contemplated by parliament when it passed that Act that the patents would not be issued for twenty years. I say, therefore, that because the conditions have changed, a duty is laid on this parliament to interpret that Act before it goes to the courts. This parliament has no right to ask the courts to render a decision on the mere wording of the Act, when the conditions have changed from what they were when the Act was passed, and from what they were expected to be. Those who hold to the sanctity of contracts must show us what that contract means. They have no right to ask us to support the sanctity of a contract if they do not know what the contract means. We know what parliament meant when it passed the Act. We know that that Act is not in a proper condition to be referred to the courts at the present time, and it is the duty of parliament to fit it to the conditions as they now exist before referring it to the courts.

As to the decision which was read to this House by way of precedent, I will only say this, that we live under a certain constitution providing for legislation under certain responsibilities; and if under that constitution no precedent can be found which would prevent us from taking this action, then I say our case stands good and is not to be shaken by a precedent taken from the rulings upon the legislation of another country under a radically different constitution. If that precedent is good, then our constitution is bad. It is because we do not approve of that system of government that we have the government which we have in this country.

As to the precedents cited under our constitution by the hon. member for East York, I am not sufficiently learned in the law to know whether these were precedents in the proper sense of the word or not; but I gather from the discussion that the rule works this way: If a certain interpretation of a contract is in favour of a railway company, this parliament has the power to make it; but if it is an interpretation that is to give justice to the people of the country, then parliament has not the power to make it. Parliament is to be the servitor of the companies, and not the servant of the people. I say that parliament is or ought to be the master of the companies and the servant of the people; and it is the right as it is the duty of parliament to see that substantial justice is done in this case, irrespective of any legal quibble. It is an outrageous proposition that an exemption from taxation to the extent of $100,000 a year should be continued to a single corporation in the Northwest for a period of twenty years beyond the time intended by parliament—to the extent of sixteen years, at any rate. I say it is a monstrous proposition that the company should be allowed to benefit to the extent of $1,600,000, at the lowest calculation, on a quibble as to the meaning of a single word; which is the contention that is put before the House.

My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said that in his view the exemption must commence at the time the land was either sold or occupied or patented. If the word 'patent' is to hold, if we are to stick to the legal, technical meaning of the word 'patent,' how comes it that that exemption ends, without a patent having been issued at all, by the mere fact of that land becoming occupied?

Mr. SPROULE. One of the other conditions under which it would commence to count, have been fulfilled.

Mr. OLIVER. But our hon. friends are contending that there is only one condition, and that is the issue of the patent. Whereas the hon. member himself has said—and the words here bear me out—that the exemption ends when the land is occupied or sold, and it is a notorious fact that the company has sold a million acres of that land without ever a patent being issued. If you admit, on the one hand, that the exemption expires by reason of occupation or sale, you cannot, in the next breath, hold that the exemption can only expire twenty years after the land has been patented.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I certainly did not make myself clear, if my hon. friend understood me to say that I made any contention whatever with regard to the meaning of this clause. I made no argument with respect to its meaning. I took the position taken by the right hon. gentleman the leader of the House, that the interpretation of the contract was a matter for the courts to decide. As to the last point of my hon. friend, he perhaps may not have been familiar with a case in which this contract has been in a way before the courts. The courts have held that there are two conditions which give rise to the power of taxation, one is the issuing of the patent, and the other the sale or occupation of the land. It has been held distinctly that the sale or occupation gives the right to taxation.

Mr. OLIVER. I was not alluding to the position of the hon. minister, but to the position of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). The contention that the exemption expired on the 15th February last, is the one I desire to maintain before this House and country. I maintain it on the ground that the word 'grant' in the Act was not intended to mean patent, but does mean, and was intended to mean, gift —that the land was given when the Act was passed, and the exemption began at that date, and ceases twenty years from that date. I claim that it is competent for this House to give that interpretation to the contract and thereby do substantial justice to the people.

I will go this far. I will admit that there is enough in what the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has embodied in his motion to make it arguable whether the exemption expired on the 15th February last, or will expire twenty years from the actual completion of the road. That would be a fair matter for reference to the court, I admit, and I would not ask for legislation from this House to prevent that question from going to the courts; but I do ask for legislation to prevent it from going to the courts in such shape as that it may grant an exemption of forty years to the railway company, when only twenty years were intended; and, under circumstances which might—but which I do not think will—exist, to grant to them an interminable exemption on the basis of a quibble as to the meaning of a single word, by importing an improper meaning into that word.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say a word with respect to the argument of the hon. the Minister of the Interior. It does not require any reference to Cooley or any one else to make us aware in this House that it is not a proper thing, except in very extraordinary circumstances, for parliament to interfere with contracts or vested rights. And in reply to what has been just urged by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), it is, as the Minister of the Interior has pointed out, very much more improper to interfere with such contracts when the country, which parliament represents, is one of the parties to the contract. Therefore, in so far as this resolution of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) purports to declare that this particular contract has a meaning which might not be the meaning assigned to it by the courts, I cannot agree that that is a motion which it was proper for this House to pass. At the same time I entirely concur in what has been said by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) with respect to the credit due our hon. friend for the zeal with which he has advocated the cause of the railway and the settlers in this matter.

I think that the hon. Minister of the Interior was not fair to the hon. member for East York in dealing with the precedent which that hon. gentleman cited. The minister held up this Act, and said it is a public Act, and therefore cannot form any part of the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think that a more illogical conclusion was ever put forward by any hon. gentleman. A part of the contract between this country and the Canadian Pacific Railway might be contained in a public Act, and it might be absolutely unjustifiable for this country to modify the terms of that Act until the purpose had been accomplished.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not intend by the use of the word 'public' to imply that because an Act was a public Act it was necessarily one that parliament might properly change, but I said that this was a public Act and such an Act as could be changed without violating the contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not agree with the hon. gentleman. I think that the second part of his argument was perfectly correct, namely, that it was an Act of which both parties to the contract assented. That was a perfectly good answer to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), but the first part of the suggestion as to this not being a precedent was not an answer at all, because this particular Act deals especially with the Canadian Pacific Railway and with the rates of duty which shall be charged upon machinery and other articles imported for the use of that company. Now, we have heard a great deal about the difficulty that has arisen in the North-west with respect to this taxation. I think that the remedy is entirely in the hands of the government, who, I suppose, have all the necessary information in their hands to enable them to deal with the matter. This difficulty has arisen for one or other, or partly from both of two causes. Possibly it has arisen from the looseness of the language in which the contract was originally couched. It is impossible to construe that language by the speeches of the hon. gentlemen who were in the House at the time. The greatest corporation or the poorest man has a right to have his contract construed in the court according to the words in which it is couched. Whether that question comes up as between this country and the greatest corporation in it, or as between this country and the poorest man in it, we should all stand by that—that the contract must be dealt with according to the words and not according to the intention one or other of the parties has in his mind in so far as it differs from these words. I say, the difficulty may have arisen from the looseness of the language in this respect—the words did not express the idea in the minds of the gentlemen who dealt with the question in this House. Or that it may have arisen from faults of administration. I do not say that that is the case, but it has been suggested that it has arisen in that way—through the administration not seeing that the grants were made at the proper time. If the difficulty has arisen from one or other of these causes, it may be that there is a grievance in the North-west. Hon. gentlemen in that portion of the country tell us that there is, because of this, a burden resting upon the people there with which they should not be saddled. If that is so, it is perfectly simple for the government to deal with it, if they think it a matter worthy of redress—and that is a question upon which the government, having the information as to its importance in their possession, should have a policy. It is competent for this parliament to declare by an Act that the period of exemption from taxation accorded to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall cease at a particular time—say twenty years from the completion of the road. I would not concur in the passing of that Act if it went no further than that. But it would be competent for this parliament, in the same Act, to say that the government should indemnify the Canadian Pacific Railway Company against any additional taxation which should be imposed upon them by reason of the passing of such an Act.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) please explain that a little more fully.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is very simple. I do not know at present what it would involve, and I do not say I would advocate it; but I say that I would give it fair consideration. It is a matter upon which the government should have a policy. Let the government, if the circumstances justify it, bring in a statute and pass it in this parliament, declaring that the exemption from taxation accorded to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by the contract referred to shall cease at a particular day—let us say, twenty years from the completion of the road or at some other convenient day—and by the same Act let the government undertake to indemnify the Canadian Pacific Railway Company against any increased taxation which shall be imposed upon them by reason of the passing of such an Act. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), speaking on this subject the other evening, said it would amount to some $50,000 a year. I do not know whether or not the circumstances are such as to justify the government in undertaking to pay that sum for a certain number of years for the future. If we are to believe representations of hon. gentlemen from the North-west, the circumstances would seem to justify it. I do certainly claim that it would be infinitely better for the government to pay $50,000 or $100,000, or any other sum of money, than to violate a contract entered into by parliament, and, in that way, to violate what I would regard as the national faith and honour.

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax), what are the terms of the contract?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The terms of the contract which are referred to are that the lands of the company shall be exempt from taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

Mr. OLIVER. From when?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). From the time of the grant of the lands from the Crown. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) evidently does not understand me. I am not giving an opinion as to the legal effect of the contract in that respect. But I say that it would be competent for the government to make it perfectly plain that the exemption from taxation should cease in twenty years from a certain date, and, at the same time to indemnify the company for any increased taxation put upon them by the passing of that Act. Then, in so far as the meaning of this clause is in doubt, they can do as they proposed to do this afternoon, leave it to be determined by the court. When it is once determined by the court, it would be a matter of little difficulty to ascertain what the amount of taxation is that would be imposed on the company in consequence of the Act. The government of this country, if the circumstances justify such an Act, would, by such an Act, undertake to indemnify the company against the consequences of such legislation, and so preserve inviolate the contract we made with the company and so preserve inviolate the national honour.

Mr. DAVIS. Would it not be as well, in the first instance, to submit it to the courts as to go at it in this roundabout way?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) was very anxious about this matter, but, apparently he is not anxious. I suggest that we can do this thing at once, if the circumstances and the information in possession of the government justify it, and then let the court determine it afterwards. If the court determines that the clause means what some hon. gentlemen in this House think it means, there will be no burden upon the country at all. If the court determines that it means something, which, under the legislation, would impose a burden upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, this country would assume the burden. I am suggesting something in the interest of my hon. friend's constituents—that is, immediate relief. But he desires, apparently, to have it postponed and dealt with in the courts for a couple of years before it is dealt with by the government and by this parliament. I do not suppose that the right hon. leader of the House (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would be pepared to say 'Yes' or 'No' to this to-night. I am not making a suggestion with a view to embarrassing him, but because I think the suggestion is one that he might well take into consideration. It is possible that he has not the information in his possession and is not sufficiently aware of the circumstances to be able to give a decided opinion on the matter. I throw it out as a suggestion which I think fairly deserves consideration by the government, and which, if it is brought down to this House by the government, will certainly receive fair and careful consideration on my part.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sure that a moment of reflection will convince the House, and will certainly convince the hon. gentleman himself (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that the proposition which he makes at this moment is altogether unacceptable, because it assumes the whole point at issue. My hon. friend proceeds upon the assumption that the exemptions exist at this moment, which is really the point to determine. The hon. gentleman who has brought this matter to the attention of the House on more than one occasion, and again this afternoon, and those who have brought the question up before him, all contended that the settlers of the North-west were labouring under a great grievance. There are no two ways of looking at that fact. We are all agreed that the settlers of the North-west are, at this moment, and have been for many years past, labouring under a great grievance by reason of the lands which were granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company having been exempted from taxation for a period of twenty years. Without going into recrimination, my hon. friend knows that if this burden has been, and is still, lying upon the settlers of the North-west, it is not the fault of those who sit on this side of the House. When the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was introduced into this parliament, most serious exception was taken by us to that feature of the contract. Our views did not prevail at that time, and the consequence has been this grievance from which the people are now suffering. But, the contract was passed by a majority of the representatives of the people, and it is now binding upon the whole country. The grievance exists in the fact that all the lands granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the 25,000,000 acres, were exempted from taxation during a period of twenty years; but the question has ever since been, at what period was this exemption to date from ? What is the limit of it ? Twenty years was the limit, but the question to be determined is, when did this period of twenty years begin to run ? Some parties in this House hold that it began upon the 15th of February, 1881, the date upon which the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway was ratified ; and my hon. friend some time ago supported and voted in favour of a resolution which asserted that it ran from the 15th of February, when the contract was ratified. He has changed his views since that time, he has changed his views in the space of three weeks. Three weeks ago he was of opinion that the period from which the exemption should run was the 15th of February, 1881 ; now he comes to the conclusion that he was all wrong then.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not necessarily.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, why did he vote for it ? If he did not believe in the proposition that the exemption should run from the 15th of February, why did he vote for it, and thereby do a great injustice to those whose cause he champions ? Now, however, he wants us to affirm that the date of the exemption should run, not from the 15th of February, 1881, but from the date of the payment of the money subsidy as provided in section 9, that is to say, when the road was completed. As a certain section of the road was completed, the money was paid thereon, when another section was completed another payment was made, and so on ; and his argumnt to-day is, that the period of exemption shall proceed from time to time as the land subsidy was earned. That may be the case, I do not say it is not the case, but that was his view. Well, here is one construction. My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), who is not here, and my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) who is here, contended that the period should run from the 15th of February, 1881. This may be the correct view, I do not offer an opinion, but, if it be correct, the leader of the opposition will admit at once that nothing could be more detrimental to the interests of the people at large than to pay compensation to the Canadian Pacific Railway for an exemption that no longer exists.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My right hon. friend surely does not desire to misrepresent me. What I said distinctly was that we should declare that this exemption ceased at a certain period, leaving the meaning of the contract to the courts, and that we should pay to the company any taxation which was increased by reason of the interpretation which we put upon the statute.

The PRIME MINISTER. Why pay them anything if there is no exemption existing ? As I understand the proposition of my hon. friend, he wants us to say that the exemption shall date from the time the patents are issued, and then the exemption shall run twenty years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We would not pay them anything if no exemption exists, because the courts would so decide.

The PRIME MINISTER. That only shows the need of referring the matter to the courts before we legislate at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I admit it.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the courts have decided that point, then we shall be able to decide what to do. If the courts decide that the contention of the hon. member for Lisgar and the hon. member for Alberta is correct, that the exemption should date from the 15th of February, 1881, then the exemption is already at an end, and there is no indemnity to be paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but, if on the contrary, the courts decide that the exemption should run from the date the patents are issued, and patents were issued in 1901, then the exemption would run to that extent to the year 1921. In that case parliament would have to determine whether an indemnity is to be given to the settlers, or whether an indemnity is to be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway. But, all this shows how absolutely essential it is that the question should be referred to the courts, that we should have an authoritative decision as to the meaning of the law before we can take any public action in the way of giving relief to the settlers of the North-west. The matter is so plain, so obvious, that I am surprised there is any difference of opinion with regard to it. For my part, I am rather pleased with the suggestion made by the leader of the opposition. He sees himself that if legislation is to be passed by the parliament of Canada to relieve the settlers of the North-west, the only basis upon which we can act is a judicial determination as to what rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway now exist under this section of the law.

My hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) rather taunted me a moment ago about precedents, both in this parliament and in the British parliament. I had to speak upon this question some time ago, and I took occasion to remonstrate against any attempt in this parliament to invade vested rights. My hon. friend pooh-poohed the idea of vested rights. He is prepared to deal with vested rights, not in the manner in which they are dealt with by the British parliament, but in the manner with which they are dealt with in France, simply to wipe them away without regard to whom the legislation may injure. That is not the policy we have followed in this parliament. I might refer to Mr. Gladstone, the great Liberal of whom I claim to be a follower. My hon. friend will remember that Mr. Gladstone was always very careful of vested rights. He was reminded a moment ago by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that Mr. Gladstone never introduced any legislation of any kind which interfered with vested rights, unless at the same time he provided ample compensation for those who were deprived of their rights. My hon. friend shakes his head, he is a sceptic on this matter. Well, I have here the legislation of Mr. Gladstone with regard to the Irish Church, and if my hon. friend will examine it he will find that in every case where his legislation interfered with a clergyman whose living was taken away from him, Mr. Gladstone took good care that every incumbent so affected should have ample compensation to the extent that he was injured. That is the policy which has been followed in every British parliament; and I am shocked and horrified that an historical truth so notorious should be controverted by anybody in this House, and especially by my hon. friend from East York, whose origin should have taught him better; I am surprised that it should have fallen to my lot to teach him a lesson upon this question. I adhere to the principle that if we have vested the Canadian Pacific Railway with any rights which we are compelled to interfere with or take away, the Canadian Pacific Railway must receive compensation. But, we must know previously exactly what those rights are, let us know at what period they began and at what period they terminate, let us know if they are terminated now, and when we know this from a competent judicial authority, then we will have a basis upon which to take action.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. MONK. I do not think the right hon. gentleman has clearly understood the proposition of the leader of the opposition, and I would appeal to any laywer in this House to maintain that he has represented it correctly. As I understand the proposition of my hon. friend here, that proposition was one, that, if adopted, would immediately put a stop to the state of affairs, of which have been told year in and year out since we have come into this parliament as existing in the North-west Territories. It puts that interpretation upon the contract, which I submit respectfully it surely bears, that the exemption ceased when the road was completed, and having done that, the grievance, so ably set forth by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) this evening, stops at once, because, taxation begins upon these lands. I was surprised to hear that hon. gentleman state to-night that these lands had been actually occupied by the Canadian Pacific Railway for a time, that they were afterwards sold and that upon the lands which the company occupied they never paid a cent in taxes. The remedy is in the proposition of my hon. friend here—pass an Act declaring that the exemption ceased at a certain time say twenty years, or say when the road was completed. When we propose that we are met by the argument of the hon. Minister of the Interior who says that we are interfering with vested rights. That is not the case, because my hon. friend added a proviso safeguarding the vested rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. In one clause he puts an end to the grievance. He puts the people of the North-west Territories upon a footing which I think every hon. member of this House believes the people of that country should occupy. In one clause he puts them on a proper footing, and in another clause he safeguards the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The right hon. leader of the government says this is a matter that can only be determined by a court of law. That is exactly the proposition of my hon. friend in the indemnity clause which is inserted, decreeing—and my hon. friend is very right, because he has had experience, as other hon. gentlemen have, that it will take a long time for that point to be decided and in the meantime the people will suffer from that grievance—that when the courts have decided at what period the payment of taxation should have begun under the terms of the contract, it will be the duty of the government to indemnify the company. Where is the contradiction in that? The Prime Minister says that the proposition of my hon. friend interferes with vested rights and it is evident from what he stated here to-night, that it is only by submission to the courts that we can obtain a solution of this difficulty. But, the solution, as was contended by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), and by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), is in our own hands, and it is our duty to the people of the North-west Territories to give them relief from the grievances under which they suffer. It seems to me with this proposition which was so clearly put before the House, and which is not approved of by the government, we should know what they intend to do to relieve the grievances of these people. I do not pretend to know the circumstances under which they suffer, but I have been in this House since 1896, and I have heard this question brought up year after year. I have heard from members representing the North-west Territories a full statement of the inequality and injustice which prevail in the North-west Territories, and I have not yet heard in all these five years any statement from the government beyond a general statement that it would be good to know what the courts think about it. What have they done to find out what the courts think about it? Nothing at all.

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt it will be pleasing for us to hear the way in which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Monk) and his leader (Mr. Borden, Halifax) have spoken on behalf of the western country, but, as one to whom his suggestion appealed as a way out of this difficulty, I was very much disappointed to find that the hon. leader of the opposition said that he would not be prepared to advocate it. What position, therefore, does he take? Is it a suggestion merely which is to be thrown out to catch those whom it may appeal to and not hurt the feelings of those whom it would otherwise hurt? If it was a suggestion which was to be brought into effect it could easily have been moved on a previous occasion, or it could be advanced upon an occasion upon which we could give the matter full and complete consideration. This is a discussion of a resolution which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has moved and with which the hon. leader of the opposition is not in sympathy. He says that the trouble may have been caused by either of two things, or partly by one, or party by both, first, by the looseness of the language in which the contract is couched, secondly by reason of the careless way in which the government have administered its affairs in connection with the contract. Which it is he is not prepared to say; nor is he prepared to express an opinion as to when the period of exemption ceased, or as to when it began to run. If that is all the light we have thrown upon it by the hon. gentleman, I do not think that the hon. member for East York should complain on account of my not being prepared to express an opinion upon this subject because his leader is not prepared to express an opinion as to when this exemption started or when it ceased. If his honoured leader takes that position, I think my humble position is not so difficult. I rose more to reply to the hon. member for East York than for any other purpose, because I believe he said, while I was not in the House, that I was not following an example which I should follow in this House. He made that statement before, and I think he knows that he treads on the tail of my coat. I am an Irishman. If Dalton McCarthy ever expressed an opinion whereby he was prepared to construe a contract made between two parties in the absence of one, I entirely repudiate it as being beyond the conception of any one who ever knew him as a lawyer. We are asked to say in the absence of one party what a contract means. It is not as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says construing, or altering, or varying a statute, because the statute is merely a confirmatory statute, one which ratifies an agreement, and if it does it refers to the agreement. The agreement is one which was entered into between two parties and no lawyer, or layman, can come to the conclusion that in the absence of one party we would be justified in altering that contract. I entirely agree with what the hon. leader of the opposition said upon that point. If the proposition were feasible, and if he would advocate the suggestion which he has so gratuitously thrown out, which appeals to me and other hon. members on this side of the House, that the government or parliament should say to the people: We will stand between the two parties to the contract and ask the courts to say that the company should have paid or they should not have paid, we would be in a different position. Unless some such enactment is provided whereby the party who is not present upon this discussion is afforded protection, I cannot see how one can consent to the resolution of the hon. member for East York.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unfortunate that whenever the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) rises in his place in this House he cannot refrain from giving us a little of what was called by the former hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) 'graveyard politics.' I think it is about time that was stopped. As to the merits of the question I have been waiting to hear from the members from the North-west Territories. It is true that we had a speech from the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). It is left to the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) and to the leader of the opposition and to other members on this side to advocate the claims of the settlers who are undergoing the hardships of pioneer life in the North-west, while those members who are supposed to represent the settlers neglect the interests of their people. I have the greatest sympathy with the settler in the North-west who finds himself suffering under this burden.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why did you fasten the burden upon the settler ?

Mr. WALLACE. We did not fasten any burden upon the settler. My interpretation is that the lands are taxable to-day and that the government should so declare. But the government have done nothing. They have made promises but they have neglected to carry their promises out as in a hundred other cases. This government has been in power for six sessions of parliament and although they have often been warned about this matter they folded their arms. In hundreds of other cases they have referred matters to the Department of Justice to get an opinion, but why have they not got an opinion from their law officers in this case ? Why did they not ask their Minister of Justice to give an interpretation and stand by it, and if the Canadian Pacific Railway or anybody else was dissatisfied with it let them go to the courts. The government knew that the twenty years expired on the 15th of February last, but nothing was done by them. Do not we remember the case of the colonization companies. About the same time the Canadian Pacific Railway was undertaken the government asked the citizens of Canada to assist them in colonizing the North-west, and they gave them grants of land on payment of money and services rendered. The lands were granted to the colonization companies in proportion to what they had earned under the government regulations, and immediately the bargain was concluded the government handed the patents to the colonization companies, and those who occupied the lands have been paying municipal taxes ever since. And, if the colonization companies held the lands they have been liable for municipal taxes ever since, and the same rule should have applied to the Canadian Pacific Railway, because in that regard they stand on all fours with the colonization companies. To-day the leader of the opposition has made a proposal which I think is an admirable one.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, hear, hear. I say it is an admirable proposition.

The PRIME MINISTER. But you have just told us that the exemption is at an end.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is not inconsistent.

Mr. WALLACE. That is not inconsistent with the statement made by the leader of the opposition, and the leader of the government has either not understood the proposal of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) or he has deliberately misrepresented it. However, I do not believe he would intentionally or deliberately misrepresent it. My own opinion is that the Canadian Pacific Railway lands were probably amenable to taxation years ago, but at all events they are amenable to taxation to-day.

Mr. McCARTHY. From what date would the first payment be made under the suggestion of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is quite clear as to what he is talking about. The proposal of the leader of the opposition is, that if the courts should decide that the Canadian Pacific Railway was liable for taxes, then the government should step in and free the Canadian Pacific Railway from any liability in that regard. I do not propose to say when the date commences, but I do say that in my opinion the date of the exemption has expired now. I again appeal to the government to do something in the matter and to get a move on. They are getting the name in the country of being a slip-shod government. They fail to recognize that they are the servants and not the masters of the people. They seem to think that because times have been good by reason of circumstances over which they have no control, that the good times excused them from doing their duty. They have neglected the interests of Canada from the day they came to power until the present and it is time for them to wake up to a sense of their duties to the people.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I am pleased to know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) takes such an interest in the North-west members and that he proposes to take the whole of the North-west Territories under his wing.

Mr. WALLACE. I am pleased to know that I have brought two western members to their feet already.

Mr. DAVIS. There are occasions when the members for the North-west are fighting the battles of the people, and when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is to be found on the other side advocating the interests of corporations and of the Canadian Pacific Railway particularly.

Mr. WALLACE. When ?

Mr. DAVIS. In the Railway Committee every day.

Mr. WALLACE. When ?

Mr. DAVIS. Go upstairs to the Railway Committee.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) cannot mention one instance of such a thing. I have always been on the side of the people as against the corporations.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) cannot refer to what takes place in the Railway Committee unless a report is made to the House.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I go further and say that I have heard the hon. gentleman advocate the cause of monopolies and corporations in this House day in and day out during the four years that I have been here.

Mr. WALLACE. I challenge the hon. member to cite one instance.

Mr. DAVIS. When the hon. gentleman advocates high protection, he is advocating the interests of the trusts and combines.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He supported this very contract.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, the hon. gentleman supported this contract, whereas if he had been looking after the interests of the people of the North-west at the time, as he appears to be since he got into opposition, this state of affairs would never have been brought about, and this discussion would not have been necessary. But the hon. gentleman at that time was quite willing that all the public lands of the country should be given away. The hon. gentleman was a member of a government which gave away millions of acres of land, and tied them up and left them exempt from taxation ; and I never knew him to raise his voice then against this iniquity that he talked of to-night. But it makes a great deal of difference whose ox is being gored. The hon. gentleman has changed his mind since he took a seat on the other side of the House. I want to inform the hon. gentleman that the members representing the North-west Territories are looking after the interests of the people in this matter. We differ as to what should be done, but there is a right way and a wrong way. I am not prepared to say that hon. gentlemen opposite, when they drafted the contract, did not draft it in such a way, and with their eyes open, as to leave a loophole for the Canadian Pacific Railway to crawl out of. I do not suppose this House is prepared to interpret that contract. The right place to have it interpreted is in the courts. I myself am of opinion that the lands were granted when they were earned. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has another opinion ; the leader of the opposition has another ; and the hon. member for East York has another.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, I agree with you.

Mr. DAVIS. It all goes to prove that the only way out of the difficulty is to submit the matter to the courts for a decision. We did something this afternoon in passing the motion which I proposed, and which I think will meet the views of the people of the North-west Territories. The lands are there ; any assessor can assess them ; but the difficulty has been that no school district or municipality has felt itself wealthy enough to start a lawsuit against a great corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway. They feared that the case would be carried from court to court until they would not be able to meet the expenses and the school district or municipality would be ruined. But the government have announced this afternoon that they are prepared to assist any municiality which will institute proceedings on this line, and they will carry the case along and find out the rights of this matter. I do not think the government could do anything more than that ; but there are gentlemen in this House posing as champions of the people of the North-west Territories, and trying to make a little cheap political capital for themselves. The hon. member for East York says he is going to the North-west Territories. I hope he is. He is not the first of the gentlemen on the other side who have gone there. We have met them and sent them back ; and if the gentleman comes, we will treat him exactly as we treated his leaders—one who was the apostle of free trade in the Territories, while the other leaders were preaching the gospel of protection in the east. These gentlemen have four or five policies, or if they have any policy at all, it is like the Yankee's suit of clothes—big enough for any man or small enough for any boy. The leader of the opposition has a policy in regard to this matter, but we never heard a word of it until the resolution was passed this afternoon, which, to my mind, definitely settles the question. The leader of the opposition might have enlightened us on this question when the discussion was going on this afternoon, or on other occasions when we had before us the Bill of the hon. member for Lisgar, who, I am sorry to see, is not in his place to-night. He was a bold champion of the people of the North-west Territories, too; and yet his seat is vacant to-day. I have heard it rumoured that he has arrived at some kind of understanding with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and on this occasion has taken to the woods. I am sorry he has left his desk-mate, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), alone to-night. They have been hunting the library together, and have had pages running for them, but very little has come of it. The hon. member for East York has fired his cannon to-night, and what does it amount to? He got up and said he had two propositions. He said the government could buy the Canadian Pacific Railway off, and in the next breath he said there was nothing at all to buy. His resolution is nothing but an expression of the opinion of this House. I would rather have the question submitted to the courts, so that we shall have an interpretation from them and know exactly what position we are in. I believe the exemption is practically up now, but I only give that as my own personal opinion.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, after the very warm invitation given to members from the North-west Territories by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), I wish to take a minute or two for further reference to this subject. I may say that I agree with that hon. gentleman entirely in the inference to be drawn from the remark he directed against the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that it is well for gentlemen in this House to have some knowledge of the subject which they attempt to discuss, and I am pleased to have to-night gained a little more knowledge of this subject. I have lived in the North-west for a considerable time, and I have heard a good deal of discussion on this subject; but to-night from the lips of the hon. member for West York I heard a new phase of the matter suggested; namely, that this period of exemption may have terminated some years ago. Up to the present time I have been limited to the thought that it was not possible that the period could have terminated before the 15th of February last. That is the contention which was put forward in this House two or three weeks ago in the Bill proposed by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). That was put forward as one extreme interpretation. But the hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace) suggests that the period may have terminated years ago, and I am pleased to have been here to gain further light on the subject.

Some aspersions were thrown by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), and some other hon. gentlemen opposite, on members from the North-west in connection with this discussion, which were entirely uncalled for. People in the country, who might read alone the speech of the hon. gentleman, would conclude that members from the Territories considered this discussion a laughing matter, and were endeavouring to thwart the hon. gentleman in his efforts on behalf of the people. I entirely resent that imputation. I did put some questions to the hon. member for East York, but solely with the idea of obtaining information and leading to a better discussion of the subject, and not at all with the idea of thwarting any effort anybody might make on behalf of our western people. But, I may tell the hon. gentleman that the people of the North-west are not going to be hoodwinked by buncombe resolutions, such as the one before the House. This resolution, even if adopted unanimously, would have no practical effect whatever. If the House were to unanimously express its opinion as to the interpretation to be placed on the contract, that would not have any more effect than the individual opinion of any hon. member. The proposition of the hon. member for East York, and his elaborate argument, were that this question should not be referred to the courts. This proposal if adopted unanimously would not keep it out of the courts, and would have very little effect, even if adopted, on the decision of the court.

The hon. gentleman himself who proposed this resolution has exhibited several changes of attitude. Three weeks ago he voted for a Bill providing that the period of exemption should be held to have commenced on the 15th of February, 1881.

Mr. MACLEAN. Are the two positions contradictory? Do they not both move along the same line?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, if the interpretation which he wishes the House to express by his resolution should be adopted, and it should then turn out that the other intrepretation, expressed in the Bill of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), to which I have referred, were the proper one, he would be, by this resolution, submitting the people of the North-west Territories to the injustice of labouring under this exemption some four or five years longer than they should. The other night he expressed his opinion, in the most practical manner in which an hon. member can express it, that the period of exemption should be held to have commenced on the 15th of February, 1881. To-night, however, he seeks to impress on the House the opinion that the period of exemption did not commence then but at some later day—anywhere from five to six years later—and then again, in his argument he seemed prepared to accept another opinion, namely, that perhaps the contention of the Canadian Pacific Railway was the right one after all, and that parliament should start and negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to buy out the rights of that company, whatever they might be.

For my part, I have long held the opinion that the period of exemption began from the date the company had completed its line, by twenty mile sections, and earned its subsidy in money and lands. And that is, I believe, the opinion which will prevail in the courts. I have not very much fear that the people of the North-west Territories will not be given justice in the courts, and if the common sense view be taken, there can be no two opinions but that the contention which ought to prevail is, that the Canadian Pacific Railway were entitled to twenty years exemption on their lands, and no more. If that view should prevail, it will be impossible for the courts to decide that the period of exemption only dates from the issue of the patents.

If it be not presumptious, I would like to offer a word of advice to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I was struck by a remark made some days ago by the Minister of Railways, who said that he did not very much fear that in a conflict between a railway corporation and the people, the corporation was going to get the best of it. In his opinion, the corporations should be the last people to desire to bring about such a conflict. I am of that opinion. I think that in a conflict between the corporations and the people, the people are very certain to get the best of it, but I am not so very sure whether some of our railway corporations have been careful to abstain from bringing about such a conflict, or from creating in the public mind a certain amount of hostility that might lead to one. The recent occurences in Manitoba ought to bring the Canadian Pacific Railway to a recognition of the fact that out in the country west of Lake Superior there is a certain amount of feeling against the policy pursued up to the present by that corporation. In the very question before the House, there is proof that the people are not entirely unjustified in entertaining certain feelings against the policy pursued by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Any man can see that the contention put forward that the Canadian Pacific Railway should only be allowed twenty years exemption, and not forty years, is an entirely proper contention, but we are given to understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway are going to claim the full pound of flesh, and take advantage of any technicality in the language of the Act, in order to obtain forty years exemption if they can. That may be pointed to as one of the reasons why, in the country west of Lake Superior, there is a certain amount of feeling against this great corporation, which feeling is pretty well justified by conduct of which this claim on behalf of the company is a very striking example.

If I thought this resolution would do the slightest good, I would vote for it.

Mr. MACLEAN. It will not do any harm if you vote for it.

Mr. SCOTT. It might not directly, but indirectly it would be an encouragement to hon. gentlemen to come forward with demagogic and buncombe resolutions, and I do not propose to encourage anything of the kind. I do not think there will be any practical value in the House declaring for this resolution, and shall, therefore, vote against it.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Before we go on with the next Public Works estimates, I would ask the House to take up item 152, one sub-item of which was reserved, as some hon. gentleman asked that it should not be finally disposed of at the time.

Public Works, chargeable to income—Quebec—Victoriaville public building, $4,000.

Mr. MONK. What will be the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). This amount will complete the work.

Public Works, chargeable to income—Ontario—Deseronto public building, site donated by city corporation, $20,000.

Mr. WILSON. How much has been spent on this public building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Work has been done to the value of about $2,000, but this has not yet been paid. Tenders were asked for the foundation only, and the contract was awarded, but the contractor died before completing his work.

Mr. WILSON. Will the amount here asked for finish the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. The site was given by the corporation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Public Works, chargeable to income—Ontario—Kingston Royal Military College, additional buildings, gymnasium and hospital, $5,000.

Mr. BRITTON. I notice that there is a decrease in this item, as compared with last year, of $3,000. Is that because the original plan of the building calls for less expenditure, or is there to be a further expenditure this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid we will have to ask for an additional sum of money to complete the work.

London drill hall and armoury, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much has been spent on this already ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work of construction has not yet been commenced. We have only purchased a part of the site.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the property to cost when it is purchased ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand we have bought land to the extent of $5,000 so far.

Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will the site itself cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is difficult to say, because negotiations for the purchase are still going on. My deputy tells me that he hopes we will not be obliged to spend more than $11,000 for the site. But I will not pledge myself to any figures now.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that is a very loose way of proposing a vote to this House. We have spent $5,000 already, and we expect to spend a considerable larger sum, and we are going it blind. I think the minister ought to be able to give the committee some definite information to justify us voting upon it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It depends upon whether the Department of Militia will ask for additional ground around the building. If there is no additional ground asked for by the military authorities than is necessary for the building itself, we expect the site will not cost more than $11,000. But my hon. friend knows that London is a very important place, it is the centre of a military district, and perhaps it may be found good policy to buy more ground and to have a larger area.

Mr. SPROULE. The government are not able to tell us whether they are going to buy a certain definite extent of ground or not. It appears the hon. gentleman has been buying it piecemeal. I understand the minister to say they had already paid out $5,000, but he does not tell us how much ground they have purchased for that sum.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had to buy by piecemeal because all the properties were small and belonged to different parties. I remember we had to conduct a good many negotiations. The properties belonged to small owners of land, and we had to buy by piecemeal. We do not yet know whether the Militia Department will find it necessary to buy more. If it is found necessary to buy more it will cost more than $5,000 or $6,000. But the site which is contemplated to-day will cost about $11,000 more, and we have already paid $5,000 so far.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has not told us whether the ground they intend to purchase is half an acre, or one acre, or twenty acres, or fifty acres, on one thousand acres. We ought to have some information as to the size of the ground.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What we have purchased already is 66 feet wide by 165 feet long, for which we have paid $5,000. We are negotiating for the purchase of a piece 72 feet wide and of the same length, from two different owners, with one of whom we have nearly concluded a bargain.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will the building cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The plans are not yet completed, and I am not yet in a position to say how much it will cost. But I am given to understand it will probably cost between $80,000 and $100,000. London is the centre of military activity, and it will be found good policy to erect a fine building and a fine armoury.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I understand the hon. minister to say they have nothing but guess-work of what it is going to cost. $100,000 is a large sum of money, but the minister does not seem to have any idea of how it is going to be spent. It seems to me that is very imperfect information to submit to the House upon which to ask us to vote money and to begin a work that will cost $100,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is difficult to follow any other policy than the one that has always been followed by the Department of Public Works under all ministers. No minister can bind himself to exact figures. I say that the plans so far as they are made contemplate a work costing between $80,000 and $100,000. I give these figures because of the information I am receiving from my officers. I am not an engineer myself, and I cannot give detailed information except what is conveyed to me by my officers.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us what the size of the building is to be and whether it is to be of brick, stone or mud ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The plans are not altogether completed and I would not bind myself as to the exact size.

Mr. SPROULE. Approximately, what size ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that the armoury is going to be about 200 feet long by 75 feet wide.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says that the building is to be 200 feet long when he has told us that the lot is only 105 feet by 138 feet. How is he going to put up such a building on that lot ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not completed the purchase of the site yet.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman told us that his ground was 66 feet by 105 feet and that he proposed to purchase 72 feet more so that the lot would be 105 x 138 feet on which he is going to erect a building 200 feet long.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have two pieces of land which would make a total of 327 feet long by 138 feet wide and I am going to have a little more. I will have plenty of ground upon which to put the building.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Does not the hon. minister think that $100,000 is a very large sum for a building of that sort ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I do not think it is.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Well, I do, comparing it with other buildings which I know have been built. The building at Victoria, 160 feet by 75 feet, only cost $43,000. It is a stone and brick building with armouries and everything that you want.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am spending a large sum of money in Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. That is very different.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Still I am spending a very large sum of money there for a similar armoury. The contract is $66,000 at Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I do not wonder that the armoury is costing a great deal because it is being built by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this building to be of brick or stone ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Brick and stone.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has no estimate of the cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Public tenders will be asked and certainly the lowest tender will be accepted.

Mr. SPROULE. But that is not the feature that interests us. We are asked to commence an expenditure that means ultimately a large sum of money. Suppose we were asked to justify that expenditure and we could give no more information than the hon. gentleman gives, I do not think we could justify it before the country. If the hon. gentleman's friends were on this side of this House they would be most unlikely to allow an item of that nature to go through without very much more information than the hon. gentleman has given us regarding it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, I verily believe that I have given all the information that the hon. gentleman should be entitled to have. We have bought the land, paid so much for it, we are going to erect a very fine building. There is a strong military spirit in that district and we want to give that military spirit a new impetus by giving the district a new drill hall.

Mr. SPROULE. I do think that towns and cities in which large buildings of this character are erected, should do something towards furnishing a portion of the land. I know that in several districts that has been done and in some instances the Minister of Public Works has insisted that they shall give a portion of the land. If one town or city does it, why not apply the same principle all round ? It is unfair to those towns and cities that have given either a free site or supplied a portion of the cost to exempt others and ask parliament to put up all the money.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. minister say that no plans have been completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No plans are completed.

Mr. MONK. And no estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Except the office estimates.

Mr. HENDERSON. As we are practically just beginning the estimates of the hon. Minister of Public Works, I think that in matters of this kind it would be just as well if the minister could tell us how he arrives at the amount of money he is going to expend on a particular building. I understood him to say that he knew nothing about this one except what he got from the officers of the department. It seems to me it is not the minister who runs the department but his officers. I wonder who is responsible. We generally think that the minister is responsible but he absolves himself from all responsibility for a proposed expenditure of $100,000 and places it upon the officers of his department. The minister should have some definite, fixed principle in his mind as to what he is going to do at London. If he is going to put up a building costing $100,000, let him instruct his officers to draw specifications which will not exceed $100,000, including the land, and confine it to that. Then, we would know that the minister has some definite policy, but as far as I can see he has no policy at all in this matter. I do not know whether he intends to be guided by the political exigencies of the case or by what circumstances he intends to be guided. He does not know what the building is to cost. When he asks for a certain amount of money he says : It will cost somewhere between $80,000 and $100,000. That is very indefinite. If the minister has decided to spend $100,000 he should inform the committee that that is all he wants for this building, that it will be completed for that amount, that nothing more will be asked, and that he will assume the responsibility himself and not leave it for the officers of the department. Let him instruct his officers to put up a building that will not exceed that sum, including the land. I think the minister should give us some definite information as to the system he is pursuing. We are moving in the dark because we know nothing about what the cost of this building will be when it is completed. Probably it will cost $150,000. The minister knows nothing about it and any information he has, he gets from his officers. If one of his officers thinks it would be a nice thing to put up a building costing $150,000 the minister will come down and ask for another estimate to supply the necessary funds. If we are to have responsible government the minister must assume the responsibility of telling this committee just exactly what money he is going to spend, and he must be held responsible for the expenditure that he instructs his officers to incur.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have instructed my officers in the way which has been suggested to me by my experienced friend. I thought I had made myself clearly understood. I told the committee that the probable cost would be between $80,000 and $100,000. My hopes are, that we will spend not more than $80,000, but at any rate we will not spend more than $100,000. I cannot say that I am an expert architect, but like every other Minister of Public Works, I must trust my officers. Of course I am fully responsible for what I say here.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. This is a sample of the ridiculous arrangement there is between the Militia Department and the Public Works Department with regard to militia buildings. I do not blame the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) because the system is the same now as it was years ago. Time and again I have seen the folly of it. As it is now, the Minister of Militia makes up his mind to erect a military building and his architect gives a rough idea of what is wanted, then the Minister of Public Works proceeds to draw his plans and before they are half finished the Minister of Militia wants something else done. There is constant conflict between the two departments. To my mind the militia buildings should be built by the Militia Department, and then they would know exactly what they wanted. I suppose the Minister of Public Works wants to have all the buildings under his own control, but it would be far better and cheaper that each department should look after its own buildings. It is a perfect farce as it is now.

Mr. GILMOUR. I hope nothing said here will deter the minister from carrying out his plans with regard to London. He may not have his plans fully formulated now, but I do not doubt but that in time he will. I would remind the House that since I have been a member there has not been a dollar voted to London except for this armoury, and I would point out that for militia purposes there is no better centre than is that city. There has not only not been a dollar expended in London during the time I have been a member of the House, but there has not been a dollar of government money expended within twenty miles of London. I have no doubt that the minister will be able to formulate his plans and to know exactly what he is going to do, and I hope the House will not deter him from making the expenditure.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to know exactly what this building is going to cost. It is a simple matter for the minister to instruct his officers to draw plans of a building that will cost with the purchase of the land not more than $100,000, and then parliament will know what we are expected to vote in the future. It is a bad plan to allow this matter to remain open, to be dangled before the electors year after year so that if the political exigencies demand a further $30,000 or $40,000, the minister will have a free hand. Let the minister tell us exactly what the expenditure will be and then let him cut his gown according to the cloth.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Tenders will be asked and I will be very much surprised if there is not a difference of perhaps $10,000 or $15,000 between them. How can I say what the exact cost will be. All I can say is that we will not spend more than $100,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, we have got that statement now.

Ottawa Public Buildings—Renovating, painting, &c., outside work, including Eastern Block iron work and re-leading windows of parliament buildings and library, $7,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was some discussion in the early part of the session as to the accommodation for members of the House, and there was complaint of rooms having been taken from members of the opposition. The minister then said he thought he would be able to provide additional rooms in this building. Has that idea been abandoned, or is it intended to proceed with it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only room available is that occupied by the Committee on Agriculture in the tower, and that room will be arranged so that gentlemen on the other side will have the exclusive use of it when the committee does not sit. Next year I hope we will be in a position to have better accommodation. I know that members on both sides of the House have a large amount of work to do, and they have not the accommodation they should have. The chief architect has been instructed to prepare a plan which I will submit to hon. gentlemen opposite so that they may give their views on it. I think my hon. friend will find when the supplementary estimates come down, that I have not forgotten this matter.

Mr. SPROULE. Do these improvements refer to the tower room only ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is only for this session.

Mr. SPROULE. The session is getting pretty well over now. There was a suggestion to build on the vacant space outside the Chamber here, because we not only require additional rooms for the members but larger committee rooms.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The plan of the chief architect will give six additional rooms and a large room for committee meetings.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The minister should ask for a vote for renovating the interior of the eastern and western blocks, because these buildings are in a disgraceful condition at the present time. Any man who compares the legislative buildings at Quebec, Toronto and Victoria with the buildings here, will say that the Ottawa buildings are no credit to Canada. The oilcloth is worn out and the passages are dirty, and want painting and plastering. I think the government should take the matter in hand at once.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Prior) is quite right. Every time I pass through the corridors I am ashamed of the condition they are in. But it is very hard at times to get money from parliament, and in making their estimates, the ministers have been afraid to ask parliament for the necessary amount. These buildings cost a vast amount of money to keep up. There is no man who will not be obliged, however careful he may be, to spend a large amount of money for that purpose. Up to 1893 or 1894 parliament used to vote larger sums of money ; but the late Minister of Finance cut down the expenditure, and the appropriation was starved out. When I took office I raised it a little, but was scarified a good deal for doing so ; and now, after having given my careful attention to this point, I say that the money placed at my disposal is not sufficient.

Pictou Public Building, $7,000.

Mr. ALCORN. Will this complete the building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, this will complete it.

Mr. ALCORN. I understand that it is for a post office and custom-house ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. ALCORN. Are there any vaults in the building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. In these buildings of small size, instead of building vaults, which cost a large amount of money, the policy of the department is to buy safes.

Mr. WILSON. Was the whole $13,000 spent last year, and will the $8,000 now voted complete the building ? I understand the $21,000 is for the building without the site ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total cost of the building and the site will be $25,000. The amount paid for the site was $4,600, which was voted three or four years ago. This vote will complete the building.

St. Thomas drill hall and armoury, $24,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the work on this been commenced yet ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract has been awarded about a month ago. I do not think the work has yet begun.

Mr. BENNETT. From whom was the site purchased ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot really say. The site was purchased by the Militia Department for $8,000. My department had nothing to do with the purchase of the site. It was placed at our disposal.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is the building to cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $45,000, including the site.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister know what the size of the site is ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The site is known as the Wilson property, being the south part of lot No. 3, concession 8, in the township of Yarmouth, at the corner of Wilson street and Chester street. The size of the lot is 660 feet on Wilson street and 198 feet on Chester street. It comprises thirty-two lots, including the street called East Avenue, and covers 8⅔ acres.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the Wilson referred to Dr. Wilson. the defeated Liberal candidate in the Liberal interest there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Upon my honour, I do not know.

Mr. WILSON. You do not know officially.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know officially or unofficially.

Sarnia public building, $30,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask how this building is progressing, and how much money has been expended out of the vote of last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that the foundations are ready, and that the work is progressing favourably. The contract was awarded on September 17, 1900, at $62,000, to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. HENDERSON. Could the minister tell us the name of the contractor ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. G. A. Proctor.

Mr. WILSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. Last year the hon. Postmaster General, who was then acting for the Minister of Public Works, informed the committee that the intention was to erect a lighthouse on the top of this building, the site being most favourable for that purpose, as the light would be seen for a long distance up Lake Huron, and also down the river. I would ask the minister if he has in contemplation the erection of that light ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that this is the first time I have heard of that lighthouse. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have to give me some more light on the question. If my hon. friend asks me for permission to erect a light on the roof of the building, I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the hon. minister is not going back on the good town of Sarnia after it has sent him so respectable a representative, and after promising $62,000 for the purpose of beautifying the town by putting up a handsome building opposite the city of Port Huron. He also promised that on the top of this very fine post office, an additional structure was to be erected which would attract attention to Sarnia, up the lake and down the river. I hope the hon. gentleman is not going back on his promises now. I thought the idea a most excellent one, and have no hesitation in saying that the hon. minister would be wise to give effect to it, even though the promise was made by another gentleman who was acting in his place.

Mr. BENNETT. Three years ago the hon. gentleman removed the caretaker from the public building at Orillia, although there was no complaint against him. He assured the House that he had decided on a new line of conduct, and that was to dispense with the expense of caretakers in public buildings, and give the postmasters charge of the work of looking after the building for a nominal consideration. I presume the hon. gentleman will see that no caretaker is appointed for the building at Picton or Woodstock or Sarnia.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think I declared myself to the policy my hon. friend alludes to. I may have said that in as many cases as possible, our policy would be to give lodgings to the postmaster, and we are doing that at Picton now. But it would be out of the question to try and do that everywhere. We will have to be guided by the circumstance. The difficulty is that these public buildings are used for customs as well as post offices, and the postmaster would not always like to live in a couple of small rooms which might be sufficient for the caretaker.

Mr. BENNETT. But the postmaster did not live in the building at all at Orillia, from which the hon. gentleman removed the caretaker.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is an old case. Let us not reopen old sores.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think this is a very opportune time to consider the whole question of the erection of public buildings throughout the country. For several years I have brought to the attention of the committee a system under which the country could be provided with suitable buildings for post offices in the smaller towns. I have the honour of representing a county which does not possess a large town; and in which, not having an incorporated town or village of more than fifteen hundred or eighteen hundred population, the Minister of Public Works is not likely to give a public building of any kind. But what I would suggest to the minister is that instead of expending some $30,000 in the construction of public buildings in a county town, that money should be divided so as to allow $6,000 for a building in each town or village of from 1,500 to 1,800 inhabitants. It is well known that you can purchase a site for about $1,000 and have $5,000 left with which to erect a substantial brick building, that will give all the accommodation necessary for a post office in a village or town from 1,500 to 2,000 population. The department will then be able to supply room sufficiently large for the post office so as to prevent the overcrowding which now takes place every morning and evening at the distribution of the mails.

Last year I drew the attention of the Postmaster General, who was representing the Minister of Public Works then in Paris, to this plan, and he seemed to treat it with a great deal of favour. Not only was it received with favour by him, but also by the then hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), and other hon. members.

These buildings will be a great improvement on the improvised post offices now in use, both as regards the security of the mails and the accommodation to the public.

The minister told us that he did not construct vaults in public buildings because it was cheaper to purchase safes. I do not know whether he got that advice from his officers, but I feel confident that a vault can be constructed cheaper than a safe can be purchased. A safe would be of very little value, which cost less than $400 or $500, and a good vault can be constructed at less than that. Apart from that, there would be in these buildings abundance of room for a residence for a postmaster.

I know something of the character of a building that can be put up for $5,000. You can erect for that amount a substantial brick building large enough for the accommodation of any postmaster, and also for those having business with the post office. The postmaster will be the caretaker of the building, or if he did not choose to reside in it, he could place it in the hands of his deputy or rent it to some other responsible person who could take care of it. And the government would be saved entirely the expense of a caretaker. More than that, the government would save the rent which they now pay. When money can be got at 2½ per cent, a saving would be effected every year, even if we did increase the national debt a certain extent.

I think this is an opportune time to draw attention to this matter, and I hope that my statement will not be made in vain. Last year, the acting minister assured me that the matter was worthy of consideration, and promised to look into it. I would like the minister to take a note of this matter and see if he cannot come to the rescue of such counties as Halton and others that have no public buildings and that cannot hope, under present circumstances, to have a building for twenty-five years, because they have no towns sufficiently large to justify an expenditure of from $25,000 to $40,000. It would only be dividing the moneys of the country fairly and distributing them through the different counties. I am sure the scheme is one that would commend itself to the minister. I fail to see any other plan by which the counties to which I have referred can receive an expenditure except that which I have marked out. Therefore, I trust that the hon. minister will bear it in mind, and that when he comes down with his estimates next year he will have, if not the county of Halton—though I hope it will be Halton—some county in whose case he will undertake an expenditure of this kind, to show how the money can be spent so as to give additional accommodation to people and save the money of the Dominion.

Mr. HOLMES. I had the pleasure of endorsing the plan of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) last year, and I am glad to see that he is consistent in advocating it now. It seems to me that this is a sound and feasible plan for establishing post offices in the smaller towns. I hope that the ideas that he has advanced will be taken up by the other hon. gentlemen opposite, because I am going to try to prevail upon the Minister of Public Works to locate a post office in the town of Clinton. The plan of the hon. gentleman from Halton seems to me a good one, and one that might be followed with profit to the Dominion, because the construction of a public building stimulates a spirit of emulation that, perhaps, could not be stimulated in any other way. I do not wish to take up time at this hour of the night, but I am sure that the Minister of Public Works will give this plan the consideration to which it is entitled. There are small towns of from 2,500 to 4,000 inhabitants that would be well satisfied with a public building costing not more than $5,000, which would accommodate not only the post-office, but also the custom-house, if one is located in the town.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). If the Minister of Public Works is going to inaugurate a plan of this kind, of course, he is not going to forget West Elgin. There are four towns in that constituency similarly situated to those that have been spoken of, and that are deserving of his consideration. There is the town of Ridgetown, with about three or four thousand inhabitants. I do not know if there is a public building there or not, but I am satisfied that if a public building were put up there it would be greatly appreciated. West Lorne, Rodney, Highgate, Shedden and Dutton are other prosperous villages on the Michigan Central Railway. These buildings could not only contain the post office, but an excellent reading-room could be established in each, where the young people could meet and——

An hon. MEMBER. Dance.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). A building of that kind would make the people feel an interest in the government. A reading-room, above all things, should be established, and the postmaster could see that it was properly kept, and the right kind of literature was there. The young people could spend their evenings there. The great trouble of the young people in our villages is that, except the store, to say nothing of the tavern, they have no place to spend their evening. This want would be supplied if a building of this kind were erected. If you are going to establish a building of that kind, I hope you will not forget West Elgin.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I wish to support the proposition of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), and endorse what has been said by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes). I think the plan is a good one, and one that could be made feasible. Towns of from fifteen hundred to two thousand inhabitants would greatly appreciate a public building such as one that has been mentioned by the hon. member for Halton, even if it did not cost $6,000, even if it cost only $3,000. It would enable our post offices to be kept in proper order. As it is now, in many towns, the post office is a disgrace to the country. I am quite in sympathy with the proposal, and ask the Minister of Public Works to take note of it. Perhaps some day I shall appeal to him privately on this particular line. While speaking of this matter, I would like to say that I agree with the hon. member for Halton that vaults are better for these buildings than safes. The idea is to keep the public records safe from fire rather than from burglars, and vaults are safer and can be built more cheaply. In buildings costing from $3,000 to $5,000, you can get a very good vault for $300. You can buy the vault doors for $150, and the mason work will not cost more than $150—built solid from the bottom, with an arched top. I have one in my own building, which serves the purpose very well. We know that it is fireproof and we feel safe.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hear a great deal about public buildings. There are few members of parliament who do not give me the pleasure of informing me of the need of public buildings in their constituencies. The great difficulty is that when we come to the House to ask for money, there are pretty large sums——

An hon. MEMBER. Increase the public debt.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Speaking for myself, I sympathize with the idea that has been expressed. I think we should have a good many public buildings—not too expensive, but decent small public buildings. There is this difficulty, however—that when you have erected a public building you have not done everything. It costs money to keep it up, repairs, lighting, heating—all these cost money. Something has been said as to vaults and safes. We pay for a safe, if I remember aright, about $250, and we cannot possibly build a good vault for less than $500 or $600. The door alone will cost about $250. I grant that a vault, in some ways, is better, but it takes more room. If you have to take for a small public building the space necessary for a vault, it takes off a considerable portion of the space that might be used for ordinary purposes. The reason why we have bought the safes is because they will take less room. I was asked the question by my hon. friend as to the total cost of the public works at Sarnia. The figures that have been placed before me are $83,375.19.

Mr. ALCORN. Do I correctly understand the minister to say that the postmaster was to reside in the building at Picton, and also the collector of customs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not both of them, the postmaster will reside there.

Mr. ALCORN. Is the postmaster the defeated candidate in the last election ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. I think all will admit that he was a capable man when he was on this side of the House, and that he will be a very good postmaster.

Mr. BENNETT. I think in this connection the House should emphasize its condemnation of the Minister of Public Works. I will mention again a case that I have already referred to. In the town of Orillia a man was caretaker of that public building, and although there was no charge against him, and no investigation, the Minister of Public Works threw him out by the crop of the neck, and assured me and assured the House solemnly that the caretaker should be in the future the postmaster. Now, the minister has never kept his word in that respect, because he has installed a new caretaker. Here the minister finds that a political hack is going to be postmaster in that place—because that is what the late independent member was, a political hack—but instead of being the caretaker of that building, I am bound to say that we will see this gentleman will have a comfortable residence. It is well for the people to know that the Minister of Public Works is always ready to yield to party exigencies.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not very well remember the facts that took place two years ago.

Mr. BENNETT. When the minister has laid down a principle in his own mind, surely he should have respect for it. But I can recall this fact to his mind. I have forgotten exactly where the town was, but it was somewhere in Ontario, where the minister did exactly the same thing. Without investigation and without charge, without the common decency of inquiring into the case, he put a man out of his position, and within a few months after installed a new man. If my recollection serves me right it was in Napanee.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no use in employing strong words in discussing this question, I will not get mad at all.

Mr. BENNETT. I should not either. But I wanted to show that in the town of Orillia the minister was a party to the disgraceful act of turning out a man without giving him an investigation, when there was no charge against him, and then solemnly pledging his word, when he was acting on the principle of saving public expense, and almost before he had time to turn round he had installed another man in the position. Let it be understood by the country, because in that part of the country it is well understood, that the Minister of Public Works is obedient to every political exigency. I admire the Minister of Public Works in that he is not hypocritical about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not believe I have ever broken my word willingly. I have a good many failings, but I do not believe any man in parliament can tell me that I have broken my word. I do not remember the circumstances clearly, but I think I dispensed with the services of a gentleman in Orillia who was caretaker. The caretaker of a public building is a temporary employee that any minister can dispense with without any inquiry. I believe his salary was $15 a month. I replaced him by the postmaster. Something happened, I do not remember what, the postmaster's services were dispensed with, and then a caretaker was appointed. As to my having erected to the dignity of a principle the policy that a caretaker should always be postmaster, I never was guilty of that, though I have said, and still say, that it would be better as often as possible that the postmaster should act as caretaker.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am grateful to the minister for the kind manner in which he listened to the appeal which I made to him, also to the other hon. gentlemen who spoke in support of the plan I suggested. Now, I had hoped that the minister would give us some assurance that he would at any rate try an experiment along the line I indicated. The minister told us that nearly every county had put in applications for public buildings, but he seemed to drift away from the subject, and did not touch the salient point. What we want to know is whether he is going to give this scheme his consideration, whether we may expect that the counties which have not large towns are to receive the same favour as the counties which have large towns.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is trying to draw me out on dangerous ground. The Minister of Finance is by my side, and if I were to make promises to-night, I would have a hard time to-morrow. Much has been said about my bossing the whole thing, unfortunately it is not the case. I would not dare to make any promises when the Minister of Finance is so near me.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the Minister of Finance had last year a surplus of $8,000,000. I think there would be no difficulty at all in drawing upon him for a small portion of that surplus.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did think we had a very satisfactory surplus last year, but after listening to my hon. friend opposite, it seemed the whole thing was a delusion, and there was no surplus at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. That seems to be the opinion of the Minister of Public Works also.

Toronto Dominion Buildings—Improvements, renewals, repairs, &c., $4,000.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister, I hope, is not going to turn a deaf ear to the appeals that have been made to him again and again to complete the drill hall.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is not the time to discuss this question. The time will be when the supplementary estimates come up.

Mr. CLARKE. If the minister will undertake to say that there will be an item for the completion of the drill hall in the supplementary estimates, we will not discuss it now. We have made no objections at all to the improvements at London and St. Thomas. I would like to remind the committee that the city of Toronto provided a site for the new drill hall, which cost about $150,000, and it is not unreasonable after eight or ten years, to ask the government to complete that drill hall. Accommodation is lacking there for the artillery and cavalry branches of the service. Representations have been made to the hon. Minister of Militia (Hon. Mr. Borden, King's), and to the Minister of Public Works as to the necessity of completing that building. I am sure it is not unreasonable to draw his attention to the fact that this accommodation is urgently required and should be provided,. He says that in the supplementary estimates a sum will be provided to complete the drill hall. We will take his word for it. I believe that if the minister gives his word he will carry it out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Matters of this kind belong to the Department of Militia and Defence. I am only a builder. If the Department of Militia and Defence asks me to erect an armoury in Toronto, I shall do so with the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. CLARKE. We have a site and the armoury is almost completed. What we have asked the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to do is to complete the building that was contemplated in the first place. Representations have been made time and again by deputations from the military authorities asking to have this building completed and to provide necessary accommodation for the cavalry and artillery branches. The Department of Militia are quite anxious to have this building completed and I think we have a special claim, in view of the fact that we provided the site for the armoury at a cost of between $140,000 and $150,000. I think it is not unreasonable to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works to give us some assurance that when the supplementary estimates come down there will be an item in those estimates to complete that building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Unfortunately, I am not in a position to give that assurance.

Mr. BRITTON. We are all wondering if the hon. gentleman, who is making this piteous appeal——

Mr. CLARKE. Not piteous at all.

Mr. BRITTON.—Certainly a strong appeal, is the same gentleman who is so often objecting to the lavish expenditure of this government.

Mr. CLARKE. I have never objected to my knowledge to any expenditure that is guaranteed by the government to any municipality, if that municipality carried out its part of the bargain by supplying a site. In this case the municipality provided a site approved of by the military authorities, a site costing between $140,000 and $150,000. The building contemplated provided quarters for the military and cavalry. What we are asking the government to do is to complete the building. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton), who represents a military city, will not say that it is an unreasonable request. We are not making a piteous appeal at all. We are asking the government to fulfil its part of the contract.

Mr. THOMPSON. It seems to me that the remarks of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) are quite in order. Toronto is the finest garrison city we have in Canada, it should have sufficient accommodation supplied for its needs, and I hope it will be supplied.

Mr. CLARKE. We are waiting to hear from the hon. Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to give any assurance. The matter does not properly belong to me, but my hon. friend may rest assured that if the Department of Militia and Defence makes up its mind that it is necessary to erect a building there and if parliament gives me the money, I will erect the building all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In other words, if the government decide to erect the building it will be built.

Windsor drill hall, $50,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Would the hon. Minister of Public Works tell me from whom the site was purchased for the Windsor drill hall, and what was the amount paid for it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The site has been given free by the municipality.

Mr. WILSON. What will the building cost, completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will cost, completed, $66,609.78.

Mr. SPROULE. This is another illustration of what I spoke of early in the evening. The hon. minister tells us that Windsor has given this site free. When we come to St. Thomas, a place of about a similar size, we pay $8,000 for a site, and at London we purchase a very small site for $11,000. I think the minister should adopt some principle that would be fair to all. If one city or town gives a site another city should be expected to do the same, or to give a portion of it. I do not think it is right to compel the city of Toronto, or Windsor, to give a site when you go to London and spend every dollar that is necessary to provide a site.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think what is happening now has happened for the last fifty years. There are towns and cities that have given sites, and there are other places which have not given sites. It is quite impossible to have a definite policy. In other words, the government cannot say that if sites are not given we will not erect public buildings, because there are towns and cities where a site would cost too much. There are other localities where sites can be bought more cheaply and they are given free. There are localities that are so anxious to have public buildings that they give sites. I need not say that we are always glad when these sites are given free, but I cannot pledge myself never to buy any sites. No minister would do it.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. minister that his predecessor, Sir Hector Langevin, made it a rule generally, to insist upon the town, or city, in which the building was to be erected, giving a site, or a portion of the cost of it. I do not think it would be proper in all cases to compel them to do so, because there are some cases where it would cost a great deal. But, I still hold that it is not fair to one town or city to make it pay every dollar that goes into the site while in other places the government pays for both site and building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is mistaken as to what was done in Sir Hector Langevin's time. The very same policy was pursued then that is followed now. In some cases sites were given free, but not usually.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been a member of this House a great deal longer than the hon. Minister of Public Works and I think my memory is quite as good as his is. I stand by what I have said. When we would apply to Sir Hector Langevin for money for a public building almost his first question would be : How much is the place going to give ? That was the general rule which he followed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do the same thing.

Mr. SPROULE. In regard to public buildings it was the same. The hon. gentleman has spoken from memory, and I think my memory is quite as good as his on this subject.

Mr. CLARKE. I am sure that if the policy of the government is to buy sites in some places and erect buildings when municipalities are sufficiently liberal to vote sums to provide a site, the least the government can be expected to do is to complete the building that is contemplated to be erected on that site.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has been on that side for such a length of time that he should have used the strong, able arguments he is using to-night. In former days these arguments did not carry weight. Perhaps they will carry more weight with me. All the same during the last twelve or fifteen years my hon. friend and his friends from Toronto have been vainly insisting upon having that armoury completed. Perhaps it may be better now. We may have better times in Toronto now.

Mr. CLARKE. This is not the first site that the city of Toronto has provided the Militia Department for militia purposes. When the original drill shed was found to be inconvenient the city provided a site in the rear of the city hall. That became too small. The armoury did not provide sufficient accommodation. They bought this new site at the suggestion of the militia authorities, and the plans were prepared for the construction of the building. In view of the fact that the municipality went to that large expense, we are not asking anything unreasonable from the Minister of Public Works when we ask to have provided the additional accommodation required for the garrison.

Mr. SPROULE. What will the full cost of this building be ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $66,000 in round figures. This vote is to complete.

Woodstock public building, $6,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What stage is this building in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not finished, but it is very well advanced. The total cost will be $54,000, including site.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the contract price ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract price for the bare building was $31,790. The government bought the site.

Mr. SPROULE. What did it cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $6,900.

2. Will the Minister of Militia state definitely when said orders and forms of application will be issued?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden) :

1. There has been no continued delay. The regulations to govern the issue of long service medals are included in the General Orders for March 1st. These General Orders were approved by His Excellency in Council on March 13th, and a certified copy was received on March 16th, 1901.

2. Steps are being taken to have the necessary forms printed.

Mr. TARTE.

LONG SERVICE MEDALS.

On the question :

1. What is the reason that the long service medals have not been issued by the Militia Department?

2. Is it the intention of the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence to issue them this year?

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. As this is the same question which has just been asked, and as we have the information, I will drop it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Dropped.

LIEUT.-COL. VAN WAGNER.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria)—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Lieut.-Col. Van Wagner's name is on the list of 'retired officers' in the Militia List. Why is not the name found in the 'Reserve of Officers' list?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). Because he was not transferred to the reserve of officers when retired. In explanation of that further, I have this note :

On the 8th May, 1899, Lt.-Col. Wagner was notified that the general officer commanding the militia refused to recommend an extension of his tenure of command, and he was also informed that it was the intention of the general officer commanding to recommend that he be transferred to the reserve of officers.

Lt.-Col. Wagner did not resign, and afterwards the general officer commanding recommended that he be retired and his name placed on the retired list. No reasons were given for so doing.

MACAULAY POINT, B.C., CLAIMS.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Is the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence willing to allow the property owners at Macaulay Point, B.C., whose claims for damages owing to the erection of forts at that point were stated by the hon. minister to be inadmissible last session, to take their cases to the Exchequer Court?

3. Is it not a fact that similar claims were paid by the Conservative government when in power?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). This is a matter which must be decided by the Justice Department. On the application of any one of those interested I shall be glad to refer the question to the Justice Department for a decision. There were two claims paid on the 28th May, 1892.

MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN MIDLAND AND VASEY.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Is there a daily mail service between Midland and Vasey, Ont.?

If not, when was the same discontinued?

If there has been of late a daily mail service, when was the same commenced, and if now discontinued, why was it so discontinued?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND :

1. The mail service between Midland and Vasey was made daily on the 13th October last, and the contractor was called upon to perform the service as increased at the rate which he received for the tri-weekly service, that is, the amount to be paid was to be increased from $119 per annum, which was his contract pay for the tri-weekly service, to $238 per annum.

2. On the 1st February last the post office inspector at Toronto reported that the contractor demanded to be paid at the rate of $1 a day or $313 a year, and as he would not abate his demand, instructions issued from the department to reduce the service back to tri-weekly frequency, and to invite tenders for a daily service from the 1st July next.

ROCKY POINT, P.E.I., BREAKWATER.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

Is it the intention of the government to extend and improve the breakwater or pier at Rocky Point, Prince county, P.E.I., this year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). I may say that the question is under serious consideration at the present time.

LOBSTER FISHERY REGULATIONS, P.E.I.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

Is it the intention of the government to allow lobster fishermen between West Point and Cape Traverse, Prince county, P.E.I., to run their lines and set their traps a few days before the 20th May, in each year, in order that they may be ready for work when the season opens?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). No. The order in council fixes the day and hour for the placing or setting of lobster lines and traps in each locality and special privileges cannot be granted the fishermen mentioned in the question.

VOTERS' LIST—KING'S COUNTY, N.B.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

Is the government aware that upwards of 400 names were fraudulently added to the voters' list for the year 1901, in the parish of Rothesay, in the electoral district of King's county, N.B., of persons not entitled to vote in said electoral district in either local or federal elections?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government has no official information of any frauds having taken place in the preparation of the list for King's county. My hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) is aware that the preparation of the list is under the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities, and if any frauds have been committed, I presume and have no doubt that a proper investigation will take place and the parties punished, if there are guilty parties. With regard to the last question, I might tell my hon. friend that the complete list of voters of Kings county, N.B., for the year 1901, certified by Geo. O. D. Otty, Esq., county secretary, was received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 24th of December last.

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for :

Statement showing the receipts and expenditure of the Montreal Turnpike Trust, and a copy of the annual statement furnished the bondholders of the said corporation by the Montreal Turnpike Trust for the past ten years.

He said : I have already had occasion to offer some observations to the House upon this motion. I spoke in French because I wished my remarks to be thoroughly understood by some of the members of this House who come from the part of the country which this motion particularly interests. I am informed that the staff of the French reporters is incomplete to-day, and I shall as briefly as possible finish my observations in English, the more so as I wish particularly to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to the concluding remarks I have to make on this motion. I mentioned the fact, when this motion was under discussion, that the corporation of the Montreal Turnpike Trust is organized in a way which is altogether repugnant to modern ideas—organized under statutes which date back over half a century, and which are not at all in consonance with such legislation as governs to-day administrative bodies of that description. In fact, as I pointed out the other day, that corporation is entirely administered by certain trustees, a majority of whom represent the creditors of the corporation. These trustees, as the hon. Minister of Finance knows, are elected yearly by the bondholders, that is, the creditors of the corporation. Some officer of the Department of Finance goes down to Montreal in the beginning of February, and there, without taking any cognizance of the state of affairs of the company, or its mode of administration during the past year, but simply representing the Dominion government, the holder of all the bonds of the corporation, names three administrators, who form the majority of the board ; and these names are suggested to him by parties who control the patronage in the district of Montreal. In no sense do they represent the farmers who principally use the roads around Montreal, nor do they represent any other interest than the interest of those who have claims on the corporation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Did I understand my hon. friend to say that the Dominion government are the sole creditors ?

Mr. MONK. That is, I believe, the case. They have bonds to the extent of $195,000. At any rate, the immense majority of the bonds are owned by the Dominion government, and it is well known that the Dominion government completely control the nomination of the three trustees who form the majority of the board of administration of that corporation. The two remaining trustees are nominated by the Quebec government, and are also, I claim, named irrespective entirely of the interests of the large majority of those who have to use the roads under the control of that corporation. When I tell you thaf of the five trustees who administer the affairs of the corporation, only one, I believe, is identified with the agricultural interests, you will readily realize that the interests of the farmers, the market gardeners, and all those who largely use those roads, are necessarily neglected. The only trustee who is an agriculturist is Mr. Thomas Trenholme. The others are merchants residing either in the city of Montreal or outside the city, and, consequently, they have neither that special knowledge which is necessary to a good administration of the great public highways around Montreal, nor are they in a position to realize readily the wants of the farmers nor to inspect as often as they should the highways in question.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Can the hon. gentleman give the names of the present trustees?

Mr. MONK. I could not give them all from memory. One is Mr. Gallibere, a well-known merchant of Montreal.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is there one from St. Laurence ?

Mr. MONK. There is Mr. St. Pierre, a wood merchant, of Cartierville. But, I maintain that Mr. Trenholme is the only member representing the farmers. If I am incorrect in that statement, I would like my hon. friend to correct me. Now, this is a body which, I think, of all bodies, ought to be constituted under the elective principle which nowadays rules bodies of this kind. As I have pointed out to you, in this case it is the creditors of the corporation who rule its affairs. I believe that is a great fault ; I believe it is one of the principal causes of the great dissatisfaction which exists in and around Montreal with the administration of that body. I believe it is within the power of this government to correct that fault, and it is advisable that it should be corrected as soon as possible. Another point is this, which it is sufficient for me to indicate to show how very defective this administration is. According to the statutes governing the corporation, they are not obliged in any way to render an account of their administration. This is entirely contrary to all the rules which prevail in the administration of bodies of that kind in the province of Quebec, and, as far as I am aware, in any other province under modern laws. They are not obliged to render an account to the government, nor even to the bondholders, and they are not obliged to publish any statement of their affairs annually. There is no provision in the law which obliges this corporation to call for tenders when executing any of those important public works which, from time to time, become necessary in conection with the improvement of the roads around Montreal. We find at the present moment that the revenues under that system of administration are completely insufficient to enable them to meet their liabilities. As an instance, the government are well aware that since 1896 not one cent has been paid on the indebtedness for interest on the large amount of bonds held by the government ; and what is the reason ? One of the principal reasons, I have no hesitation in saying, is the lack of proper legislation governing the administration. Another reason is the fact that they are obliged, owing to the expansion of the city of Montreal, to establish toll-gates at almost every road corner. At the present moment they are paying, I believe, over $13,000 a year merely for the maintenance of toll gates, for the city of Montreal is stretching out in all directions. New roads are being opened, new municipalities are being created, and cross roads have to be established ; and at every one of these cross roads the Turnpike trustees are obliged to erect what they call a check gate, and place there a toll-keeper, whose office it is to verify the payment of toll by passengers at some other spot. The more it becomes necessary to establish toll-gates and check gates, the greater the expense becomes ; and in spite of that, they are not in a position, with their present system of administration, to give us either good roads, which we very much require, or the necessary roads. They are obliged to confine themselves strictly to those great arteries which were put under their administration over fifty years ago, and they do not open the roads which become necessary by changed circumstances. I could give you instances of a man going along a newly-opened road of a municipality, one which is not at all under their control, and for crossing one of their highways, being compelled to pay toll. Take this instance of the utter inability of this corporation to meet our wants. At present farmers coming along St. Laurent, from the county of Two Mountains, Laval and Jacques Cartier, are obliged to climb Côte des Neiges, and from the top of the mountain come down a most precipitous hill, which has been invaded lately by the Montreal street railway, with its double track. That descent is most dangerous and difficult, and it would be the easiest thing in the world for this corporation to open a road starting from the St. Laurent road at a given point, which would relieve farmers from the necessity of climbing to the top of the mountain, and which would, without any ascent of any importance, fall into the Côte St. Luc road. The proprietors of land along that projected highway have offered the necessary land, and even volunteered to subscribe money, and to furnish a large quantity of road metal ; yet, we find this corporation unable to do anything. What is the reason they allege ? They say that they have no means, that the interests of the bondholders must be safeguarded. Thus, while the interest is never unpaid, the public are entirely deprived of the facilities to which it is entitled.

Let me give another instance to show how the interests of the bondholders interfere with the public interest. Before the advent of this government to power, the farmers of the counties surrounding Montreal were given the privilege of return toll tickets, good for the space of forty-eight hours. Why was this privilege granted ? Because such is the condition of the central market of Montreal, that farmers living any distance from the city, are under the painful necessity of leaving their farms about eight o'clock in the evening in order to secure any kind of a place on that market the following morning. They arrive in Montreal at two or 2.30 a.m., and even then are not always able to get a place. On this account the Turnpike Trust thought proper to give them the advantage of a return ticket good for forty-eight hours. That privilege was, however, taken away in 1896, on the ground that the revenue of the trust was insufficient to meet the interest on the bonds. Endeavours have since been made to re-establish that most equitable provision, but in vain.

When any one suggests any change which would have the effect of making the Turnpike Trust Act a little more in accordance with modern ideas, the objection is made that any legislation of that kind must necessarily be accepted by the bondholders or otherwise we would be interfering with vested rights. I therefore ask by this motion for a statement of the affairs of the corporation during the past ten years, so that we may know exactly the facts in the case. While there is no provision in the law obliging the corporation to furnish such a statement, I think the Minister of Finance need only to demand one, and it will be promptly forthcoming. That statement will demonstrate most clearly that it is utterly hopeless for the holders of those bonds, under the present conditions of things and with the growing needs for roads, to expect to be at any time reimbursed the amount due. And when the fact is demonstrated—as it will be by this statement—that this is a bad debt which can never be recovered by this government, I venture to suggest to the Minister of Finance, and the minister who has particular charge of the interests of the agricultural classes, that they should see that communication is had between this government and the provincial government, with the view to a proper reorganization of that corporation, and the Dominion government, upon proof positive that there is no hope for the recovery of the indebtedness, should consent to write it off and enable us to have an institution that will have a proper care for the maintenance of the roads.

I remember the late Prime Minister of Quebec, Mr. Mercier, declaring it was desirable that these toll-gates should be abolished. The thing is easy of realization. You will find no city of the size of Montreal which has such a quantity of toll-gates, meeting at every corner in its vicinity. This is an eye-sore and an inconvenience, not only to residents but to strangers, who ask how it is possible in the neighbourhood of such a large city to have impediments to easy circulation, which are not to be found in the vicinity of American cities or of Toronto.

Our situation is such as should invite the earnest consideration of the government. And if the government find that all hope of the recovery of this indebtedness is gone, they should write it off and allow us to reorganize ourselves properly. We have given large amounts to railways and have helped other public enterprises in a variety of ways. This government collects a great amount of revenue from the city of Montreal, and if the statement of facts I have given be true, this is a motion which should commend iteself to the attention of the government.

Mr. THOMAS FORTIN (Laval). I have followed the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), both when he spoke on the 27th of February last, and to-day, with a great deal of interest. As the representative of the county of Laval, I have taken a great interest in the abolishment of toll-gates and toll-bridges. It is well known that the county of Laval is divided into two portions—the old county of Laval, which comprises Isle Jésu, and the newer portion made up of five parishes in the lower end of the Island of Montreal. The old county of Laval being an island, none of the inhabitants can leave it without crossing a bridge and paying toll, and when they reach the Island of Montreal, they have to pay another toll on the macadamized road. I felt so much interested in this subject, and had for a number of years, that, on two former occasions, when I happened to run as a candidate for the local legislature, this question formed one of the items of my political programme. The first occasion was in 1888. I believe I was the first candidate aspiring to political honours who took up this subject as one of the planks of my political platform. When I ran in 1888, I studied the matter as best I could, and pledged myself, if returned, to do all I could to obtain relief for the inhabitants of that old historic county. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) was then residing not far from Isle Jésu, and he must have been aware that my opponent, Mr. Leblanc, took the opposite view; but, instead of trying to help me upon this question or giving assurance that he would try his best to secure the abolishment of toll-gates, he remained silent. Mr. Leblanc was elected on that issue as much as on any other. I regret that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier did not at that time think as he does now, and come to my rescue——

Mr. MONK. I was not then in politics.

Mr. FORTIN. But, surely, the hon. gentleman was liable to come into politics.

Subsequent events have shown that not only was he an aspirant for political life, but an aspirant for the position of one of the leaders of his party. The second opportunity was in 1890. There again the same issue was presented to the people. I had the good fortune to bring into the county the late Honoré Mercier, who was the Prime Minister of Quebec; and, in the parish of St. Martin, he pledged his government to abolish tolls on all the bridges and macadamized roads the moment the municipality should take the necessary steps to take over these works and maintain them in proper order. There again Mr. Leblanc, who was returned, fought this as well as the chief planks of my platform. And then the hon. gentleman Mr. Monk, who was not in politics, but who must have been aware of what was going on in the vicinity of Montreal, did not come to my assistance—I presume, because at that time he held the same views as Mr. Leblanc. I say this to show what interest I have taken in the subject, and it will show also to what an extent the inhabitants of the old portion of the constituency I represent are interested in the abolishment of these toll-bridges and toll-gates. It is needless for me to say that I still hold the same views. I sincerely desire that all these impediments, which may have arisen through special circumstances, should be removed. I am in favour of liberty in all its forms, and I like to see a man free to go from one portion of the country to another without being obliged to have his purse in his hand to make payments at these toll-gates. But if the hon. member has changed his mind, as I hope he has—for I presume that in 1888 and 1890 he was in accord with his political friends—perhaps he will allow me to congratulate him. And perhaps I may be allowed to ask him if he has any plan for the attainment of the object he desires. He seems to have given the subject a great deal of consideration.

Mr. MONK. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) asks me the question, I can only say that I have no definite plan. Even if I had studied the matter for a year and had a plan matured, and the government were not ready, my work would be in vain. And we on this side have too much to do watching the government to work out plans on these subjects. But surely what has been done in every other large city we should be able to do in the city of Montreal.

Mr. FORTIN. I accept the statement of the hon. member in the first place, that he has not a plan to suggest. I accept his statement, in the second place, that he has a great deal to do on his side of the House, and that he has not had time to give mature consideration to this subject. I understand that the hon. gentleman has, in fact, undertaken a great task. We have been told by the newspapers representing our opponents that they had resuscitated the dual leadership system, which was introduced in the 50's, when their party took the name of Liberal-Conservative. At that time, as is well known, one of the chiefs was the chief of the Conservative party of Upper Canada, and the other was the chief of the Liberals of Lower Canada. If I understand aright the nature of the task assumed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), he is now supposed to be the chief of the Liberals of the province of Quebec.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to a point of order. I would like to know what this has to do with turnpike roads.

Mr. FORTIN. I think I am perfectly in order. I asked a question of the hon. member, which he answered telling me that he had so much to do that he had no time to consider this subject. I am now dealing with that part of his statement, and it seems to me I may be permitted to say what, to my mind, is the task he has undertaken and what are the obstacles in his way. If I am well informed, the hon. gentleman stands in this peculiar position as regards the work he has undertaken—he is chief of the Liberals of the province of Quebec, as he stands in the place of Sir George Etienne Cartier, when the alliance was formed with himself as chief of the Liberals.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) undertake to be guided by me, then ?

Mr. FORTIN. We will consider that later on. I wish to point out for the moment how difficult is the hon. gentleman's task. He stands, therefore, as I say, in the position of chief of the Liberals in the province of Quebec with not a single member as a follower. Supposing now the hon. member chooses to say that he stands as chief of the French Conservatives of the province of Quebec. If my impression is correct, there again he has no following, he is not even chief of himself, for he is not a full-bred French Canadian.

Mr. MONK. I rise to a point of order. This is the last day for motions of this kind, and I know many hon. gentlemen have motions they desire to press. I have made my remarks as short as possible, and to the point. I really think, Mr. Speaker, you ought to insist upon the observation of the rule which requires an hon. member to confine his remarks to the subject under discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would advise the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) to confine his remarks as much as possible to the question before the Chair.

Mr. FORTIN. I did not propose to go on at any length in that line, and I will now come back to the subject of the motion. I fail to see what object the hon. member has in view in making this motion. He is not prepared to suggest any plans by which the abolition of these toll-gates might be made an accomplished fact. The hon. gentleman should be aware that this is no place for discussing any such plans, even though any scheme of that kind was feasible. The hon. gentleman knows very well that this is a local matter falling exclusively within the jurisdiction of the legislature of Quebec. He has alluded to the difficulties that his constituents have to overcome in passing over these roads; he has alluded to the past administration of the Montreal Turnpike Trust and to the present administration. I was unable to gather from the hon. gentleman's remarks whether he had any particular fault to find with the present administration. I understand that he finds fault mainly with the commission itself. He says that this commission is partly elected and partly appointed by the government of the province of Quebec. That is perfectly true; but it was true prior to 1897. The present commission was appointed in February, 1897, therefore the system was in existence prior to 1897. Was there any suggestion made at that time to change the system that has obtained since? No, no suggestion was made when the friends of the hon. member were at the head of that commission. Now that the friends of the present government are entrusted with the powers of that commission, there are, apparently, all kinds of fault to be found. The hon. gentleman has suggested that the present government should abandon its claim as holder of debentures to the extent of $95,000. Well, Sir, knowing what I do of this commission, I join with the hon. member in that advice. I think it is just as well for the government to abandon that claim at once. The interest on it has not been paid since 1895, and is not likely to be paid at any time in the future. But perhaps the statement made by the hon. member on a former occasion needs to be explained. I gathered from his remarks on a former occasion that he said the interest was paid on these bonds up to 1895. Now, as a matter of fact there was no interest paid for quite a number of years; no interest was paid in 1895 or 1896. It was a very exceptional occurrence when interest was paid, and the result has been that the present commission had to face a deficit of some $28,000 when they took control of the commission in trust in 1897.

Mr. MONK. My authority was the answer given by the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), who said that interest had not been paid since 1897.

Mr. FORTIN. I am not finding fault with the statement. I say the hon. member left the House under the impression on a previous occasion that interest had been paid up to 1895.

Mr. MONK. Up to 1897.

Mr. FORTIN. That interest had been paid up to 1897, and none had been paid since?

Mr. MONK. That is what I said.

Mr. FORTIN. Now, let me draw the attention of the House to the fact that in 1895 a statute was passed in the Quebec legislature which speaks of arrears of interest on several issues of bonds amounting to $187,200. Now, the accrued interest upon that amount had reached the bagatelle of $180,000. It is stated in the preamble of that Bill that no interest had been paid on the sum of $120,000 since the 15th of July, 1881, and that no interest had been paid upon $67,200 since the 5th of July, 1871. Therefore, the hon. member will see that his information was inaccurate when he said that up to 1897 interest had been paid. As a matter of fact, no interest had been paid upon these bonds since 1881 in the one case, and since 1871 in the other. As I said before, interest was paid for 1895 and 1896; but still the commission was left face to face with a deficit, which was admitted by Mr. Mondaux, who was then secretary-treasurer, to amount to $18,000, and which was found upon the special report prepared by an auditor to amount to $28,000. Now, this shows conclusively to my mind that the trust is unable to pay interest on these bonds except by neglecting the roads; and to that extent I agree with the hon. member when he suggests that the government should give up these bonds entirely. But this would not remedy the evil in any way. These roads go through twenty-seven or twenty-eight municipalities. There are four or five roads. There are two roads that go as far as Lachine, crossing along the way, all the different municipalities. One road goes through Côte des Nèiges, and goes down to Cartierville, through St.-Laurent. Another road leads from Mile End and goes through several municipalities, the municipality of Villeray and the parish of Sault au Recollet. Another road leaves the eastern portion of the city and goes as far as Point au Trembles, passing through the parish along the way. I think there are altogether twenty-seven or twenty-eight municipalities interested. Now, some of those municipalities have commuted their tolls upon these roads, in other words, have acquired the roads within the limits of their own territory; others have not. Now, I fail to see how it could be possible to maintain these roads if the government were to give up their bonds. I understand from the hon. member that he does not wish the government to give up their bonds and let the toll-gates remain.

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. FORTIN. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, only wishes the government to do its share and then to see some other authority abolish the tolls. Now, what municipality will undertake the maintenance of these roads? This is a matter that requires a great deal of consideration. I may say that the members who compose the trust to-day are just as anxious as any one for the fulfilment of that trust. They render their services without salary, and have no personal interest in the matter whatever. They have no interest whatever in it. They are just as anxious as anybody to see toll-gates removed from the Island of Montreal. But, the subject is full of difficulties of every kind. I think that nothing short of a royal commission, appointed by a special Act of the parliament of Quebec, and given extraordinary powers, can deal effectively with this subject. As it is, there are several municipalities which would not take over the roads if offered them for nothing. I know that an offer was made to the municipality of Point aux Trembles to give up six miles of the road. The receipts upon that road scarcely paid the amount of the salary of the gate-keeper. The municipality would not take it on any consideration. What is the remedy for the trouble? The hon. member calls for a statement of the receipts and expenditure for the last ten years. What would this amount to? It is very true the government can get such a statement. A similar request was made before the legislature, and a similar request was granted. It is a public corporation of a mixed nature, and it is bound to give information to any interested party. Any interested party may go there and obtain all these figures. But, since the hon. gentleman has thought proper to bring this subject before the House, it seems to me that he does not discharge his full duty merely in the observations he has made. I expected his conclusion would be the suggestion of a bold plan of some kind by which these obnoxious toll-gates could be removed, and I was very much disappointed that he could not suggest anything to that end. The hon. gentleman has alluded to what was known as the 48-hours ticket, which was sold to the farmers and parties interested, just a short time before this new commission assumed control of the affairs of the trust in 1897. The hon. gentleman knows very well that this 48-hours ticket was nothing but an election dodge, in order to secure votes probably for the hon. gentleman himself, or, for some friends of his party. This meant a loss to the commission of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4,000 a year, and the hon. gentleman must also know that the receipts have been so much decreased by the establishment of the electric railways and by the introduction of bicycles, and so forth, that they can hardly pay the ordinary expenditure of the trust and keep the roads in a proper condition. Now, I do not know that the remarks made by the hon. gentleman call for anything more to be said upon the subject. I repeat that I am very anxious to see these toll-gates and toll-bridges totally disappear. There is no portion of the whole province of Quebec where these are more cumbersome than for the inhabitants of the old county of Laval, wherein I reside myself, but I would like to see somebody coming here with a definite scheme by which a proper end could be attained.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) has found fault with my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) for introducing a motion to find out and inquire what is the amount due by this trust company on the Island of Montreal to the government.

Mr. FORTIN. That is not the motion.

Mr. HAGGART. He found fault also with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier because, as he said, in some election campaign the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, or his friends, had made an election cry about the abolition of what we look upon in our section of the country as a relic of barbarism—toll-gates. He also found fault with my hon. friend because he has not a practical plan by which these toll-gates can be abolished. It seems to me to be the consensus of opinion on both sides of the House that the claim of the government against this trust which has the duty of keeping these roads in order, is worthless. There is $180,000 of interest and $190,000 of capital due to the government, while, with the receipts of the Turnpike Trust, there is no prospect of receiving anything. The hon. gentleman asks for some plan by which these toll-gates can be abolished. I would suggest a plan to him. If he would look to the conduct of the people of New Brunswick and of Nova Scotia, and in some way or other have the claims of these municipalities referred to the Exchequer Court, which would look into the equities of them without any legal formalities to be gone through, perhaps he would be able to get something for the municipalities down there. After all, here is a claim which the government have against this Turnpike Trust, of which there is no probability and no possibility of getting anything. Would not a simple plan be for the government to say to the parties who own these roads: You gain nothing out of these roads, but you have to make the expenditure for keeping them in repair. If we forego our claim will you abolish the toll-gates altogether? If you do not do it, we will enforce our claim to its utmost. There is a simple plan. Then, the hon. gentleman says, that the municipalities will not take charge of these roads. That is a new doctrine. The municipality has to take charge of every road in every part of every province in this Dominion. The municipality is responsible for seeing that the roads are kept in order. Let the government forego their claim, let the toll-gates be abolished and then the duty devolves upon every municipality in every part of the Dominion to keep the roads in order. Now, there is a practical p'an which I would suggest to the hon. member for Laval. I propose that the government should do away with this useless asset altogether and say to the owners of these roads : We will forego our claim, abolish the toll-gates and hand the roads over to the municipalities. If we do that we will be accomplishing what the people in these municipalities have a right to ask, and we will be abolishing that which should not be allowed to exist, especially near a large city like Montreal—toll-gates, because they are a nuisance and a relic of barbarism.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) calls for papers which are quite proper, and therefore there is no objection to its passing. I am inclined to think, however, that the remarks that were made by him on this motion were calculated to lead some of us to imagine that the duty of looking after the roads in the province of Quebec belongs to the government of the Dominion. That certainly is not what he would seriously propose, and when he suggests that the government of the Dominion should do this or that in the matter, I am afraid I shall have to remind him that the government of the Dominion are only interested as creditors or bondholders. We have nothing to do with the management of provincial roads. Under the Act of Union, certain securities belonging to the provinces passed to the control of the Dominion. Amongst these were claims against this Turnpike Trust ; they came under the control of the Dominion, and for some years a portion of the interest was paid. Then, there came a period of years, owing, no doubt, to the difficulty of maintaining the roads, when the interest was not paid. About the year 1895, I think it was, the claim of the government for principal and interest amounted to upwards of $400,000. It is only fair to say that half of that was for arrears of interest. The capital sum due was about $200,000. A compromise was then come to, which was deemed at that time to be a fair one, whereby half of this claim for principal and interest against the Turnpike Trust was wiped out, and it was agreed that the Dominion should only be a creditor to the extent of $200,000, and at a reduced rate of interest. The Dominion has practically contributed as a free gift $200,000 to this enterprise, and it is now to be asked to give up the balance. I am not going to offer any emphatic opinion now, but, if the Minister of Finance is to be the watch-dog of the treasury, I think, perhaps, he may have to be on guard, not only against my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), but also against my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin), who seems to be looking in the same direction. I suppose we all agree that it is desirable that toll-gates and toll-roads should be abolished. I had a fad of that kind in my own province, and I take some pride in the fact that the last toll-bridge in Nova Scotia was abolished under my administration, but, it was not abolished by any Dominion grant, but abolished by the municipal and provincial authorities coming to an understanding and paying off the company, and making it a public highway. I have no desire to say what might be done in the end. The motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) calls for information which we shall be glad to furnish. I do not want to admit that the debt is a hopeless one. A Finance Minister never wishes to do that. However, before a proposal is made that the government should give up its claim, I would like to have a clearer understanding as to what is going to happen then. It is well that the House should understand that already the Dominion has given up its claim to the extent, principal and interest, of $200,000 on acount of this trust fund.

Mr. GOURLEY. Has the interest been paid since ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) reminded me of that. After the readjustment took place, it was contemplated that the interest would be paid, and that they would gradually pay off some of the principal. They paid for a year or a year and a half the interest under the rearrangement, and they also paid the sum of $5,000 on the capital. It is represented, however, by the trustees who succeeded the administration of that day, that that amount of $5,000 was not paid out of the earnings of the road, but was paid practically out of the capital, if I may so express it, because it is said that the roads were allowed to run down, and that when the new trustees came into office they were obliged to make good the defects, and that therefore, the earnings of the roads did not justify the payment of the $5,000. Of course, I only give that as a statement of the trustees, for I have no personal knowledge of the matter. After paying interest for a year or two on the readjusted sum, the payment ceased, and for the last couple of years no interest has been received. As to the capacity of the trustees, I have no reason to doubt that they are very estimable gentlemen. I believe that under the late administration, the chairman of the trustees was an excellent newspaper man, and a man who is capable of running a successful newspaper can generally do pretty nearly everything on earth. The gentleman who is now the chairman of the trustees is a merchant of high standing in the city of Montreal, and I have no doubt that the trustees are doing the best they can to administer the trust. I suppose that the real trouble is that the demands for the maintenance of the road are so great that it is difficult to meet the payments of interest and to maintain the roads.

Mr. MONK. I desire to thank the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) for the statement he has made. I understood from his remarks that the matter was a proper one to bring before this House, and that he would be ready to lend himself to an investigation of the financial ability of this corporation to pay its debt. But, I cannot say as much for my hon. friend for Laval (Mr. Fortin). I thought he would give me a very hearty support; but, he seems to blame me for not coming down to this House—which he admits has no jurisdiction in the matter—and take up an hour and a half explaining about the maintenance of these roads. What has he got to say about that? Why cannot he corroborate what I have said about the financial standing of this corporation? The matter began in 1888, and he has been looking into it for fourteen years, but he has not to-day any plan of any kind whatever to suggest. I think the House will be satisfied with the statements made by the Minister of Finance, and by the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart). It is a thing that is feasible, since it has been done everywhere else, and when we have the assurance of the government, that upon proper proof that this is a worthless asset, they will leave us free to arrange this matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not give any such assurance.

Mr. MONK. I know the Minister of Finance was very guarded, but I understood that from his remarks. When we have that hope, at any rate we are clever enough to find a plan, even if we have not to think fourteen years about it.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MONK. As this is the last day for motions of this kind, I would ask the government to permit the Order paper to be gone through so as to pass the unopposed motions.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is no objection to that.

BUILDINGS RENTED AT OTTAWA BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. THOS. BIRKETT (Ottawa). In moving the motion which is in my name, am I to understand that there is no discussion allowed on it?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no discussion at this stage.

Mr. BIRKETT. Then, I move, without discussion, for:

Copies of all leases, contracts or agreements for the rental of all buildings now occupied, or to be erected for and occupied by the Federal government in the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT VESSELS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) moved for:

Copies of all specifications and plans issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries when calling for tenders for the construction of two government vessels in British Columbia. Also copies of all tenders received for construction of same, together with a statement showing the amount of the deposits made by the several tenderers, &c., names of the successful tenderers, and all correspondence and papers connected with the same, including that in connection with the withdrawal of one of the successful tenders.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Stand.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. This is the second time this has been asked to stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Marine is absent, but the last information I had was, that the contract had not been awarded.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. That is three weeks ago. Better let the motion drop.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very well.

Motion dropped.

CANAL BRIDGE AT COTE ST. PAUL.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for:

Return showing the cost of construction of the bridge built by the government across the Lachine canal at Côte St. Paul, also estimated cost of strengthening or rebuilding said bridge, if such estimate has been made, and copies of all petitions and correspondence had with the government of Canada upon this subject.

He said: The Minister of Railways and Canals is not present, and I would briefly say that this motion calls for a statement of the cost of rebuilding the bridge at Côte St. Paul in the county of Jacques Cartier. This is an extremely old bridge crossing the canal and it is at present quite insufficient for the wants of the people living in that neighbourhood. I take it, Sir, that it is the duty of the government, while constructing the canal for the general wants of the Dominion, to supply wherever necessary proper means of communication from one bank of the canal to the other. As I have stated, the bridge at Côte St. Paul is too weak to admit of electric cars passing over it; and I understand that it is too narrow when open to admit of the free and easy passage of vessels coming down the canal.

I am informed that the Bohemian, coming down the canal, at that point, touches on both sides. But the chief inconvenience is the want of proper communication between the city of Montreal and the town of Côte St. Paul and the municipality of Verdun. It is impossible for the Montreal Street Railway to cross, because the bridge would require to carry thirteen tons, whereas I believe it has only sufficient strength to carry seven tons. So that the street cars only run as far as the bridge. There is no doubt that if they could cross the bridge and run as far as Verdun, where the line already reaches, and pass by a circuit back to Montreal, the greatest possible advantage would result to Côte St. Paul, Verdun and the city of Montreal itself. I believe that the people of Côte St. Paul and vicinity have communicated with the government on this subject on one or two occasions; and at their request I have called at the canal office at Montreal and solicited from the resident engineer there, Mr. Marceau, the favour of an estimate of what a new and enlarged bridge would cost. I have not been able to obtain that information in time for this motion; but I would invite the earnest consideration of the Minister of Railways to this subject. I believe it is admitted now that a tunnel under the canal would be very much better than a bridge over the canal. I believe that was established in some way at the time the difficulties arose in connection with the construction of the Curran bridge. This is a particularly favourable spot for the building of a tunnel, for the land is low on both sides, and I do not think the tunnelling would be expensive. Under these circumstances I would ask the Minister of Railways to give his earnest attention to this request.

Mr. T. FORTIN (Laval). I happen to know something about the bridge in question, and about the wants of the town of St. Paul in connection with it, and I entirely concur in the demand made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. The town of St. Paul is a very progressive locality. A few years ago it formed part of the parish of St. Paul; then it became a village, and afterwards a town. There are various industries in operation within its limits, and altogether it is a very considerable and progressive place. To my personal knowledge—for I have been for the last ten or twelve years the legal adviser of the municipality—it has lately made an agreement with the Montreal Street Railway Company, by which for the next thirty years at least it is to have electric communication with the city of Montreal through the town of St. Henri. In order to have that communication, the cars must pass over this bridge; but the bridge is so old and weak that it actually fell down during last winter. It was repaired, and it may be strong enough for ordinary vehicles, but it is certainly not strong enough for electric cars to pass over it. This is a place where the Lachine canal crosses a public highway, and it seems to me that the government are bound to restore communication between the opposite sides of the canal, so that a continuous highway may be there as it was before. Perhaps somebody may say, if the bridge is strong enough for ordinary vehicles, that is all that is required; but I submit that when a government or a railway corporation cuts up a highway, it is bound to replace it with a highway equally strong and solid, whether by a bridge or a tunnel. The arrangement with the Montreal Street Railway Company has just been completed. There is still a small matter of detail to be arranged between the parish of St. Paul and the Montreal Turnpike Trust, for a portion of the road in question is controlled by the Turnpike Trust. All these arrangements are made at considerable sacrifice by the people of the town of St. Paul, and it seems to me that it is only fair and proper that the government should take the necessary steps either to provide a bridge of sufficient solidity to carry electric cars, or to build a tunnel, as suggested by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

Motion agreed to.

THE VALLEYFIELD LABOUR STRIKE.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence, telegrams and messages in the Government Labour Bureau between the department and all persons, referring to the labour strike at Valleyfield, in Beauharnois county, province of Quebec, during the month of November last; also copies of all letters, telegrams and messages exchanged between the Militia Department and the municipal authorities at Valleyfield, or any justices of the peace, the military authorities at Montreal or any other persons relating to the said strike, and the calling out or payment of the troops in connection therewith; also a statement showing expenses incurred by the Dominion government in reference to said strike.

He said : In making this motion, I wish to make a brief statement to the House ; and if the facts which I am about to state are found to be true, as I have no doubt they would be on investigation, they reveal a state of affairs which I think calls for public condemnation. Briefly, the facts are these. Last spring an association was formed in the town of Valleyfield bearing the name of 'L'Union Libérale.' The object was to protect workingmen by seeing that their rights were on all occasions properly vindicated. But as the name savoured a little too much of politics, it was changed to that of 'L'Union Ouvrière,' 'the workingmen's union.' Its president was a man by the name of Etienne Leger, the vice-president and treasurer was one Joseph Dezy—two prominent Liberals of that locality—and the secretary, the deus ex machina, or the principal factor in the work of organization, was Louis Bertrand, who was lockmaster on the Beauharnois canal. All the workingmen of Valleyfield were cordially invited to join such a beneficial association and encourage the work of protecting the labouring man. Assurances were given that there would be no politics in the society, and that its sole object was the obtaining of better wages and the protection of the rights of labour. An initiation fee of one dollar was charged, and a monthly subscription of 25 cents.

The municipal council of Valleyfield is largely composed of Liberals. In fact, I believe that only one or two of its members belong to the true political faith. At that time, this corporation was having some work done, and it was understood that preference would be given to those who belonged to this society. If a Conservative applied for work, he was told that it was a great misfortune, but he must abide the results of his political creed or else join the association and become a Liberal. I am even very credibly informed that this man Deschene was in the habit of swearing men who joined the association that they would join the Liberal party. The municipal corporation was only paying one dollar per day to its workmen ; and as it was deemed necessary to show that this association was existing to some practical purpose, a resolution was passed to the effect that circumstances having changed, an increase of 25 cents should be given to the corporation workmen, and a demand to that effect was made upon the municipal council and at once acceded to—which of course showed what power this society had.

The Montreal Cotton Mills Company, which has very extensive and valuable works at Valleyfield, had purchased some property from the Buntin estate, on which it intended erecting thereon some buildings, and was employing labour deepening the foundations. These men were not cotton mill employees proper, but were simply employed by the day at current prices. This special work was being done when the election campaign began, and the men doing it were all voters. The association urged these special workmen to ask for higher wages. Deschene went to see Mr. Lacey, the manager of the company, and presented him with a demand for increased pay. Mr. Lacey replied that the wages were sufficient, and as the season was pretty far advanced, he suspended this special work. On the other hand, a certain number of men who were employed by the year by the Montreal Cotton Mills Company, were at that moment engaged loading coal or conveying coal to the mills, and the association succeeded in persuading them, and indeed the workmen generally engaged in the mills, to go on strike for an increase. The company has a property there valued at $2,000,000, and fears were entertained that it might suffer damage, and at this juncture, Mr. J. N. Greenshields arrived on the scene and succeeded in obtaining from the mayor of the municipality, Mr. Langevin, a Conservative, and from Mr. St. Onge, the Liberal member of that municipality, the necessary demand for military protection. Having obtained that demand upon the assurance that it was a mere formality, and that these two councillors would not suffer, he applied for military protection on behalf of the company. But when the troops arrived nobody could be found to read the Riot Act. The mayor was confined to his house, and the other councillor denied having taken any part in the summoning of the military force, and the recorder of the place, Mr. Papineau, joined with the rioters.

The House is aware of what happened. Nobody being there to read the Riot Act, a certain number of the soldiers were ill-treated, were stoned, and the minister who has charge of the Department of Labour, the Postmaster General, was asked to send some one down to put an end to this strike, which had been altogether brought about by the action of the three men who conducted the affairs of this so-called society. In answer to the demand which was made upon him, the minister gave as an excuse that his engagements would not allow him to intervene personally; but he sent down an employee of his department connected with the labour bureau, a Mr. King, if I am not mistaken——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour.

Mr. MONK. Mr. King came down to Valleyfield. As I understand it, the function of Mr. King, and his duty under such circumstances, is indicated by a law which we passed last session—63-64 Victoria, chap. 24, section 5 :

> It shall be the duty of the conciliator to promote conditions favourable to a settlement by endeavouring to ally distrust, to remove causes of friction, to promote good feeling, to restore confidence, and to encourage the parties to come together and themselves effect a settlement, and also to promote agreements between employers and employees with a view to the submission of differences to conciliation or arbitration before resorting to strikes or lock-outs.

Though that is the duty of Mr. King under the circumstances, I am credibly informed that he did the very opposite. He became a political agent. He met the leading people in Valleyfield and told them the government were prepared to do a great deal for the success of this strike, but it was all-important that they should support Mr. Loy, who was the Liberal candidate. So, Mr. King became when there an active canvasser. The information which I have given to the House as briefly as possible has been given to me by reliable people. If this statement as to the state of affairs is true, it is clear that the conduct of the parties I have named in connection with the matter is much to be condemned. I submit also that it goes a long way to maintain the claim which has been put forth by several parties at Valleyfield, that this strike, and what subsequently happened, was organized solely and purely for political purposes. If that is true, it would be extremely unjust that the cost of sending the militia should fall upon the municipality. It should be paid by the government, who allowed this state of affairs to exist——

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has made a serious charge against a very prominent official. Would he give me the name of one or more prominent persons who said that Mr. King, to the slightest extent, took part in politics ?

Mr. MONK. I have that statement from my informants.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is a very serious charge. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) must know that, coming from him as a prominent lawyer and a prominent member of the House, it cannot fail to attract attention. He should be prepared to take the responsibility of it or give us the names of his informants.

Mr. MONK. I shall be happy to do more than that, and to give affidavits of perfectly responsible men, to the effect that the facts as I have stated them are true. I shall give those affidavits in the early part of next week. I have no personal knowledge of the facts, but would not have made the statements without having information on which I could rely. As to the effect upon the election, we have the fact that, whereas in 1896, the Conservative candidate in that constituency, Mr. Bergeron, had a majority, if I am not mistaken, of 105 in Valleyfield and Ste. Cecile—both places united, and generally considered as one—in consequence of this movement to obtain his defeat, he was buried there under a minority of 312. I think I am not mistaken in that. Thus, the cause mentioned in the House the other day for the defeat of the Conservative candidate in Beauharnois county—mentioned by my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil)—is not the real cause, but, that cause was in reality the special condition of affairs in the town of Valleyfield. I see that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has taken a great interest in the statement I have made. I believe that this movement was got up, to a very large extent, for the purpose of favouring his own candidature in that county. He will remember that some pressure was brought to bear upon him to go there as candidate, and a strong movement was made to secure his election there. At that time, with parties who were going to Montreal to secure the candidature of Montreal, there was no question of Mr. Loy's candidature. I think it is very important that the facts should be ascertained; and if any official in the department has been guilty of the conduct which I have stated to the House, I think the House should take cognizance of the facts.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte). Mr. Speaker, the town of Valleyfield—I would rather say the city of Valleyfield—has to-day a population of 12,000. In 1896, the town had a population of 5,000 or 6,000. It has become a centre of great industry and activity. The Montreal Cotton Mills Company own, probably, the largest mills in Canada. They are a strong, powerful, enterprising corportion. They bought the Buntin property, and undertook to lay the foundations for a new addition to their mill. It was late in the fall; the weather was cold—in fact, it rained, I suppose, two or three days a week. The men, who were working in the water to the belt, were being paid $1 a day. They thought they were not being paid enough, and I think they were right. I am not here to justify any strike, or any organization for striking purposes; I state the facts as I know them to be. In Valleyfield, as elsewhere in the district of Montreal, the workingmen formed an organization. Now, I am very sorry that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has received so much wrong information. I happen to know what is going on in the county of Beauharnois, and I have followed this very affair with great care. This was not a Liberal association, it was a workingmen's association, and I make bold to say that the majority of its members belonged to the Conservative party. The workingmen of both political parties were members of that association. The men made up their minds that they were not paid enough, and they went on strike. Whether they were right or whether they were wrong, it is not for me to judge. Their associates, the men engaged in the ordinary work of the mill, sympathized strongly with them, and went on strike also.

If my hon. friend knew more about the state of affairs in Valleyfield, he would know very well that nearly every one working in the mills is a Conservative. I am sorry to have to state that the management of the Valleyfield mills have systematically excluded friends of this government from employment. I cannot be accused of any revengeful spirit against the owners of those mills. The hon. gentleman has alluded to my candidature in 1896, when I was defeated by a small majority. Why was I defeated, Mr. Speaker ? Because there was a most shameful pressure brought to bear upon the workingmen, and I was a witness of it. Electors were even locked up in the mills on the day of polling. I make that statement because I was a witness of what took place. But I forgot and forgave everything. I think, perhaps, if I had been disposed, I could have found means to take revenge. But I forgave everything, because I am not such a small-minded man as to take revenge on a large industry because its management have not done the right thing by me. I make that statement just to show that my hon. friend is wrongly informed. The Liberals have no show in the Valleyfield mills to-day, they are only employed when nobody else can be found.

Mr. MONK. Why did the Liberal candidate have so large a majority ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because the people changed their minds in Valleyfield, as they have done everywhere in the province of Quebec. Now, my hon. friend made some very strong statements. For instance, he stated on his responsibility that the recorder of Valleyfield, Mr. Papineau, joined the rioters. That is a very strong statement to make.

Mr. MONK. I did not say that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, word for word. 'Joined the rioters,' I took down the words.

Mr. MONK. I never said he joined the rioters. I said he sympathized with them, and refused to read the Riot Act.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not want to be unfair to my hon. friend, but he will read those words to-morrow in the 'Hansard,' those very words, 'He joined the rioters.' Now, Sir, if Mr. Papineau or other responsible parties in Valleyfield had read the Riot Act, what would have been the consequence ? The soldiers who had been called there would simply have shot down honest workingmen. But would my hon. friend be ready to stand up in this House and say that the recorder of Valleyfield did not do the right thing ? Soldiers should not be asked on such occasions to shoot down citizens, even though those citizens are not doing what is right. There was no loss of property in Valleyfield, and no riot ; yet under those circumstances my hon. friend would insinuate that the recorder of Valleyfield was wrong in refusing to read an Act, the consequences of which would have been simply the murder of honest citizens, I call it murder.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend will pardon me. I said he sympathized with the rioters and refused to afford sufficient protection to the militia that had been called there. But I did not say that he was bound to cause the murder of honest workingmen.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend knows very well what would have been the consequence if Mr. Papineau, or the mayor, or any other man, had read the Riot Act, the soldiers would have been obliged to fire.

Mr. MONK. No, that is not the law.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It might have meant that, at any rate. But nothing of the kind happened, and peace was restored. Now, my hon. friend should not try to place the responsibility of what took place on any other shoulders than those who were really responsible. I say that if the owners of the Valleyfield mills had not forgotten that they were bound to pay honest wages to honest labourers, nothing of the kind would have happened. Sir, here is a great, powerful, and wealthy corporation which is earning large dividends, larger perhaps than we know, larger than we have been told. Was it fair for them to exact from labouring men, in the month of October to work in water up to their waists, ten hours a day, for the paltry wages of $1 a day ? I say without hesitation, and the country will agree with me, that the workingmen were not being treated fairly at Valleyfield. I do not say they did right in going on strike, I think they could have arranged matters without having recourse to the proceedings that they adopted. But upon that point I am not going to judge. My hon. friend says that the council of Valleyfield is Liberal, but he was immediately obliged to admit that the mayor was one of his political friends, and it was the mayor himself who, without consulting the council, signed the very document by virtue of which the troops were called out.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Was there any destruction of property ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there was no destruction of property, and there was no loss of life, because the Riot Act was not read. Now, I am very much surprised to hear my hon. friend state that he had received information to the effect that Mr. King, the able Deputy Minister of Labour, went there and canvassed for the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Loy). My hon. friend has undertaken to produce the evidence in support of what he says. If he produces such evidence, we will be unanimous in condemning Mr. King ; but before such evidence is produced, I am bound to believe that my hon. friend has been misled in a very serious manner indeed. The name of Mr. Greenshields has been mentioned. Mr. Greenshields is the lawyer of the Dominion Cotton Mills Company, and acting in that capacity he applied for troops. But Mr. Greenshields happens to be a Liberal, and my hon. friend, who is a shrewd man, mentions his name just to associate him with the affair. He mentioned my name in connection with this affair, and said that he forgot the dates. My hon. friend was far away in his own riding, and he forgot the dates. The candidature of the member for Beauharnois had not been accepted when the trouble took place. I was asked to be a candidate there, but I was better engaged in St. Mary. Well, the electorate was not very inattentive to the explanations that I offered. There was no question of party in this affair, none whatever. I know very well that the late member for Beauharnois tried his level best to make the electors believe that he was the saviour of the workingmen. But he had told them so many things that did not turn out to be true, that they did not take much stock in what he said. He did not defeat me in 1896. I would have been elected by a couple of hundred majority if the electorate had been free as it was last November. On this last occasion the electorate of Valleyfield was free, and it is a great blessing indeed for the electorate to be free, both in civil and religious matters. The Liberal party has at least achieved that great object of giving civil and religious freedom to the electorate of this country. The electors were free in Valleyfield because this year the management of the mills was not altogether the same. Mr. Simpson had gone. He had followed me with the men of the mills in 1896 from polling place to polling place, and these men were yelling against me in every parish and in every corner of the riding. The same state of affairs did not take place this year. The electors voted freely, and it is because they voted freely that my hon. friend (Mr. Loy), and old Conservative like myself—Soit dit en passant—has been elected in that riding. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has alluded to the fact that a change took place in that constituency. My hon. friend (Mr. Loy), who sits in this parliament in place of the old member whom very very few will regret, was a Conservative. He belonged to the great Conservative party of past days. He changed his mind, and with him the thriving and intelligent town of Valleyfield changed its mind also.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I am glad that these papers have at last been moved for, but I regret that the motion should have been deferred to such a late date in the session. A reference to the Order paper will show that the notice was given nearly six weeks ago, and I was anxious before, and have been anxious ever since, that this matter should be discussed, and that the people of Valleyfield and the people throughout Canada who are interested should get to know the facts of this case. The mover of the resolution (Mr. Monk) has given a version of the case, which, although I am not prepared at this moment to contradict, most certainly disagrees very materialy with my own knowledge of some of the facts, and disagrees with the representations which have been brought before me. I know nothing at all about a political labour organization having been organized in Valleyfield last spring. It may be so and it may not. I do not know. I do know that there is in Valleyfield, and there has been for some time, a duly organized Federal Labour Union chartered by the Trades Congress of Canada. That is an organization that cannot take part in party politics. It is neither their policy nor their business so to do. It is there for purely trade union purposes to look after the interests of the workers as regards their labour, and until this afternoon I had always heard that the Valleyfield Federal Labour Union had kept strictly to the work for which it was chartered. But, Mr. Speaker, I am led to believe that this serious trouble that occurred just before the elections was the result of political machinations. I do not care which party it is that is interested, whether it is both parties or only one, we want to know the facts as to that. The matter was so very serious that if it is true that the strike was the outcome of party politics at that time, in order to influence the election, and if it resulted in the strike and the calling out of the militia on account of which a riot occurred, then some one must be held to account. From information which I think is to hand, if it can be proved that these statements are right, then there are some persons who are guilty of conspiracy in this case, and the matter should be thoroughly inquired into. I would call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that some thirteen or fourteen men were arrested and have been returned for trial, and that their trial is being postponed and held over. I am perfectly sure that if the things that are inferentially charged against other parties were charged against these men, they would have been tried for conspiracy long before this time. As to the right of the men to strike, I do not know that that is a matter that concerns us at the present time. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has told us that the men were working in a cellar digging waist deep in water for a dollar a day, and he will not express any opinion as to whether they were justified in striking or not. Well, Mr. Speaker, for my part, I am glad they did strike. If business was good in Valleyfield at that time, and if these men were working ten hours a day for a dollar under the conditions stated; surely, there was nothing to cause a riot or to call out the militia because they refused to work for that wage.

Now, the Deputy Minister of Labour was called to Valleyfield at that time, and in his report to the department there is this fact brought out: That there was a small strike there, and that not for any necessary reasons, but on the solicitation practically of the Cotton Company of that town, the militia were called out. There has never been any evidence that there was any need to call the militia out.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUTTEE. The militia were taken to Valleyfield, and we have in the report of the Deputy Minister of Labour the fact stated plainly, that the large strike of the cotton operators of that city ensued because the militia had been called there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUTTEE. Now, I am proud of these men that they did strike when the militia were called out there to intimidate a few other men who had quit work because they were not satisfied with the terms that were offered them. I would remind the House that just before this we had another case in British Columbia where the militia were called out to take a hand in settling a strike. I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to give, not only my endorsation, but my praise to the men of Valleyfield who had no complaint themselves, who were getting the work and wages they contracted for, but who threw up their work, laid down their tools and walked out of the factory and said: We will not work while the militia are in town. I may state, Mr. Speaker—and this, it seems to me, throws the weight a little more on my side than perhaps on the other in the argument, that if there is any one to blame for working this trouble for political purposes, it is not the working people—I may state that the settlement that was made at that time by the Deputy Minister of Labour has not proved satisfactory, because it has not been thoroughly observed. During the last few weeks there has been a deputation to Ottawa, and we have waited on the Deputy Minister of Labour, and we have tried to find out what were the points in that settlement, and why men have not been taken back to work who were included in the settlement at that time. I hope that the government will speedily bring these papers down, that we shall get all the evidence that can be got, and that if necessary we shall have a full investigation into all the facts of the case.

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I did not happen to be in the House when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) began to speak to his motion, but when I did come in I heard him using some very strong language with regard to the young gentleman who is acting as Deputy Minister of Labour; who is a young man of excellent qualifications, a man of the very highest character, and one who, as a young Canadian, is likely to make his mark in the civil service, or in any position in which he may be placed. I am informed, and have every reason to believe that there is not one iota of foundation for the most serious charges that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has made against that young man. I do hope that for his own credit and for the credit of this House, that when the hon. gentleman finds out that he has been misled and misinformed, he will be the first one to stand up and do justice to a gentleman who has been so improperly dealt with. If, on the other hand, he can produce—as he said, in reply to my question, he could—the affidavit of any responsible person that there is the slightest truth in the statement he made to the House, I will be the first to take action to see that justice is dealt out in the matter, and I believe I will be endorsed by the House in that. I fear that the hon. gentleman has been imposed upon, because I believe there is not the slightest foundation for the charges or for the statements that were made with regard to Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour. In regard to the case that has been discussed, I do not desire to say anything further than that I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), that, so far as we do know the circumstances, the strike was brought about by the calling out of the militia. There were no party politics in the matter at all so far as we could learn.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There have been strikes before; this was not the first.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, and the threatened strike at the present time. There is this to be said to the credit of Mr. King, that he did what he could to bring about a better understanding between the employers and the employed, and succeeded. We all know that this is a new department which has arisen out of the desire on the part of the government and on the part of parliament to do what they can towards allaying the difficulties that arise from time to time between the employers and the employed, between what is very often referred to as capital and labour. Whether this establishment of a Bureau of Labour will be altogether successful or not, I do not know, but I believe that hon. members on both sides of the House are actuated by a desire to do what they can to assist this Bureau of Labour in bringing about a better feeling between the employers and employed. In this particular case it must be a source of gratification to the people of this country, and to the members of this House to know, that, at the very moment when bloodshed was almost threatened, when there were so many men out of employment, and when the destruction of property was feared, the intervention of a third party, of Mr. King, resulted at once in settling the disturbance and allaying the bad feeling which existed. Whatever feeling there may be in regard to that disturbance, this is a result for which everybody must be thankful. In this particular case we have the reward of the effort that was made on behalf of the labouring classes of this country in the fact, that, as a result of the visit of Mr. King, the men at once returned to work and an amicable settlement was brought about between the two parties. Upon reading the news of that day, we did not know at what moment most serious results might occur in Valleyfield. I only got up to draw attention to the very strong statements that the hon. gentleman made, and I think it is due that he should either verify these statements or withdraw them.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, I think this discussion will be of considerable benefit if it draws the attention of the country to two phases of the labour question. One is in reference to the Conciliation Bill which was passed by this House last session. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), that if the statement is correct, and I presume it is, when it is made by a minister in this House, if these men at Valleyfield were asked to work belt-deep in water for one dollar a day, it is sufficient justification, and the only reason I desire to know, that they should strike, and that the sympathy of the country should be with them. This is a growing time, particularly in the cotton trade of this country. The cotton manufacturers have no reason to complain of the treatment of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), even although he may have been almost justified in wreaking a little vengeance upon them. He used them in a magnanimous way, and it is not to their credit that he is able to make the statement in this House to-day, that after the way they have been used, touching the tariff, they are compelling men to work for the miserable sum of one dollar a day. What I arose particularly to refer to was the Conciliation Bill and the good effect of that Bill. Mr. King went to Valleyfield and the result was that the strike was settled. I have had some experience myself in reference to conciliation measures in my own constituency, and I know that in a place where they had nine or ten strikes in as many years, since the formation of the conciliation board there by their own accord three or four years ago, we have not had friction between capital and labour. I think this Bill will have a good effect if used properly in this country. I regret we cannot have compulsory arbitration, because it is outside of the jurisdiction of this House to pass such legislation. If it were within our jurisdiction, I think we would not be equal to our duty if we did not pass such legislation. But, we must make the best of what we have in this Conciliation Bill. The second point brought out was the calling out of the militia when this labour difficulty commenced. It seems to me that this should be the very last resort. Men who strike for better wages have to consider a number of serious matters before they quit work. They have to consider the question of the maintenance of their wives and children. It must be supposed that when they quit work and demand better wages there are very serious reasons why they should do so, and it should be the last resort that the militia should be called out, because it is nearly always certain to result in bloodshed, in riots, in the destruction of property and in loss of life. I desire to join my testimony to that of the hon. acting Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), in reference to Mr. King the Deputy Minister of Labour. Mr. King is one of the leading economical authorities of this country. He is a young man who was taken by the authorities of Harvard University, who know a good man when they find him, and was sent by them to study economical questions on the other side of the water. He had a position waiting him in Harvard University at a large salary as soon as he completed his studies on the other side of the water. He has spent some years on the continent of Europe and in England studying these questions, and he had this position open to him when he desired to return. The hon. Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Mulock) asked him to take charge of the Labour Bureau in this country. He left the position at Harvard to come back to serve his own country, and I am proud to say that we have this young Canadian, who is such a high authority on economical questions, as Deputy Minister of Labour in Canada. With regard to my hon. friend the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I feel confident, knowing Mr. King as I do, that he has been misinformed, and I know that the hon. gentleman will be the first, when he finds that he has been misinformed, to express his regret that he has made such statements.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to continue the debate from the point of view from which it has been carried on. I do not understand from the hon. mover (Mr. Monk), or from any other speaker, that any exception has been taken to the manner in which the officers of the Militia Department discharged their duty. My hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has referred to the undesirability of calling out the militia on the occasion of strikes. Without offering any opinion upon that point, I have simply to say what I think is well known to every hon. member of this House, and to everybody in the country, that there is a provision in the Militia Act by which, on a complaint, or on a request from the civil authorities—in this case it was the mayor of the town—when a requisition is made to call out the militia, the militia must be called out. There is no alternative, the matter is not referred to the Militia Department here. Automatically the militia responds; it is called out upon a requisition made by the civil authorities. That is exactly what has happened in this case, and I do not think any exception is taken to the action of the militia officers or the department. I have only to add that there is no objection to bringing down all the papers so far as I know, and I shall be happy to see that they are laid on the Table of the House at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MONK. I have only a word or two to say in reference to some remarks that have been made here to-day. My hon. friend the acting Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), was not in the House when I opened my remarks. I stated that what I was giving to the House had been given to me by a reliable person. I have no personal knowledge of these facts whatever, and when we are having some provisions of the Conciliation Act, which is scarcely a year old, applied, I say that a man who has information which he deems reliable on a matter of public interest is quite justified in calling the attention of the House to that information; and I find that I have been justified by my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), who more particularly represents the labour interests. I have given to the House a plain statement of facts, and from the excitement which the Minister of Public Works displayed, I am inclined to believe there is really more in my statement than I at first thought. The Minister of Public Works has depicted to us men working up to their waists in water; but did he hear me make the statement to the House that a certain number of men were employed digging foundations, that application was made on their behalf by parties I have named for an increase of wages, and that Mr. Lacey, the manager of those cotton works, as I understand, declared that the season was too far advanced to give an increase, and stopped the work? Does the Minister of Public Works deny that? He does not, because he does not know anything about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do know all about it.

Mr. MONK. Does he deny that the work was stopped by Mr. Lacey on the ground that the season was too far advanced?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The reason assigned by Mr. Lacey was the one my hon. friend has given to the House; but before there was a strike or any demand for an increase of wages, that gentleman never thought of stopping the work.

Mr. MONK. But we have this much admitted, that the strike had not developed. Mr. Lacey returned, he saw trouble in the future, the season was advanced, and he stopped the work. Therefore, the men working in the water up to their waists, referred to so often by the Minister of Public Works, were not the men whose fate was in question in this strike; but it was the ordinary employees of the company who were employed in conveying coal into the mills. It was upon them that pressure was brought to bear.

Mr. PUTTEE. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to explain? I do not think he understands it quite rightly. The strike did occur through the men who were working on the foundation works asking for more wages; and after the strike occurred, when the question of a settlement came up, the manager of the company said he would not settle it, because he would not go on with the work anyway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. At that time there had been no call for the militia. What I say is that the incident there had been finished when further trouble arose, provoked by the men whom I have named; and it was then that they brought pressure to bear on those working in the coal—not those working up to their waists in water; and it was explained how Mr. Greenshields had the militia called out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Dominion Cotton Mills Company had the militia called out.

Mr. MONK. It was Mr. Greenshields who applied to the government for the militia.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, not to the government.

Mr. MONK. He got this requisition signed under the circumstances I have stated, and conveyed it to the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all. We never heard of it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To the commanding officer in Montreal.

Mr. MONK. I do not wish to misstate any of the facts. I have no personal knowledge of them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The government had no more to do with it than the hon. member himself.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend must know that the statement made by the Minister of Militia is absolutely correct; the government have no discretion whatever, for once the requisition is in the hands of the military authorities, the soldiers must go out. The formality was accomplished, and the commanding officer was obliged to go.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As an act of administration, the Militia Department had nothing whatever to do with this. As a matter of fact, the minister knew nothing whatever about it.

Mr. MONK. I quite understand that. It would be the greatest folly to stand up and condemn the government for having the militia called out, and if I name Mr. Greenshields, it is because he was counsel of the company.

Mr. BRITTON. Why did the hon. gentleman say that somebody carried something to the government ?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend will please excuse me. I know what the Militia Act requires, and I do not suppose that any one in this House will understand me as stating that the government sent the militia. It would be too absurd, and I do not believe anybody in the province of Quebec would accept such a statement. But what happened ? The strike ceased the moment the election was over. My opinion is that the whole bottom dropped out of the thing, and I think the hon. member for Winnipeg is right when he says that they have not been satisfied with the operation of this Conciliation Act. The Minister of Public Works may say what he likes, but in 1896 the vote was very different from what it was in 1900 ; and there is no doubt whatever, whether the Conservative candidate or the Liberal candidate was to blame, that the circumstances of the strike were such that they were responsible for that great change. As regards Mr. King, I gave the information to the House, and I intend seeing that affidavits are put into the hands of the government to the effect that he did use his position to advance the interests of the Liberal candidate. Textually my opinion is this, that he stated to a number of people there that there was justice in the demand for an increase of wages, but that unquestionably the success of that demand would be greatly assured if everybody would vote for Mr. Loy. It is on that fact that I intend producing evidence. Is that true or is it false ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is false.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Who states it ?

Mr. MONK. A number of people in the county.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman think it is a fair thing to take a statement like that against a reputable government officer, when he has not the evidence to prove it ?

Mr. MONK. I make the statement, and I intend to procure the proof ; and if I cannot procure the proof of it, I shall be most happy to say that I have been misinformed. I may say I have heard this from a candidate in the local election, or something of the kind ; but I will investigate, and if I find that that statement is not well founded, I will with pleasure withdraw it. I think that under the circumstances, and having received that information from several parties, I was quite justified in moving for this correspondence and calling the attention of the government to the fact that it would be unjust, if any of these statements were true, to call upon the militia to go to the town of Valleyfield. And I find it somewhat singular that the gentleman far more interested in this motion than I—I refer to the representative of that county himself—is not here to bear out the statement made with respect to him by the hon. the Minister of Public Works.

The PRIME MINISTER. The last words of my hon. friend who has just spoken convey an insinuation upon the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Loy) which is absolutely unwarranted, and which the House will resent. It is true that the hon. member for Beauharnois is not here this afternoon, but he has been here on other occasions when this motion was called, and when the mover was not in his seat to move it. Again and again, at least five or six times, was this motion called, and my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) was not in his place, but the hon. member for Beauharnois was, and it is not fair to insinuate, that because he does not happen to be here on this particular afternoon, when the hon. gentleman finds it convenient to be present, that he is in bad faith.

Mr. MONK. I saw him here yesterday.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend saw many members here yesterday who are not here to-day. It was not worthy of him to make such an insinuation against the hon. member for Beauharnois, who, I am sure, would be only too glad to be present to give his version of the facts. And if the hon. member for Beauharnois were here, he would give his opinion on another aspersion which my hon. friend cast on another gentleman, Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour, and who, of course, cannot be present to reply. Mr. King has been Deputy Minister of Labour for the past seven or eight months, and been called, not only to Beauharnois, but to many other places, even as far as British Columbia, to settle labour disputes, and this is the very first time that I have heard the slightest insinuation cast against his character or manner of doing business. I know to my certain knowledge that some time ago he was called on to proceed to Oshawa and Whitby to settle some labour trouble. An election had taken place shortly before, and political feeling was running pretty high, but Mr. King discharged his duty, not only to the satisfaction of the workingmen, but also of the employers, who, I understand, belong to the Conservative persuasion. So, in British Columbia, and everywhere else he has been, he has discharged his duties in the most satisfactory manner, and been particularly careful not to lay himself open to any charges or aspersions arising out of politics. This is the first accusation made against Mr. King. My hon. friend was within his rights in moving for this return, and I quite approve of his having done so, but, he would have followed a better course if he had not taken the opportunity to assail the character of a man who is not here to defend himself.

Mr. MONK. I do not know whose character I assailed.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. King.

Mr. MONK. I simply made a statement.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver). I was sorry, Mr. Speaker, not to have been here when the hon. gentleman moved his motion. I agree entirely in the resolution under discussion. There is sufficient evidence in our hands, as representatives of labour, from the men affected by this trouble, to prove the absolute necessity of having all the correspondence put before the House. To that extent I agree entirely with the mover of the resolution.

I can assure the House that the settlement of that dispute has not been by any means satisfactory, but, in saying this, I do not mean to insinuate at all that Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour, was at all to blame. I am happy to be able to say that in all the correspondence I have had on this matter, it has never been insinuated that he used his influence for political purposes. The first time I ever heard such a charge made was this afternoon on the floor of this House. None of the labourers of that district who have written to me—and I have had a good deal of correspondence with them—have insinuated that there was any political connection between the gentleman who went down to effect the settlement and the trouble itself. The settlement itself, however, was anything but satisfactory. I am informed that the employers of labour made certain promises, made practically a certain contract with the Deputy Minister of Labour, and there is no doubt at all that they have not carried out that contract; and if there is one thing which the government ought to see to, it is that both employers and employees should be compelled, as far as possible, to carry out their agreement. I would be just as strict with the employees as with the employers. If the labouring men agreed to certain conditions, or came to a certain understanding with the deputy minister, whose business it is to make a settlement, and did not carry out that understanding, I would be one of the first to censure them, and I take the same position with regard to the employers. There is no doubt at all that the promises made by the employers to Mr. King have not been carried out, and the government should enter into correspondence with these employers, and give them to understand that they have to keep up their bargain, and use every pressure to compel them to live up to it.

With regard to the calling out of the militia, I know that the government legally is not to blame, but it is altogether too easy a thing in this country for the militia to be called out in time of trouble. The very fact of sending the militia to the scene of trouble is sufficient in itself to provoke an extension and aggravation of the difficulty, and, consequently, it ought not to be by any means so easy to have the militia called out as it is at present. If I were working for wages and had trouble with my employers, I would not care for the militia. If my position was a correct one, I do not consider that they could injure it. But what I do say is this, that, generally speaking, the bringing of militia to the ground in troubles of this kind excites provocation, and some change ought to be made which would make the calling out of the militia a more difficult matter, and prevent the recurrence of such scenes as were witnessed at Valleyfield.

It will certainly be more satisfactory to have all the correspondence brought down, so as to put the House in possession of the facts.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY (Colchester). I have listened, Mr. Speaker, with great pleasure to this discussion, and am glad it has broadened out beyond the mere lines of the order. I come from a county whose people are largely of the working class. The chief town of my county, Truro, is filled with a body of intelligent mechanics. And if I may take the mechanics of my county, as a type of the mechanics of Canada, I can confidently say, that disturbances of this character would never occur, if the men were accorded proper treatment. The question of the position of labour is the great question for Canada to-day. I am not a labour agitator, but I say, that we in this parliament should dignify and ennoble the discussion of these questions and show the workingmen of this country, that they have the true sympathy of the best men of Canada, in an endeavour to secure for themselves fair-play. And if the workingmen feel that they have the sympathy of the parliament of this country, there will be no disgraceful strikes of this kind within our borders. The labour question should be so dealt with here, that the workingmen shall understand that this question is regarded as among the most important that can come before this parliament. The workingmen and mechanics form the great middle class of this country. The foundations of our manhood and integrity as a nation rest upon this great middle class ; and if they are not well paid and well housed, if they are not satisfied, our country can never have the strength that it ought to have. I hold that the whole labouring population of Canada are underpaid. Let me give one illustration. I have a neighbour living near me in my town. He gets $1.25 a day, and he has six little children. Under the public policy of this country, these children must attend the public schools ; where they meet children who are much better off than they are. They must dress decently, or they are made to feel at the very inception of their lives, that they are scorned and condemned by their better-off neighbours. A mechanic who has but $1.25 per day, cannot maintain, feed and clothe his family as he would like to do ; he cannot maintain his family, in decency, in honour and respect, on such wages. We must make up our minds, to influence the whole public opinion of Canada, and to bring that opinion to bear upon capital, in favour of a general increase of wages. We have our public schools, and these and other institutions have created, I believe, higher ideals among our workmen and mechanics, than characterize a similar class, anywhere else in the world. Then, we must follow out logically and properly this state of affairs which we have established, and furnish these men with wages that will enable them to live as they should.

I wish to say one word to the hon. Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair). He has in my town a staff of workmen and mechanics that would do credit to any employer of labour. I do not wish to be a demagogue—and I think he will understand that—for already I think he has attempted to ameliorate the conditions of these men by increasing their wages, but most inadequately. At the same time, in this growing period of which we have heard so much, and with the increased revenue of the Intercolonial Railway, for I would not have made this application five years ago, recognizing that the Intercolonial was then somewhat of a burden upon the country, but to-day, since that great system has become a source of revenue to the Dominion—the improvement of the condition of these men should engage his serious attention. The workmen and mechanics employed on the Intercolonial Railway—and there are Liberals and Conservatives among them, I speak for all—are a splendid body of men. Cannot the hon. minister scale up the wages of these efficient and trusty men ? There are no more trustworthy men in the world. When the members of this House, leave for Easter recess, the lives of many of them will be in the keeping of these faithful men. I want these men to be remembered, and I hope the minister will find it in his power to increase their wages at an early day. In a number of the associations in my county, and in the province of Nova Scotia, they are passing resolutions and working out figures, to show, that they are not paid, as highly, as are men in similar occupations, in other countries. I have not the data to speak upon that subject myself ; but when the time comes, and this subject is presented to him more in detail by myself and others, I hope the hon. minister will deal generously with the employees of the Intercolonial Railway, and especially with those in the county of Colchester and the town of Truro.

Motion agreed to.

PERMANENT CORPS PENSIONS.

On the motion :

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when the best interests of Canada demand that the government should without further delay introduce a Bill embodying a workable scheme looking to the granting of adequate retiring pensions to the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the permanent corps of the militia of Canada.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) As it is impossible for me to do justice to this matter in the ten minutes between now and the time arranged for adjournment, and as this is the last day when the matter can come up, I ask that the motion be dropped.

Motion dropped.

PREFERENTIAL TARIFF—DIRECT IMPORTATION.

On the motion :

That, in the opinion of this House, the preferential tariff should only apply to goods brought into Canada through Canadian sea-ports.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Like the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Hon. Mr. Prior), I cannot do justice to the subject of my motion in the few minutes remaining before six o'clock. I shall be obliged to let the motion go over, with the intention of bringing it up again at the first opportunity.

The PRIME MINISTER. Stand.

Motion allowed to stand.

FINANCIAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL STATUS OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia) moved for :

Return showing copies of all memorials, replies thereto and correspondence between the government of the North-west Territories and any member thereof, and the government of Canada and any member thereof, on the subject of the financial and constitutional status of the said North-west Territories.

He said : I placed this notice on the Order paper early in the session, but have had no opportunity to discuss it. But, as it seemed probable that we should not reach this motion I took advantage of the opportunity afforded by the debate on the budget to bring the matter to the attention of the House and to speak upon it at some length. Therefore it will not be necessary for me to go into the subject on this occasion.

Motion agreed to.

WELLAND CANAL—LEASES OF WATER POWER.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland) moved for :

Return showing : The number of leases of water power granted on the Welland canal and feeder; the names of the lessees; the quantity of power granted in each lease, and the location of such power; the consideration named in each lease, and the length of the term granted; the names of the present holders; the amount of consideration in arrears, if any, on each lease, and the number of years during which such arrears have been accumulating .

He said : I would have been glad to have spoken at some length on this motion; but, as the hour is drawing near at which hon. gentlemen desire that the House should adjourn, I shall not speak longer than until six o'clock. The motion is one which I regard as a proper motion, and the information which will be given in the return brought down in response to it will be found very valuable and important information. The water powers of the Welland canal have been used very largely for years by our opponents as a political machine. Leases of water power were granted for years for nominal sums to political partisans. There are perpetual water powers there which are worth from $50,000 to $75,000 which people are not using at all. There is one water power on the Welland canal embracing three locks, giving a maximum of 1,500 horse power, used at a rental of $250 a year; and one lock of about 600 horse power is sold for $300 a year, being $50 a year more than the total price which these people are paying, and they are holding out the balance for a price of $75,000. The Libster Cotton Mills have been offered, I am told, $20,000 to $30,000 for this power. They are not using it themselves and they will not allow anybody else to use it. There are other powers existing on the Welland canal, water is being used which is not being paid for, and water is being used at a price very often far less than the value of the power which is granted. The whole matter should be looked into carefully by the government, either by a commission or in some other way. The whole system of water power on the Welland canal should be so regulated as best to meet the exigencies and needs of the people. Power at the present day is a very valuable asset, and is worth looking after. The whole Welland canal might be a hive of industry, with industries very much larger than those now existing there. Let measures be taken so that this power could be utilized for purposes beneficial to the citizens. I believe that the government should take hold of the matter in a businesslike way and deal with it as business men would deal with an asset that belonged to them. There is here a valuable asset to this country, and I hope the government will take hold of the matter and deal with it as a business concern would deal with it. As it is now six o'clock, I will say no more, but move the resolution.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 9, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, a certificate of the return of James Halliday, Esq., member elect for the electoral district of North Bruce.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Mr. James Halliday, member for the electoral district of North Bruce, introduced by Mr. Borden (Halifax) and Mr. Sproule.

CLAIM OF NOVA SCOTIA AGAINST FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark) moved :

That the papers which have been brought down respecting the claim of the province of Nova Scotia against the government of Canada be forthwith printed, and that for this purpose Rule 94 be suspended.

He said : I wish to draw the attention of the government to the fact that the evidence has not been brought down, and I would wish it to be laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). Do you wish the evidence taken by the arbitrators brought down ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

CLAIM OF MACKENZIE & MANN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I call the attention of the government to the statement of the right hon. the Prime Minister, on the 11th of March, with reference to certain papers respecting the claim of Mackenzie & Mann. On that date, in answer to a question, the right hon. gentleman said : That a certain claim had been made, and was being considered by the government, and that the papers would shortly be communicated to the House. Inasmuch as some four weeks have since elapsed, and the papers have not been brought down, I take the liberty of bringing the matter to the attention of the right hon. gentleman.

INSPECTION OF FRUIT PACKAGES.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved third reading of Bill (No. 32) to provide for the marking and inspection of packages containing fruit for sale. He said : When this Bill was discussed in the committee the other night, there was a considerable number of alterations made in various sections which will necessitate further alterations to make the Bill intelligent and complete. The proposed changes do not interfere with the principle of the Bill. The Bill as introduced was only intended to apply to apples and pears, but as it has been made to apply to all fruit, we shall have to substitute the word 'fruit' for the words 'apples and pears,' in the sixth and seventh sections. In consequence of the introduction of clause 9, the words which deal with the size of the fruit are not required. In section 8, the word 'first' should read 'finest.' In clause 9, line 20, the words 'The marks on such packages or' are not required. I withdraw my motion for third reading.

Motion for third reading withdrawn.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved :

That the order for third reading of Bill (No. 32) be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, and House again went into committee on the Bill.

On section 6,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I move that the word 'fruit' be substituted for the words 'apples or pears,' and that all the words after 'package' in the eighth line be struck out.

Mr. MONK. Is this intended to apply to tomatoes ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think tomatoes would come under the definition of fruit, but I would not like to give a legal opinion upon it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would you give us an agricultural opinion upon it ? I think the hon. minister ought to be able to determine whether a tomato is a fruit or a vegetable.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not going to enter upon any such question.

Mr. SPROULE. I think what the hon. gentleman should decide first is what he means by fruit, because there is no definition in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would move that section 7 be amended by the substitution of the word 'fruit' for the words 'apples or pears' in the second line, and by striking out all the words after the word 'packed' in the seventh line.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the minister will insert a clause defining what fruit is to mean, because the word covers a large field. He would not say to my hon. friend whether a tomato is fruit or a vegetable.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I confess that I have not undertaken to define the word 'fruit' in this Bill. I think the practice in the market would pretty thoroughly define it. The differences between a tomato and say a currant and a gooseberry are a little indefinite, if you say that the one is a fruit and the other is not a fruit in a scientific sense, although I think there is no doubt that in the courts a gooseberry would be considered in the market acceptation of the term a fruit, while in most cases a tomato would be called a vegetable. I do not think there is any very clear line of demarcation between a fruit and a vegetable.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where would my hon. friend place a cranberry ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the market definition of a cranberry would be that it is a fruit. To state arbitrarily that certain things are fruits and certain other things are not fruits would load down the Bill with complications ; and in making out such a list, something might be omitted which should not be omitted.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister's explanation is the strongest reason why there should be a defining clause. He suggests that it should be left to the courts to determine. It seems to me there is no necessity for that. Why not mention apples, pears, and certain other fruits in the Bill, and then anything outside of those would not be a fruit ?

Mr. HOLMES. To avoid all trouble it seems to me that you should not attempt to define fruit at all. For instance, would you call a banana a fruit ? It seems to me that what is understood in the commercial world as fruit is sufficient. As a rule, tomatoes are not put up in packages, so that this Bill does not apply to them.

Mr. LANCASTER. I submit that the easiest way out of the difficulty would be to enumerate what fruits you are legislating about. Then you do not have to say what things are fruits and what things are not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At least the hon. Minister of Agriculture might let us know what fruits he has in mind to which this Bill shall apply. When he is making a change from apples and pears to fruit in general, he must have in his mind certain fruits to which the Bill is to apply ; and it would perhaps give us a better idea whether the amendments are proper ones to be made, if he would state what those fruits are.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say to my hon. friend that the amendment does not propose to change the Bill beyond what was accepted in the committee. The provisions relating to apples and pears were originally intended to apply only to the export trade ; but when it was decided that they should apply to internal trade as well as to the export trade, there was no reason why they should not apply to all fruits, as the other sections do. That is the reason why I was obliged to make this change in the wording of this particular section ; and it is only a change of the wording. I must say that I think it would be difficult to make out a list of fruits to which only this Bill should apply. It might be done ; but there would be great danger that some fruits which are sold in the ordinary market might be omitted through inadvertence. I do not think there is any doubt in any case which might arise under the Bill, the courts would be able to decide whether a particular fruit came under this Act or not.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the reason the hon. minister gives us is a sufficient reason to justify us in not amending the Bill at this stage. Even if this defect in the Bill has only now been brought to our attention, it is none the less the part of wisdom to insert a provision to overcome that defect. The minister says that if we inserted a schedule of the fruits to which this Bill should apply, it might be found afterwards that other fruits should have been included. If so, it is an easy matter afterwards to amend the Bill so as to include them. But I think it is the part of wisdom to insert some list, so that the people handling, packing or selling fruit will know to what the Bill does apply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that the amendment which the hon. minister proposes is a little more important than he seems to imagine. The Bill originally applied, of course, only to apples and pears. These sections which the hon. gentleman is proposing to amend he proposes to make applicable to every variety of fruit. Therefore, as affecting all varieties of fruit except apples and pears this has all the effect and importance of a new Bill. It does not seem to me worth while, then, to speak of this as a mere verbal change, a change of no importance. I do not know what other fruits besides apples and pears are usually sold in closed packages in Canada. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fisher), having experience in his department with regard to such matters, should be able to inform the House on that subject. I would much like if the hon. gentleman would do so before the discussion goes further. It seems to me we are entitled to have that information from the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand that the change in these words affects other classes of fruit, but the change made proposes simply to carry out what I understood to be the intention of the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With respect to apples and pears ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. With respect to all fruit. I supposed that these amendments had been made in committee, and it was only when I saw the reprinted Bill and found that these amendments had not been introduced that I proposed this change. As I understood the sense of the committee when the Bill was under discussion before, it was fully understood and intended that these sections should apply to all fruits. That is why I said that this was only a verbal alteration, and not because I did not understand or appreciate that the amendment made a radical change in the application of these two sections. As to the kinds of fruit that are sold in closed packages, peaches are frequently so sold and sometimes also currants, gooseberries and raspberries. Grapes are sold in closed packages, though the wording of the Bill applies only to kegs, barrels, or boxes, and would not apply to baskets. That change was accepted in deference to the representations of the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Smith). When I said that it would be a difficult matter to make a list of fruits packed in closed packages, it was because there may be fruits which to-day are not sold in closed packages but which to-morrow might be so sold, in which case the Bill would apply to them. The Bill applies to every kind of fruit sold in a package which is of such a character as to prevent the buyer seeing and judging of the quality of what he is getting. The object is to assure the buyer of really getting what the seller pretends to sell. That being the general character of the Bill, it seems to me that the question of the kind of fruit is only a detail. The Bill applies to all fruits which are sold in such a way that the package may help the palming off on the purchaser of fruit of a lower quality than that represented by the seller. Fruits that are sold in open packages for home consumption are frequently packed in closed packages for export. For instance, grapes are sold in open baskets in the local market, but they are sometimes exported in kegs, packed in various kinds of packing, such as buckwheat hulls and other things that are tasteless. This Bill would apply to grapes so packed. These are the reasons why, at the moment it strikes me as being inexpedient to define too closely the exact kinds of fruit to which the Bill should apply.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister how the Bill would apply to what we know in Ontario as the huckleberry, or the blueberry, as it is called in the lower provinces. We import this fruit largely from the lower provinces, and it comes packed in an enclosed package—a log hollowed out something like a sap trough and covered with a solid board. Those that come from the west are usually packed in pails. How would section 7 apply to the huckleberry if it were made to read——

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any fruit packed in a closed package, upon which package is marked the grade 'No. 1 Canadian' unless such fruit consists of specimens of one variety, sound, of fairly uniform size, and not less than 80 per cent free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects——

—and so on. When we get these berries from Nova Scotia, there is not twenty per cent of them but are bruised. Of course everybody will admit that the blueberry is a fruit, and it cannot be doubted that as we import them they are contained in a closed package. How will this Bill affect the trade in this fruit ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the mark indicated in the section is put upon the package, it will come under the operation of the section. If not, it will not come under the operation of the law. The seller is able to sell the fruit without putting on the packages the mark 'No. 1 Canadian,' and without that it would not come under the section.

Mr. MONK. All this seems to make it more evident that it is important to define the kind of fruit aimed at by this section 7. Does the hon. minister pretend that those who gather blueberries, say, in the Saguenay district of the province of Quebec, are to be brought under the operation of this section ? How can they avoid violating the law——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By not putting the mark upon them.

Mr. MONK. But they are obliged to put a mark on them. Under section 4, every person who packs fruit in a closed package for sale must mark the package——

—(a) with the initials of the Christian names, and the full surname and address of the packer ;
(b) with the name of the variety or varieties ; and

Mr. FISHER.

(c) with a designation of the grade of the fruit.

And how about the other wild berries picked in Quebec and sent to Montreal in closed packages ? How about the wild grapes that are sent to Montreal in barrels or closed packages in the autumn in very large quantities and are used in the city for different purposes ? How about the fruit known as mûre, or catherinette ? Is my hon. friend going to apply section 7 to them ? It would be a frightful hardship on those who gather these wild fruits.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If a mark is put upon a closed package, indicating that it contains a certain quality of fruit, it ought to contain that quality of fruit. Of course, if one is attempting to sell in closed packages fruit which is not up to the quality represented on the packages, he would be guilty of an infraction of the law. And that is the intention.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. minister explain the difference between 'grade' and 'quality.' If they do not mean the same thing, they mean substantially the same, or they are so intimately connected that it would be difficult to distinguish between them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think there is any distinction.

Mr. CLANCY. Then my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is right in saying that with this change all fruit in closed packages must be marked with the designation of the quality and so on.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Then there would be no escape such as the hon. minister has pointed out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But the object of the Bill is to prevent persons putting upon closed packages marks indicating that the fruit is of first quality when, as a matter of fact, it is not of first quality. If it is not the intention that the Bill should carry out that idea, these sections are not right.

Mr. CLANCY. Section 8 brings these two together, because it says :

No person shall sell, or offer, expose or have in his possession for sale any fruit packed in closed package, upon which package is marked any designation which represents such fruit as of first, best or extra good quality, unless such fruit consist of well-grown specimens of one variety, sound, of nearly uniform size, of good colour for the variety, of normal shape, and not less than 90 per cent free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects, and properly packed.

That leaves no possible escape. If there is anything that designates the quality of the fruit, and if the fruit is in an inclosed package, it comes within the operation of the law.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is the intention of the Act.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me it may be a very serious matter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As to the operation of the Act, it is very desirable that some such Act should be passed. My hon. friend must not think that we are opposed to the principle of the Act, because we are not; but it is necessary for us to see how it will work out. Take the case which was suggested a moment ago by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), the bringing of blueberries from the maritime provinces to Ontario in closed packages. They might be in such a condition when they started upon their journey as to justify the application of grade No. 1, or A No. 1; and yet when they arrived at their destination they might be bruised, as he mentions. The result of that would seem to be that you would have to open every package and turn out a sample of the fruit before you can sell it, otherwise the vendor would subject himself to a penalty under the interpretation of this Act which the hon. gentleman insisted on the other day. Now that does seem to be a result we would hardly like to bring about, and I would like to have the hon. gentleman's views with regard to it.

Mr. CLANCY. Before the minister makes his explanation, I would like to ask if all the fruit within the meaning of that section is supposed to be absolutely free from every possible defect? If so, it is a very harsh Bill. The hon. gentleman will see that the Bill originally intended to indicate the defects that particularly belong to apples and pears, namely, scab, worm holes and bruises. But there are other defects. I would like to ask the minister if it is the intention that every class of fruit under section 6 must have 90 per cent absolutely free from every defect?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention of the section as now amended would be that any fruit marked A No. 1 Canadian should be like that.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman intend that all fruit marked A No. 1 Canadian shall stand first, and the fruit coming under section 8 shall stand second, and the fruit coming under No. 1 Canadian in section 7, stand third? Because that would be the effect of the Bill by reason of 90 per cent being required under section 6 and under section 8, while only 80 per cent is required under section 7.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, No. 8 is a different section altogether from sections 6 and 7. No. 8 is practically the same as No. 6 except that it does not give an absolute grade of a certain character, or brand of a certain character; but it does not define the brand; whereas No. 6 does give a definite brand of A No. 1 Canadian. But there is no comparison, or gradation, or inferiority of the fruit as sold under the definition in section 8, from that under section 6. I may say in reply to the hon. leader of the opposition, that section 6 as applied to a fruit like blueberries, or as applied to certain other small fruits, does not seem to be very clear. I think the description of the defects in them would hardly apply to such small fruit. It seems to me if it is only applied to apples and pears, a number of other fruits which would come legitimately under this section would escape and the section would not apply to them. But section 8 is really the section that would cover most cases. Sections 6 and 7 are those under which only certain specified grades are employed, and anybody selling such fruits as blueberries and other small fruits would not use these particular definitions of A No. 1 Canadian, or No. 1 Canadian, and consequently sections 6 and 7 would not apply to them; while section 8 would apply to them if sold under any qualification, that is to say, if they put any brand upon them which indicated superior excellence. If they did not put a brand on them which indicated superior excellence, then section 9 would apply to them, and it requires that when the fruit is examined, the portion examined shall be a fair representative of the contents of the whole package.

Mr. MONK. I think section 7 will give rise in the province of Quebec to a great deal of useless litigation, because the definition therein is not correct at all as applied to fruit in general. The minister may say that when it is a question of small fruit, you won't turn to sections 6 or 7, but you must. There was a prohibition in section 7 which was limited to apples and pears, and it is now desired to apply it to all fruits, that is a prohibition to sell.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, there is only a prohibition to sell with a certain mark upon them.

Mr. MONK. But does the minister suppose that parties who send blueberries and wild grapes fresh to Montreal will neglect to mark them as No. 1, because they must mark them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Unless they mark them No. 1 Canadian this section would not apply.

Mr. SPROULE. In the first place, you say that all fruit must be marked with the designation or grade, it does not matter whether it is first, second, or extra quality or any quality. That, I take it, applies to all the fruit that is included in this Bill. Therefore you cannot exempt any kind of fruit from sections 6, or 7, or 8. I understood the minister to say that unless it is marked best, or extra good quality, it would not come under section 8; but they have got to mark the quality.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But they need not mark it extra good.

Mr. SPROULE. But there is either, first, best, or extra quality, these are the three qualities. But section 4 says you must mark the package with the grade of the fruit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but if your fruit is not of extra good quality you can mark it medium, or mark it second, or whatever you like. You must mark the grade, but you may mark it second grade.

Mr. SPROULE. But suppose you do not mark them at all ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But you must.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you are amenable to the law and liable to a fine if you do not mark them ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No doubt.

Mr. SPROULE. Then if you mark it something, it must be first quality or some other quality, and unless it comes up to the standard that is set for first quality, then I think you are liable to a fine.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If you mark it second quality and it comes up to second quality, you would not be liable to a penalty. If you mark it first quality and it is found to be only second quality, then you are liable to a penalty. If you mark it XXX and it is found to be of a quality indicated by X or XX, then you would be liable to a penalty.

Mr. CLANCY. Section 4 provides that all fruit must be designated of some quality. Now, suppose a man marks his apples XX ; according to this Bill it absolutely does not determine anything, because it might be precisely the same quality that is marked X by his neighbour, and the one not knowing at all how the other marked his apples. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how it is possible to carry out the provisions of the Bill under such circumstances unless it is declared that there must be some mark specially indicating the quality. If that be the case then it is quite clear that punishments will be visited upon those who offend against the law. If you must have some mark and that mark means anything in most cases I do not see how it is possible to work that out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is just the object covered by section 8, and it is thought to be pretty completely covered by it as far as any definition of what we do not know can possibly do it. We do not know what marks different traders may put upon their fruit, but if any one puts a mark upon his fruit which appears to indicate that it is specially good and it is not so, section 8 would cover that : whereas if we define only certain things as marks that were going to be covered by this Bill, then, anybody who did not put these marks upon his fruit, but who put other marks upon it intended to deceive, would not be liable to the penalties of the Bill. We think that section 8 covers that point.

Mr. MONK. I would suggest to the hon. minister to exempt from the operation of this law wild fruits, such as we have in the province of Quebec. There is no doubt that it is intended to apply particularly to garden-grown fruit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. MONK. The possibility of applying the Bill to fruit grown in the fields or in the woods would be very great, and I would suggest to the hon. minister to exempt wild fruit entirely from the operation of the law.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What words would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) suggest to cover that ?

Mr. MONK. I think the words 'wild fruit' in general would cover it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Would the hon. gentleman's idea be covered by these words : 'Fruit not wild fruit' in sections 6 and 7 ?

Mr. MONK. I think it, perhaps, may be made the subject of a special section, providing that fruit meant to be covered by this Act would not be meant to include wild fruit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a new idea, but it is one, I think, well worthy of consideration. I think it would be a fair interpretation of the Bill, as my hon. friend has said. The full intention of the Bill was to deal with cultivated fruit. We can quite understand that wild fruit is much more difficult to grade than is cultivated fruit. I think, perhaps, that would completely cover the difficulty that has been raised this afternoon in regard to the change in these sections. If that is the feeling of the committee, I would be disposed to insert a clause saying that in this Bill the word 'fruit' would not include wild fruit.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the hon. minister should confine the Bill to apples and pears, as was originally intended. I do not see the object he has in introducing now the word 'fruits' to take the place of 'apples and pears.' We do not know what trouble it will lead to. It has been suggested that it might apply to blueberries and cranberries, and he intends to except these, but the same objection will apply, perhaps, to some of the cultivated fruits that we purchase in closed packages. The whole discussion of the Bill was conducted the other day upon the idea that it would apply to apples and pears. The hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Smith), who takes a deep interest in the Bill, is not present today, and I would suggest, that, if the hon. minister is going on with the Bill, he should ask the committee to rise and report progress, and in the meantime that he should come to a conclusion as to what fruit the Bill should affect.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is entirely wrong in saying that the original intention of the Bill was that it should apply only to apples and pears. Sections 8 and 9, which are now in this reprinted Bill, and which were section 8 of the original Bill, as introduced in the committee the other day, distinctly applied to all kinds of fruit. My hon. friend has quoted the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith). The hon. member for Wentworth was a member of the committee of the Fruit Growers' Association which specially asked that this Bill should apply to other fruit than apples and pears, and that it should apply to the internal trade of the country instead of only to the export trade. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), in saying that the original idea was that the Bill should apply only to apples and pears, is entirely wrong, and the quotation he has made is a misplaced one, inasmuch as he has not understood the views or wishes of the hon. member for Wentworth. The Bill certainly is desired and called for by the consuming public of the country to apply to other fruits besides apples and pears, and I think the advantages of the Bill would be extremely limited and largely minimized were it not to apply to all kinds of fruit. But, I must point out to the hon. gentleman that it is only when these other fruits are sold in closed packages that the Bill does apply to them. If they are sold in open packages, as most of our small fruits are in this country, the Bill does not apply to them at all, and it does not create the difficulties which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. Is the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) writing a clause to cover the point which he mentioned ?

Mr. MONK. No, I am not ; but I will do so if the hon. gentleman wishes it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am quite willing to do it ; I thought the hon. gentleman was doing it.

Mr. SPROULE. The more discussion that takes place the plainer is the need shown that we should define what is fruit. If you say 'wild fruit,' you may refer to an article that would be regarded as tame fruit in some cases. Take cranberries, for instance ; they are being planted in marshes and cultivated. They are wild fruit in one sense and tame fruit in another sense. They are largely gathered in the Georgian Bay district by the Indians. They are usually put up in barrels, and they would undoubtedly come under this Bill, unless you define what is meant by the word 'fruit.' Blueberries are treated in very much the same way. Sometimes they are put up in pails and sometimes in kegs. Apricots and plums are also put up in barrels and kegs, so that all this fruit would come under this Bill. There is no doubt about that, and I think it would be much more workable and much more easily understood if you would insert a clause defining what is the meaning of the word 'fruit' in this Bill, and stating to what fruit the Bill shall apply.

Mr. HOLMES. I think, as I expressed myself before, that if you begin to define the various kinds of cultivated or wild fruits you are going to get into no end of trouble. I do not think that anybody looks upon cranberries as cultivated fruit. They are looked upon simply as wild fruit, and they are so classed commercially. Take blueberries ; they are looked upon as wild fruit also, so that if you begin to enumerate what are wild fruits and what are cultivated fruits, you will get into no end of difficulty. If you accept the common-sense commercial term as to what are wild and what are tame fruits, you will be safe. You cannot begin to define what may be wild or what may be tame or cultivated fruits, and if you take the ordinary commercial acceptation of the term, there will be no difficulty.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Holmes) had been at the Agricultural Committee a few years ago, he would have heard one of the members of the staff giving information as to how they plant and cultivate cranberries in the maritime provinces. People there grow as many as fifty acres in a season, and they make a regular practice of raising them for sale. Would that not be regarded as tame fruit ? They are cultivated the same as tame fruit. If we specify the varieties of fruit that the Bill should apply to, then all others are outside of the operation of the Bill. The hon. gentleman speaks of the ordinary commercial term 'fruit,' but we do not know what it is. There may be the ordinary commercial term for cranberries, but who is to say whether it is tame fruit or wild fruit ? He may say it is wild fruit, and I may say it is tame fruit. Therefore, there is the difficulty to commence with. We can avoid that by specifying what is to be included under the operation of the Bill.

Mr. HOLMES. I understand the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to say that in his section plums are shipped in barrels ?

Mr. SPROULE. Sometimes they are packed in barrels.

Mr. HOLMES. I represent a section of Ontario which produces a large quantity of plums, and I never knew a barrel of plums to be shipped.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a great deal going on in the world that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Holmes) never knew of. I make the statement which I know to be a fact. It does not necessarily follow that because the hon. gentleman does not know it, nothing of the kind could occur.

Mr. COCHRANE. I cannot see any great difficulty in designating the fruits that this Bill will cover. I cannot see how it is going to lead to such a lot of trouble as the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) anticipates in his imagination. In my mind it would be a very simple thing to designate the fruit intended to be covered by this Bill. It need not take a very long clause to designate what you intend to cover by this Bill, and then all that is not named in this Bill would be outside of it and the Bill would not apply to it. That would be the simplest way out of it. If you name the fruits it will make your Bill workable and there will be no 'if' about it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot see the object of giving a list of the fruits when it is fully intended that all fruit which is packed in closed packages shall be included.

Mr. COCHRANE. You do not include wild fruits.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. With the exception of wild fruits. When cranberries are packed in barrels I do not see why they should not be subject to the provisions of this Bill. It is true there are wild cranberries and cultivated cranberries, just as there are wild strawberries and cultivated strawberries, and in Nova Scotia, for instance, there are more cultivated than wild cranberries put upon the market. The words 'wild fruit' would not cover cultivated cranberries. I think if we make the exception for wild fruit, that is all that will be necessary. I consider that the insertion of a list of fruits in the Bill would lead to difficulty.

Mr. SPROULE. How could the minister tell whether cranberries are wild or cultivated, and that must be determined before this Bill is workable. Sometimes cranberries are frozen for transport, and at other times they are packed in during the warm season. There are high bush and low bush cranberries, both of which are packed in barrels, and sometimes when you open the package they are bruised. When they are bruised they would not come under the definition of a high quality of fruit as provided in this Bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. It seem to me that if you stencil on the package the words 'wild fruit' you would have no trouble in getting over the difficulty, and I believe it to be a wise distinction to make. Every dealer in cranberries knows that when he gets cranberries from Cape Cod he gets cultivated cranberries, because the name of the grower is placed on the package. If you get cultivated cranberries from Nova Scotia the name of the grower is on the package also, and you know that they are cultivated, whereas if they are gathered in the marshes the name is not put on the packages, and you know they are wild. The words 'wild fruit' stencilled on the package would cover the whole ground.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall move an amendment to clause 3 in accordance with the view of the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), but in the meantime we had better proceed with the other clauses of the Bill.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The word 'first' is a misprint here, and I move to substitute for it the word 'finest.'

Mr. CLANCY. I would like the minister to tell us if he can, what is the substantial difference between clause 6 and clause 8. In one clause you put the words 'A No. 1, Canadian,' which I take it includes finest, best or extra good quality, specified in the other clause.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Then why repeat the same thing in section 8?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 8 applies to other brands of a similar character which are not included in 'A No. 1, Canadian.' Section 8 would apply to superior or super-excellent or XXX, which a dealer might put upon his packages but not 'A No. 1, Canadian.'

Mr. CLANCY. The minister is quite mistaken. The sections are precisely the same except in one case you put 'A No. 1, Canadian,' which means finest, best or extra good quality, as the hon. gentleman admits. As a layman, I am perfectly amazed at the suggestion of the minister that there is any difference between the two. You simply say the same thing in different words.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 6 only applies to 'A No. 1, Canadian,' whereas section 8 applies to any brand which implies super-excellence, and is therefore wider in its scope.

Mr. CLANCY. There is no difference in the clauses except in certain words.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but these certain words make all the difference in the world.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister has evidently not studied the section. The words in both sections are precisely the same except that in one you say 'A No. 1, Canadian,' which includes the finest and best; and in the other you say 'finest, best or extra good quality.' You can read 'A No. 1, Canadian' into either of the sections and they are precisely the same. I would like any gentleman who is a lawyer in this House to say what is the difference between the two sections.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The leader of the opposition is a lawyer, and I would ask him what the difference is?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The other day I pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture precisely the objection raised by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). If you can convict any person under clause No. 6, you can also convict him of an offence against clause No. 8.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Therefore section 6 has no office which is not fulfilled by section 8; and that is the point my hon. friend made. The hon. gentleman did not make the same reply to me, that he did to my hon. friend. What he said was that he desired to retain section 6 for the purpose of educating the public to use the word 'Canadian'; and I thought it was a remarkable thing to introduce a section into legislation to bring that about, a course which had never been pursued before; for every other office of section 6 seemed to be fulfilled by section 8, which was exactly the point my hon. friend from Bothwell made to-day.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. The point he made the other day was just the reverse of that which the hon. member for Bothwell is making. The point he made was that section 6 was unnecessary, whereas the point the hon. member for Bothwell is making is that section 8 is unnecessary; and as a matter of fact, the reply which I made to the leader of the opposition the other day was not the same as that which I made to the hon. member for Bothwell. The hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that I wish to retain section 6 as an encouragement or education to the trade to use a Canadian national brand; but if section 6 stood alone, and anybody chose to use another brand which indicated superexcellence or high quality, he would not be subject to the penalties under this Bill; but section 8 brings him under those penalties, and that is its object.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. gentleman will not recede from the position he took, namely, that 'A No. 1 Canadian' means what is described in section 8.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly it does, but by section 8 these other things are brought within the operation of the Act.

Mr. CLANCY. This is what the hon. leader of the opposition said the other day:

> If the hon. Minister of Agriculture does not make the use of the word 'Canadian' compulsory, what office does section 6 fill which is not filled by the section which he proposes to add? It fills no office at all. If you add that section, but do not make the use of the word 'Canadian' compulsory, section 6 fills no office which would not be filled by the section which the hon. gentleman proposes to add, namely, section 8.

The hon. gentleman pointed out that if you adopted the new section 8, you could then well afford to abandon section 6. It is not worth while contending whether section 6 or section 8 should be retained, because the one or the other might be abandoned, and the Bill have precisely the same effect. I think I catch the hon. gentleman's idea with regard to section 8, but I fail to see that it accomplishes his object, namely, to include punishments for packing all classes of fruit other than those designated in the two sections, because a man may mark his fruit what he pleases without coming within the meaning of the Act.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 9,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would move that in section 9 the words 'the marks on such package or' in the seventh line be struck out. This clause deals entirely with the faced or shown part of the fruit being a fair representation of the fruit contained in the interior of the package; therefore the marks on the package are not necessary.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to go back to section 3, and propose as subsection 'a' the following:

> The word 'fruit,' wherever employed in this Act, shall not be held to include wild fruit.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to again press upon the hon. minister the advisability of reconsidering the proposition to define what fruits are included in the operation of this Bill, because I regard that as very important. Providing simply that wild fruit is not included does not make the Bill as workable as it would be by defining what fruits come under it. Then there would be no mistake.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope my hon. friend will let the Bill pass as it is, and if in its operation we find it necessary to define the fruit, we can do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Lock the stable after the horse is stolen.

Bill reported, and amendments read the first time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved that the amendments be now read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. CLANCY. I had hoped that the hon. minister would have considered the propriety of striking out that part of section 17 which gives a chance to informers to receive a portion of the fine. I am unable to think that any clause of that kind, which may be found in some Acts and under other conditions, because sanctioned by long usage, has ever gained respectability. My own idea is that there is nothing more dangerous, nothing more futile, nothing more disturbing or more dishonourable, than for men to live and profit as informers. This Bill affects a very large class of the people in this country, namely, the farmers, and under the widened sections of the Bill, since it applies to all classes of fruit sold either for domestic purposes or for export, a man could claim a portion of the money imposed as a fine for the most trifling infraction of the law. I hope the hon. gentleman will consent, without my making a motion, to strike out that portion of the clause. I move that all the words in section 17 from 'payable' to 'His Majesty' be struck out.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not possible to put the hon. member's motion now, because the question is on the second reading of the amendments which have been adopted in committee.

Mr. CLANCY. I will move it at a later stage.

Motion agreed to, and amendments read the second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CLANCY moved that section 17 be amended by striking out all the words from 'payable' to 'His Majesty.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it would be advisable to accept this amendment. The clause here introduced is part of our general inspection Act and is incorporated also in a large number of other laws, giving the informant a share of the penalty. I shall not enter into a discussion of the advisability of this general provision, but shall simply point out that it is a general provision in our legislation, one that has had the sanction of many years, I was almost tempted to say centuries of legislation. I do not consider this a blot upon the Bill. On the whole, the provision has worked satisfactorily in our jurisprudence. It is true that some times people of mean disposition may take advantage of such provision and may thus do themselves as well as their neighbours injustice and harm. But the number of cases in which individuals make their living by informing for the purpose of sharing these fines, is so small that I do not think that we need to allow it to influence us in the passage of such legislation. I must ask the House to reject the amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not rise to discuss the wisdom or otherwise of sending the Bill back to committee to amend this clause, but I rise to object to the third reading at this sitting. The rule we usually follow is that when a Bill passes in committee without amendment, it is read the third time forthwith——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will permit me to interrupt him—it is only by unanimous consent that we can take the third reading now, and I do not wish to press it if he objects. I understood that no objection was taken, or I would not have asked that the Bill be read the third time now.

Mr. SPROULE. My reason for objecting is that important amendments have been made in this Bill, and some of our best fruit men are absent to-day—members who, I am sure, would like to consider the amendment before the Bill is read the third time.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 93) respecting inquiries and investigations into shipping casualties.—Sir Louis Davies.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons further supplementary estimates of sums required for the services of the Dominion for the year ending June 30, 1901, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, April 9, 1901.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved :

That the Message of His Excellency and the estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to Capital—Railways—Intercolonial Railway—Steel rails and fastenings, $500,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. minister give us a full account of the requirements under this head, also the amount expended last year and the policy pursued. Will he please state whether these rails were bought by tender, and what the price was.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I may say that the amount here asked for is not likely to be all that we shall ask for this session, so the hon. gentleman must keep that fact in view. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Haggart's) request is a very reasonable one, and I shall endeavour to give the information. Last year the rails were purchased by tender. They were furnished by two firms, a part by each—the Illinois Company and the Cambria Company. We had offers from these companies lower than those of others, including English manufacturers. The rails procured last year were to re-rail, as far as they would go, the Cape Breton line. We had some difficulty owing to the scarcity of labour last year and did not succeed in getting the whole ninety-four or ninety-five miles from Point Tupper to Sydney laid. I think we laid some seventy odd miles. The balance of the work we expect to complete as soon as the season will permit. The price we paid last year was $32.60 a ton. The arrangement made this year for the rails we propose to lay down during the next year, that is after 1st July, we pay for at the same price, $32.60. These rails we get in accordance with an arrangement entered into by the government, after consideration of the whole question, with the Sault Ste. Marie Power Company. We had a proposition from them to put in a steel rail plant to manufacture these rails in Canada. They satisfied us of their ability to do this work, and that they would be capable of establishing a very efficient plant, using ores of a superior quality. They said the steel which would be made from it would contain a percentage of nickel, which would be found in the rails they would make for us. Although this formed no element in the price, it would add materially to the durability and value of the rails, and we felt that that was an additional inducement for us to make the arrangement with them. The establishment of this industry was contingent upon their securing from the government a fair order, one sufficiently large to guarantee them employment for their factory—a basis, as it were, upon which to invite and encourage the introduction of capital for that purpose. As the government viewed the matter, it was one which we felt would appeal very strongly to the sympathetic consideration of the Canadian people. It would result in the establishment of a permanent industry and would secure to railway companies and others who might require rails, a supply obtainable in this country, while giving employment directly and indirectly to a large number of people. While conferring an enormous benefit upon a very great public work, we would be at the same time conferring additional and important advantages on the country in an industrial sense. We made such an arrangement with them. In the first place the question came up in the form of a proposal. The company offered to undertake the manufacture and delivery of these rails at such a price as similar rails of equal standard could be obtained in the open market. At the time we made these arrangements we instituted inquiries as to the current price of rails, and we found it would be impossible for us to place orders at that time for a delivery earlier than the fall of the present year, and that the prices obtainable would be at all events equal to the prices that we were paying last year, and which we had contracted for the year before. When we had assured ourselves with reference to what would be a reasonable price to pay, we made a contract with this company to deliver 25,000 tons of the quality and standard which we have been placing upon the road, a rail eighty pounds in weight, and we were to pay them $32.50 per ton, the delivery to commence in the first week in August, and to continue at such a rate that we would be able to lay the rails before the snow fell.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Where were they to be delivered ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were to be delivered to us in Montreal—that is in the present year. We have no permanent and explicit contract with them for the future, although in their proposal they asked us to give them a contract for a term of five years, and to give them an order for 50,000 tons with which to commence their industry. We finally concluded to give them an order for 25,000 tons, and while we have no explicit contract with them for any term beyond the year in which we are now entering, we have an understanding with them under which, if they furnish us, as they engage to do, with rails of the quality and standard we require, and at the current price in the English market, we are prepared to continue to take our rails from them.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand the minister that these rails are to be manufactured at the Soo ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The plant is now under way. The machinery, Mr. Clergue tells me, is all constructed, they are putting up their buildings rapidly, and I have heard very lately from them to the effect that we will receive, beginning the first week in August, a delivery of 500 tons a day. As to the amount, we have inserted in this estimate the sum of $500,000. After making deductions for the value of the old rails which we are taking up, we will have to ask parliament in a supplementary estimate for a sum beyond this amount. The exact sum will appear when the estimates are brought down ; but this is only a partial appropriation covering the cost of the 25,000 tons.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are the proceeds of the old rails you are to sell applied to the purchase of these new rails.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they go in reduction of the cost of these rails. It may be that none of them will be sold in time to help pay for these new rails, but when sold, they will go to the credit of capital outlay. That has been the course adopted in times past.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When they go into store account, of course it is to the credit of the Intercolonial Railway ? These all go into store account ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, if they are used there, they are charged to working expenses.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I did not understand how many rails were bought from the Illinois company and the Cambria company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Five thousand tons from each.

Mr. KAULBACH. How are the old rails disposed of ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The old rails, when taken up, are placed in storage account. When they are disposed of, it is in one of two ways. A portion of them may be used for our sidings, where we are extending our sidings. When these sidings are put in as renewals, the rails are charged against operating expenses ; when they are put in as new work, new sidings entirely, they are charged as against capital expenditure at the value at which they have been placed in store account.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How do you determine their value when going into store account ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The value usually placed on them is the value of the old rails as nearly as we can ascertain. For instance, these old rails that we have taken up now are placed in store account at $15 per ton. Another way of disposing of old rails, if we have no use for them ourselves, as we have no use for a large proportion of them, is to sell them at public competition, where they are bought either as scrap or for use on other railways.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What do they bring ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. During the last year they have not brought less than $21 to $22.50, delivered.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I want to know on what principle rails are renewed on the Intercolonial Railway, how much does the hon. gentleman renew each year, and how much is required for the purpose. I would also like the hon. gentleman to tell me about this contract that he has made with Mr. Clergue, if it is in writing, and if he will be kind enough to bring it down to the House. Another question : Does the contract provide that these rails should be made out of iron ore smelted upon the premises and rolled, or is it merely a rolling mill, and does the contract provide that a certain percentage of nickel should be used in the manufacture of these rails ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The agreement is in writing, and it will be brought down at once. I may add that it does not contain any provision as to the quantity of nickel the rails should contain ; but all the ore which is taken out by that company from its iron mines does contain nickel varying in proportion from 2 to 4 per cent. We are positively assured by Mr. Clergue upon that point. We hope to be able to relay the road at the rate of 25,000 tons a year. The hon. gentleman can figure it up for himself—it will take six or seven years to complete all our mileage. With an eighty-pound rail, we should require about 118 tons to the mile. We should have between 1,100 and 1,200 miles to relay, beyond what new rails have now been laid down. I am not going to commit myself to the exact number of miles, but it would be in that locality. We hope to do it as rapidly as possible. It is very important that it should be done in view of the increased weight of our locomotives and cars, and we think it would be advantageous to have it done as quickly as possible.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What portion of these renewals is charged to ordinary expenditure and what portion to capital account ? Is any part charged to the ordinary expenditure of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Undoubtedly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What part of it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We anticipate charging the cost of laying down the new rails.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I mean of the rail itself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As I told the hon. gentleman, we estimated upon a value of $15 per ton for the old rail. That is the value at which we put these rails into store, so that all you would have to do would be to deduct that sum from the cost in order to ascertain how much is being charged for the new rail.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We know the charge for the new rail. The hon. minister does not understand the drift of my question. I want to know if any portion of the cost is charged to the ordinary account of the railway. What part is charged to consolidated fund account and what part to capital account ? I understand the difference between the $15, being the valuation at which the old rails go into storage and the price of the new rails being $32, making a difference of $17, which is charged some way or other against the Intercolonial Railway. I want to know whether that is charged to capital account or to the ordinary expenses of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I would understand his present statement just as I understood his previous one. I understood the hon. gentleman to ask me how much was charged to capital ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We certainly would not be charging the whole of it to capital account when we were putting into store account the difference between the whole amount and the value of the old rails. That is not charged to capital account. The hon. gentleman has a recollection of the way in which the rail matter was managed during his tenure of office, and it is now done precisely in the same way.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister does not understand me yet. Is the difference between the amount of the old rails to go into store account and the cost of the new rails—one is $15 and the other is $32, which would make $17—charged against the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, certainly it is.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is charged?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that renewals of that kind, before his time, were charged in a similar manner, to capital account ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I am not going to say that. In times past, from time to time, when a large quantity of rails was purchased by the government, the rails were paid for and charged to capital account. They went into store, and when they were taken out of store, they were, as a rule, during the hon. gentleman's administration, charged as a whole against operating.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But, that was not the invariable rule, nor was it the rule when there would be a very large amount of relaying new rails. It is only the case when the quantity of rails laid was over a very limited number of miles. Under existing circumstances it would be altogether impossible to rerail the Intercolonial Railway in five or six years, and do it out of earnings. No matter what reasonable amount of a surplus you might have, you could not hope to do it in that way. It is according to railway law and usage that it should be done exactly as we are doing it.

Mr. KAULBACH. I do not understand the point as to the sale of rails and delivery of the same. What is the exact interpretation in respect to delivery ? Does the hon. minister mean that if he sells me rails in Montreal he will deliver them at Halifax, or at any point on the Intercolonial Railway, or am I to take them from the point where they are found at the time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman refer now to the case of old rails which are being disposed of ?

Mr. KAULBACH. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our arrangement in reference to that, and I think it uniformly happens, although there may be some exception—I do not recall any—has been to charge a price for delivery at the point on the Intercolonial Railway nearest to where they are required. Our charge has been $22.50 for delivery at Montreal when the rails have been required west of Montreal, and we have made a calculation as to what would be a fair proportion less than that for hauling whenever delivery has been asked for at any lesser distance from where they happened to be at the time. These matters are taken into consideration by the officers of the department and they control it, or rather their judgment would prevail, and any arrangement which they would recommend would be carried out, because I take it they would be best qualified to judge as to what would be a reasonable proportion to divide as between a longer or a shorter distance. If the hon. gentleman refers to the delivery of rails which we are purchasing, I may say that our arrangement with Mr. Clergue, of the Lake Superior Power Company, or the Sault Ste. Marie Company, whichever is the proper name, is to make delivery of this present year's purchase at Montreal, which is the most convenient point for us to receive them. We have a further understanding, that if we take them they are to be delivered at such other points as we may deem convenient.

Mr. KAULBACH. The information I desired was simply in regard to the sale of old rails. In case I desired to purchase in Nova Scotia, and the rails were in Montreal, would the hon. minister deliver these rails at Halifax, or any other point on the Intercolonial Railway, no matter where they were, at the same figure without the cost of transport ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. The price we get is governed by the condition of the market. We get the best price we can. We found that during the last year rails were in good demand, that the price was quite high, and that we could command $22 or $22.50—I am not just certain which—for delivery at Montreal. We had to haul them from points farther down on the line. They were not there. They were in the neighbourhood of Moncton when these arrangements were made.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that the rails which have been sold were rails which they had discarded because they were apparently worn out, or because they were a lighter class of rails than the hon. gentleman is now using ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would not use any rails ourselves that we have taken up along the line that were not of a first-class character.

Mr. CLANCY. Does that mean 80-pound rails ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, you can have a very excellent rail, of less weight which would do for certain classes of work where there were not the same heavy locomotives and trains in use.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman buying any rails less than 80 pounds in weight ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Not less ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I was going on to explain to the hon. gentleman that we have taken up 56-pound rails, but we have not sold any 56-pound rails in sections—

Mr. SPROULE. Were these rails taken up because they were worn out ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they were taken up and replaced by heavier rails. We have taken up 56-pound rails because they were too light for our purpose. These rails, which are excellent rails, we are putting down on the Prince Edward Island road, where the rail is now in a very dilapidated condition.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the life of such a rail as that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that you could name any definite term. It depends a good deal on the character of your traffic. The life of a 56-pound rail would not be very considerable on such a road as the Intercolonial Railway, or as it will be when all of its trains and engines will be of greatly increased weight.

Mr. KAULBACH. In reference to the old rails that are worn out and discarded, the hon. minister does not mean to say that he sells them for $22 a ton ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have sold rails for $20 a ton, with carriage added, making $22 or $22.50 a ton. But that is an exceptional thing. I do not imagine that we will have any similar experience in the future. We got the best price we could get for them last year.

Mr. BARKER. How long were these old rails in use ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Most of them, I think I may say all of them, were old rails when they were put down on the Cape Breton branch.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose the minister will admit that if their life had expired he would have to replace them out of income. There is no question but that the weight of 56 pounds should be replaced out of income. The fact that he is putting in a heavier rail makes no difference as to that 56 pounds, and he should replace them to that extent out of income, less the value of the scrap. Has the minister done so ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that would be expected when you are compelled to increase the weight of your rails, not because they are not good themselves but because business interests require it. It would be quite impossible for any railway company because it had to add 15 or 20 pounds a yard to its rails in order to carry its locomotives, to do so out of its earnings on ordinary railway business principles.

Mr. BARKER. It is a mere matter of adjustment. The minister has an old rail, old when it was put down which is now practically out of use. If he did not want to put down a heavier rail he would have to put down a 56-pound rail chargeable to income less the value of the scrap. When he puts down an 80-pound rail he should charge the extra 24 pounds to capital, and the balance, less the value of the scrap, to his working expenses.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The effect of all that would be that it would take half a century to get your road in proper shape.

Mr. BARKER. It would make no difference at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would make all the difference in the world. You would be simply adding to the capital expenditure of the country in an indirect way, but which you are now doing in a direct way.

Mr. BARKER. No. It would be fair to charge your increased weight of rail to capital, but on the principle adopted by the minister he is saving in his working expenses on the railway at the expense of the debt of the country. He should charge the 24 pounds extra weight to capital, because that is added to the company's property ; but the 56 pounds should be replaced out of working expenses just as if there had been no increase in the weight at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Although this question is new to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker), we have threshed out the subject over and over again in the discussion of the estimates. I suppose hon. gentlemen will adhere to their opinion while I will adhere to mine. If I take a commonsense view of the attitude of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) he would say this : Here is the Intercolonial Railway which is a government railway, and if it succeeds in making a narrow margin over its actual running expenses in the year it ought to take a million dollars more, apply it to laying down 100 miles of new rail, and show in the accounts it is doing that, not by adding to the debt but out of its earnings when it did not have any earnings, and thus charge it against the public debt in an indirect manner. As a matter of book-keeping that might be done, but after all it is an inconsequential contention because it does not make one particle of difference to the country.

Mr. BARKER. It makes all the difference in the world.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only difference it makes is that in the one case the new rails would not be laid, or if they were laid in any proportion at all it would be to a very limited extent, because no government could undertake to relay the whole of its line with new rails from end to end as required by the existing necessities of the railway, and do it without asking parliament to countenance its going into debt for the purpose. It is not as though you were simply renewing a rail which gives out here and there, but, unless you allow the government railway to be a discredit to the country you have to do all this on a large scale and in an expeditious manner.

Mr. BARKER. Nobody disputes that for a moment. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) sees clearly that under his system of book-keeping he shows an apparent profit that he has never earned. If the hon. gentleman charged the expense of renewing the old rails to working expenses—not adding to the property, mind you, but renewing and maintaining his track—he would not have had the surplus which he claims during the last three or four years. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) knows that perfectly well. Nobody can be found to dispute the principle that once capital provides a thing, then after that income has to maintain it. In this case capital has provided rails weighing 56 lbs. to the yard, and it is the duty of income to maintain that 56 lbs. afterwards. Under the system adopted by the Minister of Railways he not only escapes the maintenance of that 56-lb. rail, but he is actually getting new rails instead of the old ones out of capital, and that has also the effect that his working expenses in the future are going to be improved at the expense of capital. Instead of being subject to this expense of maintenance year after year he is getting rid of the old rails and getting new ones in their places. He is getting 80-lb. rails as new material, and for several years his working expenses would be cut down by reason of these new rails being charged to the debt of the country. And why does the Minister of Railways do that ? Simply in order that he may make a good showing on his working expenses and on the management of his railway. No railway in the country would ever think of keeping its books in that way. You could never get the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway to make such charges to capital account. If they did, the managers of those companies every few years could add a few pounds to the weight of the rails, and they would never spend a cent for maintenance except the mere cost of relaying. Now, I am not trying to teach the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) anything. He understands the matter perfectly well. I simply point out to the committee that the duty of the Minister of Railways is to maintain that 56 lbs. out of his income, less the value of the scrap, and the only thing he can properly charge to capital is the extra weight of the rail he puts in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) just follow me for a moment. We have taken up the old Cape Breton rail which was a second-hand rail when put down——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was not the Cape Breton rail used on the Intercolonial Railway before? I thought that only a part of them were taken up and replaced on the Intercolonial Railway by others, and that a great portion of them were new rails?

Mr. WALLACE. What difference would it make if they were used on another part of the Intercolonial Railway and transferred to the Cape Breton Railway. It is all government railway, and they were new rails when originally put down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were inferior rails when they were put down in Cape Breton, and being old rails when they were put down they were practically of little more value than they were when they were taken up last year and when they are now being taken up, and when there are 80-lb. new rails substituted for them.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman mean that they were old rails when originally purchased and put down, or that they were originally put down as new rails, and afterwards removed from one part to another ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What I state, from information received from my officers, is, that they were old rails when put down on the Cape Breton line. The hon. gentleman would like me to charge them up as new and good rails, of equal quality of new rails of the same weight, although the late government transferred them from one portion of the line to another. I do not think that is a fair or reasonable proposition. We are charging simply the difference between their value as old rails and the value of new 80-pound rails.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand the hon. gentleman to mean that the book-keeping should be affected by the fact that my hon. friend from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) happened to be the Minister of Railways at that time, while the hon. gentleman happens to be Minister of Railways at this time. If my hon. friend from Lanark were the Minister of Railways now, it would hardly be possible to carry out logically the suggestion which the hon. gentleman makes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, with reference to the 56-pound rails which have been taken up, they are comparatively new rails—as good 56-pound rails as you could probably buy in the market to-day; and on any view that could be taken of the question, I do not think there could be the slightest criticism of the method in which these rails are being treated. They are good rails, and we are treating them as good rails; and they are being put down on the Prince Edward Island road at the same value at which they are being taken up from the main line of the Intercolonial Railway, the difference only being charged.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do all the rails purchased this year, and last year and the year before, go into the store account—the gross quantity purchased or delivered; and is it then charged out ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Deputy Minister tells me that the new rails that have been purchased in times past go into the store account when they are being charged as against revenue. If you buy a large quantity of rails and keep them on hand, and they continue on hand for a term of years, they necessarily go into store account, and are only charged up when laid on the road.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In other words, all the rails you purchased this year and last year and the year before that have not gone into store account at all, but are all charged to capital ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is correct.

Mr. HACKETT. Did I understand the minister to say that second-hand rails which had been placed on the Cape Breton road and used there are now being taken to Prince Edward Island and used for the construction of roads there ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I did not say that. The hon. gentleman quite misunderstood me. I said that we are putting down on the Prince Edward Island road a very superior 59-pound rail, which has been a very short time in use. These rails are taken from the Drummond County Railway, which hon. gentlemen who have followed the discussions with regard to that road know is a road of recent construction. The rails put down on the Prince Edward Island road, if the hon. gentleman has seen them and knows anything about rails, he will say are very excellent rails.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When I had control of the Intercolonial Railway, there were a certain number of miles of railway to be renewed every year, and the rails used for this purpose were always charged to income. These never went into store account. The hon. gentleman has charged the full amount of the renewal of the road to capital account. While on my feet, I would like the hon. minister to tell me what English companies competed for these rails, and the prices they asked. I would also ask him whether he has any assurance that the smelting works will be built at Sault Ste. Marie in time to deliver the rails or any of them next fall ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot from memory tell the hon. gentleman the names of the English companies that tendered, but I will get the information. I remember that the price was $32.75 per ton, and that there were eight or ten firms tendering. I think they must have had a tacit understanding among themselves, for I think, though I would not be positive on the point, that most of the tenders were at the same figure.

Mr. CLANCY. Where was the delivery to take place ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think at Montreal.

Mr. WALLACE. Did the manufacturers pay the duty ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were not to have paid any duty on the rails. All the tenders we invited on the basis of price free of duty. With regard to the manufacture of rails at Sault Ste. Marie, I can only tell the hon. gentleman that before we placed this sum in the estimates, we had a communication with the company. We asked them not to mislead us in any way, but to let us know with absolute confidence whether we could count on receiving the rails or any portion of them in the time specified.

Mr. WALLACE. When was the contract made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Last fall or early in the winter. The proposition was laid before us, before the last session of parliament. We were not able to give it consideration while parliament was in session, but immediately after the session and as soon as we could, we opened up negotiations and came to an understanding with the company. Just what that date was I am not at the moment able to say.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman have the contract and those tenders immediately after dinner.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether I correctly understood the hon. minister that these rails, when used for a new siding, were charged to capital account, but when they were put on an old siding they were charged to current account ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If we were simply renewing work which had been done before, that would be charged against current account.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister not see that these rails are twice charged to capital account ? When purchased originally, they were charged to capital account, and when put down on a new siding they are again charged to capital account ? It seems to me it demoralizes the bookkeeping badly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How does the hon. gentleman get credit for the $15 old rails that go into the store account, when all the rails that are purchased and laid on the road never enter the store account at all ?

Mr. BARKER. When the hon. gentleman gets old rails into sidings, at what rate does he charge out the rails—at scrap rate, $15 a ton ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Is the hon. gentleman certain about that, because some of the items seem to indicate otherwise ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly. We might let this item stand, Mr. Chairman.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to Capital—Railways—Intercolonial Railway—To complete highway bridge at Rocky Lake, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This will complete the expenditure of $8,000 for the purposes of diverting the highway and avoiding three existing dangerous level crossings. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) knows the location of this work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is between Windsor Junction and Halifax ? I know that there are dangerous level crossings there.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why do you charge a highway bridge to capital account on a road finished so long ago as that between Windsor and Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is an entirely new bridge. It would be as reasonable not to charge any portion of the Intercolonial Railway to capital account, as to say that when you are going to make the road additionally safe by means of an entirely new structure you cannot properly charge it to capital.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a new principle.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. Here are three dangerous crossings on the level. It is desirable in the interests of the public that these dangerous crossings should be done away with. We make a diversion of the road and put in a new bridge, and we think we are fairly entitled to charge it to capital.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You do not charge the diversion, but only the bridge to capital.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is as I understand it, but I am not sure. No, I see I was wrong, and that the whole work, including the diversion, is charged to capital.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to Capital—Railways—Intercolonial Railway—To build new and enlarge old engine houses, $75,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Last year we appropriated $140,000 for this purpose. We have not yet expended the whole of that amount, but it will be expended by the end of the fiscal year. The works are estimated to cost $215,000, so that we are asking for the balance of what will be needed. This will enlarge some of the existing houses to accommodate the larger engines, and we also propose to build new engine houses at places where they are needed.

Mr. CLANCY. How many new ones ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are building new ones at Chaudiere and Stellarton.

Mr. BARKER. How many new engines does the hon. minister propose to accommodate ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By the end of the current year we shall have at least eighty-five new engines of the 82-ton size.

Mr. BARKER. But the hon. gentleman has only increased the number by about twenty in the last three or four years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but I have sixty-six under contract. We are enlarging the buildings at Campbellton, Ste. Flavie and Sydney. We are also lengthening the stalls at other engine houses, concerning which I have not the minute details at hand.

Mr. CLANCY. What do the new engine houses cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The engine house at Chaudiere will cost $60,000, and that at Stellarton between $55,000 and $60,000.

Mr. CLANCY. This represents an expenditure of only $120,000, and the balance of this $215,000 will be consumed in repairing other engine houses ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In enlarging and adding to them. For instance, I have seen the work in progress at Campbellton. We are taking out the wall, adding to the building and extending the pits and tracks.

Mr. CLARKE. Is all this work being done by tender ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. How many stalls are being added at each place where enlargement is made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The number varies from fifteen to twenty-five--perhaps twenty would be the average.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman does not propose to add as many as twenty at each place ? I am asking about those that are to be enlarged.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am speaking of the ones enlarged.

Mr. BARKER. Is it not possible to give the exact number in each case ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That could be given, but I have not the information here.

Mr. GOURLEY. I happened to be in the railway roundhouse at Truro a little while before coming here, and I saw one of these fine new engines, being moved on the turntable, and it looked very much as if the whole thing would break down. The workmen said, that an accident, accompanied with great loss of property, might occur any day ; because the engines were so much larger than the turntable was originally constructed to handle. I would ask the hon. gentleman to give this matter his attention, because if one of these turntables, should break down, the loss of public property would be far greater than the cost of renewing the table. We should have a new roundhouse, with all modern equipments, at Truro. I earnestly call the Ministers attention to this state of affairs.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What the hon. gentleman says is entirely correct, and it is the same all over the line. When we are changing from a forty and forty-five and fifty ton engine to an eighty-two ton engine, you can well imagine there would be risks. The officers of my department and myself are fully sensible of the importance of having our turntables enlarged, and our engine houses enlarged as rapidly as possible. We are doing that as rapidly as we can, and Truro is not being overlooked.

Mr. GOURLEY. Do you contemplate Truro in this present vote ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there will be something in the supplementaries.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister bring down after dinner information in detail of this large expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can give the hon. gentleman the details now, except in respect to the stalls. But I do not think that we have had from the engineers any memo. of the plans of the different engine houses. At Stellarton the engine house is estimated to cost $58,500, and a turntable, $9,500. The Campbellton engine house is costing $25,000; the engine house at St. Flavie is estimated to cost $25,000 ; that at Sydney, $75,000 ; that at Chaudière, $60,000. The enlargement of the stalls in other engine houses is put down at $12,000. I can get the information in respect to the stalls if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Increased accommodation at Sydney, $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will remember that I included in the first amount $25,- 000 for the Sydney engine house. When that estimate was sent forward we were providing for six stalls in that engine house; after that came, it was found necessary to increase the number and we are putting in twelve additonal stalls in the Sydney engine house, the cost of which forms a portion of the present amount of $100,000. These additional stalls, boiler, engine house and foundations, will cost $50,000 in addition to the $25,000 that has already been asked for in a previous vote. Then we have to lay out a yard, and prepare grounds and tracks, all of which will cost $50,000 more.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has there been any arrangement made with respect to running passenger trains into Sydney and North Sydney other than that which has hitherto prevailed ? There was a good deal of dissatisfaction in one of the towns, at least, with respect to the delay which took place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are about getting out time tables, and when the new time table comes out we expect finally to settle that question, which has given rise, I think, to a good deal of unreasonable controversy, though there may be a difference of opinion. It is not to be wondered at that the people of Sydney complained of the delay in the arrival of trains by reason of their being shunted off to North Sydney. I think I stated last year that my own view was that such a condition ought not to continue ; and I think we will be able to give a service to both Sydney and North Sydney which will be satisfactory to all concerned.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Sydney is where the steel works are being erected ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As it is nearly six o'clock, I will remind the hon. minister of the notice that I put upon the paper some time ago for the purpose of eliciting information from the Railway Department that we would like to get very much for the purpose of discussing the state of affairs on the Intercolonial Railway. Among the payments is a sum of $4,527,807, including railway and canal collections. Now, I want a separate statement of the canal collections from the railways. The notice has been on the paper for ten days, and the minister has been promising to get the information day after day. Then there is a sum here of the receipts and payments of canals, this is the ten-days' statement. There is the railways and canals consolidated fund of $118,972, I would like to know what constitutes that item. I suppose that nothing of capital account appears in this statement at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not able to separate the canal collections from the railway collections this evening, but we will not get through these railway estimates to-night, and my hon. friend will have another opportunity of getting this information placed in his hands, and he will have another chance to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. gentleman is going to make a statement of his whole management of the Intercolonial Railway, and I would like to have this information before he makes that statement. He will find the question was put on March 29th by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I remember that the question came up, and I was obliged to inform my hon. friend that I had not received the information from Moncton, but the deputy minister informs me that it will be ready to-morrow.

Mr. PUTTEE. Are tenders let for these improvements that are going on under contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. PUTTEE. Does the minister include in these contracts the current wage clause as a specification ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I do not think it has been customary on the Intercolonial Railway. We have not yet met with any difficulty at all except this, that probably the general effect of what has taken place in parliament and out of parliament in regard to wages has added quite a material amount to the cost of labour. I do not say I regret that, nor do I say that it ought not to have been so, but that has been the effect. We have not found it necessary to include any clause in our contracts in order to secure the payment of a proper and reasonable wage.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. minister will remember that the resolution passed by this House last year called for its application to all government works, and surely a contract of this kind must be considered a government contract, even although it is on the Intercolonial Railway. It seems to me that it should be included, and as the hon. minister admits that the cost of labour has already been increased it will not further increase the cost.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not a very easy thing, if I may remind the hon. gentleman, with the multiplicity of small contracts we are making on the Intercolonial Railway to carry out his wish. We would have to make a very considerable addition to our working staff in order to pursue these details, and unless there was some good reason for taking on this additional burden we would not feel like doing it. We would not want to incur that expense. I am quite sure that if there had been any ground for complaint at all in reference to the amount of wages that is being paid we would have heard of it. I do not find that the people are at all slow in making such things known to the department. We have never heard anything of that kind in reference to the contracts we have made. These contracts are small matters, and you would encumber them very much.

Mr. PUTTEE. They may be small matters, although the items are not very small. I do not think this would increase the cost of the Railway Department at all. We have a Labour Department now. We are going to be asked to vote $50,000 for that department, and we should give the department something to do. I think the Labour Department could take hold of this matter.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Administration of Justice—Miscellaneous expenditure, including North-west Territories, $37,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is this miscellaneous expenditure? I see the amount is exactly the same as last year.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is the customary amount for federal purposes, and includes fees in the North-west Territories for Crown prosecutors, sheriffs, clerks of the court, maintenance and transport of prisoners, coroners' inquests, copies of evidence in applications for executive clemency and general expenditures of that description in the North-west Territories, and also here at headquarters.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the expenditure last year?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The total amount voted was expended.

Travelling allowances, court of King's Bench and county court judges, Manitoba, $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is an increase of $500, because the amount of $2,500 voted last year proved to be inadequate. An increase is asked for because of the increased business in Manitoba.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would this represent the travelling expenses or allowance for judges on circuit?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The judges receive a per diem allowance of $6. This is not an exorbitant charge when you consider expenses in that part of the country.

Circuit allowances to judges ad hoc, $200.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the occasion of payments to judges ad hoc?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the event of a judge being disqualified in any district, or in the event of not being able to have a judge to send on circuit. They send a judge out specially for the purpose of taking a case in which the judge would be disqualified.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this restricted to any province or is it applicable to the Dominion as a whole?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not able to say where that expenditure was made last year, but I do not anticipate that it is applicable to any particular province. I cannot say whether it was expended last year or whether any portion of it was expended.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know that in my own province sometimes a county court judge is disqualified and a judge from another district comes to take his place, but, I supposed that would be dealt with as a circuit allowance for a county court judge.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the province of Quebec that is the way it is dealt with. I have no present recollection of that particular item or as to the purposes for which it is expended. It is only a matter of $200.

Mr. SPROULE. Has it been expended?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not able to say whether it was expended last year or not. I am quite willing to allow that item to stand if hon. gentlemen desire it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the hon. gentleman need let it stand, but he may mention it again.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I find here a memorandum which says that this vote is occasionally required, but it has not been drawn on this year.

To provide for the enforcement of the Alien Labour law, $9,000.

Mr. PUTTEE. How is that vote used?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Up to the present, a very small proportion of this item has been expended. Hitherto the administration of the Alien Labour Act has been in charge of the Department of Justice, but now it has been transferred to the Postmaster General, and it will be for him to explain in the future how this vote is used.

Mr. MONK. Did it cost us $9,000 last year?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It only cost us $966.66.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would rather be inclined to think that a smaller vote would be required than formerly, for the reason that under the new legislation the enforcement of this Act is left to private individuals in the provinces, under the sanction of the provincial Attorney General, or of a judge. I do not at present quite see the necessity for so large a vote, but I would not feel inclined to say that this amount should not be voted if the Solicitor General will tell us that it reasonably might be required.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I did not understand from the Bill introduced the other day that the law would be left entirely to the initiative of private individuals. They would put the law in motion, but I am not quite sure that to a large extent the government may not be responsible for expenditure connected with the administration of the law as heretofore.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is quite true there is nothing in the Bill to prevent the government from proceeding to enforce the law, but, on the other hand, there is nothing in the Bill which would enable the government to indemnify a private prosecutor who acted on his own responsibility.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Judging from the experience of the past, I do not think it likely all this money will be used, but, at all events, it cannot do any harm to place a sufficient sum at our disposal.

Mr. SPROULE. Unless the government show greater alacrity in enforcing the law in the future than in the past, a couple hundred dollars would be sufficient.

Penitentiaries generally, $3,560.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the increase of $160 for ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is an annual increase of $30 in the salary of the stenographer, and $130 for office contingencies. This is the first increase in this item that has taken place during six years.

Kingston penitentiary, $190,500.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is an increase of $100 to provide for an assistant for the farm instructor, the extent of the farm having been increased by fifty acres last year.

St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, $111,700.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the Solicitor General if he knows whether the two guards who were found guilty of an assault on the ex-warden are still in the employ of the government ? I may mention that during the last election five of these guards, in a premeditated manner, arranged to assault the ex-warden after a political meeting, and pursuant to that arrangement did assault him. The ex-warden was very seriously hurt. They were brought before a magistrate and were found guilty, or pleaded guilty to aggravated assault, and subsequently they withdrew their plea. They were taken before another magistrate, and two of them were found guilty of simple assault. The whole affair was very unsatisfactory, but what I wonder is, if these two guards, who were condemned to a fine, have been dismissed from the service. I may tell the Solicitor General that during the past election many of the employees of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary were actively engaged in the work of the election. I saw some of them myself at political meetings, but the case of these two guards is one which deserves special attention.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not in a position to say whether the two guards referred to have been dismissed. My present opinion is that they have not been ; that they paid the fine to which they were condemned. With regard to the charge that the people of St. Vincent de Paul took part in the election, I know nothing about it ; but, I would accept the word of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) when he says he knows it of his own knowledge. I am afraid, however, that that is a tradition of long standing at St. Vincent de Paul, and it should be made to disappear.

Mr. MONK. It is quite possible it has existed in the past, but the Solicitor General should see that some kind of check should be put upon it in the future.

Dorchester penitentiary, $54,500.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the explanation of this increase of $900 ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is to provide for a masonry instructor, whose salary will be $700, and the other $200 is for that amount under-estimated last year.

Regina jail, $10,600.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $1,100.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is an increase in salaries of $500, which has become necessary to provide for a night engineer; an increase in the maintenance of prisoners of $300, due to an increase in the price of beef and other provisions; and an increase of $300 in working expenses.

Administration of justice in the Yukon territory—Additional salary of judge, $1,000.

Mr. SPROULE. If you paid the judge $4,000 before, why should he get $5,000 now ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The experience we have had during the last two years has led to the conclusion that the salaries of the officials in the Yukon are too low to enable them to live even in moderate comfort, and it is proposed to allow the judges $5,000 a year each, with $250 a month for living allowance, and the sheriff and clerk of the court $3,000 a year each, with $150 a month for living allowance. My hon. friend will realize that $5,000 a year to a judge of the high court in the Yukon, who is called upon to administer the laws and decide matters of very great importance, is not exorbitant. It is the salary paid to the high court judges in Ontario and the superior court judges in Quebec.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you have the words 'authorized by statute' attached to the vote of the salary of one judge, and not to the other?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Because there is provision made by the statute for only one judge. A vote was taken last year for an additional judge.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Under what authority was the second judge appointed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under the authority of the vote in the estimates. If the salary is provided, the judge can be appointed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If a statute creates a court and authorizes one judge, I do not suppose you would appoint another judge simply by voting a salary to him?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The statute provides for the appointment of one or more judges. Therefore the statutory salary is for one, and then we vote an additional salary for the other.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then I understand that the authority for the appointment of the second judge was statutory.

Mr. MONK. I do not wish to complain at all of the increase of salary for the Yukon judges, because I have no doubt that the conditions of life change there; nor do I wish to reopen the question of the salaries of other judges, because that has already been fully treated in the House. But I would like to ask the Solicitor General if the government have under consideration, with the hope of any prompt solution, the question of a readjustment of the salaries of the judges of the province of Quebec. The Solicitor General is well aware that the judges of the city of Montreal are admittedly underpaid; and if changed conditions in the Yukon necessitate an increase, the conditions in the city of Montreal changed long ago, and the present salaries of the judges there are totally insufficient. I understand that the judges in the city of Toronto have grants of some kind from the local legislature, which bring their remuneration up to $1,000 over the remuneration of the judges in the same position in the city of Montreal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They have other advantages also.

Mr. MONK. The members of the bar who know the situation of the judges in the city of Montreal, and the great increase in the cost of living there, know that their position is rapidly becoming intolerable. They cannot move in the matter, and that makes it all the more the duty of those who see what they go through to bring the matter to the attention of the proper authorities.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may say that speaking in another place, the Minister of Justice stated that he had then under consideration a Bill to provide for increasing the salaries of the judges throughout the country. Speaking for myself, and judging from the work done by the judges in the province of Quebec, they are all undoubtedly underpaid for the services they perform. The comparison with the province of Ontario is to the disadvantage of our judges; but that is a matter over which we have absolutely no control, because the local legislature provides that the judges shall receive $1,000 a year each, in addition to their salaries, until such time as their salaries shall be increased by the Dominion to $6,000, when the allowance of the province shall cease. Personally I think the salaries of the judges throughout the whole Dominion of Canada ought to be increased.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is the salary for the additional judge mentioned here authorized by statute?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The appointment of both judges is provided for by statute.

Salary of sheriff of Yukon territorial court, in addition to such fees of office as may be allowed by the Governor in Council, $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there no tariff of fees for the sheriff except what is allowed him by the Governor in Council?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Out of the fees they are allowed to take an amount sufficient to bring their net salary up to $4,000 after having paid certain amounts to their deputies.

Mr. SPROULE. There is $1,000 added. Then, will the fees which they are allowed to collect just make up the difference between that and $4,000?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a tariff of fees established in the Yukon as payable to sheriffs and other deputies, just as in the older provinces—not the same amounts, of course, but fixed. Out of the fees these officers receive, they are entitled to take a sum sufficient to make their salaries $4,000. They account for the balance, paying it over to the Yukon officials entitled to receive, or to the Receiver General.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Apparently, the additional fees have not been enough to make the salaries up to $4,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Up to the present time that is the case.

Mr. GOURLEY. As to these living allowances—I thought that the salary of the judge was for him to live on, but I see he has a living allowance in addition to $3,000. Does the judge account for it in any way? If his living expenses were only $500, would he be given the $3,000?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. He renders an account to the department, which is vouched for by the officials of the department in accordance with the rules of the Auditor General's office. I may say that there is not a great deal left of the living allowance each year.

Mr. GOURLEY. The conditions of the Yukon are greatly changed, are they not? They tell me, that one can go there, in three or four days, from British Columbia. What makes living so expensive there?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not been there recently, but I understand that it costs considerably more to live in the Yukon than to live in any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. GOURLEY. But going to the Yukon is a mere pleasure trip now. There are a lot of people, in my own Province, who intend going there this summer, for a pleasure trip.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It may be delightful in the summer, but I am not sure that it would be the same in winter.

Mr. GOURLEY. But the supplies are taken in, in the summer, when carriage is least expensive. It is no part of our training, in my part of the country, to haggle about these little matters. But I would rather see the $3,000 added to the judge's salary and be done with it.

Services in the Yukon Territory—Administration of Justice—Living allowances of sheriff and clerk of court, $1,800 each, $3,600.

Mr. SPROULE. Here is an increase of $1,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The intention is to allow the sheriff and the clerk a living allowance. This is in accordance with the amount now paid to the officials in the territory, $150 a month.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As the hon. member for Colchester truly observes, we naturally suppose that the cost of living in the Yukon is growing less, becoming more like what it is in the older provinces. But these allowances are being increased. Can the Solicitor General tell us the reason of that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Originally, when the officials were sent in, in 1897, a certain amount was allowed as living allowance. But it was afterwards found not at all sufficient to maintain them. The necessity for an increase has become apparent from actual experience. I think my hon. friends who are at all familiar with the Auditor General's administration may feel perfectly satisfied that there is nothing allowed to these officials to which they are not entitled. This is not a sum which they may have and dispose of as they please. They have to account for it. They make their claim, which is not allowed unless it is established to the satisfaction of the Auditor General.

Mr. GOURLEY. They seem like princely establishments.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not sure that there is anything princely about them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the Solicitor General the date of the statute fixing the salaries for officers of the Yukon territorial court?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It must have been 1897—I will send for it.

Mr. FRASER. Anything like a decent house in Dawson City will cost a rental of $2,000 a year.

Mr. GOURLEY. I should like to have been informed of that before.

Services in the Yukon Territory—Administration of Justice—Maintenance of prisoners, $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. On what system are the prisoners taken care of out there?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Just as in the older provinces. Provision is made to give them what they are fairly entitled to as prisoners.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the Solicitor General any idea what it costs per capita?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I did not think of making inquiry, and have not the information at hand. I could get the information.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that in the past the expenses were very high, but I think no information has been given to the House on this subject on any previous occasion. It seems to me it would be a matter of some importance to have these facts.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am satisfied, if my hon. friend wishes, to give that information on concurrence.

Services in the Yukon Territory—Administration of Justice—Transport of prisoners, $5,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is altogether new, apparently.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is intended to repay to the mounted police appropriation the sums paid for expenses incurred in moving prisoners from place of arrest to place of confinement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, a similar reduction should be made in the mounted police estimates, as this seems to be a matter of book-keeping. Can the Solicitor General tell us whether that appropriation has been reduced?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know. As I am informed, they return vouchers to the Department of Justice for this particular service, and we pay the amount. That would imply, as I understand it, that there has been an increase in the expenditure of the mounted police.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But, if there is an increase here to repay an amount to the mounted police, I should think there must be a corresponding reduction somewhere else.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, if there was the same amount of work done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In previous years, how was this charged ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The work was not done, I presume, until quite recently, until the last year or so. This expenditure, I presume, has become necessary as the result of the settling of the country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But, within the last year or two this must have appeared in the expenditure of the mounted police.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I apprehend that until it became a large amount they would pay it and not seek to be recouped by the Department of Justice. But, when it increased to so large an amount as $5,000, and as it is part of the administration of justice, they wish the Department of Justice to bear it. That is the explanation which suggests itself to my mind at present.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is right. Still, it would seem to me there should be a reduction of some amount of the estimates of the mounted police.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would suggest that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) might hold that question over until the estimates of the mounted police are under discussion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman have charge of those estimates ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I can see the reason why he wished to put it off on some one else. Who has charge of the mounted police ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Prime Minister.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) could tell us about that ?

Services in the Yukon Territory—Administration of Justice—Witness and jury fees in criminal trials, $15,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase here of $8,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, the explanation I have is that last year the vote was $7,000, and it was reported by the judges and the Crown prosecutor as too small. I asked for information to enable me to estimate the amount accurately. I was told that they have not got at the present time in the Department of Justice sufficient data to estimate exactly the amount required. The amount asked for is largely tentative.

Mr. SPROULE. Is Mr. Wade the Crown prosecutor in the Yukon ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say, but we do not address the Crown prosecutor in a matter of this kind.

Mr. SPROULE. Have the department changed their system, which prevailed some time ago, where the government prosecutor could at the same time do ordinary professional work, as Mr. Wade did, in connection with the vessel where he took a case for the prosecution and the same case for the defence ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the Crown prosecutor would have the same privilege as in the other provinces. In Quebec the Crown prosecutor takes private practice as well as doing Crown business.

Mr. SPROULE. But the facts were stated in this House, and not denied, and I think they were substantiated. Out of the deposit that the owner of the vessel made as a guarantee that he would stand his trial, the Crown prosecutor took $700. At the same time he was giving the defendant advice, he was being paid a salary by the government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. The charge, or the suggestion, was made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in the House, that Mr. Wade had charged both sides of the case. I stated then I was perfectly satisfied that the statement was made without evidence of any kind. When Mr. Wade saw the report he telegraphed me a denial, and asked me to bring it up in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of the man's money ? My remembrance of the statement made by the member for Pictou is, that out of the $900 deposited by the vessel-owner as a guarantee that he would stand his trial, $700 was retained by Mr. Wade.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think every lawyer in the House will agree with me that the thing is so outrageous as to be incredible. In my experience I never heard of a lawyer even being charged with the offence. If there was the least possible doubt about it, I am sure the Department of Justice would have looked into it. All I remember is that the member for Pictou made the statement, and subsequently a telegram or a letter came from Mr. Wade positively denying it.

Mr. SPROULE. But, the statement was deliberately made in the presence of many members of this House, that the owner of the vessel went to Mr. Wade for advice, and received advice from him, regarding the very case concerning which Mr. Wade was advising the collector of customs who seized the vessel. That statement is in the 'Hansard.' The charge was made, whether the Minister of the Interior remembers it or not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I remember the charge, but there was certainly no evidence.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the Solicitor General what position Mr. W. H. P. Clement occupies in the Yukon territory ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. None at the present time. He resigned some time last summer.

Mr. BLAIN. He is not now in the employ of the government ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The criticism which my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) referred to was made in the House last year. It was to the effect that while Mr. Wade was acting as legal adviser he was engaged in private practice. That was a thing that I do not think the Minister of the Interior himself was much inclined to defend, because after the criticism was made upon it or before, he put a stop to it. It was a very bad thing, particularly under the peculiar conditions which existed in the Yukon at the time, that a lawyer should be advising the government and at the same time be at liberty to practice among individuals. However, the Minister of the Interior did stop it, but he should never have permitted it to begin. The other circumstance to which the member for Grey referred had something to do with the customs. According to my remembrance, the criticism was to the effect that Mr. Wade was acting for the collector of Customs and was also acting for one of the persons who had some dispute before that collector.

Mr. SPROULE. A vessel came into port and was seized for violation of the customs law. The vessel-owner desired to take his vessel out within a few days, as otherwise it would be frozen in, and that would be a serious loss to him. He decided, to satisfy the officials that he would stand his trial, to put up a deposit, I think the amount was $900, if they would allow the vessel out so that he might get it away before the river froze over. The vessel was then released, but I believe was afterwards seized again. In the meantime, while Mr. Wade was giving advice to the collector of customs, the vessel-owner was getting advice from Mr. Wade as the defendant in the case ; and out of the deposit which was put up as a guarantee that he would stand his trial, Mr. Wade kept $700. If my memory is correct, Mr. Wade said that that was to pay for his charges in connection with the case, and the vessel-owner did not get it back.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the hon. gentleman tell me if the position Mr. Clement occupied was abolished, or was some person appointed in his stead ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Connolly, of Halifax, was appointed in his stead.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are the names of the two judges there ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Judge Craig and Judge Dugas. Judge Dugas was appointed in 1897 or 1898, and Judge Craig was appointed last year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not see any provision for their salaries under the Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not quite gather from the Solicitor General the reasons for the increase of $8,000 in this vote, more than 100 per cent.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The reason is based entirely upon the returns made by the judges and the Crown prosecutor of the district, namely, that the amount voted heretofore, $7,000, was entirely inadequate. At the same time, I have to admit to my hon. friend that we have not got sufficiently detailed information to enable us to say that $12,000 or $14,000 will be sufficient, and we are obliged to ask for $15,000 to meet the exigencies of the case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much was necessary last year ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say, but we were $3,000 or $4,000 short last year.

Law books, &c., and freight thereon for the use of the bench and bar, and stationery and freight thereon for territorial court, $2,500.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The increase is made up by the enormous expenditure we have been obliged to make for freight. The greater portion of the money was used in paying freight charges. We have asked for $500 additional so that if possible we may have $2,000 free for the purchase of books.

Miscellaneous expenses, including fees and expenses of Crown prosecutor, salaries and living allowances of stenographers for territorial and police courts, and other officials or employees connected with the administration of justice, coroners' inquests, &c., &c., $30,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is a very large increase, but it is caused by the fact that last year the amount was entirely insufficient. As a matter of fact last year a portion of the expenditure named in this item was met by the Interior Department. There are four stenographers, two for the high court and two for the police court. Each of these men receive $3,000, making over $10,000 for stenographers alone.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much was expended last year ? The vote was $8,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can you give us any idea ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, I cannot ; I am not in a position to tell you because the whole amount that was expended in excess was paid by the Interior Department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this designed to cover what was expended by the Justice Department as well as by the Interior Department ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, it is designed to cover what ought to have been expended by the Justice Department, and which was expended in part by the Interior Department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) can give us an idea of what amount in addition to the $8,000 was expended last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the particulars here, but I can give them to the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As this is a very large increase, perhaps the hon. Solicitor General would not mind allowing it to stand.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am quite satisfied to allow it to stand.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am not as familiar with the territorial court in the Yukon as I ought to be. I see you have two stenographers for the police court. Is that another name for the territorial court ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You have the high court judges, and then in addition to that you have the police court.

Mr. GOURLEY. Has it just the ordinary jurisdiction of a municipal court ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The ordinary jurisdiction of a police court for the trial of summary cases.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is the need of stenographers ? We do not have any stenographers in the eastern police courts.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have them in many cases in our province. There are two in Montreal and one in Quebec.

Mr. MONK. Not in the police court.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend will have to allow me to insist. I have been in the police court—not as a defendant—quite recently.

Mr. MONK. There is one in the criminal court and the court of sessions.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Investigations are taken down now in short hand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. MONK. Preliminary investigations.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All the preliminary investigations are taken down by stenographers ; at least that is when the magistrate desires it for the criminal court. There is one of these stenographers who takes evidence in the criminal court for the benefit of the judge.

Mr. MONK. In preliminary investigations.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would be for preliminary investigations. There are two in Montreal and one in Quebec.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am very glad to hear that you have all these luxuries. We will endeavour to imitate you.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) that when he proceeds to imitate what we do in the Yukon it will be at the expense of his province.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) will find particulars of the amounts paid by the Interior Department last year that he asked for, and which properly should have been paid by the Justice Department at L—46 of the Auditor General's Report. The items are as follows :—

Stenographer, police court	$ 192 46
Clerk	450 00
Stenographer	250 00
Stenographer	1,881 45
Janitor	120 00
Stenographer	337 50
Cook	137 42
Caretaker	400 00
Stenographer	18 00
Stenographer	1,335 47
Stenographer	1,900 00
Stenographer	1,900 00

Altogether we paid out about $11,000 or $12,000.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) have any objection to allowing the item to pass with this explanation ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think not.

Mr. SPROULE. I have now the item to which I referred, and I want to give a little of the information contained in 'Hansard' to satisfy the hon. Minister of the Interior that what I said had some foundation in fact. On a motion to adjourn Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper refers to the matter. He is speaking of Mr. D. W. Davis, collector of customs, and his conduct in connection with the seizure of the vessel called the Yukoner. He says :

He was asked, in compliance with the advice of the Department of Justice, to account for his conduct, to disgorge the money that he had taken out of the hands of a company doing business in the Yukon, instead of which he handed it over to Mr. F. C. Wade, of exceptional notoriety, the gentleman who holds so many government offices, and in connection with these offices is able to obtain extraordinary treatment for his clients every time he has to deal with the government. A public company, owning the steamer 'Yukoner,' an English company, incorporated in London, sends that ship into Canadian waters. The law is violated time and again, according to the information that I have. The owners of the ship are wronged by Mr. D. W. Davis, and Mr. F. C. Wade is benefited by $750 of hard cash, actually wrung out of that company and put into the pockets of Mr. F. C. Wade. All that is disclosed by the papers.

He was trying to get more information in regard to this matter.

When these London capitalists seek the protection of the Canadian government against an officer of the Canadian government, whose action has been reported upon by the Department of Justice as high-handed and improper.

That is where he refers to the case. He is desiring to get more information in regard to it, he has put his question on the paper, and they have refused to give him the information. He culls this from the report made by a government official to the Department of Justice, or through the Department of Justice, or through Mr. Ogilvie, in which he speaks of the action of Mr. Wade as high-handed and improper. This gentleman admits that he took $750 belonging to this English company, while at the same time he was advising the collector of customs what to do on the other hand. He was the adviser of the Crown as well as the adviser of the defendant in the case.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not know the merits of this discussion or what took place here last year, but, as a gentleman's name has been brought up in this discussion, I would like to say a word or two in regard to the matter. I have known Mr. F. C. Wade as a practitioner in the city of Winnipeg since 1882. There are about eighty lawyers practising in the city of Winnipeg, and I do not think there is one in the city more honourable or straightforward than Mr. Wade. There are two brothers of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), as well as Mr. Hugh John Macdonald practising there, and I do not know that any of these gentlemen will say that in eighteen years one dishonourable act was ever brought before any of the judges in regard to Mr. Wade's manner of carrying on practise. As far as I can hear this was not a matter before a judge but a matter of arbitration. I submit that before the name of a lawyer of the good standing of Mr. Wade is discussed in this way, he should at least have an opportunity of giving an explanation in some manner to this House.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman should know that Mr. Wade was called upon to give an explanation, and that he practically said: 'It is none of your business.' It is a well-known fact that when he was acting as adviser to the collector of customs he advised him to make the seizure of this vessel. The owners of the vessel go to him for advice, he advises them to make a deposit with the collector of customs, they do so, and when the collector of customs is asked for that deposit he says that he paid it over to Mr. Wade as his fee. To say that Mr. Wade enjoyed an honourable reputation in the city of Winnipeg may be all right enough; there is no person calling that in question, but that has no reference to an act that he did in another capacity, or to the fact that an official of this government reported that his conduct was high-handed and improper. Surely one who was sent to look into it ought to know a great deal more about it than the hon. gentleman who deigns to enlighten the House as to the character of Mr. Wade. It would be more becoming if we had some information or defence from either the Minister of the Interior or the Solicitor General, than from an hon. member who knows nothing about it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think there is any defence required in regard to the matter. It was threshed out pretty well last session and the session before. The facts are, as I remember, that the vessel was seized in the Yukon by the collector of customs, because of a complaint made by the seamen that their wages had not been paid. The vessel was tied up to the wharf, and the owners contended the collector had no right to seize her. They laid a caveat against the seizure, and after some time an agreement was come to that the vessel should be allowed to proceed, the dispute to be referred to an arbitrator whose award should be accepted by both sides. The collector then released the vessel and a certain amount was paid by the owners into the hands of the collector to abide the result of the award. The collector handed over the money in pursuance of the award. After the award was made, the parties who represented the vessel attempted to revoke the submission, and the collector ignored their right to do so. That was the matter in controversy. The collector said he had released the vessel on their submission to arbitration, and that he would pay the money in pursuance of the award. Whether or not they had the technical legal right to revoke the submission I do not inquire, but on the justice of the case it did appear that the collector was justified in paying the money over. I speak with diffidence, because I only know the facts as they came out in the debate, but it seems to me that a mountain was made out of a molehill, and that so far as Mr. Wade is concerned he simply received the money from the collector for his services as counsel.

Mr. SPROULE. Counsel for whom ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know which side he was on.

Mr. SPROULE. He was acting for the owners of the vessel, and he was acting for the government as well.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The government had nothing to do with this matter. The sailors filed their proper complaint and got the vessel seized. The Merchants Shipping Act provides that certain proceedings are to be taken, and when the vessel was tied up, rightly or wrongly, an agreement was come to and signed by the parties that the dispute should be referred to arbitration. I shall not discuss the legal right of one of the parties to revoke the submission, but it did seem to me that whatever complaint might be against Mr. D. W. Davis the collector, there was no ground of complaint against Mr. Wade, unless you prove that his charges were excessive, and I have never heard that contended.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that this has much to do with the item, but since the minister (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) has entered into a discussion, I may say that I do not think that the matter is so clear as he would lead us to believe. If the collector of customs was allowed to act the parts of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, it was a very simple thing indeed. According to the views the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) put forward last year, at one moment he was collector of customs, and Mr. Wade was consulted by him as such; the next moment he was not acting as collector, but as arbitrator.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think he was the arbitrator.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Oh, yes, my recollection is that he was the arbitrator. At one moment he was collector of customs and an officer of the government, and the next moment he was arbitrator, and then as soon as the money came to him—according to the statement of the minister last year—he came back to Dr. Jeykll again, and was collector of customs. It was perfectly absurd that he could be doing his duty in all these different capacities and that Mr. Wade could be advising him in one capacity and then in another and the crew of the ship as well, and be doing his duty to his clients. That was the argument of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries last session. I do not know sufficient of the facts to cast any reflection on Mr. Wade, but I do say that the matter was not explained to my satisfaction last year. I do not say that there is not a reasonable explanation of it, but I was not able to get any explanation last year to satisfy me, although the Minister of Marine and Fisheries exerted to the utmost his well-known powers for the purpose of making it perfectly plain that there was no ground for criticism at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the charge was against Davis and not against Wade.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The charge was against the collector of customs. The criticism that was made on the collector was that he went as such to Mr. Wade because Mr. Wade was the Crown prosecutor, or the solicitor recognized by the government as having a standing there; and then, when this matter was dealt with by that same collector of customs as an arbitrator, Mr. Wade appeared for one of the parties before him. That was the criticism upon Mr. Wade's position. Whether there is any thing in it or not I do not know.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think that was it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Before you leave the estimates I would like to answer a question which was asked by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) with reference to the residences of the Supreme Court judges of British Columbia. I have the information with me now, and perhaps I might as well read it so that the hon. member may see it in Hansard if he desires to look at it :

Chief Justice McColl : On his appointment as puisne judge the order in council stated : 'and that the county of Westminster be assigned to him as the county in which he shall reside and usually discharge his duties.'

The commission on the above order in council is as follows :—

'We do hereby assign to you, the said Angus John McColl, as such judge, the county of Westminster, in the said province of British Columbia, as the county within which you shall, during our pleasure, reside and usually discharge the duties of the said office of such judge.'

When Judge McColl was appointed chief justice of British Columbia, the order in council said : 'that the Victoria judicial district be assigned to the Honourable Angus John McColl as the district in which he shall reside and usually discharge his duties.'

Judge McColl's commission as chief justice does not mention his place of residence.

Judge Walkem :

Order in council does not mention place of residence.

Commission says : 'and your residence within the said province of British Columbia.'

Mr. Justice Drake :

Order in council does not mention residence.

Commission says : 'hold office during good behaviour, and your residence within the said province of British Columbia.'

Mr. Justice Martin :

Order in council states : 'that the county of New Westminster be assigned to him as the county in which he shall reside and usually discharge his duties.'

No mention in commission of residence.

Mr. Justice Irving :

Order in council says : 'that the county of Vancouver be assigned to him as the county in which he shall reside and usually discharge his duties,' and

Commission, 'and until otherwise ordered by our Governor General in Council, we do hereby assign you the county of Vancouver as the county within which you shall, from and after the date hereof, reside and usually discharge your duties as such judge.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is also a matter which the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) mentioned to me before he left. It is with regard to an appeal from the high court of the Yukon territory. I understood from the Minister of the Interior that that appeal was to be confined to the Supreme Court of the province of British Columbia, and I want to know from the Minister of the Interior whether or not he has taken into consideration the advisability of having an appeal—either a further appeal or an alternative appeal—to the Supreme Court of Canada. Speaking without very much knowledge of the class of litigation which might be dealt with on such an appeal it would seem to me that the magnitude of some of the cases which probably would arise there would justify either an alternative appeal or a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. A precedent can be found for that in the statute which deals with the admiralty jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court. From the local judge of the Exchequer Court sitting in admiralty an appeal may be taken either to the judge of the Exchequer Court at Ottawa, or to the Supreme Court of Canada; and if the appeal is taken in the first instance from the local judge to the judge of the Exchequer Court, then a further appeal may be taken from him to the Supreme Court of Canada. It seems to me that the Minister of the Interior may very well take into consideration as to whether some such scheme as that is not necessary in view of the magnitude of causes which probably arise in the Yukon territory. As to whether or not suitors in those courts should not have the benefit of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, as suitors in other provinces have with respect to litigation involving very trifling amounts, I would be glad to have an expression of opinion from the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not catch the first remarks of my hon. friend, and I thought they applied to appeals in mining cases, but my hon. friend the Solicitor General says the leader of the opposition refers to appeals in ordinary civil cases.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was referring to cases which were dealt with by the Minister of the Interior when he made a statement to the hon. member for Pictou the other day in the House. I am not very familiar with the jurisdiction of the courts in the Yukon. I suppose there is an appeal in ordinary cases to the Supreme Court of Canada, is there not ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. To the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is not an appeal from the Yukon court to the Supreme Court of Canada at present, I would extend my remarks to that. I think the magnitude of many mining claims would justify a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada—at all events, an alternative appeal.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The jurisdiction which the Minister of the Interior has officially in regard to mining claims arose under the mining regulations, and has gone on for a considerable number of years. As I explained to the House in answer to the hon. member for Pictou, it has now been changed by constituting a court of appeal, consisting of the two judges of the court and the Gold Commissioner. We have not in any ordinance provided for an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. I fully recognize that there is a good deal to be said in favour of a further appeal. A doubt exists whether that could be given by ordinance, in all probability an Act of parliament would be required. That, of course, would not involve any difficulty if it were considered wise as a matter of policy to have such an appeal. The principal difficulty I had in my mind in connection with the question of an appeal arose from the consideration that in deciding appeal cases myself, I found the most serious difficulty in thoroughly understanding the references to the markings on the ground. Although there were in some cases three or four or half a dozen plans made by surveyors on the ground, and although I had for several years given special attention to the mining regulations, and had discussed the conformation of the ground with surveyors and other people familiar with it, yet I had great difficulty in one or two cases in being certain that I understood, from references in the evidence and the decision of the Gold Commissioner, the conformation of the ground. Many cases that came before me practically turned upon some fact to understand which it was absolutely necessary that a judge should know the nature of the country, and something about the conformation of the ground. It is almost impossible to tell this from the words used by witnesses. For instance, as an illustration, I may mention that the question in one case was as to where the base of a hill was. Witnesses on one side said it was at a certain point, and they described the conformation of the ground—how quickly the ground rose at that point and the growth of grass and timber there—and they got back to the question whether this rising ground had been there 100 years or 200 years. The evidence was of such a character that it was next to impossible to a person who had never seen the country to understand what the evidence meant. I felt, therefore, that for the present at least, it was very doubtful if it would add anything to the probability of a just decision of such cases to take them from a court composed of two judges who are necessarily brought into familiarity with the facts and circumstances, to judges who would be altogether new to the mining regulations and the questions of fact which they would have to decide. I am quite of my hon. friend's opinion, that if on consideration it would seem probable that a more accurate decision would follow from an appeal to a higher court, in some cases we ought to give an appeal, because the value of the property is very great; but, so far as I have been able to give the question any consideration up to the present time, I am inclined to the view that the judges of the appellant court down here would find a serious difficulty in disposing of these appeals. They certainly would have to give an enormous amount of time to the study of the conditions before they could feel that they were giving justice to the suitors.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, where the question was simply one of fact, there would be no advantage in taking a case beyond the Supreme Court of British Columbia to the Supreme Court of Canada; for the Supreme Court of Canada have laid down the rule that where two courts below have dealt with the question of fact in the same way, they will not interfere with the finding; at least, I think that is the usual course pursued by that court. But, I have in mind one case which occurred in the province of Nova Scotia fifteen or sixteen years ago, in which the decision of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia was reversed by the Privy Council with respect to the construction of the mining Act of that province, and on the result of that decision depended the ownership of half a million dollars worth of mining lands. In an important case of that kind, where a question of construction arose, it would seem to be right that there should be an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Consolidation of Dominion statutes, orders in council and proclamations having the force of law, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. In what stage of advancement is the consolidation of the statutes?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is absolutely nothing done.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman give us any information as to when it is expected to have the statutes consolidated?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The intention is, when this vote goes through, to have an order in counil passed immediately, for the purpose of appointing commissioners.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman give any information as to when they are likely to get through with the work?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The last revision was begun in 1881 and completed in 1887. We hope to do the work more expeditiously, because we intend to utilize the services of some of the permanent officials to help in the work of consolidation.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is the hon. gentleman going to have it done by the job or by the year?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have not considered that point, but will be glad to consider any suggestions that my hon. friend may have to offer as to adopting one course or the other.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the significance of the expression 'notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act' here?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We intend to take advantage of the services of some permanent officials. There is no reason why the Deputy Minister of Justice should not be employed in important work of this kind. Other officials also should be able to render valuable assistance.

Mr. SPROULE. While that may be well, it may lead to abuse. The officials are paid for their whole time, and if you propose to employ them outside of their regular duties and pay them extra, the minister is left free to employ his own friends and give them any amount he pleases.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The intention is to select the most competent men. I do not wish to commit myself to anything when I say that we may not confine ourselves to the Department of Justice, but may ask the services of others, for instance, the law clerks of the Senate and the House of Commons. It is not expected that these gentlemen should work without additional remuneration. In the last revision, the deputy minister was paid a gratuity of $5,000 in addition to his salary of $4,000. I am not saying now what the intentions of the government are, because I do not know, but I think it proper to have the words, 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' so that if it is desired to utilize the services of permanent officials, that may be done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Permanent officials, of course, are not supposed to work during all their waking hours. They must have a certain amount of leisure, and there is no reason that I can see why they should not do some work in connection with the revision of the statutes and receive some additional remuneration for their work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to refer to the possible contingency of the officials in the Department of Justice being employed after hours, but he also indicated that they would be employed during their regular hours. Of course, they could not charge extra for work done during these hours. But, if some of them are employed by the Minister of Justice after hours, the insertion of these words would enable him to pay them for their services.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is what I thought I was saying. Every one, except members of parliament, has certain leisure, and these officials might be employed during a part of that leisure, in doing work of this kind, and there is no reason that I can see why they should not expect remuneration for it.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not object to giving reasonable remuneration. But what I pointed out was the danger of abuse. The case mentioned by the Solicitor General is a case in point. It is supposed that $4,000 is a fair salary for the deputy minister. Yet we paid him $5,000 for his services besides, we make his salary equal to or above that of the premier. Will anybody say that that is not an abuse ? I do not care which government was responsible for it, such an action is not to be upheld. But this would give the minister power to pay some of his officers extra, whether the work is done during the regular working hours or during their spare time. Leaving the money in the hands of the department to use it as they see fit, will lead to pressure being brought to bear by these employees to get as much of it as possible, and I think that very often they get more than they are really entitled to.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As I understand it, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) objects to leaving in the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' The Solicitor General said that no policy had been announced as to employing anybody. It may possibly be that the services of experts in the Justice Department may be required, and in order to make that possible, these words are put in.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting, because, of course, the Civil Service Act provides that civil servants cannot get more than the amount voted for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what we supposed the law to be, though the Supreme Court has held otherwise.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what we regard as the law now. There ought to be some understanding that we are paying them fair compensation for their working time and that we are not to pay them an exorbitant price for extra work that they do. I admit that they can be properly employed in this work and that they should get proper remuneration for what they do. But I do not think that we should give any man $4,000 salary and $5,000 extra for his services during the same year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not minimize the statement made by the Solicitor General. That hon. gentleman said, and I agree with him, that he was going to employ officers in his department and some officers out of other departments. He did not bind himself to the statement that he would not go outside of the department. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries simply says that it is possible that some men in the Department of Justice may be employed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is in error. I made no statement at variance with that made by the Solicitor General. That hon. gentleman did not lay down a policy, but said that putting the vote in this form was to enable the government, if they thought fit, to employ officers of the Justice Department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest that the experience of the gentlemen in the Department of Justice renders them particularly capable of doing work of this kind, and it would be a great pity if their services were not utilized in that way.

Dominion Lands—Chargeable to Income—Protection of timber lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories and tree culture in the North-west Territories, $15,000.

Mr. WILSON. This is a new item, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). There was a vote of $10,000 last year.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that the department is going to appoint a commissioner for Manitoba and one for the North-west Territories, and, when persons want to plant tree-breaks, they may write to the commissioner, and the commissioner will go or send some person to view the place and tell the kind of trees that will grow best in that soil, and will also make a rough sketch to be sent to headquarters, where a working plan will be prepared for the planting of the trees. The commissioner or his assistants will have the oversight of the planting of the trees and will visit them from time to time to see that they are properly cared for.

If that is to be done in that vast country, you will need to have a whole host of officials to carry out the law. It does seem to me that it is altogether unnecessary. You might as well undertake to direct and superintend any other part of the work of the farm as to take control of this tree-planting. We had the commissioner (Mr. Stewart) before the Committee on Agriculture, and he explained his plan. He went on to make these statements to us, and I would like to have from the minister a statement of what he intends to do with reference to these matters.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have for a number of years believed that one of the most important needs in Manitoba and the North-west Territories was a plan that would prevent the destruction of timber lands by fire, and coupled with that some means of educating the farmers in an intelligent system of tree planting. A portion of this vote is for the purpose of providing for the protection of forests upon Dominion lands from fire, and that is a large share of the work which is done under the direction of this branch of the department. Another portion of the work is that which has been described by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, as a means of bringing about an intelligent system of tree planting. I am confident that the committee will not begrudge this sum if they believe it can be used effectively for those two purposes. We do not suggest that there should be a system which would extend its ramifications all over the territories, under which we would meet every demand that might be made in this direction for a number of years to come. All we intend to do is to get the work started, feeling confident that if it is fairly and intelligently started, the people themselves will take up and carry it along. It is in a small way much like what the Minister of Agriculture under this government and the Minister of Agriculture under the late government have done in the way of encouraging the dairy industry in the west where, on account of the special circumstances, that industry could not have been successfully started without government assistance. The primary object of this branch of the department was to provide protection for forests upon Dominion lands, with regard to which there has been a great and deplorable loss by fire in former years; and secondly, to institute, if possible, and in an educative way, a system by which the farmers may know the best kind of trees to plant and how to take care of them. If the experiment is successful, and the farmers can be encouraged to go extensively into tree planting, the result will be worth to the country much more than this small sum of money. I may say that I know of my own personal knowledge that efforts have been made for some years past to inaugurate a system of tree planting. I know of individuals who have spent a great deal of money and labour, but to no purpose, in a great many cases, because their efforts were ill directed. I have considerable hope that the result of the efforts that we are making will be to show them a more successful way, and that they will attain more substantial results.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many years has the hon. gentleman been engaged in this scheme ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We took an appropriation for a superintendent two years ago.

Mr. WILSON. I presume in talking about the superintendent, the hon. gentleman refers to Mr. Stewart ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. Do you intend to appoint two more, one for Manitoba and one for the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We intend to appoint two assistants. We have appointed one gentleman already, but not for any particular portion of the country, his name is Norman M. Ross. He is a gentleman who has made a special study of forestry. He took his course at the Guelph Agricultural College, was engaged for some time at the experimental farm at Indian Head, was subsequently in the employ of the Ontario government in forestry work, and then he went to North Carolina for the purpose of studying forestry under Dr. Schenk, who is one of the greatest authorities upon forestry. Subsequently he went to Europe where he spent a short time. It is my intention, if possible, to procure two forestry experts from Germany or Belgium.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has given the House what may appear to him as a reasonable explanation of this vote, but I venture to say that no sane man in Canada will say they are good reasons. He puts this scheme on a par with encouraging the dairy industry, why, they are as utterly dissimilar as two cases could be. One is a general interest, the other is an individual interest. The hon. gentleman proposes to construct, with the public funds of Canada, wind breaks for each individual who may call upon him. I admit there is great difficulty in that country in getting trees to grow; but does the hon. gentleman mean to say that men there are so devoid of sense that they do not know as well how to plant a tree as Mr. Ross does ? Why, any country boy knows that. The record he has given Mr. Ross is an astounding one. He has made too good a case for Mr. Ross, he is too well trained. He comes here with an outfit for Mr. Ross that is utterly worthless. I would like to know what training he gets in the agricultural college at Guelph for forestry. Then he has been to South Carolina, and he has been to Europe. I venture to think that if the whole truth were told, Mr. Ross is a gentleman the hon. Minister of the Interior wants to take care of. Now in regard to Mr. Stewart, he never had any important duties to perform. Mr. Stewart appeared before the Agriculture Committee last year, and I am bound to say that he did not make a very creditable showing. He could not tell where the timber was upon the Crown lands that ought to be protected. All he was able to say was that there were considerable belts along the railways in British Columbia where there was valuable timber. Whether that is so or not, does not materially concern the Dominion of Canada. The timber was upon the railway lands, and therefore the railway companies were interested jointly, if not solely, in that matter. Now what timber was there in the North-west Territories and in that whole country that Mr. Stewart was able to say was of such vast importance that you should have fire wardens there to protect it ? It would be utterly impossible to man that country with a sufficient number of men to protect valuable timber if it already existed there. But in the first place it does not exist, so far as we have information; and I say Mr. Stewart was appointed to a place that was a mere sinecure. First of all, Mr. Stewart was appointed, and then the department set about to find duties for him. Now the hon. gentleman proposes to give him two new assistants, he is going to Germany to get experts to do what the common sense of every man in the country would suggest. I tell the hon. gentleman that he has not shown a shadow of justification for spending one copper for performing a service that belongs to each individual instead of to the public of Canada. So far as I am concerned I am going to take the sense of the House, if there are enough gentlemen to demand a vote with me. Where is this going to end ? Is the hon. gentleman going to make this a general service, or make it a special service for a few of his friends ? It is just as the member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) said a moment ago. When a man wants a wind-break about his place, what does he do ? He sends down to the department at Ottawa to make a working plan to put out a few trees. Did any one ever hear of anything more ridiculous than that. And then the inspector is sent there to see whether the trees are well put out——

Mr. COCHRANE. With a watering can.

Mr. CLANCY. With a watering can, my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) says. I have no doubt that will be quite as sensible as the other part of the scheme—and more successful, my hon. friend says. The hon. minister says that this is educational. Is he going to educate the whole country by building a wind-break ? Certainly not. The first thing that must be sought in that country is the class of tree that will grow there. I believe that this plan was suggested to the hon. gentleman by persons who are anxious to fill positions. I think the hon. gentleman has been imposed upon. I am going to give him credit for being sincere and honest enough to have believed in the proposal that has been made to him, but he is the victim of a fraud and a sham.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am afraid I cannot accept unreservedly the statement of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), that this plan is a fraud and a sham, nor can I accept the reasons he has given as good reasons for his belief. In the first place, he says that we had to find a place for Mr. Stewart, and that having appointed him, we had to give him something to do. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that his assumption is entirely incorrect. I think I know more about the workings of that branch of my department than the hon. gentleman does.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman does, he knows more about it than Mr. Stewart does.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was no officer of the department to give special attention to the question of protection against forest fires, which were a source of great embarrassment before that to the department.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman state to the committee where the valuable timber is in the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give the hon. gentleman the information that we have a great deal of valuable timber. There is timber upon the Moose Mountain timber reserve, where the late government made a reserve, and where, I think, in doing so, they acted with the utmost wisdom. They expended money for the purpose of preserving that timber. Most of it is not timber of a character that is fit for building purposes. But, it is timber which supplies fuel for the population for many miles around, and it would be most disastrous if that timber were to be destroyed. In the Turtle Mountain district, and up in the northern portion of Manitoba, on the north slope of the Riding Mountains, and along the streams which flow north-westward, upon the lines of railway going through the Lake Dauphin country to Prince Albert, there are considerable belts of valuable timber. The same can be said practically of the country around Lake Winnipeg, and for many years the department has been reaping quite a considerable revenue from the timber which has been operated in the districts to which I have referred. In addition to that, upon the mainland of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia, there is a large amount of valuable timber.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that that is in the railway belt, and as for Manitoba, Mr. Stewart, I do not think, proposes to go there at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend made a mistake when he was speaking before, and if he will refrain for a moment, I will explain it so that he will not make the same mistake again. The land in British Columbia, which is known as the railway belt, belongs to the Dominion government and is under our administration. A large amount of the timber comes under the administration of the department, and that is a place where a considerable amount of care is necessary for the purpose of protecting the timber from fire.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if that timber in the railway belt has not entered into the hands of private individuals ? Has it not been sold ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman asks a question which cannot be answered wholly by yes or no. By far the greater portion of the timbered land in the proportion of, I should say, fifty to one, is still in the hands of the government. There are scattered homesteads and settled tracts in that vast tract of land, but the land that has passed from the hands of the government, as far as the soil is concerned, is a mere trifle. A considerable portion of the land has been disposed of in so far as the timber is concerned, and is held upon the same terms as timber berths are always held when they are disposed of by the department. So that, the impression of the hon. gentleman that there is no large amount of timber to be protected in British Columbia, is a mistaken one. There is a vast amount of timber, and if the hon. gentleman looked into the matter and found that there were no steps being taken to protect the timber, he would be the first, and very properly so, to criticise the department for gross neglect of duty. The hon. gentleman says that giving some instructions in regard to tree planting is for the purpose of benefiting individuals. That is perfectly true. But, my hon. friend is too late in the day when he is objecting to expenditures of this class being made, because their special benefit is not distributed equally over the whole community. We have experimental farms established by the late government and continued by this government, and I know that they have done an enormous amount of good throughout the country. But, the results of the experiments are not certainly distributed equally throughout the whole community. The benefits which accrue are more largely derived by the people in the immediate neighbourhood of the farms than by the whole community, but the information and knowledge which are acquired in the operations that take place upon these farms can be made available by the whole community, and so can the information which will accrue in the case of the operations which will be conducted in connection with the plan I have suggested in the committee. My hon. friend, and I do not blame him, because I know a great deal more about the inhabitants of the western country than he does, is quite mistaken in regard to the views the people there take of this matter. The meetings which have been held, and to which the farmers have come for the purpose of discussing this matter with the superintendent of forestry, have been attended by the most intelligent farmers in that country, who have taken a very active interest in the question, and who have been enthusiastically loud in their praises of the department for taking up this plan. It is the most intelligent of the farmers who take an interest in it, because they feel that if it can be shown without too great an expense that the farmer can grow a considerable number of trees upon his farm, his success will be an object lesson to those around him, and the work will then go on itself. One of the main difficulties in regard to tree planting heretofore has been the getting of planting material of a satisfactory kind. In Manitoba and the North-west Territories, the farmers have attempted to plant what is known as the Dakota cottonwood, and it has been in some places a success. Some few other trees have also been tried, but there has been no systematic trial of other kind of trees, which might be available for fire-guards and wind-breaks on the ordinary prairie farm. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Bothwell is perfectly honest in his criticisms. I can assure him that there is no intention on my part of doing anything except to employ the most competent person to give this suggested plan a reasonable trial. I know from experience that in so far as we are expending this money for the purpose of protecting the forests, we are only doing that which the government has always done, and which it is urgently required we should devote a little more attention to. In so far as the question of tree planting is concerned, I am perfectly satisfied that we may fairly expect to see substantial results in a short time.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman says that as an instance of the intelligence of the people in that county they have held meetings and that they were very enthusiastic over the plan. I quite agree with him that it is an evidence of the intelligence of the people that they can conceive that a work they ought to perform for themselves is being performed out of the public purse. I think there is no better evidence of their intelligence that they have the best of it, and that they should be enthusiastic is not a thing to be wondered at. Let us come back to the protection of timber. Mr. Stewart stated that the principal part of the railway belt was in the hands of private persons who had licenses to cut, and that there was a system of protection in operation with regard to these limits long before this government came into power. It was not necessary to appoint an inspector to rove all over the country, because these lessees were willing to pay a portion of the cost of protecting the timber against fire. Mr. Stewart admitted that it would be impossible to utilize enough labour to protect the scattered timber except in a very general way. The country is very sparsely inhabited and the chances of fire are very remote indeed.

As to the tree planting, I believe that an expenditure of money for the purpose of discovering what kind of trees would grow in that country might be justified, but for the minister to propose that plans of wind-breaks will be sent to Ottawa and all that kind of thing, simply means that he is seeking some excuse to pay out money for unnecessary services. Our country is fast losing its timber. It is marvellous how the province of Ontario has been denuded, and although tree planting and re-foresting is a live question there, no one would propose to take up public funds for that purpose. If the minister would devote his attention to try and find what trees will grow in the North-west, I would be prepared to justify an expenditure of money for that, but it is absurd for him to propose to appoint men to plant trees when he does not know whether these trees will grow or not. The minister tells me that he knows that country and the people better than I do. That may be, but there is a common-sense view of this question which is apparent to every sensible man, and the proposal of the minister is not a common-sense one. What the minister proposes is practically to devote public money to construct wind-breaks for private individuals. I hope he will reconsider that proposal and proceed upon intelligent principles.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) seems to take particular objection to that suggestion which provides for a plan of wind-breaks being sent to Ottawa. I may say that when I looked into the matter myself I thought it would be too cumbersome, but that is a mere detail and not a necessary feature of the scheme at all. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) that there have been experiments carried on at the Experimental Farm with regard to the class of trees that would grow in the North-west Territories. To hand the material to the average prairie farmer would be simply waste. I cast no reflection on my constituents or on my friends in the North-west as regards their industry or their capacity as farmers, but as a rule they have no experience in tree-planting. The great majority of them are young men who have not heretofore made a success of their efforts in that direction, and it is because of this fact that the most intelligent farmers of the country have taken a great interest in this question, and have cordially approved of the proposal of the government. The main object is to furnish farmers with plant material, who are willing to take advantage of this proposition, and then we intend to see that the material is made proper use of so that we may have a few examples of success in the cultivation of trees, which in a short time will lead to general good results. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is unduly pessimistic on the question of forestry, and he is not taking wise ground when he says that the public funds should not be used for this purpose. In some of the European countries public funds have been used in this way with marvellously beneficial results, and in a comparatively short space of time the whole face of one or two European countries has been changed by scientific forestry. If my hon. friend visits us in the North-west in a few years I am in hopes that I will be able to show him that the result of this expenditure has been beneficial.

Mr. WILSON. The position taken by the minister now, is entirely at variance with that taken by Mr. Stewart before the committee. Mr. Stewart laid great stress upon the men who will have charge of the construction of the wind-breaks in that country, and he told us they should be men who had lived there for years, and who are well acquainted with the climate and the kind of trees that would grow in the different districts. He said that if any person applied, a man would be sent out to show him how to plant trees, and to tell him the kind of trees that would be adapted to the nature of the soil. The minister leaves the impression on the committee that this is only a start, as it were, while Mr. Stewart in his evidence laid it down that they would appoint one commissioner in the North-west and one in Manitoba, that these would be sufficient for the present, but that they would need to have assistants in the near future. If, on application to one of these commissioners, he is obliged to send out a man to each farmer to give instruction as to how to construct a wind-break, any one can understand that we would need to have a large number of officials. That is what I object to. I believe that the information gathered from the experimental farms, and the natural common-sense knowledge that a man who has lived in that country for a number of years should acquire, ought to be sufficient, without having to send out a government official to specially instruct him. Besides that, the minister says that Mr. Ross has been down in North or South Carolina to study the tree business, and now he is going to Germany; which is totally at variance with the statements made by Mr. Stewart to the committee. He laid great stress on the importance of gaining information from actual experience derived from living in the country. I hope the minister has no idea of appointing a whole army of officials to teach the farmers in that country how to plant trees on the prairies.

Mr. McCREARY. This is a matter of so much importance to Manitoba and the North-west Territories that instead of $15,000 being voted for this purpose, I think the sum should be much larger. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken should remember that whereas the older provinces possess their timber and public lands, the timber and public lands in Manitoba and the Territories belongs to the Dominion. The province of Ontario has spent a large amount of money not only in preserving its timber, but in reforesting.

Mr. MONK. Not one cent.

Mr. McCREARY. The province of Ontario has spent a large amount of money for this purpose; I heard of it being discussed the other day in the local House. How many forest rangers are there in Ontario to-day?

Mr. SPROULE. An army of them.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, and if they had been appointed years ago, the state of affairs mentioned by the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) the other day, that the province was almost denuded of timber, would not now exist. If the hon. gentlemen who sat in this House in 1882 and 1883 had taken the precautions to protect the timber about the Pembina Mountains, the farmers of that district would not be in the position they are in to-day, of having to haul coal from Roche Percee or Estevan, and pay $4.75 a ton for it. The amount of money received by the Dominion for stumpage on ties, saw-logs, for cord-wood, and things of that sort must be very large indeed—more than sufficient to pay the $15,000 mentioned here. The county which I have the honour to represent has, I believe, the largest quantities of timber of any county in the province. There are large quantities of spruce west of Lake Winnipeg, and north of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from East Selkirk to the eastern boundary of the province, and it is of the utmost importance that that timber should be protected. In fact, the city of Winnipeg derives its chief timber supply from that region. In the neighbourhood of the Riding Mountains, the Porcupine Hills, and Duck Hills, there are large quantities of timber, and if some precautions are not taken that timber will be destroyed, as the settlers going in set fire to the scrub for the purpose of clearing their land. If we had fire-breaks sixty-six or ninety-nine feet wide all around these mountains, kept ploughed and harrowed, so that the weeds would be kept down, and if fire did occur, the timber would be protected. With regard to tree-planting, that is a subject I know something about. In the city of Winnipeg eighteen or twenty years ago the people found great difficulty in getting trees to grow. Many men spent hundreds of dollars in the attempt. We tried to start parks in the city, but we did not succeed; very few understood the nature of the soil and the most suitable trees. But a few years ago we appointed a park commissioner and to-day the city of Winnipeg has as fine parks as the city of Ottawa. At first the tree-planting was not a success; but to-day we have fifteen or twenty miles of streets as well planted with trees as any streets in the city of Ottawa. That was not done until we had appointed a man who thoroughly understood the subject. We have fifteen or twenty parks in the city, some two acres in extent and others very large.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it Mr. Ross who made that discovery.

Mr. McCREARY. No, Mr. D. D. England, a gentleman from the old country, who was a gardener there, and who studied the question in this country. I have no knowledge at all of Mr. Ross, the gentleman spoken of; but I submit that it is of the utmost importance to Manitoba and the North-west Territories that this sum, and even a much larger sum, should be spent in the protection of timber and the encouragement of tree-planting.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say what kind of tree was successful in Winnipeg?

Mr. McCREARY. Those planted on Broadway are elms. The first trees planted were the Red river maple, which in appearance is between the ash and the soft maple; but it was not a success. Where the soil is deep and heavy we have taken sand from Point Douglas and mixed it with the black soil, and where this was done not over 12 per cent of the trees on Broadway failed. It will take some time to study this question, and I think the minister might have gone even further than he has. I submit that the farmers themselves might do something in the way of tree-planting under proper instructions. The country along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway west from Moosejaw, is all barren of trees except the Moose Mountain, and the timber there is all small timber. When a man wants trees planted, the homestead entry, instead of being $10, might be increased to $20 or $25. Many men would gladly pay from $50 to $100 for a homestead with trees planted on it. This matter is one of great importance, and in view of the fact that the province of Manitoba and the Territories are not the possessors of their own timber, it becomes the duty of this government to protect what they need as much as light and air, that is, timber for fuel.

Mr. WILSON. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks it necessary to send a special man to every farmer to give him instructions how to plant a wind-break ?

Mr. McCREARY. I do not think that necessary at all ; but if an instructor went and explained to two or three farmers in a municipality, how it should be done, the balance would learn from them.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has done great service. He has completely answered the Minister of the Interior. He has candidly told the House that there is no difficulty in growing certain kinds of trees, for it has been done in the city of Winnipeg. All you have to do is to plant elms, and you will have plenty of growth in the country.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. What will suit the city of Winnipeg may not suit the Pembina Mountains, where the soil is entirely different.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not helped his case. If he had said that the trees that grew in Winnipeg would not grow elsewhere, he might have a case ; but his argument was the opposite of that. After the speech the hon. gentleman has made, the Minister of the Interior is without any excuse. All he need do is to furnish the kind of tree plants suitable to a locality, and let the people plant the trees for themselves. The hon. gentleman scouts the idea of the people being able to do this. It is a slander on the intelligence of these people, many of whom come from the older provinces, to say that they know nothing about tree-planting. I dare say the Minister of the Interior has brought a class of people to the country, who live by camp fires, and who might require assistance in tree-planting, as well as assistance to keep body and soul together in many cases. But I venture the statement that three-fourths of the people, in fact, every man in Manitoba and the Territories who is worth having there, knows how to plant a tree, because he is guided by common sense, and has had experience in the older provinces, and is acquainted with a great many of the varieties of timber that obtain in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. All these people would require would be to be furnished with the kind of tree plants suitable to their locality. It may be perfectly true that a class of timber that will grow in Winnipeg would not grow elsewhere ; but the business of the government could not reasonably go beyond assisting and furnishing tree plants that are suitable to a locality. This is a service that belongs to individuals and should not be paid for out of the public purse. I still believe that the hon. gentleman has completely answered the Minister of the Interior, and I would ask the hon. gentleman to answer the hon. gentleman who has spoken on his own side.

Mr. DAVIS. I fancy the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has not travelled much in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It is a very large country. As has just been remarked, though certain classes of trees may grow well in the city of Winnipeg, it does not follow that they will grow in every part of Manitoba and Territories. There are large parts of the Territories in which the people have not yet learned what trees grow to best advantage. As to protecting the timber, that ought to have been done years ago. I have been in the part of the country where I now live for the past twenty years, and I know that there have been immense quantities of timber destroyed by fire. And this occurs not merely where there is settlement, though the hon. member for Bothwell suggested that where there was no settlers there was no danger of fire.

Mr. CLANCY. I said it was remote.

Mr. DAVIS. A certain amount of this timber may belong to private parties, for I think about 15,000,000 acres of it was given away while hon. gentlemen opposite occupied the Treasury benches. Still, I can inform the hon. gentleman that there is a great deal of good timber belonging to the people of this country. The people in the older provinces own the timber lands within the limits of those provinces ; but, the forest lands of the North-west are owned by the people of the Dominion as a whole. And, it is time that something was done to protect the timber there. In my own experience, there is township after township —yes, hundreds of them—where heavy timber grew ten or fifteen years ago and where there is now nothing but blackened stumps.

Mr. CLANCY. That is an important statement, but it is a contradiction of the statement made by Mr. Stewart to the committee. If Mr. Stewart, an official of the government, has made a statement contrary to that of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) who says he knows the facts, that fact is important.

Mr. DAVIS. I was not at the meeting of the committee, and so do not know what Mr. Stewart said. I am merely telling the hon. gentleman that I know places in the North-west Territories where, a few years ago, there were large forests and now there is nothing but prairie with some blackened stumps. That forest was very valuable, and if it had been protected it would have been there yet. One case that I recall is along the line of the Canada Northern Railway. There were immense forests there. I was through them twenty years ago. Two or three years ago I had occasion to go out to the same place, and found nothing but prairie with a few back sticks. Not only is that timber valuable in itself, but it is particularly valuable as bringing us immigration, because the presence of timber there is very important. Young timber is springing up in those places, and it grows very rapidly. Take the poplar of the North-west Territories and Manitoba, and it does not take more than ten years to grow trees that are fit for rails. There are many instances in the North-west Territories of forests being destroyed by fire.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman a question for information. If this country reforests so readily as he states, is it not an easy thing to replant these wind-breaks for farmers without government assistance ?

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman is talking as though he supposed the North-west Territories to be the same in every part. I am speaking of places where there have been trees. But there are millions of acres where there are no trees, but where, I feel prefectly sure, trees can be grown. But the people do not know what kind of trees will grow best. If the hon. gentleman will visit the Indian Head farm, he will see what trees are being grown there. But the trees in use so far do not last. An insect attacks them and kills them. If we could find a tree that would grow and last, we could turn that prairie almost into a garden. Wind-breaks are of the utmost value and enable grain to be grown where otherwise it could not be grown.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) mentioned that there are large forests there. What kind of trees are they chiefly ?

Mr. DAVIS. There is a class of white poplar, some of which grow very large. There is also spruce and what is known as the jack pine or cypress pine and others.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How large an area would these townships of which the hon. gentleman speaks—I do not suppose they are all in one block ?

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose they would cover five or six hundred miles. My own district, I suppose the hon. gentleman knows, is seven hundred miles long. On the north side it was heavily timbered, but a great deal of that timber was destroyed by fires. There is young timber growing up and we feel that it should be protected, because it will make valuabe timber in a few years. Take, for instance, the country from Prince Albert to Green Lake, and there are miles and miles of valuable timber destroyed in the last few years by forest fires, that, with a proper system, might have been saved.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What would the hon. gentleman suggest as the best mode of protection ?

Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. DAVIS. Where there is timber, men should be appointed as fire guardians. I suppose it would not be necessary to pay them very high wages. They should travel about and see that parties going into the woods carefully put out any fires they make, or if not, to prosecute such parties.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A prairie fire may start from any of a hundred different reasons. When it gets a start, is there any protection you can place around the forest in this way to protect the forest ? I am asking for information.

Mr. DAVIS. My hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) pointed out how, by ploughing and keeping the weeds from growing up you can make a perfect protection. At the same time, we should have fire guardians whose business it is at certain seasons—I suppose it would not be necessary to pay them all the year round—say, after the harvest when the grass commences to get dry, to be out all the time to see to it that fires are put out.

Mr. MONK. Would it be possible to make a system of fire guards without a great deal of expense ?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. It is not expensive. Two or three scrapes of a plough, then leave ten or twelve feet, then two or three more scrapes of the plough, and burn the grass between—that will make a protection.

Mr. MONK. But would that be of use in the case of a forest fire ?

Mr. DAVIS. I was referring to little groves such as I supposed my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was speaking of. For large tracts of valuable timber, we should have fire guardians with duties as I have suggested.

Mr. McCREARY. Frequently a prairie fire can be seen twenty miles off. If a prairie fire was observed that endangered timber, I take it, it would be the duty of fire guardians to go out and burn a piece one or two hundred yards wide, so that the fire could not cross and get at the timber. He would take men with him with wet bags to prevent the fire he made from spreading beyond the desired limit.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman think that that is possible as a practical means of protection, in such a wide area ?

Mr. McCREARY. I may mention that on one occasion when I was at a station forty-six miles south of Edmonton, a mounted policeman named Kitchen—there is only one stationed there—looked across the prairie and saw something and said to another party : Is not that smoke ? He went and got his glass, and said it was smoke, and within three minutes that man was on his horse, with his blankets and saddle, and started off for that fire. I afterwards inquired how he got along, and found that although the fire was nearly seven miles away, he went there and got the neighbours out and they crushed it. A great portion of the duty of the mounted police is in stopping fires.

Mr. WILSON. Does the minister intend to take the suggestion of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and make experiments in certain localities, or does he intend to send a man to every person that applies to him for wind breaks ?

Mr. MONK. It appears that it is a very difficult matter to prevent fires in the North-west. I understood the aim of this vote was to give instructions to farmers how to plant trees for their own protection. If that is the case, I do not see why an exception should be made in favour of the farmers of the North-west. There is quite as much need of forestry work in the other provinces. There is no money spent in this direction in the province of Quebec, and I think we have as good a claim as the North-west.

Mr. DAVIS. There is a vast difference between Manitoba and the North-western territories and the older provinces. That is a prairie country, and it is to the common interest of the whole Dominion that tree planting should be encouraged there. This is not a sectional question at all. That country has got past the experimental stage, and I think the $15,000 spent in instructing the people to plant trees on the prairie will be spent in the right direction, for it will make the country more valuable and more attractive to settlers. My hon. friend has mentioned the usefulness of the mounted police in putting out fires. But there are many portions of the North-west where there are no mounted police and which require to be protected.

Mr. MONK. I did not speak from a sectional standpoint, but it seemed to me to be an exceptional vote. Is it not possible that in the North-west, at the present stage of advancement, that people know what trees they ought to plant ? If they know what kind of trees to plant, why should we spend money to promote forestry in that section of the country more than in any other ?

Mr. DAVIS. I have said that there was a certain class of trees that the people thought was the proper kind for that country some years ago, but which turned out to be a failure.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman not think it would be better to send them the trees and let the people plant them themselves ?

Mr. DAVIS. You would require to consider the climate, the soil and all that sort of thing. You might get trees from the experimental farm, and not one in a hundred of them would grow.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember years ago the director of the experimental farm told us they were carrying on experiments at Brandon, and at the experimental farms at Indian Head, and at Agassiz, to ascertain what kind of trees were best suitable for that country, and that they had acquired a great deal of useful information in that respect. Now whatever work was done then, the people could take advantage of in the several localities. He spoke also of the cultivation of different kinds of trees in different localities. All that was in the proper direction. But this vote, if it is to be of any use, it seems to me, should be much larger than it is. The object is the protection of timber lands in Manitoba and the Territories, and tree culture of the North-west Territories. Now from the information the member for Selkirk has given us, it seems it would require a whole army of fire rangers to keep down these fires. We know that once the fire is started on the prairie, especially if there is any wind, it extends very rapidly. I have seen a belt of fire extending fifteen, twenty or thirty miles in the night. What an immense number of men it would require to put out these fires. Many years ago when Prof. Macoun was before the Agriculture Committee he was asked the question why that country was a prairie country, and not covered with trees. He said it was because extensive fires ran over it almost every year, started by Indians, or half-breeds, or travellers. He was asked if it was possible to prevent these fires from starting, and he answered that it could only be done by employing an army of men. I can imagine that $15,000 will not go far in that direction. But the hon. member for Selkirk reminds us that we have a lot of men in Ontario engaged as fire rangers and timber inspectors, looking after the replanting of forests. I am not aware that there is any replanting going on in Ontario. I can tell him that these are a very valuable class of men to the Ontario government. One of the most important services they render to the government is in connection with the by-elections. They are always available then, always ready to serve their masters from time to time. The fire rangers, timber inspectors and that class of men are very plentiful. Mr. D. F. MacDonald, who has been well known for the last twenty-five years in Ontario, was so actively interested in the preservation of the forests that whenever there was an election he always came to the front. When there was an election in Algoma he went out and corralled the Indians and squaws in one house, he took the Indians out to vote for the government candidate, then took them back into the house, made them undress, and made the squaws put on the pants and coats and go and vote. And so he kept it up all day, and then boasted afterwards that he had put between sixty and seventy-five votes in for his candidate and got him elected. No doubt he was a very valuable man, and no doubt the present government, especially the Minister of the Interior, very much desires a class of officers of that character under his control. They would be very valuable in carrying on elections. Cap Sullivan is another. I might mention a number of them, because I have been acquainted with their work. They are always available, always on hand whenever there is an election going on. They are more ardent in the discharge of their duties at that time than during any other time of the year. I notice that the present government are closely following the course pursued by their friends in Ontario, that is, they are constantly manufacturing offices for their friends and filling them. They are getting any army of men pensioned on the country, and it requires a large share of the consolidated revenue to pay these pensioners. The government appear anxious to multiply offices in which they can put their friends. Every man who is a defeated candidate, who has been an active election agent, they try to reward by giving him an office, and as offices are becoming scarce they are trying to create new ones. Now it would be possible effectually to control these fires, but I do not believe that can be done without a large army of men. The hon. member for Selkirk will admit that they have men already engaged in the North-west, some paid by salary and some by commission. The expenditure is creeping up all the time, but the results do not compare with the expenditure. I think the expenditure of money is out of all proportion to the benefit that accrues from it. I would be very far from discouraging a reasonable effort to ascertain what trees would be suitable for planting in that country. But, I think that the men who have lived in that country for years ought to know more about that than men coming from other countries that have entirely dissimilar conditions. I do not think that the appointment of a large army of men will ever be for the benefit of the country or even for the benefit of the men who are appointed. It will create a great army of pensioners in that country.

Mr. DAVIS. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not believe that a great army of pensioners is going to be appointed with a vote of $15,000. He says this grant is too small, and I think it is too small. I know the picture the hon. gentleman has drawn of the officials in Ontario, but he must not think that the people of the North-west Territories are exactly the same as he represents them. The people of the North-west Territories, from a political standpoint, do not need forest rangers to be placed there at the present time. We have all the majorities we want without the appointment of forest rangers or anything of that kind. In reference to the value of the men who are appointed for the express purpose of putting this plan into force, the hon. gentleman says that if a prairie fire started these men cannot do anything to stamp it out. If you have a forest ranger and he sees smoke five or six miles away, if he starts off when he sees the smoke, he can put the fire out, and in this way he would save probably more than it would cost to pay his salary for ten years. I do not think we require a vast army of politicians for that purpose, and a vast army could not be appointed with a vote of $15,000. I think the vote is too small. The hon. gentleman says that the farmers of the west are sufficiently intelligent to take this work upon themselves, but I would remind him that the men who have been in that country for years most heartily approve of this proposal of the hon. minister. They think it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. SPROULE. I have never yet seen any one who would refuse to accept an expenditure of money in his own locality. What I was drawing attention to was the description given by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), of the vastness of the country in which this work is to be done. I say that to make it effective it would require a large army, and this sum would not be anything like equivalent to the necessities, if you are to do effective work. This is only the commencement of it, and it will be enlarged very rapidly in the future, just as the need occurs for places for disappointed politicians. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) says that the scheme would be most valuable for putting out prairie fires, and that a ranger would be able to put out a fire if he saw it fifteen or twenty miles away. Does he imagine that during the time he would be travelling fifteen or twenty miles the fire would remain in the same locality? A prairie fire will sometimes travel as fast as a horse.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman is alluding to prairie fires; there are bush fires that could be put out.

Mr. SPROULE. They all commence on the same principle as prairie fires. They lead from the prairie to the bush. I remember very distinctly seeing a prairie fire. We saw it in the evening, and the next morning, when I saw it, it appeared to me to be twenty miles off, but in half an hour we had reached the edge of it, because it had travelled very much faster towards us than we had travelled towards it. People in that country are obliged very often to start a fire where they are to burn the prairie around them, and thus save themselves. Farmers there have had experience when whole districts of the country have been burned over. Notwithstanding the fact that the country is thickly settled, and that they get their teams out and plough their fields for fire breaks, the fires jump over the ridges, and their crops and barns are burned. This shows how helpless a man would be in the case of a fire spreading like that. When a neighbourhood that is moderately thickly settled cannot stop a fire or keep it under control in a locality, it shows that a very large army of men would be required to do anything like effective work in a country like that.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am more than astonished that there is an intelligent man standing on the floor of this House and saying for one moment that any ordinary farmer thoroughly understands the planting of trees. Now, I would like to see the farmer who knows how to plant trees. There is as large an amount of experience required to plant trees properly as there is in doing any other work, but, after you have learned how to plant out trees, you want to know the trees to plant. I defy any man who has not had a good deal of experience to go into the forest, pick out trees, to plant them on the roadside and have them on the roadside and have them live. That is a thing you do not understand, and it is a thing that you should find out. What we want is to thoroughly understand the kind of trees that are suitable, and then we want to instruct the farmers how to plant them. Let a man under ordinary circumstances go into the woods and take out evergreen trees, and see what kind of work he will make of it. He simply cannot do it. Take some kinds of evergreen trees, and if the roots are planted on a dry or windy day no man can make them live. There is so much resinous matter in the roots of these trees, that unless they are planted on a wet day you cannot make a success of them at all. In reference to the fire rangers, we have fire rangers in my riding of South Renfrew. We have men that we hire to go and put out the fires, and they put them out successfully. They have voted against me as well as for me, and they are not Indians or squaws clothed in men's pants. They are white men, they are intelligent, and they know how to put out fire. Some of them belong to the Conservative ranks. It does not make any difference whether a man is a Conservative or a Reformer. If he knows how to put out fires, that is the kind of a man we want. The Ontario government assists in that work, they pay these men because they know how the work of extinguishing fires can be done. I think that the matter of $15,000 to assist men to plant trees in the North-west Territories is too small, and it is a wonder to me that the department did not make it $50,000 instead of $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wright) pretends to say that it requires an expert knowledge to do this work, and that no farmer understands it. What expert knowledge had Mr. Stewart in that line, who is placed over the whole body of them ? He was only an ordinary surveyor, taken off the farm, and ordinary enough at that. That is all the expert knowledge he has, and yet he is sent out to instruct the farmers.

Mr. WRIGHT. I was not talking about the farmers ; I was talking about planting trees.

Mr. CLANCY. I should judge that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wright) has no farmers in his locality. I am sure that the farmers in his county must be gratified at the certificate of character that the hon. gentleman has given them this evening. He has stamped them with the indelible stamp of stupidity. They know nothing. I did not know that the farmers were any more ordinary than the merchants. I thought they were usually a class of people who were equal in intelligence to any other class. I think their business in life has led them more particularly to the planting of trees than has that of the merchant class. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is an expert tree planter himself or not ; he did not say so, but he has hinted at it. I repudiate the slander placed upon the farmers of this country, that they do not know how to plant trees. There are people who say that the farmers do not know enough to come in out of the rain. But, I tell the hon. gentleman that if there is any class of the community that knows anything about tree planting it is the farmers. There is scarcely a farmer who has not had the ambition, the thrift and the good taste to put trees about his place, notwithstanding that he has a forest surrounding it.

An hon. MEMBER. How many does he plant for one that grows ?

Mr. CLANCY. The farmers put out their trees in the fall. I tell the hon. gentleman who takes exception to that that he does not know anything about tree planting. He should go to the persons who put out trees regularly every fall. Trees are put out in the fall for the simple reason that no growth takes place then. If the earth stays around the roots of the trees and it retains its moisture, the chances are ninety-nine to one that the trees will grow. The hon. gentleman said he had nothing to say about Mr. Stewart, and to that extent he repudiated Mr. Stewart's qualifications. I know Mr. Stewart from a boy. He is a gentleman of great respectability ; he belongs to a good family. There is nothing to be said against Mr. Stewart personally only what is very much to his credit, and it would be a cowardly thing to say anything against Mr. Stewart in a place where he could not defend himself. But Mr. Stewart was a provincial land surveyor, and while he is a gentleman of great respectability, I do not suppose he ever planted half a dozen trees in his life, if he ever planted one. He left his home on the farm when he was a small boy and therefore had not any experience in that direction. Mr. Stewart is possessed of common sense like other people, but he has no more common sense or experience than other people in tree planting. Surely, farmers who are brought up on the farm, although their experience in tree planting be limited, ought at least have as much knowledge as other individuals in this direction.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not for a moment think that it is an accusation against any farmer to say that he does not understand the planting of trees, any more than it would be to say that he cannot make a wagon wheel, although he uses wagons every day in the year. It is ridiculous for the hon. member (Mr. Clancy) to say that a man can plant trees in this section of the country in the fall, and expect them to grow. I have had some experience in this matter and I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) that any man who would undertake to plant trees in the fall and make a success of the business, would deserve a leather medal from the hon. gentleman. There is just as much skill required in planting trees as there is in growing a good crop of wheat, and it is not every man who knows anything about that. Some of the settlers in the North-west come from all parts of the world. They often come from large cities, where they perhaps never as much as even saw a tree, and you might as well expect the wives of these men to make good butter as to expect that the men themselves can successfully plant trees. That branch of farming requires more skill than a man who has never had anything to do with it thinks. A great many people think that all they have to do is to dig a hole and put a tree in it, and stamp the earth around it, and that the tree will grow. That is not the case by any means. It wants a good deal of experience to make a successful tree planter, and a man should almost serve his apprenticeship to it. You want to know what kind of tree you are going to plant, and whether or not it will thrive in that particular soil, and in that locality. Many a tree that will grow in the woods will not grow in the open. As to Mr. Stewart, I have no doubt that he is a good and amiable man, and if he comes from the same section of the country as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy), why should he not be amiable and intelligent, and know a good deal about planting trees, the same as the hon. gentleman himself does.

Mr. DAVIS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) inform us why the experimental farms were started. The Conservative government get credit for starting the experimental farms, and it certainly is no reflection upon the farmers of Canada that these experimental farms were inaugurated. Neither is it a reflection on the farmers that this government has undertaken to find out what kind of trees would be suitable for certain portions of the country.

Mr. CLANCY. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) the object of starting the experimental farms. One object of the experimental farm in the North-west was to do the very work which the minister now proposes to put his hand in the public purse for. Why not leave that business to the experimental farm. It is no reflection on the farmers of Canada that experimental farms were started, but I can tell the hon. gentleman that the the young men who have studied at the experimental farms have never been able to carry their teaching into practical effect when they went to work on their own farms. I defy any one to point to half a dozen men who attended the Ontario Agricultural College who have followed out the methods they were taught there when they cultivated their own farms. In that respect it has been a dismal failure. The conditions of the land in different localities vary so much that it is impossible to lay down any general scientific principle which can govern. There are two or three principles which the common sense farmer has at his command which are applicable all over, and the best farmers in the country are those who mastered these principles without ever seeing an agricultural college. I admit the value of the agricultural college for the purpose of testing seeds and so on, but for the purpose of training men to farm, it has been a dismal failure in the greatest province of the whole Dominion, notwithstanding that there have been hundreds of thousands of dollars expended on it. I repeat that the best farmers we have in Canada are not the young men who went to the Agricultural College, but they are the men who mastered the conditions of their own farms and who by their industry and sturdy common sense were able to make their way without knowing anything of any real or affected science about farming.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). How many forest rangers has the minister in his employ in the province of Manitoba, and what are their duties ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think I gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche, Marquette) the answer to that on a former occasion. The homestead inspectors are required to act as forest rangers whenever they are instructed by the Crown timber agent. The head timber inspector at Winnipeg is authorized to instruct the homestead inspectors in their duties as forest rangers. In addition to the homestead inspectors, there is a forest ranger, Mr. Trudel, having his headquarters at Regina ; one at Edmonton and one at Turtle Mountain. The plan which it is proposed to work out under this vote is that the homestead inspectors or the forest rangers, as the case may be, will be instructed at a particular season of the year to employ such men as they think necessary for thirty or forty days temporarily. These men have printed instructions in the form of a book, and they have printed forms containing the clauses of the law which provide penalties for starting fires and that sort of thing, and they post these notices and warn the people of the district. Last year we did not require to employ any, because just at the dangerous season of the year, which lasts about six weeks, very heavy rains came on and it was not necessary to make appointments, so that the money voted for that purpose was saved. Under ordinary circumstances a very great deal of work can be done for three or four thousand dollars, at $3 a day, for the men and the conveyance, and when these men are only employed temporarily. The intention in regard to the whole plan is that we have a superintendent and an assistant superintendent, who has given special attention to forestry, and we expect to employ in the west a couple of supervisors who are thoroughly familiar with, and will be specialists in that class of work. I shall not discuss at length the points raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy), because I do not think that I need take seriously a great many things that he said. Most of his protests were directed against work which has been done by the Department of the Interior since it was instituted, namely, the taking of reasonable precautions against the destruction of timber, and that work must always be done by any department of government having timber lands under its charge. The argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) would go against doing anything at all. So far as this particular vote is concerned, it is simply an enlargement to the extent of two or three thousand dollars of a vote which has heretofore been always paid out of the Dominion lands appropriation.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Does the minister intend to utilize the present forest rangers for this work. He has only told us of three forest rangers who are homestead inspectors in the Territories. He has told us that he has some forest rangers in Manitoba who are not homestead inspectors.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy says there are two.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Are their services going to be utilized for this work ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are at work the whole time.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). At the present time are they supposed to devote their whole time to the duties of their office ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Then how is it that one is a member of the local legislature ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no permanent officer a member of the local legislature.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Is not Mr. Jerome in the employ of the government as forest ranger ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am told that the gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers was formerly a member of the civil service, but he resigned his position when he became a candidate for the local legislature. He has been employed temporarily, but he is not a permanent officer of the department.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). What salary does he get now, and what did he get before ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He does not get any salary now.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). What amount of money per annum does he draw from the public treasury ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When temporarily employed at special work he gets $4 a day.

Mr. MONK. I understand the minister to say that out of this vote of $15,000 there are employed for about forty days every year the several inspectors of homesteads on account of the danger of fire ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. What I meant to say was that the homestead inspectors are salaried officers paid out of another vote ; but they are employed by the Crown timber agent for the purpose of protecting the forests from fire when so instructed. Then it is intended to employ some farmers in the neighbourhood for a short time.

Mr. MONK. Are both of these parties to be paid out of this $15,000 ? The minister mentioned that a permanent instructor with two assistants would be employed. Do their salaries come out of the $15,000 vote ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. I will give the hon. gentleman the figures : The superintendent, $2,500 ; the assistant superintendent, $1,000 ; two supervisors, $1,500 ; traveling expenses for all the officers of the department, $2,000 ; printing notices and directions such as I have mentioned, $1,500 ; plant material, $1,500 ; building fire guards, $1,000 ; and the payment of men who may be employed temporarily in the fall, $4,000.

Mr. MONK. These persons specially employed would not be inspectors of homesteads ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, the homestead inspectors are not paid out of this vote at all.

Mr. MONK. Those would be special employees for six weeks ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, special employees.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that the mounted police, the homestead inspectors and the timber inspectors, all join in protecting the timber in that country from fire, and also that they have a right to employ other persons for a short period for the same purpose, and that they are paid out of another vote. Now, the hon. gentleman is asking $15,000 to supplement that service.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend is not taking into account the size of the district of the homestead inspector. I venture to say it is on the average from 200 to 400 miles, certainly from 200 to 300 miles. There are only four special timber inspectors engaged for a distance of 1,200 or 1,400 miles ; and they are employed in certain localities where their time is almost wholly taken up. The homestead inspectors' time is fully taken up. They simply act for a short time, because we do not want to go to the expense of employing special men when we have these men who are familiar with the country and the people. The object is to utilize for this work the staff we have.

Mr. CLANCY. Quite so ; but these gentlemen are covering the territory in that limit, and they are also in a position to call out farmers or others who must obey them, and these farmers are reasonably paid for assisting to protect their own property. Therefore, the machinery may be put in motion entirely irrespective of the chief inspector or those under him. The hon. gentleman will not say that the service has become more efficient by appointing one or two inspectors for the whole country. I am unable to see that by employing this new service the hon. gentleman has greatly remedied the difficulties that existed before. Mr. Stewart went over that country for the purpose of learning the extent of the timber in it, and he was appointed in the session of 1897 for a service unheard of before, and now it has developed into tree planting, because outside of that he has nothing to do. The hon. gentleman's statement has made it pretty clear that only about 10 per cent of this $15,000 is to be devoted to tree planting, whereas 90 per cent of it practically goes into the pockets of his own officials.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is surely carrying his argument to an unfair length. I must say that I think the hon. gentleman's argument absurd. I never said that this was altogether for the encouragement of tree planting. The vote states specifically that it is for two purposes; and I stated that it was for the two purposes of protecting the forests and tree planting. The superintendent of forestry has been in office for two years, and his salary has been voted by the House after discussion; and the animus displayed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) and other hon. gentlemen at that time is enough to account for the unnecessary length of this discussion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) understands that this work cannot be carried on without officers, and I venture to say that no hon. gentleman will say that, for carrying out the plan outlined the officers are too many. I agree with my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) that the vote is a very modest one, considering the work that we are expected to do. We anticipate being able to show good results by carrying on systematic work on these lines for a few years. My hon. friend attempted to leave the impression with the House that this vote of $15,000 except $3,000 would go into the pockets of officials. Having heard the statements and the arguments, he ought not to have tried to leave that misleading impression with the House. The arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite have undergone an entire change during this discussion. At first they said we would require a complete army of men. That was repeated several times. And now the hon. gentleman gets up and says we have too many men. I think that the simple plan that I have explained to the committee a dozen times must commend itself to every man of common sense who has a knowledge of the circumstance as the only plan that can be carried out. We are making use of the ordinary officials of the department, the homestead inspectors, who are familiar with the country and who will take charge of the work. If it is necessary to hire men to protect the forests, these officers are authorized to hire them. Anybody familiar with the country will say that an enormous amount of work in the protection of forests can be done for $4,000. A reasonable explanation having been given and these hon. gentlemen having expressed their views, I do not know how they can justify taking up the time of the House with further discussion.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the committee will be obliged to the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) for his lecture. He says that the animus shown on the appointment of Mr. Stewart justified him in the position he takes. Objection was taken to the appointment of Mr. Stewart, not because it was Mr. Stewart, but because Mr. Stewart or any other person would be a useless official. The hon. gentleman has said that we have veered around during this discussion. That is not the case. It was said that to give a service that would cover that country would mean the employment of an army of men, but it was stated at the same time that there might be an efficient service made up, of the mounted police, timber agents and homesteads inspectors who are on the ground, assisted by the settlers whose services could be enlisted. If the hon. gentleman thinks he defends himself by declaring that there was objection to the appointment of Mr. Stewart or anybody else on personal grounds, he is welcome to that opinion. Why, the minister had hardly warmed the seat he now occupies before he appointed Mr. Stewart. Nobody doubts the hon. gentleman's industry or ability in mastering the details of his department; but, knowing how little time he had, we may well doubt his knowledge at the time he appointed Mr. Stewart. I have nothing to say against Mr. Stewart except that he has been pensioned upon the service of this country for many years. He was employed by the province of Ontario, and when his work ceased there, he had to be taken care of, and the hon. minister took care of him. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) who is whispering to the Minister of the Interior now is telling him Mr. Stewart's history. Mr. Stewart was the Liberal candidate in North Simcoe against the uncle of the hon. gentleman who is coaching the Minister of the Interior. He was defeated there, and a place had to be found for him. And a place was found which was as worthless then as the one he occupies now is. He could never make it important——

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is making it very important.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) is the last one that should have anything to say on this subject. He did not welcome Mr. Stewart as a candidate in North Simcoe, and I am sure that he is satisfied that Mr. Stewart should be appointed to office that he might be taken care of when he did not succeed in carrying a constituency. The Minister of the Interior says that hon. gentlemen on this side in criticising the appointment of Mr. Stewart are moved by personal animus. I appeal to the minister himself that that is not very high politics. He should be able to give better arguments than that. I do not propose to detain the committee with further discussion——

Some hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure that the hon. gentleman who says 'hear, hear,' would say exactly the same if thousands of new officials were being fastened upon the service of this country. But see what this multiplication of officials leads to. The country to be covered by this service is a vast country. The hon. minister, in his supplementary estimates, is asking for more money for the outside service in connection with Dominion lands. I do not discuss that now, but I merely refer to the fact that this is not all the money that will be required. It only shows that when you multiply officials you are in the hands of these officials, you lose control of your expenditures and must increase them to serve these officials rather than to serve the interests of the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That item being passed, we will take up No. 246.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman should take this up item by item. That is the custom.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But all the other items were passed, this one being held over in order to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) an opportunity to express his views.

Expenses of government in district of Keewatin, $2,190.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of this sum, $600 goes towards the salary of the lieutenant-governor, $480 is for stenographer, and the balance of the money is taken up for the travelling expenses of the lieutenant-governor, who goes out about once a year, and some small expenses for printing and stationery.

Maintenance of lunatics from Keewatin, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The district of Keewatin is a sort of no-man's land, which, for administrative purposes, comes under the jurisdiction of the lieutenant-governor of Manitoba. The lunatics are brought down from that region to the asylum in Manitoba, and their maintenance is paid for by the Federal government to the provincial authorities. We have generally taken a vote of $3,000; but we think this year $2,000 is likely to be sufficient.

For the relief of distressed Canadians in foreign countries other than the United States, $500.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote is always taken for cases of emergency, where a British consul in foreign countries advances small sums to send home persons who become stranded and in distressed circumstances in foreign countries; and the British government look to us for repayment.

Maintenance and construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Spring reservation near Banff station, North-west Territories, $14,420.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is the same vote as last year, and is made up as follows: Salaries, of the superintendent, $1,200; caretaker, $740; caretaker of the waterworks, $300 ; caretaker of the museum, $200 ; estimate for repairs of road east of the bridge, $1,500 ; repairs to other park roads, $1,000 ; new road, $3,000 ; small house for the caretaker of the herd of buffalos, $500 ; care of buffalos and other animals, including $600 for caretaker, $1,500. Then, it is necessary to put in a pipe for the distribution of the hot water, which is one of the attractions of the park, $500 ; clearing land, $500 ; miscellaneous, $1,500 ; general contingencies in superintendent's office, $1,000. We ask for a vote of $2,000 for the puchase of animals. We have now about twenty-six head of buffalo, and a number of elk. I am satisfied the experiment we have inaugurated of starting a herd of buffalo will be a great success. They are breeding very satisfactorily.

Cost of litigation (Department of the Interior), $1,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have always taken that vote, or ever since I have been in charge of the department, to meet any odd case that might turn up where legal expenses are incurred. Cases arise where small costs have to be incurred in connection with the administration of timber lands. It is altogether a provisional vote. We expended last year $170 on two cases.

To provide for the survey of the boundary between the Yukon territory and British Columbia from Teslin lake to Alsek river, $20,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for the purpose of sending a survey party to survey the boundary line between the Yukon territory and the province of British Columbia. The boundary is the 60th parallel of north latitude, and the operations of the survey party are set forth in some notes made by the Surveyor General.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is the Mr. White-Fraser on that survey party the inspector of mounted police who has lately been in South Africa ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. Mr. White-Fraser is a surveyor. My deputy tells me that he has a brother in the Mounted Police.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this a joint survey on behalf of this government and the province ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any arrangement by which the line established will be binding ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not yet. We undertook it at first at the request of the provincial authorities, and as my hon. friend will see, knowing what the parallel is. I presume it would be advisable, as my hon. friend suggested, before going on with that work, to have an arrangement with the British Columbia authorities, so that there may be no question about it. I do not anticipate there will be the least difficulty, because we are doing the work practically at their request.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At the same time I think it would be desirable that an arrangement should be made.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the work will only cost $12,000 for the present season, and the minister has asked for $20,000. What does he want the other $8,000 for ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are two parties : Mr. White-Fraser's party is estimated to cost $8,000, and Mr. St. Cyr's is estimated to cost $12,000.

Mr. GOURLEY. How was this boundary fixed ? Was it fixed by Imperial statute ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. GOURLEY. Originally creating the province ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When British Columbia came into confederation she came in with her boundaries.

Mr. GOURLEY. Which were fixed by Imperial Act ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. GOURLEY. Has the boundary never been ascertained on the ground until now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. GOURLEY. How have you got along in regard to jurisdiction ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Until the last year or two there was nobody there, and it is only for the purpose of meeting the actual necessities of the case that we are going over it now.

Mr. GOURLEY. Will the hon. gentleman have some more of those maps sent to me? The people of my county are very much infatuated with them, and they have been writing to me about them.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business shall we expect to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A few Bills may be taken up, and we will go on with supply. If the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is well enough, he will go on with his estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And if not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If not, we will take up some of the Interior estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 10, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth) moved:

That that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for presenting private Bills be suspended in reference to the Bill respecting the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters of the Dominion of Canada, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 11th report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Before that motion is put, I wish to draw to the attention of the right hon. First Minister the frequency with which the rule with regard to private Bills is asked to be suspended. Earlier this session I drew his attention to the same thing, and I understood him to say that the first session of the new parliament was the proper time for the House to put its foot down on this growing practice, which tends to lengthen the session. Although we must be drawing measurably near the end of the session, the same disposition to suspend the rule continues. It is an evil that should be stopped, and I hope the government will exercise some reasonable control in the matter.

Mr. FLINT. I wish to state that the urgency of this particular Bill was mentioned at the time permission was given to present the preliminary petition. It is the only Bill at all likely to infringe the rule of the House. It is of great importance that it should be passed this session. It is exactly similar in its terms to another Bill in regard to another society which was passed a week or two ago, and I trust the hon. gentleman will not insist on his objection.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I agree altogether with the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule); but, we considered this particular case a few days ago, and came to the conclusion that the rule ought to be allowed to stand aside with respect to this Bill, but with respect to this Bill alone—nothing else.

Motion agreed to.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

1. Has John MacInnis, sub-collector at West Bay, Cape Breton, been dismissed?

2. If so, for what reason?

3. Was any inquiry made? If so, of what character, and by whom?

4. Was Mr. MacInnis given a hearing before dismissal?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) :

1. Yes.

2. For offensive political partisanship.

3. No formal inquiry or hearing was deemed necessary.

4. The information before the department being considered sufficient.

POULTRY FATTENING STATIONS.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. How many stations for poultry fattening had the government in Prince Edward Island last year?

2. Were the results satisfactory, and is it the intention of the government to continue the experiment ?

3. Who was the person employed at the chicken fattening station at Alberton, West Prince?

4. Who recommended him, what qualifications had he for the work, and was it satisfactory ?

5. How long was he employed, and what was the amount of his wages?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) :

1. The government had four poultry fattening stations in Prince Edward Island, namely, at Charlottetown, Eldon, Mount Stewart and Alberton.

2. The results were satisfactory, and it is the intention of the government to continue such poultry fattening stations.

3. Mr. H. J. Matthews was the person employed at the chicken fattening station at Alberton.

4. His work was satisfactory.

5. He was employed for about two and a half months, and received remuneration amounting to $92.50.

MAIL CONTRACT, GANANOQUE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

3. If so, is it the intention of the Department of Agriculture, with a view to the interests of the French-speaking agricultural class in the country to adopt suitable means to ensure the printing and distribution of the French edition of the report of the Experimental Farm simultaneously with the English edition?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). The Department of Agriculture has not full control of the printing and distribution of these reports.

LABOUR ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Bill No. 47 was submitted to the president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, Mr. Smith, M.P., for Vancouver, and also to Mr. Puttee, M.P., for Winnipeg. Both these gentlemen approve of the Bill as far as it goes, but reserve the right of moving amendments and making suggestions.

Bill No. 32 to provide for the marking and inspection of packages containing fruit for sale.—The Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Sydney Fisher).

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I think that when my estimates were last under consideration we left off at the discussion of the item for increased accommodation at Halifax.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister will remember also that the first item, that relating to steel rails and fastenings, stood over. He was to furnish me the tenders from the different parties who have tendered for the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy took a memo. of the matter, and he will bring the information that the hon. gentleman asked for. We may go on with the other item, that of increased accommodation at Halifax.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to Capital—Railways—Intercolonial Railway—To increase the accommodation at Halifax, $60,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This amount is being asked for because the traffic at Halifax has been increasing to such an enormous extent that our present accommodation is entirely inadequate. Besides the other work to be done, there is a cribwork retaining wall required at Richmond.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The amount voted last year was $16,200, and this with the amount now asked for will make a total of $76,200. What is to be done for this amount ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The works we have undertaken are in addition to the improvements at North street, and the cribwork that I have referred to. We have to extend the yard at Richmond. There is a grading and filling at that point that is a very expensive item. It involves, if my memory is correct, a good deal of rock excavation and is estimated to cost not less than $60,000. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), will probably be able to verify my impressions as to the character of the work to be done there. The improvements altogether will necessitate an expenditure of $120,000 in round figures. We expended, during the year ended 30th June, 1900, $22,000, and, up to the 1st of January last, $3,000. We propose to expend $60,000 this year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was a report of the Committee on Railways and Transportation adopted by the council of the Halifax Board of Trade on the 10th of December, 1899, which probably dealt with some of the matters that the Minister of Railways and Canals has brought to the attention of this committee. I would like to read that report in the hearing of the minister in order that he may have an opportunity to explain to what extent the difficulties and defects that are referred to in it will probably be removed by the expenditure of this money. The first paragraph says :

1. The business in the railway yard, both at Richmond and Deep Water Terminus, has largely increased, and, unfortunately, the capacity for transacting the business has not only not increased in corresponding ratio, but it has actually diminished. Inquiry and experience have satisfied the committee that the present yardmaster is unequal to the task which is imposed upon him, and they would respectfully suggest that he be transferred to some other sphere of duty, and some active and thoroughly competent man substituted for him.

So far as that is concerned, I do not know the yardmaster, and have no opinion as to his fitness or capacity for the place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The man referred to has been displaced, and another man, believed to be competent, has been appointed in his stead.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The second paragraph of the report reads :

The committee are further of opinion that the yard has not the equipment in the way of shunting engines which is needed to deal satisfactorily with the traffic.

I will send this report over to the hon. minister.

3. The committee are satisfied that some rearrangement and enlargement of the track accommodation in the yard is desirable, and that, in order to deal satisfactorily with freight shipped or landed at Deep Water, an additional track connecting that terminus with Richmond cannot well be longer dispensed with.

I will presently read the resolution of the council of the city of Halifax pointing out the desirability of expropriating certain properties on Upper Water street, which would meet the difficulty suggested by this paragraph.

4. The committee express their regret that the dredging beside pier No. 4 at deep water was not done during the past season, and would recommend that as the carrying on of the work after this date would seriously interfere with the docking, loading and unloading of transatlantic steamers, it be postponed until after the opening of navigation in the St. Lawrence in the spring of 1901.

So, according to the views of the committee, some work of that kind that remains undone should be performed during this present spring.

5. The committee are impressed by the evidence which has been submitted to them of the great delay which occurs in the transportation of freight between western points and Halifax, and between Halifax and Sydney, and trust that while the increased delay may be due largely to an increased business of the Intercolonial Railway, means may be found by the Railway Department to improve the present unsatisfactory condition of things.

This report was made more than a year ago, and possibly the inconvenience in this respect may have been remedied by the department since.

6. It has been felt for some time by the public, as well as by the officers of the Intercolonial Railway and Dominion Atlantic Railway, that the state of business called for the laying of a second track on the Intercolonial Railway between Halifax and Windsor Junction, and the committee trust that an item for the doing of this work may be placed in the railway estimates for the coming year.

They were referring then to 1900. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has taken that into consideration. There is a large amount of business over that portion of the line, 14 miles, between Halifax and Windsor Junction, and that has to bear not only all the business of the Intercolonial Railway which comes into Halifax, either from the north or from the east, but it has also to accommodate all the business of the Dominion Atlantic Railway, which is by no means small, and which is increasing from year to year.

7. The committee cannot conclude without an expression of regret that on more than one occasion their communications to the Railway Department have not been acknowledged, and venture to express the hope that similar oversights will not occur in the future.

The eighth paragraph is a recommendation that the attention of the department be drawn to the necessity of a more adequate accommodation for the passenger traffic at North street station.

I observe there is a note at the end of this resolution stating that since then the yardmaster has been removed to another sphere of duty and that his successor has been appointed. Now, in order not to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily, I will submit to the hon. gentleman at the same time a resolution which was passed by the city council with respect to the expropriation of land on Upper Water street. The hon. gentleman, of course, is familiar with the line which connects the main line of the Intercolonial Railway with the deep water terminus; he knows that part of Upper Water street in the city of Halifax is occupied by that line. It has been there for a great many years, I believe it was originally put there on account of the desire of the city to secure a terminus at deep water. They passed a resolution, as I understand, authorizing the laying of the railway on that portion, or a portion, of the street. The result of placing the railway there has been to narrow the street, of course, to a great extent, rendering it much less useful as a public highway than it was before. But that has not been the only result. A further result has been that the property immediately adjoining that on the west has been almost entirely destroyed for the purpose for which it was formerly used. It has deteriorated in value to an enormous extent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that deterioration of recent occurrence?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it has been going on ever since the railway has been placed on the street, and the proprietors at one time commenced an action against the government for the purpose of recovering damages. The hon. gentleman knows the difficulty that arises where no portion of the proprietors' land has been taken. No portion of the land of any of these proprietors had been taken, and upon commencing litigation they found that there were great difficulties in succeeding, and eventually I think the petitions of right were not successful. Nevertheless, no one can doubt that these people have sustained great damage, and it would seem an equitable thing at least that some compensation should be made to them. Neither the former government nor this government could ever see their way clear to do anything, thinking that as there was no legal liability it was not an occasion that called for interference. Now, what the city council suggests in their resolution, which I will read, is that increased accommodation is required for the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax, both at the deep water terminus at North street, and at Richmond, and that the increased accommodation could be best provided by expropriating land between Water street and Lockman street, as far south as the deep water terminus. I believe the property could be acquired at a very reasonable rate, and I venture to think that the suggestion made by the city council in this resolution is worthy of very careful and earnest consideration on the part of the Minister of Railways and Canals and of the government. The matter arose in the city of Halifax recently in this way: It was proposed to erect a cold storage plant in the northern part of the city, and there was necessity in that connection to obtain a siding or some right of way over that portion of the Intercolonial Railway which runs along this street, and an application was made to the city council. In dealing with that, the city council passed this resolution:

> With reference to the granting of permission for the laying of a railway siding on Upper Water street, that such permission could not be granted. Your committee would recommend, however, that immediate steps should be taken by the council to impress upon the Dominion government, not only the great desirability, from a commercial standpoint, but the utter necessity of the taking over of the land by the government in order to furnish anything like adequate facilities for the handling of freight.

That has since been followed up by another resolution of the council in the month of March, which is of the same purport, and I will not trouble the committee by reading it. I think the minister has already had this matter under consideration to some extent. I desire to press its importance upon him, not because it is a matter affecting my own city and my own constituency, but because it is a matter affecting the entire business of the Intercolonial Railway which comes into the city of Halifax. I think we may look for some development of that business, and I believe the minister himself looks for great development of business over the Intercolonial Railway into that city; but as long as we do not have first-class accommodation and proper facilities for handling freight it would be impossible for that business to develop to any great degree. At the present time those who are more capable of forming an opinion upon this matter than I am, think that the facilities are not adequate to a proper development within a few years; indeed they say the facilities are not sufficient for the business now. If that be so, it is necessary to provide increased facilities, and I see no better way in which the minister could do it than by taking that portion of land. In saying that, of course, I speak with great diffidence, because I am well aware that I have no practical knowledge of the subject which will entitle my opinion to much respect. But it does seem to me that the land lying immediately beside the track of the Intercolonial Railway, extending from the North street station down to the deep water terminus, is land that could be more useful to the Intercolonial Railway for the purpose referred to than any other land that I am aware of in that vicinity.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Chairman, having reference, in the first place, to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has stated, particularly in regard to taking over the property on Water street, I may say to my hon. friend that that subject has received a good deal of consideration from the department and from myself personally. I have not, however, I am free to confess, up to the present moment, felt that the interest of the railway or the public service was so much involved in the question as the interest of the private land-owners themselves. They naturally have a desire to dispose of this property, property which I agree, has been, to some extent, possibly to a considerable extent, depréciated in value by reason of the railway line running along that street. But, this is not, by any means, a recent grievance, it is one of very long standing. The condition which exists today has prevailed for many years. I do not think that things are much worse at this moment than they were ten, or fifteen, or twenty years ago ; so that, while I think that if we had plenty of money, if things were easy with us, it would be rather an advantage for the railway to own this particular property, we have not thought that, in the pressure under which we were to afford the accommodation to the public, we ought to defer doing what is altogether and entirely necessary in the public interest, doing what is more for a private than a public interest, or which is as much a private as it is a public interest. My hon. friend, when he suggested that this property would be a good property for us to acquire in order to improve our facilities, did not have in his mind the consideration that it is not always best that a railway should acquire property for such a purpose in the heart of the city or necessarily very close to the city. The object of railway policy in that direction at the present time is rather to get out of a city, to go where you can get land as cheaply as possible, and where you can lay down your yards at the least possible expense. We are endeavouring to do that, and that is why we are doing what we are at Richmond and in the neighbourhood of the North street station, rather than in the more settled part nearer the centre of the city. We have endeavoured to meet the urgent demands of the business people of Halifax in our present proposals. I do not say that we have covered all the ground that we would desire to cover, but we are approaching the question with a full appreciation of the necessity of more and improved accommodation being provided for the business of Halifax. It is unquestionably growing, it has grown of late, there is a congestion at the present time, and business men have good reason to complain that they have not the facilities provided for them that they need. We think that what we are now proposing to do will very largely meet the present needs at all events, and meet the needs of the immediate future as well. I think if my hon. friend understands, as I am quite sure he does, what our scheme of improvement is, he will admit that we are responding reasonably, at all events, to the demand which the business men of Halifax have made upon us ; at all events, in an equal degree with any other portion of the country through which the line runs. My hon. friend read in the resolutions that it was the opinion of the Board of Trade and the city council of Halifax that the line should be double tracked between Halifax and Windsor Junction. That question has been looked into. We have not come to a final decision in respect to it. It will be an expensive work when it is undertaken, and my own desire has been rather that we should see whether or not, for the present, and for some few years to come, we might not extend our sidings. We might lay a double track for a few miles of the distance between these two points, laying it down where it could be built less expensively and thereby answer the purposes of the relief to traffic. To double track the whole line between Halifax and Windsor Junction would be an expensive work, because there are points where a good deal of heavy rock cutting would have to be done. I think we can have six or eight miles of track in one continuous line on a portion of the road which would be comparatively inexpensive, and which would afford very great relief and sufficient relief to answer for some time. It is to that point that we are now directing attention. I think I would like, before deciding upon it in my own mind and before dealing with the conflicting views which may obtain upon it, to look over that section of the road myself, which I think I will be able to do at the close of the session. During this session, at all events, I would not be in a position to ask my colleagues to make any appropriation for the purpose of laying down either all or any portion of the double track between these two points.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) perhaps, misunderstood the ground upon which I was putting forth the suggestion that the property on Upper Water street should be acquired by the government for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway. My reference to the depreciation of the property of the land-owners there, was more with the view of pointing out to the minister that the property could be acquired at a very cheap rate. I did not intend to suggest, that, because these gentlemen had certainly what one might call a moral grievance on account of the depreciation, therefore, we should acquire the property. I was not suggesting that, but I was pointing out that it could be acquired at a very low figure. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that this is not necessary, and that what is being done at Richmond will answer the purpose for the present. Of course, he knows a great deal more about the actual working of the railway than I can pretend to know, but I do understand that at deep water itself there is a very great deal of difficulty on account of the lack of room for sending cars there, loading and unloading them, and a lack of facilities for the purpose of handling the business of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not know to what extent that can be remedied by having a yard at Richmond a mile off or more. It did seem to me that this land which is immediately adjoining would improve the accommodation which needs to be improved at deep water, and I have no doubt it would. Of course, the question remains as to whether the necessity is great enough to justify the hon. minister in going to the expense of acquiring the land. The hon. gentleman is responsible for any opinion in regard to it, and of course he is in a better position than I am to form an opinion in regard to it. But, I do know that a great many people and the leading business men of Halifax think it is absolutely necessary now, or in the immediate future, to increase the room at the deep water terminus itself, or in its immediate vicinity. I trust, that, although the hon. minister may not see his way clear to take that into consideration now, he will bear it in mind and that if the accommodation is necessary for the proper development of the business of the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax it may not be delayed to a too distant future.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How is the removal of that rock connected with the Intercolonial Railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is connected with the improvement of the deep water terminus.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. To what extent is the elevator at Halifax used by the public ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the hon. gentleman would expect me to remember all these details. He would oblige me if he would refer to the public statement which is taken from the records and he will find it there.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total expenditure on terminal facilities and accommodation at Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Up to the end of December last it was $2,168,143.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that all ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, I made a mistake. I included an amount which did not belong to it. It is $1,997,553.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the minister has not the report from his officer recommending this work under his hand now, would he bring it after dinner ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman knows the way these matters reach us. They come in the form of estimates from the department at Moncton. This matter has been the subject of representation by the city council of Halifax, and by the board of trade, and I do not know that we would have any departmental recommendation further than that involved in the estimates. If there is any such I shall bring it down.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The minister must have a recommendation from his department for this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the estimates contain any formal recommendation.

Mr. MACLEAN. In connection with these appropriations for the Railway Department, I wish for a moment to again direct the attention of the minister and of the government to the fact that the time has come when the government system of railways should be administered absolutely independent of politics. If we ever are to have a national system of railways in this country, we must begin by taking our present system out of politics. I trust that before this parliament meets again the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) and the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) will be able to announce with the sanction of the government that hereafter the railways and the post office are to be conducted irrespective of all kinds of political influences; that the administration of the railway will be in the hands of the best officials that can be obtained, that they will be well paid, and that they can do their work unhampered by political interference. The idea of national railways is growing in Canada, and I want to see it grow. I want to see the Intercolonial Railway extended from ocean to ocean. I am prepared to see the Intercolonial Railway extended to the Georgian Bay to-day if a reasonable proposition for that purpose can be secured. To begin with, let us do as they do in England, and take the administration of our railways outside of politics. No member of parliament should have a word to say in the appointment of postmasters or brakesmen or anything of that kind.

Mr. COWAN. You used to have a lot to say about it.

Mr. MACLEAN. The gentlemen who sit on the other side of the House think this is an absurd doctrine. They like to be dabbling in this kind of business, and they like to be trafficking in senatorships. If that kind of traffic has obtained in the past the people of Canada want to see it ended now and for ever.

Mr. COWAN. We like to follow your good example.

Mr. MACLEAN. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) who represents the cake-walk district of this country will follow a good example when he gets it from a man like me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN. We have had enough of cake-walk interruptions in this House, and I hope we have heard the last of them. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do trust that the Minister of Railways and the First Minister will recognize that Canada is proud of her national railway, and that the people of this country would like to see it developed. I believe that the people of Canada would like to see the railways and the telegraph and telephone systems taken over by the government, but to begin with we must take these enterprises outside the domain of politics. I hope the Conservative party will come before the country in a very short time and declare that it is one of the planks in their platform to de-politicalize the railway system and the post office service of this country. If that be done, the people will think more and more of these great public institutions, and will be prepared to invest more of their money in the extension of them.

To pay land damages for subway at Amherst, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to build a subway at Christie's Crossing near Amherst which is a very dangerous point, and we require some additional land in order to do that. We require some additional land, which we have reason to believe will cost us $1,000, and we are asking for a vote with which to purchase that land. We have had an appropriation for the subway, and have expended it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And this is to pay for the land you take ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to pay for the land we have been obliged to take, and land damages. The chief engineer reports that this amount, he believes, will be sufficient to cover both. Last year or the year before we had an estimate, speaking from memory, of between $10,000 or $12,000 for the work, which has been done.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a small item, but it is an extraordinary statement the minister makes. There was apparently a level crossing, and for the purpose of protecting the public he builds a subway. How could damages to the extent of $1,000, or any damages, occur ?

Mr. GERMAN. They certainly occurred in Toronto, when a subway was built there on the streets.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a subway on an ordinary road in the country. What land damages could occur two or three miles outside of Amherst, for which $1,000 would be payable ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not going to pay any more than we are obliged to pay. The names of the claimants are Charles Patterson and the heirs of Moffat. In making this subway, I understand that we have cut into and injured the land of these two people. This roadway goes down a valley, and then rises up and crosses the railway on a level crossing, and we are building a subway under the tracks, and in doing so we are cutting into the valley on the one side or the other beyond our own boundaries.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How far is this place from Amherst ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About a quarter of a mile.

Mr. WALLACE. What quantity of ground is taken ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know how much.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the minister in regard to the accommodation at Sydney. I am requested to ask if he has come to any settled conclusion as to whether he will make any change in regard to the running of trains to North Sydney and Sydney. As I understand, North Sydney is on the main line, while Sydney is on a branch.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman was not here when I made my reply on that subject, but he will find it in 'Hansard,' to the effect that we will be issuing the time-table for the coming season in a short time, and we contemplate making arrangements to remove the dissatisfaction which exists, which has existed for many years, but which is undoubtedly becoming more acute by reason of the increased business at Sydney. We hope to provide such accommodation for both places as will satisfy the reasonable demands of the people resident in those places.

Mr. SPROULE. By what means do you hope to accomplish that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There would be different means of accomplishing it. One would be by having a train run out from North Sydney, and connect with the express when it arrives at Sydney junction—the main express going into Sydney, which would, perhaps, carry the major part of the travel. Another arrangement that might be made would be to increase the number of our express trains from Mulgrave, and arrange to have one train a day leaving North Sydney, and one train a day leaving Sydney, and on the return one train going to North Sydney and the other to Sydney. I do not know that it would be expedient for me at this moment to state to which of these plans my own preference would incline. But, the hon. gentleman can say to those who are inquiring of him, that the subject is not being overlooked, but that it will be dealt with in a manner which I am sure will be reasonably satisfactory to the people.

Mr. SPROULE. My information is, that the first plan would not be satisfactory, for this reason, that it would be making practically a branch of what was originally a main line. It would necessitate a transfer at Sydney Junction, instead of the train going on to North Sydney, which, I am told, is practically on the main line, and connects with the regular boat, which carries a large number of passengers. If the other plan were carried out, of running through trains—one from North Sydney and another from Sydney—I do not suppose that the same objection would prevail. But, the first suggestion will not, so far as I am informed, meet with the approval of the people of North Sydney at all. They have protested against that before, and will likely do so again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not expect to be able to satisfy the people of both points, and I have some doubts as to whether I shall be able to satisfy them at either of the points. If the last suggestion I made were to be adopted, I am quite sure that the people, at least from one of these localities, would complain that both trains were not serving their particular point. There are objections to the running of through trains unless the needs of business justify it, and it is not a serious consideration for people to get on board a day car—a comfortable commodious car—and run up five or six miles and then change into another car. That is not at all a serious grievance, and if they can get first-class service, as they will by submitting to a little inconvenience of that kind, I do not think they can make much of a case on which to appeal to the public against the decision of the department. We have been giving the people of Cape Breton a great deal better service than they have been heretofore receiving. We have put additional trains on, and I think we will be justified in still more improving the service by giving, probably all the year round, a day and night service each way. But for some little time to come, it would not be reasonable to ask us to duplicate that improved service for both towns.

Mr. SPROULE. It may not be much trouble for passengers to get on and off a train, but when it is contemplated to make what was heretofore the main line a branch line, and make the other the main line, it seems to me it would be wise first to determine which line carries the largest number of passengers and the greater amount of freight. I understand that North Sydney is the line which connects with the boat line, whereas the other does not connect with any regular boat line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The proportion of passenger and freight traffic is very much larger to Sydney than North Sydney. I would think two or three times as large. The other has steamboat connection with the Bruce and Newfoundland line, but with all that there is no real analogy between the two cases, so far as the volume of passenger and freight traffic is concerned. When you get to North Sydney you get practically to the terminus of railway connection, except so far as steamers are concerned, but when you get to Sydney you have connection with the Louisburg railway, along which line there are several important mines and large centres of population. The mines of the Dominion Coal Company are located chiefly along that railway, and the connection with Sydney brings you into contact with the population at these mines and at other points on the Louisburg railway.

Mr. SPROULE. What would be the respective population of the two places ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The population of Sydney is about half as much again as that of North Sydney, and in addition you are serving the population of these mining towns and villages along the Louisburg line.

Mr. MACLEAN. Has the hon. minister sufficient terminals at Sydney or is he likely to have to buy terminals at a high price from real estate speculators ? I hope that the country has something to show for the $2,000,000 invested in terminals at Halifax. The esplanade at Toronto is a very valuable work, which cost a great deal of money and is traversed by miles of track, but I do not think it cost quite $2,000,000. $2,000,000 for terminal facilities in Halifax is rather a large item, and I would like to know whether the people are getting value for their money. If North Sydney is to develop as we are told it will, I hope that the hon. gentleman will have proper terminal facilities there, and thus avoid the necessity of having to pay two or three years hence, exaggerated prices for real estate in that town.

Original construction, $2,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that for land damages ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, this is construction, the old item.

Land Damages—Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton division of the Intercolonial Railway, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is an old item. Usually for the last ten or twelve years, $2,000 has been voted, but this year we believe that $1,000 will be sufficient. The only claims now pending relate to the Cape Breton division. They are : Charles E. Leonard, land damage in connection with the right of way of the original construction of the Cape Breton line ; Catherine McKenzie, and James and David Dowling, for the diversion of a stream. We believe that the amount here asked for will be sufficient for the claims to be paid during the year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We might as well take up the first item, which was held over—steel rails and fastenings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very well.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to Capital—Railways—Intercolonial Railway—Steel rails and fastenings, $500,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see by the returns brought down by the minister that he had tenders from seven parties, and as he stated, they were very nearly the same as that at which the contract was given. Did the hon. gentleman make inquiries as to the price of rails in the open market, the price paid by the ordinary railways of the country ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To what time does the hon. gentleman refer ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Within the last eight or nine months. The price has not varied for about six months.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the price to-day is lower. If you are ready to place an order to-day for delivery nine or twelve months hence, you can get quite a reduction upon the price we had to pay last year.

Mr. MACLEAN.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the price now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know, but I think that it is probably $5 or $6 less than it was.

Mr. MACLEAN. The price is $24 a ton.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The highest market price at any time during the last five months has been $25 a ton. I have here the contract that the hon. minister has made with Mr. Clergue and his company, and I must say it is the most extraordinary contract that I have ever known to be presented to a House of parliament. This agreement was made in October, 1900, one month before the general election. I gathered from what the minister said the other day that he was ashamed of it, because he stated that it was for only 25,000 tons of steel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I stated just what it was, did I not ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This contract is for 125,000 tons of steel. That is to say, here is a contract for about $4,000,000 that the Minister of Railways and Canals has entered into without consulting parliament and without a single dollar voted by parliament. What becomes of the promises made by these hon. gentlemen when in opposition ? What becomes of the principle they promised to carry out if returned to power—that no contract of any importance would be given without being first submitted to the House for its sanction ? Here the hon. minister, off his own bat, a month before the election, enters into a contract with a man who has had not a single forge, who was not in a position to manufacture a single steel rail, for 125,000 tons of rails at a price for the first year of $32.60, the price afterwards to be fixed in a very uncertain manner. Here are the words of the contract :

Whereas, for the purpose of encouraging the erection and equipment in Canada of plant and machinery for the manufacture and production on the most modern principle, of steel rails and plates and bridge material, the aforementioned Minister of Railways and Canals has been authorized to execute a contract guaranteeing to the company the acceptance by Her Majesty, during the five years next following, of 25,000 tons of steel rails at prices fixed as hereinafter specified. It is, therefore, agreed by and between Her Majesty, for herself, her successors and assigns, and the company for itself, its successors and assigns, that Her Majesty will in each year from the year 1901 to the year 1905, both inclusive, purchase from the company and take delivery of 25,000 tons of 2,240 pounds to the ton, of first quality steel rails, eighty pounds to the yard, of section from time to time prescribed and approved by the said minister.

Then, as to the price, it is fixed in this manner :

That, with the exception of the year 1901, for which year the price per ton is hereby fixed at $32.60, the price for such rails per ton shall be the same as the price obtainable for the same quality of rails in the open market in Great Britain at the time when the respective orders for such rails are given under the said contract.

Now, if the minister is correct—though I see nothing about it in his contract—there is from 2 to 3 per cent of nickel in the rails. Unless the nickel is mixed in England to get rails of the same quality, it will be impossible to fix the price by the market price of rails in England. The contractor, before he goes into the enterprise, has $3 per ton promised to him in the form of a bounty for every ton of steel manufactured in Canada.

Mr. WALLACE. He gets $3 per ton for pig iron and $3 per ton for steel.

Mr. MACLEAN. And something out of the Ontario government.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, he gets $6 per ton from this government besides a bounty from the Ontario government. And he has a contract for five years to sell steel rails to a total of 25,000 tons, virtually at the price of $32.60 per ton. What better thing could a man desire with which to go into the market and raise capital for the purpose of fulfilling his contract ? The government have not only made an agreement for the purchase of these rails, but they have virtually furnished the capital to carry out the contract. I protest against this growing habit on the part of the government of letting contracts without tender. It was one of the principles laid down by these hon. gentlemen when they were in opposition that no contract should be let without tender. They also insisted that no contract of importance should be let without being first laid upon the Table of this House for the approval of parliament. I do not know what this country is coming to, when the purchase of locomotives, the purchase of cars, the enormous expenditure on capital account of nearly $2,000,000 for the Intercolonial is left to an individual, when it is left to the government of the country to enter into contracts for such enormous sums without competition. There is something wrong on the face of it. The contract does not bear the date it was entered into, it only says : 'An agreement made this day, 1900.' The party who engrossed and backed it was more honest than the party who copied the agreement, because he says the date of the agreement was in October, 1900.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Look at the agreement, I think you will see the date mentioned.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, yes, 9th of October, 1900.

Mr. WALLACE. Was that the date the writs were issued for the elections ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Very near it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is difficult to follow the hon. gentleman in his statements, they are so wild, so misleading, so entirely inaccurate, so unfair. I confess I feel some difficulty in dealing with the statements as they merit. I am willing that a comparison should be made between the methods of this government and the methods of the government with which the hon. gentleman was connected. I am willing that the bona fides of the transaction should be sifted, and examined, and investigated, and turned over in every shape and form. And after you have done that, what will you find ? You will find simply that the government has endeavoured to pursue a course which, without a loss of a dollar to the public exchequer, would guarantee, if it were possible to do so, the establishment of an industry which will be of an enormous advantage to this country. I would not have expected that an hon. gentleman who belongs to a party that professes to absorb almost all interest in the industrial enterprises of Canada, should have been the first to complain of an arrangement of this kind, so well calculated to confer immense benefits upon the country, by the encouragement of an industry which could not possibly hope to succeed unless it received aid and encouragement in a proper and legitimate way from the government of the country. Now, Sir, away back in the month of June last, as I told the House yesterday, this subject was a matter of discussion. Before the close of the last session of parliament, I find, as early as the month of June, a formal proposal was made to the government by Mr. Clergue. If that proposal was one which was proper and commended itself to the approbation of the government, do I understand from the hon. gentleman that it ought to be rejected because an election might possibly occur in the near future ? Do I understand the hon. gentleman to tell this House calmly and seriously that that is the course which he and his party pursued when they were in power, that they abstained from entering into a proper, necessary and legitimate contract because somebody would suspect and charge them with having done so in view of an impending election ? I say it is childish and absurd ; and however much the hon. gentleman may have succeeded in warming himself up on this question, he will find it difficult to impress that view upon any reasonable electorate in any constituency in Canada. In the month of June, I say, we received a formal proposal from Mr. Clergue pointing out that they were anxious, in connection with their enterprises at the Soo, having large mineral interests, having an enormously valuable deposit of iron ore of a character which would make a superior steel, to establish an industry for making rails in Canada. Well, will anybody say that is not a desirable thing to encourage ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The Liberal party have said it from time to time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not care what the Liberal party said. I do not think the Liberal party ever proclaimed any such policy. I think the hon. gentleman will find it difficult to quote even individual members of the Liberal party—and individual members are not competent to speak for the party—who declared themselves against any such proposition. As long as there is no wrong done to the country, as long as there is not a dollar of burden placed upon the exchequer beyond what is necessary and reasonable, as long as you are not taking money out of the pockets of one person in order to put it into the pockets of another, I say it would be a laudable and legitimate policy and one which it is the bounden duty of any government to adopt and carry into operation, if they could do so under the circumstances which existed in this case. Mr. Clergue made this proposition, made it in good faith. It was considered in good faith, and it was finally determined upon by the government, not in the form of an order in council, but some time before the order in council was passed, some time before the date of the contract. It was determined upon by the government, and the conditions upon which such contract would be made were settled by the government.

Mr. WALLACE. When did the minister say the order in council was passed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my memory serves me, it was in the month of September, not long before the date of the contract which has been read by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The contract itself states that the order in council was dated the 9th of October.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That may be the date on which the order was passed, but the recommendation to council, I am quite sure, went in in September, because I was not here on the 9th of October, and could not have been present at that time. 'On a memorandum dated the 26th of September.' Then the order goes on to say it was in September that the report went to council, and the order passed on the 9th October. Well, now, what are the terms of that contract ? If that is open to criticism, then let the hon. gentleman criticise it, as it is his right to do. Do the terms state that we are to pay to this Lake Superior Power Company any price they may ask ? Are we to pay a price higher than the market price ? No, we are not to pay a price higher than the market price.

Mr. WALLACE. You are paying it this year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not paying a price higher than the market price. If, six months, or nine months, or a year, after a contract has been made, the price has declined, it is not fair to any government, it is not fair to any individual, to say that he was paying an exorbitant price, and attempt to prove it by the fact that the price has since declined. That is no evidence. At the time this contract was made the price of rails, from what information I could gather, was as high in the English market as the price we paid.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it necessary for the hon. gentleman to enter into such a contract at the time he did, and pay the exorbitant price that he now admits he paid for these rails ? Did he require the rails then ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I want the hon. gentleman to understand that he is not quoting my observations correctly in the remotest degree when he says that I admitted paying an exorbitant price.

Mr. CLANCY. Why, the hon. gentleman said a moment ago that the rails could be bought probably $6 a ton cheaper now than then.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But what does that prove? Does it prove that when the contract was made the price was higher than the market price which existed at the time ? It proves nothing of the kind. I tell the hon. gentleman that you could not go into the market in the months of October, September, August, or July last, and make a contract for the delivery of rails at the time specified in this contract at any less price than the price we made it for. And you cannot go into the market to-day, if my information is correct, and make a contract for the delivery of rails within six, nine or twelve months—

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong in that statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) know ?

Mr. OSLER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then I will have to yield to his superior knowledge. I am speaking from my information. I do know that when we made this contract for these rails we were not agreeing to pay an exorbitant price. I do know that the enormous demands that were being made at that time upon the rail manufacturers made it impossible to get an early delivery at a less cost than that which is named here. Now, so much for this year. We are not bound as to what the price will be next year. When we come to settle up for the next year's supply of rails, if the contract which has been entered into is carried out and the rails are delivered, we will have to ascertain what the market price is in England and the market price in England is a safe guide. If you go by that you are not paying an exorbitant figure, and we have this company under obligation to accept from us the price which rules in the English market. If they do not agree to furnish us with rails at the price which rules in the English market, we stipulated in making our contract that we were not under any obligation whatever to take the rails from them; that if they have not fulfilled their contract we are under no obligation to fulfil ours. That is a perfectly safe arrangement. I do not know how it would be possible to hit upon any terms which are to have reference at all to the future which would secure or guarantee the exchequer of this country against any loss, against any imposition in price, other than the terms in which that contract has been framed, and when it stipulates that we shall go to the open market in England to find how much it would be just and fair to pay them for rails we make a stipulation which I do not think anybody can say is not an ample protection to the exchequer of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. There are two features of it that attract our attention at the present time. The first is the unwisdom of entering into such a large contract without parliament being consulted. All this is wrong and hon. members on the other side of the House for years and years invariably declared that it was wrong and condemned the previous government for doing that kind of thing to an extent which they thought was not justifiable. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) says that there is nothing wrong in it. It seems to me to be practically another Yukon job—a worse job, some say than the Yukon job. It is, at all events, on a par with it. The same principle is involved. It is dealing with the money belonging to the country in a high handed way which is not, in my opinion, justifiable. The next feature of it is that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals did not treat the House with perfect frankness or fairness when he made the statement he did yesterday. What was that statement? We have entered into a contract with Mr. Clergue for 25,000 tons of rails at $32.50 a ton.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) pardon me for an interruption because it may avoid the necessity of his stating what he is proceeding to do. If he will look at 'Hansard' he will see just what I said on the subject. I said that we had no explicit contract for the full five years, that we had only fixed the rate for one year, and that subsequently, if they were prepared to sell us 25,000 tons of rails per year at the price which ruled in the English market, we understood we had an arrangement with them to take that quantity. These are the very words. Is not that really what we have done?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, I should say not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I certainly would say we had done. I will read what I did say:

> When we had assured ourselves with reference to what would be a reasonable price to pay, we made a contract with this company to deliver 25,000 tons of the quality and standard which we have been placing upon the road, a rail eighty pounds in weight, and we were to pay them $32.50 per ton, the delivery to commence in the first week in August, and to continue at such a rate that we would be able to lay them before the snow fell. They were to be delivered to us in Montreal—that is in the present year. We have no permanent and explicit contract with them for the future, although in their proposal they asked us to give them a contract for a term of five years, and to give them an order for 50,000 tons with which to commence their industry. We finally concluded to give them an order for 25,000 tons, and while we have no explicit contract with them for any term beyond the year in which we are now entering, we have an understanding with them under which, if they furnish us, as they engage to do, with rails of the quality and standard we require, and at the current price in the English market, we are prepared to continue to take our rails from them.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is a contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a contract, is it not?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, certainly. That is a contract to buy for five years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I say that we had no explicit arrangement because the price is entirely indefinite.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, you have a five years contract with them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is just as I stated, is it not?

Mr. MACLEAN. You said it was for one year, and now you say that it is for five years.

Mr. OSLER. You have a contract for five years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have an understanding that we are to purchase rails from them providing they are willing and ready and prepared to sell them to us at the market price in England.

Mr. TAYLOR. You are obliged to take them by your contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not obliged unless they agree to give them to us at the prevailing price in England.

Mr. OSLER. Does the hon. minister say that the contract is all on one side? The government have bound themselves to take 25,000 tons a year, but it is not a contract unless the manufacturers like to give them these rails each year. It is a contract on the minister's side, but it is not a contract on Mr. Clergue's side.

Mr. GERMAN. Do hon. gentlemen object to taking Canadian rails if the government can get them as cheaply as they can be got in other quarters?

An hon. MEMBER. You will have to vote for it anyway.

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit that my statement was absolutely correct that the minister did not treat this House with frankness and fairness. He left the impression on the House that the contract was only for 25,000 tons, whereas it is for 125,000 tons. He has read from 'Hansard' and his words have supported the statement that I made. He had a signed and sealed contract between the Minister of Railways as representing the government, and Messrs Clergue as representing the contractors. If this is not a binding contract, I do not know what it is. The condition of the contract is that they shall supply 25,000 tons of rails every year after the first year at the current market value. It is a contract all the same. I say it is not treating the House with frankness that the minister should mislead the House into the belief that there was no contract except for 25,000 tons to be delivered the present season. The other feature to which I wish to refer is the time at which the contract was entered into. When was it? In October at the very time that the writs had been issued and when the elections were on. I do not know what the date of the contract was.

An hon. MEMBER. The 9th of October.

Mr. SPROULE. The elections took place on the 7th of November. The contract was entered into at the very time that the writs had been issued and when the elections were on. About the same time he entered into a contract for nineteen locomotives at Kingston, when he telegraphed to his friend there regarding it, so that it might do the greatest amount of good to the party in power at that time. This has explained to me what would seem inexplicable before. I found that the Messrs. Clergue were very active agents in the interests of the present government during the election.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In your county.

Mr. SPROULE. They were making themselves very active in our part of the country. They were writing most diplomatic letters that had a political purpose, and when I wrote to them inquiring if there was truth in the report that this was done for election purposes, they did not deign to answer until about five weeks ago, because they did not dare to do it without having to confess. Now we have the explanation of the whole thing. They were playing into the hands of the Hon. Wm. Mulock, who was directing the campaign in that part of the country. Now we see the nigger in the fence. This contract comes out. A day ago, the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) told us that the contract was for 25,000 tons of rails, but he admits to-day that it is for 125,000 tons, and he merits the condemnation and censure of this House for not treating us with fairness. The minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) bought these rails in the face of a falling market. It must have been known to him that the price of steel was going down at the time he made this contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at that time.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, it was going down at that time. And to-day, only a few months after he made this contract, he is forced to admit that the price is $6 a ton less than this contract price. The whole thing looks like a scaly transaction, and the public of Canada will condemn it and condemn the minister. It is a contract that should receive the condemnation of this House and of the country.

Mr. MACLEAN. There is an old saying about teaching your grandmother how to suck eggs, and here we have the Liberal government professing to teach the Conservative party to set up an industry in this country. In fact the Minister of Railways has delivered us a lecture on the subject. Well, we do want an iron industry in Canada, and the government should encourage it, but they should go the right way about encouraging it. In this case they have gone back on all their record in the past; they have started out to build up an iron industry now, a thing which they told us in the past was an impossibility in this country. Why did they not invite capitalists to confer with them and discover from whom they could receive the best terms. That was not their policy at all. But just when an election is at hand they make a secret contract about which the public know nothing until four months after the elections are over. The whole transaction has not a good look about it; and especially so when we remember that these very men have heretofore been opposed to the encouragement of an iron industry in Canada. They told us it was a hot-house industry, and that you could only encourage it by bounties and prohibitive duties, but now they go back on all their professions in this respect. What does the hon. member for South Oxford (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) say now about encouraging this hot-house industry ? In speech after speech, year after year, he has declaimed against encouraging any iron industry in Canada. What has he got to say now ? What has he to say to his colleagues in the government professing to teach the people of Canada to-day how a steel industry is to be encouraged here ? They make a secret contract and that in itself is opposed to all their declarations in the past. They should have intimated to the rail-makers of the United States and of Great Britain and of Europe that they were disposed to encourage the production of steel rails in Canada, and that they were prepared to make a contract with the company that would establish that industry on the best terms. But they make a secret arrangement which they are ashamed of now, and which the people of the country from one end to the other will repudiate. What becomes of their old idea of having public competition for all these things ? Why, Sir, with the bounties and one thing and another the people of Canada will have to pay $40 a ton for these rails.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What has the bounty got to do with it ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The people have to pay the bounty.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will have to pay the bounty anyway.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman is begging the question. The people of the country will pay in round figures $40 a ton for these rails, and as to the price of rails in the market to-day I read the following extract from the New York World of yesterday :

> Mr. Charles Thullin, a Pennsylvania contractor, recently secured a contract to supply rails for Russia's great Siberian Railway. He asked the leading steel trust companies here for bids. They all asked him about $35 per ton, with freight to be added.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How does that strike you ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Wait a minute.

> Mr. Thullin went over to England, sub-let his contract to an English firm, and one of the same companies that had asked him $35 plus freight here, sold the rails at $24 a ton, delivered in England to the English sub-contractors.

That is the ruling price to-day ; $24 a ton for these rails, rolled in America and delivered in England.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the ruling price, is it ?

Mr. MACLEAN. That is the price quoted in the New York World of yesterday for these rails for the Siberian Railway delivered in England, and it is $24 a ton. As my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out, this contract was made with Mr. Clergue in the face of a falling market. A man in the position of the Minister of Railways must have prevision, and the government must have prevision and they must have known that the market for steel was declining. Every one knows that the price of iron had got to the highest point about a year ago, and that there was bound to be a decline, but in the face of that the government made this contract. I say that the contract is a bad one, because it was made in view of a falling market. I say that the contract is a bad one even on the ground of encouraging a native industry, because the government did not go the right way about it by putting it up to competition. I say that the contract is a bad one, because it was made in secret, and I say that a grievous wrong has been perpetrated on the country by the government in entering into such a contract. We have heard something about there being nickel in these rails. Is nickel an essential part of the rail, or will Mr. Clergue say hereafter : I am willing to abide by the price in England; but what is the price in England for rails containing two or three per cent of nickel ? That price may be $30 or $40 a ton in England, because they cannot make nickel rails in England, and thus we may have to pay an exorbitant price under this contract. Surely the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) cannot justify this. The minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) tried to make the House believe that this was not a five years contract, but from what we have heard to-day the period of five years is one of the essences of the contract. True the price may be reduced a year after, but if that idea of nickel being in the rails has any meaning, it undoubtedly may interfere with any reduction in the price. The result of the whole transaction is that this country is committed to a five years contract for rails with Mr. Clergue, and at a price which Mr. Clergue may fix and not the government. That is how it looks to me. What can the people think of this government professing to encourage the steel industry in this country ? Why, they are going back on their record as free traders. Did not we hear the Prime Minister state the other day that he was still a free trader, and did not believe in the encouragement of hot-house industries in Canada. What has he got to say to this transaction ? The two things do not go together. There is in them what is in nearly every one of their propositions, a great deal of hypocrisy. They are hypocrites in regard to taxation, in regard to expenditures for public works, in regard to the encouragement of native industries ; and it will be as political hypocrites that they will be tried by the people of this country. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) smiles ; what does he think of this transaction ? We all remember the steel rail scandal in the time of the Mackenzie government ; but, it was as nothing compared with this. Steel rail scandals run in the blood of hon. gentlemen opposite ; this one comes out in the second generation. This great steel combine in the United States may collapse ; it may not be able to overtake English, Belgian and German competition ; and steel rails may before long rule at $20 a ton. True, they may go up ; but, no minister can justify what the hon. gentleman has tried to justify to-day—the making of that contract for five years in view of a falling market. No, he made it in view of an election on the 7th of November last.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is difficult to satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite. To-day it suits their purpose to complain that the government has not gone to the United States when it desires to procure additional rails. If it were a case of cars and locomotives, such as have recently been purchased by the government for the Intercolonial Railway, and the hon. gentleman were to repeat what he has stated in this House, and what other gentlemen beside him have stated year after year, he would say that it was a crying wrong for this government to have gone to the United States and asked American manufacturers to tender. It was used as an election cry from one end of Canada to the other by hon. gentlemen opposite and their newspaper press, that we did not get our locomotives in Canada, but had got most of them in the United States. I would like to know what we can possibly do to satisfy these hon. gentlemen. We felt that every interest called upon us to encourage the building of locomotives in Canada. We took hold of the matter, knowing that gentlemen of capital were willing to revive the Kingston industry, gave them a contract, and encouraged them to put their money into the enterprise of constructing locomotives in Canada. We have done the same with regard to rails.

Mr. CLARKE. Are you supplying the money ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So far as the purchase price of the article made for us is concerned, yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Are you supplying the money for the locomotives made in Kingston in advance of delivery ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are furnishing the manufacturers of the locomotives at Kingston with payments on account as the work progresses.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly we are ; we are not ashamed of it ; we glory in it, if you want to know, because it is giving employment to 500 or 600 men in the city of Kingston.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let the heathen rage—we stand on our record ; and we put the rail question on the same footing as we put the engine question. They stand together, and they will be both defensible, in the good opinion and the judgment of this country.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the minister allow me to ask him a question in regard to that ? Why did he not do that before, instead of sending orders for twenty locomotives to the United States ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thank the hon. gentleman for asking me the question. We did it the moment an appeal was made to us to do it. We did not do it before, because we had given to the Kingston works, while they were in operation, orders for the building of every locomotive they would undertake to build ; and we did not go to the United States for an engine until they failed us. They had contracts for the manufacture of engines for the Intercolonial Railway unfinished when they closed their doors. Yet, hon. gentlemen opposite, from one end of Canada to the other, denounced the conduct of the Minister of Railways and the government because we did, when necessity compelled us, go outside of Canada and get locomotives from the neighbouring country. But, Sir, men came to us who, we were satisfied, had an interest in the country, and who desired to re-establish those works, from a public point of view as well as from a business point of view ; and they said, we will get the capital, put it in, and give employment to 500 or 600 people at least to commence with, if you will give us an order so that we can get the undertaking on its feet. As soon as they agreed to do that, we ceased to give orders for locomotives to the United States. We hope we shall be in a position, when these works are under way at Sault Ste. Marie, to do the same thing with regard to the production of rails. The establishment of a steel rail industry means a great deal for Canada. The amount of money going out of Canada for rails would be greatly augmented with the increased construction of railways in the future. A very large drain is made on the resources of Canada ; and when Mr. Clergue came to us and made such a proposition as he did in June last, knowing him to be an enterprising man, knowing the character of the work he had achieved, and the immense number of people to whom he was giving employment, we felt that he was entitled to a hearing——

Mr. MACLEAN. And a contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And we gave him a hearing on business grounds ; and I want to say to my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) that we did not contract to buy upon a falling market. We ascertained what the price of rails was then. There were some people who thought that after a lapse of time, possibly before many months, the price of rails might fall ; but, there was then no evidence of it, and there was a great body of opinion to the effect that the price of rails would continue to rise.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not the price of steel going down all the time last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, Sir, I say it was not ; and I defy the hon. gentleman to prove that it was. I can bring the names of persons who bought rails after we made this contract, and who agreed to pay a higher price than we agreed to pay.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who purchased at a higher price ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I can give the hon. gentleman the statement ; I am going to ascertain. We did not buy in a falling market. The hon. gentleman takes out his New York paper, and absolutely ignoring the very language and pith of the statement he reads, says it shows that rails can be bought in the open market at $24 per ton. But, what he did read shows that the price which the makers of rails asked is $35 per ton.

Mr. CLANCY. The combine price.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. And the hon. gentleman bought at the combine price.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not, unless all the rail producers throughout the world are selling at combine prices. I bought at a price which I was satisfied was the market price ruling in England. Is that a combine market ?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the whole world is in a combine, and you have to buy rails at all, then you have to buy them from a combine market. If what the hon. gentleman says is true, I do not see how you can avoid buying in a combine market. The hon. gentleman says that $35 is the price that was asked, and that since rails have gone down, and we can buy them at $24. We find from this statement read by the hon. gentleman that $35 was the price asked by the rail manufacturers when called upon to name the figures they wanted ; but later on, when they found that these rails were going to England, they agreed to lower the price in order to be able to supply the English market. Is the hon. gentleman not aware that that is a common practice among manufacturers and not confined to manufacturers of the United States alone ? There may be manufacturers in this country who do the same thing, and it is a practice which is very common among manufacturers in the United States.

Mr. CLANCY. Why did the hon. gentleman not avail himself of this practice and get the rails at reduced prices ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why then does the hon. gentleman denounce the Minister of Railways and Canals for doing with respect to locomotives what he has the temerity to call on him to do with respect to rails ? If he can condemn us in the one case for doing a certain thing, how can he condemn us in the other case for not doing it ? The hon. gentleman is riding a pair of horses, each of which is going in a totally different direction from the other. You could not establish the industry in Canada if you went to the manufacturers of rails in the United States and said to them : We want to get quotations from you for rails to be shipped to Canada in competition with rails that may be purchased from other sources. How quickly would they not, in that case, drop their prices from the figures they would ask if we simply went to them and asked their quotations. The hon. gentleman is denouncing us for not having done the very thing which, under their national policy, they have always contended against our doing. Prior to the adoption of the national policy, they were continually asserting that the manufacturers of the United States were being permitted to make a slaughter market of Canada, and yet to-day because we have adopted a course with respect to the manufacturers of rails, which is calculated to establish the industry in Canada, and prevent the making of this country a slaughter market, they say that we are doing wrong. The present attitude of these hon. gentlemen is entirely inconsistent with the platform on which for years they have been standing. I leave my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) to reconcile, if he can, the statement he himself read with the inference he drew from it. It will be absolutely impossible——

Mr. MACLEAN. My statement which I read shows that the Russian government are getting rails for their railway at $24 and we are paying $32, plus the bonus, or about $40 per ton. I cannot reconcile the hon. gentleman's course with the facts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If he cannot, I am not going to undertake to do it for him. We have agreed to take these rails for the current year at this price.

Mr. SPROULE. And for the succeeding four years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not agreed for more than one year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the contract signed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not fix the price at all.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but it does the number of tons you must take yearly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly, we will take for the other four years 25,000 tons yearly, but have not fixed the price. We will take the rails at the current market rate in England.

Mr. OSLER. Is there any period fixed during the year for naming the price ? The manufacturer will no doubt tender each year his supply of 25,000 tons of rails at that particular period of the year when the prices are highest. It seems to me that the government are bound to take the rails at the price ruling at that particular period of the year which is most favourable to the seller.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At whatever date we require these rails to be delivered we will expect to have them, and will have to allow the company reasonable time in which to manufacture them. The price will be that which will rule in England at that time. We will determine upon what is a reasonable and proper time, under the circumstances, to allow for the manufacture of the rails, and then can insist that the price shall be fixed. If the other party is not prepared to agree to the price at that time and make a regular contract with us, then he is not prepared to carry out his agreement.

Mr. OSLER. There is nothing in the contract to cover what the hon. minister has just stated, namely, that he can fix the price himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It must be implied that the price is to be fixed in advance and according to the market rates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am sure we are glad that one use at least has been found by hon. gentlemen opposite for the national policy, and that is to justify a contract for five years for 125,000 tons of steel rails, not submitted to parliament, and which contract, when it is mentioned in parliament by the hon. gentleman, is not stated very accurately, to put it very mildly. The hon. gentleman tells us about market prices during the past year. If his statement about market prices is not more correct than was his statement yesterday about this contract, I do not think the House would be inclined to place much reliance on it. Here is what the hon. gentleman said about this contract yesterday.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said at the same time that I would bring the contract down, and if the contract is any more explicit than was my statement, made from recollection, the contract is here and speaks for itself.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman comes down here with estimates and undertakes to give the House certain information. The House is entitled to rely on that information. If he cannot trust to his recollection, he should have the contract in his hands ; he should not make statements that are not justified by the contract when brought down. He has persisted in stating that his remarks with regard to the contract were correct——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In effect correct.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They are not in effect the same.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the hon. gentleman's view.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And I think I can persuade the hon. minister, if he is capable of persuasion, that that should be his view also. This is what he said :

> We have no permanent and explicit contract with them for the future, although in their proposal they asked us to give them a contract for a term of five years, and to give them an order for 50,000 tons with which to commence their industry.

That is pretty explicit. But the hon. gentleman was not satisfied with that. He went on :

> We finally concluded to give them an order for 25,000 tons, and while we have no explicit contract with them for any term beyond the year in which we are now entering, we have an understanding with them under which, if they furnish us, as they engage to do, with rails of the quality and standard we require, and at the current price in the English market, we are prepared to continue to take our rails from them.

No one would suppose, having regard to what the hon. gentleman stated, that there was an actual contract under which the government is bound to take 25,000 tons a year for five years from this very company. But the hon. minister will not dispute that now. He does not dispute it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If they furnish them we are bound to take them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, is that not a contract? The only difference between the contract for the present year and that for the ensuing four years is that in one case the price is fixed at $32.60 a ton, and that in the other place the price depends on a question of fact which is capable of being ascertained. The contract is, therefore, just as certain a contract, just as valid and just as binding with respect to the other four years as with respect to the first.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not as explicit.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by 'explicit.' He said he had no permanent contract with them. But he has brought down a contract covering a term of five years which is just as much a contract for the whole five years as it is for the first year, notwithstanding the difference as to fixing the price to which I have referred. That I may not be accused of speaking without the book, I will read the first paragraph:

> That Her Majesty will in each year during the years 1901 and 1905, both inclusive, purchase from the company and take delivery of 25,000 tons of 2,240 pounds to the ton of first quality steel rails, eighty pounds to the yard, of section from time to time described and approved by the said minister.

There is a distinct engagement.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the date of that contract?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The date does not appear here, but it purports to have been made under an order in council of 9th October, 1900. The other part, as to the engagement of the company to furnish the rails, is found in the last paragraph:

> That the company will execute all such contracts as may, during the period of said five years, be drawn in accordance herewith or presented by the minister for execution, and will manufacture and deliver the said rails for the said prices, and in all respects will comply with the provisions of the said contracts or any of them.

Surely, the hon. gentleman should not have come to this House and told us, as he did yesterday, that there was no contract for a term of five years, but a contract for one year with an understanding—an indefinite understanding apparently—as to the remaining four years. But I would like to know why the hon. gentleman found it necessary at that particular time to enter into a contract for a term of five years. He talks about encouraging the industries of Canada. Well, we are all very glad indeed to see that the hon. gentleman is converted to the view that the industries of Canada should be protected and encouraged, that he has become a believer in the national policy which some of his colleagues, in days gone by, have denounced in such scathing terms.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The time referred to by the hon. gentleman is the time when he himself entertained different views.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that the hon. gentleman need have very much to say about that. Perhaps he will inquire of his colleague (Hon. Mr. Fielding) who sits beside him if he holds the same view with regard to secession that he held in 1886.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The House knows all about that. It has heard about it before.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not desire to refer to that, and would not have done so had not the hon. gentleman's colleague brought it forward. But I am ready to discuss the matter with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals or the hon. Minister of Finance at any time and under any circumstances.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the Minister of Railways and Canals is not doing his colleague any credit when he introduces that subject in the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Don't mind me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not mind the hon. gentleman. I desire to spare his feelings, but his colleague would not permit me to do so. Now, what was the particular necessity for making a contract for five years with this particular company? Does not the Minister of Railways and Canals know that there are other companies in Canada that propose to develop the steel and iron business? Does he not know that there is a company in my own province which proposes to engage in the——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Never heard of it until long after this.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Indeed? Then the hon. gentleman is very much behind the times apparently. Because I think it was understood last autumn that that company was about to engage in this business. At all events, the hon. gentleman knew that they were engaging very extensively in the iron and steel business, that their works in that respect are much beyond the works of Mr. Clergue now, that at the present time they are manufacturing iron and sending it to England, and that they are in a better position, probably, to-day to advance the business of manufacturing steel rails than is Mr. Clergue. I do not wish to say a word against that gentleman. I admire his enterprise and hope his undertakings will succeed. I am not criticising Mr. Clergue but the Minister of Railways and Canals when I say that it might have been preferable for the minister not to make a contract for more than one or two years at the outside and to look to the future to develop industries of this kind not only in this section but in other sections of the country, industries that will have an equal right to consideration at the hands of the government. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said that this was something like the Yukon contract. But he was hardly just to the Yukon contract. The minister in charge of that had the grace to insert in that contract the provision that it should not come into effect until confirmed by parliament. But the Minister of Railways and Canals has no scruples of that kind. He comes to parliament with the contract ready made, telling us that parliament has nothing to say about it, binding the country for five years. And the administration of which he is a member has cancelled contracts for the supply of cloth on the ground that the late administration had no right to make a contract beyond the year for which the vote of parliament had been passed. I know of one case in my own province, and there are many other cases I believe in which that was the policy of the administration with respect to such matters. Having cancelled contracts on that ground, a member of this same administration comes to this parliament with a contract for five years, and does not even tell parliament correctly what the terms of it are. And we should never have known what the terms were, had it not been for my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) who asked that the contract should be laid on the Table before this vote was proceeded with. I do think the Minister of Railways and Canals has not shown very much providence or very much judgment in entering into this contract. He tells us that the price of steel rails was not falling during the past year. But, as a business man, he had every reason to believe that the price would probably fall this year. As a matter of fact, according to his own statement, this country is losing not less than from $150,000 to $200,000 a year on this very contract; 25,000 tons of these steel rails are to be provided during the present year, and on these rails, taking the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals himself, we will lose no less a sum than $150,000. Now, we may or may not lose to a corresponding amount in future years; possibly with regard to those, the price is fixed on a better basis, although it may be as the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has pointed out, that you cannot get a basis on the English market which will do justice to this contract, because, although it is not stated in the contract, nevertheless it is stated in the speech of the minister, that these rails are to contain nickel, and the minister has left it open in the second clause of this contract to make a provision that these rails shall contain nickel. In order that I may not be accused of misrepresenting the hon. gentleman, the second clause of the contract is as follows:—

That the minister shall, on behalf of Her Majesty, each year during the said five years, enter into a contract with the company, specifying, in greater detail than herein set forth, the time and place of the delivery of such rails, the section approved, the price and mode of payment, with other incidental particulars and provisions, at the discretion of the minister.

Now, that leaves a very wide door open for the minister to deal with this matter during the next five years. I think the contract is for that reason open to the criticism which has been made upon it by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart).

Mr. SPROULE. I want to reply to the emphatic contradiction the Minister of Railways and Canals made to my statement that the contract was made in the face of a falling market. He said: I deny that it is a fact, and I challenge him to prove it. I have the proof in my hand. I take the Monthly Summary of the Commerce and Finances of the United States for January, 1901. Remember that the recommendation was made to council regarding this transaction on the 26th of September, and on the 9th of October it was passed. Now, what was the market price then? On the 26th of September steel rails were quoted at $35 a ton.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is $2.40 more than the contract price.

Mr. SPROULE. On the 3rd of September they were quoted at $35 a ton; on the 10th of September they were quoted at $30 a ton, having fallen $5; on the 30th of September they were quoted at $30, and on the 3rd of October they were quoted at $26. Therefore, I was right in my statement that the contract was made in the face of a falling market, as the price fell from $35 on the 3rd of September down to $26 about the time he entered into the contract. Does that not look like a shady transaction of a political character? This is the official record of the markets during the whole year. Now, when the Minister of Railways and Canals gets up and emphatically contradicts a statement as he did, I would like some better authority to stand by than his own words.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With regard to the alleged readiness of the works in Cape Breton to supply these rails, I think I am correct in saying that the promoters of that enterprise have never made any proposal to the government for making rails, and I think I am also correct in stating that they have not been in a position to offer any rails up to the present time. I think they are now contemplating an enlargement of their operations with a view to making rails; but it is correct to say that up to the present time the promoters of that enterprise have not been ready to make rails, they have made no proposal to make rails, and therefore the two companies have not come into competition. I hope to learn that by the enlargement of their operations they will be able to make rails, and if they do, I have no doubt that we shall find a chance to give them an order on fair and reasonable terms.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think from what I saw in the public press that the additional bonds placed upon the market by that company in December last were, among other things, intended for the purpose of enlarging their plant so that they could make steel rails. Of course, the hon. gentleman is better informed than I am with regard to that, and I will accept his word; but that is my recollection of what I saw.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only point, perhaps, in which I am better informed than my hon. friend is in the fact that they have made no proposal to this government to supply rails.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not suppose they had.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But the hon. gentleman mentioned the two enterprises as coming into conflict. I think the Cape Breton people are now contemplating the manufacture of rails, but the hon. gentleman referred to them as if they were to be considered in any contract for rails. My recollection is that the additional bonds, to which the hon. gentleman referred, were issued only a few days ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Before the House takes recess, I want to say one word in reply to the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule). I thank him for the extreme courtesy with which he has referred to my statement on the subject. But I desire to state to this committee now that nothing, in my opinion, could be more unfair, nothing could be more unjust than the hon. gentleman's statement, and the hon. gentleman's method of giving support to that statement. The hon. gentleman knows that the whole basis of this arrangement between the government and the Sault Ste. Marie Company was the state of the open market in England. Why was the open market in England chosen? It was chosen because no sane man would make any agreement to bind himself to the momentary fluctuations of the rail market in the United States, which is up to-day and down to-morrow, at the arbitrary wink and demand of the combine which controls the output. It is unfair for the hon. gentleman to challenge the correctness of my statement when I said that we did not buy upon a falling market, or, in other words, that there was no fall below the price we had fixed, by showing that the iron proprietors in the United States had lowered the price of rails from $35 down to $26 within a certain period. Let the hon. gentleman search the records and he will find that the price goes up and down, up and down again; it is pulled up and dropped down to suit the fancy of these people, and is not the result of fair business operations. Upon the open market in England no such condition of things, he will find, obtains. I would like the hon. gentleman to pursue his inquiries further, and to see whether the quotations were as variable in the English market as they were in the United States market, according to what he has read. I made inquiries from some friends in Montreal, I will not say on the 9th of October, but on the 26th of September, and thereabouts, a few days before, when we were coming to a conclusion upon this matter. I inquired from friends in Montreal what the English prices were, and I found they were maintaining about the same standard as the price at which rails were offered to us some months previously. Therefore, I felt justified, and the government felt justified, in deciding that we would give to Mr. Clergue's company the same price that we were then paying for rails. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman to turn up the English quotations. While I did not have the English quotations before me, I did have statements from people that I believed knew, who were reliable, as to what the price of rails was. Now let me make one further remark. The hon. gentleman says we bought on a falling market. Supposing we had bought on a market that fell—and no doubt the market has fallen in a sense—can you avoid that? Can any prescience foresee a falling market so as to provide against it? No. The hon. gentleman nods his head. I say no. You have to make your bargain for some time ahead. What time do you choose? When you want to ensure the earliest possible delivery. We had to make our arrangement with them in order to ensure delivery during this present season. We could not tell; the price might go up. You have to take them when you can get them. You must take the price as it exists when you make your contract unless there is some good reason for believing that a lower price may prevail. The year before that we wanted to buy 10,000 tons of rails. We went into the market. We had to give some months' time for delivery—I cannot say how many months elapsed before these rails were delivered—previously when we made our contract. But, we made our contract at the best price we could obtain. We made it for $20 a ton and before half the time had elapsed for delivery we could have sold those rails for from $34 to $35 a ton, $14 or $15 advance on the price that we had paid. No human foresight can always provide against falls or rises in the price. Make the best arrangement you can bona fide and in the exercise of reasonable judgment and let the consequences follow. That is what we are doing to-day in this case. We made a good many thousands of dollars by buying the year before. It may be that if we had the foresight to enable us to know that there would be a fall in the price, if we had had reason to suppose that rails could be got for summer delivery at a lower price, we might have possibly saved a few dollars in the present transaction. These are the circumstances under which the arrangement was made. It was made fairly, squarely and bona fide. It was made, I have no hesitation in saying, with the desire to encourage the establishment of an enterprise which we had no expectation would be established otherwise. It was made at the price then governing and at a price which is fair to the public.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at 8 o'clock.

CANADA NATIONAL RAILWAY AND TRANSPORT COMPANY.

On the order :

For resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Cowan: 'That Bill No. 13, to incorporate the Canada National Railway and Transport Company, be now read the third time.'

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment to the motion which is in your hands, an amendment of which notice was given some time ago. The subject-matter of the amendment has been discussed at considerable length both in the Railway Committee and before the Committee of the Whole House, and I do not intend to take up the time of the House, but merely to ask for a division on the motion. I move, seconded by Mr. Maclean :

That Bill No. 13 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee for the purpose of amending it by adding the following section :—

'His Majesty shall have the right at any time to take over the undertaking, property rights and franchises of the company, and for that purpose the provisions of the Expropriation Act shall apply.

From any valuation placed upon such property so taken there shall be deducted, on payment, the amount of any bonus or subsidy paid by the government of Canada to the company towards the construction of such line of railway or any part thereof.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I would like to say a few words. This amendment has already been discussed to some extent when the Bill was in committee. With the first part of it I am heartily in accord, but with the second part I am not in accord for reasons that I have already stated in the committee. It does not seem to me that it would be an equitable thing in all cases to deduct the whole amount of the subsidy. I would suggest to the hon. mover of the amendment (Mr. Clarke) that it would be fairer to the company if the latter part of the resolution read in this way :

From any valuation placed upon such property so taken there shall be deducted, on payment, a reasonable amount in respect of any bonus or subsidy——

And so forth. Instead of deducting the whole amount of the bonus or subsidy, which might not be equitable in some cases where the value of the property was very much less than the amount it had cost, you should take a reasonable amount of such bonus or subsidy, leaving it to the tribunal which fixes the value to determine what such reasonable amount should be.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), that it appears to be quite acceptable to those who are asking for railway subsidies in the local House, because I noticed by yesterday's paper that in the subsidies to be granted this year and which are not finally disposed of by the House, such a condition as that proposed by the hon. member for West Toronto is included in every grant that is made. That is, that, in the future, in the event of the government taking over these railways, the subsidy which is given to them shall be deducted from the price, so that it appears to be not so objectionable to railway men, or corporations, as some persons seem to imagine it is.

Mr. CLARKE. If it is in order to accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), I will be very glad to do it. I am induced to do that because the suggestion is made by the hon. gentleman, and because of the further fact that I notice in to-day's papers that in bringing down a Bill governing the granting of bonuses to aid railways, the minister in charge of the Department of Public Works in Ontario has made a provision somewhat similar to this proposal.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does that apply to all railways ?

Mr. CLARKE. It applies to the railways that are affected by regulations made in the Bill introduced in the Ontario legislature a few days ago. Particulars can be seen in the papers, the Citizen of this morning and the Toronto papers that came this afternoon. I do not wish to take up time, but I will accept the amendment of the hon. member for Halifax, and ask for an expression of the House upon it.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Before the motion is put, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that the proposal in the motion goes further than I think it should. For instance, the resolution says that if the government desires to obtain control of this national railway from the Georgian Bay to Lake Ontario :

—they shall have the right to take over the undertakings, property rights and franchises of the company, and for that purpose the provisions of the Expropriation Act shall apply.

Now, this company have its terminals and warehouse at Fort William or Duluth or Milwaukee, or Chicago, and they may have warehouses in all of these places. What right would the government of Canada have to take over such properties ? What business would the government of Canada have to take over these four steamers that they propose in their minds to have on the upper lakes, and the half dozen steamers they talk about on Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence ? Would Canada undertake to run a steamboat business ?

Mr. GERMAN. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly not. We do not desire to do it, and we will not do it. They insist that if we take over the railway we would also have to take over these other properties, and it simply means that if they do not have complete control over the railway they do not want the steamboats at all. If the government acquires the railway it will be so much capital of the company liberated, and the money for the railway will be handed back to the company, less the amount of bonuses they received. That means that the actual amount of money they have expended on the railway will be paid back to them. The plain English of the contention of this company is, that if they have the steamers they must have the railway, and it is because the ownership of the railway would give their steamers an advantage over all other steamers carrying freight on the upper lakes and across this railway, and down the St. Lawrence to the sea, that they want the railway. The railway does not disappear if they retain the steamers. A railway owned by the government would be as eligible to carry the products from these steamers on the upper lakes on to the sea as would this private railway, and indeed it would be more advantageous for them, because past experience tells us that a government railway will carry products cheaper than any private railway. They would, therefore, be in a better position with these steamers on the upper and lower lakes than they would be to-day if they owned both the steamers and the railway. I contend that we should not take power—which, I suppose, means that it would be binding on us—to take over the railway and the steamers and the warehouses in the United States and in Canada. Let them go on with their steamer business, and the government of Canada will give them all the facilities they give any other carrier. Our experience on the Intercolonial Railway is, that goods are carried at about cost, and no doubt if the government owned this road the same thing would occur in this case. I am in favour of the principle of this resolution, but I would like to see that part of it which I object to eliminated. Of course, I would vote for the resolution sooner than not have the principle incorporated in the Bill at all, but, I would infinitely prefer to have that part of the resolution left out. This road is ostensibly a portion of the through traffic route of the country, just as the Welland canal is a link in the system of communication from the great North-west to the sea. It would, of course, be disastrous if the control of the Welland canal passed into the hands of a private corporation, who could charge what tolls they pleased, and who could put onerous restrictions on commerce. Our experience is, that the government never interfere in a case of that kind, and I cannot help stating that if this road is a necessity, the parliament of Canada, and the people of Canada, should be the owners of it. It looks to me, on the face of it, that this charter is a kind of speculation. There are a number of lines now connecting the Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario. There is the Northern Railway from Collingwood through Meaford to Toronto ; the Canadian Pacific Railway from Owen Sound to Toronto ; the Grand Trunk Railway, from Wiarton down through the country to Hamilton, and other points on Lake Ontario, and from Owen Sound as well. There is the Midland system from Midland to Belleville or Port Hope, or any of these ports on the lake, so that, in view of all the existing lines, this is, to my mind, a railway which should not get a government subsidy. The Minister of Railways has declared already his opinion that there should be no subsidy granted by the parliament of Canada for this road, and I am pleased to hear that, because it agrees with my own opinion. If this line is a necessity for the commerce of the country, then the government should make it a link in the canal system direct, instead of going at it in the roundabout way that this resolution proposes. However, parliament has disposed of that. Last session the House of Commons declared in favour of granting this charter, but the Senate, in its wisdom, declared that the people of the country had the most interest in it, and that the charter which was then asked for by the city of Toronto, the board of trade, and the commercial men of the country, should also receive consideration. I do not think there should be put into this Bill a provision that the government will be obliged to purchase those steamers, warehouses, elevators and terminals at places in the states or in Canada ; because the governemnt of Canada would have no use for them, but this company would have the same use for them, and a better use, with more opportunity of doing business. if they desired to do it fairly if the government owned that connecting link than they would have if it were owned by a private company. If it is owned by a private company and the steamers are owned by a private company, they will be able to control the traffic of the road to the detriment of common carriers, and I do not think you could make an enactment of this parliament that would prevent them having the advantages of that control. I think it would be disastrous to this country if that were permitted ; and as this resolution goes in the right direction, though it goes a little further than I would approve of, I will give it my support.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland). I am rather amused to hear the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) talk absolutely against the amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), and then say he intends to support it. There has been for some time, I believe, a sort of antagonism between those two hon. gentlemen in regard to the management of an institution in the province of Ontario which they work in the Conservative interest; but I never saw it exemplified so plainly——

Mr. WALLACE. If I may be allowed to set the hon. gentleman at rest in that matter, I will say that there is absolutely no truth in it.

Mr. GERMAN. No antagonism ? I am ready to accept the hon. gentleman's statement. The newspapers have always said so, however, and the indications point in that direction. The amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto is to my mind in the nature of an absurdity. The hon. member for West York has very truly outlined the situation, as to what would happen in the event of this amendment carrying—that the government would be bound to take over all the boats, all the terminals, all the plant which this company may see fit to institute in the carrying out of its scheme.

Mr. WALLACE. That is the proposal of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. GERMAN. It is the proposal of the hon. member for West Toronto. The proposal of the Minister of Railways, as I understood it, was to expropriate the railway and nothing more. The hon. member for West Toronto, in the Railway Committee, stated that his resolution was to take over everything that this company might inaugurate in carrying out its scheme. The proposition to expropriate the property less the bonus is not, I think, a proper suggestion. If this scheme is carried out to its legitimate conclusion, it means the expenditure of a very large amount of money. It means the expenditure of a large amount of money in order to get business. Suppose this company goes on for some years and loses money—loses more money in endeavouring to work up a business than the amount of the bonus would be, if it ever gets a bonus; and it is not yet asking for a bonus. Why should we endeavour to cross the bridge before we reach it ? This company has not yet asked for a bonus. When it does, it is time enough then to make propositions as to what shall be embodied in the Bill granting the bonus. But when you lay down a hard and fast proposition that any mercantile venture shall be expropriated by the government less the bonus that is given to it, I say you are laying down a proposition which is absolutely bad in principle. The gentlemen who are investing their money in the scheme may spend perhaps thousands of dollars more than the bonus amounts to, and when it has come to be a paying business, the government might say : We will take this over now, after you have spent the bonus we have given to you, and also spent money out of your own pockets. The hon. leader of the opposition has a view in the right direction, but it does not go far enough. He sees the dawning of the day, he knows what is the proper legislation, but he has not the courage of his opinion; he is a little afraid of his supporters behind him. If the leader of the opposition would do as he believes, I think he would say that this amendment should be voted down. His own suggestion points in that direction—that you cannot fairly take from the value of an article the bonus which has been given to it by the government of Canada, if it is given a bonus at all. If it is not a legitimate transaction, do not give it a bonus; but if it is entitled to a bonus, give it one, and then when you take it over, do not say : You men have made a property which is valuable to the Dominion of Canada, but we will expropriate the property and take away from you the bonus that we have given you, though you have spent perhaps thousands of dollars beyond the bonus in order to make the property valuable.

Amendment to the amendment negatived.

Amendment negatived.

Bill read the third time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the Bill now pass, and its title be as on the Order paper ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). When this Bill was discussed in Committee of the Whole, objection was raised to the use of the word 'national' in connection with a private railway. The Minister of Railways said he would like to see the word 'national' dispensed with, because that ought to be reserved for the national railway of this country, and I think the promoters ought to accept that suggestion, although I believe they intend to trade on the name 'national' in order to promote their enterprise. I beg to move in amendment :

That the title of the Bill be the Toronto and Georgian Bay Railway and Transport Company.

Amendment negatived. Bill passed.

OTTAWA AND HULL POWER AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 25) to incorporate the Hull Power and Manufacturing Company, Limited.—Mr. Champagne.

On section 15,

Mr. MACLEAN. This is a vicious principle, giving municipalities the right to make exemptions of this kind. This was fought out in the Ontario legislature the other day. I do not think that such a principle should be embodied in a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. How can this parliament give a municipality the right to exempt ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not know. If it cannot do so, why should the Minister of Marine and Fisheries agree to have it put into this Bill.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not been asked to consent. I take the Bill as it has been passed in the committee.

Mr. MACLEAN. But the minister who represents the government is responsible for the legislation going through this House. The attention of the country has been called to this matter in a very pointed way. It has been made clear within the last two or three days that the government, and especially the legal department of the government is responsible for private legislation dealing with public questions. I do not know how this parliament can authorize a municipal corporation to give exemptions——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) will permit me—the power here conferred is a power conferred upon the company to receive exemption from a municipality, if that municipality has power to grant it and chooses to do so.

Mr. MACLEAN. Why should the company have that power ? This is a vicious principle, yet it is justified by a minister of the Crown. And the gentleman asking to have this vicious principle conceded is the gentleman who lectured us in the Railway Committee the other day telling us how Canada was to be preserved, how our condition was to be improved and everything to be made heavenly. This is not good legislation, it is vicious in principle, and should not be dealt with by the Federal legislature, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is leading the House, should not consent to it.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am surprised that my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), who so often strongly advocates what he supposes to be the rights of the people, should advocate our going back to the dark ages and denying municipalities the exercise of the right to grant a privilege, should they choose to do so, to a corporation such as this. In my humble opinion the legislation is not required for the purpose of the company, but I did not think that any person in this age would deny the company the right to receive any favour that a municipality in its wisdom might decide to grant them.

Mr. PUTTEE. Would the company have the right to receive it, whether this Bill was passed or not ?

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then why put it in ? The parliament of the Dominion of Canada should not be employed in discussing things of this kind. You might as well put it in that the managing director of the company is hereby authorized to get his washing done in Hull instead of getting it done in Ottawa.

Mr. EDWARDS. Move it.

Mr. MACLEAN. Why not strike this out? We have something else to do than conferring unnecessary powers upon a private company. It is an insult to the federal idea to take up our time in dealing with little matters of municipal taxation. If they want anything of this kind, let them go to the provincial legislature and get it there.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). A similar clause to this was struck out in the Bill relating to the Canadian Lloyds the other day in the committee.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. CLANCY. It had precisely the effect of the grant that we are now discussing. This is said to be an innocent clause because the people are not forced to make this concession to the company. But the vice is in permitting them to receive such privilege. Some may say that this clause has no effect, but it puts municipalities in the position to do wrong. We cannot give the municipality the right to grant, but if we give the company the power to receive, the opportunity for abuse is offered. If it was thought proper, after mature consideration, to strike out a similar clause in the Lloyds Bill on the ground that it was not a proper thing for the company to receive lands with the power to alienate those lands for other purposes, it is proper to refuse the privilege here asked for. I hope the hon. gentleman will agree to this being struck out.

Mr. MACLEAN. An example of how powers granted by this House without sufficient consideration are apt to be used is to be seen in the case of the exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands which was before the House the other day. If more care had been exercised in that case, we should not have had the gigantic grievance that we have to-day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Oxford).

Mr. GERMAN. Why do you support a party that would do that ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Why do you support a party that will not cure the grievance ? I wish to tell the promoters of the Bill that if they care to get this through to-night, they can do so by accepting a reasonable proposition. This clause is of no use to them and it introduces a bad principle. I move that the objectionable words be struck out.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). As one who favoured striking out a similar clause in a Bill before the Railway Committee the other day, I am opposed to this clause being left in the Bill. It is an invitation to this company to go to the government of the Dominion or the government of the province of Quebec or of Ontario and ask for a grant—say a grant of public lands, or of pulp wood, which we find is so rapidly passing out of the hands of those who ought to care for it in the interest of the people. I think this is dangerous legislation. Without this clause the company may be able to accept a grant of this kind ; but we have reason to believe, according to the opinion of legal gentlemen in this House, that if they do acquire it under those circumstances they will be unable to alienate it and so it will be of little value to them. To my mind, a great many charters are secured merely in order to get something to sell to others and to speculate in. This kind of speculative legislation should be cried down in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The time for private Bills having expired, the House will resume in Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The attention of the committee is called to the estimates of the Indian Department, page 66.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it would be advisable to have some more orderly system of taking up the estimates. There is a point in relation to the subject we were discussing at six o'clock to which I would like to have referred, and I would like to have known at six o'clock that we were to take up some other branch of the estimates. But generally I think that the suggestion made early in the session and accepted by the government should be carried out, that is to take the estimates as far as possible in some definite order so that hon. gentlemen on this side should know what business is coming up on a particular day. If the government's course is occasioned by the indisposition of the Minister of Railways, of course I have not a word of criticism to offer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is desirable, when possible, to take the estimates in order. But it is not always possible to do that. I agree, however, that hon. gentlemen opposite are entitled to a reasonable notice. I may say that immediately after six o'clock, the Minister of Railways and Canals having informed me that, not feeling very well, he was afraid he would not be here this evening, I crossed the floor and spoke to one or two hon. gentlemen opposite, stating that in case of the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals, we would take up the estimates of the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Agriculture, if time permitted. I think the hon. leader of the opposition had left his seat, but the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was in his seat, and I mentioned the matter to him, assuming I was taking the best means afforded of communicating the matter to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. WALLACE. I was here, and I heard nothing of it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I heard it.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. The same statement was made on the adjournment of yesterday's sitting.

Department of Indian Affairs—Relief, medical attendance and medicine, Ontario, $1,100.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the physician for the band of Indians on the Rama reservation, in the riding of North Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Macdonald has been the physician in charge.

Mr. BENNETT. Out of the moneys of the band, have other physicians been paid for services performed by them, and at the same time has the physician in charge been paid his salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Except in one instance, the only money that has been paid out for attendance has been paid to Dr. Macdonald during his term.

Mr. BENNETT. Is Dr. Macdonald to be kept there ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been some complaint and dissatisfaction amongst the Indians regarding Dr. Macdonald. An investigation was held by an officer of the department sent there for the purpose. I have examined the report which has been made, but I have not had time yet to come to any definite conclusion with regard to it.

Blankets and clothing, Ontario and Quebec, $500.

Mr. MACLEAN. Where are these blankets bought ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are all bought by public tender. The quantities required are advertised for.

Mr. MACLEAN. Are they of Canadian make, the same as the steel rails must now be ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We advertise to buy them in open market by public tender. I do not think there is any specification where they are to be made.

Mr. MACLEAN. But, the government have started out in the policy of encouraging home industry. We are to have nothing but Canadian-made steel rails. We have a lot of woollen mills in Canada that can make blankets.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The blankets that have been purchased are Canadian blankets.

Mr. HENDERSON. What price was paid per pound for them ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. 34½ cents.

Salaries of chiefs, Cape Croker and Gibson, and agent at St. Regis, $150.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the minister if any investigation has taken place into the complaint made by Chief Marcil of the Micmac tribe, situated at Ste. Anne de Restigouche, in the province of Quebec, a notice of which complaint was laid by the chief before the members of this House at the first assembling of parliament.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I intend to send an inspector down to make a thorough investigation into the complaint. My attention has been called to it by correspondence, and I found that a complaint had been made, and had been dealt with by officers of the department. I decided to give the matter my attention, and I will make an investigation of the facts of the case.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister tell us why he did not bring down the correspondence ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The correspondence was laid on the Table some time ago.

Mr. SPROULE. I made inquiry once or twice, and I was informed that it was not down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was brought down a considerable time ago.

Removal, Lake of Two Mountains Indians from Oka to Gibson, $200.

Mr. SPROULE. How long will this $200 appear in the estimates for the removal of these Indians. I have seen it here almost every year since I first came into parliament, and it appears to be something like the case of Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce, the lawsuit which was likely to last for ever.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This item is one of the institutions of parliament. It is explained in this way : There was an agreement some years ago to provide for the removal of some of the Indians from the Oka reserve to the township of Gibson in the province of Ontario. The government undertook to pay the expenses of any of these Indians who desired to remove. We have taken a small vote each year in case that any of the Indians remaining should demand that we should fulfil our agreement. I do not think any money has been paid out since I took charge of the department.

Mr. WALLACE. How many are down at their old home, and how many are up in the township of Gibson ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are 123 at Gibson, and 447 at Oka.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the hon. gentleman tell us at the rate of progress they are making in the removal of these Indians, how long it will take to place the whole of them at Gibson?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If they keep on going at the rate at which they have been going for the last four years it will take a great while.

Survey of Indian reserves, $500.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that survey for the purpose of selling the timber ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Sometimes it is for that purpose, but our surveys in the North-west Territories have been necessary in selling the land that has been surrendered.

Mr. WALLACE. This is in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, my hon. friend is right. Last year we spent $47.45 for the purpose of defining the boundaries on account of settlers taking up land in the neighbourhood of reserves. It may be necessary to survey timber limits.

To provide for the Indian Land Management Fund, $14,000.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps this is just as good a stage as any in which to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to a matter of very great importance to the Indians on Walpole Island. The hon. gentleman will have it in his mind yet, because it is not very long since he dismissed the physician who was attending the Indians and who was paid out of the fund belonging to the Indians. Since that time there has been an enormous death rate among the Indians, and it is ascribed entirely to the indisposition on their part to employ, or to have anything to do with the new appointee. Now, I have nothing to say against the gentleman whom he appointed at all, but the hon. minister himself knows the Indian character sufficiently well to know that they are suspicious and that they have very strange notions in regard to their attending physician. I believe some communication has been had with the department. I believe there is a Methodist minister, who has a charge on the island, who has communicated with the hon. gentleman's department, setting forth the facts of the large death rate that has existed there and ascribing it to the cause I have just stated. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has taken notice of the correspondence, and if he has taken any steps to remedy what is an admitted evil. It would be scarcely an answer to say that the Indians have a physician and that they may employ him. The fact remains in spite of that that the Indians would die rather than employ a man whom they, in a sense, mistrusted, so far as they consider that he would rather endanger their lives than relieve them of their burdens. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has had such a communication from the minister there. I think his name is Rev. Mr. Pickard; however, it is not important. The hon. gentleman will know his name, and I would like to know if he has taken any steps to meet the wishes of these Indians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not had any such communication brought to my attention, and I am informed that he is not able to say from recollection that any such letter has been received in the department. His impression is that it has not been received, but it will be impossible for him to say positively that it has not. All I can say is that it has not been brought to my attention. In view of the hon. gentleman's remarks, I will undertake to have it looked into and endeavour to meet the necessities of the case.

Mr. CLANCY. The acting Minister of the Interior last session stated in the House, upon a similar question being asked, that such correspondence was in his possession, that he knew of it, and therefore I am able to state in advance to the hon. gentleman that there is such correspondence in his department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was not aware of it, and I will have it looked up at once.

To provide for the erection of a lock-up at St. Régis, $500.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the result of the settlement of the disagreeable trouble that took place over the St. Regis lock-up, and what became of those Indians that were arrested ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The difficulty at the St. Regis reserve to which the hon. gentleman refers is of long standing. The officers of the department, when I first had it called to my attention, informed me that there had been a difficulty for some years owing to the fact that the American Indians whose reserve adjoins the Canadian reserve were constantly fomenting disaffection amongst our Indians and endeavouring to persuade them that they should not submit to our Indian administration. These Indians made a practice of coming every little while to Ottawa by deputations and demanding changes in the administration which the department did not see its way clear to grant. They had some peculiar idea about the sanctity of their reserve and they had refused to allow provincial constables to go on their reserve to execute writs. Matters were getting into such a state that I made up my mind it was absolutely necessary to make them understand, as gently as possible of course, that the law had to be observed. The matter was brought to a head by a determination that we would appoint a constable to see that the law was enforced, and to make a long story short, we sent down the Dominion chief of police to prevent the constable being obstructed. The Dominion chief of police with some assistants went upon the reserve for the purpose of arresting one of the ringleaders in the riot and two or three of the Indians forced their way into the Indian office, assaulted the chief of police, threatened his life and he finally shot one of the Indians in self-defence. A number of the Indians were brought before the court and after a great deal of negotiation on both sides we finally came to an arrangement whereby the case went by default, and the Indians were let go upon agreement that they would appear for trial when called upon. This is the most difficult case connected with the management of the Indians I have had anything to do with, and it is necessary to use firmness with a good deal of consideration in order to bring about a peaceful result. It is necessary that we should follow up what we have done by having on the reserve a place of such a character that in case of disturbance we can take care of offenders. It is for that purpose we have asked for this vote.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the superintendent general of Indian Affairs abandoned the effort on his part to see that the Indians observe the law in the event of trouble. As I understand, the case against the Indians went by default and they were released. It appears to me that the Indians will feel that they are masters of the situation, and if so I do not see what great benefit you will derive from a lock-up when you cannot enforce the law.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Every step was taken after consultation with those who were best acquainted with the facts of the case. The Solicitor General gave the prosecution his best attention and we allowed the prosecution to go because we were satisfied that the Indians having been taught a sufficient lesson would be amenable to reason and that any further prosecution would result in exasperating them. Those in the neighbourhood strongly pressed me not to take any steps at all because they thought it would exasperate the Indians. Every one who is acquainted with the facts is satisfied we did what was best. I am not going to say that there will be no further trouble. Any one who knows anything about Indian character knows that it is impossible to predict that. But I am satisfied we have done the best that could be done, and that with judicious management we will be able to get along without further trouble.

Mr. SPROULE. You are going to build up a lock-up as a kind of object lesson to terrorize them.

Indians, N.S.—Salaries, $1,150.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What services are rendered for these salaries ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For the small salary paid, the agent is supposed to have a general oversight over the condition of the Indians, to report from time to time to the department whether any relief is necessary, and to supervise the distribution of seed grain. Of course the salaries are very small, and we endeavour to keep the expenses down as much as possible.

Indians, N.S.—Seed grain, $2,000.

Mr. WILSON. Is this paid out of the Indian fund or how is it paid ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is not paid out of the Indian fund; it is paid out of consolidated revenue.

Mr. GOURLEY. Can you tell me the amount paid to the agent in Colchester ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The agent is Mr. T. B. Smith, and he gets $50 a year.

Mr. GOURLEY. Well you ought to give him more.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an Indian reserve at Ship Harbour Lake in the county of Halifax. I have information from a responsible person in my constituency that a certain lumberman, whose name I will not mention, has been cutting timber on that land.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. On the Indian land ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes. I think it would be advisable for the hon. gentleman to cause inquiries to be made with regard to it. I may say that the gentleman who gave me the information states that he was endeavouring to purchase this particular lot some years ago, and the department after leaving the matter in doubt for some time eventually told him they were not in a position to sell. Since then the land has been very much damaged by other persons cutting logs on it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The complaint we generally have from Nova Scotia is that the Indians are cutting timber on other people's land. However, we will have this complaint attended to at once.

Mr. GOURLEY. They have a common law right to do that.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to inform my hon. friend that there are two Indian reserves in the county which I have the honour to represent, occupied by Indians. Has my hon. friend established a rule that all medical attendants or physicians shall be employed in the district in which the reserves are, or does he go outside of the district to employ others ? If it is an established rule that physicians in the district shall be employed, then the rule on principle has been broken in the case of reserves in Lunenburg, because physicians living miles outside of the district have been employed, and in consequence of which the bills are very greatly increased. If the government desire economy, we have lots of first-class physicians in the district, and I think they should be employed instead of those who reside at a distance. I would ask the hon. minister to give the matter his attention.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the case to which my hon. friend refers, we have two doctors who attend the Indians, at a salary of $75 a year each ; Dr. Marsh, who resides at Bridgewater and Dr. Kelly, at Chester. I doubt if any economy would result from employing others and paying them fees. We have a constant struggle to keep down the cost of medical attendance in the maritime provinces, because the Indians themselves desire a doctor very often when there is nothing the matter with them, and if we gave them the least encouragement, the medical bill would run up to a high figure. Therefore, we endeavour to employ men whose judgment can be relied on not to attend the Indians except in cases of necessity.

Mr. KAULBACH. The medical calls are so infrequent that I think it would be economical to employ physicians only when they were required. I do not think the cost would reach $75 a year by a very great deal ; and I would urge that physicians residing in the district be employed instead of parties residing outside.

Indians, N.B.—Salaries, $1,184.

Mr. FOWLER. Why has a reduction of $100 been made ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One of the missionaries who was on the list last year died, and we do not take a vote for him this year.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you intend to appoint another missionary in his place ? To what religious denomination did he belong ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Roman Catholic—Rev. William O'Leary, of York county.

Indians, N.B.—Relief and seed grain, $2,300.

Mr. FOWLER. On what reserves is this seed grain given ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Generally.

Mr. FOWLER. In my own county no Indians are given seed grain.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The rule is that it is generally given as a matter of relief. Wherever it is reported by the agent that there is a necessity for it, the smallest amount they can get along with is sent.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the whole amount spent last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount spent last year was $1,872.17, the year before $2,005.86, and the year before that $2,213.10.

Indians, N.B.—Medical attendance and medicines, $1,749.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the medical attendant for King's county, or is there more than one ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The medical attendance for King's county is now paid by salary. The amount paid last year aggregated $360.48, made up as follows : L. R. Murray, $90.30 ; F. P. Patterson, $74.65 ; J. N. Smith, $171.28 ; W. H. White, $24.25.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that for the year 1900 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For the year ending 30th June, 1900.

Mr. FOWLER. Are these gentlemen still employed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. D. H. McAllister now attends to these Indians.

Mr. GOURLEY. I intended to ask the same question with regard to Nova Scotia. Will the hon. gentleman tell me who are the medical attendants in the county of Colchester ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The expenditure for medical attendance for the year ending 30th June, 1900, for the county of Colchester, was : M. S. Dickenson, $33 ; W. D. Finn, $7 ; W. H. Hills, $37.75 ; total, $77.75. Dr. Yorston, of Truro, is now the medical attendant.

New Brunswick—Miscellaneous and unforeseen, $300.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is it that the amount for relief and medical attendance and medicine are so different in the two provinces. In Nova Scotia there is $2,000 for relief and $3,000 for medical attendance. In New Brunswick, relief $2,300, and medical attendance $1,740.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give any explanation except the endeavour to keep expenses down.

Manitoba and North-west Territories, General vote, $804,073.70.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman able to give the population of the Indians on the reserve in Manitoba, where there are 47 agencies ? Could he give approximately the population and the cost of maintaining each head of the population for all the purposes mentioned in these items.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not possibly answer that question off-hand. That would require me to separate the Indians of Manitoba from those of the North-west Territories, and in the votes the two are combined. Of course, we could go through the estimates of the Indian Commissioner and separate the items of Manitoba from those of the North-west Territories, but that would take some time.

Mr. CLANCY. Could not the hon. gentleman furnish that information on the supplementaries ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly, I shall do that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman explain the number of increases ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The first increase is in the item of annuities. That is caused by the fact that in 1899 we made a treaty, Treaty No. 8, by which we have secured the surrender of a large portion of territory north of Edmonton, and have added to the list of Indians to whom must be paid annuities. The increase in agricultural implements could not be avoided on account of the fact that the Indians are not in so good a position to pay for these implements as they were last year, owing to failure of the crops. We are trying to advance the Indians into a condition of self-support, and considerable progress has been made. Where the Indians show a disposition to provide for themselves, we endeavour to assist them as much as possible by getting them to engage in agricultural pursuits. While we ask for an amount in bulk, it must not be supposed that the commissioner does not give each item in detail.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By the annuity, I presume you mean a certain amount paid yearly to each member of the band.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount is paid to the Indians under treaty. In the North-west and Ontario, the Indian title to the land was recognized by the Crown, and before the Crown assumes to deal with the land the Indian title has to be extinguished. That is done by sending commissioners to negotiate a treaty. In the west it has been customary to give the Indians a certain cash amount per head by way of gratuity as an inducement to surrender, and an annuity of $5 per head.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many Indians are engaged in tilling the land in the North-west ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be difficult for me to give accurate information on that point, because in the different reserves there are a few here and there engaged in agriculture. But I can understand the hon. gentleman's desire for definite information on the subject, and I will undertake to furnish that information at the earliest possible time.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is that money paid for the lifetime of the children ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Only during the lifetime.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase in the amount for agricultural implements, seed grain and live stock. That would appear to indicate that a larger number were availing themselves year by year of the opportunity to engage in the pursuit of agriculture. What success has attended the efforts of the government of late in that line ? And what quantity of grain and other supplies have the Indians raised for themselves ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Generally, the results of the work during the last three years have been very encouraging. The Indians are rapidly becoming more self-supporting. They have been particularly successful in stock-raising. Where the country is adapted to that pursuit, the Indians manifest a desire to take it up, and, where we have been able to secure an Indian agent who understands the Indian nature, there has been a marked improvement. The amount of grain and other crops raised my hon. friend will find fully set forth in the report of the Department of Indian Affairs. Generally speaking that statement shows that the value of farm products, including hay raised last year on the Indian reserves in the North-west Territories —that does not include Manitoba—was $162,-639.07. Upon one of the reserves which I had the pleasure of visiting last summer we have an agent who has been extremely successful. The Indians there raised over 10,000 bushels of first-class wheat. They have become extremely prosperous. The agent has been so successful that I have placed him in charge of three reserves, in the hope that he will bring about a similar state of affairs in the other two. The House may rely upon it that great progress has been made. In the organized portion of the country there is no Indian population that may be considered dangerous so far as the peace of the country is concerned. The Indians are becoming rapidly a peaceful population and self-sustaining. The expenditure we are making is very large, but it is made in pursuance of a policy favoured by parliament for many years based upon a belief that it is better—aside from the justice of the question—to bring the Indians into a state of civilization or comparative civilization, so that they may not be a menace to the country, than to take any chances of their becoming a disturbing factor in the community. Generally the results have been satisfactory. The Indians of Manitoba are differently situated. They are generally what we call wood Indians as distinguished from plain Indians, and they follow occupations of a more varied kind. They work in the lumber woods and engage in other occupations, and, from the beginning have been a rather better class of Indians to deal with. They are in a fairly satisfactory state and are making good progress.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman able to prevent them killing their cattle when they get hungry ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is very rare for a thing of that kind to happen without the permission of the agent.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Is any money spent for the education of the Indian children ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will find at page 67 of the estimates an amount of $288,182 for the education of the Indian children in Manitoba and the North-west Territories alone. I think he will agree that that is a fairly large sum. I may say that one of the difficulties I have is to keep it from growing too large.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I suppose that all the Indian settlements have schools where the Indian children are taught ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think I may say without danger of departing from strict accuracy that there are schools in all the Indian settlements that may be called accessible.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Are they taught the English language ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Always.

Mr. GOURLEY. There may have been some misunderstanding as to the hon. gentleman's answer given a moment ago as to the annuity given to the Treaty Indians. Does the annuity cease with the death of the Indian, or is it paid to his heirs ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, it is, strictly speaking, an annuity, and dies with the person to whom it is payable. When the agent or commissioner goes to make the payments, if a certain person does not appear and satisfactory evidence is produced of his death, his name is struck off the list.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister may not have the information at hand at the moment, but if he has, will he please state the amount paid by way of salaries for the outside service in the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salaries amount to about $40,000. The amount paid for salaries in the commissioner's office in Winnipeg is $11,340. Then, we have two surveyors who are paid, one $1,800, and the other, $1,400. Then, Inspector McColl is paid $2,400, and Inspector Leveque, $1,800. Peigan agency : agent, $1,000 ; clerk and issuer, $600 ; interpreter and assistant issuer, $300 ; stockman, $480 ; scout and mail carrier, $120.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that, in round numbers, $40,000 covers all the salaries ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, I was in error. I think they will amount to about $80,000.

Mr. CLANCY. What are the salaries of the teachers, outside of that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no way in which, with the information at my disposal, I could give this evening the actual amount we paid for salaries out of the educational vote. Let me understand what it is that the hon. gentleman wants. The hon. gentleman will see that the educational vote amounts to $290,171. I understand that what the hon. gentleman wants is to know how much of that $290,171 is paid for salaries of teachers.

Mr. CLANCY. What I want from the hon. gentleman is the amount of the total salaries paid in the North-west and Manitoba for the outside service, of course, respectively for other purposes and for the salaries of teachers.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have given the hon. gentleman all the salaries paid to other officers of the department. Now, what I understand the hon. gentleman wants is the salaries of the teachers.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes ; that, of course, includes all the salaries of the outside service.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR I have given the hon. gentleman the salaries of the outside service. I cannot give him the salaries of the teachers now without taking time to go over them.

Mr. McGOWAN. Will the hon. minister tell us how it is that there is such a difference in the salaries paid to different officers ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think if the hon. gentleman will follow it he will find that the lowest salary of an agent is $900, and that these salaries run as high as $1,400. Some agents have much more important positions than others. The Blackfoot agency is perhaps the most difficult agency we have. A man goes into the service at $900 or $1,000, and if he is satisfactory he gets a small increase. The gentleman who gets the highest salary has been a long time in the service, and has been an efficient officer. He gets a salary of $1,400. A man coming into the service is assigned to a small and comparatively unimportant agency, and he may get a salary of $900. The same thing is true in regard to the farmers. The salary paid to a farmer is about $480. There are only one or two variations from that, and they are owing to local circumstances. Take the case of an interpreter ; we generally pay an interpreter $300.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Before leaving this item, I would ask the hon. Minister of the Interior if he is in a position to give any further explanation in reference to the disposal of the printing plant that was purchased by the old government in 1893, and established in the industrial school at Elkhorn. When the teaching of the trades was stopped in the spring of 1898, this plant was handed over by the government to some one else. The hon. minister will remember that two years ago I asked him what disposition had been made of that plant, and he told me that it had not been sold, but that negotiations were in progress with Mr. Garrison, of Virden. Last session, during his absence, I put a similar question on the paper, and the acting Minister of the Interior replied that it had not been disposed of either by lease or sale. Knowing that Mr. Garrison had sold the plant himself, I could not realize that that statement was accurate, and I made out such a prima facie case that the acting Minister of the Interior promised to have a full investigation and to give an explanation to the House. Can the hon. minister say if such an investigation has been held or what explanation can be given as to the disposal of that plant ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember what was said in the House last year. That was not called to my attention, but, I remember, on account of seeing something in one of the newspapers about it, that I made inquiry and ascertained that the late Indian Commissioner, now the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, Mr. Forget, had sold the plant to Mr. Garrison, I think it was, of Virden, and that the department had made a demand on him for payment, but the amount had never been paid. I do not know whether any steps have been taken in connection with it or not. That was the position of the matter when I inquired.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). How much was the plant sold for to Mr. Garrison ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Something between $200 and $300.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The plant cost about $800, did it not ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, I do not think so.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Garrison has disposed of the plant to Mr. Wildman for $350.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give the hon. gentleman a statement to-morrow about that.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the hon. gentleman tell us how many of these schools he is keeping up and the number of scholars that are annually taught in the schools ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The total number of children upon the roll at the various day, boarding and industrial schools in Manitoba is 1,811, and in the North-west Territories 2,159. The average attendance in Manitoba, as against a total on the roll of 1,811, is 1,132, and the average attendance in the North-west Territories, as against 2,159 on the roll, is 1,706. Outside of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, outside of the treaty limits, there are altogether 302 children upon the roll, and there is an average attendance in these schools of 180.

Mr. SPROULE. Upon what principle does the hon. minister have the money distributed towards the support of these schools ? There are three classes of schools —day, boarding and industrial schools. How does he distribute the money ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the case of boarding schools there is a fixed amount per capita for each pupil which the school shows to have in attendance. The same thing is true in regard to the industrial schools, only we pay a larger amount for an industrial school than for a boarding school. In the case of a day school the plan is not invariably followed, but in most cases we pay the salaries of the teachers and maintain the schools ourselves. In some cases we simply contribute the salaries of the teachers and the churches take care of the schools. In Manitoba and the North-west Territories Indian education is almost entirely carried on through the different churches. The Roman Catholic Church, the Episcopalian Church, the Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Church, are the four churches which take the largest part in the work and the educational institutions are, almost in every case, affiliated with some one of these different churches.

Mr. SPROULE. As time goes on and as settlement takes place, and they are taking more and more, year by year, to agriculture, is there any decrease in the expense of keeping up these schools ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am bound to say that I cannot observe any decrease. I find continually a disposition to increase these expenses, because there is a continual demand made upon us for more schools and educational operations are extended. I am constantly in the position of having to resist demands for more schools.

Mr. SPROULE. We were told some years ago that after a time these schools would be practically self-supporting. Can the minister tell us how much per capita these schools cost ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the case of boarding schools we pay a uniform rate of $72 per head. The church authorities say they want to establish a boarding school on a reserve, and we say: very good we will allow you $72 each for so many pupils, and they have to show that that number at least attend the school. In many cases a considerably larger number attend, but they only get a grant for the number agreed upon. For the industrial schools we pay as follows : Rupert's Land school, near Winnipeg, $125 per head, for 120 pupils. St. Boniface school $110 per head for 100 pupils. Brandon school $120 per head for 100 pupils. Qu'Appelle school $125 a head for 225 pupils. Regina school $130 for 125 pupils; Battleford school $150 per head for 120 pupils; Red Deer school $140 per head for 80 pupils. Calgary school $130 per head for fifty pupils; St. Joseph's school $140 per head for 120 pupils.

Mr. SPROULE. What success has attended the education of the Indians in these schools ? Are they making progress ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is a matter in connection with which there is a very great difference of opinion. I have given a good deal of personal attention to the question and my own conclusion, reached about a year ago after consulting with men of experience, is: That the money we spend for boarding schools is the most effective, and that we are getting better results from it than the money we spend for industrial schools. It is the general conclusion of all familiar with Indian education that the ordinary day school is very ineffective, and that wherever a boarding school can be substituted for a day school it is desirable to do so. It is a little more expensive but the work is far more effective. The reason is that when the Indian child comes from the wigwam to school the influences centered upon the child at school are generally effaced by the home associations of the child. The boarding school is I think the best. It is not any more effective in regard to each pupil than is the industrial school, but the latter is much more expensive and in my judgment we get better value for our money than in the case of the former. When I took charge I found that the principals of the industrial schools kept the pupils for a length of time which seemed to me to be unreasonable, and I had to issue an order which resulted in a considerable number of pupils being discharged; they having been kept there as long as the state could be expected to keep them. The principals of the schools feared what would happen to the pupils if they left the schools, and of course that was some reflection upon the operation of the system. If a pupil spent five or six years in an industrial school at a cost to the state of $2,000 or $3,000, it was a poor commentary on the system if the pupil had to be kept in school after that for protection. One of the difficulties we have to face is to determine what shall be done with the pupils after they leave the industrial schools. They have then become so far removed from the ordinary Indian that they ought to be in a position to get along as well as an ordinary white man. But experience shows that in very few cases is the Indian boy or girl capable of taking care of himself or herself in contact with the white race. My own view is that the same amount of money spent on a boy or girl in a boarding school would result in training a very much larger number, and would have a better general effect in elevating the whole Indian race. I dealt with this matter at some length in the House a few years ago, and there was considerable discussion on the subject. I said then that while I was inclined to form that opinion I was not sufficiently clear on the subject to condemn an institution which had been founded before I took office, and I had not arrived at the conclusion that they were not doing sufficiently satisfactory work to warrant a radical change in the whole organization. With one exception there has been no industrial institution founded within the last four years. That exception is in British Columbia, where a church society offered to put up the building and incur all the preliminary expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. That corroborates the information I have had, namely, that the industrial schools are comparatively a failure, and that the money spent in that direction is almost thrown away, because unless the Indians are kept under control after they leave the school they relapse into a condition little better than before they went to school. If these schools are not giving moderately good results the question arises as to what we should do. We have had them long enough on trial to enable us to determine whether they are a success or a failure, and it is important that the Indian Department should consider as to whether it would not be better to change the system.

Mr. CLANCY. Have the supplies for the Indian Department been bought by tender?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, altogether.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the minister lay on the Table the tenders for some very large supplies of groceries and clothing which are mentioned in the Auditor General's Report?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When I said 'altogether'; all the supplies that can be scheduled before the beginning of the year are printed in a list. We advertised for tenders extensively, and we award to the lowest tenderer in each case. The only goods not purchased in that way are small articles for which there arises a demand during the year. Where it is possible to be done, the great bulk of the supplies are purchased by tender. Did the hon. gentleman call my attention to a particular case?

Mr. CLANCY. Groceries bought in the city of Ottawa. The hon. gentleman will find them in the Auditor General's Report all the way from J—18 to the conclusion of surveys for the North-west Territories and Manitoba.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The supplies to which my hon. friend refers on page 54 are small supplies for which a demand arises in the year, and for which we cannot advertise for tenders in the beginning of the year. Take, for instance, blankets, flour, and agricultural implements. These are purchased in accordance with an estimate sent to us by the Indian commissioner, and for these we ask for tenders. But articles required during the year, for which no definite estimate has been sent by the commissioner are purchased in the places where they are required.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman lay the tenders on the Table?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, certainly.

Indians—Manitoba and North-west Territories —Grist and saw-mills, $1,113.

Mr. CLANCY. On page J—54 the hon. gentleman will find this item: Amount of deficits to March 31, 1900, $7,942.92. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain what that means.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That was the shortage in the management of the Elkhorn industrial school, which was paid by the department. The school had been established on the basis of $110 per pupil per annum being granted, but it was found to be absolutely incapable of being managed on that basis, and the department paid the deficit, and has had to take the school over, and it is now managed as a government school.

Indians—Manitoba and North-west Territories —General expenses, $142,320.

Mr. CLANCY. As the minister has promised to give my hon. friend from Marquette some explanation in regard to the sale or lease of that printing press, and in view of the acting minister last session having stated that no lease or other disposition had been made of the press, I think it would be well to reserve this item or some other for the purpose of getting the information which the hon. gentleman promised us.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give it on the supplementary estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. How many grist-mills is the department keeping up?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Six altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. Have any of them been disposed of during recent years? I understood that it was the intention of the department as early as possible to dispose of these to private individuals, as they were somewhat expensive and did not yield a very great return.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think it would be advisable to follow that policy. Where we can get the Indians to take an interest in them, I think it is desirable to retain them.

Mr. SPROULE. What special interest can the Indians take in them? If the mill is there to do their grinding is it not as valuable to the Indians in the hands of a private individual as it is in the hands of the department?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A private individual would run the mill for the purpose of making money, and would not be under the control of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. I imagine that the department could make such regulations as would ensure the use of these mills to the Indians on a certain basis that would give them all the advantages of the mills and yet enable the department to save something in the running of them.

Indians—British Columbia—Industrial and boarding schools, $68,750.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the same rule apply in British Columbia with regard to those articles which can be purchased by tender, as in Manitoba and the North-west Territories?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are very few supplies required for British Columbia, and they are purchased locally. My hon. friend will see that the conditions are not at all the same as in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, where we buy in very large quantities.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. How are the medicines purchased—by local tender or contract?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Indian superintendent has a schedule of prices, and whatever is bought is paid for according to the schedule.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The superintendent has instructions only to go to certain men.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is quite right.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. How about the medical officers? Looking through the Auditor General's Report, I see different names for amounts paid for attendance on Indians. I suppose the hon. gentleman has changed his medical adviser in a good many cases?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are no salaried medical officers there. They are paid so much a visit.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Was anything paid to Dr. Sanson for the Williams Lake Indians or the Kamloops Indians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount paid last year to Dr. L. Sanson was $224.50.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. What other doctor in the Yale district was paid?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Just one other doctor, Mr. Wilson Herald, $473.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like the hon. minister, when he gives the information already asked for, to give the names of the Indian agents who have been dismissed, and in whose places other appointments have been made, as well as the number of physicians attending the Indians, who have been dismissed and in whose places others were appointed, since the hon. gentleman came into office.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. What is the increase of $9,700 in industrial and boarding schools for ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is made up by a provision for a boarding school at Squamish, fifty pupils at $60 per head ; also, one at Albernie, at $60 per head, twenty-five pupils, and one at Lytton, an industrial school, $130 per head, forty pupils. This last grant is one I have been strongly pressed to give for a couple of years. The New England Company, a very ancient society organized to do missionary and educational work among the Indians, whose headquarters are in London, England, agree to put up all the buildings and pay preliminary expenses, if we will give a per capita grant.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Can the hon. gentleman recollect whether any application was made by Bishop Christie or any of his priests with regard to the increase for the Clayquot industrial school, on the west coast of Vancouver island.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be difficult to say that no application had been made for an increase, because, generally speaking, there is one in every case, but my attention has not been called to it, and I do not think that one was made.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Bishop Christie's school at Clayquot really needs assistance, and I strongly urge upon the hon. gentleman to do something for him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are getting the same grant as the other schools in British Columbia, $60 per head for fifty pupils. The increase in travelling expenses of $600 is for the travelling expenses of the agent of the north-west coast. The agent there, Mr. Todd, had a small steamer, but it has got so old that it is not safe to use it any longer, and it has been disposed of. We are asking $600 to cover all travelling expenses.

Office and miscellaneous, including hospitals, irrigation, dyking and suppression of the liquor traffic, $10,920.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Can the hon. gentleman give us any information with regard to the Songhees Indian reserve ? I see by the papers brought down in the local House that our local premier had an interview with the hon. gentleman, and declared what the province wished in regard to that reserve. This matter has been under negotiation for many years, and surely it can be brought to a termination soon. It is one of great importance to the city of Victoria.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend is familiar with the negotiations we had a few years ago with the provincial government. I made a reasonably favourable offer at that time to the provincial government. But, provincial politics became somewhat disturbed shortly after, and it was difficult to bring questions of that kind to the attention of the provincial government. The offer I made was substantially declined by the British Columbia government, on grounds I explained to the hon. gentleman about that time, or shortly afterwards.

A little while ago, when the Hon. Mr. Dunsmuir and Attorney General Eberts were here, I discussed the question with them at some length. I quite realize the importance to the city of Victoria of having the Indians removed from the present reserve. I discussed the matter with Attorney General Eberts, and I think we arrived at a conclusion that was mutually satisfactory. The government of British Columbia has now made a proposal ; and I have submitted it to Mr. Vowell, the superintendent at Victoria, in order that he may consider it, and in order that I may be sure that I do not misunderstand the facts. I have a general recollection of the conformation of the reserve, but some of the references were such that I was not sure as to the portion of the reserve they referred to. At the same time, by letter, I intimated to Premier Dunsmuir in a general way that I was prepared to meet his views. I have no doubt that as soon as I get the report from Mr. Vowell, we can close the matter up and place the Indians on a reserve at a distance from the city.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I am very glad to hear it.

Department of Indian Affairs—General, $4,200.

Mr. CLANCY. Who is inspector of timber referred to in this article ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Chitty. He has been in the department for many years. There is also the inspector of agencies and reserves, Mr. Macrae, whom I found there when I came into office.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not had an opportunity of speaking to the premier, but I think the Minister of Railways expects to go on with his estimates. My hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) tells me he expects to go on in the afternoon with the franchise or election Bills. They will probably be the first order of business, and the estimates of the Minister of Railways next.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 11, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

BEACONS ON THE RIVER RICHELIEU.

Mr. BRUNEAU asked :

Which of the departments is invested with the control, maintenance, &c., of the beacons on the River Richelieu, between Sorel and Chambly?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). I would ask my hon. friend to let that rest until we get some further information as to which department has control of these beacons.

CARETAKERS OF PUBLIC OFFICES.

Mr. BRUNEAU asked :

What are the respective salaries of the caretakers of the public offices at Three Rivers, Montmagny, Sorel, St. Hyacinthe, St. Johns (P.Q.), St. Jerome, Quebec and Montreal?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher), in the absence of the Minister of Public Works :

Salary per year of caretakers of public buildings :

Three Rivers customs house....	$300
Three Rivers post office.... ..	400
Montmagny, no salary, receives rent of offices.
Sorel.....	$400
St. Hyacinthe	400
St. Johns.....	350
St. Jerome.....	350
Quebec post office.....	700
Montreal, Dominion buildings.	No caretaker.

ICE GUARDS, STE. ANNE DE SOREL.

Mr. BRUNEAU asked :

1. How many new ice guards have been constructed since 1896 in the parish of Ste. Anne de Sorel?

2. What has been the total cost thereof?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). In the absence of the Minister of Public Works :

1. Five.

2. $5,543.57.

MR. A. PACAUD'S LEASE OF BUILDING.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

1. Has Mr. Aurèle Pacaud, the publisher of Le Progrès, of Windsor, Ont., a lease of the government building which he occupies as a printing office? If so, what rent does he pay per annum?

2. Is he in arrears for rent? If so, how much ? What steps are the government taking to collect the arrears, if any?

3. When was the lease executed? Is Mr. L. N. Castanier, customs officer at Windsor, one of the lessees?

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). In the absence of the Minister of Public Works :

1. An arrangement was made with Mr. Pacaud by which he was to pay $10 a month, for two years, and make necessary repairs to the old Weights and Measures building at Windsor, and after the two years to pay $12 a month.

2. Orders have been issued to collect the amount of rent now due, which is $210.

3. As the lease was under pleasure, and for a small amount, it was not thought necessary to enter into a formal lease. The department is not aware that Mr. Castanier is one of the lessees.

COAL-BEARING LANDS.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART asked :

1. Referring to the statute 60 and 61 Victoria, chapter 5, section 1, subsection 1, has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or any other company referred to in said subsection, conveyed or caused to be conveyed to the Crown in the interest of Canada, any and what coal-bearing lands in said subsection referred to?

2. If so, has the Governor in Council prescribed any and what conditions with respect to the holding, disposal or dealing with such lands by the government?

3. Has the government or the Governor in Council disposed of, or otherwise dealt with the said coal lands, or any portion thereof, in any and what manner ?

4. Has the government or Governor in Council disposed of the said lands, or any portion thereof, to any persons or corporations? If so, to what persons or corporations, and upon what terms have such lands been so disposed of, and what portion of such lands have been so disposed of?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). To 1, 2, 3 and 4, the answer is, no. But, I may say for the further information of my hon. friend, that the railway company has been for some time ready and willing to transfer the lands so soon as they might be selected. The selection is a matter of considerable difficulty, and involves a great deal of work. Ever since the snow went off the ground last year, and until the work became impossible again last fall, I had a party of topographical surveyors, and also an expert geologist, with the necessary assistants, going over the country for the purpose of putting the department in a position to make the selection. The plan of the territory has now been prepared, and I have all the information that is necessary for a practical selection. As soon as the snow is off the ground, it is the purpose of the government to send a properly equipped party, including men with the necessary expert knowledge, to determine upon the selection.

POSTMASTER AT GOODLANDS, MAN.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette)—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has Mr. Goodlands, formerly postmaster at Goodlands, Man., been dismissed from that position?

2. If so, why? Were charges made against him, what were their nature, and by whom made?

3. Was an investigation held?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND :

1. Yes.

2. On the ground of political partisanship, representations having been made by the member for the constituency. The Postmaster General accepted such representations and ordered his dismissal.

3. No investigation was held.

RECIPIENTS OF FISHING BOUNTY, QUEEN'S COUNTY, P.E.I.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. What is the name of the officer who received the claims for fishing bounty and who distributed the cheques to fishermen in Queen's county, P.E.I., for the year 1900?

2. How many claims were filed, and how many cheques issued for said year?

3. What are the names and post office addresses of fishermen who claimed bounty and were paid same, with the amount paid each?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) :

1. W. C. Hobkirk, fishery overseer, Queen's county.

2. and 3. I must ask my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) to move for a return. I could not fill up 'Hansard' with the hundreds of names of fishermen with their post office addresses who received bounties. If I did it for Queen's county, I might be called upon to do it for the other counties in the maritime provinces, and that would take up a whole 'Hansard' of itself. If my hon. friend desires special information, I will be happy to show him the list in the department, and he can examine it ; or, if he prefers to do so, he can move for a return.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But there will be no opportunity to move for a return.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There will be no objection. It can be put on the Notice paper, and we will take unopposed motions some day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But notices of motions will not be reached.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would just point out to my hon. friends that there are thousands of names and post office addresses of fishermen who have received bounties, and a separate 'Hansard' would be needed if I should give the names of all in the maritime provinces. There are some hundred in this county alone.

LOSS OF THE JENNIE MAY.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ordered an investigation into the causes of the loss of the schooner Jennie May, at Ebbsfleet, P.E.I., as promised in his letter of the 25th May, 1900, to Capt. Thomas Reid, as follows :— 'I regret very much to hear of the loss you have sustained in going into the harbour of Ebbsfleet, as you allege, from want of buoys. I shall have immediate inquiries and a thorough investigation made into the alleged absence of these buoys. If the officials of the government are to blame, I will have them severely punished'?

2. If such investigation has been held, what is the report of the officer?

3. Has any person been paid for the loss thus sustained?

4. If so, what is his name, and the sum paid in connection with such loss?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) :

1. The minister did not promise an investigation into the loss of the Jennie May in his letter of the 25th May, 1900. He promised to investigate the alleged absence of the buoys ; a different thing entirely. It is alleged that the loss of the vessel was due to other causes.

2. The promised investigation was made. The report of the officers state that the buoy contractor was notified to place the buoys on the 5th of May, but owing to the impossibility of getting chain at Ebbsfleet for the can-buoy, the buoys were not put out till the 16th of May. This date was the earliest one on which the buoys were placed for many years. The officers also reported that the loss was due to causes which the buoys could not have prevented.

3. No.

4. Nothing has been paid.

IMPROVEMENT OF SOUTHAMPTON HARBOUR.

Mr. HALLIDAY asked :

Is it the intention of the government to make the immediate improvements in the Southampton harbour that the Minister of Public Works found necessary on his recent visit to that place, and what are the improvements the government propose to make?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). The matter is now receiving consideration.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Summary report of the Geological Survey for the year 1900.—Hon. Mr. Sifton.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say a word to give notice respecting estimates. We propose to resume the consideration of the estimates of the Minister of Railways and Canals tomorrow afternoon. To-day we proceed with the Election Bill, but if there is time for estimates during to-day's sitting the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture will be taken up.

THE TRANSPORTATION QUESTION.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (St. Lawrence, Montreal). I would ask the Prime Minister if he would fix a day next week —Wednesday would be convenient—for the further discussion of the transportation question. I have a motion on this subject on the paper, but I am afraid it will not now be reached in the ordinary course, and there will be no possibility of reaching it except by the consent of the leader of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I shall be happy, Mr. Speaker, to proceed with the discussion on Wednesday next.

BAR AT THE MOUTH OF THE THAMES.

Mr. GEORGE STEPHENS (Kent, Ont.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the government to a matter of immediate and pressing importance. When I reached Chatham last Friday I found that the bar at the mouth of the River Thames had so accumulated that the boats from the city of Chatham could not get out into the lake. I wired to the Minister of Public Works, this being a copy of my message :

Chatham, April 6, 1901.

J. Israel Tarte, Ottawa.

Steam barge "Ireland" stuck on bar since April 3rd. Cannot get off. Only seven feet water. Best time to do work now. Other boats waiting; cannot get out. Chatham dredging plant ready to begin work; price, $8 per working hour. Answer quick.

(Sgd.) GEORGE STEPHENS.

I waited until yesterday afternoon for a reply to this message, but did not get any. I then saw the Prime Minister and asked him to speak to the Minister of Public Works. Last night at eight o'clock I got this reply :

Office of the Minister of Public Works of Canada,
Ottawa, 9th April, 1901.

George Stephens, Esq., M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Stephens,—Your telegram dated at Chatham, April 6th, has come to hand in due course. We have nothing to do with accidents to ships. It is the reason why I did not authorize the work suggested in your despatch.

Truly yours,
(Sgd.) J. ISRAEL TARTE.

Mr. SPEAKER. Do I understand that the hon. member (Mr. Stephens) will conclude with a motion ?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes. Yesterday afternoon, I received this message :

Chatham, Ont., April 10, 1901.

George Stephens, M.P., Ottawa.

Major Gray expected here to-night. Have you orders for him to see about bar at river?

(Sgd.) CHAS. HADLEY.

I have not been able to see the hon. Minister of Public Works in his office. I met him in the lobby yesterday morning as he came out of the committee room, but he would not give me a hearing. He would not give me any information whatever. I met him in the afternoon and tried to show him this telegram, but I could not get him to stop and look at it or pay any attention. To-day I have another telegram :

Ottawa.

Can you not get reply to ours yesterday to George Stephens, M.P., signed 'Hadley.' ?

(Sgd.) Chatham, Ont.

I have not sent any reply to these telegrams, for the simple reason that I have not been able to get any information, and do not know what to say. Traffic by the river is at a standstill. Our lumber merchants in Chatham, who bring their lumber by boat from Georgian Bay points are unable to bring in material, except by rail, which is much more expensive. Buildings now under construction in Chatham cannot be proceeded with because building stone cannot be brought in. There are several boats now waiting ready to start, but they cannot get out. I do not see any reason why this work should not be done at once. I confess I am surprised at the manner at which the subject has been treated by the hon. Minister of Public Works. I know that he is a very busy man, but, if he has not time to attend to the business committed to his charge, one would think that at least he could treat members of the House with courtesy. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPROULE. You had better resign and bring on another election, and then you will hurry the matter up.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I can quite understand the importance which the hon. gentleman attaches to the work of clearing the bar being done at once, and am not at all astonished that he should feel rather warm over the delay in doing that work. There is a capital dredging plant on the ground, and it seems very extraordinary that that dredge should not have been put at the work. The price asked is $8 per hour for each working day, which is the ordinary price for dredges of similar capacity. I hope that the Minister of Public Works will not delay any longer, because this is a matter of great concern to the people of that locality and the shipping interests.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is quite true that my hon. friend from Kent brought the matter to my attention, but he must remember that at this period of the session, when the House sits to a late hour and the committees are called at an early hour, such matters do not always move as promptly as would be satisfactory, but I have no doubt that my hon. colleague, who is not in his place just now, will do what he can to meet the views of my hon. friend.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). The delays mentioned by the hon. member for Kent are quite inexcusable. We are told that there is a surplus of $8,000,000 in the treasury. Surely a few hundred dollars could be devoted to enabling the prosperous city of Chatham to carry on its essential business of getting lumber, stone and all the other supplies, which must necessarily come by the water route. It appears to me that the town of Chatham has a substantial grievance in this matter. We are voting large sums yearly to the Department of Public Works exactly for such improvements as are required in this case—improvements that are urgent. And, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Kent, there is a dredge right on the ground ready to do the work at the government price of $8 per hour, so that in the shortest possible time the sand bar could be removed and the navigation made clear. It seems extraordinary that a member of parliament should be obliged to rise in his seat and call attention to a matter of this kind, which should have been remedied the very first moment the attention of the Minister of Public Works was called to it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stephens) did not see fit to notify me that he was going to bring this matter before the House, but as he is a new member, this course probably did not suggest itself to him, and we will not be the worse friends on that account. A barge or a boat has grounded at Chatham, and it does not come within the province of the Department of Public Works to float boats that are grounded. The duty of removing such obstacles belongs to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Besides, I have no money available for dredging purposes, and I cannot carry on work without money, more particularly in a case like this in which it is not my duty to interfere. I would be very glad indeed if it were my duty, but there are boats grounded nearly every week in the St. Lawrence, in navigable waters, and I am never called on to send down dredges or other boats to haul them off.

My hon. friend would perhaps not have called the attention of the House to this were he aware of the fact that my youngest daughter is down with typhoid fever, and that the very first moment his telegram came, I had to leave for Montreal. I returned as soon as I could, and then answered the telegram.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. gentleman does not pretend to say that he would not be justified in sending a dredge at once to clear the harbour and trust to the House to vote the money.

Mr. STEPHENS. Has the hon. gentleman not got a vote for this in the estimates of this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend knows that until the money is voted I cannot use it, and at this moment I have not a dollar voted.

Mr. STEPHENS. I asked the hon. minister if he had the money in the supplementary estimates and he said he had, and I supposed that he would be prepared to go on and spend it. The company which owns the dredge would not be very exacting about getting paid at once, and would be quite willing to wait. And as regards the ungrounding of the boat, my telegram merely mentioned the fact that the boat had grounded, so as to emphasize the necessity of going on with the dredging at once in order to enable other boats to go over the bar. I did not ask him to take the sunken boat off the bar, but simply mentioned the fact in order to impress him with the importance of immediately setting the dredge to work to clear the bar so that boats could pass with facility. If this work be not done, navigation will be stopped and steamers will not be able to ply to and fro and may be tied up all summer. If that is what is going to happen, then Canada must be a very much poorer country than I thought it was.

FRANCHISE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 63) to amend the Franchise Act, 1898—The Solicitor General (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick)—read the second time, and considered in committee.

On section 1,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Solicitor General might explain to the committee the effect of this amendment.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Paragraph c of section 5 of the Franchise Act now reads :

> The voters' lists shall be those prepared for the several polling divisions so established, and which on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election were in force or were last in force under the laws of that province for the purposes of provincial elections.

The intention is to omit the word ' sixtieth,' so as to have it read that :

> The voters' lists shall be those prepared for the several polling divisions so established and which on the day of the date of the writ for such Dominion elections were in force or were last in force under the laws of that province for the purposes of provincial elections.

This eliminates the sixtieth day altogether. The clause as it now reads provides that the voters' lists shall be those in force sixty days previous to nomination.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is another amendment effected. Instead of the date of nomination you take the date of the election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, the date of the issue of the writ.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General if this refers to some particular district, when the words 'polling divisions so established' are used, or, does that mean all the divisions throughout the Dominion.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All the divisions throughout the Dominion.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General if there is any doubt under the clauses as prepared that the lists in force on the date of the writ will be the lists that will govern the election, because, if the Solicitor General will notice, the clause says further: 'Or were last in force.'

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think that these new words make any material difference.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General whether this amendment will cure a state of affairs that occurred in British Columbia at the last election. According to the local Act, the list is revised twice a year—I think on the 1st of May and the 1st of November. If these are not the exact dates it is not material, but, it is a fact, nevertheless, that the revision took place a few days before the election, and as sixty days had not intervened between the revision and the election the electors had to use a list that was nearly seven months old. Owing to that there was a large number of men who lost their franchise. Will this do away with that state of affairs?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This amendment is intended to meet absolutely such a case as that pointed out by the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Prior). The object is to have the latest list for the election.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. Solicitor General if it is a fact that the voters' lists used in the last general election were some of them the provincial lists of last year and some of them lists of the year before? I am informed that in many constituencies the voters' lists were not at all of the one year, but that some of them were the lists of last year, and some the lists of the year before.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I presume there were some places in Ontario where the revision would not take place at a fixed period of the year and the list would not come into force within sixty days, and that, notwithstanding that it would be the list for that year, it would not be used for the election. Now, it is intended to so arrange matters that the list to be used will be the list in force at the date of the issue of the writ for the election, without any reference to any previous time of revision.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps it is rather late to discuss the question, for the discussion of which I rise at the present moment. I see in this clause, you have virtually adopted the provincial voters' lists, which may be in force from time to time, or, in other words, you give to the province the right of fixing the qualification of the voter or to decide who shall be the voter in Dominion elections. I may be entirely wrong, but I contend that we have no power to do that, that it is a power that is vested entirely in the Dominion parliament, and that we cannot, as we propose to do in this Bill, divest ourselves of that power and give it to the local authorities. I am objecting to it on the constitutional ground. The hon. Minister of Justice must have considered that point. It must have been brought before his department, and I would like from the Solicitor General an authoritative statement on behalf of the department whether the power is vested in the Dominion parliament to divest ourselves of the authority which is given us under clause 41 of the British North America Act and to give that power to the provincial legislature.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the constitutional principle that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has laid down, is absolutely correct, that we have no power to delegate to the local parliaments the right to fix our franchise. But, this is not what we are doing. We are adopting the franchise of the provincial parliaments. We are not delegating to them the right to fix the franchise, but we are adopting the franchise that they have fixed. There is a broad distinction between the two, and I would like the hon. gentleman not to overlook the fact that previous to the adoption of the Franchise Act of 1886, this was the system which prevailed. It was only in 1886 that we assumed the right to make the franchise. This system is no new departure. It is adopting the old system, which was in existence from confederation down to 1886.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am glad to hear that we agree upon the legal point. Now, the question is one of fact. The hon. Solicitor General says that we have adopted the voters' lists which were in force in the provinces at a particular time. If that were so, I admit that we would be perfectly within our jurisdiction, but does he not see the distinction that it is not the voters' lists which are in force, but the voters' lists which may be altered from time to time by the provincial authorities that we are adopting.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Is it the intention to adopt the marked ballot as well as the provincial voters' lists, because if you propose to adopt the marked ballot I for one will fight it here all day.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The provincial franchise was adopted when we introduced this Bill two years ago, and it was adopted after a very lengthy discussion. Then the question raised by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) as to our right to adopt the provincial franchise, was disposed of. With respect to the ballot, that question will come up on the Bill to amend the Elections Act.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I understand the ballot will be secret ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). All right.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As far as my judgment goes, that is the principle upon which we have gone for the last two years.

Mr. INGRAM. In the electoral district of Nipissing when the government changed the date of last election the voters' lists for Nipissing were prepared the same as they would be prepared for any ordinary township, and as other electoral districts in Canada used lists that were not prepared in 1900 but prepared previously, how does it come that the government by order in council changed the date of the election in Nipissing ? The hon. gentleman from Nipissing (Mr. McCool) is elected on a list prepared less than sixty days previous to the election, and that being so, surely his election must be illegal. I wish to know from the Solicitor General why an order in council was passed changing the date of the election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would not like to sit in judgment upon what has been decided by the Ontario courts in respect to the Nipissing election, and no opinion I would express would have any effect as against that judgment. It involves a question of fact as to which we cannot agree. So far as my knowledge goes there are unorganized territories in the Nipissing district within which the electoral lists must be made at a time fixed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and these are made at certain periods previous to the election. It was in consequence of the electoral lists in these particular districts not having been ready that the returning officer reported to the government that he did not have lists which would enable him to carry on the election.

Mr. INGRAM. That only applies to cases where they have a registration list and not ordinary lists. The Nipissing list was prepared in 1898, and that being so, surely it does not come under the Franchise Act of the Dominion which says that lists prepared under the Registration Act must not be older than twelve months. If it does not come under the Registration Act it applies in the ordinary way as in a municipality in which there is no registration list at all. So far as the Solicitor General sitting in judgment on the decision of the courts goes, I submit that it is our duty as representatives of the people, when we discover a defect in the election law, that we should set it right so that this kind of thing would not occur in the future. It does seem to me as a layman and from the consideration I have given the Election Act, that an unfair and undue advantage has been taken of the electors of the Nipissing district for the purpose of party gain and for no other object.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that the Solicitor General apprehends what the judgment in the Nipissing case was or he would not have answered my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) as he did. The only thing decided in that case was, that on account of the returning officer hiding himself on nomination day, no nomination could be effective. The judges did not discuss the question as to whether or not there was a legal postponement, because that did not come before them. Therefore, the question put by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) is entirely relevant. I think it would puzzle the Solicitor General to show any authority in the Governor in Council or any one else to postpone that election under the circumstances. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) may have an opportunity before the session is over of giving us some information on that point, if he can. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he intends to cover by the words 'or were last in force.' The objection raised by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is well worth considering. The lists are either in force or not in force on the day of the writ. It may be that some reason for these words has escaped my attention, but for the present I cannot see that the words 'or were last in force' will do anything except possibly create a doubt in the mind of some officer as to what lists he should use.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will bear in mind that these words are merely a repetition of the section of the statute as we now have it. There is absolutely no change. There must have been some reason for the words, because the matter was fully discussed in the House, and I have no doubt it was explained to the satisfaction of my hon. friend.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There were several things in this Franchise Act that were not explained to my satisfaction. A great many inaccuracies occurred in the statute as passed which none of us seem to have noticed, or which if they were noticed were not corrected. This may be one of them. I hardly think it is a sufficient answer for the Solicitor General to say that there must have been some reason in 1898 which none of us can now recall. The question is : Whether we have any reason now. I am not raising this point out of any factious desire to have it changed, but I suggest to the Solicitor General that these words may confuse the officer. Do not these words give him an alternative, and will he not stop to consider whether he has to use the lists which are in force on a particular date or the lists which having regard to that particular date were last previously in force ? I venture to think that these words will create a doubt and can serve no useful purpose.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am quite certain they do serve a useful purpose. I am prepared at present merely to explain the changes in the law and I cannot give the reason for this now. There is no reason why we should dispose of the Bill to-day, and I will explain the matter when we get into committee again.

Mr. MONK. The language of the section is ' were last in force under the laws of that province for the purposes of a provincial election.' It is possible that some officer might think he had a choice between the lists in force at the date of the Dominion writ, or the lists that were in force at some immediately previous provincial election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am quite sure I shall be able to make it quite clear to my hon. friend that there is really no ambiguity about it, and that it is not intended to leave it to the returning officer to decide which list he shall use in an election—because that would be utterly incongruous.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I would like to call the attention of the Solicitor General to one practical result which might result from this law. At the present time the lists in use are those in force sixty days prior to the isue of the writ ; and in the province of Ontario it is quite possible that a county judge, before whom an appeal has been taken, might have given his decision only a day or two before the issue of the writ, in which case it would be impossible in all probability to get copies of the voters' list until within a few days of the election. The hon. gentleman will understand that it takes some time after the county court judge gives his decision, to get the voters' list printed in Ottawa. I have always supposed that was one reason why the sixty days were allowed under the present law, and that provision has been an advantage in that respect. In the last election I had some difficulty in getting my lists from some municipalities ; and if an election happened to come on in October or November in any year, there would certainly be a great deal of difficulty in many constituencies in the province of Ontario if the lists used were as provided by this clause, no time being allowed for printing. If the hon. gentleman objects to sixty days, perhaps a compromise might be struck by saying thirty days.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The sixty days were put in the Bill when introduced so as to prevent the local government tampering with the lists previous to the election ; but, that provision was found to work so disadvantageously in many parts of the country that lists over a year old had to be used. The desire of everybody, it seems to me, is that we should have the freshest lists available for use in an election. My hon. friend says that it is possible that an appeal may not be disposed of by the county judge until shortly before the date of the election. My hon. friend will bear in mind that the list to be used is the list in force at the date of the issue of the writ.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am speaking from my own experience when I say that it takes a certain time to get the list printed. I only wish to have sufficient time allowed for that purpose. Perhaps a fortnight would be enough. In the months of October and November these courts are being held in the province of Ontario, and it is perfectly certain that there would be a number of constituencies in which the judgment would be given only a day or two before the writ was issued. The result would be that one side or the other, certainly one side, would have to go into the campaign without any voters' list, and I am sure the hon. gentleman would not wish to subject even an opponent to such a hardship as that.

Mr. INGRAM. I think it would be a disadvantage to us all if you abolish the sixty days. For the reasons stated by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), many of the lists will not be printed, and candidates will be put to the inconvenience of using a list which has probably been revised just two or three days before the issue of the writ, whereas the lists made up sixty days before the issue of the writ could be printed at the Printing Bureau and sent to the different candidates in time for the election. At present candidates have a great deal of difficulty with the registration lists which are prepared within a day or two of the election.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I would like to ask the Solicitor General if it would not be possible, while he is amending the election law, to have the election held at some stated time, so that we might know when it is coming on, and if it would not be possible to have it in November, or at some time when the farmers are not very busy. Then, everybody would know six months before when the election takes place. That would be a step in the right direction, and there is no reason why it should not be done in Canada as it is in other countries. I see no reason why we should not be as advanced in Canada as they are in other countries.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have on the Order paper a Bill to amend the Election Act, and when that comes up there will be an opportunity to discuss that question.

Mr. PRINGLE. Does this clause in any way conflict with the Ontario statute as to the registration of voters in towns and cities ? Because, as I understand this clause, the list to be used is the list in force on the day the writ is issued, while the list under the Registration Act does not come into force until some days after the issue of the writ.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the Bill to amend the Election Act, which will come up after this Bill is disposed of, I am dealing with that particular point.

Mr. BENNETT. I quite agree with the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) that this is a very important question. In the province of Ontario, after the local lists are printed, courts are held by the county court judges. Then, the revised lists are returned and posted up in the office of the clerk of the peace. Assuming that a list has been corrected and is to be found in the office of the clerk of the peace on the 1st of November, then, according to the wording of this Act, that would be the list in force ; and were an election to take place on the 15th of November——

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That could not be, because there must be thirty days at least.

Mr. BENNETT. Assuming, then, that it would be held on the 30th of November, what would be the result ? The government candidate might see that list on file in the office of the clerk of the peace was at once sent to Ottawa ; and the government, by reason of their influence in the Printing Bureau, might see that that list was at once sent back to the riding, particularly if it were strongly in favour of the government candidate. But, another list from another riding, which was not in favour of the government candidate, might be sent to Ottawa, and might be delayed in the printing. Then, what list would be used ? I think under some clause of the Act, the list on which the election is to take place is the list furnished from Ottawa, not the list posted in the office of the clerk of the peace. The result of this change will be that the government, in the event of the date fixed for an election and the printing of the lists being close at hand, can have those lists used which they wish and suppress or delay those they do not wish to use.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is purely a question of the balance of convenience, and there are certainly conveniences resulting from either system. It seems to me that we ought to make some sacrifice in order to get a fresh list, especially as the getting of it does not bring about the result pointed out by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). The returning officer is obliged to apply to the clerk of the peace of Ontario, who is the custodian of the list, and he may possibly get a list that never reached Ottawa at all, if it is the list in force at the time of the election.

Mr. BENNETT. There is just this disadvantage, that the clerk of the peace may not furnish the deputy returning officer a printed list at all, because the list was not prepared in time to be sent to Ottawa and printed. You will simply have a list with the names written in, which will open the door for fraud for every kind on the part of the deputy returning officer. He might, if he felt so inclined, lay that list conveniently where somebody might tear a whole page out, and those whose names were on that page could not possibly vote. Then, when the clerk of the peace gives out the list to be copied, those copying it might add names and omit names, and that is why we contended, when the present law was before the House, that the lists placed in the hands of the deputy returning officers, should be the printed lists issued from Ottawa.

Mr. INGRAM. If we leave the law as it is, we will be in a better position because we will know, sixty days before the election, the exact lists which will be used, and there will not be the same opportunity to partisan returning officers and Crown attorneys to tamper with the lists.

Mr. BENNETT. When the written list is made up in the office of the clerk of the peace, it is made up from a printed list compiled by the judge, and which the judge leaves in the office of the clerk of the peace. That list will have names written in and others scored out, and might easily be tampered with.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. These points were discussed very fully when the Bill was first introduced, and all these inconveniences were pointed out, but I do not think my hon. friends can find a case of the kind they have pointed out, which occurred during the last election.

Mr. BENNETT. Because you acceded to our request to have the lists printed at Ottawa.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We are not making a change in law in that respect. The lists will continue to be printed at Ottawa except such as come into force immediately before the election, and in such case you would have to apply to the legal custodian for a copy. I fail to see the probability of the frauds pointed out by my hon. friends being committed.

Mr. INGRAM. Should an election take place, for instance, on the 7th of November, you will find, a day or two previous to the issue of the writ, several municipalities in which the lists have just been completed and others again in which they are not completed, and every candidate will have the disagreeable task of providing himself with the lists in these municipalities in which they were prepared a day or two before the writ issued. Why not retain the sixty days, which will give ample time to have the lists printed at Ottawa, and avoid that necessity.

Mr. SPROULE. The same thing may happen whether you have the sixty days or not. In my election last year, in one of the municipalities the list of last year was used while in all the others we had to use the lists of the previous year. But although in one municipality the list had been revised before the sixty days, a certified copy had not been sent by the judge to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and consequently we had no list until a short time before the election, and I had to fall back on the old provincial lists until I got the new one a few days before the election. Whether the delay be sixty days or less, you may have the same trouble.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Every lawyer will bear me out in saying that if an election should come on in October or November in Ontario, the very difficulty pointed out must arise in the majority of municipalities. And it would be an utter impossibility to obtain the list from Ottawa. Whatever drawbacks there may have been in the former Act, at least it relieved us of this difficulty. It is absolutely certain that in a majority of constituencies in Ontario, we should be driven to take the list from the office of the clerk of the peace, and whether or not he might be trusted, as suggested by my hon. friend, those who wish to face the matter honestly know that it is almost as bad to have a large proportion of the people suspecting fraud as to have fraud actually occur. I trust the Solicitor General will see his way clear to amend the Act in such a way that even suspicion of fraud will be removed.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am sure the Solicitor General will see the importance of making some change as indicated by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup). Take, for instance, the village of Hastings in my county, or rather the county which I have the honour to represent——

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE. Perhaps I have shown the same weakness that ministers show when they talk about 'my department.' I always fancied that 'their' departments did not belong to them, but that they were the servants of the people. In the riding I have the honour to represent, it was found that the list was printed in Ottawa, except for the village of Hastings. There was no revision for that village, the election taking place on a voters' list that was in the hands of the clerk of the municipality. There had been no application for a revision, and therefore the list was in the hands of the clerk unrevised for sixty days. Thus, the village of Hastings voted on a list that was a year older than the rest of the riding.

Mr. WALLACE. A year younger.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, a year younger. Now, the question is: Where are we going to get the list? Supposing that an election comes on in thirty days, the list that was in the hands of the clerk when the writs were issued would be the list on which the election would take place. How can you get that list printed in Ottawa? The Solicitor General will see that the Printing Bureau cannot print the lists for the whole Dominion in thirty days. I am not talking from a party point of view, for this does not affect one party more than the other. No matter what side the candidate is on, it would be impossible to get the list printed in Ottawa. This only shows the absurdity of having the local legislature provide the lists for election of members of the House of Commons. We should prepare our own lists. I believe the Solicitor General intended to prepare an honest list and have an honest election law; but, with the facts brought to his attention, he must see that last year's Franchise Act and election law will not remedy the difficulties which I feel satisfied he intended to remedy. Frauds have been perpetrated, and I am confident that unless some provision—I do not pretend to be able to suggest anything, but I am sure the Solicitor General will see the need of some change—unless some provision is made, it will be impossible to prevent frauds in the future.

Mr. CLANCY. We had an experience in the last election that should be a lesson to us as to adopting the proposed change. I address myself particularly to members on both sides from the province of Ontario, and I venture to state that not 10 per cent of new lists for 1900 were used in the last election. In Bothwell, there was but a single case in which the list for 1900 was used, and that arose out of the assessment having been changed some years ago from February to July. The election was held late in the year—the 7th November. But any hon. gentleman will see the utter impossibility of having lists prepared and printed if the work is to be done in the Printing Bureau. It was a physical impossibility in the past, and must continue to be so for the future. There might be many reasons why the change the hon. gentleman proposes should take place, but I do not see how it will overcome the difficulty I have just pointed out, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned. This is not a party question, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen on both sides if their experience in Ontario has not been that less than 10 per cent of the lists of 1900 were used in the election, though that election took place on the 7th November.

Mr. MONK. The same difficulty would meet us in Quebec. For instance, if the election writ was dated between the 20th April and the 1st June, the parties interested would have the greatest difficulty in obtaining the lists, because the registrar of the county cannot possibly furnish these lists without taking on an additional staff of employees. It would be equally difficult to get the lists from the secretary-treasurers of the municipalities. The registrar for the registration division of Montreal East, who was the custodian of the list of the county of Jacques Cartier, found it impossible to conform with the provisions of section 10. If the Solicitor General will look at section 10 of the Act of 1898, he will see that it provides that within ten days the custodian of the lists must transmit to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a copy of the lists. In the case I speak of, the custodian of the lists found it impossible to do that. Even by taking on a large additional staff of employees, which cost very dear, he required twenty or twenty-five days before he could have the lists copied and forwarded to Ottawa. The provision which it is proposed to substitute would leave it impossible for the parties interested to procure the lists in their divisions, except at very great expense.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I appreciate the fact that this is a matter that we have to consider from the standpoint of the convenience of members of the House. We need give no consideration whatever, so far as I can see, to party politics in this matter. The difficulties, as I understand the matter, are these : Our present system leads to this result, that is if you take the list in force sixty days before the election, you are liable to have election lists more than a year old. That is the inconvenience that has resulted from the law in its present form.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) will not pretend that the change he proposed will overcome that difficulty.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The change will, to a very large extent, obviate that difficulty. But it will bring about this other difficulty—that, instead of having lists printed in the Printing Bureau at Ottawa we should be obliged to depend on the copies of lists we get from the custodians of the lists, the local officials. That is the question for us to consider, which of the two inconveniences are we most willing to submit to. So far as I am concerned, I have an absolutely open mind on the subject. As I said before, there is a portion of this section that I will refer to later on and explain. But I would like to hear all that can be said both for and against the amendment ; I do not intend to dispose of that section to-day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman amends this section he will have to amend some other sections of the Act as well, it seems to me. If he looks at section 10 of the Franchise Act, 1898, he will see it is there provided that within ten days after the final revision of the list of voters for the purposes of a provincial election :

> It shall be the duty of the custodian thereof to transmit to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery by registered mail a copy of such list, certified under his hand.

Then subsection 2 provides :

> That for the purpose of a Dominion election such certified copy shall be deemed to be the original and legal list of voters.

I think it will be apparent to my hon. friend that that provision can scarcely be carried out with the amendment he now suggests. It could probably be carried out in most cases under the section as it now stands, because there is a period of sixty days within which this could be accomplished. Suppose the lists were finally revised a week before the election, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery does not get this until after the date prescribed by this amendment, and the result would be that you have no original and legal list of voters within the meaning of subsection 2. I do think that my hon. friend will have to amend this Act very much further than he proposes at present to do, for this purpose. I may say in passing that the hon. member for Lanark has suggested to me a possible reason why the words were used to which we made reference a moment ago, and that is the possible case that in some province there may not be, by reason of local legislation, any list in force upon which an election could then be held. If that is the intention, then I think my hon. friend had better amend the language of this subsection. I should think the sense would be more clearly expressed something in this way : The voters' lists shall be those prepared for the several polling divisions and which, on the day of the date of the writ for such Dominion election, were in force, or in case no such lists were then in force, then the lists which were last in force. That prevents the difficulty arising from the standpoint of alternative lists.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would ask the leader of the opposition to read subsection 10 which I think meets the difficulty he has suggested with respect to the lists being sent to the Printing Bureau.

Mr. INGRAM. There is another important point that will affect our friends opposite as well as us.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Nothing can affect you that does not affect us.

Mr. INGRAM. The last portion of section 10 of the Franchise Act affects us in this way: Supposing the sixty days provision is abolished, and the lists are not printed by the Printing Bureau and furnished by the government, then each candidate, in order to obtain them, would have to go to the custodian and the latter would have to comply with this provision of section 10:

> The fees to be paid for such certified copy shall be those fixed by the provincial law for furnishing such copies to applicants therefor, and if there is no fee fixed by the provincial law, it shall be 25 cents for each 100 names, including additions and descriptions, and 50 cents for the certificate.

Take my own case where there are 10,000 names, it will cost me over $20 for the list, and we all know that one copy would never do on which to conduct an election.

Mr. FRASER. You get twenty free.

Mr. INGRAM. No, the law cannot be carried out because the list has just came into existence. Therefore, the government would not be in a position to supply it. Then we would have to apply to the custodian who keeps the list and to pay him for it. Now, I contend it is not a fair thing that the candidate should have to pay for these. I think in the way the law stands now, the government is really the proper source to which each candidate ought to apply for lists.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the intention of the statute as we have now got it. With respect to the lists which reach the Printing Bureau, a certain number are distributed gratis to the candidates. But I admit that when the list is to be taken from the legal custodian, who will be the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in Ontario, then you have got to pay him regular fees for the work he does.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like the Solicitor General to tell me which of the three custodians it is to whom we apply, whether to the county court judge, the officers of the municipality to whom he sends the list, or the clerk of the peace. That difficulty arose in my constituency. When the returning officer got the list he found out that there were three parties in the riding who were equally legal custodians of the list.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. So far as the province of Ontario is concerned, I understand the local Act makes the clerk of the peace the custodian of the list, but I speak subject to correction. In the province of Quebec he sends it to the clerk of the municipality and the registrar of the county.

Mr. BENNETT. I think some hon. gentlemen do not remember the exact procedure in the province of Ontario. After the courts have been held the county court judge returns to the clerk of the peace the list, and in that list are the interlineations, giving the names that have been added and the names that have been struck out. That list is then in the hands of the clerk of the peace, and if an election is coming on the clerk of the peace furnishes to each deputy returning officer a written list, not a printed list at all—he furnishes him with a written list. Now, the clerk of the peace would never think of doing this work himself. He gets some one to copy this out, but the original list is in the possession of the clerk of the peace all the time, he is the custodian of at least one list, and that is the important one, because that is the one upon which the alterations will be found. In the province of Ontario it is an admitted fact that the local lists are very faulty, so faulty that there is a procedure allowing a man to vote whose name is not on the list at all. They have what is known as tender ballots, so that a man may go up and vote in a local election, even though his name is not on the list, and afterwards, on the scrutiny, that vote may be counted, provided he has a right to vote. Now, if you are going to open the door to the same thing here——

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We are not.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, in the very next section the hon. gentleman will find he has got something a good deal worse than tender ballots.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There will be no tender ballots in my Bill.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the Solicitor General, in case of the candidate having to procure a list from the clerk of the peace in Ontario, who is the proper custodian? He knows that he has to pay for one copy. But he requires twenty copies, or a considerable number, in order to carry on his election. That is indispensable in the usage that prevails. How is he going to get the additional copies? At his own expense?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If he has to apply to the custodian he has to pay the custodian for the first copy and then he makes his own copies for his own benefit at his own expense.

Mr. WALLACE. That means an expenditure of several hundred dollars. I would like to know why each of the two candidates should be at the expense of several hundred dollars in order to get copies of the voters' lists that the government are bound to provide. The government are bound to provide you with the first copy and you have no right to pay for it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That applies to those lists only that have reached Ottawa for the purpose of being printed. There will be a very small number of such lists.

Mr. WALLACE. It may be a very large number. In regard to the proposal of the hon. Solicitor General to reduce the time from sixty days to thirty days, I think I am correct in saying that in the last election there would have been a very large percentage of the municipalities in which the candidates would have had to procure their lists in Ontario. Under the sixty-day limit the number was small. Each of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken have had one or more municipalities in which they had to procure the lists in that way. That was the case in my own constituency. In one small municipality the list was completed within sixty days, and therefore the list for 1900 was used. The list for 1900 should have been used in all of the municipalities, and with an assessment made in February, the lists should have been ready before the 7th of November and eligible for use, but, instead of having the lists for the election which took place on the 7th of November, 1900, the lists which were used were those that were commenced to be made and which were practically completed before the 1st of May, 1899. More than a year and a half had elapsed. The lists were necessarily old. We had just about finished the revision of the lists of 1900 before the judges of the court of revision when this election was called on, and not one of these lists was used except, as I have said, in one small municipality in my constituency. Therefore, notwithstanding the statement that the government had made that they were going to have an up-to-date list in Ontario, there was practically no up-to-date list, but the list for 1899 was used instead of the list for 1900. Then, there is the additional fact that I have already pointed out, that in the case of reducing the sixty days to thirty days, you will have a much larger number of cases in which you will have to go to the clerk of the peace for your original list, and then you will have to go and have those lists printed at your own expense, at a cost of hundreds of dollars, which is an injustice to the candidates, because you say you will provide the voters' lists for the electors. You have to provide one list anyway and hand it to the candidate through the clerk of the peace, and you should give twenty additional copies, so that he will have a sufficient number to run his election properly. You are not doing that, but you are making it more difficult by the proposed amendment.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman. In order to get an up-to-date list, that is to say, the last possible list obtainable, there will be certain inconveniences resulting from the fact that you have to apply to the clerk of the peace to get the last list and to pay his fees for copying that list. But, then you are going to have up-to-date lists instead of lists such as we voted on in 1896, which were three or four years old.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, no.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In 1896 we had no revision for three years.

Mr. HENDERSON. The lists voted on in 1896 were made in 1895.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We are going to have an up-to-date list. In order to get that it is necessary to consider two things : are we going to allow the law to remain as it is and take our chances on the old lists, or are we going to amend the law further so as to make provision that this expenditure shall be borne by the public in the event of our being obliged to go to the clerk of the peace. It is worth our while, in order that we may get a real up-to-date list, to adopt the principle I suggest by this amendment, and make some provision whereby those who are subjected to the inconvenience of having to go to the clerk of the peace, shall not have to pay out of their own pockets for so doing.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is opening the door again to a good deal of intrigue, because when you come to revise the list, if the list is in favour, we will say, of the Conservative candidate, he will do everything he can to have that list completed in order that it may be used at the election. On the other hand, if it is in favour of the Liberal candidate, he will do all he can to have it revised. Where the list is objectionable to a candidate, he will do everything possible to prevent the court of revision completing the list, in order that it may not be available for use at the election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We cannot prevent that.

Mr. INGRAM. We can prevent it by simply having the list completed sixty days before the election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are better reasons than those which have been given by the hon. gentleman. I am not prepared to admit that there is intriguing in the court of revision.

Mr. INGRAM. I am prepared to admit that there is a great deal of intriguing before the court of revision. I remember in the case of a court of revision there were six men employed to scrape up all the appeals they could in order to prevent the court of revision completing the revision of the list. The same thing can occur in other parts of the country. If a man chooses to rake up a lot of appeals he is at liberty to do so, in order to prevent the court of revision completing the list in time to be used in the election. You are opening the door to intrigue by doing away with the sixty days, and you are imposing additional expense upon candidates. The proposed amendment leaves it open to parties to intrigue in order to prevent the lists being revised, because it might give one or other party an advantage in the election. I know several constituencies where that has occurred, and it will occur again. Besides that there is the uncertainty of it. Here your friends are endeavouring to canvass a municipality, and they do not know whether to canvass on the list about to be revised or on the list of last year. They do not know whether the list will be revised in time or not, and you are placing them in this position of uncertainty by removing the sixty days' limit. Why not leave it so that we will know that the list in force sixty days before the issue of the writ is the list that we will use, and so that we can canvass on the list that we know will be used.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I think it is impossible to get along with any shorter time than sixty days. There is only one officer, the clerk of the peace, who is bound to furnish the lists. Let us accept the Solicitor General's position.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Perhaps I ought to say that I am confirmed in my opinion by reference to section 77 of the Election Act, which says :

> Subject to the provisions in the next succeeding six sections contained, the first and third parts of the last list of voters certified by the judge and delivered or transmitted to the clerk of the peace, &c.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That is not the only difficulty. I am bound to say that I am doubtful what the law is, but there is a question whether there are not three custodians of the list. The clerk of the peace is generally considered to be the legal custodian and the man that finally gets the list that may be certified. At the same time there is a list in the hands of the judge, and there may be a list in the hands of the clerk. It is a thing legislation should rectify in the province of Ontario. You can get county judges who have carefully considered the matter, and they believe there are three custodians. Thirty days after the writ issues is the usual time for an election to take place.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It cannot be shorter.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. How are you going to get these lists printed and circulated within that time? I find it very hard work even in a longer time to get the lists in such a shape that I can hand them to the different committees in forty-five or fifty polling divisions. I guarantee that in many instances, when you go to the polling place, you do not know whether your list is correct or not. That is a very undesirable state of things. The Solicitor General says very truly that it may happen, not must happen, that we will have old lists, and that depends on the time the government bring on the election. It is well known in Ontario that the lists begin to dribble in on the 1st of November and continue until the 1st of January, and if you put a provision in the law that there should be no elections held between the 1st of November and the 1st of January, we might get at it. Either do that, or say that the election shall be appointed three months after the issue of the writ instead of thirty days. As it is now, neither the candidate of one political party nor the other will be satisfied, and the candidate of the opposition must be dissatisfied, because whether the government take advantage over him or not, they have the power to do so. It is a physical impossibility to do all this within thirty days, unless clerks of the peace are empowered to have a numerous staff to get ready the lists, and one written list to a candidate is of no use whatever. I grant you this is a difficult thing to legislate upon, but we have embarked upon this principle of our franchise, and even with the best care possible, it will take us some time to get the law into such a shape that it will be fair to both parties. Do not let it go abroad, no matter what party is in power, that this law is unworkable, and that both candidates will not have a fair chance. I believe, so far as the Solicitor General is concerned, that he wants to have a fair Bill. An election contest is bad enough if we make it as short as the law allows, because it disturbs business, and all that sort of thing, and generally the result is about the same. I have considered the question very carefully, and I see no practical way, except by adopting one of the two suggestions I have made.

The PRIME MINISTER. I submit to the House that the evils which are contemplated by the removal of the sixty days are very much magnified. Undoubtedly there may be some inconveniences. There are some inconveniences admittedly under the present system, and, as has been suggested by the Solicitor General, there will be some inconveniences, even if we adopt this section. In some cases we shall have to go to the registrar in the province of Quebec, and to the clerk of the peace in Ontario to have lists. Well, we used to do that in former times. Every member who sat in this House previous to 1886, remembers that the candidates had to go to the registrar in the province of Quebec or to the clerk of the peace in the province of Ontario to obtain the lists at his own cost. The cost was not very heavy, and if, even in rare cases, the same thing has to be done now, the cost will not be very heavy either. The Solicitor General has informed the House that he does not intend to press this Bill to-day, but that he will leave it to the consideration of members and of the government, and take it up at another sitting.

On section 2,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The change here is very trifling indeed. The form of the oath required by the repealed section is different from that described in section 64 of the Elections Act, as the one puts the oath in the first person and the other in the second person. The intention here is to make the two oaths agree.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you intend to change the oath now ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, we will do that in the Bill to amend the Elections Act.

Mr. CLANCY. This is one of the greatest difficulties we had to contend with during the last election. I know of no provision in the Act which men more honestly violated than that. I know of one case in particular in which all parties concerned consented to a man who had absolutely no right to vote, going up and voting. He came to the polls, and said, 'I lived in the riding and in the municipality, and it is a mere oversight that my name is not on the list.' He took the oath, and was permitted to vote. There was no doubt of the honesty of the returning officer and the others who allowed him to vote. There was no intention of wrong-doing from start to finish; and the slight changes which the Solicitor General proposes to make will not alter the case in the slightest. What oath is a man to take to qualify him to vote ? It is simply this :

You solemnly swear that you are legally qualified to vote at this election, and that you verily believe that your name was omitted from the list of voters by reason of——

What ? He might insert absence or that his name was overlooked or some similar reason. I think it would be infinitely better, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned at any rate, that we should drop that section altogether, rather than make provision for the few persons, if any, who would be disfranchised under the provincial Act. I am not able to call to mind any cases of Dominion officials who have been disfranchised under the provincial law. If there are any, they are very few; and it would be infinitely better that those persons should not be permitted to vote than that we should open the door so widely to an evil practice which has taken place from one end of the country to the other. I will venture to say that in most municipalities many votes have been honestly polled under such conditions, and they will be again if the same conditions continue to exist. I do not care how anxious municipal officers may be to conduct the elections properly, you cannot train them so as not to be liable to go wrong under the law as it stands, or under the proposal the hon. gentleman now makes. I know of no evil in connection with the law as it now stands that is productive of more serious consequences.

Mr. BARKER. I think there cannot be any question as to the seriousness of the objection which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has stated. There is no provision in this statute which is so open to abuse as this particular one. A man, by way of committing a fraud, knowing that he is not entitled to vote, or an innocent man, believing that he is entitled to be on the list, may come forward and take this affidavit and vote; and I have not the slightest doubt that hundreds of votes were polled in that way in the late election. The Solicitor General knows that there is not a very large class of people affected by this clause. I do not quite agree with the hon. member for Bothwell that they might be omitted from the franchise altogether, for the Franchise Act acknowledges their right to vote. But instead of providing for their voting in this way by taking a special affidavit not applicable to any one else, I would suggest to the hon. Solicitor General to provide in the Election Act a summary method of adding their names to the voters' list by application to the county judge. These few people, who are government officers, would know when an election was coming on, and they could have an application made to the county judge to be put upon the list. Then they would simply take the ordinary affidavit, if required to be sworn ; and there would be no danger of others improperly getting in votes under the special oath.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Hon. gentlemen must not overlook the fact that this clause is intended to meet what may be a very real and serious difficulty. It might appear to a provincial legislature desirable to disqualify a whole class of voters. This I admit is one of the consequences of our adopting the provincial franchises. While it may be that up to the present time this provision meets only a limited number of cases, the principle involved is a very serious one, and I do not think it would be proper to place the whole of our lists under the absolute control of the provincial legislature without reserving to ourselves the power to correct any wrong which a provincial legislature might think proper to do. The question of the method to be adopted to meet the difficulty is one we may fairly discuss; but, as I view it at present, I would not be disposed to sacrifice the principle.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to point out to the Solicitor General that this affidavit is framed in such a way as to lead people innocently to take it who have really no right to take it. The oath is as follows :

You do swear that you are legally qualified to vote at this election, and that you verily believe that your name was omitted from the list of voters by reason of your being at the time such list was prepared, and for no other reason.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman look at form T in the Act as we have it now ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This form reads:

You swear that you are legally qualified to vote at this election and verily believe that your name was omitted.

Then there is a blank in which to fill the reason, but the difficulty is that the deputy returning officer or the voter may think that that oath would be properly filled in if the word 'absent' were inserted or some other such reason, whereas the intention of the Act is that he should swear that his name was omitted because he was the holder of some office or was engaged in some employment or occupation which disqualified him under the local law.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that it is very important the form of this oath should be changed. No doubt serious mistakes occurred in the last election by reason of persons not on the list claiming to be entitled to vote on taking this oath. I have in my mind two constituencies which, I believe, are now represented differently from what they would have been had it not been for this oath. In the earlier part of the session I carefully thought out the matter and drafted and introduced a Bill which was advanced to the second reading, and then allowed to stand, at the request of the leader of the government, on his assurance that the matter would be dealt with by the hon. the Solicitor General in his Bill to amend the election law. But I find the hon. gentleman's Bill does not provide a remedy, and I propose, when we come to the election law, to move the following amendment, which I hope the hon. the Solicitor General will accept :

You swear or solemnly affirm that you are legally qualified to vote at this election and verily believe that your name was omitted from the lists of voters by reason of your being :—

A. A holder of any office.

B. A person employed in any capacity in the public service of Canada or any of the provinces.

C. A person belonging to or engaged in any profession, calling or occupation.

D. Belonging to any class of persons who, though possessed of the qualifications generally required by the provincial law, are by such law declared to be disqualified by reason of their belonging to such class.

In this oath there is no blank space left in which some fictitious reason might be inserted such as being overlooked or absent. The whole space is filled up so that only the reasons assigned by section 6 of the Franchise Act of 1898, or one or more of these reasons, can be assigned by the voter why he is entitled to vote although his name is not in the list.

I also make this provision to enable him to vote :

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

5. If his name has been omitted from the list of voters on account of some disqualifying provision of the provincial law specified in section 6 of the Franchise Act, 1898, he shall be entitled to vote upon his taking, or offering to take, the oath in the form T : Provided, however, that it shall be sufficient if any one or more of the four paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) in the said form are included in such oath, the remaining paragraphs being eliminated therefrom.

A man comes to vote whose name is not on the list. The deputy returning officer tells him he can vote if he will take the oath form T. There are four reasons set forth in that oath why he should vote, and he selects which one he will swear to and eliminates the other three. No other reason can be accepted by the returning officer beyond the ones given, and a penalty of $500 is to be imposed on the returning officer if he allows a man to vote, whose name is not on the list, for any other reason than those assigned in the amended Act. This is the amendment I propose to move when we come to the election law, and I hope the Solicitor General will accept it, even if he choses to adopt some other form of words, for I am not particular as to the form provided we get the substance.

Mr. BENNETT. In the new Dominion Act, how many forms of oaths will there be. There are now sections T and U. Which one is it intended to do away with ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The intention is to amend the form U. We are dealing now with the Franchise Act, and the intention is to amend subsection (c) of section 6 so as to amend the oath——

Mr. BENNETT. That would leave section T in the original Act ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, in the Election Act. My intention is, after the discussion that has taken place, to amend section T to meet the difficulty pointed out by the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Halton.

Mr. BENNETT. I would call the attention of the Solicitor General to the form U and the reading at the head of it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That will be provided for in the Election Act also.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the Solicitor General permit me to mention that the first part of section 6 seems to be very badly worded. I do not see any connection, as a matter of sense, between the first part and the second.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I remember that the impression made upon me when I first looked upon it was much the same, but if the hon. gentleman will read it again I think he will see that it expresses about what we wished to say.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will read it and point out what I refer to :

No person possessed of the qualifications generally required by the provincial law to entitle him to vote at a provincial election, shall be disqualified from voting at a Dominion election merely by reason of any provision of the provincial law disqualifying him from having his name on the list.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman will observe that there is no 'him' after 'disqualifying.' If you put in that word, it does read badly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is a little better than I thought, the word 'him' not being there, as I thought it was. It is not very clear yet, but perhaps it is not worth amending.

Mr. MONK. Since we are trying to make the clauses as perfect as possible, I would point out, that even admitting the principle contended for by my hon. friend from Halton—and I think that if that principle was adopted it would prevent many of the frauds that were committed last election, and I think the Solicitor General admits that it would make the situation clearer if the form of oath suggested by my hon. friend from Halton was adopted—but even then we have the alternative remedy suggested by the hon. member from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). I am not quite sure whether it will be necessary to provide such machinery as he suggests, difficult and expensive as it may appear at first sight, and endeavour to make it as little expensive as possible. I was thinking of the possibility of men disqualified for some provincial reason such as registrars or men declared guilty of corrupt practices under the Election Act, obtaining some certificate or authorization to vote at a Dominion election. During the last election, to my knowledge, a number of people voted who came to the polls—I do not mean to say that the deputy returning officer was in bad faith, because we all know how excited officials get in a political campaign, and on the eve of voting, filled with the importance of their functions—forty of them at one poll, and gave an affidavit that they had been disqualified from voting under the provincial law, having been found guilty of corrupt practices. And, having that affidavit, as the Solicitor General will readily understand, the deputy returning officer was obliged to admit them to vote. The precautions suggested by my hon. friend from Halton would not meet a case like that, because a person who would go to a poll and swear that he was not entitled to vote in a Dominion election because he had been disqualified in a provincial election trial would be ready to take the oath suggested by my hon. friend from Halton. Therefore, as the Solicitor General pointed out in the beginning of the afternoon, we have to meet difficulties at every step. We had them under the sixty days' delay—that we have under examination at the present moment—and under this section we have to determine whether we ought not to provide extra precautions. We all know from experience that the moment a discretion is given to the deputy returning officer to admit to vote a man who is not on the list before him, no matter what oath you provide, no matter how precise it may be—it is unfortunate to have to admit it—you will find men ready to go to the poll, imported you do not know from where, ready to take that oath. It ought to be a matter for consideration whether we ought to surround the exercise of the franchise—there are only a few cases, as the hon. member for Hamilton pointed out —with these extra precautions.

Mr. INGRAM. The object of the provision in the law which has been referred to was to enable persons to vote in Dominion elections though disqualified under the provincial law. One of the reasons they are allowed by the deputy returning officers to take the oath and vote is to be found in subsection (c) of section 6, which seems to me unnecessary. It reads :

(c) Any person belonging to or engaged in any profession, calling, employment or occupation——

A layman acting as deputy returning officer might fairly take that to mean that a person 'belonging to or engaged in any profession, calling, employment or occupation' by taking the oath might be entitled to vote. Therefore, if the hon. gentleman is going to amend section 6, it would be well to consider whether that subsection (c) is necessary or not. I know perfectly well that when the Franchise Act was before the House it was only intended to cover the cases of such persons as postmasters, collectors of customs, officers of the inland revenue, and, I believe, in the province of New Brunswisk, railway men, because a large number of the employees of the Intercolonial Railway were disfranchised under the provincial law. It was not intended to cover the cases of men whose names, for some other reason were not put upon the list. This section was not intended to cover a class of men of that kind. But during the last election in Ontario, in many constituencies, this section was taken advantage of in order to give these men a vote, they having taken the oath which is very imperfect.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There is one strong point in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Hamilton, and which is in keeping with the principle of our legislation, that is the finality of the roll. Every suggestion that gets rid of an affidavit is a good one. We know the frauds and difficulties that used to exist, but we gradually got rid of them. I see no difficulty at all in saying that at some time after the writ is issued a man may go to some official and, after satisfying him of his right, get his name put on the roll and get a certificate. In Ontario there would be no difficulty, because the county judge is always convenient, and he is the official that decides all the appeals, practically. I think that would meet the view expressed by the Solicitor General, that this is to meet cases that might arise hereafter where a province disqualified voters that we think should have a right to vote. We ought to take a good deal of trouble rather than acknowledge the principle that we cannot settle the question of qualification by ourselves, instead of leaving it to the provinces. For my part, I would like to get rid of any affidavit if we can do so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I agree with the member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) with reference to the wording of paragraph (c). As the Solicitor General was kind enough to listen to what I said a short time ago, I would endeavour to press upon him the propriety, if possible, of revising those sections (a), (b), (c) and (d). I think they can be made much more definite, and worded in a way that would cover the whole ground, and yet be more easily comprehended by the ordinary voter, and by the deputy returning officer. I would like the Solicitor General to give some attention to that. I did not like to use the expressions in the amendment that I prepared, but, I had no desire to interfere with the existing law, and, consequently, used these words exactly as I found them in the Franchise Act.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I take the liberty of drawing the attention of the Solicitor General to another defect in the present law. It was found, during the last election, that a man whose name, for instance, is John Smith, carpenter, if he happened to be down on the list as John Smith, painter, was not allowed to vote. Although he was prepared to take any oath put to him that he was the man, yet, the deputy returning officers throughout the riding, would not give these men ballots. There were cases where the man demanded the ballot, and the returning officer point blank refused to give him one, because he was described as a painter, for instance, or as a man of some other occupation than the one he followed, although he was evidently the same man, living in the same house, and on the same lot. There were other cases where the initials of the names did not correspond. I would ask the Solicitor General to look into that, and to provide some clause by which a man whose name purported to be on the list. should be allowed a ballot; in other words, that the returning officer would have no option in withholding the ballot. Why should the returning officer constitute himself a judge in that case? If a man comes forward and is willing to take the oath and to abide by the consequences, let him vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In support of what has been said by my hon. friend from North Victoria, I may add that a good deal of difficulty of that kind occurred in my own county, for the reason that clerical mistakes had occurred in making a copy of the lists in the first place, and then in the printing of the lists that was done in Ottawa. There is more danger of that kind now than formerly. For example, in my constituency, about fifty electors were disqualified for those reasons. We came to the conclusion that upwards of a hundred other electors would have been disqualified except that the candidates on each side agreed that the sheriff should take this faulty list, which came from the printers here, and correct it by the local list, to which he had access. That was done in the city of Halifax, by consent of the candidates. Otherwise a great many parties would have been disqualified.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). There were six in one polling division who, although they had lived in the locality for upwards of twenty years, and were on the provincial list and the municipal list, yet when they presented themselves to the deputy returning officer and satisfied him, and satisfied the scrutineers that their names had been miscopied, the deputy returning officer would not hand them ballots.

On section 3,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The only change is in the proviso. The proviso was intended to apply to a case, for instance, where a Dominion election takes place, and where there are no local lists, no provincial lists which are not more than a year old, and it is necessary to appoint Dominion officers to prepare those lists. In the event of a by-election taking place for the same electoral district within a year from the time within which these lists are made, these lists will be available for the by-election. I hope I make myself clear. If these were local lists and not more than a year old, they would be available. In the last general election we were obliged, by the Manhood Suffrage Act, to prepare lists which were prepared by the Dominion officials. This is a proviso, that, in the event of an election taking place for the electoral district within a year, these lists shall be available.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman in his mind a case that this will cover?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We might take the city of Toronto or any of the cities in Ontario to which the manhood suffrage voters lists apply. It might be that after the general election a by-election would be necessary and in that event we would have to make a new list notwithstanding that we would have a by-election possibly three months after the general election.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 64) to amend the Dominion Elections Act 1900.—The Solicitor General (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) read the second time, and considered in committee.

On section 1,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As this clause now stands the only effect is to substitute paragraph (g) of section 41 for paragraph (h). There is really no paragraph (h) in section 41, so that the amendment is merely clerical. I beg to move to amend the Bill by omitting these words in the sixth line of section 1: 'And subsection 2,' because it is intended by this Bill to repeal subsection 2 of this Act altogether. That is the subsection which has reference to the stamp that the returning officer uses for the purpose of stamping the ballots.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he is going to strike out the stamp?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman explain why he wants to repeal this provision? Is it not working satisfactorily?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Because I think it would be absolutely useless if we adopt the amendments I suggest here in respect to the ballot. The stamp is intended for the purpose of identification. In the new form of ballot that I shall ask the committee to adopt, it is intended that we shall have the ballot numbered on the stub with a corresponding number on the counterfoil.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A printed number?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, a printed number on the counterfoil so that there will be no doubt that the ballot that will be given to the voter can be identified when it is handed back to the returning officer as the ballot that he received, because the number on the counterfoil of the ballot must correspond with the number on the stub. Therefore, this will be unnecessary in view of the fact that there will be a great many other things that must go on the back of the ballot.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not sure that the sole object sought to be obtained by the stamp on the back of the ballot was identification. I think the particular object was to prevent what is called the floating ballot. I do not know how the hon. Solicitor General is going to protect us against that sort of thing.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not being initiated into the mysteries of the floating ballot, I would be obliged if the hon. gentleman would give an explanation of what he means.

Mr. COCHRANE. Call in Preston.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no doubt there are plenty of hon. gentlemen sitting on the other side of the House who are perfectly able to instruct the hon. Solicitor General, and it surprises me that a man who comes from the city of Quebec and who has gone through so many campaigns should never have heard anything about this particular kind of ballot. I think the hon. gentleman is playing the part of an innocent man. However, I merely throw this out. I think the intention of the stamp was to prevent a larger number of ballots being given out, or getting into circulation, than actually were given out by the returning officer himself, and to provide that the genuine ballots might be identified. When we do away with that stamp what is to prevent that? I think that the matter ought to be very fully considered before we repeal what we considered two years ago was a very important protection.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I belong to a province where we have no trouble. Our system is that the ballots are counted by the returning officer, and the number of ballots polled are counted and the number of ballots on hand that have not been voted must correspond; the whole thing comes out like clockwork. It appears to me there is an awful amount of trouble in Ontario which I am happy to say does not exist in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. HACKETT. A great deal of care should be taken by this parliament to ensure that the franchise of the people shall be preserved inviolate. I ask the Solicitor General if he remembers that on the 10th of November last a ballot box was stolen between Alberton and Summerside, and whether he has taken any action to discover the miscreant, the wretch who stole that ballot box, and who by that act endeavoured to deprive the people of West Prince of their rights and privileges as freemen of Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is the representative in this House of the Department of Justice. What has he done? Has he offered any reward? Has he attempted in any way to trace that missing box? We are here to safeguard the rights of the people and I state that an atrocious act was perpetrated at that time. What has the Solicitor General done to discover the rascal who stole that ballot box?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If there was a theft of a ballot box in Prince Edward Island, the ordinary machinery of justice in that province ought to be sufficient to enable those who suffered by that theft to detect the criminal. The theft of a ballot box after all, in one respect, is the same as the theft of any piece of goods that might belong to any individual and the culprit might be very well detected. If my hon. friend desired the Department of Justice to take action, it seems to me that the Department of Justice should have been notified at the time of this theft. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) that so far as my knowledge goes, the matter has never been brought under the notice of the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand it is contemplated by this amendment to do away with the necessity of using the stamp. Personally, I am opposed to that. The stamp was a safeguard to some extent against improper ballots getting out, and I do not think that the proposal of the Solicitor General to have the stubs numbered as well as the counterfoils, will be effective to prevent wrong-doing in this respect. We know from what took place in elections in the past, that the deputy returning officer was in league with those who did the dishonest work outside, and therefore the numbering of the ballots would not prevent fraud. If the number on the stub has to correspond with the number on the counterfoil, a dishonest deputy returning officer could hurry the ballot into the box without allowing the scrutineers to see it, or perhaps the scrutineers would not think it was their business to take the trouble to look at it. If the official stamp is used, it could readily be seen by all parties, and while the stamp is not an absolute guarantee of honesty, I believe it provides some safeguard.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). What was it that influenced the government to depart from that principle which they adopted in reference to accepting the provincial franchises for the Dominion elections? Why did the Solicitor General make an exception of the North-west Territories? When the Election Act was originally introduced, the Solicitor General did provide for the ordinance of the North-west Territories to be accepted, just as the franchises for the different provinces were accepted. This was sent to the Senate and was amended, making an exception for the Territories. That Bill was sent back to the Senate, and it was returned the second time and accepted by the House of Commons, it being the latter end of the session. What possible reason had the present government for departing from that principle when, as they claim, they were adopting the franchises of the different provinces? Why make an exception of the Territories?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Territories have always had a special ordinance with respect to Dominion elections, and we have allowed that to continue. That is all.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). You did not accept the Territorial Representation Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Why not?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We allowed the Act to remain in force as heretofore. We saw no reason to make a change.

Mr. INGRAM. The Solicitor General withdrew at its second reading that portion of his Bill which referred to the North-west Territories, leaving it as it is now.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That was the objectionable part last year when we introduced the Bill.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Did not the Solicitor General himself favour that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not remember what I favoured last session; that was previous to the election.

Mr. HACKETT. I am astonished to hear that the Solicitor General places the stealing of this ballot box on the same footing as the loss of a barrel of flour from a freight train. Here we had in that polling division the ballots of two hundred freemen of the Dominion of Canada, and that ballot box was stolen. The whole matter is in charge of the government of Canada. Not only the returning officer and the deputy returning officer, but the railway officials, are all under the control of the government of Canada, and between Alberton and Summerside, one box was found to be stolen when the ballots were called on for a recount. There was a majority of thirty-three for me in that ballot box. The miscreant, the wretch who stole that box, knew well that if the judge would take a partisan view of it, and not having these ballots before him, that I would be counted out, and would not be here to-day to represent the people of West Prince. The Solicitor General places the stealing of that ballot box in which you had the rights, the franchises of two hundred freemen of the Dominion, on the same level as the loss of a barrel of flour on the railway. The railway officials would compensate for the loss of a barrel of flour or a cask of sugar or of molasses. But how are they going to repay the honest freemen of Canada for the loss of two hundred sacred votes. Sir, they have not sufficient money in the treasury of Canada, with all their surpluses, to repay the people for that loss. I ask the government; I ask the Solicitor General, representing in this House the Department of Justice, what action has he taken? Nothing has been done to bring this thief to justice. No reward has been offered. The ballot box has been stolen, the ballots have been taken away, and these men were supposed to have been deprived of their rights and liberties as British freemen. When we are passing legislation of this kind, I ask the government to put a stop to that machine that is working all over Canada. It is a part of the machine that was working in the province of Prince Edward Island. I had occasion a few days ago to bring to the attention of the House the fact that a man from La Patrie office was down working in Prince Edward Island for a few months prior to the last election. That man was on the train that evening watching everything when the ballot box was stolen, and I solemnly and sincerely believe that that individual, being part of the machine that is working from the Atlantic to the Pacific, stole the ballot box, with the intention of depriving me of my seat and electing a supporter of this government. We only ask for justice and fair-play at the hands of the government, and that where a man honestly records his vote, that vote shall be counted in favour of the candidate for whom it is cast.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I have a Bill before the House to make certain amendments to the Election Act, particularly as regards the North-west Territories ; and if the Solicitor General will look at that Bill between now and the next time his Bill is taken up, and will adopt some of the amendments there proposed, he will save me the trouble of going on with it. It deals with certain grievances growing out of the late election which ought to be remedied.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 29) to amend the Dominion Lands Act (Hon. Mr. Sifton), read the second time, and considered in committee.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I will explain briefly to the committee the different sections of the Bill. The first clause is for the purpose of enabling the minister to appoint an officer of the department to take the place of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands and sign documents in the absence of the commissioner. It has been customary for a number of years, when the commissioner has been away, for one of the other officers of the department to act in his place ; but a legal firm in a certain case has thrown a doubt upon the power of another officer to do so in the absence of a statutory provision, and I desire to put the question beyond a doubt by the amendment. The second clause is for the purpose of making the following change. At present, when a person makes a homestead entry, he is required by the Act within six months to prove the entry, otherwise it is void. As a matter of practice, it has never been customary to insist on that provision, and in order to bring the uniform practice of the department into accord with the law, I desire to have this clause amended so that the entry will not be void unless it is so declared by the minister. As to the third clause, I intend to ask to have the first two paragraphs struck out. The third paragraph has this effect. Two or three years ago a Bill was introduced by the then member for Western Assiniboia, providing that under certain circumstances the having of stock and corresponding improvements on a homestead should entitle a homesteader to a patent, in place of the usual cultivation conditions. This was to meet the case of persons who devoted themselves to raising stock instead of grain. The Bill of the hon. gentleman, which I accepted, required that one acre should be cultivated. That has been found to be of no value and vexatious, because in some cases the homesteader has been entitled in every other respect to a patent. Therefore, as a matter of convenience, I think it well to strike that out. Section 4 I will ask to have struck out as being unnecessary. Section 5 refers to a set of provisions in the Dominion Lands Act under which companies were authorized some years ago to make advances to settlers and to take liens on their homesteads. The plan did not prove to be a success, and has been more or less a source of embarrassment ever since. The majority of the settlers who came in under that plan did not turn out to be successful. But we have had to administer these clauses of the Act, and there were cases in which it was necessary to issue the patents to the companies which advanced the money. Some cases occurred in which there was no statutory provision for the issue of the patent, because the settler in whose name it had to be issued was not a British subject. Of course, under the ordinary law the patent cannot be issued unless the applicant is a British subject ; but when he has fulfilled the conditions, made his application and then left the country without liquidating the claim of the company which advanced money to him, and without taking out naturalization papers, the only way to enable the company to realize upon their security is to take authority to issue the patent without requiring the patentee to become a British subject. I would ask that section 6 be struck out. The effect of section 7 is to enable the minister to execute leases of Dominion lands when authorized by the regulations, without having to execute these leases under the great seal. That is simply a matter of departmental convenience and there is no object to be served in executing the leases under the great seal. Section 8 is for the purpose of enabling all persons owing money to the Crown for or on account of Dominion lands to secure the benefit of the reduction in interest from 6 to 5 per cent, which was made under the Act of last session.

Mr. MONK. Is there at present any commissioner of Dominion lands, or is this entirely a new function ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The office of commissioner of Dominion lands has been a statutory office for ten or twelve years. It has been customary for another officer to sign the name of the commissioner in his absence. I am not at all sure that this is not authorized by the Act, but a legal firm has raised the question, and I ask to have it made clear.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under the present Act if a homestead entry is not perfected within six months, it becomes void. We have many applications for extensions of time, and this is to relieve the department of considerable work caused by these applications, by providing that the entries shall not become void by the mere lapse of time alone but that after the six months have elapsed the minister must declare the entries void before the lapse of time takes effect.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice a good deal of work is thrown on the department by applications to have the time extended. I have sent in a number myself, but the question is whether this amendment would not lead to a greater abuse in another direction, by allowing people to hold lands indefinitely.

Mr. MONK. I do not see any provision for giving notice to the homesteader before the minister declares his entry void.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The power of the minister to declare it void only comes after the expiration of the six months, so that the homesteader has still as much time as he has now.

Mr. MONK. But still he will have no notice.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In every case thirty days notice is given before any action is taken affecting the entry. What the hon. member for East Grey said is perfectly true with regard to the early development of the North-west when many people went in and took up lands solely for speculation, but that practice has gone out of existence altogether, and the officers of the department are satisfied that this change will facilitate the administration of the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Would not this tend to revive the system ? Trouble like this arose : A man went from Ontario intending to settle in that country and took up land, but afterwards returned to Ontario, and, owing to business affairs or some other cause, was unable to go back. He found some person going into the country and sold his claim for a consideration. In the meantime, some one had applied for the cancellation of his title, and the party who had paid the consideration found some one else on the land. I remember having a number of these cases to discuss with the department. The party who paid money for the location claimed that he was badly used, and the man who got it thought he was entitled to it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The party who bought it had no right to buy it.

Mr. SPROULE. No legal right, but there seemed to be some sort of a moral right, since the original claimant's right had not been cancelled. I fear that this will revive the same system—not to the same extent, but to some extent at least.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not explain the latter part of this clause. The third subsection of section 36 of the Dominion Lands Act says :

Provided further, that in the case of immigrants from elsewhere than the North American continent the Governor in Council may extend the time for the perfecting of entry to twelve months from the date thereof.

It has been found unsatisfactory to confine that to immigrants from elsewhere than the North American continent. We are receiving a large number of settlers from the United States, and it is sometimes desirable that they should be brought within the same category. So, it is proposed to make the clause read thus :

3. Provided further, that in the case of any immigrant the time for perfecting his entry may be extended by the minister for any period not exceeding one year from the date upon which he obtained such entry.

I doubt if this is absolutely necessary, in view of the amendment made in the former provision, but it will make it clear.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that you substitute 'minister' for 'Governor in Council.' Why is that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is absolutely useless to have this go to the Governor in Council, and it has the disadvantage of hanging up the departmental business. It is impossible for the Governor in Council to consider such applications as that. As a matter of fact, in the administration of the Dominion Lands Act, one of the greatest sources of embarrassment is the number of cases that have to go to the Governor in Council. I am naturally indisposed to have the responsibility upon the minister rather than upon the Governor in Council, but, in such matters it is impossible for the members of the government to enter into the merits of the case, and they must take the opinion of the minister on that subject.

Mr. SPROULE. The only difficulty would be that it seems to leave a great power in the hands of the minister, should he choose to use it, as between friend and foe——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) takes the least objection to it, I have no objection to changing it.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not said that I take serious objection to it. I am only suggesting what might take place.

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Section 44 of the Dominion Lands Act closes with these words :

—and thereafter the said charge shall become a statutory mortgage on such homesteads.

As I explained, when a settler has failed to take out his patent, we are authorized by the Act, in certain cases, to issue the patent to the company. This, however, is a case where the settler has fulfilled the conditions, and we are providing for the issue of the patent to the settler. In such case, the claim of the company that advanced the money becomes a lien upon the land. The law clerk, in drawing a section, made it read :

—and thereafter the said charge shall become a statutory mortgage on such homestead.

I do not see the necessity for that. It should be left as it was in the original legislation, and leave the charge as a lien upon the homestead.

Mr. MONK. What is the object of having a patent issued in the name of the settler when he has left the country ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has fulfilled the conditions, and if the land should sell for more than the amount advanced, the settler's representatives are entitled to it.

On section 7,

Mr. SPROULE. What was the original law with regard to this ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The corresponding section in the Act of 1894, is as follows :

The Governor in Council may authorize the sale or lease of any lands vested in Her Majesty which are not required for public purposes, and for the sale or lease of which there is no other provision in the law. The expression 'lands' in this section means real property of any kind, or any interest therein.

That definition is the usual one, and is in the present Act. This provision would have the effect of enabling the Governor in Council to make general regulations for the distribution of certain classes of land, but when leases are made in pursuance of the regulation, the leases need not be executed under the great seal. That is the only effect of it.

Mr. MONK. I want to ask the minister if these words: 'For the sale or lease of which there is no other provision in the law' would allow lands to be put up at auction?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. The invariable rule is that the first person who applies gets the lease upon terms fixed by order in council. That has not been changed for many years. The same with homesteads.

Mr. SPROULE. I find the same objection to this that I found in the other, that is that what the law allowed to be done by the Governor in Council is here done by the minister.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is impossible for any minister to make an examination of all the files to see whether they are all regular, and he must depend upon his officers. Indeed I may say that this particular amendment is made largely owing to the continual remonstrance of my colleagues. It is impossible for any minister to go into details of matters of that kind.

Mr. MONK. Could not the minister meet the objection by a proviso that the Governor in Council, when authorizing the sale or lease of any lands, should fix a minimum price ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly.

Mr. MONK. But that is not mentioned in the section.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course the regulations specify the terms and conditions. I have no objection to saying that the regulations shall specify the price.

On section 8,

Mr. SPROULE. I understand there are many outstanding leases for grazing and other lands which were rented, and in all probability many of the payments remain unpaid. Will the payments that accrued up to that time be calculated on the higher rate of interest, or on the lower rate of interest ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will look at the section again and see whether the point is covered.

Mr. MONK. There is a proviso in the statute we passed last year which says :

Provided that the change in the rate of interest in this Act shall not apply to liabilities existing at the time of the passing of this Act.

The disposition of section 8 is very general.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will see that it is perfectly specific. If my hon. friend will look at page 3 of the Bill, commencing with the fourth line, he will see that it says :

The rate of such interest from the 7th day of July, 1900, the date upon which chapter 29 of that year came into force, shall be 5 per cent per annum.

I think that covers everything.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not perhaps apropos, but it might not be amiss to ask the hon.

minister if he has any knowledge of what the outstanding claims are in regard to mining leases, grazing leases and timber lands. Perhaps he could tell us whether the collections are pretty well kept up to time or whether there is a large accumulation of arrears in these claims.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not give any general statement, but it would be a very simple matter for me to have a statement prepared which I will lay on the Table of the House in a couple of days if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. SPROULE. That would do. I do not expect that the minister will have it with him, but it would be interesting if the minister would prepare such a statement.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no difficulty whatever about it. It is a very simple matter to find it in the records of the department. I would like to say, however, to the hon. gentleman that there is one class of the outstanding liabilities of the government which I have never pressed at all, which I have never made any effort to collect, because I have not been able to see any object in doing so; that is to say, the money that is owing by farmers on account of pre-emptions. The land is becoming more valuable all the time, the government has been getting 6 per cent and when this Act comes into force it will get 5 per cent which is more than the money costs the government. As the land is becoming more valuable I think there is no object in pressing the farmers to pay this money if they are unable to do so without embarrassing themselves. From my own experience in the North-west I know that on account of the pressure that was put on the farmers some years ago many of the farmers were obliged to mortgage their property simply to pay the government claim when the government did not need the money. The government are getting more interest from them than they are paying for the money.

Mr. MONK. Do they pay the interest?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, we endeavour to see that the interest is paid as rapidly as possible, but as to the principal the security is getting better all the time and there is no object in pressing them.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think there would be any object in forcing payment, nor do I think it would be right as long as a man is on his homestead and cultivating his land. I think it should be allowed to run the same as it is in the province of Ontario. I think it would be very unreasonable to force the payment on the pre-emption as long as the man is there and cultivating his land.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Every year a notice is sent out to the farmers giving the exact amount that is due.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORIES—GAME PRESERVATION ACT.

Bill (No. 46) to amend the Unorganized Territories Game Preservation Act, 1894.—the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Clifford Sifton), read the second time and considered in committee.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Act that we are amending has reference to the protection of game in the unorganized portion of the North-west Territories, the far northern part which is not organized, or represented in the North-west Territories Legislative Assembly. The section as it is in the original Act is as follows:

> Any beast, bird or eggs in respect of which, or of any part of which, any conviction has been made under this Act, shall be held to be thereby confiscated, and the authority who has made the conviction may make such disposal of them as he thinks fit. They may be kept for his own use, but shall not be sold or exported.

The provision in the last line, is, in my judgment, very objectionable. We had a case not long ago in which the officer who made the conviction kept the pelt of the animal, in respect to which the conviction was made, for his own use. Great fault was found, and it was thought that the effect of the punishment was very largely done away with by the fact that the convicting magistrate kept the pelt for his own use. I disapproved of it, but when I looked up the Act I found that it authorized the magistrate to do what he had done, and that the magistrate had only done what the Act permitted. I propose to have it amended as follows:

> All animals, birds, fish or eggs, or the pelt, skin or head of any animal, killed, trapped, snared or taken in violation of any provision of this Act, or any part of such animal, bird, fish, pelt, skin or head, shall, after the conviction of the person who so killed, trapped, snared or took the same, respectively, be confiscated to the Crown by the authority who made the conviction——

Practically that is the same as anything else that is taken under a conviction.

> —who shall have power to declare the same so confiscated, and to order the sale or destruction thereof, and, if sold, the proceeds thereof shall be deposited and applied in the manner provided by section 15 of this Act; provided, that such convicting authority may give or direct any animal, bird, fish or egg so confiscated, or any part of such animal, fish or bird, to be given to any religious, charitable or scientific institution or purpose, as in his discretion seems proper.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that under that section the convicting authority might very well continue to appropriate the animal or the skin to himself.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under what clause ?

Mr. MONK. Under the wording of the section which says that he can devote it to some charitable purpose. These North-west men are very ingenious and they might say it was a charitable purpose to keep the skin for themselves.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have correspondence in the department from scientific institutions in the United States and Europe, asking for a specimen, if an animal or bird of a certain description is found, and we exchange specimens in that way. Suppose we say that it should only go to scientific institutions.

Mr. MONK. Very good.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I would ask the minister to put the word 'school' in there before the word 'purpose.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very well.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES IN ONTARIO.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the government to an article that appears in the Toronto News relative to the judiciary of Ontario. At the outset I may say that there are fifteen Superior Court judges in that province, and these are distributed in four different courts. We have first, the Court of Appeal composed of the chief justice and four puisne judges ; then the Chancery division with a chief justice and three puisne judges; and then the King's Bench and Common Pleas divisions similarly constituted. About eight months ago on the retirement of Sir George Burton, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal, Justice Armour was promoted to the position and that left a vacancy in the King's Bench division. That vacancy has existed ever since. It is true that the government made an honest and strong effort to fill the vacancy, because it is well known that Mr. J. J. Foy, K.C., of Toronto, was proffered the position, but he for reasons best known to himself saw fit to decline. The fact that the vacancy has been allowed to exist for so long results in very great detriment and inconvenience to suitors. Under the procedure of our courts, an action may be brought before one of the judges of the King's Bench division without a jury, and if one of the parties feels aggrieved by the judgment he may appeal, and his appeal will come in due course before that very same division. He has the adverse decision of the trial judge against him and his appeal comes before that very same judge again. Associated with the trial judge will be another justice of the court, and if the court divides in its opinion the appellant is left where he originally stood. If the vacancy were filled and there were three judges this could not occur. Again, there are certain actions in the High Court in which an appeal is not permitted to the court of appeal. If the litigant in such a case found himself with the two judges divided, and he then had the right to go to the court of appeal, his position would not be so bad, but he is debarred from going to the court of appeal and thus the unfortunate suitor has to face the judge who has given an adverse decision against him. There was, for instance, what is known as the West Durham case. In that case Chief Justice Falconbridge and Judge Street took different views, and the result was that the action was a nullity, and had to go to the Supreme Court. Had there been three judges in that court, two of them would of necessity have had the same opinion as against one, and that judgment might have been accepted and the case terminated. The Evening News says this, that the following notice has been posted at Osgoode Hall :

> In consequence of it having become necessary for one of the judges to take the business assigned to the Hon. Mr. Justice Meredith, it has been found impracticable to continue the sittings of the divisional court this week.
> If, however, there be any case of special urgency, a court may be specially constituted to hear it. Otherwise, no further sittings of the divisional court will be held this month. By order of the court.

Fancy the position that these suitors are placed in. Take a case involving the ownership of a large quantity of saw-logs. It might be necessary at this time of the year to get these logs down the streams while the water is high, but owing to the fact that an injunction may be pending neither party can touch the logs, and great loss may result. This kind of thing will go on unless the government rises to the occasion. This government boasts that it is a strong government, and surely a strong government ought not be under the necessity of keeping a judgeship dangling before its friends in the province of Ontario for eight months. When the lamented death of Judge Rose caused a vacancy, an appointment was speedily made in the person of Mr. Justice Lount, and I may say that the appointment of that gentleman has given a very great deal of confidence to the bar of the province. But why this other vacancy should be kept dangling for eight months it is hard to surmise. Had Mr. Foy accepted the position, he would have relieved the government from the trouble they find themselves in. I presume that the government has many applicants for the position, but I point out that it is humiliating to see what is going on in reference to this matter when it has been stated in the public press that petitions have been hawked about Toronto asking lawyers to sign them for the appointment of certain gentlemen to the bench.

That cannot do otherwise than bring the judiciary into disrepute, not only in the province of Ontario, but in other provinces as well; for I have recently seen the statement in a Montreal paper that a judicial vacancy has existed in the province of Quebec for some time, and that a member of this House has threatened to resign if an appointment is made not to his liking. In view of the condition in which litigants find themselves in the province of Ontario, and in view of the fact that the present condition of things is demoralizing to the opinion in which the judiciary is held by the public, I trust, now that the attention of the government has been called to the matter, that they will announce that an appointment to the vacant position will speedily be made. I do not know who the fortunate gentleman may be. It is true, this government have evinced a disposition to confine the judicial appointments in the province of Ontario to their political friends. That was not always the case. The government of Sir John Macdonald appointed Mr. Samuel Blake and Mr. Justice Maclennan to the bench, and, I believe, the late Chief Justice Moss, a Liberal, was also appointed by a Conservative administration, though I am not sure as to that. In view of the statements which have been made in the press, and in view of the fact that the business of the courts is congested, I trust that the government will make an appointment to the vacant position at a very early day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to express my regret that my hon. friend did not give me any notice of his intention to bring this important question to the attention of the government. If I had been so notified, I would have informed myself as to the exact condition of judicial matters in the province of Ontario. I shall, therefore, have to answer only with such knowledge as I have. And at the outset I can say from the hon. gentleman's own statement, that I do not think the government are so guilty as he wants to represent them to be. My hon. friend, at the close of his remarks, said that this government had evinced a disposition to appoint to the bench only their political friends, whereas, in the earlier portion of his remarks, he had stated, with equal emphasis, that this government had offered an appointment to Mr. Foy, who is not a friend of the government, but an opponent. At all events, I think my hon. friend will agree with me that since this government have been in office the appointments made to the bench in the province of Ontario have not caused the admitted high standing of that bench to deteriorate. The last appointment made, that of Mr. Justice Lount, has given satisfaction to the bar of Ontario. We thought it would, and that is one reason why we made that appointment. The fact of our having offered, as my hon. friend states, an appointment to Mr. Foy, shows that the government have no inclination whatever to hawk about judicial appointments among their political friends; and the appointment we afterwards made of Mr. Justice Lount shows that the government have some regard to the character of the men to whom they entrust that high judicial office. As to the present position of judicial matters in the province of Ontario, so far as my memory goes, no complaints have been made of the vacancy still existing, caused by the retirement of Mr. Justice Burton. If complaints have been made—I will not say they have not—at least they have not come to my ears. Although I cannot say I look very carefully into these matters, as they do not belong to my immediate office, still I look into them with sufficient care to be pretty well informed; and I really believe that if any complaint had been made I would have known of it, and the government would have taken some action. The article which has been quoted by my hon. friend is the first intimation which I have had that the need of an immediate appointment has been felt; and this is felt, perhaps, as much from the unfortunate illness of Mr. Justice Meredith as from the retirement of Mr. Justice Burton. At all events, it is part of the duty of the government to see that an appointment is made. I would only add another word, and it is with regard to the hon. gentleman's statement that petitions are being signed in the city of Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT. I said they were hawked about one time, before a certain appointment was made—and it was quite current in the newspapers—not at the present time.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know whether any petitions were circulated. The hon. gentleman may have information on that subject which I have not; but, if petitions were circulated at one time, asking for the appointment of this gentleman or that gentleman, it was a most unseemly thing; but my hon. friend will give us this credit, that if there were such petitions, they had no effect at all on the government. I do not know what the hon. gentleman has in his mind as to the object for which petitions were circulated; but, I am quite sure of one thing, that no appointment was made in the province of Ontario because of any petitions being signed in favour of Mr. So-and-so or Mr. So-and-so. This ought to satisfy my hon. friend that the government are not reproachable in that respect. But, the question my hon. friend has brought up is a quite proper one to bring to our attention, and it must engage our attention.

Mr. MONK. In this connection, I might ask the right hon. gentleman if there is going to be a delay to the same extent in the appointment of some one to replace Mr. Justice Ouimet in our province, at Sorel ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know what my hon. friend means. I am sorry to see that my hon. friend, who is an important member of the bar in the province of Quebec, is so ill-informed as not to know that Mr. Justice Ouimet has been replaced two months ago by Mr. Justice Fontaine.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Patent Record, $12,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the hon. gentleman account for the increase of $2,000 in this item ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Owing to the increased number of patents issued during the past year, the Patent Record is a larger volume and the Printing Bureau has charged more.

Mr. SPROULE. How do the fees collected compare with the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The receipts for patent fees go into the consolidated revenue, and the expenditure is regulated by the number of clerks employed and the amount necessary to carry on the business of the office. Roughly speaking, the receipts are something over $100,000 a year, and the expenditure about $30,000 a year.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that the models are kept in one building down on Sparks street, while the patent office is on the third flat of the Langevin block. Is it the intention of the government to continue this arrangement ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The models used to be in the upper part of the Langevin block, but after the fire in the Western block it was found that there was a similar danger of fire in the Eastern block, the upper part of which is largely occupied by the Department of the Interior. It was therefore found necessary to furnish better accommodation for many of the important records of the Interior Department, and my hon. colleague, the Minister of Public Works, asked me whether we could not spare the model rooms in the Langevin block for that purpose. I found that for years back, models were no longer required from applicants for patents, and that models were no longer used by the patent examiners. It did not therefore seem necessary or wise to continue using the spacious departments in the upper part of the Langevin block for these models, which were no longer of practical use, and I advised the Minister of Public Works to that effect. We therefore engaged rooms in a building on Sparks street, where we put on exhibition the most interesting models, and they are there at present. I have, however, advised the Minister of Public Works that it is no longer necessary, so far as the requirements of the department are concerned, to keep even those models on exhibition, and he is at liberty to have them stored away in the same way as a large number of others are stored, and give up renting the room.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be a great mistake to do that. It seems to me that these models are useful, even if not required by the department. Many people examine and take specifications from them when they wish to make something of the same kind, and there ought to be some building provided where they might be properly kept. If we are paying very large rent for the building they are in, it might be possible to purchase ground and erect a building where they could be stored away at less expense, and which could be utilized for other offices as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was no intention to destroy or dispose of them. A large number, as it is, are packed away in cases and stored in the basement of the same building. If the government had an abundance of room, it might be possible to put these models on exhibition, but it would cost considerable to set them out and put them in shape for exhibition. As regards the utility of these models, the number of people who come to examine them in the course of the year for the purpose of getting ideas for similar inventions, is so very small that it is hardly worth while considering it.

Mr. SPROULE. No doubt since they were removed to another building, people do not go to see them to anything like the same extent as they did when these models were in a more prominent place. The reason probably is because people do not know where to find them. But I know that when they were in the Langevin block, a great many strangers used to visit these models.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is quite right, so far as sightseers are concerned, but any one who wishes to examine a model for the purpose of getting information, can obtain all the information he requires from the drawings, copies of which he can get for a very small sum indeed. These drawings are so made that a mechanic can make the object indicated by the drawings and specifications just as well as by seeing the model itself.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that the change which requires applicants for patents only to furnish drawings was made some years ago.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twelve years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. But I know that I have taken parties repeatedly to see the models, who claim that they could not intelligently make the article from the drawing as they could from seeing the model.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have now the figures the hon. gentleman asked for. The receipts for 1900 were $113,852, and the expenditure $43,040, showing a net balance of $70,812.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman gave as a cause of the increase of $2,000 in this vote, the enlargement of the monthly publication of the Patent Record. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some details.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can give the hon. gentleman an indication of the increase in this way: In 1897 the number of patents reported by the examiners was 4,861, and in 1900 it was 6,161, an increase of 1,300. Up to the present date, the increase of this year is even greater; so that, I venture to say in the current year the patents reported upon will number about 7,500.

Mr. CLANCY. Does that mean an increased number of examiners?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. That was not the reason given by the hon. gentleman at the outset, but the greater size of the Patent Record. Now it turns out that the hon. gentleman has additional examiners, and this money goes out in salaries.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Patent Record is a record of the patents issued. When there are more patents issued, the volume is larger. The Printing Bureau charges us for the printing, the cuts and so on, and consequently we have to pay a larger amount.

Mr. CLANCY. How many additional examiners does the hon. gentleman propose to employ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have been adding to the staff of examiners, and consequently have been catching up with the arrears of work and issuing a larger number of patents. The size of the Patent Record depends not on the number of examiners, but on the number of patents issued.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps it is due to my dullness that I do not understand the hon. gentleman. At first, he said the increase was due to the greater size of the volume, for the reason that he has now stated that there is an increase in the number of patents issued. He stated later that, owing to the increase in the number of patents applied for and issued, additional examiners are required.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I have not said anything about that yet.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell the committee whether there is anything in that item of $2,000 for additional examiners.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. As the patents issued are realizing a net income of about $70,000 a year, has the hon. minister ever considered the advisability or wisdom of reducing the expense of obtaining a patent? It seems a small sum, about $45 for an ordinary patent, but I know that many people that take out patents, think it ought to be done for a great deal less. I have long been of opinion that the charge for patents ought not to be more than enough to cover the cost. Has the hon. gentleman given the subject any consideration?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I have. And I have had under consideration somewhat radical changes in the fees and the mode of collecting them. But I have not been able to work out what I consider a satisfactory amendment on these lines. I have examined pretty carefully into the working of the patent laws in the United States and England, and have had several conferences on the subject. Had it not been for the unfortunate long-continued illness of the deputy commissioner of patents, Mr. Scarth, who has been confined to his house during the last year, I think I might have been able to come to some conclusion. But Mr. Scarth, who was helping me in the investigation in this matter, has not been able to take it up with me, and I have been waiting until such time as he could. I am not prepared to say that I can do anything in the matter this session, but I believe that before another session comes, I will be able to introduce a Bill making considerable amendments, amongst them something in the line the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has indicated.

Arts, Agriculture and Statistics—Statistical Year-Book, $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these books are issued usually?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We expect to publish this year, 4,300 copies in English and 1,200 in French, the same number as for the past three years.

Mr. MONK. When is this book supposed to be distributed to the public ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This work is compiled from departmental reports, which are generally ready for the public within six months after the termination of the fiscal year. But it is only after they are all completed that the Statistical Year Book is worked out from them. The result is that practically the Statistical Year Book reaches the hands of the public from a year to fifteen months after the end of the fiscal year with which it deals.

Mr. MONK. In what month was the last issue published ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was laid on the Table of the House toward the end of last session and distributed after the session.

Mr. MONK. Has the French version been distributed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, long before this.

Mr. MONK. There are two things to be said in this connection. In the first place there is great delay in the publication of the French version. In the next place, I do not believe there are a sufficient number of French copies printed for distribution. I have been asked time and again for the French version, and found it very difficult to obtain it ; I have been time and again told it was not ready, or that there were no more copies for distribution. I think the minister should publish a much larger number of the French version. I do not think 2,000 would be excessive.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am surprised to hear my hon. friend's statement, because I have been told by the statistician every year that while he had a large number of French copies left on hand, the whole of the English edition was exhausted. I state positively that has been the case every year. I have been frequently advised that it was not necessary to add to the French edition. I may say that the book is compiled in English originally and is translated immediately by an officer in the department and sent to the printer. If there is any delay in the issue of the French edition, the fault does not lie with the officers of my department. It may be that the printing of the French edition does not take place rapidly, but the translation of the copy is furnished to the Printing Bureau within, at most, a few weeks of the printing of the English copy.

Mr. MONK. There is something difficult to understand in that, and I shall certainly place in the hands of my hon. friend letters that I have received in which I was told that there were no more French copies for distribution.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Was it not that the French copies were not yet issued, or were being issued at the time ?

Mr. MONK. Both.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I grant that the French copy is not printed as soon as it might be after the English copy is issued, but I can hardly understand why, after they are printed, there should be any shortage of the French edition, because I have been told every year that there were French copies on hand but no English ones.

Mr. MONK. I have had letters making complaints of both kinds, and I will look them up and hand them to the minister. I am surprised to hear that only two or three weeks elapsed between the English and the French publication.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said between sending the copy to the Printing Bureau when responsibility in regard to it is removed from my department.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I have seen a copy of the Statistical Year-Book in the Library, and I think it is a very interesting work, and if possible it should be placed in the hands of all the school teachers of this Dominion. It contains knowledge that should be specially disseminated among the agricultural community. How many copies does the minister supply to each member of parliament for distribution ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This book is not distributed as parliamentary printing ; it is not printed on the same basis or on the same principle as the departmental reports and other things which are printed by order of parliament. This book is printed by a special vote. There is in the department a list of public bodies and individuals throughout the country, largely engaged in education, to whom this book is sent as a matter of course. That list has been in existence a long time. Sometimes additions are made to it. I have never disturbed the list that I found when I came into office, except to make some few additions to it. Two years ago, and last year, a demand was made by members of parliament for a number of copies of this book for ordinary parliamentary distribution. That of course can be done if parliament so desires. But the vote that I am asking for is for the purpose of the distribution of that statistical Year-Book as a part of the work in my department. In deference to the requirements of the members of the House I agreed that a limited number of this work should be placed at the disposal of every member, and I said I would try to give about ten copies to each member. I think it is possible to continue that with the vote that I have at my disposal. If parliament wishes to have a larger number distributed to each member, a vote will have to be passed especially for the purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me the efficiency of the work is considerably impaired owing to the delay that takes place in its publication. I never could understand why it requires twelve, fifteen or sixteen months after the returns are made to parliament to get out this book. It is only a compilation, that a few hands ought to be able to put together in a short time, and the printing is not a serious matter. To have it coming out fifteen months after the returns are made diminishes its value. With regard to the number that are distributed, I think it should be increased. We have applications from school teachers and people in various other lines for copies of the book, and are unable to supply more than a small fraction of the number asked for. Some years ago I suggested that certain classes of schools be supplied with this book, and it was thought that would cost too much. But I think the money would be well spent. At any rate, members of parliament ought to have a reasonable number for distribution to those who apply.

Mr. McGOWAN. Does the hon. gentleman send this book to the public libraries throughout the Dominion ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is sent to public libraries, to mechanics' institutes, to the press, and to a number of other people. To send it to all the schools would require an edition of 40,000 or 50,000, and a ten-fold increase of this vote.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman reduced his staff in the Statistical Department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When I came into office in 1896 there were a number of employees whom I dispensed with, but there has been no change within the last year or two.

Mr. INGRAM. That accounts for the delay in getting out the book.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not reduced the staff for the last three years. When I came into office those I dismissed were not engaged on the Statistical Year-Book, but on the remains of the former census.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount of the cost that would cover the cost of printing ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically in this item, the whole amount. The salaries of the men who do the statistical work are in another item under civil government.

Mr. MONK. I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram). I think it would be desirable that we should have a larger number of these books. It is a well prepared book, and it would be of infinite use in our schools. I know that in Montreal, very probably, you will not find in one of the elementary schools in that city, where they have 35,000 or 36,000 children, a single copy of the book. I think a great many of the pupils would be better employed perusing that book than many other books that they have in the schools. I think that next year the minister should make note of the necessity which exists throughout the country and make a larger distribution of that valuable volume.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to give some figures which will show the hon. member for East Elgin that I am correct. In 1893 there were issued 3,374 copies of this book, 2,600 in English and 774 in French, at a cost of $4,431. In 1894 there were issued 2,400 copies in English and 750 copies in French ; that is to say, 200 less in English and 24 less in French than in the previous year, at a cost of $6,000 odd.

Mr. WILSON. The book was larger ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the book was larger. But, I may say that the book to-day contains all the information that it contained at that time in the way of statistical tables, and so on. By condensation and rearrangement the information is all there, although all the opinions that were expressed are not there. In 1895 there were issued 2,400 copies in English and 750 copies in French, at a cost of $6,000. In 1896 3,000 copies in English and 1,000 copies in French were issued. It increased the first year that I came into office. The expense was only $2,100.

Mr. INGRAM. How was the reduction brought about ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By condensing the book and doing the work more cheaply. In 1897 4,300 copies were issued in English and 1,200 in French. The edition of 5,500 cost $2,544. In 1898 the same number was issued, at a cost of $3,090. That was due to the increase in the wages of the Printing Bureau. In 1899 5,500 copies were issued, 4,300 in English and 1,200 in French, at a cost of $3,161.

Mr. WILSON. How many copies does the hon. minister intend to issue this year—an increased number ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the cost per volume comes up to last year, I will have to continue with the same issue, because I have reached the limit of the money which I have at my disposal—$3,000.

Mr. INGRAM. The government have established a department of labour, and the duty of those engaged in this department is to collect labour statistics. It strikes me that instead of creating another department, when the department of statistics has been continued for years, if the government had employed such men as Mr. King and some parties to assist him, and allowed the department of statistics, as now conducted, to collect these labour statistics as well as other statistics, they would have been adopting a wise policy. It would save expense, and if members of parliament and others desiring information in respect to agriculture, labour, or any question affecting the welfare of the people, instead of getting the Statistical Year Book on the one hand, and taking a monthly pamphlet on the other, could get all these statistics in the Statistical Year Book, it would be much handier, because we could get all the information we required on any of these subjects in one volume. It would also be much cheaper than it is under the present system of having a statistical department controlled by Mr. Johnson, and a labour department controlled by Mr. King. I think the statistics would be more accurate, and they would be in a much more convenient form. There would also be the advantage of being able to procure the Statistical Year Book much quicker than it is issued to-day. As the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said, the great fault with the present Statistical Year Book is that too long a time is allowed to elapse between the end of the year with which the book treats, and the time when members of this House receive their copies. It is a great fault, because many persons, when they want to look up different questions, instead of referring to the Year Book, have to take the departmental reports to acquire the information that they desire.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not going into the general question of policy as to the Labour Bureau and the compilation of statistics. I do not agree with the hon. member for East Elgin, that, on the whole, it would be more handy for the public to have all these different kinds of statistics in the same volume. There are many people who want labour statistics, and who are not interested in the other statistics contained in this volume. There are those who are engaged in studying agricultural statistics who are not desirous of studying labour statistics.

Mr. INGRAM. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because they do not happen to be interested in those lines. They may not be or they may be. But they can get full information when the books containing all these particular things are issued. If you were to put all the statistics in one volume it would make a larger and bulkier volume, and those who do not wish to study one part would still have to take that part. The hon. gentleman has to a considerable extent answered himself, when he said that the fault of the Statistical Year Book was, that the information did not come out until twelve or fifteen months from the end of the year for which it was compiled. In the Labour Gazette that information comes out month by month. The information is given promptly and accurately. The Labour Gazette is published for other purposes besides those of statistics, and it deals very largely with other things. I think it is better that all labour matters should be dealt with by men who are specially charged with that kind of work, and that statistical work of another character should be in the hands of others who are accustomed to deal with it. As to the general policy as to the establishment of a Labour Bureau and the publication of labour statistics, I do not know that it is necessary to go into that.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that because a man wishes to find statistics affecting labour he would not be interested in questions of agriculture ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I do not say so.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman could not say so in reason, because it is a well-known fact that all those interests are so closely associated with each other that it is an important question for all persons who wish to understand public questions. I believe that by an increase in the staff of the statistical department, instead of reducing the staff, the Statistical Year Book would be published sooner, and it would be of more advantage to the public.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It never has been.

Mr. INGRAM. That is no reason why it should not be.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Because we know perfectly well that some years ago the Statistical Year Book was a very large book, twice as large as it is to-day, and if you increase the staff, which could be done at a very small cost, it would be a great convenience to the public.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not because of the lack of staff ; it is because it comes out after the other departmental reports.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister will have to find some other explanation for the delay. Every one knows that the Year Book is a mere repetition of tables, and that for each year there has only to be another year added. The book should come out immediately after the departmental reports, because the figures are all in shape for the statistician to classify them. Surely the hon. gentleman will not plead that because the Year Book was late in publication in the past, that he should continue what I consider the insane policy of having a Statistical Year Book a year behind the time. There is not so much work about this after all. Hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, when they were in opposition, were not reputed to be friendly to the Year Book. It was made the subject of annual attack, and whether the minister shared these views or not, his friends were so hostile to it that he can hardly be expected to have become friendly within a few years. This is a useful book, but it is only useful if it is properly issued and in time. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) should give some other reason for his pursuit of this snail policy in the publication of this Statistical Year Book. I think the House will justify the minister in an increased expenditure if he needs a larger staff in order that we may have this book published in proper time, when it can be of use.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What I have stated here is the reason that has been given to me by the statistician. I confess I have left the matter very largely in the hands of Mr. Johnson, a gentleman who was the statistician when I took office, who has been carrying on the work connected with this book ever since it was inaugurated, and who, I believe, is competent to carry it on. I have not given the matter my personal supervision, but I will be glad to tell Mr. Johnson of the remarks made here, and see if he can work out a scheme which will satisfy the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister knows that he is responsible, and that Mr. Johnson is in no sense responsible.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the minister no suggestion of his own to make, rather than merely to tell Mr. Johnson what has been said in this House ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will be very glad if I can hasten the publication of this book.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) is rather off the mark in charging the delay to the statistical department. It was well into the summer last session before the blue-books were laid on the Table, and I understand the Statistical Year Book is compiled from these reports. The report of the Superintendent of Printing states that the Year Book for 1899 was turned out of the Bureau before June 30, 1900, and that is within a month or two of the date that the departmental reports were brought down to this House.

Mr. CLANCY. What departmental reports does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) refer to ?

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) knows that some of the blue-books were not put on the Table until May of last year, and the Statistical Year Book, which is made up from them, was out of the Printing Bureau before June 30 last year.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) is not well informed or he would know that this book is always a year after the departmental reports are made.

Mr. MONK. And the minister admits it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What I said was : that the statistics of the year ending June 30, 1899, are made up in the Year Book which is issued in 1900. about twelve months after, and that is what the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has stated.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) stated, but that is exactly what we are all saying here.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) is correct in stating that the departmental blue-books were laid upon the Table of the House in the month of May last year, and the Statistical Year Book was issued in June.

Mr. SPROULE. Not for the same year.

Mr. CLANCY. Whose fault was it that the departmental reports were not down before ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Our Year Book is like the Newcastle horse, very hard to catch and very little worth when you do catch him. I do not care so much for the delay, but I do say that the make-up of the book and the information it contains is not what should be expected from the Year Book for the Dominion of Canada. I have been in the habit for a long number of years of getting the Year Book of New Zealand, which I will place on the Table for hon. gentlemen to examine, and they will see a Year Book that is worth looking at. Both in the printing and in the information it contains the Canadian Year Book, when we do get it, does not do justice to this great Dominion of Canada.

Mr. MONK. If the Minister of Agriculture will take the trouble to look at the New Zealand Year Book he will feel considerable humiliation at the Year Book published by his department. The preface for the New Zealand Year Book of 1900 is dated August, 1900, and it states that parts of the book have been issued already and circulated in England, as the statistics were being prepared. It is only sufficient to look at the New Zealand Year Book to see how far we are behind. I can readily understand from the remarks of gentlemen who were in the House before the present government came into power, why the Canadian Year Book is thought so little of by the government. I appeal to the minister to get out his Year Book as quickly as possible, and if he wants the necessary money for that purpose, we will not refuse it.

Aid to agricultural societies, $7,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister might tell us how this money is expended.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is expended in the North-west Territories entirely. The local territorial government are not able to encourage agriculture in those territories in the same way that the local governments do in the different provinces, and for many years the parliament of Canada has voted this sum, which is distributed among the agricultural societies of the North-west Territories in proportion to their membership. A return is made every year to the department of the number of members of the different societies.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not object at all to the item, but I think it would be just as well if the whole truth were told in the estimates. Then this item would read: Aid to agricultural societies in the North-west Territories. We have a great deal of complaint from that section of the country that the people there are getting nothing at all, and when we are giving them $7,000, and giving nothing to the other parts of the country, I think we should state the fact.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Might I ask the hon. gentleman why it is given to the North-west Territories and to no other portion of the Dominion ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Each province has the power of taxation and can do this work for itself; but the North-west Territories are not organized, and the Dominion government, which has to act for the Territories, does the work there.

Mr. WILSON. Will the minister explain the difference between the item Statistical Year Book and the item General Statistics, or are they the same ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The item Statistical Year Book is for the printing of the book, while the item General Statistics is for certain temporary clerks who are employed in the department, in collecting statistics and doing work almost entirely for the book ?

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman tell the committee who furnishes the information upon which this grant is made, that is, with regard to the number of members of each society, and so on ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is furnished through the Department of Agriculture of the Territories.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman said that the cost of the Statistical Year Book in 1893 was $4,000, in 1894 $6,000, in 1895 $6,000, in 1896 $2,100, in 1897 $2,500, in 1898 $3,000, and in 1899 $3,100; but when we take these two items together we find that this year it will cost $6,200.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The figures I gave the hon. gentleman were for the printing alone, and did not include this item of general statistics.

Mr. INGRAM. It is not fair to the committee to say that is what the book cost.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman does not mean to misrepresent me. The item before me was for the printing of the book, not for the compilation, which is done by the clerks in the department.

Mr. INGRAM. We did not understand that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot help that.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman was claiming credit for the reduction of the cost of the book. Why did he not say that that was for the printing of the book alone ? Were these items always separate before?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, always. The figures I read were a fair comparison with the cost in previous years.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman say what both items amount to from 1893 to 1899 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would have to look back at the estimates of previous years. The item of $3,200 has I believe been the same ever since I have been in office.

Mr. MONK. How many clerks are employed in this compilation, which costs $3,200 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are as follows : Mr. Watts, $730; Mr. Munro, $725; Miss Ross, $672; Mr. Lepage, $650; sundry accounts, $423; making up the $3,200. But this does not include Mr. George Johnson's salary, nor the salaries of a couple of other clerks in the office.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman unwittingly, I think, did mislead the committee. I was impressed with the remarks the hon. gentleman made. He was discussing the compilation as well as the printing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) asked how the cost came to be reduced. The hon. gentleman's answer was that he had dismissed a staff, who were at work on the census instead of compiling this book, and there was a reduction in consequence.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, no.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that money for agricultural societies paid to the North-west council, or to the individual societies ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To the societies directly.

Mr. CLANCY. Upon a statement made by the North-west council ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The statement comes through the North-west council from the secretaries of the different societies, and is certified to as correct by the secretary of the Department of Agriculture of the North-west Territorial government, he getting the returns from the societies.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not going to quarrel with the grant, but I can say to the hon. gentleman that there is a great deal of slipshod business about it. There is a great deal of padding as to the number of members, which is without foundation, and I think it will be worth while for the hon. gentleman to make inquiry into the matter. He can see at a glance the opportunities there are, in the channels through which the information comes, without attempting to cast discredit on any one.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that when I first came into office this grant was distributed without reference to the territorial government; and to avoid just what the gentleman suggests, and believing that the territorial government had more intimate relations with the people there, I required that the list of members should pass through their hands, thinking they could check it better than I could at this distance.

Experimental farms, $80,000.

Mr. CLANCY. In view of the course taken by the Minister of the Interior with regard to the growth and planting of trees, and in view of what is being done in the experimental farms, the work of one department would seem to have run somewhat into the other. I think the hon. gentleman ought to state to the committee what is being done in that respect at the agricultural farm in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Ever since the establishment of the experimental farm, the attention of the staff has been turned to the cultivation of trees in order to find out what trees were most suitable for plantation in our territorial plains and then producing and distributing such trees as largely as possible to individual farmers. Mr. Mackay, the manager of the farm at Indian Head, started with sowing seeds of certain kinds of trees, which Professor Saunders thought were likely to succeed. He also planted certain seedlings, some of which were procured from the adjoining northern states of the American union, some from Europe, and some from different parts of the Territories where tree seeds could be conveniently collected. This experimental work has been eminently successful. We have at Indian Head rows of trees which, I think, will average from 24 to 30 feet in height and which have been grown during the last twelve years, and to-day form most splendid wind-breaks. After careful investigation, we have found that for every foot added to the height of those wind-breaks, the effect upon the fields to the leeward has been extended forty to fifty feet. When a wind-break is ten feet high, it will help the culture of crops on a stretch of land about 500 feet out from the wind-break. When the tree is twenty feet high, it will affect an extent of 1,000 feet in width, and about forty or fifty feet more in width to every foot added to the height. This is of the utmost importance in those plains in which there has been found difficulty in raising successful crops in all seasons owing to the wind sweep. This work has been going on ever since the farm was started, and we have been able, by the distribution of small bundles of these young trees, to encourage the growing of trees in homesteads all over the North-west Territories. To-day there are many homesteads surrounded by little groves of trees, the first seedlings of which were sent out from the Brandon farm, which furnish striking object lessons to the people of the plains, and the result has been a constant stream of requests for these bundles of trees. But we could not possibly send out a very great number, and those we did send out were only sufficient to form object lessons, and not really form great stretches of wind-breaks for the practical working out of the problem of protecting our wind-swept plains. The Minister of the Interior appointed a gentleman some two years ago, Mr. Stewart, to study this question of forestry, especially in the Territories, and Mr. Stewart came to the conclusion that it would be well for the Department of the Interior, which has charge especially of those lands, to largely increase the supply of such trees to the settlers. The officers of the experimental farm are entrusted with the duty of finding out what can be done, but it is not their duty to supply trees on a commercial scale or in such numbers that the farmers can supply themselves with wind-breaks. That is a work which falls naturally on the Department of the Interior, in whose charge is the improvement and settlement of the public lands of the Dominion, and the officer in charge specially of this work has applied to me to allow the experimental farms to help him in producing large quantities of these trees for general distribution. We have agreed to do this and have devoted a small portion of each of the farms at Brandon and Indian Head to the production of these trees. But as the experimental farms are intended for experimental work and not for commercial production of trees for the settlers, we have required that the Department of the Interior should pay to the Department of Agriculture the expenditure caused by this work, just as my department pays the Printing Bureau for the printing of the Statistical Year-Book, and the details are now being arranged between Professor Saunders and Mr. Stewart.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand from the hon. minister that the work carried on by the experimental farms is of an educational character, in order to ascertain the kinds of trees that will be suited to the country generally and to particular localities as well. That educational work must be to a very large extent already accomplished, and the remaining question is, how that western country can be supplied with proper wind breaks. Then it appears that Mr. Stewart was also called in by the Minister of the Interior to study the kind of trees best suited to that country.

I was impressed with what the hon. gentleman said had already been accomplished by the experimental farms. If the experimental farms have been engaged in carrying out this work, a useful work, I admit, to that country, there was no duty for Mr. Stewart to perform but to draw his salary—and that is what has been suspected from the first. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has given away the case of the Minister of the Interior. What the Minister of the Interior stated, and what Mr. Stewart stated, was, that the latter's efforts were directed toward finding what trees could be grown in that country. That work seems to have been performed by the experimental farm. If that is so, we had better do without Mr. Stewart; or, if the experimental farms have been idle all this time in relation to work, we ought to know it. This matter was under the management of the former government. I am not going to say whether it was well or ill-conducted, but if it was not well carried out in the direction indicated by the hon. gentleman, it was useless then, and it is useless now. The hon. gentleman has said, as I understand, that the experimental farm expects to furnish tree plants for that whole country. But, the people of Canada hold that the government is not called upon to do more than carry on the educational work. There is no more reason why the government of Canada should furnish windbreaks at the public expense than there is why it should build barns for the farmers of that country. I am glad to hear the minister say that the educational work has been fairly well done in that country. And in the face of that statement the Minister of the Interior should withdraw the grant that he has asked this House to give him for that purpose; from the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture, it would seem that the department was teaching Mr. Stewart. I rather think the hon. gentleman is right in that. Because, as everybody knows, Mr. Stewart had not given this subject special study and was not specially informed upon it. He was respectably, and, I hope, profitably, employed for many years —all his life in fact—as a provincial land surveyor. He had nothing to do with matters of this kind, nor was he called upon to fit himself for a position of that kind. I am glad to have the hon. gentleman make the statement that the work is being well done by the experimental farms there, and after that statement, which I regard as very important, I think the House will hesitate to pay for the carrying out what I think I may characterize as the pretended work of Mr. Stewart.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not my duty, nor is it my purpose, to discuss the grant which has been made by this House, I believe, to my hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, to carry out this work. But, I wish to say a word or two with regard to the sense in which the hon. gentleman has taken the question up. I am sure he does not wish in any way to misrepresent me, but he has tried to give a complexion to what I said that is entirely different to what I intended. Mr. Stewart has not called in the officers of the experimental farm to teach him anything, but he is simply asking us to produce the plants which, according to his opinion from observation of the work on the plains will be useful for wind-breaks. Mr. Stewart's intention, as I understand from him—I was not present to hear the explanation that my hon. friend and colleague (Mr. Sifton) gave here the other night—is to give object lessons on a large scale to the people in the different parts of the plains, by planting wind-breaks on a considerable scale, perhaps half a mile or a mile long, for the purpose of showing the different kinds of trees that can be used—to carry on on a large scale the work that the experimental farm has been carrying on on an experimental scale.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will pardon me, but he was not present when the Minister of the Interior explained the matter. If he will consult 'Hansard' he will see that on the application of any person the Department of the Interior would take the work in hand for that person.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And they will show how this work ought to be done to be successful, having studied the conditions, the methods and the requirements. It is to help the settlers to accomplish work which is so much in the interest of the country there. This work the experimental farm has not undertaken to do, because it was out of the line carried on at the farm and by the officers of the farm. I have explained what the farms are doing, and I will leave the explanation of the other work to my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton), who is in charge of it.

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. minister stated that the work done by Mr. Stewart and the officers there is merely experimental.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not intend to say that. But, what I intended to say, and what I think I said, was that that was the work that the farm was doing.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Stewart stated that on the application of anybody, a man was sent out to give instructions as to tree planting. He views the land and makes a rough sketch, which is sent to the head office, where a plan is drawn to a scale, and this officer will go back and see to the planting of the wind-breaks. If that is to be done throughout Manitoba and the North-west Territories, the government will have a whole army of officers. I do not think that that should be done, nor do the members of this House, I believe. I should like to have an explanation as to the proportion of this $80,000 that is to go to each of the farms. Then, as to the course in giving out trees, have they given out small trees, or have they furnished the farmer with seeds? I understand Mr. Stewart to say that where seeds could be given, it was better than to have the small trees planted.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The only place to which the Experimental Farm sent out trees to any extent is in the North-west Territories. Occasionally a few ornamental shrubs which we want to test are sent into eastern parts of the country, but that is not the regular work of the farm. In the North-west Territories, however, small bundles of perhaps a dozen trees, or twenty or twenty-five in some instances, have been sent up, young trees. In other cases small bags of tree seed have been sent out. The farm at Indian Head and at Brandon collect seeds from all the trees growing there every season, and these seeds are distributed when asked for, much in the same way that grain and potato seed are distributed from the other farms to the farmers for trial. The hon. gentleman asked what proportion of this amount was spent on the various farms. The Central Farm at Ottawa takes $42,000; that includes the salaries of the officers at the Central Farm, and I may say it also includes practically the whole of the seed distribution which goes on from the Experimental Farm.

Mr. WILSON. Is the seed gathered on the farms in the North-west and British Columbia, distributed to the farmers there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A part of it is, and a part of it is sent down here to be used in the eastern part of the Dominion. There is much more seed distribution proportionately from the Central Farm than from any branch farm. The maritime province farm takes about $9,000; the Manitoba farm takes about $10,000; the Indian Head farm about $10,000, and the British Columbia farm about $9,000.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could tell what kind of trees have been found to be successful.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not say definitely without looking at the report, but I may say in a general way that the Manitoba maple has been found most successful, and is most generally used. There is also a tree called, I think, the Russian poplar that has been successfully used, but it breaks more easily than the Manitoba maple.

Mr. CLANCY. Has that been found successful all over the Territories?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not say as to that. There are some parts in which it has been difficult to get any trees to grow successfully, but I think those parts are narrowing down. I think that in those sections where trees have not been grown successfully it has been owing to want of careful cultivation. I do not think the experiments of the Central Farm have yet shown a state of affairs about which we could dogmatize. It is possible that in certain sections other trees might be found more successful, because, although we have sent small packages of trees to the farmers in many parts of the Territories, I am sorry to say that in many cases the trees when planted have not been properly taken care of and treated as the directions called for. But we are not prepared to say that, because a package of trees sent to a particular farmer in a particular locality has not been successful in his hands, that therefore, they could not be successful elsewhere. But we take the reports as we get them and tabulate them as well as we can, and draw from them such conclusions as we feel justified in doing.

Mr. CLANCY. I can understand that there may be cases where the trees have not been given a fair chance; but this work has been going on for many years, and surely the hon. gentleman will not now confess that he is unable to present any definite information as to the result of the experiments. I want to call his attention to a statement that was made in this House by a gentleman from the North-west to the effect that this Manitoba maple is the victim of an insect, and has been found a failure. That statement has been made in the House, I do not know whether the minister heard it; but the hon. gentleman who made that statement is sitting in his place to-night. And he has stated that this tree of which the minister speaks has been planted in the vicinity of Winnipeg as well as in the Territories, and has been found to be a failure.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not undertake to give information on that point without looking into the matter more carefully.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely after the hon. gentleman painted in the most roseate hues the success of the Experimental Farm in tree planting, he is not now going to collapse and to say that he does not know anything about it.

Mr. MONK. This brings into question the position of Mr. Stewart. When I heard the description given by the Minister of Agriculture of the success of the experiments made in the North-west in regard to trees, and particularly trees planted as wind-breaks, it seemed to me, in the first place, that we must be ready to vote any amount of money to the experimental farms, and in the next place, I asked myself what the position of Mr. Stewart really was. Would the minister tell us what is the function of Mr. Stewart? At one moment he says that Mr. Stewart is working in conjunction with the employees of the farm in the North-west on extensive trials of tree planting for wind-breaks; at another moment the minister disclaims any knowledge of Mr. Stewart, and the amount which we voted the other night he says he is not called upon to defend. Now, I would like to know what Mr. Stewart's position is there. Has he really under his direction a certain number of farm hands engaged in new experiments, experiments on a grand scale of planting wind-breaks half a mile long? They say that he is not in the department of the minister. But, I find an immense variance between what the hon. Minister of the Interior told us as to the mission of Mr. Stewart in the North-west Territories, and that mission as explained to us by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. I would like to find some way of conciliating these two gentlemen before we proceed to adopt this resolution.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend need not find any trouble. There is no difficulty in conciliating us. Mr. Stewart is an officer of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and I have no details as to his work. Mr. Stewart does not report to me, and although I have talked with Mr. Stewart frequently, I have no information under my hand to give to the committee in regard to Mr. Stewart. All I said about Mr. Stewart in connection with the experimental farms was, that by an arrangement between myself and my colleague, the hon. Minister of the Interior, the director of the experimental farms is going to raise trees on the experimental farms for Mr. Stewart's work. I did not inquire particularly what Mr. Stewart is going to do with them. I have no control over Mr. Stewart's operations after he gets these trees, but that work is going to be carried out on the experimental farms at the expense of the Department of the Interior. I have no further information in regard to Mr. Stewart's work to give to the committee on this occasion, and the vote which we are now discussing is not a vote for Mr. Stewart or a vote under the control of the department for which Mr. Stewart works.

Mr. MONK. That is about as clear as mud to me, because the hon. gentleman told us a moment ago that the work of his department in the North-west Territories was purely experimental. I understood him to say distinctly that the experiment in regard to raising trees had extended over several years and that the conclusion was arrived at that it was perfectly successful. Now, he tells us that the experimental farm is, under the direction of this officer, Mr. Stewart, to raise trees for experimental purposes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The work is not going to be done under the direction of Mr. Stewart, but under the direction of the director of the experimental farms.

Mr. MONK. For Mr. Stewart.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All the trees that are produced are to be handed over to Mr. Stewart for his work.

Mr. MONK. For distribution.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For his work, whatever it may be.

Mr. MONK. Well, I give it up.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Hear, hear.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the hon. minister could tell us the number of farmers to whom trees or tree seeds have been distributed from the different experimental farms. I presume he keeps a record of that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, there is a record, but I have not it under my hand. I could not give the hon. gentleman the number of farmers to whom tree seeds have been distributed.

Mr. WILSON. For the past year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not see any record of it in the report of the Brandon farm.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is any truth in the alleged statement of Mr. Stewart which was repeated here the other night that all experiments in tree planting in the North-west Territories had utterly failed and that Mr. Stewart's mission was to go around preaching the proper doctrine of tree planting, and to give the people instruction as to how trees could be raised and proper experiments could be made. That statement was made here, and I would ask the hon. minister how he reconciles it with his own splendid experiments in the North-west ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not attempt to reconcile it. I do not know whether it was made or not.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman stated in the early part of the evening that it was found to be difficult for the agricultural farms to produce trees to any considerable extent for planting in the country more than merely for experimental purposes. I understood the hon. gentleman to make that statement.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said we had not done so before.

Mr. CLANCY. Am I to understand that the hon. gentleman intends to enlarge the building of tree planting now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, at these farms for this purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman intend to grow trees at the experimental farms to provide wind-breaks in the country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I propose to raise trees and to hand them over to Mr. Stewart for whatever uses his department requires them and Mr. Stewart's department, the Department of the Interior, has to pay for that work.

Mr. CLANCY. But, it is paid out of the public purse.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. What I ask the hon. gentleman is if he is going to devote, to a larger extent than in the past, the efforts of the farms to the growth of trees for the purpose of making wind-breaks upon the application of such parties as may apply to the Department of the Interior. Is his department to be a pack horse for the Department of the Interior ? The hon. gentleman stated in most explicit terms, that, while in the past, only a comparatively few trees were grown for educational purposes, now he intends to enlarge the service and hand the trees over to Mr. Stewart to make wind-breaks in the country. I do not think I am misstating the hon. gentleman in the statement that I make. If it is the intention for the Agriculture Department to furnish trees to the Department of the Interior because the Department of the Interior pays for them it is a mere change of tyrants. It does not make any difference which pays for them; it all comes out of the public purse. The question is : Should it be paid for at all in the sense of work that is to be carried out by Mr. Stewart ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is another matter.

Mr. SPROULE. In the distribution of these trees to the farmers, are they to be charged for, or are the farmers to pay anything for them ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My department has nothing to do with the distribution of them. We hand them over to Mr. Stewart's branch and he deals with them entirely.

Mr. SPROULE. In connection with that, we would require more information because you are establishing a new line. It is practically the establishment of nurseries for the benefit of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. If you are going to supply the demand for trees which will be enormous in the future it would be well for us to know whether they are to be supplied free or to be charged for. If you are to become the patrons of the farmers in the whole country it would be a very expensive business.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not going to give them to the farmers. I am going to give them to the Department of the Interior and I am not able to give the hon. gentleman any information. The information does not really affect this vote because the money asked for here is not going to be used for that purpose in any way whatever. I do not raise any technical objection to the hon. gentleman's questions; I would be glad to give him the information if I could. But, the work, being paid for by the Department of the Interior, I am not in a position to give him any information in respect to it. This work is not being done by my officer, but by an officer responsible to and paid by that department. The products will be handed over to them to do with them as they see fit according to the needs of their work. I am not responsible for that part of it.

Mr. SPROULE. This vote in the first instance applies directly to the experimental farms. They are undertaking a new line of work for which the hon. Minister of Agriculture asks an amount to be voted in the estimates.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, Sir.

Mr. SPROULE. Well now, will the hon. minister wait till he hears the statement I am about to make before he so emphatically contradicts it ? I say that he asks for that item in the estimates for these experimental farms while at the same time he tells us that they are undertaking this work. It is for us to say whether it is the part of wisdom to commence this divergence or not. Therefore, it is necessary to get this information to enable us to judge whether it is wise to keep up the farms for that purpose. I think the hon. minister ought to be in a position to give that information to the committee.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No increased expenditure which is required for this work is to be taken out of the vote under consideration. The land of the farm is to be used, it is true, but any other work in connection with the raising of these trees for this purpose is to be paid for by the Interior Department.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps only a dozen farmers may apply this year, but if the experiment is a great success there may be a thousand applications next year. This will, of course, entail increased work on the farms, and before we determine whether it is wise to maintain these experimental farms for that purpose, we should have the information I have asked for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot give any more information.

Mr. MONK. I do not think that is at all fair. As the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out, we are embarking upon a new policy. I am far from saying that it is not a proper thing to maintain these tree nurseries for the farmers of the North-west, but surely we are entitled to know what amount out of this vote is to be expended for the cultivation of these trees.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No portion of this vote will be so expended.

Mr. MONK. Who will pay the expense then ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Minister of the Interior will pay the expense in that connection. I have already explained that no part of this $80,000 will be devoted to that work. The farm work will be carried on as it has been in the past, and every bit of work connected with the raising of these trees will be paid for out of the Interior vote.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, we are commencing to divide the farm work between two departments of the government, and that is a bad system. In the past we thought it wise to keep all this work under the Department of Agriculture, so that we might see at a glance what is the expenditure and what is the progress made. If the Department of the Interior becomes a co-partner with that of Agriculture, it will be more complex and more difficult to get at the value of the work done.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Although the work is going to be paid for by the Department of the Interior, that department will not have anything to do with the actual management of the work. The work will be done by the farm at the expense of the Interior Department, but it will be done by my officers and by the hands employed on the farm, and if more hands are needed, as they will be for this work, the time and the work of those hands will be charged to the Minister of the Interior, just the same as the Printing Bureau charges my department with printing other work.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that on one of these farms a dozen men are employed and three are engaged in the arboretum, and the demand will so increase in the future that it will require a couple of hundred hands to supply it, that extra demand would not be in connection with the farm work, and yet we will be called upon to vote larger sums year after year, to meet this increased employment of labour.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Through the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SPROULE. Will not the Department of Agriculture pay for the farm hands ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is impossible for me to explain any further than I have.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister told us a few minutes ago that this vote covered the salaries of the farm hands. But suppose this work requires a far greater number of hands, will we not be obliged to vote a larger sum year after year to pay them ? In order to enable us to determine if it is wise to enter into this business, it is essential that we should have the information that we ask. As soon as the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture get through their consultation, I will resume. I am not talking for the mere amusement of it, nor for the purpose of killing time, but with the endeavour—somewhat ineffectual, I admit—to get information which we ought to know before we can intelligently vote this money. We ought to know upon what line it is proposed to distribute these trees to the farmers, and whether or not, an unlimited number will be supplied in the future, as the demands may increase.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I must tell the hon. gentleman frankly that that is information which I cannot give. My hon. colleague (Hon. Mr. Sifton) has that information, and I believe gave it to the House when he got the vote out of which this expenditure is paid. I have explained that the money which I am asking now will not go for that purpose, and therefore I do not think I can fairly be called upon to give that information.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand that no portion of this $80,000 will be applied to the distribution of the trees ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None of it will go for paying the expense of supplying these trees to the Interior Department. Some of it now does go for the distribution of trees, as has been the case for years, and that same kind of distribution will be continued, but that is different from the distribution carried on by Mr. Stewart for the Interior Department. In answer to my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), I wish to say that I have found a statement of the amount of tree seed, and trees distributed from the Brandon farm last year. The following is the distribution : Six hundred bags of maple seed, of one pound each ; three hundred and sixty-one packages of seedling trees containing various numbers of box elders, cottonwood, caragana arborescens, plum seedlings and artemisea cuttings.

Mr. WILSON. These were distributed in the North-west ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. In the Auditor General's Report (D—31) there is an amount of $395.46 for distribution of trees from the Brandon Experimental Farm. Do these trees go to farmers in that neighbourhood ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was the cost of the distribution which was carried on at Brandon. These tree seeds and seedling trees are sent out through the province of Manitoba in the same way as seed grain is sent out all over the country from the experimental farm here.

Mr. INGRAM. Then I understand that the Department of Agriculture does not intend to go any further than it is doing now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the same kind of work.

Mr. INGRAM. But the Department of the Interior intends to inaugurate a system of planting wind-breaks for the farmers of the North-west, and the government is to pay for the trees for that purpose ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a detail of the work as to which I am not in a position to give information to the committee, because it belongs to my colleague's department. While I have talked the matter over with him, I have not under my hand the details as to how the work is to be done.

Mr. MONK. When we come to Mr. Stewart's mission in the North-west, the Minister of Agriculture reminds me of a character in one of Dicken's novels, who, whenever asked a question, replied : 'You must really know what you want to know.' I suppose this new line which is to be taken up on the experimental farms of the North-west has not been taken up without a previous understanding with the Department of the Interior as to the extent to which this tree-planting would be carried as an experiment in favour of the farmers of the North-west. What is the agreement arrived at as to that, and what are the trees which at the present moment are being nursed on the farms to serve as wind-breaks.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As to the exact extent of this work, I would have to inquire of Professor Saunders. I left the matter in his and Mr. Stewart's hands for mutual arrangement. In the conversation I had with him, it was considered that four or five acres of tree seed would be planted at each of these farms this spring. The hon. gentleman asks what trees are at present on the farms for this purpose. There are none. That work is just beginning. We have been doing this work for years, and a list of the trees that are planted appears in the reports of the farm from year to year.

Mr. MONK. What is the tree Mr. Stewart has recommended ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell exactly. We are going to plant two or three different kinds, we think. The Manitoba maple and the cottonwood have been mentioned ; but I would not undertake from casual conversation to give the committee a list of the trees that are to be started. That is under discussion between Professor Saunders and Mr. Stewart.

Mr. MONK. Then it amounts to this, that we are entering into this work without knowing the extent to which it is to be carried or what trees are to be planted. I do not think it is fair for the minister to ask us for this vote without giving that information.

Mr. SPROULE. It looks like a vote of want of confidence in the Minister of Agriculture by the Minister of the Interior. The hon. gentleman tells us that his department have carried on that work for some years, but I understood that it was comparatively a failure—why ? Because it was not done on intelligent lines. Now the work is to be taken out of his hands by the Minister of the Interior. The hon. gentleman's department will do the menial work of planting seeds, but as soon as the trees are above the ground the Minister of the Interior will take charge of them and will become the medium between the farm and the farmers. That is the sum and substance of the information we have had up to the present. Would the minister tell us about the number of stock on these farms, and what experiments are being carried on generally ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The annual report of the farms gives full details of the number of head of animals of all kinds on each farm. I could look up the report, and give it to the committee if the hon. gentleman insists upon it; but I do not think that is what he means. We have on these farms cattle, sheep, swine and poultry as well as horses for the carrying on of the work. In round figures we have at the present time on the experimental farm at Ottawa 125 or 130 head of cattle, 35 or 40 sheep, 40 or 50 pigs, and between 100 and 200 head of poultry. I would not like to give a more exact statement without referring to the actual figures. At the farm of the maritime provinces at Nappan we have probably 75 head of cattle, including the young calves, 40 or 50 pigs, 30 or 40 sheep, 40 or 50 head of poultry, and the horses necessary for carrying on the work. We have at Brandon about the same number as at Nappan, and at Indian Head about the same—perhaps not as many cattle. I do not think we have any sheep at either Brandon or Indian Head. At Agassiz, B.C., we have a smaller stock—20 or 25 head of cattle, 12 or 15 sheep, 20 or 30 pigs, some poultry and a few horses. The hon. gentleman has asked me about the lines of stock breeding and general work. I must be pretty general. The details of all this are given before the Committee on Agriculture every year by the officers of the farm, and it would be tedious and, I think, unimportant for me to go into the details. But generally I may say that at the farm here and at the Nappan farm we carry on considerable dairy work, besides feeding cattle for beef every winter. I have a number of steers fattened every spring, most of which were bought in the fall and sold in the spring. They are fed on experimental lines, and the results are published in the report for the information of all those interested in feeding stock. The feeding of swine and sheep and poultry is also carried on for the same purpose. The farms in the west are less devoted to dairying, although at each some cows are kept all the year round.

Mr. SPROULE. A few years ago there was considerable tuberculosis among the stock, and while a number were slaughtered, I understood that some were kept in quarantine under treatment. What has been the result of that treatment?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was none of that stock kept at the farm. The animals that were found to be tuberculous were slaughtered, with the exception of ten head, which were sent to Montreal, and put into a small quarantine station to be treated by Dr. McEachran. They were kept about ten months and then slaughtered. Since that other animals have been quarantined in the same way, and subjected to various experiments, but there have been no tuberculous animals on the farm since the spring or winter of 1897. Since then we have carefully tested every animal purchased with the tuberculine, and when, as has occurred in very few instances, reaction took place, the animal was slaughtered immediately.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman made up his mind as to the value of the tuberculine test?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That subject will be more properly treated under the heading of the tuberculosis vote.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. minister has stated that the cost of growing trees for distribution in the Territories was to be paid by the Interior Department. Has the hon. gentleman made any calculation to show what that additional cost will be?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, because that matter is now being arranged between Prof. Saunders and Mr. Stewart, and the details are not yet settled.

Mr. CLANCY. I see that out of an expenditure of $15,000 voted last night to the Interior Department, only $1,500 is for tree-planting. Evidently the Interior Department has made no provision for what the hon. gentleman says that department will have to pay with regard to those trees.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $1,500 will cover the expense.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, it is evident not much will be done.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the plan adopted with regard to the distribution of these trees? Have the farmers to apply to the Agriculture Department for the trees they require, or will so many trees be distributed to each municipality?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a matter with which the Department of the Interior has to deal and not my department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the Minister of the Interior should be here to give the explanation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He explained it when his items were before the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly $1,500 is not going to meet the expense of raising and distributing these trees and supplying all the tools necessary to cultivate them. If the Department of the Interior is to run the business, why not give the land to that department, and not make a joint account?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because it is considered that the work will be done more cheaply and better by the experimental farms.

Mr. MONK. Have any representations been made to the hon. minister for the establishment of a farm—I do not say an experimental farm—but a farm under government control in the province of Quebec?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Requests have come from various parts to increase the number of experimental farms. The Experimental Farm Act specifies the number and where they shall be. The farm at Ottawa is on the boundary between Quebec and Ontario, so that it serves these two great provinces. That was the decision arrived at by our predecessors, whom the hon. gentleman and his friends have supported.

I confess that I consider that the number of experimental farms at present is sufficient for the needs of the experimental work of the country, so far as great experimental farms can carry on that work. I have always believed as I stated when the establishment of the experimental farms was originally proposed, that it would have been better if, instead of the great farms, farms smaller in extent and less expensive in their management—small illustration or experimental stations—had been established all over the country. That view was not accepted at the time. Great establishments were made at the various points, and a large amount of money was spent on them, and a large amount of annual expenditure entailed. We would not be able to change that whole policy without making a radical change in the Act, and involving the country in large additional expenditure. The work has been done on the lines laid down, it has been carried out by the officers in an excellent manner. I am glad to say that this work inaugurated by my predecessors in office and my political opponents has been well carried out, and has resulted in great advantage to the farming industry and population of the country. I am not prepared, in view of the large expenditure of the farms to-day, to propose a radical change in the farm policy. I have had it in view, as is well known to hon. members who were in the last parliament to extend the work with establishments on a smaller scale. But that was met with such opposition by hon. gentlemen opposite, and by other gentlemen in this House, that it was dropped. I still believe that it would be in the interest of agriculture and of the community at large, if such a change could be brought about. But I have not seen my way to repeat the proposal this session. It would not have involved any change in the management or equipment of the present experimental farms.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman has gone far beyond the question I asked him. What I wished to elicit a reply to is this—as he says there is no desire in the province of Quebec to have a complete experimental farm; but representations have been made, I believe, and figures laid before him to show that the Experimental Farm at Ottawa is not easily accessible, and therefore it is desired that a station upon a modest scale, a sort of model farm, should be established near Montreal. I wished to know if the minister had arrived at a decision on these representations. I know that such representations have been made from my own county.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Similar representations have been made from various sections all over the country.

Mr. MONK. But I would like the hon. minister to answer with regard to the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am going to answer the hon. gentleman's question, but in the way I think right to answer it. Similar representations and requests have been made from various parts of the country, from Vancouver on the west to Prince Edward Island on the east. I have never seen my way to acceed to one of these requests, or to deal with them as I thought it would be well to do, if I dealt with one.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been the hon. gentleman's success or otherwise in dealing with the San José scale last year and the year before?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Here again I would point out that I am taking a vote to deal with that, and I shall be prepared to discuss the subject when the question comes up.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, there is an item?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes—not in the main estimates, but in the supplementary estimates for this year or next year.

Mr. McCREARY. In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has stated, that these farms have become unwieldy——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are the same as they were.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, but they have accomplished their object and are not accomplishing the same object to-day—has it been brought to his attention that these establishments might be turned rather into agricultural schools than into experimental farms. Many hon. gentlemen on both sides have expressed the idea that we should have more British immigrants. But I submit that the only British immigrants we are likely to get—and I think the reports of the High Commissioner will bear me out—are young men who are not familiar with farming—sons of professional men and others. Their parents send these young men out with sums varying from £100 to £600. But the difficulty is to get these young men to engage in farming. If they go to cattle ranching or horse ranching, that is looked upon as a kind of sport, and they will go into it at once. But as to going into actual farming, they hesitate to risk their capital, on account of lack of knowledge of farming. The only alternative is to send them to a farmer at £1 per month for a year at least to learn farming. The farmer is looking after the almighty dollar, like most other men, and he tries to get all the work he can out of the boy who goes to him at this small wage. Of course, a young man brought up in luxury is apt to get tired of the work, and many of them flock to the cities in Canada or the United States, or go back home and say that farming is mere slavery. If there were one or two farms started in the west to which the parents could send their boys, knowing that they were to attend a government school and learn farming in a practical, as well as in a theoretical manner, the parents to pay £100 a year, that would be one solution of the question. These farms need not cost the country very much, for they could probably be made self-supporting. Hon. members on both sides of the House must be aware that in past years it has been the custom of some parties to send out boys on the farm pupil system, which was a curse. The High Commissioner had to report upon it, and it has been done away with nearly altogether, though it is still carried on secretly. And, being carried on secretly, the boys who come out must be sent to speculators in the west, at the outskirts of civilization, at whose hands he is certain to be subject to abuse. We have actually had to send the mounted police to take these boys away from these people and save them from the abuse that was being heaped upon them. These were the sons of wealthy men in the old country. If the hon. minister would consider the advisability of turning the farm at Brandon or Indian Head into a school of that sort, I believe that he would see that it would be a move in the right direction.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would point out, in the first place, that what we may call agricultural education, like every other kind of education, is purely within the sphere of the provincial government, and the provincial law. Several of the provinces of the Dominion have provided out of their own resources for the agricultural education within their boundaries, which I think is the proper method of providing for education, agricultural or otherwise.

Mr. McCREARY. There they are trying to settle them on lands owned by themselves, but the Dominion own the lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories with regard to settlement.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I wish to point out that the work of the experimental farm is not in any way connected with teaching people on those farms to do farm work. The experimental farms are for the purpose of investigating facts and truths in connection with the production and utilization of farm crops. That experimental work is entirely inconsistent with the teaching of ignorant pupils. That must be done by those who have a scientific training. I venture to think that such a system in the experimental farm would involve a radical change in the whole aim and object of those farms, and would be entirely inconsistent with their present work.

Mr. SPROULE. Is any portion of this vote used for repairs of buildings at the farms ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is used for the purchase of implements, but not for repairs of buildings, which are done by the Public Works Department.

Printing and distribution of reports and bulletins of farms, $4,000.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that there is some complaint made by the farmers that the reports of the experimental farms are much delayed in distribution. Farmers have brought to my attention the fact, for instance, that experiments made in one year are not available to them until the second succeeding season, on account of delays in the distribution. It would be advantageous if the distribution could be made so that the farmers would have the benefit of the reports in the next succeeding year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In justice to my officers, I must say that invariably, or almost so, the various reports of experimental farms, are placed in the hands of the printer before the 1st of January, in any year. The reason of the long delays has not been due to any neglect on the part of my officers. In consequence, however, of the complaints that have been made, I have arranged this year with my colleague, the Secretary of State, who controls the Printing Bureau, to have the report of experimental farms for last year printed more promptly, and it is now being printed, and is almost completed. It was only placed in the hands of the printer on the 27th or 28th of December. It is now more than half printed, and I trust that before the close of the session the whole report will be printed and distributed.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) complained of the lateness of the distribution of this report. The evidence given before the Agriculture Committee, which is largely the same as that contained in the report, is generally printed every session, and a large number of copies are distributed to members of parliament. But the trouble is that although the order is given early in the session with the view of having those reports distributed before the session closes, they are often issued too late, and have to be sent to the members at their homes. I think if a little more expedition was used in the Printing Bureau this report could be got out before the session of parliament is over. There are about 20,000 copies printed for distribution by members, and unless they are got out during the session they are of very little use.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have mentioned that fact to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. But I want this committee to know that the Department of Agriculture and the Minister of Agriculture have absolutely nothing whatever to do with the distribution of the evidence which is taken before the Committee on Agriculture. That is purely a matter concerning the Printing Committee of parliament, and the department cannot interfere with it. Some time ago I undertook to do something and I was simply told it was none of my business.

Mr. SPROULE. If I were a Minister of the Crown and I got an answer like that from any department, I would know the reason why. The government are there to control the Printing Bureau.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it is not the Printing Bureau, it is the committee of the House that has control of the matter. I have no control over it, I cannot go to the Printing Bureau and ask the Bureau to do anything, because they say that it is under the direction of the committee of the House, and they refuse to recognize me as having any authority.

Mr. SPROULE. It depends largely upon the number of employees engaged in that Printing Bureau whether they will turn out the work early or late, and the hon. gentleman, as a member of the government, is responsible to that extent for the action of the Printing Bureau, and he should see that the staff is enlarged. The committee only gives the order, but the order may not be executed by the Printing Bureau as soon as it ought to be. The question is, Why ? There are either not enough hands employed, or they have not enough machinery, or they are dilatory in their work. They must be amenable to the department to which the Printing Bureau belongs.

Mr. WILSON. Are these reports not distributed from the experimental farm to the parties whose names have been given in by members ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The bulletins ?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. That is what I thought, so that it does not matter so much whether they are printed before the House rises or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is discussing the evidence which is given before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WILSON. I mean the evidence.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is not distributed from the farm. The farm has nothing at all to do with it.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think I have got a copy of it for two or three years.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is because it has not been sent by the committee of the House.

Mr. WILSON. I understood it was distributed from the experimental farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is an entire mistake.

Mr. WILSON. I furnished a list to the experimental farm of those I wished to be supplied in my riding with these reports and I expected they would get them but they have not gone out. I have been mistaken about that. I think somebody ought to move that these reports should be distributed fairly to the members, and that every constituency should be fairly furnished with the information that we get before the Agricultural Committee.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I want the hon. gentleman to understand the difference between the evidence taken before the Committee on Agriculture and the reports and bulletins which are issued from the farm.

Mr. WILSON. I understand the difference.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman understands the difference I need say no more.

Mr. CLANCY. This is an important question which has arisen more than once in regard to the delay in having reports sent out. For instance the question has come up more than once in connection with the printing of certain departmental reports, the Auditor General's Report, and so on. The hon. minister knows that the standing committee of the House ceases to have any functions when the House rises. Therefore, whatever may be done must be done during the sitting of the House. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who is responsible for that ? Does it belong to the Department of the Secretary of State ? Who is the officer who is responsible ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The officers of the House.

Mr. CLANCY. Under Mr. Speaker ? It would be well to learn who is responsible in order that this may be remedied. It is certainly a very great evil and we ought to be able to trace the responsibility to the officer whose duty it is to see that this is done.

As I said before, when the House rises a standing committee ceases to have existence for the purpose of performing the duty involved in this discussion. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is able to state, after the House rises, whose duty it is to carry out the orders of the committee so far as they have gone ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman which officer of the House it is, but it is an officer of the House.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the hon. minister will be able to tell us to what extent the annual report of the Committee on Agriculture is distributed ? How many are printed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The evidence which is given before the Committee on Agriculture by the different officers is ordered to be printed by the Committee on Agriculture itself. There was a motion the other day in the committee ordering 20,000 copies to be printed. The committee regulates this for itself. I believe that the committee makes a recommendation of that kind which is referred to the Committee on Printing and that the Committee on Printing gives a final decision. I understand by the rules of the House that if any one of the standing committees wants certain things printed it refers its recommendation to the Committee on Printing and the Committee on Printing eventually gives the order.

Mr. WILSON. I was asking when the whole report was printed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no such report of the Committee on Agriculture that I know of.

Mr. MONK. The hon. member (Mr. Wilson) means the printed evidence.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think my hon. friend is referring to the farm report.

Mr. WILSON. No, I am referring to the evidence taken before the committee. It is in a form like this report. I want to know to what extent this has been distributed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To the extent the Printing Committee ordered it.

Mr. WILSON. You have nothing to do with it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing whatever.

Commissioner's branch for agriculture and dairying, including cold storage on steamships, on railways, at warehouses and creameries, and for expenses in connection with trial shipments of products, and for securing improvement and recognition of the quality of Canadian farm products, $140,000.

Mr. MONK. I would suggest to my hon. friend not to take that item this evening. It is very, very late and it is a very important item. There is a very thin House and I am sure it cannot be discussed within the short time that the House will likely have at its disposal this evening. We have voted a considerable amount and have spent a considerable time on these estimates. This item connected with transportation is one which will give rise to considerable discus sion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not wish to urge the committee. I am quite willing to have this discussed as much as possible. But it is rather early for us to rise at this stage of the session at ten minutes to twelve. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would take a few of the smaller items and let us go on for another half hour ?

Mr. MONK. We might take some of the smaller items.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We will allow No. 83 to stand.

Mr. SPROULE. And 84 as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Eighty-four is purely a formal item.

Mr. CLANCY. It is very important.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well then let us take No. 85.

Classifying all Canadian patents and preparing drawings of same for classification and for exchange with the United States in return for their patents, to be paid notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase in this item.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is in consequence of the fact that we are pushing the work along a little more vigorously, doing more of it and requiring more paper and photographs.

Census, $250,000.

Mr. CLANCY. That is a big question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That can go through.

Mr. WILSON. Do you expect that amount will finish it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The last census took more than $500,000. No, I can hardly expect that this year's work will finish it. It is not at all likely.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much was voted last year for this purpose ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was $250,000 voted for this current year, and now I am asking for $250,000 for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. HENDERSON. That will make $500,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, $500,000, and I expect to have to ask for something for the following year but nothing like so much. I cannot estimate what the whole thing will cost.

Mr. HENDERSON. When does the hon. minister expect to be able to give the population of the Dominion ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to give the date. It will be probably two or three months after the returns come in before we can give an accurate statement of the population. The returns ought to be largley in by the end of the month, and in the main centres of population we ought to be able to make them up within a couple of months. We have not come to any decision as to whether we would issue reports before the whole of the returns are in. I do not see any objection to issuing the reports for the various divisions when we can get them in, but that is a matter that has not yet been determined upon.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister how they expect to get a proper census of the population of the country unless they are quicker than they are at present. They wish to know the population of the country on a certain day, on the first of this month. To my certain knowledge there are dozens of places where no one has seen a census paper yet. It would be impossible for an hotel to tell how many people they had in the house at a certain date, if you ask them a month afterwards. I always understood that in former years the papers were left to be filled in by the householders.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE No.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. It used to be so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The enumerators carry the forms around, and they ask all their questions with reference to the 1st of April. The forms are not left to be filled in.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. How could they possibly tell in a large hotel who were there on the 1st of April ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is one of the difficulties which is necessarily attendant upon a de jure census which has always been taken in Canada. The same difficulty has arisen in past census, and will in this. I understand, however, that the returns were fairly accurate in that respect in the past, and I trust they will be again on this occasion. It is well understood that in unorganized and thinly-populated centres the work cannot go on so rapidly as in older settled districts. The work has been going on as rapidly as possible, and I hear very satisfactory reports from the officers throughout the country. While the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Prior) may be correct, that in some of the outlying portions of his province—

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I was speaking about the capital of the Dominion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The enumerators have been at work here since the 1st of April, and they have been going as rapidly as possible from house to house.

Mr. WILSON. Does the minister pretend to say that there is one of these schedules left to be filled in at each house ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. WILSON. I was not at home when the officer came around, and he left a paper, which I filled in on Saturday last.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The practice is for the enumerator to fill it in himself.

Mr. INGRAM. In this city the enumerators are leaving the papers at the different houses to be filled in. I had occasion to look over some of these papers, left by the enumerators at houses in Ottawa, and if there is any man in the employ of the government who can figure out the answers given in them, he can do more than I can. The questions are not properly answered at all.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. It is a perfect farce.

Mr. INGRAM. It is a perfect farce. The proper way is for the enumerator to visit each house and put down the answers intelligently if he knows how, and I suppose he does or he would not be appointed. The way the work is being done in the capital of Canada is a perfect farce. In my own city the enumerators ask the questions and put the answers down intelligently, and when these papers are sent in to the department they will give an intelligent report as to that district, but I have seen some of the papers in Ottawa to-day, and I am sure the officers will never be able to make out what the answers are.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid that very much the same state of affairs exists in the city of Montreal, and I think the minister should look into it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will make inquiries about it.

Mr. MONK. The minister spoke about taking up some of the smaller items.

The PRIME MINISTER. Is not this vote passed now ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The PRIME MINISTER. This was only a preliminary skirmish.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We will take up some other items, and leave this one for the present.

Fumigating stations, $2,500.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is for fumigating the nursery stock imported under the amendment to the San José Scale Act. At first we prohibited the importation, but we afterwards discovered that it was possible to fumigate the stock so as to completely destroy the scale. We agreed to establish fumigating stations at different ports, similar to the cattle quarantine stations. These stations are : St. John, N.B. ; St. Johns, P.Q. ; Niagara Falls and Windsor, Ont. ; Winnipeg, Man. ; and Vancouver, B.C. We require to appoint, for a short time in the spring and fall of the year, a man to do the fumigating work.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the minister, before we reached this item, if he could give us any information as to what success attended the effort to stamp out the San José scale.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My department is not undertaking to stamp out the scale, except in so far as the entomologist and botanist of the Experimental Farm are giving information by letter, and word of mouth, and visit to any one who asks for information regarding the pest. We are taking no active steps towards stamping it out in the sense that the Ontario government has been taking steps. The San José scale exists in Canada only in the province of Ontario, I think. I am not speaking from my own personal knowledge, but from the reports in the newspapers and the debates in the Ontario House, and the statements that are made at public meetings. These sources of information are as available to the hon. gentleman as they are to me, and, perhaps, I may not be correct in every detail as to what I am saying. The Ontario government have been taking active steps in trying to stamp out the scale, and if they cannot stamp it out, to prevent its being spread. One of the most effective steps which I think they have successfully taken has been to require that all nursery stock raised in the province should be fumigated before being distributed by the nursery men. I believe that the nursery men are fumigating the stock, and if they do that there is, I think, not the slightest danger of the spread of the San José scale from that source. Our work has been directed entirely to protecting this country from the importation of this scale from abroad. We first of all prohibited the importation of nursery stock altogether, but we afterwards amended the Act so as to allow the importation, under certain conditions, which, I believe, will prevent any danger of the importation of the scale. The work has been carried on last fall and last spring, and it has been done thoroughly and satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember somewhat distinctly that the minister announced to the House some time ago, that the scale was only to be found within a limited area in the country, and that he entertained the hope of being able not only to stamp it out entirely, but to prevent the importation of it in the future. There was a discussion in the House at the time, and some hon. gentleman questioned the propriety of the steps that the minister proposed to take. According to the hon. gentleman's report, the scale seems to be spreading. It says :

> The establishment of fumigation stations for the treatment of nursery stock so as to prevent any further introduction of the San José scale into Canada was placed in charge of the entomologist, and has taken up some time. Unfortunately it would appear as though the San José scale has increased in numbers in the districts which were known to be infested last year, and the pest has spread somewhat into adjacent localities. Several experiments are being tried in the hope of getting a practical remedy.

This does not give very much encouragement for the stamping out of the pest. On the contrary, I am told that it is spreading to other sections of the country. Whether the fumigation is ineffectual, or whether the spread of the pest is from some other cause, is not quite clear. It may be that the fumigation is not effectual, and that it is spreading through the importation of stock. If not, then by what other means is it spreading ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The scale is a thing which spreads from tree to tree and from farm to farm. I am not aware that it has been spreading to new sections of the country, although I understand that it has been spreading over a slightly greater area in the province of Ontario than it was before. I think, too, it has been found in some parts where it was not believed to be before; but it was found on old trees, and not on nursery stock. The statement that fumigation is ineffectual is entirely unfounded. On the contrary, we have had no reports of any cases from nursery stock which has come into the country and has been fumigated at those stations; and as the matter is largely in the minds of the horticulturists and tree-growers, I am sure the fact would have been reported to us had the scale been so found.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman attributed to me a statement which I did not make. I asked if the fumigation was effectual, or could it be that the scale was spread through that means ? I noticed a report last fall that while the scale was at first thought to be confined to a limited area in the Niagara district, it was afterwards found in different districts between Niagara and the Western Peninsula, and that it was believed to be spreading with considerable rapidity. I also saw in the same communication that the Department of Agriculture had abandoned the idea of eradicating the scale from the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. You have reference to the Department of Agriculture for Ontario, not to this department.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood it applied both to the Department of Agriculture of Ontario and the department here as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. The first proposal was, of course, to destroy the trees on which the scale was found and to fumigate the stock. I understood that that first plan was abandoned.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All the work the hon. gentleman is discussing was the work of the department at Toronto, not of this department at all.

Mr. SPROULE. This department outlined the methods by which it was thought it could be eradicated, and it was proposed to take up the work jointly with the Department of Agriculture for Ontario.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says no, but I remember the discussion distinctly. The question was asked, why keep it out if there is no effort to stop it in the country, and the answer was that the Department of Agriculture for Ontario would endeavour to destroy it in the country, and the effort of this department would be directed to prevent its importation, and by these joint means we would hope to get rid of it. It is quite clear that one or both were out in their judgment, and that the means adopted were not as effectual as it was thought at that time they would be. It may be that we are preventing the importation of it, and yet it may be found after a while that we are not.

Tracadie Lazaretto, $5,500.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Last year, the hon. minister will remember, I brought up the case of the Chinese lepers in British Columbia. I pointed out to him how manifestly unfair it was that the government had not taken charge of those lepers. At the present time and for many years past the cities of Victoria and Vancouver have had to pay for the maintenance of those lepers. Large sums of money are collected every year from the Chinese who land in British Columbia, as head tax—over $200,000, the larger proportion of which goes into the Dominion treasury. I am well aware what the minister said last year with regard to the lepers in New Brunswick—that the Dominion government were obliged to take care of them, because they had agreed to do so when New Brunswick entered confederation. But it was also proved at that time by documents which I read from, that the Dominion government had taken charge of lepers from Nova Scotia and Manitoba; and my contention, and that of all British Columbians, is that if the Dominion government do that, they ought also to take charge of those poor wretches in British Columbia. It is costing $1,000 or $1,100 a year to maintain those men on D'Arcy Island, and the former government used to allow $1,000 a year for this purpose; but since the present government came into power——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is not an accurate statement of fact.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Well, they have not paid anything for the last two or three years. I would not say that they did not pay the first year or the second year; but they certainly stopped it; and they have not paid a cent for the last two or three years for the maintenance of those lepers. It seems outrageous that the government should treat British Columbia in that manner. What is the reason British Columbia cannot expect the same treatment from the government as Nova Scotia and Manitoba? There is not a man in British Columbia but thinks the same as I do with regard to that matter—that it is unfair to make flesh of one and fish of another. I cannot understand it unless it is because Victoria has always sent Conservatives here to represent it. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman on what ground he has refused persistently to maintain these lepers in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I stated a few moments ago that the hon. gentleman's statement was not accurate. I understood him to lead the House to believe that the Conservative government had paid $1,000 a year for several years.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. So they did.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is incorrect. They paid it one year. They did not pay it the year before I came into office, and it has not been paid since.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. They paid it more than one year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman says so; I say they did not. It was open for discussion at the time, and I looked into the matter and decided it was not necessary or proper that the department should pay, and I declined to pay it.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. For what reason?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because it was a matter affecting the public health of British Columbia, with which the people of British Columbia should deal.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Why adopt a different practice in Manitoba ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because the lepers in Manitoba were immigrants who had come in through the departmental work of this government, and therefore this government was responsible for their presence in the country.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Is not the Dominion government responsible for the Chinese who come in to British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, not more than for the Japanese or for the hon. gentleman himself, who were not brought in as immigrants by the department, but came in of their own accord.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. What about the Lazaretto at Tracadie ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I need not go into the question of the responsibility of the Dominion government to the province of New Brunswick in this matter of the Lazaretto, because that is ancient history.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The excuse given by the hon. gentleman for his manner of dealing with British Columbia is a miserable subterfuge. I see no reason why the government should not, out of the $200,000 and more paid into the Dominion treasury by the Chinese as head tax, take a sum sufficient to meet this expense. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that the late government paid only one year. They paid two or three years, and the last year they did not refuse to pay, but had the question under discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite clear that this is a matter which comes under the charge of the Department of Agriculture, because that department has charge of the quarantine stations, and if these men were admitted, owing to insufficient inspection, the department should pay the cost of taking charge of them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is nothing to show that they had the disease when they passed through the quarantine.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a matter on which there is considerable room for doubt, and if these people were affected with leprosy when they came into the country, then they should have been kept in quarantine or sent home again, and if the department failed in its duty, this government ought to pay the cost.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). How many lepers are there in British Columbia ?

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Five or six in the Lazaretto.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). Is the number increasing ?

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. It remains about the same. Occasionally one or two die and one or two others will come in.

Winnipeg and St. Boniface hospitals, $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these ordinary hospitals or quarantine hospitals ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One of these is for Protestants, and the other for Catholics, and this government contributes this amount because they take in immigrants who have no homes.

Mr. McCREARY. I think that this item ought to be increased by a further vote in the supplementaries. This is the same amount as was allowed these hospitals eight or ten years ago, when the number of patients was only half what it is now, and the cost of living was not so high. The maintenance of these institutions is a very heavy drain on the people of Winnipeg, St. Boniface and Manitoba generally, and a large number of the patients are immigrants just newly arrived. Last year one of the cases was that of a gentleman who was passing through from Japan, and who had to be taken to the hospital to be treated for a malignant attack of small-pox. The new wing, which the citizens of Winnipeg had put up at a cost of $87,000 had just been opened and furnished, and the admission of this patient caused a great deal of damage and loss to that institution. The city corporation pays $10,000 a year to the General Hospital, and the government of the province $16,000 a year, I believe. The St. Boniface General Hospital, which is controlled by the sisters, and is equally a general hospital, because it admits Protestants as well as Catholics, it has a grant also from the province. This government should certainly give more to these institutions than it does, because the larger number of the patients are people who have only been in the country a short time, many of them merely passing through on their way to the coast. You would be surprised to know the percentage of the patients in that hospital who have not been in the country a year.

Mr. MONK. Is there any account kept of those immigrants who are merely passing through ?

Mr. McCREARY. The report shows the number, and over 50 per cent of the people are patients who have not been in the country three years. I submit that this vote should be doubled and would ask the government to give my appeal their best consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. According to the decision of the minister in the previous case, this government would not pay anything, because these people had developed the disease after they passed the quarantine stations, and consequently the province should pay the cost.

Mr. McCREARY. This man Mathewson, who was afflicted with malignant smallpox, must have caught the disease on board the vessel.

Mr. SPROULE. The quarantine stations are at Vancouver and down in the east. Now, it must come in from the east or the west. If there is any evidence of disease they are supposed to be retained in quarantine until the danger is over, and if it breaks out afterwards it becomes the duty of the municipality to bear the expense of looking after them. I do not think that is right, because a few years ago the city of Winnipeg was put to a heavy expense on account of a smallpox that had been brought in by some immigrants. It must have been with them when they came through the quarantine at Quebec, and therefore the government should have borne the expense. On the same principle, it seems to me, the city of Victoria should not be called upon to bear the expense to which it has been subjected.

Mr. CLANCY. We could not well open the door to that. The cases are exceptional. Both the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario take care of such patients by grants to hospitals.

Mr. McCREARY. In the older provinces the cities and large towns are close together. And they are wealthier and better able to take care of the people. But when a man leaves Ottawa he does not strike another point where there is a hospital until he reaches Winnipeg. If he contracts disease at North Bay or Sudbury he is taken by the conductor of the train straight through to Winnipeg. They are not even taken off at Port Arthur. In the same way, coming from Vancouver they are taken through to Winnipeg. Consequently, Winnipeg and St. Boniface hospitals have to take care of all the people who become ill while travelling between Ottawa and Vancouver. Why, if a man is hurt on the Canadian Pacific Railway track eight hundred miles east or west, he is conveyed to Winnipeg. It is true that within the last two or three years, largely by the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its officials and labouring men, small hospitals have been established at Medicine Hat and other points. Still, a large majority of the patients are sent to Winnipeg.

Mr. WILSON. But are not the people who travel generally of a class who are able to pay for themselves ? It may be that now and again there is an immigrant who must be taken care of by others, but generally people who travel can afford to pay their own way.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) would be surprised if he were to go through these institutions as I have done and study the records. Many of the patients are servant girls recently from the old country, and young men who have come out from the old country to make a living. Many of these young men are not accustomed to outdoor life or hard work or hardship, and when exposed to them they take sick. Even after they get out of the hospital, they have to be taken care of until fully recovered by the city, which has a central relief fund of $5,000 or $10,000 a year.

Mr. MONK. The reason I asked the figure is because Winnipeg is peculiarly situated, and if it is true that the expense is incurred through immigrants, I think we would be justified in coming to the relief of that city. I think the case of Victoria is even stronger, because disease originates in a class of immigrants to whom special exception has been taken, and upon whom the government imposes a tax, thus raising a revenue. If you gave relief in one case, you must in the other.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. While we have left aside the large votes, we have made fair progress, and I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and some resolutions reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONK. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The PRIME MINISTER. If the Minister of Railways and Canals is in his seat and able to proceed, we shall take up the estimates of his department. If not, we will proceed with some Bills and then estimates.

Mr. MONK. Estimates of which department ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 12, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

GREAT NORTHERN TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta) moved :

That that portion of the sixth report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines reporting the preamble of Bill No. 38, respecting the Hudson's Bay and North-west Railways Company, and to change its name to 'Great Northern Transit Company,' not proven, be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

He said : I have no wish to refer the Bill back to the committee for reconsideration on the merits of the question that has been discussed before the committee. The Bill as originally introduced provided for certain railway connections between the waters of Hudson's Bay and the Mackenzie river. Application was made for an extension of time for the completion of the work, and for the privilege of making a further connection between Lake Superior and Hudson's Bay. In the committee, the discussion was on the application to make connection between Lake Superior and Hudson's Bay, and that application was refused by the committee. We have no wish to renew the application so far as that point is concerned. We merely ask that the Bill in its original shape, providing for connection between the waters of Hudson's Bay and the Mackenzie river be allowed the ordinary extension of time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry to be obliged to say that, for my part, I cannot agree to the hon. gentleman's motion. The question has been brought to the attention of the House, and, in the ordinary course of parliamentary procedure, has been referred to the Railway Committee, where it has been considered, with the result that the proposal has been rejected by the committee. The position that the government have always taken in matters of this kind is to support the decision of the Railway Committee, unless very strong reason is shown to the contrary, unless substantial injustice has been done or gross error has been committed. When the question has been considered in all its aspects in the committee to which it has been referred, and a conclusion has been reached, I have always thought it safest for the House to uphold the decision of the committee. If we review the judgment of the committee in these matters; we are apt to be led into error. Without looking into the merits of the motion, since it revives, even though in modified form, a question already decided by the committee, I shall feel it my duty to oppose the motion and maintain the decision of the committee.

Mr. SEYMOUR E. GOURLEY (Colchester). I have no interest in the Bill whatever, but I took an interest in the discussion of the matter in committee ; and while I would accept the principle laid down by the Prime Minister, that the decision of the committee should be accepted, yet, I understand the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) does not seek to conflict with that principle. The discussion in committee was confined to the proposed connection between Lake Superior and James Bay, and the rest of the Bill, providing for an extension from Hudson's Bay west to the Pacific, was not considered. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes, as the judgment of the committee was given upon that subject, to accept it ; but, as the other question was not discussed, to refer it to the committee for a decision. With all deference to the Prime Minister, I think that if he would reconsider the matter, he would not feel it his duty, to disagree with the proposition.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the House will bear with me—the report of the committee, as I understand it, was that the preamble of the Bill had not been proven. That being so, the assumption is that the whole question was considered, and the conclusion come to that the charter could not be granted. To adopt this resolution must be to revise the decision of the Railway Committee.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). In general terms I am prepared to assent to what the Prime Minister says, that we ought to be guided by the action of the Railway Committee. But, I think that it will be within the recollection of this House that only a few weeks ago the principle laid down by the First Minister was not recognized. Strong reasons being shown why the action of the Railway Committee should not be sustained, the House felt quite justified in dealing with the subject in a manner different from the manner recommended by the Railway Committee. I have in my recollection one case where private interests and public interests were affected, yet the First Minister himself assisted in pushing that Bill through to a third reading without allowing the parties to be heard. I was present in the Railway Committee when the Bill which is now under discussion was defeated. It was, practically, not defeated on its merits—I think that might quite fairly be said. It was simply defeated on the ground that the promoter of the Bill had had a former charter over a portion of the same route, and had disposed of it to another man, and now he is seeking for a charter, not over the same ground, but probably 150 or 200 miles away from his former line. Now, I have thought over that matter very carefully since, and I am not sure but that we made a serious mistake, and I for one am always prepared to remedy a mistake when I think I have made one. I think I made a mistake on that occasion, and I am prepared to support the motion of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) to refer this Bill back to the Railway Committee for further consideration. After having told Mr. Harvey, the promoter of the Bill, that we did not believe in charter selling, and warned him in that way, and punished him, I think we should be prepared to deal with this question on its merits.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). I think the motion made by the member for Alberta may very well be adopted by this House without any sacrifice of the principle or rule enunciated by the Prime Minister, and if he will give me his attention I will explain my reasons for thinking so. The Bill asks for two things ; it asks for a connection between Hudson Bay and Lake Superior, and it also asks for an extension of time for the construction of the other portion of the charter already possessed by the people who were before the committee, that is, an extension of time for constructing a road partly by water and partly rail from Hudson Bay along the Mackenzie river. That part of the Bill was not considered by the committee. All the committee considered was the granting of a charter for the connection between Hudson Bay and Lake Superior, and that the committee refused to entertain. As I understand the motion of the hon. member for Alberta, he does not ask the committee to reconsider that question, the question which the committee really decided, but simply to grant the other portion of the Bill extending the time for the construction of the rest of the road already chartered. Therefore, in referring the Bill back to the committee, it is not sought for a moment to ask the committee to change its decision in order to reconsider that which it has already decided ; it is simply asking the committee to consider a question involved in the Bill which was not at all considered by the committee on the previous occasion.

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I do not think the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has fairly presented the case to the House. The case he quoted is not analogous to this. In that particular case a Bill was reported by the committee, and on strong statements being made that other parties wished to be heard, it was referred back to the committee. To the principle now advocated by the Prime Minister, there was an exception made in that case, and when the Bill was reported and came before the House for the third reading the members of the House were divided on the question as to whether it should be read the third time or laid over. The present case is altogether different. I would say to my hon. friend from Alberta that it would seriously inconvenience the business of the House if we adopted the custom of referring Bills back after they had been thoroughly threshed out in committee, except, as the Prime Minister said, very good cause were shown therefor. In this case I am free to say there is no such cause. There was a very long debate in the committee, nearly the whole day was spent in the discussion, and the Bill was thrown out by a large majority indeed. Evidently there was very little difference of opinion in the committee as to whether the legislation should be granted. I would be the last member of this House to refuse an opportunity of reconsidering a Bill if good cause were shown, and I would myself move such a motion ; but if, every time a Bill is defeated, we are to have a motion in the House to refer it back again and open up the whole question, I say the business of the House would be seriously interfered with. In this particular case I do not think a good case has been made at all for referring the Bill back to the committee.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I may add to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), that I voted for the Bill in question when it was discussed in the committee. I must say it was discussed on its merits, and although several amendments were suggested, the committee persistently refused to adopt the Bill. I think it would be simply a waste of time to send the Bill back to the committee. We discussed it nearly two hours, and a great many suggestions were made by the promoters, but the committee would not accept them, and rejected the Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. The question for consideration by the House turns on whether good reasons have or have not been shown for a reference back to the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. member state the reasons, as I did not quite catch them at first.

Mr. OLIVER. I am going to do so. The chairman of the committee has said that it is perfectly legitimate to refer a Bill back to that committee if there is just cause therefor. Now, the cause we allege in this case is that the powers asked for by the Bill were divided distinctly into two parts. One of those parts was fully considered by the committee, all the amendments suggested were refused by the committee, and the Bill as a whole was rejected on the ground of objections made to that part of the Bill. The chief objection was that the line paralleled another line for which a charter had been granted between Lake Superior and Hudson Bay, that it was entering into a territory about to be provided for by another charter. Now, we have no desire to raise that question again, we accept the judgment of the committee in that particular.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). What part of the Bill do you wish to have reconsidered ?

Mr. OLIVER. The part which allows the construction of a railway connection between the waters of the Hudson Bay and the waters of the Mackenzie river. The first charter that was granted provided for a railway connection between the waters of the Hudson Bay and the waters of the Mackenzie river.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would it cover the same ground ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it was not discussed on those lines. There was no connection whatever with the alleged sale of the charter. I hear the hon. chairman of the committee say the whole thing was sold. Now allow me to say that the charter that was sold was an Ontario charter and not a Dominion charter. The Ontario charter covered the ground between Lake Superior and Hudson Bay and did not cover any part of the ground that was covered by the original charter of this Hudson Bay and North-west Railway, because the Ontario government has no power over that region. Four years ago a charter was granted to the Hudson Bay and North-west Railway Company to make a railway connection between the waters of the Hudson Bay and the waters of Mackenzie Basin by way of Chesterfield Inlet and Great Slave Lake. The term allowed for the commencement of the work under that charter either had expired or was about to expire. The company come before parliament and asked for a revival of that part of the charter, and for a new charter, or a new extension, to cover the line between Lake Superior and Hudson Bay. It was that part of the charter which the committee objected to, and we have no desire to ask the committee to revise its decison on that point. All we ask is that the House refer back the Bill to the committee so that the company may get the usual extension of time that has repeatedly been granted to railway enterprises in new parts of the country, where they do not compete with anybody, and where they cannot stand in the way of any other enterprise. I am willing to accept the judgment of the committee that the granting of that part of the charter between Hudson Bay and Lake Superior might have interfered with another charter, and therefore the committee were justified in refusing that charter. I cannot agree that to continue a charter which covers ground no less than 700 or 1,000 miles distant, which is not in that part of the country at all, in which no man is asking for any authority or power, can in any way prejudice any existing interest, and therefore there can be no harm in giving the extension of time asked for.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Speaker, I think the remarks which my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) has made are worthy of this consideration at least, that the question as to whether the extension of time which is asked for in respect to the other railway lines is a different matter altogether from that which the committee discussed and decided should be again considered by the committee. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he withdraw his motion now and renew it in a couple of days. In the meantime the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) and the Chairman of the Railway Committee may confer with him and look into the question so that when it comes before the House again we will know the exact position of the matter.

Motion withdrawn.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Oxford) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 121) to amend the Post Office Act. He said : Mr. Speaker, I may say that this is principally a departmental Bill. The first clause is suggested by the Department of Justice as being a necessary amendment to the Post Office Act to make clear the meaning of the words 'post letter.' I believe this has become necessary in view of some cases that have come before the courts, and that it is desirable to amend the Act. The second clause is to provide for the establishment of dead letter offices in some places not now provided for.

Mr. CLARKE. Have you decided at what point you intend to establish these dead letter offices ?

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. This amendment provides that there shall be dead letter offices at St. John, Kingston, Hamilton, London, Vancouver and Dawson. I may say that the department have found this desirable and necessary. The results of the establishment of offices for newspapers at these points have been so satisfactory that it is desired to have power given by the Act to deal with letters as well as papers at these points.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have you not that power now under the Act ? Did not the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) introduce a Bill last year giving you that power ?

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. No ; in looking into the Act I find that the power is given in respect to special points, and this Bill is to increase the number of places where these offices may be established. The last clause provides for the establishment of a class of employees known as 'train porters.' I do not suppose the name would indicate particularly what they are, but it is found now that two or three times a week, especially in the large cities during the time that newspapers are being sent out in large quantities, an extra mail clerk has to be sent, and he has to receive mileage in addition to his salary for doing what is ordinary work in assisting the mail clerks with an overcrowded mail. It is thought that a saving would be effected, and that the work would be more efficiently done by establishing a class of employees known as train porters who would be at headquarters, who could go out with these overcrowded mail trains, and who could, also, from time to time, take the places of transfer officers who are ill. There is a difficulty found in the department when a transfer officer is ill in finding an experienced man to take his place. It has been thought that after a short period of training these train porters would be able to do this work very much better than it can now be provided for. In the first instance that I have given where, on overcrowded trains, extra help is required, instead of sending out a mail clerk, the work would be done at a considerable saving to the country.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw attention to the character of the return made to the order passed by the House on the 21st February relating to the coal and wood tenders which have been received by the government, and upon which contracts have been awarded. The return which has been brought down refers only to tenders for wood. No attention has been paid to the order asking for a return of the tenders for coal. I would like to ask the government if it is the intention to comply with that part of the order and bring down these tenders.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That relates to the Public Works Department?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will take a note of it.

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to call the attention of the House to a question that I think is well worthy of its attention, I mean the immigration question. It is a matter of expending nearly half a million dollars a year. In looking over the report of Lord Strathcona, the High Commissioner, I was very much pleased to observe one thing the government have done; that is, that they have placed Canadian readers and Canadian atlases in the public schools of the United Kingdom, and that in this way they have done good service to the country, because these readers and atlases have reached 930 schools. The pupils in these schools have been passing examinations upon them, and bronze medals are being given to the pupil in each school who passes the best examination. I am very much pleased with this, and I think this departure has been of service to the country, because, by this means, we are educating the people of Great Britain and Ireland as to the resources and geography of Canada, and we have been giving them, so far as I have been able to learn, some information of which they are very much in need. We are not only educating the young people by this means, but I have no doubt they will discuss the subject with older people, and in that way they will get a good knowledge of this country. I would be very glad if the department would go farther and introduce readers and geographies into the schools of other civilized countries, if that were possible. In that way the department might be able to distribute information that would be very valuable to this country, and I think it would be particularly advantageous in Germany, where we are not allowed to send our immigration agents to distribute literature of that character which would give them a knowledge of the country that would be valuable to us and which would induce a large immigration from that country. Now, I would like to refer for a short time to what took place in this House at the last session. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) was very sanguine that we would have a very large immigration from the older countries during the year 1900. I pointed out to him that he differed entirely from the views held by the most of his officers in high places. They pointed out that unless the mode of looking for immigrants was greatly changed there would be no increase, while the minister himself was very sanguine that there would be a great increase. The Deputy Minister of the Interior during the year 1899 visited the old country, and from his report I would gather that he personally visited all the agencies in the old country. He reported very strongly in favour of assisted passages, and not only the giving of assisted passages to immigrants of a certain class, but that when they landed in this country the government should make an allowance to them to enable them to get through the first year, for which advance they would take security on the lands ; the lands that we had already given them. This, I was very strongly opposed to then, and I have since seen no reason why I should change my view. Mr. Smart the Deputy Minister of the Interior visited the agency in Dublin, and he spoke in high terms of Mr. Devlin, who is our immigrant agent in that city. Mr. Smart said that while there had not been much done in the way of getting immigrants from Ireland in the past, he thought the time was ripe now, and that we would surely get a very much larger number during the coming year. Well, Sir, what has been the result ? In 1899 we got 743 immigrants from Ireland, and in 1900 we got 765, an increase of 18, all told.

Mr. CLARKE. From all Ireland.

Mr. WILSON. From all Ireland.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much did the increase cost ?

Mr. WILSON. I have not got the increased cost specially as regards Ireland, but I will give the increased cost and the increased number of immigrants later on. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that Mr. John Redmond, a very prominent Irish member of parliament made a speech on the 17th March last and he stated that 45,000 persons had left Ireland during the year 1900. Well, we succeeded in getting 765 out of these 45,000. I am of the opinion that if we had no immigrant agents in Ireland at all that we would have got just as many people from that country as we did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. Probably more.

Mr. WILSON. Not only that ; but Mr. Devlin in his report complains of the criticism he has received in the past, and he says it was unfair to measure his efforts by the number of immigrants that reached this country from Ireland, and in fact he seems to make out that he is doing other work. My impression is that Mr. Devlin was appointed to Ireland as an immigration agent, and that his principal business was to get people to come to Canada. That being so he certainly has succeeded very poorly. Mr. Devlin complains of the miserable pittance he is getting in the way of salary and he points out in his report that the Lord Mayor of Dublin gets more for one year than he gets for three years.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). Why does he not run for Lord Mayor ?

Mr. WILSON. I suppose there is no reason why Mr. Devlin should keep the job if he does not want it. But, of course, we all understand why Mr. Devlin is emigrant agent in Ireland.

Mr. BENNETT. Why ?

Mr. WILSON. It is not from choice but from necessity. His leader and he differed very materially on the Manitoba school question, and when Mr. Devlin was elected in 1896 as a member of this House and found that he could not get the Prime Minister of Canada to carry out his pledges as he (Mr. Devlin) understood them, then rather than quarrel with the Prime Minister and his party he accepted the position of emigrant agent in Ireland. That is my version of why Mr. Devlin is an emigrant agent. We find, Sir, that Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, makes no reference to assisted passages in his report this year. He does not seem to have a word to say about it, and neither does he refer to the great increase in the exodus from Ireland. Lord Strathcona in his report for 1899 took the same view as Mr. Smart and felt that it was important that we should give assisted passages if we were to get immigrants from the old country, but this year Lord Strathcona is as silent as the grave on what ought to be done in that line. Then we have a gentleman who was appointed by this government as superintendent of immigration in the old country ; one Mr. W. T. R. Preston——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) mean by the 'old country.'

Mr. WILSON. I mean the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland ; that is what I meant.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). What did you think he meant ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). There are older countries than that in the world.

Mr. WILSON. Not being accustomed to speak very often in the House I may be pardoned if I sometimes make a slip.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You were perfectly right.

Mr. WILSON. I was about to refer to the superintendent of emigration who was appointed by this government, and I can hardly see what the necessity is for paying this gentleman, who is well known in this country, a salary of $3,000 a year and expenses to superintend seven or eight emigrant agencies with about as many agents in charge. Mr. Preston has a salary of $3,000 and his expenses, and during the year 1900 these two amounted to $4,825. I would like to know what Mr. Preston did for that money. In his report for 1899 he also recommended strongly, assisted passages, and he went further. He said that the time had come when the old methods must be done away with ; when we must not only give assisted passages to desirable emigrants, but when we must pursue the same course that insurance agents do in this country, namely, see the parties who intend to emigrate and canvass them. Mr. Preston's excuse in his report of this year is, that the time was not opportune for that kind of work. It does seem to me that if there ever was a time that was opportune it was this year when 45,000 people were leaving Ireland and seeking homes in foreign countries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words with reference to the fitness of the men who have been appointed by this government as emigration agents. I am afraid they have been chosen more because of political services rendered to their party than for any fitness they possess for the office they were to fill. Mr. Preston in his report refers to New Brunswick, and he says that province appointed an emigrant agent by the name of Mr. Hickman, and Mr. Hickman got a year to go over the province to make himself thoroughly familiar with it before he went to the old country. Mr. Hickman travelled all over New Brunswick, took hundreds of photographs of the country, which he had fixed on slides so that he could exhibit them with a lantern when giving his lectures. Mr. Hickman made himself acquainted with improved farms that were for sale in the province ; he took photographs of the buildings and some of the fields, and in that way he was prepared to deal with the better class of intending emigrants who wanted to get improved farms in Canada. Mr. Preston says that Mr. Hickman has been a great success. He writes in his report :

> Mr. Hickman has been meeting with considerable success in inducing a most desirable class of immigrants into New Brunswick; that is, young men with means, or whose relatives are willing to advance a considerable sum of money with a view of getting them lands in the more populated parts of Canada. He has succeeded in getting attention at his meetings and has incited an interest in New Brunswick in marked contrast with the almost utter failure of meetings that have been held in many localities in the interests of the Dominion.

Now, Sir, why has Mr. Hickman been able to attract the attention of the people of the old country, more than have the agents of the Dominion government. I think the reason is very obvious. Mr. Hickman was better equipped for the work. He had taken the time and the trouble to make himself perfectly familiar with the business he was going to do and perfectly familiar with the province he was trying to induce emigrants to come to. Mr. Preston appeared before the Committee on Agriculture last year and in his evidence he said, with reference to Mr. Jury :

> It has been very seldom, I have been told, that at these meetings there would be more than possibly a dozen or fifteen or twenty children, with perhaps a half dozen or less, half a dozen being the maximum, of adults that would be present at a lecture about Canada.

That shows what Mr. Jury's lectures have been, for if he could induce only half a dozen grown-up people to attend, they could not have been very instructive. They were looked on, Mr. Preston says, more as outings for Sunday school children than as lectures to induce people to come to Canada.

Last year Mr. Preston said that he was going to try to get some Boers to come to our North-west. He thought they would make good settlers and would be glad to get away from South Africa. At that time I gave as my opinion that we did not want any of that kind of people, that we did not want any people who were disloyal and had an unfavourable idea of the British flag or British institutions.

Mr. Preston has now got a new notion in his head. He wants to form a company with a capital of two or three million pounds to promote immigration, and he wants the interest on that amount guaranteed for twenty-five years by the Imperial and colonial governments. In addition to that, he wants a bonus given by each of the colonies for the immigrants in proportion to the number it gets. In this way he says you could induce the young men who are wasting their time around the cities and towns of the old country to come to Canada and make good settlers. I would say, for the information of Mr. Preston and the government, that if they want to go into that kind of work, there are in all the cities and larger towns of Canada plenty of that class of young men who, if they could be induced to go and settle on the lands of the North-west, would make better settlers than any of the same class we could get from the old country.

Mr. Preston has also been along the coasts of the Black Sea, and he has there met a tribe of people whom he is anxious to bring to this country. So far as I am concerned, I would like to have a little more information about those people before holding out any inducements for them to come to Canada, for we have already had an experience that has not been very satisfactory or profitable with reference to bringing in strangers that we knew nothing about.

There has been a great deal of talk about assisted passages, and some of the colonies have tried to promote immigration in that way; but I believe all the Australian colonies except Western Australia have abandoned the giving of assisted passages to immigrants. I will read a short extract from the Australian Handbook for 1900, with regard to the kind of people they must be in order to get assistance to go to Western Australia:

> The class eligible (for assisted passages).—The classes at present eligible for assisted passages are : Farmers and agriculturists, who must be possessed of some small capital, and who should be under forty-five years of age (and, if married, their wives and families). The amount required in each case will be decided by the agent general, and must be deposited with him. A single man is required to deposit not less than £100, a married couple not less than £150, and for each child over twelve years of age, £25. The deposit is repaid to the immigrants immediately after arrival in the colony. Each adult immigrant will be granted £10 towards his passage money, and £5 for every child between one and twelve years of age. Single women or widows without children, not exceeding thirty-five years of age, are also eligible.
> The nominees must be in the habit of working at one of the callings mentioned above, and must in accepting an assisted passage under these regulations do so with the intention of working in one of these occupations in the colony. They must be sober, industrious, of good moral character, in good health, free from all mental and bodily defects, within the ages specified (excepting when specially approved), appear physically capable of labour and have been vaccinated or had the smallpox.

In 1897 there were 40 males and 140 females, or a total of 180, assisted on these conditions; in 1898 there were 29 males and 68 females, or a total of 97; and in 1899 there were 12 males and 24 females, or a total of 36. That shows how much success has attended that kind of assisted passages; but I think the people of Western Australia were right, if they were going to assist people to go to their country, in insisting that they should be first-class people, and that they should have some capital, and not be liable to become paupers on their hands, to be supported at the public expense.

Now, the kind of immigrants we have been receiving in Canada are a very different class from those I have just been talking about. We have allowed to land on our shores people who were paupers, and who were not able to pass the ordinary regulations laid down by the department. The Montreal Herald, which is a very strong supporter of the present government, in its issue of the 13th of August, 1900; makes this allusion to some immigrants who were brought into the country during last summer :

More Roumanians.

They arrived here on Saturday afternoon, and were allowed to land on an agreement with the Baron de Hirsch Institute. After an exchange of telegrams between Montreal and Ottawa yesterday and to-day, an order was issued by Mr. Frank Pedley, superintendent of immigration, this morning and sent to Mr. Hoolahan, the agent here, permitting of the landing of the Roumanian immigrants, who came over on the Elder-Dempster steamship Lake Megantic and who are detained at Montreal. The permission was conditional upon the steamship company or the Baron de Hirsch Society guaranteeing that the new-comers will not become a charge upon the Canadian people.

I do not think that even with that guarantee these people should have been allowed to land. They have been landing in large numbers and no one society is able to take care of so many, and we only ought to allow people to land who are fit to take care of themselves and will not become a burden as paupers on this country—neither they nor their children. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to take care of our own people, but I do not think that we should open our ports to the whole world and allow this country to be overrun with paupers. I am decidedly opposed to anything of that kind.

The Lake Megantic arrived in port on Saturday with 183 Roumanian Jews on board, and the immigration officials at Quebec refused to allow 126 of them to land, for the same reason as they refused a number of the immigrants brought over by the steamships Lake Champlain and Louisiana. They did not possess the amount of money required of their class, coming into Canada should have.

On the next day, the Montreal Star pointed out that there were over 300 families settled in Montreal of the same class of people, and each family is composed of from five to six members. These people have greatly disturbed the labour market, and many of them have undermined our own people who had employment and have secured their jobs, so that our own people have been forced out of their positions and had to make the best shift they could. This is one of the things the government should stop at all hazards. On no account should we allow these paupers to land on our shores and displace our own people.

We have another illustration of the mistaken policy of this government. Not long ago an hon. member in this House—the hon. member for Selkirk—told us that 50 per cent of the sick in the two hospitals of Winnipeg had not been in this country three years, and many of them had not been here one year, and he urged that as a strong reason why this government should give additional assistance to these two hospitals.

Let me now refer for a moment to the Doukhobors, and I think, although I see the Minister of the Interior smiling, that he would feel much more comfortable if these people were not in this country at all. We remember that at the time the Mormons wanted to come and settle in this country and bring their institutions with them, but Sir John Macdonald said, no, we will not have polygamy in Canada. Then they wanted to come, and each Mormon bring only the wives he then had and leave the others behind, but Sir John again said no. He said : If you come into this country and are guilty of polygamy, you will be punished just the same as anybody else. You must abide by our laws or stay at home. It is very much to be regretted that a similar stand was not taken by this government with regard to the Doukhobors. The first unfortunate concession made to them was that they should be exempt from military service and not be compelled to defend this country under any circumstances. That was a great mistake. I do not see why any persons settling in our country should be allowed privileges which are not granted our own people. If there are any privileges to be given to anybody, our own people should be preferred. Let me quote from the press reports of what these Doukhobors have been doing :

They have issued an appeal to the nations of the world asking that they may be given a refuge from Canadian tyranny !

They object to our land laws, to our marriage laws, and to our registration laws.

And because they cannot have their own way, they are now looking for some other country where their religious liberty will not be oppressed.

These people, Mr. Speaker, must be a pretty bad lot indeed to declaim about the tyranny of Canadian laws, when everybody knows that Canada is as free from tyranny as any country in the world, notwithstanding the bad government we are at present afflicted with:.

The story of this Doukhobor revolt against the laws of Canada is an interesting one.

In June last the Doukhobors settled in the neighbourhood of Yorkton, N. W. T., addressed a petition to the Dominion government setting forth the grievances which they consider the Canadian laws impose upon them.

Their first objection was to their taking up homesteads individually, on the ground that private ownership of land is opposed to the law of God. They wished to have a tract of land set apart for their brotherhood, in the same manner that reserves are set apart for Indians, the title to the whole tract being vested in the sect and not in the individual members of the community.

This is a system to which the government cannot consent, and to which I do not believe they will consent. If the Doukhobors are going to settle in our country, they must take out land the same as other people and obey the laws just as our own people do. They cannot be allowed to live like Indians. We have got all the Indians we want, but while we are bound to take care of our Indian tribes, because they were the original owners of the soil and we have taken their property from them, we owe nothing to the Doukhobors and ought to insist that they comply with our land laws just the same as our own people.

Then they object very strongly to our marriage laws. They say :

We cannot accept such a law, for we believe that it also breaks the law of God. We cannot believe that a marriage can become legal because it is recorded in a police register and a fee of two dollars paid for it ; on the contrary, we believe that such recording and payment annuls marriage and breaks up its real legality. We believe that the real legalization of a marriage union is when it is brought about freely as a result of pure feeling, of a mutual moral affection between man and woman.

How does that strike you, Sir, from a moral point of view. They do not recognize that the community has any right to determine on what conditions marriage shall be celebrated. They contend for the right to do as they please, and pretend that the open sin of leaving a wife and taking another woman in her place is less than what they call the secret sin committed by a husband of living with his wife after he has got tired of her.

Mr. McCREARY. Are you reading from the manifesto of one Bodjiansky ?

Mr. WILSON. I am reading from the reports in the newspapers. There is a motion on the Order paper calling for all the papers in connection with this matter, but as the government has seen fit to take all the private members' days, that motion could not be made and the papers have not been brought down. I can, therefore, only use such papers as are at my disposal. Not having any access to the private office of the Minister of the Interior, I cannot get the documents, but no doubt my hon. friend has the opportunity and can get them all if he wants to. I put the question myself to the minister, and he admitted that there had been a petition received from the Doukhobors expressing their dissatisfaction with our marriage, land and registry laws. And you will see, as I go on, that a copy of this petition was sent to the gentleman who was principally instrumental in bringing these people to the country ; and he wrote a letter to the Doukhobors, advising them to comply with the laws of the country in a formal way. He said : You can take a wife and marry her ; and, if you do not like to continue living with her, you can leave her and take another woman without marrying her—there is no law against bigamy in Canada, but there is no law against adultery. If that is the doctrine taught by the leaders of this society, what may we expect of the rank and file ? To my mind, these are the most undesirable people we can possibly have, because they have no regard for our laws. I heard an instance the other day. A railway company was in a great hurry to build a piece of line, and some of these people were engaged for the work. They were poor, and the men who employed them paid their way out to the work. But when they got out there, he found that it was a holy season for them, and for two days they refused to enter upon the work, though they had been engaged specially for that purpose.

Mr. McCREARY. Was that not all right—not to work on Sunday or a holy day ? Is that not all right according to any religion ?

Mr. WILSON. I can only answer by saying that if these people were as religious as they pretended to be, they would have told this man : Our feast day comes at such and such a time, and we cannot go until after that time. Is that not what an honest man would have done ? We do not want to be dishonest, whether we are religious or whether we are not. But, when men who profess to be better than their neighbours deceive people and get benefits under false pretenses, they are worse than the out-and-out man who does wrong things openly. I have not much use for the religious man who is dishonest—I do not think he has much religion or much principle. I am of opinion that if the government had to bring these people in to-day, they would hardly do it.

But, there is one matter I had overlooked, and that I want to refer to. We have appointed Mr. Preston as superintendent of immigration. If it was necessary to have such a man and he were a good man for the place, we would expect that he would increase the numbers coming from that part of the world in which he carried on the work. But, what are the results ? We got from countries other than the United States in 1899, 32,598 immigrants, while in 1900, we got only 29,197, or 3,401 less. These are the facts, if we may believe the reports of the department. What is the advantage of having appointed Mr. Preston, if we have 3,000 fewer immigrants now that he is full-fledged as our representative, and has spent nearly $5,000 in a year? The fact is, we have had to provide a place for Mr. Preston, as for hundreds of others since hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, and I think that is the only excuse that can be given for his appointment at all.

Now, I wish to read from a little history of the Doukhobors about the circumstance under which they left Russia. They wanted to get the same privilege in Russia that they get in this country—to be exempted from military service. But, the Russian government said: No; if you are going to stay in this country, you will have to do as the rest of us have to do; you will have to perform your share of the duties falling upon the whole body of citizens. When they got leave to go, they had to sign a document, which I will read:

That they leave the frontiers of Russia at their own expense; and that before leaving they sign an agreement never to return within the borders of the empire, understanding that in the case of non-compliance with this last point the offender will be condemned to exile to remote places.

That shows in what esteem they were held in their own country. I venture to say that Russia was very glad to get rid of them, because they had been a source of great trouble. They had been asked to comply with the laws of their country, and they refused. Of course they suffered by reason of refusing. You may say that their suffering was for conscience sake. But, it is very strange to me that men take these fads, and seem to be entirely unable to reason out what their duty is or what they should do as citizens of a country. These people have had to sign an agreement never to go back to Russia under penalty of being banished from that country. I am afraid we shall have to take very strong measures with these people, more especially if they persist in their views of marriage. We cannot tolerate the idea of a free-love association in our midst. I do not think the people of Canada, under any consideration, will submit to anything of the kind—that a man can live with a woman for a time, then banish her and leave his children illegitimate. This seems to me outrageous. The authorities of this country ought to insist upon these people complying with our laws or leaving the country.

Now, this government tells us that the only kind of people they are bringing in are farmers and farm labourers. Last year, in the committee, we went into an investigation of the number of immigrants that came into this country, and, outside of the Doukhobors and Galicians—and I might say that the Galicians have had to be fed by the government, if the reports of the newspapers are true—the number of immigrants has been comparatively small. The great trouble has been that the government has ignored quality and looked altogether to quantity. Now, what we want is quality more than quantity; and if we can have only one, let us have quality; if we can have both so much the better. But, leaving out the Galicians and Doukhobors, we received, in 1899, about 10,000 or 11,000 that might be considered desirable immigrants. This year we have not had the pleasure of having any of the officers of the department before us to give evidence on the subject of immigration. We are in hopes that, before the estimates on immigration are taken up, we shall have the privilege of having two or three of these gentlemen before us to give us information if they can, which will enable us to discuss the estimates properly. I find that, in 1899, about one in four of those who were brought into the country settled on the land. In 1900, the proportion was about the same. As to expenditure, we find that, taking into account the appropriations they have asked for the coming year, $445,000, this government has spent in immigration in five years, $1,524,074, as against $876,369 that was spent by their predecessors. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say: We get a great many more than our predecessors did. But, if you have only brought so many more people to the country to loaf around the towns and cities instead of going on the land, I do not see where you have benefited the country. I am afraid, when we come to look for those you are supposed to have got, you will have a good deal of difficulty in finding them. I have here several resolutions passed by the Congress of the Trades and Labour Councils of Canada for several years. These are the people who represent the working classes of this country, and who, I presume, have a good knowledge of their condition. It is true that this government, and the Ontario government, have taken care of two of the most prominent members of those organizations, and in one way have shut their mouths; nevertheless, I think the views set forth in these resolutions are those held by the working-people throughout this country. I will read first a resolution passed in 1893:

Moved by Mr. O'Donoghue, seconded by Mr. Glockling,——

An hon. MEMBER. Who is he?

Mr. WILSON. I believe Mr. O'Donoghue is in the Department of Labour in Ottawa, and Mr. McGlockling has been given a comfortable government situation in Toronto.

——that this Trade and Labour Congress, composed of regularly elected and credentialed delegates of bona fide labour organizations throughout Canada, having a knowledge that for years past, and at the present time, the labour market of the Dominion has been and is constantly overcrowded in all its branches, mechanical and manual; be it therefore resolved, that the expenditure of any public money, directly or indirectly, for the purpose of assisting, bonusing, encouraging or decoying immigrants of either or both the classes mentioned, adult or juvenile, from abroad to Canada is unnecessary and unjustifiable under such circumstances.

Be it resolved further, that as a consequence of the existence of such a condition of the labour market in the Dominion of Canada, the existing unjust and misleading system of Dominion immigration, as well as like expenditures on the part of all the provinces except British Columbia, should be abolished, and only those possessed of financial wealth should be encouraged to the country.

I think that fairly represents the feelings of the working classes. Indeed, what is the use of bringing out large numbers of people, without means, to settle on our prairies? There is no labour for them, their neighbours cannot give them work until they can get a start, and we ought to have, I was going to say, more Christian charity than to put men off in a lonely part of the country like that, and without means. What will happen is what is now happening, that the government will have to see that they do not suffer for the common necessities of life, and they will have to be supported out of the public exchequer. Here is another resolution of a similar character, passed in 1894 by the Trades and Labour Councils of Canada:

Moved by Mr. O'Donoghue, seconded by Mr. Holmes, and resolved:

That in view of the past and present experience of organized labour in Canada, that the labour market is overcrowded; be it therefore resolved, that the expenditure of any public money, directly or indirectly, for the purpose of assisting, bonusing, encouraging or decoying immigrants, adults or juveniles, from abroad to Canada is unnecessary and unjustifiable under such circumstances.

Be it resolved further, that as a consequence of the existence of such a condition of the labour market in the Dominion of Canada, the existing unjust and misleading system of Dominion immigration, as well as like expenditure on the part of all the provinces except British Columbia should be abolished, and only those possessed of financial wealth should be encouraged to the country.

Be it resolved still further, that it be an instruction to the executive committee of this congress to prepare and present to the hon. the Minister of the Interior and Immigration for Canada and the several immigration bureaus of the provinces, a duly certified copy of this resolution.

I will read one that was passed in 1896:

Moved by Mr. O'Donoghue, and seconded by Mr. Little, and resolved——

Mr. CLANCY. Is that the same Mr. O'Donoghue?

Mr. WILSON. I guess likely it is, he had not been shelved at that time.

—that inasmuch as the immigration policy of the Canadian government in the past has not been beneficial either in the matter of desirable settlers or as to the character of the immigrants encouraged and assisted to this country, it be an instruction to the executive committee to immediately press upon the government of Canada that the immigration system be remodelled so that only the proper class of people should be sought as immigrants from abroad for Canada, and that to the better attainment of securing the settlement of our vacant lands a very liberal system of colonization should be inaugurated, not only by the Dominion government, but by all Canadian provincial governments as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have laid pretty fully before you the opinion of the labouring classes of this country with reference to the course pursued by the government in bringing undesirable immigrants to this country. I think no one will object to any man coming here who is able and willing to take care of himself and of his family. We will welcome such men with both hands. But, I would be just as strongly opposed to bringing people here who would not be able to take care of themselves, and who would become a burden on the country.

Now, I want to call attention to the expenses in connection with the immigration system, to the money spent both in the United States and in Canada. It is true that according to the reports we are getting a good many more people from the United States than we have heretofore. I am going to give the cost of the various agencies in the United States, a bulk sum, in order that our people may know how much of their money is being spent in the United States, and also in the old country.

Mr. COCHRANE. Who is Mr. White?

Mr. WILSON. Well, he is a mere wanderer, he is a press agent, and appears to have travelled all over the country. Now I will give you a little detailed account of what he expended his money for. In the first place he is getting a salary of $2,000. In the second place his accident insurance costs $20; board and lodging, $1,117.65—a very moderate sum; baggage transfer, $26.50; bus fare, $45.30. I wish we had the former member for North Wellington here to criticise this properly. Banners for side of cars, $16 ; cabs, $56 ; fares, $669.70 ; flags, $10.50 ; laundry, $18.02. That is his washing. Livery, $70 ; loss on dining car, $107.25. I suppose he had to have a dining car to himself and that it did not pay very well. Pullmans, $590.05. I guess he slept in a Pullman car all the time pretty nearly. Special supper to Press Association, half price, $150 ; tips, $51.95.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is the total amount ?

Mr. WILSON. The total is $5,443.69. I believe it is the custom of the department now to insist upon immigration agents sending in a diary every day showing where they are and what work they are doing. I took the pains to copy out of a return brought down to the House a short time ago a few of these particulars. Mr. T. O. Currie, in 1898, was employed 151 days and was unemployed 162 days ; or, at least, there is no report for those days. He drew his salary of $1,200 just the same. In 1899 he was employed 156 days and unemployed, so far as the report goes, 157 days. He drew his $1,200 just the same. In 1900 he was employed 167 days and unemployed 146 days. He drew his $1,200 for the year just the same. Now, of course the hon. Minister of the Interior may be able to explain this. He may say that his diary did not give a detailed statement of what he was doing. If it did not, and the hon. minister has the information it is his duty to give it to the House. This is the information that I have gathered from the report brought down by the Department of the Interior. Then, there is Mr. W. H. Rogers. The House will remember and the members of the Agricultural Committee will remember that we had great difficulty with this gentleman last year. He seemed to ignore the instructions he got from the department entirely, because, on four different occasions at least when they asked him to give a daily report of what he was doing he never did it apparently. In 1898—I take it that he was only appointed in 1898—he drew $525, and in 1899 he drew $900. There is no account in either year as to what he did, but, in 1900 he reports as having been employed 126 days and unemployed 166 days, but he drew $900 all the same. Here is Mr. M. V. McInnes. He is located at Detroit. He is reported in 1898 as having been employed 177 days and unemployed, or no report as to what he was doing, 136 days. He drew his $1,500 just the same. In the next year he only lost 65 days, Sundays and all, but there was no reduction made in his salary in either of these two years. Now, there are others here that I could talk about in the same way, but I do not suppose it is necessary, because, if the hon. minister will clear up these gentlemen, it may go a good way in clearing up the whole lot.

Now, then, I shall come to the results of our immigration policy, taking Ireland first. We have Mr. C. R. Devlin and Mr. John Webster at the Dublin agency. They got $6,689.35 in 1900, and we have the Londonderry agency, in charge of Mr. E. O. Kelley, which cost $3,253.27, or a total of $9,942.62. I have taken in this case the fiscal year. There were 701 immigrants in the fiscal year of 1900. Perhaps I should have taken, to make a fairer comparison, the calendar year, but, in the fiscal year 1900, as I have said, we got from Ireland 701 persons and they cost us $14.18 per head. The Glasgow agency cost us $5,123.73, and the Dumfries agency, $1,872.08, or a total cost for Scotland of $6,995.81. The number of immigrants we received was 1,411, at a cost per head of $5. The Liverpool agency cost us $10,730.54, the London High Commissioner's office $2,132.72, and the Welsh agency, $5,164.65, making a total cost for England and Wales of $18,027.91. The number of immigrants we received from these parts of the United Kingdom was 8,814, at a cost per head of $2.20 as against $14.18 per head of the immigrants received from Ireland. Now, I just want to make, in conclusion, a comparison between the United States and ourselves. You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that in the United States, instead of sending parties abroad to induce people to go to that country they have a large staff to prevent undesirable immigrants landing there. In 1899 they prevented over 1,800 people from landing in their country who were considered undesirable immigrants, and they have adopted more stringent measures than those before in force because they are appointing men to come to Canada to prevent people going into the United States from Canada as immigrants. The number of immigrants that came to Canada in 1899 was 44,543, and in 1900, 44,697, an increase in 1900 over 1899 of 154 persons. That was the total increase, and had it not been for the increased immigration from the United States there would have been a very large decrease on the whole. The expenditure on immigration in 1899 was $255,878.88, and in 1900 it was $434,562.61, an increased expenditure in 1900 over 1899 of $178,683.88. That is paying pretty dearly for the extra 154 people we got. We are paying over $1,000 a head for them and the increased cost in 1900 over 1899 was nearly $3 per head. In 1899 the cost was $5.74 per head, and in 1900 $9.72 per head. Now compare that with the United States. The commissioner general reports that in 1898 the number of immigrants to the United States was 229,298, and in 1899 the number was 311,715. The total expenditure by the United States on immigration in 1898 was $275,809.32, and the total expenditure by the United States on immigration in 1899 was $288,002.26. The cost per head of immigrants to the United States in 1898 was about $1.20, and the cost per head of immigrants to the United States in 1899 was about 92 cents. Now let us take the cost in Canada. The cost of immigrants per head in Canada in 1899 was $5.74, and in 1900 it was $9.72. We therefore find that Canada's immigrants in 1899 cost her six times as much as it cost the United States for their immigrants, and Canada's immigrants in 1900 cost over ten times as much as it cost the United States for their immigrants. Remember, Sir, that this expense has to be borne in Canada by a population of less than 6,000,000, as compared with a population in the United States of over 70,000,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well for this government to consider the situation, and either to pursue the course which the United States is pursuing, namely, call their agents in from the old countries; or else, let this government do as the province of New Brunswick is doing, bring their agents back to Canada, give them instructions that they may know what they are expected to do, and let them go to the field of their labours properly equipped for their duties. If these men who now are agents are willing to do that, and if it is necessary we should have immigrant agents abroad, then they should pursue their work properly; but, if our present agents are not willing to do their work, let the government appoint others who will do it in their stead.

Mr. WM. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). I have understood, Mr. Speaker, for the last ten days that the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) was likely to speak on the question of immigration, and as I have a quantity of data from which I could have spoken in probably more detail, I regret that I have not been able to collect these papers for the present occasion. I think, however, Sir, that I will be able to show the House that some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) are absolutely without foundation. In the first place, I do not know that there is any more important subject that could be brought to the attention of this parliament than the question of immigration. It has been recognized as such by both political parties for many years. When during this session two or three weeks of valuable time were expended in discussing the tariff, I thought that while that might be an important matter, yet there were other matters of equal importance to the west especially, to which very little time or attention is given. When the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper and other hon. gentlemen were, in 1881, urging the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate bargain to the favourable consideration of parliament, one of their strongest arguments was that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the government would fill up with settlers our great territories in the west. And while we are proud of possessing that line of steel that connects one province of this Dominion with the other; while we are proud of pointing to the Canadian Pacific Railway as a great military road, we must bear in mind that to the people of the North-west, it has not been altogether an unmixed blessing. That is due to the very fact that the building of that road so rapidly across the prairie district, has caused many hardships under which the people of the North-west are to-day labouring. The same remark would apply to the city of Winnipeg. We were told that the city of Winnipeg was going to have a great population in a comparatively short time, and during the boom of 1882 they so enlarged the city limits of Winnipeg, that they are at present of the same extent as the limits of the city of Glasgow, or Manchester, England, each of which has a population of about 800,000. The consequence is, that in Winnipeg, as some of you know, people flock to the outskirts, buy small lots, put up houses, and when a few get together they demand a sewer, a sidewalk, and a graded street, so that it is difficult for the corporation of Winnipeg to provide for the government of the city because of the sparse population extended over the extensive limits of the municipality. Well, Sir, the same thing applies in the North-west Territories. When the road was extended, settlers came to pass by good lands quite close to the city of Winnipeg, with the expectation that they would get better land in Alberta or Saskatchewan, and so they proceeded on a thousand miles with the hope of settling prosperously at the foot-hills of the Rockies. That has had a bad effect upon immigration. It has had the effect of driving people away to seek land in countries more thickly settled as there is nothing so prejudicial to settlement as the absolute loneliness of life on the prairie, especially for women and children, when they are located miles from any organized community. Schools cannot be erected; there is no society, and a great many of the people who have left our country did so on account of these conditions. Sir Charles Tupper, when he urged the adoption of the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate bargain, was of the opinion, and no doubt justifiably so, that we would have two or three million people in that country within ten years. We all know that unfortunately that result has not been obtained, and that unfortunate result is due largely to the policy adopted by the then government. As a matter of fact, the census of 1891 showed very little more than the natural increase notwithstanding that we had expended over $1,000,000 on immigration. If there ever was a time when we should have got emigrants into that country it was during these years. The Canadian Pacific Railway main line was built between 1882 and 1886; the Deloraine and Glenboro branches running through southern Manitoba, and the line to Yorkton were built during these ten years, and in that same ten years the United States got the largest number of immigrants that ever came into their country. In the year 1883, 788,000 immigrants settled in the United States, and in each of these ten years there was never less than half a million immigrants to that country. Therefore, if ever there was a time in the history of the Northwest when that country should have been settled it was the time when these roads were being constructed, when that money was being expended, and when that country was being so well advertised. That is the time we should have got our immigrants and kept them. I submit that owing to the peculiar policy adopted by the late government, the few emigrants that were brought into that country were allowed to go away. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if there is any one question from which party politics should be entirely swept away it is the question of immigration.

Mr. WALLACE. Why have you not set the example thus far ?

Mr. McCREARY. I think it has been done to a great extent, and I think before I am finished, I will be able to show that so far as the western portion of Canada is concerned it has been done.

Mr. WALLACE. I was speaking of the hon. gentleman's own speech.

Mr. McCREARY. I was not referring to this matter because the government was Conservative or Liberal; I merely mentioned a particular period, and you can call it what government you like which was in power then. As to excluding politics from this question of immigration, I shall quote the Hon. T. Mayne Daly, who, in the last report he made to this House after a trip to the old country, said :

> The question of immigration should be considered entirely aside from politics. Both political parties should approach this subject from the standpoint of nationalism only and do all they can to assist in strengthening the government of the day in carrying out, this, in my humble opinion, the greatest work that presents itself to the government of the country.

Again, he says :

> It is admitted on every hand by both political parties that the future welfare and prosperity of Canada is in a very large measure bound up by the peopling and developing of our great west from Port Arthur in Ontario to Vancouver Island on the Pacific. We have everything to offer the coming settler, and we can feel justified in encouraging the right class of people to come to make their homes amongst us. It has been calculated by American statesmen that each settler who takes up land in the United States is worth $1,000 to the State. I agree with this estimate.

Mr. CLANCY. Are the Doukhobors worth that ?

Mr. McCREARY. I will come to that in a moment. I shall give you the authority of gentlemen who are identified with the Conservative party for nearly everything which I shall say to-day. The hon. gentlemen opposite should be satisfied with that authority. I say the Hon. T. Mayne Daly was correct in the statement he made at that time. In the United States, notwithstanding the political feuds that exist between the two parties, when the Democrats were in power the Republicans abstained from criticising their immigration policy, and the Democrats act in the same way when the Republicans are in power. The only criticism was by the labouring men when large numbers of people were imported from foreign countries to flock into the cities and cause strikes. It is not necessary for me to refer to the various reports made by the High Commissioners in England, Sir Charles Tupper and Lord Strathcona, in which they dealt with the immigration question entirely in a non-partisan spirit. And I want to say here on behalf of Sir Charles Tupper, that I have noticed that since he re-entered politics, he never criticised the policy of this government in regard to bringing in Galicians and Doukhobors. Although his satellites and party papers attacked those people as the scum of Europe, Sir Charles Tupper never made a statement derogatory of them, because he had been in England and on the continent of Europe, and had studied the situation. In his various reports he commended the very policy which this government are pursuing. I am glad to be able to compliment him in this respect.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson), in the first place, seemed to commend some features of the policy of the present government, especially the literature they have issued. Then he took up the question of the desirability of procuring immigrants from the Britsh Isles. There are very few members of this House but will agree that if we were able to get suitable immigrants from the British Isles, they would be much better than those who come from continental Europe. However, I submit, after some experience, that the most desirable immigrant is not from Great Britain. The most desirable immigrant is the man from Ontario, and the older provinces of Canada, who has had some experience in the Western States, such as Kansas, Missouri, Wisconsin or Dakota, because he adds to his knowledge as a farmer here a valuable experience derived from living in a prairie country. With regard to getting immigration from Great Britain, the High Commissioners in their reports of the last ten years, have pointed out the difficulty ; and the Hon. T. Mayne Daly, who went abroad to look into that question, explained very fully in his report why it was difficult to get immigrants from Great Britain. He showed that one of the causes why such a large number of people went from Ireland to the United States was that their passages were prepaid, and I will quote from his report what he says with regard to Canada doing the same thing. He said :

A system has been in vogue in the western states for some years back known as 'prepaid passages.' It means that through the assistance of local banks, railway corporations, and other agencies, settlers in the western states have been enabled to send money or tickets to their friends in the old land whom they were desirous of bringing to America. It is surprising the thousands of people that have been brought out to the western states by this means.

As a matter of fact, I believe about 95 per cent of the immigration from Ireland to the United States went there through prepaid passages. Mr. Daly goes on :

What we want, and the only class of people our agents are authorized to encourage, are agriculturists, farmers and farm servants of both sexes, or others having experience in, or who are desirous of engaging in agricultural pursuits. We are getting our share of this class of immigrants at present; if we desire them in large numbers, we will have to offer the inducements I have enumerated.

I have spoken entirely of this system being carried out in Great Britain and Ireland. There is no reason why it should not, under the same supervision, be extended to continental Europe —in such countries as the government officials would be permitted to carry on their propaganda.

So we have the statement of Mr. Daly that he would not only allow immigrants to come from continental Europe, but he would actually have their passages prepaid and every other possible inducement offered.

The hon. gentleman dealt at considerable length with the question of foreign immigrants, especially the Galicians and the Doukhobors. I might point out, in the first place, that this government is not to be given the credit of having brought in all the Galicians. The Galician immigration to Canada was started under a former government. I think it was about the year 1893 that Prof. Oleskof was brought from Galicia and travelled through the North-west Territories and made a report in behalf of the Galicians. The first large band of Galicians arrived in this country on the 17th of June, 1896, just about the time of the general election of that year. Mr. Carstens, the Galician interpreter at Winnipeg, speaks in the highest terms of these people in his report, as published in the Report of the Department of the Interior for 1896. Sir Charles Tupper, in his report as High Commissioner, also says that he is satisfied with the Galician as an immigrant ; and I submit, after an experience of four years in dealing with that class of settlers, that they are going to make good settlers for the North-west Territories. The Galicians differ from the Doukhobors in some respects. They do not hold their property communally, but individually. They may not be in one way as moral a people as the Doukhobors, and of course they have not the same religion. The Mennonite prefers to go on open prairie where there is no bush or scrub, and where he can engage in the raising of wheat, and agricultural machinery can be used. The Galician differs from the Mennonite in this respect. He prefers to go on land where there is scrub or timber, with which to build his small house and provide himself with fuel ; and the quality of the land does not make so much difference to him. For instance, the first party of Galicians sent out settled east of Emerson, in the district known as Greenridge or Dominion City, within forty miles of Winnipeg. The greater part of that district was settled in 1872 by some of the soldiers who went out with Lord Wolseley ; but there were six or seven townships of very inferior land left, and the government showed the Galicians that land and they took it up. It has a great many gravel ridges and small pocket meadows or sloughs, and machinery cannot be profitably worked on it ; but the Galicians like to have fields of from five to twenty acres here and there, on which they can raise pigs, poultry, coarse grains, vegetables and cattle. They do not care for raising grain on an extensive scale. In fact, they are the very class of farmers the North-west stood in need of. The great drawback in the North-west was that every man wanted to grow grain on a large scale. There were not enough men raising cattle and other stock, or what is known as mixed farming. Fortunately, in the last few years there has been an improvement in that respect. The Galician prefers the very kind of mixed farming which is carried on here in the Ottawa Valley, and I have no doubt that many of those people will be able to supply the country with large quantities of the things which we have hitherto had to import.

As regards the cleanliness of the Doukhobors and Galicians, I would point out that when they landed on the docks at Halifax or Quebec, they had just left a vessel on which they had been two or three weeks crossing the sea. And if the hon. members could see the condition in which the holds of such vessels are kept—vessels that have brought cattle across and return with immigrants—they would realize how difficult it was for these people to have any regard for cleanliness. And there was not much use in their going to any pains to wash and take care of themselves on their landing, because they had still a long journey over land to make. But, the moment a train load of these immigrants arrives at Winnipeg, and before they are there an hour, the water is boiling, and those people are washing night and day until they are just as clean as any other settlers. When I remonstrated with them about their condition, they said to me, with tears in their eyes, how could we help it, our linen was clean when we left, but the vessel was in such a condition that we could not keep ourselves clean, packed as we were in a small hold. I might say that a similar condition prevailed in the old days, when our forefathers came over, and it is not reasonable to reproach these people with a lack of cleanliness which, under the circumstances, was unavoidable. I have visited their houses, and can give personal evidence of their proper habits. If any hon. gentleman is coming west this coming summer, let him drive some sixty miles from Edmonton and visit the houses of these Galicians, who have been in the country three years, and he will see that the common opinion circulated regarding them is a very erroneous one. Some of these settlers, who had not $100 when they arrived here, have built substantial log houses and have well cultivated farms, with five or six cows, a pair of oxen, and lovely gardens, blooming with not only plants and flowers common to the country, but also brought from Austria with them. He will also notice that the manure is removed from their stables every day, and will find more cleanliness on their premises than he will around many Ontario farms. Last year I had a letter from a gentleman named Ross, who had farmed many years in Ontario, and afterwards conducted a large farm and private bank in Minnesota who had paid a visit to the Galicians west of Edmonton. I regret that I have not that letter with me, but in it he said that within five years these people would not only be among the most prosperous farmers of the west, but be lending money, as the Mennonites in southern Manitoba are now doing. This testimony, coming from a man of his experience, is worth any amount of newspaper gossip, founded on prejudice or idle rumours.

A great deal has been said by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, and by other speakers on other occasions, regarding these Doukhobors. These people have been misrepresented, probably, even more than the Galicians. The first party of Doukhobors with which I came in contact numbered 2,100. They arrived in January, 1899 and had been painted to me in such colours that I was afraid we were going, particularly at that season, to have terrible difficulty with them. I put 600 in the immigration hall at Winnipeg, 300 in a building 300 or 400 yards off, and a little over 1,000 in the immigration hall at East Selkirk. I engaged a number of Galicians, who spoke English, to act as interpreters. About one half the words of the Galician language are the same as the Doukhobor tongue, so that these Galicians were rather imperfect interpreters, but, I employed them to look after these Doukhobors. These people, however, soon came to me, and said they did not want interpreters, and if told what to do, could look after themselves. I, therefore, allowed the Doukhobors to look after the buildings, see that the fires were kept up—it was intensely cold—and they kept the buildings and did their business in such a way that few business men could have kept them better. I discharged the interpreters except the official one, and allowed those people to manage for themselves, and I concluded from the way they did manage things, that they would make very good settlers on the prairie.

It is charged that they have interfered with the labour market. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is just the reverse of what they will do. If they believe in anything, it is the great brotherhood of man. They believe in every man getting decent wages for a day's work. Let me give an instance of this. On the Canadian Northern road, in 1899, there were about forty Canadians working on a piece of grading from Swan river east, some twenty-six miles. It was very swampy and these people were up to their knees in mud and water. A party of Doukhobors was sent up, and after a while their leader wrote me that his people could not make any money at the wages, and were going to quit. I advised him to go to the proprietors and explain the matter. They followed my advice. They went up and asked 20 cents a yard instead of the 13½ cents or 14 cents which they were getting. They did not get the 20 cents, but they got a raise to 17 cents. Then they went to the forty Canadians and told them that they had got a raise of 3 cents a yard, so that, instead of decreasing the wages they actually gave the forty Canadians the benefit of their efforts to raise the pay. The same thing has invariably prevailed elsewhere. I defy the hon. gentleman to show me one case in which the Doukhobors have cut down wages, except during the first two or three months when they were in Winnipeg, and sawed wood at a lower price than they should. But, that was done in ignorance. They did not know the value of money, and could not tell 25 cents from a dollar. Why, the president of the Manitoba and North-western road, Mr. W. R. Baker, told me, that the first time these Doukhobors worked on that road, when they got their first $15 in new one dollar bills, so ignorant were they that they came with the money and wanted to know how much they should give back to the landlord—what percentage was his and what theirs. They could not believe that all that money belonged to themselves. They are honest labourers, and let me tell you what was done in some cases. They were imposed upon by railway foremen. Take the division west of Moosejaw, known as the western division, of which Mr. Milestone was superintendent. He sent a gang of Doukhobors to work on that road, but they did not give satisfaction, and I could not understand why. I found out, however, the reason. You know, Sir, that these people will not eat meat if they can avoid it, and the cook in the camp used to put meat in their soup, which was made of vegetables, and after they had eaten their soup, he would take out the piece of meat, show it to them and mock them. They did not know how to put a remonstrance, and quietly left the place. Mr. Milestone said they were no good, but I told him that if they got fair treatment they would do very well. I got evidence of the fact, and laid it before Mr. White, of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then, some of these men went back, and Mr. Milestone has since written a letter in which he states that he has handled men for thirty years in railway construction, and a better class of men he never handled than those 300 Doukhobors. But, he saw that their consciences were not interfered with, and that they were properly treated. The same experience is told by Mr. Sullivan, one of the foremen on the South-eastern road. When some 300 or 400 Doukhobors went down to work on that road, he had difficulty with them at first, but as soon as they understood that they would get fair treatment, and be properly housed and fed, they gave every satisfaction, and Mr. Sullivan says he never had a better gang of men.

The highest record for grading work done by any man in the North-west Territories is held by a Doukhobor working on that road. He made $119 in twenty-four days at dump work. Now, with regard to the Doukhobors, as I have said I spent the winter of 1899 with them. There were six hundred of them around me in the hall where my office was. I was passing out and in among them all the time. I had the best citizens of Winnipeg come to see them. On Sundays, these immigrants generally occupied the evening in singing their psalms, and I had the choirs of the various churches come in. There were people about them there all the time ; and surely, if there had been anything immoral or wrong, we should have had an opportunity to know of it. I have watched these people and studied them for the last three or four years, and I defy any one to show a single case of anything wrong or unchaste in their conduct. I wish, here in my place in parliament, to give a denial based upon my knowledge of these people, to the statements that have been made here, and not only that, but to statements made in another place within the last two weeks. I think it is a disgrace—I cannot use any other term—that public men and public journals should cast such aspersions upon people who have suffered so much for conscience sake as these Doukhobors have. Now, where do we find the greatest opposition to these Doukhobors ? Certainly not where they are best known. Swan River around, Yorkton and Rosthern, the three colonies, are situated out from these towns—and what do the people of those towns say ? When it was said that 150 of the Doukhobors were going to California a couple of years ago, the Yorkton Board of Trade, a body composed of men of all shades of politics, met and passed a resolution asking the government to do what it could to keep them here. Take the statement of such a man as Mr. Thomas Meredith, one of the strongest merchants there. He said to me : McCreary, when you trust one of these men to pay you on a certain day for a bag of flour or other goods that he has bought, you may make up your mind that on the day, and at the very hour agreed, he will be there with the money or with a satisfactory explanation—and we cannot say that about all the other settlers. It is true they do not buy as largely as some of the others. But they do buy. And what is the result ? The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who is largely interested around Yorkton will bear me out in saying that, whereas in 1896 Yorkton was so dilapidated that you could buy a lot on the best street for $50, that town has taken life, and to-day you have to pay $1,500 for the same lot. This is evidence of what effect the Doukhobor, Galician and other immigration has had upon the country. They have built a school-house there of solid brick, costing $10,000, and a church costing $15,000. And that Protestant church is patronized by these very Doukhobors and Galicians. I think I have said enough to show that these people will become good settlers. The only thing, apparently, that can be said against them is that in some of their peculiar laws, they do not agree with the laws of Canada. Now, from some of the remarks that fell from the lips of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) the other day, when he was urging the establishment of a divorce court for Canada, I do not know that we have so much to boast about in our marriage laws.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McCREARY. I am not giving my own opinion, but am referring to what the hon. member said. He quoted cases in Toronto and other cities throughout Canada showing that there was a very serious condition of affairs. Now, as a matter of fact, while the Doukhobors have a peculiar system of marriage, there can be found only one case of divorce among them during fifty years. The authority of that is Count Tolstoi, the authority for that is Prince Hilkoff ; the authority for that is Alexander Konshin, of Moscow, a gentleman who belongs to the Greek Church, and has no connection with the Doukhobors, who is a merchant prince of Russia, and a man of the highest standing in Russia and in Europe, a man whose word I would take at any time. The authority for that is John Bellows, of Purleigh, Essex, the leading Quaker of England, a gentleman whom I have heard went to the peace conference at the Hague, as personal representative of Her late Majesty, a man of the very highest standing in Great Britain. Surely the word of such a man should be worth more than the utterances of some hon. gentlemen opposite and some newspapers in Canada. With regard to marriage, these Doukhobors are something like the Mennonites. They do not believe in taking out a license for marriage. They will, in time, register their marriages in their own way just as the Mennonites have done. In fact, they are something like Roman Catholics in their views in one respect, if I am to judge by the decision of Judge Archibald in the Delpit case—they look upon marriage as a sacrament, and not as a civil contract to be dealt with by the courts or civil authorities. That marriages are registered in Heaven they take literally. Shortly after they came, I had Premier Haultain, of the North-west Territories, and Hon. Mr. Bulyea, come to Winnipeg and meet the representatives of the Doukhobors. They discussed this question for four hours, and Mr. Haultain told me afterwards that there would be but little difficulty in bringing these people to our way of thinking. Why, we had difficulty with regard to others of their customs and methods—not relating to such serious matters, of course, but still involving some difficulty. For instance, there was the way they treated their horses. The horses in Russia are a light class, and the people are in the habit of driving them rapidly and feeding them at intervals of two hours day and night. The horses they bought here were heavy draught horses, and they could not treat them in the same way. They could only be driven thirty miles a day. The Doukhobors wanted to race them. The consequence was they killed off 40 or 50 per cent of their horses by improper feeding and driving. Then, there was trouble about their wagons. They wanted the Russian wagon to be brought out, and that wagon is about three times as heavy as ours, and not at all suitable to the prairie. I told them that they had better have Canadian wagons. But there was a party of men, eight or ten of them, and some women as well, who came out here with the Doukhobors as nurses and doctors, who were more impractical than the Doukhobors themselves. They were theorists, fadists, anarchists you might call them. It was a case of the blind leading the blind. Instead of trying to persuade the Doukhobors that they were wrong, and leading them to take up Canadian ways, they told them that they were right, and told us that we must come to the Doukhobor's ways. But I said : No, there is no use in that ; we know best what is suitable for this country. But the only way you could teach some of them was by experience. They went to a factory and ordered the material—oak—to be sawn for eighty wagons. The order was given to a man from Almonte, who keeps a mill there, in Winnipeg. They ordered the hubs, spokes, fellows, and so on, three times the size that are used in our wagons. Young Tolstoi encouraged them to get wagons after their own pattern. But I got eight or ten of the more intelligent to buy the Chatham wagon. And when the Doukhobors, after they had got two or three of their own wagons, saw how the other teamsters could do far more work with the Canadian wagon, they threw their own wagons aside and bought ours. Prince Hilkoff had to go down and pay out of his own money $1,650 for the oak that had been sawn for these heavy wagons, and that had to be thrown away as useless. This is a simple thing, but it shows how difficult it is to overcome their prejudices. Why, they wanted to use the shorthandled axe—to chop logs with one hand. We had less difficulty in convincing them that that was wrong. No doubt in a very short time there is not a law in force in Canada but these people will cheerfully comply with. I mentioned that the greatest difficulty we had was with the people who came out with them. But thank God, I got rid of them all—all but one. That one was Mr. Bodjiansky, a well-meaning man, but one of most peculiar ideas. About fifteen months ago, I found that correspondence was going on between him and the Southern Pacific Railway, who were anxious to get five hundred or a thousand men to engage in railway construction work in California, about eighty miles south of Santa Barbara. I learned of this correspondence, and also got a copy of the contract signed by the milling and railway company, and, with this contract, tried to stop these men at the boundary line. But, notwithstanding the boasted laws of the United States, they were allowed to pass, though they were going to the United States under contract, and though there was not $25 among one hundred and fifty of them.

Notwithstanding that I produced the contract in Russian, notwithstanding that I produced the English copy of that to the authorities at the boundary line, notwithstanding that the custom-house officer told me clearly that a case had been made of a breach of the Allen Labour law and also of the immigration law,—notwithstanding all that, so great was the influence of the Southern Pacific road at Washington that his decision was overruled, and these people were allowed to pass through. This Bodjiansky was the prime mover in all this affair. He sent his son with this crowd, he was in the first crowd that went. I told the people they would regret it. I said : If you go down there you will get a little bigger wage, more steady employment, but the land is so high that you will never be able to become the owners of your own homes. The climate will not suit you, as it is too similar to the climate that you left in Cyprus and in the Caucasus in Russia. The result was that a short time before I came here a large number of these people came back and almost kissed my feet on the platform at the station at Winnipeg. They told me that had they followed my advice they would not have been coming back in the famished and sickly condition in which they arrived at Winnipeg. This was all the work of this man Bodjiansky. He knew that he was foiled, he knew that I had spoiled his game. I do not wish to say that the man was trying to get a large percentage on the people he sent away, but I have my own suspicions. However, he was foiled in his efforts, the people have all returned, and as one last gasp before he left he published a manifesto. But the Doukhobors did not believe him, and twenty-two names are all he could get on the manifesto. I may say that I wrote up—I had not time to write the Doukhobors themselves—but I wrote to a young Doukhobor of the name of Michael Cacazoff, who had been living in Brandon. I will give you the history of this young man. He is about 23 or 24 years of age. He was anxious to get an education, and I said I would try and get him into a Winnipeg school, but it was difficult to get employment for him. He went to Brandon and saw Mr. Fox, professor of foreign languages in the Brandon Baptist college, who took this young man up. That was about October last. He now writes me a letter in his own hand, in as good English, with as good penmanship as myself, or most of the members of this House, could frame a letter in,—learned in eight months, showing how that young man got along. I wrote to him telling him the injury that was being done by this manifesto, and asking whether Bodjiansky voiced the feelings of the people. Here is what Mr. Fox wrote to me on the young man's behalf :

As English instructor to Michael Cazacoff, the Doukhobor whom you know, and knowing that you are both personally and officially interested in the welfare of the Doukhobors, I have taken the liberty to write to you briefly of my experience with that people during the past winter.

When I came to Brandon last October to take charge of the language department in the college here, it was suggested to me that I give Michael English lessons. Interested as I am in foreign languages generally, and desiring to learn the Russian particularly, I took him in hand as soon as he was free to come. Ever since he has had regular appointments with me. He has been exceedingly faithful, never having missed an appointment, always coming on time and without fail, at the close of each lesson showing me his deep appreciation of what is being done for him. He tells me from time to time that the fact that he receives any recognition from an official such as yourself, is great encouragement to him. I assure you that your name stands high in honour among the Doukhobors. They are a grateful people.

Through Michael I have come in contact with them quite often, frequently visiting their homes. I have found them all as you described them in your last letter to Michael—clean, peace-loving and thrifty. They all unite in saying that not only do they feel satisfied with the Canadian laws generally, but also that their dreams could not picture to them anything that they would like better.

Mr. McCREARY.

I have been questioning Michael regarding the Bodjiansky letters. He says they were written at the instigation of two or three disgruntled Doukhobors who are of the kind that would never be any good anywhere on this globe. Michael got this information from his father who lives in one of the villages in the same locality where Bodjiansky resides.

I have no doubt but some of the hon. gentlemen from Ontario may know Mr. Fox, the writer of this letter. He says further :

A number of people here call the Doukhobors lazy, using as their proof, so-called, the fact that very few of them are learning English. I confess I thought at first that it was strong evidence in that direction; but now I see that their backwardness in this respect is owing to their timidity of people.

That is just the thing, the very difficulty of the whole question. They have been so down trodden by the Russian soldiery and the Cossack authorities, their women have been so flogged and so persecuted, they have been so beaten on account of their religious beliefs and for other reasons, that to-day they are very suspicious, and it takes them a long time before they will believe that what a man says to them is true. They have been deceived so often that they will not believe a man the first time. That is one of the difficulties that has stood in the way. A school was set up at Winnipeg by a lady, or under charge of a committee of ladies. When they first went into that school there was a large number of pictures hung around the hall. They did not know but that these pictures represented the doctrines and rites of the Greek Church, and they began to leave. The lady did not know why the children quietly slipped away from the building and would not attend ; they would not even tell my interpreters and officers for some time why they would not go to that school. Finally they said : These are Creek Catholic schools, and we do not want to go where the Greek religion is taught. We believe in our own religion. We want to come here to learn reading and writing, history and geography, and we do not want to see these pictures hung around the walls. The consequence was that the pictures were taken down and the children went back to school. So you see, Mr. Speaker, some of the difficulties we have to encounter in dealing with these people.

As I have said, this man Bodjiansky tried, and is trying to the last to make trouble. There is no doubt he feels aggrieved because he was not able to carry out his measure for removing these people to the United States. He tried to stir up strife among them ; and I may say that since he wrote that manifesto he hawked it around the city of Winnipeg to try to get it published in the daily papers. For a long time I have known that he was trying to get this up. Seeing he has been foiled in his efforts he has gone back to Siberia in Russia, and I am told by the Doukhobors in the North-west that they are glad to get rid of him. I may tell the hon. member that if he desires it I can bring a statement from the North-west signed by every Doukhobor that the sentiments expressed by Boujansky are not the sentiments of the Doukhobor people. I have hopes that in a short time, even this year, the Territorial government and the Dominion government may make certain slight amendments to the marriage laws by which these people will be able to register their marriages in a little different manner from what they do, different even from the Mennonite custom. I think any difficulty of that nature will be got over.

In regard to taking homesteads communally, that is another objection. The hon. gentleman may be surprised to know that within the last six weeks more Doukhobors have taken up individual homesteads than in all the previous time since they came to Canada. Not only have they taken up homesteads in their own villages, but quite a number of them are breaking away from their villages and going off and taking up homesteads among Canadians. At Swan River they have asked to be excluded from the colony, to go out of the communal system and start for themselves, just after they had acquired sufficient money to buy a horse and cow to start with. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is only one argument in favour of the communal system, in favour of settling foreigners in a colony, but that argument is a good one, and that argument has prevailed throughout Canada. The fact has been mentioned in another place, in Ottawa, to the prejudice of the Doukhobors; but it is a strange thing that even in older Canada the Scotch Highlanders like to get together, Frenchmen like to get together, where their language is spoken, and where their religion is taught. I do not blame them. We see the same thing among many nationalities except perhaps those from the North of Ireland, the country from which my father came. Perhaps we do not flock together quite so well, because we are a little too belligerent. But most all nationalities like to come together and settle in colonies. The same rule prevails all over this continent. The Moravians settle together in colonies, so do the Roumanians and the Hungarians. Every one of the foreign peoples brought to the North-west in the early days have settled in colonies. Why? Because they were poor, and they have got to depend upon one another until they are rich enough to help themselves. One man cannot buy a team of horses, but two men together can buy one ox each and put them together; one man may not have enough money to buy a plough, but as they get a little richer three or four of them can buy a reaping machine. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that had that communal system prevailed a little more in the early days, among Anglo-Saxons, we would not have had so many Canadians leaving there to go to the United States? So with those who came from Ontario to the west with very little means. Then, as now, the implement agents had sweet mouths and oily tongues. These travelled throughout the west, and just as soon as a farmer had ten or fifteen acres of ground he was asked to buy a binder, he was asked to buy a rake, and all the implements necessary to run a farm of ten times the size. They bought this, probably the crop failed, but the note was due, the interest on the note had accumulated, 12 per cent compounded year after year, the creditor got a judgment, the implement man came around and sold out the belongings that were not exempt under the law, he took the old machine back, and the consequence was there was that man struggling, there was no use of raising a crop next year, because it would be seized again, and the man, struggling against fate, concluded: I might as well quit, and quit they did in many cases. So many of them were quitting that the Manitoba and Territorial governments were obliged to make the very wide exemption under the law of which I spoke a few nights ago. If these farmers had done something similar to that which the Doukhobors have done, gone a little slower at first and worked a little more on the communal or co-operative plan, they would have been able to get along all right. The Doukhobors, as the Mennonites are doing now, as soon as they become possessed of sufficient means, will go into individual ownership to a large extent.

There is one more word that I wish to say in regard to the education of the Doukhobors. One of the difficulties that was encountered at first was, that the Doukhobors did not want to learn the English language. I asked Prince Hilkoff what he though the Doukhobors would be willing to do in this respect, and he said that he thought about one-third of them would be willing to learn the English language at once, and that, with the balance, two-thirds, it would take some time. I asked Mr. Haultain, the premier of the North-west Territories, if he would be willing to provide schools for the one-third of these Doukhobors, and he said that they would be willing to provide these schools as soon as possible. As the result of the united efforts which were made by the Quakers in England, a young man, a graduate of Oxford, was sent out. He travelled amongst the Doukhobors, and is now endeavouring to secure funds for carrying on educational work. The Quakers of the United States have also contributed largely in that direction. In the meantime there were two Canadian ladies who undertook the work. A young lady from Kingston, Miss Nellie E. Baker, and Eliza Varney, a fine old Quaker lady, who lives in Prince Edward county, came up to the North-west, and started a school. They started a school in a tent which I loaned them. The children squatted on the grass. I would like to read a few extracts from a letter written by the young lady to me shortly before I came down here. She says :

But here were the children, all as ignorant of the English language as I of the Russian, waiting to be taught. We had not expected such a prompt response to our project. So my first experience as a teacher began under decidedly unique conditions, teacher and taught being without a single word in common. By signs and motions I got them seated in rows on the prairie grass of the tent floor—later we had plank benches—and holding up a pencil said 'one.' I could detect no apparent comprehension; then taking up another pencil said 'two,' and adding a third, 'three'; still no response, and my heart sank somewhat. However, I decided to repeat the method, and as I said 'one,' I noticed a look on a boy's face that told me he knew I was counting, and I saw him turn and speak to the others. Almost instantly they understood, and soon repeating after me, counted up to ten. Then making the figures on a large sheet of paper—that had to serve as a blackboard—they soon knew perfectly the English numerals. . . . .

All were very attentive and eager to learn. Some of these children came regularly from the village, Dtshenje, five long miles in all weathers. They came early; too. So I opened school at half-past eight daily, and when closing time came at four, I often thought I was the only tired one. So much of the teaching was of necessity oral that the six and a half hours a day for five and a half days each week I found rather trying.

At the first the school was visited by several of the older Doukhobor men, who, I apprehend, were present to satisfy themselves as to the nature and probable influence of the undertaking. Later this critical attitude gave way to a feeling of hearty approval and confidence. . . . .

As to writing, which was done on slates in school and in 'scribblers' for homework—of which seemingly they could not get too much—I must confess that it was often at least as good as my headlines. This shows that the Doukhobor has a strong eye for form, and certainly in the scrupulously artistic power in the handling of strong colour effects. . . . . .

The manliness and independence of the Doukhobor character was shown when these poor villagers found that the school was entirely non-official, and my work wholly voluntary ; a committee of the men offered me remuneration, which, being declined, they expressed their gratitude, and told me through their spokesman, Constantine Plaxton, that they 'thanked me all the day and all the night.' . . . . .

The importance of some knowledge of English to the Doukhobors is apparent when it is shown that one who cannot understand is only able to get half wages, but apart from this there is a general desire to learn our tongue and to become Canadians. This view, formed in my visits to the villages near Good Spirit Lake, was confirmed when later I visited many villages to the south and north colony. . . . .

When Mr. Barcroft came to the tent school at Good Spirit Lake, he was accompanied by M. Nicholas de Struve, the Russian consul to Canada at Montreal, and these gentlemen were good enough to express their gratification at finding in my school a 'going concern' of considerable experimental importance, which, it was said, would throw practical light on the subject in hand. . . . . .

It does not require a very keen perception on the part of one who has had a welcome into hundreds of their homes to be assured that this is a community living up to high moral standard, and holding tenaciously to the simple tenets of Christian faith.

That is good enough evidence for me to believe, besides that which my own eyes taught me in four years, that these people are good people. At one time I made up my mind that I would visit these people in their own homes. I was brought up in this country amongst the pioneer settlers on the Upper Ottawa, and I know what pioneer life is. I know what it is to build log houses, and I am in a position to judge as to what kind of a settler is necessary for a new country. I decided that I would not take any provisions with me, but that I would live with them as they lived. I made a trip to Swan river, over to Fort Pelly, and down to Yorkton, and slept five nights in their homes. I was surprised and astonished at the cleanliness of their places. I was surprised at the kind of log houses that they built. I have seen very good log houses built in the early days here, and I have seen what were called first-class 'corner' men, but I had never seen any log houses of which the corners were as neatly made, and in which the plastering was so neatly done, and on which the roofs were so well put on. I have never seen any log houses built by any Canadian builder equal to these houses. They had blended the clays used in the decoration of these houses in such a way as to almost make you think that they were actually painted. There was another prejudice that they had at first. They would not have stoves in their houses, but they had large clay ovens, which they placed next the doors. When I said to them that they should have stoves, they at first said that they would burn out, but they quickly overcame that prejudice, and in two or three months there were a great many box stoves in use. As to their food, it is true there was no meat, but they had vegetables, onions, &c., and they made a very nice salad. They had soup of rice and barley, which they took with bread, well baked. I found them most polite people, and the best things in the house they gave me. Their style of living was a little different from ours; they did not use the ordinary bedsteads but they had pillows made of down and feathers which were taken out every day to be exposed to the fresh air, and in that they gave us a lesson in hygiene. I was as comfortable as I would be in a hotel. It is true that twenty or thirty occupied the same house. Their beds were arranged on platforms at the end of the wall, but they had neat curtains and hangers and you were just as private as you would be in a Pullman car. These people are most religious as regards their food. Even in an hotel or rough boarding house, it was one of the noticeable features that they were not afraid to stand up before they partook of a meal to thank God in their own way for providing it, and after they had eaten they were not ashamed to do the same thing. I saw these people out through the west, and I say that at Yorkton, Swan River, and in other places where they are settled amongst the roughest class of men, they are thought a great deal of by 95 per cent of the people. There are a few cranks up there. There are some worse than cranks who do not want any one but themselves to go into that country. One of the greatest difficulties we had to face came from the rancher class who went there as so-called ranchers with 100 or 150 head of cattle, and they thought because they had taken up 160 acres—which a great many of them had not paid for although they had been there for fifteen years—they thought because they squatted upon that land and put up a small house and let their cattle roam over the entire prairie, that the country was sacred to themselves alone. Merchants in Yorkton told me that these so-called ranchers were not of much benefit to the country. It was true they raised these cattle, but they shipped them to the east and they did not even buy their supplies in the country, because they brought them in from eastern cities. I was told that every quarter section taken up by Galicians and Doukhobors was a source of wealth to the country and the trade had increased in such a manner that the business people saw the difference and wanted to get rid of the ranchers. I reasoned with some of these ranchers, and I said : Do you expect to tie up a half a township for the sake of your cattle ? I told them : Go to Cypress Hills or to Maple Creek district for your ranching, for you have no right to say that this land which is suitable for mixed farming shall be retained for your benefit for ever, and that the Dominion government are not to get out of it what they should get out of it, because you claim that the country is to be kept apart for men like you.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is also said that these Doukhobors and Galicians were fed by the government. It is charged that in the first place they were brought in by the government, and then that they were fed by the government. Certain newspapers throughout the west and throughout the east too have told that lie so often that they have got to believe it themselves. They say it is peculiar of a man who is a pretty square liar that if he tells a lie often enough he gets to believe it is true. Nothwithstanding that the story about the government feeding these immigrants has been denied time and time again, it has been repeated by every Conservative newspaper in the west and in the east. Why, Sir, not a single Galician or Doukhobor was ever brought in by this government. They paid their own fares in good coin of the realm. It is true they were assisted by the Society of Friends, a Christian sect, one of the most Christian sects in Canada I believe; one of the most self-sacrificing religious denominations I have ever known, and I was very much surprised to hear the hon. gentleman from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) say anything disparaging to the Quakers. We have not very many Quakers in the west, but from the experience I have had in dealing with Quakers from Philadelphia, from Great Britain and from Canada, I think that if ever I should desire strongly to belong to any denomination, it would be that denomination. They are men whose religion consists in helping the needy, whose religion consists in taking out of their own pocket what they can spare and giving it to those who want it. That is a good enough religion for me. We see too little of it in our days.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCREARY. I repeat that I was surprised to hear the member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) cast a reflection upon the adherents to that religion. Now these people were never assisted by the Dominion in any way except that the ordinary bonus was paid as in the case of other immigrants. If I wished to occupy the time of the House I could refer to the bonus paid by the Conservative government. I could go back to the time when they paid two pounds sterling per head on some of the immigrants coming in here. I have with me the names of some of these immigrants and certainly they are not French, English or Irish; they sound very Polish. I will tell you the history of some of these, and I can tell you why they were unable to settle down permanently in the North-west. A number of these immigrants were brought out from Galicia in 1889. That country has a population of 7,000,000 people, 3,000,000 of whom are Roman Catholics and 4,000,000 of whom are Ruthenians who are interspersed with Germans, a number of whom were sent there about 104 years ago. A number of these people were brought out and settled in the North-west, and where were they settled, do you think ? They were settled in a country where it was known that a man could not live on mixed farming. There was no water. The government had sunk wells there and they could not find water. I refer to the settlement nine miles this side of Medicine Hat, south. However, the government settled these people there, and what has been the result ? They paid a very large bonus of $10 a head for those immigrants and here are some of the names. Konrad Gredl, Heinrich Vockeroth, Takob Kraushaar, Tehan Dochotke, Gottleib Fliller. What do hon. gentlemen think of those for Anglo-Saxon names ? The first thing the government had to do was to try and get them water, and when they failed in that, these poor people had to haul water from the Saskatchewan river. The government gave them seed-grain the first year, but there was no rainfall; the seed failed, and there was no crop. Some of them left. Some remained there and the following year the government advanced them seed-grain again as well as provisions to keep them from starving. Very large sums of money were expended in this way. Some of them left again, and finally every single settler was forced to leave that district and not one was left to tell the tale. All that money was wasted. And, Sir, the result has an injurious effect to-day on the settlement of that country. The seed-grain mortgage rests on these homesteads to-day, and when we send a settler in there to take up one of them, he is met with a seed-grain mortgage of $45 or $50 which he does not want to pay, and so he gets out. I point out to the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) that this seed-grain mortgage will have to be wiped out. It is stopping the settlement of that district to-day, because men will not pay a debt which they did not incur. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you where these immigrants went when they left the Medicine Hat district. This settlement took place in 1889 and 1890, and in 1895 the exodus from that country was so great that the people of Winnipeg became alarmed. I left Winnipeg with some members of the board of trade and drove out Portage avenue on the main road heading west, and in the space of four miles on that road, we met no less than twenty-nine wagons, prairie schooners as they are called, with a family loaded in on top of the few belongings, and the teams were hauling these people from the great Canadian west to the United States. That is where these immigrants went. A few went to Northern Alberta, but the great number left for the United States and became good American citizens. That was the result of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. That was the policy which they pursued not only with regard to farmers, but in regard to other classes of immigrants. What about the Crofter Colony ? What about the great Imperial Colonization Company that settled at Yorkton, and about Churchbridge and about Saltcoats ? Millions of money was spent by the Imperial government to settle these people there. It is true they spoke our language, but they did not know anything about farming, and whom do you think the Conservative government sent to teach them ? They sent political party hacks who knew nothing about farming. These men said to the settlers : You have $600 grant on your quarter section which is advanced by the Imperial Colonization Company; for that $600 I will buy you a pair of oxen and I will buy you a plough and we deduct from that two years interest on the $600. The stuff that was supplied these settlers was grossly over charged, and was in many cases absolutely unsuitable. In fact some of these men told me : We did not understand it then, but the oxen actually never were hitched up at all, and some of them were both for the off-side or both for the nigh-side. The men who should have had the best implements, oxen and equipments were supplied with oxen and implements that were not suitable. The result is that there are just nine families of Crofters left in that district, and they are destitute. It is not their fault, but it is the fault of hon. gentlemen opposite for putting men in charge who did not understand their business, and who cheated the people. A few of those people can be found to-day around East Selkirk, and will give evidence to this effect. It is the same in other parts of the country. To-day the town of Yorkton is thriving, and the hon. gentleman from West York who is interested in the York Colonization Company has become almost a rich man through the efforts of this government to bring in immigrants and he should be thankful.

One hon. gentleman said a few moments ago that there has been no change in the policy adopted by this government which made it differ from that of the late government—that the Minister of the Interior has inaugurated nothing new. Well, the best evidence of a change is in the feelings of the people of the west and in the progress of the country. One evidence of the change is in the fact that in Manitoba last year, although we had a very poor crop, one of the worst since the grasshopper plague of 1875 and 1876, you could scarcely hear a farmer or a merchant murmuring. Why ? Because they have got on their feet, and have confidence in the country, and they know that one year's failure cannot affect them as it would have done ten or fifteen years ago, when the failure of a crop caused many people to leave the country. They know that they have a government in power who are administering the affairs of the country in a business way.

Does the hon. gentleman want any more evidence of the wisdom of the policy pursued by this government as contrasted with that of their predecessors ? Let him look at the city of Winnipeg itself. Stand on the post office corner, and within a distance of four or five hundred yards you will count more substantial warehouses which have been erected in the last four years than ever existed before that time. Take the case of Gault Bros., of Montreal, who a few years ago would not invest a dollar in brick and mortar in Winnipeg. Their confidence has become such that they have erected a $50,000 warehouse in Winnipeg. Geo. D. Wood Co., R. J. Whitla, and others have done the same thing. In fact, thirty or forty warehouses averaging $30,000 in value, have been erected in Winnipeg in the last four years. Last January, on the train going west, Mr. Gault said to me : 'I do not know anything about Sifton, but if his policy is such as to produce the development of the west that we have seen in the last three or four years, we ought to keep him where he is. It is a policy which has enabled us to double our business, not only in Winnipeg, but in many towns in the west where we formerly were afraid to trust our goods; now we send them out with perfect confidence that we shall be paid.'

What about the value of property in and around Winnipeg? I was for ten years, from 1880 to 1890, handling 80,000 acres of property, as manager for the late Sir John Schultz, and I know almost every quarter section of land around that city. I know that at that time it was impossible to sell much land even for the taxes. The municipalities frequently put up land for sale for arrears of taxes, and they had to adjourn the sale, because no one would give $30 for a quarter section. The municipality had to buy in the land, and on the day following the sale, I have bought a quarter section for $5, and got a tax deed for it. What is the case to-day? The country around Winnipeg is filling up with settlers, largely from the United States, to such an extent that land which was valued a few years ago by the Hudson Bay Company and others at 50 cents to $2 per acre, is to-day worth from $7 to $8 an acre. This fact shows the difference between the policy of this government and the policy of the former government; and the same condition of things prevails in many parts of the west. I venture to say that this year that there will be an unprecedented number of people from the United States coming into that country. To-day they are flocking into the country between Calgary and Edmonton at the rate of three special train-loads a day, in addition to the regular train service, and I believe 25,000 people from the United States will go in there this year. I showed Prof. Saunders a letter which I got a few days ago from Thos. A. Foster, a man who went from Kemptville and settled in Iowa and afterwards in North Dakota, where he resided for twenty years, and who sold his land in North Dakota for $30 an acre, and his land in Iowa for $50 an acre, and having a large number of sons, came back to Canada and the old flag. I asked him about his politics, and found him to be a good Conservative. He bought 2,240 acres of land within thirteen miles of Winnipeg, and he wrote to me the other day thanking me for a sample of seed oats which I had sent him, and for the care which the government were taking of new settlers, and he added: 'You will be surprised to know that I have already 90 lambs, some over 50 pounds.' He had brought in 800 sheep, and he said: 'This is better than I have done in raising sheep in the United States.' That is the best kind of immigration literature you can send out. I immediately had that letter sent to the United States, and I am going to use it there. The result of this policy will soon make itself known. It is just like advertising any business; tell the people what you have got, and the results will follow. We have been practically only advertising our wares; now the fruits will be shown. These men will write to their friends, and before long, instead of having 40,000 immigrants a year, we should more nearly approach the number of 440,000 who go to the United States annually. At all events, we ought to get into this country 200,000 people a year, and we will eventually, because we have now the right policy. I will just give you a list of the amounts of money which some of these people are bringing in.

Mr. Foster brought in $30,000. We have also received the following farmers from the State of South Dakota: Johan Benner and family, with a capital of $10,000; Peter Buller and family, with $25,000; Johan Boese and family, with $12,000; Cornelius Bayer and family, with $2,000; John Keaassen and family, with $1,000; Johan Goerzca and family, with $1,500; N. Sfvoble and family, with $3,000; Peter Paukratz and family, with $1,000; John Baerg and family, with $1,000; Isaac Adrian and family, with $1,200; N. Patzlaff and family, with $1,000. The Americans almost invariably bring in large sums of money, whereas during the time hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, some of even those few immigrants we got from the United States were the class of people known as professional movers,—a class of people who keep moving about and will not settle down. A story is told of some of them who settled in Red Deer district, that so accustomed were they to move, that their hens and chickens invariably once a year threw themselves on their back to have their legs tied preparatory to moving away.

I will not enlarge further upon this immigration problem, as it will probably be discussed later on. I would like, however, to quote one authority in support of the policy of the government. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) quoted the report of the Labour Union of the east—men who know as much about the Doukhobors as I do about the Fiji Islanders. But let me quote the report of the Winnipeg Board of Trade, which is composed of about four hundred citizens of Winnipeg, representing not only that city, but the entire Manitoba and the North-west. When you speak of the Board of Trade of Ottawa, you mean a body whose interests are almost exclusively centred in Ottawa, but the Board of Trade of Winnipeg is a body whose interests extend over the west—who are agents of the loan companies and the machinery companies and the other great concerns which have their ramifications all through the Territories. And if you will read the names of the members, you will find that a large number are Conservatives. You will find that the presidents of the Board and the vice-president are both strong Conservatives. Well, what do these people say ? This is what they say in their report :

The work of this department of the Dominion government is being prosecuted vigorously, and its splendid results are shown in the large number of 38,324 added to the population of the west, during the year 1900. Of these, 14,000 were Canadians, and 5,136 came from the United States, and are principally well to do farmers, who have a thorough knowledge of the requirements of the country, and can adapt themselves to the state of affairs existing here. They bring with them a large amount of money and personal effects, and in most cases either enter directly upon land previously selected by them, or purchase improved farms, and engage at once in the cultivation of their new properties.

It is reported by the department that the foreigners who have come to our country are rapidly becoming self-sustaining, and exhibit a keen desire to remain upon and cultivate their farms, and it is evident that they will prove a valuable addition to our population.

I think, Sir, you would rather have that authority than the authority of politicians, and a very low order of politicians, too.

There have been 8,827 government land entries and sales during the year, aggregating nearly two millions of acres and in addition to this the Canadian Pacific Railway have made 2,283 contracts, covering 432,000 acres, and amounting in value to $1,377,715.48.

The very question raised by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and others about taxing the Canadian Pacific Railway land, is going to be solved in a most satisfactory manner by having these lands sold to bona fide, actual settlers.

There is one other point which I have partially forgotten. The hon. gentleman stated that one out of every four of these people remain in the cities and towns. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his figures, but I do know that out of the immigration which has come into this country in the past four years, not one-tenth of one per cent has remained in the cities or towns. Winnipeg is the only place where they would be likely to remain, and I do not believe that you can find one hundred foreigners in that entire city out of all those who came in during the last four years. I know every street and lane of that city, and speak from personal knowledge. It is true that some who came out in the winter season, when they could not go on to farm lands, remained in Winnipeg during the winter, but even those who remained sometimes a whole year in that city, are gradually moving out on to the lands. The only people among these foreigners who come to the cities and towns are what are called the Pollaks.

The hon. gentleman spoke of the American immigration problem. Well, I could show him something that would astonish him. I could show him that out of 330,000 immigrants to that country, only 16,000 went on the farms, and the rest went to the thickly settled manufacturing states, such as Ohio and Indiana, where labour is congested. The United States got 84,000 southern Italians and 90,000 Slavs last year, and 60,000 Galicians of the worst kind—those who go to the cities and towns. The hon. the minister will recollect that two or three years ago I went to Milwaukee to see about the advisability of bringing into this country 1,700 Galicians who had settled on an island in Lake Michigan. It did not take me very long to find out that these people had come from the towns of Galicia, some twenty years ago, and had gone into the cities and towns of the United States and would not go on land. I immediately advised our agent that these were not suitable people to settle on our prairies and to have nothing to do with them. The Galicians taken from the land in Galicia and transplanted on the land in the Territories, are the raw material of very good settlers, fit physically and in every way, but the Galicians who have lived twenty years in the cities of the United States and were never accustomed to farming, would not make suitable settlers at all. We have none of that class coming to the west. I think I have shown sufficient to warrant this House in coming to the conclusion that the immigration policy of this government is one most satisfactory to the people of Canada.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

OTTAWA AND HULL POWER AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY, LTD.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 25) to incorporate the Ottawa and Hull Power and Manufacturing Company, Limited.—Mr Champagne.

On section 13,

Mr. HENDERSON. We were told this afternoon by the First Minister that the proper course for this House was to accept the judgment of the committee on a private Bill. It will be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen who were there that the Railway Committee, the other day, struck out a clause identical with this in the Bill relating to the St. Lawrence Lloyds. I can scarcely consent to giving power to this company which was refused to another, unless some very strong reason is assigned for so doing. For one, I am opposed to this class of legislation. It is simply an invitation for this company to go to the Ontario government or the Quebec government and ask for a grant of land. Now, it is quite evident to those of us who are watching legislation, more particularly of the province of Ontario, that all the valuable pulp wood of Ontario is rapidly passing out of the hands of the government of the province, and is becoming the property of private individuals. This is an inheritance of the people, and it is unwise on the part of this parliament—and, if I were permitted, I would say on the part of any other government—to foster legislation that will tend in the direction of giving away what properly belongs to the people. It is said that in one instance, a company in the province of Ontario that received a gift of pulp wood, a short time after the grant was made sold one-thirtieth of it for $10,000. The property did not require development, but the moment they got the charter, were awarded by the government a gift of $300,000. Are we justified in promoting legislation that will help this sort of thing ? True, we are not giving these people any land, but we are putting a clause in the Bill which enables them to accept such a gift, to own it and dispose of it. And, in all probability, it would be disposed of within thirty days at a very large figure, as there is a great demand for that kind of property at the present time. I dare say that legal men will tell us that it makes no difference to the company whether they get this power or not, that they will be able to accept such a gift if it should be offered. But, legal men tell us also that they will have no power to alienate it unless they get a clause like this in the Bill. That is why we should leave out such a clause, because it will compel the company, if they receive such a gift, to develop it, and to use it so that the people may get some benefit, and not have the whole value going into the pockets of a favoured few. I am decidedly opposed to this legislation, and I hope the committee will not entertain it, more especially as it was refused to another company. It would be very strange if we gave to this company what the Railway Committee refused to another company within the last ten days. Unless some very strong argument can be advanced in favour of legislation of this kind, I shall vote against it. In fact, I can hardly conceive of any argument that would convince me that legislation leading in the direction of giving away the public domain without compensation should be passed.

Section agreed to.

On section 17,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the sections of the Companies' Clauses Act which are not to apply to this company ? Will the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill please tell us ?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. I have not under my hand the Companies' Clauses Act, and cannot inform the hon. gentleman as to the substance of these sections. Perhaps the hon. gentleman himself could inform the committee on that point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not in charge of the Bill. As the company is exempted from the operations of these sections, I suppose that—however, I will not press it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GERMAN. There are several private Bills standing on the order paper for second reading, to which there will be no opposition. I would suggest, with the concurrence of the leader of the opposition, that these Bills be read the second time, so that they can be sent at once to the committees. It will take but a very short time to go through them ; whereas if we take the committee stage on these Bills that are standing for that stage, the chances are the other Bills will not be read the second time until next week. Some of them involve legislation of an important character. I might say that I spoke to the premier about it this afternoon, and he concurred in the idea, and I understand that the leader of the opposition is not averse.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not pretend to dictate at all to the hon. gentlemen who have charge of Bills as to what course they should pursue. Some gentlemen who have Bills standing for a second reading asked me if I had any personal objection to the course suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. German), and I stated that I would not pretend for a moment to dictate to them what they should do.

Mr. GERMAN. It will only take a few minutes to get through with the second readings.

Mr. CLANCY. There was an important Bill standing for the third reading a day or two ago, and I asked permission of the House to have it called out of order, that is Bill (No. 6) that was in charge of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), who is unfortunately absent from the House by reason of illness in his family, but the House did not assent to that proposition. If the committee is willing to allow that Bill to take its third reading, I am willing to assent to the proposition of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German).

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose this can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House ?

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. member for Welland consent to Bill (No. 6) being taken up immediately afterwards ?

Mr. GERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose that if objection is made to the second reading of any one of these Bills out of their order they will have to stand over ?

Mr. GERMAN. Certainly.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) respecting Le Crédit Foncier du Bas-Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company.—Mr. Fraser.

Bill (No. 105) to incorporate the Kamloops and Atlin Railway Company.—Mr. Prior.

Bill (No. 106) respecting the South Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 107) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of John Abell.—Mr. Bell (Addington).

Bill (No. 108) respecting the Manitoulin North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 109) to incorporate the Canadian National Bank.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 110) to incorporate the Debenture and Securities Corporation of Canada.—Mr. Osler.

Bill (No. 111) to incorporate the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Murray.

Bill (No. 112) respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company.—Mr. Carroll.

ST. LAWRENCE LLOYD'S.

House in committee on Bill (No. 43) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Lloyd's.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. As the hon. member for Chambly and Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion) is not here, I would ask that this Bill stand over.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

LONDON MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 12) respecting the London Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Hyman.

On section 1,

Mr. CHARLTON. Would the hon. gentleman having charge of the Bill please make some explanation in regard to this change of name, and in regard to the provisions of this section.

Mr. HYMAN. There is no change of name.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are the provisions ?

'An Act to grant certain powers to the Agricultural Mutual Assurance Association of Canada and to change its name,' is repealed.

Why is that repealed ?

Mr. HYMAN. That is merely the title of the Act. There is no change in the name.

Mr. GERMAN.

On section 2,

Mr. CHARLTON. What is this amendment in section 2 of chapter 118 ?

Mr. HYMAN. I will have to send for the Act. The reason of the change is this : It was originally a mutual company, and it was changed by the Act of 1899 to a part stock company. The effect of the amendment is simply to allow by any one holder the holding of more than thirty shares of the stock, a provision which was not considered proper with a mutual company, but which is quite proper with a stock company.

On section 3,

Mr. CHARLTON. What are the words that are omitted from paragraph (b) of section 9 ?

Mr. HYMAN. The only change in this section is one in accordance with the change in the other section, by which a holder shall be allowed to vote on more than thirty shares of a holding. It is a necessary change, because of the change in the former section.

Mr. CHARLTON. The explanation is satisfactory.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN CANADA SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY (LIMITED).

House in committee on Bill (No. 19) respecting the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company (Limited).—Mr. Borden, Halifax.

Mr. FLINT. Were there any amendments made to this Bill in committee ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill would make a brief explanation of the general provisions of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The first section is to give the company the usual powers of lending money which are possessed by all such companies, and which have been included in all charters granted within the last fifteen years. When the company was originally incorporated the powers were very much more restricted in that respect than was the case later. It is simply to put it in the same basis throughout the Bill as that accorded similar companies during the last ten years. Every one of the sections has been taken from either the general law, or the general form of such sctions in similar Bills.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE RATHBUN COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 12) respecting the Rathbun Company.—Mr. Britton.

On section 1,

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) having charge of the Bill will state the significance of the change from 'five' to 'seven.'

Mr. BRITTON. The company has a very extended business and there are a large number of persons interested in it, and it was thought that five was rather a small number to have as its board of directors. This company stands in a different position from most of the joint stock companies in the Dominion, inasmuch as it is incorporated by a special Act and the section in reference to its board of directors is a hard and fast one limiting the number to five, and not giving the shareholders power to increase. It is thought desirable to have that amended.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE CLERGUE IRON AND NICKEL STEEL COMPANY OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 51) to incorporate the Clergue Iron and Nickel Steel Company of Canada.—Mr. Dyment.

On section 4,

Mr. CHARLTON. I would inquire from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dyment) having charge of the Bill, where the operations of this company are likely to be carried on, and whether this large sum of $10,000,000 will be employed in the Dominion. I think the House should have a brief statement with regard to this very important Bill.

Mr. DYMENT. The works that are destined to go on are of a very extensive character including the building of steamships and bridges which will require a large amount of capital. The time before the demands can be made is usually extended over a long period and a large capital is required.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are the works to be located at Sault Ste. Marie ?

Mr. DYMENT. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Will works be located anywhere else ?

Mr. DYMENT. As far as I know the intention is to carry them on altogether at Sault Ste. Marie.

On section 7,

Mr. SPROULE. How is this section amended ?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Britton). It is amended by inserting after the word 'purposes' the words 'of its undertaking as hereinbefore set forth.'

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that that amendment only applies to anything coming after subsection 2 and it would be much better if the words were inserted at the top of section 7. It says :

> The company may (b) acquire and operate coal, iron, nickel and other mines, timber limits and other sources of fuel supply.

Timber limits may be a source of fuel supply or they may be for the purpose of engaging in the lumber business. It appears to me they crowded every power possible into this Bill and that they can do almost anything they like : Build railways, be a construction company, and be lumbermen.

Mr. CHARLTON. They have pretty extensive powers.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think it wise to allow such extensive powers. So far as they require these things in connection with their undertaking I fancy there would be no objection to it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The clause is modified to the extent, that all powers are limited to things pertinent to the undertaking.

Mr. SPROULE. It would appear that the limitation only applies after subsection 2.

Mr. BRITTON. The entire part of section 7 has reference only to manufacture.

Mr. SPROULE. Timber limits is not a manufacture.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The timber limits are for the purposes of a fuel supply.

Mr. SPROULE. When you say 'timber limits' I take it that it is broad enough to cover dealings in all kinds of timber.

Mr. HEYD. They have one million acres now.

Mr. SPROULE. Of pulp wood.

Mr. HEYD. Of pulp wood and hardwood. Their purpose is to sell the best wood and to make charcoal of the other.

Mr. SPROULE. As far as it is required for coke or coal, I do not think there would be any objection, but this goes further than that.

Mr. HEYD. What would they do with their good wood ? They must cut it up and sell it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to taking the wood off, but I am objecting to allowing them to go into so many other lines.

Mr. HEYD. They are not asking for a single thing more than the industries which they are engaged in at present. Every one of these is a by-product of a larger industry. They will do everything they promise here.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a mere statement of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HEYD. I had the pleasure of going through their works, and saw what they are doing.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman might see a great deal, but that statement is not borne out by facts. The Bill gives them larger powers than they have to-day. My only object is to confine them to the operations which they are engaged in to-day.

Mr. DYMENT. This is just a copy of the Dominion Steel Company's Bill which was passed by this House last year.

Bill reported, and read the third time.

Mr. DYMENT. I move that the title be changed to An Act to incorporate the Algoma Iron and Nickel Steel Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 68) respecting the McClary Manufacturing Company.—Mr. Hyman.

Bill (No. 37) to incorporate the Bishop of Keewatin.—Mr. Osler.

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION.

House resumed debate on motion of the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). I feel, Mr. Speaker, that it is my duty to say a few words on this question, which was discussed so long and ably before recess. The question of immigration is one of the most important that can be considered by this House, because the future welfare of this country depends on the class of people that we bring into it. If it be necessary to bring in people to settle our wild lands, and help to carry on the industries of this country, it is the duty of the government to see that the very best class of people from Europe are brought in, and no others. We have heard something this afternoon about certain people who have been brought in, and concerning whose desirability there is considerable difference of opinion. We had the two sides of the question presented to us this afternoon. The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) thinks that the Doukhobors are a detrimental class, who will be of no benefit to us. On the other hand, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) says they are a very fine people, who will make most excellent settlers. There are the two opposite opinions, and it is not for me to say which is right, because I do not remember ever seeing a Doukhobor, and, consequently, am not in a position to judge. But if, as the hon. member for Selkirk says, they are, they are equal to the Society of Friends, known by the name of Quakers, then, I think they will be a great addition to our population, because I am satisfied that there is no denomination which stands higher than the Society of Friends. If what the hon. member for Selkirk says be true, then, hon. gentlemen on this side have nothing to grumble about. However, I cannot pretend to be a judge.

The member for Selkirk spoke with a great deal of zeal for something over an hour. He waxed fast and eloquent, and I must say that he not only spoke with zeal, but with knowledge. He had a right to have knowledge, for I see in this book, the Auditor General's Report, that he had expended $90,000. I did not know whether that is the same gentleman, and if I have made a mistake I apologize. I would have a good deal of knowledge and a good deal of zeal, too, if I had that amount of money voted for me. The reason why I feel, perhaps, more interested in this question than most of the hon. gentlemen present, is that I am one of those whom you have been talking about so much—I am an immigrant and a farmer. And, being an immigrant and a farmer, I think I have a right to speak for these people. But it is forty-five years since I came here—that is to say, I came here before some of these hon. gentlemen were born, so I know as much about Canada as many who are not immigrants. Then I have had the pleasure of having under my rôof and under my tuition quite a number of young immigrants. And I have to tell some of these hon. gentlemen that I wish I could say that they were as good men as those whom I have educated. Some of these men are now settled in the North-west, and I am satisfied that they do credit to the community wherever they may be located. I was sorry to hear this afternoon the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) say that a certain section of the country was not fit for settlement. I had the plea sure of visiting that section some eighteen years ago. The Dominion government has established an experimental station in that section. As well as I could judge of the soil—there were no crops growing there then—I thought the country was fit to produce an excellent crop. I went further than the Canadian Pacific Railway was then built, and I had a favourable impression of the country. With proper irrigation and cultivation, I am satisfied that that land will some day be a garden. I believe in that country around Medicine Hat that was traduced this afternoon by the gentleman that was so much interested in immigration last year, and I am sure the people there will not thank the hon. gentleman for what he said. Now, we heard this afternoon not only that the success of immigration work was due to the fact of this government being in power, but that it was to the same fact that we must look for the cause of the good crops in that country. We know that for ten years previous to last year there were good crops in the North-west—and I am always pleased, though the people of the North-west compete with me in growing grain, to learn that they have escaped frost and have good crops. And why ? Because they are my neighbours. A large number of young men from Ontario have settled in that country and have built up homes for themselves there. The hon. member for Selkirk gives us to understand that it is only when the present government is in power that the crops are good ; but according to the hon. gentleman himself, last year the crops were not good, although this government was in power. I believe that immigration should be carried on. We must have people in this country, we must develop our vast resources. We must settle people on our land. A former government, led by one of the great statesmen of this country, thought it advisable to enter into an agreement with British Columbia to build a road across the continent. And, as a result that great North-west which, when I first heard of it, was known as the Hudson's Bay territory, was developed. All this has been due to that railroad that was built by the much-abused Conservative government. I do not think that the present government would like to destroy that great highway across the continent ; I feel confident that they are glad that a party was then in power that had the courage and the hardihood to build that road. I am satisfied that it was one of the grandest things that ever happened to Canada. I am not speaking from a party point of view, for, I care not who did it, it was one of the grandest things that ever happened for the development of this country. I do not intend to bore the House by speaking at great length. The first time I spoke here, I said I would not say very much during this, my first session—whatever I might think, I would say little. But, unfortunately, I have been on my feet a number of times. And I have failed to give satisfaction to all parties when I have spoken, and I do not expect to give satisfaction to all to-night. But let us investigate this immigration business a little further. I shall not give the government my plan for bringing immigrants into this country, because they would not accept it. They might take advice from a straight Tory—but they will not take it from me. But there is one thing I object to, and that is sending out as immigration agents every party hack who cannot get a job at anything else. Now, I find here in this report mention of a gentleman whom I have never seen, but whose name I have often heard. The people of my county would like to see something of him, because in West Elgin they know something of him—to their sorrow. He came there on the eve of a by-election and took up quarters at one of the hotels and sent for some of the young and doubtful voters. He had strong views in regard to their health and wanted to see them. Some people are uncharitable enough to say that they voted as he told them to.

Some hon. MEMBER. What is his name ?

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I never like to mention people's names unless they are present. But I find in this book that he is an immigration agent and that his salary for twelve months was $3,000. But, besides he gets living expenses—I have to pay my own board—$673.10 ; travelling expenses, $793.64 ; cab-hire, $31.15, cablegrams, $23.73 ; exchange—I suppose that is on the exchange of money between Canada and Spain or some other country—$3.40 ; express, $1.46 ; insurance—I suppose that would be on his life—$11.43 ; parliamentry papers and hand books, $9.17 ; postage and telegrams, $56.86 ; stenographer, $5.19 ; stationery, $3.04 ; Swedish translation, $5.11 ; Travelling to Canada and return, $205. So he he had a holiday during that year. Perhaps he came over to clear himself from the accusations made against him in West Elgin, and the government pays him for coming over. If I had been in his place I would have had to pay my own expenses. Now, I find that the whole expenses amounted to $4,822.28, if I have figured it right, that he drew from the treasury of this country last year. We were told this afternoon how few immigrants have been introduced through his exertions. Now, I have not mentioned his name yet, I do not think it would be advisable to do so. Mr. Speaker, I do not bring this as an accusation against the government only in so far as that man was a played-out politician, and was a tool of this government, or of any other government who wanted to give him a job. But if he was a good man, the best man that could be selected for that place, then I would be willing to give the government credit for it notwithstanding all the money he has cost us. Now, he has an office. Of course, you see, he is travelling all the time, and I should think he would need to, by the amount of money that he has spent. But he has an office, and he has to keep that office open. Now, I contend that there is no need whatever for an immigration agent to have an office in London, or in Liverpool, or Brussel, or Paris, or anywhere else. His duty should be to go amongst the people and to instruct them as to the benefits they would derive by coming to this glorious country ; and if he would take up—not his bed and walk—but take up his map and his diagrams and go to the villages, and to the people's houses, notifying them beforehand that he was going to lecture on Canada and tell the villagers about this country —then he would be rendering Canada some service. The class of people we want are the workingmen, the husbandmen. We do not want any man in this country or any other country who does not work, either with his hands or with his brain. We do not want idlers here, we want intelligent men, no matter from which one they come of those glorious little kingdoms, Englishmen, Irishmen, Scotchmen, Weshmen, Germans, if you please—Frenchmen do not count because they do not raise big enough families, and they have to stay at home. We want the hardy, sturdy sons of toil, not the people of towns and cities, they are of little use. We do not want to send our agents into the towns and cities, we want them to go round amongst the peasantry and show them the great advantages they would derive in coming to this country. We have been told this afternoon what the Doukhobors have done. If the Doukhobors can do it, other classes can do it, and better classes can do it. Now, Sir, I think I have said enough. I want to say to the government that I do not care how much money you spend if you spend it right, spend it so that we will get value received for it. But when you put in a man merely for the purpose of giving him a job, because he has served in some parliamentary election, for pity's sake do not come and ask our support. I say, Never do it again. Do not appoint broken-down politicians to any office. Now, I have spoken longer than I intended to speak ; I have spoken twenty minutes, and I only intended to speak ten.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Yes, go on. It may be fun for you, but it is not for me. I do not think I have made much fun to-night. I will say again, as I told you the other evening, Mr. Speaker, that I do not care who sits on those benches on the opposite side ; if they will only endeavour to work for the benefit of this country, they will have my support, I do not care who they are. Now, I thank you very much for your kind attention——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Well, some time, maybe, you will have to laugh on the other side of your mouth.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). When you find a man who is always ready to titter, his brains lay somewhere down below. But, Mr. Speaker, I never wish to stand on my feet unless I can make a point. I thank you all very much for your attention. I hope if I have said a word that will induce the members of the government, and more particularly the hon. gentleman who presides over the immigration department, to see that these men earn their money, I will be well repaid.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I would like to endorse a great deal that has been said this afternoon in regard to the success of the immigration policy that has been pursued during the last few years. I am entitled to speak with some authority upon this subject, as the district I represent has been receiving the larger proportion of the immigration. I can endorse what was said in regard to the large number of people who have come in and the still larger number who are coming in ; I can endorse what was said in regard to the suitable character of a very large proportion of those who have come and who are coming. I am sorry I cannot endorse all that was said. I am sorry that, as it appeared to me, an impression was created, or was liable to be created, by the remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) that this favourable condition was resultant from a certain feature of the immigration which is taking place, that is to say, that the building up of the town of Yorkton, the building up of the city of Winnipeg, the prosperity of the district of Alberta, rested upon the immigration of Galicians and Doukhobors into that country.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not think any such inference could be drawn from my remarks. I said——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McCREARY. I have a right to explain. My words are down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McCREARY. I beg your pardon.

An hon. MEMBER. Two hon. gentlemen are standing at the same time.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not questioning what the hon. gentleman said, I am stating the impression that his words conveyed to my mind, which I presume I am entitled to do. I repeat that the impression was conveyed, whether intentionally or otherwise, that a very large proportion of the increase and of the prosperity enjoyed by the western country was resultant from that class of immigration. The House will bear me out when I make that statement. Now, I am here to protest against that construction being put upon the results of the immigration policy. I am here to say to-night that I believe the present conditions of the country would be better, our prosperity would be greater, we would have a still larger number of good settlers, if we did not have that class of immigration at all.

The idea was conveyed to the hon. members of this House that these people are occupying country that no other people will occupy. Speaking of the part of the country from which I come, and which I represent, I know more of this subject than any other hon. member of this House, bar none. The people are occupying land that is good for any people. They are occupying land that, if they were not occupying it, would be occupied by other people, either now or in the very near future, and the fact that they are occupying this land is a deterrent to other people from occupying not only that land, but the land in their neighbourhood. Let me tell this House that, when the American settler makes inquiry as to settlement in this country, the first inquiry he makes is : What is the class of people in the locality in which he desires to settle, and I can tell you that the greatest objection that can be raised is that that part of the country has the presence of the very class of people which the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) lauded so highly this afternoon.

I am not questioning the motives of any hon. member of this House. I am not questioning any motives in respect to the policy of the government at all, but I am here to state what I know for the information of the House and of the country. It is very well for us to theorize, and to say what might, could or should be, but it is desirable that we should, in discussing this and kindred questions, come down to facts, and understand whether we are doing the very best that can be done in the circumstances or not. We all want to see the western country settle up, and it is merely a question of what is the best policy to be pursued in order to settle that country up. If it can be shown that the inducement or acceptance of a certain class of immigrants is detrimental to the best interests of that country, and to the settlement of that country, then, I say, it is time to prevent, instead of encouraging, that class of settlement. I speak strongly on this point, because I find that there is a tendency on the part of people of this part of the country, not only in parliament but out of parliament, to suppose that the prosperity, welfare and progress of that country depends upon the continuation of this tide of immigration of the character of which the hon. member for Selkirk speaks. It is so far wide of the mark that I would be altogether failing in my duty as a member of this House and as a representative of that country, if I did not call attention, in the strongest language, to the facts of the case. What that country is to-day, it is because of the exertions, the sacrifices and the abilities of the men of eastern Canada, who have spread themselves over those plains and through those mountains, who are developing the industries and resources of that country, and who are building up a nation, a Canada, such as you have here, and, we hope, better than you have here. I say they cannot do that to advantage if their efforts are handicapped by the presence in thousands and tens of thousands of a class of people who, however worthy they may be, however capable they may be as agriculturists, are not and cannot be citizens of this country, as we would wish them to be citizens, to take part with us in the building up of a civilization and a social system there which are a necessary part of success in the settlement of any country. It is not enough to produce wheat out of the ground. We do not live to produce wheat. We live to produce people, to produce a social condition, and to build up a country, and if you give us only those who can produce wheat, and who cannot take their places as citizens, you do us an injury, and you place an obstacle in the way of our progress, instead of conferring an advantage upon us.

I have heard hon. members say that these strange people, these Slavs, will assimilate with the other people. Do you know what that word 'assimilate' means ? It is a nice sounding word. Do you know that it means that if you settle on a farm on the prairies amongst them or in their neighbourhood you must depend for the schooling of your children on the tax-paying willingness and power of people who neither know nor care anything about schools ? Do you know that it means the intermarriage of your sons or daughters with those who are of an alien race and of alien ideas? That is assimilation, or else there is no assimilation. There is no assimilation, and there will be no assimilation for many, many years, and the whole country will suffer a drawback to that extent for a number of years.

Another idea that is conveyed is, that all foreign peoples are the same, that because the German people are foreigners, and because they are desirable settlers, therefore, the Galicians, being foreigners, and the Doukhobors being foreigners, are also desirable settlers. Do my hon. friends know that they could not insult a German, or a Scandinavian, as much in any other way as to compare him with a Doukhobor or a Galician ? The pride of race is as strong in these people as it is in us, and they object, and object very strongly, to being placed in the same category as a Slavic people, a people who, less than two generations ago, were serfs of the soil, and who, unfortunately, have not had the opportunities, even if they had the capability, to rise very high above that position to-day. Make no mistake, that there is no comparison between the German who comes from Galicia and a Galician who comes from Galicia, and no man will resent such a comparison more strongly than the German himself. It is not because they both wear sheepskin that they are alike. It is not because they both come from the same country. They belong to radically different races. The foundation ideas in the minds of both people are radically different. The German of Galicia is a German such as he is everywhere. He is a man of dominant race, of untiring energy, of great foresight ; he is a man of sterling honesty and reliability, whether he comes from Germany, from Galicia, or anywhere else. He is a German, and a citizen of the highest character. He is not only a producer, he is a citizen ; but, the Galician, or the Doukhobor, who have been reared under circumstances which did not permit them to know what free government is, who know nothing of government, except that government is a tyranny, these people, let them be ever so good, cannot be citizens as we would wish them to be citizens, or as our Scandinavian and German fellow-citizens are.

As to the settlement of this western country, let me suggest that the summit of success is not reached merely by quick settlement. It would not be as beneficial to this Dominion of Canada to have the North-west fully occupied by people inside of two years, as it would to have that population grow steadily during the next twenty years. It is not after a country is filled up that we get our benefit out of it ; it is in the process of filling up that we get the benefit. It is in the steady growth that we have the advantage and not in the too rapid growth. In my estimation, it is a mistake in the mind of our friends here to presume that absolute success is achieved by the quickest possible settlement. What we want is steady growth by a class of people who will make good citizens as well as good producers. Let it not be forgotten that the good citizen is the greatest producer; that a colony of Germans or Canadians will produce more inside of two years than a similar colony of Galicians or Doukhobors will in ten years. If you want production it is just the same in farming as it is in anything else, the men of the highest intelligence and the highest character will give you the best results. My contention is this: That when we are taking measures to procure settlers for our country, it is our business to secure the best settlers and to reject those that are not the best. That is why we spend our money, and if we do not spend our money that way we mis-spend our money.

I might refer to a remark that was made by my hon. colleague from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) in regard to the settlement that was made at the Cypress Hills. The hon. gentleman said it was a settlement of Galicians. He read out the names of those settlers, and I submit that the names read were the names of Germans and not Galicians.

Mr. McCREARY. Germans from Galicia.

Mr. OLIVER. Germans from Galicia, showing that an attempt has been made to mix up the idea that the Germans, and the Galicians who come from Galicia are the same. I say they are two different peoples altogether. In regard to the settlement of Germans in the Cypress Hills, those Germans came from Galicia and there were attached to them a very few families of Galicians. When these Germans moved to the Edmonton district, the Galicians came with them, and after a time other Galicians followed from Galicia. Let me explain for the information of the House how this matter came about as it is possibly interesting. The province of Galicia was a part of the ancient Kingdom of Poland. When Poland was divided between Russia, Prussia and Austria, the province called Galicia became the share of Austria and fell under the domination of the Austrian Empire. The German is the dominant race in the Austrian Empire, and it became sound policy on the part of the Austrians to people Galicia with a German population if possible. Therefore they took measures to settle in Galicia a number of German colonies. In process of time as the Germans multiplied and as they acquired land and spread abroad in the country, they began to crowd each other and to crowd the Galicians, and the Germans being the more enterprising and knowing what to do under these circumstances, began to emigrate, and a number of them came to Canada and settled near the Cypress Hills. After being settled there for some years, many of them moved to Edmonton. Now, the Austrian government took alarm at this movement of Germans from Galicia, and seeing that it would defeat their object in settling Germans in that country, they said : If anybody has to go from Galicia we will take care that it shall be Galicians and not Germans. So they sent Professor Oleskow, a German professor in the service of the government, out to Canada to prospect for locations for Galician emigrants. He was directed to the handful of Galicians who were settled in the Edmonton district. He found it was a good country. He found that these men were doing well according to their idea. He found that the Conservative government of Canada was favourable to the location of the Galicians in our country, and forthwith a deal was consummated between the late government of Canada and the government of Austria, whereby the Galicians should get an asylum in Canada. Let it be understood that the Galician emigration to Canada is not because of inducements held out by the government of Canada, but because of the pressure behind in Galicia. I speak strongly on this subject, and for this reason. As the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has said, and as I am given to understand, there are in Galicia between three and four millions of these people belonging to a separate race; belonging to a race which is what you might call the under race in that country, dominated by the Poles and dominated by the Austrians. They have never been fairly treated in that country, even since their emancipation from serfdom. They have been dominated as well by the landlord class, the Poles, as by the Germans who represent the Imperial authority. They feel a desire to better their condition by moving out. The Austrian government is anxious that they shall move out, and to-day the Dominion of Canada stands in danger of the wholesale removal of the greater part of that three millions of Galicians to this country. Let the position be not misunderstood. Many of our friends on the other side of the House have attacked the government because of the supposed expenditure of money in inducing this Galician immigration. There is no money necessary to induce Galician immigration. It is the pressure behind the Galicians at home which induces emigration from their country. There is a population of three millions to draw from, and the pressure behind that three millions is directed towards sending the greater part of them to this country. That is the position of affairs, and it is well this House should understand it and recognize it, so as to decide whether or not this parliament is favourable to having our North-west settled by that class of people. That is the question at issue.

In regard to the Doukhobors, the position is very different. They are a religious sect belonging also to the Slavic race.

Mr. McCREARY. Slavic ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly they are Russians and Slavs, as the Ruthenians are. The Doukhobors are Russians belonging to a certain religious sect dissenting from the Established Church of Russia. There is only a limited number of that sect, and I am given to understand that the whole of that sect is now removed to Canada. Therefore, we have all there are of them, and we do stand in danger of an overflow of that class of people. I am not in a position to speak of the Doukhobors from an intimate personal knowledge, as none of them are resident in the constituency I represent, but on the Galician question I claim to be an authority, because I believe that fully half of the whole Galician population of Manitoba and the North-west is located in the district I represent. I understand that there are some 12,000 or 14,000 in one colony. Already one local electoral district is in all probability in the hands of the Galician vote, if those people were qualified to vote. In regard to the Doukhobors, I wish to say, speaking of course without having such an intimate knowledge of them, but speaking on the general principle, that any people who are too good to conform to the laws of this country are too good to live in this country, and we do not want them at any price. I want to say for the Galicians that whatever they may be or may not be, they are at any rate anxious to become citizens, and are willing to conform to the laws and customs of the country ; whereas I am given to understand that the Doukhobors resent the suggestion of becoming citizens, and are not willing to conform to the laws and customs of the country. I certainly object to any such class of immigration, and the only redeeming feature of it is that there is not very much of it. But the Galicians are practically unlimited in number.

The great settlement of the North-west has taken place by reason of the overflow of people from these eastern provinces. The idea prevails in these provinces that if our people go to the North-west the eastern provinces thereby suffer ; and on that point I wish to say a word. There is room in these eastern provinces for more people than live here now ; but there is not room for more people under the conditions which now prevail in these provinces. The people of the eastern provinces desire only to have favourable conditions of existence, and for that reason they move out to other fields rather than submit to the conditions which would necessarily follow a further congestion of population. As a matter of fact, the people of eastern Canada have been moving out during the last thirty or forty years, and have been moving in a large degree to the United States. The last census of the United States shows that fully 1,000,000 native-born Canadians were in the United States at that time. This is a fact to which the people of eastern Canada seem to shut their eyes. If that million of Canadians were settled in the North-west, we would have three or four times the population we have there now, and four or five times the development, and we would not need to rely on any foreign people for the settlement of that country ; and what would be the result in the eastern provinces ? What do your factories depend on for their further increase, and your factory hands for employment ? An increase of markets ; and where is your increase of markets to come from ? Certainly, from the settlement of the western prairies. It is in order to get a market for the products of your factories and for your wholesale houses that you want the North-west settled with anybody or anything, so you say. But I tell you that if you want such a market, you must settle the North-west with a people who will be in sympathy with you, and upon whose industry, integrity and loyalty you can rely It is better for you and better for us that the people leaving the eastern provinces should go to the North-west rather than to the United States. What has been done cannot be helped ; but this is still a young and a growing country ; population is still increasing in these eastern provinces ; young men and old men are still looking for new fields. Then, instead of attempting to people the North-west with Slavs, with people from eastern Europe who are certainly not recognized by the rest of Europe as being equal with them—people under whose nationality and government there has never been reached that degree of liberty, civilization, progress or prosperity which we expect to attain—instead of looking to these people for the settlement of the North-west, let us look to our own people and to kindred people upon whose industry and loyalty we can depend. That is the immigration policy which will appeal to the people of Canada from one end to the other.

Let me say one word to the government, and it will be a word of advice. I speak here to-night on behalf of the most populous constituency in the west ; and I have reason to believe that I speak the sentiments of the majority of the people between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains on this immigration question. There is no question that the people of the west feel more strongly on than this immigration question, and there is nothing that they more earnestly resent than the idea of settling up the country with people who will be a drag on our civilization and progress. We did not go out to that country simply to produce wheat. We went to build up a nation, a civilization, a social system that we could enjoy, be proud of, and transmit to our children ; and we resent the idea of having the millstone of this Slav population hung around our necks in our efforts to build up, beautify and improve that country, and so improve the whole of Canada. I say it is an unpopular policy in western Canada to encourage this Slav immigration. That may be a low ground on which to put the question ; but it is a business ground, and business is business. It may be a low ground, and yet it is a high ground ; because who are to be the judges as to what is best for the interests of the North-west except the people who have built it so far, and upon whom must rest the chief burden of building it up to the height of prosperity to which we all expect it to attain.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, I deem this question of sufficient importance to justify an eastern man in saying something upon it. I will not presume to express my opinion so emphatically upon the general conditions of upbuilding a country as the last speaker has done. Of course, he knows more about it than I—much more. I have been in that country, and my cursory observations may not have enabled me to understand the question generally, but when we consider that less than one acre in every hundred in the Territories is at present occupied and cultivated, I submit that a few Galicians, not amounting to 20,000, cannot surely have any very injurious effect on its development. It may be all very well for the hon. member for Alberta to dilate on the great advantage of bringing out to this country people who enjoy bright tinted social positions, and who will be able to hold their own with him in all that makes up the amenities and graces of society. But for my part, I respectfully submit that the tiller of the soil, the man who produces wheat, is not a bad citizen. He may not have the social distinction of the hon. member for Alberta. He may not rise to the high plane of asthetic cultivation to which hon. gentlemen opposite have risen, but I submit that this country depends on the development of its soil, and that the man who produces wheat is as good a citizen as the best gentleman in the land. I would be glad if we had sufficient population in eastern Canada to fill that western country, and in default of that, I would like very well to bring into it a large number of Englishmen who are willing to work—not the gentlemen who come out to buy a large area of land and who fritter away their time with a lot of dogs and that sort of thing, but will not cultivate the soil. I would be also much pleased to see a number of Irishmen brought into that country —one of the best products of the old land, as they make one of the best product of this new land. But above all, I would like to see God's own elect, the Scotch, brought in there. And failing these, I want to see good honest people settle in that country who will till the soil and produce wealth. We have to admit that we cannot supply that vast country with people from eastern Canada. I do not want a man to leave the older provinces unless compelled to. That is like swapping jack-knifes from one pocket to another. I want every man in Nova Scotia to stay in that province if he can find there remunerative employment, and I want to see the same thing in the other provinces, but if there is any young man in the eastern provinces who thinks he cannot make his mark and succeed in life at home, in the name of Heaven let him go to Manitoba or the North-west in preference to the United States. But if we cannot get people from the older provinces into the Territories, what are we to do ? I submit that the great requisite to the development of this country is good citizens. The hon. gentleman will not speak of the Doukhobors. I may be wrong, but the general opinion in Manitoba and the North-west, when I was there, on one or two occasions, among opponents of the government, was, that the Galicians are fairly decent citizens, but the Doukhobors should never have been let into the country at all. Well, let me tell you one peculiar characteristic of the Galicians, and it is this. It cost less to bring out the Galician, than the Doukhobors, and it did not cost very much to bring either out, but the Galician, when he came out, had not very much coin in his pocket, and he asked the government, as he had the right to, for a small advance. The advance was given, and what was the result ? Out of the very first money he earned, he paid the government back the money he had borrowed, and I wish that Canadians, from one end of the country to the other, would pay their debts with equal regularity. I submit that a man who does that in a new country, and who does not try to live on the government, is not a bad citizen.

Do hon. gentlemen appreciate the extent of that western country ? I do not want any one to go in there who will not make a good citizen, but the Doukhobor or Galician, who leaves a country like Austria or Russia, for the purpose of escaping imprisonment and being permitted to worship God as his conscience dictates, is the kind of citizen we want here. We can very well understand that men who are settled in the North-west may not like these people, but we are not to be the final judges after all of our surroundings. I submit there is not a gentleman in Ottawa, who has a fine residence, who would not much prefer that the small buildings which obstruct his view, and out of which the citizens go to work every morning, were taken away. No doubt he would like to see his property surrounded with fine buildings and splendid approaches, but if he is a good citizen he will admit that the poorer man is necessary, because he does honest work, and although he may not have the revenues of his rich neighbour does equally important work. Well, in this country, with its millions and millions of acres, are you to be afraid of a few Galicians or Doukhobors ? Is our civilization so effete that it cannot make good citizens out of them ? If we bring only in to this country those who enjoy all the advancement in civilization and religious training and everything that makes a gentleman and a scholar, we will never settle this country. It is because I believe in Canadian civilization that I do not fear a few Doukhobors or Galicians. There are millions of acres in the west waiting cultivation, and I care not whether our settlers be Doukhobors, Galicians or Chinamen, provided they are good citizens and keep our laws and pay their debts, and live honestly. Any man who tills the soil will eventually make a good citizen. The trouble with Canada so far is the lack of population. We have a bigger and a wealthier country than our neighbours, and yet here we are with only 6,000,000 of people, and are we going to have objections raised against any immigrant except upon moral grounds. The fact that he may not understand our language should not be a bar. Let me tell hon. gentlemen that when my grandfather came to this country he could not speak the English tongue. Should he have been prevented entering the country on that account ? My father learned English, and though I may not speak that language with all the fastidious grace of other gentlemen here, at least I have the satisfaction of knowing that in the evolution from the grandfather who spoke Gaelic to the present generation, I am a fairly decent Canadian citizen. I believe that the hon. gentleman would have been better employd if he had stated, perhaps, that certain restrictions should be placed upon foreign immigration, but I submit that it is not the proper way to people Canada with good citizens to say that these men are all wrong. Have they been convicted of crime ? Is the rate of crime amongst the Galicians and Doukhobors higher than among other citizens ? It is true that a few Doukhobors, at the instance of a miserable wretch, who has laid down certain principles that are not in accord with religious truth as believed in by myself and others, have made certain representations, but let me tell hon. members that often worse opinions have been spoken in Canada by Canadian citizens than even those given expression to by that miserable man.

This country is too big for the like of that. And when I go into the magnificent territory that the hon. member for Alberta represents, when I see in the northern part of it riches of soil untold, and when I see in the southern part of it men who have come from Salt Lake City and who believe in having more than one wife, and not a word said against them, I submit that the good citizen who leaves Austria or Russia to escape tyranny, should not be excluded or left without a welcome ; I submit that he is a better man than the man from Salt Lake City, who wants to marry more than one wife. Let us be fair to these men. Once upon a time, a man who is now dead but who should never be forgotten, brought to a part of Manitoba that would not be taken up by the ordinary settler from the east or any part of the British Empire, a race of people who came to this country, and lent them some $96,000. Of course, the same opposition was raised and the same talk was indulged in. And what has happened ? The Mennonites of Manitoba have paid back the $96,000 with interest at 4 per cent, and they are among them the wealthiest people of Manitoba to-day. And the hon. member for Alberta—no, not he, I think he has too much good sense—but men of smaller calibre, who spoke against these people, must surely feel ashamed to-day. There are Mennonites in Manitoba who are worth $20,000, $30,000—some of them even $60,000. Their habits were different from ours ; their methods were different from ours. But in less than a generation they have become good citizens, they have extended their bounds and increased their wealth. And an increase in the wealth of the citizen means an increase of the wealth of Canada and larger payments into the exchequer of the people of Canada. We cannot put on too fine airs about our surroundings. Any man must wish sometimes that he could avoid meeting this man, that man or the other. But we must not be too particular—least of all a politician who, in the course of an ordinary campaign, must meet people whom he had rather not meet on other occasions. But I am willing to let any honest man come into Canada, any man who will till the soil or work for a wage and give a fair return in labour for that wage. I call upon the civilization of our country as represented by the government and upon the higher civilization of our country as represented by our societies and churches, to join in lifting these men up and making them good citizens of our great west. For, if we wait for population to go from the east to the west, that land will remain sterile and unproductive for centuries to come. We have six millions of people in Canada—and terror in the hearts of some of them because 7,000 Galicians have come amongst us. Dr. Robertson, of the Presbyterian Missions, relates an incident that shows what we may expect of these people. It may be a small matter, but to my mind it indicates that these Galicians will make that country a better country than it is. He was passing a school, a school that was taught by an English teacher, while the children were just beginning to learn English. He saw a little girl with blue eyes and fair hair——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER. Oh, hon. gentlemen opposite need not interpose. I will relieve their feelings by saying that she was not more than that high. Dr. Robertson said to the little girl : 'You are a Galician, are you ?' 'No, sir,' said she, 'I am a Canadian.' This is one of the things to indicate what has happened in the history of every nation in the world among whom outside people have come to live—the newcomers have caught the spirit of the country and their surroundings and have become good citizens. And particularly does this happen when the newcomers come out into liberty from barbarism and oppression. There is no better way to make good citizens than to remove people from despotism and give them liberty to expand their energies. I am not afraid of these people. And why ? Because I am not afraid of myself. If I lived in the Northwest, I would not be afraid of 17,000 Galicians, I would feel humiliated if I could not take my place against ten or twenty or fifty people that could not speak my language. I hope the Dominion of Canada will be broad in this matter. I would exclude any vicious man from Canada if I could. I would put a mark on any criminal seeking to come in. But I should be ashamed of myself if I desired to keep out of Canada any man who came here to better his condition and who was willing to toil at any legitimate employment for a wage that would support himself and family. I admit that I do not know as much about that country as my hon. friend from Alberta. But the hon. gentleman is not the only one who is entitled to express an opinion on this matter. The hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), who spoke this afternoon, has a different opinion from that of the hon. member from Alberta. These hon. gentlemen are equally brilliant, and, I suppose are equally entitled, so far as the possession of information is concerned, to speak on this subject. But I am aware of one fact, and that is that there is not a railway in Manitoba or the North-west Territories that has not discovered that after the first year the Galician and the Doukhobor make as good men as any from eastern Canada or any part of the world. I myself saw Doukhobors and Galicians in charge of men, and this after they had been here only two or three years. Not too bad citizens were these. I do not suppose that the railway company, which has neither soul to be saved nor body to be burned, would employ these men because they were Galicians or Doukhobors. They employ them on commercial principles and because they give the best returns for the wages paid to them. No, Mr. Speaker, what we need above all is not to be too fastidious in order to please any particular section of men. What we need in Canada is to keep in the older provinces every man we have here ; but, if conditions are such that any man feels that he must leave the east, let him go to our mighty country in the west and seek there employment, and let that country be filled with the people who for industry and morals command our admiration. At Halifax, when these Doukhobors arrived, there was a scene that will never be forgotten. As the ship came into harbour what did these people do ? I commend this particularly to hon. gentlemen opposite—as the ship came in and these immigrants fell on their knees, they sang hymns and praised the Maker of us all that they had reached in safety a land of freedom.

Shall we not now and always welcome to our shores men who recognize the higher and greater Power that rules over the destinies of men ? Shall we speak against them ? No. Shall we not rather encourage men who flee for religious and social reasons from a tyranny, and come here to enjoy the institutions underlying British freedom ? I am not afraid of the consequences to this country. Why, Mr. Speaker, 400 miles north of where my hon. friend lives, the wheat was raised that got a first-class certificate at the exhibition in Chicago. The greater part of that land is not occupied. If we remain until the people of eastern Canada go there, the sons and the daughters of members opposite, as well as others, how long shall we remain ? Shall we not rather do what we can at once to have those acres made productive—perhaps not with all the success that the best farmers of Ontario have achieved, although even they complain that they are not doing better ? But, if they do not achieve all that success, they will, at least, achieve such success as will make themselves and the country prosperous, and enable their sons to do better, in consequence of the knowledge acquired by their fathers, and to become better citizens. I approve what has been done by the government, because they have brought into that country men who, I believe, will be good citizens. They may not have all the polish, they may not be able to speak with all the correctness of an educated Englishman. But, if they have good hearts, and steady hands, and are willing to work, and to take what they have to pay their honest debts, and enable themselves and their families to live, to my mind, they will constitute a great accession to this country. I do not agree with my hon. friend that a man who raises wheat should be despised. I say that the man who raises, on a given acre, more wheat than his neighbour, although his neighbour may be a gentleman of royal birth and with all the wealth in the country, is a good man and a good citizen of Canada. Whether it be wheat he raises, or oats, or pease, or currants, or anything else, if he does better than his neighbour, that man is a more useful citizen. If he makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before, he adds to the richness of earth's products, and, therefore, becomes a good citizen. I am in favour, as I said, of doing all we can to get into this country citizens who are honest, industrious, who will pay their debts. I am sorry they cannot speak the English language. Let us go to work and try as soon as possible to teach them my language. They will thereby not only increase their ability to trade with their neighbours, but will become better citizens in the all-prevailing force of our British supremacy ; they will join in the regular cavalcade that must make Canada, as it must make the nations of the world, forget the Slav, forget the Celt, forget the Scotch, forget the French, forget the everybody, in the overmastering onward march of that British supremacy that takes all nations under the sway of its mighty power, and will not be retarded by anything except those crimes that hinder the advancement of humanity.

Mr. ARTHUR W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). The forcible argument of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who has just taken his seat, would probably have had more strength if he had adapted it to the circumstances that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) outlined. His argument was based solely on the supposition that 17,000 or 18,000 foreigners, Galicians or Doukhobors, did not make much difference in a population of five or six millions, that it was comparatively easy for this country to assimilate that number of strangers. But, the point of argument of the member for Alberta, who comes from the district where these people are settled, is that that district is a sparsely-settled district, and that it already contains thousands of those foreigners, that the proportion is not one in a hundred, it is a large percentage, and that therefore, their influence, whether for good or ill, is a large influence, and is bound to be a great influence in the future social status of the North-west Territories.

Now, this immigration question has had a rather peculiar force in this country for the last few years. I notice that the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson), who introduced this subject this afternoon, was not at all at home with the subject, and did not feel that he had much free room. And I will tell you the reason why. I remember well, in fact my first recollection of the immigration policy, was the promise that we used to hear time and again previous to 1896, that we would be treated by the then Conservative government with a vigorous immigration policy. They promised the North-west that they were hatching a vigorous immigration policy. Previous to the general elections of 1896, the two parties who were appealing for power in this country were both promising the North-west a vigorous immigration policy. Certainly it is not a party question, and as the member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) stated this afternoon, neither in this country nor in the United States is it a party question, except as one party is in power and the other is not. In the United States the Democratic party is opposed to immigration, and is willing to pass all kinds of restrictive laws when they are in opposition, and the Republican party the same. It has probably been the same in Canada. Both parties have promised immigration, and I submit in all fairness that we have to acknowledge that the immigration policy of the last few years has been vigorous, and has been successful, in so far as it has induced immigrants to come into this country. As to the effect, as to the character of that immigration, there is a difference of opinion. But, we have had better value for the money, so far as the quantity is concerned, beyond doubt.

Now, as regards the Doukhobors, I think the hon. member for Lennox proved to our satisfaction to-day a remark that was once made by a celebrated American, that you cannot draw up an indictment against a whole people, and the hon. member for Lennox failed most miserably in his attempt, by charging that those Doukhobors were people of a low grade, of bad morals, or were likely to be hurtful to this country. Nobody who had seen the Doukhobors when they first arrived would be unfavourably impressed by them. Certainly, they do not speak our language or wear our dress, but that is not a crime. Though they may differ from us in those respects, they may be just as good men, and make just as good citizens as we do. But the Doukhobors, when they arrived in the North-west, were a people that any country could be proud of. They were people of superior physique, and although we could not understand their language, their every appearance told us that they were an intelligent people. I do not think that we have much to fear from the Doukhobors, if the Doukhobor can only be persuaded that he is in a good country. That, so far, has been the trouble, he does not think so. We have heard much of a protest that has been lodged by the Doukhobor people against the laws of this country. That protest virtually amounts to a charge that they have been deceived in coming to Canada. It has been said, not only to-day, but on previous occasions, that the protest, or the appeal as it is called, was only made by one man, and that, at all events, there were only twenty-nine who supported it. I do not think that is a fair statement. I do not think that properly represents the case. I take up the appeal as it has been put out, and I find that it says :

Before everything else, we must extend to you from the communities which delegated us.

And so on. Necessarily those who are writing and who are signing the document may be few, but it states that they are speaking for the community who delegated them. Then again, they replied to the letter that has been addressed in these words :

Kamenka, Oct. 14, 1900.

Immigration Agent, Yorkton.

Delegates from the settlement of the Society of Universal Brotherhood, situated in townships 31 and 32, ranges 27 and 28, assembled to-day in Kamenka to consider your proposition, whether they will be willing to accept lands.

And so forth. The delegates assembled and these delegates themselves drew up this protest. To prove that this is so, we take the reply to these gentlemen of Mr. J. T. Turiff, the commissioner of Dominion lands. He addressed them as follows on the 7th of January, 1891 :

Ottawa, Jan. 7, 1901.

Semen, Semenoff, Vasilie Popoff and others, Village Blagodarofra :

Dear Sirs,—In further reference to your petition to the government of Canada of the 22nd of June last, I beg to say that since my interview with your head men in the month of November, I have discussed the subject-matter——

He had evidently met the head men, the delegates and he refers to this. Therefore, I submit that it is prejudicing the question to say that the protest does not come from the people at all, that it has only a few signatures and that it has been got up by somebody else altogether. Now, I am not prepared to say that the principles they are maintaining and for which they suffered are right. I do not think though, that it is sensible for me to suppose that people brought up in a different land, under different conditions, and taught different views would not come to different conclusions from those at which I have arrived. However, I do not know that I have any right to assume that I am altogether right, and that they are altogether wrong. In other words, until the Doukhobor interferes with our laws, until he becomes a factor in our political life, I am willing to allow that he may be right. Perhaps he is right. We sympathized with these people when they were in Russia, and when they were being persecuted, but I wonder how it is that the Immigration Department did not thoroughly investigate the causes of that persecution and see whether it was safe that these people should come into Canada, not only whether we should induce them to come, but whether it was safe for us to allow them to come, because it seems to me that the position now is that if we have given these people an asylum under false pretenses. The question must be considered : What are we going to do about it ? If they do not wish to be governed by our laws, what is to be done with them ? We have invited them to come here; are we going to pay their way and put them out of the country, or are we going to try, by various methods, mostly commercial, to convert them to our way of thinking ? The hon. gentleman who introduced the subject this afternoon thought fit to quote from, and likely quite properly, or to refer to the records of the Trades Congress of Canada on the question of immigration. I do not complain that he did so, but I feel that there is ground for a little complaint in that he did not go far enough but that he dropped off at 1896. I think that the position of the Trades Congress on the immigration question has always been a logical and consistent one, and that their position is not very different to-day from what it was in 1893 or 1894, except that it has been a little further developed. In 1893, referring to the Proceedings of the Trades Congress, the hon. gentleman read the resolution in which the Trades Congress condemned any governmental means of bringing in immigration that would interfere practically with industrial business; that is that would bring in immigration in bulk, that would be placed in direct competition with men who are at work or who are looking for work, or in other words that would increase the supply of the labour market and have the effect of reducing wages. In 1894 the resolution passed was practically to the same effect. And then again in 1896, after the present government came into office, the Congress met again and drew up a resolution very much on the same lines and which called for a remodelled system of immigration, a system that would result only in bringing people here to go on the land. Now, I do not see that there is any inconsistency in these resolutions at all. Then, there was another resolution on the question of immigration in 1899, which I find in the Proceedings of the Congress :

Whereas, the Trade Congress is on record as raising no objection to honest frugal and industrial agriculturists coming of their own volition and expense to Canada, and settling on our vacant lands, at the same time we do most emphatically protest against the action of the Dominion government in spending the people's money by granting assisted passages, as the present system of immigration is largely maintained in the interests of those connected with transportation, and those employers to whose profits cheap labour contributes. The right stamp of immigration is not obtained by bonusing transportation companies, as those corporations never do exercise proper judgment in selecting a desirable class of settlers.

I believe that has been recognized, and I think that even the records of the department will show that as far as possible now immigration is taken out of the hands of transportation companies and that there is no direct bonus given. I think this is in the right direction. At the same time our Immigration Department has been growing and the work, although it may now be done from other motives, is still going on. At that same congress there was another resolution passed, but, I am unfortunate in having it here in the French language, and not being able to read it, I can only give a general idea of its purport which I happen to know because this resolution was proposed by Mr. Mortimer and seconded by myself. It condemns the importation of labour in blocks, or in large quantities, because, when such is brought into the country, it interferes with the labour market and has a tendency to reduce wages. It is not a proper thing for the government to concern itself with that in view of the fact that it has taken no means whatever to in any way fix a standard of living in this country such as has been adopted in some other countries by fixing a minimum wage and a maximum number of hours to constitute a day's work. I quite believe that if this were properly provided for there would be no objection from the ordinary workingmen of this country to any kind of immigration whatever, Asiatic, European or any other. If there was a standard of living, if there was a minimum wage and a maximum hour for everybody and a fair competitive basis as far as the market is concerned, I do not think there would be any objection to immigration. This can be obtained, and is being obtained now in some countries. New Zealand by means of its arbitration laws, is fixing the minimum wage and fixing the day's work. It is doing so with the most remarkable success and its experiment has not been followed by the calamities prophesied for it. In most of the Australasian colonies the same thing is being done. The immigrant question in these colonies—in the light that objections are taken to it, not only by the labouring people of Canada but of this continent—has passed out of controversy. There is no objection to immigration as immigration on the part of any one. We all wish to see the country prosper and we all wish to see the country properly develop, but there is a decided objection to what is practically the bonusing of competition in the labour market. In 1898 there was some correspondence between the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg and the Minister of the Interior, dealing with this very subject of the Doukhobor and Galician immigration. It very fairly represents the opinions of both sides, and reading it over now after two years, I think it is probably one of the fairest and one of the ablest statements to hand on the immigration question as it affected the city of Winnipeg, which city is most vitally interested. I will not read all the correspondence, but I will give the House an idea of what it contains. In the summer of 1899, when the larger part of this immigration was coming into the North-west it had a most decided detrimental effect on the labour market of the city of Winnipeg at the time. With two or three thousand people laid down in the city for some months with nothing to do, you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, that the labouring men of Winnipeg at that time felt that their interests were jeopardized. They wrote to the Department of the Interior as follows :

> The Winnipeg Trades and Labour Council desire to call the attention of the government to some of the grave evils attending the large importations of Galicians and Doukhobors into this country, especially as they are at present affecting the interests of the unskilled labourers of Canada. We wish the government to clearly understand that we are not opposed to immigration into this country as such, but where public money is being spent to bring these people here, we have a right to demand that their presence should not injure the standard of life of the resident population.
> Now, sir, this is just where the working classes are being hurt. These immigrants have been accustomed to a mode of life which enables them to work cheaply, and are thus displacing the Canadian workman who earns his living by manual labour. Last winter hordes of Doukhobors were parading Winnipeg doing such work as wood-cutting, &c., at wages of about 30 cents per day. At other points in Manitoba their competition was equally injurious, and thus, in spite of the written assurance of the local immigration commissioner, Mr. McCreary, that they would not be allowed to compete in the labour market, but would be located on land. We will cite another instance of this injurious competition. A large number of Galicians have been drafted from Yorkton and are being employed on the railroad construction of the South-eastern Railway at rates of wages which we have reason to know are less than current. In the House of Commons recently the Hon. Mr. Blair, discussing the low rates of wages paid trackmen on the Grand Trunk Railway, said the matter was one of supply and demand, but just here the government is paying out public money to increase the supply of labour, while the demand, being normal, is crowding down the wages of the working classes to a point that will not afford even a bare subsistence.
> Having these facts in consideration, we therefore petition the government that railroads subsidized by public money shall pay current wages to all classes of labour which they may employ, and thus do something toward checking this unfair and dangerous competition which the working people of Canada are being subjected to.

Then the Minister of the Interior answered that letter and answered it very fully, and I believe put forward grounds that will hold good to-day. His answer was in part as follows :

I may say that when these people came in, I gave the most positive instructions that they should not, while under the charge of government officers, engage in any work that would bring them into competition with other men. I am sorry to say that owing to the difficulty of handling so many people at one time, my instructions were not in all cases literally carried out. As soon as I found this to be the case, I telegraphed positive instructions, and I have reason to believe that my instructions were carried out from that time forward.

The question of work upon railways is a difficult one to deal with, and I must admit that it has not occurred to me that labouring men in the cities would be affected by the immigrants doing work upon the railways.

This has been one of the experiences in the North-west especially in connection with competition of foreign labour on railways. And although the hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) told us fairly and eloquently of the bright side of the immigration question, there is a seamy side that he could have referred to and his portrayal of which would have been of very great value to this House. Everybody knows that there must have been evil effects attendant on the immigration to the North-west during the last few years. Every one knows that there must have been a great deal of trouble and of wrong-doing perpetrated on some people, but I am glad to say that a large part of the evil possible has been averted by a thoroughly competent and wide-awake immigration commissioner. It is unfortunate, but it is true that in a large number of cases all manner of means are resorted to in one way or another, to get more value out of these people than the employers wish to give an equivalent for. That is done by various methods and in some cases by the very direct method of absolutely refusing to pay them at all. I wish to say that the immigration commissioner has in some cases, I believe, done that which he had no lawful right to do, and the result of his action was the very laudable one that some employers were obliged to act square and to pay these foreigners what they owed them. Whether they could speak English or not they got fair treatment. In this connection I would say that the Immigration Department might very well add to its other functions in the North-west and establish an employment bureau over which there would be a legal officer whose duty it would be to take hold of these frauds that are daily perpetrated on immigrants who are brought to Canada by this government, to see that they are protected, that the people who employ them pay them their proper wage, and that they should measure their work with proper measures which is often not done now. If this were done a great many of the evils that are now complained of would be abolished, and justice and right would be done. Replying to this letter of the Minister of the Interior, the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg stated their general position in regard to immigration, and it is for the purpose of submitting this letter to the House that I refer to the question because it will give a fair idea of the attitude taken by labour on this question :

To the Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior.

Dear Sir,—We have very carefully considered your letter of the 10th inst. respecting the immigration policy of this country and the effort which you say the government has made to prevent unjust competition against the industrious classes.

You say that 'in your judgment there is no class of population which is more interested in filling up the country with an agricultural population than the labouring men of the cities and towns.'

By what process of reasoning you have arrived at that conclusion you state not; therefore, we trust you will pardon us if we call your attention to some considerations respecting this matter.

Labourers buy goods and sell labour. The welfare of the labouring classes will depend, therefore, on these two conditions, the price of goods and the wages of labour. We, therefore, ask your attention to these two factors.

First, as to the price of goods, how are they affected by the present system of indirect customs duties? Are they made cheap or made dear? Does the government send out agents to the cheapest markets in the world and offer bonuses at so much a pound, or so much a yard, to enable labourers to buy their goods at the lowest possible rate?

You know thoroughly well that not in a single instance has the slightest effort been made to enable workmen to buy cheap. It is altogether in the opposite direction. In the whole proceedings of parliament, from the day of its inception, never had any member made the first proposal or uttered the first hint that taxes should be directed to enable the labouring classes to get their goods at the cheapest possible price. Labourers are never aided to buy cheap.

And, Sir, when labouring men discuss this question of immigration, in my opinion they do right to consider it in connection with the question of the customs duty or the tariff. They can argue and argue consistently that the tariff has the effect of enhancing the price of everything they buy, and therefore of reducing the purchasing power of their earnings. The tariff makes the market high against them in what they have to buy, and the immigration policy, so far as it encourages and bonuses the immigration of labourers, brings them competition. So that their wages are reduced in the one instance by the customs tariff, and in the other their labour, which is the only thing they have to sell, is made cheap.

We now ask your attention to the act of selling. Labourers do not sell goods, they sell labour. Can any of your colleagues point out a single particular in which you enable us to sell dear? Not merely do you subject the labouring classes to the widest possible competition, but you maintain at enormous expense an immigration system whereby you intensify our competition. You crowd the labour market. Even at times when we are striking to secure some approach to decent wages, and even when many are tramping the streets in vain search for work. When labour sells, it is not merely in a free trade market, it is in a market with competition intensified by your immigration policy.

For the labourer you have an immigration policy which compels him to sell cheap, and which enables the capitalist to buy cheap. When the labourer goes to buy, you raise the market against him, you make his market dear, and you help the capitalist to sell dear.

The immigration policy must be examined with the tariff policy. They are but two parts of the same system, and they are most ingeniously devised to swindle the workingmen for the benefit of the rich every day in the year. . . . . Whether it is the intention of the government to right these wrongs, or at least to seriously grapple with them with a view to a remedy, we do not profess to know, but we do know that justice demands the abolition of the present immigration policy. It is no more, the duty of the government to seek cheap labour for capital than it is to seek cheap goods for labour. What is clearly the duty of the government is to seek to maintain in every possible way the material prosperity of the people, which will be simply impossible as long as one class of society is enabled on every hand to rob the other.

In these letters the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg state more fully than the Trades Congress of Canada the position of the labouring people on the immigration policy of the country as it has been operated in the past.

Coming to the immigration department as we have it to-day, I may state that it was with considerable regret that I saw that the same amount of money was being asked this year as was asked last year for the maintenance of that department. I quite understood from the remarks of the hon. Minister of the Interior last year that high water mark had been reached, and that we might look for some reduction in this respect. I think the time has come when the expenditure and the scope of the immigration department might begin to be gradually reduced. I must say that I view with some alarm the growth of the different agencies and the machinery of that department. At some time this government will pass away and another will take its place, and if this machinery then continues to be in existence, though its parts may be changed, it will be set at work again and probably increased. We have seen by the reports from the various officers that there is now a limit to the immigration which can be expected from Great Britain and the northern countries of Europe. The officers themselves report that it matters not what effort is put forward, there is a limit to the immigration which can be expected. Therefore, our efforts and our increased expenditure are being directed to southern Europe ; and while I would not at any time or under any circumstances underrate or put a stigma upon my nation or class of people, yet we must recognize that some immigrants are desirable and that others are less desirable. We know that the most desirable immigrants come from the north of Europe, Great Britain and the United States ; and I think we are making a mistake, and even practically committing a crime against the people in the sparsely settled portions of the country who have to live with those people, in bringing such large numbers from southern Europe. As the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said, we should not extend our operations there, but should watch the immigration that comes from there. We have already so considerable a population on the prairies from southern Europe, and there are such large reserves yet to be drawn upon, that without the immigration department spending a cent, it may be expected that that immigration will continue in the natural course, as in the United States, where, in spite of all their restrictions, immigration still continues, because people will go where their friends are. It seems to me that it would be wise to take note what class of immigrants we are getting from those countries ; and instead of spending more money, we should curtail the expenditure as far as possible and as quickly as possible, reduce the number of our immigration agencies, and get the department down to something like respectable limits, where it would no longer be looked upon as a place where room can always be made for one or two more appointments. We should begin by lopping something off. This is what the country expects ; at any rate, it is what we expect in the west. There is no doubt that our immigration policy has been successful in that it has brought immigrants into the country ; and I quite agree with what was said by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) that it is recognized by people belonging to both political parties as having been a success. He told us, for instance, of the resolution of the Winnipeg Board of Trade and about their saying that if that was the immigration policy of the government, they hoped it might continue. That may be so. The Winnipeg Board of Trade is a very honourable body; but at the same time it is a class body ; it represents the wholesalers almost exclusively. I remember when the hon. Minister of the Interior was speaking in Winnipeg on this question in the fall of 1899, when it was not a very popular question, he showed us the effect of the policy, and like the hon. member for Selkirk pointed out to-day that it was building up the city ; but the sum and substance of his remarks was this, that in five years there would not be a wholesaler in Winnipeg but would say that this policy was the best. Granted that the wholesalers may say so ; but we want some attention paid to the settler and the labourer. We feel that a government which can spend so much money on a matter of this kind, which is looked upon as outside the regular limits of government, should give more attention to the ordinary citizen of the country and his conditions of life. The money now spent on immigration, if capitalized, would amount to $15,000,000 or $20,000,000; and if that money were put in charge of a commission and spent wisely in the North-west, it could be made a better immigrant drawing agency than we have to-day, and would not be attended with the evils of the present system. I hope, Mr. Speaker, to see a curtailing of this expenditure on immigration.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I would not have spoken on this question were it not for some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Alberta. But first I would like to refer to a few of the statements made by the last speaker (Mr. Puttee). He discussed the immigration question from a labour standpoint, as affecting the labour interests in Winnipeg. But very few of the people he spoke about are to be found in Winnipeg. No doubt, when first brought in, they might have affected the labour market for a few weeks, but after they got out to the locations, I do not see how they could have interfered with that market. No doubt these people have done a certain amount of work on our railways, but if it had not been for them we could not have constructed our railway lines because it was impossible to get Canadians to work with pick and shovel when times were so prosperous on the farm. The hon. gentleman appeared to imagine he was talking for the whole of the North-west, but certainly the people are not in accord with his view. What the people want is a larger expenditure on immigration. The more immigrants we get into the country, the better it will be for all classes. I do not think that the small amount paid by the department in promoting immigration has been badly spent. Mr. Daly, when he was Minister of the Interior, inaugurated what he called a progressive immigration policy, and according to the figures, you will find that for the last three years, before the late govment went out of office, it had brought in 79,000 people at a cost of over a half million dollars. But in the last two years this government has brought in 119,000, at a cost of only $26,000 more than the late government paid for bringing in 79,000 people. That certainly speaks well for the administration of the Immigration Department.

The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) certainly deserves credit for having brought out the crushing reply which was administered to him by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary). In discussing the Galicians and the Doukhobors, he showed that he did not know very much about the question. I happen to know something about these people, having employed both. I have had Doukhobors working for me and now have them in my house. I have had men and women working for me and am, therefore, in a better position to judge than my hon. friend from Lennox. The hon. member for Alberta said he knew more about this question than anybody else in this House. Well, I would not like to say that I know more about it than any other hon. gentleman, because I think that the hon. member for Selkirk, who has been immigration commissioner for four years, has demonstrated this afternoon that he knew more about it than perhaps any other man in this House. The hon. member for Alberta has taken some dislike to these people, but he has no right to say that in expressing his dislike he is voicing the sentiment of the whole North-west. He has no right to speak for the people of the west, but only for those of his own constituency. The immigration of the Doukhobors was not promoted in the first place by this government, but by the late government, and in this I think they did what was right. It is unreasonable to expect that with our great territories, stretching west from the great lakes, we should wait for their development by the sons of farmers from the other provinces. In the county of Alberta there are 96,000 square miles of territory. Assiniboia is about the same extent, and the county I represent has an extent of 110,000 square miles of good agricultural lands. Are we to be asked to wait until the sons of the people of older Canada will come out and settle that country. I like to see the Galicians coming out there because they are very good settlers. If we are to wait to populate our western territories with the sons of English farmers, I am afraid that our people will find there is a terrible lot of money spent with very little result. The hon. member for Alberta spoke of millions of these people who are in Galicia and may come here in the near future. Well, 60,000 of these were accepted as desirable immigrants in the United States last year, and from my own observation they will make very desirable settlers.

The Galicians may not have much capital when they come in, but when they settle on the soil they are there for good. And, if the government advances them any money or loans them seed-grain or gives them any other assistance, the government may be very certain that it will get back that money, every dollar of it, with interest. In my own district I have a lot of Galicians. And if the Minister of the Interior can send us more Galicians they will be welcome. If my hon. friend from Alberta is not satisfied with these in his district, let him send them to my district and I will be very glad. For, those we have there are doing remarkably well. I have heard it said in this House and out of it and have seen it in the press that these people were immoral and dishonest. My knowledge of the Galicians lead me to believe that there is as high a percentage of honesty among them as there is among any other people of the country or out of it. There are exceptions, of course ; but these exceptions are not enough to condemn a whole class. I attended an agricultural fair last fall at which several Galicians had exhibits. And one of those exhibits was the finest hog I ever saw outside of Toronto fair. The Galicians took as many prizes as any other class in proportion to the number of their entries. The hon. member for Alberta says they will not assimilate, and he went on to say that they would block the establishment of school districts. That may have happened in Alberta, but it has not happened in my district. The Galicians have a thirst for knowledge, and they want schools established. There are many ranchers in that country, Canadians and others, who would do more to prevent the starting of school districts than these Galicians would. Now, I have a few words to say with regard to the Doukhobors. I have employed them. I have had a Doukhobor woman in my house for the last year, and she is a first-class servant; and I have had her husband working for me, and he is a first-class man. They have a boy of six or seven years old, and he is attending the public schools under the direction of his parents, and he speaks English as well as my own boy does. I do not share the fear of my hon. friend from Alberta that these people will not assimilate. Why, when the Mennonites were settled here twenty-two or twenty-three years ago, exactly the same things were said about them. I do not see much difference between the Doukhobors and the Mennonites so far as the objections that are raised are concerned. The Mennonites were placed on land in Manitoba that was not considered good for anything. But let hon. gentlemen opposite go to that country and see the perfect paradise that these people have made out of the district that they have settled, and I am sure they will not criticise this class of immigration as they have been doing. The older people among the Mennonites remain in Manitoba, but the young men are moving out. Hundreds of them are coming to my district. And these young people abandon the old customs of their fathers. At Rosthern we have several thousands of Mennonites, Germans and others. They have started public school districts all over. They have built two large roller mills, and they have established a town of several hundred population, and in the seven years since they started, they have exported about half a million bushels of grain. This goes to show that these people will develop and the second generation at any rate will be all right. I think that the money that has been spent by the department in the last three years has been well spent. We see the effect in the homestead entries. In the last year of the last government, the entries numbered about 1,500, and last year they have increased to nearly 7,000. There is another class of immigration that we are receiving and concerning which very little has been said—people from the United States. The hon. member for Alberta said there were about a million Canadians in the United States, and that it was desirable to get them back. So it is. And since this government came into power these people are coming back—hundreds and thousands of them—not only into the North-west, but into Quebec and other parts of the Dominion. Those who come to the North-west are first-class settlers. The knowledge of a prairie country that they have gained in the United States fits them to do well in our country. We are getting from the United States also a great many Germans and other foreigners, many of whom have been in the United States for twenty-five or thirty years but who find that their holdings are too small for their large families of boys, and they are selling out their land where they get $40 to $50 an acre, and are moving into the North-west Territories. And they do not come empty-handed. Some of them are bringing $10,000, some of them $20,000 in hard cash to be spent in the North-west, besides all their stock and other things. We are getting thousands and thousands of these people. Hon. gentlemen opposite never give the government credit for anything of that kind; they can only howl against the Galicians and the Doukhobors. In one sense they must be glad these people have come in, for otherwise, so far as the west is concerned, hon. gentlemen opposite would have no policy. And hon. gentlemen can see by the majorities given to the Liberal candidates that the people of that country take very little stock in it all. It may have had some effect here in the east, but, so far as the North-west is concerned it had no effect. In my own district the development is something wonderful. There is an Indian reserve that had never been taken up by the Indians. It was opened up for settlement three years ago. This reserve is about ten miles square, and there is a lot of good country all around it. I passed over that track three years ago, and there was nothing there—it was a wilderness. Last fall at the time of the election I had occasion to go through it again, standing on a little hill I counted fourteen windmills on top of big bank barns. I saw houses there that were as good as any in the town in which I live. I went into one of them and found it furnished as well as a house in town. I saw ten and fifteen teams of horses working there. One man told me that he had brought in $25,000 in cash, besides his implements, horses, cattle, &c. That gentleman has a section of land under cultivation this year and next year he will have two sections. That is an example of what is going on all over the North-west, and what has been going on since the present minister took over the office and adopted his present policy with reference to immigration. I am sorry to hear hon. members, particularly those from my own section, talk about cutting down the amount of money spent on immigration. Why, the country is large enough to sustain a population of 60,000,000, and you must spend money to populate it.

Put four or five millions of people in there: If you are getting into the public treasury something like $50,000,000 out of the five or six millions of people that we have now, you will get $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 when you have increased the population by that number. What would the $400,000 a year that we are spending on immigration amount to in comparison to that? Every good settler you put on the soil is worth thousands of dollars to the whole people of this country. The people of the east are interested in this question as well as we are, because, as the development of that country goes on, the development of the eastern part goes on. What supports the manufacturing industries of this country? The very people that consume the products that are manufactured, and we in the west are the greatest consumers in the whole Dominion of certain classes of products. Look at the amount of agricultural machinery we use in that country. We manufacture nothing, we produce grain; and I submit, with all due deference to the member for Alberta, that I do not care who it is that tears up the prairie and grows the grain, he is an accession to that country, although he may not be as cleanly as my hon. friend would have us think. With reference to the Doukhobors, there is no more cleanly people in the world, in their dress, and in their houses, or a more thrifty people. They have not been placed on the best land in the country. In my district they have been placed on the very worst portions of the land. There was a colony placed at the elbow of the Saskatchewan river, on land that no person else would take up. Even the Mennonites, the Germans, would not take it up. They have been there for two years, and they have good crops of grain. They have the finest gardens I ever saw. When I went into Battleford last fall I saw them with wagon loads of vegetables, peddling them in the town, they even had cucumbers. That town has been in existence for twenty-two years, and I do not think we ever saw a cucumber sold there until these Doukhobors came in. They are very thrifty and able-bodied men. They get work on the railroad and I want to say for the benefit of the representatives of the labour organizations in this House, that they do not cut wages, they will not work for low wages. They go and earn money, and the women and boys and the old men stay at home and do the farm work. When the men come back with their money in the fall they invest it in cattle, in sheep, in horses, horses for the purpose of breaking up the prairie and assisting in the development of the country. I say these people are getting along, and it is too bad that, for the sake of making a little cheap political capital out of this thing, it should be made a party question, and that these people should be abused as they have been abused in the party press of this country. That proclamation or manifesto that was published, and which the hon. member for Selkirk spoke about, is the work of only one crank. There are cranks amongst all classes. I venture to think you will find cranks in the city of Montreal, and other places, who will send out manifestos in favour of the Boers. That class exist all over the world, do you wonder that there is one amongst six or seven thousand Doukhobors? I know the Doukhobors well, I live pretty close to them, and I have seen them working, and I know they are satisfied and happy; they are pleased with the liberty that they have here. They are good citizens, not troublesome to any person, they earn their living and pay their debts, and any people who do that are a desirable class of people. I wish to say in conclusion, that if the Minister of the Interior has any more Galicians, and the hon. member for Alberta does not wish them sent into his district, I should be happy to see the minister send them into the district of the Saskatchewan, because I think they are going to make a very good class of people. They have already commenced to marry with other classes of people, and, I understand, that is one of the objections the hon. member for Alberta has to them. There is another class of people that I will mention, that were brought in when the hon. gentlemen were in power, that is, a class of people from France brought into Duck Lake, Saskatchewan. They came in without any money, practically, and to-day, taking them from the standpoint of Ontario and Quebec, these men would be considered wealthy. There is hardly one of them who has not fifty or sixty head of cattle all paid for, their implements paid for, raising 1,000 to 3,000 bushels of grain, owing nobody in the world. They are picking up our habits and our language. They are law-abiding citizens, and I think if the minister can promote more immigration of that kind from Normandy or Brittany, it will be a good thing for the North-west Territories. I would be pleased to welcome them, or any other hard-working man, who is willing to take off his coat and go to work.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I shall not waste much time in attempting to reply to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Davis), or to the wishy-washy speech of the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), who tried to steer to every point of the compass, but without pronouncing a definite opinion in any respect. When I was listening to the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), the impression created in my mind was, that the government had made a mistake in not having made that hon. member the immigration commissioner in Europe. He has evidently missed his vocation in studying law. Judging from his speech to-night, he would have far surpassed those commissioners and agents who have been sent over by the Minister of the Interior to promote immigration from the countries of Europe. I have another fault to find with him. For more than 1800 years we had never heard from the Galatians. Since the time that the apostle Paul wrote his epistle to them, we had heard very little about them until to-night. But, the member for Guysborough has resurrected them. To-day we have the member for Guysborough giving the highest character to those Galatians. For 1,800 years we have been asking what had become of them, and now, to our surprise, the member for Guysborough brings the Galatians into our view, and gives them a certificate of character. The member for Guysborough also has a grand eulogy for these Galicians, that some persons call Galatians. There are no people in any country, apparently, to equal the Galicians and the Doukhobors, except himself, the hon. member for Guysborough. He has a sneer for the Englishman who comes to this country. It is true, he has a little eulogy for the Irishman and the Scotchman, but they are not to be compared with the Doukhobor and the Galician. I am told that the Galicians had not been a year in this country until the authorities in Winnipeg found it necessary to hang two of them for murder. That was not a very good recommendation to start with, but apparently that does not count for much with the member for Guysborough.

Mr. McCREARY. Those two men were brought in under the former Conservative government ; they were hang-dogs.

Mr. WALLACE. That is very clever, and the Minister of Customs is overwhelmed with laughter. Two Galicians were hung, and the only reply of the member for Selkirk is, that they were brought in by the Conservatives when they were in power. If the Conservatives made a mistake and brought in a few of them, what are we to say of this government, who, having known the character of their men, and having assisted to hang two of them, went to work and brought in 16,000 more of these very admirable Christian characters ? The great test, the only test, the member for Guysborough will recognize, is their ability to grow wheat. If they can grow wheat it does not matter whether they are Mormons, whether they turn their wives away, whether they break the laws of the land, whether they ever become Canadian citizens in the true sense of the word, and British subjects ; that does not matter a straw with the member for Guysborough, so long as they can grow wheat. It does not matter a straw to the hon. member for Guysborough if they can only grow wheat. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has the same argument. He repeats in parrot-like fashion the statement of the hon. member for Guysborough. Let them grow wheat, let Mr. and Mrs. Doukhobor be good manservant and maidservant in my household and I shall ask for nothing more. I agree with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), whose able speech to-night upon this question deserves to be read and considered by every Canadian because he has laid down the true principles which should guide the government of the people in the matter of immigration into this country. Sir, it is true that the great bulk of the population of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and latterly of the province of British Columbia, is made up of people from the eastern provinces of Canada. The proof of it, if proof were necessary, is shown in one fact that I shall state, that in the province of Ontario this year the Minister of Education, in his report, states that there are about 7,000 less children attending the public schools in Ontario than there were in the previous year. I have a letter from the Minister of Education of the province of Quebec in which he says that there are a thousand less children attending the public schools, or what are considered to be public schools in Quebec, than there were in the former year. What has become of these children ? Their parents and themselves have gone to the North-west Territories. They have built up the country very largely, together with Englishmen, Irishmen, and Scotchman from the old land. The hon. member for Guysborough, though he has a little word of commendation for the Irishman and the Scotchman, sneers at the Englishmen. Mr. Speaker, the time has gone by when an Englishman need be put out at the sneer of the hon. member for Guysborough. The Englishman has taken his part with the Irishman and the Scotchman in civilizing the world. That illustrious trio, not only on land but on the sea, have upheld the honour of the British flag, they have upheld the honour of the greatest nation that the world has ever seen and they have promoted the colonization and settlement of the four quarters of the globe. You cannot go to any civilized or uncivilized part of the earth to-day but the Englishman, the Irishman and the Scotchman have been there engaged in the promotion of civilization, commerce and Christianity. The sneers of the hon. member for Guysborough will not be considered of very great importance when we look at the illustrious history of the Englishman in all ages and no less than in the age in which we are living to-day. Next, the hon. gentleman speaks of the Mennonites as being an admirable example of foreigners being brought into Canada and paying their debts. He said that those men who decried and deprecated the introduction of these men in the past will look very small to-day. In this case he has only to look at his friends around him, because they were the men, when the Conservative party were in power, who denounced and opposed the introduction of the Mennonites whom he eulogized so highly to-day. But, the hon. gentleman was, in his speech, from beginning to end, constantly harping upon the fact that the Doukhobors and Mennonites paid their debts. That was another evidence of the desirability of immigration. I would be rather of the opinion, from his constant reference to the fact that these people paid their debts, that there were some of the more desirable class of immigrants from the British Islands who did not pay their debts and that the hon. member for Guysborough was perhaps let in a little by some of these chaps. But, however that may be, the fact that a man has to pay his debts if he is worth it is only something that characterizes Canadians as a people. We all pay our debts.

An hon. MEMBER. No, we do not.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, the hon. member who interrupted and said that we do not, is evidently speaking for himself. I am sure that he is not speaking for anybody on this side of the House and I would be sorry to think that he was speaking for any of his colleagues on that side of the House, so that we will leave him as the solitary example of the men who will not pay their debts. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), this afternoon, when I was out, though I was listening to most of his speech, made some reference, I am told, to the prosperity and progress made in the town and district of Yorkton, North-west Territories, and gave my name as one who had participated in that prosperity. I have quite an intimate knowledge of that. We formed a colonization company more than eighteen years ago and it is a matter of very great pride to myself, personally, that, in the last local election, that district had more than 1,000 recorded votes at the election. We sent the settlers 100 miles in from the railway at that period. We complied as a colonization company with every condition that the government had laid down, which I do not think another company did as well as we did. At any rate, we brought in the right kind of settlers. We brought in settlers from old Canada as well as some from the old land.

Mr. McCREARY. If the hon. gentleman heard that I reflected in any way upon him or upon the company of which he has spoken, he is mistaken. 'Hansard' will show him, if he reads it to-morrow, that I merely said that the value of the land owned by that company had increased largely, owing to the fact of that immigration having gone in there. I did not refer to the colonization company of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is president, in a disparaging manner, but simply mentioned that fact.

Mr. WALLACE. I am glad to hear that. But, I was proceeding to say that that company, and I think it is a matter of very great pride to every member of the company, turned the tide of the emigration of those young men who, in former years were making their way to the United States, and directed them to our own North-west Territories. Such men as the Merediths and other young men who went in there and have become prosperous business men and farmers, were among those whom we induced to settle there. I do not believe that there is any portion of the North-west Territories or Manitoba that is enjoying greater prosperity than the district I allude to, with which my name has been connected and to which I have devoted a large share of attention in years gone by and in all the years since. But, I say further that when the hon. member for Selkirk says that prosperity is largely due—that is as I understood him——

Mr. McCREARY. Partly due.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, partly due—to the fact that the Doukhobors are settled near there. I do not share that opinion with him. The Doukhobors are settled thirty or forty miles away from Yorkton and they are the exclusive settlers in that part. But when people say they are going into Yorkton they take objection to these Doukhobors and say: Oh, that is where the Doukhobors live. The fact that the name of Yorkton is connected with the Doukhobors, although they are forty or fifty miles away from Yorkton, has been detrimental to the whole district. Yorkton being the terminus of the Manitoba and North-western Railway, the settlers from all these districts to the north must leave the railway at Yorkton, and as people get it into their heads that the Doukhobors are settled in Yorkton the prosperity of that part of the country has been retarded. I do not believe that the Doukhobors are a desirable class of settlers. Those men who have been proved to so lightly regard the marriage tie that by their rules and regulations they discard their wives whenever they wish, and who in other respects are guilty of loose and improper conduct, are not the kind of people we want in Canada. I do not know that we want them to assimilate with our Canadian people, but anyway they do not assimilate. The government made a mistake in putting them into a separate community, where they have exclusive lordship over the soil in that whole section of the country. If they are a desirable class of settlers, they should be sent to mingle with the other people, so as to be taught Canadian instincts; the value of the liberty we enjoy, and the kind of institutions we live under. The Doukhobors will not learn these things themselves and they apparently do not want to learn them. I regret that the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is not here to-night, as I wanted to bring something to his attention. His organ, his newspaper, as I am told, the Halifax Chronicle, pronounced an opinion about these Doukhobors which I will read for the edification of the Minister of the Interior, to show him how his colleague views these Doukhobors; if the Halifax Chronicle represents his views.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). It does not represent his views.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Nor the views of anybody else on this side of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. I am told the Minister of Finance was the editor of the Halifax Chronicle.

The PRIME MINISTER. That was a good many years ago.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Is he the editor now ?

Mr. WALLACE. I have failed to hear that the Halifax Chronicle has ceased to be the organ of the government.

Mr. KENDALL. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the Halifax Chronicle is to-day the organ of the company combines in Nova Scotia. Some of us do not recognize it as the organ of the Liberal party.

Mr. WALLACE. I am glad to have that information because to my mind it is one and the same thing as the organ of the Liberal party.

Mr. COCHRANE. Only ten times more so.

Mr. WALLACE. Referring to the immigration of the Doukhobors, the Halifax Chronicle says :

> It is well perhaps that this matter has come up in this way, at this time. Not much damage can yet be done. The few thousands of foreign riffraff so far brought into the Dominion can probably be swept out of the country or got rid of in some way without serious injury. But we want no more of it. Immigrants have recently landed in Halifax, and not a few of them, whom all that have seen them report as anything but a promising acquisition to any civilized land, and as a most probable good riddance to their native countries.

I was very much struck with the charming description which the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) gave of these good and amiable Christian people when they first saw the shores of Halifax, but I forgot that a man who was at Halifax at the time watching these Doukhobors has written an entirely different description from that given by the hon. member for Guysborough, who did not happen to be there at all.

> It is revolting in the extreme to think of blood such as this being destined to mix with our good, clean British and French Canadian blood to its certain corruption. The early filling up of our vacant lands is a small matter as compared with the preservation of the wholesomeness of our population. What would be thought of the sanity of the owner of a mansion and the father of a growing family who should go into the slums and fill his vacant chambers with their denizens to the pollution of his home and the probable ejection of his unborn children? There is no necessity for reckless haste in peopling the North-west. Better let the prairies lie fallow as they have lain since the waters receded from their face than plant them with residents who will be in but not of Canada ; and whom shall we be ashamed to acknowledge as bearers of the Canadian name. Population is desirable—but not undesirable population. If the department would permit us to address it in Latin we should say to it, ' Festina lente '—which, being interpreted, means ' go slow.'

I would refer that opinion of the candid friend, the Halifax Chronicle, to the serious attention of the Minister of the Interior, who, I hope, has an open mind upon this question, because last year he apologized for the introduction of the Galicians and the Doukhobors, and said there would be scarcely any further immigration of the Doukhobors to this country, as the supply had been exhausted. It seemed a relief to the minister (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to be able to make that announcement to the House.

Mr. McCREARY. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) tell me who is the present editor of the Halifax Chronicle.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) that the present editor of the Halifax Chronicle——

Mr. WALLACE. Now, I must object to this kind of thing. One gentleman over there gets up to ask me a question and another one of them gets up to answer it for me. I object to that. I contend that that game won't work.

Mr. McCREARY. I merely wanted to find out if it was a certain gentleman who used to edit the Free Press at Winnipeg, a Mr. McLellan, I think.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) will have to go elsewhere for that information.

Mr. McCREARY. I thought so.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not concerned as to who is the editor of the Halifax Chronicle, I am only concerned in the wisdom of his remarks.

Mr. McCREARY. We are concerned in the west, as we know the gentleman.

Mr. WALLACE. I am concerned with the fact that there is one Liberal newspaper in the country that gives words of sound wisdom to its readers, because we do not always find that to be the case. Has the hon. member for Selkirk anything to say against the editor of the Halifax Chronicle, even if he should turn out to be that gentleman from the Winnipeg Free Press ?

Mr. McCREARY. I say we know that gentleman, that is all. In the west he is pretty well known.

Mr. WALLACE. Merely knowing does not convey any idea to this House unless the sneer that accompanies the remark means that he is a disreputable character or an unreliable man. I would like to hear the hon. member, who knows all about him, tell us what his opinion is of this editor of the Halifax Chronicle.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Would the hon. gentleman allow me to say that he was not in Halifax when the Doukhobors arrived, and he never saw any of them, and he was not at that time an editor of the Chronicle.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to know where the hon. member gets his information as to the whereabouts of this individual.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I can give the hon. gentleman that information if he wants it.

Mr. WALLACE. Apparently every man in the Liberal party who has an independent opinion, and who is not afraid to express his independent opinion, is hooted down by the members of the Liberal party, and we have the hon. member for Selkirk and the hon. member for Victoria, N.S., both casting their sneers at this gentleman. It would be better for them to reply to his statements than to asperse the character of the man. The important matter to us is whether his statements are true and his opinions sound. In my judgment his opinions are exceedingly sound, and represent the proper and true opinion of the people of Canada. Now, the hon. member for Selkirk told us in glowing and eloquent terms what they were going to do in the future, and the great results that were going to be accomplished by this enormous expenditure on immigration, more than double the expenditure during the last years of the Conservative regime. Why did the hon. gentleman not tell us of the great results that have flowed from the policy and the acts of the government of to-day ? We were told that he was the immigration commissioner, and the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) told us that he had handled in one year $90,000 of the money of the people of Canada. Well, we would like to know where were the good results ; or had he just sown the seed and expected that the good results would follow in future years ? He was not able to point to very great improvement, although he might fairly have done so. He said there was a larger immigration into Manitoba and the Territories in the last three years than there had been in the previous three years. I have no doubt that is true, because Providence blessed the North-west during those three years with the most abundant crops perhaps which had ever been enjoyed there, and prices were fairly good, at any rate profitable. There was every inducement, therefore, for the people to go up and possess the land. The railroads had opened up the country ; the people were becoming better acquainted with the resources of the country. I think myself that any man residing in any of the older provinces who is not satisfied with the conditions which obtain there, cannot do better than seek his fortune in our own North-west and British Columbia, where there is a variety of occupation, where there is mineral wealth as well as agricultural wealth, and where there are all the conditions to make a prosperous and wealthy people. So that we cannot advertise our resources in those parts of the Dominion too much, even to our own people; and we should say to them, If you are going to change your condition, if you are going to farm, farm in our own Dominion, because the conditions are more favourable there than they are in any other part of the world for increasing the prosperity and wealth of the people. The hon. member for Selkirk eulogized the Doukhobors and Galicians, followed by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), and the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), in the same strain. There was nothing too good to be done for those people, whom I for my part consider to be an undesirable element of our population. But I was reading yesterday in one of our Ottawa papers a contrast to these eulogies in the shape of the treatment which some of our own Canadian citizens received. Here is an article in the Ottawa Evening Journal of yesterday :

The Fox Bay Settlers are Leaving Manitoba—They Claim to have been Set Down in a Swamp in the Dauphin District—Sickness and Death Followed to Many, and those who Survive will Return to the East to Find a Living.

(Special to the Journal.)

Quebec, April 11.—The Fox Bay settlers are on their way back from the Dauphin district of Manitoba, where they suffered much from typhoid and then la grippe. Twelve of their number died. They were set down in a swamp and have been nearly drowned out.

Richard Whiting has arrived with his own and his decaased brother's family, making a party of eleven.

Edward Osborne and family are on the way, making as many more. Their tale is one of hardship and loss. Asked what they intended doing and whether they contemplated returning to Anticosti, Whiting said he intended settling down in Quebec city, where his family might enjoy the privileges of civilization, and that if he and his two brothers could get a little help, he would purchase a second-hand schooner with which they would go below and engage in fishing in the waters with which they were acquainted.

That is the treatment given to loyal Canadian citizens. I say that the treatment of these Fox Bay settlers from the Island of Anticosti forms a black period in the history of Canada. They were deprived of their homes to which by all the usages of this country they were fairly entitled. There is no part of Canada where the settler, who performs his duties as those Fox Bay settlers did for twenty-eight or thirty years, is refused permission to retain the land on which he has squatted or settled. They were fishermen, and farmers in a small way, and God-fearing, orderly citizens. They were driven out of their homes and transported—what do I hear ? The hon. member for Bellechase (Mr. Talbot) had better be careful of himself ; we know his history pretty well.

Mr. TALBOT. Why do you not tell it if you know it ?

Mr. WALLACE. I have no hesitation in telling it.

Mr. TALBOT. Speak it out.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. Make him keep order. I am speaking to the question and giving my opinions, and I hear various improper and ill-bred interruptions from that quarter.

Mr. TALBOT. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have not made a single remark on anything he has said. I was speaking to a gentleman here.

Mr. WALLACE. I heard some improper remarks from where the hon. gentleman sits, anyway.

Mr. TALBOT. I do not care what you heard.

Mr. WALLACE. I was saying that these Fox Bay settlers were a desirable class of people to have retained in the Dominion of Canada. If they were driven from their homes by any process of law, it was a process of law which worked untold hardships on those men. After the season was over, and when it was impossible for them to cultivate the ground and earn their living, they were taken and placed in a district which was unfit for them to live in under any circumstances, and especially at a time of the year when it was impossible for them to make a living. Those men, women and children should have been the wards of the government, and those caresses and that assistance given to undesirable people should have been reserved for deserving Canadians like the Fox Bay settlers.

This government has an army of immigration agents in the old country. They have Mr. Devlin, formerly a member of this House, as immigration agent in the city of Dublin, and according to the statement of my hon. friend from Lennox he has not had very great success. Out of 45,000 emigrants who left Ireland during the past year, only 765 came to Canada, or one out of every sixty. I am sorry that Irishmen or Englishmen or any man in the British Islands, when he moves, should not come to the Dominion, because we can offer him inducements not exceeded by any other country in the world. We can offer him the freest institutions, the greatest liberty, and that variety of occupation without which no country ever became great and prosperous.

We have Mr. Preston as a kind of roving commissioner with authority over all the other agents. Is he placed over Lord Strathcona, and does he instruct that illustrious gentleman how he should conduct immigration matters in the city of London ? I presume he has the same authority over Lord Strathcona that he has over other immigration agents. We find that this roving agent has struck some new class of the population in Asia, and would like to have the fullest information from the hon. minister as to whether the government intend promoting the immigration of this class into Canada and can certify that they are a desirable class. I do hope the hon. gentleman will take warning by the mistakes his department has made in the past and try to bring out a desirable class of people—men from the northern parts of Europe, men from Great Britain, who are proved colonizers and settlers, and men like the Germans who assimilate with our people and become Canadian citizens, and are as proud of their country of adoption as of the country they left behind them. We do not want numbers regardless of any other consideration, which has been the text of the hon. member for Guysborough and other gentlemen, because population is not the great desideratum after all. If it were, China would be the greatest country in the world. What we want is the right stamp of men to lay the foundations of liberty and freedom in this country. We want those qualities which have made Canadians not inferior, but, I believe, superior to the people to be found anywhere else on the globe, and do not want those qualities to become degenerated by the importation of improper foreigners.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR Hon. Clifford Sifton). I have had occasion in this House to discuss that phase of the immigration question which has been discussed at such great length this afternoon and evening, and I should hardly deem it necessary to place again upon the records of the House the views I have already expressed at some length on a former occasion, not entertaining the same desire to repeat the same sentiments and opinions a number of times as some of my hon. friends opposite seem to have.

I have had during the past few years the pleasure of listening to the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Wallace) upon a variety of occasions and subjects, and I have never heard him make a speech in this House which was a fair presentation of the case, even from his own standpoint. I have never heard him resume his seat without appealing to the prejudices of some class of the community, and he has this evening well sustained the reputation he has achieved of never neglecting an opportunity to strengthen himself politically by appealing to those prejudices which every statesman ought to endeavour to allay. This evening he followed his usual tactics by dragging in by the heels a reference to the case of the Fox Bay settlers, which has no relevancy whatever to the subject we are discussing. That is purely a domestic matter not connected at all with the immigration policy of this department, one which ought to be discussed fairly, in the light of all the facts, properly stated, in order that the people may have a fair and proper conception of what has been done so as to decide whether or not the government is blamable.

But that is not my hon. friend's method of discussion. His method is to seize upon some ex-parte statement and proceed to discuss it. He does not even take the responsibility himself, but reads from a newspaper, in order that an unfair and dishonest statement of the facts may go before the people. In the experience I have had in connection with the administration of the affairs of this country, I do not know of any body of people who, having no claims on the government more than any other citizens of the country, have received such liberal, such considerate, such judicious treatment as those to whom my hon. friend referred. If they have not been successful, I regret it.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. minister tell us at what time of the year they were sent up to the North-west ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember the exact time.

The PRIME MINISTER. If I may be allowed a word—it was in the month of July or August.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has never been a small body of people—or a large body for that matter—who have gone as new settlers to Manitoba or the North-west Territories, who have received the same kind and constant attention at the hands of this government and the officers of this government, as those to whom the hon. gentleman has referred. I need not say anything more about that. It has nothing to do with the discussion in hand, but was dragged in by the hon. gentleman in pursuance of his ordinary policy—for I am within the judgment of the House when I say that that hon. gentleman never rises without appealing to the prejudices of the people. My hon. friend has not thought fit to be extremely careful in the statements he has made. One hon. gentleman on this side of the House said something about the Mennonites. There was no necessity for the hon. member for West York to travel outside the record to discuss the question of who brought the Mennonites into this country. He made the statement that it was the Conservative government which brought them in and the Liberals who opposed, as being the immigration of an undesirable people. The hon. gentleman's knowledge in this respect is greatly at fault. If he will look at the records of the House, he will find that the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie was the man who made the loan and sent the Mennonites to the North-west amidst the denunciation of the political friends of the hon. gentleman—denunciations against his political character such as are addressed against us at this moment in reference to the Doukhobors.

Mr. WALLACE. I repeat the statement I made—I did not refer to the loan of the money—that the bringing in of the Mennonite settlers was arranged by the government of Sir John Macdonald, before they went out of office.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Mennonites were sent to Manitoba as part of a policy which involved a loan which was arranged by the government of the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. At page 379 of 'Hansard,' of 1875, the hon. gentleman will find the resolution with regard to this money.

Mr. WALLACE. They were in the country long before that, and the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) cannot deny it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This policy of settling these people there was met with abuse of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie for bringing them in, precisely as we are being abused now for bringing in the Doukhobors. We have been carrying out a policy of immigration which to-night for the first time has been denounced by a man sitting on the front bench of the Conservative party. For, as my hon friend from Selkirk well said, Sir Charles Tupper, when leader of his party, carefully refrained in any discussion that took place in this House, from expressing himself in any such terms as those that have been used by the hon. gentleman opposite in this debate. And, as I have shown, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has spoken in total ignorance of the record of his own party on that question. Then, the hon. gentleman did not like the reference that was made by my hon. friend from Selkirk on the subject of the success attending the operations, in the Yorkton district, of the York Farmers' Colonization Company with which he is connected. I have sometimes been surprised at the statements made by the hon. gentleman in this House, but never so much so as at the remarks he has made in regard to that particular locality. One would have thought from the hon. gentleman's remarks that the York Farmers' Colonization Company had peopled that country with those of British lineage and that the miserable Doukhobors and Galicians of that locality were a detriment, and prevented him from getting settlers for his lands. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the year before the Galicians went there, I drove over the York Farmers' Colonization tract, and I saw the abandoned mill, the stones of which had been taken out, and the walls of which stood tenantless, while the thousands of acres of the tract were unoccupied, the hon. gentleman not being able to dispose of the land or to get settlers for it. This will give an idea of the correctness of the information the hon. gentleman has given this House. If he knew the facts, apparently he took pains to forget them before rising to speak. But I call attention also to the spirit of the hon. gentleman's remark. There seemed to be, on his part, a desire to leave a certain impression upon the House, an impression which certainly was not justified by the facts. What justification could the hon. gentleman have for speaking of the record of the Doukhobors and Galicians and saying that they might be murderers or anything else, that we might have had to hang a couple of them, but that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) did not care so long as they were good servants in his house ? For what purpose was this ? The hon. gentleman sought to leave upon the public mind the impression that these people were of criminal tendency, that they were not of good character morally. I make the statement here that there is not an equal number of people in the Dominion of Canada among whom, for an equal length of time, there has been a lower record of crime than among these people. There is my challenge ; let the hon. gentleman take it up. He has no right to stand up, in this House, and seek to give the people of this country the impression that any class of people in Canada are of criminal tendency or have a criminal record when such is not the case. He said that it had been necessary to hang one of the Galicians. Well, it has been necessary to hang Canadians before this. But I say that the record of these people in connection with crime is not less favourable than that of the best class nationally speaking that can be found in Canada. I was struck with the wisdom of one remark made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson). He said that as he did not know anything about the Doukhobors he would not express any opinion. If one or two other gentlemen would entertain and act upon the same sentiment, I think a good deal of the time of the House would be saved which has now been wasted.

I quite admit the right of the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) to have an unfavourable opinion of the Galician people. It does not disturb me much that he has that feeling and expresses himself in an adverse way whenever discussions arises upon the subject in this House. The hon. member for Alberta and I have been friends for a good many years, I have known him for a long time, but I have never heard him express unqualified admiration for anything or any individual. There seems to be something about my hon. friend's constitution which, while it does not affect the keenness of his intellect, prevents him from expressing a favourable opinion about either men or things. Possibly it is a good thing for us to have one or two gentlemen of that class in the House, it keeps us from having too high an opinion of ourselves, and possibly there may be a corrective influence in his criticisms which have a beneficial effect upon us.

I will say one or two words about the general effect of the immigration policy of the government. One would think from the statements which have been made—and I think in that respect the member for Alberta was unfair to the member for Selkirk —one would think that the whole question of immigration as we have dealt with it in the last four years was a question of Doukhobors and Galicians. My hon. friend from Alberta said that the impression left upon his mind by the remarks of my hon. friend from Selkirk was that the prosperity of the North-west in the last few years was due to the influx of Doukhobors and Galicians. Well, I think if the member for Alberta will reflect for a few moments he will not consider that as a fair criticism of the remarks made by the hon. member for Selkirk. The member for Selkirk addressed almost all his remarks, and naturally so, to the criticisms which had been made upon the policy of the government and with the execution of which he had had a great deal to do himself. But my hon. friend from Selkirk knows well, knows better than any other member of this House, the exact proportion of people that have been brought into the North-west through the efforts of this government, and he knows that the Doukhobors and Galicians are comparatively a small proportion of the people that have been brought in there. This talk about the Doukhobors and Galicians has arisen almost entirely from the fact that our friends on the other side, having had for some years past the painful experience of failure in their immigration policy, think there is an opportunity of raising national prejudice against the policy of this government by attacking us upon that question. Forgetful of the record of their own party, careless of consistency so far as that is concerned, they endeavour to attack us particularly upon these two points, and they have endeavoured to lead the public mind to the supposition that we were bringing only these two classes into the country. The very first year after our taking office, something like 700 or 800 people came from the United States into Manitoba and the North-west Territories; last year, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the organization which we have perfected in the western states, we brought no less than 15,000 settlers from the United States into Manitoba and the North-west Territories. This year our friends from the North-west who are familiar with what is going on at the present time, tell me, and the officers of my department tell me, there will be a considerably larger number. Sir, if the whole of the nearly half million dollars which we have expended had no other result in those three years than to bring those 20,000 people from the western states into this country, it would be one of the best expenditures the Dominion of Canada ever made.

Hon. gentlemen, I presume, were not serious when they said: We will wait, wait, we won't develop the country by bringing in population, but we will wait until the sons and daughters of Canadians spread themselves over the western prairies and become tillers of the soil. My hon. friends do not take the trouble to think what they are talking about. We get a few people in the shape of farmers from the older provinces, but don't my hon. friends know that the average young Canadian to-day does not want to go out on a western farm and grub there as his forefathers grubbed in the wilderness of eastern Canada? The great majority of these young men desire a different kind of life, and they won't go there, and if you get them to go in the first place you cannot get them to stay. That has been to a large extent the experience that we have had in that western country. But, Mr. Speaker, what we should be able to do as a result of populating that country is this, we should be able to furnish those young men with profitable occupations of all kinds in the cities and towns of the west which will be built up upon the prairies, and in the cities and towns of British Columbia where mining and manufacturing interests are developing, where towns are going up upon the prairies about the Saskatchewan. We should be able in those towns and villages to furnish young Canadians occupations of a profitable character and of a class which they will be ready and willing to carry on. That will be the result. When you look over the scope of the development of our western country you will find that within the last three or four years young people from the province of Ontario have not been going to the western states as they did in former years. My hon. friend says we want people from the province of Ontario to go out on to these prairies. Why in the name of common sense did they not get people from the province of Ontario to go out on to those western prairies when they were in power? But not at all, they went to the United States, and it was not until the last two or three years that the movement was entirely stopped, and those young men are now going to Manitoba and the North-west Territories. That is the position, and as a result, thousands and thousands of young men can find a profitable occupation of a professional character, and clerical work of various kinds, all over that vast country.

Sir, I do not propose to discuss the question at greater length. I have only spoken as I did because I was impressed with the idea that the criticism of the hon. gentleman was most unfair and inaccurate, and his remarks were of such a character as to cast an aspersion upon people who had no right to be treated in that way. As I have said in this House before, I have not apologized. The hon. gentleman was not more accurate then than in the other statements he made. I did not apologize for anything the Department of the Interior done in regard to the policy of immigration. The hon. gentleman's statement in that respect was wholly inaccurate. I did not apologize, but I explained frankly to the House what had been done. I do not come before this House at any time for the purpose of saying that everything my department has done is entirely right, that everything my officers have done is absolutely and entirely right. I have spoken fully and frankly, as I always endeavour to do, of the operations of the department in respect to this work of immigration, and explained to the House in respect of the Galicians that though we were quite satisfied we could take care of a certain number of those people, we did not want unduly to increase the number, and we have made certain arrangements for the purpose of curtailing the movement and prevent it from unduly increasing. That is what I said, I did not in any way apologize, but I made a correct statement of what we have done. For my part, Mr. Speaker, so far as this particular class of people is concerned, the small proportion of them that have been taken into the North-west the last four years, I am satisfied that they are a very desirable people, and will make good citizens indeed, I have not the slightest doubt in the world about that. I fully agree with the statements which have been made by the member for Selkirk and the member for Saskatchewan in that respect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say a word or two, not for the purpose of detaining the House at any length, but in justice to my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Wallace). The Minister of the Interior has confined his remarks to setting forth the great value of the immigration policy pursued by him as compared with that of his predecessors, and with endeavouring to cast some fine scorn upon the member for West York. But he did not answer anything that my hon. friend from West York said. He has told us that the Galicians are guilty of less crime than any other community in Canada. I do not know whether that is the case or not, but it is no answer to what the member for West York said. It may be that what the Minister of the Interior said is absolutely correct; but I would point out to the hon. Minister of the Interior that when he makes that statement to the House it would be far better for him to give us some statistics so that we might judge as to the truth of his statement. Is he prepared to give us any statistics to bear out what he says? I will sit down and let him do so if he can give us any. Well then, if he is not capable of giving us these statistics, why does he state to the House a fact of which he can have no knowledge whatever? His ipse dixit is not to be the guide of the House unless he is able to support it by some facts. He also sneered at the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) because that gentleman read a statement from the public press and did not make it on his own responsibility. I should think that the hon. Minister of the Interior is the last person in this House to throw such a sneer at an hon. member across the floor of the House, because, when charges were made in this House which would result in either driving him from public life, or the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) from public life, his followers voted down the motion for investigation which was asked for.

Now, so far as these Doukhobors and Galicians are concerned, I am ready to welcome them to Canada in such numbers as it is likely Canada is able to assimilate, provided they are not coming here with manners and customs which are likely to do injury to the general community in this country. I do not know what the marriage customs of the Doukhobors are, but I took notice that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), when he was dealing with this question, touched it very lightly. I would like an answer from that hon. gentleman merely for information, because I have no information on that subject myself, beyond what I see in the public press, and have heard in this House. The hon. gentleman seems to be familiar with the facts. Will he state yes or no as to the alleged custom of the Doukhobors putting away their wives without resort to any proceedings in court at all. It has been alleged in the public press, and I do not know whether it is correct or not, that this is a custom which prevails amongst them. I heard my hon. friend say that there has not been a divorce among them for a great many years, but that may be consistent with a custom such as has been referred to. I will give way to the hon. gentleman if he will make a statement on that point.

Mr. McCREARY. I thank my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) for the opportunity of probably making more plain anything which I may have omitted to say this afternoon. I have read the book called The Christian Brotherhood, of which I have a copy in my desk, but that does not explain the marriage ceremony. I have also had many conversations with Doukhobors on this question. I have questioned them very closely about their belief in regard to the after life, and I was convinced from what I learned from them that their ideas were orthodox, that they were in accord with the general ideas held by Protestant people. In regard to their marriage ceremony, as far as I could learn, when a young couple desire to marry the procedure is this: As you know they live in villages, and a great many live in the same house, the grandfather, the father and the grown-sons. There are probably twenty or thirty people living in one house. When a young couple desire to marry the question is studied very closely. Their temperament, their habits, the prospective husband's means of supporting his wife are all considered. The fathers and grandfathers are required to take some time along with the young couple to consider whether or not the couple are suitable in temperament and habits. When it has been finally decided that they are suited for one another, they have a celebration of their own, and all their friends from the village and the neighbouring villages assemble. One of their elders—they do not call them elders—but one of their leading men in the village is supposed to, and as a matter of fact, does perform a certain rite by which he marries the young man and woman. There is no great ceremony about it; a few words are uttered by which they become married. There has never been known to be but one divorce during all the time that this marriage ceremony has existed in Russia. In so far as I can learn these are about the facts. I questioned a great many people, amongst them young Tolstoi and Prince Hilkoff, and as far as I could learn that is the way the marriage ceremony is carried out. As far as leaving their wives is concerned, it is simply ridiculous. Such a thing could not exist for four years and not come under my notice or under the notice of the officials. Such a practice has not been noticed by me. In regard to the marriage ceremony, I think that all that is required is simply a change in the law by which they will be enabled to register their marriages in a little different manner from that in which the Mennonites do, and there will be no trouble whatever.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say what he has said, and I do not believe, if the customs of the Doukhobors are such as he states, and are otherwise of the character which has been described in this House, that there can be any particular objection to their becoming citizens of this country provided they can be properly assimilated. But, I do not understand how it happens that such a letter could have been written as seems to have been written by some one in England to one of the Doukhobors in Manitoba with respect to their marriage customs. I am taking the statement that such a letter was written from hon. gentlemen in this House, and from the public press, and if a letter of that kind was written it certainly points to a different conclusion from that which the hon. gentleman has stated. I would think that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), or the hon. Minister of the Interior, if the customs of these people are not perfectly plain in that respect, might very well satisfy the people of the country by making some definite inquiry into the matter. Surely it is easy enough to find out what their belief is in regard to these matters, and I for one would say that if such a custom as that of divorcing a wife without resorting to the courts prevails, they are not a class of people whom it is desirable to bring into this country. I do not suggest that such is the case, and I know that the hon. member for Selkirk, who has more knowledge of this subject than any other hon. gentleman in this House, says the contrary. Still, I do not understand how it happens that such a letter could have been written.

Mr. McCREARY. I never heard of this letter until I heard of it here to-day. Who wrote this letter, and to whom was it written ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know nothing more of it than that I saw it in the public press, and that I heard what was stated about it here to-day. I do not assert that such a letter was written, nor do I suppose that the hon. member for Selkirk can assert that it was not written. It is a matter that may be inquired into by the hon. Minister of the Interior. If any such letter was written, if any such beliefs are entertained, it would be better that it should be settled once and for all in this country so that public opinion should not be disturbed by these rumours. Public opinion would be quieted by a definite statement from the government or some commission, or officer appointed by the government for the purpose of inquiring into it.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) let me interject a remark which seems to be very important ? Is he aware that the Doukhobors were endorsed and recommended by the Quakers Association of England and of the United States, and does he not think that without knowing much of the religious ceremonies we may depend a great deal upon that endorsation ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not saying a single word against the Doukhobors.

What I am suggesting is, that when these rumours are in the public press, and when they are brought to the attention of the House, the government might very well make such inquiries as would place an authoritative statement before the people of Canada that no such practices had prevailed amongst these people. It is not desirable that public opinion should be influenced by rumours of that kind, which, according to the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary), are absolutely unfounded.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will understand that it was in that spirit I presented, as an offset against these rumours, the opinion of well known and most respectable organizations in the old country, in the United States and in Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) for the suggestion, and I think it affords additional reason why, if injustice is done to these people, they should be cleared in the minds of the population of this country from all such unjust aspersions. It is not conducive to the interests of Canada that these people should be living amongst us, and have their neighbours believe these things of them unjustly. I will not detain the House further with regard to that. I would suggest to the Minister of the Interior that we would like to have an explanation from him, when his estimates come on, as to what he proposes to do with respect to the expenditure for the purpose of inducing immigration from Ireland. The hon. gentleman did not touch at all what seemed to me to be the rather strong case put forward by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) —namely, that although this government has spent a very large sum of money in Ireland, and should have secured a fair share of the emigration from that country, yet we got only 765 people out of the 45,000 who emigrated from Ireland last year. I need not say that the Irish people are a very desirable class of immigrants for Canada. They form a very large and respectable and important element in my own constituency, and I venture to think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) cannot expend money to better advantage than in inducing immigration from Ireland to Canada. I may say in passing, that I think, upon the whole, that it might be as well, so far as possible, to direct the best energies of the government to immigration from those countries from which the population of Canada has already been recruited. I refer to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and France, as well as Scandinavia and Germany, countries which possess people of practically the same stock as those of the British Isles. I believe that if we can supply the needs of this country, so far as population is concerned, from those particular nations, it would be desirable to do so, and that the best efforts of the government should be directed to that end. It may not be a very desirable thing in the future that separate communities of Doukhobors and Galicians, and various other nationalities from Russia and from Central Europe, should be growing up in the middle of the North-west. It may be desirable, to some extent, to have these people, but it is far more desirable to have immigrants from the British Isles, from France and Germany and Scandinavia. I will not detain the House further, but probably when the immigration estimates come up, I will have a word or two to say further.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to the statement made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), that the question of the observance of the marriage law by the Doukhobor people was discussed by him, when immigration agent, with Mr. Haultain, the Attorney General of the North-west Territories, and that Mr. Haultain took the matter under advisement as to what course should be taken. The North-west Territories has a government of its own, and Mr. Haultain is a gentleman who is fully competent to deal with the matter. I think it would be very much better left under his charge than it would be in the Department of the Interior.

The PRIME MINISTER. At this hour of the morning, I presume the House is not inclined to go into Committee of Supply, and I rise for the purpose of asking leave to withdraw the motion. Before I do so—and if it were not so late I would do it at a greater length—I wish to point out to my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) that he brought the Fox Bay settlers into this debate without any rhyme or reason, and he took occasion to make statements which were not warranted in fact, and which cannot be substantiated.

Mr. WALLACE. What was that ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Everything that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) said. When he stated that these men ought to be the wards of the nation, I would like to know from him under what law can we make any citizen of Canada a ward of the nation ?

Mr. WALLACE. I said that while we were caressing the Doukhobors, surely we could have paid a little consideration to our own people, who were in distress.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows very well, that what he calls caressing the Doukhobors is done under the immigration law, and he also knows very well that there is no power under the law to take people from one province into another province of the Dominion. He ought to know, if he does not know, that the Fox Bay settlers have been treated with the greatest consideration by this government ; without our being bound to do anything at all, but simply because of consideration for them. He ought to know, if he does not know, that if they were located on a swamp, as is stated in the paper which he quoted as his authority——

Mr. WALLACE. I simply read the public press.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, and what was his object in reading such statements, to which he will not give the sanction of his authority ? Is it not to raise prejudices in the minds of the community ? He is not prepared at this moment, even after he quoted the newspaper, to endorse it with his authority, but he was ready to incorporate it in his speech, so as to create the impression which I have spoken of. Let me say that if the Fox Bay settlers were settled in a swamp, they were not so settled by the Canadian government, because they were settled upon lands selected by their own friends, who fixed on the vicinity of a lake in order that these settlers, having been seafaring men all their lives, they could still engage in fishing operations. It is too late to discuss the subject at length now, but, I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) that if it pleases him at any other time, I shall be very glad to discuss this subject with him.

Mr. WALLACE. May I be permitted a word in reply. I read the article which appeared yesterday in the Ottawa Evening Journal, and I do not think that every article to which a member feels it his duty to call the attention of the government has to be certified as to its accuracy by the member reading it. The government know the facts. The government know whether these men have been placed in such a locality under such conditions and surroundings as has been stated in that paper. The government should know whether it is true that these men are returning, and that twelve of them died of disease out of a total number of—I cannot say how many, but I think sixty or seventy at the outside.

The PRIME MINISTER. Sixty-one.

Mr. WALLACE. Twelve of them died out of a total of sixty-one. Are these statements true or are they not true ? The government should have information upon these facts, and I can tell the Prime Minister that when he characterized all my statements as untrue, I made no statement myself, except to say that the allegation appeared in a despatch from the city of Quebec to the Ottawa Evening Journal. I deemed it my duty to call the attention of the government to this matter if they had not already known it, and I would have expected that a reply would have been given, and not the wholesale denial which the right hon. the Prime Minister has made. The statement of the Prime Minister does not deny that twelve of these people died of disease during the year they were up there.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not the fault of the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If these large lambs in the North-west are the result of the government's paternal care, I suppose they ought to be able to exercise the same influence against disease amongst the Fox Bay settlers.

Mr. WALLACE. To find that twelve out of sixty-one of these settlers have lost their lives there, certainly does not recommend it as a healthy or proper place to send these poor people to.

Motion withdrawn.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 12.45 a.m., Saturday.
