Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to offer any lengthened remarks upon this subject; but the speech, well intentioned, I am sure, that we have listened to from the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) proves that this subject has not received from himself and from the members of this House, the attention as to the facts that it should have received after the notice that has been given of it by the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan). In fact, I may safely say that up to the last few days, when it was known through the press that this subject was to be taken up by the parliament of Canada, most of the people who knew anything at all about the subject thought that the coronation oath and the declaration that we have objection to were one and the same thing. The hon. member for Lanark has based his argument on a point which, I think, from his point of view, from the point of view of the majority of the British people and from the point of view of a large majority of the citizens of the empire, is a right one. It is that the sovereign of England should be a Protestant. As far as that is concerned, there is no Roman Catholic sitting in this House who is urging any difference of opinion on the matter. Had the hon. gentleman had time to study the subject, he would see that there is nothing in the Bill of Rights and that there is less in the present declaration to force the British King to be a Protestant. No Roman Catholic or Greek schismatic could take that declaration; but outside of these, any man belonging to any faith or creed which does not believe in transubstantiation or in prayers to the saints and the Holy Virgin could take it ; and, therefore, the object that the hon. gentleman has in view, that of guaranteeing to the people of England that their King shall be a Protestant, is not at all covered by this declaration. A Pagan or a Buddhist could take it; in fact, any man but a Roman Catholic or a Greek schismatic could take it. It is not a declaration of Protestantism; it is simply an anti-Catholic declaration ; and if to-day we are asking the parliament of Canada to urge the British parliament to repeal that declaration, it is not because it is a Protestant declaration. No, Sir, we are not asking for anything to be taken from the rights or privileges that belong to our Protestant fellow-citizens; we are asking that a useless, obsolete, anti-Catholic declaration should not be imposed upon the British King at a moment when his accession to the Throne should be synonomous with peace, liberty, freedom and equal rights to all of his loyal subjects, who are ready to uphold him in keeping this empire up to the glorious state that it has attained. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the coronation oath which is not at all affected by this motion, and to which we have no objection at all. He has stated that a Roman Catholic could take the coronation oath. No, Sir, he could not; because the King of England, by that oath, is obliged to declare that he will uphold the Protestant faith. No Roman Catholic would make such a declaration. Therefore, I think the guarantee which every fair-minded Protestant wants to be given to him is completely covered by the coronation oath enacted by the Bill of Rights of 1688. The declaration to which we object was not added by the Act of Settlement of 1689, for the purpose, as every one who has studied English history knows, to give a guarantee to the Protestant people at large ; but simply as a result of dynastic feuds which had been agitating England at that time. The only object of this declaration was to prevent the Pretender, who was a Catholic, from conquering the Throne of England; or, if he had succeeded in conquering the Throne, from ascending it. If he had succeeded in conquering the Throne, he would have been prevented by this declaration from accepting the Crown and acceding to power.

From the very point of view taken by the hon. gentleman which, as a matter of principle, may be the right view for him to take, the objection he is making to this motion is completely unfounded. It is unfounded legally and constitutionally. If the hon. gentleman looks upon this question in the broad way that should be taken by this House, he will see that his opposition is still more futile. As long as the parliament of England is there, the people of Great Britain and the people of the empire cannot have imposed on them a king they would not like to have. We all respect the sovereign of the empire; but we know that the King is there only as the crowning of that magnificent edifice that we call the British constitution ; and that the safeguard of the British constitution is the free parliament of Great Britain where the people is represented by men who can look after its interests, and prevent the accession of a successor to the King who might not be in accordance with the views of the majority of the people of Great Britain. The intention of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., as I understand it, and the intention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall) who seconded the motion, the intention of the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and the intention of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), are all the same after all; and we should all be united upon the matter. We come here as the representatives of a free British community, proud to be living under British institutions. We have fought even against British authority to acquire rights we thought we were entitled to. We are proud to live under these institutions, and we should be willing that the parliament of England should now sanction that magnificent work of freedom of thought, freedom of law, freedom of constitution which has been carried on in Great Britain from the beginning of this century. The first step in that direction was the abolition of the test oath for the free elected representatives of the people; then, it went on abolishing that same test oath for the civil servants of the Crown; and to-day, we ask that this test oath which is but an obsolete relic of days long past, should not be imposed upon the sovereign of that free people which is proud to call itself British.

The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has made an argument which I cannot accept. He said that my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) was lacking in logic inasmuch as that the conclusion of the resolution was not relevant to the preamble. I believe the contrary. It is only a detail, of course, and I am glad to say that I can agree on the whole with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax). But, after all, this detail has its importance. The preamble of the resolution says :

> That as a token of the civil and religious liberties and of the equality of rights guaranteed to all British subjects in the Canadian confederation as well as under the British constitution, the British sovereign should not be called to make any declaration offensive to the religious belief of any subject of the British Crown.

Sir, the purpose of this resolution is not to ask for a special favour for Roman Catholics ; the principle of this resolution declares in favour of the very basis of our British institutions, namely, that there shall be perfect equality before the law for all nationalities and for all religions. Therefore, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) followed the advice of the leader of the opposition, he would simply ask that that part of the declaration which is offensive to Roman Catholics should be repealed. As a matter of fact, I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) who says that if you take out that which is offensive you take out nearly the whole of it. But this is not the main point. Should we follow the advice of the hon. leader of the opposition and ask to amend that declaration by merely taking out what is offensive to Catholics, we would not fulfil the principle of this preamble ; because this preamble asks on broad lines that the British King should be acknowledged by Catholics and Protestants, by non-believers and believers, as their King. The King of Great Britain should not be forced, in this new century, to make any declaration of the kind he is now obliged to make. I do not say that the King of England should not make any profession of his faith. The coronation oath is there for him to promise to uphold the faith of the majority of his subjects ; but he should not be bound to further take this declaration at the opening of the first parliament ; a declaration which I will not say is insulting only to his Roman Catholic subjects ; but offensive also to all the true Protestant British subjects who believe in the same equality and in the same acknowledgment of equal rights and freedom for all His Majesty's subjects.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not devote any time to the speech of the hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace). I shall reply to that speech and to that gentleman in the words that Mr. Gladstone used toward a certain noisy member of the House who opposed him when he moved the second reading of the Disabilities Removal Bill in 1891. Mr. Gladstone, pointing at the man, said : I am not surprised, because I have always recognized that gentleman 'as the prop and pillar of everything that deserved to be overthrown and removed.' So I may designate the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). He has thought proper to give us a course on comparative religions, contradicting the very words of his opening remarks when he said that this is not the place to discuss religious matters. With these words, and with these words only uttered by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) do I agree. If this were only a question of religion ; if this were not a question affecting the rights of all British subjects ; if this were not a question based upon the very spirit of British institutions, we would have no business to bring it here.

I fully agree with the right hon. the Prime Minister and with the other hon. gentlemen who have spoken in favour of the resolution when they said that as British subjects we have a right to concern ourselves with everything that is in the interest of the empire at large. On a previous occasion, when I found myself obliged to differ from the almost unanimous opinion of this House on matters of Imperial concern, I clearly stated that every time when I believe that a large portion, or any portion of our fellow-citizens of the empire were affected in their rights, I was in favour of voting in this parliament for an expression of sentiment that might be favourable to that class of our fellow-citizens. But, I go further : I say that as Canadians, as representatives of the Canadian people, as members of the Canadian parliament, this is a matter of direct interest to us. What is the constitution of our country ? The constitution of our country is an Act of the British parliament. We cannot touch the slightest portion of the British North America Act without proceeding along the same lines as the mover of this resolution has resorted to. Suppose we wanted to amend the constitution of our Senate, or the power of our executive, or the relations between the provinces and the federal government, the only procedure which we could follow would be to vote an address to the King of England asking the parliament of Great Britain to amend our constitution. Article 9 of the British North America Act says :

> The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to be continued and vested in the Queen.

Sir, the King of England is for us not only the King of England, not only the head of the British Empire, but he is the sovereign of Canada. He forms part of our executive system ; he forms as much a part of our constitutional system as does this very House of Commons and the Senate. Therefore, in voting for this resolution I do not vote only on sentimental grounds, I do not vote only as a Roman Catholic ; but I vote as one of the representatives of the Canadian people in the Canadian parliament. And I am following the very procedure which the British North America Act obliges me to follow, if in that same capacity, I wished the Imperial parliament to amend our constitution in any other respect. Therefore, finding that the head of our government, that the chief of our Canadian executive is bound by a law which I am sure he detests himself ; by a law over which he has no power and over which we have no power—to make on the day of his coronation a declaration offensive to the dearest feelings of 40 per cent of the Canadian people, I say that it is our duty to ask, and to ask now, that the British parliament, which is the proper authority to do so, should amend the Act of Settlement and abolish that declaration. At the opening of this new century, in the first year of the reign of Edward VII., in this year when we have mourned together, Catholics as well as Protestants, French Canadians as well as English Canadians, the deplorable loss of that noble and kind-hearted woman who for sixty-four years reigned so gloriously over Canada as well as the empire at large ; I say that we are simply doing our duty to the people of Canada and to the King of England in asking that the parliament of Great Britain, which has the sole legislative control in the matter, should free for ever our future kings from making this declaration, and thus enable the sovereign to be considered not only as the king of a certain portion of his subjects, but as the king of all his subjects in this vast empire.

As the Prime Minister said this afternoon, if that declaration is not to be abolished, certainly the Roman Catholic subjects of His Majesty will not be more disloyal to him. But I ask all fair-minded men of this House : Do you think the loyalty of the Roman Catholic Canadians as well as the Roman Catholic British, that loyalty which has proved itself not only on the battlefield, but in every way in which a man can give to his nation and his sovereign the best of his efforts and abilities—do you think that loyalty which has been so staunch and so fully acknowledged by everybody, which cannot now be under the suspicion which dynastic feuds and rivalries of former times might cast upon it—do you think that loyalty should be rewarded by a declaration so offensive that, if it attacked any of the Protestant creeds of this Dominion, I myself would be proud to stand with those who would demand its repeal, and ask that the Protestant section of the people should be put upon the same footing as the rest. Sir, let us all be equal in Canada, let us all be equal in Great Britain ; and let us vote unanimously, if possible, for a resolution asking, not that the King of England should lose any of his privileges, not that the Protestant section of this country should lose any of its rights, but that the King of England should be more and more respected and loved by all his faithful subjects ; and it will be a great work which we shall have performed—a work which will be well received on the other side of the Atlantic by all the men who wish for the real welfare of the empire at large.

Hon. Wm. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Hon. gentlemen need not be alarmed, as I am not going to make a speech—I never do. I rise merely to throw out a suggestion. The First Minister remarked in a very gentle manner that he did not approve of the wording of the resolution, and the same idea has been conveyed to the House by the leader of the opposition—and I must do that hon. gentleman the justice of saying that his speech has been very acceptable to the supporters of the government. He has approached the subject with calmness, and with a judicial mind, and he has only suggested that the wording of the resolution should be changed. In that respect he and the leader of the government agree. Now, would it not be well for the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) to take both of these gentlemen into his confidence, and amend the wording of his resolution in such a manner as to make it acceptable to the House ? That is a suggestion which I throw out in a spirit of fairness, which I hope will commend it to the House.

I was going to say to the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) that I sympathize with him in having learned the Shorter Catechism in his younger days ; but I have the advantage of him in that respect—I had to learn it in two languages. Though my memory is not now as good as it was then, I can repeat considerable of it in those languages to-day. And let me say to the House, that no man will ever be the worse for having read and studied the Shorter Catechism. The teaching of the Shorter Catechism and the Confession of Faith has made Scotland and Scotchmen what they are.

Mr. EDWARDS. And some oatmeal.

Hon. Mr. ROSS. Yes, and the oatmeal has now become so general that even Englishmen and Frenchmen use it. Now, a word about the Confession of Faith. Do not be alarmed, because I am not going to discuss religious subjects. But there is a general impression that the Confession of Faith was prepared by Scotchmen. It took seven years of the best minds and the most eminent religious men in England and Ireland and Scotland to prepare the Confession of Faith. They sat in Jerusalem Chambers for seven years, and they sat there by Act of parliament, and parliament paid them.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is why they sat so long.

Hon. Mr. ROSS. Of the 115 men who formed that body, only eight were from Scotland. But Scotland had the sense to adopt the Act of Uniformity, which was passed at that time, and to adhere to it, and it has adhered to it till this day.

Now, I think that the minds of both Protestants and Catholics have undergone quite a change, and that the feelings and sentiments we entertain towards each other have improved and are improving all the time. I used to read of the time when the idea amongst Catholics was that there was no salvation for Protestants ; but I hope there is not a Catholic in this House who is so narrow-minded, and I am sure there is not a Protestant in this House but believes that a large number of devout Catholics will find their way to heaven, though perhaps not in such an expeditious manner as the Presbyterians do. I do not think I have heard a story in this House since I came here. There was a certain Presbyterian in the county of Pictou to whom a priest of the district was expressing his sympathy on the occasion of the death of his sister. The good Presbyterian said, 'I have no doubt but she went to heaven, because she was a good woman.' Said the priest, 'When did she die ?' The answer was, 'On the 20th of May.' 'Well,' said the priest, 'if she gets there by Christmas, she will do very well.' As I said when I began, I am not going to make a speech ; I have never attempted to do so, because I do not know how. But I throw out the suggestion which I have made, because possibly a great deal of this debate might be dispensed with if the leader of the government, the leader of the opposition, and the mover of the resolution would meet together, and make a few gentle changes in the resolution. It is for the hon. member for Victoria to say whether this suggestion is accepted.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria).

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I have listened, Sir, with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, and I really believe that the suggestion he has made is one that might lead to any easy solution of the question which is now before the House. I do not wish to enter into any lengthy discussion of this question.

I was one of those who doubted the propriety of bringing such a delicate matter before this House, because, of course, this is essentially a political assembly, and although, since I have had a seat in this House, I have found evinced on all sides a most tolerant disposition, we know that questions of this kind, almost in spite of ourselves, drift into political acrimony, from which it is sometimes difficult to rescue them. I feel the less disposed to take up any of the time of the House, because the remarks made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition were of such a nature that, to me, whom this question interests in a particular manner, it seems impossible either to take one word from the remarks he has made or add anything to them. It is extremely satisfactory to me—and I think it must be to every member of this House—that a question of this kind should have been treated by the right hon. leader of the government, not as a Catholic, not as a Protestant, but as a man who understands and appreciates the liberties we enjoy, and it is doubly satisfactory to me that that question should have been so ably treated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition.

Addressing myself, therefore, just to one point or two, I wish to call the attention of the House to the question of the form of this petition, because I have heard doubts expressed as to whether we could touch this question even in the manner in which it has been raised by the hon. member for Victoria. Upon that point let me remind this House that this resolution is in the form of a petition, and that it is one of the most inalienable rights of British subjects all over the world to petition the King upon all manner of subjects, without any restriction whatever. When we come to pass resolutions, when we come to advise the Crown and express our opinions on matters which are beyond the purview of this legislature, we may be infringing upon ground which is not ours. But the right to petition is absolutely unrestricted. Long before we obtained the great charter of our rights in 1215, it existed under the Saxon kings, it was reaffirmed, not only in Magna Charta, but in the thirty odd affirmations of that charter, it had been insisted upon since strenuously during the centuries of struggle of British subjects for the revendication of those rights they enjoy to-day, and it is to-day incontrovertible. We can petition the King of England upon any and every subject. That right is not restricted, except in this respect that it is restricted to British subjects. So jealous are we of that right that no alien has the right to petition the King of England, except when he happens to be on British soil. Therefore, the objection that we are by this resolution touching a subject upon which we have no jurisdiction is, to my mind, well founded.

As to the question whether the subject is one which interests us or not, that has been answered by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. But let me remind the House, as a student of constitutional law, that there is a contract. We are petitioning in reality with regard to a contract, and that contract was formed by the oath of allegiance which every British subject is supposed to take. That oath is responded to by the oath of the sovereign, and from the oath of the sovereign, corresponding with the oath of allegiance which every British subject is supposed to take and may be obliged to take, arises the contract, which is one of service on the part of the subject and of protection on the part of the sovereign. Is it not just, under those circumstances, that the subject, who has become a party to that contract, should be allowed to make representations to the King upon the nature of the obligation which the King takes at the time of his coronation. It seems to me that this is essentially a subject upon which any subject may make a petition to the Crown. And that right is not only extended to British subjects, but belongs to every organization throughout the British Empire. Great legislative bodies, municipal corporations, in fact every corporation, as well as every British subject throughout the empire, has the inalienable right of petitioning the sovereign.

I shall not go at any length into the question of fact, as at present the only inhabitant of the British Empire who remains bound by the provisions of the test oath, passed in the reign of Charles II. is the sovereign himself. The great progress of liberty, the progress of enlightenment, of religious tolerance, has brought us to this stage fortunately—and it is by no means the last stage—at the opening of this great century, that all creeds are tolerated. We have had the Act of 1829 and the Act of 1858, and to-day, as a matter of fact, the only person bound by the provisions of the test oath of Charles II., enacted at a time when religious passions were excited to an inordinate degree, when the fury of religious strife was so great—the only person bound by that statute is the sovereign himself; and it seems to me only right and proper that he should be freed from the hard and harsh exactions of that statute.

In the remarks of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), there was a suggestion to which I would invite the attention of all the members of this House who belong to the legal profession. The concluding part of the resolution of my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B., (Hon. Mr. Costigan), my hon. friend from Halifax suggested should be modified, and I think his suggestion is an important one for those who have at heart—as I think many members of this House, irrespective of creed, have—the success of the step which this House is now taking. That suggestion was that we should modify the concluding portion of the motion in this sense—that we should suggest to the Crown, to whom this petition is to be addressed, that the declaration should be modified.

Now, I speak in the hearing of the Solicitor General and of other members of this House who have given some attention to the study of constitutional law, and every one who has studied our constitution knows that there are two things absolutely required of a British sovereign before he can rule his people—he must take an oath, and he must make a declaration. The coronation ceremony as a matter of fact is an unnecesary ceremony; the sovereign can exercise kingly power without a coronation. A number of British sovereigns who have ascended the Throne during times of civil war, and even at other times, have exercised their kingly power without any coronation. The coronation is a mere relic of the old system, which obtained in England in Saxon times, and has been handed down through centuries, of presenting the King to the people and crowning him, so that there should be no doubt as to his title. But it is a different thing when you come to the power of ruling the subject. The King must take the oath provided by law, and he must make the declaration to the effect that he is in communion with the Established Church of England——

Mr. MACLEAN. And that he is not a Catholic.

Mr. MONK. No, it is not necesasry, according to the constitutional writers—and, if I mistake not, they are all unanimous on that point—that he should repudiate any particular doctrine. But I am speaking of the commentators; and it is necessary that he should not only take the oath, but declare himself in communion with the Established Church of England. And the reason for that is not far to seek; because the Bill of Rights of 1689, and the Act of Settlement of 1701, both, not only from specific portions of the Act, but from the whole text, require that the sovereign of England should belong to the Established Church of England.

Now, what my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan) has sought to obtain by his motion—and what I for one, as professing the Catholic faith desire—is that from that declaration should be eliminated these words which, to quote the language of the Prime Minister of England are 'so deplorable.' And I hope and believe it is the desire of the great majority of the House. But we must not go too far, and that is why I think there is wisdom in the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden). We must not go to the length of suggesting in our petition, which in other respects is so well founded, that the declaration should be suppressed altogether. We may not be met with that favour which, I need not say, we have a right to expect from the successor of a sovereign who, during such a long, and such a glorious reign manifested so continuously her disposition of good-will toward all those who professed the Roman Catholic faith. Therefore, I say, lest it should be noted on the other side when our petition reaches there that it has the defect of going beyond what is really required, we should adopt the suggestion that has been made. It is a suggestion which does not require, it seems to me, much negotiation among us to enable us to come to some agreement upon it. We should simply limit our petition to the object we desire to attain, that is to the elimination from the declaration of these expressions, for, Sir, we cannot reasonably ask, at the present moment, that the declaration should be suppressed altogether. Therefore, I suggest to my hon. friend from Victoria, that he should take the suggestion into consideration, because I think it is a very important one. It is possible—is it not?—that when this petition, in its present form, is received in England, the people may ask : Why is it that these petitioners do not ask for the elimination of the objectionable parts ; do not they know that, under the circumstances, it is necessary that the sovereign make a declaration of some kind ? I very earnestly suggest to the right hon. leader of the government to take the suggestion into consideration. It has been said by some that this is not the proper time to make this petition. I differ entirely from that view. Speaking as a member from the province of Quebec, and as one conversant with public opinion of that province, I know that during the long reign of the late Queen, and particularly during the last thirty years of that reign, nobody would have thought it proper or delicate to have moved in this direction. We in our province all knew what sentiments of friendliness and tolerance the late Queen entertained towards all those who professed the Catholic religion. And she was a woman ; and I venture to say, with absolute certainty that, among French Canadians there would have been a great reluctance to move in this question while that great and good woman lived. But it is different now ; and I think the time is opportune. We have now reigning a man whom we have learned to know as one of most tolerant disposition. He has just ascended the Throne, and has made the declaration. It is a declaration which, under the law, must be made either at the first sitting of parliament before the House of Lords or at the coronation. He made that declaration, as I think he was bound to do, at the opening of the first session of parliament in the presence of the Lords. It seems to me that now is the best time, for the question to be mooted at the moment when everybody hopes that the life of His Gracious Majesty may long be spared. It seems to me that the King having just made that declaration, and the question being agitated in England, and there having been, on the part of men known as most loyal subjects of the empire, a protest in regard to that declaration, it is a matter which we can treat as being ripe for consideration. It has been said by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), that some parties have endeavoured to make political capital out of this question. I am glad to say that so far as I have assisted in the debates in this House on this question, I do not find this disposition—unless indeed the hon. member for Westmoreland alluded to the remarks which may have fallen from my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace), which I had not the advantage of hearing. But, Sir, the physical resemblance between my hon. friend from Westmoreland and my hon. friend from West York is so great that my hon. friend from York may have deemed it necessary to accentuate the difference between them. In the same way I would say to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), that he seems to have spoken with great heat on this subject, anticipating, no doubt, that it would give rise to very serious divergences of political opinion. I am glad beyond expression that his anticipations, if any such existed, have not been realized. I trust that in the few remarks that I have made, I have not expressed myself with too much heat. I cannot claim to be an extremely religious man.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, no.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps I am as good as the right hon. gentleman.

The PRIME MINISTER. Far better, I hope.

Mr. MONK. Well, Sir, I believe there is a good place where members will go who have been obliged to hear some of the speeches made in this House, and I believe there is a bad place where members will go who speak too long. But I am, to this extent at any rate, religious, that I have preserved the principles of charity which were instilled into me in my youth ; and whatever may be the vote which members of this House may think it necessary to give upon this question, I can assure them that the feelings I entertain for them will continue to be in the future as they have always existed in the past.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I feel it incumbent upon me as a member coming from the central part of the province of Ontario to make a few remarks upon this important question. When I entered this House, among the first expressions I heard was a statement coming from the hon. member (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure), who seconded the address in this House, that he hoped this parliament would be a parliament of peacemakers. But when, the other day, I heard the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan) state that he proposed to introduce into parliament a question which, in my opinion, ought never to have been introduced here, I could not but contrast his action with the words to which I have just referred. That hon. gentleman has had a long parliamentary experience, the people of Canada have been very kind to him in the past, he has had the honour of representing a constituency for a great many years in this House, and I should have expected better things from him than to introduce on the floor of this House a question of a class which will inevitably create discord among the people of Canada. I have listened with great interest to the remarks that have fallen from every hon. gentleman who has addressed the House, and especially those which were expressed by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). Just now I am reminded that it is not so long ago when that hon. gentleman rose in this House and resigned his seat because Canada was helping Great Britain to fight her battles. I was amazed that that gentleman should be selected to address the House upon this occasion, asking that an oath that does not interest the people of Canada should be complained of by the people of Canada. I thought such a proposition ought to have come from some hon. member who had proved himself in the past a defender of British interests.

Mr. BRITTON. What does the hon. gentleman mean by saying that the hon. member for Labelle has been selected ?

Mr. BLAIN. I say I listened with a great deal of interest to all the addresses that have been made upon this question today, I have listened with especial interest to the remarks so carefully prepared and well expressed by the hon. premier. I was anxious that, since it had been decided to introduce this question into parliament, there should come from the First Minister some expression of justification, that he should point out wherein some humble subject of His Majesty in Canada was suffering because the King of England had taken that oath. I am one of those who believe in British institutions. I am one of those who do not think it necessary, as some hon. gentlemen do, to tell just what religion and what church they belong to. I believe it is the duty of Canadian representatives to deal with questions that interest the Canadian people, and not go across the Atlantic to discover and discuss questions that do not interest us. When I was nominated for this parliament I made a promise that when questions came up here that had no right to be dealt with by the Canadian parliament, I should stand up in my place and speak against them and vote against them, and I shall do so on this occasion. If any representative of the Canadian people on coming to this parliament had been required to take an oath to which he felt he could not subscribe in his capacity as representative, then I would say that it was the duty of parliament to look into that question and come to his relief. But I find that there is nothing in the oath that any member of this parliament has not been willing to take when he took his seat in this House.

Then, I say, that so far as this parliament is concerned, we have no complaint to make. We ought not to cross the Atlantic to find trouble to bring into this country at the present stage in our history. Though I am not a very old man I have taken some interest in public questions, and the only questions that have caused trouble in our county of Peel, the only questions that have rent homes and set the people one against another have been questions introduced into this parliament with which we had nothing to do, and which ought never to have been introduced here. In speaking as I do, I represent more than the Liberal-Conservative party in the county of Peel, I am expressing the sentiments and feelings of a very large majority of the people who voted against me at the last election on November 7. The Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition have said that this is not a political question and ought not to be treated as such. If that is the case, then I think the Conservative party in this House should have been consulted upon this question before it was introduced. I have listened to the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) pointing out what was objectionable in the declaration. He said that political feeling would be aroused in this question and would extend until it was settled. In my opinion, it is a question that will take some time to die out, a question that ought not to have been introduced here, particularly in the commencement of the twentieth century. The hon. member for Westmoreland spoke about empire building. Have the people of Canada, have the people of the British Empire, suffered because Queen Victoria took the declaration which has been referred to ; no, they have not. The Liberal-Conservative party and the Reform party in Canada have been engaged during the past few months pointing to the growth and advancement of this Canada of ours and of the great British Empire ; but I have never heard it suggested before that any Canadian had been injured in either person or estate because Queen Victoria, when she ascended the Throne, took the declaration that is now under discussion.

I have listened to the discussion of other troublesome questions, and in the history of parliament I have never heard of this question before. I was glad to hear the hon. member from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) say that the people of Canada did not know that there was any difference between the oath and the declaration. The declaration has not interfered with the people of Quebec, and that it has not interfered with the people of Canada, either in their homes, or the state, or the church, at any time in the history of the country. I have already said, and I repeat, that if there is anything that could be introduced into the parliament of this country that would interfere with empire building, it is just such a question as we are now discussing this evening. I say it is a time, in my humble opinion, commencing this new parliament, and commencing a new century when a question of this kind should not be introduced, and I am hoping that the young members of this House of parliament, whether they are Reform or Conservative, whether they support the government or the opposition, will be Canadian enough to say to the people of Canada that they will vote against this motion, and against every other question that ought not to be discussed in parliament. In respect to the introduction of the motion, I said a word, and I want to say something further upon the question. When it was allowed to be introduced into this parliament it was announced that it was not a political question. If so, there should have been some other form of introducing it rather than that it should have taken the form which by the rules of this House precludes any amendment being made by which the hon. members on this or the other side of the House are compelled to vote for or against it. I was amazed when the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) rose in his place, and when the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) rose in his place, and suggested that some changes should be made, when the Prime Minister said further that had he been preparing the motion he would have used some other words. Why did not the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., rise to his feet and say that he was willing to take the House into his confidence and make certain changes. I am sorry that I have spoken so long, but I want to put myself on record on this question as a Canadian representative, and I am here to say that I will vote against the motion. I am not going even to investigate the wording of the motion very closely. It is not my business as a representative of the people. It is my duty as a representative of the people to deal with questions that will help the Canadian people, and if the hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec, who, I suppose, will be most anxious that this resolution should pass, will come down with any Canadian resolution, if they can point out that the Roman Catholic people of the province of Quebec, or any class of the people, Presbyterians, members of the Church of England, or of any other class or sect in this country suffer by such oaths and declarations, that they interfere with their progress, whether they be Protestant or Roman Catholic, I will give that question my careful consideration, and if I find that Roman Catholics are being interfered with by any law that has been placed on the statute-book by the Canadian parliament, I will stand up in my place and vote that that should be taken away in order that every class should have their rights, and in order that we may develop the great country in which we live. These are my opinions upon the question. I am amazed, I repeat, that the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion would not stand up in his place and say: I am willing to consider a change if others differ from me. But, he says : 'No,' and he is defended on the other side of the House by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). They will accept no suggestion, but will maintain the resolution as it is. I feel it incumbent upon me as a man interested in all classes of the people, to stand up on the floor of this House and say that I will vote against this motion, because it should never have been introduced into the parliament of this country.

Mr. ROBERT A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). Mr. Speaker, I desire on this occasion just to say a very few words. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks that fell from the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), from the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and other hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this question. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. I think it would have been better if the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) had framed his resolution in a little different language. I may say that I am in sympathy with the terms of the resolution, but I think the latter part of it is not couched in the language which will accomplish what is desired by the parties who are interested in the resolution. My reason for that is this ; in looking at the Act, 2 William and Mary, which requires the declaration to be taken, and in looking at the Act for establishing the coronation oath, I observe that they are two separate and distinct Acts. The Act for establishing the coronation oath is one thing, while the Act in regard to the Bill of Rights is another thing. It is an Act declaring the rights and liberties of the subjects and the succession of the Crown. In that Act it is imperative that our sovereign should take the declaration. My view of that resolution is that the latter part of it should have been put in such a manner, I might say, as suggested by one of the leading English journalists, that it should be amended, but that there should still be a declaration taken by the sovereign as to the Protestant faith. In making that reference I quote from the paper which the hon. member for Victoria quoted from, the Guardian, which I believe is one of the leading Protestant papers in England. If I might be permitted, I will just read a short extract from this paper :

We are thankful indeed to know that this declaration does not, and never has, formed any part of the solemn and historic coronation service of our English sovereigns. It is a careless blunder, into which several of our contemporaries of the secular press have recently fallen, to assert the contrary. The facts are these. The declaration formed part of the Act of 1677, which the necessities of the times seemed then to justify, for 'the more effectual preserving the King's person and government, by disabling Papists from sitting in either House of parliament.' It had to be subscribed and audibly repeated by every member of each House before he could take his seat. The experience the country went through under James II. provoked further aggressive action, and in 1689 (1 Will. and Mary, sess. ii., c. 2) it was enacted in order to debar Papists from the Crown, that——

Then follows a citation from the statute, and the editorial continues :

However unreasonable and objectionable in its terms the declaration may be, it is satisfactory to know that it cannot, under any circumstances, with the long-established custom of deferring the coronation, be uttered in Westminster Abbey. But it will be highly unfortunate if the necessary legal steps cannot at once be taken to relieve Edward VII. from the necessity of uttering, even in Westminster Palace, words which cannot but be singularly offensive to millions of his subjects, not only in the United Kingdom, but throughout his great dominions across the sea. Christian charity has made great strides in two and a half centuries, and if this declaration of the time of Charles II. has long ago become too offensive to be used by any of His Majesty's subjects, why is the studied insult of calling all his Roman Catholic subjects idolaters to be maintained as a part of the King's accession duties? A quiet and dignified declaration of personal loyalty to the Church of England is all that is necessary. If unhappily the law officers of the Crown see no way out of the difficulty in the short interval before the King meets his first parliament, the deliberate use of such a string of offensive terms cannot fail to produce mischevious heartburnings and dangerous misunderstandings. International notice is nowadays far more keenly awake to a royal declaration than it was in the earlier times of the Hanoverian dynasty. We shall be heartily sorry if Edward VII. is obliged to use words which will brand the King of Portugal, the King of the Belgians and many others of the royal mourners by the good Queen's grave as superstitious idolaters.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better if the latter part of this resolution were in different form. I read in the resolution that the Act is to be amended. In what way ? By wiping out in its entirety this declaration ? It does seem to me, Sir, that the hon. the leader of the opposition, together with some hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, ought to be able to get together and so frame that resolution that it would accomplish the purpose which the mover (Hon. Mr. Costigan) has in view, and at the same time be more effective than in its present form.

I do not look upon this question, Mr. Speaker, as either a national question or as a religious question. It seems to me that it is a simple request for simple justice. Now that we are on the threshold of the twentieth century and looking back at the immense progress which has been made in the past century in religious liberty, I believe that we should do all in our power to obtain for that large population of Roman Catholics who are loyal subjects of His Majesty the King, relief from that declaration which certainly is offensive to them. I read in a recent article by Mr. Goldwin Smith, that very able and very distinguished gentleman, the following words :—

The coronation declaration and oath of the King of England, settled in 1688, is a curious historical fossil of the revolutionary period. The King is made solemnly to repudiate the doctrine of transubstantiation, and to declare that the invocation and adoration of the Virgin and saints are idolatrous and superstitious. There can be no doubt that this formulary is not only obsolete but extremely offensive and insulting to all the millions of Roman Catholics who are numbered among His Majesty's subjects. There can hardly be any doubt that it will be abolished by parliament with the hearty concurrence of all right-minded and sensible men. Its counterpart has already been abolished in the admission of officers of state.

We have only to look back to the legislation of the past to find a precedent for future legislation, which will remove the last vestige of offensive references to the religions of any class of His Majesty's subjects. Look at the Emancipation Act of 1829. Previous to that year every member of the British House of Commons had to subscribe to identically the same declaration as the sovereign now has to take, and by the Act of 1829, known as the Roman Catholic Relief Act, relief was given to our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects. That Act provided a single form of oath acceptable to Roman Catholics and available to them only ; and it abolished the declaration against transubstantiation. That legislation has been followed up by other relieving Acts. For instance, an Act was passed to relieve the Jews who were opposed to the form of oath required of them. I do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to take up any further time in the discussion of this subject, as it has been so ably and so thoroughly dealt with by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me. I feel satisfied of this : that even although I do not approve exactly of the nature of the language of the motion, and while I should desire that the latter part of that motion should be amended yet as the resolution does not in any way effect the coronation oath, and does not in any way ask for the abolition of the oath by the sovereign to maintain the Protestant religion by law established, and as there is no attempt to interfere with the provision of the Bill of Rights which indicated that the sovereign must be a Protestant; it is evident to my mind that the repeal or the amendment of that declaration against transubstantiation can in no way prejudicially affect either the Protestant religion or the succession to the British Crown. When we look back in the history of our country to the many bitter fights which arose in settling principles which are now firmly established in this Dominion, every true Canadian must feel a degree of sorrow when he sees any question come before the people of Canada which is of such a controversial nature that it causes bitter discussion. I think we should approach a question of this sort in a calm, judicial manner, and discuss it apart from any religious feeling or bigotry. There is no room in Canada for a bigot. These matters should be discussed entirely on their merits, and it seems to me that the Roman Catholic population of Canada, who I understand constitute nearly 40 per cent of the total population, are perfectly justified in sending this petition to the mother land, and asking that any objectionable clauses in this declaration should be amended.

There has been a great deal said here on the question of church. Like the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I may never have been accused of being over-religious. What I believe is that there is one church only, the church of God, and no body of men, be they called a church or a denomination, have an absolute possession or control of the narrow way, and no race has a monopoly of all the virtues, leaving to the others all the vices. We should take a broad view of questions of this sort; and feeling in that way, I intend to support this motion, although I would have much preferred that the latter part of it had been couched in different language. I picked up to-day one of our leading Canadian papers, a Tory paper, and I may be pardoned if I refer to an article in that paper dealing with this matter. After reciting the declaration, it says:

> The phraseology is the best evidence, perhaps, of the fears that caused the thing to be thought necessary, fears that now, happily, have little existence and less cause. There have been many changes since the Stuarts' time. Catholic countries are now not a menace to those of Protestant faith. The oath is one of the two remnants of much legislation, the most of which time and events have outworn. As the danger from Roman Catholic power outside declined, the restrictions against Roman Catholics in England were removed, till there is only one office, and that a semi-ecclesiastical one, in the service of the state, which a Roman Catholic has not the right to fill, or has not filled. The oath might well be subjected to the revision that has improved the laws in other respects. The Roman Catholic peers, and there are no more loyal men in the empire, have put on record their views in a dignified protest. Accepting the declaration of the Lord Chancellor, that the oath cannot be changed but by Act of parliament, they said:—
> 'We desire to impress upon your lordship that the expressions used in this declaration made it difficult and painful for Catholic peers to attend to-day in the House of Lords, in order to discharge their official or public duties, and that these expressions cannot but cause the deepest pain to millions of subjects of His Majesty in all parts of the empire, who are as loyal and devoted to the Crown and person as any other in his dominions.'
> It is a reasonable requirement of the law that the sovereign of Great Britain shall be a Protestant, like the great majority of his Christian subjects. It is equally reasonable, though, that in the obligations the sovereign is required to take on assuming his duties, there shall be nothing needlessly offensive to his other Christian, or non-Christian, people. There is reason to think that this is so fairly recognized that the common sense of parliament will bring about the change that the simple statement of the case suggests.

I believe the parliament of England will bring about that change, and I see no reason why the Dominion of Canada, the premier colony of Great Britain, has not the right to send forward this petition, although, as I have already stated, I would have preferred that the latter part of the motion had been couched in different language.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I would like in the first place to appeal to the right hon. First Minister to adjourn this debate now. There ought certainly be a conference; it is in the interest of the country that there should be one; and it will prevent a great deal of discord if the suggestion thrown out by the hon. member from Victoria, N.S. (Mr. Ross) is accepted. Even if we have to adjourn this debate now and do not go into Supply, it will be worth the time we may lose to arrive at a right conclusion. There are serious constitutional objections to the line on which we are proceeding; and, while my sympathy is altogether with the object the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) has in view, I think it is in the interest of the country that this little conference should take place before we come to a conclusion, and I ask the First Minister if he cannot concede that point and adjourn the debate.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are several hon. members who wish and are ready to speak on this question, and I think we should give them the privilege of speaking.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will you allow the debate to go over to-night?

The PRIME MINISTER. We shall see what time it takes.

Mr. MACLEAN. While, as I said a few moments ago, I am in sympathy with the object of the hon. gentleman who proposed this resolution has in view, I substantially agree with what was said by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). If I read history aright, the meaning of that declaration is that the people of England in those days required the sovereign to abjure the Roman Catholic faith. That was the first requisite. Subsequently, they required of him an oath that he would maintain the Protestant religion. Now, if we ask the people of England to abandon that first declaration, namely, that the sovereign must abjure the Catholic religion, our petition will not be received, because it will ask the people of England to destroy something which they consider one of the bulwarks of the constitution. We must not disguise from ourselves that fact, that the people required the sovereign to abjure the Catholic faith by having him deny the two essential doctrines of that faith. If we wish to advocate what is laid down in the resolution, that a Catholic may be the sovereign of England, we can vote for the resolution as it stands ; but the constitutional objection is before us, and our petition will be dismissed unless we put it on right lines.

As I have said, I am in sympathy with the motion. Being one who has always favoured equal rights in this country, I think nothing should be said which would be unnecessarily offensive to the religious views of Catholics ; and I am ready to support some measure which will lead to the end we have in view. But if we think we can go to the King and parliament of England and ask them to change something which is an essential of the constitution, we shall make a mistake, and, in the common phrase of the day, we shall be turned down. Hon. gentlemen may argue that a Catholic ought to be qualified to be the sovereign of England. That may be maintained, and I am not going to deny it ; but the people of England will not be prepared to accept that proposition, and what we ought to ask is that the sovereign should be able to declare that he is not a believer in the Catholic faith, and declare it in a way that will not be offensive to Catholics. He ought to be able to swear that he will maintain the Protestant religion. But, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart), you are striking out the essential thing that the people of those days intended to maintain, and which, I believe, the great bulk of Englishmen wish to maintain to-day. There is no use disguising the fact that what they had in view was that the sovereign himself should abjure the Catholic religion, and what we ought to ask to-day is that he should abjure it in some way not offensive to Roman Catholics. If that can be done, I am perfectly in sympathy with the object of the hon. gentleman, and I appeal to him to find some way of doing it. I appeal to him to confer with the right hon. the leader of the government and the leader on our side, and try and find out a way, a constitutional way, of accomplishing his object. That is all I have to say, but I think I am touching an essential question. There are lawyers on the other side who are members of the government, and I can see clearly, from the trend of the discussion, that they are disturbed as regards the constitutional aspect of the resolution we are asked to adopt. I would then suggest that we should adjourn the debate and see if we cannot devise a resolution that will commend itself to the House, and be likely to receive favourable consideration on the other side. By the present motion we are asking the British parliament or the King to change something that the English people, even at their present advanced stage, will not be willing to consent to.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). It is certainly a tribute to the judgment of my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) that the resolution he has introduced has met with only two objections, and neither of these strikes at the base of the position taken by him. These objections are, first, that the time is inopportune, and, second, that the resolution is not happily worded, and might be improved in such a way as to be made acceptable to the authorities on the other side.

As to the wording of the resolution, I do not agree with my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Maclean), or the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart). The point taken by the hon. member for Lanark was, that it was absolutely necessary to carry out the settled idea and intention of the British people, both Catholic and Protestant, namely, that there should be always on the Throne of the empire, a Protestant or non-Catholic sovereign, and that, therefore, if the declaration at present in force were struck out, some other declaration should be substituted. I think that that opinion is erroneous. In the first place, it is a law of the land that the sovereign must be non-Catholic, and take certain oaths binding him to support the Protestant religion, and must be in communion with the Church of England, and the abolition of this declaration would not affect that law in the slightest degree. Supposing his declaration were absolutely struck out, we are left with these three fundamental planks in the constitution which are undisturbed. First, that the sovereign must take the oath to support the Protestant religion ; second, that he must be in communion with the Church of England ; and, third, that all these other laws requiring the sovereign to be a non-papist remain in full force. The Act of Settlement provides all these constitutional requisites in the case of the sovereign, and it adds that, in addition to these constitutional requisites, which are sufficient for the purposes that Protestants cherish, he should make a certain declaration. Consequently, if this declaration were entirely abolished, the constitutional safeguards would still remain, and the feelings of our Roman Catholic compatriots would not be offended.

The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), whom everybody expected to take the strongest ground possible against this resolution, completely failed to make any serious argument against it. Instead of that, he brought the whole discussion down from the high level which it had attained to one of personal attack on the gentleman who supported the resolution. He had nothing but words of condemnation for my hon. friend the member for Victoria, and attacked the right hon. the First Minister on matters connected with South Africa, which had nothing at all to do with the subject before the House, and wound up by a fusilade on the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). But the point made by the hon. gentleman was, that inasmuch as the sovereign is ex-officio the head of the Church in England and Scotland, he is in that capacity obliged to make substantially the same declaration. But, as head of the empire at large, he should not be asked to make a declaration which is offensive to any section of his subjects ; and the King, as a matter of fact, is not expected to subscribe to the Westminster Confession. He is not bound to subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who is acknowledged to be a very high constitutional authority, has made the statement that the sovereign is required to subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles.

Mr. FLINT. I am not prepared to enter into an argument on that point; but I simply say that in my constitutional studies, which have not been more extensive than those of other hon. gentlemen, I have not seen the statement made before my hon. friend made it to-night. But let us suppose that the hon. gentleman's contention is right. The King is, ex-officio, the head of the army and the head of the navy; and it does not follow that he has to abide by all the rules of the army and navy which others follow in order to attain to various positions in those services. Where this devolves upon the sovereign ex-officio, the fact that he neglected to subscribe these articles would not destroy his sovereign power or position.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But here is the distinction—the two matters that were mentioned are before he can become a King or exercise any of the powers of King, whereas, in becoming King, he has become the head of the army and the navy. The others are conditions precedent.

Mr. FLINT. There is no statute to that effect. Now, this resolution, if adopted, becomes a petition from parliament to the Crown. As to the point raised by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), of course, we all agree that parliament has the right to petition. The only question we have before us is as to the terms in which the petition should be couched. We should approach the question in the same attitude of mind and with the same sense of responsibility as if the vote on this resolution enacted a law, because it is an expression of the opinion of parliament on an important question. The point raised by my hon. friend from Cornwall and Stormont (Mr. Pringle), and which was alluded to in one or two remarks of other hon. gentlemen, is a good one—that, apart from the relief to the feelings of an immense body of the loyal subjects of the Crown, it is proposed as a relief to the King himself, a measure of relief to the sovereigns of the future, that this amelioration should be attempted by the parliament of Canada. Why should we who admire and revere the person of our future sovereigns, as we trust we shall always be able to admire and revere them, inheriting, as they will, the character of their ancestors and the high traditions of the office they fill—why should not we endeavour to relieve them from what must be, to any high-minded and sensitive Briton, an invidious position ? Why should future sovereigns of the British Empire be called upon to utter in solemn form before the estates of the realm a series of statements of an entirely abstract character, a personal belief which does not, in the slightest degree, affect any practical interest of the state ? We boast, both here and in the mother country, and in the colonies of Great Britain, that we are, above all, a practical people, that we never legislate except for practical ends, and that sentimental grievances and difficulties must always give way to something practical—that we put up with grievances for a long time for the sake of performing other duties of practical utility. If it can be shown by any gentleman that calling on the sovereign to make a declaration of purely abstract sentiment upon a religious subject is of any practical utility in the government of the empire, then, although some person's feelings may be affected and injured, the majority, I think, would willingly see it stand, and even those who suffer from it, would allow it to stand for the other practical advantages derived from it. In this case, we have simply a declaration superadded to the law, an excrescence upon the law; and something superadded when it was appropriate to the feelings of the people, when controversies on abstract questions of religion were carried on with a zeal and bitterness of which we can form no conception, when political life, literary life, philosophical life, were filled with controversies over questions of doctrine on ecclesiastical matters. We have passed into a new era, when we cheerfully allow differences of opinion on these subjects not at all affecting our conduct toward each other in business or political life. So, I say that if we adopt this resolution, we simply remove the bone of contention, an excrescence which is painful to many Protestants, and which must be painful to all adherents of the Roman Catholic Church, and which is of no practical utility whatever—a relic of a past age, bringing up subjects uncalled for at the present time, and certain to be a source of controversy—as long as this useless declaration remains as part of the statute law of Great Britain. Therefore, I have no hesitation in saying that I join heartily in support of this resolution, and I think, in the interest of harmony and peace, in the interest of the goodfellowship which happily exists between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants of this country, and all over the empire, this controversy should be removed as soon as possible. Unless this useless declaration is removed, the controversy must continue. We are at the beginning of a new parliament, of a new century, of a new reign. We are almost unanimously agreed that the phraseology of this declaration is unfortunate, to say the least of it, that it is painful, that it is of no practical utility, and that it should be swept away as soon as possible, and the controversy closed. Suppose that parliament having accepted the prayer of this suggestion, it is forwarded to the mother country, and, in the course of time it is acted upon, and that declaration is cancelled. Can we not see the prospect that is opened up of peace and harmony between all the various religions of the empire ? Cannot we see that our Catholic fellow-citizens, comprising, as they do, such an enormous number of the ablest sons of the empire, are placed upon a footing of absolute equality, in every regard, with other subjects in all portions of the empire ? If the King is compelled in this year of Grace 1901, or in some future year, to declare that the doctrines of the Catholic Church are idolatrous and abominable, why should he not declare that other religions with which Protestants disagree are also absurd and idolatrous ? Simply because in regard to Mohammedanism, and Brahmanism, and other religions with which the majority of Protestants disagree, there has been no historical struggle upon the soil of England, and no question regarding them which has affected political life in the mother country ; while the controversies over the Catholic religion did indirectly affect political life in England during the past several hundred years. Therefore, I join in the hope that this resolution will be accepted by this House, and that it may aid in inducing the parliament of the mother country to remove entirely this question from the arena of political agitation. Therefore, I cannot agree, either that this resolution is unfortunate in its terms, or that it has been introduced at an inopportune season. I think the hon. member for Victoria should receive the approval and thanks of parliament for giving us an opportunity to pronounce on so important a question at this time.

Mr. WM. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). As this debate has proceeded the conviction has been more and more strongly borne in upon my mind that among the members of this House there is a great divergence of opinion as to the facts under which this obnoxious declaration came into existence, as to the existing law, and as to the competency of this House in dealing with it. I was astounded when the hon. gentleman who brought in this resolution gave his reason for bringing it before the House. He said :

> I feel impelled to act on behalf of those whom I represent.

I was astounded that so old a parliamentarian as the hon. member for Victoria should stand up in the House and say that he was impelled to act on behalf of those whom he represents. Why, Sir, whom do we represent in this House ? If there is anything more clear than another under our constitutional system it is that every member in this House is elected, not to represent the particular body of the electors who exercised their franchise in sending him here, but he is elected by the people in that constituency to represent all the people of Canada ; and every man sitting on the floor of this House represents every elector in the Dominion of Canada just as truly, and should represent him to the best of his ability, just as effectually, as the particular representative who is sent to this House by the franchise of that elector. Yet we find an old parliamentarian beginning this important debate by stating that he was impelled to act on behalf of those whom he represents. That is the first point on which I would part with the hon. member for Victoria. I am impelled to speak here, not particularly for those who elected me, those whom I represent are the people of Canada. I was sent here to act to the best of my ability in the interest of the people of Canada. When the summons was received in the Gazette calling the representatives of the people of Canada to meet here, it was for the despatch of business connected with this Dominion of Canada, and when we are here for the despatch of business, when there is business to be done, I submit it is an imposition on the people of Canada whom I represent, that a whole day should be taken up in the discussion of a measure for relief which the hon. gentleman, if he really wished to obtain some redress for his co-religionists, could have obtained hours and hours ago by accepting the suggestion which has been made again and again by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

Now, Sir, I would like to say at the outset, that I thoroughly sympathize with every word that has fallen from several hon. gentlemen here regarding the language which is on the face of the declaration. I quite agree with the premier of Great Britain when he spoke of that language as deplorable, and I would be only too glad if I were standing on the floor of the Imperial parliament and a question came before that House on a motion that it should be considered and decided—I would be only too glad to raise my voice and give my vote in favour of expunging from this declaration every obnoxious term, every term that could even by a stretch of imagination be considered offensive to any one of His Majesty's subjects. If the day ever comes when we are engaged in recasting the political bonds that bind us to the mother land, and in devising any new political arrangement between that land and this, if at that time this declaration has not been modified or removed, and if I am then a member of this House, I will vote heartily for the passage of a resolution to remove any offensive expressions therefrom. But neither of those occasions is the one before us at the present time. We are here as representatives of the people of Canada and we are asked to consider a certain resolution. While I would not like to describe this resolution in terms that would be unparliamentary, if I were outside this House, if in my office a similar document to this were presented to me, I would not have the slightest hesitation in saying that it was as illogical as it was impudent. Why, since the debate commenced we have had many hon. gentlemen in discussing this question either wholly overlooking the terms of this resolution—and I hope that is the case—or misrepresenting the actual facts before the House. We have one hon. gentleman stating boldly that the coronation oath required the King to be a member of the Church of England, and on reference to the coronation oath it is found there is not a word to that effect. The last gentleman who spoke (Mr. Flint) said that the sovereign was compelled by law to be in communion with the Church of England. He nods his head in assent. Now, every hon. gentleman must be aware of the occasion when this declaration was put in force. A short time before that there was a sovereign of Great Britain who was in communion with the Church of England and continued in such communion until the day came for his reign to end, and then he took the last rites of that church to which he had always been attached and in which he had always believed. And it was at that time that the people of England, knowing that the mere declaration that a sovereign must be in communion with the Church of England, had not ensured a sovereign being a sincere member of the Church of England, knowing from actual experience that what the hon. gentleman asserted, had not been the fact, they at once put this declaration on the statute-book to attain the end that they had in view. It is all very well to refer to the coronation oath, but there is no conflict between the coronation oath and the declaration, and neither can take the place of the other.

Now, we are asked by the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., to adopt this resolution. I have read the preamble and the resolution, and I venture to say that a more illogical document was never placed in the hands of a Speaker of this parliament. It is astonishing to me that an hon. gentleman of the legal acumen and the ability of the right hon. gentleman should for a moment have endorsed it, if he has glanced over this document, and seen how thoroughly illogical are the statements in it. Another who failed to perceive the character of this declaration is the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). When the leader of the opposition suggested that perhaps the objectionable phrases could be dropped from the declaration, this hon. gentleman from Westmoreland, a gentleman who has come to this House with a great flourish of trumpets, whose advent we looked for with anxiety, with apprehension on this side of the House, for we had heard that he was shortly to occupy one of the important benches behind the premier—when that gentleman arose he said that if you eliminated from this declaration all of the phrases that are objectionable and offensive to any people in this country you have nothing left. Now, that is a statement which is either correct or it is not. Let us see if we can find anything here that can be eliminated without destroying the declaration. If those who support the resolution really desired to obtain relief for a certain class of people, they would have presented it to the right hon. leader of the government and to the leader of the opposition, and an attempt would have been made to secure that support from both sides of the House that should be secured for such a resolution. But no such thing was done. The government alone has been taken into the hon. gentleman's counsels, and by a friendly member this resolution is brought before the House in such a way that 215 gentlemen are taken by the throat and are told : You must either swallow this, accept what I, the member for Victoria, say, or you must throw the whole thing overboard. I think that fact alone is sufficient to justify the description I gave of the resolution already. Let us see how the document proceeds. There is the usual preamble, it speaks about the Act of Settlement, gives the coronation oath, and then says :

> Such declaration is most offensive to the dearest convictions of all Roman Catholics.

I am in thorough accord with the hon. gentleman on that point. The declaration is of necessity offensive to the feelings of all Roman Catholics. I am sorry it is so, and would be only too glad to do anything in my power to remove that offensive character. Then he goes on to speak of the staunch loyalty of His Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects in Canada to whom it is very offensive to be branded as idolaters by their sovereign. I am thoroughly in accord with that too. I am sure there is not one gentleman on this side of the House but would raise his voice in endorsing that sentiment. These two premises being admitted, first that part of the declaration is offensive, second that the loyalty of His Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects should not be rewarded by being so treated, let us see what is the conclusion. The conclusion from the premises is :

That in the opinion of this House the abovementioned Act of Settlement should be amended by abolishing the said declaration.

If there is nothing in the declaration that is not offensive, as the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) has said, then it is open to the objection that is raised, but let us see whether, if we do eliminate the offensive phrase, there is anything left. Bearing in mind the fact that the Crown had just been settled on William and Mary, who had no more right to the Throne of England by blood than any hon. gentleman in this House, that their title to it was wholly statutory, that, on the other side of the water, was the old sovereign King James who was encouraged and supported by Louis XIV. of France, who subsequently landed troops upon the shores of England; bearing in mind these facts, and the fact that his brother, Charles II., had taken the communion of the Church of England all his life, and had died in the rites of another church, we find that the House of Lords and House of Commons decided that this declaration must be taken by every sovereign who ascended the Throne. What was that declaration ?

I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever.

Every Protestant in the world believes that, and there is nothing offensive in saying that any Protestant becoming King shall be called upon to declare that he does not believe in that particular doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church. There is nothing offensive in its use here. There may be a statement of a theological belief to which a Roman Catholic as a theologian might object, but there is nothing offensive in that statement. The declaration goes on :

And that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary, or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous, etc.

All the rest of this declaration is open to the objection of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., but, if we eliminated every other offensive phrase we would still have left in it the statement that the sovereign does not believe in the doctrine of transubstantiation. For 200 years, whether wisely or not, this has been part of the oath, and for 200 years it has been taken by every sovereign who has ascended the Throne. A new sovereign has just ascended the Throne, and it is our wish that he may long occupy that position. Throughout the mother land, objection has been taken to that oath by lawyers, by the press, by parliamentarians and by the people who regret this phrase and declare the necessity of removing it. Why, then, in the name of all that is sacred, should the time of parliament and the money of the people of this country be wasted here in discussing a question which we believe will be settled in the mother land in just the way we think it should be settled. I could not help suspecting, when the suggestion was first made by the leader of the opposition, that a conference should be held between the leader of the government, the leader of the opposition and the mover of the resolution to see if it would not be possible to agree upon terms, and when the leader of the opposition went so far as to intimate that he was willing to eliminate all the expressions that are offensive to the religious belief of a portion of the subjects of the British Crown, when I found the right hon. leader of the government and the mover of the resolution refused, although appealed to again and again to save the time of the House, to save the risk of having religious excitement stirred up in this country, when I found that the right hon. Prime Minister refused only a few moments ago to allow the debate to be adjourned, insisting that we should proceed to a decision to-night, and when I found that the leader of the opposition was willing that the resolution should take the ground of asking for the elimination from the declaration of the offensive expressions, it occurred to my mind that the elimination of the offensive expressions would not meet the desire of the mover of the resolution. What he desired was, although he has not told the House, but one or two members on the other side did blurt out what he really desired, was not the elimination of the offensive expressions, but to strike out the whole of the declaration so as to get rid of this particular declaration, which, rightly or wrongly, the people of Great Britain, for 200 years have considered one of the bulwarks of their religion. I would be glad to see the people of Great Britain do anything they can to bring about the removal of these expressions which cast a reflection upon a religious body, but I am not a member of the parliament of Great Britain. I am here to represent the people of Canada, I am proud to be a Canadian, but I would be ashamed of my position if I were to do anything that would belittle Canada and make Canada seem small, mean, contemptible and foolish in the eyes of the nations. Look for a moment at our position; at the moment when the people of the mother land have told us that they desire to make a change we rush in with our petition asking them to do that which they in all probability are unwilling to do. Are we doing anything to increase the respect entertained by the mother land for us ? The right hon. gentleman told us this afternoon that a number of years ago we did send an humble address to the Throne, that it had not been received in a courteous manner, but that, perhaps, an address as this would be received. The Prime Minister said that a few years ago the Dominion of Canada was snubbed by the premier of Great Britain because we sent a resolution over, but that last year we sent a resolution to England which was gratefully accepted. I do not wish to say anything disparaging of the hon. gentleman's logical powers, but surely that was hardly worthy of the ability that we all credit him with. Last year, when the resolution was sent over to the mother land, what was the state of affairs ? We had the mother land engaged in a war in South Africa, we had the press of all the other civilized nations outside of the empire decrying the mother land and upholding the Boers as being in the right. We were told that Great Britain, standing in her splendid isolation, would soon be a thing of the past, and we sent in this resolution expressing perfect confidence in the purity and justice of Her Majesty's cause. It was unavoidable that a resolution sent in under such circumstances should be received with acceptance. Surely there is a distinction between that resolution of confidence and a resolution telling the people of the mother land that they have not known their own business for the last 200 years. It may be that the House of Commons will pass such a resolution. I would be glad to do anything in my humble power to remove these offensive expressions from the statute-book, but my first duty is to the people of this country, and I will be sorry to do anything which would reflect seriously upon the intelligence of this House by supporting such a resolution.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I wish, for a very short time, to ask the attention of the House to this resolution, and give some reason for the vote that I propose to record upon it. I have always viewed with disfavour any inclination or disposition to import into this House questions of this troublesome kind, questions relating to religion or to race. I have always regarded it as one of the things that parliamentarians should avoid as far as possible. I think that we may all trust implicitly to the trend of public opinion of the nineteenth century, and to the tolerance of the age to make us a more homogeneous people, to make us forget the distinctions of the past and to bring us closer together as members of the human family. We might trust to the disposition of the age to accomplish this, rather than to resort to resolutions of this kind. The toleration of the nineteenth centry is already historical. It is in the direction of broader charity of man towards man, of a more enduring philantrophy in the human race, and of a stronger inclination to live in unison with our fellowmen. The teaching of the social habits of the age all lie in that direction, and the inclinations of the people are to forget the controversies of the past and to make for harmony in the future. That happy result is, however, impeded in its course by the introduction of just such questions as these from time to time, which cause us to reflect on the history of the past, to remember the animosities of by-gone days, and to bring them before the world's notice so that they may do duty again in resurrecting what the best disposed people would gladly allow to remain dead and forgotten. The coronation oath, or declaration as it is called, was the crystallized wisdom of the time to provide against something that it was desirable to provide against. What was the object ? It was to do away with the possibility of a Roman Catholic king or queen being on the Throne of England. And, why was it necessary to provide this oath or declaration ? It was because of the troubles which had been engendered for generations previously, and the wars even which had been brought about by the intolerance displayed by the Roman Catholic sovereigns who had occupied the British Throne. It was to prevent these dangers to the state that the coronation oath and declaration was formulated. And what is the coronation declaration ? It is at best but a declaration or confession of faith. The oath is taken by the sovereign on his accession that he will support the Protestant faith. Then follows the confession of faith or declaration that the sovereign does not believe in the Roman Catholic religion, which had been found so troublesome up to that time; it is an acknowledgment that the sovereign adjures that faith if the sovereign ever believed in it. That is practically what the coronation declaration means, and why it should be offensive to Roman Catholics is the great mystery of my life. I do not believe in the faith that the Roman Catholic believes nor does the Roman Catholic believe in my faith. Is it offensive to me that he does not believe in my faith ? Not at all. Should it be offensive to him that I do not believe in his faith ? Not at all. These are matters which appertain individually to us and should not be offensive to either. And when the law of the country demands that the Protestant religion shall be maintained and that the head of the state should be a Protestant, why should it be offensive to a Roman Catholic if the sovereign makes a confession of faith before the people of the world in taking his position at the head of the state. With equal propriety might you say that it is offensive to the Buddhist, offensive to the Jew, offensive to every other religious denomination. For my part, I can see no just ground why it should be offensive to the Roman Catholics of the country. Previous to the passing of this law it was found detrimental to the state that the king or queen should be a Catholic, and so the law was made that the sovereign, in ascending the Throne, should declare that he or she did not believe in that faith. Now, if this declaration did any injustice to the Roman Catholic ; if the Roman Catholic had the right to ascend the Throne of England, then I would regard it as an injustice. If it compelled any Roman Catholic in the land to take that oath, I would regard it as unjust. But it does not, because a Roman Catholic is not allowed to sit on the Throne of England so long as he is a Roman Catholic. In no position under the Crown, except that of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and the Lord Chancellor of England, is a Catholic debarred from occupying a position of emolument or honour by reason of the necessity of taking such an oath. Therefore, there is no injustice to the Roman Catholic. It debars him from no position he has a right to occupy under the law of the land. Were we charged with the duty to-day of providing a safeguard for the supremacy of the Protestant religion, I am bound to believe that we would be happier in our selection of words to accomplish that end. I believe that the spirit of the nineteenth century and the toleration of the nineteenth century would enable us to do so, but we are not charged with that duty, and, therefore, we cannot in any sense pretend to alter this declaration. Are we in this parliament within our rights in passing a resolution inviting the Imperial parliament to alter this declaration ? Some say we are and some say we are not. In my judgment we are within our rights, but the question that interests me is : Is it advisable or is it the part of wisdom to do so, and on that point I believe that it is not wise nor advisable to attempt it at the present time. The resolution which we passed last year in reference to the Uitlanders is not a parallel case, and on that point I beg to differ from the right hon. the Prime Minister. When we passed that resolution the mother country was engaged in a struggle to settle a most important question, and we wished to give her our moral support by declaring that we were in favour of the claims of the Uitlanders. In order to strengthen the hands of England we declared by a resolution in favour of the policy of England in regard to her subjects in South Africa. But, Sir, is England fighting to-day ? Is England now dealing with the question of the coronation oath, and is she asking to have it repealed ? Not at all. When the question was presented to the British nation what did Lord Salisbury say ? When the question was asked, how can this be amended ? he said : ' Only by an Act of the Imperial parliament ; but I am not disposed to introduce that Act, because I think I would be doing a very dangerous and unwise thing.' If that is the spirit of the Imperial government to-day, and the spirit of the British Empire, why should we attempt to disturb it, and do something that will invite or provoke a great deal of trouble, not only in the mother country, but in the various colonies of the empire ? Therefore, whether we have or have not the right to do it, I think it would be the part of wisdom to avoid provoking any unpleasant feelings by a controversy over this question.

If it was desired to pass this resolution, why was it brought in as an amendment to going into Committee of Supply ? We are always told that an amendment to Supply has but one meaning, that is, that it is a vote of want of confidence in the government. My opinion is that the object in bringing forward the motion at this time is in order that it cannot be amended in any way, but must be accepted in its entirety or rejected in its entirety ; for there is no amendment allowable to a motion made in amendment to the motion to go into Commitee of Supply. Therefore, it does suggest to my mind that the mover of this resolution desired to introduce it in such a way that it might be made a political machine in the hands of some parties rather than do justice to his co-religionists, who he thinks are suffering under something which he feels called upon to rectify.

These agitations do no good, but they often do a great deal of harm. We have had experience of them in the past in the Canadian parliament, we are having a similar experience to-day, and we may have it again in the future. What does this resolution ask ? It asks the abolition of the declaration altogether. If you abolish the declaration, you do more than Lord Salisbury himself says he has the power to do, except by an Act of parliament. If the resolution had been to eliminate the objectionable words in the declaration, and substitute something else in their place which might contain a sufficient safeguard for what was intended, that is, the perpetuation of the Protestant religion, as represented on the Throne of England, I could understand the wisdom of it. But this resolution aims at no such end. It aims at another end entirely, that is, the elimination of the declaration altogether.

Why is this resolution introduced at the present time ? As a general thing, we introduce resolutions or Bills into this parliament because there is a demand for them from the people of the country. Have we had any petitions presented to this parliament asking for this resolution ? Have we had any great agitation in favour of it ? Not at all, so far as I know, and I have been constantly watching the press of the country. It is true, we have in the country a small sect, or society, that has been promoting this agitation from time to time, and, so far as I know, it is the originator of this question. But we have had no petitions nor demands for such a resolution from any part of the country, and therefore, in my judgment, there is no necessity for introducing it at the present time.

It is said that we declare that we are in favour of equal rights to all. So we are—equal rights to all under the Crown. We do not deny that ; we stand up for that ; but this resolution is going further than asking for equal rights to all. It is asking the elimination of that essential promise to the British Empire, that only a Protestant king or queen shall be seated on the Throne. It is going that much further, and therefore I am opposed to it. Is there any injustice done to any one by this declaration ? It is said that it is obnoxious to the feelings of Roman Catholics. I do not know why it should be any more obnoxious to their feelings than the declaration of the Roman Catholic faith is to my feelings when it says that I am a heretic and an outcast. Is it obnoxious to me that any Roman Catholic reads that to me ? Not at all. That is his own faith, and I have no quarrel with him because it is not mine.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question ? Does he acknowledge allegiance to any Pope or bishop of the Catholic Church ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not talking about allegiance to them at all. Every British subject is bound to pay allegiance to the head of the state.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). My hon. friend was saying——

Mr. SPROULE. If my hon. friend wishes to interrupt me every little while with a question, I would like him to make his own argument. I am not talking about that at all.

In 1688, when the settlement was made between the state, the church and the people, this was part and parcel of the agreement ; and every member of the state from that time to the present, acknowledges allegiance to the Queen or King, with the understanding that he is obeying that part of the compact, and therefore, it cannot be insulting to his faith. The late Queen took that declaration sixty-four years ago. Has any Catholic suffered in consequence during the last sixty-four years ? Has the late Queen been any the less tolerant of the religious convictions, the religious rights, or even the prejudices of Catholics ? I do not think any one will successfully contend that she has been. Yet she took it, and they have lived under it all that time. The present King has taken it, and are they likely to enjoy any less freedom or any fewer advantages under him than they have done under the late Queen ? I do not think any one will contend that they are. That being the case, what ground is there for complaint ? In my judgment there is none.

I see great objections to the periodical introduction into this House of these disturbing questions, which have a tendency to divide the people and destroy that spirit of charity and tolerance which is the spirit of the nineteenth century, and rake up ancient history and the quarrels of the past, which many of us would gladly leave to be hidden in oblivion. It is because of these opinions and feelings that I am disposed to vote against this resolution. I never view with complacency the disposition to introduce these controversial questions. They are very troublesome questions, and those who introduce them must be held responsible. There are some who live and thrive on that class of work. I do not grudge them any little popularity they may obtain from it, but I think they are doing a great injustice, not only to the people of the country, but to the very class of people whose interests they profess to serve.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). Mr. Speaker, I wish to relieve at once the mind of my hon. friend who has just spoken as to the feelings of Roman Catholics on this very important question. Speaking as one of the descendants of those Frenchmen who were ceded by a French and Catholic King to an English and Protestant sovereign. I have no hesitation in saying, as my leader very eloquently said this afternoon, that, Catholic and Frenchman as I am, I am prouder to have lived under a wise and constitutional sovereign like Queen Victoria, than under an arbitrary ruler like Louis XV.

I rise to give my humble but earnest support to the resolution presented by the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan).

The question now submitted to you, Sir, is not raised with the object of creating any religious agitation. If it were, I would not speak in favour of the resolution. The Roman Catholics of Canada, united with their co-religionists of the British Empire, are anxious that a grievance should be removed, that an evil should be remedied and that a wrong should be righted. Without going any further, I wish to answer at once a preliminary objection which has been raised. It is stated that this is not the proper place to discuss the declaration of the King against transubstantiation—it being a subject-matter, coming within the purview of the Imperial parliament. This opinion is presumably based upon the following reply sent to the Marquis of Lorne by the Earl of Kimberley, at the time the resolutions, adopted by this House in favour of home rule, were sent to the Imperial government :

> Her Majesty will always gladly receive the advice of the parliament of Canada on all matters relating to the Dominion and the administration of its affairs; but with respect to the question referred to in the address, Her Majesty will, in accordance with the constitution of this country, have regard to the advice of the Imperial parliament and ministers, to which all matters relating to the affairs of the United Kingdom exclusively appertain.

This same view is shared by a portion of the Canadian press. It is contended that the parliament which prescribed the declaration against transubstantiation, is the only parliament that can abolish or amend it.

Sir, I quite agree that this parliament cannot substitute itself for the Imperial parliament, but surely we have the right to express an opinion upon a question deeply affecting twelve millions of His Majesty's loyal subjects, and at the least 42 per cent of the total population of Canada. Granted, that we can not legislate for the British parliament, but who can deny to our parliament, but any of our legislatures—that expressive power or expressive function, without which, parliament would be nothing but a mere name ? True, we cannot interfere with the functions of the Imperial parliament, but, Sir, we would be unworthy of our British citizenship if we could not, in this House, ventilate a grievance, and even humbly petition the King himself.

After all, the declaration against transubstantiation, which is made the subject of this debate, is a relic of past ages. At the time it was framed, the English people thought it was absolutely necessary that such a declaration should be made by the King. It was, perhaps, considered more as a political move than as a sectarian one. But, Sir, the fear of the Stuarts exists no more, and the Protestant House of Hanover is now deeply rooted in the British Isles, nay in the whole British Empire. The Pope of Rome is, and has been, for years and years a firm advocate of peace ; the disabilities against British subjects belonging to the Catholic faith have also disappeared in the course of time, and today they form an important and numerous body of His Majesty's most loyal subjects. Why then, should the British sovereign be forced to make a declaration giving needless, wanton and studied offence to his Catholic subjects ? Why then should their dearest belief be officially declared idolatrous and superstitious ?

As Catholics, we hold as tenets of our faith: (1) the real presence of Our Saviour in the Blessed Eucharist ; (2) the invocation of the Blessed Virgin ; (3) the invocation of the saints ; (4) the sacrifice of mass.

Yet, Sir, these fundamental and essential articles of the Catholic creed are pilloried by Act of parliament. What are we asking ? We are asking that Catholic doctrines held sacred by twelve million British subjects should not be made the object of royal condemnation.

This vast British Empire is composed not only of Protestants, but of Catholics, Brahmins, Mahommedans, Budhists, Pagans as well. Strange to say, Catholics alone—twelve million of Catholics—are obliged to listen to a severe condemnation, to a rebuke, from the lips of their sovereign. This declaration, Sir, is, as I have already said, a relic of past ages. Let it disappear. Other relics have been done away with in conservative England. Not a century ago, according to public documents, the King was not only King of England, but also King of France. This title disappeared in the course of time, proud as the English were of this relic of past ages.

We also, in Lower Canada, were, after the cession, subject to the disabilities affecting the Catholics of England. An oath —a test oath—was required from our ancestors which practically debarred them from holding any public office. They protested, and Sir, Great Britain wiped out that vestige of past ages, and granted them civil and religious liberty.

We hope—we earnestly hope—that this resolution will be received in England, as the expression of the sincere and loyal wishes of the united Canadian people, and that the Imperial parliament will soon remove from the statute-book a declaration most offensive to Roman Catholics. This is not a national question ; this is not a religious question. It is a matter of public policy, a request for equal rights, for the exercise of that fair-play and broad toleration which characterize British institutions. In conclusion, I will say that I, as a Catholic, would not object to a Protestant declaration from the British sovereign, but I object to a purely anti-Catholic out-of-date declaration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If I may be permitted to speak again in this debate, I desire to say, in view of the appeals that have been made to me from some quarters of the House to ascertain whether it would not be possible to amend the resolution, the principle of which seems to be generally acceptable, but the language of which seems to be the subject of some exception, after conference with my hon. friend the mover of this resolution, and with some other members on both sides of the House I have to propose, that my hon. friend would accept and agree to a change in the motion. The change I would suggest is in the last paragraph of the motion, which is in these words :

That in the opinion of this House, the above mentioned Act of Settlement should be amended by abolishing the said declaration.

And substitute the following words :

That in the opinion of this House the declaration referred to in the above mentioned Act of Settlement should be amended by eliminating therefrom all those expressions which are especially offensive to the religious belief of any subjects of the British Empire.

Of course, it is a well known rule of the House that such an amendment could not be accepted except by consent of the House; but I imagine that, in a matter of this kind, no one would object and that these words could be substituted in the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. SPEAKER. With the unanimous consent of the House, there will be no difficulty in the hon. gentleman withdrawing his motion and substituting the other.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, if, in offering a few words with regard to the suggestion just thrown out by the leader of the House, I should preclude myself from speaking should the debate continue ?

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is a personal explanation the hon. gentleman has, no doubt, the right to give it. I suppose also that, with the unanimous consent of the House that the hon. member could have an opportunity of giving the explanation he wishes to give.

Mr. WALLACE. This is a most unusual and extraordinary state of affairs. They first violate the rules by amending the resolution originally proposed, and, in the second place I suppose, as it is a new resolution, every one will be allowed to speak again.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will waive my right, and I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will do the same.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is proposed to withdraw the resolution now before the House, and substitute a similar motion except with the alteration proposed. Is is the pleasure of the House that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) shall have leave to withdraw his motion.

Motion withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN moved :

That all the words after ' That ' be left out, and the following added instead thereof :

That a humble address be presented to His Most Gracious Majesty the King, as follows :—

Most Gracious Majesty:

Your Majesty's most faithful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave most humbly to represent :

That as a token of the civil and religious liberties and of the equality of rights guaranteed to all British subjects in the Canadian confederation, as well as under the British constitution, the British sovereign should not be called to make any declaration offensive to the religious belief of any subject of the British Crown.

That by virtue of the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement, the British sovereign, on the first day of the meeting of the first parliament, or at the coronation, is called upon to make the following declaration :—

' I, A. B., by the grace of God, King (or Queen) of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever ; and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do make this declaration, and each and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope or any other authority or person whatsoever, or without any hope of such dispensation from any person or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or men, or absolved of this declaration or any part thereof, although the Pope or any other person or persons, or power whatsoever, should dispense with or annul the same, or declare that it was null and void from the beginning.'

That such declaration is offensive to the convictions of all Roman Catholics.

That the staunch loyalty of Your Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects in Canada and throughout British possessions should exempt them from any offensive reference to their religion by their sovereign.

That in the opinion of this House, the declaration referred to in the above mentioned Act should be amended by eliminating therefrom all these expressions which are especially offensive to the religious belief of any subjects of the British Crown.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I am not familiar with the rules of the House, but I understand that every hon. member is at liberty to discuss this question before the motion is carried. With all sincerity I crave the indulgence of the House in rising to speak on this very important question, more particularly perhaps, as it is not the feeling of the House that I should speak. On an ordinary question, one affecting only the financial interests of the country I would not feel that I needed the consideration of hon. members to the same extent. But, rising to speak at this late hour, and at a time when it may seem to many hon. members that debate is less necessary than it was at an earlier stage, I am obliged to ask the hon. members for every reasonable latitude. I feel, like the last hon. gentleman who addressed the House (Mr. Lemieux) that it is such an important question that it almost justifies a written address, which is contrary I understand to the rules of the House, rather than those unstudied remarks which may fall from the lips of one who attempts to speak without that assistance. I assure hon. members on both sides, that I approach this subject with diffidence, and also with an honest desire not to say one word which can be offensive to any hon. member of the House or that can be construed as offensive to any of the people that go to make up the Dominion. I realize that it is important too, in this country that the law should be such, as not to unduly or unfairly cause offense to any class of His Majesty's subjects. I realize also that it may well be said that the language in which the declaration which has been so frequently referred to is couched, may be reasonably offensive to some of His Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects. I recollect, too, that the loyalty and devotion of British subjects of the Roman Catholic faith have been tested on many occasions. Therefore, I should be sorry indeed if there should be perpetuated in any of the statutes of the British Empire anything that is likely to cause offence to His Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects. But, I ask leave to say also that I have not varied very much in my opinion of this matter during the progress of the debate. One subject has become reasonably clear in my mind in a way, that I did not quite anticipate at the beginning of the debate. I had a great deal of doubt as to whether it is competent for this parliament to deal with this question. But, the remarks which fell from the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) were so plain and so convincing in that regard that I am perfectly convinced that it is competent for this House to pronounce upon this question, if properly presented to it.

I venture to say that there is a wide difference between the competency of this House to present a petition to His Majesty and the propriety, or the wisdom, of the policy of pursuing the course we are asked to take here to-night. I still hold the view I entertained at the beginning of the debate, that this question is fraught with the greatest danger to the peace and harmony of this great Dominion, and the constant introduction of questions of this kind is calculated to arouse religious strife among the people. I desire to protest as vigorously as I can against the introduction of these questions on the floor of the Dominion parliament. Whilst we have the right and the privilege to present petitions to the sovereign of the empire, the introduction of this subject at present is unnecessary, and worse, because it is calculated to injure this country. We have already had sufficient racial and religious difficulties in this country without going across the Atlantic and importing others. The great curse of this country is that from time to time some gentleman whose motive I do not wish to asperse, seeks to drag questions of race and religion into parliament. While these questions will do injury to the country, they will not ruin it, because nothing can withstand the progress of this great Dominion. I am astonished that so old a parliamentarian as the hon. member for Victoria should be so wanting in astuteness as to have committed this great error of introducing a measure which can have no other effect than to arouse strife. Notwithstanding that the resolution has been modified, I am prepared to vote against it. I do so for many reasons, and one is that I believe the parliament of Great Britain is prepared to treat this matter on the broad and enlightened principles of the century on which we have just entered. One of those principles is that the Roman Catholics of the empire should receive every consideration at the hands of the British parliament. I am content to leave this matter where it belongs. Almost every gentlemen who has spoken in the House to-night has spoken in favour of the resolution, and claimed liberties which they would never have enjoyed in any other land. I am confident that while the present dynasty reigns over the British Empire the liberty of no one will be in danger, and no Act will remain on the statute-book which is necessarily offensive to the Roman Catholic people of the empire.

Several hon. gentlemen have maintained that the present is an opportune time for bringing forward this question. I do not share in that opinion. It is not an opportune time when the Crown is passing from one head to another to raise such a question as this. If I had any doubts as to the expediency of passing this resolution in its first form, those doubts have been much increased by some of the speeches that I have heard this evening. We find hon. members differing very widely, both as to the existing laws and as to the effect of the resolution if it is passed. For instance, we have the hon. member for West York referring to the Thirty-nine Articles and the Westminster Confession. That fact alone suggests to my mind that there are too many questions surrounding the proposition before this House to justify us in dealing with it, there are a great many questions connected with it that the parliament of Great Britain is more competent to deal with than we are. We should understand exactly the position we are in before making any move in this matter. Then we have the opinion that has been so ably put forth by the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart). I followed him as closely as I could, and I am inclined to think there is a good deal in what he said, showing again that we are in doubt as to the exact position of the question we are dealing with. Then, we have the hon. member for Labelle (Mr.

Bourassa), who put his construction upon this resolution. He argues that under the sovereignty of Britain men of all religions and all creeds have equal rights. Surely we all assent to that proposition. He goes further and says that all creeds ought to be on the same footing. If that is what is aimed at by the resolution, that is not the understanding of many hon. members who have spoken here to-night. There is no distinction at present between the civil status of Roman Catholics and Protestants in the British Empire.

Speaking for myself, I am not prepared to subscribe to that proposition. An hon. gentleman says that we have a right to deal with this question. He puts that right very emphatically, but although he puts that right so emphatically, declaring that we have a right to take part in this matter as regards the British parliament, the hon. gentleman does not look at both sides of the shield. When it comes to the Canadian people supporting Great Britain in the field, the hon. gentleman takes an opposite view. He proclaims, in a resolution which is to come before the House, an opposite doctrine to that which he has just propounded to the members of this parliament. For these reasons, in addition to others which I have given, and desiring as honestly as any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House that there shall be no differences between Roman Catholics and Protestants before the Crown, that there shall be no differences of creed or nationality in this country, or the old land, I wish it to be distinctly understood that this is not the place nor the time to introduce a question of this kind. I submit this with all deference. I feel that I have been speaking at a great disadvantage. I feel that, coming before the House at this time and under these circumstances, I am handicapped, but I want to see the great people of this country, of one origin or the other, whether they are Roman Catholic or Protestant, grow up in peace and harmony together. I do feel, that at the beginning of this new year, the first of the century, it is time to realize the importance of keeping such questions out of the debates of this parliament. I rejoice that our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens have joined with us to fight the battles of the empire. I remember that when Great Britain was in her hour of need Roman Catholics and Protestants went out together as Britons to fight her battles, that whilst, perhaps, they knelt before different altars, they worshipped the same God and waved the same old British flag, and that while worshipping the same God and owing allegiance to the same sovereign, they marched on together to victory, which has always perched upon the banners of Great Britain. My Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, gentlemen of French origin as well as of English origin, unite in wishing prosperity to the great British Empire and the great Dominion of Canada. I am, perhaps, in my earnest desire to see carried out my idea that all shall live in peace and harmony together as His Majesty's subjects, speaking more excitedly than is consistent with a calm declaration of the ideas I have, but coming before this new parliament, at the beginning of a new year and at the beginning of a century which I believe will be the greatest in the annals of Great Britain and the Dominion, I feel it is time for us to unite in this one grand sentiment:

This is our country, strong and broad and grand,
God guard thee Canada, our native land.

Mr. FLETCHER B. WADE (Annapolis). Mr. Speaker, I presume that it will be pleasant to hon. members to know that I do not propose making a speech at this late hour of the night. The only reason that I rise here now is because I desire to correct a misapprehension of a number of hon. gentlemen in the House. It seems to be taken for granted that the only church to which this declaration is offensive is the Roman Catholic Church. That is quite a mistake. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that there is a large portion of the Protestant Church to whom the first clause of this declaration is quite as offensive as it is to the Roman Catholics. I refer to the Lutheran Church or the Evangelical Lutheran Church. This body of Christians is composed of followers of Luther, and their creed is to be found in the Augsberg Confession of Faith. Luther contended for the doctrine of transubstantiation, and upon that question the Calvinists split and seceded from the church. This is an important body throughout Canada, and more especially in the county of Lunenburg, where I happen to reside for many years. I make this correction in the interest of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) who represents that fine county. I do not purpose engaging the attention of the House beyond this point. I am going to support the resolution, but I do not wish to do so without expressing myself openly, and I express myself openly for the purpose of showing the House and the country that the constituency which I have the honour to represent is far above and beyond all bigotry and uncharitableness.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to detain the House for any length of time, because the suggestion that has recently been made comes so near meeting, if it does not wholly meet, the views that I have entertained from the beginning, that any lengthy remarks are wholly unnecessary. But, if nothing else induced me to detain the House for a moment it would be the discordant speech, I regret to say on this side of the House, that has been made, and which suggests that there is not to be that harmony which, for the sake of our House and for the sake of the country, if not for the sake of the empire, would be so desirable on an occasion of this kind. I am not going over some of the observations and criticisms which occurred to me at the beginning of the debate. There is, after all, when the views which have been expressed are threshed out, so very little divergence of opinion, I think it a very unfortunate thing that the hon. member for Victoria took charge of this resolution at all, though against himself personally I have not the slightest thing to say. Still he is a Roman Catholic. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is a Roman Catholic, and their positions were not such for that reason—we have to look at things as they are, at prejudices as they exist—as would suggest to either of them that they should when feelings of excitement in connection with religious questions have not died out in Canada, be the first to leap into the breach on an occasion of this kind. There were dozens of hon. members on both sides of this House, strong in the Protestant faith who would have been glad to have had the honour of introducing this question to the House.

If the moderate course pursued by those in England, who are interested in the matter had been followed here, the House would not have been forced to say willy nilly that a certain set of words would have to be adopted before progress was made in parliament. If the proper course had been adopted before, members would not have been dragooned, so to speak, into assuming a position on this question, and members would not be put unnecessarily on their guard, and their suspicion unnecessarily aroused, as apparently is the case with some hon. gentlemen who are going to stand aloof from this movement, which I think from many points of view is so desirable. Take the moderate and prudent example shown by the Catholics of the United Kingdom to the Catholics of other parts of the empire. Instead of holding up the parliament of England until this question was decided just as they wished, with a moderation which shows the strength of their case, they ask that the declaration should be amended and that those parts of it which are especially offensive to the belief of certain subjects of His Majesty, should be eliminated. They do not ask that the declaration should be repealed, as was suggested at first in this House. They recognize, as the Roman Catholic members of this House have cheerfully recognized, that whatever the future may have in store, there must be a Protestant monarch in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. They recognize, too, that there must be a declaration which puts it out of the question that the monarch holds or sympathizes with the Roman Catholic doctrine. That is a position that was not attacked by the mover of this resolution. He candidly admitted that he had no sinister designs in connection with that condition of affairs, and the Prime Minister cheerfully bowed to the existing situation, and did not suggest that that question should be debated here or anywhere within the King's realm. I do not sympathize with the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair), who, judging from his interruptions, is of the opinion that it is a question of splitting hairs, and that if you eliminate the offensive part of the declaration nothing remains. The astute Roman Catholic peers and these astute minds in England recognize that even if their views be adopted, there must be an anti-Catholic declaration made by the monarch of Great Britain and Ireland, and the strength of their case lies in the fact—and I do not see how they can fail—that all they ask is that in making that anti-Catholic declaration which assures the King's subjects of the Protestant faith, it shall not be made in an offensive manner to those ardent Catholics who are loyal subjects of the British Crown. I, of course, have no right to speak as to the views of the Roman Catholic Church, but I hold in my hand the Tablet, the recognized exponent of Roman Catholic views, and in that journal is the moderate memorial of the Roman Catholic peers, which they have placed in the hands of the Lord Chancellor. The article in the Tablet is headed 'Superstitious and Idolatrous,' and the gravamen of their complaint is directed against these five lines in the declaration which are unnecessarily offensive. Every reasonable man here knows—the member for West York, I take it, believes—that these words are unnecessarily offensive to the Roman Catholic subjects of the King. No one has defended the use of those words here to-day, and reasonable explanations were given as to the time they found their way into that declaration. Surely the Catholics in this House cannot ask the Protestants for any more than they should follow the lead of the Roman Catholics who are at the head of this movement in England, and in connection with whose suggestion I can see no danger to the state. If we concur in their action, that ought to be sufficient. I regret exceedingly that there should be any member in this House who feels constrained to prevent a unanimous conclusion being reached on this subject, seeing that the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition, and a large majority of the members are clearly one in desiring to have all the peculiarly offensive words of that declaration eliminated.

Sir, I took pride as a Canadian in the manner in which the debate was conducted. It is one of the most creditable debates that has ever taken place in this parliament since I have had the honour to sit here. It is the only occasion on which a question connected with religion, has been discussed without heat and without offensive epithets thrown across the floor. The moderation displayed was simply magnificent, and when the member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) suggested that I did not go heart and hand with my leader, I almost laughed in his face. I never was prouder of a leader in my life than I was of the hon. leader of the opposition to-day, in the high position he took. Without a caucus, without conference with his party, without any reference to the gentlemen who sat behind him, and newly come to his responsible position, he said to his followers : I leave you all free, but as for myself, I stand out on this broad plane, that I want to see equal justice done to every race and creed in Canada and the empire ; I take my stand for justice, equal civil and religious rights, and I do not wish to see included in this coronation ceremony, or in any of the great functions of state, an epithet that is considered offensive to my Roman Catholic fellow-subjects, or to any of my fellow-subjects of the King. I repeat that I was never prouder of the position taken by any leader of a party than I was of the manly, sturdy, and truly Canadian position taken by the leader of the opposition to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would not have risen, except to add my poor voice, by way of appeal, to all those gentlemen with whom I generally act, that they should do a generous thing, forget the manner in which the resolution was introduced, and the opportunity taken for its introduction, on going into Supply, when no suggestion could be made to amend it, as could be done if the ordinary course were adopted. That course might have been pursued here, which the hon. seconder of the resolution (Mr. Kendall) pointed out, was adopted in the province of Nova Scotia many years ago, when a unanimous vote was obtained, because there was no attempt to force on any one a particular phrase or a particular sentence, and a committee being appointed to draw up an address, there was a strong resolution framed that was acceptable to every man in that chamber. I believe the same thing could have been done on this occasion, and the responsibility of any difference of opinion rests upon the shoulders of the member for Victoria (Mr. Costigan). He has been ill-advised, in my humble judgment ; but notwithstanding all that, I would make as ardent and earnest an appeal for unanimity on this question as I can possibly make to hon. gentlemen on one side of the House or the other. We can strengthen the hands of our fellow-subjects in the United Kingdom to-day in a cause that is good, a cause that has nothing in it which in the slightest degree imperils an interest in the empire, and we can promote that cordial feeling which seems to be growing, and happily growing, in our own country, and particularly in this Chamber.

Mr. GEO W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, although the hour is late, I propose to inflict a few remarks on the House, for the reason that I do not wish to give a silent vote on this question. I may say at the outset that I am in favour of the resolution before the House, because I believe that the declaration which the sovereign of this empire makes should be made without giving offence to any class or race, or creed, throughout his vast dominions ; and I do not agree with the statement which has been made by some hon. members that this is not the place nor this the time to bring up a matter of this kind. I think this is the very place. It would be a hard reflection upon this honourable House, which is supposed to represent the intelligence of this Dominion, if we 213 men could not discuss a question of this character without arousing race or creed prejudices ; and I am glad to be able to bear the same testimony as the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who congratulated the House on the manner in which this debate has been conducted up to the present time. I must take this opportunity to congratulate the government upon the course which they have taken with regard to this resolution. I wish to congratulate them upon the fact that they have had the good sense to appreciate the suggestion which was made to them by the hon. leader of the opposition. I am glad to be able to congratulate them upon the fact that they saw the peculiar position in which they were placing the House by adhering to the resolution of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Costigan), as it was first introduced, because the resolution which they had evidently determined to support in its entirety was a resolution which went vastly further than the statements which the hon. members made as to the object they had in view. I therefore, congratulate them, that, as in the case of the binder twine discussion the other night, they have adopted the suggestion thrown out on this side of the House.

There is one thing I regret exceedingly, that is, that two of the hon. members from the maritime provinces who have spoken, have shown lamentable ignorance—the one on a question of religion and the other on a question of history. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), who made a very eloquent speech, made a statement with reference to the expulsion of the Acadians a great many years ago. The hon. gentleman said that the reason the Acadians were expelled from Nova Scotia was that they refused to take the declaration which is embodied in this resolution. I am very sorry that the hon. gentleman should have displayed such vast ignorance of that subject, because he comes from the maritime provinces. As a matter of fact, the Acadians were expelled from Nova Scotia because they refused to take the simple oath of allegiance to King George, and not the test oath at all.

The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) brought up the grievance of the Lutheran Church, a church which has a great many adherents, he says, in the province of Nova Scotia; and he said this declaration affected them and their prejudices. The hon. gentleman has not that knowledge of dogmas or of the creed of the Lutheran Church which he ought to have, in order to speak with authority, or he would know that the Lutheran Church does not subscribe to the doctrine of transubstantiation at all. It subscribes to an entirely different doctrine, the doctrine of consubstantiation, and the hon. member does not seem to distinguish between the two. For the information of the hon. member, and in order to correct the wrong impression which hon. members who are not well versed in religious matters may have gathered from his remarks, let me read from the Encyclopedia Britannica, as to the difference between these two dogmas:

> To commence with the Roman Church. With regard to the doctrine known as transubstantiation, it must here suffice to say that the Church of Rome teaches that the whole substance of the bread and wine in the Eucharist is converted by consecration into the body and blood of Christ, in such a manner that Christ in His entirety, including His human soul and His divine nature, are contained in the elements.

Now, with regard to the Lutheran Church:

> While the continental Reformers were of one mind in repudiating the Roman doctrine of transubstantiation and the sacrifice of the Mass, very wide difference existed between them in their estimate of the grace imparted by the Eucharist and the mode of the presence of Christ in that sacrament. The symbolical books of the Lutheran Church, following the teaching of Luther himself, declare the doctrine of the real presence of Christ's body and the blood in the Eucharist, together with the bread and wine (consubstantiation), as well as the ubiquity of His body, as the orthodox doctrine of the church.

A wide distinction; and when my hon. friend has further studied the doctrines——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOWLER. I can quite understand how the Minister of Railways might be amused at this, because he has very little knowledge on these matters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There appear to be a couple of us in that dilemma.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, you and the member for Annapolis. The hon. gentleman has already exhibited his lack of knowledge, when he did not see any distinction between the resolution as brought in by the hon. member for Victoria and the amendment as suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition. But I am very glad that this resolution has been amended in the manner in which it has been, and I shall take very great pleasure in voting for it, and I would be very sorry to see a division of the House on the question. I think we should approach it, as we have almost without exception, without any party feeling. This is another point on which I am sorry the hon. member for Westmoreland should have made the statement he did. He endeavoured to bring politics into this matter, although there are no politics and should not be any in it. Now that the hon. member for Victoria has accepted this amendment, and the government, who are, I have no doubt, behind him in the matter, have also accepted it, I think we should all vote for it without division, and have it unanimously carried.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I had intended to vote against this resolution, and to speak against it as strongly as I could. Not because I do not thoroughly and entirely agree that all those offensive words should be left out of the declaration; but I do not think this is the proper place to introduce such a motion. My feeling is that to bring this and kindred subjects before the House must revive religious strife which has almost ceased, at all events in western Canada. But, as I do not wish that there should be any division in the House on this subject, and after the amendment has been accepted by the mover and endorsed by the leader of the opposition, not taking that as an endorsement of the principle that such a resolution should be introduced into this House at all, I will frankly support and vote for the amendment.

Mr FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I am sorry not to be able to join my voice to the chorus of approval with which the amendment to this resolution has been received. I am sorry that the resolution was brought into the House. There are people to be considered out of this House as well as those in it, and this is a question which touches the hearts and consciences of people of many different classes in all sections of this country. We are placed in this position that we must either vote—so the extremists will tell us—to insult one section of our population, or we must betray the other. If it were within the province of this legislature to decide the question, it might still be right and proper to bring it up in this House, but when it is one outside our jurisdiction, I think we should leave it severely alone. We know that in this country we have suffered in the past from agitations over questions of religion, which were exploited by political brigands and parasites, and we are liable to suffer from similar agitations in the future, if such questions are again introduced. It looks to me as if it were the intention of some people to introduce them. I am not one of those who object to this resolution because it deals with a subject which is within the sole jurisdiction of the Imperial parliament. I do not object to approaching the Imperial parliament. We have the right to do so, but there are many things which are right, which are not expedient. Having been a member for a number of years of the territorial assembly, I am well aware that however much an irresponsible House may know concerning any certain measure not within its jurisdiction, it is apt to deal with it in a different spirit from the legislature charged with the responsibility of settling the question. I notice there is a degree of carelessness and levity in our treatment of this question that I am sure we would not display if the responsibility of deciding it rested with us. I do not imagine that if we had such a responsibility, a resolution would be approved, hour after hour, in one form, and then, after hours of debate, a radical amendment, changing its nature, would be just as readily accepted. It seems to me that this readiness to accept a radical change argues a sense of irresponsibility, which is not creditable to this House.

With regard to the change that has been made, it is certainly an important one, and makes a radical difference in the resolution. Those hon. members who spoke in favour of the resolution as it stood, by doing so laid themselves open to the charge of being willing to forego the Protestant succession to the Crown of England. But the resolution has been amended in that particular, and now we are only dealing with it as regards the assertion of an insult to our Catholic fellow-citizens. I am not prepared to accept the statement that there is any insult intended. I take it that insult exists by reason of intent rather than by what is said, and there is no intent, and never was any, to insult any one's religious belief by requiring the King to take that solemn declaration.

The seconder of the resolution said whatever rights he claimed for himself he is willing to concede to others. I resemble him in that particular, but I say that the rights which I concede to others I claim for myself and those who think with me. If we admit the principle of Protestant succession to the Crown of England, then we admit the principle of establishing the Protestantism of the King by such form of words as may be necessary, and in so doing we do not insult any man's religious belief. It is the privilege of the members of every church to declare their religious belief by such form of words as they may think necessary. I do not think that our Roman Catholic friends will say that the form of words in which they profess their religious belief could not be construed as offensive to Protestants. No doubt the same view will hold with regard to the profession of faith of the Protestant church. These are subjects on which each one has the right to express his own opinion in his own way.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. McLENNAN. Would you call Roman Catholics idolaters ?

Mr. OLIVER. Nobody calls them idolaters.

Mr. McLENNAN. Read the declaration.

Mr. OLIVER. The declaration reads :

> And that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitous and idolatrous.

I humbly submit that it does not follow necessarily from that declaration that Catholics are idolaters. I am sorry that other hon. members do not look at this matter as I do. But I decline to be put in the position of stating that our constitution has systematically for 200 years insulted any class of the loyal citizens of this country. I deny that contention. I say that this matter of the declaration of the faith of the King of England is a necessity arising from the fact of the Protestant succession. The intolerance, if intolerance there be, is in that principle of Protestant succession. If a wrong is done, it is because the constitution demands that a Protestant and not a Catholic shall sit upon the Throne. That is where the difference lies between the case of a king and others. No Catholic is debarred from any office or position throughout the King's dominions, but still a Catholic is debarred from a seat on the Throne. That is intolerance if you like. I will admit that it is intolerance, but I will not admit that the form of words by which it is established that the King is, as required by the law to be, a Protestant, is an insult to anybody. With regard to the change that has been made in the resolution, I say that, when the principle of the Protestant succession is admitted, the contention contained in the resolution falls to the ground. The contention that any insult is contained in the constitution is as incorrect as to say that any insult is intended. I cannot, by supporting even this amended resolution, admit, as I say, that the constitution of England has insulted a part of the people of England for two hundred years, nor will I be a party to, saying that the King of England, when he took the coronation oath and made this declaration a few days ago, did, as a matter of fact any more than as a matter of intention, insult the Roman Catholic people of this country. I shall, therefore, vote against the resolution.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). As an independent member of this House, I feel that I would not do myself or the people of this country justice unless I expressed my opinion upon this question. I always had the idea that this parliament was instituted for the purpose of discussing politics and introducing legislation for the benefit of this country. I had no idea that it could at any time have the power to turn itself into a convocation of bishops to discuss religion. It seems to me that that is what it has been doing since three o'clock to-day, and I think it is time this discussion was ended.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). And it will end the sooner if hon. gentlemen opposite will keep quiet. I am built of the kind of stuff that will stand here till to-morrow morning if necessary. Now, I say, in all earnestness, that I hope and trust that this will be the last time that ever a resolution of this kind will be introduced into parliament. It is an insult to the people of this country for this House to sit here for twelve hours and discuss a thing that is not our business. I am satisfied that the people of England, whom we propose to advise in this matter, understand their business far better than we do, and that we should let them settle this question. I understand, from what the Prime Minister said, that we had been snubbed once for the advice we gave. I hope that that will not happen in this case. I have very little objection to the resolution, but I do object to forcing our opinion upon the British people. What would we think if the British parliament wasted their time in telling us what we should do here? We would think they had better mind their own business. I have not much more to say——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin)—but I could talk for a long time if I wished to. I only wish to protest now, and for all time against this question being brought up in this House. If I had to prescribe the oath for His Majesty, it would read something like this: 'I, King Edward VII., a Protestant firm in the faith, solemnly swear that I will give to all my subjects of every race, colour or creed, the right to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences; and no person shall interfere with the people of any religious faith, against the law, or make them afraid for anything they may do in religious matters.' No man, whatever his religion, could find fault with such a declaration as that. I hope that that is the last oath that will be given in this House, and I hope hon. members will all subscribe to it, and will live like upright, good, honest, Christian men.

Mr. WADE. The hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) has been good enough to state that I did not know the difference between transubstantiation and consubstantiation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member (Mr. Wade) wishes to make a personal explanation.

Mr. WADE. I fancy that it does not make much difference to this House whether I know the difference between transubstantiation and consubstantiation, but I wish to assert that the statement that I made here that the first paragraph of said declaration is offensive to the Lutherans as well as to Roman Catholics is perfectly correct; and, as authority, I would refer, if I may be permitted——

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. member that at this stage of the debate he is only permitted to make a personal explanation, because he has already spoken once.

Mr. JAMES M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MACLEAN. Another bishop.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And this bishop claims the right, as a Presbyterian bishop, to be heard upon this subject, and, perhaps, so far as learning is concerned, he would be able to say as much, and to as good purpose as many of the politicians who have spoken. I rise simply to state that I deeply regretted and felt deeply anxious over the whole question, from the time notice was given of this motion by the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Hon. Mr. Costigan). I regret the discussion of to-day for various reasons, and especially on account of the precedent which this House has set to-day for discussions of this kind. I certainly desire to follow my hon. friend from the west who has just spoken, and to say that I hope it will not be repeated. I think the politicians are bad theologians, and if I wished to study theology I would never come to the House of Commons to do so. Now, as a Presbyterian, I regret that the creeds of the church which I represent, and of the Church of England, which I so much respect, should be hauled before this House in the unceremonious way that we have to-day witnessed. I can respect the opinions of those who proposed the standards of the church, simply because I appreciate their historical benefit in the church to-day. I know that these men were men of God, were men of knowledge, were men of culture, were men who had the best interest of church and state at heart, and if they gave expression to strong views it was because they were surrounded by strong circumstances, because they were surrounded by oppression and wrongs inflicted upon them. These were the circumstances that brought into life these strong declarations in reference to matters of faith and practice. That is why these creeds have come down to us with such a history, and when we, in the beginning of the twentieth century, speak in the freedom and liberty which we enjoy, we are apt to look upon them as being extremely odious and, perhaps, objectionable. But we need to put them back into their historical setting, and then we will see the wisdom, the tact, the ability, the piety and the prudence of such statements and such declarations.

Now, though I am a member of the Presbyterian Church, and for forty-five years a minister and a religious teacher in that church, and hold to-day my full standing, I claim that I am no bigot, that I sympathize with religious toleration, and that I am quite willing to accord to my fellow-citizens of the Roman Catholic religion in this country every benefit, and every privilege and liberty which I claim as an individual, and would be willing to sustain any movement in that direction. Yet, after all, I deprecate that this matter was brought up for discussion, not only because it will give rise to endless discussions throughout the country, but because it will give to bigots an opportunity to make speeches, semi-political, it may be, and semi-religious, and men who are not reasonable will seek to make capital from this text that we have given them. It would have been better for this government, it would have been a great deal better for this parliament, a great deal better for this country, both religiously and politically, if this discussion had never taken place. I want to say further, that I had the honour in India not many years ago of being present when religious toleration was proclaimed by the Empress of India to the people of India, and the resolution which we now propose is in keeping with the spirit of that declaration. I was opposed to the resolution as it was first introduced, and had made up my mind that I would vote against it. But now that the mover has accepted an amendment which largely changes the nature of the resolution and its bearings, my mind is largely relieved on that score, and I can support the amendment. In questions of this kind it does not do to be too specific, my objection was that the resolution was too specific, and that the whole thing could be better summed up in a single sentence or two, which should contain a general principle without bringing in either the Roman Catholic or any other sect. But I hold that this declaration should be purged of anything that is offensive, in the broadest sense, to any British subject in the empire, and with that in view I am prepared to support the amendment.

Mr. EMMERSON. I rise to make an explanation. I am sure my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) must have misapprehended what I stated this evening with reference to himself. I did make a reference to the fact that the member for Halifax had shown him a lack of sympathy with reference to the very excellent points which he had made. There was a lack of sympathy from those around him, but I referred to the member for Pictou as apparently being the only one who had given any applause to the remarks uttered by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace).

Mr. DOUGLAS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I be permitted a word of personal explanation? I do not feel the need at all of any sympathy from the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) in respect to the matter referred to.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I have not taken up any time so far in the discussion of this matter, and I crave the indulgence of the House for a few minutes. I confess to some embarrassment in view of the amendment which has been suggested to meet the objections which were raised to the resolution presented by the member for Victoria, N.B., (Hon. Mr. Costigan). For my part, I have no fault whatever to find with the remarks with which the hon. gentleman presented his resolution to the House. But, in common with many other hon. members, I think I have good ground to find fault with the manner in which this resolution has been presented. The hon. gentleman desires us to believe that he is actuated solely with a view to secure for those for whom he says he speaks, those whom he represents, an amelioration of the declaration which is now made by the sovereign of this empire. I think that a matter affecting the rights and liberties of any class or section of His Majesty's subjects is a matter in itself of sufficient importance to justify even such a representative member as the hon. gentleman claims to be in asking the co-operation and support of every member of this House. I think if he desired to secure the greatest possible benefit for those whom he represents, before he introduced this resolution it was his duty to see if there was any divergence of opinion, and what that divergence was, between himself and others as to the terms of his resolution. But, instead of pursuing that course, as a man actuated wholly by the desire to benefit his co-religionists might be expected to do, he took the opportunity of moving under the forms of the House when a motion was made to go into Committee of Supply, so that his resolution could not be amended in any way. He made the resolution as stiff and as strong as it was possible for him to make it; and it is only after the resolution has been debated for some nine or ten hours that a slight amendment has been suggested, and I believe has been accepted by the hon. gentleman and hon. members on both sides of the House. I stand here to-night as one who believes from the very bottom of my soul in the principle of civil and religious liberty. I believe also in absolute equality before the law, and I desire that any disability under which Roman Catholics exist, either in this or any other part of the British Empire, shall be removed at once and for ever. That is my confession of faith, and I am not ashamed to make it here. I have made it many times before, and as long as I am spared I shall continue to make that my confession of faith and of doctrine which I most firmly believe. But, the hon. gentleman, as I have already said, did not ask the co-operation or support of those who differ from him in these matters as to the framing of his resolution, or as to the time and manner of its introduction. If he consulted any person in connection with this matter, he consulted the right hon. Prime Minister, and when, at an earlier stage in this debate, the suggestion was made to the right hon. gentleman by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) that the debate be adjourned so that an opportunity might be given to the hon. gentlemen who, believing in equality, desired to frame a resolution that could be passed unanimously by this House, that reasonable request on the part of the hon. member for East York was absolutely refused. We are kept here until one o'clock in the morning trying to reach a conclusion that will do honour to the Commons of Canada and reflect the voice and opinions of those whom we represent. I say it is a most unreasonable proposition that an amendment to a motion of this kind should be presented to us at this stage of the debate, and that we should be asked to decide at once upon it. As I understand the amendment, it reads as follows. I have only been able to get it into my hands within the past few minutes :

That all the words on the second page of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Victoria be struck out, and the following substituted : That in the opinion of this House the declaration referred to in the above-mentioned Act of Settlement should be amended by eliminating therefrom all those expressions which are especially offensive to the religious belief of any subjects of the British empire.

The amendment goes a considerable distance to mitigate the objections I have to the resolution, but it does not go far enough; and desirous as I am of seeing the resolution carried out, unless an addition is made to the amendment I shall have to vote against it. Being a layman I do not profess to know what the exact meaning of the amendment is, but the suggestion I would make is that there should be added the following words : 'so long as the distinctively Protestant character of the declaration is maintained.' It seems to me that this is not an unreasonable proposition. It has been conceded by hon. gentlemen who have spoken on both sides of the House, that it is an absolute prerequisite that he or she who is the sovereign of the British empire shall be a Protestant. That condition being admitted and agreed to, if the parliament of Canada memorializes the Imperial parliament, or the Crown, to have an amendment made to the declaration, I think it is not an unreasonable proposition to suggest that when we are asking for changes in the declaration, when we ask that the words which have been objected to, and which are offensive to our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects, should be eliminated, we should still preserve the feature of the declaration which has been taken by the sovereigns of Great Britain for the past 200 years—that they shall continue to make a declaration in which the Protestant features in the present declaration shall be maintained and continued. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the view which I desire to present, and I have tried to do it as briefly as I could. Let me say two or three words more. I dispute the contention with all respect and humility which has been presented here again and again, that it is the duty of this parliament to pass a resolution of this kind or a memorial of this kind at any stage of its proceedings. The Prime Minister stated this afternoon in the course of the debate that the resolution which was passed unanimously by this House last year, endorsing the position and action which the Imperial authorities took respecting the Transvaal, had been graciously received and acknowledged by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. It is quite true ; but if my memory serves me right, the resolution which was passed by this House unanimously endorsed the position which the government of Great Britain took respecting the Transvaal, because that government was acting with the desire and with the object to secure for British subjects who resided in that part of the empire the same religious and civil liberty that we enjoy, and which British subjects enjoy in every portion of the empire ; and the reply which was received from the Secretary of State for the Colonies was a reply to an address which expressed satisfaction with the action of the Imperial authorities in their efforts to secure equal rights and liberties to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects. If there was any class of Her Majesty's subjects which did not enjoy equal civil and religious liberty, I would be one of the first to advocate that any disability under which they laboured should be removed. For the past 200 years the declaration has been subscribed to by those who have occupied the position of sovereign of Great Britain, and the British Empire. The declaration was imposed upon them, but why ? Because the framers of that declaration were smarting under a series of the most intolerable wrongs and injustice which alone could justify the use of such language. The hon. member for Victoria speaks as one representing a certain class of this community. He has a right to speak as the representative of that class if he pleases, but I would ask him and the people whom he represents if the church to which they owe allegiance has changed any of its canon law which obtained 200 years ago, or if its authorities have acknowledged any abbreviation of the rights and privileges and powers which that church claimed belonged to it 200 years ago? Two hundred years ago the head of the Roman Catholic Church—I do not desire to speak with anything but the greatest respect of that august ecclesiastic—claimed the power to depose and absolve. Has he relinquished that power? Does he claim the right to exercise that power and jurisdiction to-day? If he does, not one jot or tittle of the declaration which Her Majesty subscribed to, and which His Majesty subscribed to, should be removed. The foundation which was laid 200 years ago by those who framed this declaration was laid broad and deep and strong. A stately and superb edifice has been erected on this foundation in 200 years. Every man who is a British subject has now the fullest measure of civil and religious liberty accorded to him under the constitution which was then firmly established, and which has been growing steadily in power, up to the present time, and Roman Catholics experience only disabilities that are common to their Protestant fellow-subjects. I think, therefore, that we should be very chary of inviting the Imperial parliament to amend the declaration which was found to be so essential when it was passed. The Prime Minister of England, Lord Salisbury, has made a statement respecting this matter. His attention has been drawn to it by some eminent Roman Catholic peers whose loyalty is above suspicion. Lord Salisbury has pointed to the condition of things which existed when the declaration was placed on the statute-books, and he has referred to the fact that that condition is happily passing away. Sir, the liberties of the Roman Catholics of the United Kingdom and of every other part of the British Empire are perfectly safe in the keeping of the parliament of Great Britain and Ireland. That parliament will, I have no doubt, and I hope very speedily, amend the wording of the declaration that is complained of, and wipe out any portion of it which is especially offensive to any section or creed in this empire. The parliament of Great Britain is charged with that jurisdiction, and in view of the responses which were received from the Imperial authorities when resolutions were passed by this House and by other legislatures in Canada, respecting matters over which we had no jurisdiction, I think we are justified in asking that great care and deliberation should be exercised now before we place ourselves in a position to receive another rebuff. It has been said by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) and others, that no special sentence or paragraph in the declaration is offensive to any other class or creed of His Majesty's subjects. That may be quite true, but surely we do not overlook the fact that when the declaration was framed it was framed because of the condition of things that then existed. It was framed because of the machinations of foreign potentates against the liberties of the people of England, and it was framed in the only language that could be found at that time which would give that security, freedom and liberty to the English people which they desired. I wish to express my regret that this resolution has been introduced at all into the parliament of Canada. It deals with a question belonging to the parliament of England, that mother of parliaments, that parliament which has always been in the van in promoting the interests of all races and creeds of British subjects. That parliament is seized with the power of amending the declaration, and I repeat that the liberty of all classes and creeds of His Majesty's subjects is perfectly safe in the keeping of that parliament. I do not desire personally to see a division in the House on this question, but if the amendment which has been suggested—and which I believe has been accepted by hon. gentlemen on both sides—is further amended by the addition of the words which I have jotted down, I shall deem it my duty, so far as I am concerned, to support it, and will not take up the time by a division of the House. One word before I sit down. The hon. gentleman who introduced the resolution (Mr. Costigan) and the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) have quoted from the Guardian newspaper which is published in London, Eng. They quoted from the edition of February 13. I would not like to do either of the hon. gentlemen an injustice, but I think they left the impression on the House that the views they were quoting were the views of the journal itself. I draw the attention of those hon. gentlemen to the fact, if I am correct in my premises, that the opinions they quoted were merely the opinions of a correspondent, and the editor is very careful to say in the journal:

> Opinions expressed in signed articles, or in articles marked communicated, or from correspondents, are not necessarily those of the Guardian. The appearance of those articles only implies that the editor thinks they are of such interest as to justify their publication.

The appearance of such a communication in a journal of this kind is in itself an evidence that the people of Great Britain and Ireland are becoming alive to the inequalities which may exist in the declaration; that they are discussing the question of its amendment, and I repeat with all humility and with the greatest possible respect, that the parliament of Canada ought to leave this matter to the authority to which it properly belongs. We have no jurisdiction over it in this parliament, but if we pass a resolution by a divided vote, the force of that resolution will be materially weakened. I should hope that even at this late hour it might be possible to so further amend this proposition of the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Costigan) as to have it meet with the unanimous approval of the House so that it might be sent across the ocean as the undivided opinion of the parliament of Canada. I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for taking up so much of the time of the House, but I felt it incumbent upon me to say at least these few words before the debate closed and the division was taken.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Costigan).

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended agreed to.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN moved :

That an humble address be voted to His Excellency the Governor General praying him to transmit the address of this House to His Majesty in such manner as to His Excellency may seem fit, in order that the same may be laid at the foot of the Throne.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN moved :

That the said address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of this House as are of the hon. the Privy Council.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not suppose the House desires to proceed with Supply at this hour. I beg to move :

That the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply at the next sitting of the House.

Motion agreed to.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I desire to have called the resolution with regard to the Pacific cable, which requires some urgency. My hon. friend the Postmaster General wants to lay some papers on the Table.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). I ask leave to lay on the Table a copy of an agreement between the colony of New South Wales and the Eastern Telegraph Company. I do so now in order that the papers may be looked at by any hon. gentlemen who take an interest in the matter, so that we may be prepared to proceed with the resolution on Tuesday next.

VISIT OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CORNWALL AND YORK.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he can inform the House whether he has had any answer from the Imperial government in regard to the proposed change of programme of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York. I am anxious to know, as the British Columbia legislature has unanimously passed a resolution asking Their Highnesses to visit British Columbia, as I learn from a telegram received from Premier Dunsmuir, to-night.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must answer my hon. friend that there is correspondence still going on upon this subject. I am not in a position to state anything further now.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.50 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 4, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 14) to incorporate the Century Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Monk.

P.E.I. MAILS.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. Were tenders invited for the carrying of mails between Kensington and Park Corner, French River and Long River, all in Prince Edward Island, in the year 1900?
2. When were tenders invited, the names of the parties tendering, and amount of their respective tenders?
3. To whom was the contract awarded, and amount of his tender?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

Tenders were invited for this service in 1900, the notices being dated the 18th July, and the tenders due to be opened on the 31st August. The following is the list of tenders received :

John C. Durant	$336
Edward Hillman	375
Gordon Tupline	380

The post office inspector at Charlottetown, to whom each tender was in turn sent beginning with the lowest, reported that the sureties for the lowest tenderer declined to act, that the sureties offered by the second tenderer were not good for the amount of the bond, and that the third tenderer, who was the former contractor, was strongly recommended for the service. As a consequence, the department made a contract with the third tenderer, Mr. Gordon Tupline, at the rate of his tender viz.: $380 a year.

JOHN W. MEALEY.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Fowler—asked :

1. Is John W. Mealey, of Pennfield, N.B., an officer of the Fishery Department?
2. If so, when was he appointed?
3. What is his salary?
4. And will he be required to live at Beaver Harbour, or some other place convenient to the fishing grounds?
5. Is he the same John W. Mealey who was an officer of the customs at Lepreaux, N.B., and if so, why was he dismissed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) :

1. Yes, a fishery guardian.
2. 15th January, 1901.
3. $1.25 per day and expenses, when actually employed.
4. No instructions as to where he should live.
5. He is presumed to be the same man. He resigned his office in the customs on the 15th August, 1899, and his resignation was accepted on the 17th August, 1899. He was not dismissed from the customs service.

HOPEWELL CAPE WHARF.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Fowler—asked :

1. Who were the tenderers for the construction of the Hopewell Cape wharf, Albert county, N.B., and what was the amount of each tender?
2. What time does the contract call for the completion of the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte) :

1. Warren Downey, & Ernest W. Lynds, Hopewell, N.B. $19,988
   J. B. McManus, Memramcook, N.B. 25,000
   Reid & Archibald, Halifax, N.S. 27,937

TRENT CANAL.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Who was the successful tenderer for section No. 3 of the Balsam and Lake Simcoe division of the Trent canal, and what was the amount of the tender?
2. Who were the other tenderers, and at what figures did they tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Brown & Aylmer are the successful tenderers for section 3, of the Balsam and Lake Simcoe division of the Trent canal, and the amount of their tender as extended upon estimated quantities is $369,202 25

2. Magann & Gibson $407,665 25
Larkin & Sangster . . . 481,226 50
W. H. Davis 566,783 25
Rogers & Taylor.. .... 532,594 00

MAIL CONTRACT, ALMA.

Mr. McGOWAN asked :

What was the date the last time the contract for carrying the mails from Alma station, Ont., on the Grand Trunk Railway, to the post office was advertised and let by public tender? To whom let and the amount? Has said contract been since renewed by the Postmaster General without tender? If so, to whom, and the remuneration paid for such services? What arrangement was made with the contractor when the service was increased?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

Notices were issued on the 13th December, 1894, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 25th January, 1895, for a contract for four years from the 1st April, 1895. Two tenders were received viz.: From Alexander Gale, and Edward O'Neill, each at fifteen cents per trip, and the tenderers having been asked to bid again, Mr. Gale, whose offer at twelve and a half cents per trip was the lowest, was awarded the contract at that rate, and a four years contract entered into with him. On the 11th June, 1895, the post office at Alma was removed, and the length of the route increased, and a corresponding increase was made in the rate of payment, which was made fourteen and a half cents per trip. It having been subsequently reported that the service had been satisfactorily performed, and the conditions advantageous to the public interest, and acting under the provisions of section 2, of clause 61, of the Postal Act, authority was given for the renewal of Mr. Gale's contract for a further term of four years from the 1st of April, 1901, on the same terms and conditions. On the 1st of August, 1899, the service of Alma was increased from two to four trips daily, and a temporary agreement was made with Mr. Gale for the additional semi-daily service at thirty-five dollars per annum. This agreement to continue until the expiration of the existing contract viz.: March 31, 1903.

PORT COLBORNE HARBOUR WORKS.

Mr. LANCASTER asked :

1. Who was the successful tenderer for the harbour and other works at Port Colborne, Ont., awarded by the government last year?

2. What was the amount of the accepted tender?

3. Who were the other tenderers, and at what figure did they tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte) :

Mr. BLAIR.

1. Hogan & Macdonald.

2. $395,000. M. J. Hogan, 114 Metcalfe Avenue, A. R. Macdonell, Westmount, Montreal.

3. The Kunkin Bros., Construction Co., Cleveland, Ohio.... .... .. $447,399 80
W. J. Pourpore and M. McAuliff, Montreal. .. 475,000 00
H. T. Dunbar, Port Colborne.... .... 532,237 93
Mann, Simpson & Turner, Montreal 553,600 00
Geo. Goodwin, Ottawa.. 631,000 00

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

As regards the Department of Railways and Canals, I beg to reply :

1. Hogan & Macdonell are the successful tenderers for 'improvements at Port Colborne.'

2. The amount of accepted tender applying schedule prices to estimated quantities is $906,519.90

3. P. H. Gilbert .. .. .. $ 921,943 00
Dunbar & McNaughton 978,119 50
Canadian Construction Co.. .. .. 1,024,687 65
Wm. Buckner 1,041,701 60

ALLOWANCES TO CENSUS COMMISSIONERS AND ENUMERATORS.

Mr. MARTINEAU (by Mr. Talbot) asked : (Translation.)

1. Whether the government is aware of the existence of a lack of conformity between section 24 of the Census Act, Chapter 58, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and the table of allowances paid to the census commissioners and enumerators, approved by Order in Council of the 11th March, 1891 ?

2. Is it the intention of the government to secure the adoption of a table analogous to that of the 11th March, 1891, for the next census ?

3. If so, is it the intention of the government to so amend said section of the Census Act as to remove the said anomaly and allow the adoption by the Governor General in Council of a table of census allowances adapted to the requirements of each case and to the amount of work done by each enumerator and each commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). (Translation) :

(1.) Yes.

(2.) The question is under consideration.

(3.) We do not think it necessary to amend the Census Act in order to accomplish that object.

YUKON DISTRICT—LIQUOR PERMITS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

How much liquor, if any, were any or all of the following persons permitted by permit, letter or otherwise, to ship or send into the Yukon district in the seasons of 1899 and 1900, respectively :—
Henry Macaulay, Esq.
— Houston, Esq.
Messrs. Murray and Ross?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Henry Macaulay—No permit was issued to Henry Macaulay, Esq., at any time. The department consented to an importation by Macaulay Bros. of 2,000 gallons of beer in 1900, under permit formerly issued by the commissioner. A permit for this amount was subsequently issued by the department.

—— Houston—2,000 gallons of liquor in 1899, but none in 1900. Permit issued by the commissioner, and subsequently allowed by the department.

Murray and Ross—None in 1899. 6,400 gallons of liquor in 1900 issued originally by the commissioner, and subsequently allowed by the department. 3,600 gallons of beer in 1900.

I may say that my hon. friend from North Oxford (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) who acted for me last year at various times, has called attention to the fact that there is an omission in the return which I laid upon the Table the other day. I will correct it by a supplementary return to-morrow.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW—BOAT-BUILDING AT WHITE HORSE.

Mr. PRIOR—by Mr. Borden (Halifax)—asked :

1. Have any complaints been received by the government from British Columbia or Yukon district about aliens being hired in Seattle and taken to White Horse to build boats there?
2. If so, from whom were said complaints received and on what dates?
3. Did the government acknowledge receipt of those complaints, if any?
4. Has the government taken any action in regard to this matter?
5. If so, what?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. Yes.
2. From James Tagg, president of the Shipwrights' and Caulkers' Union, Victoria, B.C., on behalf of that union, received on the 25th February, 1901.
3. Yes.
4. Yes.
5. Instructions have been sent to the Alien Labour officer in Vancouver, B.C., to make an immediate investigation, in order to ascertain the facts, and to report thereon, with a view to further action.

BANK ACT—UNAUTHORIZED USE OF 'SAVINGS BANK,' &c.

Mr. PREFONTAINE—by Mr. Angers—asked :

Is it the intention of the government to so amend the Bank Act as to prevent and prohibit the using by any person or persons of any name or description calculated to lead the public to consider such persons authorized to carry on a banking business, receive deposits bearing interest, give negotiable receipts and discount notes, as for instance by using the words 'savings bank,' 'discount office,' or other like designations?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). It is not the intention of the government to introduce any legislation on the subject at present. The existing law is probably as effective as any legislation could be. Section 100 of the Bank Act enacts that every person assuming or using the title of 'bank,' 'banking company,' 'banking house,' 'banking association,' or 'banking institution,' without being authorized so to do by that Act, or by some other Act in force in that behalf, is guilty of an offence against the Bank Act, and thereby becomes liable to fine, or imprisonment, or both.

BANK ACT—MORE EFFECTIVE INSPECTION.

Mr. PREFONTAINE—by Mr. Angers—asked :

Whether it is the intention of the government to so amend the Bank Act as to provide for a more complete and effective inspection of the financial institutions of the country?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). It is not the intention of the government to introduce any measure on this subject. Under recent legislation provision was made for the inspection of the circulation of every chartered bank by officers of the Canadian Bankers' Association, and arrangements for this inspection are now in progress.

INSPECTION OF POTASH AND ASHES.

Mr. PREFONTAINE—(by Mr. Angers)—asked : (Translation.)

Whether it is the intention of the government to introduce, this session, a measure providing for the compulsory inspection of potash and ashes offered for sale in Canada, in accordance with the petition of the Board of Trade of Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) : (Translation.) The matter is under consideration.

PRINTING OF 'HANDBOOK OF CANADA.'

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. In what printing office was the 'Handbook of Canada,' which was distributed at the Paris Exposition last year, printed?

2. What was the total issue of said volume?
3. What was the average cost per volume?
4. Who supplied the paper for the work?
5. If printed in any establishment other than the Government Printing Bureau, why was this done?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. S. A. Fisher) :

1. Herald Printing Company.
2. 10,000 copies—5,000 English, 5,000 French.
3. 52 89-100 cents per copy, which was arranged for and approved by the Printing Bureau and done through the Printing Bureau.
4. Herald Printing Company.
5. This was done on a report from the Printing Bureau that pressure of work there prevented this book being printed at the Printing Bureau.

I. C. R.—DISMISSAL OF MECHANICS, MONCTON SHOPS.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

1. How many mechanics have been dismissed from the railway shops at Moncton since the 7th day of November last?
2. For what reasons have these men been dismissed?
3. At whose instance were they dismissed?
4. Were charges preferred against them, or any of them, and if so, by whom, and were investigations held?
5. Have their places in the shops been filled by new appointments?
6. What are the names of the men dismissed, and of the new appointments?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). On being made aware that this question was on the Paper, I directed that the information should be procured as soon as possible from Moncton. I think it will be several days before I shall have it, but as soon as it comes, I shall notify the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler).

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Statement showing the number of employees in the civil service, outside and inside, permanent and non-permanent, on 1st July, 1900, showing separately the number of English-speaking employees and the number of French-speaking employees in the several departments, with their salaries ; also the number of employees of the first class in each department, with their salaries and their nationalities.—Mr. Angers.

Copies of all circulars, papers and instructions sent out by the Inland Revenue Department during the past year in reference to certain brands of baking powder being condemned by the department, and notifying merchants to cease their sale under penalty.—Mr. Roche (Marquette).

Copies of all orders in council, correspondence, reports, papers and documents in relation to changes in contracts for improvement or construction of the St. Lawrence canals from 1st January, 1897, up to the present time, and in relation to all extras allowed to any and all contractors for or in respect of work upon such canals or any of them, and all papers showing the amount of extras paid to any and each contractor upon each of such canals from the 1st January, 1897, up to the present time.—Hon. Mr. Haggart, by Hon. Mr. Tisdale.

Return of all correspondence, petitions or other documents between the Indian Department and Alexander Marchel, chief of the band of Micmac Indians residing on the Indian reserve, Saint Ann de Restigouche, P.Q., for years 1900 and 1901, relative to the Indian agent or his duties in connection with the said band.—Mr. Sproule.

Copies of all reports, orders in council, papers and correspondence respecting the dismissal or resignation of W. A. Russell, late inspector of steamboats.—Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Copies of all orders in council and all correspondence, contracts or agreements, between the government or any member of the same, or any officer of any department, and the Kingston Locomotive Works Company, in reference to the supplying of locomotives or other rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway; also what payments have been made on same, and the date of said payments.—Hon. Mr. Haggart, by Hon. Mr. Tisdale.

Copies of all correspondence, letters, papers and documents relating to the alleged interference with the fishing berths of the members of the Shad and East Dover Fishing Association in the county of Halifax, and all letters and communications to the government or Department of Marine and Fisheries from the said association, or from any person on its behalf relating to the matters aforesaid.—Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Copy of the memorial to His Excellency the Governor General and any communication to the government of Canada, or any member thereof, respecting the requirements of the Yukon territory, and all reports, communications and orders in council respecting the same or any subject of the said memorial.—Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Copies of all accounts, agreements, receipts and vouchers in connection with the settlement of the petition of right, Pictou Harbour Commissioners vs. the Queen, which was completed by payment in 1898.—Mr. Bell (Pictou).

BOARD OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan) moved :

That this House is of opinion that the public interests demand that the railway companies of Canada should at the earliest moment be brought under control of a board of railway commissioners, clothed with full power to enforce the provisions of the Railway Act, and to prescribe and enforce the observance of such regulations as may be necessary in the public interest.

He said : Mr. Speaker, the motion I place in your hands is not new to this House. It was first introduced by the late member for Winnipeg, Mr. Jamieson, and later by the late member for Macdonald, Mr. Rutherford, in 1899. Last year I had the honour of moving practically the same resolution in this House with reference to the appointment of a railway commission. Those who are interested in this question had reason to hope that the government would take some action last year toward the establishment of a railway commission for the purpose of controlling the railroads in this country, and settling disputes between the people and those corporations. But the government have not done so, and still there is a growing feeling in this country that something of that kind should be done. We know as a matter of fact that all agitation in this country with reference to government ownership and control of railroads is the outcome of the way the railroads have been oppressing the people, and discriminating against one part of the country in favour of another. When we turn to the province of Manitoba and see what is taking place there to-day, when we find that the people of that province, in their desire to get relief from railroad monopoly, have undertaken practically to purchase 350 odd miles of railway for seven million dollars, a railroad which is not worth more than three and a half million dollars, we must come to the conclusion that the people are in earnest in their determination to get relief from the monopolies under which they are labouring.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this sentiment is growing stronger in the country day by day. We see articles in the newspapers and read of speeches made on public platforms in favour of government control of railroads. I may say that I am in favour of government control. But the kind of control government should have over railroads is a matter on which there is a great difference of opinion in this country. Some hon. gentlemen in this House are of opinion that the government should undertake the purchase or lease of all the railroads in this country. In that opinion I cannot concur, for the simple reason that I think that would be too large an obligation for the people of this country to undertake at the present time; nor do I think it is necessary for the government to purchase or lease all the railroads in this country. We heard a statement the other day by an hon. gentleman in this House that we could lease the Canadian Pacific Railway system and also the Grand Trunk Railway system for $1 a year each. Well, Mr. Speaker, taking the same basis of calculation as was adopted in Manitoba, I suppose the hon. gentleman would expect the people of this country to assume all the liabilities of these railroads, and all railroads that we might rent in this country. Now, when we take into consideration that the majority of the railroads in this coutnry are bonded for double what they are worth, I do not think this proposition will commend itself to the people of this country. Take the case of the Calgary and Edmonton road as one in point. There is a road bonded for five million dollars; and I think you will find the statement in the report of the Minister of Railways that the road did not cost more than three million dollars. I wonder if those hon. gentlemen who propose that we should lease these roads or purchase them, think we should pay to any corporation five million dollars for a road that they tell us only cost three million dollars. Take the Regina and Long Lake road, and you will find the same thing occurs there. You will find the statement in the report of the Minister of Railways that that road cost something like two and a half million dollars, and you will find that it is bonded for $3,800,000; and so on all along the line.

I suppose there is hardly a road in this country that is not bonded for double what the road is worth. In my humble judgment it would be a very foolish thing for the government to go into a scheme of this kind, but, there is another system of controlling the roads. We have power by the Railway Act, under section 224 and some other sections, to regulate rates and see that there is no discrimination. This is all the control the people want. All that we require is to provide some machinery to make that provision effective. It may be said that we have the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, but the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is composed of men who are very busy, who have not time to take up all the cases that should come before them, and the business of the country is rapidly increasing. The carrying corporations are extending the lines of transportation, opening up new roads, and it is time that we had some authority that we could rely upon to bring the railways under control, and to do away with unjust discriminations. Now, I do not think the people of the country care very much whether the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Grand Trunk Railway, or any other companies own the railways, or whether they operate them, so long as the roads are under proper control, and so long as they are not oppressed by being charged excessive rates for carrying the products of the country from one part to the other. We have paid millions of dollars in subsidies to railway corporations in aid of the railways that have been built during the last few years, and not only have we paid millions of dollars in money, but we have given some sixty odd million acres of the best and most fertile lands in the North-west Territories to railway corporations, and I think it is not an unreasonable request to be made by the people, who really have the greatest interest in the soil of the west, that somebody should be appointed to control railway corporations and to see that the people are afforded a reasonable amount of relief. I may say that I am not opposed to granting railway subsidies. I believe that in a new country like this it is impossible to have railways built into new portions of the country unless the government give some assistance to the parties who undertake to build these roads. If we are to make room for new settlement in the west we have to open up new tracts of agricultural lands, and the government should come to the aid of railway corporations who undertake such works, but, the time is past when we should continue to grant either land or money to these corporations. What I would propose would be that the government should, where it is necessary to build a railway—and where there is no necessity, a railway should not be allowed to be built—give to the corporation that undertakes to build that road a guarantee of their bonds. The government should guarantee their bonds to a certain extent, proportionate to the cost of the road, and take a first mortgage on the road to secure the loan. When the country fills up, and when the road commences to pay and the earning power of the road is such that it can pay interest on its bonds, it would be an easy matter for the company to get other parties to take up the bonds, thus relieving the government of their guarantee and the government would relinquish their mortgage. If a corporation were not able to meet their obligations the government could take over the road, which would then belong to the country, and the country would have an asset for the money it had advanced. That would be a preferable plan to the one we have hitherto adopted of granting large tracts of land and large sums of money in subsidies to railway corporations.

As to the proposal to appoint a commission, I may say that it is not a radical measure. They have had a railway commission in Great Britain for a number of years. The Act appointing the commission there was passed in 1873, and a commission of three was appointed to hold office for five years. They were to receive £3,000 each, and were to be assisted by two assistant commissioners of £1,500 each.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that the English Act ?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes ; they were to hold office during good behaviour, one of the commissioners being a business man, another a railway man, and another a lawyer. So that you see that they appointed a railway commission years and years ago in Great Britain in the same way that we are asking to have a commission appointed in this country. In the United States, and we will be more interested, I suppose, because that country is close at hand and we know what is taking place there, nearly all the states of the union have had railway commissions. I have here, in my hand, the 23rd annual report of the Iowa State Railway Commission, and if any hon. gentleman will take the trouble to read this report, he will come to the conclusion that the sooner we have a railway commission in this country the better it will be for all concerned, not only for the people, but for the railway corporations themselves, because, I suppose, there are cases where people complain without having justification for the complaints they make. We find that this is no new or radical proposal. In the United States they have two kinds of railway commissions ; in the old states, Massachusetts, for instance, they have what is called an advisory commission. An advisory commission is a commission which is appointed without power to arrange rates or settle disputes. They are appointed to arbitrate and advise as to disputes, and to make a report to the legislature, if a settlement has not been made, so that the legislature will then be in a position to legislate intelligently, and give relief to the people. In the western states they take a more advanced view ; Illinois led off, and the other states followed in the appointment of commissions with power to regulate freight rates, to settle disputes and to deal with complaints of discrimination, not only that, but to deal with any dispute that may arise between the individual and the railway corporation. I have here the report of the Iowa commission, showing in one case where they have settled a dispute between a railway corporation and grain shippers about the scarcity of cars. That is a thing that we are troubled with all the time in the North-west Territories. Again, there is a case of excessive rates charged which the commission settled. Again, the people complained that they were not getting sufficient facilities for the shipping and handling of grain, and this case was settled. There are two cases in which complaints were made by shippers that they were overcharged. These cases were settled. Another case involving the laying of a side track into an elevator was settled. We have, in the west, disputes as to getting side tracks laid in to elevators. There are several other cases besides those which I have mentioned which were settled in Iowa. Any person reading this report must come to the conclusion that such a commission as this would be a good thing for us to have in this country. In reference to a commission here, I would suggest it should be established on the same lines as those adopted in the western states, a commission with power to deal with all disputes between the individual and the railway corporation. Another thing I would suggest in reference to the functions of a railway commission in this country, is this : There is not the least doubt, as every hon. gentleman in this House knows, that a great deal of the time of the House, not only this year, but in years gone by, has been taken up in dealing with what are called 'straw charters.' Charter-mongers come here to get charters in the hope of being able to secure a subsidy. The moment they have a charter and get the subsidy they have something to sell which has not cost them anything. They toil not, neither do they spin. It is high time that that sort of thing should be stopped, and that these charter-mongers should be choked off.

If we had a proper railway commission appointed we should have all applications for railway charters submitted to that commission, which would investigate at to whether there was necessity for the proposed roads being constructed, and on the report of the railway commission for or against, parliament could deal with the application intelligently. That railway commission could also report on the probable cost of the construction of the road, and then parliament could insert a clause empowering the incorporators to bond that road only for what it was likely to cost, so we would not have a repetition of the scandals in connection with the Calgary and Edmonton road and the Regina and Long Lake road in which people were enticed—to use a mild expression—to invest their money without any chance of getting it back. That was an injury to the credit of Canada. If all these applications for charters were referred to a competent commission we would have fewer applications here session after session. There are cases too in which legitimate railway companies ask for charters which should not be granted, because if you build a line parallel to an existing line the work will have to be divided between the competing lines, and somebody will have to pay the piper. If a line is paralleled in one portion of the country the people living on that line in another portion of the country will have to make up for the loss, and in days gone by the people of the North-west Territories and Manitoba have suffered in that respect. We feel strongly on this railway question in Manitoba and the Territories, and we have a right to do so because we have suffered for years and years from railway oppression and extortion. Nevertheless you have gentlemen, employed no doubt by railway corporations, travelling through the country and writing letters to the press trying to make people believe that there is no discrimination and that the people in one part of the country are treated just the same as the people in another part. In the North-west Territories we are some 2,000 miles from the head of ocean navigation at Montreal and close to 3,000 miles from the sea-board. The great problem with our people is as to how they are to get their products to the markets of the world so as to enable them to compete with people living in other localities. We do not expect to get our produce carried for nothing ; all we want is reasonable rates. We are prepared to pay just as much as they pay in any other portion of the Dominion, but when we are made to pay double it is time for us to raise our voices against this oppression.

I have taken the trouble to prepare a few figures in connection with this discrimination. It has been said there is no discrimination in the west, but I am prepared to prove to the House and to the country that discrimination does exist there in connection with the carrying of our products. Look at the enormous freight rates we pay on wheat alone. We pay 14 cents per hundred pounds for carrying our wheat from the city of Winnipeg to Fort William or Port Arthur, a distance of 448 miles.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). It was 21 cents a few years ago.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, that is true. Up to three years ago it was 17 cents a hundred pounds from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, and then the government of the day came to the relief of the settlers in that portion of the country, and in the arrangement they made for the building of the Crow's Nest Pass railway they got a reduction of 3 cents a hundred pounds on the freight rate. Let me tell the House that that comparatively small reduction, on the average wheat crop of the province of Manitoba amounted to something like $600,000 saved to the farmers. The production of wheat in that country is increasing by leaps and bounds and we may assume that if this increase continues, then in five years about one million dollars would be saved to the farmers of that country on account of this small reduction alone.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). What distance did you say that wheat was hauled ?

Mr. DAVIS. About 448 miles. If we take into consideration that wheat is hauled by the Canada Atlantic and Parry Sound Railway, including water stretches from Chicago to Montreal for 4½ cents a bushel, while we in the North-west have to pay 8⅝ cents a bushel from Winnipeg to Fort William ; it will be seen that it was high time that the people of Manitoba loaded themselves with liabilities to the extent of some $14,000,000 in order to try and get relief.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Give the distance from Chicago to the sea-board via the Parry Sound railway, and it will make your comparison more effective.

Mr. DAVIS. From Winnipeg to Port Arthur, a distance of 448 miles, we are charged 8⅝ cents a bushel. From Chicago to Montreal via Parry Sound ; water stretches, 525 miles ; land or rail, 379 miles; in all a total of 904 miles the rate is only 4½ cents a bushel. This other railway company charges 4½ cents a bushel to carry wheat 904 miles while the Canadian Pacific Railway charges the people of the west 8⅝ cents a bushel for hauling it 448 miles. We have been told that there is no discrimination in the west, but I have gone to the trouble to get the present western local tariff as well as the traders' tariff, and also the general tariff, because these gentlemen have two or three tariffs in the west; they have a tariff for traders, and a tariff for the ordinary individual, and I cannot understand why one person wishing to ship a car-load of goods should be called upon to pay more because he is not a jobber.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you mean car-load and part car-load lots.

Mr. DAVIS. Car-load lots.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Have they two distinctive tariffs by car-loads ?

Mr. DAVIS. They have two tariffs, one for the trader and another for the other man. Some goods are classified as No. 2 by local rate which are the same as No. 5 in car-loads.

From Toronto to Winnipeg, a distance of 1,091 miles, groceries and goods of that kind, which are fifth class freight, pay 82 cents per hundred pounds, while from Winnipeg to Prince Albert, a distance of 609 miles, the rate for fifth class freight is 80 cents per hundred pounds. We pay in the west, within two cents a hundred pounds to carry goods 609 miles, of what the Toronto people pay to haul their goods 1,091 miles. Let us look at the condition of affairs on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am well aware that the government have not the same control over the Canadian Pacific Railway on the main line as they have on the branch lines, but it appears to me that the Canadian Pacific Railway management are charging these exorbitant rates to a greater extent on the branch lines where the government might be expected to step in and give the people relief. On the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Winnipeg to Calgary, a distance of 840 miles, the first class freight rate is $1.82 per hundred pounds and the second class, $1.57.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that by car-loads or by smaller quantities ?

Mr. DAVIS. It is according to the way you send it, by car-loads or not. Fifth class would not be fifth class if sent at local rates. It is the ordinary rate for car-loads at local rates.

Mr. WALLACE. That is in small quantities.

Mr. DAVIS. That does not make any difference for the purpose of my present argument. I am showing that on the same class of goods and the same quantities sent to different points, they sometimes charge more for the shorter distance than they do for the longer distance. From Winnipeg to Calgary, a distance of 840 miles, the first-class rate is $1.82 per hundred pounds; second class, $1.57 ; third class, $1.25 ; fourth class, 90 cents ; fifth class, 80 cents. Now, take the rate from Winnipeg to Prince Albert, a distance of 609 miles, according to the Canadian Pacific Railway folder, or some 230 miles less than the distance from Winnipeg to Calgary. The rates are : first class, $1.89, or 7 cents per hundred pounds more than from Winnipeg to Calgary : second class, $1.57, the same as to Calgary ; third class, $1.25 ; fourth class, 90 cents ; fifth class, 80 cents. I would have no objection if they charged the people of Calgary just as much as they charge the people of Prince Albert ; but when they charge the people of Prince Albert 7 cents per hundred pounds more than the people of Calgary, though the distance is shorter by 230 miles, I think the people of Prince Albert have good reason to kick.

Take lumber. The rate from British Columbia to all points in the Territories is 50 cents per hundred pounds. From British Columbia to Regina, from British Columbia to Prince Albert, or from British Columbia to Winnipeg, the rate is the same—50 cents per hundred pounds. I have been told on good authority by a gentleman in the business, that occasionally they send it to Fort William, 800 miles further on than Winnipeg, at the same rate. What position does that place the people of my district in ? It kills our local trade. We have three sawmills in Prince Albert, and if they want to ship lumber out they have to pay prohibitory rates, so that it is impossible for them to compete. I do not think that is a fair way to treat our people.

I have made a comparison of the maximum tariff on first-class goods west of Lake Superior with the maximum tariff of the Canada Atlantic Railway on first-class goods. The rate in the west for 30 miles is 27 cents, on 50 miles 35 cents, on 100 miles 54 cents, on 200 miles 80 cents, on 250 miles 92 cents, and on 450 miles $1.33 per hundred pounds. Compare these rates with what the people in eastern Canada have to pay. Between Ottawa and Depot Harbour, the maximum tariff rate on the Canada Atlantic, for 56 miles is 26 cents, for 102 miles 34 cents, for 200 miles 46 cents, for 254 miles 46 cents, as against 92 cents in Manitoba and the Territories for 250 miles. For 363 miles on the Canada Atlantic, the rate is also for 46 cents per hundred pounds.

We hear a great deal about the railroad monopolies of the United States. Gentlemen connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway try to make the people of this country believe that if the large railroad corporations of the United States got a footing in this country, our people would be bound to suffer. It is all a question of sentiment. We know that the people of the United States are getting their work done by the railways for one-half of what the people of this country have to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway for the same work. These are the maximum tariff rates in the state of Iowa, fixed by commission : 30 miles, 17·16 cents per hundred pounds ; 50 miles, 20 cents, as against 35 cents charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the west ; 100 miles, 24 cents, as against 54 cents in the west ; 200 miles 40 cents, as against 80 cents in the west ; 450 miles, 63½ cents, as against $1.33 charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the west for performing the same service. And still we are told by those gentlemen who want to exclude competition from this country, that if we allow the American railroads to get a footing here, the country will be ruined. I hope to see the day when some of these American railroad corporations will get a footing in the country, so that we may get relief from these excessive charges, and that magnificent country west of Lake Superior may get a chance to develop. I do not see why the Canadian Pacific Railway corporation should own that country. Is it not enough that the people of this country gave that corporation $110,000,000 in lands and money, but we must hand over the whole country to them ? I hope the members of this House will see to it that when other companies seek for charters to build railways into that country, those charters shall be granted, notwithstanding what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company may say.

I have another statement which has been sent to me by the president of the Board of Trade of Prince Albert, Mr. F. C. Baker. He says the rate from Winnipeg to Prince Albert, 603 miles, on first-class goods, is $1.89, while the rate from Winnipeg to Regina, 356 miles on the main line, is $1.12, while on the branch line from Regina to Prince Albert, for 247 miles, we have to pay $1.15. In other words, we pay 3 cents more for 250 miles than the people of Regina pay for 356 miles. That is a clear case of discrimination against the town in which I live.

We have heard a great deal about the long haul, and I wish to draw the attention of the House to that phase of the question. Let us look at the rates on coal oil, which is a commodity not used so much in the towns and villages as by the farming population. From Petrolia to Winnipeg, a distance of 1,200 miles, the fifth-class rate is 61½ cents per hundred pounds. From Winnipeg to Prince Albert, 609 miles, the rate is 65 cents. So that we are paying 3½ cents more for hauling our coal oil 609 miles than is paid for sending it 1,200 miles. There is a case of discrimination. It might be supposed that you would get a lower rate from Petrolia to Prince Albert because of the long haul. But if you add the two local rates together, from Petrolia to Winnipeg, and from Winnipeg to Prince Albert, they come to $1.26½, whereas the through rate from Petrolia to Prince Albert is $1.37½, or 11 cents more. In other words, you could take a car-load of coal oil from Petrolia to Winnipeg, unload it there, load it again on the cars and ship it through to Prince Albert, and you would save 11 cents per hundred pounds. And yet, we are told that the people of Prince Albert have no discrimination to complain of.

I have taken this from the Toronto Globe, and I believe it to be true. It certainly has never been contradicted. From Brantford, Eng., to Toronto, the rate on wool is 17 cents per 100 pounds. Compare this with the rate from Crane Lake, N.W.T., to Toronto of $1.50 per 100 pounds, and the excessive charge imposed on the people of the North-west Territories is at once apparent. How is it possible for the people of that country to live and pay such exorbitant freight rates ?

Take the rates on cattle, the largest industry in the North-west Territories, and a very large one in Manitoba. From Prince Albert to Montreal the rate is $180 per car, and the value of a car-load of cattle is $680. I am not grumbling at this, but want to make a comparison. The rate from Toronto to Prince Albert on a car-load of apples, the average value of which is $190, is something like $375 now, and two or three years ago it was $518. I paid $518 freight on a car-load of apples from Seaforth to Prince Albert. When I ordered the apples, I had no idea that I would be charged such an exorbitant rate.

Mr. KAULBACH. How much did you pay for the apples ?

Mr. DAVIS. $190, and I paid $518 freight. As a consequence, I lost about $250 on the car-load, and I did not go into the apple business any more. This is a matter which affects, not only the people of the Territories and Manitoba, but of the eastern provinces as well. When you have good crops of apples in the eastern provinces, you find it difficult to dispose of them, and they are often left to rot on the ground. But if reasonable freight rates were charged, you could easily dispose of them in the Territories and Manitoba. We produce wheat and cattle, but we cannot produce fruit, and are willing to exchange. But if a man has to pay $5 a barrel freight on apples, you can easily see that the average farmer cannot afford to indulge in luxuries of that kind in order to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to pay its president $50,000 a year and the rest of the officials in proportion

In the early history of the country we expected to have to pay rather high freight rates, but it is high time these rates should be reduced. We hear a great deal about American railways coming in to oppress our people. Let me show what the people of Massachusetts have to pay for hauling freight per ton over their railways and show you how these rates were reduced from year to year. The following statement gives the freight and passenger rates :

In the Territories we pay three cents and four cents passenger rates per mile, and up to last year we paid five cents per mile on the Regina Long Lake and Saskatchewan Road, yet this country has paid that road three times more than it has cost. We gave it 6,400 acres of the finest lands in the country per mile. They will not take ordinary land, and I understand there is a suit pending because they refuse to take the lands offered and want the choicest. Besides 6,400 acres per mile, they get $80,000 per year for twenty years for carrying the mails, and they have never earned more than $2,000 or $3,000 a year in that service. Take the lands at $3 an acre—and they have not sold one acre at less, and some they have sold as high as $6 or $7 an acre—that makes $19,200 per mile as the value of the land, taking its lowest value of $3 per acre. Then take the cash subsidy of $80,000 a year for twenty years, and you will see that this corporation has received not less than $20,000 per mile.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I have seen an estimate which figures out that the $80,000 per mile for twenty years capitalized is equal to $6,000 per mile.

Mr. DAVIS. I am making a very low estimate. The value of the lands is $19,200, and the hon. member for Lisgar tells us that the value of the mail subsidy is $6,000 per mile, which would bring the total subsidy up to $25,000 per mile. What did the road cost ? Take the report of its cost issued by the company, and you can rest assured that when they made that report they made it so as to show as large a cost as possible. It shows that the road cost $10,000 a mile, and the people have given them actually $20,000 a mile. I suppose their heavy charges for freight and passengers are to meet the interest on the bonds, and it appears they have bonded the road for $3,800,000, although it only cost them $2,500,000. Into whose pockets the difference went I do not know, but I do not think it is fair that we should be called on to pay the interest on money that did not go into the construction of the road at all, but into the pockets of the speculators.

In 1895, the last year for which I have a return, the people of the state of Massachusetts only had to pay 1·78 cents per mile passenger rate, and yet we are told by interested parties that if you allow American railways and capital to come into Canada our people will be oppressed. For my part I would like to see more competition, and hope the day will come when we will have it.

It is high time the government took some action with reference to this commission. There is an agitation for the establishment of a railway commission going on in the country and gathering force as it goes. All the leading papers in the country are taking this question up, and it is one the government cannot ignore. They will have to take some action and take it in the near future. Let them appoint a board of railway commissioners for only four or five years if you like. Such commissions have been working in the United States for twenty-five or thirty years and have proved successful, and if we had a commission appointed to wipe out the discrimination and force the railway corporations to impose fair and moderate charges, as we have the power to do under the Railway Act, you would soon find the cry for government ownership and control of railways disappearing. All this agitation for government ownership is due to the fact that the people are desirous that something should be done to relieve them of the oppressive railways rates which are now charged.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Before that motion is put, I would like to offer one or two observations. I may say that after a study of the railway question carefully for the last four or five years, I am scarcely so sanguine as my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), that the appointment of a railway commission would accomplish all that he thinks it would. I will tell you why I think so. In the first place, the railways have been stocked and bonded for an amount far in excess of their cost, in many cases double and treble the cost of the roads. Now, they always maintain that before you should allow government to regulate the rates on railroads, you must allow interest to be earned on all the stock and on all the bonds that the road carries. They will meet you with this proposition, that there are vested interests, that capitalists in Europe have purchased these bonds and this stock in good faith, and that it is only reasonable to allow a proper interest to be earned on this stock and bonds. There is another reason why I think a railway commission would be largely ineffective. When the contract for the Canadian Pacific Railway was made in 1881, exactly twenty years ago on the 15th of last month, a provision was inserted whereby the company was allowed to earn 10 per cent on the capital actually invested in the road before the government could exercise any control of the rates. That is a statutory provision which would meet the commission at once. If this railway commission were appointed it would be absolutely unable to control the rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway until they have earned 10 per cent on the capital actually invested.

So here is one difficulty that would meet you, the determination of the amount of capital that was invested in that enterprise. Now, in order to get over that difficulty I moved a resolution in this House some four sessions ago for the appointment of a commission by parliament to ascertain the actual cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway in order that parliament, if it desired to secure control of the rates, might know when the company earned 10 per cent on the money actually invested. My own recollection is that the gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific Raiway run up to nearly thirty million dollars, and that the actual earnings to-day are a good deal more than 10 per cent, probably thirty per cent, I do not know but 100 per cent on anything they have put in. I wish the House clearly to understand this proposition. Why should the Canadian Pacific Railway be allowed to earn 10 per cent, or any per cent whatever, on capital that the Canadian people have put into the enterprise ? As the hon. member for Saskatchewan pointed out, although he did not give you all the facts, the Canadian people gave to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company twenty-five million dollars in cash, and it handed over completed railroads, the Thunder Bay branch, the Yale and Cariboo section, and a section in eastern Canada, all of which had cost the Canadian people thirty-five million dollars. That is to say, the government made practically a cash payment to that company of sixty million dollars. In addition to that, we gave them twenty-five million acres of the best lands in that vast country ; and so particular is this company with regard to the selection of these lands that the Minister of the Interior told us the other day they have declined to accept all their land grant because they are very anxious to obtain the very best land in that country. What is the result ? The member for Saskatchewan told us a moment ago that the land grants on the Regina and Long Lake Railway have brought $3, $4 and $5 an acre, they have never sold an acre for less. I was able to show on the floor of parliament last session that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company never sold an acre of land, in Manitoba, at least, for less than an average of $4 or $5 an acre. But let us take the land grant at $3 an acre, and we find that in addition to giving that company sixty million dollars in cash practically, we gave them seventy-five million dollars worth of land, or a total subsidy to that company of practically $135,000,000, not speaking of all the other concessions that we have given them.

Mr. Speaker, let me state that the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate's own estimate of the whole cost of construction of that railway was $91,500,000, and that included $10.000,000 for equipment. Now, having given the company something in the neighbourhood of forty-three million dollars more than the actual cost of the road, why should we be called upon to stick to that clause allowing them to earn 5 per cent on what it actually cost ? Why should the country be obliged to pay, in high freight rates, 10 per cent on the money that the country actually gave to the company ? My contention in parliament four or five years ago was that we should appoint a commission to ascertain if that company spent $1 of its own money in the construction of that road; and if that company did not spend $1, then, having ascertained that fact, we would be able to say: You shall not be allowed to earn 10 per cent on what the country gave you, and we shall take control of your rates. If parliament would adopt the suggestion I made a few years ago for the appointment of that commission to ascertain exactly what the company had put into the enterprise, then I think we would be able to control the rates on this vast transcontinental road. I maintain that until you are able to control the rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway, your railway commission is in a large measure bound to be ineffective.

The only cure for the transportation question that I can see, is in government ownership and control of railroads. But I do not think at the present time that the finances of this country would warrant the government in purchasing all the railroad systems of this country. I believe that the government should do what I urged on the floor of parliament two sessions ago. The government now own the Intercolonial Railway, which they have recently extended into Montreal, and I believe if it could secure control of the Parry Sound Railroad, and then acquire control of the Rainy River Railway, and get access into those vast wheat fields of the west, we could effectively control the transportation question of this country, and it would not cost a large amount either. It would not require a great deal to control the Parry Sound road up to Parry Sound, and afterwards securing railway communication from the head of lake navigation into the wheat fields of the west, then the question would be largely solved. If the people of that great country are able to send their products away at decent rates, then I do not think there will be much to complain of. If the government controls one road and is able to fix the rate, then all other roads would be obliged to meet the rates which the government makes on its road.

When the question was before parliament two sessions ago, when these vast subsidies were given to the Rainy River Railway, I myself, seconded by the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) moved a number of resolutions relating to that subject. I wished to have the government appoint an officer who should superintend the construction of that railroad, in order that we might ascertain exactly what it cost—so that, if parliament desired, at any later date, to put into effect the government ownership of even one railway, it would be able to acquire this road with the knowledge of the actual cost. And I added in the resolution that it should be acquired at the cost price, less the subsidies which the country had given to the road. That resolution, I am sorry to say, did not carry. I believe that one reason why it did not carry was that the House was not fully seized of the importance of the question. I believe that hon. members had not given sufficient study to the transportation question, and did not understand the true nature of the proposition I put forward at that time. I moved another resolution—and I think there are signs throughout the country that the people are beginning to understand the importance of the question—that the rates on that road should never be higher than would produce 6 per cent on the cost. The crux of the transportation question is the limiting of capitalization. You must not allow charges, fixed or otherwise, to appear in these enterprises more than is actually necessary. If you limit the stocking and bonding to the actual necessities of the case, it is easy to see how you protect the producer, for you can then control the rates; you will not be obliged to allow charges to pay a percentage of 4, 6 or 10 per cent on capital that never went into the road. What has happened in regard to the Rainy River road on which we made such a strong fight? In addition to the $4,000 per mile which the legislature of Ontario granted to that enterprise, in addition to the $6,400 in cash that this parliament granted, making in all $10,400 a mile given by the public to assist that road, we find that we also gave power to stock this road for $28,000 a mile, and to bond it for $20,000 a mile. So that, for all time, that road is loaded with a capitalization of $48,000 per mile, and for all time the settlers will be obliged to pay the interest in freight rates on that enormous capitalization. And what are we told here to-day? We are told that the Manitoba government is coming to the relief of this company by guaranteeing the bonds of the road for $20,000 a mile. What would be the result?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does that include the whole mileage?

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Two hundred and ninety miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not cover any portion of the mileage of the Rainy River Railway, does it?

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). It covers the mileage, the hon. minister will understand, from the western terminus of the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western, a point known as Stanley station. The company that own that through road bought the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western. It goes two hundred and ninety miles west to Fort Frances, and the province of Manitoba, judging from the reports, is about to guarantee the bonds on that section for $20,000 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is any portion of that in Ontario ?

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). It is all in Ontario. The point I make, the hon. minister apprehends, is that the country gave $10,400 a mile in cash, and the people also will give this 4 per cent guarantee on $20,000 a mile, so that the people will have practically given in cash and undertaken to give in a guarantee, as good as cash, $30,400 a mile. And, as I tell you, the result is that for all time the people of that country are obliged to pay high freight rates on this over-capitalization. I believe the time has come when there are sufficient people in this country who understand this question to say that unless we limit the stocking and bonding to the actual necessities of the road we shall never be able to exercise any effective control over freight rates. I have reason to believe that a strong attempt will be made this session to limit the stocking and bonding of railway lines in order that a commission such as my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) moves for may be of some effect.

Now, I am not prepared to say that a railway commission such as is called for in the motion would not be of considerable advantage. Probably, in doing away with discrimination, in regulating long hauls and short hauls, in regulating rates over branch and trunk lines, it might be of some effect. I believe, and I think it likely the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) agrees with me, with the 10 per cent clause as it is, and with the lines over-capitalized as they are, even with a railway commission, we shall not be able to exercise any effective control. Why, Sir, let me give two or three facts with regard to what this country has given for its railway system. The people of Canada have given in cash, up to the present time—and I include the municipalities, the provincial governments and the Dominion government —$223,000,000 in cash for railways. From what the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) told us the other day, it appears that the country has contributed 60,000,000 acres of land for the construction of railways. You will agree with me that, in view of the statements made by my hon. friend (Mr. Davis), and in view of the facts produced in this House from time to time, $3 an acre is a very moderate estimate of the value of this land. Estimating on that basis, you will find that the people of this country have given $403,000,000 for the construction of railways. Just let the hon. members of this House pause and think for a moment what that means. It means that the people have given far more than would build the entire system of railways in this country. And what do we own ? We own the Intercolonial Railway, which, I presume, actually cost about $25,000,000—we paid $50,000,000 for it, but it was not worth that amount of money. Think of this expenditure in connection with the proposition that we shall attempt to regulate rates by appointing a commission. We cannot do it. The only way in which rates can be effectively controlled in this country is for the government to own and control one road on which there shall be no over-capitalization, and on which fair rates shall be charged, based on the actual cost of the road. When the government takes that position, I assert, we shall have the transportation question effectively solved. As I have said, I am not one who says that the country should, at present, go into the enterprise of controlling all the railroads of the country. But, I would be willing to go even that far, if we cannot get justice in any other way. Look at the example of the Australasian colonies. According to an article in the North American Review that I read recently these colonies have paid $600,000,000 for their railways. At present those railways charge more favourable rates than ours do, rates in accordance with the condition of the settlers, and they are able to pay 3 per cent on that vast sum of money, and pay operating expenses as well. If that can be done in the Australasian colonies, why can it not be done in Canada ? It is perfectly true that we have made this bad start ; it is perfectly true that we have paid this vast sum of money and have practically no return for it. But, surely, Sir, we are not going to perpetuate this colossal error. The time has come when the transportation question is knocking at the door of parliament, and unless the people's representatives deal with this question, I want to say the people will deal with their representatives later on. I shall not oppose the motion, Mr. Speaker, because, as I said, I believe some good may come of the regulation of these rates in various ways. I shall listen with great interest to any debate that may occur on this question, and particularly to the views which the government may give us at the present time. I may say, before I sit down, that I think if anything is to be done in this matter it ought to be done soon. We have been led to expect from session to session that we would have this railway commission appointed, and I think it would be gratifying to members of this House, and also to the country, to know that the question was soon to be settled one way or the other and not keep it dangling before the public any longer.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of offering any remarks upon this question until I heard of the deplorable state of Canada in a railway sense from the two hon. gentlemen who have been discussing it. I have got up to say that I feel quite differently about it. I cannot see any reason why such a pessimistic view should be taken of our present transportation facilities and of the position of Canada in regard to its railways and to the transportation question. I did not suppose that on this motion we would be going into the whole railway and transportation question, because the question involved in the motion is only one of the very important propositions in connection with our railway transportation system. I am at a loss to understand the cause of the grievous state of affairs that these hon. gentlemen seem to have discovered in regard to our railways, not that I am interested any more than they are in railways. Since I have been in this House I have had no interest in railways; I have none to-day any more than they have. I have had some experience of the difficulties of getting railways built in this country, because the only railways that I have been interested in were roads of a local character where we wanted to build them through to different parts of the province of Ontario, some years ago and some very recently. We had very great difficulty in accomplishing this. How did we manage to get them? Something like the manner in which the Canadian Pacific Railway was got. The most of them were of a much smaller pattern. We wanted to get railways through the old-settled parts of the country where the pioneers had gone in years ago with their axes and yoke of oxen and hewed out their homes. These pioneers had for fifty or seventy-five years been taxed for carrying on all the public affairs of the country. We found it impossible to get these roads constructed except upon the principle of the people helping themselves. The people offered bonuses. There is scarcely a township between Lake Erie and Georgian Bay that has not contributed by bonus to obtain railways. Why? Did they do it to give away their money? Did they do it on any other principle than a mere business proposition? It was a business proposition. You can be sure that the hardy pioneers who built up the country, and who were a long time without transportation facilities, having discovered that railways would be a great boon to them, would not have given away their hard-earned dollars unless they thought there would be some return. Why did they give away anything? Because it was found impossible to get money to build railways otherwise. So they offered what are known as bonuses and the government of Ontario, before the Dominion government entertained the proposition at all, established a system of giving bonuses to railways, municipalities following that up. But, money in addition to the bonuses was required, and I have had considerable experience in helping to secure the construction of railways in that part of the country, not, however, in the way of making money out of them. I happened to be one of those gentlemen who did not have much money to put into such enterprises, but who tried to find means of raising, with the assistance of the municipalities and the government, the balance of the money required. The government and the municipalities knew that they were giving this money to enable the balance of the money to be obtained which was always a hard proposition. These hon. gentlemen who have spoken say that it was very unwise and that great difficulties have resulted. I totally disagree with them when they say that it makes a great deal of difference how much stock or bonds are issued. It did not make scarcely any difference for the reason that the propositions in those days were left largely to the promoters. We did not care so much whether the promoters got permission to issue a lot of bonds or a few bonds, a large amount of stock or a small amount. We were satisfied whichever way they could work the scheme as long as we got the road after having subscribed our money as taxpayers. Go through the country to-day, even through Manitoba and the North-west Territories, where there is so much talk about the Canadian Pacific Railway, and ask the people there if they would have these railways taken away from them and get their money back. They would laugh at you and very properly. I want to go roughly and quickly over this question. Apart altogether from what has been given by the country or for what railways have been bonded, the money that has been put into railways in Canada in addition has never returned 1½ per cent to the people who put it up. That is a proposition which, if hon. gentlemen will look into it, will be borne out. Take the Grand Trunk Railway, for instance, the road most heavily loaded with bonds, stock and preferences. Why was it so? Why did we from time to time help it? Because, if the government of Canada, in times past, had not come forward and given assistance it would have entirely disappeared. Millions of money had been sent across the sea for investment in the road, and widows and orphans had put their money into it in the belief that they were going to get a big return. I remember once in the history of the road that $10,000,000 of common stock was sold at 10 per cent or ten cents on the dollar and the company induced people to believe that they would get big returns that they bought it. If it had not been for that financial transaction, away back in the history of the road, the Grand Trunk Railway would have been forced to shut up. That was the pioneer road in Ontario and Quebec. I remember how glad I was to see it. I had never seen a railway train and I had never seen any cars, except a few on the old Northern Railway which ran out of Toronto. That stock is worth less to-day, about five or six cents on the dollar, than half a century ago when these people bought it. The government had to help the company out of a hole with several millions of dollars.

Take the actual money which has been put into the road and there are many millions upon which not one cent of return in interest has been obtained. The bonded debt and stock were so large, looking at it in this day, that it would be absurd to try and float a scheme of that kind now. But it cost the government of Canada a good deal. That was the pioneer road and there are thousands of people across the sea, or their descendants, who will never receive a cent of return on their investment. It is well that we should look upon the other side of the picture. I am one of those who believe that the first business is to get the railway, secondly, to get it on the best terms possible and don't bother your head too much about those who undertake to raise the balance whether they have bonded it for much or little. I will tell you why. Under our law, except in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the amount of the bonded stock has nothing to do with the fixing of the rates. If a case is brought before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, the question to be decided there is what is the proper rate, and not what is the rate charged.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). How would you ascertain a proper rate ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) can answer, but it is one of the most difficult problems I know of. Some hon. gentlemen assume that the government or a railway commission can in some way decide off-hand, but these gentlemen have not studied the question or they would think differently. How are you going to say what is a fair rate ? I tell you that you will have to get an education that no man in this House has to-day before you can decide that.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I can tell you.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I have paid some attention to the question ; I have consulted men who have devoted their lives to it and I have read books upon it, and all agree that it is a most difficult problem, although I will agree with these hon. gentlemen that you have to watch the railways. But look at the condition of things in Canada. The fact is that the farmer in the most remote part of Ontario can land his produce in Liverpool cheaper than the farmer in Wales can send it to London. What do these gentleman say to that ? The truth is that the people of Canada wanted railways and were not afraid to assume responsibilities to get railways, and were willing to give men a fair margin of profit who took the risk of raising the necessary money to build these railways. There is not a country of the same population under heaven that has a better water or rail transportation system than has Canada. I just wish to say that, in order to relieve myself of the depression which I might experience by listening to the pessimistic views of some gentlemen in this House. I made up my mind to say something upon the other side of the question. Let me say one word about the Canadian Pacific Railway and about this 10 per cent. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson, Lisgar) remember the difficulty there was in getting anybody to undertake the Canadian Pacific Railway ? Does he remember how earnestly and honestly the two political parties in the early days of that tremendous undertaking were concerned about that work; and does he remember that its initiation and successful carrying into effect would have paralyzed any small nation except Canada ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) talked to-day about the lands in the North-west and he counts up their value by the millions. But how much were those lands worth before the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed ? Why, we have under our control the alternate sections which, even if we gave for nothing to settlers who would go in there and develop them, are still a most valuable asset. I believe, Sir, that we made a good bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway. What if we did give the Canadian Pacific Railway several millions, have we not a return for it ? I tell you that the enhanced credit of Canada at home and abroad by the successful carrying out of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is worth twice the number of millions we invested in it.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), stated that our North-west lands were worth nothing before the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed. Does he not think that if the government built that road themselves with the money they gave the Canadian Pacific Railway that those lands would be just as valuable to-day ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Certainly, but if the hon. gentleman had a political part to take in this House in those early days as he has to-day, would he have dared to say that Canada should have assumed that burden ? He dare not. The best men of both political parties, men who knew as much in those days as the best of us know to-day, agreed that things should have been done as they were done and the people of the country were satisfied. Had Canada not made that bargain her credit would not have been such in the interim as to enable her to carry out the other immense public works of the country. By giving the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to men who could raise the money abroad, the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed and the chances are that it might not have been constructed otherwise. You have to draw a distinction between things as they existed then and things as they exist at the present time. I will not be any meaner as a public man than I am as a private citizen, and I say that even if we had made, which I deny, a bad bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway, yet it was made in broad day light by the representatives of the people of Canada, and the bargain should be maintained to the letter. If we act in good faith we will maintain our self-respect and have a higher standing as a nation than if we act in bad faith, even though we made money by doing so. Whether it was a wise bargain or not we should stick to it, and although we did cancel part of the contract, yet I believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway agreed to it at the time. I am no defender of the Canadian Pacific Railway people, and I have no reason to be particularly friendly with them. My interest has been in the railways in my own province, and if I have been more friendly to one railway than the other it has been to the old Grand Trunk which was the pioneer road in the older provinces, and which enabled us to build these local roads and to turn them over to a company that could handle them as we could not. It is to the credit of the Canadian Pacific Railway that they have gone outside of the mere operating of their main line, because had they done nothing more they would never have paid a cent on the money invested. But they have their telegraph lines, and their sleeping-cars, and their steamship lines, all auxiliaries to the main line and the earnings of which go into the same treasury and enable them to pay dividends. If there was nothing but the bare Canadian Pacific Railway, then notwithstanding all the money we gave them, I doubt if they would today be able to pay 2 per cent on the actual money they raised. Well, Sir, there are men who fought me in 1874 on the political question as to whether it was a wise thing to make the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and have the road built, and I am glad I have lived to see them recant the views they then held. The prime minister of the province of Ontario ; one of the brightest men in that province—and I say it though he is politically opposed to me—he has acknowledged the mistake he made in opposing the Canadian Pacific Railway in the early days. I am not afraid to stand up here and bear testimony to a great corporation that has carried on an immense work under the greatest difficulties, and has made a brillant record for this country. Let me tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) that in my opinion this railway commission might not be the unmixed blessing he thinks. We have evidences on every side that there is going to be discussion on this railway commission question in this parliament.

I have lately consulted a report of the commission that was appointed some years ago to consider this question. That commission was composed of able men, with Sir Alexander Galt as chairman. They took the best expert evidence they could obtain as to the most efficient tribunal that would be available to control rates, railway disputes and similar matters ; and they recommended the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I think that body has administered its duties fairly well. I supported it when the Conservative party were in power, and I have supported it just as strongly since hon. gentlemen who are opposed to me politically have had charge of it. Why did the commission prefer that tribunal ? It would have several good features. It would be sure to be composed of able men, from whichever party they came ; and not only able men, but men responsible directly to the people for their places and for the way they administered their trust. They were given plenary powers. They had the absolute power to enforce their decisions, and even if necessary to order out a force for that purpose. It is impossible to have any other tribunal equal to it in these respects. You could not vest such powers in a railway commission, because it would be a reversal of our constitution to do so. Therefore, I sympathize with the members of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in wishing to compel them to retain their present powers. I am quite sure they would be willing to resign the duties imposed upon them, and to place them upon other shoulders, but I do not think those duties would be as promptly or satisfactorily attended to. Further, there would be great difficulty in getting three men qualified to act on a railway commission. In the United States they have sometimes had these railway commissions, they have sometimes abolished them, and they have sometimes brought them back. So far as I am concerned, I am quite content with a Railway Committee of the Privy Council, composed of my political opponents, rather than relegate to a railway commission such as we could choose such powers as we could confer upon it.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). The hon. gentleman did not understand me to give an unqualified endorsement to the appointment of a railway commission ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I give an unqualified fealty to the present tribunal in preference to a commission. Having thus expressed myself, I do not wish hon. gentlemen to suppose that I do not think it wise to have this discussion. I do not want them to suppose that while I disagree with them, I am finding fault with them in any way. I am glad to see them bring up these questions for discussion, because that is the way to get light. But I prefer to go slow, and to hold by what we have found to be good rather than to take the chances of an untried experiment.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, this very important subject has been pretty thoroughly threshed out in this House, not only this afternoon, but in previous sessions, and I had no idea that there was any possibility of a difference of opinion upon it anywhere in the Dominion of Canada. I had not thought that there was any person who would get up and earnestly combat the advisability of appointing some additional body, different from anything we have in the country at the present time, to regulate the operations of the railways. But the sentiments which have been expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), indicate that there is an opposition in the country and in this House to the idea of the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). I notice that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) applied the term pessimist to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson.)

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I did not apply to any individual, nor to this proposition. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the hon. gentleman to apply the term to those who hold the ideas expressed in this resolution. I am one of those myself. I think the hon. gentleman himself is a worse pessimist than we are, because we express the view that certain conditions may be improved. I do not understand that the hon. gentleman disputed the facts set out by the hon. member for Saskatchewan and the hon. member for Lisgar; but he has no idea that any improvement in existing conditions is possible. Therefore, I think he is the worse pessimist. One opinion the hon. gentleman expressed was that it was impossible under our constitution for such a body as that suggested to be created and to perform any valuable service. To meet that point, I think it is only necessary to refer to one of the facts stated by the hon. member for Saskatchewan—the fact that in the mother country, the land from which we get our constitution, some such body as that suggested was created, and existed for a number of years, and is still in operation. If it is not impossible in England, it cannot be impossible in Canada, for our constitution is very similar to that of Great Britain. Another point which the hon. gentleman raised was the difficulty in the way of reducing freight rates, owing to the very low interest which stockholders in railway companies have been able to reap since railways have been operated in this country. That is perfectly true, I believe, even of some of the lines of railway in the North-west Territories which have been referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Saskatchewan and the hon. member for Lisgar. Take, for instance, the Calgary and Edmonton road. I believe the stockholders in that road, at least the present managers, are having great difficulty in earning sufficient from the operation of the road to pay the interest on the existing bonds. It is perfectly true that these stockholders are in this difficulty, that they cannot get a fair rate of interest on their investment. But what is the reason? It is to be found in the insane method by which the roads were built and the corporations created. If the stockholders have difficulties to meet, certainly there were some promoters who had no difficulty at all in making a very good rate of interest on their investment, because, as has been stated, the Calgary and Edmonton road was constructed in such a manner that its promoters did not put a single cent into it, and were able besides to put into their pockets an amount almost equal to that which the road cost. The country kindly gave the promoters, not only the amount which the road cost, but a duplicate amount to put into their pockets.

This is not a new question, but one which has been pretty thoroughly and widely discussed. The conditions existing with respect to excessive and discriminating freight rates are pretty generally admitted. Even the hon. gentleman who last spoke did not dispute any of the statements made by the two hon. gentlemen who preceded him; and admitting the facts, it is evident that the government will have to take the matter up and try and devise a remedy. This subject has been already discussed this session. I am bound to admit that I am inclined to a certain extent, to favour some of the views expressed here since this session opened, by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), who is not here this afternoon, and quite ready to admit that I am in favour of the principle of government ownership and operation of railways in Canada. But I must also confess that I lack some of the faith with which my hon. friend from East York is blessed. I lack faith in the idea that $2 taken out of the treasury of Canada would be sufficient to secure government control of all the railways in Canada, and I possibly lack a little of the faith of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), who has spoken this afternoon. I have very grave doubts as to whether government ownership is a practical immediate remedy. While the people in the Territories are suffering from excessive railway rates, they are also suffering from lack of railroads. While one of the needs of the North-west Territories is lower freight rates, another is a greater mileage of railways. We have settlements in that country, which have been waiting seventeen or eighteen years for railway communication, and which to-day are still distant sixty or seventy miles from any railway. Unless this parliament is willing this year or next year to accept the principle of government ownership and operation of railways and apply that principle immediately, I would not confine myself to advocating that remedy alone. I hope and trust that, with the assistance of the Minister of Railways, some of those people who have been waiting for railway communication during so many years, and who settled under the definite promise, given by those in authority at that time, that railway communication would be furnished them at an early day, will find their expectations realized very shortly.

The hon. gentleman who spoke last (Mr. Tisdale) did not dispute any of the facts presented by the two hon. gentlemen who preceded him. It is entirely unnecessary for me to take up the time of the House by supplementing these facts. I will confine myself to relating one instance which came under my own notice. Some months ago a firm in Vancouver ordered a piece of machinery from Glasgow, Scotland, and about the same time a firm in Regina ordered an identical piece of machinery from the same people manufactured in the very same place. Would you believe it, Sir, when I tell you that the piece of machinery laid down in Regina cost in freight within a few cents of $100 more than the piece of machinery laid down in Vancouver, 1,500 miles farther away. That is an instance of what the people in the North-west Territories have to complain of.

One of the points raised by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), which would tend to lessen our faith in the proposition submitted by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), namely, the establishment of a railway commission, is the existence of what is known as the 10 per cent clause in the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the government. That is something which must remain there until eliminated by purchase or some other means, and which would limit the power that a railway commission would have over the railway company. But even taking that objection into account, there is in Manitoba and the North-west a considerable mileage of railways not covered by that contract and to which, consequently, that 10 per cent clause does not apply. I do not think I am very wide of the mark when I say that there are probably a thousand miles of railway west of Lake Superior, between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains, to which that clause does not apply.

If the statements made by the hon. member for Saskatchewan respecting rates on the branch line from Regina to Prince Albert are true, then there is good reason, even though the commission could not touch the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to consider whether a commission should not be appointed to control rates on the thousand miles of road not under the ten per cent clause. However, I was somewhat surprised to hear the objection raised by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), because I recollect that last year or the year before, when some other railway contract was up in this House for discussion, he suggested inserting in the contract a provision embodying exactly the principle embodied in this ten per cent clause. He went over the ground this afternoon establishing the fact that my recollection was accurate and that he had moved for the insertion of this provision limiting the returns to six per cent—the difference between six per cent and ten per cent being not one of principle, but of detail. I do not intend to take up the time of the House at greater length. But if this House and the government admit the facts presented, they must, in all reason, apply their minds to find a remedy. If this House and the government state that government ownership does not afford an immediate, a practicable remedy, then let us be told what is such a remedy. If the government and the House hold that such a commission as is now suggested will not constitute a practicable and effective remedy, then let us be told in what way an adequate remedy may be found. Surely if we admit the conditions, if we admit the fact of these discriminations imposed upon the people of the west—and if what the newspapers state be true, the evil does not exist exclusively in the west, but the people of the eastern provinces have reason also to complain—it is the duty of this government and the duty of this parliament to find a remedy and apply it as speedily as possible.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). It is not necessary to add anything to what has been said in proof of the necessity of a railway commission whose duty it would be to adjust fairly the rates as between shippers and as between different localities. All I wish to say is, that while a railway commission is necessary, in my humble opinion, towards remedying the present conditions, it does not and cannot, in the nature of things, provide a complete remedy for those conditions. Some of those conditions, I am afraid, have gone beyond remedy. But the fact that there are or may be such conditions as cannot be remedied makes it all the more necessary that we should provide against the recurrence of like conditions in all cases in the future over which we have control, and with the responsibility for which we are charged. The point has probably been alluded to by other speakers, but I wish to emphasize it, that the great difficulty we have, or shall have, in dealing with the question of rates on our railroad system is the fact that the railroads of the country have been permitted to be overloaded with indebtedness. In view of that circumstance, and in view of the facts laid before the House, I desire to place before hon. members the great and urgent necessity of providing against over-capitalization of all railroads chartered by this House in future. I hold that if this House allows railroads to be bonded on the basis of their possible earning power, instead of requiring that they should be bonded only on the basis of their cost, this House cannot afterwards come in and regulate the rates below the point that will permit those roads to earn a fair interest on the amount of indebtedness which has been incurred with the consent of this House. We should provide in all railroad charters hereafter granted that indebtedness should not be allowed beyond the cost of the road. Then, we pay for what we get and we get what we pay for. We know that we cannot have railroads without money. Our complaint against present conditions is not that we are required to pay interest on the cost of the roads, but it is that we are required to pay interest on double and treble the cost of the roads; and we ask that for the future we shall be ensured that, whatever the railroad may cost, it is only on that cost that we shall be required to pay interest in the way of railway rates.

Now, as there have been instances given of peculiar rates, I wish to draw attention to an instance also, the more particularly because this is in connection with the rates over the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, a railway the rates on which, we were given to understand, the government absolutely controlled. I have a memorandum placed in my hands which purports to give the local rates charged over that road, between certain points previous to May, 1900, and since May, 1900. I find that, from Lethbridge to Cranbrook, previous to May, 1900, the first-class rate was 99 cents per hundred pounds; second class, 82 cents; third class, 65 cents: fourth class, 49 cents; fifth class, 44 cents; and tenth class, 22 cents. I find that since May 14, 1900, the rates have been: first class, $1.27 per hundred pounds; second class, $1.06; third class, 85 cents; fourth class, 64 cents; fifth class, 58 cents; and tenth class, 29 cents. The people who live along that line of road very naturally asked the question, and I may tell the House and the minister that they asked it very pertinently during the election, how, if this government had control of the rates over that road, they permitted that increase to be made. I was not able to answer them, and I ask the Minister of Railways now: Has the government, as a matter of fact, control over those rates, and if it has, what were the reasons which led them to permit this increase of rates to take place? I think anybody will agree, upon comparing the rates previous to May, 1900, over the Crow's Nest line, with similar rates in other parts of the country, that those rates were certainly high enough. But they were increased very materially after May 14, and the people along that line, and I, as their representative in this House, want to know whether that increase was made in defiance of the government or with the consent of the government.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron). Before the question is put, I would like to make a few remarks on this subject. I think that the public at any rate look for some measure of government control, or at least for a commission that should to a certain extent control the rates. Personally, I am not acquainted with the grievances that are claimed to exist in regard to inequalities in freight rates, but I have seen a good deal of discussion about them in the public press. Those of us who have paid any attention to this question will have noticed in the press lately a number of articles concerning the practice of discrimination in freight rates on the part of railway companies. It occurs to me that the forms of discrimination, if they do exist, have more bearing upon the interests of the North-west and Manitoba than upon those of the province of Ontario.

In this connection we are reminded of the discussions that took place when the original contract was made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Liberal party at that time contended that under the proposed contract certain evils would arise in the future that would cause a great deal of difficulty and a great deal of trouble; and people are apparently realizing now that these evils prophesied by the Liberal party are actually upon them. But, there is no doubt that the people look for some measure of redress; and I am sometimes of the opinion, whether wrongly or rightly, that the people of the North-west, judging by the arguments that are advanced, look for the same consideration and the same rates as the people of the older settled provinces. It strikes me that many of the arguments advanced by the people of the North-west tend to put the matter upon the same footing as in the older settled portions of the country, and they are asking for the same consideration. Now, I am not saying that the Canadian Pacific Railway discriminates, but all their arguments seem to be directed against the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway may deserve the criticisms levelled against it or it may not; all I can say is that the undertaking of constructing that railway was one of enormous magnitude. But people seem to be looking for some form of redress whereby the grievances that they claim to suffer may be removed. I understand that a system has been in vogue in the old country for a number of years, introduced away back in the early fifties, which might be some guide to us. A commission was appointed for a period of five years, and proved so successful that it has been repeatedly reappointed and exists, I understand, at the present time. In the neighbouring republic we find railway commissions existing that are endowed with certain powers to adjust grievances between the people and the railway companies, and to supervise rates and deal with attempted discriminations. Apparently these commissions have proved successful there, and it is possible a similar commission might prove successful in this country.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) made a remark that the public expected the Dominion government to deal with questions of this kind, and if the government do not deal with them the public will deal with the government. There is a certain amount of force in that. I am not prepared to go quite as far as the hon. gentleman does along that line, but the public no doubt look to the Dominion government to take some steps, or to enact some legislation, to bring about a better state of affairs than exists at the present time. I am not a very extensive shipper, so personally, I have no grievance to complain of; but parties who are large shippers have complained to me at different times that unfair discrimination is made by the roads, discrimination which they cannot overcome. They have no court of appeal, and they have no way of redressing their grievance, and consequently have had to submit to them so far. It seems to me that some measure of this kind might well be introduced into this country. So far as my opinion goes it leans toward a government commission.

I do not propose to go into the side issues, so to speak, bearing upon this question further than to make a passing remark in reference to government ownership of railways. I am not yet sufficiently advanced to give my consent to government ownership of railways. I think, however, I can foresee a good many difficulties in connection with the successful management of railways by the government. I have noticed that the arguments advanced by members on the other side of the House, with the exception of the hon. member for Lisgar, with respect to government ownership of railways, have come largely from men who were instrumental in fastening upon the North-west, the very railway that they are trying to get control of now, men who, in their papers or in their arguments on the floor of the House, were instrumental in fastening upon the North-west the very objectionable system that they are to-day asking this government to assume control of, and to use for the benefit of the people. I do not believe that the principle of government ownership of railways is theoretically correct; it seems to me there are a great many grave dangers in connection with it. I am satisfied that the people in the western part of Ontario, as well as in other portions of the province, are by no means united in favour of the principle of government ownership of railways. It seems to me that the easier solution of the difficulty might be in some form of legislation like the appointment of a railway commission or tribunal of some sort that can deal with matters of this kind.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). I rise to say very briefly that I am in favour of a commission, as moved for by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). I believe that the time has arrived when, if the government cannot see its way clear to purchase and manage the railways of this country, they certainly ought to appoint a commission of able men to manage the railways irrespective of party politics. The farmers' gatherings all through the country, in Ontario, at least, have expressed themselves strongly upon this matter, and they are all desirous of a commission being appointed for the purpose of settling differences between the people and the railways, and preventing discrimination in favour of exporters or importers and against the farmers. We have heard four hon. gentlemen from the North-west Territories and Manitoba speak this afternoon in favour of the appointment of a commission. They are all suffering from the effects of the overcharges of the railways. I am satisfied that Ontario has a grievance, especially when the railway companies will carry freight to the seaboard at a cheaper rate than from a point in Ontario. The Grand Trunk Railway will carry freight as cheaply from Chicago to the seaboard as from Listowel. There must be something wrong when railway companies are allowed to discriminate against the farmers of Ontario in favour of the farmers of the North-west Territories and the farmers of the United States. I think something should be done, and done quickly. The country is expecting this government to do something. I believe it has been promised. I believe the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has stated that something of this kind will be done, and the people are looking for it. I have nothing more to say except that I fully endorse the motion that has been made by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and supported by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and others.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that there are a couple of hon. gentlemen who would like very much to say something upon this motion, but who are not in the Chamber at this moment, and perhaps it may be agreeable to the House to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAM A. GALLIHER (Yale and Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, in reference to the motion before the House, I would like to add a few words to those which have already been said by hon. members before me. I live in the western part of the country myself and represent a western constituency. I have personally experienced the hardships that have been complained of so much in regard to excessive rates, and have done so for the past twenty years. I do not propose, for my part, to abuse the Canadian Pacific Railway here to-night, or any other railway company. We are all more or less proud of that great transcontinental line known as the Canadian Pacific Railway, but, at the same time, it behooves us to watch carefully and see that the road is giving us justice and giving us justice in every respect. Now, the question for us to consider is not so much as to whether this or any other road has made a good bargain or whether it has received more than it should have received from the country, as it is whether we are suffering in any part of the country and the remedy that should be provided to alleviate that condition. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) made reference to a matter that I would like to bring up again. He referred to the rates charged on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. I have before me a resolution of the board of trade of the town of Fernie, which is in my constituency, setting out the exact facts and figures, and I can do no better than read what they say as an illustration of the condition that prevails. The following table showing the freight rates charged from Lethbridge to Fernie, a distance of 141 miles, will be of interest. Between these points, prior to the 14th of May, 1900, the rates, which were then considered excessive, were as follows :

Class.	Rate.
1st	69 cents.
2nd	58 "
3rd	46 "
4th	35 "
5th	31 "

An hon. MEMBER. Between what points ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Between Lethbridge and Fernie, a distance of 141 miles on the Crow's Nest line. That is up to the 14th May, 1900. On that date, the rates were increased, and now are :

Class.	Rate.		Former rate.
1st	$1 02	as compared with	$0 69
2nd	0 85	" "	0 58
3rd	0 68	" "	0 46
4th	0 51	" "	0 35
5th	0 46	" "	0 31

This is an illustration of there being something wrong in connection with the management of that road, though, as I understand, there was a clause in the charter granted for the building of that road giving protection in the matter of railway rates and we will assume that when the Canadian Pacific Railway started out they did not commence by charging the least possible rate they could charge, but, I think, we may safely assume that they charged the rate they were entitled to. Then, why has that rate, in some instances, been practically doubled? I merely quote this statement in support of the figures given by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and to show that even on a road subject to a certain amount of government control these rates have been increased. I do not know whether the matter has been reported to the government or not. If it has and if it has not been remedied I think I might ask that the matter be looked into.

It is my opinion that this is a matter which should be taken up by the government, and if it is found that the present system of managing our railways is not satisfactory, then some other way should be sought. Whatever good might come from the appointment of a railway commission in the older provinces of Canada, we expect that it will be of comparatively greater benefit to Manitoba and the Northwest and British Columbia. My views on the matter are very much similar to those expressed by the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), who moved the resolution. I am in favour of the appointment of a railway commission, and even if that commission does not accomplish all that we hope from it, at all events its appointment will be a step in the right direction. There are, doubtless, some portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway which cannot be fully placed under the control of a railway commission, but it must be remembered that there will be other portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway built in the west, and there will be other lines constructed throughout Canada, and all these, at least, will come within the scope of the proposed commission. If this commission is appointed it will be its special duty to attend to railway business alone, and as the hon. member (Mr. Davis) has said, they will be able to take into consideration such railway charters as are applied for to parliament and decide whether they are necessary in the public interest or not. If found not to be necessary they should be rejected by parliament. I have much pleasure in seconding the motion proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis.)

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Although this question has been threshed thread bare in this House, and we can hardly expect to have any fresh light on the matter until some practical plan is submitted to the House, yet I wish to express my opinion very briefly upon it. My predecessor in the representation of Winnipeg, the late Mr. Jameson, introduced a motion similar to this one in 1898. He referred to the fact that the government had promised to bring down some kind of measure providing for a railway commission, and he excused himself in speaking to the motion on the ground that his remarks might probably prepare the minds of hon. gentlemen for the expected measure. Now, it seems to me that the railway question in the country has made a great deal more progress than the questions of a railway commission in this House. There is need for some stronger control over our railways than we have now ; some government supervision, something that will bring the railways nearer together in the matter of rates and abolish that discrimination which is so rampant all over the country. Cases of discrimination have been presented to this House so many times that there is hardly need to refer to them, but one very flagrant case in connection with the furniture trade has come to my notice. On a car-load of chairs from Ontario to Vancouver, the rate is $1.17 ; on a car-load of bedroom suites the rate is $1.38 ; on a car-load of mixed furniture the rate is $1.68 ; and if there be included in it any upholstered goods the rate is $2.08. It is plain that this discriminates against the small dealers and in favour of the big dealer, who can order a car-load of each kind of article. The effect of this discrimination is to absolutely prohibit that small dealer from buying Canadian goods and rather than pay the high freight rates, it is cheaper for him to buy in the western states and pay freight and duty on the goods that he sells to Canadian citizens on the Pacific coast. In spite of all the difficulties that have to be overcome, I have hope that a railway commission can accomplish some good, because in ten or a dozen states of the union where railway commissions have been operating from ten to twenty years, satisfactory results have accrued to the farming and business communities. At the same time, I must say that I do not believe that the appointment of a railway commission will ever prove a proper solution of the transportation problem in Canada. That, in my opinion, can only be attained by government ownership of the roads. At the present time the people of the country have to bear all the burdens of the construction and of the operation of these railways, and, sometimes they have to bear the cost of maladministration, and yet we practically have no say at all in their management, and no control over their rates. If I believed that the appointment of a railway commission would in any way militate against progress in the line of government ownership, I would not be in favour of it, because I do not believe that a railway commission will be a final solution of the difficulties that have to be overcome in this transportation question. The very extent of our country demands that we should look to finality in this matter, and the only way we can govern the roads effectively is by government ownership, operation, and control.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Many years ago, when this question was first introduced to the notice of the Canadian parliament by Mr. Dalton McCarthy, then member for Simcoe, I supported it. There was a growing feeling in the country that some competent power should control the railways and adjust disputes between the railway companies and the shippers throughout Canada. The agitation grew stronger from year to year, both in this House and in the country, until the government were obliged to ignore it no longer. Then a commission was appointed to inquire into these troubles and to ascertain what would be the best remedy. As a result of the report of that commission, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council was established. I held then, as I have ever believed since, that that was only a makeshift with a view of causing the agitation to subside, and to leave the railways still under the control of parliament. It seemed to me that the railway companies had some kind of cinch upon the parliament of the day, so that they felt safer in the hands of parliament, than under the control of an independent commission, and from that time onwards such cases as have been brought to the notice of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council have been adjusted by that body. As to the workableness of that body, and as to whether it has fulfilled the expectations of the people, it is unnecessary for me to say much at the present time, because the country knows as well as I do that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has failed to meet the expectations or desires of the people, or to give the people confidence in the tribunal.

The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) expressed the opinion very strongly that a railway commission would be an unworkable body in this country, and referred to the fact that railway commissions in the United States had not done all that was expected of them. But when speaking of that subject, I thought he did not display a very intimate knowledge of what had been accomplished in the United States through railway commissions. If he had been as familiar with the workings of those commissions as some United States writers, he would have, at least, conceded a great deal of good had been accomplished by them —that while they failed to do all that was expected of them, it could not be successfully established that they were a failure. Where they were a partial failure, it is for us to inquire what were the causes of failure, and whether those causes would apply with equal force in Canada. In my judgment they would not. The principal cause of their failure in the United States was the fact that different states were governed by state laws, so that when a railway passed beyond the boundary of one state, it came under a different law. But that is no reason why the same difficulty would be met with here. We have no provincial laws that would interfere with the working of a commission, because all our railways are largely under the control of the Dominion ; and a railway commission which had its authority from this parliament would be able to exercise a very effectual control over them in every part of the country. But the history of railway commissions in the United States—and I have taken some trouble to look into it—is that they have been of very great benefit to the people, remedying many grievances, and readjusting many difficulties between railway companies and the people, in many cases to the satisfaction of both.

The hon. member for South Norfolk rather read to the House a lecture on the subject of interference with railway companies. The hon. gentleman said that we hear the pessimistic utterances of men against railway companies—companies who bond railways for very large amounts of money and then complain when we endeavour to readjust the tariff of rates on these railways, and point out that they are not earning a fair rate of interest on the money invested in them. Lest I should do the hon. gentleman injustice, I will quote his own words as I took them down: 'We are talking about conditions and difficulties of railway problems of which we know little,' and he went on to give us a history of the difficulties encountered in promoting railway construction twenty-five or thirty years ago. I remember when the hon. gentleman was one of the most active railway promoters in western Canada, and I know that he had many difficulties to contend with at that time. But the hon. member should not forget that we are a progressive people, and are advancing all the time. It was much more difficult to get capital to invest in railway construction then than it is to-day. The difficulty that existed then does not exist now. While to-day capital is plentiful, and a great deal of money is going into railway construction, it is, to my mind, a matter of great importance to control the bonding power of these railways because the railway companies always put up the plea, when an agitation is started for a reduction of freight rates, that they are not earning a reasonable interest on the money invested. When such a plea is set up, it seems to me that it is the absolute duty of parliament to see that these railway companies are not loaded down with bonds and watered stock to a much greater amount than actually went into the construction of the roads. What we want to know about a particular road is, what amount of money actually went into its construction. The capitalist who put his money in is entitled to a fair interest upon it; but it cannot be successfully established that we are in duty bound to protect capitalists who have watered the stock, and who desire to get out of a road what they never put into it.

We cannot shut our eyes to the agitation which exists in the country to-day, which is becoming more strong and widespread, which is growing with such rapidity as will soon compel parliament to take note of it and deal with this vexed problem. It must be dealt with in the near future, and the government which is not capable of dealing with it will be obliged to give place to one that will deal with it, and deal with it successfully.

The hon. gentleman gave us an illustration of what he regarded as unfair freight rates compared with what the farmer is getting to-day. He says the farmer in the most westerly portion of Canada pays less on his produce shipped to Liverpool than the farmer around Liverpool gets his goods taken to London. Whose grievance is that? It is the grievance of the farmer around Liverpool, and let him fight his own battles. That has nothing to do with our grievances in this country. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) made the statement, which, I presume, is capable of proof, that on a piece of machinery brought from Glasgow and laid down at Regina there was over $100 more paid for freight than is charged on a like article carried several hundred miles further and landed in British Columbia. Why should that be the case?

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. Because there is competition.

Mr. SPROULE. I hope that when the parliament of Canada puts money into railway enterprises, it is acting for the whole people of Canada, and the people have a right to expect that they will get fair-play in proportion to the distance of the haul. I am told that the railway problem is a complex one, requiring years of experience to understand, and that if a railway did not often haul goods long distances below actual cost, it would not get the business at all. Far better not get the business than do it under cost. When the western farmer had the privilege of carrying a barrel of flour from Minneapolis to Montreal at 25 cents a barrel, while the farmer of western Ontario had to give a share of his hard earnings to build a railway, and in addition was compelled to pay 35 cents for the hauling of a barrel of flour to Montreal, I say that Canada is paying its money for the benefit of the western farmer near St. Paul, rather than for the benefit of the farmer of western Ontario. Then, I am told in the same breath that it did not pay the actual cost of transportation. If it did not, why should we pay a part of that cost? Is it to help to bring the western farmers around Minneapolis and St. Paul 500 miles, nearly 1,000 miles, nearer the market in which they sell their produce than we do the Canadian farmers here?

This question must be dealt with in the near future. The sentiment in favour of settling it is growing so strong that the government cannot ignore it much longer.

The hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) said that the establishment of a railway commission would be an interference with the constitution. How would it interfere with the constitution? There can be no interference with our constitutional rights in the appointment of a railway commission. 'No parliamentarian or statesman will deny that we have the power and the right to establish such a commission without thereby violating in any degree the spirit of the constitution. It is just as much within our rights to do this as to make any other law for the purpose of controlling the railway companies.

I was rather amused at the illustration given us by the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher), of the discrimination in rates on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. That brought to my mind the strong plea of the hon. the Minister of Railways in favour of giving that road a subsidy of $11,000 per mile, namely, that it would provide the farmer with reduced freight rates, and that the control of the freight rates would be in the hands of the government, and there would be no danger of discrimination. That was the plea he gave to justify the large subsidy of $11,000 per mile, and the illustration given by the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo now shows how little credence that plea was entitled to. The hon. member, by his argument, justified the contention on this side of the House that there was not sufficient provision made for the control of the freight rates by the government, and not sufficient justification for the large subsidy given that company.

The hon. member for South Norfolk said that we had no reason to bother ourselves at all about the bonding of the roads so long as the railways were built. That seems a very short-sighted policy for an hon. gentleman of his experience to advocate. It seems to be that we are bound to take cognizance of the bonding of these roads, and keep it within reasonable bounds. Otherwise should we ever take the power to in any way control these railway corporations, we will find ourselves confronted with the same dilemma in which we are with the Canadian Pacific Railway to-day, and will be told that we must not do anything which would prevent any company paying the interest on its bonds, and on its watered stock, as well as on the money that actually went into the construction of the road. Are there any members here who know anything about the Great North-west Central Railway Company, which has a Bill before the House to-day ? If there are, they will remember that in the course of twenty years we were obliged, on two or three occasions, to provide, when amending the charter of that railway, that the company which took it up would furnish the money to pay its debts. There were thousands of dollars piled up against that road before a mile of it was in operation or even built. Another example is the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. Where did the money go which was voted for that railway by the Dominion government and the government of the province of Quebec ? Should we ask that company to lower its freight rates, they would claim that they must be allowed to charge sufficiently high rates to pay the interest on this money, or otherwise we would be doing an injustice to its creditors. Had we exercised the proper control over the expenditure of capital by these companies, and not have allowed them to squander it as they did, we would not be confronted with the dilemma in which we are to-day. Then there is the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company which has been before the country for many years. I give these examples to show the unwisdom of allowing railway companies to borrow money on bonds, and distribute it among railway promoters and charter brokers and others, and then have it charged up against the road as a debt, to meet the interest on which it is entitled to charge heavier freight rates than otherwise would be required. I give this as an answer to the hon. member for South Norfolk, that we should not concern ourselves at all about what the companies bond their road for, or how they water their stock or pile up debt.

We are rapidly reaching a day when one of two things must be accomplished. Either the government must control the railway companies, or the railway companies will emphatically and entirely control the government. Some people think they are doing that to-day. I am glad to see that occasionally our Minister of Railways puts up apparently a pretty good fight against them, but whether they are too strong or he fails to keep up the persistence absolutley necessary to success, the result seems to fall far short of his expectations. He, however, has my encouragement to any extent he can be induced to go in opposing the pretensions of these corporations.

I am not one of those who believe that a railway commission would remedy all the evils from which we are suffering. There are many reasons why it would not, but if it remedies only a tenth of the evils complained of, that would amply justify its creation. If the commission does not come up to what we expect, it will be easy to amend it. We know that the railway commissions in the United States have been beneficial in many respects, and we have more reason to expect success in this country because our railways are nearly all Dominion roads, and we are not hampered by any state laws as these commissions are in the United States. It is said that as our railways extend in the United States and draw considerable traffic from there, a railway commission would not be effective. But that argument would apply with tenfold greater force to railway commissions in the United States, where each state has its own railway legislation. I think it would be workable to a greater extent than many people suppose. While I do not believe it would entirely cure the evil we have to contend with, I think it would be a step in the right direction. But there is one thing sure, and that is that in the near future something must be done. Some tell us that the remedy should be the purchase and ownership of the railways by the state. That seems a gigantic undertaking, and one for which we are hardly prepared. I have sometimes thought that we should bring our efforts to bear in a way of increasing our own railway by extending the government railway to the lakes, and ultimately it might reach the Pacific coast. This would give us the through railway that would offer a salutary check upon the two great corporations that seem likely, in the near future, to control all the railways of the country. Such a project involves a much smaller financial undertaking than the buying out of all the railways, and I would rather favour that. But I must say that there is a growing feeling that the day will come when the state will be obliged, in some way, to take charge of the railways, or to have control of them by purchase or otherwise. But, for the present, let us make a step in advance of what we have done in the past. It seems to me the only reasonable thing would be the establishment of a proper railway commission to do the work very largely on the same lines as those followed by a similar tribunal in the United States.

Mr. WILLIAM F. McCREARY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to have spoken on this question to-night, as I had no notice until this afternoon that the subject was coming up. This is a question the history of which is practically the history of Manitoba and the North-west Territories for the last twenty years ; it is a question calling for thought and preparation on the part of one who is to speak upon it. I will not weary the House with details of cases of discrimination in freight or passenger rates or excessive rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for I believe these matters have been thoroughly dealt with by previous speakers. But I would refer to one or two phases of the question that, it seems to me, have not been sufficiently dealt with. Several speakers who preceded me have told you that grants have been given to the Canadian Pacific both in cash and in public lands. They forgot, however, to mention that these lands have been free from taxes ever since they were given to the Canadian Pacific Company, which, if translated into terms of money, would represent a very large sum. These hon. gentlemen forgot to tell you that these lands have been increased in value, not, as one hon. gentleman said this afternoon, by the fact of the line being built, but by immigrants coming in and settling on the homestead lands alongside, improving them, and building roads, bridges, schools, and so on.

As I have said, the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway is almost contemporaneous with that of Manitoba for the last twenty years, and it would be well to refer back to 1881 and to speeches made by members of this House at that time, some of whom are still here. I regret that time has not permitted me to refer to the debates on that occasion. As a resident of Winnipeg, however, I can remember looking over the newspapers at the time, and scanning the reports of speeches of the leaders on either side. I can remember that the leaders of the opposition of that day made most strenuous efforts to have certain clauses inserted in the contract which were not accepted by parliament. And it is for that reason that we suffer some of the grievances we are labouring under to-day. I can recollect certain prophecies made by Sir Charles Tupper —I was going to say 'promises,' but I remember that Sir Charles Tupper denied that he had made promises and said that they were prophecies. He prophesied in 1881 that, in ten years from the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there would be two million people in that country, and we would export, if I remember the figures well, 60,000,000 bushels of wheat per year. No part of that prophecy has ever been fulfilled. I regret to say that the census of 1891 showed very small advance over the natural increase of the population for the ten years between 1881 and 1891. When Sir Charles Tupper made that prophecy in this House, I feel assured, he honestly stated what he believed. I believe that that hon. gentleman was, in most of his acts, a friend of the west. I believe that when he was a member of this House, and also when he was High Commissioner in England, his intentions were honestly friendly to the western country. But I believe that, unknowingly, he placed in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway a weapon by which his prophecies were defeated. The first difficulty arose when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company gave the construction of the road to a company composed of their own managers. The first steal, if we may use the term, was made when this construction company made millions of dollars out of the building of the road, which stands charged to the people of Manitoba to-day. The next difficulty arose in 1884—I believe, when, as you know, the farmers' union was formed in Manitoba—many farmers in Manitoba began to see that the road which was to have been of so much benefit to us was a monopoly that would take the profit of everything they raised. I remember attending a meeting of that union in the Opera House in Winnipeg. I saw men there take off their coats and make speeches of a most declamatory and inflammatory nature—almost to the extent of threatening war. I afterwards saw many of the men who attended that meeting, among them some of the most solid farmers of the province, go to Minnesota and Dakota to escape this octopus whose tentacles were closing around them—and many of them can be found in those states to-day. It went on till 1886, if I recollect aright, when the merchants of Winnipeg and the farmers of the west saw that this Canadian Pacific Railway, unless there was some competition in rates, would take the profits of everything in the country—that everything would belong to that company. We clamoured for lines to be brought in from the south. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) said this afternoon that the Canadian Pacific charter had been altered in 1886 so as to allow other lines to come in. And how did that come about? If you had been at a place called Fort White, near Winnipeg, at that time, Mr. Speaker, you would know why they had allowed other lines in. You would have seen citizens there, church members, peaceful men, standing at that crossing where the diamond was being put in at two o'clock in the morning, with something in their hip-pockets besides tooth-picks—and they meant business. When the box-car of the Canadian Pacific Railway with forty men aboard came up to that diamond, those men saw that the safest thing for them was to get out of the car. Time has gone on, but Sir Charles Tupper's prophecies are far from being fulfilled. I claim that one of the greatest causes retarding immigration into the North-west has been this Canadian Pacific Company. I must do them the justice of saying that during the last three or four years they have made some concessions to passengers going into Manitoba and the North-west Territories from the south. They have also given a pretty low rate on freight that is settlers' effects—a $6 rate on car-load lots from the boundary line to Winnipeg. The Northern Pacific Company does the same. They have also given a low rate to Edmonton—about $42—on car-load lots, and also a low rate on passenger traffic. But when the immigrant wants to go back to see his friends, he has to pay four cents a mile, and an exorbitant freight rate on everything he wants to take out. You can easily imagine the effect that it will have upon people coming from the United States, and from the old country as well. Some Russians, for instance, who have come in the last five or six years, after they have been accustomed to travel at the rate of one-third of a cent per mile at home, when they are told that they have got to pay four cents, they walk. That is the way they get over the difficulty. The same plan is followed by some merchants living down in the country not far from Winnipeg, in the town of Selkirk, twenty miles away. I have known them to employ teams of horses to draw their groceries, coal oil and so forth, instead of taking them by railway. They say they can make more money that way than by paying the Canadian Pacific Railway rates.

Now, I would like to discover the best means for relieving the province of Manitoba and the west generally of this condition of affairs. It is a matter that will require considerable thought. Government ownership is a very popular cry. It is a fad in the minds of some people. But the difficulty is that it has not yet been tried in Canada sufficiently to warrant any man of sound judgment in saying it is going to be an unqualified success. I have had a little experience in municipal matters, and for a number of years, in our city of Winnipeg, we worked for municipal ownership of public franchises, when I was a member of the city council in 1895, 1896 and 1897, we undertook to municipalize our waterworks. We raised three-quarters of a million dollars under a by-law, and went into that scheme. I am sorry to say, and my hon. friend across the floor, from Lisgar, will bear me out, that these waterworks have not been the success I should like to have seen them. I believe the principal is all right, but unfortunately one thing and another has happened so that the people are not altogether satisfied with the result. We must also say that the management of the Intercolonial Railway for the last twenty years, or for the last number of years, has not been so satisfactory to the people of Canada as it should have been. I very much fear that according to our present system of government it may be some time before we reach that millennial stage by which government ownership of railways will be in the best interest of the people. I very much fear that so long as party government prevails in its present hard and fast lines, no matter how religious and pious party politicians may be in power, they will be too much disposed to favour their own friends and make the railway management a political lever, for such management to be in the best interests of the public. All these matters have got to be taken into consideration before we should have government ownership. I observe with some pleasure that the Hon. Geo. W. Ross proposes or suggests to construct a line of railway to Temiscamingue. I would like to see this experiment tried in the province of Ontario, before it is attempted in the great Dominion.

I believe that a railway commission properly conducted will be the means of doing much good, but I think a great deal depends upon the powers of that commission. I trust that the commission will not be empowered merely to settle questions of discriminations in rates, I trust that it will not be limited to settling time tables and matters of that sort; but that it will have such powers as will enable it to go back and examine this charter given to the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1881, and to consult the best attorneys, irrespective of any railway company that can be found, to see exactly what the meaning of that charter is. A charter has sometimes to be studied, to be read very closely, and several times before the full gist of it is comprehended, and I take it, that if solicitors of ability were to take up that charter and to look up that clause which seems to trouble the hon. member for Lisgar so much, they might find means of getting over that ten per cent clause. I would not be surprised if solicitors could even find means of getting over that. I recollect very well we had a charter given to a street railway company in the city of Winnipeg, and some years ago the company refused to level their tracks with the street crossings. They refused to do several other things that the city engineer required of them. He gave them a notice as required by the charter and they refused to comply. Another solicitor was called in, and I pointed out to him clause two of the charter, and I said: Doesn't that clause mean that if they won't carry out this thing you can take away their charter? A bill in equity was filed within two or three weeks to take away their charter, and they came down off their perch immediately and did whatever the city of Winnipeg required of them. For years the city of Winnipeg had no idea they had such power.

There is no doubt that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, if properly brought to task, will do much better than they are doing to-day. This is borne out by a statement made the other day by Mr. Shaughnessy, president of the road, when Mr. Roblin, now premier of Manitoba, brought in a Bill to purchase the Northern Pacific Railway, to guarantee its bonds and to make a certain bargain with the Canadian Northern road. Immediately we saw Mr. Shaughnessy come to the legislature and say: Don't do this for God's sake, I will come down, I will give you a reduction of four cents within the short space of two years if you will not give this charter to that company. That shows what can be done if the people of Manitoba are in earnest. Now, Sir, I believe that this commission will not fulfil probably all that is expected of it, it will not carry out everything that we require. But, I believe it is a step in the right direction, and after we have had it two or three years, and find that it is not relieving the west of the disabilities under which they are labouring, then will be the time for the western politicians, irrespective of party, to join hands and hearts and come down to eastern Canada and to this parliament and demand that the government build such roads as will enable our new province and the western territories to achieve the destiny for which they were carved out.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I desire to add something that the hon. gentleman has omitted. He said that government ownership had not been tried sufficiently in this country to warrant any man of sense and judgment advocating it. It may be that what he says is correct. But government ownership has been tried successfully in Austria-Hungary, in Belgium, in Switzerland, in Germany and in the Australasian colonies, and so far as figures go, has proved to be an absolute success.

Mr. McCREARY. I was speaking of Canada. The conditions may be so different in those European countries that they would not apply here at all.

Mr. A. S. KENDALL (Cape Breton). I do not rise to take part in this discussion, but merely to put myself on record. I come from the eastern part of Canada, where we have the advantages or disadvantages of a state-owned railway, and for one I desire to say that I think the advantages entirely outweigh the disadvantages. A great many of our people are in sympathy with the desire of the west for state-owned roads. Now it has been made apparent here that the people are suffering from undue exactions by the railroad in the way of freight rates. The influence which these railway corporations have acquired in this country is a subject for alarm. It has been my opportunity to sit in the committee room during a number of sessions as a spectator, and I must say that the safety and welfare of this country have depended upon the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, and other great railway corporations were trying to cut one another's throats. When these great corporations are united as they doubtless will be before long, and united perhaps with the big coal combines of the country, they will have power to make and unmake parliaments. These big corporations do not care for politics, except in so far as one party or the other will serve them best. For these reasons I say that while I believe this commission will give some measure of relief, for one I shall never be satisfied until Canada owns her railroads.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I should be very much inclined myself to despair if the facts were such as stated by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Kendall), and I should feel bound to draw the same conclusion as he does from those facts. The hon. gentleman suggests that if the time ever does arrive, and he imagines it is likely to arrive at some not remote day, when the two great railway corporations, the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway, shall unite their interests, they then will have such a controlling power over the parliament of this country that we will be absolutely at their mercy. I feel constrained to express the opinion that even if the time should come, and I am not so sure that that time has not already arrived, when, to all practical intents and purposes, the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway are in entire unison in their railway policy, I should be very loath indeed to acknowledge that the people of this country will be unable to defend themselves and to take good care of their own interests. I think that the railway companies will be sorry to find themselves in antagonism to the people of the country. I think they will not find it to their interest to excite any such conflict, and I believe, Sir, that the managers of these two railways are in their hearts convinced that in such a conflict they are bound to succumb. The people of the country are not in their hands. A few individuals here and there may be largely subject to their influence, but the great body of the people of this Dominion, I am happy to believe, if the time arrives, and they are called upon, are able to go to the polls, and record their votes irrespective of what the two great combined railway corporations may demand. That is my conviction, and I believe that to be the conviction of the majority of the members of this House, and if that were not my conviction, I would despair of the future of this country. I have followed with all possible interest the discussion that has so far taken place, and I have followed with like interest the discussions which have ensued from time to time, and particularly within the last two months in the newspaper press upon the question of a railway commission, and if one is justified in forming any judgment as to what the state and trend of public opinion is upon this question you would be justified in concluding that the people of Canada are rapidly coming to the opinion that a railway commission would be a very important advance, and that they think its working would be attended with good results. I believe that to be the state of public opinion. I am not in a position to say whether that opinion is founded upon good reason, or whether it is founded upon sufficient ground or not. I am inclined to think that a great many of the most earnest and active and vigorous advocates of a railway commission are led to conclude that it will be a panacea for all of the ills upon grounds which are not sufficient. I have heard, during this discussion, hon. gentlemen specifying their grievances, the grievances of their people, the grievances that are complained of in different sections of the Dominion, and the grievances which they have mentioned, I am bound to say, in my opinion, as far as I have been able to form one, are largely grievances that do not admit of remedy at the hands either of a railway commission, or any other tribunal that can be set up by legislative enactment. Take, for instance, the case mentioned by two or three hon. gentlemen who have spoken. One hon. gentleman, I think it was the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) mentioned one case, the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) mentioned another, and the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) another. These cases are all very similar. One hon. gentleman said that it was a grievous wrong, and parliament ought to remedy such a wrong, that it was possible for the wheat shippers of Chicago to have their wheat carried to the Atlantic seaboard at as low a rate as the farmer at Listowel could have his grain carried to the seaboard. I think reflection will convince anybody that you cannot remedy that state of things, and that if it is a grievance, a grievance it must continue to be. Why? Because the railway company which is carrying grain from Chicago to the seaboard is obliged to carry it at such rates as will enable it to get the business there, or not carry at all. Our railways which are competing for the traffic from Chicago to the seaboard will carry for rates equal, or very trifiingly in excess of the rates to which the hon. gentleman refers, if engaged to carry grain. If the legislature should provide, either by its own direct enactment, or through a commission, that the railway should be forbidden to carry grain from Listowel to the seaboard at the same rates that it charges to carry from Chicago to the seaboard, what would be the result? The grain would either not be carried from Chicago to the seaboard, or it would not be carried from Listowel to the seaboard. The railway company would make its choice as between the two businesses. Which shall it hold, and which shall it abandon? It would have to determine which was the more profitable. It would have to take into account all the conditions existing, and to say—and the Railway Committee would have to yield to the force of the argument—that the business between Chicago and the seaboard will not be done by this company, or that it will not be done by another company. So that, no injustice is being done to the Listowel farmer. He will not have his grain carried one fraction of a farthing less by reason of the fact that you have prevented the railway company from hauling wheat from Chicago to the seaboard, and he may have to pay an advanced rate because the increased business the company may be getting in its haul from Chicago to the seaboard may enable it to carry grain at a somewhat lower rate from intermediate points. In my opinion it will be impossible that you can so legislate as to prevent business being done under these conditions, so long as railway companies have to confront one another between competitive points. The existing law, the Railway Act, which was framed after due consideration upon this point, I apprehend, contains a clause which distinctly limits the application of the discriminating rule to the case of the carriage of freights between competing points, recognizing that if they did not do that they would be likely to strike a blow at the business of the country which would be vastly more injurious to the general interest and vastly more likely to be productive of the dislocation of the general business of the country than it would be to omit such a provision from the Act and make an arbitrary rule which shall prescribe that every railway company shall carry every pound of freight hauled on its line at precisely the same comparative figures. I do not think that can be done. That is only one out of many illustrations which can be given of the same character, and which go to show that when you are dealing with questions of this intricate character, of this complicated nature, you cannot work out the ideas that you may think are equitable and just, and at the same time have regard to the demands of business and the conditions which are existing upon the other hand. But, Mr. Speaker, when I say this, I do not pretend to advance it, and I would not be understood as advancing it, as a reason why a commission cannot with great advantage be established by the law of the land. I desired to point that out to show, merely by way of illustration, that the strong reasons which have been urged in this discussion so far by my hon. friends—and they do impress me as being cases of very great grievance—are not reasons upon which it would be wise for parliament to arrive at the conclusion that a railway commission will be able to provide an adequate remedy for these things, and that we will find it a complete answer to all the complaints that are being made.

My hon. friend mentioned a somewhat similar case when he spoke of machinery which was brought from Glasgow and carried all the way from Vancouver at a rate of about one hundred dollars less than the same kind of article was carried from Glasgow to Regina. Is that not a case precisely in point? There are two or three railways running in competition between the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific coast. These railways are competing with each other for the business, and in order to secure that business they are obliged to cut under one another, and in doing so they cut their rates down to the lowest possible limit; and so they get the business. Is it any real injury to the people who may be located along that line that the freight is carried by a railway company in this country rather than by a railway company in the United States, and brought in by one of these connecting lines to the Pacific coast? Would it be an advantage to this country that we should force that traffic over one of the United States lines? That would be the result, however, if we would say that a railway company cannot impose upon goods which are brought to any point short of the Pacific coast, a rate which, proportionately would be higher than the rate to the coast itself. Hon. gentlemen will see, on a moment's consideration, how full of all sorts of difficulties these questions are. Do not let us jump to the conclusion that a railway commission is going to provide an adequate and complete remedy for all these difficulties, but, taking a moderate view of the question, let us see whether or not there are not things which a railway commission can accomplish which has not been accomplished under the jurisdiction of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

With respect to the action of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in the past, I may fairly claim that it has endeavoured, and with some success, to deal effectually and vigorously with such cases of discrimination under the law as have been brought to its notice. Let it be remembered that all that has been described here to-day as discrimination is not in any sense discrimination under the law. People are apt to give a much wider interpretation to the meaning of the word 'discrimination' than our present law would warrant, than the word bears in law, under which a railway commission has been established in any other country, or under which a railway commission will be or can be safely established in this country. A railway commission has been established in the mother country. Let us look for a moment how it operates. When I visited England a few years ago I spent a couple of days in the beautiful fruit-growing county of Kent. It is a great strawberry-growing county, and I asked the people about how they forwarded the berries to the London market, the price they paid, and the charges for freight. They told me that for many years they had regarded it as a great grievance that the strawberry-growers and shippers of France, Holland, and Germany were able to send their strawberries to the London market at a lower rate of freight than they themselves had to pay, although they were within from forty to sixty miles of London. I asked an intelligent gentleman with whom I was conversing: Why does not your railway commission apply a remedy, and his answer was: The railway commission cannot prohibit the shipment from the continent at these low rates; they cannot control the rates, and our fruit-growers have to fight it out for themselves, and do the best they can. Yet our friends in some parts of Canada think that a similar condition of things can be remedied by the appointment of a railway commission in this country. They cannot afford a remedy in England under the railway commission, or at least they do not do so, and the inference is that, although the railway commission has ample power, they have not found it expedient to interfere, and we may assume that they have very good reasons for their course. We cannot tell in what direction a general dislocation of business would ensue if these matters are thoughtlessly meddled in, and, while relief cannot be afforded in a particular case, or class of cases, it might be attended with serious consequences in other directions, and result in a larger degree of injury being done. Let me refer again to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Speaking with the best recollection I have of the various questions which have been brought to my attention since I have been Minister of Railways, I am not aware that there has been any case of discrimination in rates that has not been dealt with by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, if under the law it could deal with it. I remember one or two cases in which we were able to decide that there had been discrimination, and which were dealt with effectually. The House will remember the complaint as to the arrangement made by the Standard Oil Company with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. That complaint was capable of being proven within the law, and when it was proven there was no weakness in the arm of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to deal with it. We did not hesitate a moment to make up our minds as to what we should do, and the result was that this grievance was abated at once. I do not remember any case in which a complaint was made to us from any part of the country, in which we did not endeavour to get at the facts, and when it appeared that there was discrimination in the sense contemplated by the law, we have applied the remedy. There have been many complaints made to us of alleged discrimination, but there was no discrimination in them in the sense intended by law, nor was there discrimination in the sense that could be intended by any law we could pass. Hon. gentlemen complain of high rates upon many grounds. I will take the case that was mentioned to-day—the increase of rates between Cranbrook and Lethbridge, or between Lethbridge and Nelson. What is the fact with regard to that case ? The fact is that the rates which are now being imposed by the railway company are not in excess of the rates which they are authorized by law to impose, under the schedule which was fixed by the Governor in Council, with the best information at our disposal. It is true, there was a raise in the rate not very long since; but that raise occurred in this way. There was a reduction previously ; or, when the rate was first fixed, it was away below the schedule. For some reason or other, the companies concerned felt that these rates were too low, and they raised them ; but they did not raise them beyond or up to the schedule of rates allowed them by law, or when the tariff was submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council. It does not follow by any means that because we approve of a schedule of rates, the railway companies will always or to any great degree maintain their rates up to that schedule. That is the maximum. We have to fix a maximum. It is the only way in which rates could be fixed by us or by a railway commission. We cannot fix a rate to-day on this railway for a part of its line, and another rate to-morrow for another part of its line. We have to make a general rate for a district or area of country, arriving as well as we can at a conclusion as to what would be a fair and reasonable maximum rate to allow, from the best information we can gather, considering the different conditions of the different belts or areas. We have to consider the cost of operating the line. We do not often consider the question of the cost of building the line or the extent to which bonds have been issued. These are not the things we have in our minds ; but we have thought that we could best arrive at fair results with regard to a tariff of rates by comparison with other roads operating under like conditions, in other countries it may be, or in our own. For instance, when we were determining what we would approve as the maximum scale for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, we took pains to ascertain what were the schedules allowed and in operation upon the lines to the south of the boundary traversing the same description of country as our own ; and I will state to the House now that after a careful comparison of the rates, local and through, which were fixed by the authorities in the different states and territories to the south of the boundary line, we fixed as the maximum a lower schedule of rates upon the Canadian Pacific Railway traversing the Crow's Nest Pass than were allowed on those other railways. In every single instance, I think, we fixed lower rates in respect to all the classifications of goods and in respect to all the distances. At all events, we did so in the great majority of cases. So that it is not fair to say, and it cannot be said with a knowledge of the facts, that the schedules upon the Crow's Nest Pass Railway are higher than the schedules upon the other roads which are traversing east and west, south of the boundary line.

I have no doubt that while these maximum schedules are as they are, there are reasons why some of the railways to the south, perhaps all of them, may issue their tariffs upon a lower scale than the maximum. I have no doubt that they do it just as we do it. Possibly they may under some particular circumstances make some of their classifications lower and some of their distances lower. But we cannot by any possibility avoid that, and no tribunal, no railway commission, could reach a general conclusion as to what ought to be a fair maximum rate, in respect to all those classifications and in respect to distances, in any other way than the result was arrived at by the Governor in Council. It is not a thing which is capable of mathematical demonstration. There is no way in which we can figure out what would be absolutely right, what the business ought to stand, or what the business would not stand, what the conditions of the people will enable them to pay, or what the conditions of the people in a locality will not enable them to pay. We cannot reach these results by any precise scientific method. We have to do it in a crude way, by comparison with other railways, and railways whose applications are before us. When you come to examine, therefore, into the complaints which are so frequently made in the public press, as a matter of fact many of them will be found to be based, in the first place, upon insufficient information, and in the next place, upon the drawing of improper inferences from information which they may accurately have.

But, all the same, I frankly acknowledge, as I stated a moment ago, that there are strong reasons why it would be well for us to try the experiment of a railway commission. It is not possible for us to introduce a Bill for that purpose at the present session. I may frankly confess that if any culpability attaches for the non-presentation of a Bill of that kind at the present session, I would be in duty bound to assume the largest measure of responsibility upon myself. I want to disabuse the mind of my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) when he suggests, not probably intending to do anybody any injustice, that my inclination may perhaps be all right, but that I find myself overborne or prevented by the influence of others, or perhaps by my colleagues. I want to say to the House that so far as I have any means of judging, my colleagues are as well disposed as I am to favour the experiment of a railway commission, and I confidently believe that it will be one way of convincing the public mind that there are difficulties in the way of handling these questions which are not of a political character, which do not take their rise from any political influence or pressure, but which are necessarily incident to the transaction of a business that has grown to enormous proportions during recent years, which it is an immensely complicated problem to solve. I do not say that the railway commissions in the United States have not done good work, but they have fallen very far short of the expectations which were formed for them. I do not say that the railway commission in England has not done good work, but I do say that it has absolutely failed to meet the expectations which were held out respecting it, and there is a strong agitation in that country against its continuance.

During the course of this discussion, some of our friends have pointed out a few matters which they think might fairly come within the scope of such commission. The hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) thought that the charter-mongers perhaps might be sent adrift if a railway commission were established, and that the duty might well be imposed upon the commission of investigating into the sufficiency of all applications to parliament for railway charters, and reporting the conditions upon which these charters should be granted, and the extent of bonding privileges that should be conceded. I hardly think that parliament would be willing to denude itself entirely of the power of granting railway charters. We are supposed to make some inquiry into these applications. We are in the habit of inquiring into the necessity for the railway asked for and of imposing restrictions against the excessive issue of bonds. It is not difficult for any member of parliament to procure information as to the reasonable necessity of constructing a railway in any section of our country, nor is it difficult to get information as to the probable cost, in a general way, and we usually have that information furnished us. When there is any conflict as to the granting of a charter, the subject is pretty thoroughly discussed, and we have ample means of forming a judgment as to whether the charter should be granted or refused. I question, therefore, whether it would be well for parliament to refuse to retain in its hands to the fullest extent the right of granting these applications made from time to time. The question of railway construction is not one which has ceased to be, by any means, a live question. I believe that we are only entering upon the work of railway construction in Canada. Railways are just as necessary as highways. You will have to increase your railways in our great western country, ten-fold, twenty-fold, perhaps one hundred-fold, before you get that country developed. We are, in fact, only upon the threshold of the opening up and proper development of our great western inheritance. Let us not forget that the people in these different localities are impressed to a degree that we perhaps, in this section of the country, can hardly realize, with the importance of having railways laid down in their midst. These railways are an absolute and vital necessity to the filling up of this country. And when the people are crying out for railways, I do not think it would be wise policy for parliament to place undue obstacles in the way of chartering these roads.

The same experience will be undergone in the west that we have had in the east. We will find the people there crying out almost in despair for the construction of railways in every section of the country, giving, and themselves supplicating their municipalities to help, calling upon the provincial legislatures to contribute, and also upon the Dominion parliament to come to their rescue. They do so because railways are to them a paramount necessity, and because there is no reasonable amount of debt that they would not feel justified in incurring in order to secure railway construction in their midst. Therefore, we in this part of the country ought not to be any less generous in our treatment of applications for railway assistance in these unopened sections of our great west, than we have been in the past when dealing with applications for railways nearer the great centres and in the older provinces of Canada. We must not shut our eyes to the growing necessities of that country ; we cannot refuse to give it liberal treatment. If we should, we would be adopting an unwise policy, and one which will be attended with much more serious results than even going a little to the extreme the other way.

I do not think I would be justified in dwelling any longer on this question. I did not intend speaking at such length, but I wish to make one concluding remark. The Bill to establish a railway commission cannot be introduced this session. I stated in the House last year that I hoped at an early date to be able to introduce such a measure, but at that time I did not sufficiently carry in mind the fact that as soon as parliament was over, we would be plunged into the engrossing occupation of a general election. That absorbed pretty well all the time and attention which would have been possible for me to give to any other subject, and from that time down, there has not been any opportunity open to me of taking the subject up and considering and examining it as it must necessarily be considered, weighed and examined, if a Bill was to come up for consideration of parliament in such a form as it ought to come before receiving the sanction of this legislature.

In the meantime, and while we are waiting for another session, we are considering now whether it might not be to advantage that we should set somebody to work who, without our incurring a very large expense, might become possessed, by inquiry upon the spot, of the real facts and the full extent of the grievances which may be remediable, and which are finding expression in the public press and on the floor of this House. Such an investigation would be attended, I think, with two great results—it would put us in a position, when we finally draft our measure, to know, at all events, the nature of the difficulties which, so far as it is possible to do so, we hope to be able to surmount ; and it would, at the same time, enable us to find whether or not there are at the moment existing in these localities any grievances which the Railway Committee itself could deal with and deal with promptly, before we should have time to introduce and pass a law dealing with this subject. That is the feeling and disposition of the government. My own personal desire, Mr. Speaker, is that we should grapple with the question—a question necessarily of great importance, and one that is engaging largely the attention of the general public throughout the whole of Canada—and grapple with it vigorously. Let it strike where it may, so far as any improper railway interest is concerned. Railway interest we must consider, but improper, unreasonable railway interest we are not justified in considering. And when I say that this is my own feeling, I am bound to say, as a matter of justice to every one of my colleagues, that I believe, from what has occurred and from the opinions they have expressed, and from what they have said to me, that they are as deeply sensible of the importance of our meeting, as fully as possible, the complaints which are being made throughout the country, and are as strongly disposed as I am myself to aid in any measure which will ensure an adequate and efficient remedy.

Mr. DAVIS. In closing this debate, I would like to take a few moments to answer some of the statements made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and also statements made by the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair). If I understand the argument of the Minister of Railways, it amounts simply to this—that without competition, the people can get no relief, for, in discussing the point brought up by the hon. gentleman from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) with reference to the haul of grain from Chicago as compared with the charge from Listowel, Ont., I understood him to say that competition would force the railway companies to give a lower rate from Chicago than from Listowel. Now, as I have said, we in the North-west Territories live at a distance from the head of ocean navigation, and we had hoped for some relief from the rate charged on our grain from the grain fields of the west to the head of navigation, and I cited this afternoon the fact that we were paying 8⅔ cents per bushel for hauling our grain from Winnipeg, 448 miles, as against 4½ cents paid by the people, no matter who they are, who have their grain hauled a thousand miles, in round numbers, to Montreal, on the lakes, and the Canada Atlantic. So, I think we had a right to claim some relief. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) says that the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the kindness of their hearts, have offered to reduce the rates on grain to the lakes to 4 cents a bushel, provided the people of Manitoba will deal with them instead of dealing with a competing line, the Canada Northern. In view of this fact, I think the people of the west may justly claim that the government should step in and give them some relief. It seems to me a sad thing if the government cannot do this. If we must get competing lines in order to secure cheaper freight rates, it is a good thing for the people to know that fact. But, I submit that if one railway can do all the work under proper supervision and control, it would be better to have one railway than two ; for, if they have one railway, it can do the work for less than two railways can do it for when it is divided between them.

Of course, we do not expect that a railway commission would be a panacea for all the ills that flesh is heir to. We never advanced that idea. But we think that with a properly constituted railway commission we could get relief from some grievances. I showed this afternoon that the local rates on coal oil between Petrolia and Winnipeg, and Winnipeg and Prince Albert, are together 11 cents less than the through rate from Petrolia to Prince Albert. That is a grievance that a railway commission could deal with. Other questions also would arise. We have had any number of grievances in the North-west. For instance, for two or three sessions here, a good deal of time was taken up in discussing the Elevator Bill, and trying to get relief for the people in the handling of their grain. If we had had a properly constituted railway commission, the question could have been dealt with by that commission without troubling this House. Another point was that referred to by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in connection with the locating of a station. We do not want to be at the mercy of a railway corporation, because a big corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway Company can make or break towns. If we propose to tax them and they do not want to pay the taxes, they can remove the station to some other place and build a town there. The case referred to by the hon. member for Alberta was that of Pincher Creek. A branch of the Crow's Nest line, passed within two miles of Pincher Creek. The people of the town petitioned the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to place their station at the nearest point to the town. The railway company replied that on account of a grade or something, it was impossible for them to do so. So they put the station about two miles up the track, or about four miles from the town. Then the people applied to the government, I suppose to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, that my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) thinks is so much better and more suitable to the requirements of the country than a railway commission, but the reply of that body was that nothing could be done. But, lo and behold, a short time after, the Canadian Pacific Railway wrote and wired to the people of Pincher Creek, telling them they would place their station on the very spot where the people asked them to build it in the first place, and would do it without money and without price, though, in the first instance, the people offered a certain sum if they would place it there. A question of that kind could be settled by a properly constituted railway commission if we had one.

Now, I want to point out another fact to the Minister of Railways and Canals. In the town in which I live we have a salt deposit, and we would not have to go more than 250 miles east with our salt in order to be able to develop quite an industry in that town; but we cannot do it simply on account of the freight rates. We find the people in Goderich load their salt as ballast on boats going across the lakes, and get such low rates from the Canadian Pacific Railway, that they can place their salt down in competition to us, and drive us out of our own markets. I claim that is a grievance.

Now, I find in comparing the rates between Buffalo and New York over the New York Central, and it is about the same distance as from Winnipeg to the great lakes, that the shippers over that road have to pay something like 3 cents a bushel as compared with the 8 2-5 cents per bushel that we pay for the same distance in the west. I have shown this afternoon that they charge in the town of Prince Albert, in which I live, more for hauling stuff 609 miles, than they charge the people of Calgary for hauling 840 miles. I do not see where the long haul comes in there. If they hauled for the people of Calgary for the same price as the people of Prince Albert, then there might be some force in the argument of the Minister of Railways and Canals; but when they charge us 3 and 4 cents per 100 pounds more for carrying freight a shorter distance than they charge the people of Calgary, I think we have a grievance.

I want now to refer to the speech of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale). That hon. gentleman appears to me to be a venerable Rip Van Winkle. He appears to have been asleep for the last 15 or 20 years and to have just wakened up; because he has treated us this afternoon to a tale of ancient history about the Grand Trunk Railway. He tells up that the Grand Trunk Railway, with all the money that had been invested in it, much of which he says was invested by widows and orphans, had never paid more than 1½ cents per mile on the money invested. I wish he had gone further and told us how much money had been invested in the road. I think it would be found that the road is bonded to about double what it is worth. As was said by the hon. member for Grey, the people should not be called upon to pay interest on double what a railroad is worth, but only upon the exact amount taken in the first place to build the road. Is it right that the people of Alberta should be called upon to pay interest on 5 million dollars, when their road only cost 3 millions by the statement of the company in the blue-books ? I do not think that is a fair proposition. Therefore, I say it is time some steps should be taken by the government; and if we cannot get relief by a railroad commission, then we will have to go a step further, and the government will have to take control of the roads as they have done in Australia and other countries.

Look at the bearing of this question on the North-west Territories. If we are ever to get that country opened up and developed, its mineral resources with its wealth of timber and fisheries and agricultural lands, we must have some relief from railroad oppression. We will not get people to come into that country otherwise. A pioneer who is an intelligent man is sent in by his fellow-farmers to look out locations, and the first thing that man will do is to inquire what he will have to pay for hauling his produce to market. When he is told that he will have to pay 8 2-5 cents a bushel for hauling his grain 448 miles, he will compare that rate with what the people have to pay in the United States, with what they have to pay in Australia and other countries, in the Argentine Republic and in Brazil, and that man will go somewhere else to seek a location on account of the exorbitant freight rates.

I am sorry the Minister of Railways thinks we cannot get a measure of relief from this commission. I think, however, it would be well to give the experiment a trial. I have studied the report of the railway commission in the United States, and I find that outside of the question of freight rates altogether they have been a great advantage. I do not suppose a railway commission would cost more than $40,000 or $50,000 a year, not too big a sum for a country growing like this. There are a hundred ways in which it could be a benefit to the people. Take, for instance, a poor farmer in the west whose cow or horse is killed on the railroad track. He makes an appeal to the railroad corporation for compensation, and if they feel disposed in the kindness of their heart, they will give him something for it, but in case they refuse to pay him he is at their mercy, and can do nothing, because they will carry the case from court to court, and finally to the Privy Council, and the poor man will be ruined. If you had a properly constituted railroad commission that poor man could carry his case before them, they would investigate it, and if they found that he had a just case, they would order the corporation to settle with him, and if they refused to do so they would have the government to deal with instead of that private individual.

The hon. member for Norfolk said this afternoon that the Grand Trunk Railway had not paid more than 1½ per cent on the money that had been invested. And what is the reason? Because the money has been wasted. There is a case in point, an object lesson for any gentleman who has passed over the road between this town and Toronto. I have looked out of the window and seen about 50 miles of railroad graded upon which there had never been a tie or a piece of iron laid. That road cost about $600,000 of the money of these poor widows and orphans the hon. gentleman was talking about. If there had been a properly constituted railway commission existing in this country at that time, that money never would have been wasted, because a charter would never have been granted.

The Minister of Railways thinks that parliament would be denuding itself of its powers by placing the control in the hands of a railroad commission. I never made a proposition of that kind. What I said was that when an application was made to this House, and that application was handed over to a railroad commission for them to examine into the facts and report back to this House, on that report parliament would be in a position to deal intelligently with the question. That is what I said. With all due respect for the members of the Railway Committee, I do not think that they are at all times seized with all the information that they should possess. Some gentleman comes there with a beautiful map and places it on the wall and shows the point where the road is going to, and perhaps it does not go within a hundred miles of the point shown on the map. That is about all the information they get, and we pass these charters. I would like to know how many bogus and straw charters there are in this country at the present time. You have them all over the North-west Territories; you have railroads running to Hudson Bay and Timbuctoo, and everywhere else, on which there has never been a shovelful of mud turned, and never will be. But these people come back to parliament and ask for an extension of time so that they may be able to keep this charter until something turns up so that they can turn it into money; or perhaps under a government that is a little soft in that respect they may be able to get a subsidy, and then they will have something to sell. I say if a properly constituted commission was in existence, we would not be troubled with this charter-mongering. We have suffered from that in the west.

Take the case mentioned by the hon. member for Grey this afternoon, the Great North-west Central. That charter was granted some twenty years ago, it bore a land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, they built 50 miles, and they never built any more until forced by this House two or three years ago to build 20 miles, and that is all that they have ever done. Still the people have settled 100 miles ahead of that line, waiting for relief, and nothing is being done. I hope the government will see its way clear at least to try the experiment of appointing this railway commission. The Minister of Railways says there is a disposition in England to do away with the commission. But, we find in the United States for the last 25 years they have been in existence, and I am sure that the people in that country are too intelligent to keep anything of that kind in existence if it was of no benefit to the people.

We find that the reports of every state that has a commission are placed before the country, and you can see exactly what they are doing. I would advise all the hon. members of this House to take the trouble to read these reports, and, as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said this afternoon, they would find from them that a great deal of benefit had accrued to the people. I am sure that when the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) shuffles off this mortal coil the people of the North-west Territories will erect a monument to his memory, because he has always exerted his influence so strongly in committee and out of committee in their interests. From a political standpoint, I would like if the hon. gentleman would come out through the North-west Territories and express himself as he has done in this House this afternoon. It would be the best thing that could happen for the Liberal party. I believe it would do them more good even than the trip of the late leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), because, in place of having six seats in the entire country west of Winnipeg after the elections as is now the case, the opposition would then have none. I hope the government will, in the near future, see their way clear to do something in the way of trying to give the settlers, not only in the North-west Territories, but of other parts of the Dominion, the remedy that is needed by appointing a railway commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I would like to say a word. So far as this motion is concerned it does not seem to point to anything very definite. The motion is :

That the public interests demand that the railway companies of Canada should, at the earliest moment, be brought under control of a board of railway commissioners, clothed with full power to enforce the provisions of the Railway Act.

Well, the Railway Act is enforced to some extent by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and possibly to some extent by the courts, and it is occasionally difficult to find out whether you are to go to the court or the Railway Committee of the Privy Council with a particular matter. So far as that uncertainty or difficulty is concerned, it seems to me that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) may very well devote his attention to it, and amend the Railway Act for the purpose of making that clear. I had occasion some time ago to examine the Railway Act with respect to a difficulty between two railways, and I found a great deal of legal difficulty in knowing whether or not you should go to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or to the court. That is a subject which might very well be dealt with by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in framing legislation. As to the project of transferring the power to enforce the provisions of the Railway Act, so far as they are enforceable by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, to a railway commission, that depends to some extent on the question as to whether the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is found to be an efficient body for the purpose for which it was intended. There may be something in the suggestion which has been made, I think, by the hon. mover of this motion (Mr. Davis), with respect to the want of time on the part of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to deal with these matters, but, on the other hand, we have the assurance upon which, no doubt, we may rely, of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that every case which has been brought before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has been dealt with by that body. I understand the hon. gentleman to give that assurance to the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that is so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The rest of the motion is clothed in terms almost as delightfully vague as those in which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals expressed his intentions in regard to this commission in the future.

And to prescribe and enforce the observance of such regulations as may be necessary in the public interest.

I think almost every hon. gentleman in this House may be permitted to support the principle of this resolution in regard to that, but, possibly, when we came to decide among ourselves as to what regulations were in the public interest, there would be a good deal of divergence among hon. members on one side or the other as to what these regulations should be. However, so far as that particular portion of it is concerned, it is worded in such a delightfully vague manner, that I am sure there is hardly an hon. gentleman in this House who will have the heart to say a word against it.

I agree with the hon. gentlemen in this House who have doubted whether it is possible by means of a railway commission, or by any legislation, to bring to an end the evils and the complaints in respect to railway transportation. So far as a railway commission is concerned the words in this resolution mean nothing at all. The question is : What powers are you going to give the commission ? Are you going to give it merely advisory powers, as in Massachusetts, or the power of a court, as in other states ? What do you mean by a railway commission ? That is the thing you must decide in the first instance, and the House can not be prepared to pass upon the subject intelligently upon any such vague resolution as this. You must first bring down a measure, and say whether you are going to have an advisory commission or to give it the power of a court, and you must reasonably define all its powers, before we can intelligently discuss it. It does not seem to me that there is really anything very definite in this resolution. Undoubtedly a railway commission will not necessarily bring to an end the evils which have been spoken of here to-night. That is perfectly plain from what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has told us, and from what other hon. gentlemen have told us in regard to the state of affairs in England to-day. If a railway commission would bring all these evils to an end, the farmers of Wales would not be complaining that it costs them more to carry their produce to London than it costs the farmers of Ontario to carry their produce to London. I do not suppose it is possible to cure a matter of that kind by any legislation. As the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has pointed out, this is a very complex question. You have to take into consideration competing lines, you have to take into consideration the lines which compete by water and the lines which compete partly by land and partly by water. You cannot cure all of these matters by appointing a railway commission and passing Acts of parliament. The great complexity of business transactions makes it absolutely impossible to deal with matters of this kind to the satisfaction of every one, and possibly makes it necessary that incongruities of this kind should sometimes exist.

I do sympathize with the remarks of the hon. mover of this resolution respecting the granting of what he calls straw charters and the giving of enormously large bonding powers to railway companies. I do not believe that railway charters, or any other charters in this country, should be made the subject of speculation, and I also recognize the fact that this is an evil which may not be very easy to deal with. I have tried to think out in my own mind some remedy for an evil of that kind, and I may say that I have not completely satisfied my own mind as to what would be the best mode in which to deal with it. It occurred to me that possibly if we required from the promoters of every new railway company the making of a deposit which would guarantee good faith and an intention on the part of the people who received the charter that they intended to build the railway, good might result, but possibly the only effect of that would be that when they came to sell the charter they would charge a higher price from the persons to whom they sold it. I do not at all feel sure as to what the proper remedy is, although I entirely agree with the suggestions of those who believe that some remedy should be found. Bonding powers should correspond with the cost of the road in some reasonable degree. There are two reasons amongst others for that. The first thing that occurs to me is that by giving too large bonding powers you may be leading into a trap unwary investors, and in the next place, although the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals assures us that the question of the amount of bonds, or the question of the amount of stock does not enter at all into the consideration of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council when dealing with rates, nevertheless we know that these things are put forward in the public press, if they are not put forward any place else. That is an additional reason why the bonding power should be carefully guarded, and I take it that the Minister of Railways is of the opinion that these should not be unduly extended. I hardly thought that the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) gave sufficient weight to what was suggested by the hon. member from Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall). What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall) said was that if all or the majority of the great railways of Canada combined in a vast trust with persons who became possessed of enormous interests in connection with the coal and iron and other industries of the country, there might be fear in the future. I do not think the hon. member intended to suggest, nor do I intend to suggest, that there is any present or immediate danger in Canada of that kind. I am not suggesting that, but we know that so far back as in 1886 in the United States it was publicly charged that great trusts did exercise a very pronounced influence upon legislatures. In fact the statement made by responsible persons went very much further than I have indicated. I am only suggesting, in passing, that possibly what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall) said might require a little more serious consideration than the Minister of Railways was disposed to give it upon his attention being first directed to it. It seems to me that in its present form the resolution is so extremely vague as not to commit the House to anything beyond the proposition that a railway commission could do the work of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council better than the work is being done by that body. I am not sufficiently familiar with the way in which the Railway Committee of the Privy Council discharges its duty to say whether that is the case or not, but if we take, as we are bound to take, the statement of the Minister of Railways on that point, it seems to me that that particular portion of the motion hardly seems to be justified by anything that has been advanced in support of it.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). There is just one point to which I would draw the attention of the House, because it may give some indication of the wild statements that have been made by some hon. gentlemen in this discussion. The hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has referred to the Regina and Long Lake Railway. If he will refer to the railway returns he will find that the gross earnings of that railway company for the last year amounted to $100,702, and the working expenses amounted to $115,-500, so that the road was operated in favour of the country through which it passes and in favour of that hon. gentleman's constituency at a direct loss of $15,000. If the road had been built for nothing—as far as the country is concerned it was built for nothing—it has paid its bondholders or shareholders not one dollar interest, and it is being operated now at a loss. It has been operated at a loss since the day it was opened. It was a very unfortunate thing to build a road in such a country, but the origin of that road was because the government wanted to build a railway into the Prince Albert district after the rebellion. The reports in the department at that time showed that the land through which the railway ran was supposed to be good land, but it has turned out that the land is barren land until you get near Prince Albert. I can see no future to the road, and unless some change takes place there is only one thing that can happen to it, and that is that the road must be closed up.

Mr. DAVIS. It should never have been built.

Mr. OSLER. Quite right, it should never have been built ; but it cannot be continued to be run at a loss and the question of the exorbitant charges have nothing to do with the working of that road, or with the rates which may be charged upon it.

Motion (Mr. Davis) agreed to.

VIRDEN, QU'APPELLE, REGINA AND MOOSEJAW TOWN SITES.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto) moved for :

Return of a certain report presented to the Department of the Interior by the commissioners appointed on June 19th last to audit all accounts and investigate and report upon all matters connected with the administration and sale by trustees of the town sites of Virden, Qu'Appelle, Regina and Moosejaw.

He said : I wish to make a few remarks on this motion, because perhaps there are very few hon. gentlemen in the House who are aware what this Town Site Trust is. In 1882 the Canadian North-west Land Co. bought about two million acres from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and with that they bought a half-interest in the town sites from the western boundary of Manitoba to the boundary of British Columbia. For that they paid at the rate of one-half dollar an acre extra, or nearly a million dollars. The government asked that they should be interested in certain town sites along that district, and consequently the government obtained a half-interest in four town sites, Regina, Virden, Qu'Appelle and Moosejaw. Trustees were appointed to administer the town sites, and the trustees were Lord Strathcona, Mr. R. B. Angus, Mr. Scarth and Mr. Osler. Those trustees administered the town sites and they sold altogether about a million dollars worth of lots. They administered under an agreement with the government, and I think they acted strictly under the terms of that agreement. In June last the government appointed a commission to inquire and report on these town sites. The report was brought in and it was handed to two or three of the government newspapers, and in January last these papers, the Globe especially, commented upon that report. The Globe headed its article :

Money Flew Fast in the Good Old Tory Days—Discoveries made by the North-west Townsites Commission—Fleecing the Government—How Mr. T. M. Daly made a handsome price for land in which he had no rights—Mr. Davin's loan—How the Government was made to pay for Mr. Davin's Newspaper Plant—Heavy Refunds to Speculators, some of them represented by trustees—Large sums paid out in Unauthorized Salaries—Cash Statement—Government out about $50,000—Names of Witnesses called before Commission—Mr. Osler Objects to Testifying—Text of the Report of the Commissioners.

Now, the Globe makes a summary of the report, the main points of which are : That Mr. Daly received $6,400 for a section of land in Virden which had really belonged to the government. The renting and final purchasing of the building of the trustees by the government at an exorbitant price. The trustees lending the money to Mr. Davin to start a newspaper. The trustees refunding various sums to persons who had bought for speculative purposes ; the government charged improperly for many town sites; and that Mr. Osler, Mr. Scarth and others drew large sums of money in salaries and otherwise. Now, the land which the government contributed toward those town sites realized in the actual sale not much more than one-third of the whole amount ; that is to say, the land contributed by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other parties was very much more valuable.

I have a report here by Mr. Hamilton, the land commissioner, and Mr. Ogden, the auditor and comptroller of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in which they answer these charges as they are made. As regards the Virden town site, Mr. Daly had a claim upon it, and it was necessary to secure that claim at once, or the sale of the lots would have been lost ; the station and town site would have been located elsewhere :

The agreement for the administration of the town sites states the amount of land to be contributed by each party. In the case of Virden, the entire quantity is to be contributed by the government. There is nothing unusual in this, as at that time any party owning land was very willing to give all the land to have a station and a town site located, retaining a half interest in the net proceeds of sale of lots in the town. The commissioners find that Mr.

Daly had rights on the south half of the section until he dismissed the entry, which was probably done when he was paid $6,400. The government contributed the section and the $6,400 was paid to clear the title. The whole amount should have been charged to the government instead of one-half.

With regard to Mr. Davin. At that time I had not the pleasure of knowing Mr. Davin personally; but the loan to him was made for the purpose of establishing a newspaper in the new government town—a very wise and necessary expenditure. I think that even now the government feel that it is necessary in some cases to contribute to the support of newspapers. I notice in a return that one newspaper published in the largest city of Canada, receives in pap or in contributions $40,000 or $50,000. The amount in question was contributed quite properly, and was an investment which paid, because advertising had to be done; and while the newspaper was apparently carried on at a loss, Mr. Davin's covenants were released, when the property had to be taken back by the trustees, which was a very proper thing to do. Certain money was refunded at Regina, after full consideration and investigation, because very large taxes were running up there, and that had to be done in the interest of all parties.

It is claimed that certain salaries were paid to Mr. Scarth, Mr. Campbell, and others as extra clerks. These salaries were perfectly proper, and were chargeable to the trustees and the government. The Canadian Pacific Railway in the same case paid a very much larger sum for salaries than was charged to the government. The trustees, I may say, in connection with the administration of these town sites, have never personally drawn one dollar. Report says that I drew a certain amount—$500. I did draw an amount—I think it was $1,200. I drew that money when the office was being removed and certain clerks were being discharged. I saw no other way of bonusing those men; and, as I was entitled to remuneration as a trustee, I drew a certain insignificant amount for that purpose. The administration of this trust, amounting to $1,000,000, has been carried on without the expense of one dollar charged by the trustees to the government; but if they appealed to a court in Ontario to-day, those trustees would be awarded a remuneration of at least $50,000 for their work. Thousands of deeds and thousands of agreements have been signed. A gratuity was paid to Mr. Gosling, who, when the business was large, was employed as the chief accountant. The business fell off, and naturally he was paid a comparatively small sum on leaving the trustees. Now, I make the statement that from first to last there has never been a trust in Canada administered so faithfully, so squarely, so thoroughly, for the benefit of all concerned.

It is charged further that there were certain rebates made to parties who purchased town lots. That is quite true. Rebates were made to a great many town lot purchasers, amoung others to a Scottish company. Mr. Scarth was connected with that company. It had spent hundreds of thousands of pounds, I think, in the development of north-west interest. It had established a stock farm on the Manitoba and North-western Railway, and had brought out high-class cattle, the result being that from along that line to-day probably the finest cattle that are brough from the North-west come. Too much credit cannot be given to the enterprise of that company. Unfortunately, the venture proved a failure. The trustees, with the consent of the government, refunded to that company $30,000 or $40,000 of the money which they had expended in town lots in Regina. So far for being blamed for that, I say the trustees are entitled to every credit.

I can understand that probably it was a proper thing for the government to have a report made on this subject, although every year audited statements were submitted to the government, approved and accepted by the government, and the money due to the government was paid over. But this report was made, and was handed out to one or two government newspapers, apparently for the purpose of having those newspapers comment upon two or three gentlemen connected with that trusteeship. They singled out one of the trustees, who has been for a number of years a government official. Perhaps his place was wanted, and a little excuse was necessary. The chief attack, however, has apparently been made upon myself. The report closes with a statement that Mr. Osler objected to testify. I did object to testify, but under these circumstances. The two commissioners came into my office one morning with a shorthand reporter, their secretary. They began asking me questions concerning this town site in 1882, before I had anything to do with it. I was not a trustee until nearly a year and a half after that. They began to ask me questions about financial matters, about payments that took place eighteen years ago, and I replied that I was quite unprepared from memory to talk about such transactions. The books had been taken from Toronto seventeen years ago, I think, and I did not see them after they had gone to Winnipeg, and concerning the transactions referred to, I knew nothing personally. I told those commissioners that perhaps I could tell them where and how they could get information, but if they were going to examine me on matters that occurred nearly twenty years ago—matters connected with figures—I refused to testify without having the books sent down from the North-west. In that refusal, I think I was perfectly justified.

I do not think that the commissioners were justified in completing their report by emphasizing, as they did, the fact that Mr. Osler was the only one who refused to give evidence. The only inference that can be drawn, as far as I can see, is that the government expected to find some serious irregularities in the administration of that town trust, and the commissioners found that there were no irregularities. The report was given out to two or three newspapers, which made this severe attack. As soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is the only company having anything to do with the government, was apprised of this report, it asked the government for a copy of the evidence. This report was published in the Globe on the 5th of January, 1901. But up to this date, the government have failed to comply with that request. These two commissioners, acting by themselves, taking what they saw fit to take, looking at the books as they liked, brought in an account showing that the trustees are liable to the government for $40,000, and asked them to put that to the credit of the government.

An hon. MEMBER. Who were the commissioners ?

Mr. OSLER. Mr. Smart and Mr. E. F. Stephenson. The Canadian Pacific Railway is directly responsible to the government for the administration of that trust. These trustees were accepted by the government, but the Canadian Pacific Railway was the original trustee, and assumed all liability for the share of the government's money that would accrue. Application was made to the government for this evidence, so that a more complete answer might be given, but that evidence has not yet been furnished. The Canadian Pacific Railway then asked that the government refer the accounts to a commission or to a court, and the government simply wrote saying : We do not propose to take further action in this matter ; place this money to our credit.

The trustees, one and all, for a long time have desired to resign. They wish to have this trust divided and be no longer partners with the government. They applied to the government to have this done, and the government at one time accepted the suggestion, but since then the government have changed their minds, and only on the 27th February last they wrote to Mr. Hamilton, the land commissioner :

> Dear Mr. Hamilton,—I have yours of the 23rd inst., with reference to a division of the remaining lots of the towns of Virden and Qu'Appelle, Regina and Moosejaw. In reply, would say that it is not thought advisable to make a division at the present time.

This is a report of the commissioners on the four trustees, who each assumed equal responsibility—Lord Strathcona, R. B. Angus, W. B. Scarth, E. B. Osler—and it casts a slur upon the administration of those gentlemen. Yet, in the report, from end to end, there is not a single item, which is not a credit to the administration of that trust from the beginning to the end. There is not a single item or transaction which has not been approved by the government. There is not a single item or transaction, in the whole administration of that trust for nearly twenty years, which does not reflect credit on the ability, honesty, and forethought of the trustees. Those trustees have administered that trust for themselves, for the North Western Land Co., and for the government, the government receiving half of the net proceeds. They have sold in that time within a few dollars of $1,000,000 of town lots at prices running from $10 up to several thousand. Of course a good many of those sales had eventually to be cancelled after the boom burst and the purchasers could not meet their payments. The trustees have paid the government some $200,000 for its half-interest, when the real interest of the government in the land sold was only $132,000.

There is one other complaint made by the commissioners which I have overlooked. They say that the Canadian Pacific Railway took to itself some acres of land at $3 an acre, but the only objection that could be raised to that is that the Canadian Pacific Railway should have paid anything, because the agreement provides that both the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway shall have all the land required for railway or government purposes free.

I do not propose to comment upon this report. If I were to express myself as I feel, I am afraid I should be called to order very suddenly and sharply by the Speaker. But I cannot understand how such a report came to be issued. I cannot understand how the government could have asked to have such a report made, or to have that report issued exclusively in two or three partisan journals, with the headings outlined and whom to attack marked out, and then have refused to give at once a copy of the evidence. I cannot understand how the government should refuse to dissolve a partnership, after bringing in a report which is interpreted by the newspapers to mean that these trustees have administered wrongfully that trust. Why the government should have refused absolutely to dissolve the trust and allow the trustees to withdraw from the administration is something I cannot understand. Who instigated this report, I do not know. I only know that it was issued apparently for the purpose of doing harm and injury, and issued in such a way as to try and mislead the public and cast a slur upon the trustees, who, I venture to say, have administered the property in such a way as no other public trust has ever been administered in this country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I do not know that I can find fault with my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) for the tone in which he has discussed the report, a copy of which he has moved for. It might, perhaps, have been expected, under the circumstances, that my hon. friend would take an early opportunity of making a statement to the House which would explain, to some extent at least, the statements which were made in the report referred to. Some of the remarks my hon. friend has made would naturally leave a somewhat incorrect impression upon the minds of hon. members—though I desire to be understood as not in any way imputing that my hon. friend has intended to mislead the House. In the first place, so far as the refusal to furnish the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with the evidence upon which this report was made is concerned, I never heard of any such refusal until I heard it from my hon. friend just now. If the company had made application to me or had made application in such a way that it would have come before me personally—and I may say that the company has not shown any great backwardness in coming to my office and calling attention——

Mr. OSLER. I may have been misunderstood as to the refusal. I have delayed asking this question, and the government have been applied to for a long time back, since shortly after the report was made, and they have failed to send the evidence. After the report was made, one would have thought that the evidence would be sent, but, up to this date, neither the Canadian Pacific Railway nor I have received nor been able to get the evidence.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What I was saying was this, that the government is not in the position of having refused to give a copy of any evidence taken by the commissioners; and I was proceeding to say that if the company wrote an ordinary official letter and did not receive it, they could have called my personal attention to it, and they would have received the papers without any delay whatever. So, there has been no intentional refusal to furnish any evidence or papers whatever. As to how this report came to be made—and as my hon. friend assumed a moderate tone in discussing the matter, I do not purpose going into the subject at length or making any strong remarks in regard to it, because the report will speak for itself when it is laid before the House—when I had been in office for some time, I experienced some difficulty in dealing with the accounts of the trust to which my hon. friend has referred; and, from time to time, it is necessary, for the purpose of carrying on the business of the department, to get more information than we were able to procure. At different times, I thought I would cause an examination of the accounts to be made for the purpose of getting an exact record of what had taken place. I may say that I had not the least notion, in bringing about this examination, that my hon. friend or any of the trustees had been guilty of any personal dishonesty; but I thought—and I think now—that, as the minister responsible for the conduct of this business, it was my duty to direct an investigation into these accounts so that, as the minister responsible, I might know what had been done with the moneys, and also know in what manner the business had been conducted. The commission to make the examination was issued to two gentlemen both of whom are first-class accountants and both men thoroughly competent to conduct such an investigation, one being Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, and the other Mr. E. F. Stephenson, who was an officer of the department before I took charge of it, and who is, I believe, a son of the late Rufus Stephenson, M.P. Mr. Stephenson is a most trusted officer of the department, one of the most competent in the service of the department. These two gentlemen went through the various accounts and made a thorough investigation and report. Now, the question whether the report is correct or not is a question which, if it is disputed, cannot be decided by an adverse statement made by Mr. Ogden, the auditor of the Canadian Pacific Railway nor by a statement made by my hon. friend on the floor of this House. I have no intention of entering into an argument that the report of the commissioners was founded on fact. These gentlemen spent some time, I believe, in going through these accounts. It was a very laborious task, I was informed. The report speaks for itself. If its accuracy is disputed, that question can only be settled in the proper quarter by a judicial tribunal. The report having been made, we asked the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who are responsible for the due performance of the trust, to place to our credit the amount of money which, the commissioners concluded, had been improperly charged against the government; and I think it is only necessary for me to state the facts to the House in order that the House may perceive that that was my plain duty under the circumstances, and that I could do neither more nor less. So far as the suggestion that my hon. friend has made that there was anything further than an effort to investigate this matter which had been made part of the business of the department and to have a proper record of it, and, when moneys were found to be due to the government to have them placed to our credit, I can only say there was nothing in my mind except simply to accomplish that purpose. And I submit, with all confidence that nothing further has been done. The question whether the moneys were properly charged against the government, whether the moneys found by the commissioners to be due to the government are to be paid or not is one which my hon. friend and I cannot settle by debate in this House. I am free to say that I cannot agree with some things my hon. friend says. I cannot agree, for instance, in connection with the town site of Virden, that it was proper to charge the government one-half the cost of the town site when the government furnished half the land—I do not think they should be called upon to pay $3,200 for land they had furnished themselves. Then, to speak in connection with cases that seem very clear, I do not think that in the case of taxes paid by the trustees, all the taxes should have been charged against the government.

I am not going into a discussion of that, further than to say that the commissioners found that in the case of the taxes which were paid upon the property which the trustees held in trust, the government owning one-half of the land, the Canadian Pacific Railway one-quarter, and the Canada North-west Land Company one-quarter, the Canada North-west Land Company alone was liable for taxes. The trustees paid the taxes and they charged it up against the fund, so that the government had to pay its share of the taxes for which the Canada North-west Land Company was liable. The commissioners make a plain statement of the fact, and show that the money ought to be refunded. I have the report in my hand in which the commissioners state the facts. If there is any answer to that, it will be for the Canadian Pacific Railway, for my hon. friend and his co-trustees, to show it when the proper time comes. I have simply to say that upon the face of it, the report does not at all indicate that my hon. friend's statement is correct when he says there was nothing objectionable in regard to the transaction of the business by the trustees. When I say that, of course, my hon. friend and every member of the House will understand that I am not in the slightest degree suggesting there was anything improper from a personal standpoint, but only that close and personal supervision was not given by the trustees. In fact I presume my hon. friend had not an opportunity to give that personal supervision. Lord Strathcona, the High Commissioner, is equally responsible with him, and I do not suppose that Lord Strathcona ever saw or heard anything connected with it since the very early days of the trust.

But if my hon. friend thinks that there is anything in the slightest degree objectionable with regard to the position the department has taken, I can only say to him that the report having been made after full and careful investigation by gentlemen who were thoroughly competent for that purpose, and I am satisfied thoroughly unbiased in every possible way, I conceive it to be my duty to see that that money is collected and placed to the credit of the government. As for the government refusing to agree to a division of the property concerned, I may say that I have never refused to make a division of the property. In fact for the last two years, I have desired that there should be such a division. My hon. friend will see that before we can have a division of the property we must have a settlement of the account, and the government are quite prepared that the account should be settled and the property divided as soon as possible. I have no desire to enter further into a discussion of the matter. A copy of the report will be duly laid upon the Table of the House, and hon. members will have an opportunity of judging of the statements for themselves.

Mr. OSLER. The Minister of the Interior would have us believe that the government is always quite willing to refer this matter to the courts. Now, let me read him what Mr. Drinkwater says on the 9th of January:

> I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, informing me that the report of the commissioners who recently held an investigation in connection with the management of the town sites of Virden, Qu'Appelle, Regina and Moosejaw, a copy of which accompanied your letter, had been approved by order in council. I understand from these documents that the government proposes that the lands comprised in the town sites in question shall still be managed and dealt with by the present trustees, and in the manner indicated by that report, namely, that the sale of the lots shall be made to extend over a term of two or three years, in which time sales by public auction at intervals of certain of the lots could be held until the whole are disposed of. I am directed to say that this company prefers that the trusteeship be ended at once, and that a partition take place between the parties interested in these lands without delay. I shall be glad to know that this course is acceptable to the government, and that you are prepared to discuss the best method of carrying it into effect.

On behalf of the North-west Land Company that same request is made to the government. Then there is another letter from Mr. Smart dealing with that question, and finally a letter on the 27th of February, referring to the question, pending the settlement of the accounts, in which he says :

> I have yours of the 23rd instant, in reference to the division of the remaining lots in the towns of Virden, Qu'Appelle, Regina and Moosejaw, and in reply would say that it is not thought advisable to make a division at the present time. Will I return your maps to your address in Toronto?

There is a distinct refusal to make a division, no reference to a settlement. Now, then, with reference to the other matter of referring the question, the department say :

> I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, having reference to the report of the joint town site trustees, in which you intimate that the company would desire that the question as to placing to the credit of the government the sums mentioned in the report as being due to the Crown should be submitted to the Exchequer Court, and requesting that a copy of the evidence taken by the commissioners may be forwarded to you on which to prepare the company's case, and you ask further whether the course suggested as to referring the matter to the Exchequer Court is agreeable to the government. In reply I am directed to say that the government has not decided upon any course with regard to this matter, except to ask the company to make the necessary credits in the books of the trustees, so that the amount mentioned in the commissioner's report may be shown to be due to the government in this connection.

Now, it is plain as anything can be that the government refused to submit that matter to the Exchequer Court or to any court. They say that an amount of money arbitrarily found by partisan commissioners shall, without any reference, be at once acknowledged by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and by the trustees to be due to the government. That is directly and absolutely asked. In reference to the request that the matter be referred to the Exchequer Court, surely I am justified in saying the government refused to recognize that course. I think it is unreasonable, unfair, it is not the proper course to take under such circumstances. If the government found that the trustees were indebted to them and the trustees refused to acknowledge it, their only honourable course would have been to refer it at once to arbitration, or to some tribunal. These figures are arbitrary figures brought in by partisan auditors. On the other hand, the accounts sent in by the trustees from year to year have been approved by the government, the moneys have been paid to the government during all the twenty years they administered the trust, five years of which were under this government, to which they rendered statements in exactly the same manner as they rendered them under the late government. The trustees had no indication or suggestion from the government that everything was not absolutely right until this report was published in the Globe. That is the first that we ever heard of it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think my hon. friend is trying to make a grievance where no grievance exists. The letter of Mr. Smart to which he refers is in regard to the question of submitting the matter to the Exchequer Court, and merely stating that the government had not decided finally upon a course. If the Canadian Pacific Railway secretary suggested a certain course, the government was not called upon immediately to assent to that, the government was entitled to give the matter consideration. The trustees have been handling this money and doing this business for many years.

Mr. OSLER.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the hon. gentleman is in order in speaking again.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am aware I am not in order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it is not a matter of personal explanation——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is not a matter of personal explanation, but my hon. friend was out of order when he rose to reply to me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, he was not out of order. I do not want to object if the hon. gentleman has any personal explanation to make.

Mr. OSLER. I do not object at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a matter of public business, it is not a matter of personal explanation. What I was about to say was that my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) is endeavouring to make a mountain out of a molehill. He has endeavoured to show that we have refused to refer this to the courts, because Mr. Smart simply said that the government had not decided upon that course. In so far as the other question is concerned, to which Mr. Smart's other letter referred, the letter is simply one of a similar character. It does not make a final decision, nor does it profess to do so. I think my hon. friend will find, when he comes to go into this matter with the same degree of care that the commissioners have gone into it, that his ideas upon the subject will undergo somewhat of a change, and I think he will find that the statement he has made, that this is the report of partisan auditors, is not justified by the fact. If the word 'partisan' is used in the sense in which it refers to the political proclivities of the commissioners, certainly, Mr. E. F. Stephenson could not be considered to be a partisan of this government, and I think, therefore, that the personnel of the commission was as fair and as free from partisan bias as it could possibly be under the circumsances.

Mr. OSLER. I would ask to have the evidence produced.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That can be included in the motion.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The motion is amended by including the words 'with the evidence.'

Amendment agreed to, and motion, as amended, agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Experimental Farms for the year 1900.—(Hon. Sydney A. Fisher).

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolution respecting the Pacific cable will probably be the first order, then Supply, with the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) on deck.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 5, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BRITISH YUKON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 40) respecting the British Yukon Railway Company. He said : This is simply to enable the company to extend its line from White Horse to Dawson City. The length of its present line is 120 or 130 miles, all of which is in Canada except 16 miles.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 41) respecting the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company.—Mr. LaRivière.

Bill (No. 42) respecting the Klondike Mines Survey Company.—Mr. Fraser.

Bill (No. 43) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Lodge.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 44) respecting the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company, and to change its name to the Ottawa, Gatineau and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Champagne by Mr. Ethier.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That for the remainder of the session Government Orders shall have precedence after questions on Thursdays.

He said : In making this motion, I may inform the House of the government business, not only so far as it is already before the House, but so far as it is intended to bring in other business. There are on the Order paper two Bills to be introduced by the Solicitor General, one relating to the Franchise Act and one relating to the Elections Act. These Bills will be introduced, probably, to-morrow. Then, the Minister of the Interior contemplates introducing a Bill for the consolidating of the Indian Act. The Minister of Finance contemplates introducing the Bill, which was announced in the speech from the Throne, concerning the mint. A Bill will be introduced concerning the Alien Labour law. The day after to-morrow the Bill concerning the Alien Labour law will be introduced, and the other two probably in the course of a week. It is expected that supplementary estimates will be introduced not this week, but early next week. I will not say that this is all the legislation to be introduced this session, but if there is more, it will be of a light character.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Can the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) give us any information as to when we may expect his budget speech ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Some day next week, but a more definite announcement will be made next Thursday.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). The business brought before the House so far has been very largely promoted by private members, members of the opposition. I think the government have had ample opportunity to forward their measures, and that they will still have sufficient opportunity without at once taking one of the private members' days. We have not reached a point in the session—though I believe it is quite understood on both sides that we are to have a short session—for such a step. The government has not its business in such a form as to make such a step necessary. I think the government should not be in a hurry, considering that private members have been diligently bringing business before the House, and at this stage one of the days devoted for private members' business should not be taken.

The PRIME MINISTER. I certainly must give the opposition credit for putting a great deal of matter on the Order paper. But, as to anything further than that, I cannot say that they have shown any remarkable diligence, for, day after day the same motions standing in the names of hon. gentlemen of the other side have been called and allowed to stand. However, I would not quarrel with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) on this subject. I do not believe I could change his opinion on this subject and I am sure he could not change mine. However, if my hon. friend will accept such an arrangement, I will agree not to take next Thursday but the Thursday following. I ask to have the resolution amended to that effect.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not agree with the Prime Minister. I think that hon. members on this side have been making it very interesting for the members of the government. However, I shall not oppose the motion as it is now proposed.

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. I find that in 'Hansard' of the first of March my name is recorded as having been paired against the motion introduced by the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Hon. Mr. Costigan). I desire to say that that pair was arranged for the original motion as introduced by that hon. gentleman, and not for the motion that was voted on by the House. Had I been in the House when the vote was taken I would have voted for the resolution as amended.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). I desire to ask when I may expect the returns I moved for early in the session, one with reference to the cost of elevators in St. John and Halifax, and the other for certain information respecting immigration.

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to explain——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I shall be very glad to make immediate inquiries, and, if there is any information that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) has asked for and that has not been forthcoming, to supply it as speedily as possible.

Mr. WILSON. The resolution passed the House early in the session.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no doubt the matter is being attended to.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am in the same position as the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. WILSON. I would like to have an answer from the Minister of Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) as to the return relating to immigration.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following resolutions :

That whereas by 'The Pacific Cable Act, 1899,' His Excellency in Council is authorized to guarantee payment of five-eighteenths of the principal sum of £1,700,000 sterling, to be applied in establishing direct submarine telegraphic communication between Canada and Australasia ;

And whereas in lieu of said sum of £1,700,000 it is estimated that for the purpose aforesaid there will be required a sum not exceeding £2,000,000 sterling, which sum of £2,000,000 the government of the United Kingdom is willing to advance ;

1. That the Governor in Council is authorized to guarantee payment of five-eighteenth parts of the principal and interest of and upon the securities to be issued by the government of the United Kingdom for raising the said sum, namely, £2,000,000 so to be advanced.

2. That section 3 of said Act be repealed.—Mr. Mulock.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). This resolution to some extent changes the financial scheme as authorized by the Dominion Act of 1899. Under that Act power was given to His Excellency the Governor in Council to assume as our share five-eighteenths of the total liability, which was limited to £1,700,000 sterling. It has since been ascertained as a result of actual invitations for tenders that the cost of the cable will exceed somewhat that amount, and it is estimated that the work under contract for the cable and its incidentals will call for the financing of about £2,000,000. Accordingly, the resolution enlarges the liability of the Dominion government from its percentage of the £1,700,000 as provided for in the Act of 1899, to the same percentage of a sum not exceeding £2,000,000 sterling.

It would be right for me to point out to the committee before it gives its sanction to this measure, that since the Act of 1899, some change has taken place in the conditions that existed when parliament sanctioned our entering into that arrangement. The Australasian colonies, or states as they would like to be called, own the telegraph lines, and of course that circumstance is a guarantee that a cable in which those states or any of them are interested, is sure to receive much business patronage through the governments of Australasia. Since the contract was signed on the 31st of December last, by the Imperial government, and by the other contracting parties for the construction of the cable on the 16th of January last, the state of New South Wales made an agreement with the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company, a cable company of great strength financially and otherwise, that is, I think, the only cable company connecting Australasia at the present time with Europe and the commercial world. That contract which I allude to, made two weeks after the conclusion of the contract by the Imperial government and the other governments on behalf of the Pacific cable partners, grants to the Eastern Extension Cable Company, certain concessions and privileges practically in competition with the government of New South Wales in the carrying on of telegraph business within New South Wales. They therefore are given an advantage that they did not enjoy when we entered into the arrangement for competing for Australasian cable business. I do not know, had we a veto, that we would have insisted upon the government of New South Wales not making such a concession. Nevertheless, that concession has been made, and it seems to have some appreciable effect, I do not see to what extent, upon the financial success of the Pacific cable as a self-sustaining enterprise; and therefore, I deem it proper to call the attention of the committee to that fact before they give their sanction to this measure. It is of course too late, I recognize the fact, for us to recede should we desire to do so, because the contract has been signed by the various governments, and the work of the cable, I presume, is now under construction. I do not know that the concessions granted will have a damaging effect upon the financial result of the enterprise, at the same time I feel it my duty to bring the matter to the attention of the committee.

I would also say that instead of the money being borrowed as was contemplated in 1899 by the commission itself, and the various partner governments guaranteeing their respective shares, the Imperial government proposes to borrow the money, the various governments undertaking to bear their proper share of that Imperial loan. That circumstance does not at all affect the liability, it is only altering the machinery. In 1899, it was thought the money would be borrowed through the direct intervention of the commission, now it is going to be borrowed on the credit of the Imperial government, the various colonial governments guaranteeing to indemnify the Imperial government for the portions they respectively assume. These are, I think, the only material circumstances that have occurred since 1899, and I therefore move the resolution.

I wish to suggest one or two verbal changes. For example, I see they have left out the words 'therefore be it resolved.' Those words should go in just before section 1, after the words 'is willing to advance.' Then at the end of section 1, it is proposed to add the following words :

> And to pay amounts from time to time payable in respect of such guarantee out of any moneys forming part of the consolidated revenue funds of Canada.

There appears to be no uniform practice in legislation in this House for those words being in each money Act which authorizes payment. But inasmuch as any such liability would have to be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, it seems to me that as a matter of correct drafting those words should always appear in measures of this kind for creating a statutory financial liability when it is not necessary or intended that there shall afterwards be a vote of parliament in order to meet the liability in question. In this particular case we might any day be called upon during a recess to pay our share of the sinking fund of the Imperial loan, and therefore the government of the day should have power to discharge its liability under the Act without having to wait for a vote of parliament.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not quite understand from the hon. gentleman the reason on account of which it is supposed that the sum of £2,000,000 instead of the sum of £1,700,000 will be required. I read the agreement which the hon. gentleman placed on the table of the House a few days ago, and I do not quite understand the bearing which it has on the resolution as now proposed. I see that the resolution really deals only with an increase in the amount. As the hon. gentleman brought it in, it seemed at first as if we were to guarantee something, which we did not propose to guarantee by the Act of 1899, because, in the first part of his resolution he refers to the Pacific Cable Act, 1899, as guaranteeing the principal only. Upon referring to the Pacific Cable Act, I find that by subsection 2 of that Act, the Governor in Council was authorized :

> —to guarantee payment of five-eighteenths of the said total principal of the said debentures, limited as aforesaid, and of interest as aforesaid on the said five-eighteenths.

The only difference is as between £1,700,000 and £2,000,000, this government guaranteeing five-eighteenths of both principal and interest on the increased sum.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is also a press clipping which has been placed in my hands, the meaning of which I do not quite understand. Possibly the hon. gentleman will be able to make perfectly clear to me what it does mean, if it is authentic. In the Canadian Gazette of the 22nd February, 1901, there is this reference to the scheme :

> The Melbourne Argus says that the Victorian government is communicating with the governments of Queensland and New Zealand with a view of forwarding a combined message to the Pacific cable board suggesting a joint purse undertaking with the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company.

I will pass this clipping across so that the hon. gentleman may read it and may inform us what is the exact meaning and bearing of that reference, if it is authentic.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, I thought, in connection with the motion that is now before the committee, that we would have had some statement from the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) in regard to the general policy of the government in connection with the telegraph system of this country. I thought he would have come forward here to-day and made a proposal to nationalize the telegraph system of Canada, in connection with this cable scheme. It has been shown that a system of cables, even when state-owned, unless the land lines are controlled by the state, will accomplish very little good, and the proof of that is instanced in the case of the Mackay-Bennett cable across the Atlantic ocean. A company was organized with a large capital, and it succeeded in establishing a first-class cable system across the Atlantic, between Great Britain and the United States, but the men interested in it found that in order to make that cable system an effective one, they had to own and control land lines, and the ally of the Mackay-Bennett cable is the Postal Telegraph system of the United States, which had to be organized and capitalized and a great deal of money spent in connection with it. I would like to see this Pacific cable scheme go through. I am quite prepared, and I know my constituents are quite prepared, to vote our portion of the money, but while we are doing that, I think the announcement ought to be made that in order to realize the benefit of that cable system, we should have a nationalized telegraph system in Canada, and make one the complement of the other A very important deliverance on that line was contained in a letter which Sir Sandford Fleming read the other day in this city, at the meeting of the British Empire League. Sir Sandford Fleming, after a most careful study of the question, and no man either in the old land or in America, has given more consideration to this question, makes this statement :

> In my open letters which have been published in England, Canada and Australia addressed to the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, the Hon. Wm. Mulock and the Rt. Hon. Lord Hopetoun, it is pointed out that by nationalizing our telegraph service by land and sea the charges on messages to and from the most distant parts of the empire can be reduced to one-eighth or one-tenth the rates at present exacted.

Now, there is a most important statement, and I wish to call the attention of this House to the fact that a gentleman who is an expert in regard to telegraphic service, says that if you nationalize the cables and nationalize the land service telegraphs you will cut down the cost of cabling and of telegraphing to one-tenth of the rates we pay now. Just think of it ! It is practically saying that if you pay 25 cents for a message now, you will get a similar message transmitted for 2½ cents. I do not know that we will come to such a low point as that, but we will get a much better service than we have to-day at very much less money, if the cable and telegraph lines are nationalized. Sir Sandford Fleming has said it, and reports have been presented in Congress of the United States, and they all go to show that to be the fact. The land lines are nationalized in Great Britain and all over Europe ; we ought to be prepared to go at least as far as they have gone, and the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) ought to tell the country now that he has under consideration a proposition to nationalize the telegraph system of this country. What will be the cost of nationalizing the telegraph system of Canada and running it in connection with the post office, as is the case in Great Britain and in the Australian colonies ? It will cost a comparatively small amount of money, and what will be the result of it ? Cheap telegraphy removes a great deal of the trouble and inconvenience that are experienced by trade, by reason of distance and other conditions of that character, and if you have a national telegraph system in connection with the post office, you can run it cheaper than in any other way. In every little village you will be in a position to establish a post office and to pay a decent wage to a man who will conduct the post office, who will be an operator, and who will, if necessary, take charge of the telephone lines in that village. That will form a grand service, namely, the public will have the telephone, the telegraph and the post office, all in one building, and combining all those services under one man, to whom you will be able to pay a good salary and who will give good service. What can the telegraph lines do in the way of supplementing the service of the post office ? Trade will be largely increased and men will be able to do business in a country like Canada by telegraph instead of through the mails. If you can transmit twenty-five words for ten cents, look at the impetus that will be given to trade when a man can do all his correspondence, for instance, between Montreal and Vancouver, by telegraph. You cannot imagine how that will help business in this country. Take out of the way places, where there are only two or three mails in the week ; if you have a national telegraph system, bringing every little hamlet in the country into touch with the business centres, see what a convenience every business man in that hamlet will have People so situated will be in touch with everything outside and at a nominal cost The telegraph service of this country is the easiest thing of all to nationalize. We have heard a great deal about nationalizing the railways. That is a very expensive proposition, I have been told, but it is not such an expensive proposition to nationalize the telegraph lines.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. How much would it cost ?

Mr. MACLEAN. There are two ways in which you could do it. You could do it by duplicating the lines we have in Canada at probably less than $5,000,000—I am not speaking exactly as to that—or you could take over the lines that are in existence to-day, and there is a special provision in the Telegraph Act for that purpose.

There is another thing which I wish to urge as one of the great benefits that a national land and sea telegraph service renders to the public. We in this country, and all over the British Empire, are trying to build up an Imperial public opinion. We wish in Canada to think on all great public questions the same as they think in England or in Australia. There is only one way to create that great Imperial public opinion from one end of the empire to the other, and that is to have a national telegraph and cable system which will enable us to have the freest exchange of public opinion from one end of the British dominions to the other. The news that we get in Canada from England comes to-day through American channels. The Canadian press at this moment is hardly able to pay the present toll rates, and to give that quality of news to the Canadian public which they desire, and which the Canadian public ought to get. But, if we had a national cable system with a nominal rate for press messages at night, when the cable is not busy, our people would know in the morning exactly what they think in England, exactly what they think in Australasia and South Africa, and that news would be transmitted daily at almost a nominal cost. At all events, it would come to us independent of the United States. I have watched this thing very closely. I have seen the class of news that comes to the Canadian papers by way of New York. It is not British opinion, it is not Imperial opinion, but it is British opinion changed, modified and distorted in order to suit the people of the United States. The Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) proposes to do what the other colonies have done; he proposes to supplement what they have done, but he fails to do what they have done by nationalizing our land telegraph service in connection with this cable system. The hon. gentleman could well afford to take us into his confidence to-day and to, at least, tell us whether he is considering that proposition or not. Like everything else, when a national proposition comes before this country, we, unfortunately, take the worst end to begin with. I am in favour of this Pacific cable scheme, but I cannot help thinking that if we wanted to strike a first-class business proposition, it would be for Canada and Great Britain to lay down an Atlantic cable. There is any amount of business there, not for one but for five cables owned by Great Britain and Canada; a cable that would pay a big dividend, and probably cut the present rates down to one-quarter. That is the cable I would like to see first laid and operated by the mother country and Canada. But, unfortunately, as I have said, when anything national is to be done, the hardest end, and the most expensive end, is first experimented on. In the case of the Intercolonial Railway, we commenced to build it at the end, and through the northern portion of New Brunswick, and in the province of Quebec, where there was very little traffic, and when we got it just to the point where the traffic originated we stopped there. That was an extravagant railway proposition for Canada. Sir, I want to see state ownership applied to railways and to telegraphs, at that point where there is lots of traffic for the line, whether it be a cable, a telegraph, or a railway. In the present case we are asserting the principle of government ownership just where the conditions are least favourable. I am satisfied to take this meausre as it is to-day placed before us, but I hope the minister and the government will act in the light of the experience of the Mackay-Bennett cable, where they found their whole expense realized nothing until they established at great expense a system of land lines throughout the states. I say the government ought to tell us now whether they are going to have a really national system, which can only be achieved by their ownership of the land telegraph lines in Canada and a cable across the Atlantic. Let us have a state-owned cable from Great Britain to Canada; a state telegraph system in Canada, across the continent to the Pacific ocean, and a state-owned cable across the Pacific ocean to Australasia with the land lines in Australia also forming a link, and then you will have a really national system. We would then have an Imperial telegraph system that will give to the public, according to Sir Sandford Fleming, a service costing about one-tenth of what it costs at present. I believe the statement of Sir Sandford Fleming is correct in that respect. I believe that the Postmaster General thinks it is correct, and if he does believe it, I hope he will move on these lines. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that in this proposition he is up against the greatest monopoly almost in the world to-day, viz., the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company. This monopoly will cut the throat of this scheme if it can possibly do it. It may be a competitor with the Postmaster General in getting hold of the land telegraph lines in Canada. If that great company in London thought they could block this scheme, that is one of the first things they would try to accomplish. I do not say they can do so, but, at all events, at every point the Postmaster General will be met by that great corporation trying to block this proposition. In this proposal the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) has my entire sympathy, and I believe he has the sympathy of the whole of Canada. The government here is moving on the same lines as the Imperial authorities and as the Australian authorities, but in one sense they are lacking, and that is, that they are not making provision for the nationalization of the land telegraph lines in Canada, and they are not making provision for a state-owned Atlantic cable between the mother land and Canada in connection with which there is the most money to be earned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition called my attention to an item which appeared in the Canada Gazette, of February 21 last, containing a suggestion from the Melbourne Argus, that there was some idea afloat for the constitution of a joint court as between the Pacific cable commission and the Eastern Extension Company. There is no danger whatever of any such agreement as that. It can only be carried out with the consent of the Pacific Cable Commission and of the various governments concerned. I am quite satisfied that the commission which is sitting in London, and which is entrusted by the various governments with the carrying out of this scheme, would never dream of being parties to such an agreement except on the authority of their principals, the respective governments that have appointed them. You may be sure that the people of Canada will be taken into full confidence and consulted before any such arrangement as that is made.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition also asked me how this increase from $1,700,000 to $2,000,000 was arrived at. Since the Act of 1899 tenders were invited, but, as we know, it is one thing to estimate the cost and another to find out what the contractor will do the work for. In 1899, we proceeded upon the report of the Pacific Cable Commission, which, in 1894 and 1897, furnished the various governments with estimates.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Were not tenders asked ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, tenders were invited, and I have a list of the tenders here, if my hon. friend desires to see them. It was all done through the commission in England, and the various governments were consulted, and on the advice of all parties concerned, a contract was entered into which it was thought was the best to make, having reference to all the tenders. I will place that contract on the table.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You misunderstand me. I believe the estimate of $1,700,000 was based on tenders received at that time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the reason for the difference ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that you could call these real tenders. There was an inquiry made as to what it would cost, and a sort of tentative tendering took place. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) asks why the increase ? I think it may be accounted for in two ways. First, I think their specifications call for a cable with more copper core than was contemplated in the original specifications. There has also been a slight increase in the cost of materials. For these reasons the contract for the construction of the cable amounts to-day to £1,795,000 ; and the balance of the £2,200,000 is for incidentals which will in all probability turn up in connection with the scheme. For example, it will be necessary to have a repair ship stationed in Canadian waters and a repair ship in Australian waters. There are also some expenditures for surveys incurred by the commission. We have been asked by the Imperial government to accept that round sum as affording a sufficient margin for carrying on the enterprise.

With reference to what my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) said, that this scheme does not go far enough, in that it does not provide for the nationalizing of Canadian telegraph land lines and an Atlantic cable system, those matters do not form any essential part of this Pacific cable scheme, but at the same time they are very proper subjects for discussion by the people of Canada themselves ; and if my hon. friend favours, as he does, the nationalizing of the cables and telegraphs, then he is quite consistent in approving of this as an instalment of that work, and I know it has his hearty endorsement. If this were the proper occasion for it, I would give some views of my own, which might be of very little value, but which are the result of some inquiries on the very question to which my hon. friend has referred ; but I am afraid that I would be diverting the discussion from the real question before us.

Mr. MACLEAN. You might give a squint.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that I can add anything further.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us at what stage of progress this work is now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract calls for the completion of the work by the 31st of December, 1902. It is then to be in full working order.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). To whom has the contract been given for the construction of this work ? Is it not to the Eastern Extension Company, which has the rival lines to South Africa and Australia ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract is with the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company, Limited, doing business at 38 Old Broad street, London, England.

Mr. MACLEAN. Who is the president of that company ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not the faintest idea.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). Is not that practically the same company as the Eastern Extension Company ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I would call the minister's attention to that, and I think he should see that this line does not fall under the control of the Eastern Extension Company.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It cannot get under its control without the consent of the government.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I may inform the hon. gentleman that this is the company which laid the old Atlantic cable.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me that we have too large an interest in this undertaking to go on with such a very heavy expenditure without knowing whether or not the allegation just made is correct. If it be a fact that the Eastern Extension Cable Company have the contract to lay our cable, they certainly have in their hands great power to control its destinies in the future. I think that in the interest of Canada the hon. minister ought to be able to give us some further information in regard to that.

Mr. MACLEAN. I might point out that this company is so strong that it not only controls the Eastern Extension Cable Company in the matter of cables, but it has cornered every steamship and factory that can be employed not only in the manufacture but in the laying of cables ; so that if we did not make a contract with them to-day, the probability is that we would not get a cable for years, until the factories could be got ready to produce the necessary material. There is a practical monopoly in both the manufacture and the laying of cables, and this company controls that monopoly. So that there is every reason why the minister in charge of the project should see that the interests of the country and the interests of the empire are protected. This great monopoly, as I told him before, will try at every stage to balk the building of this line and its completion within the proper time ; and I trust that the minister will tell us that there is a strong penalty clause in the contract for the completion of the work within the specified time. If there is not such a clause, this great monopoly will attempt to balk the line and do everything they can to prevent its realization.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I am very glad indeed that we can at last assure ourselves that the cable is a reality. I am sorry to learn that one of the colonies, New South Wales, thought fit to vary the terms under which the land lines should be worked after the agreement between the colonies and Great Britain had been signed. To some extent that may affect the working of the cable ; but it is well, I think, that the matter, has been closed, and I should judge that after this no other colony will enter into an agreement with a rival company, which would render its own liability greater. With regard to the increased cost over the estimate, I think that is quite natural, because materials have advanced in price, rubber especially. With regard to letting the contract to a company which has more or less interest in the Eastern Extension Cable Company, I understand that that can hardly be helped, because that company has practically a monopoly of the work of laying cables, and if you advertised for tenders for the work, and that company did not get the contract, I dare say that it would advance the price of rubber and other materials to such an extent as to increase the cost of the cable by 40 per cent or 50 per cent. This is a construction company, I understand, and under their contract they must hand over the cable to the government. It is a very wealthy company. I do not see any ground for fear that the fact of their having the contract for laying the cable will give them any control over it afterwards. For my part, I am delighted at the prospect of having the Pacific cable laid within the period named.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is there a penalty clause in the contract ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract calls for payments as the cable is manufactured. It is to be made in three sections, and as it is made the government pays for it. There is a certain sum reserved, which is to be paid for the laying. So that it is like a contract for goods which are delivered and paid for as the work goes on.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is there a penalty for the performance of the work within the specified time ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think there is a penalty. I will send the contract to the hon. gentleman, so that he can see it.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. minister should not ask us to go on with this unless there is a penalty provided for securing the completion of the contract within a certain time. I do not want to see the contract. The minister ought to be in a position to tell us what it contains.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not draw the contract.

Mr. EDWARD HACKETT (Price West, P.E.I.) In these days of steam and electricity, I am in favour of our keeping pace with the progress of other countries in these lines, and am therefore not opposed to the building of this Pacific cable telegraph line. But we ought to guard ourselves against anything in the shape of a monopoly. In Prince Edward Island we are suffering because of a monopoly established there some fifty years ago, when a small cable, nine miles in length, was laid between Cape Tormentine, N.B., and Cape Traverse, P.E.I., On every message which we send to any part of Canada outside of the island we have to pay twenty-five cents extra to this cable company for the transmission of the message over that short line. Last year this matter was discussed by the hon. the Minister of Marine, who stated that there was no monopoly. I do not know what the hon. gentleman has done since then to have this matter ventilated, but at all events we are still under the same old monopoly. What we object to is not so much the twenty-five cents we have to pay for the use of this cable, as to the fact that those people close their doors at eight o'clock in the evening and only open them at eight in the morning so that there is no telegraphic communication with the mainland during the night time whatever. And last year when our young men were away fighting in South Africa for the old empire, their friends in Prince Edward Island were unable to hear from them at times unless they got the news over this cable. I would press the necessity therefore on the hon. minister of guarding against anything in the shape of a monopoly in connection with this new cable scheme. I would ask also the hon. the Minister of Marine to tell us what has been done in the way of remedying this great evil in Prince Edward Island of which I complain, and under which the people there are labouring to-day. The people of Canada are paying this company a subsidy of $2,000 a year for this telegraphic communication, and you will understand that deprived, as we have been the present session, during some eight or ten days, of a mail service from Prince Edward Island, we should at least have the advantage of cheap telegraphic communication with that province. But instead we are taxed twenty-five cents each message for the use of that short cable. I would ask the hon. the Minister of Marine what he is doing to relieve the people from this great monopoly and unjust tax.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). The subject of telegraphic communication with Prince Edward Island is somewhat alien to that now before the House, but I have no objection to saying that the opinion I gave last year, namely, that there is no monopoly in the present Anglo-American Cable Company between Prince Edward Island and the mainland I still entertain. The hon. gentleman seems to think that for some reason or other I have changed that opinion. I never have had any reason to change it. The present cable communication is maintained by the company, or its successor, which had the contract when we came into confederation in 1873. By the terms of confederation the Dominion was obliged to pay to that company the same yearly subvention that was paid by the island before confederation, and we have continued to do so ever since. The charges exacted by the Anglo-American Company upon the people of the island are, in my opinion, extortionate and excessive. I have never failed at any time to tell the Anglo-American Company that such is my opinion. I have been in communication with them for over twelve months, and there is a vast amount of correspondence, which I would be very happy, at the proper time, to lay before the House, my object being to have the charges which the company make against the people of the island, and those who have telegraphic communication with them, reduced to a reasonable amount. At present negotiations are going on with another large cable company, with the object of inducing it to extend a competitive line to Prince Edward Island, and in the present state of the negotiations I do not wish to say anything which would give rise to controversy. It may be that these negotiations will be successful, or they may not, but whatever can be done is being done by myself and my colleagues to give the people of the island fair play in the matter of telegraphic communication. If, when the matter is fairly before the House, my hon. friend desires to discuss it, I will be happy to discuss it with him, but I do not think this is the proper time to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the hon. the minister is scarcely exercising business shrewdness in connection with this transaction. We are paying out a large sum of money in a haphazard way. We will imagine for the moment that it was desirable for the Dominion to build another railway as a competitor with the Canadian Pacific Railway, what would the people of Canada think if the government should give the building of that competing line to the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves, and make no provision as to when the contract should be completed or the quality of the stuff put into the line. One could hardly call that shrewd business dealing. If the contract be given to the Eastern Cable Company, which will be the great competitor of this line, we will be committing the same mistake. True the line is to be finished in December, 1902, but there is no penalty attached to the non-fulfilment of that condition, and therefore the construction may go on indefinitely, and we will have no redress. It will be decidedly to the advantage of the Eastern Extension Cable Company to delay the construction, because every month's delay means a very substantial profit to them. I think there is scarcely sufficient information to justify paying out the money.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before this is passed, I may say that it might possibly have been better to have had a penalty in this contract, but the absence of a penalty would not prevent the recovery of damages. The company have contracted to do the work within a particular time, and will be liable in damages if they fail to do so; but as the government is really a party to the contract—I observe that Lord Strathcona has executed it on the part of the Dominion—it might be well to consider the suggestion of the hon. member for West York.

Mr. MACLEAN. That contract is not yet completed, it is subject to revision. There will be suggestions made in various parts of the empire. And I think that, before he authorizes anything further, the hon. minister should consult his co-contractors and have them unitedly insert a penalty clause. The company may not be of such a character that you can recover from them. While the liability may be there, there may not be assets sufficient or of a character to indemnify this country if they do not perform. And even money will not pay for the inconvenience the empire may be put to in this matter. If it is not too late I make the suggestion now that the hon. gentleman should consult his co-signatories and have some provision made for the insertion of a penalty clause.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). I would take the liberty of suggesting—while I do not think it possible to amend the contract, it being already signed—that it is, nevertheless, possible to exercise due precaution that the material of which the cable is made shall be the very best. During the recent South African war, almost weekly one or other of the cables broke. If this Pacific cable breaks, it means at least two or three months and possibly more before it can be resurrected and put in working order. If the Eastern Extension Co. is the concern to manufacture the cable and if they have secured a monopoly of the construction of all the cables in the British Empire we must not treat them differently from any other monopolists. If it is in the interest of their other lines that this cable should break periodically, we may reasonably expect that the cable will break. I would suggest that engineers should be appointed to see to it that both the manufacture of the cable and the laying of it should be properly done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has taken many years for the various governments to arrive at the present stage in connection with this cable; and it is to be borne in mind that, in consequence of the long distances that separate these governments, it is not so easy as between man and man to debate and settle terms and embody them in a contract. In this particular instance, our cousins from the Antipodes have their delegates in London as we have also, while the representatives of the Imperial government are there, of course. These together constitute a board to which is entrusted the practical carrying out of this scheme; and they have, in their wisdom, prepared this contract. I have no doubt, after supplying themselves with expert information as to the sufficiency of the specifications. The original specifications were prepared upon the advice of Lord Kelvin—such is the statement in the report of the Pacific Cable Commission of 1884 and 1887. I know of no higher authority on electrical matters than Lord Kelvin. We may assume from the composition of the board that the specifications are equal to the requirements of the occasion. With reference to the action of New South Wales, I may say that what they have agreed to is much less harmful than what was originally proposed. They originally proposed to grant these concessions at once, and that would have given the Eastern Extension Telegraph Co. many years of a start in gathering business throughout New South Wales. But, as the result of protests continued throughout many months, they finally yielded that point and the concessions to be granted to New South Wales cannot be enjoyed until the Pacific cable is an accomplished fact. Though, as I have said, they entered into that contract sixteen days after the contract for the construction, still, the negotiations leading up to it had been continued for a length of time.

Section agreed to.

Resolutions reported and agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 45) to amend the Pacific Cable Act of 1899.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PAY OF COLONIAL TROOPS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that the notice of motion to be discussed to-day by the request of the Minister of Militia (Hon. Mr. Borden, King's), who is ill, is held over. However, I will take the opportunity for calling the attention of the government and the House to a statement which appears in the London Times of February 22nd last :

PAY FOR SOUTH AFRICAN SERVICES.

Mr. W. Redmond asked the Financial Secretary to the War Office if he could state how many men of the rank and file in South Africa are receiving in pay or in pay and allowances as much as five shillings a day, and to what regiments they belong.

Lord Stanley. I am unable to give the details asked for. I may state that the Imperial Yeomanry, Imperial Bushmen and the majority of the colonial corps are paid at this rate. In cases in which a lower rate of pay has been issued to colonials it has been supplemented by the different colonial governments.

Mr. W. Redmond. Can the noble lord state why the colonial troops are paid at a rate so much higher than that paid to the regular army? Would they not come otherwise?

I do not wish to discuss this matter, but I wish it placed on record so that the attention of the Minister of Militia and the government may be drawn to the fact that the English understanding of the matter is that all colonial troops have been paid at the rate of five shillings a day. We are aware that there is dissatisfaction existing among some of our Canadian soldiers because some have been paid up to five shillings a day, and others have not been paid up to that figure. I shall not discuss the question further than to say that when the first Canadian contingent went to South Africa, they went on the understanding that they were to get one shilling a day. It was not, as is suggested in this report, that they required high pay to induce them to go out and fight for the empire. I think, possibly, all round, it is a mistake if this pay has been increased in one case and not in another. It will give rise to general dissatisfaction. When I first brought up this point, I was clear in taking the ground that the various localities sending these troops should have nothing to do with paying them, that the Imperial authorities alone should have in their control all the payment of these contingents. I merely lay the matter before the First Minister in order that the question of equality of pay all round may come under the consideration of the government.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Public Buildings—Ottawa Military Buildings—New store $25,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). The sum of $10,000 is asked to fit up what is known as the Seybold building. I have been obliged to rent that building for census purposes. There was no other building available, and my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, came to me and said I must find a building. It has to be fitted up with a new heating system, we have to make partitions and build an elevator, and so on, and for these purposes the sum of $10,000 has been asked from me by the chief architect. We have rented it for three years, at the rate of $3,500 per year. The chief architect, who has charge of that work, has looked all over the town, and cannot find a better building.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a very large rent. What means were taken to see whether there were other buildings available ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief architect would naturally have charge of that kind of work, and he looked all over the town. I may say that I myself consulted real estate agents, and looked all over the town, and could find no other building.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What other offers were made ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No other offer was made for that kind of building.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was there any public notice given that such rooms were desired ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we did not advertise, it would have been of no use, because the city is not very large.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand the hon. gentleman says that he and his chief official went privately through the town ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister and the chief architect, who both of them have charge of that work, looked all over the town and could not find any other building.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What were the names of the real estate agents that the hon. gentleman consulted ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A number of them, I cannot remember their names. I know the chief architect told me he had looked all over the town and could not find anything better.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman stated that real estate agents were consulted.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I remember right, I spoke to Taggart & Son, and I also asked several other people. I think I spoke to Ahearn & Soper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If I understand the hon. gentleman, this building, for which he is paying $3,500 a year, was the only building available for the purpose in the city of Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. I may say that I have also consulted with my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, whose officers have also looked over the ground.

Mr. BENNETT. Are any changes made in the building, and who is to pay for the repairs and for the changes, and what will be their extent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are going to make partitions and repairs, and this sum of money is asked precisely for that object. I was going to say that my colleague and his officials looked after other buildings, and, in point of fact, this was the only one they could find available for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the amount required for making the repairs and alterations ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief architect is asking $10,000 for those purposes.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the building in question is on the north-west corner of O'Connor and Sparks streets, a large three-storey stone building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it was formerly occupied as a wholesale house. Now, the minister comes down with a statement that seems rather large, that $10,000 is to be expended on this building in fitting it up for offices. May I ask the minister if he has a building which adjoins the Rideau Club, known as one of the Nagle buildings, and is now occupied by the Customs Department ? What is the lease of that building, and who paid for the repairs on that building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister tells me that we are paying a rental of $1,800 for the building occupied by the Department of Customs. I just stated that this building on Sparks street we had rented for three years ; we have got an option to keep the building.

Mr. WALLACE. I should think so, for that rent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think my hon. friend could do any better. My officials and the officials of the Department of Agriculture have looked all over the ground themselves. We are free to keep it for three years only, or to keep it for any length of time. The census work could not be postponed, and I had to find a building.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman happen to know what that building cost a couple of years ago ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not say.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The rent would pay for the building in four years.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the cost of the repairs on the Nagle building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed by the deputy minister that we spent about $5,000 on repairs.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand the Minister of Public Works has been making recently two deals in renting premises. The first one with which he seems to have started in is what is known as the Nagle building, adjoining the Rideau Club. I have heard it said in town that that property belonged to the estate of the late Mr. Nagle. There are two buildings there, and if my recollection is correct, I heard that the two buildings were offered for sale for $12,000. Now, under the circumstances, it seems startling. Two buildings are offered for $12,000, and apparently there is very little difference between them in point of appearance, and I presume in point of value ; yet, in face of that, assuming, for the sake of argument, they are both of the same value, what do we find the minister has done ? He has taken a building that is offered for $6,000, and he has expended no less a sum than $5,000 upon it in repairs. He says he pays $1,800 rent for it, therefore he is paying to the owners of the property the modest income of 30 per cent on what they purchased it for themselves. Then, in addition to that, he has improved the building to the tune of $5,000. Now, if we are to judge other cases by this one—I do not know myself, I have heard no estimate of the value of the so-called Seybold building, but it is fair to assume there is an equally bad arrangement in the interests of the country. Now, if the minister, as he announces, is going to spend $10,000 in improving this Seybold building, I think, before the committee votes him that money, it would be well to consider whether that investment should be made. In the first place, if the sum of $10,000 was spent on this building in what is known as the third storey or the garret. There would be for all time to come in this property a large number of rooms which might serve the purpose of these census enumerators. It is well for the House to consider whether or not this large investment should be made, of spending $10,000 on improvements, and then to pay this large rental, $3,500, for the next three years. I would ask the hon. minister to consider whether it would not be better to spend this large sum of $10,000 in improving the third storey of the building here, so that after it had been used by the census staff it might be available for other purposes of a public nature.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Seybold building had been offered for $12,000 ?

Mr. BENNETT. No, I said that the two Nagle buildings, near the Rideau Club, were sold at $12,000. The hon. minister is having the use of one of these buildings, and a fair price of that will be $6,000, yet on that building, which was offered for $6,000, the minister has expended $5,000. I think that is correct, according to his statement, and it shows that on this $6,000 investment he is paying 30 per cent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief architect and the deputy minister tell me that they have never heard of any such offer as $12,000 for the building that was rented last year. But what has been done last year has been done last year. We are discussing an item of $10,000 to be spent on the Seybold building.

Mr. BENNETT. Who owns the Seybold building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is owned by Mr. Seybold.

Mr. BENNETT. Any others ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. minister know if it is owned by Messrs. Seybold & Russell, and that Mr. Russell is the collector at the port of Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All I know is that I have only to deal with Mr. Seybold. Last year we were short of space. I tried to buy the building, and Mr. Seybold asked $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT. You did not give it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I did not give it. When I came back after the election, I found myself confronted with the fact that it was necessary to have a building for the census. I had no choice because that building was the only one available for that purpose. It was large enough, and it was the only one available.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose Mr. Russell was the only one available for the collectorship of customs. I understand that formerly Messrs. Seybold & Russell occupied this building. Mr. Russell gets out into the collectorship of customs. That was not put up to tender. I suppose he was the only suitable man for the position. Then Mr. Seybold is dealt with by way of this lease, and he has the only suitable building for the purpose, so that Messrs. Seybold & Russell have been singularly favoured. It may be, as the hon. gentleman says, necessary that all that should be done, but I am glad it does not happen every day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let us come straight to the point. We were short of a building. I am obliged to pay rentals that I should not be obliged to pay. There is only one way of avoiding it, and that is by erecting another building. We are short of buildings. The business is extending. We cannot take the census without having a large staff of officers, and we must locate them somewhere.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do nothing more than express my amazement. It may be that it was possible, as the hon. minister says, for his officers or himself to get a suitable office to accommodate the men who will be employed in this special work except under these extraordinary terms. They are most extraordinary. Whether the original cost of the building was what has been mentioned or not, the rental is enormous, although the hon. gentleman says that with all the efforts made by himself and his officers, he could get no other building that was suitable. There is this amount of $3,500 a year for three years, and there is this proposal to spend $10,000, or possibly more, on the building, all for the benefit of the owner of the property. It is an unusual and a most extraordinary transaction.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). Mr. Speaker, I may say that at the time the requirements in regard to the census were first brought up last fall, the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was not in Ottawa. I consulted with the gentleman who is in charge of the census as to the requirements for the census work. I then asked him, in conjunction with the chief architect of the Public Works Department, to see if a place could be found in the city to suit these requirements. As my hon friend knows very well, there must be a large staff of clerks engaged in the tabulation of the returns of the census, and that work will last probably for two or three years. These people have to be accommodated in a convenient way, and together. You cannot scatter them in different buildings. The accommodation required was very difficult to find. As a matter of fact, after considerable investigation there were only two buildings to be found which were at all suitable. One was in some rooms in a building known as the Slater block on Sparks street, and the other was this Seybold building. The Seybold building was a very much more convenient chamber and more suitable for the work, and I therefore asked the hon. Minister of Public Works to try and secure that building on such terms as he could. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) spoke of the value of the building and said that it was worth $12,000.

Mr. BENNETT. No, it was another one.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well, I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I went over that building completely, and I venture to say that the building alone, to say nothing at all about the land or its situation, or any adventitious value which may be attached to it, could not be erected for less than $60,000, to-day, in Ottawa. Of course, buildings of that class are difficult to find for this purpose, and one must expect to pay a little more than the ordinary rate of interest on the investment in the building. I think the rent required was not out of the way, in view of the circumstances. As to the improvements which are necessary and for which this vote is asked, no matter what building we might take, a large amount must be spent to provide the necessary accommodation, and to make it suitable for these men to work in. We cannot get, in a building erected for ordinary purposes, accommodation suitable for public offices and public work. A large portion of this expenditure will be incurred in providing heating apparatus in the building, which does not belong to the owners, and would not go back to the people who owned the building. It is necessary to heat it for those who will be employed there and a large portion of the expenditure will be for heating.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And to buy furniture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, furniture and desks.

Mr. WALLACE. We are getting a little more of this so-called information. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) tells us now that it was he who did the work of getting this building.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I did not say so.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr Tarte) had just told us that he had scurried all over town examining other buildings. He added that his officers had done this and that so that if anything is wrong his officers can come in for a share of the blame. He was asked if he had consulted the real estate agents, but he rather scurried around that question. Why did he not consult those men who carry on the real estate business and ascertain what suitable places there were available in Ottawa, so as to save himself from all this racing around the city that he had to do in order to secure this building, which we now learn was recommended by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and which was right under their noses and before their very doors ? They are giving $3,500 rent for a building which was sold a few years ago, I am told, for $20,000 at a mortgage sale, and they are giving it to one of their political friends in accordance with the doctrine recently laid down by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon Sir Louis Davies), who told us that when any good thing was going, they were going to give it to their friends.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. So we will.

Mr. WALLACE. They are very generous with their political friend, Mr. Seybold, in this arrangement, and so they are carrying out the doctrine laid down by the minister (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). A few years ago, when the Langevin block was erected the officials did not half occupy the building.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh.

Mr. WALLACE. The First Minister laughs.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, this is a free country.

Mr. WALLACE. We then moved the Patent office into the Langevin block and gave it four times as much space as it formerly occupied, but since the Liberal government came into power they moved it out again, and they also moved out the Department of Indian Affairs, and yet they have not enough room for the scores of their political friends they are appointing to office. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) tells us that they are out every day hunting around Ottawa for buildings to rent in order to accommodate the friends of theirs they are crowding into office. This is the economical government that is doing this. I remember how they used to denounce the Conservatives for filling up the department with useless officials ; but now they are appointing double the number themselves. They are renting all the buildings around town for the accommodation of these useless public officials. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) laughs at that, but he will laugh at the wrong side of his mouth when he begins to explain this to the people of Canada.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is very laughable, too.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, it is very laughable to think that hundreds of thousands of dollars, the money of the people is being squandered on favourites of the government in accordance with the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. They complained that the Conservatives appointed too many officials, but the Liberals have appointed scores and hundreds since they came into power, and the Minister of Public Works tells us that he is running around Ottawa looking for buildings to accommodate them. That is a nice condition of affairs, and the country will demand to know more about it than the ministers have yet deigned to explain.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows perfectly well that this building is for the accommodation of the census staff, which is not a permanent addition to the public service.

Mr. WALLACE. They will be permanent for three years.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) was a member of the Conservative government which took six years to finish the census which we hope to finish in three. The hon. gentleman, who was Controller of Customs, also knows well that accommodation was required for the statistical service which has been brought to Ottawa recently, but which formerly was conducted in different parts of the country, and that staff is no addition to the public service.

Mr. WALLACE. Indeed it is, and I give the minister notice that we will investigate it a little later on.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the investigation comes, it will be found that what I say is true.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is clear from the statements made by the ministers themselves that they are to-day paying more in the way of rental and for improvements on these rented buildings, than would meet the interest on the outlay for the erection of a first-class building which would belong to the government. As it is at present we are simply making improvements for the landlords. It is bad financing, and the government cannot justify this extravagance. If a building is needed to accommodate the public employees then the government should come forward with a proposition to erect, and that proposal would be more in the line of good financing.

Mr. POPE. What about jobs for their friends ?

Mr. MACLEAN. They would have more accommodation for their friends than they have to-day, and the country would still save money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In point of fact that may be true, but the census work had to be done and I could not help myself.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Agriculture stated that the last census took six years to complete. The census was taken in 1891 and the general elections were held in 1896, five years afterwards. Was the census not completed when this government came into power?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were some of the census staff still in my office and I dismissed them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Were they still doing census work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were working still on census work, as far as I know. They were on the census staff and I suppose they were working at census work.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the census work was not completed, why were they dismissed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because I closed it down.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I remember correctly, every volume of the census returns was printed and published one or two years before the election. If it took six years to finish the census, that would bring it down to 1897. That statement can hardly be correct. Now, I will ask the minister where was the work of the 1891 census done ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was done in the Langevin block to a large extent; not altogether.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, the entire census staff was accommodated in the Langevin block, and the Patent branch and the model room were in that building at the same time. When this government came into power they went to their friends and hired a building for the Patent office and the model room, and they left the upper flat of the Langevin block vacant. I ask the minister what takes the place of those departments in the Langevin block now ? How have they managed to fill it up, and to rent buildings from their friends besides. I think the work was completed in 1892 ; but what has been done in these two flats ? Have the departments over there increased the staff so much in four or five years that they have filled up two flats of the Langevin block with new officials ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. One of the great difficulties I have is to find enough room for the work performed by the different departments. I have been obliged during the last year or two to fit up the attic of the Langevin block for the Indian Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Indian Department is in the Eastern block.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Part of it. It also occupies the whole upper story of the Langevin block. If my hon. friend will be kind enough to look over that building, he will find that there is no available room. My hon. friend is a reasonable man, and he knows that the business of this country has increased vastly. For instance, the business of the Department of the Interior has trebled. The business of the Department of Public Works has doubled. He knows very well that a business man cannot do a business of $500,000 in the same building in which ten years before he was doing a business of only $25,000.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that the difference between the past and the present?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not quite so much, but it is a vast difference, and that is why we have to have more officials and more room. It is no pleasure to me to rent offices in Ottawa.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). It seems to me that there is something in the nature of very bad management in this transaction. The minister says that he made an effort to buy the Seybold property, and got a price on it. He said he was asked $100,000 for the property, and did not take it. The people of Canada would have been better off if he had taken it. The government can borrow money at something under 3 per cent; but he is paying 3½ per cent per annum on $100,000——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Only for three years.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). And in addition to that he is spending 3½ per cent per annum for repairs and charges.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And furniture.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). So that for three years to come he is going to spend 7 per cent on $100,000, twice the amount it would cost the people of Canada if he had bought the property. But, surely it would not be necessary to pay $100,000 for it. The property was sold a short time ago for $20,000, and surely it would have been possible for the government to have taken possession of it under expropriation proceedings. Then it would have been the subject of arbitration, and would probably have been got for $30,000 or $40,000; and, besides, all the improvements made on it would have become the property of the people of Canada. If, as the hon. gentleman says, the government are pressed to find accommodation for the increased number of public servants who are coming here, it strikes me that he should look a little further ahead, and realize what every member of parliament realizes before he is here three months, namely, that the accommodation provided for parliament and the public officials is perfectly inadequate. He should not wait until real estate advances to an extravagant figure. Intelligent management on the part of the Minister of Public Works would have dictated that he should have advised his colleagues to proceed at once to secure such real estate within the neighbourhood of the public buildings as would give the government of Canada accommodation not only for the present but for the future. I should think a scheme which would involve the purchase of the whole block between Metcalfe and O'Connor streets and Wellington and Sparks streets would be a capital investment. The minister would deserve more commendation if, instead of pursuing a piecemeal policy, involving vast expense to the country, he would formulate some proper business-like scheme which would give to parliament and the officials the accommodation they must have, not only for the present, but for years to come.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid that the same practice obtains in some of the departments as we find about this House. During the last few years, since hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, we find in every portion of this building, both downstairs and upstairs, where rooms were available a few years ago for the use of members, there are none available to-day. What has become of them? They have been taken for the accommodation of the additional employees engaged by the party for the time being in power, until we find all the rooms practically occupied by a few officials. I presume it is the same in the different departments, and thus we find the government renting buildings here and there and filling them up with the army which they are employing to do the work of the country. I wonder what will be the case when we get through with taking the census. It will be an interesting sight to see what accommodation will have to be provided for that army in the work to be done a few months hence. I think it is time we called a halt. Members of parliament find it difficult to get a seat anywhere around here to do their private work. Rooms which were available a short time ago are not available to-day. They are taken up by the Speaker of the House or the Deputy Speaker or by some employees, and members of parliament who come to do the business of the country are told, You have no interest in these rooms or control over them; they belong to us. They are controlled by the Speaker, or the Sergeant-at-arms, or some other official, and we are denied the use of these rooms—for the business we are called here to do. A few years ago the members of the opposition had seven rooms; but three of them were taken away this year, and were given either to the friends of ministers, or to some employees. We had formerly a large general room downstairs, which was at one time used as a drinking room; but we cannot use it any longer. If a member wants to bring a private secretary here to do any work, he has no place to go. Sometimes he is told to go to the library, and the library people tell us, You have no right to bring these people here. And there is no place else to take them. I think that the same thing is going on with regard to other departments. They are being filled up by a large army of employees, friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, whom they are pensioning on the country for many years to come. Hence comes the necessity for renting other buildings and paying very high rents—rents out of all proportion to the value of the buildings. If it is necessary that we should have these buildings, they can be purchased for a very moderate sum. Instead of renting them at the figures we are doing, we should rather buy them and save paying such large rents.

But I am told that we do not need them at all, and I presume, if ordinary economy were exercised, they would not be required. The country has not developed to such an extent in the meantime, and the work of the department has not developed to such an extent that we should require to rent new buildings for the public service.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of the high-handed manner in which the hon. minister acted in the past when he rented the Nagle building, we ought to know what he is doing at present. In that case the Minister of Public Works rented a building which was sold for $6,000, and after spending $5,000 on it in repairs, he paid a rental of $1,800 per year. It is true that that matter is not under discussion, but in the item before the House the minister is paying $3,500 a year for a building and spending $10,000 on it for repairs, and that building was sold a few years ago for $20,000. Capitalizing the rent paid, that would mean that this building is to-day worth over $60,000, and yet it was sold at public auction for $20,000.

What are the facts? A few years ago, when the census was taken and when all the public officials were occupying the present building, there was still ample room for the census staff, and to-day the Minister of Agriculture has rooms rented on Sparks street, to which he has transferred a number of the patent officials and the models, so that there is more room to-day in the Langevin block than there was ten years ago. It is nothing short of an outrage to ask us to pay $3,500 a year for the next three years for this building and spend $10,000 in repairing it, and if this vote passes, every bit of repairs done will be done by day labour and not by contract under competition, just as the hon. minister has work done from time to time on other public buildings. The hon. gentleman has been deliciously frank to-day, and the reason we have not far to seek. He has been thwarted in his idea. He never wanted to rent a building, but wanted to build another large departmental block, and now that he has been foiled in that design by his colleagues, the House is getting the benefit of his revenge in all these details which he has given.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has re-stated that this building is worth about $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I ventured no such opinion, but I said it was sold at public auction for $20,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to know on what occasion that was and how much mortgage was assumed at the time by the purchaser. If the hon. gentleman will undertake to get any valuator in Ottawa to value that building alone, without the land, as it stands, at less than $50,000, I would be very much surprised.

Mr. WALLACE. Did the government take any such precaution?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware that they did. That is a matter which concerns the Public Works Department. The hon. gentleman went on to make other statements which were wider of the mark than many others. He said that the Minister of Agriculture had moved a lot of his staff down to another building in Sparks street with a lot of models. There is not a member of the staff in that building.

Mr. BENNETT. Why does the hon. gentleman allow all those beautiful models to be unprotected by his staff?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a caretaker there from the Department of Public Works who keeps that room as he used to do the room in the Langevin block when the models were there. As soon as we get possession of the Seybold building, that room can be given up and the rent saved and we can deduct the rent of that room and the room adjoining, occupied by the Public Works Department, from the rent of the Seybold building.

As to the work in the Langevin block, the hon. gentleman does not understand what occurred after the fire in what is known as our western departmental building. At the time there was a large number of clerks in the public service, accommodated in the attic of the western block. We all know the deplorable loss that we suffered from that fire. We found that the attic was practically a fire-trap and that it would not be proper to allow public records and papers and men engaged in public works to continue in such rooms. The same condition was found to exist in the attic of the eastern block, where a large number of clerks of the Interior Department were accommodated in a way in which it was a shame that men engaged in the public service should be kept. Valued records of the Interior Department were stored in that attic, and had a fire started it would have been practically impossible to save them. We would lose records that could not be replaced, valuable interests in the North-west Territories would be injured, and endless litigation would follow. The result was that the Interior Department was moved bodily to the Langevin block. The rooms formerly occupied by the models were placed at the disposal of that department and the rooms on the floor below. In my own Department of Agriculture, the number of employees has, to a certain extent, increased in consequence of the largely increased work done, and I was obliged to take for that work the rooms formerly occupied by the census staff. To-day in the Langevin block there is no accommodation for the census staff, and consequently the Minister of Public Works has to look about for a building in which to do that work. The Patent Office also has increased in the number of employees, in consequence of the large increase of applications for patents and of an effort on my part to overtake the arrears in the applications for patents which were before the department when we came to office. The Interior Department has also largely increased and requires greater accommodation. The result is that every room and every space for a desk in the Langevin block was occupied before the work of the census began. Until the Seybold building is ready for occupation, it is impossible to carry on the work of preparing for the census except under extreme disadvantage. Hon. gentlemen opposite have talked about the erection of a new departmental building. It is possible that it would be wise to construct such a building. But everybody knows perfectly well that the work of construction would occupy at least two years. Meanwhile, the day for the census is fixed, the work must go on, and the clerks who are to do the work must be accommodated. Therefore, the hon. Minister of Public Works, instead of undertaking the construction of a building, buying a suitable building, as was suggested by my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) rented a building until such time as a decision as to a new public building can be come to. I venture to say that it is not fair to make comparison as between the new work carried on by the customs in the Nagle building or the work of the census, and the work being done when the present government came into office.

Mr. BENNETT. Now that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has, I hope to his own satisfaction, shown, first, that a census is going to be taken, and, next, that it is desirable that a census should be taken, let us discuss the question of this building. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works how it is intended to expend this $10,000—by his favourite method of day's work or by tender and contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The money will be spent in buying furniture and in making necessary repairs. And these repairs, as every one knows who is familiar with these matters, cannot be done otherwise than by day's labour. My hon. friend has just alluded to the western block. He reproached me with having built that by day's labour. I did it that way, and I employed union men, and for that I was congratulated by all the union men in Canada. I say without hesitation that, when you can find good foremen, work carried on by day's labour is cheaper and better than that done by public tender and contract. I am surprised that my hon. friend would even suggest that, for repairs of this kind, tenders should be asked for. There is a partition to be put here, a door to be cut there, and so on. Where is the sensible man who will say that such work can be done by tender and contract ? My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) says that I am very anxious to erect a new building. I have no anxiety about it ; but it is quite evident that some accommodation must be provided. I know very well that when I shall come and ask for money to put up a new building, I shall be strongly opposed, and accused of wanting to spend money lavishly. But now I am told that because I want to rent a building, I am spending the money foolishly. My hon. friends on the other side are very hard to please. I have not pleased them in the past, and I am afraid I shall not succeed much better in the future. But I rely on this—that the sensible men of the country will not take much stock in the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BENNETT. In Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We shall see in a short time whether Ontario will take stock in them or not. Ontario needs only to be talked to a little in order to understand. I have great confidence in Ontario.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But Ontario has not much confidence in the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member for Pictou should not speak of a province lacking confidence in me. The hon. gentleman's own province has no confidence in him. He has barely secured his own election. But I have been elected in my own province, and I am here not alone, but some of us are here with a pretty strong backing. Let the hon. gentleman be a little more careful.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What about Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Ontario is all right. The hon. gentleman and some of his friends have succeeded in making Ontario wrong. But I am glad to take this opportunity of congratulating the hon. leader of the oppositon (Mr. Borden, Halifax) of repudiating them. They have appealed to passion and to racial prejudice. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has not done so. I say that sensible men cannot take much stock in the position assumed to-day by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for East Simcoe has moved a motion to strike out from the estimates $10,000 that I have agreed to pay to provide means for carrying on the census work of this country. Now, the rental may be a little high. I do not believe it is too high. But, suppose it is, am I going to close the doors of the building upon the staff of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and scatter them to the winds so that no work can be carried on ? My hon. friend has taken an untenable position, and I think if he were a little older and a little wiser, he would not insist upon a vote. I have no more to say except this—that my long experience, both in the press gallery and in this House, leads me to believe that a party does not gain much by such tactics as those of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) is resorting to.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. Minister of Agriculture speak as though this census work had come up suddenly. These hon. gentlemen have been in power since 1896. They knew that the census was to be taken in 1901. Why in the world was not some provision made a year of two ago ? Why leave the providing of rooms until the day they want to use them, and then go to a political friend and pay two or three prices for accommodation ? The hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte), a few moments ago, tried to make the House believe that he had gone to every agent and every landlord in the city inquiring for rooms. But when asked to give the names of the parties applied to, he could not give any. This is a case like that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) stating the other night that every dollar voted—and it is no wonder the opposition protest—is handed out to political friends to pay for goods and services at double prices.

Item voted : Yeas 90, Nays 50.

Slides and Booms—St. Maurice District—
Increased facilities for descent of timber on the St. Maurice river $50,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This sum of money is asked to provide improvements for the descent of timber on the St. Maurice river. These works were begun in 1852, and since that time there has been growing up a magnificent succession of industries, among which I may mention the well known Grande Mere Mills, which this year we expect will consume about 2,000,000 logs. Those works are productive works, that is they yield more than it costs to maintain them. This year we expect to derive a revenue of about $30,000 from these works.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And to spend how much ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is only part of the money that will be necessary. The money we will have to spend this year will be over $100,000. These works have cost the country up to date about half a million dollars. In 1899, there was a damaging flood that carried away a large number of logs, and it is to avoid a recurrence of such an accident that this sum of money is necessary.

Paris Exhibition, $30,000; Buffalo Exhibition, $30,000; total $60,000

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This first item of $30,000 is to close up the accounts in connection with the Paris exhibition. The time has come now when the exhibition accounts can be completely closed up and the work practically completed, provided this money is voted. I may explain the need of this money by saying that last year I asked an amount that I thought would be necessary for the Paris exhibition, basing my request to the House on a statement which I received from Paris of the expected requirements. I took that request to mean from the date that it was sent to me, but I found afterwards that the commissioners intended it to mean from the 1st of July. Therefore, I made an error of something like $25,000, in the request which I put before the House last session for what I considered necessary to complete the work at the Paris exhibition. A few items have come up since then, amounting to a few thousand dollars beyond what I had expected, and the result is to-day that I am obliged to ask for $30,000 to close the account of the Paris exhibition. I should be glad to give the committee any information they may desire with reference to the Paris exhibition. I will only say just now that from the reports that have been received in this country of the results of that exhibition, the flattering accounts which have come in, not only from all over Canada, but from the press of the world, and from the utterances of a large number of people who visited that exhibition, I feel satisfied that the Canadian exhibit there was worthy of the country, and it has accomplished, in spreading the reputation of Canada as a productive and industrial country, much more than could have been expected from the amount of money there expended I feel extremely gratified at the results of the Paris exhibition, which was conducted under the management of gentlemen who have shown themselves to be eminently qualified for that work, the whole under the presidency of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. CLARKE. How much has been spent up to date ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not at the moment a statement of the actual expenses up to date, but the total expenditure covered by this vote and all previous votes will be $315,000. Before this I had a vote of $285,000, and this $30,000, making $315,000, I am satisfied from the estimates laid before the department by the commissioner now in charge will cover all the expense.

Mr. POPE. I would like to ask if this is the only detail we are to get concerning this item, a mere request for another $30,000?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am perfectly willing to give all the information that the committee require. I will give full details of the expenditure.

Mr. WALLACE. How much did the commissioner receive for his expenses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Which commissioner ?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Public Works. I suppose he was the one in charge ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The chief commissioner, Hon. Mr. Tarte, received an advance of $3,000 when going to Paris, and $3,000 more was later sent forward, making a total of $6,000 for the commissioner's work.

Mr. WALLACE. How long was he away ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. About five months.

Mr. WALLACE. Did his salary as minister go on while he was acting as commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. And he got all these thousands of dollars while his salary was accruing ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He got no salary as commissioner to Paris.

Mr. WALLACE. No, but he got $6,000 all the same.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, that was placed at his credit.

Mr. WALLACE. How many other commissioners were there ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was originally a board of eight commissioners, four being officers of various departments and four being appointed specially to this work. Three of these special commissioners went over to Paris. Prof. Robertson, who is one of the officers, was obliged to make a trip there for a few weeks, Prof. Saunders went there to represent Canada at agricultural conventions, and Mr. Gourdeau, the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was in Paris the most of the time, I think, all the time from the opening of the exposition. The hon. Minister of Public Works was away from Canada about five months.

Mr. WALLACE. Are we to be furnished with all the details of the expenditure of these commissioners and the chief commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The details will appear in the accounts of the commission. I have not them available here now.

Mr. WALLACE. Are they in the Auditor General's Report ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are, up to the 30th June.

Mr. WALLACE. That does not cover the interesting part of the accounts.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They will appear in the Auditor General's Report for next year.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, we will have the pleasure of waiting a year.

The PRIME MINISTER. Deferred pleasure ; that is all.

Mr. WALLACE. We must have the particulars of all the bills that make up this expenditure of $315,000. How much did the building cost ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The building cost $87,600, and we received back $10,600 which we had paid to the Imperial commission for accommodation in the Imperial space. They charged us that, but they returned us the amount I have stated. Our share of the cost of the colonial building, which was to embrace the colonies of the empire, was $76,958, practically $77,000.

Mr. WALLACE. That was for space ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For the Canadian share of the colonial building.

Mr. WALLACE. That is in addition to the $87,000 for the Canadian building ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, no ; there was no Canadian building. There was a British colonial building, for which we had to pay our share, and our share amounted to the sum of $77,000 in round figures.

Mr. WALLACE. A gentleman who is quite competent to judge, I should say, told me that he saw the Canadian building at Paris, and he estimated that he could put up that building for $10,000 and make a profit on it at that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am sorry for that gentleman's judgment.

Mr. WALLACE. I can say to the hon. minister that if he knew that gentleman as he is known in the city of Toronto, he would have a good deal of respect for his judgment. That is his statement about this building. Every statement I have heard is to the same effect, that the moneys which it had been rumoured were paid for that building were exorbitant. We have the statement of a total expenditure of $315,000 and the disbursement of it. The chief commissioner, while drawing his salary as Minister of Public Works in Canada, and performing none of the duties of the Minister of Public Works for all these five months in the year, was drawing $6,000 of our money, and if the newspaper reports were correct, he was spending a large portion of his time in England, where the duties, I presume, of chief commissioner at the Paris Exposition, would not call him. I would like to know if the minister would read to us the details of the whole expenditure so that we may have them before us. We are entitled to that before we vote any more money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Allow me to explain, Sir.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to have the explanation of the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will the hon. gentleman have the kindness to hear me ?

Mr. WALLACE. We will listen to any information that is given.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman must do so. The hon. gentleman stated somewhere during the last campaign that I had spent $100,000 in erecting this building, which, he has repeated to-day, could be erected for $10,000. I had nothing whatever to do with this building. When I reached Paris the building was up.

Mr. POPE. Or it never would have been.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The building was up. The hon. Minister of Agriculture had arranged with the Imperial government that Canada would form part of the colonial exhibit. The charge of the building had been entrusted to a Royal Committee in England. Then, I say, when I reached Paris the building was up. I must immediately say that the building was not creditable to us. It was nobody's fault except the fault of the Royal Committee. Not one single member of the committee had crossed the channel and gone to Paris. I immediately sent for the architect and I asked him where the specifications were. I could not get hold of them, and I only saw them a few days before I left. I asked him whether there were any specifications and whether they had been followed. I took him around the building and he was obliged to admit and recognize that the specifications had not been followed. I asked him whether he had given notice to the Royal Committee, and he said : 'No, I did not give notice.' I immediately communicated with my colleague and with Lord Strathcona, and we did with a bad job the best we could. To say that the building is only worth $10,000 is, if I may be permitted without offence to say, stating something which is ridiculous.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much would you say it would be worth ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would say between $40,000 and $45,000. I visited the building with one of my colleagues. One of my colleagues was in France and that same gentleman, no doubt that the hon. gentleman alludes to, a big contractor, was with me. Several Canadians came there and admitted that the building was not creditable to us. It proves that at the next exhibition we should go on our own hook. When my colleague went to London all the colonies had undertaken to take part in the exhibition. It came out that only Western Australia and Canada took part in the exhibition. Practically we were alone, because Western Australia is a pretty small colony and had only an exhibit of gold. When I reached Paris we could not even get admission to the exhibition grounds without going to the English officers and asking for tickets. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) reproaches me with having gone to England. Well, I have gone there and I will go again I hope, and I went there on that occasion in connection with the exhibition. I felt that Canada as the independent nation we are, as a self-governing country, was entitled to have a proper standing at Paris. I went to the Royal Committee and represented to them that I would not stay in Paris unless I were credited directly to the French authorities. I did not care for myself. It was easy for me to have a personal standing in Paris, for I have relations there, but I made up my mind that I was doing my duty towards Canada in insisting that Canada should be properly represented. The Royal Committee did not seem to understand me, and then I prepared a memorandum that was forwarded through Lord Strathcona to Mr. Chamberlain, and it is my duty and pleasure and pride to say that forty-eight hours after Mr. Chamberlain read my statement I was directly accredited to the French authorities. I went to England for that very purpose on two occasions. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) believes that I have spent a great deal of money. Well, I have spent $6,000 of the money of the people of this country. Will you permit me to state here that I should have spent a great deal more. Forty-two nations were represented in Paris, and I am sure that I am the commissioner who spent the least of all those. There were smaller nations whose commissioners spent a great deal more money than I did. I do not of course compare my position to that of the English commissioner, but I am sure that Col. Jenkin has spent in entertaining and advertising his country a larger sum of money than some hon. gentlemen imagine. Those who have been a minister, those who have travelled; those who know what a nation is; those who know what a great exhibition is, will not reproach me with having spent too much money. Perhaps I may be permitted to say that I have spent a very large sum of money which I have not the means to stand. I judge from reading the debates in the House (I trust that I may say it without offence to anybody), that the position was not stated as it should have been stated. I wrote to some friends of mine on the other side of the House begging them not to make such statements as were made. An ex-minister of the Crown whom I am sorry not to see here stated in the House that we should not have spent more than $25,000 on the Paris exhibition. We have spent about $300,000, and we obtained the grandest advertisement that Canada ever obtained on the European continent. Our exhibit was a most creditable one, and if the building —with which we had nothing to do—was not creditable, the exhibit was most creditable to us, and I must compliment my hon. colleague and friend (Hon. Mr. Fisher) and his officers on the splendid showing they have made on behalf of Canada. I may say that all the staff in Paris did their duty thoroughly and faithfully. As far as I am concerned myself, I have done my best to advertise Canada in France, and in Belgium, and everywhere I was able to speak. If an account of my speeches is asked for at a latter period I shall be most delighted to give it to the House, but we are discussing a financial question just now. I have no hesitation is saying that no expenditure of money will bring to us better results than the money that was spent on the Paris exhibition.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Has the Minister of Agriculture made any provision in the supplementary estimates for the exhibition at Glasgow next summer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). How much?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell off-hand, but I trust sufficient to make a very creditable display.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Is any provision made for the exhibition at Buffalo?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There will be in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. I made some remarks in the House last year with reference to the Paris exhibition, and I do not know that we could have a better opportunity than this of getting explanation from the minister on what seemed to me then to be improper conduct on his part. I refer to the reception to President Loubet. The president as the representative of France visited the exhibition, and I presume expected to be received by Col. Jekyll, the representative of the British Empire in his department. That would appear to be proper, but the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) contended that it should take place in the building belonging to Canada, and that as he was there to represent a portion of the British Empire, an independent country, that the reception should take place in the Canada department. If it did not take place there, in a somewhat peevish way the minister declared that he would close the Canadian exhibit. In my judgment such conduct on his part was very improper and some explanation should be made by the minister regarding it. I have no doubt that he will give an explanation that may put a different face on it from that conveyed by the information we got from the press of this country. As to the exhibition itself, I have a letter from a friend who was in Paris, and he does not seem to have quite as high an opinion as to the value of that exhibition as the Minister of Public Works has. He speaks of it in some respects as being creditable, and other respects he thought it was not a fair representation of Canada. He says :

As to the exhibits here, they were not what they ought to have been. I have seen better individual exhibits at provincial fairs in my own country. It was ahead of Australia and perhaps India, but it could not touch Mexico either for design of the pavilion or beauty of arrangement. It was all right in one thing, that it did not go in for a foolish display of nicknacks, to the detriment of industrial exhibits. Compared to the arrangement and character of the Russian exhibit, it was very poor, as outside of the exhibits purely and simply, no information was given regarding the country either as regards colonization or industrial purposes. All Canada wants for success to-day is capital, and there is plenty of it lying idle here awaiting favourable opportunity of investment, but the details of mining and other wealth of the country were altogether too meagre to attract the attention of any capitalists. There was a large amount of space taken up with a lot of trash, such as exercise books for school children of ten or twelve years of age, and you will no doubt know what kind of an exhibit that would be. Such things as this made the exhibit look rather childish, in my judgment. The rest of the exhibit represented the industries of Canada well enough. Had the arrangements been better, and had more information been given, and also had the materials of which the exhibit consisted been of a higher class, it would have been much better. The art exhibit was simply ridiculous.

I am not one of those who feel inclined to criticise very severely the amount of money spent by the minister, because while he was there, I am bound to believe that he was trying to do the best he could for his country, and a man in that position cannot be niggardly. Therefore, if there was more spent by him than we might think necessary, we must make allowances. Some of those who visited the exhibition say that it was a comparative failure, while others say that it was a great success. I have given that as the evidence of a Canadian who was living there and going in and out day after day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture how it happened that there was no proper supervision over the construction of this building. I understand from the Minister of Public Works that he regarded the building as unsuitable, as not built according to the specifications, and as worth very much less than we paid for it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will give the hon. gentleman full explanations after recess.

At six o'clock the Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has rendered a great service to me in asking me to explain the incident of the visit of President Loubet. One morning I read in the Paris newspapers that the president was going to visit the exhibits of the foreign colonies. I had not been notified, although I had been directly accredited to the French authorities. I made preparations. To understand the matter properly, it is necessary to know that there were three main doors to the colonial pavilion on the Avenue d'Iena. In that pavilion Canada had, of course, the largest place. If I remember rightly, Canada had 90 per cent of the space, and paid 90 per cent or thereabouts of the cost. Then, there was Western Australia, and the little island of Mauritius. I made preparations to receive M. Loubet by our main door. In this country, we are in the habit of receiving by our main door, not by our kitchen door. But I found that the British understrappers, who had managed to log-roll in London, had arranged for President Loubet to come in, not by the main door of the building, the Canadian door, but simply by one of the small doors, and only to pass through a small section of the Canadian exhibit. He would simply go into our kitchen and see the stove exhibit, and a small corner of the Canadian exhibit. I felt that it was my duty to Canada not to allow British understrappers to slight us in that way; and if any hon. gentleman from the other side of the House had been there representing this country, he would have done just what I did. I am glad to say that there were present, when that incident happened, not only French Canadians, but a large number of English Canadians, and they all sided with me to a man. As I say, preparations had been made. A band of music had been engaged. There were three or four hundred Canadians of all creeds and races there to receive M. Loubet and the distinguished people who were accompanying him. When I learned that we were going to be slighted in that way, I said to one of those English officers that I would rather close all the doors of the colonial building than submit to such an insult. My hon. friend from Grey is altogether wrong when he is under the impression that M. Loubet's visit was intended for the British pavilion. It was intended for the foreign colonies. The British pavilion was on the Avenue des Nations, on the other side of the Seine, while the colonial, or rather the Canadian building, was on Trocadero square—two different places altogether. Mr. Crozier, chief of the protocol, was informed of the incident, and as soon as he learned that such a trick had been attempted upon the president, he changed all the arrangements on the spot, and the president came into our exhibition by our main door. An explanation was given a couple of days afterwards to the English newspaper men who were in Paris, and I may say that they all congratulated me on the firm stand I took. Now, my hon. friend from Grey is altogether wrongly informed when he states that the exhibition was not a credit to us. As a commercial exhibition, I make bold to say that it was the most complete on the ground. There were European nations which had bigger exhibitions, which had art exhibitions ; but, as a commercial exhibition, the Canadian one was a very great success indeed. The number of prizes or medals it secured is the best evidence of that fact. The exhibition of grain, of lumber, of minerals and of fruit was very fine. I do not know that I need say anything more, except to add that the Canadian commissioners and staff at Paris did their duty faithfully towards this country. We had a little trouble and a great deal of work. As has been truly said, the building was not what it should have been, and we were obliged to spend some money in decorating it, but when we had covered our sheds with drapery and other decorations, it looked very presentable.

I must take strong exception to what has been said by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) concerning the educational exhibit. Our educational exhibit was a great credit to us. The province of Ontario, perhaps, did not do as well as she should have done, but all the other provinces had very nice exhibits, and I think the installation of our educational exhibit was one of the best, if not the best, in the building.

Mr. SPROULE. That only shows the different impression created on different minds. We have the view of the hon. gentleman who was there to superintend, and who naturally would give as favourable a report as possible, but I have simply given the view of an independent Canadian who went over the exhibit.

I brought to the attention of the House to-night this matter of the reception of President Loubet, because, as represented to us by the press, it certainly bore a very different appearance from what the hon. minister has given us to-night. I brought it to the hon. gentleman's attention for two reasons—not because I was uninformed with regard to it, because I read a lengthy explanation of the hon. gentleman, which satisfied me in a measure that he was perhaps not as much to blame as represented. But my principal object was to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity of giving the House an explanation which would remove the impression in the public mind created by the accounts in the press. As we understood the reports then, it was the duty of Dr. Jekyll, who was the representative of the Imperial parliament, to receive President Loubet, but the hon. minister told us differently, and I am not going to say that there was not good reason for his conduct. But it did seem somewhat out of keeping with the dignity of the situation and what might be expected from a minister of the Crown in a British colony, to use the representative of the British Empire in that way. The hon. gentleman spoke of Dr. Jekyll as the British understrapper.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I never mentioned Col. Jekyll's name—far from it—I am glad to say that he behaved towards us very nicely indeed, but he came very late, and there were other people before he came to whom I could not pay the same compliment. Col. Jekyll behaved towards us like a gentleman and a friend, and on the very occasion of President Loubet's visit he was by my side and was very glad to be with us. But he came to Paris about the same time as I did myself, and the wrong that had been committed towards us was then done. If the commissioners who had been before in Paris, were on the floor of this parliament, without any distinction of origin or creed, they would tell stories that would induce the press on both sides to make up their minds that when Canada again took part in any exhibition anywhere, we should go on our own hook. And I may add that the commissioners at the Paris exhibition in 1878 told me the same story. We were simply looked down upon and treated, not as representing a self-governing nation, but to a certain extent as inferiors. Within my hearing is one of the commissioners, and if he were free to speak he would say something that would astonish you more than anything I have said. I exonerate completely Col. Jekyll from any blame. When he came to Paris he did his best to help us, and did help us very materially indeed.

Mr. SPROULE. I came to the conclusion I did from the speech of the hon. gentleman when he said the British understrapper did so and so.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Understrappers.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the difficulty was with the representative of the British Empire through whom officially any arrangement should be made. I am glad the hon. minister made the explanation because his remarks seemed to reflect in an unkindly manner on the representative of the British Empire. As to the wisdom or otherwise of our taking part in an exhibition of that nature, independent entirely of the British Empire, I am not going to criticise, because I am not in a position to judge. But it seems to me that as long as we are a colonial dependency of the British Empire, it would not be inappropriate if we were in some way or other under the wing of the empire to which we belong, when making a display in a great country like France.

I have given the impression of a Canadian who visited the exhibition. Where he thought it was defective was largely in the fact that although we had exhibits of our mines, there was, comparatively speaking, no information to be had with regard to our mining laws and the condition of things in this country. In many departments he said the exhibition was a success. He spoke of our fruits being very fine and serials, but that, in his judgment, in some other lines it was very poor, and he spoke especially of the exhibit of educational books for children and the art department as being very poor. I am not giving my own impression but only those of one who went there on a visit.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not mean to say that Canada should be altogether independent of England. I did not mean anything of the kind. But we are a self-governing colony, we are making our own tariff, for instance, quite independent of England. An exhibition is a question of business and not of foreign policy, just as when we are making our own laws. And in that Paris exhibition, our interests in some lines conflicted with those of British exhibitors. We were large exhibitors in agricultural implements, and so was England. We were large exhibitors in cotton, and so was England. Before I reached Paris, an arrangement had been made that sixty judges altogether would be given for the British Empire, including her colonies. We were occupying 44,000 feet of the ground in the British Empire, and the British Empire itself was occupying 200,000 feet, so that we were entitled to have about one-fifth of the judges in number. I found that we had only four. I said that that was wrong and insisted strenuously on being given more.

Arrangements were made. It was agreed between the English and the French authorities, as I say, that sixty judges should be given for the whole British Empire. Of that number, the British Commission in London had given only four judges to Canada. Was that reasonable, was that fair, especially when we had interests conflicting with those of the British exhibitor ? In questions of business the Englishman does not care much whether you are an English Canadian or a French Canadian—if he has to fight against you he does it ; if he can carry the medals and prizes against you he does it. I insisted strongly on a change, and, with the help of Lord Strathcona and Mr. Chamberlain, I gained some small points. The correspondence asked for by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) will show the strenuous efforts we made to secure, not justice, but a small share of justice. We did not get the number of judges we should have got. But the thing turned out right. I represented to Colonel Jekyl that if the Canadians did not get the prizes to which they were entitled, there would be great disappointment and resentment in Canada. He helped me to the best of his ability. I give these explanations at some length because I feel that this is not a party question. There will be other exhibitions. My hon. friends opposite may then have crossed the floor. If so, they will find themselves sometime in the same position that we were in ; and I beg of them, as I beg of my friends on this side, to take the stand, once for all, that we are a self-governing country; and, in matters of business let us stand by Canada—Canada before all. That does not prevent us from being good, loyal subjects of the King. But we have business of our own, we have a realm of our own, and let us try to exploit it to the best of our ability.

Mr. HACKETT. I have been much pleased to find that, at the Paris exposition the province of Prince Edward Island was among the foremost in taking prizes. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that for oysters, one of the products of Prince Edward Island, we were awarded first prize. Those who love to partake of the luscious bivalve will be pleased to know that at that great exhibition, where the province was brought into competition with the whole world, it won first prize. But we have in Prince Edward Island other products besides oysters. We produced there an individual who was elected to the legislature a little over a year ago to oppose the local government. His name is Pineau. He was a Conservative and was elected by the Conservative people of Prince county. The local government was in extremis, and if Mr. Pineau got in, it was believed they would have to resign. But what do we find ? The Minister of Public Works states that he was in need of help in Paris. If he had taken Mr. Pineau with him he would have had all the help he required. Mr. Pineau was approached by an agent of the government, Dr. Wickham, in Tignish, the district in which he was elected. This gentleman went to Mr. Pineau and said : If you will support the local government, or if you will leave the province and go to Paris as commissioner of the Dominion government you will be paid a salary of $5 a day and $5 a day expenses. Mr. Pineau came to Ottawa. Would not you consider it a singular proceeding for a man elected by the independent people of Prince county to oppose the party to which the hon. Minister of Public Works belonged should come here and remain for a week in the very shadow of this building in conference with the hon. gentleman or his agents ? He was purchased by the government, and that fact remains a stain, a blot, upon our history. But Mr. Pineau did not take the trip to Paris, Mr. Wise, a member of the local legislature upon whom the party of hon. gentlemen opposite were depending for support, opposed the local government, and it was found that the presence of Mr. Pineau in the legislature was necessary and it was——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never saw the man.

Mr. HACKETT. He was here for a week, and I am told on the best authority that he was in close communication with the hon. gentleman's (Hon. Mr. Tarte's) private secretary. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) will say that he never saw him. Perhaps the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) will say that he never saw him. But the fact is that Mr. Pineau was waiting here in Ottawa for instructions to go to Paris under the Minister of Public Works. This, I say, is a blot upon our history. When the electors vote for a man, they wish to have him as their representative and not to have him bribed by a hostile government needing his support. While I am proud of one product of Prince Edward Island, the oyster, I am ashamed of the product of Pineau, and I am especially ashamed that I supported the man who came here and sold his support to the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett) has given us such a picture of his own province. I confess it is new to me, because

I did not suppose that Prince Edward Island put forth such a product as he speaks of. I was quite prepared to hear that that province had taken the prize in oysters, because I had the pleasure on many occasions of partaking of those oysters. But, as to the other, the hon. gentleman has surely jumped at a conclusion. I dare say Mr. Pineau was here, but I do not know it. So far as I know, no member of the government saw him here. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Hackett's) friends may have seen him. As minister in charge of the Paris exposition, I can tell the hon. gentleman and the House and Prince Edward Island, and the country at large that I never saw Mr. Pineau, never had any communication with him directly or indirectly; Mr. Pineau did not go to Paris in connection with the Paris exposition, and the hon. gentleman will search in vain in the accounts of the Paris exposition for one cent paid in any way to Mr. Pineau. I trust that this statement is sufficiently categorical to convince the hon. gentleman that, whatever the Conservative electors in Prince Edward Island may choose, they do not choose a man that this government tries to buy or buys in any shape or way. One or two questions were asked me before recess, to which I take great pleasure in replying. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) asked for explanations in connection with the building in Paris. That building was entirely managed by the Imperial Commission, and the Canadian Commission had neither part nor lot in the contract for its construction of any connection with it.

When the invitation to Canada came to us to participate in the Paris exhibition, it came through the Imperial authorities, as was natural that it should, coming from a foreign country. We were informed that they would be pleased if we would take part as a colony of Great Britain, and that they would make the arrangements necessary to secure a proper opportunity for the various British colonies to be represented at Paris. Those communications indicated to us the steps which the Imperial commission had taken for this object. They informed us that the building would be prepared under their control and management for the products of the colony, and that that building would have to be submitted to the French authorities for acceptance. They asked us if we would take part in an exhibition in that building, and if we would pay our proportion of the cost pro rata to the space occupied. As the minister in charge of these things, after consultation with my colleagues, and discussion with gentlemen in Canada who had taken some part in former exhibitions, that was agreed to. Lord Strathcona, the High Commissioner of Canada in London, was appointed as our representative on the colonial committee of the Imperial commission, and all the work in connection with the Imperial commission was done through Lord Strathcona. Plans of that building came out here, the estimates having been prepared in London, and we were informed that that was what had been arranged for us, and we had either to accept that or refuse to take part in the exhibition.

It happened that summer that I was in England on other business, and I attended one or two meetings of the colonial committee with Lord Strathcona. I made some suggestion in regard to the details and plan of the building, which were taken into consideration and some of them accepted. But on the general question of the plans of that building, its construction, its cost and everything connected with its management, we had practically no word to say. At that time it was expected and intended that Cape Colony, with the various Australian colonies and New Zealand, would take part in the exhibition. We were informed that one-third of the whole space of that building would be at our disposal. We protested energetically that that was not sufficient to a proper representation of Canada at such a great exhibition as that in Paris. From time to time various of the Australian and Crown colonies decided they would not take part, and as they so decided we were asked if we would take the space which had been accorded to them. Finally, the result came about that we had over eighty per cent of the space in that building accorded to us. We took this, not because we desired to do so, but because we found that the Canadian exhibitors, commercial men, manufacturers, agriculturists, men engaged in forest industries, and the lumber trade of this country, were demanding more space than we had at our disposal; and therefore, we felt it was necessary to have larger space than was at first accorded to us. We, therefore, took the opportunities that were presented to us, and whenever the Imperial authorities informed us that more space was available, we seized upon it greedily in order to satisfy the claims and demands of the Canadian exhibitors who wished to exhibit at Paris.

Hon. gentlemen, therefore, will see that so far as we were concerned, so far as my own management of the department was concerned, so far as the management of our commercial interests was concerned, we had practically nothing whatever to do with the construction or the cost of that building. I may say that when one of the commissioners first went over to Paris and saw the building, he protested against its method of construction, and against the quality of the building. Afterwards, when my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, went over there, he again protested to the Imperial commissioners as to the quality of the building. I am satisfied from what I know, and from the reports given to me since, that that building was not up to the mark, that it was not worth the price that was paid for it; and I withheld for a long time the final payment, because I believed Canada was not fairly charged with the amount which the Imperial commissioners asked from us. But after the Minister of Public Works reached Paris and had discussed these questions with Mr. Jekyll and other Imperial commissioners, and with Sir Montague Ommany, Under Secretary for the Colonies, who came over to Paris to look into this matter, and after the Minister of Public Works had gone to London and consulted with Lord Strathcona, the chairman of the colonial committee of the Imperial commission, and after this whole question had been thoroughly discussed, we received a letter from the Imperial authorities stating that as the architect had signed the reports upon the building and had accepted the building, as the contractor had the certificates of the architect for the building and for its construction, we practically had no recourse ; the Imperial authorities distinctly informed us that we had no recourse, and they called upon us to foot the bill. I may say that so far as I saw, we had no recourse. I protested to Lord Strathcona, and asked him to protest to the Imperial authorities in his capacity as chairman of the colonial committee. He did so, and I have in my department to-day a letter from Lord Strathcona, in which he strongly urged me, and advised me, in his capacity as a member of the Imperial commission, and as representing Canada on that commission, to pay the bill and settle the matter, because he could see that we had no recourse, and no other alternative.

That is the position of affairs to-day. I regret extremely to have to say that that building was not commensurate with the demands of Canada for the products which were put into it, and I have no doubt whatever that the inferior character of the building militated considerably against the success of our exhibition there. But when my hon. friend and colleague, the Minister of Public Works, went over to Paris, seeing the inferior quality of the building, seeing there was danger that our exhibits would not be properly presented, and would not look well in that building, he undertook to make some decorations in the interior of the building, and he so far succeeded, with the co-operation of the other commissioners and of our staff there, as to make the building inside a creditable one, and fit for the splendid exhibit which the people of Canada put into it. This added somewhat unexpectedly, but reasonably, I think, to the cost we were put to in regard to this exhibition. I do not think that I need say any more in regard to the building.

Mr. CLANCY. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that question, would he say upon whom the duty devolved to look after the character of the building ? In other words, whose duty was it to see that a suitable building should be provided for Canada, for which we had to pay a certain portion of the cost ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The colonial committee of the Imperial commission, on which our representative was Lord Strathcona.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand there were specifications sent out here.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Plans, but no specifications.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, if Canada was going to pay a proportion of the cost of this building, why did not the hon. gentleman see that specifications were produced, so that we might know what we were going to pay for. I would also like to ask the hon. gentleman whether, when it was suggested that we should pay a portion of the cost of this building, any estimate was furnished to him as to what the building would cost ? I am not prepared at present to concur in the view that there should be no recourse. I cannot understand how this business has been transacted so that we pay double what this building is worth, and have no recourse against any one. There must be fault somewhere, and I want to find out where it is.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that the whole question lay in the hands of the Imperial commission. We were invited to take part in the exhibition by the Imperial commission. We did not stand as an independent country ; we had to deal with the Parisian authorities through the Imperial commission. When we were invited to attend the Paris exhibition, a request was made that we should deal with the Parisian authorities. That was refused by them and refused by the Imperial authorities, who desired that the British Empire should stand together and act as one empire in connection with the Paris exhibition. The Imperial commission appointed a special committee known as the colonial committee, to deal with colonial exhibits. These were the conditions upon which we should take part in the exhibition. We had to accept or reject them. We might have said that we did not wish to make an exhibit at the Paris exhibition. An estimate was made of the cost in regard to the building. The first letter I had said that it would not exceed 10s. per square foot, and that the cost of administration would not exceed 5s. per square foot. Later on it cost more, and before the final acceptance of the contract the price was stated at 12s. 6d. per square foot. As a matter of fact, the final cost went a little over that even. I can assure the hon. gentleman that in this matter the whole affair was in the hands of the Imperial committee, that we had practically no control, except that we had the right to refuse to go to Paris at all, and the idea we had at the time the Imperial committee undertook this was that we could safely and satisfactorily entrust to such a committee, composed of the leading men of the empire and representatives of the colonies, whose chairman was Lord Strathcona, the construction and management of such a building, and that our interests would be carefully safeguarded. When that was agreed to and when we accepted that position, we were satisfied that the colonial building was to be for the whole of the British colonies and that we would have about one-third of the space in it, and be obliged to pay only for one-third of the cost. As time went on we accepted further responsibility by taking more space. We were driven to that by the demands of intending exhibitors who desired to show Canadian products in the building, and a refusal to accept their products would have entailed an enormous amount of disappointment to the people who wished to make these exhibits and great loss would have resulted to the Dominion of Canada had not these exhibits gone to Paris. Under these circumstances I cannot see, myself, as the minister in charge of this department, how the government of Canada was in any way responsible for that building. We had to take our share of it as it was given to us by the Imperial commission, and the Imperial commission did all the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not at all the question of the empire standing together, so far as I understand it ; it is a question of the administration of the hon. gentleman's department. The hon. Minister of Public Works very plainly stated to us, only five minutes ago, that matters of this kind are matters of business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are, I think. Are they not ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They are matters of business. I agree with the hon. gentleman, and I am quoting him as against his colleague, who seems to think that it is not a matter of business but a matter of keeping the empire together.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not a bit of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the hon. gentleman's explanation is satisfactory. He seems to think that this was a trifling matter because it involved only one-third of the cost of the building, but it is a very considerable sum of money—$25,000 or $30,000. What I venture to suggest is that it would have been a proper thing for him to have proper specifications and an estimate made as a business matter for the purpose of finding out what kind of a building we were going to pay for and how much we were going to pay for it

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We had that information, and if the building had been up to the contract and specifications there would have been no fault found.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Very good ; then, I do not understand how the hon. gentleman expects the committee to believe that there is no recourse. Here are the contractors and here is the architect, here are the specifications and you would expect the architect to proceed according to these. There is the contract to do certain work up to a certain standard and for a certain sum of money. We have the safeguard of responsible contractors and the safeguard of an architect. Some one must be responsible for seeing that the building would be erected in accordance with the specifications. Either the contractors are liable, or if the contractors have been relieved by any unjustifiable action of the architect, the architect is liable, and I suppose he is a responsible man. How then could the hon. gentleman expect us to understand that there is no recourse against any one ? I do not understand it. If the Imperial commission was the body that dealt with these contractors, have they not a valid claim against the contractors ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not say they have not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has said that there is no recourse.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I say that we have no recourse.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We have recourse directly or indirectly.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We may have recourse against the Imperial commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to know if the hon. gentleman has asked the Imperial commission or the Imperial government to take action against the contractors ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Through Lord Strathcona, yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If so, has any action been taken ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They declined to do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, it would be extremely satisfactory to the committee to have their reply placed upon the Table of the House, so that we could understand it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have Lord Strathcona's letter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would be satisfactory to know why it is that when the commission made a satisfactory contract with certain contractors to do a certain work, and when that work was supervised by an architect, that the work done is not up to the value which it should have been, according to the hon. Minister of Public Works, by about one-half? Why is it that, under such circumstances, the Imperial commission should decline to take action against the contractors ? It seems to me that the hon. gentleman should give us some better explanation than merely stating that he has asked them to do this and that they have declined to do it. For what reason have they not taken action against these people, if the facts are as the hon. gentleman states them ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Speaking from memory, I may say that the letter in which Lord Strathcona communicates this decision, stated that the Imperial committee found that the architect whom they had employed had given his certificate to the contractors, and that consequently they did not feel that they had any recourse against the contractors.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But, they have recourse against the architect if he is found to have acted improperly. Under the circumstances disclosed to this committee by the hon. Minister of Public Works, I venture to think that they would have a perfect recourse against the architect. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) what is the meaning of the item which I find in the Auditor General's Report, page D—12, and which states that the government has paid this architect—I do not know whether this architect had anything to do with this building or not——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)—three hundred and sixty dollars on account of fees, and $30.12 for a trip to Baden, Switzerland.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is not the same architect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What architect is this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will explain that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is another matter altogether.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We will deal with that presently in order that we may close this matter first.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Very well.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the architect passed this building, which the hon. Minister of Public Works says is worth only half the money which it cost, he must be liable for his dereliction of duty in doing that, and if the contractors are not liable the architect is. If we cannot have recourse against one we must have recourse against the other, because it is not possible that the money of this country shall be paid out for a default of that kind and no one be responsible for it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As to this architect, I may explain that when I reached Paris the inside of the building looked like a barn. I thought it was my duty towards the exhibitors and towards Canada to give the building a better appearance, and with the consent of my co-commissioners we engaged a young Canadian, who has been studying in Paris during the last five or six years, and he rendered us very valuable services, and we paid him that sum of money and something more.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then this vote is for the purpose of assisting to hide the shame ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) had been there he would have done just as I did.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have no doubt

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He would have done better, perhaps, but he would have proceeded on the same lines. As soon as I reached Paris I protested to the Royal Committee in the strongest terms, and that correspondence will be brought down. I represented to them that this Canadian building could not possibly be according to the specifications, but I could not get hold of these specifications until a couple of weeks before I left. No member of the Royal Committee had visited Paris, and the architect, who was the architect of all the other colonial buildings, was left to carry out the work alone.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. minister know his name ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was Mr. Clowes. I do not see what more could be done by us to protect Canadian interests. The architect had given his certificate, but it was actually raining in the building. I was afraid it would fall on our heads, and we made them strengthen it, and we succeeded at least in preventing the rain from destroying the exhibits. To achieve even that required a good deal of energy. The Canadian government is not to blame in this matter, except that from the start we should have made up our minds to erect our own buildings. The Minister of Agriculture has stated that the French authorities declined to deal with Canada. I am bound to say that on that point my hon. colleague has not been rightly informed. This is not a party or a government question, and as I have been there I know what took place. The French authorities allowed nations who are less independent commercially than we are, to exhibit on their own hook. Egypt exhibited on her own hook, and Egypt is not quite as independent as we are. Bulgaria, which is under the thumb of Russia, had an exhibit of her own. If the French authorities alone were concerned we would have been allowed to exhibit as a self-governing nation, because the French authorities realize, as we realize ourselves, that we are a self-governing people. However, I can quite understand the strong desire of the British authorities that the whole empire should stand together at the Paris exposition, and it is to that desire that the Canadian government yielded. Whether we have been right or wrong it is for the Canadian people to judge. Speaking from the experience I acquired in Paris, I say without hesitation that we made a mistake. We meant well, but it would have been better for the British Empire had we exhibited independently as a self-governing colony. We would have been under the wing of the British Empire just as well, but we would have had more prestige ; we would have had more latitude ; we would have had a better social standing, if I may say so. The word ' colony' is not understood on the continent of Europe as it is understood in the British Empire. The word 'colony' in Europe means a subordinate body. As a matter of fact, I do not know that any country other than England has under her wing a single self-governing colony. I had to explain over and over again, every time I had an opportunity of speaking, that we were a self-governing country, because we are not as well known on the other side as some of our friends think we are. It is for these reasons that, perhaps, we have made a mistake, a well-meant mistake, in not exhibiting on our own account as a self-governing country. I cannot repeat too often that an exhibition is a question of business and that there are no foreign relations involved in it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No one pretends for a moment that there is the slightest objection to erecting this building in connection with the other colonies or with the Imperial government. That is not the question. We are delighted to join with the other colonies and with the British government in the erection of the building, but the point is that in doing that we should use ordinary business methods. We should have had estimates and specifications, and, if we find the building has cost more than it is worth, as the Minister of Public Works states——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That cannot be denied.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In that case we should be in a position to seek recourse against the person responsible. That is the only point there is about it. All I desire to ascertain is, that the Department of Agriculture, which has charge of that duty, has taken the necessary means towards that end. I do not think the Minister of Agriculture would venture to deny that some one must be responsible for damages on account of this default. If an architect leaves a building as described by the Minister of Public Works, with the rain coming through the roof, he must be responsible. I do not know whether the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) himself indulged in this pastime with his subordinates, of bailing out the water with buckets and covering up the exhibits when it rained——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That had to be done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Minister of Agriculture desires the House to believe that an architect who is guilty of leaving a building in that condition is not to be responsible to any person for his default.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman seems to suggest that there is some hesitation on the part of the commission to have recourse against this architect. I cannot believe that that commission would have any hesitation about proceeding against that architect unless there is some reason that has not yet been disclosed to this House. The hon. gentleman having referred to the letter from Lord Strathcona. I was anxious that he should lay that letter on the Table in order that the House might judge as to the reasons which have been advanced for this course, which seems to me somewhat singular.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am sure that the leader of the opposition has not the slightest desire to misrepresent me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not at all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I had no desire to say that nobody had recourse against this architect. What I did say was that he had no recourse against the architect. The Dominion of Canada had no buildings erected there. We were a part of the British Empire invited by the Imperial Commission to take part in that exhibition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I understood the hon. minister to say was that Lord Strathcona said there was no recourse.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What Lord Strathcona said was that the Imperial committee were not in a position to take action aainst the contractors, because they had the certificate of the architect. No doubt the hon. gentleman would say that the Imperial committee should take action against the architect. I presume he is right as a lawyer to say so. So far as I know, the Imperial committee did not take any such action, but they did require from me the payment of our share of the cost of the building. I have the letter, which I shall be only too glad to lay on the Table for the information of the hon. gentleman, because I am sure he will understand that I am not wishing to misrepresent the facts at all; but I do not wish it to go abroad that I am giving the opinion that the Imperial committee had no recourse against either the contractor or the architect. What I say is that the Dominion government had no recourse except to pay for our share of the building, which was the condition on which we accepted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask at what stage had the building arrived when the Canadian commissioner first protested? Also, at what stage had the building arrived when the Minister of Public Works raised a protest. I understood from the Minister of Agriculture that protests had been raised on two different occasions by the two gentlemen to whom I have referred.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The first protest I think was verbal on the part of one of the commissioners, who saw the Imperial agents on the subject. I could not tell the hon. gentleman at what stage the building had arrived. It was a few weeks or perhaps a month before the opening of the exhibition. The Minister of Public Works did not reach Paris until just before the opening of the exhibition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The building was then completed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nearly completed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I reached Paris on the 27th of March, and, if I remember rightly, I went to the building the very day after I arrived. I had with me Mr. Clowes and Mr. Humphrey, one of the contractors, and I told them at once that, although I was not an expert, I had enough experience to be sure that no architect would specify such a building; and I protested immediately afterwards to Lord Strathcona. We several times obliged Messrs. Humphrey & Company to improve the building, and make it as good as it was possible to make it.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a good thing that this House and this country are not often treated to the spectacle which we have here to-night—two ministers acknowledging to the grossest negligence and incapacity in the management of their departments.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. WALLACE. They shake their heads. What was the speech of the Minister of Public Works? Was it not confession from beginning to end that everything had gone wrong? Our money was voted by the parliament of Canada two years ago. The Minister of Agriculture came here and asked parliament for $175,000 for the Paris exposition. That was after careful estimates and calculations of the space that would be required, and he pledged himself to the House and the country that nothing would be left undone to see that the money was carefully and economically expended, that good value would be obtained for it, and that competent men would be got to administer it. What do we find to-day? $140,000 is required in addition to the $175,000, which we were assured would be all that would be required; $140,000, and more than that absolutely thrown away without any beneficial results for the people of Canada. It is a confession of incompetence from start to finish. What did the Minister of Public Works tell us a moment ago? He admitted that all was wrong, but he said the Canadian government were not to blame. He has a habit, which we have seen a hundred times in this House, if anything goes right, to claim credit for the genius and the admirable management of the Minister of Public Works, whereas if anything goes wrong, he says, It is my staff—I will cut their heads off. I think we have had enough of that sort of thing. He told us that in his opinion the building was worth $40,000 or $50,000. I do not know where he got the experience to be a competent judge. For myself, with the greatest deference to him, I refuse to acknowledge his judgment in the matter at all, especially as his interests all go to make the value of the building as great as possible. A gentleman in Toronto, capable and competent, said he could put up that building for $10,000, and I will take his opinion a hundred times over on that matter before the opinion of the Minister of Public Works. The hon. gentleman says the Canadian government are not to blame. Who is to blame? We voted the money, and the Minister of Agriculture gave us the assurance that it would be economically, carefully, and wisely expended. He told us of his plans and schemes. Where are those plans and schemes to-day?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All carried out.

Mr. WALLACE. All scattered to the four winds of heaven—nothing carried out. Like all the plans and schemes which the Minister of Agriculture has presented to the House in times past, they have been an utter failure. Now, I am a little mystified about this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. Hon. gentlemen opposite say 'hear, hear.' They are mystified also. First, one minister went over, then another, then a whole army of ministers crossed the Atlantic, and visited Paris, and took in the exhibition, and viewed the buildings, and enjoyed themselves, all at the public expense. I say we are mystified, and the ministers themselves are unable to give the particulars. To get out of it, they say this is not a party question. What is it ? The party on this side of the House had nothing to do with the expenditure of these thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars. All we did was to vote the money, and we did it with fear and trembling, because we knew it would not be put to a good and proper use; and our fears have been verified. Why, I read in the Auditor General's Report this item : Payments to Colonial commission on account of space, &c., $87,600. This is only on account. Is that for the building that was erected jointly by the Canadian and by the other British governments ? I would like to ask that question of the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Public Works, or anybody that happens to know it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was for the Royal commission, for the building and the space in the Imperial space in the main building, both included. Out of that we received back $10,641 from the Imperial commission as they had made a mistake in charging us for space included in their own allotment.

Mr. WALLACE. I am delighted to know that we got $10,000 back. But this is only a payment on account and we have no information as to the total amount. Is this the total ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. It is satisfactory to find that we paid only $87,000 for nothing and got back $10,000 of it.

There is another item here. I see that one H. Fabre had appartments fixed up for him, I presume in this building. Is that correct ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Where ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the city of Paris, rue Jérôme.

Mr. WALLACE. Then the government of this country, without an appropriation from parliament for that purpose——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. WALLACE. There was nothing said, when the government asked the vote of $175,000, about $7,641 being paid to fix up the appartments of Mr. Fabre in the city of Paris. Why should that be charged against the Paris exhibition ? This was not in the exhibition at all but miles away in the city of Paris. It was the residence of Mr. Hector Fabre. The minister has told us so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not tell you anything of the kind.

Mr. WALLACE. Did the hon. gentleman not say it was in the city of Paris ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but I did not say it was the residence of Mr. Fabre.

Mr. WALLACE. What residence was it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was the offices and not the residences.

Mr. WALLACE. I must say that the offices are delightful and beautiful to behold—something that would charm the eye and please all the senses. In the office there is an ante chamber and to furnish that chamber with Wilton carpets and chairs—two at $27 each—and a letter box $19.30, and a lot of other things, cost $186. Then there is the reading room, laid also with Wilton carpets at an expense of $99.97, a table $57.90, book-case $86.85, desk $13.50, two arm chairs $57.90, six other ordinary common chairs $81.06. The total for the reading room is $419.75. This is just a common every day office.

Then you come to the rotunda and veranda: Wilton carpet $52.83 ; curtains and poles $26.63; window blinds, $26.05; table, $28.95; three chairs, $40.54 ; large sofa, $86.85 ; three easy chairs, $86.85, and sundry other things on the rotunda and veranda, making a total of only $367.42.

Then we come to room No. 1 and there we find a Wilton rug, $19.30 ; curtains and other hangings, $19.30 ; window blinds, $10.62, one sofa, $28.95 and one $19.30 ; easy chair, $18.34 ; two office chairs, $13.52 ; walnut cabinet, $11.58 ; office table, $19.30, and so on, and that room only cost $203.63.

These are the poorly furnished shed offices of Mr. Fabre in Paris. Then we come to room No. 2 : Wilton carpet, $66.17 ; two sets window hangings, $48.25 ; two pairs curtains, $5.79 ; blinds, $11.58 ; mantel decoration, $4.83 ; sofa, $57.90 ; office chair, $15.44 ; two easy chairs, $57.90 ; two chairs, $27.02 ; desk, $96.50 and wardrobe, $33.81. This room only cost $424. This is one of the commoner rooms apparently required for offices in the city of Paris. I would like to know what return we get for the moneys spent.

Then we come to room No. 3 : Wilton carpet, $56.62 ; window hangings, $19.30 ; blinds, $4.83 ; mantel decorations, $4.83 ; desk, $19.30 ; book-case, $31.84 ; office chairs, $12.55 ; sofa, $48.25 ; easy chair, $27.02 ; two chairs, $27.02. Total for that room only $254.45.

Then we come to room No. 4, and I think that when the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Agriculture were around they must have been entertained in room No. 4 : Wilton carpet, $93.23 ; two sets window hangings, $61.76; two pairs curtains, $5.79 ; blinds, $9.65 ; four double portières, $115.80 ; mantel ornaments, $4.83 ; table, $11.58 ; desk, $96.50 ; book-case, $67.55 ;

table, $19.30; office chair, $14.48; two chairs, $27.02; drawing-room furniture one set: Sofa, two easy chairs and four other chairs, $347.40—making a total for the drawing-room of only $874.89.

Then we come to room No. 5: Wilton carpet, $54.43; window hangings, $19.30; blinds, $4.83—a good many blinds——

An hon. MEMBER. Pull down the blinds.

Mr. WALLACE. I suppose that is what the hon. minister would like—to pull down the veil of oblivion over all these entertaining items. Mantel decorations, $4.83; one blind, $7.72; desk, $96.50; mahogany, $38.60; office chair, $14.47—in all, $388.32.

Room No. 6 and other rooms follow and a number of other items. And in addition to all the items I have read, and deducting $1,300 or $1,400 for insurance, and so on, we still have $3,000 and more for furnishings in addition to the items I have read.

Where did they put the $3,000 additional furniture? Under what authority did they act? When did parliament give them power to make these expenditures? Was this expenditure part of the programme the Minister of Agriculture had in mind when he asked us for $175,000, and told us what he was going to do to make an exhibit worthy of the Dominion? Now we find the money squandered, we find that the ministers have helped themselves liberally, and no account given, of course. They say: You cannot entertain in a way to show Canada off in the best light without spending money. Why, Mr. Chairman, when we looked at the newspapers of that time, we saw telegrams: 'Mr. Tarte is in London;' 'Mr. Tarte left for London to-night'; 'Mr. Tarte has been in London for some days.' And there were significant stories as to the business that took him so frequently to London. Another question—this furniture, which has been charged at $7,641—where is that furniture now?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is there in the office.

Mr. WALLACE. What office?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Fabre's office in Paris.

Mr. WALLACE. This was bought and charged to the Paris exposition, and it remains there now that the Paris exposition is over. Is that furniture needed there—$7,641 worth? If so, what did Mr. Fabre do before it arrived? Did he sit up all night in a chair? Of course, the government did not get those rooms for nothing. What was the rental of them? I do not see it charged in the account. Was that part of the $109,000 for the particulars of which, the First Minister tells us, we shall have to wait another year? Is it proposed that the furniture shall remain there, and that this great mansion is to be rented at a high rental, like the old Seybold building here? The government must give us further particulars. They pretended to make a clean breast of all they knew. They told only what they could not avoid telling. We must have an explanation of this $87,000, less the $10,000, which we have been told has been returned, for that building, which was worth $40,000 or $50,000 according to the Minister of Public Works, but which was not worth more than a quarter of the money according to more competent authority. We want to know what was done with the money of the people of Canada that the Minister of Agriculture, with his usual incapacity, pledged himself two years ago, would be administered economically, which promise he has been utterly powerless to carry out. I would like to ask another question—there are a lot of names here, headed by the Minister of Public Works as chief commissioner, and these other commissioners also spent large amounts of money. I would like to know who was Jas. Jardine, one of the commissioners.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We produce him—he is here.

Mr. WALLACE. What did he do, I would like to know? When this building was found to be only a worthless barn that did not even keep out the rain from heaven, was there nobody of all these commissioners who could look at it with the eagle eye of the Minister of Public Works and know that the roof would leak, and that it was an improper building to hold the exhibits of Canada? Now, Mr. Chairman, we shall have to have these two ministers give us a little more information about the way the $315,000 of the people of Canada was squandered.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I always like to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace). He is unique. In my long experience I have never met such a character as he. It takes a man of some ability to make a speech such as the one he has just delivered—ability of a certain order which, perhaps, not many people would like to possess. If the hon. gentleman knew a little more of the world, the world that was in Paris, and is to be found at any exhibition of this kind, he, even he, would not have ventured to say what he has said to-night. Canada is a great country, and her people would not like her to appear in the eyes of the world as a beggarly country. There were many eminent people from all parts of the world in Paris. All the nations represented in Paris had their buildings and offices, 'appartements,' to use the French word, which, I believe, is English also. England had large space in all the buildings, and besides that, in Avenue de la Bourdonais, Col. Jekyll had appartements much larger than the Canadian ones. We took advantage of the Canadian agency in Paris, which is located at 10 Rue de Rome. It was furnished with decency, as Canada has to be treated everywhere, so that we might be able to receive people who called upon us. I was there most of the time receiving people from all parts of the world, including, of course, the Canadians who visited Paris—I am glad to say we saw thousands and thousands of them. The Canadians who came to Paris had a right to be received somewhere, had a right to have rooms where they could read or write or transact business. I wish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) had gone to Paris. He would have seen that all the nations spent vast amounts of money in entertaining. I am sorry that I ever accepted the position of Canadian commissioner in Paris, and I will tell you why. We were invited everywhere, entertained everywhere, but, with the limited amount of money I had at my disposal, we were not able to do honour to this country as we should have been able to do. We can be reproached for nothing except that we did not know what was going to take place in Paris. Instead of spending what we have spent, we should have spent a good deal more. Think of what that exhibition has done to advertise Canada. There are even in this country business firms who spend $500,000 a year in advertising. I know a firm in Canada in which one of our senators is interested, which spent last year $1,000,000 in advertising. The Paris exhibition was a great advertisement for Canada. Was it not reasonable, was it not decent, was it not our duty to have rooms there furnished in a decent manner to receive the visitors who were calling for information ? The furniture that was purchased is the property of this country ; and if the hon. gentleman ever goes to Paris—I wish to God he would go sometimes, because he would learn a little refinement, which he so sorely needs.

Mr. WALLACE. He will take no lessons in that from the Minister of Public Works, nor in integrity either.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think any lesson I would give him would be altogether lost. I have not the slightest intention to teach him any lesson. But this I must resent—when I hear a man who was nearly becoming a minister speak as he does to-night, I say that the country should not stand it. He has said things which I would characterize, if the word was parliamentary, as being a disgrace to this Canadian parliament. We are not such a small country after all that other nations should look upon us as not understanding our duty. The hon. gentleman has again referred to my London trips. I did go to London on several occasions. If I understood him right he has spoken about ' ominous stories' as to what led me to London. I do not like to have any misunderstanding, I like plain language. If the hon. gentleman has heard any 'ominous stories' let him tell those stories in the House. This is the proper place.

Mr. WALLACE. I will do it at the proper time, never fear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The proper time is now.

Mr. WALLACE. I am the judge of that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let the hon. gentleman speak out—speak now. I have nothing to hide either in my public life or in my private life. If the hon. gentleman has anything to say, let him say it now. I know one gentleman who, last year, was villain enough to circulate stories in this parliament. He is no more a member of the House, and he won't come back here for some time. Let us have plain speaking between members of the House. Sir, the hon. gentleman has spoken of my commissioners, he has slighted one of them, Mr. Jardine. Mr. Jardine is not here. He has been a most painstaking commissioner in Paris. There was abundance of work for all of them, and they have performed their work successfully and zealously. I am glad on this occasion to bear testimony to the success and energy with which they performed all their duties.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I feel proud that Canada took so honourable a position at the Paris exhibition, and that even the province of Prince Edward Island made a creditable show of its products. But we are very sorry that such an enterprise as the Paris exhibition should have been prostituted to such political debauchery as the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) has brought to the notice of the House to-night. I think, Mr. Speaker, it would have been a good thing if the roof of that building had fallen in on some of them, rather than that such disclosures should have been made to the people of this country. Now, what are the facts in this connection ? The Minister of Agriculture treated the affair in a light manner. I have before me the declaration of a respectable gentleman, made in regard to this Pineau matter, and I am going to read it to the House, because it is well that the House should have a true understanding of the state of the case :

I, William Callaghan, of Ebbsfleet, Prince county, province of Prince Edward Island, do solemnly declare that on or about February 9 last, Henry J. Pineau, M.L.A., of Ebbsfleet, called on me and said that he wished to speak to me on an important matter, and wanted my advice. He stated to me that he was approached by Dr. Wickham, of Tignish, and was offered, if he would accept, that he (Mr. Pineau) could get the appointment of commissioner to the Paris exposition with the pay of $5 per day and all expenses. He further stated that Dr. Wickham told him he would have to go to Charlottetown to see Premier Farquharson, who would direct him to the Deputy Minister of Public Works, Ottawa, for further instructions. I told him he was adopting a dangerous course, and better mind what he was about, and go to Tignish and see his friends, which he promised to do. He said it would be a great thing for him to see his own country—France. I afterwards saw Mr. Pineau. He told me that he had a letter in his pocket, and his appointment was all right, to date from April 15 to December 1, 1900.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) WILLIAM CALLAGHAN.

Declared before me at Ebbsfleet, Prince county, province of Prince Edward Island, this 28th day of May, A.D. 1900.

CHARLES DALTON,
J.P. for Prince County.

Now, we have also another declaration to the same effect, and then we have the following letter from Mr. Pineau himself :

Ottawa, March 8, 1900.

Mr. James W. Shea,

Dear Sir,—I now take the pleasure of writing you a few lines to let you know that I am in Ottawa at present, and I must also tell you that it is a fine place. I have seen a good deal already. I must also tell you that I have been well received by the government here, and I am weighting for orders to go on which I think will be to-morrow or next day I was all over and Seen all the House of Parliament the House of Commons and the Senate Chamber and I must say it is a fine Place to see. it is no wonder that they are so Keen to get here. you keep my C.M.B.A dewes paid up I will send you money in a few days the 10 lb. twine I got from you you can get it Back you can also get your men Boarded at our place if you want and See that they have what they want. You give them what is right for Boarding them I Know you will do that you can tell them at Home if you See them that you got a letter from me I Suppose Some people are very mad at me for doing what I have done I Could not Help Myself it is what every man is doing looking out for himself not more at Present I Remain yours truly

I will write you in a few days and will give you more in detail

HENRY J. PINEAU.

Now, there is a letter of the gentleman himself, and you have the sworn affidavits of two reliable persons. The history of the matter is simply this. The government of Prince Edward Island had lost the confidence of the people, and in consequence a number of by-elections. There was a by-election to be held in the first district of Prince and the life of the Farquharson administration depended upon winning that seat. They lost the seat, but the Dominion elections were coming on, and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I presume, was very anxious to keep the local government in power on the island so as to give him a little prestige. So negotiations were entered into, and they sent this Dr. Wickman to this man Pineau, who was financially embarrassed at the time, and the result was that they got him spirited away to Ottawa. Nobody knew that he was coming up, but they got him here. He was in communication with the government, and it does not matter whether or not the hon. Minister of Agriculture or the hon. Minister of Public Works gets up and says : I did not know he was here. I did not see him. That has nothing to do with the case providing he was seen by the Deputy Minister of Public Works or by any member who was authorized to approach him. This shows that the deed was perpetrated and that the government had a hand in that transaction. Will these hon. gentlemen get up and declare before the committee that they knew of no man from Prince Edward Island being up here——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Who was seeking a position of some emolument in order to be paid for some deed he was doing on the island ? I think the matter should not be treated so lightly, and I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the hon. Minister of Public Works should get up and tell how much of this money credited to the Paris exhibition was paid for the people of Canada, and how they excuse the expenditure of $312,000 for advertising Canada and doing other things when we know that they were prostituting the money of the people of this country to the uses of political debauchery. I think the expenditure needs more explanation than the hon. Minister of Agriculture has given to the committee.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, since you have allowed a little extraneous matter to be thrown into the discussion, I would ask for time to throw a little extraneous matter back in reply. The hon. member from the western part of Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hackett) has referred to Mr. Pineau, you may be surprised to know that I also know a little about Mr. Pineau. Perhaps the hon. gentlemen opposite would like to know how we got the information we have. I am sorry I cannot take them into my confidence. However, I am willing to deal with a few occurrences. It is stated that Pineau came to Ottawa. I do not know whether that is so or not. It was actually stated that he came under the malign influence of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), or of his private secretary. I do not know whether that is so or not, but I am informed on what I consider indisputable evidence that in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite that hon. gentlemen opposite sent a spy, a detective, after this man Pineau to Boston.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. KENDALL. This I do know that a man went down and met Pineau after rather a difficult hunt, and he said, so I am informed: Pineau, you want money. You have been brought under the influence of the Liberals, but we have as much money as they have, and we can furnish you with what is necessary for you to go back to Prince Edward Island, and put yourself right with your own party. Now, let me say that I know that an agent was in direct communication with a gentleman who is a very prominent factor in the Conservative party, who was so important a man in the Conservative party that he was selected to play a very important part in the late elections.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) knows very little about the matter. Where does he get his information? Who was the spy he spoke about? Surely the hon. gentleman was not the spy himself? Did he go to Boston himself? He was in the pay of the government, he was supporting them, and while he was working in connection with the bait freezers was he hunting up Pineau at the same time? Pineau was paid as my hon. friend says. All I have to say is that we in Prince county, a little over a year ago, elected Pineau to go to the legislature of Prince Edward Island to oppose the Farquharson government, and, that fresh from the people, he was seduced from his allegiance and taken away and bribed by the present government to support their friends in Prince Edward Island. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) knows very well about the case. He says that Pineau was approached by a Conservative who said that we had as much money as the other side, and that we were going to buy him to support us. Why should we, the people who elected Pineau, be obliged to buy him? He was elected by the free votes of Prince county. This man was debauched. He was brought here by the government, and was held in the shadow of these buildings for a week, and told that he would be sent to Paris. My hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) has read to the committee a letter sent to a friend in Prince Edward Island. He has also read a declaration made by a reputable gentleman in West Prince, who swore to the statement made by Pineau that he was to go to Charlottetown to Mr. Farquharson, and that he would be directed by him to the Deputy Minister of Public Works in Ottawa. That statement has not been refuted by any evidence on the other side. It is a blot upon the fair fame of the country that we should have a government that would buy a man like this. If the government cannot hold power by the intelligent votes of the electors of this country they have no right to hold power at all, and when we find that this government is assisting a local government to maintain power it is a shame and a disgrace that should not be upheld by the people of this country. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) may think that he is entitled to some consideration in this House. If he has been going around hunting Pineau, if he has been the spy, he should be condemned. The Auditor General's Report shows that he has received thousands of dollars of the people's money in connection with these bait freezers. Is he the man who, through Dr. Wickham, approached Pineau, and if we believe his statement we must believe that he followed him to Boston with the bait in his pocket, and gave it to him to support the local government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am authorized by the Deputy Minister of Public Works who is now on the floor of parliament to say that he does not know Pineau, and that he has never seen him, and I am adding on my own behalf that I would like to know where Pineau is now.

Mr. KENDALL. I may say in reply to the hon. member from West Prince, P.E.I. (Mr. Hackett), that I do not think he is serious when he asks if I was the spy employed by the Conservative party to hunt up Pineau. In the second place, I tell him that the man who was employed in that work undertook to carry a constituency in this country with no other qualification than his bank account, and later, if necessary, we can demonstrate this.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call your attention, for a moment, to the fact that the last speaker (Mr. Kendall) is scarcely a disinterested witness in this House. The Auditor General's Report contains a record of the hon. gentleman's transactions.

Mr. KENDALL. Read it.

Mr. CLANCY. I am going to read it for the benefit of the hon. gentleman, and, perhaps he will not be quite so fresh when I have done.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask hon. gentlemen to keep as near the discussion of the item under the consideration of the committee as possible. I think we have been wandering away from the point under discussion. I would appeal to hon. gentlemen to keep within a reasonable limit of the question before us.

Mr. CLANCY. I bow with great pleasure to your ruling, but I would like to know if you have laid down one set of rules for some gentlemen——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CLANCY—I am asking a very proper question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CLANCY. I said I bowed to the hon. gentleman's ruling, and then I have a right to ask his reasons for that ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I had no special reference to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) more than to any other member. We have been wandering away from the question before the committee, and I would appeal to members on both sides to keep as near to the discussion as possible. That is my ruling.

Mr. WALLACE. A reference to Pineau who was engaged to go to Paris, is quite within the question.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He was not engaged.

Mr. WALLACE. We will not be diverted from doing our duty in having a thorough investigation.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to say that I am going to submit to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and the hon. gentleman who took his seat a moment ago can find protection under it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I desire to say once more that Mr. Pineau was not directly or indirectly——

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to a point of order. The Minister of Agriculture is discussing Mr. Pineau, which he has no right to do under your ruling. Now, I will ask the Minister of Agriculture to sit down until we get the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling in regard to Mr. Pineau is that we have heard just enough of Mr. Pineau.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) with the Auditor General's Report in his hand, was preparing to criticise items of expenditure in connection with the Paris exposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I understood.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not for hon. gentlemen to say 'No, no,' when they do not know what book he had in his hand. Was not the hon. gentleman for Bothwell quite in order in discussing the Paris exposition ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell stated that he was going to quote some figures in reference to another subject.

Mr. SPROULE. He did not say it was another subject.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is what I understood, and when I noticed that we were wandering outside the discussion before the committee, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) saw that I was right and the excuse he made was that I allowed others to do so, and then he like a gentleman sat down and waived his contention.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not state what subject I was about to deal with, and so the hon. gentleman is entirely in the dark.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that we have heard enough of Mr. Pineau, and I will say nothing further on the subject. There are, however, matters connected with the Paris exposition of which I wish to speak. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) quoted certain individuals who apparently have been to Paris and have expressed their opinion against the good name of the Canadian exhibit. I was surprised to hear such expression of opinion, because during last summer when I was unfortunately prevented by pressure of other business from going to Paris. I took every possible means of seeking information from Canadians who had been to Paris, and I watched the press carefully to see what opinions were published in regard to the Canadian exhibit. I was extremely gratified to find from private individuals occupying high positions in this country and abroad, from gentlemen intimately connected with the party opposed to us politically, as well as from those who are entirely indifferent to politics ; a universal consensus of opinion that the Canadian exhibit at Paris was a credit to Canada, and that it was a surprise to people from other countries who previously did not understand or appreciate the material and industrial progress of our country during the last few years. I felt that the Canadian exhibit at Paris was costing a considerable amount of money, and that if it did not fulfil its object, this would have been an unjustifiable and extravagant expenditure. I felt myself to a large extent responsible for that expenditure, but from the knowledge that has come to me, I have no hesitation in justifying before the House and before the people, that expenditure, and, Sir, had we spent much more I would have been ready to justify it, because of the vast beneficial results achieved for Canada. I have heard encomiums from Canadians who have gone to Paris, and from foreigners who were sent by their various governments to examine into the economic condition of their rivals in the great commercial markets of the world. I have the testimony here that our Canadian exhibit was one of the most successful in its economic aspects of all the exhibits at the Paris exhibition. In the gathering together of the exhibits, the Canadian commssioners adopted the view that we should not make a flash exhibit of pastimes and side shows to attract the ordinary vulgar crowd for amusement sake, but that we should make an exhibit of the economic products of Canada, so that those who wanted to buy raw material or manufactured products would be lead to make inquiries in Canada for commercial purposes, and to place orders here which would redound to our profit commercially. That was the object with which the exhibits were gathered together, and that object I commended. I took upon myself as Minister of Agriculture to see that in four great classes the department over which I have the honour to preside, should be worthily represented. We collected an agricultural exhibit, a horticultural exhibit, a mineral exhibit, and an exhibit of forestry, and of fishery and game products, and we put these exhibits collectively before the world, and I am proud to know that as a result every one of these exhibits obtained the grand prix, the highest award possible at the Paris exposition.

In addition to that, we provided the facilities by which the Canadian exhibitors were enabled to go to Paris and exhibit in ordinary competition. We paid the cost of transporting the exhibits to Paris. We paid the expenses of the commissioners, who devoted nearly a year to the preparation of the exhibit, who went through the length and breadth of this country, giving information to the industrial classes, to the agricultural classes, to those engaged in mining, in the fisheries and in forest work; and by these means we were able to stimulate the people of Canada to make a creditable exhibit. I found, what was a matter of extreme gratification to me, as I am sure it must be to all Canadians, that when our commissioners first went through Canada and asked the people to prepare exhibits for the Paris exhibition, they were told on all sides: We are so busy with the ordinary affairs of commerce, our workshops are so busy with orders ahead that we can hardly meet these orders, and we cannot afford the time to prepare exhibits for the Paris exhibition. This was a condition of affairs in which we might well rejoice, a condition which had come about within two or three years, but which unfortunately had been unknown in Canada for many years before this government came into power. That was the condition of the industries of the country under this administration in the year 1899-1900; but by reason of the value which the Paris exhibition would be to the industries of the country, and by reason of the urgent solicitations of the commissioners, Canada did for the first time in her history make a creditable display of her industrial products and show the world that in many classes of manufacturing she could take a proud position in competition with the other nations of the world. This was a contrast to what she had done a few years before in the Columbian exhibition at Chicago, where every Canadian had to hang his head in shame at the miserably inadequate display which Canadian industries made there. But we were determined to show that Canada could take a position in the industrial world of which she need not be ashamed; and the result has fully justified our confidence. I have the long list of awards which were given to the Canadian exhibits at Paris, and I will read it to the House:

Although this is an extraordinary showing, I have still to make an explanation to show that it is more important than at first glance it might appear to be. A large number of these Grand Prix and gold medals were given for what are known as collective exhibits. In other countries these collective exhibits were not so largely made use of; but our competitors were individual exhibitors and in that way they got a much larger number of prizes. For instance, our fruits were collective exhibits, made either by provinces or by the Dominion, and these collective exhibits could only obtain one Grand Prix for each exhibit. We could have divided each of these collective exhibits over and over again, and in that way have got a Grand Prix for every portion of that exhibit. And I will venture to say, in connection with the fruit exhibit at Paris, that a totally new conception has come into the minds of the people of the continent of Europe as to Canada; that is, for the first time in many generations, the old story of Canada being a few acres of snow has been absolutely and for ever set at rest, and to-day Canada is known to be a land flowing with milk and honey, and the people of that portion of Europe appreciate this country at its true worth.

I have here another statement which I would like to refer to; for while this statement of our success is absolute, there is a comparison of which we may well feel proud. I have here a comparative list of the awards granted to the Canadian exhibit and those granted to the mother country. In many of these things we would naturally come to the front; but I would be rather surprised to find Canada coming to the front in competition with the old land in certain products which for centuries she has been working up. Take, for instance, books and binding. Great Britain received ten awards, but Canada received five, almost half as many or more in that highly finished product as the mother country was able to secure.

Take musical instruments, Great Britain received three awards but Canada received six, or this young country had doubled the success of the mother land in this line.

Again, in general machinery, in which the old land has for centuries been the leading country in the world. Great Britain received eleven awards and we received three, and that, I think, is a most creditable showing for Canada in this, to her, comparatively new field.

In carriages and vehicles, the mother land received five awards and Canada eleven, one of which was a grand prix, and there was no such award given Great Britain.

In agricultural implements, in which the mother land entered into keen competition, Great Britain received twenty four awards and Canada twelve.

In horticulture, with the gardens and the soil of England close at hand, right at the doors of Paris, while our products had to come over 3,000 miles, Great Britain received two awards and we three.

In fruits we received altogether 109 awards, and our fruit had to come over 3,000 miles before they could enter into the competition.

In minerals—and I understood an hon. gentleman opposite to say a little while ago that in that line Canada was not properly represented in mineral display—Canada received forty-two awards and the British Isles only fourteen. In other words, we trebled their success.

In hunting apparatus, we received six awards against Great Britain's eleven, and in the clothing trade we received eleven against her twenty. In the manufacture of paper, we received three against Great Britain's four, and in leather manufacture and skins we had three awards against Great Britain's four.

Altogether Great Britain received 853 awards, and we received 394, or very nearly half as many. I venture to say that this is a showing of which every Canadian should be proud, and of which I certainly, as the minister responsible for the collection of the exhibits and their display in Paris, am proud and have no hesitation in putting before the country without fear of criticism.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman a list of the prizes taken at the Chicago exhibition. He made some unfavourable comments on our exhibit there, and I presume he will read to the House, to be fair, a list of the prizes taken by us at that exhibition.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the list. I was not responsible for that exhibition.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman is responsible for the statement he has made.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I know as much about the Chicago exhibition as the hon. gentleman. In certain lines, Canada made a remarkable success, but in the industrial lines, nobody will dispute the fact that Canada's exhibit at Chicago gave to the world the idea that she had no manufacture worthy of the name. In her natural products, she made a splendid showing. And again in Paris, she made a very gratifying display, but what I want to emphasize is the fact that in this Paris exhibition, for the first time in the history of Canadian exhibits at any international or foreign exhibition, Canada came to the front as an industrial and manufacturing country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Thanks to the National Policy.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman and his friends know well that in 1896 the people of Canada were tired of their administration of the National Policy and expelled them from the government benches, and the wisdom of the people is shown in the fact that four years later, under the wise policy of a Liberal administration, our industries had advanced in leaps and bounds and we made an exhibit at Paris which has opened the eyes of the world.

Hon. gentlemen opposite find fault with the way in which the money was spent in the Paris exhibition. But the reason is not far to seek. They remember the good old days when they were able to reward their own friends by their lavish expenditure at the exhibition in Chicago, and cannot conceal their chagrin at the fact that these matters are now in the hands of other men who are able to use them to better advantage to the country.

These hon. gentlemen have read letters criticising Canada's exhibit. Let me read a statement which I am sure these hon. gentlemen must admit comes from an unprejudiced source:

> It will be surprising if this show in Paris does not draw world-wide attention to Canada's mining.

I think the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) took some exception to our exhibit in that line.

Mr. WALLACE. I made no reference to our mineral exhibit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Then it must be the hon. gentleman's understudy, the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule). I sometimes mix the one with the other.

And the enormous possibilities in the investment of capital. There is no display of mineral wealth from any country represented in the Paris exhibition except the United States which can for a moment compare with that of Canada, and certainly never before has so large, varied and rich a show of mineral from any single colony been seen in any international exhibit.

The same article goes on to say :

In the little space allowed to Canada, the Commissioners have visibly displayed raw material as most likely to attract attention to the immense forest wealth of Canada . . . It would be difficult for England to make a better show of elementary and intermediate education, and in some respects Canada puts the old country to shame.

A little while ago some hon. gentlemen on the other side said our educational exhibit was not worthy of the country, but as a matter of fact, in primary education, Great Britain received only 33 awards and Canada 18, and Canada got high awards for her primary, intermediate and university exhibits. Now here is another extract :

In some departments Britain was foremost, but generally speaking she has allowed it to appear that France, Germany and America are the three great commercial countries and that France is the great colonizer. Canada, however, has put her best foot foremost, and with that loyalty to the empire and the interests of her own people which distinguishes her in these days among the younger nations, she has set up at the Trocadero a show of her industries and boundless resources which will advertise her throughout the world. Her corner of the exhibition is at all times one of the liveliest of the whole show and in proportion to its size perhaps attracts more real business than any other.

That is taken from the Mail and Empire of August 29, sent by its special correspondent at the Paris exhibition. There is another thing I would like to put before the House :

A comparative estimate of the value of Canada's exhibit can only be formed after seeing the products and industries of other countries.

A comparative estimate of the value of Canada's exhibit can be formed only after seeing the products and industries of the other countries. It is gratifying to be able to state that from a commercial point of view, our Dominion leads the whole exposition. This is a testimony of many competent judges, including a number of Frenchmen. We have not the rich and artistic products which dazzle the eyes in the pavilions of the foreign powers, but we have a greater number and variety of useful manufactures than any other country. The number of grand prix which have fallen to our share will be a surprise to many. We have already won the highest awards in forestry, fish and game, agriculture, canoes and minerals, and it is more than likely that the grand prix will also be given to our bicycles and agricultural implements, which are in the annex at Vincennes.

That article is from the Montreal Daily Star of July 21, 1900—again a moment of clear vision accorded to the blind. The Montreal Gazette of August 25 says :

Cold storage good——

Mr. FISHER.

Hon. gentlemen opposite sometimes twit me a little with the failure of cold storage, but the Montreal Gazette says my exhibit in Paris was an excellent one.

A large stand, showing Canadian apples, &c., gathered last fall and preserved in the cold storage, attracted great attention. Cold storage is not familiar yet to the crowds, who would hardly credit that the fine specimens of apples were not wax imitations. Had the French commissioners granted sufficient room, it was the intention of the Canadian commissioners to make cold storage a very prominent exhibit. As it is, all that is to be seen of this marvellous invention is in a little out of the way cellar, where the Linde British Refrigeration Co., of London and Montreal have their system in operation.

And then he goes on to describe the exhibit we have there. Now, let us take extracts from other papers. I have here a statement from the Manitoba Free Press, with the testimony of a prominent citizen of Winnipeg, Dr. McArthur. I do not know the gentleman, but he says :

Canada had the finest display of natural products. Canada had the only cold storage exhibit on the grounds and it excited a great deal of interest.

Here is a statement from a French newspaper, which, to save the nerves of hon. gentlemen opposite, I will not read. But here are one or two statements which I will take almost at haphazard from a large number. I find, from gentlemen who have had experience in exhibition work, and who have no connection with Canada or the Canadian commission in any shape or way. For instance, Mr. B. I. Rose, commissioner for British India, our rivals in the exhibition, occupying the adjoining building to us, and naturally desirous to putting forward their claims, says :—

With over twenty-five years' experience of international exhibitions, I can without hesitation testify that Canada's representation at Paris this year is the best and most perfect that the Dominion has ever made and I believe will result in a great increase of her trade. The elaborate statistical and other works (printed in both French and English) dealing with the products and resources of the country compare most favourably with those of all other countries and reflect the greatest credit on the government of the Dominion.

(Signed) B. I. ROSE,
Commissioner for British India.

Here is a gentleman who is engaged in trade in England, and whose business is especially interesting to us, because he is interested in the produce trade—Mr. Walter Stark :

I have been exceedingly pleased in looking over Canada's exhibits, and must say it does both the producers, and those who have been responsible for display, very much credit. Such a splendid display of Canada's products must be an eye opener to Europe and should be of great service to the Dominion.

Here is a French gentleman of special qualifications as a representative of the Chambre de Commerce de Lyons, and I am afraid, even though it grates on the feelings of hon. gentlemen opposite, I shall have to read it :

Paris, October, 1900.

Having been intrusted by the Chamber of Commerce, of Lyons, to gather the elements of a collection of samples, in connection with the industrial and agricultural production of Canada, I have received from Mr. Auguste Dupuis, the secretary of the Canadian section at the Paris Exposition, all desirable data and information. The Chamber of Commerce, of Lyons, would receive with acknowledgments any collection it would please the Dominion government to send them.

(Signed) F. VERTAN.

So, here we have an anticipation on the part of a French gentleman, representing the Chambre de Commerce de Lyons, of a large augmentation of the trade between Canada and France in consequence of the exhibition. Here is another gentleman from France, who was particularly authorized to study the products of foreign countries, and especially of colonies, for the purpose of helping the French government in the development of their colony in Algiers :

Mr. Amédée Rebattu, lumber merchant, from Bone (Algeria), a member of the statistical committee of the 'Algerian Statistical Union' and a member of the jury (class 90) at the exhibition of 1900, asks for information concerning the use and manufacture of cold storage appliances for the preservation of fruit.

He came to us for information and specimens in regard to cold storage. Here is another gentleman, the assistant commissioner general of Great Britain :

Paris, Nov. 29, 1900.

I am delighted to be afforded this opportunity of placing upon record my admiration for the successful manner in which the work of the Canadian section of the Paris exhibition has been carried out.

The installation of the exhibits, combined the most remarkable illustrations of the industrial wealth and progress of the Dominion with general artistic effect which it would be difficult to surpass, whilst the courtesy and experience of the organizers naturally contributed in the highest degree to the success of the section.

(Signed) EDMUND R. SPEARMAN
Assistant commissioner general of Great Britain.

Mr. HUGHES. To whom is that letter addressed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These were expressions written in a Canadian book at the Canadian exhibit at Paris. And Col. Herbert Jekyll says :

Paris, Nov. 29, 1900.

I have much pleasure in bearing witness to the admirable display made by Canada at the exhibition. In spite of the limited space which it was possible to place at the disposal of the Dominion, the exhibition was so well organized and arranged, that it afforded a good representation of the resources of the country and reflected the greatest credit on the able officials who were charged with its installation and administration.

(Sgd.) HERBERT JEKYLL,
Commissioner General of Great Britain,
Secretary of the Royal Commission.

And here is another I would like to lay before the committee, a representative of Belgium, a gentleman specially qualified to give an opinion :

In the magnificent show of Canada's industries and products at the Trocadéro, I was enabled to see a striking corroboration of what I had previously read in magazines and other publications. I am delighted to have this opportunity of testifying to the same.

(Signed) LTE. ROLUI,
15 rue des Augustins, Bruxelles.
In charge of the information service for the export of agricultural products from Belgium.

Now, the hon. gentleman opposite has spoken about a certain individual whom they have quoted. I have also here quotations of certain individuals whose names I think will be acceptable even to hon. gentlemen opposite. Here is one :

My friends and I are greatly pleased with the Canadian exhibit and I, who with dear love remember my old home, rejoice to realize my country's improvement, development and increasing prosperity.

(Signed)
MACDONALD N. EARNSCLIFFE.

Here is another :

The thoroughly practical character of the exhibit combined with effective and tasteful arrangement (which is in itself a work of business capacity) cannot fail to strike the observer with highly favourable impressions.

In my own case these impressions are of course made peculiarly agreeable, because of the many pleasant associations awakened by renewed acquaintance with typical products of the country which must hold a firm place in the regard of those who have partaken of the hospitality of 'Our Lady of the Sunshine.'

(Signed) ABERDEEN.

Here is another :

I am delighted to be afforded this opportunity of congratulating our brethren of Canada upon their magnificent and most interesting industrial and agricultural exhibit.

(Signed) A. GOUBARD,
Member of the Rouen Chamber of Commerce.

Here are several others from Canada, but I will not read them because they are largely a repetition of each other. But, I want to read this one signed by a gentleman who was one of the committee on food products:

The fruit exhibit is admirable and defies description. I shall be delighted to know the names and addresses of the various fruit producers and to represent some of them in Paris. Being an agent for food products, I could easily place those products on the market, and especially canned fruit in the natural state, such as peaches, plums, raspberries and apricots.

(Signed) E. CERF,
Agent for food products.

I will give this one :

I have visited most parts of the world, and I believe the Canadian display of fruit at Paris exhibition is the finest I have seen.

(Signed)

CHEVALIER KENN DE HOVGERWOERD, Consul General in Turkey, Persia, Arabia, Siam, etc., Les Sources, Champagne, Seine-et-Oise, France.

And this one :

Being a manufacturer of preserves, am highly pleased with Canadian show of fruit. Shall at any time be pleased to receive lists, &c.

(Sig.) S. G. CANNING, Birmingham, England.

And this one :

I am surprised at the great variety of fruits and qualities. No one certainly who had not visited Canada would dream of the variety and beauty.

(Signed) ANTOINE MONFERRAT, Alexandria, Egypt.

Here is another gentleman from Redhill, England, who says :

Absolutely the best show of fruit in the exhibition, which is a great and pleasant surprise to find.

I think I have read enough to convince hon. gentlemen opposite even, if they are open to conviction at all, that an unprejudiced opinion of this exhibit was that it was extremely creditable to Canada, and greatly extended the reputation of Canada abroad.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman say how many newspaper correspondents were paid by the government during the Paris exposition, and who they were ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not pay anybody whose opinions I have read. I think there were one or two gentlemen connected with the press who were attached to the exhibition commission. They were there only for a short time, and were employed to give information about Canada, for which they were especially well equipped. I did not pay the Star, I did not pay the Mail and Empire, I did not pay the Montreal Gazette, I did not pay the Baroness Macdonald, or any of these other people whose opinions I have quoted.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not answered my question. I asked how many newspaper correspondents, apart from those whose opinions the hon. gentleman has been reading to boom himself, were paid by the department for their services during the exhibition ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have told the hon. gentleman that I think two gentlemen connected with the press were employed.

Mr. CLANCY. Who were they ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One of them was a gentleman from the city of Quebec, Mr. A. Girard, who received a small sum of money to go over there and write to the Canadian papers an account of the exhibit, and write about to the foreign press. The other gentleman was Mr. Wilkinson, from British Columbia.

Mr. CLANCY. Did any of these articles emanate from Mr. Girard?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not one of them, unless possibly the Mail and Empire and the Star may have employed him. But certainly he did not write any of the opinions that I have just read.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To what Canadian newspapers did he contribute ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To Le Soleil of Quebec, and two or three others. I have not quoted the opinion of a single one of these papers. I have not quoted the opinion of a paper in Canada except of the three that I have mentioned, the Mail and Empire, the Star and the Gazette.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I notice in connection with the Paris exhibition, under the auspices of my good friend who, like myself is a temperance man sworn not to touch, taste or handle, an account for 40 gallons of alcohol at $1.90 a gallon. Was this for the use of those red parlors ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That alcohol was bought for the purpose of preserving fruit. And here I would like to mention, since the hon. gentleman has brought the subject forward, that one of the most effective and remarkable exhibits in the Paris exhibition was the fruit exhibit. We were able, by reason of the excellent management of Prof. Saunders, of the Experimental Farm, who had charge of that particular exhibit, to collect in the autumn of 1899, fruit from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. The fruit was carefully collected by chosen agents throughout the orchards of Canada, and sent into cold storage in the city of Montreal in the autumn of 1899. It was kept in Montreal until the spring of 1900, it was then picked over again, packed and sent over in our cold storage departments on the steamers to Liverpool. It was sent by express from Liverpool to Paris, and put into our cold storage chambers in the Paris exhibition. That fruit was able to go out, after a passage from British Columbia, of over 6,000 miles, to Paris, in our cold storage arrangements, to come into competition with the fresh fruits of Europe, to beat them and to obtain the highest awards which were granted to any fruit on exhibition at Paris. During the summer of 1900 we again collected fresh fruit in Canada and again sent specimens of the large fruit of all the provinces in the Dominion. Again we were able to come into competition with the fresh fruits of France, Germany, England, Belgium and all the European countries, sent straight from their own orchards by express only a few days' journey to Paris, and again Canada succeeded in beating the world and getting a larger number of awards than was given to any other country for fresh fruits. This is remarkable testimony not only to the quality of the fruit production of Canada, but to the perfection of the cold storage transportation facilities which were provided by the government for the benefit of the producers in Canada in puting their wares on the foreign markets. I do not know if there is any particular necessity for my saying anything more on these matters. If particular information is desired, I shall be glad to give all I have at my disposal. I will say this, however, that in connection with this exhibition, in connection with all the expenditure in regard to it, with every item and every detail, I am perfectly willing that the truth should be known that hon. gentlemen opposite should sift it to the bottom. I am satisfied, and know that in the hands of the commissioners who had it in charge, appointed by this government, the expenditure has been absolutely and entirely proper, correct, pure and free from any scandal whatever, and I will challenge an inquiry on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, by themselves, or in any way they can conduct it, to find out if there is anything different from what I say.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is almost impossible to get the hon. gentleman's estimates through, because he insists upon talking so much about matters that have really very little to do with them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is very unpalatable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And he takes up the time of the committee very unnecessarily. I trust he will not read very much more French while the hon. Minister of Public Works is in his seat, because, at the time, I saw the expression of agony on that hon. gentleman's face. He has a very sensitive ear and I think in justice to that hon. gentleman the hon. Minister of Agriculture should not repeat that performance. The hon. gentleman seems to want to introduce a sort of budget speech into the discussion of his estimates. He seems to think that we should consider the history of this country in regard to protection and free trade during the past twenty-five or thirty years, and that for the purpose of glorifying himself a little it is desirable that he should go into matters of that kind. Does not the hon. gentleman know that the industries of which he has spoken with so much pride, and of which we are also proud, were fostered by the policy introduced by the Liberal-Conservative party——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)—while he and his friends were running around the country talking about commercial union, free trade as it is in England and unrestricted reciprocity? Does the hon. gentleman think that a discussion in respect to these matters is really necessary for the purpose of getting his estimates through? Why is it that he introduces controversial subjects that have nothing to do with the question before the House, not pretending to give explanations to the House of the estimates which we are now endeavouring to pass? I will not assist the hon. gentleman in obstructing his own estimates by dwelling further upon that. I will leave it at that and let his remarks go for what they are worth. It is perfectly clear, however, from what the hon. Minister of Agriculture has said, that the hon. Minister of Public Works was not required in Paris at all. The hon. gentleman has explained to us that he did it all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not go to Paris.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I feel inclined to move to strike out of these estimates the sum of $6,000 for the hon. Minister of Public Works, because it is perfectly plain that the hon. Minister of Public Works was merely the fifth wheel to the coach. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has done the whole of this, and he is the man who alone should be recognized in regard to it. This is the only case in the history of this government during the past four years in which the hon. Minister of Public Works has been compelled to sit in the background. I am firmly convinced that the country will recognize that on this one occasion at least the hon. Minister of Public Works is completely overshadowed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Now, apart from matters of this kind, which really have not very much to do with what we are dealing with, but which were introduced unnecessarily altogether by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who is supposed to be trying to get his estimates passed, I desire to ask him a few questions which have really something to do with the matter under consideration. I notice that there are a great many people mentioned on pages D—10, 11 and up to 14, of the Auditor General's Report, to whom sums of money have been paid for travelling expenses and services. I will point out to the hon. Minister of Agriculture who they are, as we require from him some explanation in regard to them. In the first place, there is Miss Mary Barry, D—10, to whom $1,069 has been paid. Then, on page D—11 there is Mrs. Dandurand—I do not know if my French is much better than that of my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher)——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is good.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).—to whom $1,420 has been paid. Then, there is Mr. Dupuis, page D—11, to whom $2,486.24 has been paid;

Mr. Faribault, a very worthy and competent gentleman, whom I personally know, from the Geological Survey, $732.02; Miss Anna Galbraith, secretary, $560.85; Mr. A. H. Gillmor, $2,034.72; Mr. P. H. Gillmor, assistant commissioner, $591.48; Mr. A. Girard, to whom the hon. gentleman has referred, $200; Col. Gourdeau, the worthy Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, $1,380.50; Henri Hains, D—12, $678.90; Mr. Andrew Halkett, $760.67; Mr. Robert Hamilton, $1,964.65; Mr. W. H. Hay, of the Experimental Farm, $950.35; Mr. James G. Jardine, $4,199.42. Then, I may observe in passing, that Mr. Lancefield's studio in Ottawa has been paid $20 for three copies of enlarged photographs of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. J. I. Tarte and Hon. S. Fisher.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is too dear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is dear? Does the hon. gentleman think it is not a good photograph?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I trust the minister's features have not been delineated before the nations of the world in such a way as not to do him complete justice. Then, there is Miss Eva LeBouthillier to whom the sum of $582 has been paid; Mr. A. P. Low, of the Geological Survey, to whom $258 has been paid; Mr. J. Marchand, architect, Paris, to whom $390.12 has been paid. I think the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has explained that that was necessary on account of the disgraceful condition of the building on his arrival. Then there is Mr. J. M. Macoun to whom the sum of $1,489.79 has been paid; Mr. W. A. McKinnon to whom $839.56 has been paid; Mr. J. X. Perrault, commissioner, to whom the sum of $4,126.24 has been paid; Mr. W. D. Scott, commissioner, to whom $4,297.06 has been paid; Mr. R. P. Small to whom $822.70 has been paid; Mr. Angus R. Stuart to whom $478.50 has been paid; Mr. J. O. Turcotte to whom $1,153.56 has been paid; Miss E. L. Turcotte to whom $276 has been paid; Mr. J. W. Comeau to whom $755.53 has been paid; Mr. L. A. Cusson to whom $1,790.96 has been paid; Miss P. Cusson to whom $318.20 has been paid; Mr. A. D. Verrault to whom $288.65 has been paid; Mr. C. W. Willimott to whom $648.48 has been paid. Of course so far as the gentlemen who are employed on the Experimental Farm, or in the Geological Survey who are in the service of the government and whom we know, we understand they have the qualifications necessary for the work which they undertook to perform. But with regard to the others whom we do not know, I desire that the hon. gentleman shall explain what was the nature of their previous employment, if any; what qualifications, if any, they had for the work to be performed in Paris. With respect to each of them, including the officials of the government, I desire to know what the special duties of each of these persons was in connection with the exhibition in Paris. I venture to think that possibly some of the time which the minister (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is devoting to other subjects might have been more profitably employed in giving us this information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be very glad to give the hon. gentleman all the information he desires in regard to these matters. Miss Mary Barry translated the Woman's Hand-book, and she has an allowance for a certain number of days and her expenses over that. Miss Barry was appointed as an assistant to the honorary lady commissioner. Miss Barry is well known in the province of Quebec as a journalist and as a writer. Her acquaintance with literature and with the Dominion of Canada qualified her eminently to appear in Paris. She has great facility in both the English and the French languages, and she was well qualified to represent Canada in those conventions which the women of the world held in Paris to discuss those things which are of special interest to the fair sex.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask the minister to state whether this lady, as well as the other officials, while employed in connection with the exhibition, were engaged in any other occupations such as writing for newspapers for which any of them have received remuneration in addition to that which they may have received from the government of Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Miss Barry was one of several of the staff who were asked by me to contribute to Canadian papers, articles in connection with what was going on at Paris in connection with the Paris exhibition. I told Miss Barry that she must not receive any other remuneration for work of that kind, and as far as I know neither she nor any other member of the staff did receive any remuneration from any outside source. I cannot tell what their private arrangements may have been, but their instructions were that they should not do so. Miss Barry was appointed as an assistant to Madame Dandurand, the lady commissioner to represent Canada at these gatherings of the women of the world which took place in Paris. I may say that several organizations of the ladies of this country requested that at Paris the women of Canada should be recognized and represented. I believe it was in the interest of Canada that this should be done, and therefore I took upon myself to recommend the appointment of the honorary lady commissioner Madame Dandurand, who is well known in literary circles in Canada for her writings on many subjects, was chosen, and she represented Canada most worthily. She is a lady of not only high social position in Canada, but of literary accomplishments as well, and possessed of what the French call esprit, which we can hardly translate, and which I would not like to translate in connection with a lady.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt him a moment. Miss Barry has been allowed living allowance, and that is now a system which is carried on all through the service. It is a system which has created a breach between the Auditor General and the government of the day. I do not believe that those in the service of the government should in any sense receive mean or beggarly treatment in relation to their expenses, and I can quite understand that in certain cases it might not be wise that the accounts of persons occupying certain positions should be published to the world. I wish to point out this case, because it is becoming the habit of this government to allow living expenses which are equivalent to part of a salary. I see that Miss Barry is allowed the maximum of $6 a day. While she no doubt occupied an important position, I do not understand that she occupied a position justifying that allowance. Under the former government all accounts were rendered, and hon. gentlemen opposite were manly and courageous enough to criticise them, even to the pay of bootblacks and other incidental expenses which are no doubt included in these living allowances, and they were spread all over all the backwoods of Canada in order to discredit the government. Whether these expenses were excessive or not may be open to debate; but the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite have covered them up in living allowances is something that cannot be condoned. I think this committee should lay down a rule by which every person in the service not occupying a responsible position should render an account, so that this House might see it. I would ask the minister why $6 a day was allowed to Miss Barry as a living allowance ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is in error. The $6 covered both salary and living expenses. It was allowed to all below the rank of commissioner, except the labourers, who were employed there and paid by the day. A large number of employees were paid at the uniform rate of $6 a day, which covered all they received during the time they were in Paris. Besides that, their actual transportation charges from here to Paris and back were paid. The commissioners went into this matter very thoroughly before fixing the remuneration. In most cases the employees protested against it ; but it was felt that it would be a fair return for their labour in a foreign country, where, of course, they would be under unusual expenses. Everybody knows that on the occasion of a great exhibition like that, the cost of living is greatly increased, and we could not expect them to live in Paris as economically as in Ottawa or elsewhere in Canada. In a rough awy, I may say, this $6 a day was thought to be about equally divided between living allowance and salary. The ordinary living allowance made by the government to people of that class while travelling abroad is, I understand, $5 a day. That was before the present arrangement was made with the Auditor General by which actual disbursements were charged. But in this case the Auditor General has gone over all these accounts, and has accepted this arrangement as being a satisfactory one.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice on D—12 of the Auditor General's Report that H. C. Knowlton was paid $1,115.48. Will the minister be good enough to tell us who he is, where he is from, and what he was employed at ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. With pleasure. Perhaps I had better continue the list which the hon. leader of the opposition gave. Mr. Cusson was one of the secretaries. We first appointed Mr. Dupuis, whose experience in connection with exhibitions is well known. He was the commissioner for the province of Quebec at the Jamaica exhibition some years ago, and made a most valuable report on that exhibition. I, therefore, felt that he was a man well qualified for this position, and asked him to assume the position of secretary to the commission. He did the preliminary work here, but when the commissioners had to go to Paris and begin to receive the exhibits there, we had to send somebody over with them. As Mr. Dupuis' work was not finished here, we employed Mr. Cusson to go to Paris. Mr. Dupuis remained here till his work here was finished ; then he went to Paris, and Mr. Cusson returned home. Mr. Faribault is a member of the staff of the Geological Survey. He went to Paris in connection with the exhibit prepared under the direction of the late lamented Dr. G. M. Dawson, whose death the other day is such a great loss to this whole Dominion, and especially to the department of which he was the brilliant head, and in which he has given so much excellent and invaluable work to the Dominion of Canada. Speaking as one who has come largely into contact with his work in connection with this Paris exhibtion, I may say that if Canada made the splendid record she did with her mineral exhibit, it was largely due to the experience and wide knowledge exercised by Dr. Dawson in the preparation and management of that exhibit. Mr. Gillmor was one of the commissioners who was asked to go from the maritime provinces. During the earlier part of his commissionership he was unfortunately laid up at home, and was not able to travel about and secure exhibits from the maritime provinces ; but he asked that his son, Mr. P. H. Gillmor, might do that work while he was laid up, and the payments made to him are payments which would have been made to the commissioner if he had not been confined to his bed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In what position was Mr. A. H. Gillmor before he was appointed commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His name is well known in this House, and in the whole Dominion of Canada. I need not give the record of the former member for Charlotte county, and now senator of the Dominion. Col. Gourdeau is the well known deputy minister of the Marine and Fisheries Department. I do not know that we could have chosen a man better qualified to prepare the marine and fisheries exhibit than Col. Gourdeau. Mr. Gelinas, whose name was brought forward, is the private secretary of the hon. Minister of Public Works, and he was taken over in that capacity. Andrew Halkett is an official of the Marine and Fisheries Department, an expert in mounting fish and game, who went over to see that the exhibits were properly mounted and displayed. Robert Hamilton is a well-known fruit-grower of the province of Quebec, coming from the town of St. Andrews, in the county of Argenteuil. He is one of the best known writers on fruit-growing in the Dominion of Canada. He went in charge of the fruit-growing exhibit. When he was obliged to return to Canada, Mr. A. McD. Allan, one of the best known fruit-growers in Ontario, went over in his place. Mr. W. H. Hay is the accountant of the Experimental Farm. Those gentlemen who know the exhibits made by the Experimental Farm at the exhibitions at Ottawa, Toronto, and other places, know his work. He is an expert in agricultural exhibits, in decoration, and in working up specimens of grain and fruit and other things into an artistic display which will attract attention. Mr. Jardine was one of the commissioners appointed from the province of Ontario, and spent a large amount of time and money travelling about to secure exhibits.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What were his personal qualifications ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has a large acquaintance with business in Toronto and formerly in Montreal, and had been in the leather and boot and shoe trade.

Mr. CLANCY. What class of exhibits was he expected to select ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He did not select the exhibits but went to the manufacturers and gave them the information necessary, and afterwards in Paris he was in charge of the manufactured exhibits and did other general work as a commissioner.

Mr. CLANCY. He was selected to take a sort of holiday trip.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On the contrary, he was one of the hardest working men during the last year and a half that lived in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT. Upon whose recommendation was he appointed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not remember exactly, but I think I consulted my colleagues from Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. gentleman know that Mr. Jardine has been a very active politician in Ontario—part and parcel of the machine moving from one riding to another.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not know that he was an active politician, but that would be no disability.

Mr. BENNETT. Many gentlemen here can testify that he was used in the by-elections in Ontario to work the machine. As far as the statement of the minister that he was in the boot and shoe business is concerned, that is a little off colour.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That statement is the exact truth. I do not know whether Mr. Jardine was active in politics or not, but I have heard that he met the hon. gentleman on the public platform and took the change out of him. That would not be a disability in my opinion.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Jardine is now on the floor of the House, and I presume he communicated to the hon. gentleman the statement just made. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that if Mr. Jardine told him that he ever met me on the public platform, he made a statement that is utterly and deliberatively false and maliciously untrue, and that the company which that man consorted in the elections was not the company to be found on the public platform, but of a vastly different nature.

Mr. McGOWAN. He went through Wellington riding and kept track of the machine there.

Mr. COCHRANE. Along with Cap Sullivan.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must call the hon. gentleman to order. We are not discussing the character of Mr. Jardine or of Cap Sullivan. The hon. member for Wellington introduced the name of Cap Sullivan.

Mr. McGOWAN. I did not say anything about Cap Sullivan.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood the hon. gentleman to have done so. Hon. gentlemen have no right to discuss the characters of men not mentioned in the item before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. Are we to understand that we can discuss as long as we please the antecedents and the qualifications of Mr. Jardine, but if we connect his name with Mr. Sullivan, then we must stop. But, Mr. Sullivan may be somewhat of a divine, and the presence of Mr. Jardine in company with Mr. Sullivan might be a testimonial as to the holiness of Mr. Jardine's character. Therefore I must protest against the ruling that we are not to bring in the name of the Evangelist Sullivan in connection with that of Mr. Jardine. If Mr. Jardine, who is accused of doing shady things, can prove that he is a friend and colleague and ally of Cap Sullivan, the Evangelist, that in itself might dispose of the accusation.

Mr. CLANCY. I think it would be unfair to attack a man who is not in this House to defend himself. But it is quite as unseemly to import here a man whose name appears in the public accounts in order that he may protect and coach the minister. No more unseemly thing has ever happened in this House. I do not know anything about Mr. Jardine, but it is reported that he has taken very active part in the elections.

Man after man in Canada, good officials, have been dismissed, their moneys that were paid into the public treasury taken from them, faith not kept with them—and for what? Because it has been charged, but never proved in a single instance, that they had taken part in elections. Yet, a gentleman is on the floor of this House this evening, prompting the minister, who has earned his position by political activity —as has been stated unblushingly by the Minister of Agriculture that that was his special qualification to be appointed to this office. If we hope to get these estimates through, and I do for one, we must not have the unseemly conduct of the Minister of Agriculture. We have a good deal too much of this by-play. The hon. gentleman has done a good deal of acting, a good deal too much, for it was bad acting. His deportment has not contributed very much, I will not say to increase his reputation, but to maintain the traditions of the high place he occupies. The hon. gentleman challenges any on this side to bring forward a single administrative act that was not clean or that will not bear the search-light of inquiry. And yet he declares, backed up by the Minister of Public Works, that there was an open swindle upon the people of Canada, and that nobody is responsible for it. No hon. minister can shelter himself behind the High Commissioner. If the hon. minister is in a position in which he has no redress, it must be because he failed to take the necessary precautions that should be taken by one acting for the country in a case of that kind. But the hon. gentleman came here with a statement that he has been told by the High Commissioner to pay the bill, and say nothing about it. Why? Is it because there is a reflection upon the High Commissioner as a member of the Imperial commission? I will not reflect upon Lord Strathcona, but, as the hon. leader of the opposition says, this is a matter of business concerning which the people's representatives should know the facts. If there are reasons why we should pay the bill and ask no questions, the hon. minister should be able to give those reasons.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentlemen opposite have asked with regard to a number of others than those I have already mentioned——

Mr. CLANCY. Before the hon. minister proceeds, I will ask him to explain why it was that no action was taken beyond the writing of the letter of Lord Strathcona, of which he speaks, to inquire into that swindle and to get the reparation to which Canada is entitled.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) was probably absent from the Chamber when I answered that question, when asked by the leader of the opposition. I explained that the control of the building was in the hands of the Imperial commission, on which Lord Strathcona was our representative. They felt that we ought to pay, and insisted on our paying. We could look to them, but we have no recourse elsewhere. We had undertaken to make an exhibit at Paris under the condition, which was stated in the first place, that we should deal through the Imperial authorities. When my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Public Works went to France, he succeeded in obtaining for us a superior position to that which had been accorded before, and this fact, I have no doubt contributed largely to the success of our exhibit. I would have been glad could that have been the case from the commencement; but it was not. The building referred to was not a Canadian, but a Colonial building, in which we had only part of the space; and we and the other colonies entrusted the management of the building entirely to the Imperial commission, through whom we did all our work.

Mr. CLANCY. I was in when the hon. minister (Mr. Fisher) made his previous statement, and he has told me nothing new. But when this swindle was discovered—and that is a mild term to apply to it—was there any correspondence to show that the High Commissioner, who was one of the Imperial commissioners, protested or made this a subject of inquiry into the fraud perpetrated upon Canada? If there is any point of that kind on which the hon. gentleman has correspondence or is prepared to make an authoritative statement, we would like to hear from him.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has already been informed that the hon. Minister of Public Works, when he went to Paris, protested——

Mr. CLANCY. Permit me—I am asking if the High Commissioner representing Canada protested against Canada being compelled to pay an undue sum for services she did not receive, and if the High Commissioner, both as High Commissioner for Canada and as a member of the Imperial commission, endeavoured to make this a subject of inquiry.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps I can give a word of explanation. As my hon. friend and colleague said, I protested as soon as I found that the specifications had not been followed. The architect admitted that they had not been followed. With that admission I immediately wrote to Lord Strathcona, and after negotiating, Sir Montague Ommany, Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, came to Paris. We discussed the question. I represented that the building was not worth what was contracted for. After giving all the attention we could to the question, Sir Montague Ommany, who is a lawyer and a man of long experience, said that we were altogether without any recourse because the architect had given certificates to Messrs. Humphreys & Co., the builders. We withheld for some time a larger amount of money than was agreed for, so as to oblige the builders to make repairs if any accident happened.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand it was the High Commissioner's special business as representing Canada, and one in a position to examine, to know whether the architect was justified in giving the contractor a certificate. Again, I ask the question if the hon. gentleman is aware that the High Commissioner made any attempt to make this a subject of inquiry ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure that the High Commissioner used his best endeavours to settle that difficulty. But it was found that the architect had given certificates against which we could not rebel. My colleague had nothing to do but to pay it. The bottom of the whole difficulty lay in the fact that we were not masters of the situation, the Royal Commission were the masters of the situation. Mr. Clewes, the architect, was recommended to Lord Strathcona as a reliable man, and he was very much surprised, and the Royal Commission were very much surprised, when they found that the building was not what it should have been.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman aware by personal knowledge that the High Commissioner, at any stage, protested or made this a subject of inquiry ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, he did.

Mr. CLANCY. By correspondence ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I know he has communicated with my colleague, and I will produce the correspondence in a day or two, all that is in my hands.

Mr. CLANCY. And the correspondence, as I understand, will show that the High Commissioner not only entered his protest but also made it a subject of inquiry ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, so much so that Sir Montague Ommaney came to Paris on purpose to investigate the difficulty.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman a report of the investigation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. Sir Montague Ommaney did not make a written report, as he was not bound to do so. The Royal Commission were the masters of the situation, we complained, but more than that we could not do. The building was nearly completed when I reached Paris, and I was astonished at the character of the building. I called the attention of Mr. Clewes and of the contractors to the state of the building, and I forced from Mr. Clewes the admission that the specification had not been followed. He said that he vainly endeavoured to oblige Humphries & Co. to carry out their work in the way it should be done. Then I asked him if he had notified the Royal Commission, and he said that he had not. Then I told him that he had not done his duty, and I wrote to Lord Strathcona and to the Royal Commission stating all these facts. My letters will be found in the correspondence that will be brought down. Lord Strathcona then interfered and Sir Montague Ommaney came to Paris.

Mr. CLANCY. At whose instance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He was sent by the Royal Commission. I made a mistake when I said that he was a lawyer, he is an engineer, as he told me himself. Sir Montague told me that from a legal standpoint our hands were tied, that we could not do anything, that the architect had got several letters that were binding. The architect was responsible to the Royal Commission, he was not appointed by us.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. gentleman found the building unsatisfactory and not what was required, why did he pay the money ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not pay the money. The Imperial government had exacted from this government that we should take part in the exhibition in a certain way. In pursuance of the agreement that was made between the Imperial government and ourselves, the building in Paris was erected without our having any control over it. Indeed, incredible as it may appear, the contractors were left in possession of the building during the whole time of the exhibition, we could not even get possession of the building. I had never before read of specifications or a contract like that, but we could do nothing, we could not close the doors, and we had to go on.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it not show all through a want of business intelligence and attention? We have already voted $315,000 for the Paris exhibition, and it will probably reach a good deal higher sum. Now, the country expects the ministers in charge to look after these things, to look after the expenditure of that money and to get full value for it. Yet they are obliged to come here and, in a humiliating way, admit that we did not get value for the money, that we in fact had been swindled, and they say nobody is to blame.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. Whom should we hold responsible for it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Royal Commission is responsible for it.

Mr. SPROULE. Do we not hold responsible the ministers of the Crown under whose charge the money is spent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Imperial government insisted on my hon. friend giving to them the control of the erection of the building. Was it possible for the Minister of Agriculture to foresee that the Royal Commission would commit a blunder like this ? I could not believe my eyes when I saw the building, I could not believe that such a contract could have been given. The Royal Commission trusted their architect, he was the architect not only for our building but for all the Imperial and colonial buildings. I do not want to make any accusation against him, but it seems to me clear that as soon as he found out that he could not bring Messrs. Humphrey & Co. to alter the contract, he should have notified the Royal Commission in London, which he did not do. He admitted to me that he did not do anything of the kind. He was wrong there, but it is for the Royal Commission to deal with him, we are helpless.

Mr. SPROULE. But will not the country hold responsible for it the minister of the Crown under whom the money was paid ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The country will hold us responsible to this extent, that we should not have given over the entire control to the Imperial authorities. We are a self-governing country, and we should have gone there and conducted our own business in our own way. We have given up the control of our own building, and to that extent we are guilty. I think it is a fault that we should not be accused of after all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did the architect ever give an explanation why he passed that building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that I could not get any satisfactory explanation from him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems almost incredible that he should have done that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is just as well that this parliament should know all about it. There is nothing to hide.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not suggesting——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am just stating the facts as I know them. The building is not what it should have been, and there has been a miscarriage of justice somewhere. More than that I do not know.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite clear that the Imperial Commission trusted the architect, that the architect did not do his duty, that we trusted the Imperial Commission, and that we paid our money and got no return for it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Do not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. How does that correspond with the statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture a few minutes ago, that the most conclusive inquiry could be made and that nothing would be found wrong ? And now, we are told that the correspondence, which has not been placed on the Table of the House although it ought to be in the possession of the committee, to enable it to go into this inquiry, has been carried on between the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the High Commissioner, and between the hon. minister and some one else. All this is withheld from the House, although the papers should have been put upon the Table of the House before this inquiry commenced. Certainly the House is entitled to these papers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the motion for the papers was only passed the day before yesterday.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. minister knew that this estimate was coming up today, and how is the committee intelligently to deal with it in the absence of this correspondence ? It could not be expected to do it. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has been justifying himself in regard to everything that has been done, and the whole tenor of his remarks seems to be very much as if he said : Thank God, I am not like other men. The hon. Minister of Agriculture did everything right. He read us certificates of character, and when we asked him whom these statements were from, we found that they were from his own guests, who were invited to write their autographs in his album, with a little puff, after they had probably been wined and entertained. They were written at his request, and in addition, the puffery bureau, like that which has been established in Ottawa, supplied complimentary allusions to himself, and these puffs were sent all over the counry. He says that Miss Barry was one of those so employed. He says: We allowed her to write certain papers, she was under our care, receiving our money. As a consequence she would not be likely to write in a critical strain. In my judgment, we could not expect anything from these persons which would enable us to arrive at a proper conclusion as to whether matters were well conducted or otherwise. The hon. Minister of Agriculture referred to a letter which I read from a gentleman who was in Paris, and he said that it was not in accordance practically with the truth. Well, at least, it was from an independent source, it was from a party who had no interest in either belittling the Canadian exhibit on the one side or of eulogizing it on the other. It is evidence from an independent source, and I need only mention the fact that where there was a creditable exhibit he said so and made full acknowledgment of the merits of those features of the exhibit which were deserving. I instanced the mineral display, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture told us how many diplomas and awards had been obtained in that line. The gentleman whom I quoted did not complain in regard to that. He said that there was a fairly good display of minerals, but there was no person in connection with it to give that information which should have been available so as to induce capitalists to come to Canada and invest their money in mines. We have no evidence that any such information was given, but the minister says : See the magnificent results we have achieved ! What results did he give us ? Did he tell us how many orders had been given to Canada for goods as the result of the exhibits, or how much had been sold on account of the display we made ? Not at all ; he did not say a word about that, but he went on to read the certificates of character which had come from this questionable source. If the hon. gentleman had told us that a great many orders had been given for the manufactured articles or the raw products of Canada, I would have said that the information was much more valuable than that which he gave us. These complimentary puffs are all right, but they have been well paid for, and the people of the country will know how to appreciate the importance of them. But, there is the undeniable fact that Canada's money has been squandered without any adequate return, and that the ministers admit. They found a building unsuitable for the requirements, but the money had to be paid for it. That is the sum and substance of it.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not propose to detain the committee further than to make a remark in regard to the responsibility of ministers, and of the government, in regard to this transaction. Surely, neither the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte), nor the government of which he is such a distinguished member, can hope to escape that proper ministerial responsibility that attaches to every act and transaction, no matter how remotely they should be connected with it. In the first place the hon. gentleman gives as an excuse and as a reason that it was a mistake to surrender entirely this whole matter into the hands of the Imperial Commission.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did he do it ?

Mr. CLANCY. That is a matter that involves responsibility, but I am not going to discuss that phase of it. The point I desire to make is, that when they surrendered this matter entirely into the hands of the Imperial commissioners, they did it knowing perfectly well that Canada had a representative who was also a member of the Imperial Commission. Now, the government of the day is responsible for every act that the representative of Canada does, either as a member of the Imperial Commission, or as High Commissioner, and the hon. gentleman has as much responsibility as if he did it himself, if it were done through the High Commissioner of Canada, especially as High Commissioner, or as a member of the Imperial Commission. But the hon. gentleman says that there was an inquiry that a Mr. So-and-so came to Paris after this matter had been stirred up, and that the Imperial commissioners, including the representative of Canada, all agreed that nothing could be done. It was the business of the government of Canada, through the Imperial Commission and the High Commissioner, to have made an inquiry and to have punished the offenders. There is absolutely no escape from the ministerial responsibility that attaches to the hon. gentleman and the government of which he is a member. It is perfectly idle for the minister to say it was a mistake to place the authority there. The hon. gentleman knew that he must have trusted some person, and he is responsible for having misplaced his trust.

Mr. BENNETT. The country will not be surprised at this vast unpardonable expenditure, because it was expected that the Paris exposition would be a grand carnival for a number of the Liberals and their friends. I think the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was too generous in excusing his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, nor does the fault lie altogether on the shoulders of the Minister of Agriculture, but must be shared in by the Postmaster General, who forced him to appoint this Mr. Jardine, who is utterly unfit for the position of commissioner. I think it is time now for the Minister of Agriculture, in view of my denial, should retract his statement as to the castigation this Mr. Jardine gave me on the public platform, because if that statement does not emanate from his own fertile brain—and that is quite a strain on his brain power—it must be traced to this Mr. Jardine. Who is this Mr. Jardine anyway ? Neither the Minister of Agriculture nor the Minister of Public Works knew anything about his fitness for the job, because he was forced on them by the Postmaster General. The minister told us that Mr. Jardine was selected for his knowledge of trade and commerce. Well, I have the public accounts of the province of Ontario before me, and year after year this gentleman who is so well versed in trade and commerce, occupied the position of what is called a sessional clerk in Toronto, which up there is a happy medium between a page boy and something else. It is a notorious fact that this gentleman for years has been figuring in the Ontario public accounts as a second edition of W. T. R. Preston, the local government hack, and on page after page of the public accounts appears the name of 'Jardine,' 'Jardine,' 'Jardine,' the very same gentleman who figured as a commissioner at Paris.

An hon. MEMBER. Sardine.

Mr. BENNETT. An hon. gentleman suggests 'sardine,' and he may have been that too, because I have known him to be in a pretty close box several times. I do not know who authorized this vast expenditure for furniture in Paris, but I am bound to say it was not the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I had nothing to do with that.

Mr. BENNETT. I now ask the Minister of Agriculture if it was he who authorized this huge expenditure for furniture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When I was in Paris the Canadian commissioner, Mr. Fabre, showed me his office, and I found it to be utterly inadequate for what I was sure would be the demands upon it for the exhibition. I authorized Mr. Fabre to secure another office and to furnish it, and he did so. He sent in the accounts and I was told by the commissioners that these accounts were correct, and that the goods were delivered in the manner in which the accounts showed they were.

Mr. BENNETT. If the purchases were made upon the recommendation of Mr. Fabre, then Mr. Fabre got too large a limit altogether. To pay $80 each for sofas and $27 each for chairs is an indecent expenditure of the public money. We have the startling admission made to-night that the government spent $315,000 upon the exhibition, with the result that from the very day of the opening Canada was black-eyed as to the exhibit she made, and to-night both of the ministers who went to Paris at the expense of the country, are forced to admit that thousands of dollars of this expenditure were entirely uncalled for. Let this be a warning. The Buffalo exhibition is coming on next year, and it is to be hoped that Canada will have a proper exhibition there, and that due economy will be practised. If not, the blame will be upon the head of the Minister of Agriculture much more than in the present case. Once again I repeat that the minister made a great mistake when he appointed this Mr. Jardine, who was utterly unfitted for the position he occupied. Just as Mr. Preston of Ontario was dumped on the Minister of the Interior, so Mr. Jardine was dumped on the Minister of Agriculture, and both ministers are entitled to sympathy. I suppose that after all that has been said this item might as well pass.

Mr. CLANCY. Does Mr. Fabre occupy these six rooms at the present time ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Fabre is occupying the same rooms that he and I occupied during the Paris exhibition. They are just comfortable rooms and no more. I know that the expenditure on the furniture may look a little high, but during the exhibition we had to put on airs a little.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is it necessary to keep up all that style now when the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is not there to represent Canada ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When one has fallen into decent habits it is difficult to get out of them. The rooms are still there and the furniture is there. The price was a little high, I grant, but at the same time we received thousands and thousands of callers in these rooms, and two or three thousand dollars more or less in a great advertisement of this kind does not amount to much after all. My personal opinion, apart from all party feeling, is, that the rooms were furnished in a proper way and only in a proper way.

Mr. BARKER. Was that furniture made in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Surely not.

Mr. BARKER. Why not ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It was made in 'gay Paree.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. Speaking of furniture, I think we ought to be able to establish a large market for our furniture in France. I know that orders have already been placed as a result of the exhibition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If we had sent our own furniture there, would it not have been an excellent advertisement ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I wish we had done so. I wish we had done what Australia did. They found their building in the same inferior condition as ours, and they imported wood from Western Australia, and rebuilt the entire inside of the building. We talk about spending money for Canada, but the small colony of Western Australia with a population of 150,000 people spent a vast sum of money in rebuilding their building. They imported their own architect, their lumber and their furniture, and if I had been there two months before, I think I would have asked my colleague to do the same thing. But it was too late when I arrived there, and we did the best we could. In my opinion we should give more attention to that Paris agency. I believe we could establish a large trade with France and Belgium in fruit, timber, furniture, pulp, paper and other articles. So far we have not perhaps given the Paris agency all the attention we should give it. This exhibition has been a great advertisement for Canada. The Massey-Harris Company will tell you that they are to-day selling agricultural implements in France to the value of millions of francs. I say again, if we only follow up that Paris exhibition, there is a great opening for us. It seems to me hon. gentlemen are going a little too far in criticising my hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture for things for which after all he is not responsible.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Interior if he intends to keep up the magnificent apartments in the city of Paris for the immigration agent there. It seems to me that for all the people we are getting from France, it is hardly worth while to maintain that agency; the money could be better spent in other places. It is certainly not necessary to keep up those extravagant apartments simply for an immigration agent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far this House has voted only $2,500 a year for the Paris agency. It is not enough. My hon. friend is altogether mistaken in his views. There is no use of being so much afraid of France ; it is not a bad country.

Mr. WILSON. I am not afraid of France, but how many immigrants a year are we getting from there ? This gentleman has been there for many years at a very large outlay, and what has he done for his money?

If you are going to establish an agency there for trade and commerce, that is another thing; but if you are simply going to have him as an immigrant agent, it is not necessary to give him such extravagant quarters.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Agriculture did not answer the question of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) as to what Mr. H. C. Knowlton had done for the $1,115.45 which was paid to him; also what his occupation was, and where he lived.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was answering all these question when I was interrupted. Mr. Knowlton lives in my own county. He is a fruit-grower, a business man and a farmer. I appointed him on the Paris staff in consequence of the excellent work which I found he had done at the Omaha exhibition the year before.

Mr. TAYLOR. You sent him to Omaha the year before ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did. I appointed one man from my county on the whole staff in connection with the Paris exhibition.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I see on page D—13, of the Auditor General's Report that $3,000 was paid to J. I. Tarte on account of travelling expenses. I would like to know what trips he made for the $3,000, and what he was paid besides for living expenses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Minister of Public Works was paid altogether $6,000 for his trip and expenses in connection with the Paris exhibition. The $3,000 which is put down for travelling expenses ought to be for general expenses, as should the other amount which is given for living expenses. There was no requirement that part should be paid for travelling and part for living.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) asked the Minister of Public Works if it was the intention of the government that Mr. Fabre should retain the large office which was obtained for the Paris exhibition, which was probably quite a proper thing to do. His duties in connection with the exhibition have now entirely ceased, and my hon. friend asked if it was the intention that he should still retain those offices, seeing that his duties will be now entirely different from those for which the offices were obtained. I have some hesitation in asking this question, because the hon. Minister of Public Works intimated that if a gentleman from this side of the House asked a question of that kind, he was striking at France. The sooner the hon. gentleman drops that kind of language the better for the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was joking, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman's remarks do not go to the country as a joke; but even as a joke, they are not very happy, in view of a good many things which I do not care to resuscitate or discuss to-night. I ask the hon. gentleman to answer that question.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Fabre is in the same rooms which he occupied during the exhibition. These rooms are one story higher than those he occupied under the late administration for years. There are only two rooms additional. It was found necessary for the exhibition to have the higher flat because there were two rooms additional.

Mr. WILSON. The rent and taxes are over $1,300 a year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But the apartments are in a fine location.

Mr. WILSON. It is money spent for nothing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman should weigh a little more carefully his words. The thousands of English and French Canadians who visit Paris every year will tell him that that agency has been most useful. I admit that we have not received from France as many immigrants as we should like, but we have spent very little money there. This House has voted every year only $2,000, and the vote was originated by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it the intention to keep on these apartments ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That I do not know. This question will have to be decided later.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman should know, because he is the one who suggested the leasing of them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I am not. When I reached Paris I found the rooms occupied and furnished. I simply took possession of one of them.

Mr. WILSON. The Minister of the Interior brought down a return showing that from France and Belgium we only got 483 immigrants, and it does not show how many stayed here. In view of that fact, these seem very extravagant offices.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I had with me two days ago the representative of a large French syndicate, who have settled in the Yukon, and are conducting large operations there. How have we attracted these men to this country ? By advertising this country and by having an agency in Paris. There is a large amount of French and Belgium capital that could be brought here, and French, English, Belgium and German money is good money.

Mr. TAYLOR. Were the travelling expenses of the Hon. S. A. Fisher, $526 on page D—5, in conection with the Paris exhibition ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, they are not.

Mr. CLANCY. Is Mrs. Turcotte, who had $276 for living allowance, employed in any other capacity ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. She was employed two or three years in the Railway Department and came to my department in 1899 as a typewriter and to prepare the index of my private correspondence. I took her to Paris with my private secretary, Mr. Haines, in the same capacity as that in which she was working with me in Ottawa, namely, as a typewriter and stenographer.

Mr. CLANCY. Was she a permanent employee ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, she was not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the hon. gentleman got through the explanation of the duties of the different persons which I asked him to give.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I got down as far as Col. Gourdeau when I was interrupted. Miss LeBouthillier was one of the ladies with Miss Galbraith, sent out in charge of the ladies' room and as typewriters to the commissioners. Mr. A. P. Lowe is one of the officers of the Geological Survey. He was on leave of absence in Europe and went to Paris in the place of Mr. Fallardeau, who was returning here. Mr. Macoun is an officer of the Geological Survey and well known for his scientific attainments, and especially his knowledge in connection with forestry. He took charge of the forestry exhibit in Paris. Mr. McKenna was employed under Prof. Robertson to take charge of the food products exhibit in connection with the cold storage. Mr. Perrault is the commissioner appointed from the province of Quebec. He was the first to go over to Paris to receive the goods sent from here. Mr. Scott, another commissioner, was a resident of Winnipeg and represented specially the west. He had been for a number of years representative of Manitoba in Toronto, specially engaged in showing the products and exhibits of Manitoba in the Ontario local exhibitions. I found him a most efficient business-like commissioner, and have appointed him in charge of the Glasgow exhibition. Mr. J. Otis Turcotte is a gentleman from Quebec recommended by Mr. Parent, at the request of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to be the chief of the caretakers and the employees there, to keep their time and see that they kept the building and exhibits in proper order. Mr. Perrault is a well-known fruit-grower from the village Des Aulnats, employed by Mr. Dupuis, and he had charge of the fruit exhibit. Mr. Wilmot, of the Geological Survey, had special qualifications for the setting up of the exhibits. He packed the geological exhibits and unpacked and set them up. Mr. Small went over to set up the honey and maple sugar exhibits. The honey had to be all taken and worked over before being exhibited. It was prepared a year before and was crystallized and not in fit condition to be exhibited. Anybody who understands the exhibiting of honey products knows that they have to be prepared immediately before being put on exhibition in warm weather. Mr. Small was an expert in bee culture, and he went to look after that exhibit. Mr. Angus R. Stuart went from British Columbia practically as the representative of that province. He has been living there a good many years and is well known in connection with newspaper work there and was engaged somewhat in mining. He was recommended to me by my late colleague in the House, Mr. Bostock, as a gentleman well acquainted with the industry and resources of British Columbia. He was found very satisfactory, and I have appointed him to the Glasgow staff for the coming season.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And as to Mrs. Turcotte ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mrs. Turcotte is stenographer and typewriter, and went in that capacity.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an item in the Auditor General's Report, page D—14: 'Services and expenses re women's department, $1,749.41.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was largely expenses in connection with the preparation of the women's book, a publication prepared and compiled by a number of ladies well known in connection with the charitable and other work done by the Women's Council, and other women's work done in the country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as that work in Canada was concerned, it was entirely voluntary, was it not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were some travelling expenses, printing, typewriting and editorial work. Allowances were also made to quite a number of the ladies who were not in a position, owing to financial circumstances, to devote their time to the work gratuitously. Much of the work was gratuitously done, and the general management was gratuitous.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not finding fault with the gratuities to the ladies, but, speaking under correction, the work in my own province was done gratuitously.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not say who received gratuities or who did not. A good deal of the work was done by Miss Wilson, who is secretary to the Women's Council, and who acted as editor and compiler. She was paid for her services.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. The hon. minister stated that the work done by Mr. Stuart was satisfactory. I am sorry to say that Mr. Stuart did not seem to think that the action of the hon. minister's colleague (the Minister of Public Works) was very satisfactory to him. I remember that a few months ago Mr. Stuart complained very bitterly about the treatment he received from the Minister of Public Works, stating to friends, and also to correspondents, that he had been behaved to most shabbily, and asked to do work derogatory to a man in his position. Does the hon. gentleman know of any complaints of Mr. Stuart, or was there any truth in the statements made to me ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was just saying to my colleague that I never had more trouble with a staff than with this one in Paris. A good many of the employees, not all, but a certain number, seemed to think that they nad gone to Paris on a holiday.

Mr. TAYLOR. Correct.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is not correct ; because there was a great deal of work to do. I do not wish to apply these remarks to Mr. Stuart. I do not remember treating him or any other employee in an improper way. I made them work as I worked myself. I know some of them did not like it, and I was obliged to send some of them home. I felt that Canada had a right to be represented by men who would keep sober and work, and would be on the spot when explanations were asked for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Stuart certainly made no complaint to me, when I saw him on his return ; he expressed himself as well pleased, and was extremely glad to get the appointment to go to Glasgow.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to ask the minister a question with reference to an article appearing in to-day's Montreal Gazette, which reads :

The Hon. Sidney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, is having a unique map of the province of Quebec prepared for the Pan-American exposition. It will contain the physical features, forests, possible canoe trips, routes by the early missionaries, and by Champlain, and by other early French explorers, Hudson Bay forts, ancient Indian village sites, modern Indian reserves, regions of fish and game preserves—— —and so on. Is it the intention that Quebec shall be the only province mapped out in that way for the Buffalo exposition, or may we expect that for the whole Dominion we shall have similar information furnished ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have been requested, in connection with the ethnological exhibit at Buffalo, to assist to the extent of preparing a map for Quebec, as the Ontario government is preparing a map for that province in the same way. No arrangements have yet been made, and I have not given any orders in regard to the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I certainly think that what is done for one province ought to be done for another.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—VISIT OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CORNWALL AND YORK.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I wish to draw the attention of the government to an item which appears in the government's organ, the Globe, of Toronto :

> It is learned to-night from an official source that the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall have consented to go as far as Vancouver, but their trip west must necessarily be hurried, as their Royal Highnesses will be able to spend only a month in Canada.

The item says that their Highnesses will go as far as Vancouver. It is noticeable that the press all over this country, when speaking of British Columbia, always mention Vancouver as the most westerly city of the Dominion I wish to say that there is another city further west than Vancouver and of just as much importance, and more, for it is the capital of British Columbia and the seat of the greatest wealth by far of any city in the province. But it was not that point I rose to speak about. I desire to ask whether the government have any official information as to whether their Royal Highnesses had agreed to go to the Pacific coast or not, and whether they would go to Victoria.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would prefer that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Prior) should put that question to-morrow, when the Prime Minister is in his place.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I merely brought it up because it says it is from an official source.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 6, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

GAME PRESERVATION, UNORGANIZED TERRITORY.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 46) to amend the Unorganized Territories Games Preservation Act, 1894. He said: The object of the Act is to amend a certain clause providing that the articles confiscated might belong to the convicting magistrate. That is not in accordance with good policy.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

BINDER TWINE—CHANGE OF PRICES.

On the question :

Mr. Blain—At what dates were the changes made in the prices of binder twine during 1900, and what were the changed prices?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Hon. Chas. Fitzpatrick). We are getting some information from Kingston to enable us to give the information my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) asks for. I shall probably be able to answer the question to-morrow.

PREFERENTIAL TARIFF—GOODS OF FOREIGN ORIGIN.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the government taken any, and if so, what steps, to ascertain the percentage of value of the goods of foreign origin which have been imported into the United Kingdom, and thence exported to Canada, to which the preferential tariff has applied?
2. What percentage of value of goods entered under the preferential tariff is of foreign origin?
3. In what foreign countries did goods or material originate which have been enhanced in value by British workmanship so as to be entitled to the advantage of our preferential tariff?
4. What are the names of such countries, and the value of the goods coming from each?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). I do not know whether I have fully apprehended the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Clarke's) question, but I think the answer I am about to give will convey the information he desires to have. Under the regulations and practice governing the preferential tariff, manufactured goods entitled to be admitted under such tariff, must be finally manufactured in Great Britain or her colonies and possessions entitled to the preference, and there must have entered into the production of such articles British labour to the extent of at least 25 per cent of the value of the articles in each case. Exporters of such articles to Canada are required to subscribe to the following certificate :

I, (1) ..... the exporter of the articles included in this invoice, have the means of knowing, and do hereby certify that said invoice being from myself to (2) ..... and amounting to (3)..... .... is true and correct; that all the articles included in the said invoice are bona fide the produce or manufacture of one or more of the following countries, viz.:—(4) .... and that a substantial portion of the labour of one or more of such countries has entered into the production of every manufactured article included in said invoice to the extent in each article of not less than one-fourth of the value of every such article in its present condition ready for export to Canada.

Signed.....

Dated at .....this .....189....

In certain cases where doubt has arisen regarding the right of preferential entry, inquiry has been made through the High Commissioner's office, and by correspondence with the exporters as to the proportions of British labour or material, and foreign material represented in the article exported to Canada.

There is no record of the amount of foreign material which, in some cases, enters into British manufactured articles entitled to the preference, nor is there any record of the countries where such foreign material originates. Quite a number of manufactured articles imported under the preference are, of course, entirely British, both in respect to material and workmanship.

IMPORTATION OF TOMATOES.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth) asked :

What was the quantity and value, each week, of tomatoes imported during July and August, 1900?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). The hon. gentleman's question asks for a return of the quantity and value of each week. I can only give the hon. gentleman that information by a special return from all the ports, which would entail a length of time, and perhaps I would not be able to secure it for the hon. gentleman during the session. However, if he wishes, I will do so. But I can give him the imports by the month, and perhaps that would answer the purpose that he has in view. The quantity and value of tomatoes imported into Canada as entered at the custom-house during July and August, 1900, are as follows :—

	Quantity.	Value.
July	9,409 bushels	$8,569
August	4,458 bushels	3,758

STAFF IN RAILWAY SHOPS AT MONCTON.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

1. How many mechanics have been dismissed from the railway shops at Moncton since the 7th day of November last?

2. For what reasons have these men been dismissed?

3. At whose instance were they dismissed?

4. Were charges preferred against them, or any of them, and if so, by whom, and were investigations held?

5. Have their places in the shops been filled by new appointments?

6. What are the names of the men dismissed and of the new appointments?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Changes to the number of thirty-one have been made in the railway shops since November last.

2. These changes were made by the officers at Moncton, under general authority, but without individual instructions as to any men in the employ, the superintendent exercising his own discretion in such cases. The changes were made in order to improve the organization and to secure more efficient service.

3. The department takes the entire responsibility of the changes made.

4. No charges were preferred, nor investigations held. It has not been customary to do so in the past.

5. Others have been taken on in the shops, and are on trial as to their competency.

6. The names of the men whose services were dispensed with will be furnished by a return, if the hon. member will move for the same.

REQUEST FOR BI-LINGUAL COMMISSIONER.

Mr. GAUVREAU—by Mr. Pope—asked :

Whether the hon. Minister of Railways is aware that in making investigations in cases of damage to property on the line of the Intercolonial Railway, between Montreal and Ste. Flavie, the commissioner sent from Moncton was an official who neither spoke nor understood the language spoken by those living in the province of Quebec, and who had suffered such damage?

If so, is it the intention of the department to remedy this faulty and expensive mode of proceeding; and how does the department propose to attain that end?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Yes, I have learned that such was the case in one instance, and I propose to remedy the difficulty by assigning a clerk for the claims agent who speaks and understands the French language.

SCHEDULING OF CANADIAN CATTLE.

Mr. BICKERDIKE asked :

Has the government taken any steps to secure the repeal of the Imperial statute scheduling Canadian cattle imported into the United Kingdom? Is it the intention of the government to press this very important question on the Imperial authorities at an early date?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I may say that, as representing the government, I have taken every opportunity for a number of years back to urge this question upon the Imperial authorities, through Lord Strathcona chiefly. When I was in England myself I interviewed the Minister of Agriculture and the veterinary authorities of that department. I may say that I hope to proceed to England again this spring, and I shall make it my business to urge this matter with the utmost insistence upon the Imperial authorities, as I have continued to do ever since I have been in office.

HONORARY DECORATIONS AT PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. LEMIEUX asked :

1. Is the government aware that no honorary decorations have been granted to members of the Canadian commission, or to exhibitors, at the late Paris exposition, in which Canada participated officially?

2. Were such honorary decorations awarded to Canadians in connection with the previous expositions at Paris, in 1855, 1867 and 1878?

3. If so, how many, and to whom?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). The government is aware that no honorary decorations have been granted to members of the Canadian commission, and no orders were conferred by the French government on any of the colonial attachés at the request of the Imperial authorities. In 1878 Mr. J. X. Perrault, Dr. May, and others, received the Legion of Honour. I have no means of finding out what was done in 1855 or 1867, there being no records of it in the department.

PURCHASE BY GOVERNMENT OF PROPERTIES AT SYDNEY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Has the government or the Department of Railways and Canals purchased within the past ten months any properties at Sydney, North Sydney, North Sydney Junction, and other places from Sydney to Grand Narrows Bridge, for Intercolonial Railway purposes?

2. From whom have such properties been purchased?

3. What is the area of each property respectively?

4. What price has been or is to be paid to each person from whom each property was purchased?

5. In what way was the price fixed or determined?

6. Will the Minister of Railways lay upon the Table a sketch plan showing the properties purchased or arranged to be purchased?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Answering the first five questions together, properties have been purchased within the past ten months as follows :—

At Sydney—6,480 square feet of land from Henry Lecras. Price paid $1,500. Offer reasonable from owner, accepted by Railway Department.

10 2-10 acres of land from heirs of Birchall. Price paid $10,000. Offer reasonable, accepted by Railway Department.

3 84-100 acres expropriated from Nelson E. Muggah, June 14, 1900. Valuator recommends $33,300. Amount not tendered. Considered excessive.

7,314 square feet expropriated from Edward C. Leahy, June 14, 1900. Valuator recommends $2,000. Amount not yet tendered, but may be offered.

Two lots, total 48,906 square feet expropriated from Henry Mitchell. Valuator recommends $11,320 for land and $4,000 for damage to six lots at rear. Amounts not tendered.

At North Sydney Junction—5 5-10 acres from Edward J. Johnson. Price paid $200. Reasonable offer from owner accepted by Railway Department.

75-100 acre from William H. Johnson for $40. Reasonable offer of owner accepted by department.

No land has been purchased within time mentioned at North Sydney, or between North Sydney Junction and Grand Narrows.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I call the minister's attention to number six, and ask whether there will be any trouble in preparing a small sketch plan to indicate these properties concerned ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not imagine there will be. On the other hand, of course, the lands in Sydney are not lying together, but we will be able to make a plan.

RETURNING OFFICER FOR WEST PRINCE.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Was Mr. Benjamin Gallant, returning officer for the riding of West Prince, P.E.I., at the election held on the 7th November, 1900, paid all amounts asked by him to defray expenses in connection with said election?

2. If he has not been supplied with money to pay said expenses, on what grounds were the payments withheld?

3. Has he been forwarded money to pay the fees of each of the deputy returning officers at the twenty-seven polling divisions in West Prince, opened, and at which votes were polled at said election?

4. If he has not paid all such deputy returning officers, why not, and what are their names?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

1. Mr. Gallant has not been paid all amounts asked by him in connection with the election in West Prince. The accompanying statement shows the accounts paid and unpaid.

2. The notes on the statement referred to above show the grounds on which payment has been withheld in each case.

3. He has received money to pay the fees of the deputy returning officers, but in some cases the total mileage claimed has not been allowed for the reasons given on the statement.

4. As Mr. Gallant has not yet reported the distribution of the amount placed in his hands to pay the fees and allowances, it is impossible to say whether he has paid all the deputy returning officers or not.

The Auditor General has accompanied this with a memorandum which I will send across the floor for the hon. gentleman's information.

PRINTING OUTSIDE GOVERNMENT BUREAU.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. In what printing office was the official catalogue of Canadian exhibitors at the Paris exposition, last year, printed?
2. What was the total issue of said volume?
3. What was the average cost per volume?
4. Who supplied the paper for the work?
5. If printed in any establishment other than the Government Printing Bureau, why was this done?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher) :

1. The Herald Publishing Company of Montreal.
2. 5,000 copies.
3. 38½ cents per copy.
4. Herald Publishing Company.
5. Owing to pressure of work in Printing Bureau.

TRANSPORTATION OF GRAIN.

Mr. WM. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe) moved :

That in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when a fixed and definite line of action should be undertaken on the question of the transportation of the grain and other commodities of the North-west Territories, Manitoba and the western states, with a view of centreing the same to the greatest possible extent in Canadian channels.

He said : Last year I had the honour of making a motion in the same terms as the one which I have just read. At that time it attracted the attention of a large number of gentlemen on either side of the House, and it also excited a considerable amount of attention and caused a large amount of discussion throughout the country by the public press, showing that the public are greatly interested in the question of transportation. The question of transportation is doubtless one of the largest questions in the public eye of Canada at the present time. That is shown by the fact that the Dominion government is from time to time expending large sums of money in the improvement of the canal service and in the construction of railways, either directly or by granting large subsidies for that purpose. And beyond that, private capitalists are from time to time investing in railways in this country, or constructing railways, showing, as it does, the great interest in the work. To the farmer of the western prairies the question of transportation is to-day probably the largest one before his view, because, the cheapening of grain transportation or carriage from the west to the east must result, in some part, in his participating in the cheapening of that transportation, and with the development of the northern part of Ontario, rich in mineral and timber resources, a great deal of interest centres in the fact that transportation may be cheapened from the west to the seaboard. The question also is of great importance in the province of Ontario and in other provinces in this that we are hoping to build up in the older provinces a large manufacturing trade and if we are to have customers for the manufactured products of these provinces we must after all expect to find them on our western prairies. The people of the older provinces, burdened as they have been for a great many years by raising large sums of money for the construction of railways in the west, and particularly the Canadian Pacific Railway, are anxious to see any plan of transportation adopted that can result in their being able to place manufactured goods in the west at cheaper rates than they can now be placed there. Now, in regard to the question of the policy of past governments a most striking point doubtless is the large expenditure on the canal system, and I presume that I am within the mark when making the statement that $75,000,000, or even more, has been expended on the construction of the St. Lawrence and Welland canal systems, and according to the signs of the times large sums of money are to be expended by this government in still furthering these projects. While we are spending these large sums of money there is something which is withdrawn from the public to-day, and it is the idea of stability on the part of the government because members of the government are from time to time speaking of going farther in this, and of the possibility and chance that the government will take up other plans and projects with the view of ending this transportation question. So long as the government dangle before different sections of the provinces and the Dominion these gigantic projects, there can never be the possibility that the public will be assured that any plan is to be a permanent or lasting one for the future. I am quite well aware of the fact that political considerations may in the past have weighed in some of these projects, but has the time not arrived when political considerations should be dropped, and even at the risk of offending the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) and the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) in this debate, I must say this, and say it at the outset, that I fear and I think the public believe too, that too much heed is at present being paid to political considerations in the expenditures and in the expected expenditures of vast sums of money in this country. We have in all lines of business a guiding star to lead people on and that is the success that others have attained in any particular project or enterprise of a similar kind, and looking to-day at the question of transportation, it must be plainly manifest to the world that the Americans in their route by way of Buffalo and New York by water from different points on the great lakes have seemingly achieved the solution of the transportation question. It is to be regretted that, while we in Canada have spent and are spending millions of dollars on the St. Lawrence canal system year by year, we see with mortification that less grain is being shipped down this canal system upon which such large sums of money are being spent. Let me say, so far as this government are concerned, that if the St. Lawrence canal system is a failure, comparatively speaking, no blame is to be attached to the present government, because these gentlemen came into power finding a well-defined line of policy on the part of the late administration, and the present administration would have been blameable, I believe, and would have been blamed by the country and by the press, had they not done exactly as they did, finding the work uncompleted and under tender, had they not gone on with the contracts that were then pending and completed the work as the work has been completed to-day. It is true that the government have claimed a great deal of credit in the past for the construction of this St. Lawrence canal system, while, as a matter of fact, they have simply carried on the lines of policy laid down by the late administration and whether it is a failure or success no blame can attach to the present administration, because the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals simply followed out the line of policy formulated by the late government. Last year this question was under discussion ; last year the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals had warning notes thrown out to him not only from this side of the House, but by his own political friends, but despite the warning notes then thrown out to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and the hon. Minister of Public Works, because, in their departments occur these great expenditures in this regard, these hon. gentlemen have still kept the public in a vacillating and doubtful frame of mind wondering what possible move is next to be made on the transportation checker board, so to speak, by this administration. While speaking from his place in this House the hon. member from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who is not present to-day, made these remarks :

> Whether the building of the St. Lawrence canals was a mistake or not, and whether or not a heavy expenditure at Port Colborne is necessary, I think we have gone far enough in that direction until we have more reliable data as to effect of improvements in railways and reductions in cost of transportation by railways in Canada and the United States.

If that word of warning from the hon. member for North Norfolk was timely last year, how much more so is it to-day, in view of the fact that the government have a great many plans and projects before the public asking for commendation and in due time I have no doubt parliament will be asked to sanction the expenditure not of hundreds of thousands of dollars but of millions. At the outset, I think there is a sort of mistaken idea in the minds of the people as to the extent of the trade which is to be assured to the Canadian system of transportation. At first sight it would seem that it is not a question of our reaching out simply for the Canadian trade or reaching out for a large portion of the trade of the United States. A glance at the map will show hon. gentlemen the fact that there is a certain area of the United States export trade which we in Canada may successfully bid for. We may, in Canada, hope, in time, to ensure this to our Canadian facilities and this has been demonstrated for two or three years beyond the possibility of a doubt. In this connection some figures may be interesting, which are compiled from the public reports to show the extent of the trade from certain American ports which we in Canada have a fair means of reaching out for by way of our Canadian schemes of transportation. At the port of New York I find from the figures of 1899 that there were exported no less a quantity than 93,830,352 bushels of grain. At the port of Boston there were exported 28,905,095 bushels of grain, and at the port of Baltimore 56,335,397 bushels. I have not the figures of the other American ports because I think that these are the only exporting points which we may hope to compete with to a certain extent.

Let us look for a moment at the vast trade that is done at the port of Buffalo. In the year 1899, the immense quantity of 153,393,184 bushels of grain passed through that port, and in addition to that there was handled at Buffalo, 40,899,928 bushels of grain in flour, or in all nearly 200,000,000 bushels. I have before referred to the superiority of the Buffalo system as shown by the immense trade that port does, compared with the relatively small quantity of grain passing through the St. Lawrence canal system, and which I regret to say is lessening year after year, compared with what is known as the Grand Trunk Railway and Canada Atlantic systems. The trade of Buffalo has largely increased in the last few years, owing to the fact that the railway and the shipping interests have worked hand in hand in modern improvements. There was a time on the great lakes, when a vessel carrying 20,000 or 25,000 bushels of grain was supposed to be of very considerable size, but that day has gone past, and the grain freighter of the present time is a vessel carrying a quarter million bushels. Last year a vessel was launched at Cleveland, with a capacity of carrying 300,000 bushels of grain. A little consideration will show that that class of vessel is the one which has come to stay on the great lakes. These large vessels can be run at a comparatively less cost than the smaller ones, because the crew carried by the large vessels is not very much larger than that of the small vessels, while the expense of the higher class of officers is practically the same on both. I have seen on the lakes between Port Arthur, Chicago and Midland, a rate of five cents a bushel; so that a vessel carrying 300,000 bushels will earn $15,000 in freight, while the smaller vessel carrying 20,000 bushels will only earn the trifling sum of $1,000. It stands to reason that the demand should be for the large vessels, and the large vessels alone. I know that in the debate last year, there was a difference of opinion on that point between the hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell), and the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). I am not here to decide between these two gentlemen, but in my humble opinion the signs of the times go to show that the hon. member for Quebec West was wrong in his contention. I believe that the time has not yet arrived for what may be termed canal freighters, but the day has certainly come for the larger class of vessels on the great lakes.

And, while they have been increasing the size of the vessels on the great lakes, the railways have not been idle by any means. There was a time when the railways between Buffalo and New York ran comparatively small trains, and with cars capable of carrying only 600 bushels; but I am credibly informed that to-day, there are cars on this railway system carrying 1,500 bushels, and locomotives which can each haul thirty of these large cars. A comparison can easily be drawn as to the very great saving which will be effected by the present railway system of doing business as against that of former days. There are many indications that the Buffalo grain trade is likely to increase. One reason is that there is always to be had cheap freight by boat between Buffalo, Duluth and Chicago. By reason of what are known as the coasting regulations, only these large American vessels can ply between Buffalo and Chicago, or any other American port on the great lakes. A Canadian vessel cannot trade between Buffalo and any American port, and so she is restricted to carrying between Buffalo and Port Arthur, or some other Canadian point. The result of that is that these American vessels are able to enter the ore carrying trade, which is now a very considerable factor in the United States, when the heavy grain trade of the spring is over. They leave the grain trade in the spring, and engage in the ore carrying trade during the summer months, and again in the fall they enter the grain carrying business. From time to time they are constructing more boats on the American side, in view of the guarantee which they have that they will not only be able to engage in the grain trade in the spring and fall, but that they can carry ore during the summer months. There is another factor which militates against the grain carrying trade of Canada, and that is that ocean freight rates have been much cheaper from American ports than they have been from the ports of Montreal, St. John or Halifax. The reason is that there are always to be found a large number of ocean steamers in these American cities plying to European countries. In that respect the Buffalo grain trade has had a decided advantage in the past. The receipts of grain at Buffalo during the past year amounted to 57,000,000 bushels, from Chicago; 50,000,000 bushels from Duluth; 17,000,000 bushels from Milwaukee; 3,500,000 bushels from the Canadian port of Fort William, and the balance of 26,000,000 bushels from other points, mainly on Lake Michigan. These figures show that the American people have been able to attract the bulk of the trade of the western states to the port of Buffalo, and not only that, but that they have been able to encroach on the Canadian trade from Port Arthur or Fort William to the extent of 3,500,000 bushels. This certainly should not be the case. With this condition of things staring us in the face, is it not time that we should take some measures to endeavour to cope with the enterprise of the American people, and to direct the current of trade into Canadian channels. We in this country, are to-day, largely relying on the canal system for this trade as the Americans relied on it in the past, but the Americans have changed their principle of doing business, and we can see for ourselves that the canal system is a failure.

Surely the time has arrived when this parliament, before it plunges into an expenditure of millions of dollars more through the government of the day, should adopt some fixed and definite policy, so that for a few years to come we may know where we are at. The grain trade of the west is going through Buffalo to the tune of nearly 200,000,000 bushels per year, while the grain trade at Montreal year after year is lessening. In the year 1898, 38,710,259 bushels of grain passed through the port of Montreal; in 1899, 30,541,702 bushels passed through; and in 1900, according to a computation which one must make, as the report of the Montreal Board of Trade does not show exactly what was carried in grain and what was carried in flour, only some 22,000,000 bushels must have passed through. Unfortunately, we are not able to ascertain whether that grain went down the St. Lawrence canal system; but, from all I can learn, instead of that quantity going down the canal system, less than 10,000,000 bushels actually passed down the St. Lawrence canals. The figures of the Canada Atlantic show that that line handled some 13,000,000 bushels from Parry Sound to Montreal, which would leave only 9,000,000 bushels to go down by the St. Lawrence canals ; and the facts point to this being the case. While at Prescott and Kingston a large grain-handling trade has been done in past years, it is a regrettable fact that at Prescott no trade at all was done last year, and the trade of Kingston has diminished to a very appreciable extent. We have been attempting to build up the port of Montreal ; yet, after the large expenditure which we have incurred with that object, the truth must dawn on us that year by year, in spite of the deepening of the canal system from 10 feet to 14 feet, the grain trade of that port is very greatly diminishing.

It may be said that there are many reasons why the trade of the port of Montreal has not been built up. I am free to admit that that is so. In discussing this question with marine men and men conversant with the shipping trade, one hears that there is a great shortage of Canadian vessels. There will always be a shortage of Canadian vessels so long as the government continue to play fast and loose with this transportation question. What inducement is there for a man to-day to engage in Canadian shipping ? If he builds a Canadian bottom, he is restricted to the trade between Port Arthur and the port of Montreal, or Georgian Bay ports, whereas if he builds a vessel in the United States, he has not only the grain trade between Buffalo and any point in the northern lakes to rely upon, but he has during the summer months recourse to the vast ore trade, which is even a more profitable carrying trade than the grain trade. While the government are vacillating in their policy, vessel men hardly know what kind of vessel to build, if they are inclined to build a Canadian craft. They are told that the government intend to have the St. Lawrence canals so constructed as to accommodate vessels going all the way from Port Arthur to Montreal. If you are going to have on that trade vessels with a capacity of 50,000 bushels, these are a class of vessels which cannot possibly compete with the larger vessels on the great lakes. In the same breath hon. gentlemen bespeak for use in Canada a class of vessels to carry grain from Port Arthur to Port Colborne—vessels which are very much larger than those which have been projected.

There are some other points in Canada to which we have been attempting to attract trade ; and in this connection I am going to refer to Halifax and St. John. It must be remembered that every one of these plans of transportation that have been projected contemplate the expenditure of hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars. What did we see last year ? The government of Canada had at Halifax a large grain elevator. The construction of that elevator, from all I can learn, had been demonstrated to be practically a failure ; yet, in the face of that, the Minister of Railways and Canals saw fit in his wisdom, last year, to construct at St. John a large elevator, which, with the docks and wharfs and approaches, has involved an expenditure of half or three-quarters of a million dollars ; and I am sorry to say that one may fairly attribute to the hon. gentleman political reasons for his action. What happened at that port last year ? The minister had his elevators and canals completed ; he had his railway system established to that point ; yet, with that elevator standing there a monument, I will not say to his folly, but to his lack of business judgment, the Minister of Railways and Canals, in order to please the people of St. John, brings to that port, over the Canada Atlantic Railway to Montreal, and from there by the Intercolonial to St. John, 300,000 bushels of grain, to demonstrate that grain could be carried over that system of railways ; and the demonstration meant a loss to the revenue of Canada of $10,000. It is all very well to be patriotic ; it is all very well to build up a trade in the interest of the port of St. John ; but, surely the people of Canada are not to be asked to spend money at this rate simply to prove that the elevator at St. John has an adequate carrying capacity.

Now, looking at the canal system of the Dominion, we find from the experience of the past season, that the largest boat that passed from the upper lakes and went through to Montreal carried 45,000 bushels of grain ; and it is the opinion of practical vessel men to-day that it is utterly impossible to carry at a profit so small a quantity of grain so great a distance. What was the opinion of the hon. Minister of Railways last year on this question ? Speaking in this House, the hon. gentleman said :

> We will see that with Montreal properly equipped, there is no reason in the world why we should not be able to offer sufficient inducements to shippers of grain in the west to prefer the St. Lawrence to any other route.

After a number of years, we find that the grain shipments at the port of Montreal have decreased to a most visible extent. Therefore, the opinion of the Minister of Railways last year was, I regret to say, rather a mistaken one. That hon. gentleman considered that one of the most desirable things in our canal system was this, that we would be able to carry through from points on the upper lakes heavy freight to Montreal, and to-day, with the deepening of the canal system, we find that last year the largest vessel that went down carried some 45,000 bushels. I am free to admit that the Welland canal to-day is only 14 feet deep, and that no doubt larger vessels should pass down that canal than those carrying 45,000 bushels. But there is this fact to be borne in mind. The Welland canal system is still water, and freighters will not take the risk of carrying vessels deeply laden down the St. Lawrence that they would through the still water of the canal. But whether there are 14 feet or not in the St. Lawrence system, I am informed that experience will prove that even with 14 feet, you can never hope to carry through vessels with much more than 50,000 bushels capacity. If you take vessels with 50,000 bushels from Fort William through to Montreal, you will find that they must of necessity return unloaded. There is no freight for vessels from Montreal to Toronto, or other points, to any appreciable extent. True, you may have freight for some of them, but not to any great extent, and the result is that boats are going back up the St. Lawrence system with comparatively little freight, and the more boats there are employed in that service the less quantity of return freight will there be for each.

It was demonstrated in the past year by the Algoma Central Railway Company, that it will not pay to send vessels right through from points on the lakes to the old country. They sent some boats over to the old country laden with steel billets, and the result was that these boats carried at a much less sum than paid their expenses, and the company were considerably out on the deal.

I need not go into the question of vessels leaving Fort William, and going clear to the old country. This proposition is so absurd that it does not require to be refuted. If you were to secure vessels capable even of carrying 60,000 bushels from Fort William to Liverpool, you would be brought into competition with the large first-class freighters at Montreal; and could not compete against the mixed cargoes and passenger lists on the ocean passenger vessels from the port of Montreal, so that transportation from the head of the great lakes through to Liverpool is a matter altogether out of the question.

Might I call the attention of the House to the fact that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has not been able to carry out the pledges he made last year as to the deepening of the St. Lawrence canal system. That is not a matter anybody can find fault with. We can only regret it, but we can hold the minister to this, that he ventured a prophecy, with all the information at his hand as chief of the department, and so did the hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell), as a member of the administration, concerning trade that would accrue to the St. Lawrence canal system this year, and despite that prophecy we find that the St. Lawrence canal system is going behind in grain receipts. The hon. member for Quebec West said last year :

> We only got 8 per cent in the past year, and in the year 1901, we would obtain no less than 20 per cent of the grain-carrying trade.

If 8 per cent was the correct figure last year, we have fallen far short of that, and have not come up to his expectation of 20 per cent.

I am not here to complain of the action of the government in going on with this St. Lawrence canal system. The government and the Minister of Railways came into office and found this fixed line of policy adopted by the late administration, the policy of deepening the St. Lawrence canal system, and if it has been a failure, the government cannot be held to account, nor can the late government be considered responsible, because the changes on the American side in the improvement of transportation, have militated against the interests of the St. Lawrence canal.

Hon. gentlemen may say that it is all very well to offer criticism, but some solution should be suggested, and he who simply stands and complains ought not to be listened to. But, I do not pretend to be voicing my opinions on this question, because I have no practical ideas. I am simply stating what I learn from vessel owners and others interested in the shipping trade, and what I have learned by the experience of the past. That experience has taught us that the people of the United States have laid down a definite line of policy. Their shipping interests, both by rail and water, have laid down the policy that you must construct on the great lakes the largest possible freighters, and have the most complete and modern means of railway communication. Carry that grain by vessel to the nearest point of navigation on the great lakes, and then on to the seaboard by the most modern means known to railway enterprise. Keeping in view the fact that we have been spending millions of dollars on our canal system, and that the more money we have been spending the poorer results we get, surely it is time to call a halt, and before all our grain goes into American channels let us see if we cannot improve upon the present canal system by some other means. The government could do this. They should at once as a whole, bind themselves to a fixed line of policy, and not have each individual member of the government formulating different lines of policy on the question of transportation. That they should stop at once and for ever, and adopt as a body a fixed and definite line of policy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does the hon. gentleman mean by that. I would really like little light thrown on that question.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not intend to refer to that at present, but will do so. The hon. Minister of Railways last year told the country that the St. Lawrence canal system was to be the system of the country. The hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell) said that we were only doing 8 per cent of the trade, and that next year, when we had 14 feet of water in the canal, we would do 20 per cent of the trade. How has that prophecy been fulfilled ? The trade has fallen far short of his expectation, and I regret that such has been the case. And while you were endeavouring to build up our transportation trade by the St. Lawrence canals—and you can only build up any successful means of transportation by engaging capital in the business—you are frightening every man who may wish to engage in the vessel business——

Mr. GERMAN. What proposition does the hon. gentleman make as a remedy ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like my hon. friend to answer my question. He alleged that the government were split up and divided in their policy, that one member of the cabinet had one view and another another. Will the hon. gentleman give his justification for this statement.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I will deal now with that point which the minister has raised. I recall the circumstance that two or three years ago the Minister of Railways spoke in the city of Halifax at a meeting of the board of trade, and he drew there what I believe was a truthful picture of the position of the transportation question in the country. He said : It is true, against the wishes of our political opponents, but in accordance with what we thought was the proper idea, we have now a means of communication from Lévis, which had hitherto been the termination of the Intercolonial Railway, clear through to the city of Montreal ; we have now a railway system from St. John and from Halifax to the port of Montreal, still I am free to confess, said the minister, we are in a very handicapped position. Our cars arrive at the city of Montreal and we find them empty. These cars we wish to take down to build up the trade of St. John and Halifax. As soon as we arrive at Montreal we are confronted with the fact that there are loaded cars there belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway and to the Grand Trunk Railway. In our dilemma, he said, we approached the Grand Trunk Railway people and said to them : You have grain at Montreal, we wish to take that grain over the Intercolonial Railway system down to St. John or Halifax. The Grand Trunk Railway replied at once : We can carry our grain to Portland, which is some 300 miles shorter—I believe that was the distance—than the Grand Trunk Railway haul to St. John. As a result of that, he said, we are not able to secure from the Grand Trunk Railway Company a bushel of grain to carry down to the ocean. Now, he said, in our dilemma, we turned to the Canadian Pacific Railway and we asked them to give us the grain brought from the west to the port of Montreal, and the Canadian Pacific Railway replied to us : We have a shorter route to St. John than you have by the Intercolonial Railway, by some 300 miles. The result is, said the hon. gentleman, that we have our empty cars at Montreal, and we are not able to get freight from the Grand Trunk Railway or from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and therefore we had nothing but failure staring us in the face.

Now, I think I have correctly stated the gist of the hon. gentleman's remarks in the city of Halifax on that occasion. But he went further at that time and outlined a policy on the part of the government, and that is the question which is to-day before the public. He said, there is a line of railway known as the Canada Atlantic Railway which runs from Montreal to a point on the Georgian Bay, to Depot Harbour. Now, he says, the policy of the government might be to acquire this line, and if we acquired that line we would have uninterrupted railway communication from a point on the Georgian Bay, by the Booth system, clear through to St. John or to Halifax, and then we would be in a position to bid for the grain trade ourselves. I think the minister will give me credit for stating correctly what he said on that occasion. But a sign of the times appeared later on. An hon. member who has the honour of representing the county of Hants (Mr. Russell) in this House, and who is accredited with holding a pretty prominent position in the House on the government side, came shortly afterwards to the rescue of the government and of the minister's line of policy, because there appeared from him in one of the Halifax newspapers a strong letter favouring the purchase of this Booth railway system. Now, I do not know whether the hon. member for Hants had the authority of the minister for formulating that policy for the government ; but I do know that neither the Minister of Public Works nor the Minister of Railways and Canals will to-day stand up in the House and say that the government has not discussed, and that the government has not contemplated, the acquisition of what is known as the Booth line. Let me tell the Minister of Railways and Canals this, that it is in the mouths of the people east and west that that line is to be purchased by the government. Let me tell him more than this, that last winter when there was a good deal of discussion over the purchase of this road, a prominent personal friend who has the honour of sitting in this House, who is a gentleman of wealth, paid a flying visit to the town of Parry Sound and was looking around for real estate in that quarter. Surely that gentleman must have had an idea that the government were about to acquire the Booth line. So the minister is blowing both hot and cold. At one moment his government is going to buy out the Booth railway and throw the St. Lawrence system to the winds, and going to secure an uninterrupted railway communication clear through from a point on the Georgian Bay to a point on the Atlantic.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will permit an interruption. I understand that to be the ground upon which he made the statement a few moments ago. Now, at the risk of disturbing the completeness of his argument, I may say to the hon. gentleman that down to this moment, so far as I am aware, there never has been a word, not one syllable of a discussion in council on the subject of the purchase of the Parry Sound Railway, nor, so far as I am aware, has there been among the members of the council.

Mr. BENNETT. Of course I accept the statement of the Minister of Railways that in council the question has not been discussed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no hesitation in making that statement.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I must say the hon. gentleman puts himself in a very odd position. He goes before the public in the province of Nova Scotia as a responsible minister of this government, and he there lays down a line of policy for the acquisition of this railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BENNETT. Then the hon. gentleman was not sincere at Halifax, he was humbugging.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never made such a statement. The hon. gentleman will find it difficult to find, even in a hostile newspaper or from any other source, a report that I stated the government was to purchase the Canada Atlantic Railway or the Parry Sound Railway. I think that the hon. gentleman is confusing two things. As I recollect the speech I delivered then, the idea I had in my mind was that arrangements could be made whereby an interchange of traffic could take place between the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. I had no idea of purchasing the Canada Atlantic Railway.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I will take the minister's word.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman will find that to be the case if he will read the speech.

Mr. BENNETT. Unfortunately, I have not the speech under my hand. Then the position of the minister is this, that at Halifax on that occasion he outlined, not the purchase of the railway, but the securing of running rights over that road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, not that either. The hon. gentleman does not understand the meaning of the English language.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand an interchange of traffic to mean a participation in profits between the Intercolonial Railway and the Booth system. That is correct, I think.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not understand that.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, what I understand by an interchange of traffic is that both parties to the contract would like to have some of the profits—or it may be that the minister was prepared to concede to the Booth people all the profits. But I will accept, and ask the House to accept, the hon. gentleman's own word that an arrangement was to be made between the two companies by which there would be an interchange of traffic. In other words, that the trade down the Booth line would be diverted over the Intercolonial Railway to the interest and to the benefit of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, mark what the hon. gentleman was doing. He was giving the public of Canada, who might be favourable to the transportation by way of the St. Lawrence route, fair notice that he was going to fight them with another arrangement, and that arrangement was the Booth line. That is the position into which he has brought himself to-day. He has got the carrying trade of this country into this position, that they have no faith in the stability of the government as to their line of policy. And to-day they have this additional fact, that the Minister of Railways and Canals has had in his mind—and no doubt, because he is an active man, he may spring it on the council soon—that this plan must be carried out of a trade arrangement with the Booth line, and if that is done, then it follows that it must be at the cost of the St. Lawrence canal system. Now, I think there are proofs, outside of any statements made by the hon. gentleman opposite, that the government is about to acquire the Booth system. If they are not going to acquire it, I can only say that they are proceeding very strangely with the expenditure of public money. This government has been advertising for tenders for the construction of large works at Depot Harbour, the terminus of the Booth line. And, may I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals—for the time has gone past for that contract—if the information is correct that comes to me that these works are to cost $150,000 or $200,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are no works being carried on in my department of that kind. I do not know what progress has been made by the Department of Public Works in connection with the matter. Some aid, I think, was granted by parliament last year toward piers there, the same as for other harbours. But that has nothing to do with any proposition to acquire the Canada Atlantic, so far as I ever heard, or so far as it has been discussed by the government.

Mr. BENNETT. I have been informed—and I asked the question so as not to mislead the House—that the contemplated public works are to cost the country upwards of $200,000. That is to say, at the terminus of the Booth system they are expending $200,000 for works in which the public will have no real interest, and which will be a benefit only to the Booth system of railway. It is openly stated in that section that it is the intention of the Booth system to construct an elevator on those docks, or rather the intention of the government, for it is expected that the government are about to take over the railway system. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that these ideas are not going forth by the authority of members of the cabinet. Where is the hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell), and the hon. Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick), who has an important place in this government? He has been telling us, and the Quebec press are all the time assuring the public, that the whole scheme of the St. Lawrence canal system is practically at an end, that it is to be revolutionized in its entirety, that the Booth system is to be purchased, that the Great Northern road, which connects, I believe, at Hawkesbury, is to be taken over and used to carry the grain from Parry Sound direct to Quebec, there to be transhipped to vessels and to be taken out of the country.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) to say that that is what I have been saying in Quebec?

Mr. BENNETT. If I attributed the words to the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Dobell), I should not have done so, because I have not read any speeches of his. But I have seen it stated in the public press, and it has been a matter of current comment, that the government intend to acquire the so-called Great Northern Railway, and then the connection will be made through from Parry Sound to Quebec.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. Quite right.

Mr. BENNETT. And the hon. gentleman agrees with that?

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. That is not the statement that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) made, but I shall be pleased to say a few words when the hon. gentleman has finished his speech.

Mr. BENNETT. And I will be bound to say that the hon. member for Quebec West will be too loyal to the interests of his constituents to oppose such a scheme. The papers are full of it. And I think the Solicitor General told us the other day that he would speak on the transportation question. I think he will say the solution of the whole question is a system of railways through to Quebec, and if you can keep Quebec open in the winter months——

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman must understand that the House will not be surprised to know that there are differences of opinion in the cabinet. That is quite usual. We shall see a difference of opinion in the cabinet inside of a week. One section, probably a large section, will contend for the entrance of American railways into the southern portion of British Columbia, and a small section will oppose it. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals remembers that, a few years ago, on the question of the Kettle River Railway, he announced in the Railway Committee, with all the authority of his position, that the government's position was that that railway should have entrance——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bennett's) pardon.

Mr. BENNETT. All I can say is that for many days, in the Railway Committee at that time, there was weary watching and waiting to see what was the stand to be taken by the government on that question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no watching and waiting to see what was my position on that question.

Mr. BENNETT. But there was waiting a good many days before the Minister did speak—and I think he was sorry afterwards that he had spoken at all. His position as Minister of Railways and Canals should carry a good deal of weight on a question of railway policy; and he must have felt humiliated, to see the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) kill the proposition to which he (Hon. Mr. Blair) has announced himself as favourable. And it was a question of vital import to that country, and to the whole carrying trade. There was a clear line of cleavage in the council; and we all remember the cheerful countenance of the Minister of Public Works when the division showed that he had carried more votes than had the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Now we have the question of the Great Northern and transportation by way of Quebec. I do not see my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works here. But he steps into the arena and announces what the policy of the government on the transportation question will be. And, remembering the fact that the Minister of Public Works had his own way in the Kettle River Railway matter, it is fair to assume that he will have his own way on the transportation question. He says that the solution of the question is to open up the French River and make a system of water carriage through to North Bay, and from there bring the grain down on the Canadian Pacific. It is intimated to the hon. gentleman that that means an expenditure of millions. But, in his 'airy fairy Lillian' way, he treats that matter lightly. Surely the government's supporter from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) will not be pleased, but will be much disappointed if he realizes that the government is going to throw the Ottawa and Georgian Bay ship canal overboard. That also is a bantling of this government that they are keeping before the people all the time. The hon. gentleman who represented West York last session, Mr. Campbell——

Mr. COCHRANE. Kent.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, he hoped to represent West York in this parliament—is a warm advocate of a line of policy endorsed by the government, or, at least, by the bulk of its members. He declares that the time has arrived for a railway from Collingwood to Toronto, all the grain to be carried that way. And if the hon. Minister of Public Works were here to-day, he would tell you, Mr. Speaker, that, in furtherance of that scheme, he has been spending thousands and tens of thousands of dollars in fitting the harbour of Collingwood for the trade that must follow when that line of railway—which is to be assisted by very liberal grants from this government—is constructed.

Now, the ministers, while they have all these plans before the public which are only discussable ones, are lending their aid to other projects. When the deal was made with what is known as the Drummond Counties Railway, this government went deliberately to work to steal away the trade from Montreal by paying the Grand Trunk handsomely to carry it to Portland instead. The people of Montreal now cry out that the Grand Trunk have announced that they will give Montreal the go-by, and carry their grain to Portland. But the government, in their laudable endeavour, if it may be called laudable, have bonused the Grand Trunk to the tune of half a million dollars to improve the bridge at Montreal, thus facilitating the carrying of the trade to Portland. Now, I think I have mentioned a few reasons, and some very substantial ones——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has given no explanation of the statement he made a short time ago; he has not even touched it yet.

Mr. BENNETT. All I can say is that when the hon. minister makes the statement that he did at Halifax, if he thinks that the public disregard him, I think they take him at his word.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What has that to do with the canal system?

Mr. BENNETT. It has everything to do with the hon. minister building up rival systems to the canals. He has given the public notice of that, and given them fair notice, that in his opinion he does not think the canal system is a proper one to be carried out.

Mr. GERMAN. Where has the government built up a rival system to the canal system in this country?

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) does not hear me, perhaps, if he comes closer he will hear. I have been pointing out what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said in reference to making trade arrangements with the Booth line. I have pointed to the line of policy announced by the government press of the acquisition of the Booth line and the Great Northern line, and to every word of that the member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell) says amen, and the Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) will too when he comes in. I have also pointed out that the hon. Minister of Public Works is to-day announcing that a proper line of policy would be to act in conjunction with the Canadian Pacific Railway in building a canal system to North Bay on Lake Nipissing, and then hand over to the Canadian Pacific Railway the carrying trade of the west to Montreal and the seaboard. Surely these are schemes gigantic enough even for the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German). They are sufficient to cause the public to stop and think, and to ask if the time has not arrived for the government to come down and enunciate a line of policy, particularly in view of the fact that so long as you dangle all these schemes before the public, so long are you going to hamper the usefulness and injure the interests of the St. Lawrence canal system. What are the government going to do in this dilemma? Is the canal system to be thrown up? Fourteen feet of water has been reached, I believe, the department having so announced. If there are any drawbacks to that it is to be hoped that parliament will be asked to make a sufficient grant of money for fourteen feet of water, but, while the government are going to provide fourteen feet of water, and while they are going to attract all the freight they can, in the name of the public, and in the name of the public treasury, let these hon. gentleman individually, and as members of the cabinet, stop formulating these different lines of policy, let the public breathe easy, let them know what is to be the transportation system of the future or the solution of it. The hon. member for Welland asked me what I would suggest. I am not here to say: This is my opinion. I am not going to be so egotistical as to say: This is my opinion. I am simply referring to what is advocated by railway companies, by men prominent in public life, and backed up by men who are investing their money in these enterprises. We find that despite the fact that you have increased the depth of the canals to fourteen feet, you are carrying a lessened quantity of grain through them, that you have almost ruined Prescott's carrying trade, that you have almost ruined Kingston's carrying trade, that you are ruining the ship building industry of this country, and I am also here to argue that when this vast sum of money which you propose to spend is spent at Port Colborne, you are not going to have a system superior to the system that is now in vogue.

Coming down to the Port Colborne expenditure, let us pay some attention for a moment to that. Last year the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and the Department of Public Works came to the House with a proposition. They said: We find that owing to the fact that we cannot carry large vessels through to Kingston because the Welland canal intervenes we must make, at Port Colborne on Lake Erie, very large and very great improvements. Those who were here at the time will recollect that the hon. Minister of Public Works came down from his department and laid on the Table of the House a proposition that involved an expenditure of $5,000,000 at Port Colborne. The government said: We are prepared to spend $5,000,000 at Port Colborne, and by referring to the debate of last year, it will be seen that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said that the expenditure would not reach that amount. He said: The works that we have contemplated and the works that we have tendered for will involve an expenditure of about $2,000,000. I think I can find in 'Hansard' that reference. We are spending $2,000,000 at Port Colborne on what the hon. minister himself must admit is an experiment simply in anticipation, and when the House realizes that the results of trade through the St. Lawrence canals fall far short of the anticipations of hon. members of the government, it is fair to say that such a large expenditure should not be made without a good deal of foresight and looking into. What is the hon. minister going to do at Port Colborne? He is spending $2,000,000 in constructing large public works, in deepening the water, in the construction of docks upon which elevators can be built at any time, and in connection with the breakwater there. I do not know if it is the intention to proceed with the construction of elevators at Port Colborne.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No steps have been taken in that direction.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that he does not intend to construct them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) asks me a question and I give him an answer, he might at all events correctly quote what I have said.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No steps have been taken in that direction.

Mr. BENNETT. I will quote from the report of the hon. gentleman for this year:

> The improvements comprise the deepening of the approaches to the canal to twenty-two feet and the construction of two docks, with piers 200 feet wide, upon which grain elevators will be erected to transfer grain to fourteen-feet draught canal boats when required.

Of course, there is the saving proviso 'when required.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not say that the government are going to erect elevators upon them if it were decided to erect elevators.

Mr. BENNETT. If the government are not going to construct elevators at that point, then why have the government built these very large piers or breakwater which would serve the same purpose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The breakwater would not serve the same purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. The breakwater would serve the purpose of erecting elevators.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The breakwater is a mile away from where the elevators could properly and usefully be placed. What is the use of talking about erecting an elevator on the breakwater?

Mr. BENNETT. I have not seen the plan. But, here is the fact that the hon. gentleman is spending $2,000,000. I think I am within the mark in that statement—at Port Colborne—and what are you going to gain by that expenditure? Without this expenditure of $2,000,000, more grain has gone down to Montreal in former years than went last year. You will have to increase the depth of water at Port Colborne, and you will be able to carry larger freighters to Port Colborne than the freighters employed in the past, but when you carry these freighters to Port Colborne you will kill the trade at Kingston and Prescott. You will transfer at Port Colborne into small boats which will be capable of carrying 50,000 bushels at the outside, and carry the grain on down to Montreal. What benefit are you getting by the proposed system over the present system? The present system is that you have vessels carrying 75,000 bushels of grain to Kingston where the grain is transferred to a canal barge carrying 50,000 bushels. The only difference possible is that you are transferring at Port Colborne instead of at Kingston from a 250,000 bushel boat, instead of a 75,000 bushel boat. Does not the minister see that at Kingston you can bring into requisition a comparatively cheap class of vessels. At Kingston you can load into a barge carrying 50,000 bushels, and you can tow four or five of them down to Montreal, but you cannot put that same cheap class of vessel into Port Colborne. The vessels in the Port Colborne trade must be expensive vessels.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why cannot you put it into smaller vessels if you want to.

Mr. BENNETT. The whole contention of the hon. gentleman is to deepen the canals so that we can have larger vessels.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly, but you can use smaller vessels if you want to.

Mr. BENNETT. I grant that, but you must get the maximum size. The point is that the vessel which you take from Port Colborne to Montreal, must be a high priced vessel, because you cannot use canal boats on that route.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why cannot you ?

Mr. BENNETT. Does not the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) know that Lake Ontario is one of the roughest of the great lakes, and that the principal part of the grain trade is done in the fall of the year, when that lake is at its roughest ?

Mr. GERMAN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) suggest that tow barges are not used from Port Colborne to Montreal ? If he does, he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. BENNETT. The reputation of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) for lack of courtesy has preceded him here, and he need not make a display of it now. Let me tell him that I do know something about it.

Mr. GERMAN. Will the hon. gentleman suggest that tow barges are not used from Port Colborne, to Montreal and Kingston and Prescott ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not from Port Colborne. The hon. member knows nothing about it if he talks that way.

Mr. GERMAN. They are used from Port Colborne and Port Dalhousie.

Mr. HAGGART. There are no canal barges towed through Lake Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. There are no canal barges towed through Lake Ontario. You have a class of vessels that can be towed from Kingston to Montreal, but no man would embark upon them in Lake Ontario or in Lake Superior in the fall of the year.

The vessels that are to-day towed from Port Colborne, and that will ever be towed from Port Colborne, must of necessity be expensively built vessels, in order that the lives of the men who sail them may be protected. From Kingston down, where you are in smooth water, there is a comparatively cheap class of vessel which I am informed by men in the trade will not cost one-third of what the other expensive vessels cost. I know well that the vessels which to-day ply in Lake Superior and through Lake Ontario, vessels like the Rosedale, are large and expensive vessels, and the barges which they tow are expensively built barges which must be equipped with canvas, because no mariner with a regard for the safety of the lives of his men on the consorts would ever put vessels on Lake Superior without masts, similar to canal barges. From Port Colborne down, you must have expensive and well-built vessels, whether these vessels contain their own propelling power or whether they are vessels in tow. The result is that on this expensive class of vessels between Port Colborne and Montreal, the rates will be higher in comparison than the rates from Kingston.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How was the grain got down in times past from the Welland canal ?

Mr. BENNETT. I have just been telling the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair). It comes down in first-class boats like the Rosedale, the Algonquin boats, iron built boats that cost $125,000, or well-built wooden boats that cost a large sum of money, and, as my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Calvin) knows, they are not towing cheaply-built boats on the great lakes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will there be anything to prevent these vessels continuing to go down in the future, if people want to use them ?

Mr. BENNETT. The point I make is, that these canal barges cannot be used between Port Colborne and Montreal, because you will have to navigate the rough waters of Lake Ontario in the fall, when stiff gales are to be met with.

Now, Sir, what is being done by the government to-day ? Here is the minister spending $2,000,000 at Port Colborne, and all that is to be brought about by this large expenditure will be simply that you will be able to transfer from a large boat into an expensive freighter on to Montreal; while if the minister had permitted affairs to go on as they have been going on, you might transfer at Kingston into cheaper boats, and the result would have been—as I am told by vessel men it will work out in the long run—that it would have been much better to go on with the old state of affairs. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) asked me what could be done under the circumstances ? In the first place, the government of the day through the Minister of Railways, told the people of Quebec, and told all these other people who had those baits held out before them, that the policy of the government is to adopt the St. Lawrence canal route system——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman please tell me what he means by 'bait' being held out before them ?

Mr. BENNETT. Having baits held out before them. All I can say is that the minister, when he spoke at Halifax, told them the only advantage they ever could get in the carrying trade would be by the acquirement of the roads in the Booth system——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) venture to make such a statement as that seriously in this House ?

Mr. BENNETT. I will say 'traffic arrangement' if that suits.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I defy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) to produce any statement that I ever made that will bear out his statement. I absolutely defy him.

Mr. BENNETT. Why, the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) has said within a few minutes——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BENNETT. You have not heard what I am going to attribute to you and you cannot know what it is——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know why the hon. gentleman should think that it is any advantage to him or to his party to misrepresent what I said. The hon. gentleman professed to give a statement which I made. I did not say that the only hope was to acquire the Booth system, but what I did say was : That one of the directions in which we hoped to get more business for the Intercolonial Railway was by having a traffic arrangement with the Booth lines, whereby we could exchange traffic. That is what I did say, but the hon. gentleman now puts it forward that I affirmed in Halifax that the only hope was to acquire the Booth system. I made no such statement at all.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) held out to the people of Halifax the idea of a business arrangement—if that term will suit him—with the Canada Atlantic system. I state here that any business arrangement with the Canada Atlantic system by which you have to carry grain via the Georgian Bay, must be at the expense of the St. Lawrence canal system.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see that.

Mr. BENNETT. I will refer to some facts that will perhaps convince the minister that the Booth system and the Grand Trunk Railway system from Midland have had the effect of diverting trade from the St. Lawrence canal system. We find that there are two well-defined lines of transportation in Canada, as against the St. Lawrence route. First, there is the Grand Trunk Railway system, which carries grain from its terminus at Midland on the Georgian Bay through to Montreal, and now, (thanks to the generous aid the government gave the Grand Trunk Railway in the matter of the Victoria bridge), on to Portland. The Grand Trunk Railway Company have been building up that trade, and they have been building it up successfully, and we find that in the past season, there was carried from Midland over their lines to Portland and to Montreal no less a quantity than 10,214,841 bushels.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was there a bushel of that sent to Portland ?

Mr. BENNETT. I think probably there was a portion of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you know it ? Have you any statement to that effect ?

Mr. BENNETT. I am not in a position to know from the return whether a portion of that went to Portland or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then why drag in the imputation that because we helped the Grand Trunk, therefore they got this business ?

Mr. BENNETT. I am here to say that by reason of the fact that the government contributed so handsomely to the Grand Trunk to enable it to carry trade past Montreal, the Grand Trunk to-day are building up Portland, and I leave it to the hon. members from Montreal to say whether or not that is at the expense of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is altogether a different statement from that which the hon. gentleman made. The statement he made was that by reason of the assistance which the government had given the Grand Trunk for the bridge, they were carrying the grain which they received from the Parry Sound Railway, to Portland. Now, my information is that there is not a bushel of grain received by the Grand Trunk from the Canada Atlantic Railway and taken to Portland.

Mr. BENNETT. If the minister makes the statement that none of the grain from Midland goes to Portland——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not talking about that. I am talking about grain received from the Parry Sound road.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister misunderstood me. The grain taken to Portland is from Midland, not from Parry Sound.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then I was in error.

Mr. BENNETT. The Grand Trunk bridge, by means of the half million dollars contributed by the government, has been so improved and strengthened that the Grand Trunk are to-day building at Portland an elevator with 2,000,000 bushels capacity. More than that, I know that the company which owns one of the large elevators at Midland is constructing at Chicago an elevator of 1,000,000 bushels capacity. My argument from that is that the Grand Trunk have every confidence that the carrying trade of this Dominion, not only from our own North-west, but from western points in the United States on the great lakes, will in future be done by way of Midland to Portland, with any trade which may incidentally enure to the port of Montreal; and the result, I believe, will justify that confidence. It is, I believe, expected by the Grand Trunk Railway people that they will succeed in building up a very large trade.

Now, it is a fair question to ask, why can grain be successfully carried from Midland to Portland as against from Buffalo to New York? There are many advantages in favour of the Midland-Portland system as against the Buffalo-New York system. One of the first advantages is this, that you can make three trips from any point on the great lakes to Midland as against two trips to Buffalo, which is a very decided advantage, especially in the fall of the year; so that a large vessel, with a capacity of from 200,000 to 300,000 bushels, would earn on that route from $10,000 to $15,000 more on three trips than if she went to Buffalo. That is the reason, I believe, why the Grand Trunk people are making preparations at Portland and at Chicago for a large carrying trade. The line of the Grand Trunk from Midland to Belleville or Port Hope is poorly equipped; they can only haul fourteen or fifteen cars, and those not of the largest size. When the day does arrive that the Grand Trunk has as complete a system of railways from Midland to Portland as there is from Buffalo to New York, there will be seen carried on that line, not 12,000,000 bushels of grain, but twice and probably three times that quantity.

I am not going to say anything in reference to the Parry Sound route. That route has asserted itself in the past year, and has shown that it is capable of carrying 13,000,000 bushels in a season. The other places on the lakes—Sarnia, Goderich and Collingwood—carried comparatively trifling quantities as compared with the systems from Parry Sound to Montreal and from Midland to Portland.

Now, what is to be done under the circumstances? First, I say, in the very words of this motion, a halt should be called on public expenditures. The government should at once drop the propositions which have been discussed before the public, by giving an official and authoritative denial of the statement that they have in contemplation the taking up of any of those propositions, and announcing that they intend in the future to pin their faith alone to the St. Lawrence canal system. When they do that, we shall have the satisfaction of seeing the vesselmen of the country embarking in the shipping interests of Canada.

If these railway systems, both the Grand Trunk and the Canada Atlantic, are able to compete with the Buffalo system, we may be sure that we can attract trade from Buffalo through Canada, which will be to the advantage of the Canadian public; because every bushel of grain carried by vessel or by rail through Canada must be to the advantage of the Dominion as a whole, and more particularly to the advantage of the province of Ontario through which it will pass; and it is a debatable question to-day whether it would not be well for the government even to pay these people a bounty of so much a bushel for the grain carried through Canadian channels for a year or so. The effect of giving such a bounty would be this, that they would be able to improve their roadbeds to such an extent that, I believe, they would cut appreciably into the Buffalo trade.

In conclusion, I have only to say that I have introduced this resolution, as I did last year, hoping that it would evoke some little discussion—hoping that any views thrown out in the debate—not any poor views of mine—would be taken up by the press and discussed, and that the gentlemen sitting behind the government and retaining them in their position would be moved, in a spirit of patriotism, to ask themselves: Is there any means that can be adopted for increasing the grain trade through Canada—not only our own trade, but by taking part of the trade now going through the United States? I believe the solution of the whole question rests on this—that some encouragement should be given both to the Canada Atlantic system and to the Grand Trunk system, provided they carry a largely increased quantity of grain over what they are now carrying. But, above all things, here and now is the place and time for the Minister of Railways and Canals, before this debate closes, to announce that the government intend for the future, at least for a fixed period of five or six years, to pin their faith to the St. Lawrence canal system, and not introduce any of the side schemes or projects which are now before the public.

Hon. R. R. DOBELL (Quebec West). Mr. Speaker, I must offer my congratulations to the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) for having so fully drawn the attention of the House to this important question. I do not think there has been a matter brought before the House this session of more importance than this question of transportation; and in congratulating the hon. gentleman upon having brought it to our attention, I wish I could also compliment him upon the accuracy of his statement of the case. But, I regret to say, he made many grievous mistakes. There were many causes operating against the removal of grain to Montreal last year on which he did not even touch. And I am quite sure that when these exceptional causes are brought before the House, hon. members will at once understand why there was not more grain brought down the St. Lawrence last year.

I confess that I read the motion of the hon. gentleman with some degree of doubt, because I could not quite see what it was intended to cover. He says that it is now time this government should state its policy in this matter. But I do not think that the government has ever withheld from this House the policy it was intending to pursue. The government has acted upon the policy that every possible avenue that could be utilized for the transportation of grain and other produce, not only from our own great North-west, but also from the north-western states, should be taken advantage of and improved, and I do not care whether those improvements are confined to water navigation alone or extended to a combination of water and rail. We all know that if we depend simply on our water navigation, we will be shut off during the winter months from a very large supply of grain, and, therefore, it is desirable that we should make provision ahead by establishing large storehouses at different points. My hon. colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals, was fully justified in the large expenditure he undertook at Port Colborne. To use the hon. gentleman's own argument, we will be able to bring to Port Colborne steamers drawing 20 feet of water and carrying grain to the extent of 200,000 bushels, and certainly 150,000 bushels, and that grain can be transhipped thence in barges and steamers, not merely carrying 45,000 bushels, as mentioned by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), but 200,000 bushels, for I maintain that a steamer and two consorts can bring down from Port Colborne 200,000 bushels, and even more. As I figure it out, two barges and a steamer would be able to bring 210,000 bushels from Port Colborne, and we have been told by a most reputable and trustworthy shipbuilder in the west, that that will prove the most economical way of moving grain from Port Colborne or Port Arthur or Duluth or any other point to the seaboard.

The hon. member for East Simcoe dwelt at considerable length on what the port of Buffalo has done. But how has Buffalo managed to do what it has accomplished? That port obtained command of the grain trade simply through our supineness in years gone by. While we made the Sault Ste. Marie canal 20 to 22 feet deep, and the Welland canal 14 feet deep, when the grain got into Lake Ontario it was shut out from the St. Lawrence canal, because our locks and canals there would not carry vessels drawing 10 feet of water. The greatest draught that could get through the St. Lawrence canals was about 6, 7 or 8 feet, and, under the most favourable conditions, never more than 8 feet. What, therefore, are we doing? We passed through our 'Soo' canal 4,000,000 tons of American shipping the year before last entirely free of toll, and then gave it to Buffalo. Why? Because there was no other place to receive it. Therefore, the government took in hand the work at Port Colborne, in order that that port might accommodate these large steamers, even as large as 6,000 tons, and from there the grain would be reshipped to Montreal, or Quebec or elsewhere. The hon. gentleman laid great stress on the probability of our killing the trade of Kingston and Prescott and other places by these improvements at Port Colborne. But he is not able to see far enough. If we are to get any proportion of our western trade, we shall have a trade not only for our Welland canal and our water navigation—which, I believe, will in the main be the most economical way of moving our crops—but it is probable that our railways will be utilized in order to bring the grain through much quicker, even though it cost a little more. But, as regards the bulk of the grain, I believe there are no advantages on the American side over our St. Lawrence and great lakes. We should not belittle our advantages, but should instead show to the people of the whole continent that our ports of Montreal and Quebec will not only be national ports, but great international ports for the transhipment of grain in ocean steamers, and also for the transhipment of products from England to the far west.

The hon. gentleman also laid some stress upon the quantity of grain that could be carried through our canals to Montreal, and very much underrated it. He said that no vessel had brought more than 45,000 bushels through last yaer.

Mr. BENNETT. I must say this, that that was in reply to a question I asked the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman was not correct in his statement of quantity, but what was the cause of that? It was simply this, that there were so many detractors of the work of deepening the St. Lawrence canals to 14 feet that the report was circulated broadcast that such work had not been accomplished, and to-day you will find some people arguing that it is not possible to bring vessels drawing 14 feet of water through the St. Lawrence canals. But my hon. colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals, gave us the assurance a few days ago that there is not the slightest risk or danger to barges or steamers going through our St. Lawrence canals drawing 14 feet of water. The hon. gentleman also forgot entirely the very abnormal state of things which existed last year. We could not get steamers to go up the St. Lawrence. I pointed out two years ago the discrimination that existed in our insurance rates, and if those rates cannot be amended, the Grand Trunk Railway have acted wisely in taking their grain to Portland, where they ship at less than one-third the insurance rates charged from the St. Lawrence. This is far more serious than people imagine.

I believe it is the duty of the government and of every member of this House to do all they can to have that remedied. I do not believe that there is any good cause for the discrimination that has taken place. If the hon. member for East Simcoe had really thought out the subject carefully and wanted to put a fair case before the country, he should have given the government his assistance by pointing out what steps should be taken to have this insurance matter put right. I believe that for all these years we have been debarred from using the St. Lawrence in the winter or as early in the spring as we might. I believe, for my part, in absolute winter navigation, that we have nothing like the difficulties that Russia is now combatting, both in the Black Sea and in the Baltic, in the matter of ice. There may be a time in the middle of March, and perhaps up to the early part of April, when in the gulf the northern ice blocks the channel between Cape Ray and the Bird Rocks. But that happens only once in three or four years, perhaps not so often. But the matter of snow storms is very much exaggerated. It is true we have snow storms on the lower St. Lawrence, and all along the valley of that river as well. But, you have snow storms in the English channel, which render navigation there very dangerous because of the number of steamers navigating those waters. But we have good anchorage in the St. Lawrence, for from the time you enter the river up to Quebec, there is no difficulty when a storm comes on in anchoring and waiting until it is over. A snow storm does not last, ordinarily, for more than twenty-four hours. So, there is no such reason for this discrimination against the St. Lawrence as is alleged. If we could establish winter navigation in Quebec, and make Quebec a great emporium for trade by building large elevators, a great step in advance would be taken. And I believe that the Grand Trunk will find that they have made a serious mistake in going to Portland, because you can carry grain from Montreal to Quebec for less than half what you can carry it for from Montreal to Portland. So, if this insurance question is challenged and remedied, as I believe it will be by the government, we shall do more for St. Lawrence navigation than has ever been done before. The hon. member for East Simcoe said that I had told the House that the proportion of the grain trade carried through the St. Lawrence river never exceeded 8 per cent. I am not quite sure that it ever reached 8 per cent, but that is very near it. The hon. gentleman says I said that in 1901 it would be 25 per cent. I have not had the opportunity of consulting 'Hansard,' but my recollection is that I said that we ought to have 25 per cent, and that we will get 25 per cent, but I do not think I limited the acquiring of this 25 per cent to one year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Dobell) leaves the question of insurance, which is a very important one, and one on which, I am sure, the House desires to be informed, can he give me the figures of the amounts paid to the underwriters for insurance on the St. Lawrence and the losses to those same underwriters.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. It is impossible to get those figures. I tried to get them when I was in London, and it is impossible. But I can give one or two examples of the way this insurance system is worked. I will repeat what was told us to-day by Mr. Clergue. He sent four of his steamers across last fall, leaving Montreal as late as the 4th of December. They asked him £25,000 for insurance on these four steamers. His freight amounted to £50,000—that is, half his freight would go in insurance. He ran his own risk. But before running his own risk he had cabled to insure one of them, and the insurance was taken at Lloyd's at 60 shillings per cent. When he got to London, and looked into the matter, he found that the underwriters who had charged the 60 shillings had rewritten the risk at 20 shillings in Hamburg. That is only one example. I myself had four ships loaded late in the year at Bic, in the lower St. Lawrence. I had a cable from London saying that the lowest rates possible for insurance was 14 per cent on one, and 15 per cent on the other.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Shillings ?

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. No, pounds. I thought it over, and cabled back : 'Am prepared to take half the risk if Lloyd's will take the other at ten guineas.' And they took it. That only shows that if we had a responsible and strong insurance company in Canada, we should save at least one-third of our insurance rates ; for, it is not only the amount you have to pay on the cargo that is to be considered, but the amount you have to pay on the steamers to come up the St. Lawrence. When you enter into a time charter with four, five or six steamers, there is a clause that if you want them to come up the St. Lawrence after the first of September, you must pay the additional insurance required. And that additional insurance is one per cent for the whole year, and, after the first of September two per cent. So, we are actually handicapped to the extent of three per cent. And, when a cargo steamer is valued at £50,000 to £100,000, you will see how it practically forbids our chartering them late in the year.

And that brings another thought to my mind, as to the desirability of trying to establish winter navigation. The underwriters now fix the date at the first of September. Now, we regard the first of September as rather a pleasant season. But if we could establish the navigation of the St. Lawrence up to the first of February, the underwriters would not begin to discriminate against us from the first September, but would probably bring the date forward to the first December. Certainly, it would have a good influence if we could only extend our navigation for even two months. I do not think that any one can speak positively as to the possibility of winter navigation, but, after carefully watching it both down the river and at Quebec, I believe there is no practical difficulty in having steamers navigate the St. Lawrence throughout the winter. If that could be secured, it would be such a benefit to Canada as never before was known. If the hon. member for East Simcoe would inquire from the Canada Atlantic Railway, he would be told that they could have taken orders for any quantity of grain if they could have got freight last fall. But they could not get freight, and they had to take the grain down to Boston. Speaking with a gentleman the other day—and I think it is not unfair to state what he told me—he said: If you could only establish winter navigation from Quebec, we will guarantee to send to Quebec between the months of December and May, 350,000 tons of cargo. The gentleman who made that statement was Mr. Shaughnessy, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The amount of freight he named is equal to about seventy steamer-loads. But he said that this must be navigation with ordinary care and skill, and using no special steamers—because if we have to resort to special steamers for that service the work cannot be done, because if special steamers must be employed, it will cost so much that it would be cheaper to run the grain down to Portland and Boston than to send it by way of Quebec. I think a matter that we ought at once to face is the possibility of winter navigation. With winter navigation Quebec would become the emporium, not alone of Canada, but I believe of this whole continent. Grain would be shipped down to Quebec because of the perfect security which could be afforded for keeping it. It is not like Baltimore and Philadelphia where you have to keep moving it on account of the heat. The climate at Quebec is perfectly dry and cool, and when I speak of Quebec I mean, of course, Point Lévis as well, which latter place is admirably adopted for the erection of elevators and for the shipment of grain by large steamers. There is no place equal to it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What about Montreal ?

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. I would not belittle Montreal at all. Montreal has incurred very heavy expenditure in deepening Lake St. Peter and they deserve credit for it. At that time Quebec was asleep, but now we have wakened up a little, we see our advantages, and we hope to utilize them to such an extent that there will be shipped from Quebec, not merely 25 per cent of the grain which I mentioned twelve months ago, but a very much larger proportion. I believe that this government, by its policy of improving every avenue of shipment, will ultimately increase very greatly grain shipments at the port of Quebec. I do not know much about the Georgian Bay canal, but if opening it up to North Bay will give us increased advantages for getting grain down, I will go in for it. I do not think the result will be what the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) fears, that is, to rob our St. Lawrence canals of their trade, because there will be more grain to carry than the St. Lawrence canals can handle, and all the railways you can build. We are not able to realize the possibility that lies before this Canada of ours. We ought to have more faith in our future than to think that by improving Port Colborne we are going to ruin the trade at Kingston. I am sorry the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) is not in his place, because I do not think he would share in the fear of ruining Kingston. I presume there will be trade enough for all possible routes. Instead of getting forty million bushels, or fifty million bushels down the St. Lawrence canals, we want to get that two hundred millions that is going now by Buffalo, or a large share of it. Certainly, we ought to get all our Manitoba wheat. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that next year the hon. member for Simcoe will be able to change his tone a little, and have a little more faith in the government and in the St. Lawrence route.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). I shall not say much on this subject, because I do not profess to have that intimate knowledge of the internal transportation of grain which some hon. gentlemen opposite seem to have, and which every person ought to have in dealing with a subject of this nature. But I am encouraged by the remarks that have fallen from some hon. gentlemen in this House who have made long and strong arguments containing the scantiest modicum of intelligence on the subject. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is any subject which the Liberal-Conservative party placed before the inhabitants of Nova Scotia and of the lower provinces generally, it was the prospect that by means of the railway system of Canada, and by means of the improved transportation, our ports would be made the point of shipment for immense quantities of produce from the west on the way to Europe. If I understood the argument of the hon. member for Simcoe it was that the quantity transported by water and by rail to the port of Montreal this year was very much less than in previous years, and from that fact he deduced the argument that the means which the government had provided for transporting the grain were not successful, were not proper. Now, I have been led to understand that there was less grain produced in the North-west during the past year than in previous years, and that would account for the fact that less grain was shipped from the port of Montreal, and therefore the long and laboured argument of the hon. gentleman directed against the government would fall to the ground.

Moreover, the hon. gentleman must know that the carriage by steamers of different kinds on the lakes does not cover the whole transportation question. He should be able to tell us what proportion the cost of lake carriage bears to the cost of the transportation of grain between the terminal points, that is to say, between the point of production in the west and the point of shipment in the east, wherever that may be. The small cost on a portion of the route may be balanced by advantages on the longer portion of the route, and that would destroy the value of the hon. gentleman's argument. I do not know what the exact amount of toll is between the point of production and Buffalo, or those other ports on the lakes. But there are other considerations, after the grain has reached the place of shipment, and those considerations are connected with the question of Atlantic navigation. We have heard something this afternoon about the tempestuous character of navigation on the lakes, that vessels cannot navigate the lakes with masts. Well, Sir, do modern vessels navigate the great Atlantic ocean with masts ? The great steamers on the Atlantic all dispense with their masts, they do not depend upon sails at all, but entirely upon steam power. Now, if large vessels are to be employed to carry this grain after it has reached the point of shipment, the larger the vessel employed on the longer portion of the route the greater will be the profit of the shipper. I say there is no port in Canada, there is no port in the United States, there is no port in the western world, which affords better facilities for the shipment of grain across the Atlantic than the port of Halifax.

Perhaps some hon. gentleman may think that I am an amateur on this subject, as some sceptical people thought the other day that I was an amateur on the subject of farming. I know something about the subject of navigation also. Into the port at Halifax there come the largest steamers in the world. I was on board two of the largest steamers in the world in Halifax, one the steamer Pennsylvania, of the Hamburg-American line. This, the largest ship in the world, came into Halifax without a pilot, and the captain turned her around himself, under my direction, and went out again without a pilot, showing the superior navigating facilities of that port. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is this point, and it is the solution of this question of navigation : We know that the tramp steamers, those that carry the grain in bulk, and nothing else, are the vehicles of communication which make the rates on grain. You cannot bring them up to Quebec or to Montreal in the winter time. They go to ports in the United States because the grain is collected there for them, and they go to those ports in ballast. What is the great difficulty of winter navigation ? It is that these ships have to come out from England or continental points empty, and that is the great difficulty of winter navigation, as the captains tell me. I only repeat what a number of them have told me. They say : We can get no cargo to bring out to United States ports, and we have to depend on the back freight to make the enterprise pay. Here is the solution of it : Bring out the western trade, bring out the freight from England and other ports to Halifax in these steamers and the whole question is solved. You will have back freights which will reduce the rate on grain one-third or one-half, and there is no other port in Canada to which you can bring those back freights. What about the winter navigation of the St. Lawrence ? Did they not try to run a steamer from Paspebiac to Europe, and what was the report we got ? Steamer still in sight, still in the ice ; a week later, relief steamer gone out, steamer still in the ice ; at the end of a month, steamer still in the ice, steamer in sight, and relief steamer in the ice. They will always be in the ice, and they will always remain there while the St. Lawrence goes out, while the Arctic ocean is to the north, and while the Atlantic is beyond. Hon. gentlemen may talk about intermediate points upon the lakes, about one point on Lake Erie and another point on Lake Ontario, but the only solution is to get down to deep water on the Atlantic. Political parties have been trifling with the question all along. An hon. gentleman said that there was an elevator at Halifax. There was an elevator at Halifax, and grain was shipped through that elevator, but through the carelessness of the Conservative party the elevator was burned down. There is an elevator at Halifax now, a beautiful, capacious elevator, with every facility adapted to the movement of grain. It only requires the grain to be brought there when the superior advantages of the port of Halifax will be at once demonstrated. What keeps it back ? Why is not the experiment made ? Is it the timidity of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, or is it owing to the lack of rolling stock to transport the grain which is ready to go over the railway ? I am told it is the absence of rolling stock, the paucity of locomotives, and a great many other detrimental circumstances which prevented the experiment being tried.

In regard to insurance upon the St. Lawrence, I may say that amongst my other qualifications, I was 21 years in an insurance office, and I know that the insurance companies who want to make money very shrewdly conjecture where the risk is which calls for these high premiums, and they know that the navigation of the channel of the St. Lawrence from the month of October is very dangerous. In the summer time, with a certain depth of water, the St. Lawrence is good enough, but for all seasons of the year, for all depths of water and all sorts of tonnage, there is no port in the world, certainly not on the western hemisphere, that can compare with the port of Halifax. There is another rival springing up, and a rival with which the St. Lawrence will have to struggle, perhaps in the summer time, perhaps in the winter time. I am informed by the captains of these ships which carry grain, that desperate efforts are being made to make New Orleans the terminus of the grain-carrying trade, and that the navigation of the Mississippi is going to be the great rival of the St. Lawrence. They have prepared their elevators, they have a variety of products to give a variety of cargoes, and they believe that they can successfully compete with any means of communication possessed by us ; but, in the meantime, until the question of these rival ports is settled, we must have some outlet for the trade of Canada, and the problem will not be successfully solved except by means of back freights from Europe, which will lessen the rates of freight, coupled with the use of the free port of Halifax, with all those facilities which are necessary to enable the produce to be handled at a cheap rate, and which will prevent the trade from going by any other route.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence). Mr. Speaker, a good deal has been said by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) in support of that very valuable port, and a good deal has been said by the hon. minister without portfolio (Hon. Mr. Dobell) in favour of Quebec. Every person seems to have forgotten that there is a little place called Montreal. There have certainly been solutions offered both by the hon. minister without portfolio and by the hon. member for Halifax, but I do not think that we have quite yet arrived at the solution of the difficulty. It is a very simple one to my mind, and I think the Board of Trade of Montreal, a very important body, as well as the Board of Trade of Toronto, have made known to the government just what they think would be the solution of the difficulty. The solution of the difficulty would be a safe 14-foot channel from the west to the foot of Lachine canal, a safe 30-foot channel, 500 feet wide, from the foot of Lachine canal to the ocean, and having these channels lighted so that steamers could proceed as well by night as by day, as they do in other countries and in the ports to the south of us. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has stated that the grain export trade from Montreal and the shipping have fallen off considerably in the last few years. I think he is slightly in error about that. It is true that during 1899 there was not as much produce exported as in 1898. That, I believe, was owing to the fact that we could not get steamers last season, because many of the very best of our steamers were taken by the British government for transport service to South Africa, and that diminished the tonnage out of Montreal. There was no very serious falling off, however. In the year 1899, there were 30,000,000 bushels of grain shipped from the port of Montreal, and 39,000,000 bushels was the highest point ever reached. Last year a larger number of inland vessels arrived at the port of Montreal, but there was a falling off in the ocean steamers. In 1898, 830 ocean-going steamers arrived in Montreal, and in 1899, only 771. That falling off, as I have said, was largely due to the vessels being engaged by the British government in the war service.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have had considerable difficulties at times with the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), but I am happy to say that he had grasped the situation on the present occasion and solved the problem by affording us a thirty-foot channel, 500 feet wide in the St. Lawrence river. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) will now do his part, and have our navigable waters down there lighted and buoyed to the same extent as are the American ports, then we will certainly get the insurance rates reduced. The hon. gentleman from Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell) expressed the wish that we had a responsible Canadian marine insurance company in this country. I can tell the hon. gentleman that we have such a company. We have the Western Assurance Company of Toronto, than which there is no better or more reliable assurance company in the world. I might mention that the hon. member for Toronto Centre (Mr.

Brock) is one of the directors of that company, and the Hon. Senator Cox is president. I can tell the House that the experience of that company during the last ten years has been that they have paid out three dollars for every dollar they have received. In view of that, how can we expect lower insurance. An hon. gentleman spoke about the Clergue steamers going down the St. Lawrence last fall. I remember the circumstances very well. The steamers were delayed somewhere up the lakes, and they went through from Montreal after the buoys had been moved from the channel, because the buoys must be removed from Lake St. Peter before the ice takes, or they cannot be removed at all. These four Clergue steamers went down, and one of them came to grief. I do not know whether or not that is the one the hon. gentleman referred to as being insured, but at all events some one of them came to grief and was obliged to go into dry dock at Halifax. Now, I would point out to hon. gentlemen that it will not take a very great deal of money to put our navigable waterways in first-class condition. The only fault we have to find with the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is that he does not ask for sufficient money in his estimates, and I can tell the minister, and I can tell the House, that if Canada is ever to be made commercially great, now is the time to do it. I repeat that it will not take a great deal of money to carry out this very important work, and the present is the time to do it or not at all. A great many of our friends, especially the Board of Trade of Montreal, are much exercised over the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway has made its terminus at a foreign port. Well, Sir, I am of opinion that that is not altogether an unmixed evil, because I believe the result of it will be that both political parties will be spurred on to a supreme effort to protect the trade of Canada, so that in the end good will result. The hon. members who represent the province of Manitoba will bear me out in the statement that out of the 56,000,000 bushels of grain annually shipped from the North-west, less than 15 per cent of it goes through Canada, and 85 per cent of the whole export goes through United States territory and from United States ports. There is no patriotism in business—except in a few cases at least—and if a man can ship his grain from Manitoba to Great Britain and save $8,000 or $10,000 a year by sending it through a foreign port, he is going to do it. What we have to do in this country, and what we have to do now, is to make our facilities for transportation so cheap and so good that we shall have all our grain and all other exports from Canada going through our own country and shipped from Montreal or Quebec, or from the maritime provinces in the winter.

When I mention Quebec, I do so because I know that in Montreal we are too broad-minded to have any jealousies. We recognize that what is good for Quebec is good for the rest of the country, and that if Quebec prospers, then Montreal and Toronto, and our other Canadian cities will prosper too.

In my opinion the hon. gentleman from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has not proposed the right solution of the difficulty. I believe that the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is on the right course, and if he succeeds in carrying out these improvements there will be no question but that the insurance rates will be reduced. As I see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) in his seat, I would make a suggestion to him which I consider of great importance. I do trust that he will supply a steamer next winter to keep the ice broken at Cap Rouge. It is well known to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and to the hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell) that the ice at Cap Rouge sometimes attains a thickness of forty feet.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. Sixty feet.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I accept the hon. gentleman's amendment. Now that we have started to build the Quebec bridge at this very spot, the piers and abutments of that bridge will certainy have the effect of causing the ice to be thicker still.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. Oh, no; the contrary.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Well, we will have to differ on that point. I believe that the effect of the bridge will be to keep the ice there longer and later in the spring. While I am not as sympathetic as my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Dobell) is towards the idea of having navigation all the year round, I do believe that if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would provide a steamer to keep the Cap Rouge ice broken we would have navigation at least ten or fifteen days earlier in Montreal, and I think the experiment would be well worth while making. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Dobell) is very strong on winter navigation, and I hope he will succeed. I trust Quebec may succeed in having winter navigation, but I have grave doubts that even if you do keep the river open between Quebec and the gulf, that you will get any one to use it. Steamers would have to come up there through severe snow storms, and I am afraid the insurance of the underwriters would be so high as to render navigation during the winter months well nigh impracticable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) sits down, I would like to ask him whether he claims that there is not a fourteen-foot channel on the St. Lawrence route down to Lachine.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The difficulty to my mind is this. I believe there is fourteen feet of water, but the impression has gone out that fourteen feet of water means a fourteen-foot channel, and that a vessel drawing fourteen feet of water could come down safely through that. That is an impossibility. Fourteen feet of water would only mean, to my mind, a thirteen-foot channel, because a vessel must have one foot of water under her keel to navigate with any degree of safety.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Fourteen feet, on the mitre sills is what is claimed.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. That would pass a vessel drawing 13½ feet safely.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland). Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I wish to say a few words on this question which interests to a very considerable extent a portion of the county which I have the honour to represent. The motion as it reads, strikes me as being peculiar in its terms. It says :

> That in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when a fixed and definite line of action should be undertaken on the question of transportation of the grain and other commodities of the North-west Territories, Manitoba and the western states, with a view to centreing the same to the greatest possible extent in Canadian channels.

Well, Sir, if no fixed idea had been arrived at, I would think that the time had certainly come when a fixed and definite line of action should be taken, but to my mind a fixed and definite line of action was adopted many years ago. It was adopted by the Conservative party when in power, and it has been followed up, and followed up properly and to greater advantage to the country by the present government. That fixed line of action was that we should open up the country to bring about as far as possible the transportation of the western products of Canada to the seaboard by means of our water communication. That was the policy of the Conservative party when they enlarged the Welland canal.

But, Sir, this line of action has been exceeded by the present government. They are not only carrying out the line of policy adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite when in power, but they are going further, to this extent, that they are deepening our harbours and opening every means of communication from the west to the east ; and that is the proper line of policy to pursue. Whether it may affect Midland or Port Colborne or Parry Sound has nothing whatever to do with the question. The question is, shall we open up every line of communication from the west to the east in this country, so that the products of the west shall be carried through Canadian channels to the seaboard, and not through American channels ? That is the policy which should be adopted, and that is the policy which has been adopted. If the hon. gentleman's resolution is an insinuation that such a policy has not been adopted, then, I say it should not pass this House. There should not go forth to the public the suggestion that there is not a definite line of policy with reference to the transportation of the products of this country to the seaboard.

It is said that we are not carrying the quantity of the products of the west that we should carry. It was stated by an hon. member from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), who has had a wide experience in this line of business, that last year about 85 per cent of the wheat grown in our own North-west Territories was carried to the seaboard through American channels. That is a lamentable state of affairs, and we want to remedy it. The policy of this government is, I understand, to endeavour to remedy that state of affairs.

It is said we are not carrying to the seaboard the quantity of the products of the west which go through American channels. Is not the riddle easy to read ? Why, it is only a few years since we had a North-west. It is only a few years in the life of a country that we have had a homogeneous, united Dominion. It was only a few years ago that this Dominion was born. Prior to that time, though the Welland canal was built to some extent, there was not that united and energetic effort to acquire for the whole length and breadth of this country the mercantile supremacy to which this country is entitled. It was split up into disorganized communities—the provinces down by the sea, the North-west unexplored and unknown, Upper Canada a considerable country, Lower Canada a considerable country, but the different parts with divergent interests, and not working together along the one line of building up a great and united country. When confederation was brought about, these provinces were united, and then we began to see that what would be for the benefit of one section of this Dominion would make for the interests of the whole, whether it might be Montreal or Quebec, Midland or Port Colborne. Since then the North-west Territories have been joined to this Dominion, and now the products of that great North-west are pouring down to the seaboard to the open market in Europe. Who is to carry those products ? Are they to go through American or Canadian channels ? Are we to fill up that country with a hardy, intelligent and prosperous population, producing enormous quantities of grain and other commodities for the markets of the world, and are those supplies to go through Canadian territory ? The object of this government, I understand, and I trust to support them in carrying it out, is to develop every line of transportation which can be developed to bring those commodities through our own territory.

The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) made a very lengthy speech. He complained about everything in general, but nothing in particular. My reputation may have preceded me, though I doubt if that reputation is one of obtuseness ; but I must be exceedingly obtuse, for I could not grasp what the hon. gentleman was driving at. He gave us no suggestion of a remedy for the evils which he claims exist, if there be evils. He simply expressed the opinion that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway should be bonused by the government in order to induce them to carry grain in competition with the very route which he says the government should pin its faith to. I failed to apprehend the argument of the hon. gentleman in any particular. He does not propose a remedy. He launches out with the statement that some member of the government made a speech in some section of the country that did not correspond with a speech made by some other member of the government in another section. I venture to say that there has not been a speech made by any member of the government in any section which has not been in the direction of developing the transportation facilities of this Canada of ours. The Welland canal has been talked of. The expenditure at Port Colborne has been talked of. Did not the Conservative party, when in power, spend millions of dollars in enlarging the Welland canal. Their policy was a mistake, for this reason, that the class of vessels now plying on the upper lakes could not go into Port Colborne, by reason of the low water there. Those vessels go to Buffalo, because they are obliged to go there. They will go to Port Colborne and tranship the products of the North-west in tow barges to Montreal as soon as the harbour is deepened to 22 feet ; and that is what the government is doing at the present time. I heard the suggestion made that the Welland canal should be enlarged to a greater depth, and that the transhipment should take place at Kingston. The hon. gentleman proposed something of that kind this afternoon. He does not propose that it should be the policy of the government, so that the larger vessels on the upper lakes could go to Kingston.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He cries a halt.

Mr. GERMAN. He cries a halt. He thinks they should go to Midland. Probably the government will enlarge the harbour at Midland. At the present time I think the policy of enlarging the Welland canal would be a mistake. Let us deepen the harbour at Port Colborne so that the same class of vessels can go there as go to Buffalo, and can tranship their cargoes at Port Colborne as they tranship their cargoes at Buffalo. The distance from Port Colborne to the seaboard is nearly 500 miles shorter than from Buffalo to the seaboard. When that is done, let us look around and see if there is not a means of bringing about the result we are striving for. There is one thing which has been to some extent a drawback, and that is the failure to get a return cargo. That is one of the drawbacks with which Canadian shipping has to contend. Ships go to Buffalo with a cargo of wheat or to Cleveland or Erie with a cargo of iron ore, and they go back with a cargo of coal. But anthracite coal is on our free list, and it can be laid down at the port of Colborne and shipped from that port just as readily as from Buffalo. It can be brought to Port Colborne just as cheaply as to Buffalo, and I believe there is sufficient enterprise in this country to bring about a condition of affairs which will give these large vessels return cargoes from Port Colborne to the west, and thus build up the great trade that should be ours.

I do not know that I have anything more to say on the question. The resolution is a peculiar one, and one hardly knows whether it should pass or not. It insinuates that the government of this country has not had, on this question, a definite line of policy. But that statement is utterly unfounded. The government has a definite line of policy, one which I approve, and one which I believe both sides of the House will be glad to see carried out—a policy which will build up this country, irrespective of whether the port of Montreal or Quebec or Port Colborne or Midland are specially benefited or not, and a policy which will aid in making this Dominion the great and glorious country we all desire it should be.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

House resumed at 8 o'clock.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 7) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Mr. MACLEAN. I shall not take up the time of the committee at any length, but wish simply to call attention to the character of his measure. It is a Bill legalizing a transaction between the Grand Trunk Railway and an American railway company, by which the Grand Trunk Railway assumes responsibility for a railway in the United States, which has been making deficits for years, that have been met by increased charges put upon the traffic in Ontario. I rise to enter my protest against this House endorsing any such arrangement between the Grand Trunk Railway and a corporation outside this country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). It is very apparent to me, from the remarks I have just heard, that facts are things which cut no material figure with the hon. gentleman.

The hon. gentleman was present at a meeting of the Railway Committee when this Bill was considered and disposed of. There was no division upon it. The statements that were made by several members of that committee made it abundantly clear that there was not sufficient ground upon which the committee could refuse to report the Bill favourably to the House. Two or three of the leading facts, I may say the strongest possible evidential facts, were those: That there was, in 1878, an Act passed by this parliament which conferred in express terms upon the Grand Trunk Railway the right to acquire or make arrangements by leasing or otherwise, or make traffic arrangements of any kind, with any railway with which it desired to be connected in the United States. There was no limitation whatever upon that power. That passed in 1878. I think it was only a year from that date when the government of this country, supported and approved by parliament, imposed as a condition upon its purchase of a portion of the Grand Trunk line—I mean the portion between Lévis and Rivière du Loup—that it should go outside of the territory of Canada and expend its resources in making railway connection between Detroit and Chicago. It imposed that charge upon the Grand Trunk Railway. Later than this, and in respect of this road which is now in question, in 1890, the Grand Trunk Railway Company made a leasing contract with that company, which leasing contract was submitted to parliament and was approved. Now, they are not making a new contract at all with the company. They are revising the terms under which the other arrangement was made, and as the facts were presented to us, it is made abundantly clear that they were making a beneficial arrangement for themselves, and that the proposals were of a nature which from a business point of view, could not be other than approved. And the only obligation, apparently that they were assuming by this arrangement which was at all different from their previous existing contract with the company was an arrangement to pay a sum as rental amounting to $43,000 a year. This was not in addition, as I would gather from the facts, to their previous obligation in respect of this road, but it put the form of a specific rental when they were taking over and re-issuing in another form, certain bonds with certain guarantees which were associated with the transaction. Now, it is said that it is wrong for the Grand Trunk Company to go to the United States and acquire any of these roads. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) puts his objection to this Bill upon that ground. It might be a very wise conclusion for parliament to arrive at to say that we will not sanction any arrangement of this kind which the Grand Trunk Company might make as respects railways outside of Canada from this time forward. I am not going to say that I would feel that there would be any public interest that parliament would serve by coming to such a conclusion; but I can understand that there might be gentlemen who have extreme views with regard to these matters who might entertain that opinion. I would not quarrel with that opinion now—the time has not come to deal with it. But it is manifestly clear that we are not in a position to treat this proposal as a new one or one that has had no legislative sanction or no reason for existence. The reverse is the fact. I can scarcely believe that the hon. gentleman has considered this matter. It seems to me that he must think that there is a little kudos, a little political prestige to be got out of jumping up and opposing, whether on tenable grounds or not, a proposition of this kind. I am sure if the hon. gentleman were called upon to take the responsibility of actually giving effect to the intention he has declared of defeating this, he would not take that responsibility. I am well assured of that. There was no member of the committee so far as I coud gather, except the hon. gentleman himself, who had any doubt that this was a proper Bill to pass. It passed in committee nem con.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have called attention to a practice which is growing and which the Minister of Railways himself, in a committee, yesterday pointed out as a dangerous one, so far as regards a similar Bill before the committee. I am well within my right in doing what I have done, the hon. minister will find other things happening that will justify what I am doing. Even if there was this general power given to the road of which the hon. minister speaks, surely parliament has retained discretionary power over any special application under that general power that may come before parliament.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 35) respecting the Mather Bridge and Power Company.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 36) respecting the Great North-west Central Railway Company.—Mr. La-Rivière.

Bill (No. 37) to incorporate the Bishop of Keewatin.—Mr. Osler.

Bill (No. 38) respecting the Hudson's Bay and North-west Railway Company, and to change its name to 'The Great Northern Transit Company.'—Mr. Oliver.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS MAILS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock), or, as he is absent, that of some of his colleagues, to a matter in connection with the mail service of this House. The mail coming here over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Brockville arrives in Ottawa at nine o'clock, and goes to the Ottawa city post office. Yet, I observe, the daily papers from Brockville never get on the file in the reading room until 2 p.m. I went to the post office to-day for letters expecting one or two important ones. I inquired if the Brockville mail was in, and I was told that it arrived at nine o'clock. This was at one o'clock. At two o'clock I got one letter. At four o'clock in the afternoon I received another letter, which happened to be an important letter from the Bank of Toronto. I have the envelope, and will send it to the proper member of the government. It will be seen that it is endorsed by the postmaster of the House, as having been received at four o'cock, though it was in the Ottawa city post office at nine. It is quite evident that there must be something seriously wrong with the arrangements for getting our mails from the general post office.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order :

House in committee on Bill (No. 2) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.—Mr. Ingram.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) to allow this to stand. The Solicitor General has a Bill on the Order paper which he was to have introduced to-day, but he came too late. I am under the impression that when that Bill is before the House, my hon. friend will find that it covers the object he has in view in presenting this Bill.

Mr. INGRAM. I suppose that if I am absent, that will not prejudice my position ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No ; but I think the hon. gentleman will be satisfied.

Order allowed to stand.

THE DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton), moved the second reading of Bill (No. 9) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would ask my hon. friend to allow this to stand. I think he will find the subject dealt with by the Solicitor General in a Bill we propose to introduce.

Mr. HENDERSON. Might I ask the First Minister if he will permit this Bill to go to a second reading in order that I may give the reasons for introducing it ? It will only take a few minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR.

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Bill I am introducing consists of only three clauses. The object of the first clause is to altar the form of oath provided in the Election Act to be taken by persons who come in and say they have a right to vote, but whose names are not on the voters' list. It was found in some constituencies in Ontario that persons came in and claimed the right to vote for a reason that was never contemplated by the Act. The Franchise Act passed in 1898 sets forth clearly the reasons to be assigned by the voter for asking for a ballot if his name is not on the list, and they are as follows :

(a) The holder of an office, or (b) any person employed in any capacity in the public service of Canada or in the province, or (c) any person belonging to or engaged in any profession, calling, employment or occupation, or (d) a person belonging to any other class of persons who, although possessed of the qualifications generally required by the provincial law, are by such law declared to be disqualified by reason of their belonging to such class.

Notwithstanding these reasons, some deputy returning officers, by mistake, I assume, permitted voters to assign other reasons than any of those I have read, as came out in the trial of the North Bruce election. One man said the reason he was left off was because he was neglected. Another man swore that the reason he was left off was of a somewhat similar character, because he was absent. Now these reasons were never contemplated by the election law. The intention was to provide for those cases that occur in the province of Nova Scotia where all Dominion officials are left off the provincial list, and, as a matter of course, off the Dominion list. The intention then of the first and third clauses is to provide against the possibility of such a practice by deputy returning officers. Instead of leaving a blank in the oath, I propose that the whole space be filled up by inserting the various reasons provided for by the Franchise Act ; and then when a voter chooses the particular reason which he will swear to, the other three reasons are to be eliminated. In this way I hope the difficulty will be got over. I may say that in drafting the Bill I inadvertently left out the latter clause of the oath, but that can easily be amended in Committee of the Whole.

The other clause of the Bill is intended to prevent errors by voters marking their ballots above the bar over the first name. In the county which I have the honour to represent that mistake occurred. Persons came in and marked their cross above the bar. Illiterate voters are frequently told to vote opposite the first name or the second name. There have been cases of that kind, and voters thinking they were properly marking their ballot by putting the cross over the bar instead of opposite the name, lost their votes. A peculiar case occurred in the election of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), which I will mention to show the far-reaching effect an error may have. The man who printed the ballots was named Dick, I do not know his first name; his name appeared at the top of the ballot over the bar. Now, our hon. friend who represents the county of Peel is named Richard Blain, and is familiarly known as Dick Blain amongst his friends. Some 25 electors in the county thought they were voting for Dick Blain when they actually put the cross opposite the name of Mr. Dick who printed the ballot. Now, by having no space above the bar the possibility of such a thing would not occur. The proposal is that, in the words of the Bill:

> Form P in the schedule I to the said Act is amended so that the broad black line above the first name on the ballot paper shall extend to the upper edge of the ballot paper, and the broad black line below the last name on the ballot paper shall extend to the lower edge of the ballot paper.

I propose that there shall be no space outside, either above or below the black bar, and this will prevent the possibility of a voter marking his ballot outside the space which is intended.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether, in this Bill which he proposes to bring down on behalf of the government, there will be a provision for avoiding what happened in the West Durham election. There, the gentleman who received a majority of the votes, by reason of some technicality raised by the returning officer, is not in his seat here to-day. There ought to be some provision in the law by which summary action would be secured in a case of that kind. There is a provision in the municipal law under which disputes of a similar character are referred at once to a single judge, and within a week you can get a decision. A case might arise where, if there were a dozen returning officers in the country, and they happened to be strongly partisan, and if the election proved to be very close, and those dozen returning officers declined to act or raised a technical objection, the government would be in the hands of a party that did not have the majority of the votes of the people. Not only can this serious wrong be done to an individual and to a constituency, but by the present defect in the law a great wrong could be done to the whole country; and I hope when the hon. gentleman is bringing in a Bill he will provide some kind of an appeal to a county judge, who will see that the intention of the people under the circumstances is respected and that their choice is returned to parliament. While I say this, I do not dispute the right of this House now, if it saw fit, to seat Mr. Thornton for West Durham, without any reference to the courts. I believe it is to the discredit of parliament to-day that we have not righted that wrong, and that Mr. Thornton is not sitting in the House as the representative of that riding. I am much in favour of leaving disputed election cases, as a general rule, to the judges and to the law of the land; but in this case the law is defective, and parliament would be certainly exercising its just rights, and probably the right hon. gentleman would only be doing his duty if he came down to this House and made a proposal that Mr. Thornton should be allowed to take his seat as member for West Durham.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). I wish to add a word to the remarks just made by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). Mr. Thornton won his seat fairly, so far as any one knows. The right hon. gentleman will remember that when the law was amended only a few years ago, in relation to the deposit of a candidate, the intention was then to avoid the possibility of a returning officer declaring the election void or electing a candidate of his choice. The intention was clear that the receipt which the returning officer gave should be a guarantee to the candidate and all concerned that the deposit was perfectly valid. I think that if the remarks, made in the House at that time, are referred to, that will be found to have been the motive cause. I am not entering into the discussion here to-night of the question of the voiding of the seat, but I wish to suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister that when the Bill is brought before the House, the point involved in the West Durham election will be placed beyond peradventure. There is another issue. The matter has not been brought before the House so far as I know during this session. It is in relation to a case which is, I believe, before the courts, and possibly it is out of order to discuss it here upon its merits, but I am referring to it merely in order that safeguards may be put in the law to prevent a repetition of the Nipissing scandal. Here we find a returning officer hiding on the day of nomination, secreting himself, in order that the legal nomination may not be held, and having what we call an irregular nomination subsequently held. I would like to suggest to the right hon. gentleman that the law be so amended that errors of that kind, intentional or otherwise, should not be committed in future, and that no man should hold a seat in this House under such circumstances as the hon. member now representing Nipissing holds his seat here. Another point is this: We find that men who have been living for years out of the riding, but who chanced to be registered as farmers' sons, or owners, or occupants, are brought in to vote. I will not say one side does it any more than the other; but the section of the law is not clear as to how long a man may be absent. It applies to lumbermen, labourers and students who are absent from their homes. I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman that the section should receive his attention. A hired man living in one riding moves to another one; he gets his washing done at his own home, and so on. I just bring in that one illustration. Where does that man vote? There are a great many votes lost on each side owing to this, and a great many votes improperly cast owing to the improper construction of the law. I trust the right hon. gentleman will give these suggestions his consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have no objection to allowing this Bill to go to its second reading, because I find most of the provisions which are contained in it are also contained in the Bill to be introduced by the hon. Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick). My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will be satisfied to know that the mistake which he wishes to provide against in so far as the marking of the ballot is concerned, is provided for in the Bill which is to be introduced to-morrow. There will be no space above upon which such an error may be repeated as that which occurred in the last election. In regard to the other provisions of the Bill, a provision which enacts that no one shall be permitted to vote whose name is not on the list except those who are specially provided for, I believe, is also contained in the Bill. Therefore, I will allow this Bill to go to its second reading, subject to it being taken up later on, if my hon. friend is not satisfied with the Bill which the government proposes to bring in. In regard to my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), I am happy to say that the mistake which took place in West Durham is not to be repeated either. First of all, my hon. friend must allow that there is an improvement. The man who got the minority of votes in West Durham is not in the House. In former times he would have taken his seat in this House. But, the Bill provides, I believe, that if such a mistake as took place in West Durham occurs, it will not avail, because there is a provision in the Bill to be introduced that an accepted cheque will be sufficient deposit instead of money. As to the objection of my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), I doubt whether we shall be able to meet all the requirements of his fastidious taste. We will try to do our best, but if we do not succeed it will be open for him to offer such amendments as he thinks best when the Bill comes up for consideration in the committee.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether the counterfoil of the government ballot is to be black?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, the ballot will be black.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

Mr. INGRAM. I mean the counterfoil attached to the ballot.

The PRIME MINSTER. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, in respect to what has been suggested by some hon. members of this House as to a summary mode of dealing with mistakes made by returning officers, I think the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) might well keep that suggestion in mind, notwithstanding what the Prime Minister has said. For example, there is a summary way of dealing with questions respecting the proper or improper marking of ballots that is open to a summary proceeding before the county court judge. It has occurred to me, in thinking over the West Durham case, that mistakes by the deputy returning officer or the returning officer, which brought about these very bad results in West Durham, might possibly be dealt with in the courts in some way other than by the cumbrous machinery of an election petition. I believe in having these matters dealt with by the courts. I have no doubt the House could amend the return in the West Durham case, but it did not seem desirable to bring that matter up in the House for the reason that the question had been committed to the courts, and I do not think the House should attempt to deal with it. But, while I say that, I do not think it would require a very great effort to so amend the Controverted Elections Act, that certain matters of that class might be dealt with in a summary way by some tribunal, as the question of proper or improper marking of ballots is now dealt with upon application before a county court judge. I trust that the hon. Solicitor General will take that matter into consideration, and see whether it is possible to make some additional provision in that regard. I would like to point out to the right hon. gentleman that although he amends the law in this respect, that does not obviate the possibility of a returning officer in future making mistakes of a similar character.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, that case, I should think, would be a very proper case to go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. We have a right here to deal with it, and but for the fact that it was first taken to the courts, I think it would be proper to bring it before the Privileges and Elections Committee, and deal with it in a comparatively summary way.

Mr. MACLEAN. May I ask the right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will he, under the circumstances and in view of this Bill, bring down a resolution giving Mr. Thornton the seat for West Durham?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is a little bit of a radical, I am afraid. I do not know that he would advise me seriously to take the case out of the courts and bring it into parliament.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I would.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think I am prepared for that.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he has examined any of the ballot-voting machines. I do not mean the professional ones that have been so aptly managed by hon. gentlemen opposite, but the ordinary voting machines. There are a number before the public, and I am satisfied that they do their work perfectly and accurately.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have seen a great many of these machines, and I stand by the ballot. I think that with a little attention very few mistakes must take place in future with the form of ballot we have now.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT—SIZE OF FRUIT BASKETS.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth) moved second reading of Bill (No. 10) to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

He said: I presume it will be expected that I should briefly give the reasons for the introduction of this Bill. Many hon. members are no doubt aware that up to the present time we have had no standard size for fruit baskets. Many years ago, when fruit-growing first became an important industry, baskets were manufactured that were thought to be most suitable for different kinds of fruit, and custom established these baskets at certain standards. The largest of these is described in the Bill as a 15-quart basket, and it was used for shipping grapes by the ton. That basket still remains about the same size, and as the fruit is sold by the pound there was no inducement for any one to make a different basket. The second largest basket; the 11-quart basket was originally made a 12-quart basket which was thought to be about the right size to conveniently ship peaches, pears, plumbs, quinces, apricots and tomatoes. It was not very long, however, before some smart 'Aleck' thought he could make money by reducing the size of the basket to 11½ quarts, and as it was the same shape as the 12-quart basket, the only difference being a quarter of an inch in the depth, he found that he could sell it for the same price as a 12-quart basket. This went on for a time and then some one invented the 11-quart basket, until at the present time the basket that is called a 12-quart basket in some cases only holds 9 quarts. These baskets are all sold as 'baskets,' and not as holding any particular quantity of fruit, but the consumer believes that he is getting a basket holding 12 quarts. It may surprise some to know that the consumers do not know the difference, but experience shows that to be the case, and consequently the producer who ships his fruit in an honest 12-quart basket, or even in an 11-quart basket, is defrauded because the average basket to-day only holds about 10½ quarts. At a recent meeting a fruit-grower very happily put it when he said: The fruit producer is placed in a dilemma, because if he ships in an honest 12-quart basket he cheats himself, and if he ships in a 10-quart basket he cheats his customer, so betwixt the two he is sure to sin. In regard to the next size of basket described in the Bill as 6⅔ quarts, there are several sizes used at present containing various quantities between 6 quarts and 7½ quarts. This Bill seeks to do away with these various sizes, and to substitute one that practical men believe will fill the purpose of these different sizes. There is at present no standard. The smaller basket is called a 5-pound basket. Some ship in a basket that holds an honest 5 pounds, while others ship in baskets that hold 4 pounds and 3½ pounds. As to the fifth size which is the strawberry box, I believe a Bill was introduced in former sessions to regulate this size. The size specified in this Bill is the standard size in a large section of this country. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the need of this Bill is so great that the Ontario Fruit Growers Association, a body of men representing the best fruit men in the province, passed a resolution last December appointing a committee to draft the details and arrange for the size of baskets they thought best suitable to the trade. That committee met at Grimsby a couple of weeks ago, and in conjunction with subcommittees from various other associations all over the Niagara district, they recommended certain sizes as being suitable, and practically drafted this Bill. Some objected to making a hard and fast rule as to size because there might be times when baskets would be hard to obtain in this country, and would have to be imported from the United States. To meet that difficulty it was proposed that baskets which were different from the sizes mentioned in the Bill should be stamped in plain letters with the contents of the basket. These are the main features of the Bill. The reasons why the sizes have been adopted will, I presume, be inquired into at a later stage.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). I do not rise to oppose in any way the principle of this Bill, because I believe that a well-defined standard for fruit baskets is a very desirable thing. But, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) has a thorough knowledge of the fruit business, and knows more about packing fruit than perhaps all the members of this House put together ; yet I dare to suggest to him that possibly he has not struck the best mode of determining the size of the berry basket. This matter was very fully discussed last session, and the session before, when I had the opportunity of meeting men who are well acquainted with that line of business. The impression seemed to be then that the better way to define the size of the berry box was by making it so many inches square at the top, so many inches square at the bottom, and so many inches deep, thus fixing the size by inches, and not by measurement in the form of a quart or four-fifths of a quart. My reason for thinking that mode of determining the size of the berry basket the better one, is this : A man may go on the market in Montreal to buy a box of berries and desiring to know if he is getting a box of the standard size he has no quart measure or four-fifths of a quart measure with him, but he has a rule in his pocket with which he can determine in three seconds whether the basket is 4¾ inches square at the top, 4 inches square at the bottom, and 2⅞ inches in depth. If that is the size, he knows he has a standard box, and is getting all the berries he pays for ; but in the other way it would be very difficult for a man to know whether he was receiving the proper quantity or not. I do not wish to oppose the principle of the Bill, because in the county which I have the honour to represent, a very large quantity of small fruits are grown and shipped to the larger markets of Toronto and Montreal, and my constituents are very much interested in a measure of this kind. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press the Bill too rapidly through the House, so that we may have an opportunity of hearing from persons interested in it ; and it may be that at a later stage he will accept the suggestion as to the mode of defining the standard box instead of the one he proposes in the Bill.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I do not rise to oppose the Bill, because I do not profess to be sufficiently familiar with the details of the business to take exception to many portions of it. I simply rise to ask that the House be very cautious in accepting this measure, on this ground, that while it may be satisfactory to the gentlemen forming the Fruit Growers' Association of Ontario, dealing as they do with a definite trade well understood by them, there is much danger that a measure covering in its operations the whole Dominion of Canada, if passed by this House, might work great hardships on many people in various portions of the country. I very much fear that this Bill, if passed in its present form, would be found oppressive and unsatisfactory in many portions of the maritime provinces; and if the measure ever reaches the committee stage, I will move that until further information can be gained, the province of Nova Scotia be exempted from its operation. Another thing: as the whole subject of weights and measures applicable to berries and fruits of all kinds as well as other things, is under the control of the Department of Inland Revenue, I would ask my hon. friend who introduced the Bill if it has ever been referred either directly or indirectly to that department to be enquired into and reported upon. It seems to me that in regard to a measure dealing with interests which are large in some places and small in other places, but in every place important, a department of the government charged with making inquiries as to the effect of new legislation of this kind should have an opportunity of examining the Bill and reporting upon it through the experts of that department. In the county which I have the honour to represent which exports annually from $30,000 to $50,000 worth of blueberries, and in which a large part of the population at a certain season of the year is interested in the picking, packing, transporting and selling of those berries, none of the dimensions given here would apply, but the provisions of the Bill would operate with peculiar hardship. Assuming that other portions of the country may have other difficulties of a cognate character, I merely rise to ask the House to be cautious in accepting a measure which, in one portion at any rate, is of a very drastic character, because it makes any violation of the law a criminal offence. I would suggest that my hon. friend, if he takes the second reading to-night, allow the Bill to stand for some time before moving it in committee, in order that gentlemen may have further opportunity of looking into it.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The suggestions of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) seem at first sight to be very good, and in many respects I think they are ; but with the baskets made as at present, they would not be practicable, because he gives the square measure top and bottom, whereas the baskets are usually round.

Mr. HENDERSON. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I think one who has handled fruit for a great many years ought to know something about it, and it is a fact that the baskets are made in that way to-day. The baskets for either peaches or grapes are round at the ends. Therefore, a square measure would not do. But for that, I would say that the suggestion was a very good one.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). My constituents are largely interested in the milk trade around Toronto, and they have long asked this parliament to give them a standard milk can. There are a lot of these questions coming up constantly, and I would have liked to see the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) here to-night to give his views on this Bill. When it comes up again, I hope he will be here. If parliament deals with a matter of this kind, it must deal with it in a drastic way. It will have to make a lot of standards for almost every trade—an apple barrel, a flour barrel, and many other things; or we shall have to leave everything to the standard of weights and measures recognized in this country. Perhaps on the whole, that would be the best thing to do. Otherwise we shall have to provide a standard for every product raised in the country.

Mr. LOGAN. I would suggest to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) that a panacea for all these ills would be a government ownership of baskets.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is not in his seat this evening, as the duty of dealing with this Bill devolves upon me, and I must confess my utter incompetence. However, I am not very much ashamed of that, in view of the differences which exist even among members who are familiar with the subject. We have a difference as to whether the baskets used to-day are square or round. With such a difference on a question of fact, there must necessarily be differences of opinion on the measure; and I am sure that my hon. friend who has brought in the Bill will be satisfied if we take the second reading to-night, and take the committee stage at a future sitting.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

THE DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell) moved second reading of Bill (No. 15) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.

He said: I move the second reading of this Bill on the understanding that was come to at the suggestion of the right hon. First Minister some days ago, namely, that it be allowed to pass its second reading, and that discussion takes place upon it when the whole subject matter comes up.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection; but, perhaps, my hon. friend would give us the reasons which led to the introduction of the Bill.

Mr. CLANCY. I stated the reasons briefly a few days ago when I introduced it. The purpose of the Bill is to prevent the worst form of intimidation, namely, persons telling voters that the mode of voting is not secret, thus placing the voters at the mercy of those who may state on the one side that the ballot is a secret one, or of others who may state that it is not. Under such circumstances, it is natural that the voter will be improperly influenced. It seems to me that there is no more insidious form of intimidation than for persons to make statements of that kind. The right hon. gentleman will see himself that it utterly destroys the secrecy of the ballot. That is shortly the object of the Bill, and I trust the right hon. gentleman will allow it to take this stage, with the undertsanding that it will be discussed when the whole subject-matter is taken up.

DRAINAGE ACROSS RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 16) respecting drainage.

He said: The object of this Bill is to give to the farmers the same privileges that are enjoyed by the railway companies. Since the country has become cleared up, the farmers are beginning to under drain their land, as it is impossible to successfully cultivate land unless the surplus water is taken out. In many cases where railways have been built, ditches have to be carried beneath the railways, and the railways are not amenable to the same laws as the farmers. This Bill will make the railway companies contribute towards the cost of those ditches the same as the farmers. The amendment to the Railway Act of last year reads as follows:

> Whenever proceedings for the drainage of lands have been taken by any landowner under the provisions of an Act of the legislature of any province in that behalf, and it appears to the Railway Committee that an outlet for such drainage works is required over, across or under the lands of the company, the Railway Committee may, upon the application of the landowner or engineer in charge of the works, or of the clerk of the municipality and on due notice to and hearing the parties, order the company to construct and provide upon its lands all necessary means of drainage, as in such order specified upon the landowner first complying with such terms as to payment as to the whole or so much of the cost of construction and maintenance of the said drainage work as the Railway Committee in such order provides.

This is the clause that stings the farmers all through Ontario. In many cases it would cost the farmer more money to apply to that Railway Committee and make the payments here required than the land would be worth. We require, consequently, that the railway companies should come under the same law as the farmer. All we have to do to accomplish this is to put in these few words into the Railway Act and take clause 14a out of it. I hope the farmers in this House will appreciate this measure and thoroughly examine it, and if they are satisfied no doubt the other hon. members will be satisfied also. If this Bill is allowed to go to committee, the farmers thoroughly understand it and will be able to convince that committee of its necessity. The farmers of this country have expressed themselves in stronger language against the Minister of Railways for having put that clause in last session than for all the other sins this government committed last summer. I trust that this matter will be taken up and handled in the proper spirit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I am very much afraid, if the hon. gentleman's view of the result of my action in this matter last session be correct, that in endeavouring to have this legislation put into the shape in which I think it ought to be, in order to fully safeguard the public interest, I will be discharging a very thankless duty. This is happily a question which does not partake of a political character, and which we can therefore deal with solely on its merits and come to the wisest conclusion at which our judgments will enable us to arrive, without being hampered in the slightest by political considerations. I am not going to suggest that this Bill should not pass through its second reading, but I would ask the hon. gentleman to have it referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways and Canals so that it may undergo discussion in that committee.

There is more in the matter, I can assure the hon. gentleman, than he and his friends and the people who are calling for this legislation imagine, a great deal more. It involves the complete and total surrender by this parliament to the local authorities which are constituted under provincial drainage Acts of the means to be taken for the protection of life and property against the possibility of casualty resulting from carelessness in the way in which roadbeds of railways may be affected by this procedure. The duty is cast upon us as a parliament of seeing that the railways of the country are operated safely, that nothing that is necessary for the protection of those who use the railways—both, as I said, as to their lives and as to their property—shall be overlooked. And it will be a matter for the Railway Committee, and, if necessary, later, for this House to see whether or not that proper and necessary protection can be secured if this Bill becomes law. I take that to be a larger and more important consideration than the one which the hon. gentleman would wish to see provided for. I do not for a moment dissent from the view that this is a very important matter for people residing in many sections of the country. I can well conceive that it would be a great advantage to them if some means could be adopted, consistent with the proper protection of life and property, which would enable them to drain their property under more favourable conditions than, it appears, by law, they are now able to do. I grant the importance of the matter which the hon. gentleman has in view; but we must not overlook the importance of the other considerations. It is the duty of parliament to weigh both and to examine both. We will do that, I trust and believe, according to our very best judgment and ability when the matter comes to be considered by the Railway Committee, to which I would suggest that the Bill be referred. Let me say one word with regard to the legislation of last session. It is open under that legislation for any landowner to give notice to the Railway Committee that he has utilized the machinery which he has at his hand at home, and the Railway Committee, being then set in motion, can work the problem out.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the legislation of last session has resulted in any cases coming before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was just going to say that that has been done in one or two cases. I know of one case, and I am under the impression that there was another, but cannot speak with confidence as to that. The parties did not require to send a delegation to Ottawa. They were told, when the Bill was before the House last session, that a simple letter would answer all purposes. A letter was written informing my department that a case had arisen which was within the contemplation of the Act of last year. We immediately sent an engineer for the purpose, and he met the parties, and they met the railway people. There was no further complaint about it, and I understood that an understanding satisfactory to all had been reached without any serious expense to the party. That is as far as I can speak with confidence at this moment. I believe that could be worked out; I know of no reason why it could not be done. I think it is not possible for any one to say that they have endeavoured to utilize the procedure of last year and have failed. I am confident that that has not occurred, for if it had occurred, I am sure I should have known of it. I would urge that we do not deal with this matter too hastily, because we cannot conceive what the consequences might be if such a change as is proposed becomes the law of the land. There is one matter the hon. gentleman complains of which is not so easy of adjustment, and that is with regard to the expense that must be incurred when these works are required to be carried on, and the distribution which may be made by the officers of the department or by agreement between the parties as to the portion which each should bear of the cost. I can well believe that it would be somewhat burdensome, perhaps it might be found to be beyond the means of the applicants to comply with the requirements of the Act. But that is no ground of objection to the law. We can well imagine that conditions will arise that cannot possibly be remedied. But, if you are going to insure fair treatment to all parties in such controversies, when such a question arises you must impose obligations upon each, and if the obligations appear to be heavier upon one than the other, if one of the parties is less able to bear what he justly ought to bear than the other party, that is no ground for criticism of the law. We cannot prevent these conditions from existing; we must take things as they are. And, therefore, I can see that it might be almost impossible to remedy the complaint which the hon. gentleman has dwelt upon with respect to the probable cost which may be imposed upon the landowner who would secure the right of making a drain or constructing works through or under the road-bed of a railway. I am content, as I said, that every opportunity should be afforded the hon. gentleman, and those who think with him, to thresh the question out again before the Railway Committee. Or, after it reaches there, should it be deemed wise to take that course, I would favour it being referred to a sub-committee for, perhaps, a closer and more thorough inquiry than would be possible before the whole committee.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 9.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 7, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved:

That the papers covered by the return to the Order of the House of Commons, dated 12th February, 1901, Reference No. 3, with supplementary return of said Order, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

He said: That is the itemized statement of the gallons of spirituous and malt liquors sent into the Yukon. The Minister of the Interior knows the return, and the subject is referred to in the Auditor General's Report. Some inquiry will be made into that, and these papers would be useful.

Motion agreed to.

ALIEN ACT AMENDMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 47) to amend the Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens. He said: The leading feature of the first amendment which is proposed by this Bill concerns the third section of the present Act, which provides for a penalty for a violation of this Act of $1,000, no more and no less. The object of the amendment is to make the penalty not more than $1,000 and not less than $50, giving to the judge discretion to apply the penalty according to the offence. Then, it is stated in the Act that the penalty is to be recovered only by the consent of the Attorney General. We propose to modify that section, and to provide that the penalty shall be recovered with the consent, either of the Attorney General of the province, or of the judge of any court in which the penalty is sued for.

The second amendment concerns section 5 of the Act. I have not the Act before me, but section 5 provides that a settler, that is to say, an intending settler, may bring with him a relative or a personal friend. It has been found in practice that this word 'personal friend' is too elastic for practical purposes, and that it may be made an occasion for evading the law; therefore, we propose to strike out the words 'personal friend.'

Section 6 of the said Act provides that if there has been a violation of the Act, the party who has been introduced into the country illegally shall be sent back at the expense of the person previously contracting for the services. It is proposed to strike out these words, and to substitute in lieu thereof:

At the expense of the person, partnership, company or corporation violating any of the provisions of section 1 of this Act.

Then, it is proposed to repeal section 8 of the Act altogether, and to substitute the following section therefor:

That it shall be deemed a violation of this Act for any person, partnership, company or corporation to assist or encourage the importation or immigration of any alien or foreigner who resides in, or is a citizen of any foreign country to which this Act shall apply, by promise of employment through advertisements, printed or published in such foreign country, and any such alien or foreigner, coming to this country in consequence of such an advertisement, shall be treated as coming under a contract as contemplated by this Act, and the penalties by this Act imposed shall be applicable in such case. Nothing in this Act contained shall be held to affect or control the government of Canada or of any provision of the Territories in respect of promoting immigration.

This last amendment has been inserted at the suggestion of the labour organizations, who have strongly pressed for its adoption.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

LONG SERVICE DECORATION.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. When did the authority to distribute the long service decoration and long service medals reach the Department of Militia and Defence?
2. Have the forms of applications for either been issued to district officers commanding; and, if not, when will they be forthcoming?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. Approved regulations to govern the issue were received at the Department of Militia and Defence, February 4, 1901.
2. No. The regulations will be promulgated in General Order of March 1, 1901—the first orders submitted for the approval of His Excellency in Council since the receipt of the approved regulations. Application forms will be printed and distributed without delay.

LICENSES FOR PACKING LOBSTERS.

Mr. BELL (Pictou) asked :

1. How many licenses have been granted for packing lobsters on the shores of the island of Anticosti?
2. If any, to whom have such licenses been granted?
3. What fees have been paid for such licenses?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). Assuming that the hon. gentleman's question refers to the coming year :

1. One.
2. M. G. Daggett.
3. $100.

LACHINE CANAL LOCK.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has the contract for the Lachine canal lock been awarded? If so, to whom and at what figure?
2. Who were the other tenderers, and at what figures did they tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. The contract for the Lachine canal lock has not been awarded.
2. Until the contract is awarded it is not in the public interest to make known the names and figures of tenderers.

SOREL HARBOUR WORKS.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has the contract for the Sorel harbour works been awarded? If so, to whom, and what was the amount of tender?
2. Who were the other tenderers, and at what figures did they tender?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). The contract has not been awarded.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has not answered the second part of the question. Who were the tenderers ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Until the contract is awarded, I have nothing more to say. The contract is not awarded. That covers the whole case.

MONTREAL HARBOUR WORKS.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Who was the successful tenderer for the harbour works in the city of Montreal, awarded by the Public Works Department?
2. What was the amount of the accepted tender?
3. Who were the other tenderers, and at what figures did they tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte) :

1. James C. Malone.
2. $631,033.33.
3. James C. Malone, Three Rivers, Que., $631,033.33 ; N. K. & M. Connolly, Quebec, $886,606 ; M. A. Pigott, Hamilton, Ont., $827,000 ; W. H. Davis, Ottawa, $936,570 ; F. B. McNamee, W. Strachan, J. Quinlan, Montreal, $1,019,000 ; R. Macdonald, Coteau Landing, Que., $1,185,000.

CONTRACT WITH THE CANADIAN LOCOMOTIVE CO., KINGSTON.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. What was the nature of the contract made between the government and the Kingston Locomotive Works, or with private parties at Kingston, or elsewhere, for the supply of locomotives for the Intercolonial Railway?
2. How many engines were ordered, and when were they to be delivered?
3. What price is being paid for each engine?
4. Are the government making advances to the contractors on account before the delivery of the engines, and if so, on what basis?
5. Were tenders asked for the supply of the engines?
6. What was the date upon which the contract was entered into?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. There is a contract with the Canadian Locomotive Company of Kingston for single expansion consolidated freight engines with four pairs of coupled wheels.
2. Twenty engines were ordered, and they are to be delivered in the following manner, viz.: The first engine on the first day of May, 1901, and an additional engine every ten days thereafter until all the said twenty engines shall have been delivered.
3. $19,000 each.

4. 80 per cent is allowed the contractors on each progress estimate.

5. No, upon a submission to the Governor in Council, it was ordered that as the department had obtained prices for similar engines from United States manufacturers, the government would be justified in paying this price with duty added, less $500 each.

6. The agreement originally made was with Messrs. William Harty and others on the 22nd December, 1900, and transferred to the corporation formed by the original contractors under the name of the Canadian Locomotive Company.

YUKON DISTRICT—LIQUOR REGULATIONS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Will the government lay on the Table of the House ' The departmental regulations with reference to liquors for personal use ' referred to in letter of Deputy Minister of Interior to Mr. Turenne, January 11, 1901, (return to Order of the House, Ref. No. 3, 1901)?

2. Will the government lay on the Table the departmental regulations with reference to liquors for the Yukon district?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Yes, I will lay the regulations on the Table to-morrow.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—RECRUITING IN CANADA.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to put a question to the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). According to the notice that was given some days ago that the government were to take Thursday, I expected to-day that the government would go into Supply, and that I would be able to bring up the motion of which I gave notice some days ago. The government did not take Thursday, and to-morrow being Friday, and some hon. members desiring to be present, who will be absent, I would like to give notice to the House that I will bring the motion up on Tuesday, unless there is a special reason why I should not do so.

VISIT OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CORNWALL AND YORK.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.). Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to the fact that two nights ago I asked a question in the House when the right hon. gentleman was not present, and that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) intimated that he would rather I should wait until the Prime Minister was in his place. It was in regard to the visit of the Duke of Cornwall and York. There is a notice in the Globe, quoting it as from official sources, that their Royal Highnesses are going to Vancouver, and I would ask the Prime Minister if he can give any official information ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I stated some time ago to my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Prior) that we are corresponding at this moment with the Colonial Office upon the subject of the visit of their Royal Highnesses, that the correspondence is not concluded, and that I would not like to make any statement until the correspondence has been concluded. But, in the meantime, I think without divulging any secret, I may assume to say that it would be, I think, quite fitting and proper that their Royal Highnesses should visit Vancouver, B.C.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I presume Victoria at the same time.

The PRIME MINISTER. I should say so.

THE BUDGET.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I said that I would make an announcement as respects the time at which the budget will be presented. Our present intention is that the budget speech shall be delivered on Thursday of next week unless something should occur to postpone it, of which, of course, due notice will be given.

TRAINING OF OFFICERS AND MILITIAMEN.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment wish to interfere with the budget or with the motion of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), but I would say that I also gave notice of motion on going into Committee of Supply. I would not think of intruding upon the privileges of the hon. member for Labelle, but I would say that my notice has precedence over his, and that it was held over at the request of one of the ministers who was ill.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) The motion of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) also concerns the Transvaal, and perhaps we can agree to compromise.

TRANSPORTATION OF GRAIN.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bennett :

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when a fixed and definite line of action should be undertaken on the question of the transportation of the grain and other commodities of the North-west Territories, Manitoba and the western states, with a view to centreing the same to the greatest possible extent in Canadian channels.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, this motion was before the House yesterday, and the debate was cut short at six o'clock. I had intended saying something then, but was prevented by that fact. I just wish to say a little more in regard to the transportation problem and something in regard to the features of it that were brought up in the House yesterday. I would like to take a strictly non-partisan position in regard to this transportation problem, but when I remember how the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) treated me last night, and has treated me on several occasions, I do not think I would be discharging my duty unless I pointed out some of the mistakes that he has made in the past in connection with this question. The other day, the recognized organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, the Globe, in Toronto, was discussing the railway question as it affected the people of Manitoba, and as it affects them to-day in relation to a certain proposition that is now before them in connection with the Canadian Northern Railway. The Globe, said that there is an element of resentment in the attitude of the people and their representatives in the matter. What gave rise to this element of resentment in the minds of the people of Manitoba ? It is because this government failed in 1898 to do what they should have done for the protection of the people in connection with certain transportation problems then before the parliament of Canada. In 1898, when we had this matter up in the House, I directed the attention of both sides of the House to the fact that a great railway proposition and a new proposition was being brought to their attention. I quoted from the Globe newspaper of that day outlining the scheme of Mann and Mackenzie, having in view the establishment of a new transportation route, and I said that this is the opportunity when so much money is being expended to protect the people of Manitoba, and to protect the whole people of Canada. I will quote from the Globe newspaper a statement of what was done in 1898 in this House, in the legislature in Toronto, and in the legislature in Manitoba, in three legislatures that were controlled absolutely by the Liberal party. The Ontario and Rainy River Railway has 286 miles in the province of Ontario, and that province gave it $1,110,000 without a single condition being imposed. The Dominion government gave $960,000 in connection with the same railway without conditions, and the province of Manitoba guaranteed bonds to the extent of $5,800,000 on the portion of the road both within the province and without it. On the whole there was granted to that road $27,000 a mile of public money for 290 miles in Ontario ; $8,000 a mile guaranteed by Manitoba for the Minnesota section and the section in Manitoba ; and the Dominion government in 1898 gave 6,400 acres a mile. The Manitoba government guaranteed $10,000 a mile bonds which, with the land grants, made a donation of $20,000 a mile to that concern. In 1898 three Liberal legislatures in this country : the legislature of Ontario, the legislature of Manitoba, and this parliament controlled by the Liberal party, gave the equivalent of $20,000 a mile for this road. I called the attention of parliament and the Minister of Railways to these facts when the measure was going through here, and I said : Now is the time to protect the people of Manitoba. But the minister replied : You are wandering far afield ; you are trying to pose before the country, and he made all kinds of charges of that kind against me when my only desire was to get him to protect the interests of the people. What was the defence that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) set up then ? He said : This is not a great continental project ; it is only a little railway and does not involve any great interest. That statement of the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) is on record, and when I divided the House, the right hon. the First Minister rushed the measure through and he neglected to seize the opportunity which would have protected the people of Manitoba to-day. The people of Manitoba are now seeking to right the wrong that was perpetrated upon them by three legislatures controlled by the Liberal party. The province of Ontario is to blame for not taking some sort of satisfactory guarantee from the Rainy River road ; the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) is to blame in the same way, and the Greenway government is most of all to blame. If what I proposed had been done, namely, to unite and make that road a national road, there would be no grievance in Manitoba to-day, but on the contrary, the Rainy River Railway would have been a link in the new national system. It would in a short time have been connected with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and with the Intercolonial system, and for the money that Canada has expended on these railways we would have practically had a national system across the continent without costing us an additional cent. The Minister of Railways on that occasion failed to protect the interests of the country ; he failed to protect the interests of Manitoba, and the same charge applies to the Liberal governments of Ontario and Manitoba.

I want to pass, Mr. Speaker, from that partial view of the case. I am sorry to have to say of hon. gentlemen opposite that they failed in their duty. Now, with what the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has said in regard to transportation of Lake Superior, I agree to some extent, but I do not agree with all he said, for if his argument means anything it means that the Grand Trunk Railway system from Midland to Montreal is the system best adapted to solve the transportation problem, and that after we are finished with the canals we should do nothing more. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) in that respect. On the contrary, I agree with hon. gentlemen opposite. I say that there is or will be enough traffic for every system of transportation which we have got, and the thing for us to do is to find that system will give us the best and most immediate results. The Grand Trunk Railway has a good harbour at Midland and a good system to Montreal, but just when it reaches Montreal it does the worst thing possible for Canada, because it deflects that traffic to Portland. That should not be, nor should the Grand Trunk Railway be allowed to continue that practice. The best way to stop that and to afford a remedy is to do just what the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) said we should not do. I believe we should nationalize the Booth lines and nationalize the Ross line, and from all I can gather to-day Quebec is the natural port for a great deal of that trade. At very small cost Quebec can be made a splendid shipping port, and can be developed and put in running order this year, and extended every year in the future. I believe that there is something in winter navigation, but I do not intend to enter upon that subject to-day. Be that as it may, Quebec is the most available port we have in Canada for the greatest length of time during the year, and it can be equipped with the least expense. I believe that the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Great Northern Railway would make a first-class extension of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not believe that our national line, the Intercolonial Railway, should end at Montreal. I believe in its extension to the great lakes where the traffic originates and where it will find a feeder. If these ports are to be built up ; if the 200 million bushels of grain —which I believe will be 400 millions before a great while—which comes to the great lakes and which will come to Midland and to Parry Sound are to be handled in Canada, I want to see the Grand Trunk Railway get a share of it and I want to see the Canadian national railway getting its share of it and taking it to Quebec in the summer time and to St. John, Halifax or Sydney in the winter time, or if need be, all the year around. I am applying my system of nationalizing the railways as a solution of the problem submitted to us yesterday by the hon. member (Mr. Bennett). I believe that the people of Canada are in favour of nationalizing the Booth system and the Ross system and making them part of the Intercolonial Railway. I believe that if the government had in 1898 secured a proper control over the Rainy River road, Canada would have a national system of railways in a short while right into the city of Winnipeg, and in that way we would have been able to discipline all the other railways in this country. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) said that we had spent enough money on the canals and that we should now let the railways have a show. I do not agree with him there. My opinion is that for twenty years the railways have done their best to prevent the deepening and enlarging of our canals, and now that our canal system is coming into vogue I would like to see it largely improved and extended.

We in Toronto also believe that probably one great solution of the transportation problem is to make a national road somewhere between the Georgian Bay and Toronto, by which we could use the canal and river system from that city down to the sea.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the idea.

Mr. MACLEAN. That may be the cheapest and best way out of it ; that may be the complement of what the government is to-day doing in the harbour of Collingwood. They are making great improvements there, and we would like to know if they are making them with the idea that they will have a railway between Toronto and Collingwood, or Toronto and Midland or wherever the port may be. The port may be Penetanguishene. But that is a proposition which must be in the government's mind, and it may be one that will go a great way in solving the transportation problem. The only satisfactory solution of the transportation problem of this country, however, is by the parliament and government taking over the railways, and making them a complement of our canal system. When you control the railways and the canals, you can use the one or the other or the two in combination; they will work in harmony in the best interests of the country.

I wish briefly to enumerate some of the positive advantages of the nationalization of railways. It will secure the absolute control of our own lines, and absolute equality of treatment to all, rich and poor, individual and corporation. Government ownership will restore the land grants to the people, and some of the money the people put into these roads. Government ownership will make the canals and our water navigation, and all the improvements thereof, and the railway system of the country, complementary one of the other. Government ownership will necessitate the ocean terminals of our railways being at Canadian ports and in that way make our railways patriotic. The only way you can make Canadian roads patriotic is by compelling them to have their terminals at Canadian ports. Government ownership will build up a British Canadian ocean service on the Atlantic and the Pacific. It will secure the fullest use of all trains for a greatly improved postal service. It will secure the control and extension of the parcel express business, and will allow of the railway telegraph service being consolidated with a national telegraph system; and all this will be secured at a much less cost than now for administration, and at a much less cost to the people who use the service. Government ownership means that a national policy with regard to railways can be made complementary to the national fiscal policy, and one will greatly aid and reinforce the other. Government ownership means lower freight rates for the producers, whether farmers, miners, lumbermen, stockmen, or fishermen. Government ownership means cheaper passenger rates, with a greatly improved passenger service. Government ownership means the opening up of new country with the money now sunk in unnecessary roads in older sections. Government ownership means that the entire energy of the management of such a national system will be devoted to the service of the people, and to solving the problem how best to handle the traffic of the country at the lowest cost to the producer or consumer, instead of wasting the best part of that energy, as is done to-day, in fighting rival roads at the expense of people along the lines or the country at large.

What are the things which the nationalization of railways will prevent or render unnecessary ? It will prevent the creation of a railway commission. If we can avoid the creation of an expensive railway commission, it will be a great point in favour of the nationalization of railways. Government ownership will prevent the everlasting war between such a commission and the railways which is sure to occur after the commission is created. Government ownership will prevent the unpatriotic conduct of private railways like the Grand Trunk going to Portland, and the Canadian Pacific Railway going to Boston. Government ownership will wipe out the frightful corruption in politics by the great corporations. Government ownership will do away with the extravagant and unnecessary extension of the present national system of railways. Government ownership will do away with the duplication of existing roads by unnecessary lines. Government ownership will avoid the expensive and extravagant system of competition for business, involving many unnecessary officials, offices, advertising, solicitors, commissions, &c. Government ownership will prevent foreign ownership and control, and the consequent unpatriotic policy that might emanate therefrom. Government ownership will prevent the hostile attitude that existing roads show to new roads coming into and getting into cities, and will put an end to all unnecessary and expensive entrances into cities and ports. Do you know what happens in a city like Toronto or Montreal when a new road wants to come in ? It involves the expenditure of millions of money, a great fight, and the waste of a tremendous amount of energy. With government ownership there will be a national entry into each city, and none of the fighting and expense now indulged in by competing roads. That alone will be an enormous saving. The more you look at this railway question in all its aspects, the more evident it becomes that the only way to avoid the troubles ahead is through government ownership. The more we do to build up rival roads, the more we complicate the problem. When you stop giving to railways, subsidies of money and lands, and gradually get control of them, you will be in a position to give the people transportation at the lowest cost.

Just one other feature of this transportation problem I want to refer to, that is, the Atlantic service. This country has made no progress in getting an Atlantic service since this government came into power. We are rather worse off than we were before. We find our Canadian ports becoming deserted. My idea is that the government should run an Atlantic service in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I believe that the coming Atlantic port is Sydney. The government could make the experiment with two moderate-sized steamships, which would give a service once a week; and if it were found to pay, it would do more to advertise this country, and build up the Intercolonial and the Canadian national system of railways than anything else. The traffic would have to pass over the national railway of Canada. Not only the people of New York and Boston would use the service, but all the west would use it; and I believe that before ten years were over, we would have a fast Atlantic service running from an Intercolonial terminal, which would send a steamer across the ocean every day in the year. I believe that a fast Atlantic service is coming, and as a Canadian I would like to see it quick. The way to secure it is to hold the national system of railways which we have to-day, and gradually extend that system, and not to be afraid to go ahead and take over the other systems, which can be done at a very small expense.

As I have said before, the people of Canada to-day, are paying all the cost of these railways. It is not the companies or the shareholders who are paying for them; it is the traffic, and the greater burden you put upon the traffic by establishing unnecessary lines, the harder it is for the people to bear. There is no getting rid of the difficulties of the situation other than by coming to a straight national system of railways.

I hope that the government will yet see its way to come out in favour of the nationalization of railways, and extend the national system to the upper lakes. We have only got a portion of the way. While I agree with a great deal that my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has said in criticism of the government, I do not agree in his policy of making the Grand Trunk Railway the line over which this traffic will pass, but would prefer a line owned and controlled by the people, and which would be an extension of the Intercolonial Railway. I trust that hon. gentlemen opposite will not charge me with posing before this House, because the very policy I am advocating to-day I drew attention to three sessions ago in this House; but I do make this charge to-day, and am sorry to have to make it—that if the government had maintained control of those roads, and the money they gave the Rainy River Railway in 1898, there would not be the trouble in Manitoba which exists there to-day. I believe, however, that the Manitobans are a self-relying people, and that they will work out a solution which will not impose any great burden on them in this connection. They are making a step in the direction of government ownership, and the province of Ontario proposes hereafter to maintain some kind of control of the railways, so that we can fairly say that government ownership is in the air; and those politicians who first tried to impress that policy on the public and have it carried out, will be those whom the people will recognize as having had the courage of their convictions, and as having advocated a policy which cannot fail to be beneficial in the public interest.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Peter Macdonald, East Huron). I rise to express my views upon the transportation question irrespective of any route. The transportation question, in my opinion, is one of the most important engaging public attention. I do not regard it as a party question at all. Nor is it a local question, for we are all desirous of establishing the very best system of conveying from one part of the country to the other the products of the energies of the Canadian people. It is not to be supposed for one moment, that any one route will carry all the products of the country. Some will go by the waterways, and some partially by waterways and partially by railways; but it is undoubted that the most effective way of controlling railway rates is to put our waterways in the very best condition. It has been the experience everywhere that a waterway has a very strong controlling influence upon railway rates owing to the cheapness with which a waterway can carry the freight and traffic of the country, and the time has come when we must devise the best means of meeting the extraordinary expansion of trade we are now experiencing. Our trade is happily increasing by leaps and bounds. It would probably surprise many who have not given attention to the figures, that in 1888, 9,000 vessels passed through the Sault Ste. Marie canal, south and west, the average tonnage of which was 600 tons, and the amount of tonnage carried through was 5,495,000, and the value $79,000,000. That will give an idea of the extraordinary trade which passed through the Sault canal in 1888. Twelve years have elapsed, and I find, on looking over the figures, that instead of 9,000 vessels having passed through last year, 20,000 vessels passed through, with an average tonnage of 1,000 tons; and these vessels carried, not five and a half million tons, but twenty-five million tons. And instead of the value being $79,000,000, the freight carried amounted to $218,000,000 in value. That shows the expansion of trade in Lake Superior during the past twelve years, and impresses upon us the importance of providing increased facilities for that trade, so as to prevent its being handled by a foreign country. Our government have been doing what they could to improve the greatest waterway in the world. Canada's waterway extends from the Atlantic into the very heart of the continent, a distance of no less than 2,700 miles, but nature, in giving us that unrivalled waterway, left some obstacles which we are in duty bound to remove as far as possible. A portion of that waterway belongs to us, and a portion is common to us and the United States. We have spent no less than $75,000,000 to $80,000,000 in constructing canals, which, I think, was a wise policy. But we must remember that there are other things to be done. We have canals now 14 feet deep, which will accommodate vessels carrying from 60,000 to 100,000 bushels of wheat, but we require also deep harbours and better terminals. We sometimes lament that we are not getting more trade, but the reason is because we cannot handle satisfactorily the trade we are now receiving. The large vessels that come down laden with wheat pass in sight of Port Colborne and sail into the port of Buffalo, and one of the most important things Canada has to do is to make that Port Colborne sufficiently deep to enable large vessels to come in and send the wheat in our direction. There is another thing required, and that is a guard pier; and I am glad that the parliament of Canada voted money last year for the purpose of providing it. Without that guard pier, particularly when the wind is blowing from the south and south-west, the waters become so disturbed that the elevating of wheat becomes very difficult.

Now, I wish to show that the particular attention of parliament should be directed, not for the purpose of constructing railways, but for the purpose of putting the waterways in the very best condition. It is well known to those who have given consideration to this question that the waterway, no matter how inefficient, has a very large control over the rates charged by the railways during the open season. The lowest rates in the world for carrying wheat to-day are the charges from Chicago to New York. And what is the reason of that ? The reason is that the lowest charges by waterway are the charges by water from Chicago to New York. The best equipped railways in the world to-day are the railways from Chicago to New York, the reason being that the waterway adjoining has forced the railways to improve in this respect. Twenty years ago the curves on these roads were much more numerous and much more difficult than at the present time. The railways saw that, in competing with the waterways, they would be obliged to improve their means and methods. They straightened their curves, they lowered their grades, they increased the size and capacity of their cars, they increased the capacity of their engines ; and the consequence is that where, a few years ago, they could carry only from twenty-five to thirty cars, now they draw forty, and even fifty cars. This is owing to the improvements that I have spoken of. And, as I say, these improvements have been forced by the proximity of the waterway upon whose bosom floats the vessels of commerce. This shows us the importance of putting our waterways in a condition to control the railway rates in our own country. Another thing that we must bear in mind is that the western states, in order to control the railway rates, seek an outlet at some place on the waterway. And as soon as they strike that point they can control the railway rates, because they can say to the railway : We will take the waterway unless you give us reasonable rates. The very best authorities in the United States who have investigated this matter agree on these points. No doubt hon. members will recollect, that in 1885, the Senate of the United States appointed a commission to investigate the transportation question. This is known in history as the Cullom Commission. Before this commission sat to hear evidence, they formulated questions which they sent out to men who were particularly well informed on this business, and one of these questions I will read to you. This question was sent out to ninety different individuals, for the purpose of ascertaining their opinion as to the controlling power of waterways over railway rates :

> In making provision for securing cheap transportation, is it or is it not important that the government should develop and maintain a system of water routes ?

The parties to whom this was sent included expert railroad men, steamboat men, engineers and others who had paid attention to these matters for many years. And of the ninety to whom the question was sent, seventy-three sent an answer to the following effect :

> That a national system of water communication is the most certain and effective method of regulating railway rates and of insuring to the people the advantages of cheaper transportation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Hon. members will probably remember reading the history of this committee and its report to the Senate. As a result of the findings of this committee, and based upon its report, a Bill was introduced and carried under which the Inter-state Railway Commission was appointed. I find in that report the following, which gives the opinion of the committee on this point of water communication, and shows the important effect of waterways upon railway rates in that country :

> The evidence before the committee accords with the experience of all nations in recognizing the waterways as the most efficient cheapeners and regulators of railway rates. Their influence is not confined within the limits immediately accessible to water communication, but extends further and controls railroad rates at such remote and interior points as have not competing lines and the means of transport by water. Competition between railways, sooner or later, leads to combination or consolidation, but neither can prevail to secure unreasonable rates in the face of direct competition with free natural or artificial water routes. The conclusion of the committee is, therefore, that natural or artificial channels of communication by water——

Now, note this :—

> —when favourably located, adequately improved and properly maintained, offer the cheapest method of long-distance transportation now known, and they must continue to exercise in the future, as they have invariably exercised in the past, an absolutely controlling and beneficial regulating influence upon the charges made upon any and all means of transit.

Now, you will notice that there are three things as specified in this report as necessary. One is that the waterway shall be favourably located. We have a favourable location ; we have a far more favourable location than the United States. The United States waterway is not to be compared with the Canadian waterway. For instance, they have one mile of canal for every four miles of open water ; we have only one mile of canal for every sixteen miles of open water. They have only the Erie canal with its depth of seven feet, we have our canals with their depth of fourteen feet. We have rapid transit from Port Colborne to Montreal practically. It takes a barge on the Erie canal one month to make the round trip ; it does not take a week to make the round trip by our methods of transit. We are as near Liverpool at Hamilton as they are to Liverpool at New York. Montreal is 158 miles nearer to Chicago than New York is to Chicago. These are the advantages we possess. But they have a few advantages which we have not. They have no tolls upon the Erie canal, we have some tolls upon the Canadian canals. There is another advantage that we possess. The Welland canal, on an average of twenty years, is open nineteen days longer in the season than the Erie canal. The Lachine canal is on an average open four days longer than the Erie canal. Now from these facts you can see that our advantages are far in excess of those offered by the Erie route; therefore, other things being equal, we should be more than able to compete with the other route running through Buffalo to New York.

But there are disadvantages. They have better terminal facilities than we have. We have no facilities of any importance at Colborne compared with those at Buffalo. We have no elevators at Colborne elevating 40,000 or 50,000 an hour, as they have at Buffalo; therefore we cannot reasonably expect to handle the trade. They have elevators at Buffalo with a capacity of 21,000,000 bushels. They elevate grain at the small price of one-eighth of a cent per bushel. We have never done that, we have not been able to do it. It costs our people four times as much as that to elevate either at Colborne, or at Montreal; and can any reasonable man expect that shippers and exporters, knowing these facts and these difficulties, will send their produce our way when they can get so much better facilities by other routes?

Now let me point out the disadvantages under which the port of Montreal labours. Montreal is not a first-class harbour, it is not a second-class harbour, it is not a fifth-class harbour. It is entirely deficient in facilities for handling the trade that might centre in Montreal. Therefore, it will be impossible for shippers and exporters to take advantage of that route when Montreal is in such a bad condition. I do not say that for the purpose of throwing cold water upon Montreal, because I consider that Montreal, if it had the proper equipment and apparatus, could handle the trade of this country, and that in less than twenty years its present population would be doubled or trebled. It is the gateway standing between the eastern and western trade. Our import trade must of necessity, if it comes by Canada at all, come through that door, and our export trade converging from the different points of the west must pass through the city of Montreal. Therefore, I have been of the opinion, that instead of waiting for private enterprise to put Montreal in a proper condition, it should be made a national port, the government should provide proper equipments at Montreal for that port to handle the trade of Canada. If that is done, rest assured that the trade will be largely diverted from other routes to Montreal on account of the natural facilities and advantages which that port possesses, and a large proportion of the trade now handled by the Americans will be handled by the Canadian people, and we will get the advantages of it.

Now, I want to give some facts showing the lack of facilities at the port of Montreal. The way that cattle are handled in the port of Montreal has largely driven the export of cattle to the port of Boston. Boston is one of those ports thoroughly equipped and prepared for handling the export of cattle. Let me give you an idea of how they use cattle in the city of Montreal when farmers send their cattle by that way. The cattle come in, say, on the Canadian Pacific Railway. They are run down to Hochelega where they are untrucked, and where they are fed, watered and rested, and that is proper. Then when the ship upon which they are to be sent across is ready, they are retrucked and run back to the point nearest to the ship, and that very frequently is 100 or 150 yards away from the ship. Then they are run down a steep gangway on to the platform of the wharf, thence they are urged along a narrow way between merchandise on the right and merchandise on the left, till they get to the gates of the sheds. Then they are urged through the narrow doors of the sheds on the front, and out of the narrow doors at the back, and then forced by twisting their tails, by goading and whipping, on board the steamer. When the cattle get on board the steamer, they are excited, they are heated, they are bruised, and consequently they enter upon the voyage in that condition. Cattle exporters in this country, who have given the matter consideration, tell me that this treatment depreciates the value of each animal from $2 to $5. Taking the lowest figure, last year we exported 115,000 head of cattle, a loss of $2 each would mean $230,000 lost to the farmers of this country by the poor means which are afforded them to handle the cattle, and to put them on board vessels in the city of Montreal. Now, $230,000 would pay the interest on six or seven million dollars. It would be cheaper for the farmers of this country to borrow five or six million dollars to equip the port of Montreal for the proper export of cattle.

Then again, Montreal is not a good port to ship flour from, and that is one of the reasons why the Grand Trunk Railway carries nearly all its flour to Portland. Mr. Lond, who was a prominent official in the Grand Trunk Railway service, has stated that the cost of shipping flour in Montreal is so high that they are seeking another way of shipping. He says this: We come into the city of Montreal with a train load of flour, we have no place to put that flour. There are not sufficient storehouses, and consequently we have to allow our freight to lie upon the track until we get an opportunity of loading it directly from the train. The cars are so far away from the edge of the wharf that we have to employ drays and carts, and the consequence is that it costs us about $4 a car for unloading, whereas if we had proper facilities and a proper place we could unload for at least $2 a car. That probably comes out of the exporters' pockets in Montreal. But, do not hon. gentlemen see that the profit of the farmer is lessened in proportion to the expense which it takes to remove these difficulties and to overcome them? All that comes ultimately out of the pockets of the farmers of this country.

Now, let us take another article, that of lumber. We export lumber from the city of Montreal very largely. I think last year we exported about 336 million feet board measure. When a ship is expected by the agents of shippers in the city of Montreal, they telegraph to the lumber exporters up the river, and other places, to send their lumber forward because they expect the ship on a certain day. The lumbermen send down their lumber, some in barges and some by rail. Very frequently it occurs that when the lumber arrives at Montreal something has detained the ship, the ship is not in the harbour; and consequently they have no piling wharfs there, and the cars have to remain there with the lumber on board until the ship arrives, it may be one, two, three or four days, in some instances. On the other hand, the barges which come down have to remain with the lumber on board until the ship arrives. Well, the railway charges $2 demurrage every day that the car remains, and the barges charge $10 a day demurrage for their retention in the canal or harbour. The steamboat company has to pay that in Montreal, but of course ultimately the expense all comes out of the freight. If they had not to pay this expense the cost of the freight would be less, and that amount ultimately comes out of the pocket of the producer. Therefore, it is a loss to the producers to have this condition of things prevail in the city of Montreal.

Now, how do they do in Boston in loading cattle? Cars run right down to the sheds on the edge of the wharf. The ship is lying in her berth. There are level tramways running from the floor of the cars right to the hold of the ship. The cattle are urged along quietly and put into their stalls. In that way the city of Boston has been known all over the continent; in fact one-third of the cattle imported into Liverpool two years ago came from the city of Boston. Until we, as Canadians, put the port of Montreal in such a condition as that it is impossible for us to expect the trade to go there. Now, there is another point; how about the elevating capacity in the city of Montreal? There is one elevator owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or, at least, used by the Grand Trunk Railway. It is situated upon the canal where it cannot be reached by an ocean vessel at all. The other is operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I think, together, their capacity is 2,000,000 bushels. Now, how do they load ships? Just let us look at that for a moment. They load the ships exactly as they did twenty-five years ago. They load the ships just as if the world were not moving forward at all. They have the same equipment in the city of Montreal to-day as they had twenty-five years ago. They have the old exploded system of floating elevators. A barge goes to the elevator, gets a load then floats down to the vessel, and the load is transferred to the vessel at the rate of 4,000 bushels per hour. The best business that they ever did in the city of Montreal was loading the steamer Montcalm with 100,000 bushels in twenty-six hours. In the first year of the twentieth century, think of them loading in the city of Montreal at the rate of 4,000 bushels per hour, while at Duluth last year, they loaded a vessel at the rate of 195,000 bushels in 153 minutes. Do you really suppose that you can expect trade to go to the city of Montreal and wait to be loaded at the rate of 4,000 bushels per hour, and when we are so far behind in adopting the most recent inventions for expediting the transfer of freight to vessels? It is impossible that any reasonable man can expect it. If we expect to do business in Montreal we must equip that port for the purpose of doing business as well as other ports are equipped. If not, do you expect to get trade? How could you expect that the trade of Buffalo could be diverted to Montreal when shippers know the conditions existing at one port and at the other? At Buffalo 50,000 bushels of grain are elevated in an hour, and at Montreal 4,000 bushels are elevated in an hour. Do you suppose the shippers would be foolish enough to send their grain down to Montreal and pay half a cent a bushel for elevating it there, when they can get it elevated in Buffalo for one-eighth of a cent a bushel? Let us make our port a fraction of a cent cheaper than any other, and we will have the trade just as sure as we are existing, because the other conditions in Canada are far superior to those elsewhere. Now, I am going to give another instance. One of the Hamburg-American vessels came into Portland two years ago to be loaded from Grand Trunk Railway cars. From the time the vessel came in, was unloaded, and was reloaded with 265,000 bushels of grain and ten car-loads of other freight, only three days elapsed. Do you really suppose that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are wrong in seeking a port where their goods can be handled with such despatch allowing their trains to return to do business again? If we want to get the Grand Trunk Railway business in Montreal, we will have to do better than we have been doing. Let me give a few figures which will probably astonish some hon. gentlemen. These figures are authentic. They are in regard to the congestion of trade in the port of Montreal during the season of 1897-8. On October 11, 1897, there were 447 cars lying on the sidings in the city of Montreal waiting for accommodation to be unloaded; on November 2, 1897, there were 473 cars; November 9, 451 cars; November 10, 438 cars; November 15, 427 cars; or an average during these months of 464 cars standing idle waiting for the accommodation which should be there to receive their freight as soon as they come in. Do you really suppose in ordinary business that if there were such congestion of trade as that, or that if any of you hon. gentlemen were wishing to transport your products, knowing these conditions to exist, you would send your goods forward to be exported from that congested centre ? I do not think you would. Taking the whole season from the opening of navigation in the spring until the closing in the fall, there were 315 cars on a daily average lying in that city waiting to be accommodated at the elevators, or on the wharfs. Let me give you a few more figures to show that the figures I have already quoted do not have reference to a special season or to special conditions. In May and June, 1898, the Grand Trunk Railway had more than 1,000 cars upon the tracks waiting for accommodation, and the Canadian Pacific Railway about 500. On May 12, 1898, there were 439 cars waiting for accommodation ; on May 18, 314 cars ; on May 30, 532 cars ; on June 15, 446 cars ; and on June 17, 181 cars at Point St. Charles, and 423 were standing around the elevators without receiving the accommodation they desired. Now, I think I have said enough to show the House that while we express surprise that after all we have done we are not getting the trade for the port of Montreal, we can see the reason for this. We have deep canals and deep water, but this is a link in the same transportation route. The strongest part of the chain is the weakest link in it, and the strongest part of this transportation chain is the city of Montreal, which is a very weak link indeed. What do I propose to do ? I am not speaking for the government, but I think I am speaking for a large proportion of the people of the west, and I think I am speaking for the whole country when I say that parliament should direct the government to assume the port of Montreal, and make it a national harbour. They should have plans drawn by the most expert engineers in the country upon a magnificent scale, and let them go on with a portion of the plan as we can find the money. Let them go on for five, ten, fifteen or twenty years with the improvement of the port of Montreal, and then we shall have a port there of which Canadians may be proud. By that time trade will be very largely diverted along the lines to which we now look, and our trade will have reaped the advantages it can never have unless such things are done. We cannot leave the improvement of such a large harbour as that to private enterprise, and therefore, it is the duty of the government, in my opinion, to spend money, if it requires $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 to complete that work. Ten million dollars of an expenditure simply means about $300,000 a year, and I have shown that on cattle alone there was a loss of $230,000, and the loss coming from lumber, the shipment of flour and a hundred and one other things would be three times covered by the $300,000 which I believe the government will be called upon to pay annually for the equipment of that harbour. There is another thing about the city of Montreal, and perhaps I should not say so much in regard to Montreal in the presence of an hon. gentleman who is a representative of that city. I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) will endorse every word I say with regard to the condition of the Montreal harbour. The wharfs in Montreal are on too low a level. It is impossible to erect permanent sheds on them, because the sheds would be carried away when the ice moves, and the result is that the sheds along the docks are temporary structures, which have to be taken away in the fall, stored during the winter, and replaced when navigation opens. You will see there is a great loss of labour and of money in all this. If the wharfs were built on a higher level the freight sheds could be permanent structures and they could be enlarged to meet the requirements of the trade. In Boston and New York the trains move down along the centre of the sheds on the wharfs, and the merchandise is unloaded into different sections ; one section for Liverpool, one for Glasgow, one for London, and so on. Then, when a vessel comes to port her loading is quite a simple thing. We have no such arrangement at Montreal, and consequently the railway cars have to unload in the night time. According to the rules of the harbour commissioners, trains cannot unload from 7 o'clock in the morning until 7 o'clock at night, because the general traffic occupies the space during the daytime. The consequence is that at 7 o'clock in the morning if a ship is not loaded and the cars are not unloaded, the train has to draw out and remain there for 12 hours before they can resume their work. It can very well be seen, therefore, that, as I said in my opening remarks, Montreal is not a first-class harbour, nor even a fifth-class harbour. I do not believe that you will find on the Atlantic coast any harbour worthy of the name which is so much behind the age as is the harbour of Montreal. Another reason why importers do not do their business through Montreal is this : When a vessel arrives, there is very frequently no cover for the merchandise she brings, and cement and tin and wire, and such goods are exposed to the weather and very often injured, notwithstanding that sometimes tarpaulins are used for covering. The importers who bring such goods into the country, and whose goods have been damaged will certainly not use that port again, but will seek some other, where the accommodation is better. In view of all this, would it not be wise for us all, irrespective of political parties ; would it not be judicious for us as Canadians to put the port of Montreal in such first-class shape that it will accommodate the trade that we are soliciting. The federal government of the United States consider New York as a national harbour. They look upon it as the centre towards which a large portion of the western trade converges, and they have given about $10,000,000 towards the construction of piers, warehouses, and other works at that port. In like manner the United States federal government recognizes Boston as a national harbour, and they have made a grant of $5,000,000 to it, and so with Galveston, and so with many other ports on the Atlantic coast. Look at the port of Liverpool. One hundred years ago the annual trade of that port was only 500,000 tons, but the yearly trade of Liverpool today is over 11,000,000 tons. What is the reason for this vast increase in the trade of that port ? I will tell you. Liverpool, during the last 100 years has spent $100,000,000 on its port, or at the rate of $1,000,000 a year. Hamburg has spent $34,000,000 during the last twelve years, and many other cities in the old country as well as the new, have been spending large sums upon their harbours. Indeed, we might say that this is not an expenditure at all, but it should be viewed in the light of being simply an investment of money in the interest of the people. In Canada we would pay 3 per cent for the money expended on our harbours, and we would realize not 3 per cent but five times 3 per cent, which comes back to the people ; maybe not in the form of a few cents which we can see, but in the form of increased trade, increased credit, and increased development of our country in the various avenues of our greatness. I, therefore, believe that the government should make Montreal one of the best harbours on the continent. Montreal cannot be considered as being a competing port unless we make such improvements as will enable us to compete. We cannot to-day handle the traffic as quickly or as cheaply as can other ports that have modern equipment. We must have such facilities as will enable a vessel carrying 80,000 or 100,000 bushels to have her cargo elevated in two hours and the vessel ready to resume her return journey. It has been said that a great difficulty is that we cannot get sufficient return cargoes for Canadian ports. Well, Sir, my opinion is that when we have our transportation system in proper shape and when exporters find it profitable to send their goods from our Canadian ports, then the merchants in Chicago, Duluth, Superior City, Winnipeg and other places west will import their goods through Canadian ports. The time will come when our trade will increase in the import line as well as in the export line, and when we have modern facilities in Canada the goods that now come to New York and Boston will come through Montreal or Quebec or Halifax or St. John, and be handled by the Canadian people to their advantage.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Now, there is also the question of the navigation below Montreal which must be attended to. My hon. friend from West Quebec (Hon. Mr. Dobell) pointed out the weaknesses there. We have an artificial ship channel, and that channel is not sufficiently wide, nor are there a sufficient number of navigation lights. There are jutting rocks which have to be removed and there are curves which have to be straightened, and with all these improvements made the insurance would be less and a large proportion of our trade would find its outlet by the St. Lawrence. I do not know of any other subject which could better or more profitably be discussed by the members of this parliament. There is no question more interesting to the people of Canada, because our great fertile plains are so far removed from the seaboard that the question of cheap transportation to the markets of the world must ever be one of great concern to us. We cannot increase the price of our products, but we can so lower the rates of transportation that the producer will get the benefit, which will enchance the value of his products to him. I have deemed it my duty to place these facts before the House, because I have taken considerable pains to obtain them. I twice went to Montreal and I examined the port that I might be able to deal with this question intelligently, and for that reason I thought it advisable to present my views on this question in a non-political light. I say that both political parties are deeply interested in accomplishing this great aim in the interest of our country, and I trust we will all be able to move hand and hand towards success in that direction.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) tell the House how much money the government has spent in improving the harbour of Montreal in the past ?

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Up to last year, I believe, there has not been one single dollar spent by the Dominion government. True, they loaned money to the harbour commissioners for which they receive interest ; but they have never spent independently on the port of Montreal one dollar, so far as I know, unless they have spent it since the last session of parliament.

Mr. ALBERT E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with very much interest to the discussion which went on yesterday afternoon in this House, and the discussion which has been going on this afternoon, on the transportation question. The proper solution of that question will result in great benefits to the people of this country. I am a great believer in water transportation, in regard to which we have advantages in Canada which no other country in the world possesses. We have a natural system of water communication extending into the very heart of this continent, 2,000 miles from the Straits of Belle Isle ; and what the government of days gone by, as well as the present government, have been trying to do is to make that whole system navigable for vessels of 14 feet draught, of 22 feet draught, of 28 feet draught. Therefore, I have no hesitation in saying that I support the policy of the present government in going ahead and deepening the St. Lawrence canals to 14 feet. In the discussion of this question, I fear that it will be impossible for me to avoid criticising the government for some things which they have done in connection with what I may term their transportation policy ; but I desire to say at the outset, that it is not a studied criticism, and I am sure they will receive it in the spirit in which I give it.

On the motion which is before the House, I suppose we may reasonably consider the transportation question not only as it affects the great railways of this country, but as it affects the fresh water navigation and the salt water navigation. I was very much interested yesterday, or the day before, in the Railway Committee, in hearing a note of alarm sounded by the hon. Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) in reference to the action of the Grand Trunk Railway in transferring its terminus to Portland from a Canadian port, in which we had all taken great interest, which we had been trying to build up in the hope that it would ultimately rival the port of New York. Some years ago the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said he hoped to make Montreal the Buffalo of Canada. I also recall a letter which the hon. Minister of Public Works wrote a few days ago to the president of the Montreal Board of Trade, in which he expressed alarm at the position in which we found ourselves owing to the Grand Trunk having transferred its terminus from Montreal to Portland. The government of the last four years have made rather loud professions in regard to their transportation policy, and, therefore, I think it is fair to criticise what they have accomplished.

What we have been trying to accomplish in the last few years has been to secure for Canadian channels the carrying of the products of Canada and their delivery at Canadian ports at the lowest possible cost. The question is, how far have we succeeded in accomplishing this ? In connection with the transfer of the terminus of the Grand Trunk to Portland and the diversion of the business which should go to Montreal, I desire to refer to a matter which has already been very thoroughly discussed in this House ; that is, the agreement which the government made with the Grand Trunk Railway for bringing the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. I would like to point out that Mr. Hays, who was at that time the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, stated plainly and publicly, before the agreement was consummated, that it was his intention to carry out the policy which the Grand Trunk are now about to put into effect, of making Portland their terminus in the summer as well as winter seasons instead of Montreal. In a speech which he delivered in Portland in the year 1898, and which was reported in the public press, he made that statement. In this connection I would also direct the attention of the House to the following figures. The total amount contributed by the present government towards the reconstruction of the Victoria bridge was $500,000. The amount paid annually by the government for the use of the bridge is $40,000 ; the amount paid annually for the use of the track from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert is $37,000 ; and the amount paid annually for the use of the Grand Trunk terminals at Montreal is $62,000. I have come to believe that owing to the great liberality of this government to the Grand Trunk Railway, that company have been enabled to use the money paid by the government for these purposes, in obtaining communication with Portland all the year round ; and my contention is that as this agreement was not consummated at that time, it would have been fair for the government to have said to the Grand Trunk : If you intend to do what your general manager says, the people of this country will not put up with it, and we must insert in the agreement a clause prohibiting you from going to Portland, and passing by the port of Montreal in the summer season.

A good deal has been said here this afternoon about the difficulties of transferring freight from railways to steamships at Montreal, and there is a good deal of truth in what has been said. At the same time, we must not forget that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have spent an enormous sum of money at Portland in the last few years ; and I think it would have been fair to have said to the Grand Trunk Railway, as a business proposition : You spend so much and we will spend so much on Montreal harbour ; you are the great gatherers of freight in the country, and especially in Ontario ; you are the people who control the commercial arteries of this country; you control the lines of traffic which carry the produce, and we cannot and will not submit to your making Portland your terminus to the detriment of a Canadian port during the season of open navigation of the St. Lawrence.

In this connection I would like to draw the attention of the House to the number of miles of railway which the Grand Trunk own in this country. They own 3,194 miles, of which 2,600 miles, or about 80 per cent, are in the province of Ontario. As this House knows, the province of Ontario is gridironed with lines of the Grand Trunk Railway, and the exports of this country are gathered by this railway and are taken to the various ports for export.

It cannot be denied that the rates of freight which the Grand Trunk Railway collect for the transportation of this business are of a character sometimes described as burdensome to the producer, and I think that in consideration of the great favours which the Grand Trunk Railway have received at the hands of this administration and of previous administrations, and the great amount of Canadian traffic they carry, they are not treating the country fairly. The government, I think, could have prevented this. It is a cold and heartless proposition to come from the Grand Trunk Railway. This company practically say: We will pass through the city limits of Montreal and carry freight to Portland, a greater distance by 300 miles, at the same rate as to Montreal. I hope that the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Public Works will not content themselves with merely protesting against this but find some way of effectively checking it. For what does it mean? It means that by the great influence which this corporation can wield over steamship companies, steamship after steamship will be driven away from Montreal, and we find that although last year the great Dominion Steamship Company declined to make Portland its port, in the summer season, this year it has had to bow to the inevitable. What now is the policy of the Grand Trunk Railway? In 1899, they made arrangements with the Reford line for a service to London from Portland; in 1900, they made arrangements with the Thomson line for a similar service; and in 1901, they have arranged with the Thomson line for a service to London from Portland. In 1901 also they will have taken the whole fleet of the Dominion Steamship Company from Montreal, and I am informed on good authority that they are engaging with a company which now runs to Montreal, to run a steamship service from Portland to Glasgow. I am further informed that it is likely that, in 1902, they will have a Bristol summer service from Portland, and expect to have a service to Antwerp and Hamburg also during the summer. Where are the steamships to be engaged in those services to be taken from? From Montreal, and instead of the St. Lawrence route becoming more popular, instead of our building up business over that route, and utilizing the great expenditure on our canals, we will find business being diverted to Portland, and we will have to spend enormous sums to get the steamship companies to come back again. We ought to deal with this question very soon before any more steamship companies are engaged to go to Portland and give up the port of Montreal.

I wish to refer to our canal system. I believe that the government was justified in spending sufficient money to give fourteen feet draught to the St. Lawrence canals. I put a question a few days ago upon the Order paper with reference to the depth of water in the St. Lawrence channels and canals between Lake Ontario and Montreal, and the reply of the Minister of Railways seemed to indicate that some transportation companies have been trying to depreciate our canals in the eyes of the public. I am not in sympathy with any such tactics. I believe that the railway companies perhaps in years gone by tried to curtail the expenditure on those canals. The question I asked was: When does the government expect that vessels of fourteen feet draught will be able to pass from Lake Ontario through the canals and St. Lawrence channels to Montreal without lightering? And the reply of the minister seemed to indicate that we had that depth of water last season. We had the assurance of the Minister of Railways and Canals that there is fourteen feet depth of water on the mitre sills in the canals, but the information which I had previously, and which I have obtained since, is that you cannot get fourteen feet of water in the St. Lawrence channels except when the wind blows in a favourable direction. If the wind blows from the east, you cannot get more than twelve feet or eleven feet and one-half. This is a matter which ought to be looked into. I am not stating this for the purpose of criticising the government, but simply to assure the government that if it be necessary to spend more money in order to complete the channels, I will support it in that expenditure.

I noticed a report a few days ago that four large steamers were being prepared in Chicago to go to Europe by the St. Lawrence straight through without transhipment. These steamers are intended to take perishable products in cold storage and also lumber and iron, and steel manufactures, and they prefer the northern route rather than that via New York. This is an experiment and is based on the belief that there is a depth of fourteen feet of water along the St. Lawrence route. Would we not be in a peculiar position, if, when those vessels reach the canals, after passing through the first canal, they should find the wind blowing from the east and have a wait over in the channel until the water rose?

Let me draw the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to an article which appeared in the press on this subject, written by a very reputable gentleman, Captain Thomas Donnelly. I shall not take up time by reading the letter, but he stakes his reputation on the facts and accuracy of of statements he makes.

If these steamers can go straight through to Europe with the produce of the United States, it is fair to assume that we might reasonably hope to work up a through service from Canadian points on the upper lakes. This problem of transportation is of immense interest to the people of our great North-west, from which we hope, in a few years, to have a greatly increased export trade, and are therefore bound to open every avenue that will prove profitable to our farmers. But the province of Ontario is our great producing province, and it is in the interests of that province that the canals should be deepened to fourteen feet, and that we should encourage the building on the lakes of ships under the British flag, in which we are now very deficient.

We have discussed this question as regards the railways and the St. Lawrence canals, but I would like to draw attention to the fact that while a very large amount of money has been spent by the government on small harbours on the lakes, and while we have spent millions of dollars on improvements in Halifax and St. John——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) There have been no improvements by the government in the harbour of Halifax because none are required.

Mr. KEMP. I refer to the statements made in this House with regard to the amount of money spent for an elevator in Halifax and for improvements at St. John. Now, Sir, it may be an astonishing fact to the members of this House, but still the fact remains, that when the canals were eight feet deep the vessels that traversed them could come into Toronto harbour ; but, for years we have been trying to get a sum of money voted to take out of Toronto harbour the silt, the deposit of clay that has been flowing down a river from the country at the back and filling up that harbour. We have not been able to get that vote from the government. I hope, from the pressure that has been brought to bear and the explanations that have been laid before the government, that they will make an adequate grant at this session of parliament in order to make Toronto harbour in depth the same standard as the St. Lawrence canals. Toronto is a great gathering point, it is the point in Ontario to which the freight comes from all directions; and we want to be placed in a position to take that freight down the St. Lawrence and out to the sea and deliver it at Montreal or Quebec if necessary, and so enable the farmers of Ontario to get cheap transportation. I would like to draw the attention of the House while I am on my feet, to the importance of the shipments of freight from the city of Toronto. In the year 1898, there was occasion to get some facts made public, and these facts were then made public by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. They involve comparisons in freight traffic between Toronto and Montreal. I have no doubt that it will be surprising to this House to learn that Toronto is a greater shipping centre, notwithstanding that Montreal is a sea port, than Montreal is. In the month of January, 1898, the freight on the Grand Trunk Railway system from Toronto was 103,754 tons, against 58,091 tons for Montreal. In the month of September, 1897, at a season when, it will be observed, Montreal has the benefit of ocean steamship traffic, the freight handled in Toronto was 105,000 tons, as against 96,000 in Montreal, while the passenger receipts for Toronto far exceeded those of Montreal. I would like my hon. friends from Montreal to understand that I give these figures, not to disparage Montreal, but to show how important it is to keep open this water communication and to equip Toronto harbour in a suitable way for this traffic. Something has been said about the various schemes that the government has in hand with regard to the transportation question. I think it was the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) who stated that there were so many schemes on hand in connection with this matter that the public were somewhat confused. There is the Parry Sound Railway matter to which that hon. gentleman referred. I do not know that I can say that I ever heard the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) state that it was his intention to purchase the road on behalf of the government, but I think there was a discussion a year or two ago with respect to some remarks on that subject that fell from the lips of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Then there is the question, which has recently been resurrected, about the Georgian Bay canal, or the initiation of a project to improve the French river. Then, a year or two ago, the people of Port Hope sent a deputation here to interview the government and try to convince them that $8,500,000 could be save to the country in the Trent Valley canal scheme, if the terminus were made at Port Hope, instead of at the point intended on Lake Ontario. Then, there is the matter of Port Colborne to which I do not intend to give any time ; but I would like to have some one rise in this House and explain if it is not a fact that the improvement of Port Colborne was initiated to a great extent on account of a gentleman of the name of Conner, who expected to erect elevators at that point, and also had a scheme to improve the equipment of the harbour at Montreal. Were not the plans adopted largely under his supervision, and approved by him ? And now that this Conner syndicate is not materializing, I would like to know if it is the intention of the government to go on and develop that scheme also. We have also another difficult question before us, and that is the matter of a Canadian marine on the lakes. We are at present, to some extent, in an experimental stage ; and the great difficulty is that we have not Canadian bottoms on the lakes, but the ships are all mainly those under the American flag. I would like to have the government propound some policy whereby we might encourage the building of a Canadian marine on the lakes. I believe it will bring great prosperity to this country. And, in considering the transportation question, and all these various routes, I hope the government of the day will take into consideration this fact, that we cannot bring influence to bear in regard to water transportation to the same extent that influence can be brought to bear through the transportation companies who own and run railways, companies that represent an existing and fully established interest. If we could get more capital invested in a lake marine, we should be able to start the ball rolling, and should have a constant influence in the direction of improvements in water transportation, and the question would be raised to a position of importance equal with that which it holds in the United States. And further—in considering all these questions, I hope the government will not forget the part of the country (the province of Ontario) where the great volume of our exports is produced, and will not forget the importance, in any scheme they may have of interesting centres of population, for instance, Toronto, Kingston, Montreal and Quebec. If you can get these centres of population interested in any project, in the nature of things, that project will attain all the greater importance. I have to thank the House for the very kind attention with which they have listened to my remarks.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). It will be expected, I presume, that, as the minister chiefly responsible for the canal system and its operation, I should have a word or two, at least, to say upon this subject before the conclusion of the debate, and I choose the present as likely to be the only opportunity that may offer, in the event of the debate concluding this evening. At the outset I wish to express to you, Mr. Speaker (Mr. Macdonald, Huron), the obligation which, I think is generally felt in the House, and which I certainly feel, for the very interesting contribution that you have made to the present discussion. We certainy got from you information, which, no doubt, had been collected with a very great deal of labour, information exceedingly valuable in itself, and tending to raise the discussion upon this occasion to a distinctly higher plane than that upon which, I am sorry to say, it had been placed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that because both the hon. gentleman who made this motion (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), while disclaiming the slightest intention of giving the discussion any party political character, and while declaring that the question was one of a non-partisan character and should be so treated, did not fail to devote a very considerable portion of the time they occupied to criticising from a party point of view and censuring in a party political sense, not only my own acts and my own alleged omissions, but the acts and the alleged omissions of my colleagues. And I am sorry to have to acknowledge that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp), who has just taken his seat, has also sinned very notably in this direction. Let me refer at the very outset to what my hon. friend from Toronto has just spoken of. As I say, I am compelled to make reference to these matters, but would have very much preferred if we could have dealt with this question upon general principles, and dealt with it in something of a broad way, rather than that I should be compelled to answer statements and criticisms which are really beside the question, and which are practically of no interest or importance to the people of this country.

Now, one of these sinners is my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat. He thought it would be appropriate to drag in the arrangement that was made between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company when we took over the Drummond line and arranged for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal. I cannot, Mr. Speaker, for the life of me, understand how the carrying of the business of the Grand Trunk Railway to Montreal was either encouraged, or promoted, or could have been prevented in any way by that transaction. The acquisition of the rights which were obtained by the government in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway from the Grand Trunk Railway, was an acquisition of interests and rights which were secured, because it was felt that they would be immensely to the advantage of the government railway. We paid no more than we believed they were worth; we paid no more than we are sure the experience of the future will show that they are worth. We treated with them upon a distinctly business basis; and I think we would have been laughed to scorn, I know we would have been ridiculed by the Grand Trunk Railway people if, when we were offering to give them less than they were claiming, and no more than the privileges were worth, we should have attempted to annex some condition such as the hon. gentleman suggests; if, when we acquired from them the right of running our railway over their line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, and using their terminals, paying, I say, no more than those privileges were worth, they should have been asked to contract on their part to withdraw from the port of Portland.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think you paid them less than they asked.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Now, my hon. friend will not deflect me from the course of my argument by making so entirely an immature and so inappropriate a suggestion as that. My hon. friend is an intelligent gentleman, one of the most intelligent on that side of the House, and he knows that there is nothing in the suggestion that he now makes. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) asks this House to believe and to credit him with believing that in making a business transaction with the Grand Trunk Railway Company—when we were making no gift to them understand, when we were giving them no bonus, but simply paying them a moderate and reasonable price for valuable concessions—we should have attempted to make it a condition that they should withdraw from the harbour of Portland, and cease to make Portland a terminus of their line. Why, Sir, Portland has been a terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway since the line was first completed.

Mr. KEMP. I referred to the summer traffic, not to the winter traffic taken to Portland.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend says he refers to the summer traffic. Well, if we had attached any such condition as respects traffic in any portion of the year, the Grand Trunk Railway would never have entertained the proposition, and as a result we would not have been able to have made any arrangement with them for securing an entrance into the city of Montreal, and we would not have been able to make that arrangement which, outside of a few red hot and extreme opponents, is approved by the judgment and common sense of the people of this whole country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman makes it a ground of criticism against us that we did not do as he suggests we might have done. If the hon. gentleman wants to make a political question out of it, I would ask him to consider the conduct of his own party and of his own government whose policy he has uniformly sustained. I would ask him to carry back his recollection to 1884, when the government of Canada was making, not a business arrangement, but practically giving a bonus of thirty million dollars to the great Canadian Pacific Railway corporation. A modest suggestion was made to the government and to parliament at that time, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in consideration of their receiving so munificent a grant from the exchequer of this country, should bind themselves not to expend any portion of the money that they were receiving as a gratuity from the people of Canada, in building up or creating a terminus or termini for their railway in any foreign country. How was that proposition received by the gentlemen whom my hon. friend is associated with, and by the government which he, during its life, continued to support ? It was treated with absolute contempt, the proposition was voted down, received no sort of favour from the friends of the hon. member. I think when he compares the two propositions, the proposition which he says I ought to have entertained, and the proposition which was submitted to parliament at that time, it will not be open to my hon. friend to make any great amount of political capital against this government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will my hon. friend permit me ? He referred to what he calls a gift of thirty million dollars to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I had always understood that that was a loan, and that it was repaid before it was due.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the amendment which was proposed at that time :

> That all the words after the word 'that' in the said motion be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof : The said resolutions be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with power to provide as a condition of the proposed advance, that so long as any part of such advances or interest thereon remains unpaid, none of the resources of the company shall be expended towards acquiring interests in railways or railway securities in the United States, with a view to an Atlantic ocean terminus in the United States territory.

I think you could not put anything more clear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I merely wanted to understand the hon. gentleman, it was not merely a grant in aid of the Canadian Pacific Railway construction that he was referring to, but a loan.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was referring to the thirty million dollars which was procured by the Canadian Pacific Railway from the government of this country in 1884, and which was not given to them in consideration of any rights that we were acquiring from them, though, no doubt, the grant was secured by the obligation of the company who promised to return the money; but it was all the same a practical gratuity to them, given to them at the time, though it enabled the company to attain a very laudable object, no doubt. The company was receiving this enormous, this splendid grant, from the government of this country, and they declined to entertain the proposition that no portion of this grant should be expended outside of Canada in building up a terminus in a foreign country.

Now, so much for the political bearing of this question. The hon. gentleman then proceeded to refer to a subject which I am glad he has taken up, because it justifies me in taking up some little time of the House in speaking upon it in order that I may, if possible, remove any impressions there may be in parliament, or in the country, with regard to the condition of the canal waterway. The hon. gentleman has convinced himself that we have not what might be called a fourteen-foot waterway; he does not believe that we have more than twelve or twelve and a half feet, possibly we may have twelve and a half feet, he says, but when the wind blows from certain directions we surely have not a fourteen-foot waterway. Now, let me state to the House exactly what endeavours have been made, what means have been adopted in order that we might convince ourselves, and that I might be in a position to make a positive statement on the subject to parliament concerning this waterway. As soon as doubts began to be thrown upon the actual existence of this depth of waterway, and that was immediately after the announcement being made that we had a fourteen-foot channel, certain statements appeared in one of the New York papers, and a letter which the hon. gentleman has referred to, was published. They came very shortly after to my notice, and upon my seeing the statement which was made by Mr. Donnelly, I called the attention of the officers of my department to it. I quite agree with what the hon. member from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) has said, that Mr. Donnelly is a gentleman of the very highest reputation and standing. I do not believe that Mr. Donnelly would make such a statement unless he was convinced that it was true. But, all the same, Mr. Donnelly, I am satisfied, from information which has been given to me by my officers, and who must know whether they are right or whether they are wrong, is entirely mistaken in the facts upon which he relied. Mr. Donnelly specifically mentions the particular parts of the canal system which he says are defective, and upon which he grounds his statement. He put us in a position in which we were able to ascertain whether or not what he said was or was not correct. He did not confine himself—and that was very fair and honourable conduct on Mr. Donnelly's part—to a mere general statement, but gave us particulars, and furnished us with the facts, or what he believes to be the facts, which justified him in criticising the correctness of our assurance. Immediately upon that coming to my notice, we asked the superintending engineers of the three different districts into which the St. Lawrence canal system is divided for the purpose of superintendence, to come to Ottawa. They came here, and we asked as to what their knowledge was, and they were asked to tell us whether or not all or any of the statements that Mr. Donnelly made were correct. They were informed that the information which was being sought from them was being sought for the purpose of giving a reliable and authoritative statement to the public and parliament upon the question, and they were charged, therefore, that they should be accurate to the utmost degree in the answers which they gave. These gentlemen have made their reports to us. I have, in my hand and which I will now read to the House, the compilation from these reports and statements, which the deputy minister gives me in an official manner, so that it may appear upon what authority these statements have been made. I imagine that no person supposes that the Minister of Railways can, himself, of his own personal knowledge, know whether there are ten, or five, or more feet of waterway along these routes. All that he can do is to convey to parliament the information which is furnished him by his responsible officers; but, at the same time, taking care that these officers are charged that the information which they furnish shall be absolutely reliable in every particular. Now, this is what the deputy minister has prepared, and what I would ask permission to read in reference to this subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) will lay it on the Table of the House?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I will lay it on the Table of the House. He says:

In order to avoid any misconception as to the depth of water afforded by the new works of enlargement, generally termed a fourteen-foot navigation, it must be clearly understood that the scheme as devised and carried out is based on the construction of locks of such depth that there shall be fourteen feet of water on their mitre sills.

I apprehend that no person has imagined that anything that has been said, either before this government took charge, or since, that there would be anything more than 14 feet, or that we engaged that there should be anything more than 14 feet of water on the mitre sill. Whatever draught of water the water over the mitre sill shall afford shall be the draught which the canal system shall afford to the shipping of the lakes.

Allegations have been made, however, that vessels drawing no more than 12½ feet have struck in the intermediate channel ways of the River St. Lawrence and doubt has been suggested as to the full efficiency of the works executed. These allegations are most practically met by the fact that the new system has been safely navigated last season by lake vessels drawing from 12 to 13 feet 6 inches of water, an instance being the steamer Arabian, which passed down safely on the 1st December, 1900, drawing 13 feet 6 inches of water. Mr. Wolvin, of the American Shipbuilding Company, Cleveland, has stated that he can answer absolutely for a depth of 13 feet, as one of their steamers had gone through drawing that depth of water.

Mr. BRODER. Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question? That does not state what time of the year is referred to. The water varies considerably in depth at different times in the year, and when the wind blows from one direction or the other, and it is very important that we should know whether this was in the spring of the year or later in the season.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was on December 1 that this particular vessel passed through drawing 13 feet. My impression is that there were no vessels which went through the canal, throughout the entire length, until the season was well advanced. Hon. members may rely upon it that we have 14 feet of water on the mitre sill as we assume we have. We have a depth of channel all the way through deep enough to enable you to navigate a vessel which can cross the mitre sill of these canals. There has been no close limit in the dredging of the channel in order that it should just fit 14 feet and stop there. There has been a foot of leeway in the dredging from one end to the other. There has not been a contract that has been executed which has not had 15 feet. That is what the engineers say, and with absolute confidence, so that hon. members will see that the question does not admit of doubt from the standpoint of the men who are charged with the serious and grave responsibility of seeing that this work is properly done, of a particle of doubt. It does not appear, to me at all events, that any doubt can arise in the minds of hon. members of this parliament with advice from this authoritative quarter.

Mr. KEMP. May I ask the hon. minister if the reports which we have say anything in reference to the depth of water when the wind blows from the east? It might vary a foot and 6 inches or 2 feet in depth.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our officers are thoroughly familiar with the effect of the winds, and they would not be justified in stating that we could furnish a 14-foot channel of water unless we were able to furnish 14 feet of water, and they say that this was at low water. I was going to say, speaking of Mr. Wolvin, that he was here the other day and had a conversation with the deputy minister upon this subject. I asked, when I heard of this conversation, if the deputy minister had procured from him a written statement, because it would be of interest and value to the members of parliament to have a statement made from such a reliable source upon this subject. He said that he had omitted to do that, but he telegraphed and received a reply from Mr. Wolvin. He is a very large shipper, and the head of the American Shipbuilding Company of Cleveland. He wired on March 5 to Mr. Schreiber:

> Your telegram of the 4th reached me here today. I remember stating to you that I am satisfied there was deeper water through the St. Lawrence canals and river than many people claim, as one of our steamers went through this route drawing thirteen feet. You made the statement that you had fourteen feet of water, and I replied by saying I felt there was that draught, but could answer absolutely for only thirteen feet.
> (Sgd.) A. B. WOLVIN.

That is Mr. Wolvin's statement. It is unfair and unjust to the canals to say that we only have twelve feet or that we only have thirteen feet, when we are able to submit a statement to this House that a steamer went through the entire length of the canals drawing thirteen feet six inches without meeting the slightest obstacle at any point of the route. Writing under date of June 30, 1900, Mr. Rubidge, the superintending engineer of the Soulanges canals, says:

> I again desire to state most positively that there is a practical fourteen foot navigation between Prescott and Coteau Landing at low water and during the season of navigation.

That is from Mr. Rubidge, who has been in charge of that portion of these canals for a long term of years, and than whom no one is better acquainted with the condition of the canals. He is not a person whose report to me might be doubted by hon. gentlemen opposite. I found him in the department and he has been in the same position he now occupies for many years. What right has any one to discount that statement of Mr. Rubidge? Mr. Schreiber further says:

> As to the existence of certain shoals which were referred to in a letter of the 3rd December from Mr. Donnelly, the inspector of the Canadian Lake Underwriters Association, published in the Montreal Star, the superintending engineer states, in regard to the shoal at the upper entrance of the Galops canal, that it is entirely outside of the new channel, and is located between the old and the new channels.

Those who may have read Mr. Donnelly's statement will recall that Mr. Donnelly speaks of this particular shoal at the upper entrance of the Galops canal as having been the place where some vessel went ashore, and he has given that as one of the reasons upon which he bases his condemnation of our channel. Now, when I show that that shoal is entirely outside of the new channel altogether and is located between the old and the new channel, the value of that statement as leading to such a conclusion becomes abundantly clear. Capt. Donnelly referred to the shoal at Sparrow Hawks and to the shoal at Rapide Plat, and Mr. Schreiber states:

> There is a deep channel at the west of the shoal; and at Rapide Plat, vessels have the option of using the canal at low water, in which there is a fourteen foot waterway, instead of the river channel. In order to straighten the channel, however, the shoal spurs will be cut off next season, and indeed, even though at the present time there is a safe channel for fourteen foot navigation various features of improvement may, and no doubt will, from time to time, present themselves in the practical operation of the system, and the public may rest sure that the department will not fail to carry out such further minor works as experience may show to be desirable.

Mr. Schreiber goes on to say:

> In March, 1900, the superintending engineer notified vessel-men that they should proceed with caution in traversing the new channels, as they would have a great deal to learn as to entrances and exits to and from the canals, and as to the varying currents of the river reaches, and generally as to the behaviour of large vessels in the currents, and that masters and pilots should be urged to understand and appreciate the tremendous difference existing between a nine-foot and a fourteen-foot navigation. Again, there was a statement in one of the papers that the vessel Eureka had touched bottom last season with 11 feet 4 inches draught in the new channel in Lake St. Louis.

This is another one of the alleged facts which goes to discredit our channel, and as to that the deputy minister states :

On investigation it appears that the place where the bottom was touched was not in the new channel at all, but in the old channel.

My officers tell me that the difficulty we have had is in prevailing upon or inducing the navigators to adhere to the new channel and leave the old route. They think they know so much about the business that they take upon themselves to disregard the warnings and the instructions they have received from our officers. Stubborn, unwilling to allow it to be assumed they do not know all about where they are going, and do not know better than the officers who seek to advise them ; they plunge ahead, disregard the buoys, disregard the signals, disregard the warnings, and as a result they run ashore—but outside of the channel. That is what occurred in Lake St. Louis.

Again, the whaleback, the A. D. Thompson, was reported to have struck bottom in the Williamsburg section of the canal, and a statement to that effect was made in the newspapers. It turned out upon inquiry that this report was false. As to the Soulanges canal and its approaches, the superintending engineer, Mr. Munro, reports :

'A depth of fifteen feet of water on the mitre sills of the locks at low water and a depth of from twenty to sixty feet in the channel from the foot of lock No. 1 at the easterly end of the canal to Lake St. Louis.'

Mr. Munro observes : 'As a matter of fact, barges are continually passing down it drawing twelve to thirteen feet, and the Arabian went out some time ago drawing 13½ feet.

The superintending engineer of the Quebec canals, and these comprise the whole series of the Soulanges system, says :

As ascertained by myself.

He did not take the statement of any one else, but he ascertained for himself in the way in which these things can only be properly ascertained without running vessels over them.

Mr. Schreiber reports :

The superintending engineer of the Quebec canals reports that, as ascertained by himself, there was a full depth for a fourteen-foot navigation from Montreal to the foot of Ile Perrot, and from that point to the Soulanges canal entrance old plans show depths of from fifty to seventy feet.

The department has, of course—the question being one of vital interest—taken all possible precaution to ensure that the full depth of the enlargement should be utilized with perfect safety, and it remains confident that the necessary channel ways in the waters lying between the several canals have been formed as required for that purpose, and, further, that such channels have been indicated with care, leaving to pilots and others the necessary mastery of the details of this, as of any other similar navigation in which they may be employed, and adhesion to the rules laid down for their guidance. So important a change as is implied by this enlargement will, naturally, tend to create in some quarters a desire that it should fail of its objects, rather than it should be successfully operated, and possibly this attitude may for some little time act to its prejudice. It stands, however, as an accomplished fact, and must be so regarded.

(Sgd.) COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER,
Chief Engineer.

That is the official statement furnished me by the chief engineer for the purpose of communicating it to the House. I do not know of any other way or by what other means I could give the House more positive assurance.

I ask hon. members to dismiss from their minds any such idea that we are deficient in respect of our St. Lawrence channel. I am not going to say, I never have said, the officers have not said, that many things cannot be done to greatly improve the channel —to straighten it probably, or to widen it ; but we have everything which it was stated we had. We have enough if the people who navigate the channel will use proper care and diligence. We have a good channel, and I think it is only fair and just to the men who have done this work that I should take the present opportunity of saying that in various quarters and from men who are fully competent to form a judgment on the question, the very highest testimony has been freely offered to me as to the skill and ability with which this great work has been carried to completion. The men whom I found in the department in charge of the work have continued, and have about finished what was proposed to be done ; at all events, in connection with the main works. They have been indefatigable in their efforts and have exhibited a great deal of skill ; and people who have made a study of these matters and who have such information as to qualify them to express an opinion, do not form the same inferior judgment as to the character of our channel or our canals or our works generally that some of our own people seem to do. I have reason to believe that the people who are engaged in transportation in the United States look upon what we have achieved and at the present condition of our canals, as a matter of grave anxiety and alarm to them. They think we have provided a very adequate and efficient waterway. They recognize, as we do ourselves, that there are some things to be done at the two extremes which do not, however, affect the sufficiency of a 14-foot channel. They recognize that we have not all the details perfected ; but they do acknowledge that the government of Canada has made a most thorough and efficient channel throughout the whole St. Lawrence route, and they look upon it as a most grave and serious rival of their various transportation routes.

My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) who has made this motion—I am sorry I shall have only a very few moments to devote to his address—starts out by affirming that the time has arrived when we should stop and ask ourselves what we are doing—or, as he expressed himself in the course of his speech, where we are at—before we spend another dollar. My hon. friend asks us to come to a decision as to what the policy of the government is, because, as he affirmed, not once, but many times, not with any qualification, but in the most unhesitating language, the Canadian canal system had proved itself a failure. Now, why does the hon. gentleman say that ? He is a member of the Canadian parliament, entrusted by his constituents to represent them here in an important capacity. What he says is published in the newspaper press ; headlines can be read this morning in all the opposition papers : 'Canadian canal system a failure—killing the traffic.' That will be read not only at home but abroad, and is it going to tend to our advantage for my hon. friend to utilize the prominent position he holds as a member of parliament to give currency to such a statement, and particularly to do so on the insufficient grounds on which he supported it ? What were those grounds ? What was his reason for asserting that the canal system had been found a failure ? He says that I made a prediction last year in parliament, that I held out great hopes and expectations that we were going to have an enormously increased business this year, and that my hon. friend from Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell) made a similar prophecy. What was the language I did employ ? In another portion of his speech he quoted from 'Hansard' what I said last year, and I leave the House to judge how far that quotation bears out, not the pessimistic, but the absolutely hopeless view which he has taken of this matter, and which he is seeking to impress on parliament and the country. This is what I am supposed to have said, and no doubt did say :

> We will see that with Montreal properly equipped, there is no reason in the world why we should not be able to offer sufficient inducements to shippers of grain in the west to prefer the St. Lawrence to any other route.

Well, it strikes me that that is a very conservative, very modest, and very cautious statement. Made in July, 1900, it was by no means to be taken as an assurance that in that year with the season nearly gone, the business was going to be so much greater than it had ever been before. We have not yet got into the year 1901, and do not know what the business of 1901 will be. It may be better than that of 1900, or it may be worse. If worse, it proves nothing ; it does not prove that the canal system of Canada is a failure—no, a thousand miles away from establishing such a proposition. It proves that we are not yet in adequate condition to compete successfully with the Buffalo route ; and is that a very unreasonable or unexpected thing ? Why, Sir, you cannot change the character of our canals in a day. You cannot expect shippers to equip themselves with barges and other facilities and adapt themselves to the deeper channel in a year or in two years or possibly in more. If our business seems declining on the canals, we can find sufficient explanation in the fact that probably the largest steamers are continuing, and continuing in a greater measure, to absorb the traffic on the lakes, and are necessarily taking away from us a portion of the traffic which we would otherwise have, and which we will have when we are in a position to receive those large ships in our harbours connected with our own canals. It may be three or four or five years before we get into full swing, but there is no doubt, in my mind, that the improvements which are in contemplation at Port Colborne, properly and efficiently carried out, and in the harbour of Montreal and the route perhaps below, will make the St. Lawrence superior to any other route. Why should my hon. friend use the language of despair ? What object is to be served by telling us that the canals are a failure ? I do not think that he reasoned this matter out. I do not think he could have informed himself as to the superior advantages of water over all rail communication or the superior advantages of our lake and canal system over the joint lake and railway system on which the shippers from New York, Boston and other American ports have to absolutely rely. These shippers will undoubtedly give us a hard fight, but as was stated by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Macdonald) if we can get down the cost of transportation by the fraction of a cent below the cost by any other route, we will have the advantage, and we surely can do this.

My hon. friend made a number of assertions, and very extraordinary assertions they were. He asked : Why, he asked, do you not stand by the St. Lawrence route ? Why is not that your policy ?

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If that is not our policy, what is or what has been our policy ? That is what I am curious to have my hon. friend inform me upon. Not once but several times did he tell us that the late government had a fixed and definite policy of making the St. Lawrence canals the Canadian water route. Well, what did they do more than we have done ? If what they did convinced my hon. friend that they had a fixed and definite policy, why should he withhold from us a similar acknowledgment? He seems to think that because some men of this government expressed the view that it would be an advantage to make traffic arrangements between the Intercolonial Railway and some other system, we were turning our back on our canal route. But I do not apprehend that any traffic arrangements between any two railways is going to fill up the channel we have got or will have the effect of tearing down the locks and rendering it impossible for vessels to navigate our canals. Because, in the city of Halifax, I made a speech in which I spoke of getting something from the railways as well as the canals to increase the business of the Intercolonial Railway, my hon. friend takes alarm. And because the Minister of Public Works refers to some other railway undertaking as a means of increasing our carrying trade from the west, my hon. friend is again alarmed. He puts these three statements together, and says you are going around the country holding out terrors to the people; you are going to favour some other means of carrying grain than the St. Lawrence canals. I must say that I think my hon. friend has not done his superior intelligence justice in constructing an argument of that kind. I am aware that he knows better. I would not speak slightingly at all of my hon. friend's mental capacity and powers, because I know they are very considerable, and he has also had the training of a professional man. And I am sure he knows that you could not put these three facts together and draw the logical inference from them that our canals were to be prejudicially affected in the remotest degree.

We are not going to hurt the canal, if, as a matter of policy, we took a dozen other means of getting into the western country. Our canals are there. We are proceeding with all possible despatch to put them in perfect shape; we intend to complete the works at Port Colborne. But my hon. friend does not want to see the canals equipped and finished in a proper way. He does not want to see the steamers that are now going to Buffalo invited to Port Colborne. What he does want, I cannot say. I can only draw the conclusion that he is looking for a grievance against the government and the Minister of Railways and thinks he has found one. We are not going to hurt the canals. They will run, I hope, for all time and will be maintained. And if we can maintain those canals and control the business, what harm to Canada or the canals will accrue if the railway companies could, by any process, reduce their cost of transport to a figure which would enable them to induce traders to ship a portion of their traffic over these lines. That will not hurt anybody and may help the railways.

Mr. BLAIR.

My hon. friend, drawing a conclusion, told us—and I am going to quote his words because they are the concluding words of a very lengthy address, prepared by my hon. friend with very great care, possessed as he was, of very elaborate notes, and after he had devoted, no doubt, a good deal of time to the collection of these facts, as far as they were facts, which he submitted to the House. This is the conclusion which he draws:

> In conclusion, I have only to say that I have introduced this resolution, as I did last year, hoping that it would evoke some little discussion—hoping that any views thrown out in the debate—not any poor views of mine—would be taken up by the press and discussed, and that the gentlemen sitting behind the government and retaining them in their position, would be moved, in a spirit of patriotism, to ask themselves: Is there any means that can be adopted for increasing the grain trade through Canada—not only our own trade, but by taking part of the trade now going through the United States? I believe the solution of the whole question rests on this—that some encouragement should be given both to the Canada Atlantic system and to the Grand Trunk system.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) looks with displeasure upon the idea of a member of the government suggesting that some traffic arrangements might be made with some one of these railways, and has nothing but condemnation for the conduct of the hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell), because he thought that the Great Northern Railway would be a useful feeder for the Canadian Pacific Railway to Quebec, and for my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, because of what he said with regard to transportation on Georgian Bay. But, though he condemns all this, and says that we are floundering and blowing hot and cold, that we do not know what we are about, that we ought to come to our senses and fix our minds upon something, and have a definite policy—yet, after all this, he winds up his entire address by suggesting that a bonus should be given to the two railways, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway. Why, is my hon. friend serious when he talks, as he did in the few words that he spoke afterwards about our want of fixed policy, and our want of judgment? He says:

> But, above all things, here and now is the place and time for the Minister of Railways and Canals, before this debate closes, to announce that the government intend for the future, at least for a fixed period of five or six years, to pin their faith to the St. Lawrence canal system, and not introduce any of the side schemes or projects which are now before the public.

That is my hon. friend's serious conclusion to his very lengthy address. I answer to my hon. friend, I say that we are as deeply interested in the success of the St. Lawrence canal system as he or any other member of this House. We require no stir or stimulus to induce us to do anything and everything which we may regard as reasonable, and which is in our power, and in which we are satisfied we shall be supported by opinion in this House and in this country, to raise our transportation system to the greatest possible degree of efficiency. We have committed ourselves to it. Whether it was wise or not, it is too late to say. Looking over the field, one might be inclined to think that, with the expenditure of less money, the canalization of the Ottawa river to twenty feet or thereabouts, would, beyond all peradventure, have given us the absolute control of the western traffic. But we are not discussing that question now. We have laid out our money on the St. Lawrence. As a result of the fixed policy of both Houses of parliament, and of all parliaments, and as the result of united opinion in this country, that money has been expended. I decline to yield to the hon. gentleman and stop in our expenditure till we have perfected that system, in a way which will put us in a position to achieve the best results.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at 8.10.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Just prior to the rising of the House at six o'clock, we were treated to an address from the Minister of Railways and Canals upon this all-important question introduced by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). I am sure that I was not alone in being surprised at the unusual weakness of the minister in reply. The time at his disposal was largely occupied in seeking to prove that certain officers in his department had not found any channel in the St. Lawrence that was less than 14 feet deep. The minister did not reply to the arguments advanced by the hon. member for East Simcoe, by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), and by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp). I was more than surprised also at one of the breaks made by that hon. gentleman. We all admire his ability, and as a rule we look for the fairest of fair-play from the Minister of Railways. But his treatment of the loan of 30 million dollars made by the former government in this country to the Canadian Pacific Railway, his insistence on retaining the expression that the Conservative government had made a 'gift' of 30 million dollars to the road, when the records and data of every description show that it was a loan, and so intended from the outset, every dollar of which was repaid to this country, placed that hon. gentleman in a very unenviable light before the House. Now, what was the effect of that loan ? The effect of that loan was to save the Canadian Pacific Railway to this country and to make it a success. It gave this country a highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, every foot of it on Canadian soil. It opened up our prairies and the great mining districts of British Columbia. Without that loan of 30 million dollars we would not to-day have the north shores of Lakes Huron and Superior opened up as they are, and attracting capital in large volume, as is the case at the present moment. The inexhaustible resources of this country are only at present being disclosed and beginning to be utilized. In short, we may say the Canadian Pacific Railway has made Canada a nation.

The hon. member for East York, in the course of his remarks, made reference to the Canada Northern Railway, or that portion of it locally known as the Ontario and Rainy River Railway. In order that any misconception in the minds of hon. members or among the people regarding the construction of that road, may be removed, I will take the liberty of pointing out here that the Manitoba government, up to 1897, had for some years been aiming at a line from the city of Winnipeg to the city of Duluth. The Manitoba government were going to assist that road with enormous subsidies, and were merely going to take a guarantee from the company that the grain should be carried from the city of Winnipeg at the rate of 10 cents a bushel. There was no provision at all about controlling rates at other points on the Northern Pacific line in the province of Manitoba. But that was the policy of the then Liberal government of Manitoba. I may say that my own efforts at upbuilding Canadian ports and Canadian trade have not been confined to the last few years. On that occasion, having the interest of Canada at heart, I visited the city of Winnipeg. I need not go into details, suffice it to say that the Liberal-Conservative friends in that province took up the project of having, instead of an American road, an all-Canadian road from Winnipeg to a Canadian port on Lake Superior. That was the beginning of the present line between the city of Winnipeg and the town of Port Arthur. I find in the Manitoba Free Press of November 17, 1897, an interview with myself which I will read to the House. I was asked a question as to how the plan of the Manitoba government to assist a line from Winnipeg to Duluth, with a guarantee of reduced rates for the carriage of grain, would take in the eastern part of Canada, and with my usual frankness——

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). For I have never found, in any avenue of life, any advantage in hyprocrisy or in trying to play Machiavellian policy, and I find that I have done fairly well in pursuing a policy of frankness. I had no reason to change the policy on that occasion, and I said this :

The Dominion government will not be able to support financially Mr. Greenway's railway scheme, because nine-tenths of the people are opposed to a road terminating in the United States territory. They have had experience in that line, for in the east we have built up the United States cities, Boston and Portland, and starved our own seaboard cities, Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal. If they must have a railroad let it be to some point on the Canadian lake, Port Arthur or Fort William being much preferable. And then what assurance have the people that the bond required by the Manitoba government re the Duluth route will be fulfilled? Positively none.

Some hon. gentlemen here will bear me out in saying that ten sessions ago I drew the attention of this House and country to the fact that we had upon our seaboard some magnificent cities. The hon. member for Halifax rightly stated in this debate that at the port of Halifax we had a harbour that required no money to be expended on it to make it fit for any vessels to enter it. The city of St. John is also possessed of a magnificent harbour. In the Straits of Canso and along that shore there are numerous excellent harbours. Louisbourg and Sydney are historic. These are Canadian harbours that merely require to be developed to attract to their wharfs the trade of the vessels that rightly belong to them. It has been my policy and the policy of my friends of the great Liberal-Conservative party for many years to develop as far as possible, from a government view point, the harbours I have already named. Why should we not? We are frequently told by the advocates of railways, those who favour railways in preference to canals, or to water-hauls, and experience also teaches the same thing, that the improvements in railways, in the road-beds, in low grades, in powerful engines and large cars, have reduced the haulage of grain to a minimum. I am told that the New York Central has volunteered that, if the state of New York, in case it retains control of the canal, will hand over to the New York Central Railway the sums of money that it will take to enlarge the Erie canal, they will guarantee to haul to New York all the grain that will ever present itself at Buffalo, at cheaper rates than they now haul grain through the Erie canal. I am not saying these statements are true, but if they are true, why should we not set ourselves to work to develop our own seaboard ports? Why should we not improve the grades of our railways? The superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. McGuigan, has worked a revolution in the Grand Trunk Railway that is not known to the general public. On many of the American roads they can haul, from the city of Chicago to the seaboard, 1,900 tons of freight with an engine of a certain power. A similar engine on the Grand Trunk Railway from Chicago to the seaboard can only haul 800 tons of freight. You can see at once how our Canadian ports and railways are handicapped. Fully alive to their own interests, as well as the interests of the country, I believe both the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway are reducing the grades and putting their roads in such a condition that, in the course of a very few years, they will be able to haul from the west to the seaboard as heavily loaded trains as the American roads.

The question now is: Why should we not develop and have on our own seaboard winter and summer ports? Why should we not develop the city of Quebec, and why should we not also develop the city of Montreal? I maintain that while we are criticising the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway for going to Portland and Boston, we have ourselves largely to blame for that state of affairs. If we had taken proper precautions and had provided approaches to our own ports at Montreal and Quebec, and had provided proper accommodation, I think these roads would have undoubtedly preferred shipping from Canadian ports rather than from American ports. But, inasmuch as they have already established themselves at these other ports, it now becomes the duty of Canada, irrespective of party, to develop some plan that will recall this trade to our own ports, that will bring shipping again to Canadian harbours, and upbuild our own country instead of upbuilding foreign nations.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I presume that hon. gentlemen have exhausted themselves on the subject. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) made his reply this afternoon, and I regret he is not in his place this evening. One would have thought that with the matter that had been introduced on both sides of the House the subject would be considered of such importance that it deserved a little more in the form of a reply than the hon. gentleman gave it, because the hon. minister simply contented himself with a very extravagant amount of scolding in answer to the questions brought up in the debate. One would have expected, that, when the hon. minister's department and his own method of doing business in relation to large enterprises had been brought into the question, the hon. minister would have attempted to defend his administration, but from the minister came not one word in explanation as to the erection of a large elevator, at a very considerable cost, in the city of St. John, and the minister did not vouchsafe to the House the information whether or not he intended, during the coming season, to attempt to do business by way of St. John. The statement goes today, and is not contradicted by the hon. gentleman, that he, last year, at the city of St. John, for purposes best known to himself, attempted the experiment of freighting grain in that direction at a cost, for 300,000 bushels, of some $10,000 to the country. It may not be a matter of interest to hon. gentlemen opposite, but I think it will be to the country, to know whether this government is going on with that principle of business year after year, whether we are going to see freighted down to St. John large quantities of grain, at a great loss, simply to place the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in the position that he has been able to justify, in the city of St. John and before the country, the construction of an elevator at that point. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals waxed very indignant at my statement, that the question was in contemplation of the purchase of the Booth system of railway. I would have thought, when the hon. gentleman gave the very stiff denial he did to the statement I attributed to him, knowing as he did the time when such address was delivered by him in Halifax, that he would have produced files of the newspaper published on that occasion, which, I regret, I have been unable to locate as to the date. I think if the hon. minister had produced that paper it would have borne out the fact that the minister held out to the people of Halifax on that occasion what the hon. minister was apparently afraid to place before the House and the country ; that is, that he had the idea in his mind, and that idea prevailed, not only in the city of Halifax, but also in Montreal, that the government would acquire that railway. Now, Sir, extrinsically, I introduce this matter as evidence of the fact that the government contemplate the purchase of the railway ; I introduce the fact that the government have, for some time, advertised for tenders for the construction of a large public work at Depot Harbour. I make this statement on the authority of people who live in the neighbourhood of this place, who have seen the plan, who know what the contemplated work is, and the government have closed a contract, I believe, for the expenditure of a large sum of money, some $200,000, for the construction of docks at Depot Harbour. The government stands in this position, and the Department of Railways and Canals, and the Department of Public Works are in this position, that if they are not spending that $200,000 at Depot Harbour with the view of the government's taking over that railway and the docks, which will be a complement to the railway, they are taking $200,000 of the people's money to construct docks for Mr. Booth at Depot Harbour, which will be exclusively his own, which will be altogether his, and do not constitute a work of public necessity or benefit. I think this afternoon that the statement which was made, that $200,000 is to be expended by the government on large public works of interest to no person else except to the proprietors of that railway, should have been met by the hon. minister, or explained in some manner or other. Now, coming down to the question of our transportation facilities, let me say that the words put into my mouth by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals this afternoon, of wholesale denunciation and condemnation of the canal system, were not borne out by anything I did say. I say that every man must regret that after such a large expenditure of public money on the canal system, it is not bearing better fruits. I regret, as much as any man regrets, that our trade has not increased, and is not increasing by way of that system. The hon. minister attempted to make merry, and it was a sorry exhibition, but I must say that I regret he is not here tonight to express his view as to my idea, that there should be a proposition made to these railway systems, to the Grand Trunk Railway from Midland to Portland, or Midland to Montreal, and to the system from Parry Sound or Depot Harbour to Montreal, or Boston, by way of bonus or bounty for the carrying of grain. Hon. gentlemen are fond admirers of the principle of bounty. These hon. gentlemen, after years of decrying the principle of bounties in this country, at the very first opportunity embraced the proposition that they had denounced for years, and went in for the principle of giving bounties on iron. I say it would be in the interest of the country, in place of seeing the grain of the western states and a large proportion of the grain of our Northwest Territories carried by way of New York, Boston, Baltimore and other American ports, and by American railway systems, that we should endeavour to secure that trade for our own channels at the cost of giving some bounties or assistance. How might that be done ? While on both of these systems from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 bushels of grain are now being carried, the proposition might be made, that having carried 25,000,000 bushels in a season, all that is carried in excess of 25,000,000 bushels should be paid for at so much a bushel by way of bounty. The result would be, in the first place, that the fact that we were going to carry such a large quantity of grain in a season would tend to the making of contracts far in advance, and the result of making these contracts would be cheaper rates, which would enure to the benefit of those in the west who had produce to transport. Another great advantage would be that if you once attracted trade so that through these two systems there would be an annual carriage of from 50,000,000 to 75,000,000 bushels of grain, the chances would be that trade, once attracted in that direction, would in all probability remain there in the future.

Further, these railway systems, benefited by the cash concessions which would be made by the government would be in a better position to equip and maintain their roads for the increased trade. Every one knows that in the transportation of all kinds of merchandise through the country large sums of money are spent by the railways and by the shipping interests, which of course is a great advantage to the country as a whole. The minister (Hon. Mr. Blair), spoke of the grant to the Grand Trunk Railway, which enabled them to greatly improve the Victoria bridge, and as a result of which they are now carrying the grain beyond Montreal to Portland. This is a matter to be regretted by all Canadians. The minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) does not admit, as he should, that this was bad policy, and that there was lack of foresight on the part of himself and his colleagues in reference to it. His defence now is, to say to us : Why you did exactly the same thing with the Canadian Pacific Railway, when you gave them large concessions, and you did not restrict them to carrying freight to a Canadian port. Well, one would think that time and experience would teach the Minister of Railways something, and the government having had before them the example of the Canadian Pacific Railway in this respect, we would naturally expect that the aggregation of wisdom which composes the present cabinet, would have learned something, and that their Minister of Railways would not be forced to come here to-day with an idle tu quoque argument. I made this motion partly with the idea that the government would state to the House and to the country, that their policy was that they were going to be bound for a number of years at all events by the St. Lawrence canal system, so that those interested in maritime business might feel a sense of security in investing in vessels in Canada. Unfortunately any one who takes what the minister has said and scans it carefully, will not find a single word to show that the government stands pledged even for the next five years not to acquire the Booth system or the Great Northern Railway. It must be remembered that freighters that would be restricted by their construction to the canal trade between Port Colborne and Montreal, would on account of their limited capacity not be able to compete with the larger vessels for the trade of the great lakes, and of course if the government acquire this railway system it would to a large extent put them out of the business. Therefore, those interested in the trade in Canada are afraid to invest their money in such vessels. I presume the public are to be kept in suspense for some years to come, and that the newspapers in the meantime will be filled with statements to the effect that the government intends to purchase the railways I have referred to. So long as the ministers will go from one end of the country to the other giving their individual opinions as to what the future transportation system of the country will be, there will be uncertainty in the public mind as to the policy of the government. I expected when I moved this resolution that there would be a profitable discussion upon it, and in that I am not disappointed. I regret, however, that the government did not give a complete denial to the statements made throughout the country that they intend to purchase the Booth system, and the Great Northern Railway system. At least some good purpose has been served by the motion, and I now beg leave to withdraw it.

Motion withdrawn.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LAND GRANTS.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar) moved second reading of Bill (No. 17) respecting the Land Grant of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

He said : The Bill which I have before the House is similar to one which I introduced a year ago for the purpose of interpreting a clause in the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the brief explanation I gave when I introduced the Bill, I did not go over the ground so fully as I should like to, and if the House will bear with me I shall now go into the particulars a little more minutely. When the charter under which the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed was made with the syndicate, and ratified by parliament on the 15th of February, 1881, the land grant to the company (comprising about 25,000,000 acres) was under clause 16 exempted from taxation. That clause 16 is known as the 'exemption clause' of the charter and it exempts the tracks, rolling stock, road-bed, stations, ground and appurtenances for all time, and the clause concludes thus :

> And the lands of the company in the North-west, until they are either sold or occupied, shall be free from taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

Now, Sir, the twenty year period contemplated by this clause expired on the 15th of last February. Various constructions have been placed upon the wording of the clause. It is contended by a number of persons, including the right hon. the Prime minister, that 'the grant thereof from the Crown' means the issue of the patents for the land. Although the twenty year period of exemption has expired, the company has not applied for the patents for these lands. The government has been questioned from time to time during the last five years on this matter, and we find from the answers given that only a small portion of the entire lands granted—I think less than 2,000,000 acres—have been patented up to the present time. The company state that they have not even selected all their land grant. The position seems to be somewhat like this. The company have indicated to the government certain districts throughout the North-west Territories where they are willing to select their lands, but no definite selection has been made of a large portion of these lands up to the present time. I was looking up the other day the speech of the right hon. premier, delivered last session, and his contention seemed to be, and I may say it was also the view held by the late leader of the opposition, Sir Charles Tupper—that the exemption runs from the date of the issue of the patents. If that contention is correct, then inasmuch as the patents have not been issued for this vast land grant up to the present time, the exemption period will extend for another twenty years ; and if the delay in issuing the patents is continued, the exemption will go on indefinitely.

Now, I think I shall be able to convince reasonable men, from quotations which I will give to the House, that it was the clear intention of parliament that the twenty years period began when the contract was ratified on the 15th of February, 1881. If that is true, the twenty years period expired on the evening of the 15th of last month. If there is any doubt on that point at the present time, I claim that it is the clear duty of parliament to say now what that clause meant.

I have no doubt that I shall be told that this is a remarkable proposition ; I shall probably be charged, as I have been on other occasions, with being a socialist because I ask parliament to determine what that means. I bow very often to the views held by the leader of the government in many matters ; but when he says that we would be interfering with vested rights if we were to interpret this clause, I judge from a perusal of his speech of last year that the vested rights he is afraid of interfering with, are those of the bondholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Without assuming to criticise the position which the right hon. gentleman takes upon this question, let me, as one who has lived in the North-west for nearly twenty years, who has witnessed the development of that country, who has seen the people there bear the burden and heat of the day, who has witnessed the hardships of those people, and has always felt a great deal of sympathy with them—let me say that I think they have vested rights, and it is their vested rights that ought to be respected. When those people settled in that country and took up land, they doubtless had read this contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and doubtless had clearly understood that at the expiration of the twenty years period they would not be obliged, as they are to-day, to bear a double burden of taxes. When a settler in that country takes up his quarter section, he is obliged to pay taxes for schools, for roads, and for local improvements ; and inasmuch as the section adjoining his belongs to the railway company, and is included in this land grant, and is therefore exempted from taxation, the burden that falls on the settler is just double what it should be. And I want to appeal to members of this House and ask them, what must be the feelings of those settlers when they discover that though the twenty years period is now up, yet, by the interpretation placed upon this clause by leading members of this House, they are obliged to go on and pay taxes for another twenty years ? I want to appeal to the members of this House in the name of these settlers ; I want to speak of the vested rights which they have ; and I think that notwithstanding the views which many may hold, and honestly hold, on this question, those who consider the hardships which those settlers have endured must recognize that the first duty of parliament is to the people who settle on the land, and to whom that country practically belongs.

I said that I would endeavour to show, by the position which parliament took upon that question some twenty years ago, that it was clearly and definitely understood that the twenty years period began when the contract with the company was ratified. Let me first, however, make a slight reference to the fact that when parliament grants a title, it may be what is known as a title by statute. Title by statute is recognized in Great Britain as being quite as good as title by patent. I claim that it is not necessary that patents should issue in order that the title to these lands should be vested in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. When the contract was ratified on the 15th of February, 1881, to all intents and purposes the land became the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

I shall be told, no doubt, and correctly, that the land was not at that time all set aside for the use of the company, and this section will, no doubt, be quoted to me—and I may just as well deal with it now :

> Section 9. Upon the construction of any portion of the railway hereby contracted for, not less than twenty miles in length, and the completion thereof so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon, together with such equipment thereof as shall be required for the traffic thereon, the government shall pay and grant to the company the money and land subsidies applicable thereto.

I admit that that is quite a strong section, and will be used against my argument with considerable effect ; but for the last four or five years, I have endeavoured to obtain from parliament information as to when this land or any portion of it was set aside for the use of the company, and I must confess that I have been absolutely unable to get that information.

As I said at the outset, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, seeing the strength of their position, seemed to get the government to fall into line with their view, and not to issue patents to them ; so that they will claim that the land has not been set aside or made available for them up to the present time. If I were able to find out exactly when this land was set aside, it might make some difference to my argument.

But the point is this, that the Canadian Pacific Railway have had as much use of that land grant as if they actually had it in their possession from the first moment, and I will show you how. In addition to the vast subsidies which we gave that company, in round cash, completed railways, exemption from taxation, exemption from duty on the materials that entered in the construction of the road—in addition to all these subsidies, we exempted their lands from taxation. And, in my opinion, inasmuch as they have not chosen to take up that land, but still have had the benefit of them, the time has come when they should pay their share of taxation. Let me point out that no sooner was the ink dry on the contract than the Canadian Pacific Railway raised $25,000,000 in land on land grant bonds. They mortgaged their entire land grant and raised the money required to go on with their work. Therefore, I say they had the use of these lands just as much as if they had taken possession of them at once. That being the case, why should not parliament interpret that Act as it should be interpreted, taking all the circumstances into consideration, and declare that twenty years' term of exemption at an end.

The right hon. gentleman who leads the House told us last year that it was a question for reference to the courts, and he said: Let the municipalities take out a writ against the company and sue for the taxes. But I would point out that as these lands are up to the present unpatented, it is legally impossible for any municipality to take any action. Had the government issued the patents, as it should have, at least after 1885-6 when the road was completed, the exemption would have expired in 1906, and there would not be such a serious grievance. But the patents never having been issued, these municipalities are not in a position to effectually or satisfactorily collect the taxes.

Further, I do not think it would be quite fair to expect any municipality to undertake a lawsuit with the Canadian Pacific Railway. These municipalities are not wealthy and have not the resources to enter into litigation with that powerful company, which litigation would be very costly, as it would be carried to the last court of resort. Why should not the government itself, if it is bound to have it that way, obtain a legal opinion and relieve the municipalities from that task?

But I say that we ought not to take the risk of referring it to the courts. I have discussed this question with lawyers. Of course, the committee of the Privy Council might take a different view. They might look at the political aspect, they might read the speeches delivered at the time the contract went through, and give a decision according to what they thought was the understanding of parliament. But I am informed that the courts are apt to rely upon the wording of the Act and the technical construction of the clauses, and that being the case there would be extreme danger, if this matter were referred to the courts, of its being decided against the people. This is a case in which the interests of the people suffer to such an extent and in which the meaning of parliament is so clear that no risk ought to be taken. Why should this idea of vested interests be held up to terrify us on every occasion? If the wording of the contract were clear and distinct, if there could be no doubt that the exemption should date twenty years from the issuing of the patents, I would not ask parliament to place any interpretation on the Act. But the wording may appear to some minds slightly ambiguous. I think that to any one who reads the clause in connection with the debate which took place in parliament, what was meant is perfectly clear. If that be true—and I think I shall be able to satisfy almost any one by quotations from 'Hansard' that it is—why should parliament not now say what its intent was on the 15th of February, 1881?

Parliament is supreme. What do the people of Canada send a representative to parliament for if not to see that they are justly dealt by? Why should we think of the bondholders in Holland or any other country.

Mr. MACLEAN. We must weep for them.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). We may, but there are people who have lived on the plains all those years, who have borne the burden and the heat of the day, who have paid double taxes all these years, and it is they who, if they are to be told that they must go on paying double taxes in perpetuity, will have just cause to weep. They have vested rights in this matter too.

I wish to give the House some little idea of the views of members of the government and the opposition when that contract went through on the 15th February, 1881. I may first say that the word 'granting,' that is the granting of the lands—'after the grant thereof from the Crown'— is used frequently through the contract, and I would infer that parliament intended that the grant meant the bestowal of the land when that vote went through in 1881. The first speech to which I shall refer is that of Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, and who was the chief force in putting this contract through. He did not say in so many words that the granting thereof from the Crown meant twenty years from that time, but he made a comparison to show that the contract was a very favourable one compared with those put through in the United States. He pointed out that the exemption period in the United States was generally 25 years, and in this contract it was only 20 years, and he emphasized this point, that the land grant, until either sold or occupied, should be exempt for 20 years. Sir John Macdonald made the estimate that in ten years half that land grant would be sold and would have passed into the hands of settlers and become taxable, so that the bonus given by the country would not be so large. Sir Charles Tupper emphasized the point that in view of the development of that country the land grant, until sold or occupied, would be free from taxation for 20 years, and made the point that the contract was better than the American contract because it had that saving clause, that until sold or occupied, the land grant was free of taxation, but that once it became the property of the farmers and settlers it was taxable.

So much for the speech of the late leader of the opposition. Now, I wish to refer to the speech of one of the greatest Liberals this country has known. I think my hon. friend the leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will consider the testimony of the Hon. Edward Blake pretty good authority with regard to this matter. Hon. Edward Blake is a tribune of the people. I remember sitting in the press gallery when he fought that contract. I think he used to occupy the seat where the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) now sits. I remember how Mr. Blake battled for the interests of the settlers in the western country. And, in this connection, let me pay a tribute to the right hon. leader of this government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I spent nearly a week going through the debates that then occurred, and I found that the right hon. gentleman took very strong ground on that question. The Liberal party did noble work for the country in those days. Amendment after amendment was moved—I think twenty or twenty-five amendments in all—affecting every clause in this contract. Even the matter of this tax exemption was referred to by many leaders of the Liberal party at that time. And I think, as a Liberal, that I can appeal to the Liberals to stand by the position which they took in 1881 in regard to this matter. This is what Hon. Edward Blake said :

> They have freedom to reject land they deem not fairly fit for settlement and to choose the best land elsewhere. They have perpetual exemption from taxation of their enormous property, a most monstrous provision, in my opinion. Why, this monstrosity is not to last merely twenty years, which is to be the period of bondage in other respects, but it is to last for ever.

Can any man with a mind doubt what Hon. Edward Blake had in his mind when he made that declaration ? The period of bondage, he says, is perpetual, with regard to the road-bed, and rolling stock, and that is a monstrous thing; but the other exemption, he says, is for a period of twenty years. Surely that is plain language. Twenty years must mean twenty years. If that was the position Hon. Edward Blake took that time, surely I shall not appeal in vain to Liberals to take the same position now, notwithstanding there may be repeated to us the talk about the vested rights of the bondholders. I could read from Hon. Edward Blake's speeches many passages which would be excellent reading as showing the interest he took in the settlers of that western country, in whose behalf he, assisted by the right hon. leader of this government, made at that time such a magnificent fight. But, let me read another sentence :

> That, on a gigantic scale, will be the effect of the exemption on the syndicate, who can hold their lands from year to year for twenty years without any drawback in the way of taxes.

Here are two quotations from that great Liberal tribune of the people to show that he understood that twenty years was intended when the contract went through. Now, I will quote an authority which, I should think, must satisfy the Conservatives in this House as to what view the Conservative government, and the Conservative party, took of that clause at that time ; I will quote from no less an authority than Sir Hector Langevin, the Minister of Public Works in the Conservative government of that time, and a colleague of Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper. At the close of his speech he says :

> Therefore, in a very short time, the parish or municipality will be settled, and the exemption of taxation on these lands will not be felt, because really the lands remaining to be sold will remain there only until the settlement can be extended in this direction.

Now, mark these words :

> So that, after these twenty years, what will remain exempt from taxation will be just the 100 feet in width the length of the municipality.

Could you desire stronger testimony with regard to the position the government of that time took on this question ? After twenty years from that time, said Sir Hector Langevin, all that will remain exempt from taxation will be the 100 feet—merely the road-bed, because, as you know, road-beds are 100 feet wide. Surely, I need not appeal to any hon. member who sits to your left, Sir, in view of the statement I have read, and surely none will hesitate to support the Bill I have the honour to place before the House to-night. Surely every Conservative will support this Bill without hesitation, on the ground that it is the duty of parliament to interpret that clause more particularly in view of the testimony I am now able to produce. Let me now quote from the speech made by Mr. Rinfret, who was a Liberal member from Quebec, and a man of considerable promise in the councils of the Liberal party at that time.

> The exemption of the syndicate's lands from all taxation, whether municipal, school, federal or local, can be estimated at half a million dollars a year, making for the twenty years a sum of $10,000,000.

So, there could be no doubt about the position Mr. Rinfret took. At that time elaborate calculations were made as to what this tax exemption would amount to. There were various estimates, but the estimate generally adopted by the Liberal party at that time was that the subvention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was increased by this exemption by a sum of not less than $10,000,000. We had given them $25,000,000 in cash, $35,000,000 of completed road, and 25,000,000 acres of land—which was estimated by a number of hon. gentlemen the other day to be worth at least $75,000,000. The Liberal party of that time, as represented by its leading men, held up its hands in protest and said: You are going to give another $10,000,000 by this exemption from taxation. According to the interpretation of the right hon. leader of the government, we are bound now to give them exemption of another twenty years, which would be more than an additional $10,000,000, for that land has vastly increased in value, and the value of this exemption from taxation is increased in proportion. The argument I make with regard to Mr. Rinfret's utterance is that he said the exemption would be worth $500,000 a year, and he estimated that the total at $10,000,000, showing clearly that he meant exactly what he said when he stated that that exemption would be for twenty years. Now, let me quote a few words from another great Liberal. I refer to Hon. G. W. Ross, the present Prime Minister of the great province of Ontario. He was then a member of this House for Middlesex, sitting with the Liberals and taking a prominent part in their discussions and in their councils. I shall abbreviate this quotation, as I have abbreviated the others, because I am anxious not to delay the House :

> Every man that settles on a section of government land in the North-west will be a hewer of wood and a drawer of water to these great corporations.

You see he was prophetic. The people up there have been hewers of wood and drawers of water to these great corporations, and unless parliament to-night does its duty in this matter, we are going to relegate these people to another twenty years, probably for perpetuity, to the position of hewers of wood and drawers of water to these identical corporations.

> Every road he makes, every bridge he builds to span a little stream or rivulet will be clear gain to this syndicate. Every dollar he invests in the improvement of communication between the back parts of the government lands and the front will benefit the syndicate. Moreover, if the settlers wish to levy rates to secure the construction of roads or erection of school-houses, instead of levying a single rate, which they would do under other circumstances, they will have to levy two rates on their own properties, because the syndicate property is free.

Just exactly what I said myself a few moments ago. Settlers are obliged to levy two rates on themselves for a school-house, two rates for a road, and two rates for any other improvement, and unless parliament decides to do its duty to-night, the settlers will be obliged to levy two rates for another twenty years at least, and probably for all time.

> I believe this would be a practical bar to the settlement of the lands in the North-west.

It has been a practical bar.

> It is tantamount to telling every man we invite from the other side of the Atlantic that the moment he settles on our lands in the North-west, instead of contributing of his means for his own advantage and comfort of his family, every dollar he invests for the benefit of himself and neighbours will be so much to the advantage of the company that contributes not one dollar itself.

And, Sir, it has continued to be. The company sells a quarter section of land to a settler, that moment the land becomes taxable, and the settler is obliged to pay taxes on it. But the company does not have a patent issue lest that settler should fail in his payments, and the land might revert to the company, and should it revert to the company, as it has done in many cases, the land becomes non-taxable. It is always the case with the company of 'heads I win, tails you lose.' Under no circumstances must they be called upon to pay taxes, because parliament in the past has been protecting these railway companies instead of protecting the interest of the settler, of the men who form the brawn and sinew of this country, who contribute the taxes that help to carry on the affairs of the country. Now, Mr. Ross, speaking at another point, said this :

> The hon. member has been reading the Railway Acts of the United States. He will find that some of the railway lands of the United States were taxed 14 cents an acre, and some 11 cents an acre, and the hon. gentleman knows that lands in Manitoba, held by non-residents, are taxed from 5 cents to 6 cents an acre. Put that same rate——

Now, I would like that each member should see what the Hon. Mr. Ross had to say on this point :

> —on 25,000,000 acres for twenty years, and it will amount to $10,000,000,——

You see, the present Premier of Ontario at that time had it clearly in his mind that it was to be twenty years from that date, because he makes an estimate of half a million a year for twenty years, and that gives $10,000,000.

> —an enormous sum, which shows the immense gain which this tax is to the company. It not only relieves them from a regular payment of, say $50,000 a year, but enables them to hold their lands in order that they may increase in value.

That is just what has happened in the North-west Territories. The company does not appear to be anxious to sell their lands, they simply leave them there, and by the work which the settlers put upon their lands, by their improvements in fencing and in cultivation, the value of these railway lands is enhanced, sometimes doubled; therefore, by the work of these very settlers, the railway companies are enabled to make enormous sums of money. Now, let me quote briefly from a speech which my honoured friend—because I always take pleasure in referring to the Minister of Customs as my friend—a speech which he made upon that occasion:

He was cognizant of the evils of exemption in the case of the Canada Company in days gone by, and he told the House that he had given power to the resident settlers to tax the lands of the non-resident, and therefore, those non-residents must either pay the taxes or sell out. He thus qualified that clause himself, and yet the same gentleman has since become a party to a contract wiping out that exemption clause and giving the company freedom from taxation for twenty years——

He was chiding, I think, some gentleman on the opposition side. He says that the gentlemen on the opposition side had even gone so far as to give an exemption to the company, or to give freedom to the company from taxation for twenty years.

—so that the settler will have an unsettled mile on the east, west, north and south, exempt from taxation. He will have to bear the whole burden, build churches and make road improvements, and the hon. Minister of Railways asks parliament to adopt that clause.

I think, anyway, I have got one friend sitting at your right, Sir, to-night; I feel satisfied the Minister of Customs will, at least, stand up and fight for this Bill. He chided a member of the opposition for daring to support that clause, and I honour him for doing it. He spoke, as did the other gentlemen from whom I have quoted, about compelling these settlers to pay double taxes, even for churches—the hon. gentleman introduced the church—and for schools and other such improvements. I am sure I will not appeal to him in vain to-night to stand by the position he took then, and to support this Bill. If this Bill passes, then these poor settlers will not be obliged to pay double taxes for churches, schools, roads, and so forth. Now, I want to quote, because it comes in here consecutively, what the Globe said at that time. I feel satisfied that the Globe would not go back on the position it then took.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What! Oh, oh.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I remember when this question was up last year, the Globe quoted the speech of the Hon. Edward Blake, from which I have quoted to-night, and while it did not commend me for the position which I was taking, neither did it say I was wrong, and I felt that was at least a point gained. The Globe said this:

This land grant is infinitely more valuable than that of the Union Pacific. Therefore, the least value that can be put upon the exemption from taxation of the Canadian Pacific land grant is twenty times $835,023, or $16,700,460.

That was the estimate the Globe placed on the value of this exemption. Now, suppose we to-night, by defeating this Bill, agree that this exemption should be extended for another twenty years, you make a subvention, in exemption from taxation, to the Canadian Pacific Railway of something like $33,000,000. That is a vast sum, almost half enough to build the entire Canadian Pacific Railway, taking the company's own estimate of the cost of construction. The Globe continued:

The exemption from taxes of the railway itself is worth at least as much to the company as the liability to taxes costs the Union Pacific, namely, $279,158 per annum. Capitalizing that sum at 4 per cent, we arrive at the value of the exemption from taxes of the railways—it is $6,978,950. Add value of twenty years' exemption from taxes on land grant, $16,700,460. Total value of exemption from taxes, $23,679,410.

So you see the great Globe at that time was perfectly clear, no doubt whatever, as to what that meant; and we all recollect how unalterably hostile the Globe was to the then government. If the Globe could have interpreted that by any stretch of imagination to mean that it should be twenty years more, or in perpetuity, how it would have wrung its hands and declaimed against the government. I am not so sure but that it might even have succeeded in defeating the government had they attempted to make that exemption in perpetuity. Yet the twenty years are gone, and here we are to-day face to face with a proposition for another twenty years, if this exemption is to go on. I think we will certainly rely upon the Globe to stand by us in this fight and advocate the interpretation of that clause as I say it should be interpreted. Now, I will quote from the speech of another prominent Conservative of that period, Mr. Charles Rykert. He was a man of scrap-book fame, and a man who was great at going into calculations. I find that he entered into most elaborate calculations in reference to this land grant. He speaks as follows:

Now, I go still further. I will give them the benefit of last year's taxation. Mr. Poor says——

He is referring to the American railway statistician.

Mr. Poor says that the taxes last year were $108,437. I will double that, which will make $216,874 a year, multiply that by 20, allowing one-third off for sales only, and I find the total amount would be $2,891,654, or a difference of $13,808,806. It does seem to me that the hon. gentleman ought certainly to withdraw that statement upon the floor of this House or admit that the organ——

He is referring to the Globe.

—was incorrect or misinformed. It is an unfortunate thing that these statements should go about the country in order to mislead the public mind with a view of getting a snap verdict against the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

What would Mr. Rykert himself have thought, what would he have said if he had been face to face with the proposition that we have to face to-night that this exemption is for quite a number of years, if not in perpetuity. Let me read next a brief sentence from a speech delivered by the Hon. Timothy Anglin, a distinguished predecessor of yourself, Sir, in the chair. Mr. Anglin said :

It was very extraordinary. There was a very remarkable fact in reference to the lands. Eleven million acres would furnish 10,000 acres per mile for 900 miles, making a total of 9,000,000, and furnish about 2,000,000 acres more for the three-tenths of the road of the eastern section, which the company were required to build within the first three years. So that within three years, the company should have acquired and obtained possession of the two twenty-four mile belts in the prairie section.

Now, I do not propose to go any further into the speeches delivered at that time upon the contract, but I want to place in the witness-box another very important witness, and I am satisfied that the testimony of that witness will be accepted as being very important by the House to-night. I want to put the Canadian Pacific Railway Company into the witness-box, and find out what they thought in regard to this land grant. I took the troube last year to borrow from the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals the reports printed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, from the time of the inception of the syndicate. I went very carefully through all these reports, and I found some important statements made therein. The first report of the company was dated the 12th of December, 1882. Mark the date, Sir, December 12, 1882, shortly after the ratification of the contract :

The proceeds of the $20,000,000 of land grant bonds, as sold, are deposited with the government, which pays interest on such deposits at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

I started out with the proposition that this 25,000,000 acre land grant was available to the company from the date of the ratification of that contract. To-day we find that on the 12th December, 1882, they had sold land grant bonds, and that they had raised $20,000,000 on mortgage. Surely we are not to be met with the argument of vested rights when we find that the company have had all the use of the land grant that they could possibly desire. Then the statement proceeds :

These proceeds are paid to the company in agreed mileage proportions (in the same manner as the government cash subsidy), as construction progresses ; and the balance of these proceeds and of cash subsidy coming to the company amounts to about $31,500,000.

I will now read from the report published by the company on the 31st December, 1883 :

A statement of land sales from the commencement of the company's operations, is also submitted.

It will be observed that a considerable reduction is shown in the acreage sold, as compared with the statement published in the official memorandum, dated December 12, 1882.

This has been caused, mainly, by a reduction of the acreage originally sold to the Canada North-west Land Company, from 5,000,000 acres to 2,200,000 acres.

The point I wish to make is that before the 31st December, 1883, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had sold to the Canada North-west Land Company some 5,000,000 acres of land. Although you will find by the public records that the company did not have that amount of land set apart for them, at that time they seemed to have been able to transfer any portion that they desired whether it had been set apart or not. Let me quote briefly from the Canadian Pacific Railway report of 1884, signed by George Stephen. He was asking for certain legislation from parliament to enable the company to do certain things, and he says :

Should this measure become law the position the company will occupy on the opening of the through line next spring may be summed up as follows :—

It will have a cash deposit in the hands of the Dominion government sufficient to pay semi-annual dividends at the rate of 3 per cent per annum on its $65,000,000 capital stock for seven and a half years, or until the end of the year 1893. It will own 3,299 miles, and will hold under lease 695 miles, of fully completed and thoroughly equipped railway, forming a total mileage of 3,994 miles. It will own more than 21,000,000 acres of agricultural lands.

We have the statement of President Stephen himself, that the company will then have 21,000,000 acres of agricultural lands. In the report for 1885, we find this :

It will own three fine steel steamships on the great lakes, and an extensive and well-appointed telegraph system, with power to extend its telegraph lines to all parts of the country.

All this property, together with certain outside assets, in all valued at $230,960,585, will be represented by a total indebtedness of $53,892,545, bearing an unusually low rate of interest ; and by $65,000,000 capital stock, for which dividends for seven and one-half years will be in hand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will allow a diversion, I would like to refer to that matter. According to the president's own statement at that time they had set apart sufficient money to pay interest on the $65,000,000 of capital stock which the company had issued. You will find in the sessional papers a return made to parliament, in obedience to a request of the Hon. Edward Blake, in regard to that $65,000,000 of stock. That $65,000,000, in the then state of affairs of the company, they pretty generally admit was an unnecessary over-capitalization. The members of the syndicate distributed the stock among themselves at the rate of 25 cents on the dollar. They reserved a large quantity of the proceeds which were set aside to pay themselves dividends on this stock, and they actually paid themselves dividends at the rate of 6 per cent par value, or 24 per cent on the amount of money they had paid in.

Instead of turning the money in for the purpose of constructing the railway, they set it aside for the purpose of paying dividends on their stock at the rate of 24 per cent, so that in five years they had paid themselves more than they originally paid for the stock, and they owned the stock besides, and it was recently quoted at 102. Yet, Sir, we will probably be asked to-night to protect the vested interest of these stockholders. Well, when the House understands that these people pay themselves 24 per cent on this stock there will not be much sympathy felt for the vested interests of these gentlemen. I quote from the report of 1886 :

To represent this capital liability, the company has a well-equipped railway system of 4,651 miles, a thoroughly efficient commercial telegraph system, and nearly 15,000,000 acres of selected agricultural lands.

In 1886 they had nearly 15,000,000 acres and that was about the time the railway was completed. I think there is no hon. gentleman here who will not take the view that all the land became taxable at least at the time the railway was completed. I do not propose to weary the House with more than one other quotation, and that is the report of the company, dated the 8th May, 1889, which says :

In addition to the lands embraced in the foregoing statement, the company holds 1,389,424 acres of land in southern Manitoba, which came to it from the purchase of the Manitoba South-western Railway. These lands are among the best and most available in the North-west. At the average of the sales last year, $4.64 per acre, their value is $5,944,785. They are subject only to a lien of $884,773 in favour of the province of Manitoba. Your directors believe that they will yield at least $5 over and above the amount due to the province, and, as they are not liable to any other mortgage or lien, the surplus will be available to the general purposes of the company.

Therefore, according to the statement prepared on the authority of President Van Horne, the price the company received for their lands was $4.64 an acre, and he added that they would be worth and would sell for $5 an acre. But, take the price at $4.64, and we find that the subvention of lands to that company at 6,400 acres per mile was worth $32,100 per mile. I do not think that prairie roads cost more than $10,000 a mile, so that we practically gave to the company in lands alone three times the cost of the road, and yet we will be told that if we ask parliament to declare what parliament clearly meant, will be interfering with vested rights. I could give further quotations from the statements submitted by the company, but I do not propose to go further into any technical argument on the question. I wish before concluding to point out that the request which is made in this Bill is a reasonable and a just request. I remember that Mr. Blake in his speech quoted the statement of Sir John Macdonald when he was justifying the contract to parliament and where Sir John said : That by virtue of the vast subsidies which Canada was giving to this company it would be able to carry freight for at least one-quarter the cost that a road built out of private funds would be able to carry it for. In view of the fact that we gave that company $25,000,000 in cash, $35,000,000 worth of completed road, and $75,000,000 worth of land, it is only fair and reasonable to ask that that land grant should not be exempted from taxation in perpetuity. The greatest curse the North-west labours under at the present time is the exemption from taxation of these vast tracts of land, and the Minister of the Interior told us the other day that some 60,000,000 acres of land had been given as subventions to railways in this country. I should think that at least 90 per cent of these lands are exempt from taxation, and parliament must see that it is handicapping that country for all time to come to continue this exemption. We have now a chance to set free about 20,000,000 acres of land and hon. gentlemen would understand what an immense relief this would be to the country. If parliament does its duty with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway lands it will surely be expected to do its duty with regard to lands belonging to other railway companies. The Bill sets out in brief form some of the considerations I have mentioned, and it concludes with the following :—

Clause 16 of the contract mentioned in the preamble, between Her Majesty and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is hereby interpreted to mean that the period of exemption from taxation of the said land grant terminated twenty years after the date of the ratification of the said contract.

I beg to move the second reading of the Bill, seconded by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is a question which has already more than once engaged the attention of the House, and my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) has just reminded us that last session we threshed it out at greater length than I care to do on this occasion. The hon. gentleman knows that the legislation against which he protests is contained in the original contract which the Liberal party of 20 years ago fought with all its might.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I said so.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Blake, who was then the leader of the party, opposed that contract with such vigour and ability as has never been equalled in this House. All the arguments which the hon. gentleman

(Mr. Richardson) has quoted to-day fell from the lips of Mr. Blake and Mr. Ross and the other leaders of the Liberal party, upon a deaf House, and against the protests of those Liberal leaders this clause was put on the statute-book. It was decreed that the lands conveyed to the Canadian Pacific Railway should be for 20 years exempted from taxation. There may be a difference of opinion as to the interpretation of the clause, but there can be no misinterpretation as to the meaning of 'twenty years.' The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) has truly said that '20 years' means '20 years,' but the question is as to what date that 20 years should run. My hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) says that the 20 years should run from the date the contract was ratified, namely, when the Bill was passed, and he has quoted from the speeches made on that occasion to prove that such should be the interpretation of the contract. I wish it were so ; but, unfortunately, the language of the statute is very different from the language which was used in debate. The statute does not say, as my hon. frined will have it say, that the exemption of the said land grant shall terminate 20 years after the ratification of the said contract. If such had been the intention of parliament, it would have been very easy for parliament to have said so ; but that was not what parliament said. What parliament said was that these lands should be free from such taxation for 20 years after the grant thereof from the Crown. I am sorry that it is so ; I wish it were otherwise ; but it cannot be argued seriously that the grant from the Crown was made at the time of the ratification of the contract. That is one reason.

But there is another reason which my hon. friend has not alluded to, and which is very conclusive on this point. There was a contract entered into in 1880, between Her Majesty, represented by the government of Canada, and certain gentlemen—Canadian, Americans, Englishmen, Hollanders, and Frenchmen—who undertook to build a railway on Canadian soil. For this undertaking on their part the people of Canada agreed to give them $25,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 acres in land. Did that grant operate and become valid so as to be exacted by the company on the day of ratification of the contract ? Quite the reverse. If on that day the Canadian Pacific Railway Company could have claimed their $25,000,000 of money and their 25,000,000 acres of land, there would be some reason for the contention of my hon. friend. But, on the contrary, the Act said positively, in so many words, that the grant would be available, not on that day, but at the time the subsidy would be earned by the building of the railway. Here is the clause :

> In consideration of the premises, the government agree to grant to the company a subsidy in money of $25,000,000 and in land of 25,000,000 acres, for which subsidies the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be completed and the same shall be equipped, maintained and operated.

My hon. friend agrees with me, I am sure, that under the terms of this clause, the subsidy could not be paid to the company except as the construction of the road proceeded. It seems to me that is quite clear without further argument.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). It could not with regard to the money ; but so far as the land is concerned, they borrowed money on it instantly.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not instantly, but later on ; and if my hon. friend were to contend that the twenty-year period were to run from the day the company mortgaged the land, there would be some argument for that.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Would the right hon. gentleman support me if I modified my Bill to that effect ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will not support the hon. gentleman when he asks parliament to interpret its own Acts. I said last year that my hon. friend could take the matter before the courts. He says that last year, when he made his argument, I called him a socialist. I said that his argument smacked of socialism, if it were not the pure article itself. In what other way could I characterize it ? Why should a contract be sacred, why care for the bondholders, why not make the bondholders weep ? Because we are in a British country, and if there is anything held sacred in a British country, it is a contract. My hon. friend says, do not leave the courts to interpret the contract, but put on it such interpretation as you hold. My hon. friend asks us to do something which has never yet been done in a British parliament. If there is anything which the British parliament has a horror of, it is to interfere with contracts. I regret that provision of this contract as much as my hon. friend does. He has argued that it is a serious blot on our statute-book, that it is an injury to the settlement of the North-west. I agree with him that it is so ; yet, for my part, I am not prepared to say that the bondholders must bleed or weep, or to take away their property and their security from them. My hon. friend should not bring such a proposition before this House. I suggested to my hon. friend last year that he should go before the courts and get their interpretation of this contract. How, my hon. friend asks, can this be done ?—the lands have not been patented. Well there are many thousands of acres which have been patented, on which the matter can be tested in the courts.

My hon. friend made another argument : he said that these municipalities are poor, and that this government might do this. If I understood the hon. gentleman's argument aright, he did not want any judicial interpretation. He said the meaning was too clear—we could interpret it ourselves.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). That is my position.

The PRIME MINISTER. If that is my hon. friend's position, it is a position against which I contend with all my might. If my hon. friend is sincere and earnest in this matter and wants to have it tested in the courts, I am here to tell him that the government will back him with all their might in so doing ; but, if my hon. friend says, I do not want a judicial interpretation, but I want parliament to say that the exemption started on such a day, whether we would rob the bondholders or not, I am not prepared to assent to anything of the kind. The proposition I make to my hon. friend is a very reasonable one—to have a judicial interpretation, and we will give the poor men of those municipalities all the assistance we can in order to have their rights, whatever they are, established. If my hon. friend is satisfied with that, the government will assist him with all their power to have this contract judicially interpreted. But if he is not willing to accept that, and says there is nothing to do but to have parliament interfere and say whether it is right or wrong, whether it is according to the truth or not, that the twenty years must run from a certain day, then, I hope that such a monstrous proposition, such a socialistic proposition, will receive no countenance in this parliament ; and the only position I have to take is to move that the Bill be not now read a second time, but be read a second time this day six months.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the right hon. First Minister if the government would not state a case for the Supreme Court, and have the contract interpreted themselves ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have just said that if it be the wish of the settlers of the North-west to have it interpreted, I will do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). You said you would assist me in the matter. I ought not to be placed in the positon of having to take the initiative.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). We have heard a lawyer's argument from the leader of the government and the great exponent of Liberalism in this House. Is there no other course than to refer this matter to the courts ? I say there is. We have had grievances of the people of the North-west brought before this House time after time. The greatest grievance the people of the North-west had was the monopoly clause in that contract, which prevented any other road than the Canadian Pacific Railway building to the American frontier. That grievance was aired in this parliament, and eventually the Conservative party, which put that monopoly on the country, found a way of removing that grievance. When the Canadian Pacific Railway came here for further concessions, it got them, but only on condition that it removed this grievance. The Canadian Pacific Railway has come to this House session after session, since hon. gentlemen opposite have been in office, asking for favours, and I have always contended that we should take advantage of these applications to make terms on behalf of the North-west people.

The hon. Minister of Railways gave the Canadian Pacific Railway great concessions in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and he obtained in return reduced freight rates for which he claimed great credit. Two years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway demanded further concessions, and got a blanket charter over the whole of the North-west. I then protested that then was the time to get rid of some of these monopolistic clauses in the contract, particularly the 10 per cent clause, which prevents this government from interfering with the freight rates until the company earns 10 per cent over its expenses, but I protested in vain. The Canadian Pacific Railway is asking again this session for further concessions, and hon. gentlemen opposite will, no doubt, be as supine as they were in the past. They have not the courage to insist on the removal of these monopolistic clauses. There are two such clauses remaining. One is the clause granting exemption from taxes, and the other is the 10 per cent clause. Time and again attention has been drawn to these grievances by gentlemen from the North-west, but all we can get is a lecture from the right hon. the Prime Minister on vested rights and the iniquity of interfering with them. But that is a lawyer's plea, and not that of a statesman. A statesman is a man who can take advantage of opportunities and always find a way to remedy grievances, but here we have Liberals going about the country before elections weeping for the farmers, and in parliament weeping for the bondholders.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sure my hon. friend does not want to give any more to the Canadian Pacific Railway than we have given. According to his contention, this monopoly is at an end, and the twenty years exemption have expired. If the courts maintain his view, why need we grant any further favours to the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to obtain this concession ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The right hon. gentleman has given a great many concessions to the Canadian Pacific Railway since he came into office, without obtaining any corresponding benefit from that company. The Canadian Pacific Railway is here this session asking further concessions, and the right hon. gentleman will have his opportunity of settling this disputed point and obtaining something for the people in return for what he will give the company. But he will not take advantage of the opportunity. Instead we will have the lawyer's plea that vested rights are sacred, that contracts must be upheld, and not a word will we hear about the grievances of the people. But a statesman can find a way to remedy the grievances of the people, and at the same time do no injustice to vested rights.

Mr. DAVIS. Give us a way out of it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have two cures for it. The Canadian Pacific Railway came here some years ago and got a most valuable blanket franchise over the whole of Manitoba that had not already been pre-empted. Let us impose on them some conditions this year in return for the favours they ask. The hon. the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) laid down last session the doctrine—and so did the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton), who is not here this evening—that the present administration was composed of statesmen who would get something for the people from great corporations in return for anything they gave. That was the whole justification advanced for the Crow's Nest Pass deal. The only justification was that the Canadian Pacific Railway was compelled to give up something in the way of monopoly.

I have another cure for the situation, and that is government ownership. We can get that railway into our hands for a very small consideration, and we will get all these lands back.

Mr. DAVIS. Will you buy the lands back ?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, if you buy the road you will get the land with it.

Mr. DAVIS. Not necessarily.

Mr. MACLEAN. If you buy the shares you get everything the railway owns, and you get the lands back. There are very few lands left in the North-west now to give to the settlers, and the easiest remedy would be to acquire the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DAVIS. How much would it take to buy it ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Shaughnessy has told you that you can get it absolutely for $30,000,000. I believe you can get the control for less than $25,000,000, and there is enough land there to pay for all that. You can get that land back into the hands of the country. You could give it to the settler free. Or you could devote the proceeds of sales to paying the taxes and helping the settlers. Instead of spending our time talking about the great corporations, we should be doing something for the people. We should do away with this most unfair system of exemptions under which the poor man has to pay the piper. The poor man in Toronto and every little hamlet in Ontario, and all over Canada to-day, is paying the municipal taxes, while great corporations go scot free, which would not be the case much longer if Liberals would stand by their pledges. But they have gone back on their pledges, and to-day are defending the corporations and weeping for the bondholders. They only weep for the farmers when out in the country looking for their votes.

I believe that this wrong can be made right. As soon as I can get away from here, I intend going up to the North-west and telling the people there how this parliament regards a question of this kind, and I will let them know that the little Napoleon was not in his seat to-night when this question was being discussed, and that the young bucks from the plains, who talk so much about the people's rights on the public platform, are out to-night at some kind of a sun dance or corn dance.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. That no doubt is great sport for hon. gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. SCOTT. Which one of the young bucks is at a sun dance ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I see that some of them have come back from the sun dance.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the hon. gentleman name one who was absent ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Now, it is very fine to hear these interruptions from the North-west whenever a proposition in their interest is before the House. But, I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite and to tell the Premier that there is a way to cure such evils as we complain of. He has availed himself of it once; he has failed to avail himself of it several times. He had better avail himself of it hereafter. For the people do see that parliament in this country is supreme, that parliament can rectify every wrong. And parliament does not rise to its responsibility if it does not find a way to right a known wrong. Law, we are told, is for the purpose of righting wrong; and, if there is no law, or if it is found that the law cannot right the wrong, this parliament can if it will but find a way. And some of us will find the way, and some of us will stake our reputations and our future on the finding of a way. I am one of those who will consecrate what strength I have and what effort I can put forth to that end. It is a strange thing to hear a Prime Minister of this country, a man who professes always to be a Liberal, throwing out some kind of insinuation against those of whom he speaks as socialists. I am something of a Socialist, and something of a Tory.

Mr. DAVIS. That is a bad mixture.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, it is not. I am one of those who do not regard socialism as a crime. Somehow, the world is suffering under great grievances, and the men who profess to be socialists are men who are trying to do something for humanity. I belong to two or three clubs in this country, and some are rather exclusive. And when I go into those clubs, I hear the members talking about these socialist fellows on the hill here. I wish these gentlemen, and some hon. gentlemen opposite, who speak in this manner could be in some of the London clubs to-day. They should hear what is said in those clubs by men of great family connections, leaders in the universities of England, men high in the service of the state—and nine-tenths of these men are socialists, if you call them such. And the great city of London has set an example to the world in the last two or three days of what socialism on good lines means. The London County Council is taking over the control of the great utilities which, until now have been in the hands of private corporations who have been robbing the citizens of London right and left. Of all the robbing corporations, some of the very worst were the water companies that controlled the water supply. They are going out of existence. The city of London is taking over every tramway there. The state owns the telegraph and telephone services. The gas works and electric light works of the city of London are owned by the public. That is the kind of socialism I believe in, and I am not afraid to say so, even though I am opposed by gentlemen who profess to be Liberals. But, I hope that this is the last time that a Liberal Prime Minister in this country will say a word against socialism of that kind. Before I finish, let me say again that the responsibility rests upon parliament of righting this wrong of the North-west settlers. That wrong may have been inflicted upon them by the Tory party. For that, the Tory party is responsible. But equally does the responsibility rest upon members of the other side as well as upon members on this side to right what is a wrong and to find a cure for what is a grievance.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). In 1880, a contract was entered into between the government of the Dominion of Canada and a certain corporation, under which the corporation undertook to build a railway extending from central Canada to the Pacific ocean. As a result of the making of that contract, certain grievances, apparently, have resulted to the people of the North-west Territories and Manitoba. Now, these grievances were pointed out by the Liberal party at that time as being the necessary and inevitable result of that contract. Since that time, this parliament has been asked, by means of the Bill now before the House for consideration, to remedy that grievance—that is to say, the hon. gentleman who presents this measure asks that the remedy be applied in this way. He says: The contract was made between the people of this country and a firm of contractors or a railway corporation, and we now ask you to undertake to construe that contract, and practically to set the contract at defiance. The government now in power says: We do not think it proper to consider the contract in that way. We do not think it proper that one of the parties to the contract should take it upon himself to construe the contract as against the other party, but this contract once made, should be left to the courts for judicial interpretation. And the hon. gentleman from East York (Mr. Maclean), who now leaves the House, says, the course adopted by the government is an improper course. He says: It is all right for lawyers to talk about the sanctity of contract and about respecting their obligations contracted under such conditions as those under which this contract was made, but we statesmen deal otherwise with these things. We statesmen, he says, take out our knives and put them through these contracts and put an end to them. It is all right for mere lawyers to talk about keeping sacred their covenants, but we statesmen deal otherwise.

Mr. MACLEAN. Now, did I say that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, having stated the position taken by the hon. gentleman and by the government, the matter is at an end. We say: The contract is made: in consequence or as a result of this contract, certain obligations were entered into by the people of Canada towards the bondholders who made the advances necessary for the purpose of enabling this road to be built; and, if there is any doubt about the terms of this contract, let the courts settle it and put it at an end; but it is not proper for us to interfere and to construe this contract ourselves, violating obligations we have entered into towards these bondholders. Let me go one step further. What are the facts? When this contract was entered into, it was provided that the road was to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. To enable the company to build that road certain grants of lands were to be made to the company as the road progressed. The company was authorized to use the land grant for the purpose of borrowing money, not only upon the land granted, but the lands to be granted under this agreement. These bonds were sold, and the money for which they were sold was taken by the company and put into this road. And now we are asked to take that land grant which was made at that time and given to the bondholders as security for their advances, and to say that we are going to alter the conditions under which the grant was made. Now, is that common honesty, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Would the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) allow me to ask him whether he would be willing to have this interpreted to mean that these lands shall be taxed twenty years from the date they were earned ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not going to say how I should be willing to have this contract interpreted. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) will try to understand the position the government takes, I am sure we shall be at one in a moment. The government say : The contract is made providing that these lands shall be exempt from taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown. All that is necessary is to ask the courts to construe the words ' grant thereof from the Crown.'

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Yes, but you have not issued the patents up to the present time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Now let me go on. Are these words to be construed as of the date of the making of the contract, as my hon. friend wishes them to be construed ? Are they to be construed as of the date of the earning of the lands, or are they to be construed as of the dates when the patents issued ? These are the three constructions that may be put upon these terms ; and what we say is that as these terms are vague and indefinite, and are possible of any one of these three constructions, let us refer the matter to the courts and let the courts construe them. If the court says that when this contract was made the meaning of these words was of the date of the making of the contract, then we have no responsibility. If the court decides that the grant is to be understood as of the date when the land grant was earned, we have no responsibility. If they say it is of the date when the patent issued, we are equally without responsibility.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Yes, you are responsible, because you have allowed five years to elapse, and you have not issued the patents.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is for the courts to say the date from which that grant is to run. Now, my hon. friend takes this position, he is endeavouring to tax the government with responsibility for not having granted patents during these five years. Why does he not bring in a Bill to discuss that question ? What we are dealing with now is the hon. gentleman's Bill ; I presume he drew it, and if he drew it, I presume he understands it. What the hon. gentleman wants to do is to say that this grant is to be construed as dating from the date of the ratification of the contract. That is what he asks us to do ; and I submit respectfully, Mr. Speaker, that we should not by an act of this parliament say that such is the meaning of that contract and the Act that was based upon it ; and if there was a possibility of construing the contract in that way, then we must not forget that the land never passed out of the possession of the Crown until such time as the road was constructed and the grant earned.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). It has not passed out of the possession of the Crown yet.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. So the position is this : My hon. friend, if he is sincere about this matter——

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Do you suppose I would be doing it if I were not sincere ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. ——if he is sincere about that matter, as sincere as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) was when he spoke on this subject last year, he would adopt the suggestion thrown out by the government, that is to say, he would have the contract referred to the courts and the courts would judicially construe it. Then the people of the North-west would benefit by it, and no individual would succeed in obtaining some political benefit out of it. I say the position of the government takes is one which will commend itself to the House. Let there be a judicial construction put upon this contract, that is all any member can ask, then we will know where we are, and how far this evil complained of can be remedied.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) deserves credit for the anxiety he displays on behalf of the people he represents. There is no doubt, people in Manitoba are labouring under a grievance, under a hardship, and there is no doubt they desire and deserve a remedy, no matter from what quarter it may come. The hon. member brought this question up last year, and, if I remember right, he brought it up before that ; but he has always aimed at redressing the grievance under which the people of Manitoba labour. But I regret to say, personally, that I cannot agree with him in the remedy he proposes. If there is one thing more than another that ought to be held sacred by parliament, it is the contracts that we make with corporations or individuals ; and there is no doubt that this was a contract that parliament entered into seriously and intentionally, whether it was a wise one or not. We are one of the contracting parties, and to violate that contract by an arbitrary declaration, to make that Act mean what we desire it to mean, I think, would be entirely out of keeping with the principles usually obtaining in all constitutionally-governed countries under the British Empire. The hon. member for Lisgar quoted from several members of the Reform party, giving their interpretation of that Act when it was being passed, and amongst them he quoted from the Hon. Edward Blake. Now, it seems to me that Mr. Blake thought at that time that the twenty years were to run from the time when the agreement was entered into. That being the case, I respectfully submit that it justifies any person in holding a similar view, and the hon. member for Lisgar is not so much to blame if he comes to the same conclusion and desires to act on it. That was Mr. Blake's opinion, and that was the opinion of several members of the Reform party, but it does not happen to be the opinion of those who constitute the other contracting party.

When this question was up last year I made a suggestion which the First Minister has intimated he is willing to act upon tonight. I suggested that the government should state a case for the court to decide, instead of leaving it to any private individual to prosecute a case in court in order to secure the rights of the people interested. I understand the First Minister to say tonight that he is willing to join with the hon. member for Lisgar, and to have a case stated for decision by the court in order to ascertain the correct interpretation of the law. It seems to me the hon. member for Lisgar should accept that offer. I do not think it is possible for him to secure any remedy that will redress this grievance at an earlier date ; and since the government have assumed responsibility and given their solemn pledge in the House that they will act in this manner, I think that ought to be acceptable. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), I regret to say, stated some propositions that I cannot agree with. I cannot agree with him in the conclusion he reaches in regard to this and many other cases of a cognate character. He gave us an example of remedying a grievance suffered by the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories some years ago with regard to the monopoly clause ; but he evidently forgot that we did not arbitrarily interpret that clause, but we entered into negotiations with the contracting parties that were controlling the situation, and induced them to abandon their rights.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is my proposal exactly, negotiate now respecting the rights in order to get rid of the grievance.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, if the hon. gentleman had only gone that far I should have been glad to support him ; but to say that we should arbitrarily interpret a law in a manner to suit our own side of the question, is going much too far.

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not say that for a moment.

Mr. SPROULE. On the other hand, to say that parliament is above the people and above the contracts, and that we should violate a solemn obligation we entered into with a corporation, I think is also going entirely too far. Now, had the government acted on this suggestion last year, they would have done right. They have agreed to what is, in my opinion, the only remedy, and I am sure the House will sustain the First Minister in that suggestion. Therefore, I think it will be the part of discretion, and it will be the honest way of securing a remedy, if the hon. member for Lisgar, who is entitled to great credit for the perseverance he has displayed in the interest of the people, would accept that suggestion and withdraw his Bill.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). It seems to me this is a very simple question, and there has been a great deal of discussion wide of the mark by one or two hon. gentlemen who made long speeches. A great many matters that are not pertinent to the question were brought in. I think the House understood the hon. member for East York in the same way as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) understood him. He, as an old parliamentarian, must know that he was entirely out of order, because his argument would have nothing to do with the question before the House. I am glad to hear that he did not mean anything like as drastic as he said and as we understood him.

Mr. MACLEAN. Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That is the way we all understood him. I will now leave it and say nothing more about it. The whole question is rather broader than the statement of it by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), in my opinion. The whole question is not the interpretation of the contract, but it is that we shall not interpret it at all. We have no business, as a House, or as a legislature, to put a construction on a contract that has been entered into.

Mr. MACLEAN. I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. If you do agree with it, I do not think it is wise or fair in discussion to bring these other matters into contention for the reason that those hon. gentlemen who stick closely to the question, and who argue it upon that line are placed in an unfair position, because in arguing a lot of other matters it would look as if those of us who are strong on this question are not standing up for the rights of the people. I am one of those that willingly will never consent to one tittle of that sort of legislation, because it is the bulwark of the poor man. The poor man is the man who most often requires the law to protect him within his rights. I grant there is no socialism about me as I understand socialism. There is no socialism about Conservatism, as I understand it ; otherwise, I would be beginning to think of becoming a Liberal, because I am glad to say that as far as I have observed the legislation of this country, there is no record of the Liberal party being socialistic in their actions in parliament. We all, I think, agree upon that; at all events, excepting the new members in the House, we all agree because we voted upon it last year. I was going to read a few words from the speech of Sir Charles Tupper, our then leader on this side of the House, but I do not think it is necessary. He endorsed entirely, I think, the words of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as he expressed himself last year, and I think all of the members of this side of the House endorsed him also. To-night, I believe that nearly all of us, I think probably every one would do the same, if the question came to a vote. As the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) quoted from some of the speeches and transactions which occurred at the time of the passing of this contract, there are one or two quotations that I will detain the House by referring to, for a minute or two, because I do not see the pertinency of the hon. gentleman's quotations any more than the pertinency of some of the things the hon. gentleman said. He quoted what Liberal members said in opposition to this contract at that time. He did not quote, as the Prime Minister has remarked, from these discussions one thing pertinent to the question, or that would help us in the consideration of it. As great a lawyer as Edward Blake would seem to have been satisfied with it. He left us in this dilemma as to what the contract does mean, because, I agree with the hon. Solicitor General and with the right hon. Prime Minister that it is doubtful what the construction is. But, the hon. member for Lisgar went on to speak as if the Liberals were all against the proposition. He forgets that the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, while endeavouring to grapple with this question, made a much larger offer, an offer of 50,000,000 acres of land, $25,000,000 cash, and 4 per cent on whatever it might require beyond that, and asked for tenders upon that basis. So that the House will know that all the difficulties and all the extravagances, if there were extravagances in regard to the terms given by the Canadian Pacific Railway, were not upon our side of the House. The hon. gentleman read from the speech of the present Prime Minister of Ontario, but he forgot to read the recantation of that hon. gentleman. I will read it for his edification, because he ought to read what he said then, and what he says now. He was then dealing with a matter which was surrounded with difficulties, and which awaited the test of the future. He was in opposition to the proposition, because he then took the Liberal view of it. Mr. Ross, speaking in one of the constituencies in Ontario within a year past, said:

I remember when the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed, we thought Sir John Macdonald was undertaking a herculean enterprise, one which would crush the country. I think, perhaps, he was right, and we were wrong. I think, perhaps, he builded more wisely than he knew. No one will say to-day that the building of the railway was a mistake. Canada to-day would be a very small country, would be weaker in the councils of the empire, would scarcely be a confederated Domiaion, as it is, were it not for the Pacific Railway.

In discussing a matter such as this I would prefer that we should bring no party politics into it. I merely make reference to these two statements because the hon. gentleman saw fit to bring before the House, and to the attention of the Prime Minister, portions of the discussion which took place then, that seemed to be, from his standpoint, evidence that the action of the Conservative party in reference to this great enterprise, this herculean task, which was undertaken by the great man who is here no more to give us his counsel, has not verified the anticipations of those who projected it. I wanted to give the views of one of the strongest men who existed at that time, and who still gives his counsel, wisdom and best efforts to the province of Ontario. I would prefer, and I always endeavour to carry out that view in discussing matters like this, where there are no party politics, that we should deal with them simply on their merits as the right hon. gentleman has done to-night. In his speech a year ago he went into some other subjects. This is not a matter of party politics. It is one of those things where both parties should feel some of the difficulties and responsibilities, and unless it is a matter in which party politics are concerned, I think the wiser and better plan is to deal with the subject just as we have with this, and pitch into each other on party questions.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go very far afield in the short remarks which I desire to make in regard to this subject, and I would not delay the House by participating in the debate at all, were it not that I think it is an extremely important subject, and it affects particularly that part of the country which I am supposed to represent in the cabinet. It is not by any means a new subject, as we all know, and it does not seem to me that it is a subject upon which there can be very much difference of opinion. I would be surprised if any member of the House of Commons of Canada would be found to take the position that this parliament would be justified in altering a contract which has been deliberately entered into. What certain members of parliament thought and said when this contract was passed, has absolutely nothing to do with the question. What this man or that man said as to the intention of an Act of parliament has nothing whatever to do with the Act when it is passed. When a contract is made by this parliament with a corporation or individual, it makes no difference whether that corporation or individual turns out to be unpopular or not, that contract must stand absolutely. We have no more rights as a parliament to pass an Act interpreting that contract than you would have, Mr. Speaker, to place your own interpretation upon a contract that you might make with me in private life. For my part, I take most emphatic issue with the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) when he says that the House of Commons is supreme in the sense that it has a right to break its contracts or violate public faith.

Mr. MACLEAN. The member for East York did not say that, nor did not advocate it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think he spoke for the Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not speak for the Bill.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is very unfortunate then in the language he used.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, he is not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman told us, with great vigour, that parliament is supreme, and that parliament has the right and the power. We all know it has the legal power.

Mr. MACLEAN. By concession for concession.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman did not mean that parliament had the power rightfully to alter contracts, then his remarks were totally irrelevant, and could not convey any intelligent idea to those who listened to him. The question was well and clearly put by my hon. friend the Solicitor General, and by my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale). It is not a question as to what interpretation should be put on this contract. Parliament has no right to put any interpretation on this contract. The interpretation of a contract made betwen two parties must be decided by a judicial tribunal, independent of both parties. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) said truly that if this course were taken, it is not so much the large corporations that would suffer in this country as the poorer classes, because the trend of legislation in all countries shows that injury to the public credit, injury to confidence in contracts, injury to confidence in investments, brings its misfortune first upon the poor classes, and particularly upon the labouring men. We have had many discussions in this House as to the benefit conferred upon the country by large sums of money being brought in here for investment. I fancy there is no man who has given careful consideration to the affairs of Canada who will not agree, that there is perhaps no country in the world which is in a position to profit so largely as Canada would, by the investment of capital from other countries where it has accumulated and where it cannot be as profitably used as it can be here. I can conceive of no more fatal blow that we could strike at that confidence, which we are happy to say has always been displayed in regard to Canadian securities, than that we should deliberately assume the power to alter to even the extent of one letter a contract that has been deliberately entered into by the parliament of Canada. As has been well said, the Liberal party has no reason to be apologists for this contract in any sense whatever. But, Sir, the Liberal party called upon to administer the affairs of this country must administer them with absolute honour and good faith, so far as the public contracts are concerned.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have had occasion to experience some difficulties in connection with this question. I have addressed public audiences when it would have been more popular for me to use such language as was used by the hon. member for East York, even though I did not wish to be responsible for the meaning of the words I used, as he did not wish to be responsible. I have been called upon to address many audiences where it would have been more popular for me to assume the attitude taken by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and endeavour to confuse the minds of the people, so as to lead them in some way, directly or indirectly, to suppose that there was a way in which this contract could be got around which would relieve them from its effect. I am here to say, that never upon any occasion have I ever taken any other stand than that which I take to-night upon this question. I have expressed the opinion, and I express the opinion now, that I hope and trust there will never be a government in Canada that will be prepared to take the responsibility of introducing legislation to vary or change contracts which have been fairly and honestly entered into by the parliament of this country. So far as my view of the matter is concerned, it is entirely a question of law. I have been asked a number of times as to what position the government would take in regard to this matter, and I have always said, that so far as I was concerned, my view was that the interpretation of the contract must be made by a judicial tribunal, and I further said, that so soon as the twenty years had expired from the date of the ratification of the contract, then, so soon as any municipality was in a position to bring about a state of circumstances that would give rise to a test case, we would be quite prepared to have that test case carried to court at the expense of the government. I have no doubt that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister is quite in accord with that view, and I believe that nine-tenths of the members of the House will also be in accord with it.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gnetleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) has charged me with not stating my views intelligently. I think I did make myself intelligent, and I received an approving nod from the leader of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I protest.

Mr. MACLEAN. I received an approving nod from the leader of the House when I said that he claimed as one of the great credits to his party, that he had negotiated with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the abandonment of some of their monopolies and the reduction of their rates. These gentlemen opposite have gone up and down the country making stump speeches to the same effect.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order.

Mr. MACLEAN. What ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Spoken.

Mr. MACLEAN. There is an amendment moved, and I have a perfect right to speak to the amendment. One reason why this Bill should not be hoisted for six months is, that parliament can maintain the sanctity of contracts and still right the wrongs of the settlers of the North-west. That is what this parliament can do, and that is what I advocate here to-night. It may be by compensation, and even if it has to be by compensation let it be done. Whatever way it be done, the Liberal party, in doing it, will only be vindicating the policy they announced twenty years ago, when they denounced this contract as an injustice to the settler. Even at this late date it is incumbent on the Liberal party to rectify that wrong. My argument was wholly on the line of the Crow's Nest Pass deal, namely, that when the Canadian Pacific Railway next comes to the government they can say to them : We will entertain the proposition you are making, but we want you to surrender that monopoly clause, which is a grievance to the people of the North-west Territories. That is what I argued, and if that is socialism, I am sorry to hear that the Minister of the Interior is not a believer in that kind of socialism, and that he tells the public of Canada and the settlers in the North-west that there is nothing else for the members of this House to do than to maintain the syndicate contract. They have more than that to do. Their duty is to rectify the wrongs of the settlers. These wrongs can be rectified, and the duty and responsibility of rectifying them is upon hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see that the House has apparently taken the position—judging from what most of the speakers have said—that it does not intend to interfere in this matter. I am afraid that a good deal of the indifference of members of the House is due to the feeling that it is not their ox that is gored. As long as it is only a North-west matter, and does not affect the rest of Canada, it is a question for the courts. But if it were a matter which concerned Eastern Canada, and concerned it very deeply, I think ways and means would be found for seeing that if we went to the courts, the play would not be with loaded dice at any rate. We are willing to go to the courts, but we want the law straight to go to the courts on.

Let me give the House a few figures to show what the present condition of affairs means to the North-west. There is at the present time a law of the North-west assembly taxing every quarter section of land under ownership within a statute labour district at the rate of $2.50. Under the law for the organization of school districts, lands owned by homesteaders are taxed at an average rate of $3.50 per quarter section. There are thirty-six sections in a township, sixteen of these belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The company's exemption from taxation in each statute labour township amounts to $160, and there are in the North-west I think not less than 300 statute labour districts; so that the total exemption of the company from taxation in statute labour districts amounts to nearly $50,000 a year. There are about 500 school districts in the Territories. The country school districts are allowed to be five miles square. That would give at least twelve sections of Canadian Pacific Railway land in each school district. The average taxation is about $3.50 per quarter section. Taking for the purposes of calculation 300 as the number of school districts in the Territories, and not 500, we find that the company's exemptions from taxation in school districts amount to about another $50,000 a year. The point I want to make is this, that there is a tax of $6 on every quarter section of land owned by a settler or homesteader, and we claim that the adjoining section owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should pay an equal amount. What I want to impress on this House is that that means something to the people of the east. Ever since the North-west Territories were organized, the support of the schools and the improvement of the roads have been carried on by means of a subsidy supplied out of the Dominion treasury, and year after year the plea has been made to this government by the government of the Territories that, because of this exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands from taxation the Dominion treasury should supply the deficiency, and it has been supplying the deficiency and will have to continue to supply it as long as the deficiency exists. Do not make the mistake that this eastern country is not interested in the question of the taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands. This eastern country is paying every year out of the general treasury because of that exemption. The people of the North-west are bearing part of the unjust burden, and you are paying the other part; and it is your question as well as ours whether you are going to continue to bear that burden or make the Canadian Pacific Railway Company bear its share.

The House is instructed that it has no right to interpret its own contract, and that if we touch this contract we break the good faith of this country, and do ourselves a great deal of injury. I hope we will never want to break an honest contract, but I trust that we will never submit to be buncoed by the misinterpretation of a statute. The right hon. the First Minister said that he agreed with the understanding of the House at the time, as that understanding was explained by the hon. member who moved the Bill, but unfortunately that was not what was embodied in the contract. If that be the case, I say that the understanding of the House at the time was our side of the contract, and it is our business to see that that understanding is maintained, and we are not acting fairly by the people if we do not. This House is not an ordinary party to a contract. When, in the course of debate, questions are addressed to ministers, the positions taken by ministers with regard to those questions, as taken down by 'Hansard,' are accepted as interpreting the law. That should be so, and is so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not so.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I will have to accept the correction, for I certainly am not in a position to give instances to the contrary, but I know of instances in which such statements have been accepted as interpreting the law. I say that the bargain made at the time was understood by this country and parliament as having a certain effect, namely, that on the 14th February, now passed, the exemption from taxation terminated, and I say it is the duty of this House to see that the people are not robbed of $50,000 or $100,000 a year through a misinterpretation of the contract.

For my part, I do not admit that there is properly any necessity for the introduction of this Bill. I do not admit that there is any necessity for any interpretation of the contract, or any room for any misinterpretation of it. The necessity for the Bill has arisen from the doubts thrown upon the meaning of the contract by members of the government, as stated in the preamble. I am at the disadvantage of not being learned in the law, and of taking a position entirely opposite to that taken by some members who are learned in the law, but I say that the words in this Act can have only one meaning, according to my understanding of the English language. The words in dispute, as mentioned by the Solicitor General, are :

> Shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

I say that the word 'grant' means 'gift.' That is the dictionary meaning of the word, and it is not right to import into that word the technical legal meaning of 'patent.' I say that the land was given when the Act was assented to, and that the twenty years exemption has to run from that time. Do you tell me that the ownership did not begin until certain acts had been done ? But does not the homesteader, who makes a homestead entry, become in law the proprietor of his land at that moment, although he has not completed the homestead duties, and need not complete them for three years afterwards ? And is he not taxable for that land, as soon as he enters it as a homestead. And if he does not pay his taxes until he gets his patent, the land is then sold, and the back taxes are collected out of the proceeds.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no such law. The land cannot be sold for the taxes.

Mr. OLIVER. When a homesteader enters for his land, that land thereupon becomes assessable, and is assessed. An assessment is placed against that land each succeeding year, and if the taxes are not paid until the patent is secured, then the land can be and is sold for the taxes. Of course it cannot be sold until the patent is secured, but those taxes stand against it until it is patented.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. The taxes assessed against the land before it is patented cannot be collected from that land. No title can be conveyed in the case of land sold for taxes assessed before the patent is issued.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I have seen hundreds of cases of lands advertised for sale for taxes, and no doubt so has the hon. the Minister of the Interior, and you will find printed at the end of the list 'unpatented.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They cannot give a title for these lands.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). They may not, but they are sold for taxes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No one who goes to a sale for taxes and knows anything of the subject will buy any land that is unpatented. Time and again in the courts of Manitoba such sales have been set aside, and the most emphatic declarations made by the courts that lands cannot be sold or titles conveyed in respect of taxes assessed before the patent is issued. The provincial legislature can make the debt a personal one, but cannot convey the lands.

Mr. OLIVER. As regards the point whether land that is homesteaded can be taxed before it is patented, I cannot tell you what the law is, as I am not a lawyer. I can only tell you what is done. There is another case. Land is purchased sometimes under an agreement of sale. In such case, who has the ownership of that land, and who is taxed for it up to the time the agreement is completed and the last money paid ?

I say that the ownership of the land for the purposes of this Act commenced when the Act was assented to. As the company could negotiate its business on the strength of the money grant that was given by the Act, just so it could negotiate its business on the strength of the land grants given by the Act. It was given then, and the company proceeded forthwith to do business on it, because it was given. I am astonished to hear the contention that this land grant is not taxable until twenty years after it is patented. I understand that there are members who make that contention. If there are, do they understand the position in which it places them ? Do they understand the position in which it places this country ? Do they know that if that contention is admitted, so far from this exemption having expired at the time this whole country expected it to expire, inasmuch as not an acre of that land has been patented the twenty years exemption has not begun to run; and this country is robbed —I say robbed—for at least twenty years to come of whatever taxes they should have received, but for that exemption. Surely, the Prime Minister is not going to take that position ? Then, is he going to leave it to the chance of a judicial decision on a bunco Act as to whether we shall be robbed for that twenty years or not ? I cannot agree with him, that that is the duty of parliament or of this government. I cannot agree with him that we can afford to stand aside and let ourselves be robbed to any such tune as that ; because, whatever may be the strict legal interpretation of that Act, neither he nor any other man can contend that it was in the mind of parliament—can contend that it was not furthest away from the mind of parliament at the passing of this Act—that any such contingency should arise. Would any man argue for a moment that, if it had been presented to parliament that that exemption was liable to extend for forty years it would have been granted ? Nobody would contend such a thing.

Mr. MACLEAN. Oh, yes, they do.

Mr. OLIVER. No one.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I have heard it tonight.

Mr. OLIVER. Not with the cold facts before them ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) means that the Tories would have given it for fifty years if they had been asked.

Mr. OLIVER. I say that if there had been any such idea in the mind of parliament at the time, it would have been brought out in the debate. But there was no such idea brought out in debate, nor was there any such idea in the mind of the country at that time. Those who desire, then, to take the position that this country is liable to the chance of a judicial decision on an Act which they themselves say they do not understand, may say that that is their duty ; but, so far as I am concerned, it is not my duty as a member of this House, as I understand it. I claim that the position of the members of this House is not the same as that of a private individual. It is the business of this House to see that justice is done to the people of this country ; it is the business of this House to see that Acts which are faulty when they are passed are amended and made right, so that there shall be justice and substantial justice to the people of this country. This House is taking too great a responsibility when it says : We will do nothing in the matter ; we will throw it into the courts and let the people take chances on a judicial decision on an Act which we do not pretend to understand, though we know and every man knows, what was meant when the Act was passed by the parliament who passed it. It has not been shown that there was anything different in the mind of parliament when the Act was passed than I have stated. If it can be shown that parliament had any other idea, that parliament thought exemption would extend for twenty-five or thirty or forty or fifty years, it was competent for any hon. member to show that. But it cannot be shown. There is no doubt that the country and parliament, on behalf of the country, made that bargain with the full belief that the exemption from taxation would terminate on the 15th February, 1901. Then, if the understanding of parliament is not distinctly and clearly provided for in the Act, it is the duty, as it is the right—and as it is admitted to be the right—of this parliament to make the Act as parliament understood it to be, and thereby protect the interests of the people of the western country and protect the treasury in which both east and west are interested.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I ventured to express dissent to a remark of my hon. friend from Alberta, and I only rise for the purpose of explaining why I did so. Like him, I have not the good fortune or misfortune, that being a matter of opinion, of being a member of the legal profession. But I think that the principle involved in the Bill now before the House is so simple that even a layman could understand it and find reasons for voting against it. I understand my hon. friend to lay down the principle that the intention of parliament respecting an Act is to be learned from the discussions which took place in parliament. To that I said 'no.' Now, I venture to say that it is not necessary that one should be a member of the legal profession to reach the conclusion that the meaning of an Act of parliament must be gathered from within the four corners of the Act itself. As to coming to the reports of the debates of parliament and finding out what A, B, or C said he meant by that Act, I think no court would entertain that idea. I can give one or two notable instances in which that point had to be considered. One case, if I mistake not, arose in connection with this very contract. I remember, though I need hardly say I was not a member of this parliament at that time, that the question came up as to the meaning of the clause which has been referred to by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), providing that within a certain period no lines of railway should be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When the matter was before parliament, the question was asked what that meant. I think I am correct in saying that a very prominent man who occupied an independent position in this House, Hon. Wm. McDougall, said he attached great importance to that and wanted an explanation of it. Then Sir John Macdonald, replying, said that that clause could only affect the North-west Territories, which were subject to the government and under the control of this parliament, but could not affect the organized province of Manitoba; and he used the very famous expression, 'You cannot check Manitoba.' Yet, when, a few years afterwards, the province of Manitoba, under that interpretation, tried to exercise the right to charter lines running to the United States, we were told, nothwithstanding the assurance of Sir John Macdonald, that that was not the meaning of the contract, and it must be interpreted as it was, and not as Sir John Macdonald or anybody else said it should be.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I interrupt to suggest a correction, and that is that the action of the government of Sir John Macdonald in disallowing the Manitoba railway charters was not come to on a point of law, but was a matter of policy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And I believe that the government of Sir John Macdonald determined that they could not allow the claim of Manitoba until they had obtained the consent of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is the way out of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That confirms my statement that not what Sir John Macdonald said but what the Act of parliament said must be the law of the land. I can give the hon. gentleman another illustration in a matter with which he is not familiar, because it arose in the history of my own province. It arose at a time when the office of Attorney General was occupied by an able lawyer, who afterwards became Prime Minister of this Dominion, the late lamented Sir John Thompson. The contract was made with a railway company, that is the class of contract in which these troubles arise chiefly. A question arose as to the meaning of a certain clause. Sir John Thompson gave his opinion, offhand, that it meant a certain thing. The House accepted that, and the country accepted it. Not many weeks afterwards Sir John Thompson, in his capacity as Attorney General, was called upon to interpret that contract, and he interpreted it to mean, not what he had said it was, but what, in his judgment as a lawyer, the written Act of parliament meant. But nobody ever assumed that because Sir John Thompson said in parliament it meant something else, therefore it must be held to mean something else. Now, I think that is so simple a matter that even I, as a layman, may properly come to a conclusion at once. We are not called upon to discuss whether the Canadian Pacific Railway contract is a good or a bad contract; we are not called upon even to discuss, however much we may sympathise with the hon. member for Alberta as to the grievance of the North-west, we are not called upon to consider that to-night.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). Does not the hon. minister sympathize with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) also?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, the hon. member for Lisgar was said by somebody to-night to be a socialist; and my right hon. friend said something about socialism which gave offence to the distinguished socialist from East York (Mr. Maclean), who said he was a socialist of a certain kind. The right hon. premier did not object to socialism of a good kind. There may be a wholesome socialism; but the kind of socialism the Prime Minister objected to was the socialism of this Bill, which proposes that we, one of the parties to a contract, should interpret it in our own interest against the other party. That is a kind of socialism which this parliament has never adopted.

Mr. KENDALL. It is not socialism.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from Cape Breton, who, I believe, represents a good kind of socialism, dissents at once from that. Now, I want to say again that we are not called upon to consider to-night whether this was a good or a bad contract, or what Mr. Blake said, or what anybody else said; and we are not called upon to consider whether the North-west has a grievance to-day in this matter. The only thing that we are called upon to consider is whether this is a matter for parliament, or whether this is a matter for the courts of the country, to deal with. I think the hon. member for Alberta made a pretty good argument to show what this means. I think if I were chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada I might be disposed to agree with him; but we are none of us here exercising the functions of the Supreme Court. If there is one thing more than another which we all recognize, it is that the interpretation of contracts shall be determined by the courts and not by parliament. That would be true, even if we had no contract interest ourselves. But when we have, the very fact that we are ourselves a party to a contract, and that we propose to interpret it against the other party—surely, I think the hon. member for Lisgar will not press that matter any further. I agree with all that was said by my colleague, the Minister of the Interior, as to the sacredness of these contracts. Let the idea once get abroad that the parliament of Canada is going to undertake to interpret its contracts for itself rather than submit them to the judicial tribunals of the country, and I venture to say from that time forward there would not be the slightest faith in anything this parliament might do upon which a dollar might be required for any public purpose in Canada.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I think the hon. gentleman has furnished, in his brief speech, the strongest possible reason why this Bill should be passed. He has laid down the proposition that the courts shall take no cognizance whatever of a debate that may have occurred, or of the understanding that prevailed when a contract was made. Now, this is not a verbal understanding, let me remind the Minister of Finance. There were not certain words passed verbally between members of both sides of the House and the syndicate; but the understanding was taken down in black and white by 'Hansard,' and remains in 'Hansard' up to the present time. I do not think even the hon. gentleman himself will contend that there is not some doubt at least in that clause itself. He will not contend that it is absolutely sure that the twenty years does not run from the date of the contract. I think the Solicitor General was willing to go that far, and he is the only one, so far as I know, who ever made that admission.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What admission?

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). That the language cannot be interpreted to mean that the twenty years began with the ratification of the contract.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I claim that you can read into that clause easily, any layman, at least, can read into that clause, what it did mean; and certainly the many able members on both sides of the House who spoke when that contract went through, understood what it meant. Is the Solicitor General, or is any legal man to-day, able to say that they did not so understand it, or can he say that his opinion or the opinion of any other man at present, is better than the opinion of the members who sat on both sides of the House when that contract went through, and who clearly declared—because I quoted their utterances—that they understood that the twenty years would date from the ratification of that contract?

If, therefore, the proposition of the Minister of Finance is correct, that the courts must take no cognizance whatever of the understanding, not a verbal understanding, but a distinct printed understanding at that time, then why should we not pass an Act to-night and declare what parliament did intend? I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, as a representative of the North-west, to take any risk in the matter; I do not propose to agree to a reference of this point to the courts. I claim, with the hon. member for Alberta, that it is perfectly clear what parliament intended. Parliament is supreme, far above any superior court, or even any judicial committee of the Privy Council, and let parliament say to-night what was intended. Let parliament protect the vested interests of the people. Why, we hear about 'the monstrous proposition of interfering with vested interests of these stockholders.' Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when these bonds were sold, the men who bought them had the right to investigate that contract, and if they were honest men, if they were shrewd men, they had the very clauses of that contract before them, and having bought their bonds after reading the clauses of the contract, then, on their own heads let the consequences rest. The duty of this House is not to protect the bondholders of Holland and other countries, but the interests of the people, and it is for their interest that we stand up to-night.

I am not afraid of being called a socialist to-night, I am proud to be a socialist, if socialism is standing up for the interests of the people. I do not think, from what we see here, that many people understand what socialism is. What is socialism? It is serving the interests of the people as against private or corporate interests; it is taking hold of public franchises and running them in the interests of the people. Is that a crime? Is it anything for which any man need be ashamed? I do not think it is. So far as I am concerned to-night, I am proud to stand here and allow the Prime Minister to call me a socialist, because I stand up for the interests of the people as against corporate interests. The point, however, is this: Why should not these patents be issued at once?

Mr. MACLEAN. That is the point.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I have a resolution in my desk, written a week ago, that I propose to bring up when the House is moved into Supply, declaring that the patents issue at once. I want these patents issued. I listened with pride to my hon. friend from Alberta when he said that the proposition of the right hon. premier was a monstrous one, that the twenty years period must date from the issue of the patents.

The PRIME MINISTER. I never said that.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I will read from the hon. gentleman's speech of last session.

> I am not prepared to say that the argument of my hon. friend is right or that it is wrong. It may be right, I do not think it is. I think it is only from the date of the issue of the patents from the Crown that the grant is to be construed.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). The patents have not been issued up to the present time, and it may go on for ever.

The PRIME MINISTER. I said I would not undertake an expression of opinion. I did not say my own view was clear, that is a question for the courts.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I would not put the Premier in any position that he does not occupy, but surely the English language is plain and understandable. He said it was his own opinion that the twenty years period would date from the issue of the patents. Up to the present time not one patent for a single acre of land which has not been sold by the company has been issued. What position is the hon. gentleman in, according to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver)? The government have been in power for five years, and these patents have not been issued. Even, if you accept the explanation of the Prime Minister they have allowed five years to go, and if the patents are issued, now at least five years have been added to the burdens of the people in that country. That is the consideration that I want to place before parliament. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is not disposed to sympathize with me, and the hon. Solicitor General intimates that he thinks I am not sincere. I say that the hon. Minister of Finance is not disposed to sympathize with me, because I have been designated as a socialist.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I found no fault with you.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I think I am entitled to this credit, that I have stood up here session after session in this House and have done what I could. What personal axe can I have to grind? Is my position right or is it wrong? When the fact exists that the taxpayers in that country are paying (and if the interpretation of the Prime Minister is allowed to go and if they are not to issue these patents, they will be obliged to pay for all time to come) double taxes that they should not pay for school-houses, roads, bridges and other considerations, is it right that such a condition of things should be permitted to continue? I want to say it now, and I am glad the House is listening to me, that this is a question which we cannot afford to dally with. The people are not going to be fooled any longer. It is idle to say that it shall be referred to the courts. I am not willing to agree that it shall be referred to the courts. I suppose that makes no difference, as the government will do as it likes anyway. I am here as the representative of 50,000 or 60,000 constituents, and a representative man from Manitoba and the North-west Territories, to say that the people are watching the government and watching parliament very closely on this matter, that they will hold this parliament responsible if they are going to be obliged to pay double taxes for all time to come in order that this great corporation, into whose lap we have poured our millions, into whose lap we have poured $75,000,000 worth of land, in order that they shall go on for all time to come to take toll from the people of the country as they have been tolling the people, and as they will continue to toll the people unless parliament does something. This is a serious question, and I most earnestly hope the government will reconsider the proposition to give this Bill the six months' hoist.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I am fully in accord with the Bill before the House. If it is understood, here, to-night, that the people of the North-west Territories settle and perform the duties of settlement while the rich corporations which own railways and lands around them escaped taxation, I think the best thing we can do is to recall our immigration agents in Europe, because I am satisfied that we will get very few emigrants to come in and settle, and perform all the statute labour and all the settlement duties in that country while allowing the wealthy corporations to get the benefit of it. I think it is time that this was fully understood. I think the government, instead of throwing this question over by giving it the six months' hoist, ought to take it into their serious consideration and see whether there is not something in the Bill. I think there is, and I shall therefore support the Bill.

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, owing to the heated deliverances of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), I feel it necessary that I should make some remarks in regard to this Bill. If the subject before the House had been to the effect that freight rates should be lowered, that some grievance which existed in the North-west Territories should be remedied as against the Canadian Pacific Railway, I would be inclined to agree with what the hon. gentleman has said, but, how, in the name of common sense, applying the ordinary interpretation of the English language to the Bill which he has introduced, he can apply his last remarks made in this House, I am entirely at a loss to understand. The question is whether we, as the parliament of Canada, shall interpret an Act which was merely an Act of ratification and which, in effect, is not an interpretation of an Act as he and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) would have us believe, but is in reality an interpretation of the contract which was entered into between the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which contract required the ratification of parliament to make it effective and operative. Now, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), and this is the part which struck me as being the most irrelevant and erroneous, said that hon. members on both sides of the House stated what in their opinion, was the meaning of that clause in the contract. What has that got to do with the judicial, or proper, or fair interpretation of that clause? We have not before us, we cannot have before us, what took place in the negotiations between the government and the other contracting parties, which, in this case, was the Canadian Pacific Railway. Is it fair, therefore, for us to interpret the meaning of the contract pursuant to a discussion which took place in the House, when we are not in a position to know what the other contracting party has to say. It is manifestly unfair, because, they cannot be said, although perhaps it is alleged that they have representatives on the floor of parliament occasionally, that they were in that sense represented so as to say or put before the people of the country what their contentions were in arriving at the conclusion which was embodied in the words of that clause of the contract. Looking at it as an abstract proposition, as the hon. member for Lisgar put it in his last remarks, is it fair that we should sit down here and interpret that contract according to a discussion which took place between the respective leaders or members of one party or the other? I go a long way with the hon. member for Lisgar. I commend him in many instances for the effort he has made on behalf of the people of the North-west Territories. I think they have grievances, that they have grievances in regard to freight rates, and they may have a grievance in regard to this very question, which has been thrown into this discussion, that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be made to pay taxes upon these lands which were granted to them twenty-one years ago and upon which, I dare say, they may have raised money; but the question is: Is a contract which was made between these two parties, namely, the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway, to be interpreted by one of the contracting parties without the other being present at all, on what we may call, in legal phraseology, an ex-parte application? We are not, as the hon. member for Alberta says, asked to amend a statute, because that is not the case that the hon. member for Lisgar presents, or could present. If it were the amendment of a statute it might be different. What he asks us to do is to interpret a contract which was ratified by parliament twenty years ago. That puts it in an entirely different light and makes it an entirely different case which is presented to parliament in this Bill. I therefore feel myself absolutely constrained, speaking as a lawyer, to say that I would not be one to interpret the Act, either as between a corporation and the government, or as between two parties in the absence of one.

I am furthermore constrained to that conclusion by reason of the offer which is made by the government to pay the cost of interpreting that Act in the courts. It may be said that naturally a lawyer would do that because it brings grist to his mill, but although we lawyers have to live, that is not my reason for supporting the proposition on this occasion. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) says: That may be a lawyer's position, but that is not the position of a statesman whose aim is to right the grievances of the people. I think there is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, but is this an opportune time to do what he suggests? Can we with credit to ourselves as the parliament of Canada enact the legislation which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) proposes; can we interpret that contract to be in our favour in the absence of the other contracting parties ? A proper tribunal is given to us before which that contract shall be construed, and if we were to assume to interfere with it ourselves, it would be something that no British legislature has ever done before. As the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has said, it makes it awkward to discuss this question when so many erroneous ideas are imported into the consideration of a plain proposition, namely : Whether or not we shall interpret a contract which was made twenty years ago and ratified by the parliament of Canada. We hear of the loss of money which has to be made up by reason of this contract, and we are told it was a bad contract and ought never to have been entered into. What has that got to do with the question at issue ? I say, Sir, that viewing the Bill as it stands and apart from all the erroneous and irrelevant discussion regarding it, I am constrained to support the motion to give the Bill the six months' hoist. I do so because I do not believe that with credit to ourselves and with respect to the country to which we belong, we can take upon ourselves to interpret any contract which has been entered into, we being one of the contracting parties.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). I am not exactly satisfied with the position that this question has assumed to-night. I do not sympathize at all with the position taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson), who has moved this Bill. I do not believe that he represents true socialism when he tries to do that which is unjust, and it is quite evident to us English speaking people and French speaking people that we cannot be the judge and the jury and the witnesses in this case. There are two sides to it, but one thing is evident, and that is that something ought to be done, and ought to be done quickly to settle this matter. This everlasting drift that appears to surround a question of such moment to a large number of the people of Canada ought to be made disappear at the very first opportunity, and therefore, it is that I say that the resolution for the six months' hoist is not going to remove the grievances that the people are subject to. While I do not think it is the duty of parliament to put its construction upon that agreement, I do think it is the duty of the government to have a legal interpretation placed upon it, and that immediately. I do not believe that the poor settler who has been induced to take up lands in the North-west should have the onus of moving in this matter until his risks were guaranteed against. If I in my individual capacity were a party to that contract, and I felt my rights were being jeopardised by delay, I would take the first opportunity that presented itself to find where I stood and to get a judicial decision upon it. It is the duty of some authority in the state to get this question settled as soon as possible. I am constrained to vote against the Bill which, in principle, is vicious, dishonest and unjust. But while we may be compelled to vote for the amendment, which puts this case out of court for six months, I trust the government will assume the responsibility which attaches to them as a party to the contract of finding out where we stand, so that justice may be done to those people who are suffering in the far west.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish for the information of the House to explain a certain point which has been in dispute.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) can make a personal explanation, but he cannot raise any question for debate.

Mr. OLIVER. I merely wish to read a section which I think would clear a certain point, and I wish to have the consent of the House for that.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can do so with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. OLIVER. It is on the question as to whether land is assessable while under homestead entry, and before patent is issued. I read from section 5 of chapter 101, Revised Statutes Manitoba, 1891, Vol. 2 :

> Crown lands so occupied, whether under right of purchase or under homestead or pre-emeption entry, and unpatented land vested in or held by Her Majesty, which may be hereby hereafter or may have been heretofore sold or agreed to be sold, to any person or corporation, or which may be located as a free grant, homestead or pre-emption, shall be liable to taxation from the date of such homestead or pre-emeption entry, location, sale or grant.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, I am too well aware of the feeling of the people of the North-west in this matter, and of the concern and fear with which they view this matter of tax exemption, to look upon the question lightly. I am sorry that a Bill of such importance as this should be introduced in such a shape that it is impossible that it can receive the endorsation of the House. It seems to me that a member of parliament to vote for the Bill must first deny the cardinal principle of responsible government. We are asked to change an Act of parliament which was passed in 1881, and which was proposed by a government which retained the confidence of the people of Canada from that time until the year 1896. In 1881 the Liberal party was in opposition, and they condemned this clause. The then opposition, now the government, still holds that this clause is an outrageous one, and we have a right to look to the government as the trustees of the people to guard the people's rights. I may say that the people of the North-west are fearful that their rights are not being attended to. I would like to see such a course taken as would give confidence to the people of the west, and I would like to see the government say to this great corporation: You shall have all that is yours by virtue of this exemption; you shall have your pound of flesh, but not one drop of blood. I cannot understand why the socialists have been brought into this argument and referred to in connection with this Bill. I have too much faith in the socialistic tendencies of the present time to wish to see them slightingly referred to in any way, and I see nothing in the legislative progress which has been made by socialism to cause it to be connected with a Bill of this kind. Taking the most socialistic countries, taking England and New Zealand, you will find that all the measures adopted along socialistic lines have been measures that in no way denied the responsibility of the people's representatives, that did not expropriate without due recompense, that did nothing antagonistic to the well-settled ideas of British law. Some previous speakers have referred to this contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as if it were an ordinary Act of parliament that could be amended session after session; but it is not so. When it was passed it became a contract, and I can see no strength in the argument that before the matter has been referred to the courts at all, this parliament has any right to interfere in regard to the interpretation of that contract.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to give a silent vote on this question, particularly because I find my inclination in conflict with my common sense. My inclination, both natural and political, would lead me to support the Bill before the House; but my common sense prevents me accepting the premises laid down in the Bill. I read one of the clauses, which is to this effect:

> And whereas it appears from the debates which occurred when the said contract was before parliament, that the exemptions was intended to cover a period of not more than twenty years from the date of the said contract.

Now, I go very nearly the whole length with my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) on this question, and I do not find myself on the general question at all in agreement with the several members of the government who have spoken to-night, and the several other gentlemen who have laid particular stress upon the peculiar sanctity of contracts. It may be that having lived so long in the North-west and knowing so well the condition of the settlers in that country, the injustice that would be done them, should the possibility suggested by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) be realized, and the courts find that the period of exemption does not commence until the date of the issue of the patents, looms up too largely before my eyes. However, I think the Bill is unnecessary; I think the question should go before the courts. Should the courts decide that the exemption period does not commence until the date of the issue of the patents, I would be ready, should I then have a seat in this House, to vote to void that condition of the contract, because it would subject the settlers to too great an injustice, and because it would give the company profits never contemplated by parliament. Nevertheless, if the Bill before the House expressed the common-sense view that the exemption should begin at the date when the company came into possession of the lands, I would be prepared to support it.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). If you think the House would accept that proposition, I think I would be willing to so amend the Bill.

Mr. SCOTT. If the hon. gentleman can change his Bill to express that view, I will take great pleasure in supporting it. It seems to me entirely unreasonable to maintain that the period of exemption provided in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract commenced before the company could begin to enjoy the exemption; and they could certainly not begin to enjoy the exemption until they were in possession of the lands. I listened carefully to the able address made by the hon. member for Lisgar, and I have read very carefully the speech he made on this subject in this House one year ago. Those speeches would certainly lead any one to believe that the debate upon the contract which took place in this House in the year 1880-1 showed unquestionably that it was the intention of parliament that the exemption period should commence on the date of the signing of the contract on the 15th of February, 1881; and I must confess to you that I was considerably surprised, after I came down to attend this session and went to the Library and scanned the debates of that period, to find that the very opposite was the case; and I think it is very unfortunate that speeches made by responsible members of this House should mislead other members, as an admission made to-night by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) would show that he was misled. I think it is unfortunate that members of this House and the people of this country should be misled by speeches made by reputably responsible members of this House, and scattered broadcast throughout the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). You do not charge that I misquoted any hon. member from 'Hansard,' do you?

Mr. SCOTT. I make no charge at all, but I leave the House to judge whether the speech made by the hon. member for Lisgar last session and the speech he made tonight would not lead any one who listened to him to believe that the portion of the debate contributed by the Hon. Edward Blake, for instance, showed that he believed that the period of exemption commenced on the 15th of February.

Mr. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). The Globe quoted it last session to prove the very same thing.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I will quote just one sentence from the speech of the Hon. Edward Blake, as I find it in that debate, and peculiarly it is one sentence which the hon. member for Lisgar happened to leave out of the excerpt from Mr. Blake's speech which he quoted in the House last session. This is the sentence :

> Then, Sir, there is freedom from taxation for the lands for the long term of twenty years, and that term of twenty years is from the day they acquire the lands, and therefore it is longer than twenty years from now. It is perhaps on the average twenty-five years.

I think that proves conclusively that the opinion of the Hon. Edward Blake was not that the exemption period dated from the signing of the contract; and one would have thought that a statement like that having been made by the leader of the opposition as a serious objection to the proposition of the government, if that statement was not a reasonable one, and if the point against the bargain was not properly taken, some member of the government would have arisen in his place to set the leader of the opposition right. Here is a statement made by a member of the Conservative party, Mr. Ives. I do not think he was at the time a member of the government, but this will show his view of the contract. He said :

> But it is said they (the company) may not take the lands from the government, even when they have the right to them, until they find an opportunity of selling them, and in this way may prolong this period of exemption indefinitely. Surely the government can compel these gentlemen to take an assignment of these lands when they become entitled to them.

These two extracts, Mr. Speaker, and in fact, the whole debate as I have read it, lead me to the belief that it was the intention of parliament that the period of exemption should commence at the time the company had earned and come into possession of the lands. That being the case, and the Bill setting out that the period commenced on the 15th of February, 1881, at a time before the company had built a mile of the road under its bargain, before it had earned an acre of land, it becomes impossible for me, if I am to be governed by my common sense, to support the Bill.

Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Fort Qu'Appelle Railway Company.—Mr. Douglas.

Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the Arnprior and Pontiac Railway Company.—Mr. Lemieux.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

MINTO :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the dutiful Address which you have adopted in reply to the Speech with which I opened the session of parliament. I accept with gratitude your assurances that all measures submitted to you will receive your earnest consideration.

Government House,
Ottawa, 7th March, 1901.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, would the right hon. gentleman give us an idea as to the probable date when the government measures will be introduced ? I think it was announced about a week ago that several government measures were still to be introduced.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think all the measures which I mentioned the other day have been introduced. The only measure yet to be introduced is the Act concerning the mint.

SUPPLY—THE CONTRACT WITH THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice that on the motion that this House resolve itself into Committee of Supply on Tuesday next, I will move the following resolution in amendment :

Resolved, that in the opinion of this House, the government should take such steps that may be open to it under the law to obtain authoritative interpretation from the Supreme Court of Canada of the meaning of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in relation to the exemption of lands from taxation; and

That the patenting of lands earned by railroad companies should be proceeded with all practicable speed.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, there is a matter to which I beg to call the attention of the government, and particularly the attention of the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding). It is in reference to the bounties on iron and steel as contained in the statutes of 1896, 1897 and 1899. The Bounty Act of 1897 provides for a bounty on steel ingots, puddled iron bars, and pig iron manufactured in Canada, specifying the amounts per ton which the producers of steel may be entitled to. That Act was amended in 1899, and the statute sets out, with considerable detail, the extent of the bounty which may be earned by those producing iron and manufacturing steel in the Dominion of Canada. A few days ago the press of the country contained the prospectus of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, of Sydney, Cape Breton, over the signature of Mr. Moxham, the general manager of that vast industry, and among the attractions specified in that prospectus I find the following :

GOVERNMENT BOUNTY.

If the production from the company's works be as estimated, 300,000 tons of pig metal and 60.-000 tons of steel blooms in 1901, and thereafter 400,000 tons of iron and steel per annum, made from foreign (Newfoundland) ore, the bounties to be received from the Canadian government will be as follows :—

1901	$ 870,000
1902	2,075,000
1903	1,850,000
1904	1,450,000
1905	1,000,000
1906	625,000
1907	225,000
	$8,095,000

In the seven years the bounties to be paid by the government of Canada to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company would amount in the aggregate to $8,095,000. It may not be fair for me to surmise, that taking into consideration the vast resources at the disposal of this company, and the tremendous increase in the iron trade probable in the next few years, that that bounty is likely to be double the amount indicated here. Now, Mr. Speaker, if we were confined to paying bounties even to this one company, in my opinion, the matter would be sufficiently serious, but I find that the Cramp Ontario Steel Company have also issued a prospectus, in which they give us an idea of their expectations with respect to this great industry.

They also are in a position to earn and will earn a very large bounty. Then there are other large industries in the Dominion, all of which come under this Act. What I wish to draw the attention of the government to is this, that the Dominion of Canada stands to pay out a very large amount of money in the way of bounties, and I would like to know whether it is too late for the government to take such steps as may, while not invading any vested rights, at the same time prevent further vested interests growing up under the Act. There is no doubt that the principle of granting bounties to industries under certain conditions is a proper one, and one which has been adopted by governments in all civilized countries in the world ; but at the same time it strikes me that in these cases there may be an invasion of that principle. For instance, we find by the prospectus of the Dominion Iron and Steel Co. that they have a capital of some $23,000,000, and they have on their directorate some of the leading financial people of Canada, the United States and Great Britain—men of whom in no sense can it be said that they are financially in dire need of any assistance in respect to any industry or concern to which they may attach themselves. At this juncture—and it is not too early—I think the government should take into their serious consideration this question of the bounty on iron and steel. It may be that the volume of business generated, and the amount of money expended in and about these industries may be commensurate with the amount of bounty the people of this Dominion are obliged to pay to these companies. It is not my intention, in directing the attention of the government to this matter, to advocate the invasion of any vested right that may have been established by this Act. Doubtless the Act was passed with a view to helping the struggling industries of this country ; but I do not think anybody would characterize the Dominion Iron and Steel Co. or the Ontario Cramp Steel Co. as struggling industries that would require such a large amount of the money of the taxpayers of Canada to be given to them in order to earn their dividends.

I would like very much if the government would give us some assurance that the proper interests of the people will be safeguarded in this respect. I think it is a matter of very great importance, and one that interests every taxpayer in the Dominion. The amount of money which will be paid in bounties must be very large ; in the seven years it might amount to anywhere from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000. I am not an alarmist, but taking the statements of these companies themselves, and the tremendous output which is likely to attend the successful operation of their works, there is every indication that the amount of the bounty will at any rate exceed $15,000,000 within the seven years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I should not care to give a definite answer to the statement which forms the main point of my hon. friend's question, that is to say, whether or not parliament might properly place any restrictions upon the amount which would become payable under these bounty Acts. The matter has already received some consideration, and I am not disposed to give any answer to-day which would tie the hands of the government as to their future course. Of course, there is one thing we must clearly understand, that though how far there may be vested rights is a debatable question, yet in so far as we may agree that there are any vested rights arising under these Acts, those vested rights must be respected. There have been on the statute-books of Canada for many years Acts respecting bounties on iron and steel, and in those Acts there has never been any limitation as to the quantity on which a bounty would be paid. In fact, I think the great difficulty hitherto has been that the Acts were not effective in producing a large development of the iron and steel industry. I am afraid that the inference might almost be drawn from my hon. friend's remarks, although he might object to it, that if this industry had jogged along in the old way and only made small demands on the treasury, it would be all right ; but inasmuch as is has got out of the old rut and has developed on a large scale, it is all wrong. I should not like to accept that conclusion. I think, perhaps, there is a tendency on the part of the promoter of a company, when issuing his prospectus, to put his best foot forward ; and if he has any government advantages, he is not likely to underestimate them. Therefore, I should not be very much alarmed at the statements of a very rose-coloured character made in the prospectus of any company organized under this bounty system. Still, it is well to point out that the only matter of difference between us on the two sides of the House as respects this Bounty Act was that while we were willing to pay $2 a ton to this Cape Breton corporation on the iron it might produce, my hon. friend who was at that time the leader of the opposition, was quite willing to pay $3 a ton, because he thought we should treat the iron ore of the colony of Newfoundland just the same as we treat the iron ore of the Dominion itself. On that view there would be paid on all the iron produced in Cape Breton from Newfoundland ore the full bounty, whereas in reality we shall properly treat it as a foreign ore entitled to receive only the minimum bounty. I do not, however, feel very much alarmed over the matter, even if we should be called upon to pay a very large sum under this system. We may perhaps agree that if the industry was worth encouraging at all, it was worth being made successful, and on a large scale. One thing is certain, iron and steel cannot be produced in such enormous quantities, either in Cape Breton or in other parts of the Dominion, without there being an enormous development of the business of the country, from which the Dominion in one form or other will receive a very large return. There is that comfort to us in the first place. There is the further comfort that even if this system should result in the payment of large sums of money, that payment will speedily come to an end, because at the very time we provided the scale of bounties, we stated that it was regarded by us as of vital importance that the bounties should be gradually reduced by the terms of the Act itself; so that after a term of five years, beginning on the 1st of July next, the bounties will cease to exist. If, therefore, for a short time we should be called upon to pay even a large sum for the development of these industries, we would have the comfort of knowing in the meantime that as a result of that experiment there must grow up a vast amount of business in the Dominion which would not probably have grown up except for that development; and that if the bounty should be large, it can only continue for five years, when it will be wiped off the statute-book. And if at the end of that period we should find ourselves with a tremendous development of the iron and steel industry—and my hon. friend knows that it will be not only in Cape Breton, but also in the province of Ontario, where great works are projected—and if that result should be achieved at considerable cost to the public treasury, I am not sure that we would regret it; for we would have established throughout the Dominion great industries which would undoubtedly have a tremendous effect in developing the prosperity of the whole country.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) When the hon. member for Westminster rose to draw attention to the bounty system, I was in hopes, Mr. Speaker, that instead of finding fault, he was going to urge the necessity for an extension of that system, especially in the province of British Columbia. The hon. gentleman is an old resident of that province, and knows its immense resources. He knows that the people of British Columbia look forward to a not far distant day when we shall have iron works started there ourselves, and he must know that it is impossible to get such works started without a bounty. I do not understand why he should have so much anxiety concerning the large amount Canada may have to pay. As the hon. Finance Minister has pointed out, whenever an amount is paid for bounty, there is considerably more added to the wealth of Canada, as on every ton of iron manufactured a large sum of money is paid out in wages and material. I have in my hand a newspaper clipping, giving a report of the convention of the Boards of Trade of British Columbia held at Greenwood. One of the resolutions passed is the following:

> Whereas, there is at present no lead refining works in the Dominion of Canada, and the initial cost of establishing such a plant is very great, it is the opinion of this association that the Dominion government should encourage the establishment of such a plant by a grant for a term of years of a bounty of $5 per ton upon all lead of Canadian origin smelted and refined in Canada.

That is one of the resolutions passed by the associated boards of trade at its annual convention, and it shows the feelings of the business men of that province. With that resolution I am heartily in accord, and I am sorry to see an hon. gentleman get up and endeavour to lead this House to believe that the people he represents are not in favour of the bounty system, but are in favour of its being carefully watched at least, if not entirely done away with. Let me say that even if millions be expended in bounties, we would get an ample return for our expenditure from the work done in the smelters. In British Columbia, the business interests are not only asking for a bounty on lead refining, but are looking forward to government assistance to the ship building industry in Vancouver and Victoria. In fact, we hope soon to see the day when the Pacific coast will be the great manufacturing section of the Dominion.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Before the motion to go into Supply is adopted, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that this government, which obtained office on free trade principles, has adopted the most positive and direct form of protection that is known, namely, the system of giving bounties. I shall not say anything further than point out the inconsistency of its course in giving a bounty of $3 per ton on the pig iron manufactured from Canadian ore. I have read within two or three days the prospectus of the Dominion Steel and Iron Company, whose head quarters are at Sydney, N.S.

In this prospectus, which is issued to invite subscriptions to the stock of the company, they state that they can produce pig iron at a cost of $5.50 per ton. And this free trade government, this government which is going to bring us gradually down to free trade, this government which has free trade as its goal, keeps on the statute-books a law giving a bounty of $3 per ton on this article that can be produced for $5.50 per ton. I assume that that will bring down the cost to $2.50, and as the market quotations today are from $12 to $15 per ton, the company will make a very handsome profit, and this will be due to the fact that this government, which went before the country as free traders, has gone back on its policy and adopted the most stringent form of protection known.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to ask the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) whether we are to understand that he opposes the policy of granting a bounty for the manufacture of iron in Canada ?

Mr. WALLACE. I have always professed to be one of the most ardent protectionists in this country, and have always advocated a bounty for the protection of pig iron and steel, so that my position is different from that of hon. gentlemen opposite in that regard.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee.

Ottawa Military Buildings, Ont.—New store $25,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). This work is under contract. It is the new store on Cartier square, just behind the drill shed. The cost is $50,745.

Public Works—Chargeable to Capital—Harbours and Rivers, Quebec—River St. Lawrence ship channel $419,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This sum of money is asked to continue the work which has been going on for several years—for many years I might say—in the St. Lawrence. The depth of the water in the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal was supposed to be 27½ feet. But, in 1895, and also in 1897, the water fell. In 1895, during three days of the month of November, the water fell so low that the depth was only 25 feet 10 inches. It was then found necessary to adopt a new basis. When I took office, I may say, the department was not equipped. In 1888 the late government had taken from the harbour commissioners both the work on the channel and their equipment—their plant. Before I took office, my predecessor had built one new dredge, the Laval. Since then, we have built the Laurier, the Lady Aberdeen, and the Lady Minto, and we have another dredge in course of construction, which will be completed by the first of June. Of these four dredges, two are steel dredges. Perhaps I may be permitted to say, to the honour of our Canadian workingmen, that these four dredges last built, are, as I claim, the best dredges of their kind in America. That may be saying a good deal, but I am quite sure that I am correct in making that statement. We are now dredging the channel to a width of 450 feet, and a depth practically of 30 feet. During the last season, which is practically the first during which the work was carried on, we dredged to the depth of 30 feet, a distance of a little more than ten miles. The intention of the department is to dredge to the width and depth I have named the whole channel, so that about fifty miles remains to be dredged. Within the last fortnight, I have signed a contract with the Polson Iron Works for the construction of a suction dredge, which will have a capacity of between 30,000 and 40,000 yards a day. It seems almost incredible that a dredge could do such a quantity of work. I have seen one of these dredges myself ; in fact, the decision to build this dredge is the result of a trip I made with the deputy minister to New York to inspect machines of this kind. We expect to be able to complete the work of deepening and widening the channel within the next season. It may be that we shall be deceived by a few months ; but, if there is no accident, I fully anticipate that the whole work of deepening and widening the St. Lawrence in the way I have just pointed out, will be completed in the next season.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. What is the length ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About sixty miles—that is fifty miles to Cap a la Roche, and ten miles already done.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On that point, could the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) give the quantities on the work already done, and on the work yet to be done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think I have that information here. I would not bind myself to exact figures, but I am told by the chief engineer that the quantity in Lake St. Peter alone is 90,000,000 cubic yards.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the capacity of the dredges now working ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The capacity of the best dredges that are now working—and working night and day—would vary between 7,000 and 8,000 cubic yards a day. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) knows very well that the capacity of a dredge depends a good deal upon the material in which it works. If you strike a boulder or a difficult spot the dredge, powerful as it may be, cannot do the same amount of work as in soft material. In Lake St. Peter the work is in soft material, and we expect to do that work with the new suction dredge, which is to be completed by the middle of August. I may say in passing that four of the dredges that I have at work now are equipped with electric light so that they are capable of working during the night as well as by day. We intend to equip with electric light the new dredges that are now being built.

Several questions have been raised as to the work now going on. Of course, the main object of deepening and widening the St. Lawrence is to enable the largest ships to come up to Montreal. The Montreal business men have no ambition to monopoize the trade of this country, but Montreal is so located that unless the trade from the west is brought down there, it is certain, I am very much afraid, to go to American ports. Two and two make four, and cannot make five. Now, between the port of Buffalo and the Port of New York the distance by rail is 445 miles. The New York Central have made their road between these two points just as level as the floor of this Chamber. So fine is that road that they are able to attach between 75 and 100 cars to a single locomotive, and draw that immense load to their terminus in the city of New York.

Mr. COCHRANE. What has that got to do with our canals ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will try to show you what it has got to do. Now, the grain comes, as we all know, from the American and Canadian west to Canadian ports. Trade has no law, it goes where it pays best. From Port Colborne to Montreal by water is 375 miles. When the works at Port Colborne are completed we will have a harbour there, which we have not to-day. It is almost incredible that we have no harbour there yet, and how can we expect to have trade ? There is Buffalo on one side, with a magnificent harbour, with a breakwater, with about sixty elevators, a port fully equipped, giving a depth of 22 feet ; while on our side we have no harbour accommodation whatever. How can trade flow through our Welland canal to Montreal when big ships cannot load and unload, when big ships cannot enter at Port Colborne to-day ? It is out of the question for shipping to anchor there, the harbour is solid rock. The works at Port Colborne will be completed for the accommodation of trade within a short time, my department has awarded a contract for the erection of a breakwater, and the Minister of Railways and Canals is going on with the works for the canal itself ; and when we have proper accommodation there, the big carriers of grain that now go to Buffalo, and must go there because they cannot go anywhere else, will then be able to come to our Canadian ports to load and unload, and transhipment will take place at Port Colborne.

Whether we have 14 feet of water—I have every reason to believe that we have 14 feet—but whether we have that or only 13 feet, or 13½ feet, we are certainly in a better position than our American friends with their Erie canal. Then, our Canadian system of canals, with its terminal at Montreal, will be a competitor with the American railways. I do not take the Erie canal into account at all. To-day it is little more than a small ditch, if I may say so without offence it is out of date, and cannot in any respect compete with the great system of American railways, nor with the great system of Canadian canals. On the one hand we have Port Colborne and the Welland canal, 375 miles from Montreal.

On the other hand we have the Parry Sound Railway. The government has, so far, not done much to help the enterprising gentleman who has completed, at his own expense and at his own risk, the Parry Sound Railway. I have asked for tenders for the erection of a breakwater which will enable Mr. Booth, or anybody else, to erect elevators if they wish. When that elevator is completed and when Mr. Booth has completed his work, Parry Sound will be a first-class port. During the past season the Parry Sound Railway has been the principal carrier of grain to Montreal, by the aid of the St. Lawrence route. Unfortunately, that railway system has not yet reached the city of Montreal independently. To-day Mr. Booth is obliged to tranship his grain at Coteau Landing and take it in barges to the port of Montreal. In spite of that difficulty, Mr. Booth has been able to carry grain at a profit to the city of Montreal, though not a large profit. Why is he able to do this ? Because he is able to get the western trade. Not many people believed, two or three years ago, that the Parry Sound Railway would be a competitor with the American railways in getting a return trade, but it has done so. You would be surprised to learn, Mr. Chairman, the amount of return trade that Mr. Booth has been able to capture between New York and Chicago. And so the Parry Sound system is another feeder to the port of Montreal and to the St. Lawrence route.

A good deal has been said lately of the project of improving the French river. I have read speeches—I have no right, I suppose, to refer to them here—referring to that scheme. I wish the House would give its close attention to that project. The question whether the Canadian Pacific Railway will carry the trade going to North Bay will not prevent anybody from giving that scheme his favourable consideration. From the mouth of the French river on the Georgian Bay to North Bay is 50 miles. I make bold to say that with the expenditure of about $2,000,000—I cannot bind myself to any figure, of course, but I have reason to believe that with an expenditure of $2,000,000, that waterway between North Bay by the French river to Georgian Bay, can be made 20 feet deep.

Mr. SPROULE. That is $2,000,000 on fifty miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, I have known works shorter than that which have cost more money. The Welland canal has cost us $25,000,000, I think. But I am not speaking of a canal, I am only speaking of improving the river.

Mr. SPROULE. How much nearer to Montreal are you when you are at North Bay than at Parry Sound ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was going to say that when we have deepened that waterway to North Bay, it will be 330 miles to the port of Montreal.

Mr. CLARKE. By railway ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By railway.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before leaving that subject, give us the size of the locks.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not yet reached that subject, some of my officers are making a survey to-day, and I am speaking of the project on broad lines. I have no plans made, I have not been authorized by my colleagues to go on with the work. I am addressing myself to the House and to the country, and speaking of a project that rises, I am sure, above party politics. The question is whether the St. Lawrence route will handle our Northwest trade and the American trade that we are able to get ; in other words, speaking from the standpoint of the St. Lawrence route, it is a question whether we are 'to be or not to be.' We cannot lose much more time.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If the hon. minister will allow me to interrupt him——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He has just recently remarked that he has not the authority of his colleagues to make these statements here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I did not say that.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Do I understand that the hon. minister has the authority of his colleagues to make these statements ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say anything of the kind. What I did say was this : My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) was asking me what was the length of the locks. I told him that I had not reached that point, that I had not been authorized by my colleagues to go on with that work at all. I am now speaking of the St. Lawrence route on broad lines.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are we to take the hon. minister as merely airing some of his own private opinions, or is he following the principle of responsibility by speaking with the authority of the government ? Are we to hold the government responsible for the utterances of the hon. gentleman here to-day ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think my colleagues will be very glad to say that they are responsible for what I say, when I say that the distance is 330 miles between North Bay and Montreal. I am just speaking of the possibilities of the St. Lawrence route.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the hon. minister if he will assume the responsibility of telling us what the distance by rail is from Parry Harbour to Coteau Landing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The length of the Booth system, or of the Parry Sound Railway, between Parry Sound and Montreal, is 384 miles.

Mr. CLARKE. And the distance from Port Colborne to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From Port Colborne to Montreal by water the distance is 375 miles. I may be mistaken by half a mile, but in the main figures I am right.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the hon. minister tell us the distance from Midland to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot really say. Of Midland I can only remark that a large part of the trade which flows through there is not carried to Montreal, but is carried to Portland. If I had any way of making the Grand Trunk Railway take their trade to Montreal, I would certainly do it.

Mr. SPROULE. They handled 11,000,000 bushels last season.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know it, but, unfortunately, nearly all of that trade went to Portland.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister must not give Midland a black eye. The Grand Trunk Railway Midland system carried within a million bushels as much as the Booth system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not to Montreal. I do not call it a crime. Money knows no law. The Grand Trunk Railway have located at Portland, and the harbour facilities at Montreal are so inadequate that I could not blame them too much for having done so. I deeply regret that they have located themselves in Portland, but the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway have a right to expect, and to get, dividends. We have neglected our waterways. We must admit that. There is no reflection on anybody, but it is a fact that we have neglected our waterways. That cannot be disputed. Now, if we apply our minds and our attention to the St. Lawrence route, within a few years, we will have redeemed the ground that we have lost. I verily believe that the French river project, and I am speaking only on broad lines, would bring to the St. Lawrence route 50,000,000 bushels of grain a year. It cannot be anything else. The Canadian Pacific Railway between Montreal and North Bay can make their road just as good as the New York Central have made their road. Then you would have the Welland canal, 375 miles to the port of Montreal, you would have the Parry Sound Railway 384 miles to the port of Montreal, and you would have the French river in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway 330 miles to Montreal. These are three great feeders that are at our disposal, and I know that my hon. friends from Toronto proposed to have an air line between Collingwood and that city. We have an adage in French that says tout chemin mène à Rome—all roads lead to Rome. I would apply that adage to the St. Lawrence route. Every available road should lead to the St. Lawrence route. There is no reason why we should detract from any one of them. I am not advocating any ridiculous expenditure of money, but I quite share the views a gentleman was expressing this morning before the right hon. Prime Minister and some of us. He was calling our attention to the vast expenditure of money that we had made in building our railways and our canals. He was reminding us that we had expended $169,000,000 to build our railways, and that we had expended $80,000,000 in building our canals. Are we going to fold our arms, to stand idle and let the Canadian trade and such portion of the American trade as we can capture go by us, when, with an additional expenditure, a small expenditure compared with the expenditure we have made already, we can capture a vast amount of trade? What does it mean, Sir? It means cheaper rates for our farmers, for the manufacturers of this country, for everybody; it means the building of towns and cities. I do not despair of seeing half a million more population in the city of Montreal than it has today. It is necessary to spend some money on widening and deepening the St. Lawrence route to enable us to handle the large amount of trade that must inevitably come to us from the west. I expect with an expenditure of $2,000,000—I hope a little less—to complete the widening and deepening of the St. Lawrence between the sea and Montreal. Then, my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) will have to light that magnificent highway with electric buoys or gas buoys. The amount of money spent so far on the St. Lawrence is $5,500,000. This is a small amount of money compared with the large amount that has been expended elsewhere.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). How much additional do you require?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just stated that we expect an expenditure of $2,000,000 additional will complete the work of the St. Lawrence. Then, Sir, there is still the question of the port of Montreal. I have no desire to deal with it now, because, when my estimates on that point are before the committee, I will be asked questions, no doubt, by hon. gentlemen in the House. If any other question should be asked me, I shall be glad indeed to answer to the best of my ability.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. minister the figures as to the tonnage of freight that has been moved westward by the Booth railway?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not.

Mr. CLARKE. Have you any idea as to the quantity?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only trade point I investigated was as to the grain trade.

Mr. CLARKE. That freight is coming east.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. I will be very glad indeed to bring down that information.

Mr. CLARKE. When the minister was speaking, I understood him to refer to the gratifying fact that the Booth road was able to obtain a quantity of the traffic moving westward toward Chicago. If the hon. minister could tell us the tonnage of that traffic it would be very interesting information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I had the pleasure of a conversation with Mr. Booth a few days ago, and he told me that he had handled a very large amount of return freight, and that if he had been able to get accommodation he would have been in a position to make contracts for double the quantity.

Mr. CLARKE. Accommodation where?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He did not tell me how much it was, but I will be glad to ask him.

Mr. CLARKE. Where was the accommodation lacking?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course he lacks accommodation in Montreal, and he wants more accommodation at Parry Sound. Mr. Booth has built a large elevator at the latter place, and I suppose he has spent nearly a million dollars of his money there.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost per yard of this excavation at Montreal ? When you dredge it out, do the prisms remain perfect or does it require a dredge all the time to keep it open.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have only a couple of places, and these not important, at which we are obliged to dredge occasionally. Lake St. Peter was dredged fifteen years ago, and it will be a pleasure for the House to know that the middle of the channel is deeper to-day than it was then. The St. Lawrence does not fill in. We had a little accident a couple of years ago at one point, where there had been some little filling in of sand, but not of much importance. As to the cost of dredging it varies, but I think I may say that the suction dredge we have contracted for will be able to dredge at about half a cent a yard.

Mr. CLARKE. Half a cent a yard ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, yes. The cost of dredging with our last improved dredges varies from 3 cents, 5 cents, 6 cents, to 7 cents. Of course some of the dredges cost more, for when you strike a boulder it may take a day to get it out, but with our improved dredges the cost has been reduced very greatly indeed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This information confirms the statements I made last year in the House as to the cost of dredging. I drew the attention of the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) to the cost of dredging at Liverpool and New York, and to-day the Minister of Public Works tells us that he can do dredging in the St. Lawrence at a less rate than 1 cent per cubic yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In soft material.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, yes, I understand that. I congratuate the minister on getting the improved style of suction dredge which has been adopted in European countries and in the United States, and it is the dredge above all others that we ought to have had long ago in the St. Lawrence. You have no harbour accommodation at Montreal suitable for the western trade, even if you do open up the St. Lawrence route. I understand from Mr. Booth and others interested in the trade, that the amount of grain deposited in Montreal is limited to the accommodation. I had hoped from the statement of the minister, made some three or four years ago, when his plan for better accommodation at Montreal was adopted, that the work would be carried out by this time, and I am sorry to say that because of force of circumstances, or deficiency in the treasury, or through being overpowered by his colleagues in the government, he has been unable to carry out what he promised. The minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte), has given us his obiter dicta without the authority of the rest of his colleagues, as to his intentions with regard to deepening the French river from the Georgian Bay to Lake Nipissing, and I congratulate him on entertaining this idea. Not only would it accommodate the trade of the west, but it will open up facilities for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Of course we must not say anything about that because if it favours a railway some people say it is an incubus on the country, but we all know that anything by which the trade of that railway will be developed at the port of Montreal will be for the benefit of the community at large. There is another point to which I wish to refer briefly. I believe that the building of the Georgian Bay canal will be in the interest of Montreal, and in the interest of all Canada, and that canal must be built in the future. The minister speaks about a twenty foot navigation, which is the navigation of Lake Superior and the upper lakes, and there is no necessity for having more than that on the mitre sills of the locks. But, let there be plenty of breadth and plenty of length in the locks, and then steamers of almost any burden can proceed to Montreal, because with twenty feet in depth you can build steamers broad enough and long enough to carry seven or eight thousand tons. These steamers could carry coal from the maritime provinces to the upper lakes and return with cargoes of grain. I predict that some day the Georgian Bay canal will be built. I agree with the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that if not a single boat passed down the St. Lawrence canals, and if we got no direct benefit from them, yet the people of this country would receive a return for the seventy-five million dollars expended on the canals by the very fact of their being there and the influence they have in reducing freight rates generally. I trust the minister will be able to make a harbour at Port Colborne. His present proposition does not contemplate a harbour, but rather the construction of a couple of piers for the purpose of constructing elevators. If you try to make that a harbour I am afraid you will have to make an expenditure largely in excess of the amount that has been stated, for I believe it will cost three or four million dollars. And what benefit is it to the country ? It is to enable vessels of twenty-two feet draft to tranship at Port Colborne for the purpose of their freight being taken down the River St. Lawrence.

If they went fifteen miles further they could go to the port of Buffalo, tranship there, and come down the St. Lawrence as well as from Port Colborne. You will never make a port at Port Colborne that will at all bear comparison with the port of Buffalo. It may be said that the transhipment should be made in our own country, or that the navigation laws interfere with transhipment at Buffalo. I do not think that is the case. An American vessel coming down from Chicago can tranship at Buffalo and get its freight there. A vessel from our own port of Fort William can also go to Buffalo, empty its cargoes on the elevators there, and reload just as well as it can at Port Colborne. It is true, it has to go fifteen miles further ; but in order to make a port at Port Colborne, which could be entered in all weathers, an expenditure of at least $4,000,000 would be required. However, it seems that this is to be done anyway ; we are going to have a port there, and have navigation from Port Colborne down to Montreal.

I hope the improvements which the hon. gentleman is making in Lake St. Peter will serve as a counterpoise to the heavy insurance rates on the St. Lawrence route, which his hon. colleague, the minister without portfolio (Hon. Mr. Dobell) says are almost prohibitory. I was astounded at the figures that hon. gentleman mentioned the other day as having been paid on a cargo going from Montreal to the old country. He said they often have to pay an insurance of 15 guineas on £100.

Hon. Mr. DOBELL. I did not state that that was on a cargo going from Montreal. I stated that it was on vessels leaving a point on the St. Lawrence further down—a place called Bic. I stated that on four ships going down the river 14 and 15 guineas per cent insurance had been asked, and by taking no risk we got it done for 10 shillings. That was in November.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I inquired from other gentlemen who had been in the habit of using shipping, and they confirmed literally the statement of the hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell). They stated that on cargoes going from Quebec they had paid 15 guineas on £100. But if you pay 15 guineas from Bic, what would you have to pay from Montreal ? It would probably be £2 or £3 more, which makes the statement so much worse. If these are the facts with reference to insurance, all the deepening of the St. Lawrence and all the lighting you can put upon it from one end to the other will never divert the western trade from the channels through which it at present flows, and bring it down the St. Lawrence river. I was also astonished at the statement of a gentleman who represents Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), that he had it from one of the best marine insurance companies in Canada that for every pound they had received in the shape of insurance on vessels going from Montreal to Great Britain they had lost £3. That is an alarming statement. All these things have to be taken into consideration. The men who insure vessels after all know the risks of that navigation. They know what they can possibly make from insurance ; and if you have to pay £18 on £100 going from Montreal to the old country, that means a loss of one-sixth of the vessels and one-sixth of the freight. It cannot possibly be so. There must be some remedy for such a state of affairs ; and the only possible remedy, I think, is that suggested by the hon. member for Quebec West, that our own people must be interested in the navigation of the St. Lawrence, must own the shipping, and must see that the insurance rates are moderate. I am afraid the shipowners of Montreal are, after all, a little behind the age. The transportation business, to be carried on successfully, requires modern means and modern ideas. To carry freight successfully from Montreal to the old country requires, as was stated in this House some years ago, the largest kind of freighters without masts, with as small a crew as they can possibly do with, quadruple expansion engines, and all modern appliances. But these things are not yet found on the St. Lawrence route. Our shippers there are behind the age. You will have to get a new class of men in the business ; this may as well be known from one end of the country to the other.

Now, I would suggest to the hon. minister, first, the improvement of the port of Montreal itself. The lighting of the St. Lawrence is in the hands of his colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies). I forgot to ask the minister whether he had made any arrangements with the harbour commissioners of Montreal that on account of the completion of this particular work there should be any reduction of the dues, or that any portion of them be paid to the government.

This is about all I have to say on this subject. I am a firm believer in water transportation. Would all the traffic now carried on from Lake Superior down to Cleveland, Buffalo, and other lower lake ports, be done as cheaply or successfully by railroad ? Not at all. There is a marine on those lakes today doing a greater business than is done between Great Britain and America and the Orient—greater than the business which passes through the Suez canal, and I believe that our St. Lawrence route and the port of Montreal, if they are properly looked after, will in the future have a development such as we cannot contemplate at the present day. The young men of the country at any rate are willing to take the risks of the future ; and I urge upon the hon. Minister of Public Works to do all he possibly can for the purpose of developing the port of Montreal, and seeing that the St. Lawrence route is made as efficient as possible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is very gratifying to find that on questions affecting our national security, men of both political parties generally agree. This question of the St. Lawrence route is above party politics, and I will always be only too glad to receive suggestions from my hon. friends opposite, as well as my friends on this side. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is quite right in urging me to have the port of Montreal properly equipped. I admit that it is not equipped as it should have been long ago. But this country is large, the requirements of Canada have exacted from us the expenditure of vast sums of money, and we have not been able to do everything at once. Now, however, the hour has come when this question must be solved. The harbour commissioners are carrying out very great improvements in the port of Montreal. Large docks and basins are being erected. One of the docks is completed, another will be finished in a few months, and the third in a year or so. These are high level wharfs, upon which permanent structures can be erected.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We want something more.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that these works are only the beginning. The government is building a wharf in the eastern portion of the city--that unfortunate eastern portion, against which so much has been said, but which should have been equipped long ago. I know that we have not the requisite facilities. Any one who has travelled over the world with his two eyes open knows that we are nowhere in the port of Montreal, but there are so many people who have not travelled as much as they should, and I am very much afraid that some of our Montreal friends belong to that class. I am happy to say, however, that there is a great improvement in this respect in that city. The young generation is asserting itself, and my hon. friends will agree with me that the ships now coming to that port have improved in size, capacity and in carrying power, but we must have something more.

The insurance question has been dealt with by my hon. friend in a way upon which I could not improve. The Lloyds, I am sorry to say, have taken us by the throat. When they say that they have incurred terrible losses, they always forget to give us the number of years during which these losses have occurred. Ten or fifteen years ago the St. Lawrence route was much more dangerous than it is to-day, and this remark may be applied to the statement made to the House a day or two ago by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike). I asked him how many years the losses he gave covered, and he answered me that they covered a period of eleven years. I make bold to say that during the last three or four years there were fewer accidents in the St. Lawrence than ever before. In point of fact, the St. Lawrence is in a better condition than it has ever been. I have had built testing scows and implements, and twice a year the whole length of the St. Lawrence is swept and tested, so that the shipping community may be completely assured that there are no obstacles in the channel. Nearly the whole channel has been scraped, and the curves have been straightened and obstacles removed, and during the last four years we have done most useful and profitable work.

I must take exception to what my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has said about the work at Port Colborne. I hope that he is mistaken in his view. I have given a good deal of attention to that port. I have been there myself several times to try and understand the position better. I have asked for tenders for a breakwater from the Point on a length of 5,700 feet, and have received a tender from Hogan & McDonald, for the sum of $395,000. When that breakwater is built, any vessel drawing 20 feet of water will be able to take shelter behind it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are they building the breakwater and deepening the harbour besides ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, they deepen a part of the harbour so that they may use the dredged material to fill the cribwork. The area to be dredged first will be small, but I may say without hesitation, that with a pretty small sum it would be possible to have sufficient area to give shelter to ships. When that breakwater is built, and when the works going on under the direction of the Minister of Railways and Canals are completed, the largest carriers on the lakes will be able to load and unload in that port. Would it be sufficient, from a national standpoint, to rely on the port of Buffalo ? Is it not clearly better that the ships carrying the trade of the St. Lawrence route should go to a Canadian port and unload there ? My hon. friend is afraid that we will be obliged to incur a large expenditure. But if, with a moderate sum, we can make ourselves independent, that will be a great deal better for us than relying on the port of Buffalo. In all these commercial and national questions, our motto should be 'Canada first.' We must be independent of anybody, we must make ourselves at home in Montreal, on the lakes and in our winter ports. We should give the best possible attention to these matters, and make Canada an independent nation from a commercial standpoint. You do not know what may happen to-morrow. You do not know what Congress may decide to-morrow. Why, a few weeks ago, the Board of Trade of New York wanted to boycott Montreal and even Portland, and I suspect that the last move of the Grand Trunk Railway in settling itself in Portland was, to a large extent, dictated by American influence. Well, Sir, I say it is our duty, the duty of both sides of the House, to make this country at home in these large national questions.

Mr. CALVIN. I had not intended to say anything at all in this matter, but as the hon. minister has invited an expression of opinion by members on both sides, I shall say a few words. While I do not wish to find fault with the spending of money in deepening Port Colborne harbour—for I think it is necessary that the harbour should be in such a shape as to be fit to receive large vessels with a deep draught—yet, I do think that what money is spent on Port Colborne harbour should be spent with a view to having, later on, a Welland canal large enough to receive the largest class of vessels. The navigation of the great lakes is a different style of navigation from that of the River St. Lawrence. The River St. Lawrence from Kingston, or, if you prefer it, from Prescott, down, is practically a canal, that is, it is a canal with stretches of river which are the same as canals in not calling for such a staunch style of vessels as are necessary on the lakes. Practically the great lakes are small seas, and the style of craft necessary there is one that would be practically safe upon the ocean itself. From Duluth, or from Chicago, to the beginning of the St. Lawrence proper, that is, to the foot of Lake Ontario, is a chain of lake navigation. That is broken at the Welland canal now. The hon. minister should not lay out his work with the intention of having what we may call the small Welland canal—that is, a canal of a size which will accommodate the present modern size of boat. I desire to draw the hon. minister's attention to the fact that from Port Colborne to Kingston and from Port Dalhousie to Kingston, the navigation calls for the same style of vessel, so far as seaworthiness and style of navigation are concerned, so far as the class of officer and seamen are concerned, as is required on the upper lakes. Therefore, it is not wise for the hon. minister to proceed as though the Welland canal were to be made part of a chain of river navigation, because after the Welland canal is passed and Lake Ontario is entered, there is a stretch of lake navigation before the river navigation begins. As I say, the navigation of the river does not call for so staunch a style of vessel or so expensive a crew. Take, for instance, the present style of craft now navigating the St. Lawrence—with a capacity of 25,000 or 30,000 bushels and costing $8,000 or $9,000 when new, pin flats, as they are called, which carry most cheaply. Of course, if you can carry your grain in a craft that does not cost more than thirty or forty cents a bushel to build, you have an advantage over a style of vessel that costs twice as much, such vessels as are necessary for the navigation of the lakes. The point I seek to make is that there are two great chains of navigation, the lake chain to the foot of Lake Ontario, and then the river chain from the foot of Lake Ontario to Montreal. The object of the government should be to make each chain complete. As the hon. minister has asked for suggestions, I would suggest also that the tolls might be taken off the Welland canal.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the tolls ?

Mr. CALVIN. They amounted last year to something over $100,000, which is a small amount of money compared with the interest on the expenditure represented in the canal. These tolls are a direct hindrance to trade. Take the tolls on coal, for example. The toll-rate on coal on the Welland canal is twenty cents a ton. Why, coal has been carried from Buffalo to Chicago or Buffalo to Duluth, for 25 cents a ton ; so you can see what a barrier this toll of 10 cents a ton must be, and how it will restrict the carrying of merchandise through our canal system. The result has been that the carriage of coal through the Welland canal has been cut down to about half to what it was two or three years ago. So far as canals are concerned, we meet the Americans at two points, once at the Soo, where both our canal and the American canal are free, and again at Port Colborne, where we have a canal with tolls, while the Americans have a canal on which no tolls are charged. Our trade is handicapped to that extent.

Mr. SPROULE. I only wish to say a very little on this subject. It seems to me that the question resolves itself into two points, and what I regard as the important things in giving us control of the transportation of our own country are something like the following : First, we should make the channel between Montreal and Quebec what it ought to be as regards depth, and we should have it well lighted. The hon. minister is directing his attention towards that end at the present time, and I feel satisfied that both sides of the House will support him in that policy. Any reasonable expenditure looking towards that end will be in the right direction, and will be in the interests of Canadian shipping and of Canada. Following that, it seems to me, means should be devised to reduce the cost of insurance. For that is the next large item interfering with the trade by the St. Lawrence. It appears to me, from what has been written of late on the subject, that the government might well join some insurance company in sharing the risk or guaranteeing a portion of the risk for some years to come, at least until a business is built up by an insurance company, and we can be independent of outside insurance companies. In the meantime, to ascertain what risks are incurred, we ought to have better data than we have with regard to the losses that have taken place during the last few years on that route. Surely we have the facts somewhere in connection with our returns of shipping or of trade and navigation in this country. We ought to have these facts and so be able to estimate what it would cost to insure trade by this route, and then join some company, or else the government become the insurers themselves. It must seem to most people that the insurance paid on this route at the present time is out of all proportion to the dangers incurred in carrying on the shipping by the St. Lawrence route. Then, I think, improvement ought to go on in the harbour of Montreal, because, it seems evident, from what the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) tells us, it is very much out of date. The hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is causing expenditure to be made with the object of improving our equipment in this respect. Whether that expenditure is as rapid as it ought to be or not, I am not prepared to say ; but at least, I think, we ought to exercise greater enterprise in trying to bring it to a successful conclusion than we are doing at the present time. We should have improved means of handling freight ; the time spent by vessels in coming in and going out, in loading and unloading, should be made as short as possible. These matters might well engage the attention of the minister, because the inconveniences that now exist may be the means of driving vessels that hitherto have sought the St. Lawrence route to go to Boston or other ports for their trade. These improvements seem to be of the greatest need at the present time, and I think co-ordinate with them we might well improve the waterways above Montreal, leading to that port. The minister says he is directing his energies towards that end at the present time. and I think he is entitled to credit so far as he is doing so upon intelligent lines. But I must confess that I have felt for some time past that the proposed expenditure, especially at Port Colborne, is not likely to bring the return which the minister expects or desires, and that perhaps the same amount of money might be spent in other directions that would bring a better return. The ex-Minister of Railways stated that when Buffalo affords facilities for vessels going fifteen miles further and transhipping, it is very doubtful whether the improvements the minister is making at Port Colborne are likely to be a sufficient inducement to make vessels go there and unload instead of going to Buffalo, if they desire to transhipping there and go on down to the St. Lawrence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Port Colborne and the Canadian system of canals will be competitors of the Buffalo route. If we were to place ourselves in the hands of our opponents, how could we fight against them ?

Mr. SPROULE. I admit there is a serious obstacle to be overcome, and one which is worthy of consideration. We practically handicap ourselves to a certain extent for that trade. If we could provide facilities for transhipment at Port Colborne by way of docks, elevators and depth of water, no doubt we would be acting largely in the right direction ; but whether that would accomplish the end we have in view must be for the future to determine. But I say that our own waterways might be improved very well at the same time.

Now, there seems to be a serious contention between people in this country as to whether we have or have not fourteen feet of water above Montreal. Many shippers say we have not. I believe some are afraid to risk a trial. Others say we have. I see that the Montreal Witness says that we have not, and I presume they would scarcely write a hap-hazard without some definite knowledge on that subject. They contended last year that we had not. It is claimed by others we have such a depth. But if we have not, the sooner we have the better, and the more urgently we should direct our endeavours towards securing that end in the interest of shipping.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What would the hon. gentleman suggest ought to be done that has not been done in order to assure owners of vessels of the existence of this fourteen foot channel ?

Mr. SPROULE. I think there ought to be soundings along the whole channel where there is supposed to be a less depth.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does not the hon. gentleman know that there is no portion of the channel that has not been sounded, no portion that has not been swept from one entrance to the other with the most improved appliances for that purpose ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may add that in some respects rivers are under the care of the Public Works Department, and I made up my mind last year to understand the whole question, and for that purpose I ordered a survey to be made. At this moment a survey is going on between Kingston and Prescott. A survey will be completed in the course of next year, not only of the channel but of the whole river ; so we will be perfectly sure of the depth, not only of the channel but of the whole volume of the river. So far as I am concerned, I have consulted with many shippers in Montreal, and they are all convinced that we have a fourteen foot channel. The Minister of Railways and Canals stated that clearly the other evening. What other means we could take, I do not see.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman has given us information himself of what they are doing, and he is doing just what I was going to suggest, that is, making soundings and then publishing charts of the soundings, so as to settle the question to the satisfaction of those who are interested in navigation. I am not contending that we have not that depth, but so long as there is uncertainty in the public mind it deters shippers from running the risk. Now, when that is done, I trust the Minister of Public Works will direct his attention towards improving the upper lake harbours. I am glad to say that he is doing it. I have no fault to find, nor do I wish to be understood as finding fault with what he has done, because I am only suggesting what should be done in this connection. But after all, it is claimed by some that we cannot get trade through our ports and down our canals. I may mention here that we are sometimes at a loss on this side of the House whether to look to the Minister of Railways and Canals or to the Minister of Public Works, because sometimes it seems that the Minister of Public Works is usurping the functions of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and vice versa. But so long as they are working in the same direction, it is all right.

But after that is all done, it seems to me that we might go further and do something more to induce shipping to come through our own channels and down to our own ports. Looking up the history of shipping in other countries some years ago—I am speaking with an indistinct recollection, and may not be accurate—I found that some countries have determined to give a bounty on shipping going through their own ports and down their own channels. It seems to me we might do something in that direction. We have our own ports and our own lake vessels. It seems to me we might give a bounty upon all vessels that will carry produce, say from the port of Montreal instead of from the port of Boston, or that will carry produce from the port of Halifax, or the port of St. John, or the port of Quebec, instead of from American ports. We might give all shippers landing goods at those ports some rebate upon their cargoes, so that vessel-owners might get some consideration for landing in our ports. It is not necessary to make it a large one, but frequently a small bounty would be a sufficient inducement to make vessel-owners land their cargoes in a Canadian port. I think this point is worthy of consideration on the part of the government. Let them look into the question carefully, and see if something could not be done in that direction. We might give a consideration to the vessels of our own country larger than we would give to the vessels belonging to a foreign country; but give some consideration to foreign vessels as well, if they will land cargoes in our own ports and take cargoes from our own ports to foreign countries. Let us give a consideration to the trade that is carried through our own channels, and through our own ports in contradistinction to the trade that goes to and from the ports of a foreign country. The government might look up what other countries have been doing in this respect, because what others have done we may do

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I was very much interested in seeing the Minister of Public Works take the stand he has taken this afternoon in his purpose of opening up, not only the routes from the west to Montreal, but the routes from Montreal to the sea. I may say that in any scheme which has merits he will have my cordial endorsation, so long as it is opening up Canadian routes to trade. I was a little surprised, however, at the proposition made by the hon. Minister of Public Works in relation to a canal twenty feet deep to North Bay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not a canal; simply improving the river.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I know, but the hon. minister will have to construct locks.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. minister gave no intimation that he purposed continuing that waterway to Montreal down the Ottawa river, but he gave the distance as 364 miles from Montreal to North Bay. It is eighty miles from North Bay to the Georgian Bay, it is ninety miles from that to the Spanish river, it is only 151 miles from the mouth of the Spanish river to North Bay, and at the mouth of the Spanish river on the north shore of the Georgian Bay there is a most excellent port at the present time. The Canadian Pacific Railway is in there to-day, and that being the case, why spend $3,000,000, or $4,000,000, in order to construct a twenty-foot waterway from the Georgian Bay up to North Bay when it would be of no use except for a few months in the year? If the hon. minister has a project to continue the canal up to Lake Nipissing, thence to Mattawa, then down the Ottawa to Montreal, if he can find a sufficient water supply, then, being in favour of canals myself, he will have my hearty endorsation. The Canadian Pacific Railway at present runs from Montreal to the mouth of the Spanish river on the route of the Sault Ste. Marie Railway, the distance being 515 miles. It would be an easy matter for these large ships from Chicago, Fort William and the west to bring grain from any of these ports, tranship it to the Canadian Pacific Railway at Spanish river and send it thence to Montreal. There is another matter that I wish to mention to the hon. minister. Navigators on the St. Lawrence claim that not only is the navigation of the river very imperfect and very difficult, but that it can only be utilized between Quebec and Montreal during the day time, and that even below Quebec very great improvements are necessary in the way of buoying.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I can assure the hon. Minister of Public Works that anything in his scheme that proposes to develop the St. Lawrence route will have my hearty endorsation.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister of Public Works, under the appropriations in 1900-1, asked for $433,000, and this year he asked for $419,000. By a reference to the Auditor General's Report of last year it would seem that the bulk of the expenditure of $433,000, authorized last year, or so much of it as was made was expended something after this form : At the town, or city, I do not know which, of Sorel, it would seem that the government had established large workshops, and that at these workshops there is in the employ of the government, and at day's labour, a perfect army of men. I do not believe it is in keeping with the principles of government that any one minister should spend such a large sum as $90,000 a year for day's labour in the construction of dredges and tugs and other parts of the apparatus, because, I understood the hon. minister to say that some dredges were constructed at that place last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it a business deal on the part of any government to come down and ask parliament to vote moneys, and I presume he will appropriate this large amount, equally as much, to the same purpose in the coming year, upwards of $100,000, or more, for the construction of dredges, tugs or whatever he may desire. And, mark you, these are not to be constructed by public tender and contract, but the hon. minister is to go out among his party friends and ask them to send in their party friends and they are to construct these tugs. It is not fair to the city of Toronto, and I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will be heard from on that point, where they have shipbuilding yards that they are not to be given an opportunity of tendering for the construction of these dredges. Why should the minister have the right and the privilege and why should his colleagues assent to the proposition that he should have placed at his disposal upwards of $100,000 for the construction of dredges and other craft ? It is a preposterous proposition, and if we are to have dredges build for this country there should be the open principle of public tender, and instead of the minister taking $90,000 as he did last year, and I presume he will take an equally large sum this year, or perhaps a larger sum to construct dredges, he should put the work up to public competition. It is startling that the hon. minister has such amounts of money as this at his disposal. Contrast this with other departments of the government, with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for instance I know, that, in my riding, when that department wished to place out buoys, they openly called for tenders for the placing of these buoys. The work is ground down to the last cent. The competition is keen and the result is that this work is done at almost starvation prices. Take the Post Office Department; in Ontario, and I believe in the other provinces of the Dominion, there is the wholesome principle of tender, and the result is that people are carrying the mails at comparatively trifling prices. But, the hon. Minister of Public Works takes another ground altogether. He said last year : I want parliament to give me $400,000 with the right to spend $90,000 in constructing different kinds of craft, and it is fair to assume that he is going to take a larger amount this year for the same purpose. If he is not going to construct craft of the same kind, then, I presume, the amount should be cut lower, but, before the committee passes this item it will ask what the hon. minister proposes to do with this huge amount of $419,000. Is it in line with the policy of this government that they are going to assent to the proposition that the hon. Minister of Public Works is to have upwards of $100,000 to construct tugs, and dredges ? And, how is he going to construct them ? Is he going to ask for tenders and get the work done at the lowest figure ? Not at all; he is going down to Sorel, he is going to the representative of that riding, a party friend, and then all the friends of the government will be turned into this government shipyard to the exclusion of others, and the wholesale patronage is vested in the minister and the representative of that district. It is bad enough that upwards of $100,000 should be spent in this manner, but, we come to something worse than that, and it is the purchase of supplies. The committee will be startled when I tell them that the minister last year purchased, at Sorel, for the construction of these dredges, and other craft, no less than $235,000 worth of supplies without public tender. I would ask the hon. minister if that statement is correct ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) should not forget——

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. minister pardon me ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will answer the question. If my hon. friend will go on I will answer him altogether.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. minister if he will answer 'yes' or 'no'?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will explain the whole thing when I speak.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister says that these supplies were purchased by tender, no comment will be necessary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman will make his speech and I will answer him.

Mr. BENNETT. Were these $235,000 worth of supplies purchased by tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman will simply finish his speech I will pledge myself to answer every point he makes now.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, if the hon. minister wants to keep his supplies back he is going about it now in the proper way.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will not take long; I will answer the hon. gentleman in a few minutes.

Mr. BENNETT. I simply ask the hon. minister whether these supplies were purchased by tender or not. The hon. minister can answer that by saying 'yes,' or 'no.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot now. I am just looking up the memorandum.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I will sit down and let the hon. minister answer that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend should not forget what he has apparently forgotten, that he has only to go back to past history to remember that the shipyard in Sorel was established before we took office. I found it there, and I also found the same system of days labour in vogue. Indeed, that system is the only one that can be followed at Sorel. We have a shipyard in Sorel because we have a fleet of dredges, a fleet of barges, and a fleet of tugs, and so on. In case of an accident occurring, where could we go if we had not the shipyard? The working of the whole system would be quite impossible without it. That shipyard has been in existence for many years, even when the harbour commissioners had charge of the ship channel, and in fact it is just as necessary for the government to have such a concern as it is for the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway to have shops. My hon. friend reproaches me severely for having built dredges by days' labour. Well, I take great pride for having done so, but I must pay the same compliment to the gentlemen who preceded me. I am sorry to say that I have just been informed that I cannot pay the same compliment to my predecessors, because they did not built dredges by days' labour although they built tugs and barges and so on. The best dredge they did build is the Laval, which was built at Hull, and without any attempt to discredit that dredge it is not the best of the fleet. I claim that the dredges that have been built at Sorel by Canadian skilled labour are the best dredges that are in America. I do not see why the government should be reproached for building the dredges with Canadian labour in Canada. I would go further. I have often and often pressed my colleague the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) to have workshops of his own in this country. I claim there is no reason under the sun why the Canadian people should not do their own work in their own country. All the dredges which are working to-day in the maritime provinces are imported from England, but they are not quite as good as the dredges we build ourselves, and I want to know in God's name why should we import anything that we can build here. I may have faults——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may have faults, but on that point I am a strong Canadian.

Mr. WALLACE. What about the furniture at the Paris exposition?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The furniture at the Paris exposition was bought before I went there, and when my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) goes to Paris and sees it he will agree with me that Canadian labour could have done just as well.

Mr. WALLACE. Then why did not the government do it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) is quite capable of understanding the difference there is between building a dredge in Sorel and buying furniture in Paris.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. I quite understand that the Minister of Public Works will preach protection in one place and practice the very opposite in another.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I feel there is a great difference between buying a hat in New York and building a dredge in Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. How does the cost of constructing dredges at Sorel compare with the price paid for dredges constructed in England?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredge that was brought from England cost a good deal more than the dredge we are building in Sorel.

Mr. CLARKE. The same capacity?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. On that point I court the fullest investigation, and I would be very glad if some of the gentlemen on the other side would be good enough to come to Sorel and see the work that is being done there.

Mr. CLARKE. Are we to understand that the dredges built at Sorel have cost less than dredges of the same capacity purchased in England ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredge St. Lawrence, which was imported from England, cost $115,000, I am informed. Her capacity is not half the capacity of our Sorel dredges, and the average cost of our Sorel dredges is $110,000.

Mr. CLARKE. That is a saving of $40,000 in favour of building them at home ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. I think they ought to be built at home then.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think so too, and I may say that the dredge we are building in Toronto to-day will be built cheap compared with other dredges built elsewhere.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the price of the dredge which is being constructed by the Polsons in Toronto ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For British Columbia ?

Mr. CLARKE. This suction dredge for the St. Lawrence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The cost will be $163,000, but of course there are additions that will have to be built later on ; there are discharge pipes and the like. This is an entirely new model and nothing of the kind has been built here before, and it will cost $163,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Did the minister ask for tenders for that dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I did not, and for the excellent reason that I thought it would be a waste of time. I was very anxious that the St. Lawrence channel should be dredged as quickly as it could be. I have seen at the Paris exposition models of suction dredges, but I was very anxious to build a dredge on American lines on this side of the ocean. I went to New York and to Bridgeport, where there was a large dredge that had worked in the port of New York for Messrs. Hughes & Co. I was received by the engineer in charge at Bridgeport, and I asked him if he ever came to Montreal, and he said : Yes, I studied at the Royal Military College at Kingston. It was a great pleasure indeed to meet a Canadian engineer in charge of such a large work in the United States. That gentleman's name was Morrison. There was another engineer by the name of Robertson, who is the consulting engineer for Hughes & Co. He is a Canadian who had worked for several years for the harbour commissioners at Montreal, and since he crossed the line he has designed 116 American dredges. That man has made a plan for us. I learned since that he has also designed for the Polson Iron Works a small dredge that my department is building for British Columbia. We united Mr. Robertson and Mr. Morrison and the Polsons with the officers of my department, and we gave to the Polson Iron Works the hull and machinery of the dredge, keeping for our works in Sorel about $60,000 of the work. With regard to the supplies, we follow the same method as is followed by all the other departments. When we ask for nails or iron, we ask for quotations, as the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk, the Richelieu Co., and every other big firm in this country does, and we always get the goods at the lowest possible price. If my hon. friend would permit me, I would ask him to rise above party in matters of this kind. It would be simply impossible to ask for public tenders in such cases. We would be simply wasting three-quarters of our time without getting any better prices.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister has stated exactly his position, and it is this, that on coming into power he found that there were some workshops at Sorel where repairs were made on government dredges. I quite agree with him that there was a necessity for such workshops. It would be absurd to argue that a government which had dredges and tugs should not have a place to which recourse could be had for repairs. But the minister has gone outside of the question altogether. It is not of repairs that the complaint is made. It is because, on construction work, the minister, instead of calling for public tenders, gets the work done at Sorel, where there is an army of 450 men employed all the year round. Surely he does not say that all these men are kept employed to make repairs on dredges.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do not always keep that many there.

Mr. BENNETT. The amount expended there, according to the Auditor General's Report, was $90,000. It is all clap-trap for the hon. gentleman to talk about employing Canadians. Any person knows that wherever these dredges might be built in Canada, they would be built by Canadians. The hon. minister has stated his position, and I congratulate him, because he is getting stronger every year and does what he likes. He undertakes the construction work on this large craft, and the result is that he has in his hands this immense patronage, consisting in the employment of 450 men. All I can say is this, that it is well for the people of this country to understand the difference in the position of these ministers. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may have a little contract ; that has to go to tender. The Postmaster General has a little contract ; that has to go to tender too. But, when the Minister of Public Works wants to spend $90,000 in labour, he snaps his fingers at contracts and tenders, and all such wholesome restrictions, and declares that he will do as he pleases, and spends hundreds of thousands of dollars among his party friends. Hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition at one time, and if there was anything they ever did condemn, and condemn wrongly—that is, the old guard from Ontario, who were here at one time, but none of whom are here to-day—it was this expenditure at Sorel. They condemned it day in and day out ; but to-day nothing is heard from them, and the minister has carte blanche to spend what he likes. Coming to the expenditure for supplies, that is even more startling than the expenditure of $100,000 for labour. Would the House believe it ?—the minister last year went among his party friends at Sorel and distributed among them no less than $235,000 of public money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On machinery, engines, and all sorts of things.

Mr. BENNETT. Let us have a look at some of these items. The minister says it was utterly impossible to have tenders called for these matters. All the other departments have to ask for tenders ; but the Minister of Public Works stands up and says that when he wants $25,000 worth of hardware, he cannot call for tenders for that. I find in the Auditor General's Report that a Mr. Cavanagh, of the city of Montreal, was given no less than $25,000 on account of hardware supplies. Does the minister mean to tell me that when he wants $25,000 worth of hardware supplies, he does not ask for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I mean that the goods purchased with that sum of money were purchased, I suppose, during twelve months, and after quotations were asked for every time.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the minister if he asked for quotations from the leading hardware men in Toronto or any other place in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, there has been a good deal bought in Ontario, and in Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. We have in the city of Toronto some of the largest hardware firms in the Dominion. Did the hon. minister ask for tenders from those firms ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say that I asked for tenders everywhere, but I have often asked for tenders in Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT. Before I go into this matter of supplies, I find that when hon. gentlemen opposite were condemning the workshops at Sorel, there were only fifty men employed there, whereas the minister has now 450.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is a growing time.

Mr. BENNETT. It is, no doubt, and a growing time for the influence of the Minister of Public Works in the cabinet, on which I congratulate him. Now, let us take some of these items. First, Ahearn & Soper, for electric light business in connection with a tug, got nearly $3,000. Beauchemin & Co., of Sorel, got supplies to the tune of $2,253. Cameron & Co., of Ottawa, supply lumber to the tune of $8,292. The Canada Switch and Spring Company, of Montreal, received $4,407. Carrier, Laine & Co., of Lévis, received $4,955. Edward Cavanagh, of Montreal, received $25,000 ; B. J. Coghlin, of Montreal, $2,300 ; Dods & Co., of Montreal, $659 ; the Dominion Foundry at Sorel, $2,239 ; the Dominion Wire Rope Company, of Montreal, $2,810 ; T. K. Foster & Co., of Ottawa, $974 ; the Gutta Percha and Rubber Company, $1,900 ; Kingman & Co., of Montreal, $20,000 ; the Laurie Engine Company, of Montreal, $5,584 ; E. H. Lemay, of Montreal, $10,333. I would like to ask the minister if Mr. Lemay, who furnished $10,000 worth of timber, is not one of the harbour commissioners of Montreal, and one of the appointees of this government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He is one of the harbour commissioners, and a very able man. All those goods were got after quotations were submitted.

Mr. BENNETT. I find the following firms down for supplies : Louis Bros., Montreal, $16,456 ; T. C. Moore & Co., $10,000 ; D. R. Macleod, Quebec, $15,600 ; McAvity & Sons, St. John, $2,000. It seems startling that the hon. gentleman had to go to St. John to purchase supplies for works at Sorel. Patenaude & Co., Sorel, $4,422 ; Robertson & Co., Montreal, $5,297 ; Robillard & Co., $1,405 ; James Shepard, Sorel, $4,010 ; Wier & Co., Montreal, $9,510.

And so on. Here are thousands and tens of thousands of dollars expended, and the hon. minister gives us fair notice that after spending last year over $400,000 in the construction of dredges, tugs and so on, at Sorel, he is asking a similar grant this year, and it is only fair to assume that he will do as he did last year, namely, construct the tugs and what else he pleases without public competition. He and his friends who were opposed to our having fifty men there some years ago, are going to employ 450 men, and in addition to spend a quarter of a million dollars among their party friends. When we taunt him with not having invited competition, his only answer is that he bought at fair prices. Surely the wholesome principles ought to prevail in the construction of dredges and tugs of inviting public tenders. Let me give one instance, in my personal knowledge, which will show the hon. gentleman's manner of conducting business in this matter of expenditure on tugs. His department had a very old tug at the town of Midland, which had been used there in connection with dredging work. It was necessary to construct a new hull because the old one was used up. The machinery of the old hull was taken out at the town of Midand and shipped to Sorel, where a new one was built, and the new tug was brought back to Midland. The hon. gentleman could have built a tug at Midland for the amount of freight he had to pay on the machinery, and the hon. gentleman knows it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I do not.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman will look up the accounts, he will find that the cost of transporting the machinery down to Sorel, and then bringing the tug back to Midland, would have built a tug at Midland, because it was not a tug of any considerable size. If that is the kind of business method that characterizes his department in Sorel, the House should hesitate before giving him the opportunity of spending such a large sum as $400,000 in those workshops.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Our complaint in the province of Nova Scotia is that we have not sufficient dredges for the public works necessary to be done. We are quite prepared to build those dredges in that province, because, with the exception of the harbours of Yarmouth and St. John, in the province of New Brunswick, bucket dredges would not be suitable for our work. The kind we want in Nova Scotia, in the rough parts of our harbours and coasts, where there are a good many boulders on the bottom, is spoon dredges, and they can be built for $30,000 to $40,000 each. We would always have plenty of work for them. Some of those dredges have been built before in the province of Nova Scotia, and have done successful work, and I hope, therefore, that the Minister of Public Works will see that we have one or two dredges built in that province suitable for the wants. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on the influence he can exercise in this House, not only on the supporters of the government, but on hon. members opposite, and on the manner in which he looks after the requirements of the country, for whenever he finds anything important requires to be done for the improvement of trade, he is ready and willing to do it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend from East Simcoe is somewhat unfair.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not attacking the hon. gentleman, but the principle on which he acts.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He has given as an instance an old tug in Midland. Well, that was out of shape, but the machinery in it was good, and we simply took down that machinery to Sorel and put it into a new hull. Where is the crime in that? It was a business-like operation, which any ordinary firm would do. What I endeavour to do in the conduct of my department is what I would do in my own affairs, and what any ordinary business firm would do. I do not think that the business men of the country will share the views my hon. friend has expressed. The government is doing the right thing in building its dredges and tugs. My hon. friend says that that gives me patronage..

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, I reply that I wish I was delivered from patronage.

Mr. HEYD. Is it not a fundamental plank in the platform of the trades unions and labour organizations that the contract system on public work should be abolished, and the government do the work themselves?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Between that contention, which I know very well, and the other which my learned hon. friend advocates, I chose what I consider is the right policy. When I believe that a work can be better done by days' labour, I do not hesitate. And when I believe that it cannot be done as well by days' labour, I call for tenders. In this case, I believe, I am doing the right thing. In Sorel there are skilled labouring men who have been for fifty years building ships, and I am using the skill and ability of those men in building these dredges and tugs. If my hon. friend knew the people of Montreal better, he would find out that among those who have received patronage, there are some good friends of his. But I shall be very frank. I am a minister in this Liberal administration, and my duty is to give the patronage to my political friends, and my hon. friend, if he were in my place, would do the same thing. But what I do say is that when there is a manufacturer who does not share my political views, but who is the only or the best man who can supply me with what I want, then I buy from him. And when I find my own political friends who have the same article at as good a price, I deal with them.

Mr. BENNETT. But the hon. minister does not ask other people for prices.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I learned my trade with my hon. friends on the other side, and I learned it fairly well. When I was on the other side of the House, we used to protect our friends to the best of our ability. I am on this side of the House now, and I proceed upon the very same principle.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the minister to say that he considers it his duty to give this patronage to his political friends ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All things equal—yes. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to find that I have given one cent more to a political friend than the ordinary market price.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see by page V—34, of the Auditor General's Report, that the hon. minister purchased $25,029.17 worth of goods from the firm of Edward Cavanagh & Co., Montreal. Among the items is 514·9 gallons of boiled oil, at 87 cents per gallon. I ask the hon. minister if he will say that he has not paid one cent too much there ? I am buying boiled oil for our company, and while it is higher now than it was between June 1, 1899, and June 1, 1900, it has not reached that price even yet.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What price is it ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The price charged here is 87 cents. I leave it to any man who knows anything about the trade if that would not be an outrageous price, even at retail.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has found fault with us often about such matters—and as he is on the other side of the House it is right for him to do so, it is his duty. The other day he told us we paid too much for onions, and now he says we pay too much for oil. I have at the head of that department at Sorel an old officer, Mr. Howdon, who was fifteen years under the late administration. I have kept him there because he is one of the most honest men I have ever known, and he knows his work well. His instructions are to buy at the best market price. There are times, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has suggested, when oil is higher than at others. But I should be surprised if Mr. Howdon, in whom I have implicit confidence, had paid too much in this case. I thank the hon. gentleman for calling my attention to the matter, and I will look into it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister has stated that he bought goods by tender after quotation. He must have those quotations, and I would ask him to give the quotations for boiled oil between June 1, 1899, and June 1, 1900.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I can I will. I have nothing to hide. Of course, I do not buy myself ; I could not do it.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the hon. minister say that Mr. Howdon has bought all these goods ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not mean to say that he has not instructed some of his subordinates to do the actual buying, but he is the responsible man in such matters.

Mr. McGOWAN. I think it is only just to the Minister of Public Works to say that I bought linseed oil by the car-load at 81 cents. It was very high last spring.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And, of course, we do not buy by the car-load.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like my hon. friend (Mr. McGowan) to give the prices of the year before. I am not speaking of last year, but of the year before. It is higher now. This government ought to buy as cheaply as anybody can.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I observe some purchases here which, I think, might be made better than by the method of inviting offers only from friends of the administration. There is one item under the head of Weir & Co., Montreal, from whom a boiler was bought for $4,125. There is no description given of the boiler except that it is to bear a pressure of 200 pounds. In a case like that it should be quite easy for the hon. minister, as, evidently, he does not construct boilers in the Sorel works, to ask all the manufacturers of boilers within a reasonable distance to tender. We have in different parts of the provinces large concerns whose business it is to make boilers, and I should suppose there is no doubt that the cost of these expensive boilers to the government would be reduced if tenders were asked for. That is one instance where there is a large outlay without sufficient information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know, in the case of Weir & Co., quotations were asked for. I may add that this firm ranks among the best manufacturers of boilers that we have—although, I may say, they are not, politically, friends of ours. But Mr. Howdon represented to me that, in his opinion, these men were safe, that they had done work for the government for years and years. They were the lowest in this case.

Mr. CLARKE. Were tenders called for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quotations were asked for from manufacturers—we always do that.

Mr. CLARKE. In Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And elsewhere, I think. I cannot say in this case, but we generally have quotations from many places.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). How large a boiler was that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the dimensions here, and, of course, I cannot carry these details in my memory—that would be out of the question.

Public Works—Chargeable to Capital—
Harbours and Rivers, Ontario—River Kaministiquia $10,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the ordinary appropriation every year. There is nothing special.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask if this is the only appropriation to be charged to capital for expenditure in the province of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is the expenditure on Port Colborne harbour.

Manitoba—St. Andrews Rapids improvements, Red River $100,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Explain please.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is this item to apply to the St. Andrews locks contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). Yes. Last year there was a sum of $125,000 placed in the estimates. This year we ask for $100,000. That work has been urged for a number of years, and as I said, last year, parliament decided that the work should be constructed and a sum of money was placed in the estimates. The object of the work is to improve the Red river in such a way as to make it navigable from Lake Winnipeg to the city of Winnipeg. West Selkirk is the point where navigation now stops. From West Selkirk to Winnipeg the distance is about twenty-three miles. Ten miles from Winnipeg there is a succession of rapids. The object of the work is to erect a dam and a lock which will flood these rapids so as to make that part of the river between West Selkirk and Winnipeg navigable for boats drawing seven feet. The work has been advertised and the lowest tender has been accepted, the contract going into the hands of Messrs. Kelly & Company for the sum of $469,000. This will not cover the whole cost of the work as the contract has been awarded only for the masonry. There will be a considerable sum of money required later on to build the upper part of the work. The work is composed of two parts—permanent masonry work 800 feet long, on which work there will be placed gates, movable walls, if I may call them that, which will be opened during the flood and which will be closed when the high waters of the flood are passed. When these gates are closed there will be seven feet of water at Winnipeg, the fall being about fifteen feet. Parliament pronounced last year on the principle of the work, and I am only carrying out the order of parliament in going on with it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Could the hon. minister say how much he expects the entire work will cost.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The estimate that has been placed in my hands puts the balance of the work at $200,000 in round numbers. It will be composed of a service bridge, movable frames, lock gates and working apparatus, lockmaster's house, shed, two steam travellers for loading freight, &c. Then, there is the ordinary cost of supervision, and, in round numbers, the work will cost $200,000 additional.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That will make altogether how much ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $660,000. If my hon. friend would like to have this little plan I shall send it over to him. It is simply proposed to flood the rapids that cannot be navigated now for a distance of twenty-three miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Between what points will this constitute a route, and what kind of traffic will go over it ? I am merely asking for information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course my hon. friend knows that there is a large traffic in Winnipeg. Fuel is very scarce in Winnipeg itself, and the object of this work is to create navigation over the whole length of Lake Winnipeg and thence to the American frontier. The United States government have improved the Red river and made it navigable for over sixty miles. This will give access from the city of Winnipeg to Lake Winnipeg; in other words, all the district around Lake Winnipeg will have water communication with Winnipeg, while, to-day, that water communication stops twenty-three miles from Winnipeg, which is a great inconvenience indeed.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. minister will remember that tenders were called for this work a second time. The object of calling for tenders a second time was to provide for a contract under the minimum wage resolution which was passed by this House last year. I would like to know if the minimum wage clause was included in the contract and whether that clause has been observed, whether any progress estimates have been paid, and if so, has the contractor filed affidavits to the effect that the minimum wage clause has been observed and such wages been paid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know very well that the work has to be carried on under the regulation respecting wages. No estimate has been paid yet. I have received from the Department of Labour a complaint that the contractors, Messrs. Kelly & Co., have not obeyed what is called the fair-wages clause. That complaint is before me. I am sorry to say that I received it only two or three days ago and have not yet had time to look into it. I intend to compel Mr. Kelly to follow those regulations, as he has bound himself to do. Every time that a complaint is brought to me I will certainly look into it carefully, and if I need the services of the Department of Labour, I shall be glad to avail myself of their services.

Mr. PUTTEE. Could the minister tell us whether the figures in the second contract are the same as those in the first tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was not here when the tenders were called for, and I do not remember the figures. But I will be glad to give the information to my hon. friend.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the occasion of calling for tenders twice?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because the fair-wages clause had not been inserted in the first contract. There is a schedule attached to the contract which binds Kelly & Co. to pay wages up to a certain figure in virtue of that clause.

Transportation facilities—Port Colborne harbour improvements $150,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I explained this afternoon the nature of these works. I may say that a contract has been awarded for only 1,300 feet of the breakwater that we intend to erect. The whole length will be 5,700 feet. The Minister of Finance, in my absence two years ago, stated to the House that he thought the expenditure would not exceed $150,000. As the item passed through the House last year without any explanation being asked or given, we thought it only fair not to bind parliament to any expenditure of money larger than the amount already voted. But the contractors, Messrs. Hogan & McDonald, have undertaken to build the whole work for the sum of $395,000. As I have said, this breakwater is an essential and necessary work, without such we cannot do any trade at Port Colborne. At Buffalo, 20 miles from Port Colborne, which, as my hon. friend knows, is the entrance of the Canadian canal system, there are magnificent harbour works. The American government have spent large sums of money in building these works, which are not yet completed. The sweep of the wind on Lake Erie at certain times is as violent as on the Atlantic ocean. It is therefore out of the question to expect any large trade for the Welland canal unless we have harbour facilities at that point. The breakwater is the first work to be done. And I state here that I am going to ask from parliament the balance of the money—I do not require it this year, but I will ask for authority to build the whole breakwater. I would not stand in this parliament and say that 1,300 feet would be sufficient; there would remain a large gap of about 4,300 feet which, unless it was filled up, would make the harbour useless. Now, I wish to insist on this point, that Port Colborne is the first link in our system of canals between England and the west. That work is just as essential as the works in the port of Montreal, and without this improvement at Port Colborne we cannot expect any large freight carriers to come to our Canadian waters, it is out of the question. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals is performing the work that belongs to him, and I am performing the work that belongs to me. I hope that on this question we will have the support of both sides of the House.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it was two years ago, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, a plan was laid on the Table of the House which projected an expenditure at Port Colborne of some $5,000,000. That plan embraced the building of piers and jetties, and an extensive amount of dredging. I do not think it included the construction of an elevator on any of the piers. Now, the minister has discussed at considerable length this afternoon, and more briefly this evening, the present position of Port Colborne; and if any one had heard him who was not aware of the circumstances, he would have been led to believe that never a bushel of grain or a vessel had passed Port Colborne. Now, what are the facts? Port Colborne is on the Lake Erie entrance of the Welland canal. I think I am within the mark—and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) can correct me if I am not—in saying that two or three years ago some 10 million bushels of grain passed through the Welland canal and passed Port Colborne on to Kingston and Prescott. Now, if 10 million bushels of grain went past Port Colborne through the Welland canal to Prescott and Kingston, it proves that this much-condemned place, Port Colborne, is not so bad as it has been described. Let me tell the Minister of Public Works that for several years past vessels have gone through this entrance of Port Colborne carrying cargoes of 75,000 bushels of grain. Such vessels as the Rosemount, the Algonquin, the Rosedale, and others, have been seen from time to time in the harbour of Kingston, as the hon. member for Kingston will tell the House. Now, the minister has a proposition before the House to-night to expend $400,000. When this $400,000 is expended, he has partially completed a work which, according to the plans presented from his own department, will cost the sum of $5,000,000.

I want to ask the minister what will be the upshot of all this ? You can now carry from Fort William to Kingston a cargo of 75,000 bushels in vessels like the Rosedale and Algonquin as the hon. member (Mr. Britton) will tell you, and at Kingston that grain is placed in barges to go down the canal. As a result of this expenditure you will bring a vessel carrying one-quarter of a million bushels to Port Colborne, and you will transfer that to smaller carriers for Montreal. You will have to transfer that cargo to an elevator both at Kingston and Port Colborne if ever an elevator is built at the latter place. If you carry by large freighters to Port Colborne, you will practically close up Prescott and Kingston ; and I am informed that no grain went through Prescott this year, and a less quantity through Kingston. Can the minister tell the House what will be the saving in carrying wheat in large 200,000 bushel freighters to Port Colborne, as compared with carrying from Fort William to Kingston in 75,000 bushel boats. This difference in the cost of freight, if there be any, is the only benefit that will be derived from this expenditure. Surely the government had some data of this kind before entering on this large expenditure. I would also ask the minister what basin or area will be dredged to a depth of 23 feet at Port Colborne in consequence of this expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The point I make is this : Buffalo is 20 miles from Port Colborne, and last year over 200,000,000 bushels of grain and flour went through Buffalo, and it went there because the grain can be carried quickly and cheaply from Buffalo to New York. Between these two cities it is 450 miles by rail, and 500 miles by the Erie canal, which, however, carries a very small quantity of grain now.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman does, but this is one of the questions which the country needs to be educated upon, and the hon. gentleman may have something to learn as I had. If I am not mistaken it costs about three cents to carry a bushel of grain from Buffalo to New York, and perhaps a little more at times.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Including the terminal charges.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, Now, the cost of carrying a bushel of grain from the western points to Buffalo and to Port Colborne will be about the same. The point is how much will it cost from Port Colborne to Montreal ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) thinks that Kingston and Prescott will suffer. I hope they will not. I am confident that there will be trade for all the ports on the lakes, but the broad question is : whether the Welland canal will continue to carry only 10,000,000 bushels, as against 200,000,000 bushels received at Buffalo. It is not a patriotic policy for us to try and raise little differences between town and town. The main point is whether Canada will retain her own trade, and whether we can capture the American trade. Our route is the shortest, and the problem for us is to make it the best and cheapest. I feel confident that we will be able to carry grain from Port Colborne to Montreal inside of two cents a bushel, and if we can accomplish that, then when we have completed the port of Montreal and the deepening and the widening of the St. Lawrence, we are going to take the life out of Buffalo. We have only to put our hands and our heads together to do that. My friend (Mr. Bennett) asks what accommodation we are going to have when these works are completed at Port Colborne. I believe the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) is providing for a harbour 1,200 by 600 feet.

Mr. CLARKE. What depth ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Twenty-two feet.

Mr. CLARKE. At what cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will cost between $900,000 and $1,000,000.

Mr. CLARKE. To make a harbour 1,200 feet by 600 feet, and 22 feet deep.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the entrance to the Welland. The entrance is to give a depth of channel of between 500 feet and 600 feet in width, and the excavation we will have to make will extend over a distance of about 1,200 feet. Our side wings will extend out, and we will have to dredge to a depth of 21 or 22 feet for the length and width specified. The work at the entrance is our work. In connection with one of the side wings, and as part of them we are making our structures substantial and sufficiently wide to admit (with one or two projecting piers) of ships coming right straight from the lake and lying alongside the pier. There will be no turning and twisting to get into the pier, and there will be no difficulty in getting out. My hon. colleague (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is now asking for an appropriation for a breakwater which will inclose—for the purpose of extension and enlargement, if need be—a very considerable harbour, and it will be just as the needs arise, whether or not we will make a harbour of any larger area, and whether we will do in the future any rock dredging, of which there will be a good deal. There is a large quantity of rock in that inclosure; and whether we will dredge any of it in the future or not, we do not want to do any more than is absolutely necessary. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) was not present at the time the plan spoken of by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was mentioned, and I think, produced; and I would like to remind the House, as I think the hon. member himself recollects, that it was stated very distinctly at that time that it was a plan, covering the whole of the work which the engineer would advise us to do, and had not been passed upon by either the present minister or the acting minister, nor had it been considered by the government. It was the suggestion of the engineer of the department. It was a very expensive plan. He proposed dredging out the whole of this basin all the way from the breakwater to the canal piers, and providing for piers being thrown out inclosing the whole basin between the breakwater and the canal entrance. It would not be fair to treat that plan as a concluded policy on the part of the government, because it had never been considered.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In other words, the engineer who made the surveys simply showed on the plan what could be done if it should become necessary later on. The plans which we are carrying out have nothing to do with that big plan, which I hope it may become necessary later on to carry out. If we were in a position to receive 100,000,000 bushels of grain in a couple of years, or were capable of supplanting Buffalo, I am sure this parliament would not hesitate to spend a couple of millions to do so.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask if the contract has been let for the work which the minister alludes to, and, if so, who the contractors are?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The contract has been let to Messrs. Hogan & Macdonell.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Public Works has not answered the question I asked him. While to-day you are carrying cargoes in vessels of 75,000 bushels capacity to Kingston, which cargoes you discharge into barges going down the canal, what would be the lessened cost when you are to carry in larger vessels to Port Colborne, and transfer there to barges which will go to Montreal? Has the department any data to show that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Nobody can have any exact data as to that; but experience has shown that waterways are the cheapest means of transportation. We have now a fourteen-foot channel between Port Colborne and Montreal, and by transhipping at Port Colborne into boats of fourteen feet draught, we shall necessarily decrease the cost of transportation from the west to the east. That seems to me just as clear as daylight. We shall certainly have enterprising people who will build fleets of large boats. I quite grant that we are short of Canadian bottoms. This is one of the difficulties, but all these matters will be settled in time. When the trade is there and the improvements are completed, the fleets will come. For the moment, what I consider important is to prepare the accommodation for the freight. The deep water channel would be nothing without harbour facilities. Port Colborne is in the same position as Buffalo, and there is no reason why, with a fourteen-foot channel, we could not carry trade more successfully through Canadian waters than the New York Central does to New York.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister has made the exact statement which I wished him to make. His statement is that despite the fact that millions of bushels of grain have gone through the Welland canal system to Kingston in barges of 75,000 bushels capacity, and that grain has been going to Montreal, he is now asking the country to pledge itself, and the country is going to do so, to an expense of nearly $1,500,000—to do what? To try the experiment of transferring the grain at Port Colborne instead of at Kingston. If you had to take 10,000,000 or 100,000,000 bushels of grain to Montreal, you could do exactly as has been done in years past—take it to Kingston in 75,000 bushel barges, and transfer it there to barges of 30,000 or 40,000 or 50,000 bushels capacity. The hon. gentleman says that has not been successful. He says, I am convinced that we should make a new experiment at Port Colborne at an expenditure of $1,500,000, of having larger boats to carry the grain to Port Colborne, and having it there put into identically the same barges as in past years have carried it from Kingston to Montreal. And the minister makes the astounding statement that his government are going to spend this $1,500,000 when they do not know what difference there will be in the freight. Would any business man plunge into an expenditure of that kind without having any idea of the saving that would be effected ? The only advantage in favour of Port Colborne will be the lessened freight that there may be in carrying grain from Fort William to Port Colborne in 250,000 bushel bottoms against 75,000 bushel bottoms to Kingston. For this expenditure of $1,500,000, what are we to have ? We are to have a basin 400 yards in length and 200 yards in width.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, that is not the basin ; that is the entrance.

Mr. BENNETT. What will the basin be on the inside ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member knows the situation there pretty well. We throw out from the mouth of our canal two projecting piers starting in the form of a funnel. From the side of one of these piers we throw out a couple of cross piers as it were out into the entrance, of sufficient length to enable us to safely receive and tie up the largest crafts that is likely to come down the lakes. They unload there. That is where the elevators will be. From these the grain will be loaded again into the barges which it is anticipated with every confidence will be the mode of carriage from Port Colborne down to Montreal. We have no basin in the sense the hon. gentleman would convey. We have an entrance and ships can get right in, and this breakwater is designed for the purpose of protecting that entrance from the extremely heavy storms which very often occur at that point.

Mr. BENNETT. When you get inside of these basins after you have done this dredging, what will be the depth of water on the inside ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Twenty-two feet. The hon. gentleman has affirmed, over and over again, that every year the steamers employed as freighters on the lakes are increasing in size, and that these large steamers are absorbing the traffic of the lakes. Why do they ? Because it is cheaper to carry tonnage in these large steamers. Every year the number of small steamers is becoming less, and the number of large steamers greater. When large steamers come down in the neighbourhood of Port Colborne, they are compelled of necessity to pass the entrance of that canal and go to Buffalo. And they must continue to go to Buffalo until we make suitable provision for them at Port Colborne. That is as plain as any proposition that can be advanced. The ultimate result, when we will have equipped Port Colborne, will be that these vessels can ride into the entrance of that canal, lie there safely against the winds and the storms, unload their cargoes into the elevators, and we will have secured all this freight for our canals, which we are now losing.

We did not act upon any mere conjecture, but took the opinions of every shipper that could be reached. We took the opinion of every one who is doing business on the Canadian route, and also the opinions of some of those who are doing business by the Buffalo route. I read in this House two years ago a number of these opinions, and all agreed that there is no hope for the future of the St. Lawrence canals unless we put ourselves in a position to handle the cargoes that come down by large steamers. Relying upon the best expert opinion we could obtain, we deliberately came to the conclusion that the only remedy was to put Port Colborne in such a shape that large steamers could be induced to go there.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there not a difference of opinion between the government engineers as to whether Port Colborne or Port Maitland was the best ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We took the opinions of various engineers as to which port was to be preferred. Our engineer was decidedly in favour of Port Colborne. Mr. Thompson had no doubt whatever upon the question. Mr. Keefer said that something had to be done either at Port Colborne or Port Maitland. He was in favour of Port Maitland, and I did the best I could, in view of these conflicting opinions. I had these two gentlemen together, I let them cross-examine one another and cross-examined them myself as well as I could, and applying the best judgment I could to the differences which existed between them, I came to the conclusion, in which I was supported by the concurrent judgment of the chief engineer, that Port Maitland was entirely out of the question. It was a number of miles away, and there were other disadvantages into which I need not now enter.

When the steamers get into Port Colborne, their cargoes will be transferred into elevators, just as they are at Buffalo. At Buffalo they are transferred into elevators, and thence into cars, and this is done at very small charges. Why ? Because they have established an elevator system up to the highest degree of perfection, and there are fifty or sixty elevators at Buffalo. When these same steamers come to Port Colborne, they will have also to transfer their cargoes into elevators and thence into these large barges instead of into railway cars, and we propose to go right through with these barges from Port Colborne to Montreal, just as the trains go right through from Buffalo to New York. My hon. friend says why do you not elevate at Port Colborne, and load into small barges and then elevate again at Kingston ? Or if you take the large barges at Port Colborne, why not load into them and then go to Kingston, and elevate again at Kingston, and transfer into small barges and take these down to Montreal ? But, there would then be two elevating in the one route when you need only have one.

Mr. BENNETT. My contention is, that at present you take a 75,000 bushel barge to Kingston, and you transfer then to any barge that will go through to Montreal. You take your vessel to Kingston and transfer into an elevator, and then into a barge, and on to Montreal. We agree on that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not agree as to the necessity of transferring at Kingston.

Mr. BENNETT. If you take a 75,000 bushel barge——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you do not propose to have your big steamers at Port Colborne, you do not propose to have any business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) simply excludes from our Canadian waters all those large carriers which are the favoured carriers, and wants only small carriers. It is well known that the size of the ships on the lakes is increasing every year. But, he does not want them at Port Colborne, but wants them at Midland.

Mr. BENNETT. They are going there anyway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am just dredging to 22 feet at Midland. Why ? Because it is necessary to have deep water there for these large carriers. My hon. friend wants them at Midland, but not at Port Colborne. That is not very logical in my opinion. My hon. friend is all mixed up.

Mr. BENNETT. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I believe he is. There are two kinds of ships navigating the lakes to-day, ships of small size and ships of larger size—and growing larger every year. We want both kinds. The small ships will continue navigating our canals, but the larger ships will come to Port Colborne. Last year only ten million bushels of grain came by our route. I make this prophecy to the House—that when we have completed our equipment at Port Colborne and Montreal, the Welland canal will carry five times more grain than it does—I believe at least five times more. Large ships cannot go to Port Colborne to-day. Do we want those large ships ? My hon. friend says, no.

Mr. COCHRANE. Nonsense.

Mr. BENNETT. I said nothing of the kind.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He says that practically. If there is no accommodation at Port Colborne the large vessels cannot go there. Is that a fact or is it not ? We know that there is no accommodation and that the large ships cannot go there. And, if the hon. gentleman says we are not to provide the accommodation, that is another way of saying that he does not want the ships to go there. Let us talk plainly. Without necessary accommodation at Port Colborne those vessels will continue to go to Buffalo.

Mr. GERMAN. I have listened for two days to the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), and I have failed to understand his idea. He put before us the other day a proposition to bonus the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Atlantic in order to induce them to carry grain from Midland to Montreal and the seaboard. The proposition he has to-day is that the government should enlarge the Welland canal sufficiently to allow the largest upper lake boats to come to Kingston and tranship the grain there. If that is not his proposition there is no earthly meaning in what he says. The boats that navigate the upper lakes with profit cannot go to Kingston, they cannot get through the Welland canal, unless it is greatly improved. The new aqueduct which was built at Welland cost $700,000, which is to afford navigation of 14 feet. You cannot get a boat drawing 22 feet of water through an aqueduct having a depth of 14 feet. You would need to build a new aqueduct at an expenditure of at least $1,000,000 in order to get these large boats from the upper lakes through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would need to rebuild the canal.

Mr. GERMAN. Yes, you would need to rebuild the canal at an expenditure of $5,000,000 or $10,000,000. It is simply an impossible proposition.

Mr. COCHRANE. Nobody suggested it.

Mr. GERMAN. The hon. gentleman from East Simcoe says, if his language means anything at all, that the transhipping should be done at Kingston——

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for East Simcoe will never be responsible for trying to make the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) understand plain English, I can assure him of that.

Mr. GERMAN. If I have not stated the proposition correctly, then I should much like to know what the proposition is. The hon. gentleman has been talking of transhipping at Kingston. He told us of vessels going through the Welland canal carrying 75,000 bushels of grain and said that these boats should go to Kingston, and the transhipping should be done there into smaller barges for Montreal. I think I am quoting him properly in that, and if I am not I should be glad to have him correct me. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that there are not half a dozen boats going through the Welland canal carrying 75,000 bushels of grain. There is a line in connection with the Vermont Central between Chicago and Ogdensburg carrying 70,000 bushels, but there are not half a dozen carrying 75,000 bushels nor anything like it. The fact is that all the boats navigating the upper lakes with profit are boats drawing from 20 to 22 feet of water. These boats go to Buffalo. The proposition of the government is that the Buffalo harbour is exceedingly congested, and vesselmen are continually saying that they want a harbour at Port Colborne so that they can send their cargoes by that way, and so relieve the congestion at Buffalo. Building a breakwater at Port Colborne will make as good a harbour as there is on Lake Erie. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says he does not believe that a good harbour can be constructed at Port Colborne. Well, he has been there and ought to know the situation ; but I will venture to say that there is no practical engineer in the country who will not admit that, when a breakwater is built at Port Colborne as is proposed by the Minister of Public Works, there will be one of the safest harbours of refuge there that is to be found on Lake Erie.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be a closed harbour.

Mr. GERMAN. And it will be a harbour with 22 feet of water; a harbour into which even the heaviest vessels on the upper lakes can come. They can then go right up to the piers at Port Colborne, transfer their cargoes into vessels drawing 14 feet which will pass through to Montreal. There is no question of doubt in my mind that that will be the route which will carry the grain of the North-west in a very few years hence. There is only one other point I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) and that is that he must put more money into his estimates to put the Welland canal into the condition it ought to be in. It is in no proper condition now, by reason of the curves in it and by reason of the bridges which were built under an antiquated plan. It will be necessary to spend in the neighbourhood of $200,000 to put the Welland canal into a proper condition by the time the breakwater and harbour improvements are made at Port Colborne.

Mr. BRITTON. While the plan of the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works, if carried out, would seem to do away with the large business that is now done at Kingston—and, in so far as it will do that, certainly I, as representative of Kingston, should oppose any such plan—yet, if I understand it aright from the argument that has been brought forward, all this business that is to be done by the transhipment from the very large vessels that will come to Port Colborne in the future is practically new business. It is said that we do not get that business now, and if we had the facilities we could get that business in the future. Now, so far as that may be done, if it does not cost too much, I certainly shall not oppose it. In this estimate is an amount for improving the harbour at Port Colborne. As I said last year, so I say again that irrespective of these very large vessels, a large share of the improvement in the harbour is necessary, both as to dredging and building a jetty or breakwater. Let me tell you how the business is done at the present time. As the member for Simcoe says, a large amount of business has been profitably done for some yars. There are four vessels, at all events, carrying grain from Duluth and Port Arthur direct to Kingston, the Rosedale, the Rosemount, the Algonquin and the Bannockburn. They carry cargoes, in round figures, of 80,000 bushels, if they are loaded up to their full capacity they carry 90,000.

Mr. GERMAN. They cannot go through the canal with that.

Mr. BRITTON. But they go to Port Colborne, drawing from 15 to 17 feet of water. They have to lighten at Port Colborne, and from there the grain is carried to Port Dalhousie by the Niagara Railway, where it is taken on these boats again and carried on to Kingston. I am sorry to say that it is carried at a very high rate over this railway, and I think one thing the government ought to do soon is to take over that railway. To that extent, I am in favour of the proposition that has been so often mentioned in the House, of government ownership of railways. This railway stands at Port Colborne as toll taker on the grain carried from the west to the east, they charge a toll of two cents a bushel. That means that it would pay these boats just about as well to come from Duluth with a cargo of 60,000 bushels as with a cargo of 80,000, because they have to lighten to the extent of 20,000 bushels at Port Colborne, and they have to pay two cents a bushel for carrying that 20,000 bushels the distance from Port Colborne to Port Dalhousie. Therefore, they have to pay $400 for that 20,000 bushels. Now, they could go through on the 4-cent rate from Duluth and Port Arthur to Kingston, and be glad to get it, and probably will have to do so for a good deal less. They have got to pay two cents a bushel for this 20,000 bushels that they lighten. That means that for the 40,000 bushels of grain carried by the canal to Port Dalhousie, they only get as their share two cents a bushel on the whole route from Duluth or Port Arthur to Kingston. That won't pay, as things are at present. So they might as well come down with a 60,000 bushel cargo, and for this reason. They cannot get a 60,000 bushel cargo as easy as they can get an 80,000 bushel cargo. Persons who have grain to carry want as much carried as possible, and therefore it is easier to get an 80,000 bushel cargo from these upper lake ports. Now, these vessels that I have mentioned, each take with them two consorts or lake barges. Each of these lake barges will carry in round figures 50,000 bushels, therefore, each of these boats with its consorts brings down a cargo of 180,000 bushels. The barges do not have to lighten, they can go through the canal drawing no more than 14 feet of water. It is only the steamship that has to lighten, after which she goes through the canal with her 60,000 bushels, takes her barges again at Port Dalhousie, and goes on down the lake. That has been a very profitable business to the railway for some years.

Mr. CLARKE. Do these barges that are towed by the steamer from Fort William to Kingston discharge at Kingston ?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. They do not draw more than 14 feet of water, do they ? Why are they not sent on down to Montreal ?

Mr. BRITTON. Because we want them to go back as soon as they can. The steamship is too big to go down the St. Lawrence, and through the canals profitably. The barges could go through the St. Lawrence canals, but as soon as they are empty, after the discharge of the cargo at Kingston, they go back with the steamer.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that because they are a part of the steamer's outfit ?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the tonnage of these steamers ?

Mr. BRITTON. I cannot tell the tonnage, but they have a carrying capacity of 80,000 bushels. At all events, while they may go down with safety, it is not economical to navigate the St. Lawrence with that class of steamers. They are expensive steamers, and they cannot go down with a full cargo. Of course they have got to be lightened so that they will draw less than 14 feet. If you have only 14 feet in the canal, you cannot load them for 14 feet, they cannot draw that. In order to have safe navigation, you have to have at least one foot of water under the keel of the boat.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have got more than that in the canal, except in the locks.

Mr. GERMAN. A boat will go through a lock with three inches under her keel.

Mr. BRITTON.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have gone through with six inches.

Mr. BRITTON. That is the way, at all events, that grain has been carried. Now you propose to improve Port Colborne to accommodate larger vessels ; vessels that will carry a larger quantity of grain than 80,000 bushels, as high as 250,000, then they will not have to stop at Kingston or Prescott to transfer, but go on straight down to Montreal. Now, two questions arise. One is what kind of vessels are you going to use ? You have either got to have barges, such as we have already, towed with steamships, else you will not have safe navigation of Lake Ontario, because, as the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Calvin) said this afternoon, Lake Ontario is a large lake and requires a very staunch and seaworthy vessel to carry grain safely. The scheme that is before us for improving the harbour at Port Colborne by deepening it, and by building this pier, is something that is needed, even for the present for bringing grain down. Of course it is very rough sometimes at Port Colborne. Even if there is 18 feet of water in the harbour, a vessel drawing 17 feet of water cannot go safely through in rough weather, everybody knows that. Therefore, it requires deepening, and it requires breakwater protection in order to give facilities for the present mode of carrying grain.

I do not want to commit myself, and I do not commit myself to any large scheme of building elevators at Port Colborne, but, generally, the transhipment of grain there for the purpose of the St. Lawrence route, the improvements that are necessary in the harbour and the consequent expenditure of money, are things that are urgently needed. I remember last year that the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) spoke about this Niagara Railway. I do not know whether he submitted it as a scheme or not, but what he did say seemed to me to be most reasonable and ought to have the consideration of the government. Just as much as the want of harbour facilities at Montreal stands in the way of the use of the St. Lawrence route, the Niagara Railway stands in the way of the shipping trade availing itself of the greatest advantages afforded by the Welland canal route. There ought to be something done to reduce the cost there. They are coining money with the quantity of grain that goes down at a two cent rate for such a short distance, elevating it at one end and spouting it out at the other. For this haul of twenty-one miles they get actually half of what the carriers get for bringing the grain down. This is something that ought not to be tolerated, and if nothing better can be done it would not be out of place, considering the large expenditure this country is making in providing transportation facilities, if the government bought out the Niagara road and used it as a link in the transportation system. Our boats have to pay, in addition to this two cents a bushel for lighterage, canal dues of twenty cents a ton, and these are charges imposed on the carrier which reduce his profits to a minimum. This is something worth considering. I do not give it as originating with myself. I think the hon. member for Grenville is entitled to any credit for the suggestion which he made in regard to that railway. Now, I wish to say a word or two in reference to the fourteen foot channel. I read what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said in reference to that fourteen foot channel, and he blamed the transportation companies for rather throwing discredit upon the claim that there is a fourteen foot channel between Kingston and Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say they all did that.

Mr. BRITTON. I do not think it is in the interests of the transportation companies, nor have they any desire, to withhold credit from the government for doing what they have done, but I think they would not say anything in reference to the channel that is not borne out by the facts. There is a fourteen foot channel, but there are places where some money has to be expended to make the fourteen foot channel as it ought to be. It is not enough that there should be a fourteen foot channel just wide enough, or a little bit wider than is sufficient, to allow a vessel to go through. There must be a fourteen foot channel, and it must be so well defined that vessels can navigate it with safety and without the necessity of creeping along that part of the river. I did call attention when the estimates of the Department of Public Works were under consideration before to one point in the river and I will just mention it now. It is no part of the Canadian channel from west to east, but it is a place where you cross over from the Canadian channel to the American channel at the foot of what is known as Long island, the longest island in the St. Lawrence. The channel stretches above and below it, and it requires to be deepened in order to make it a fourteen foot channel. But, hon. gentlemen may say: why do you ask to have that place deepened so as to allow vessels to cross from the Canadian to the American channel. There are two reasons. American boats carrying grain from any American port bound down come up the Canadian channel until they get to that point, and if they want to lighter at Kingston they can do so, if they want to purchase supplies at a Canadian port they can do so, and then they can go over to their own channel and go on down, or, Canadian boats can use the American channel which is a straighter channel between Kingston and half way to Brockville than the Canadian channel is. They are both good channels, but the American is the straighter and the deeper channel and Canadian boats use it. Now, I shall say a word in reference to Montreal. Enough has been said about that port so that I need not take up the time of the committee in stating what the port needs. What it needs now is that something should be done to relieve the carrier from the enormous charges made by the elevator men there. The elevator company are using floating elevators and charging half a cent a bushel for transferring grain at Montreal. They are coining money. I speak in the hearing of some shareholders of that elevator company.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Forty per cent.

Mr. BRITTON. They have made from forty to ninety per cent year after year. Something ought to be done to relieve the carrying trade from such enormous charges. Half a cent a bushel may not seem very much, but it is a good deal when rates are cut as fine as they are now in the carrying trade. If relief is given in that direction immediately before the harbour is equipped, it will be of great assistance to the carrying trade and we can at once begin to increase the traffic by way of the St. Lawrence route. These points suggest themselves to me, and I give them to the committee at this stage.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Chairman, in listening to the discussion here for the last two or three days of the transportation question and the best way of carrying grain to market, I observe that every hon. gentleman who speaks upon it has an object in speaking. He is speaking for his constituency and not keeping in mind the best way of carrying our grain to market. Now, if the government have devised a scheme, if after mature consideration they have concluded that Port Colborne is the best point at which to tranship the grain en route to Montreal, if they have had the advice of the best engineers, I do not think it is right for us to stand and quibble about that amount in the estimates. I notice that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) wants all the trade drawn to the port of Midland. He wants all the vessels to go to Midland, while the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) has a word to say for Kingston. We heard the other evening of the port of Halifax as being the place where the trade should go, and the hon. member for Welland Mr. German), of course, has been standing up for the system adopted by the government. We also heard from Toronto the other day. If the government have a well-devised scheme, and if it is shown that we can carry grain cheaper by adopting that scheme in preference to any other, for pity sake do not let us quarrel about it. Let us pass the estimates and have done with it. I do not want to give the committee any plan because I think the plan which the government have presented is better than any plan which I could put forth, and therefore I cheerfully submit that the estimates should be passed and that we should get value for the money expended.

Mr. MORIN. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) said a short time ago that the distance from Buffalo to New York was 445 miles. I contend that our railroads from Port Colborne to Montreal are as good as the railroads from Buffalo to New York, and our waterway from Port Colborne to Montreal is better than the waterway from Buffalo to New York. Now, why is it that it costs more to handle the grain from Port Colborne to Montreal than it does from Buffalo to New York ?

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). One word more. If the people of Montreal are charging the farmers and the shippers of this country 90 per cent for the use of their elevators, I would not be a bit surprised if Portland were made the outport. The people of Montreal are inducing shippers to leave Montreal by that kind of exaction. I think the Montreal people ought to consider this matter well. I do not make the charge; I want to know if it is true.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must admit that unfortunately it is true that there is a floating elevator company which has exacted very high rates.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). I want you to see to it that they do not do it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I denounced them from my place in this House two years ago. But that state of affairs will not last very long. When we have improved the port of Montreal, we shall have elevators. We have no accommodation in the port of Montreal ; but we are getting it now.

Mr. COCHRANE. How ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained that over and over again ; we are building large piers.

Mr. COCHRANE. You talk so much you do not explain.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want to obtain a little information from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. I do not understand the works at Port Colborne very well. I gather from what the hon. gentleman said that the work which is projected there is a funnel-shaped enlargement of the mouth of the canal, and the side of it is about 1,200 feet long. Is that right ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have a sketch of it which I will show the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask one question of the hon. Minister of Public Works. I think he said that the present cost of carrying a bushel of grain from Buffalo to New York was about 3 cents, and he also said that after these improvements were completed the cost of carrying a bushel from Port Colborne to Montreal would be about 2 cents.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope less.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would, of course, give that route a very decided advantage. What is the hon. minister's data for making that statement ? And perhaps he would tell us what is the present cost of carrying a bushel of grain from Port Colborne to Montreal, so that we may compare the two.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My data is that the Parry Sound Railway is able to carry grain from Parry Sound to Montreal for 3 cents a bushel, and it is making money at that rate.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that mean carrying grain from Parry Harbour to Coteau Landing, putting it into barges there, and conveying it thence to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. I have reason to know that. If the Parry Sound Railway could reach Montreal direct, without the necessity of transhipping at Coteau, I think we should be surprised at the low rate at which it could carry grain to Montreal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Possibly there may be some more immediate connection between the charge of the Parry Sound Railway and the cost by this waterway, than I can at present see. The reason I ask this question is that it seems to be most important to know to what extent we can depend upon the opinion which the hon. gentleman gives to the House. I would also like to ask : does that include, as I understand, the 3-cent rate from Buffalo to New York includes, the terminal charges ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it does.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not know that this discussion was coming on to-night, as I have some statements which I have gathered from reliable sources on the whole subject, and which I intend to have when my estimates come up.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that I am well informed that Mr. Booth carries grain from Duluth and other western points to Montreal for inside of 5 cents a bushel, and I believe it does not cost him more than 1 cent a bushel, or perhaps a trifle more, to carry it to Parry Sound. From Parry Sound to Montreal he can carry for inside of 3 cents a bushel, and make a profit. He has his own terminals at Parry Sound. He should have his own terminals at Montreal. When the government have equipped our canals, and when we have terminals, either our own or terminals which would be under our control, we would be very unfortunate indeed if we were not able to do what the private corporations can do.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister did not answer my question, as to the present cost per bushel of carrying from Port Colborne to Montreal.

Mr. BRITTON. It is rather difficult to answer that question, because there is no rate quoted that I know of from Port Colborne to Montreal. The rate from Kingston to Montreal is 1½ cents per bushel. Then you would have to apportion the rate from western points to Kingston, which is 4 cents.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. member for Kingston could give me the information I desire. I see the difficulty he suggests : the rate to Kingston and the rate from there to Montreal are through rates. Therefore, it is impossible to say, except on a mere estimate, what the rate is from Port Colborne to Montreal. Will the hon. member for Kingston be good enough to explain to me how the rate by the Parry Sound Railway, referred to by the hon. Minister of Public Works, compares with the rate by water through the Welland canal to Montreal ?

Mr. BRITTON. Of course we cannot tell, but we have understood that the rate by rail has been so cut that it is a little under what has been the ordinary rate by water, and that the railways have got business by cutting in that way. While I do not know the exact rate, it is a little under what it has been carried for from Port Arthur to Montreal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is correct in saying that grain would be carried for two cents from Port Colborne to Montreal, it does seem that we might have a possible solution of the difficulty surrounding this grain-carrying trade. If this rate of two cents includes the same charges as the three cent rate from Buffalo to New York, it must give a decided advantage to the Canadian route. Is that what the minister intends to suggest ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister has referred to the Parry Sound Railway, but I do not see the sufficiency of his grounds for stating that the rate from Port Colborne to Montreal would be no more than two cents.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman from Kingston (Mr. Britton) has told us that the rate between Kingston and Montreal would be one cent and a half, and the rate from Port Colborne to Kingston would remain at one-half cent. I may add to that statement, that I have met a great number of American grain shippers as well as Montreal shippers, and their information tends to confirm that statement. The American capitalists who, two years ago, applied for a site in the port of Montreal, gave me valuable information as to the rates at which they could carry grain. Perhaps I may be told that they have not succeeded so far. Mr. Conners, I am sorry to say, has not got along as speedily as he expected, but the House must not forget that if he has not succeeded so far it is because the big monopolies in the United States could kill any individual who would try to fight against them. I know that several times he has succeeded in getting his money, and that every time they got at his men and simply took the life out of him. The information conveyed to me by the most important shippers in the United States was, that they expected to carry grain from Port Colborne to Montreal for two cents, or even less. I, of course, cannot give definite assurances. These rates vary, and when I speak of three cents between New York and Buffalo, that is the average rate, because in some months of the year the rate is higher and in some months lower. But, if by rail they can carry a bushel of grain between Buffalo and New York for three cents, then water transportation being admittedly cheaper, and Canada having a 14 foot canal system, it seems to me that when I estimate a rate of two cents I am making a pretty conservative estimate.

Mr. CLARKE. There are a few words I should like to say before this discussion ends. I agree with the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that we have the best all-water route ; in fact, the only all-water route ; but, there is a disadvantage which is to be found in the length of that route. Now, having spent such a vast sum upon our canal system in making it perfect, if there is a defect at any particular part of our water route, that defect ought to be remedied. There is a defect in the Lake Erie entrance to the Welland canal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) have declared that expert testimony has caused them to come to the conclusion that Port Colborne, rather than Port Maitland, is the best place to make good the defect in this water route. When the matter was under consideration on a previous occasion, I drew the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that at least one of the experts appointed by his department favoured Port Maitland. I presume there is no use discussing that matter any further, because the minister, after the fullest consideration, no doubt, has come to the conclusion that Port Colborne is the proper place, and the government are carrying on the necessary works there to enable vessels of 20 or 22 feet draught to enter Port Colborne and discharge their cargoes there. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has pointed out a fact that cannot be controverted when he stated, that the only advantage that will result to our all-water route by the expenditure of this money is the advantage that will be gained by enabling vessels of a capacity of 250,000 bushels to bring cargoes from the head of Lake Superior to Port Colborne and discharge them there. That is the only advantage, after all, that will be gained, and whether that advantage will be sufficient to offset the disadvantages under which this all-water route labours, I am not prepared to say. The minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) tells us, however, that he hopes—I am sure we all hope that his expectations will be more than realized—that when the works at Port Colborne have been completed, and when large vessels are able to enter the new Port Colborne harbour, he will be able to reduce the rate per bushel for carrying grain from Port Colborne to Montreal to two cents, or a little less. Let me draw the attention of the committee to this fact: that according to the statement which the hon. minister has made, the Canada Atlantic Railway have been bringing grain from Parry Sound to Coteau Landing, a distance of 384 miles by rail, have been discharging it there into elevators, and again transferring it into barges, and bringing it 30 miles thence by water to Montreal, at three cents per bushel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Less.

Mr. CLARKE. Less than three cents per bushel. The minister says that the distance by water from Port Colborne to Montreal is 375 miles, and if I took his figures down correctly, he said there was a distance of 384 miles between Parry Harbour and Coteau Landing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And Montreal.

Mr. CLARKE. It is thirty miles to Montreal from Coteau, and, therefore, the distance from Parry Harbour to Coteau would be 354 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Thirty-eight miles from Coteau.

Mr. CLARKE. At all events, there is a land haul of about 350 miles, and there are two transhipments of grain between Parry Harbour and Montreal, and Mr. Booth has demonstrated the practicability of making a land haul about as long as the distance between Port Colborne and Montreal, transhipping his grain at Parry Harbour, and transhipping it again at Coteau Landing for Montreal, and doing all that at a cost of less than three cents a bushel. Now, in view of this, unless the minister can by these proposed improvements at Port Colborne materially reduce the cost of the carriage of grain to Montreal below two cents per bushel, it seems to me that his expectations cannot be realized from this large expenditure at Port Colborne. The minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) referred this afternoon to the proposition to expend a large sum of money to make North Bay one of the termini on the upper lakes for large steamers coming from the head of Lake Superior. He also spoke of the expenditure which is being made at Port Colborne. I feel very much disappointed that the hon. minister has apparently overlooked the manifold advantages that would accrue to the Canadian government if it had a second bow to its string by the construction, or part ownership, if you will, of a railway specially constructed for the carriage of grain between Collingwood and Toronto.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did allude to it.

Mr. CLARKE. Unfortunately, I must have been absent. I think the hon. gentleman just alluded to it in passing, but it was a mere allusion. I do not think he held out any hope to us that a matter, with respect to which we thought he was so favourably impressed a year or two ago, would receive very much consideration from him at present.

I want to draw attention to the fact that there is practically no difference in point of distance between Port Arthur and North Bay, Midland, Parry Harbour, Collingwood or Owen Sound. They are practically equidistant from Port Arthur. The distance from Port Arthur to Montreal by any of these routes is nearly 300 miles shorter than going round by Port Colborne and the Welland canal, and the most feasible route, it seems to me, that can be developed by the government is the route which will have Collingwood for its lower terminus on the upper lakes. The government are spending a large sum of money in deepening and improving the harbour of Collingwood.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. They have promised, I think, to make a considerable expenditure for the purpose of deepening and improving the harbour at Toronto. I expected to have an affirmative nod from the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will speak by-and-by.

Mr. CLARKE. I had hoped to have some sign of assent from the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. You will have a friendly speech.

Mr. CLARKE. Both these works being accomplished, the distance from the head of Lake Superior to Montreal is reduced to 995 miles as against 1,296 by the all-water route via Port Colborne, thus shortening the distance by 300 miles, and of that distance of 995 miles less than 75 are by land. The entire distance, less about 70 miles, is by water. I need not appeal to the committee that it would be a very great advantage indeed, as supplementing the water route, if the government would give favourable consideration to the proposition to acquire a controlling interest in the road specially to be constructed for the carriage of grain between Toronto and Collingwood. I do not know whether these large freighters that carry grain to Buffalo receive return cargoes or not.

Mr. GERMAN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They take back coal.

Mr. CLARKE. But there would be a great deal more likelihood of vessels running to Collingwood from the head of Lake Superior obtaining return cargoes, if there was a route established from Collingwood to Toronto and from Toronto to Montreal or Quebec. The advantages are so obvious that I do not think I need take up the time of the committee in enumerating them. The hon. the Minister of Public Works has been to Toronto and has given some attention to the matter. He has discussed it with the members of the board of trade and he had the pleasure of listening yesterday to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), who pointed out some of the advantages that would obtain if more consideration were given to the establishment of Canadian marine on the upper lakes and the lower lakes as well. I am perfectly satisfied that if the hon. Minister of Public Works will spend one-half as much time in considering the advantages to be obtained by the people generally from the establishment of this almost direct route for the transport of grain to the seaboard, he will come down—if not in the next supplementary estimates, at the next session—and ask for a grant, not only to deepen the harbour at Toronto, but also for the construction of an air line between Collingwood and the Queen City. It is not unreasonable to ask him, in view of the representations made by both sides of the House and those of the board of trade of Toronto, not to overlook this matter longer, and not to forget the claims of Toronto harbour and the Collingwood and Toronto route. That route will be 300 miles shorter than the all-water route. If the government can afford to spend a million and a half or two millions on what has not passed beyond the experimental stage, it is not unreasonable to ask them to make a moderate expenditure in the harbour of Toronto and on the construction of an air line. These works being completed, we will have the shortest, the most direct and best route from the head of Lake Superior to Montreal.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have much pleasure, Mr. Chairman, in endorsing the strong appeal made by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) on behalf of the short line between Toronto and Collingwood. I had intended to make a few remarks on the motion of my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) yesterday, but owing to the debate having come to the abrupt termination it did by reason of the fact that the hon. member withdrew his motion, I was unable to do so. Nor do I feel that at this juncture it should be necessary to urge on the government the advantages of the Toronto-Collingwood route. Parliament will not forget the struggle which took place in the Railway Committee room last year between two very strong bodies of financial magnates, seeking to obtain a charter of incorporation to build that short line of railway from the Queen City to Collingwood. Could there be a stronger demonstration of the advantages to be gained by that route than the fact that men of such high financial ability should be struggling for a charter to build that line? That in itself appeared to me conclusive evidence of the great benefit such an enterprise would be to our shipping trade and the interests of the country generally. It was unfortunate that the Upper House last year saw fit to prevent the passing of what is known as the Canada National Railway Bill. That Bill passed this House after a struggle, but was defeated in the Railway Committee of the Senate. In my opinion, this country will regret the action of that body. In my opinion, our people will regret that one or the other of the corporations endeavouring to obtain a charter was not given the opportunity of carrying out the promise made by each, that if a charter were given, the first sod on the projected line would be turned within six months. Now the enterprise has been delayed a year, and after a year's delay what do we find? We find practically the same gentlemen coming again to parliament and making renewed applications for a charter, and without expressing any opinion favourable to the one set of financiers as opposed to the other, I do hope that parliament will grant a charter which will enable that short line to be built this year, and I feel confident that just as soon as a charter is granted, that road will be pushed ahead and we will have a link joining the upper with the lower lakes which will give us a route shorter than any other from the great west to the seaboard. We are spending large sums of money on the Welland canal and Port Colborne which, in my humble opinion, might be much better spent on the Toronto and Collingwood route. There is doubtless a certain justification for this government in spending money on the former route. They have this justification, at all events, that their predecessors spent such large sums upon that route that they must keep it in proper condition, and to that extent I am with the government, but they have advanced the further argument that they must put the harbour of Port Colborne in such a condition that it will compete with the harbour of Buffalo. Well, Sir, I have submitted to this parliament and I submit again, that the transhipment at Collingwood would be no more expensive than the transhipment at Port Colborne.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is the mileage of that railway ?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is eighty miles as it goes now, but sixty miles as the crow flies, and through a country easy for railway construction.

Mr. MAXWELL. Watch the crow fly.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend (Mr. Maxwell) says ' watch the crow.' Certainly there are a number of vultures, at any rate, when it comes to distributing public money through different parts of the country. I do not care for the jeers, if we get fair-play. The money should be spent on the best route, and the best route, if you take mileage into consideration, is via Collingwood and Toronto. There is every justification I believe for maintaining the Port Colborne route in its present efficiency; but to squander more money on Port Colborne I hold, is not justified by the information we have. I was going to say that transhipment at Port Colborne will cost no less than at Collingwood and at Port Dalhousie no less than at Toronto. The question is : Is it cheaper to take a vessel through the Welland canal having regard to the delay necessarily involved in canal navigation, or is it cheaper to take a vessel load of grain down by rail ? I submit that it is cheaper to take the load by rail from Collingwood to Toronto than it is to take it through the Welland canal. In Collingwood, I am very glad to say, we have received fair consideration at the hands of the government. We have advanced in our work in a way satisfactory to the citizens of Collingwood, if we are to judge by the votes they have given in the last two elections. The question we are now discussing is not so much the vote at Collingwood as the general question which route should receive the consideration of this government. If you take the mileage there is no doubt about it, it is the shortest. And I submit that with an expenditure of a far less sum than would be necessary to improve Port Colborne harbour, the harbour of Collingwood would be made far better than Port Colborne, and you would then have a complete route, not a waterway I admit, but the transhipment would be the same, and you would have a shorter route which would be in the best interests of the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think I cannot be accused of having overlooked the importance of the air line between Collingwood and Toronto. We are improving Collingwood harbour. The road is not yet built between Toronto and Collingwood. My hon. friend says he has expected a friendly nod from me in reference to Toronto harbour.

Mr. CLARKE. I have been expecting it for some days.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not treated Toronto too badly. We are carrying out large works of improvement there, but we are in the difficult position that at Toronto the two jetties that lead into the inside harbour have been built on a quicksand, and it will be difficult to give much additional depth without incurring a large expenditure. I do not accuse any engineer, especially those who are no more, of having been unwise, but all the same, it is a well known fact that all the harbours in Ontario have been built on a twelve-foot basis. We have to rebuild the whole thing, practically, because the conditions have changed. I fully recognize that the route indicated by my hon. friends would be the shortest route, but I beg of them not to deprecate any other route. There are forty millions of tons of freight originating in the great lakes. There is trade for all the ports. I claim that Georgian Bay is, perhaps, the greatest trade reservior in the world. Collingwood, Owen Sound, Midland, Parry Harbour—all the harbours of Georgian Bay should be equipped so as to receive the trade from the west. I think that if we give our best consideration to the different routes and the ways and means of getting freight for Canada, we might, in a few years, be surprised at the results we were able to achieve. I am always sorry when I hear a member of parliament deprecating any of the Canadian routes. All the roads that lead to the great St. Lawrence route are good. I was accused once of having made a speech in which I was for everybody. Well, I honestly believe that all the ports on Georgian Bay may be great recipients of trade; but I would like that every bushel of grain, every ton of freight carried to these ports should be carried further down to Canadian waters. That is a point we should never lose sight of, and that is the reason why, at times, I feel a little sore about Midland. We are carrying on great works there, but a good deal of the trade which comes from Midland is taken to American ports. If some morning, I can find a way of stopping that and directing the trade to our own ports. I will do it. I do not blame the Grand Trunk Railway, because we have not in Montreal harbour facilities that would justify us in taking strong measures even if we were able to do so. But, when the St. Lawrence is equipped and the port of Montreal is equipped, I do not think that there will be any railway strong enough to take its stand against Canada.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the hon. minister when he expects to have the port of Montreal equipped. I have been listening to a good deal of discussion; and the minister perhaps, thought I was a little rough when I complained that there was more talk than explanation. I did not want to be offensive. But I think the hon. minister will allow me to say that I do not think it helps him to get his estimates through to be talking all the while, instead of giving explanations in a few words. I have no interest in one of these harbours more than in another. My only interest is to see that the money we vote in parliament is expended where it will be best in the interest of the whole country. I do not care whether it is Midland, Collingwood, Port Colborne, Parry Sound or any other port. When the whole case comes to be summed up, it seems to me that the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Public Works are competing with Mr. Booth and that it is Mr. Booth who is lowering the rates and not our canal system. Our canals are not carrying the grain to-day, as I understand it, as cheaply as Mr. Booth is carrying it by his railway to Montreal. What does that prove? It proves that, after you get your great improvements at Port Colborne completed, after you complete your Welland canal, after you get your great equipment at Montreal, Mr. Booth is going to carry the grain.

Now, the Minister of Public Works says that it is because Port Colborne is not properly equipped that there is a falling off in the amount of grain carried through the Welland canal. I do not see it that way. It is because Mr. Booth is carrying grain cheaper than you can carry it by waterway, and he is carrying grain that formerly went through the Welland canal. The hon. gentleman shakes his head; but will he tell me there is not as much grain carried to the seaboard now as there used to be? Will the Minister of Public Works take the ground to-night that there are as many bushels of grain carried to the seaboard as formerly? Either he must take that ground, or admit the fact that the Booth railway is carrying grain that used to go through the Welland canal.

Now, I do not understand the contention between the member for Simcoe on the one hand and the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways and Canals on the other. The Minister of Public Works is fighting for this principle, that if he can get the amount of money spent at Port Colborne that he wishes, he is going to have a larger class of vessels, carrying 250,000 bushels, coming to Port Colborne that are now going to Buffalo. By doing so he thinks that he is going to reduce the rate of carrying that grain down to Montreal. Now, the member for Simcoe and the member for Kingston recall a fact to my mind that has not been controverted. Men are bringing grain to-day from Lake Superior down with vessels carrying 80,000 bushels, and each vessel has two consorts carrying 50,000 each, or 180,000 bushels altogether. They are now bringing this grain to Port Colborne. But the difficulty is that an 80,000-bushel vessel cannot get through the locks, therefore, she has to be lightened at Port Colborne, and the grain taken off is carried by railway down to Port Dalhousie, and then taken on again. Now, is it not a fact that this class of vessels do not pay under these circumstances? That fact has not been controverted by the member for Kingston. Grain has to be transhipped at Port Colborne and Port Dalhousie before it can be sent down to Montreal, that is a portion of it. How are you going to overcome that fact? You have to have a better class of vessels to carry freight from Port Colborne to Kingston than a class that will pay to take it from Kingston to Montreal. There is the difficulty. If the hon. gentleman succeeds I shall be very glad of it, but I do not think, with the data we have at hand, he is going to effect the saving he expects. I do not think it is prudent to go on and spend the enormous sums of money that he has in view, because I do not think that prospects will justify the expenditure. I may say this to the Minister of Public Works. He is a younger man than I am, and if he takes care of his health and does not get too excited, he will live to see the grain of the great North-west carried out by railway, and the canal system will only serve to keep the rates down to a proper level. That is what Mr. Booth is doing now. I am here to add my testimony of respect to Mr. Booth, for I believe his line is going to be one of the most important lines of railway in Canada for the transportation of grain from the North-west to the port of Montreal. Instead of spending so much money at Port Colborne, to my mind, it would be better to equip the harbour of Montreal so that you can handle the grain there, and not rob the people that are trying to get grain to the seaboard.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to point out to the minister that the works that are being done at Toronto are works for the preservation of Toronto island. Those works are being carried on as the result of an agreement entered into years ago between the government and the city of Toronto. The government took the extraordinary position that before they would construct the necessary works for the preservation of the island, which, of course, makes the harbour of Toronto, the municipality should be called upon to contribute a portion of the cost, and the municipality did contribute $100,000 towards the construction of the works that were necessary to maintain Toronto island. Now, the other work that we are asking the minister to provide for is a work that has been rendered necessary because of the action of the government. They acted, I presume, upon the advice of their responsible engineer. They thought the deviation of the course of the Don, which enters Toronto harbour, would help to cleanse the harbour of Toronto, and that it would remain as deep as it was before the deviation took place ; but instead of having that effect, the mud that is carried down in the spring and fall freshets has been deposited in the harbour, with the result that it is being continually made shallower.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is not that largely caused by the straightening done by the municipality of what was formerly a circuitous river going slowly down to the bay, and not depositing its silt in the bay at all ? The municipality, I understand, straightened it and enabled it to flow straight down.

Mr. CLARKE. Evidently the hon. gentleman cannot stand very high in the engineering profession, otherwise he would know that the widening and straightening of the channel rendered freshets an impossibility. There is no such a thing as a freshet in the Don since this great channel has been constructed ; but we have made a reservoir for the deposit of mud and silt that come down in the spring and fall, at a cost of half a million dollars. The municipality has provided a dumping ground for this silt in the new channel of the river. The point I want to make is this, that the city of Toronto is so reasonable in its request to the government that the government ought not to withstand the request any longer. The request of the city of Toronto is, that the damage to the harbour, which has been partially filled up—the eastern part of it, practically, wholly filled up—as a result of the government works undertaken on the advice of the government engineers, should be undone by the government.

The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) drew the attention of the House to the fact that Toronto is a greater distributing point actually than the city of Montreal ; and I am sure that the representatives of Toronto heartily sympathize with the Minister of Public Works in his desire to build up an all-Canadian route, and to secure as much trade as possible for our Canadian channels. I want to point out to the minister that if the harbour of Toronto is deepened to enable vessels of the full capacity of the St. Lawrence canals to come in, there will be a stronger competitor secured for the producers and consumers of this country against the railways than by any other policy that can be adopted. If the Collingwood and Toronto route is established, as I am sure it must be, for it will continue to press itself upon the attention of the government, vessels drawing 14 feet of water can proceed from Toronto to Montreal and Quebec during the season of navigation, and they are more likely to get full return cargoes back again to Toronto than to any other possible point. Mr. Booth, in bringing grain from Duluth and Port Arthur down to Montreal, had to find return freights for his cars. Vessels coming to Port Colborne, large freighters, that discharge their cargoes there, will have great difficulty in finding return cargoes to bring back to Port Arthur and Port William. But, with a line of vessels running from Toronto to Montreal or Quebec there is a greater probability of return cargoes being obtained through the entire season of navigation than by any other proposition which has been submitted. Now, I can point to the fact that the work being done in Toronto is done because of a contract made in good faith between the government and the city years ago. The work that we are asking to be done is to repair the damage which has been caused to the harbour of the city of Toronto, because of the action of the government and the government engineers in diverting the channel of the Don years ago. Surely this proposition is so reasonable that we may look for a substantial appropriation in the supplementary estimates of the hon. Minister of Public Works to have this work commenced and carried out to completion as speedily as possible. Estimates have been voted by the House before, but so far practically nothing has been done. May I appeal to the hon. minister that there shall be no further unnecessary delay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say, first, that I do not feel inclined to admit all the wrongs that the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) says have been committed by the government. I will not place the question on that ground at all, because I think we might not agree. But, I will say of Toronto, what I have said of all the other points. If the air line between Collingwood and Toronto, after full investigation, is proved to be a practical line, if transhipping grain twice, once at Collingwood and again at Toronto, is not a barrier against that route, in spite of Toronto's failings, I would be very much inclined to do anything I could to help it, because, in questions like this with me here, there are no party politics. I hope that the House will share my views upon that. Montreal, Toronto—all points that can be made reservoirs of Canadian trade should be placed above party politics. But, I do not know that the hon. member for Toronto will rise in his place and say that the question has been investigated fully as to whether the problem of the construction of 80 miles of railway, the transhipping at Collingwood and transhipping at Toronto, has been solved.

Mr. CLARKE. I will draw the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that it has been solved by Mr. Booth. He transhipps from large freighters at Parry Harbour to cars, he carries the grain in cars down to Coteau Landing, he there transfers it from the cars into barges and sends it down to Montreal, and he does it for three cents a bushel. The difference in favour of the route which we advocate, as against Mr. Booth's route is, that, whereas there are 350 miles of haul by land that Mr. Booth has to perform and 30 by water, there is a haul of only 70 miles by land and of 300 miles by water by the Toronto-Collingwood route, and there are no more transhipments to be made.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But, the hon. gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that Mr. Booth's transhipment at Coteau Landing is only a temporary one. I may say that if Mr. Booth did not contemplate having a direct communication with Montreal perhaps he would not have tried to accumulate as much trade as he has done, but the Grand Trunk Railway were simply asking him to pay $150,000 a year to carry his grain to Montreal. He had to do something else and he has built an elevator at Coteau and is transhipping there. It is only a temporary arrangement, while transhipment twice will be a permanent feature of the air line. Speaking for myself, I would like, before we are too old, to have expert testimony as to the feasibility of that plan. The government are open to argument. If I were not a minister perhaps I would speak a little more freely, but, of course, if I were to say too much, I would be accused of wanting to spend a large amount of money, I have notions of my own. I would like to see the trade of this country developed to the greatest possible extent before I die, and before I go to heaven with all the hon. members here. In other words, I would like if the country would do now what is to be done even if we have to spend some money. Some millions, more or less, do not amount to much provided they are spent with prudence, with care and with intelligence.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. minister passes to a better world before he has completed the reasonable works that we require at Toronto, and assisted in the construction of the Collingwood-Toronto route, I think he would regret it for all ages.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps it would be better for the hon. minister to get his estimates passed and go to bed instead of going to heaven.

Mr. INGRAM. There are a few things that I cannot understand and one is this: The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) says that it is not the government's intention to either widen or deepen the canal between the entrance of Port Colborne and the other end of the canal because the cost of such work would amount to several millions. On the other hand, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) says that boats arrive at Port Colborne with cargoes of 80,000 bushels that they have to lighten to 60,000 bushels in order to pass through the canal. The government say that their object is to bring in vessels bearing 250,000 bushels of grain to Port Colborne harbour, and in order to do that they have to build a breakwater at a cost of $3,950,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is for the whole work, not the breakwater.

Mr. INGRAM. The total cost of the whole work is to be $5,000,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, no.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood two years ago that the object of enlarging the canal was for the purpose of building elevators, enlarging the entrance of the canal, &c., and that this work would cost in the neighbourhood of $5,000,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, no.

Mr. INGRAM. Very well; we will let that pass. The entrance of the canal is to be between 500 and 1,000 feet wide, 22 feet deep and 1,200 feet long. What is the object of expending this large sum of money at the entrance of Port Colborne harbour to bring in vessels carrying 250,000 bushels of grain, when it is now necessary to reduce cargoes from 80,000 to 60,000 bushels to enable vessels to pass through the canal? If it is the case that we have to pay high rates for grain passing over the Port Colborne and Niagara Railway, if the company controls the rates, if the government cannot bring that company under control sufficiently to reduce the rates and increase the amount of grain coming into that harbour, what benefit will Canada gain by expending this large sum of money in order to bring larger cargoes into Port Colborne harbour without being able to put larger cargoes through the canal than are now able to pass through it? Will the hon. minister explain that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained that matter over and over again.

Mr. INGRAM. I will put it plainer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand the case, but I have answered at least a dozen times. The object of building the breakwater at Port Colborne is to allow the big ships that are carrying the grain to Buffalo to come to our Canadian harbours and unload there as they do at Buffalo. There will be a fleet of steamers and barges of less capacity which will take that grain at Port Colborne down to Montreal. That is the object in two words.

Mr. INGRAM. That implies that these boats that come to Port Colborne are not to pass through the canals.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some will and some will not.

Mr. INGRAM. But none will that exceed 60,000 bushels capacity. I have not heard any description as to what distance the breakwater is to be from these piers, and what distance these piers are to be extended into the lake. I know something of the harbours on Lake Erie, and I know the difficulties experienced in Lake Erie harbours at the present time. I know that at Port Stanley and Port Burwell, that there is a great difference in how you build the piers. If the arms extend in a funnel-shape as it is proposed here, and if the breakwater does not prevent the sand from washing in between these piers, you will be no better off than in the other harbours on Lake Erie. The western piers have to be extended a certain distance beyond the eastern piers in order to prevent the sand coming in.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no sand there; it is solid rock bottom.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not saying that there is, and I am not saying that there is not, but I do know that this is the difficulty in other harbours on Lake Erie, and that the government of Canada have expended thousands of dollars in dredging out the harbours because the breakwaters do not keep out the sand, and in view of that, very great care should be exercised at Port Colborne where there is so much money to be expended. I am not finding any fault with Port Colborne. Like my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), I am willing that any harbour in Canada shall be improved if it is in the best interests of the country to do so. My hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German) said that this would make a great harbour of refuge. Well, in view of the large amount of money expended on it, it ought to make a fine harbour of refuge. Before sitting down I wish to compliment the Minister of Public Works for the interest he has taken in the harbours at Port Stanley and Port Burwell. We know that Lake Erie is a shallow lake, and that there is danger on it from storms, and I believe that a judicious expenditure of money now will place these harbours in such shape that vessels in distress within reasonable distance of them will be able to find refuge.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. BRITTON. I wish to refer to a question which was asked me earlier in the discussion by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden). I spoke from memory, and after he asked me the question I telephoned to the general manager of the transportation company, and his reply to me is that they carried grain from Kingston to Montreal last year for 1⅜ cents, which, of course, includes the elevator charges at Kingston. He said that if he was asked to make a rate from Port Colborne to Montreal, although there is no such rate made at present, it would probably be 2⅜ cents; perhaps 2½ cents.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps less.

Mr. CALVIN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) say that that includes the transferring charges at Kingston.

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. CALVIN. Does it include any of the elevating charges at Montreal?

Mr. BRITTON. I think not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These charges will disappear in Montreal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) for the information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will take up the votes for public buildings, as there are no controversial items, they being all old votes.

Mr. WILSON. There are some controversial items; there are votes for immigration buildings at St. John and Halifax and Quebec, which will require some explanation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All these items will come up in the supplementaries.

Mr. WILSON. I know that, but we must have the information when they are being passed by the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We have been going on with about thirty members in the House for the last three hours, and perhaps it would not be expedient to go further.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is only to make progress.

Halifax, new public building..... $25,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to ask for some information in regard to this vote. The site for this building was purchased some time ago, and there is urgent need for immediately extending the accommodation required by the Dominion offices at Halifax. The item of $25,000 would not be nearly enough for the purpose of erecting such a building. I would like to learn from the minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) what is the cause of the delay in connection with the erection of the building, and if it is the policy of the government to erect it, why is it that we have not a vote which would be sufficient to make substantial progress, and if possible, complete it during the ensuing year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am just asking parliament to place at my disposal the sum of $50,000; this sum of $25,000 was voted at last session of parliament. We had a great many buildings to erect all over the country. We were just completing in Halifax a large drill hall. Perhaps we have not gone as fast as some of our friends expected us to go, but my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) may rest assured that no time will be lost now. I think I speak the views of my colleagues when I say that the government intends to erect in Halifax a building worthy of that capital. We consider that Halifax is one of the most important cities in Canada. It is a kind of Imperial city. Without spending too much money, I hope that the new building will be a credit to Canada and to the city of Halifax. I understand that the plans are now completed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There has been a great deal of delay already. I remember last spring arguing an appeal to the Exchequer Court from a decision with respect to the expropriation for the site which had taken place a great many months before.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was not expropriated; it was purchased. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) is referring to some other property. The city market building was not expropriated. I know it was purchased, because I negotiated the purchase for my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte.)

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The term 'expropriation' is, perhaps, not technically correct, but there was a question of the interest of one of the parties. The money was paid into the Exchequer Court, and it was practically dealt with by the Exchequer Court in the same way as if it had been expropriated. However, that is immaterial. The question is: what is the date when the site was acquired, what is the cause of the delay which has since taken place, and what delay will there be before the building is constructed? It is very nice to know that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) regards the city in so favourable a light as an Imperial city, and so forth, but still that does not help us so much with respect to the advancement of this building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can only say that no time will be lost. I do not want to plead illness, but my hon. friend knows that I have been away from this country through illness. No time will be lost now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not press my hon. friend in that aspect of the matter of that kind, but I would suppose that this would be dealt with by the engineers and the permanent officers of his department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, no time will be lost now.

Mr. WILSON. What is this building intended for? Those of us who are not acquainted with the city of Halifax do not know much about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The building is intended chiefly for a customhouse, and also for other offices. There has been no public building for that purpose erected in Halifax since confederation. The public offices, so far as it is possible to accommodate them, are in a building erected before confederation, and with the growth of business it has been necessary to hire offices in different parts of the city. For example, the Assistant Receiver General's office is a hired appartment in one part of the city, and there are various offices connected with the customs and inland revenue scattered over the city. The object of this vote is to provide for these in one building. The present building is chiefly used for customs and post office, and both these departments need better accommodation.

Mr. WILSON. What will be the probable cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I stated, on a previous occasion, that if the building cost over $150,000 we would again communicate to the House. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has told me since, that he feels that a building of a proper character for the city could not be erected for less than $200,000, and that is one of the reasons why I have not felt like pressing my hon. friend to award the contract, because I had given assurances that in case it cost more than $150,000, the matter would be mentioned again in parliament. Up to the present time no contract has been awarded.

Mr. WILSON. This is a small vote for a building of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The building will occupy some time in erecting.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Does the $200,000 include the site?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The site was paid for by a special vote of $25,000. I fancy this will not include the site.

St. John immigration building $11,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the building.

Mr. WILSON. I wish the minister to explain what kind of building is in St. John now, what great necessity there is for this new building, and what it is to cost. I do not want to enter into a general discussion of our immigration policy, but I feel that we are spending a great deal more money in that direction, and this vote will be charged to another account than immigration.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that we have no accommodation whatever at that port now. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) knows, St. John is one of the winter ports of Canada, and it is out of the question to try and bring immigrants there unless we have accommodation. The cost of the building will range between $25,000 and $30,000, and it will have to be equipped as a good immigration building should be equipped.

Mr. WILSON. Was there anything spent out of the vote last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. WILSON. It is wonderful how you got along so many years without an immigration building there. I find from the returns that the number of immigrants landing at St. John is not very large. The people who travel to St. John are usually tourists and such.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All the same, if we are going to have a fast line, as I hope we will have, we must have an immigration building there surely.

Mr. WILSON. Is it the intention of the government to have large immigration buildings at all the ports ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not all the ports.

Mr. WILSON. Is there not one in Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have one in Halifax and one in Quebec.

Mr. WILSON. You are building one in St. John, and have you not one in Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have none in Montreal.

Mr. WILSON. It is strange you should want one in St. John and none in Montreal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The people of Montreal are very moderate in their demands, and they have taken care of their immigrants up to the present.

Buckingham building	$7,000
Drummondville public building	9,000

Mr. WILSON. What did these public public buildings cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The one at Drummondville will cost just $14,000, with furniture and everything complete ; and the Buckingham building will cost $15,000, with furinture. They will just cost what is in the estimates for them.

Some resolutions reported.

QUESTIONS.

PICTOU, N.S., MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BELL (Pictou)—by Mr. Clarke—asked :

1. What postmasters in the county of Pictou have been dismissed since November 6, 1900, and who have been appointed to fill vacancies so created?

2. What contracts for carriage of mails to or from points in the county of Pictou, have been made since November 6, 1900?

3. In how many cases and for what sums have these been made without advertising for tenders?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. I beg to reply :

2 & 3. The following contracts or agreements for carrying mails to or from points in the county of Pictou have been made since the 6th November, 1900 :—

MOUNTAIN ROAD AND RIVER JOHN.

Semi-weekly—4 miles.

This contract having expired on the 31st December, 1900, notices were issued on the 15th October, 1900, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 23rd November for a new contract for four years from the 1st January, 1901, and the tender of Robert Holt at $33, being the lowest, was accepted.

BARNEY'S RIVER AND RAILWAY STATION.

Semi-daily—4½ miles.

Notices were issued on the 13th November, 1896, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 25th December, 1896, for a new contract for four years, to date from the 1st January, 1897, and the tender of A. Murray at $140.85, being the lowest, was accepted. Mr. Murray's contract having expired on the 31st December last, and it having been reported to me that the service had been satisfactorily performed and the conditions advantageous to the public interest, acting under the provisions of section 2 of clause 61 of the Postal Act, I authorized the renewal of this contract with Mr. Murray for a further term of four years, from the 1st January, 1901.

KING'S HEAD AND NEW GLASGOW.

Tri-weekly—7½ miles.

Notices were issued on the 18th December, 1896, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 5th February, 1897, for a new contract for four years to date from the 1st April, 1897, and the tender of N. McKenzie at $150, being the only one received, was accepted. Mr. McKenzie's contract will expire on the 31st March next, and it having been reported to me that the service has been satisfactorily performed, and the conditions advantageous to the public interest, and acting under the provisions of section 2 of clause 61 of the Postal Act, I authorized the renewal of this contract with Mr. McKenzie for a further term of four years, from the 1st April, 1901.

MEIKLEFIELD AND MAIN POST ROAD.

Semi-weekly—2 miles.

Notices were issued on the 18th September, 1896, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 6th November, 1896, for a new contract for four years to date from 1st January, 1897, and the tender of D. Meiklefield at $18, being the lowest, was accepted. Mr. Meiklefield's contract expired on the 31st December, 1900, and it having been reported to me that the service had been satisfactorily performed, and the conditions advantageous to the public interest, and acting under the provisions of section 2 of clause 61 of the Postal Act, I authorized the renewal of this contract with Mr. Meiklefield for a further term of four years, from the 1st January, 1901.

MEADOWVILLE STATION AND SUNDRIDGE.

Tri-weekly—4 miles.

Notices were issued on the 18th December, 1896, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 5th February, 1897, for a new contract for four years, to date from the 1st April, 1897, and the tender of G. Clark at $69, being the lowest, was accepted. Mr. Clark's contract will expire on the 31st March next, and it having been reported to me that the service has been satisfactorily performed, and the conditions advantageous to the public interest, and acting under the provisions of section 2 of clause 61 of the Postal Act, I have authorized the renewal of this contract with Mr. Clark for a further term of four years, from the 1st April, 1901.

HODSON AND RIVER JOHN.

Tri-weekly—10 miles.

Notices were issued on the 18th December, 1896, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 5th February, 1897, for a new contract for four years, to date from the 1st April, 1897, and the tender of W. Gammon at $69, being the lowest, was accepted. Mr. Gammon's contract will terminate on the 31st March, 1901, and acting under section 58 of the Postal Act, which provides that the Postmaster General may, in special cases, enter into contracts under $200 by private agreement, if he conceives that the public interest will be promoted by such a course, I have authorized that a contract be made with Mr. John Ritchie, on the same terms and conditions, for a further term of four years, from the 1st April, 1901.

RIVER JOHN AND RAILWAY STATION.

Semi-daily—1 mile.

Notices were issued on the 18th December, 1896, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 5th February, 1897, for a new contract for four years to date from the 1st April, 1897, and the tender of W. Gammon at $39, being the lowest, was accepted. Mr. Gammon's contract will terminate on the 31st March, 1901, and acting under section 58 of the Postal Act, which provides that the Postmaster General may, in special cases, enter into contracts under $200, by private agreement, if he conceives that the public interest will be promoted by such a course, I have authorized that a contract be made with Mr. John Ritchie on the same terms and conditions, for a further term of four years, from the 1st April, 1901.

BLUE MOUNTAIN AND NEW GLASGOW.

Daily—15½ miles.

This contract being about to expire on the 31st December, 1900, inquiries were set on foot as to the best arrangement for the service in the future, and as these were not completed when the contract expired, a temporary agreement was made under section 62 of the Post Office Act, with the former contractor, at the lowest rate which could be obtained, viz.: $400 per annum, and notices were issued on the 4th January, 1901, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 22nd February, 1901, for a new contract for four years, from 1st April, 1901. The lowest tender has been accepted, subject to inquiry as to the competency of the party tendering.

NEW GLASGOW AND TRENTON.

Semi-daily—1½ miles.

Notices were issued on the 18th September, 1896, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 5th November, 1896, for a contract for four years, from the 1st January, 1897, and the tender of J. W. Church at $149, being the lowest, was accepted. Mr. Church's contract having expired on the 31st December, 1900, and it having been reported to me that the service was satisfactorily performed, and advantageous to the public interest, acting under the provision of section 2 of clause 61 of the Postal Act, I authorized a renewal of this contract with Mr. Church for a further term of four years, but Mr. Church having declined to enter into a new contract for four years, was willing to continue temporarily on the same terms and conditions until permanent arrangements were made, and the department arranged with him accordingly.

The matter is at present engaging the attention of the department.

PICTOU AND PICTOU LANDING.

Daily—1¼ miles.

This contract being about to expire on the 31st December, 1900, inquiries were set on foot as to the best arrangement for the service in the future. These were not completed when the contract expired. A temporary agreement was made under section 62 of the Post Office Act, with the former contractor, at the lowest rate which could be obtained, viz. : $197.80 per annum.

The matter is still engaging the attention of the department.

SCOTSBURN STATION AND WEST BRANCH RIVER JOHN.

Daily—14 miles.

This contract having expired on the 30th June, 1900, notices were issued on the 13th April, 1900, inviting tenders to be received at the department on the 25th May, 1900. The lowest tender was that of W. A. Berry at $420 per annum. This was considered by the department too high, and the inspector was instructed to obtain a lower rate. The inspector reported that Mr. Berry would not reduce his tender, and that he could not obtain a lower rate, and the contract having expired on the 30th June, a temporary agreement was made under section 62 of the Post Office Act with Mr. Rae, the contractor, at $415, the lowest sum for which the service could be obtained, and on the 6th December, the tender of Mr. Berry at $400 per annum was accepted. Mr. Berry declined the contract on the ground that he was not in a position at that time to undertake the service. Mr. Rae, who had been carrying on the service for $414, since the expiration of the contract on the 30th June, refused to go on after the 31st December, unless he was paid at the rate of the tender he made to the department in May, that is, $445 per annum, and he has been paid at that rate since that time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not notice that the hon. gentleman answered the first paragraph of the question.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that was answered on a previous occasion, but this being a matter involving a good deal of preparation, was held over. The answer to the first part will be found in 'Hansard.'

MAIL SERVICE—CLARENCEVILLE AND LACOLLE STATION.

Mr. POPE—by Mr. Ingram—asked :

Why does the mail carrier to and from Clarence village and Lacolle station receive $93 a year more than his tender reads for?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. The contractor for the mail service between Clarenceville and Lacolle railway station is not paid anything more than the amount for which he tendered for the service. This service was last up to tender in 1898, notices being issued on the 15th July, and tenders due to be opened on the 26th August. The service is daily each way over a route four miles in length, and the rate paid prior to that period was $240 a year. The only tender received was from Mr. M. J. Burwort at $313 a year. The department regarding this tender as too high, directed the inspector to see if a lower rate could possibly be obtained. The inspector after inquiry reported that no lower rate could be obtained, the tenderer explaining that he had to pay fifty cents per day, or $156.60 a year, for tolls. The inspector, also, stated that every effort had been made to secure offers for the service, since, besides posting up the notices in all public places, all those likely to tender were notified by him directly of the bidding ; but as the only tenderer was the late contractor, who enjoyed the confidence of the public, no person desired to bid against him. The inspector also reported that there was a railway in course of construction which would pass near Clarenceville and might affect the mail service, and he recommended that instead of a regular contract a temporary agreement be made with Mr. Burwort at the rate of his tender, viz. : $313 a year, which was done. The service is still being carried on under the terms of that agreement.

COLONIZATION OF ABANDONED LANDS, MANITOBA AND N.W.T.

Mr. DOUGLAS—by Mr. McCreary—asked :

1. What steps, if any, have been taken by the government during 1899 and 1900 to bring the abandoned lands of Manitoba and the North-west Territories now in the hands of colonization companies into the market for sale or settlement by homestead entry ?

2. What number of patents have been issued by the Department of the Interior to these companies during the years 1899 and 1900?

3. What special difficulty stands in the way of issuing such patents?

4. What amount of such land has by the action of the Interior Department during these years been made liable to taxation?

5. Will any action be taken by the government this session so to amend section 44 of the Dominion Colonization Act, so as to enforce the provisions of the same in all colonization companies and thus protect the interests of the settlers and the rights of the Crown?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1. The government, in order to bring the abandoned lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, now in the hands of companies or individuals who have made advances to persons, under clause 44 of the Dominion Lands Act, into the market for sale or settlement by homestead entry, has notified such companies and individuals that under the provisions of the said Act they are bound to place a bona fide settler on such homestead by the sale thereof to such settler or otherwise within two years from the date of such patent, and in default of so doing within the said period shall be bound and obliged, on demand, to sell the said homestead to any person willing to become a bona fide settler thereon, for such sum of money as is sufficient to pay the amount of such charge and interest, and the expenses incurred by the patentee in obtaining such patent and in retaining the homestead.

The department has notified the persons interested in pursuance of the condition named, which, in case of refusal will mean the absolute forfeiture of the property and all claims thereon, and of the patent or other title thereto.

2. Ninety-four patents, covering an area of 15,040 acres, to the several companies and individuals authorized under clause 44 of the Dominion Lands Act.

3. There is no special difficulty. The department requires a statutory declaration showing a compliance with the terms of the Act before taking steps to issue patent.

4. It is assumed that all the lands patented are liable to taxation.

5. It is not thought advisable, in view of the fact that advances were made to the settlers under its provisions, to amend the Act this session, but it is the intention of the department to take necessary steps to enforce a compliance with the conditions referred to.

MURRAY AND ROSS—LIQUOR PERMIT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

Referring to the following letter :—

Ottawa, April 20, 1900.

To the Chief License Inspector, Dawson City.

Sir,—Messrs. Murray and Ross have satisfied me that they are the holders of a permit from Mr. Ogilvie under which they purchased liquor for shipment, and that in accordance with the rule adopted they are entitled to take in the amount purchased. You will therefore be good enough to admit for this firm 6,400 gallons liquor under proof, on payment of the fees provided by law.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) JAMES SUTHERLAND,
Acting Minister of the Interior.

1. What are the full names of Messrs. Ross and Murray?

2. What was the date of the 'permit from Mr. Ogilvie' ?

3. What amount of liquor did the permit from Mr. Ogilvie cover?

4. By what means did Messrs. Murray and Ross satisfy the acting Minister of the Interior that they were holders of a permit, as stated?

5. Did correspondence take place on the subject?

6. If correspondence took place, why has it not been brought down to this House, as ordered on 12th February, 1901?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1 and 2. The department has no record of the full names of Messrs. Ross and Murray, or of the date of the permit from Mr. Ogilvie.

3. Ten thousand gallons.

4. Statement was made to the acting minister which satisfied him of the facts as set out in the letter.

5 and 6. There is no correspondence on the subject.

PERMIT TO H. J. LOCKYER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

Referring to letter of September 1, 1900, of acting Minister of the Interior to license inspector, Yukon territory—

1. On what ground was this permit given to Mr. H. J. Lockyer?

2. Was there any correspondence between the applicant and the department respecting the permit?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1. This permit was granted to Mr. H. J. Lockyer, because the acting minister in his discretion considered Mr. Lockyer a proper person to receive it.

2. No.

DEPOT HARBOUR BREAKWATER.

Mr. McCORMICK—by Mr. Ingram—asked:

Who has been awarded the contract for construction of locks or breakwater at Depot Harbour?

What is the price of lowest tenderer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte). No contract has been awarded yet.

LIGHTKEEPER, MUSQUASH ISLAND, N.B.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Is G. W. McDonald lightkeeper at Musquash Island, Queen's county, N.B.?

2. If not, when was he dismissed, and for what reason?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In the absence of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies), I would give the answer as follows :

1. No.

2. Mr. Whitfield McDonald, keeper of the light at Musquash island, N.B., was dismissed by order in council, dated 19th January last, because he was an exceedingly offensive political partisan.

YUKON—GAMBLING HOUSES AND DISREPUTABLE SALOONS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

1. Is the following letter authentic?

Dear Sir,—I have read a good many complaints, most of them of a private character, in regard to the fact that women of bad repute are permitted to be employed in the bar-rooms and drinking places, where they are used for the purpose of decoying people into such places, and in regard to the lack of effort in suppressing gambling; it is also charged that the fact of fining gamblers is indirectly a license to them to continue their operations. I have not heretofore interfered in this matter, because it seemed to me that yourself, the commanding officer of the Mounted Police, should have been able to decide on what ought to have been done, but from information which I have received, it seems to me that a considerable increase in stringency is required. I see no reason why what is known as dancing halls, but which are in reality, as I understand it, bar-rooms with women selling liquor, should not be summarily suppressed. The same remark applies to the systematic and open gambling. I desire, therefore, that you will take the necessary steps to carry out these views without delay.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the commanding officer of the Mounted Police, with whom, no doubt, you will require to consult, but who will be directly charged with the carrying out of the above instructions. It would be just as well for you, after the receipt of this letter, to intimate that the matter has been considered, and a resolution has been arrived at on the above lines, so that the people generally will understand what is going to be done, and govern themselves accordingly.

Yours truly,

CLIFFORD SIFTON,
Minister of the Interior.

(a) If so, what is its date?

(b) Has any report been received showing what action has been taken on said letter?

(c) If such report has been received, will steps be taken to cause it to be laid before the House ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1. A letter to the effect of that set out was written by me to Mr. Ogilvie. It is not quoted with absolute correctness.

(a) Date of letter 14th August, 1900.

(b) A report has been received from the commanding officer of the mounted police.

(c) The papers will be brought down within a day or two.

YUKON—ROAD AND BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

1. Is the government aware that the commissioner of the Yukon was reported by the press to have announced, in the fall of 1900, to the residents of White Horse, in regard to the request for the construction of roads, trails, &c., that the only revenue available for such purposes is that derived from the liquor traffic, through the sale of permits, by fines, license, &c.?

2. Would such a statement be substantially correct ? If not, from what sources is such a revenue derived?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1. No. The government is not aware of such fact.

2. The statement would be incorrect, inasmuch as the government of Canada expends a very large amount annually in the construction of roads and bridges in the Yukon territory.

PREFERENTIAL TARIFF—CERTIFICATE OF PRODUCTION.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

What proportion of the goods that have been entered under the preferential tariff has a certificate attached to the customs entries, to the effect that a portion of such goods has been manufactured in other countries than Great Britain and the British colonies?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). A separate invoice, covering only articles entitled to preferential entry, is required under the preferential tariff. In the certificate prescribed to be made on the invoice, the exporter certifies that all the articles included in the invoice are bona fide the produce or manufacture of one or more countries (naming them) entitled in Canada to the benefits of the British preferential tariff, and that a substantial portion of the labour of one or more of such countries has entered into the production of every manufactured article included in the said invoice to the extent in each article of not less than one-fourth of the value of every such article in its present condition ready for export to Canada. There is no certificate attached to the invoice (or customs entry) to the effect that a portion of such goods has been manufactured in other countries than Great Britain and the British colonies.

ISSUES OF SCRIP.

Mr. OSLER—by Mr. Clarke—asked :

1. What amount of scrip has been issued to half-breeds and others in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, in each of the years since 1896 ?

2. What is the total amount of scrip received by the government in payment of Dominion lands, in each of the years since 1896 ?

3. What is the total amount of scrip now outstanding ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

* February is not quite complete. There are a certain number of Dominion Lands Agents' returns that have not yet reached the department.

EXPORTS OF ANIMALS TO GREAT BRITAIN AND UNITED STATES.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the number of cattle, over one year old, produce of Canada, exported to Great Britain yearly, from 1894 to 1900, inclusive, and the total value and average price for each of said years ?

2. What was the number of cattle, over one year old, produce of Canada, exported to the United States yearly, from 1894 to 1900, inclusive, and the total value and average price for each of said years ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). Statement showing the number and value of cattle, over one year old, the produce of Canada, exported to Great Britain and to the United States respectively ; the value and average price per year, during the fiscal years, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, and 1900 respectively :

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the total amount of bounty paid by the Dominion government for the manufacture of pig iron from native ore in each of the years ending June 30, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899 and 1900, and also for the six months ending December 31, 1900 ?

2. What was the total amount paid as bounty on pig iron made from foreign ores for each of said years, and for the last six months of year 1900 ?

3. What was the total amount paid as bounty on steel for each of said years, and for six months of year 1900 ?

PRODUCTS OF ANIMALS—IMPORTATIONS INTO THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What quantities of butter, cheese, bacon, hams, and eggs respectively were imported into the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland from all other countries in each of the years 1898, 1899 and 1900 ; also the value in each case for each of said years ?

2. How much of each of said articles so imported came from Victoria, New South Wales, and New Zealand respectively, and the values thereof for each of the years 1898, 1899 and 1900?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). This is a question which I am afraid cannot be answered by the government. We have not any information respecting the trade returns of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland which is not public property and accessible in all quarters. Moreover, the mode of making up those returns differs somewhat from our own ; so I am afraid I will be unable to comply with the request of the hon. gentleman.

HOG IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

What was the total weight in pounds of all hogs and hog products, viz., hogs, lard, pork, bacon and hams imported into Canada from the United States in the year 1890 ; also for the year 1900 ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). The weight in pounds, so far as hogs are concerned, cannot be given. During the fiscal year 1890 there were hogs to the value of $82,964 imported from the United States, no quantity being given in the returns of that date. In addition to the foregoing, there were 7,250,861 pounds of swine to be slaughtered in bond for exportation ; also 128 swine (in number) admitted free for improvement of stock. The quantity of lard amounted to 4,826,103 pounds; of pork, 17,739,082 pounds, and of bacon and hams, 4,414,321 pounds. During the fiscal year 1900, the quantity of hogs imported from the United States amounted to 183,703 pounds, and in addition 47 swine (in number) for improvement of stock. The quantity of lard imported was 687,958 pounds ; of pork, 5,774,432 pounds, and of bacon and hams, 5,273,434 pounds.

EXPORTS OF BUTTER, CHEESE, &c.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. How many pounds of butter, cheese, bacon and ham respectively, produce of Canada, were exported to Great Britain in each of the three years 1898, 1899 and 1900; also the value in each case for each of said years?

2. How many dozen of eggs, produce of Canada, were exported to Great Britain in each of the three years 1898, 1899 and 1900, and the total value for each of said years?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). Statement showing quantities and values of butter, cheese, &c., exported (home produce) from Canada to Great Britain during the years ended June 30, 1898 to 1900, inclusive ; from Canadian returns :

YUKON TERRITORY—HOUSTON PERMIT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

Referring to Houston permit (863 Hansard, 1901), is there any report, communication or correspondence respecting it not brought down to this House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Yes. The papers will be brought down if desired.

YUKON TERRITORY—IMPORTATION OF LIQUOR.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

1. Has the government, or any department thereof, knowledge of the amount of beer or other liquor shipped by J. H. Russell or the Atlin Brewing Company of Glenora, into the Yukon district in 1900?

2. If so, under what authority were the shipments made?

3. What amount of beer or other liquor was so shipped?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1. J. H. Russell, of Atlin, was granted a permit to import into the Yukon territory 1,000 gallons of beer, on August 8, 1900. No further information on the subject is in the possession of the government.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—PATENT BRANCH.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria) asked :

(a) What has been the revenue of the patent branch of the Agriculture Department each year since 1891, inclusive?

(b) What has been the cost of the patent branch each year since 1891, inclusive?

(c) What has become of the balance of the revenue, if any, each year?

(d) How many examiners are there now in the patent branch?

(e) (1) Is each examiner abreast with his work, or (2) are there any applications awaiting attention ? (3) If there are any awaiting, how many are they in number? (4) How long in arrears is the work, viz.: What is the date of the last applications passed upon in the regular course?

(f) Is it the intention of the government or of the Minister of Agriculture to expend upon the patent branch each year for the future the revenue derived therefrom?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sidney A. Fisher) :

(a.) I have the honour to submit the following figures, taken from the minister's report :

	Revenue.	Expenditure.	Surplus.
1891	$ 77,723 63	$41,394 41	$36,329 22
1892	84,720 83	39,643 37	45,077 46
1893	62,344 68	36,116 70	26,227 98
1894	78,777 02	38,010 71	40,766 31
1895	84,603 26	36,254 53	48,357 73
1896	92,498 81	39,840 68	52,658 13
1897	100,531 89	36,335 34	64,196 55
1898	97,522 70	34,402 17	63,120 53
1899	105,354 60	35,808 09	69,546 51
1900	111,331 58	43,046 93	68,284 65
			$523,313 31

(b.) I may say that there are now eight examiners, one of whom was appointed on January 15. I have found that the work needed more men, and I have been adding to the number, until at last there are eight.

(c.) As to the balance of the revenue, it goes into the consolidated revenue fund like all other revenue.

(e) There is always a number of applications before each examiner. I have here a statement of the unreported applications before the individual examiners, which is as follows :

			Filing date of oldest case before each.
1.	Examiner McCabe....	264	February 7, 1900. Ref. March 13, 1900.

7.	" Belanger ..	196	*July 26, 1900.
8.	" Stevens ...	152	†January 8, 1900.
		1,507

*All referred October 1, 1901; taken from other examiners.

†All cases referred to this examiner on the 15th January, 1901.

On October 1, when Mr. Belanger began his work, some cases were taken from other examiners and referred to him. Mr. Stevens only commenced on January 15. I have the following statement from the chief clerk in charge of this branch :

The examining work would be closer to date and more satisfactory to the inventors, if the staff of examiners was further augmented.

Comparison may be made with the United States patent office and this office, in respect to this branch of the work.

During the year 1900, the United States patent office received 41,980 applications, with a staff of 219 examiners (of whom nineteen were added two years ago) and one or two copyists to each division; while this office received in the same period 4,629 applications, with only seven examiners and no clerical help. The last-appointed examiner (No. 8) not examining to any extent as yet.

According to the American basis, the Canadian office should have twenty examiners to keep the work up to the six weeks' limit, which I have found the United States patent office has reached. (United States commissioner's report, page 1, 382, O.G., February 12, 1901.)

It may be added that many of the cases filed in the early part of last year were not referred to the examiner for weeks after (although their filing date is preserved and appears in this report) for the reason that the applicants, or their solicitors, delayed in returning the papers, when called upon to amend the form.

The original date of the application is not a fair one to the office, because frequently applications have to be returned, and sometimes they remain months in the hands of the solicitors who prepare them, while they are being put into proper form. The patent branch received 4,692 applications during the year 1900, and issued 4,181 patents. Two hundred and thirty-nine were reported on but not issued. In the year 1899, the branch added 887 applications to the arrears, making a gain during last year of over 600 in the comparison between the number of applications and the number of patents reported upon. In January and February of this year, which are very heavy months, the branch received 368 applications in January and issued 313 patents ; while in February, it received 344 applications and issued 325 patents.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I did not get the answer to the last section.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no intention on the part of the government to spend on the patent branch the revenue derived therefrom, but it is the intention to ask parliament for sufficient money to carry on the affairs of the office properly.

LONG SERVICE MEDALS.

Mr. SHERRITT asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to issue Long Service medals to those volunteers yet living who have served twenty years and upwards in the militia of Canada ?
2. If any are to be given, when may they be expected ?
3. In what position does the matter now stand ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). The issue of a long service decoration and medal to colonial forces was approved by the Imperial authorities some time ago. Regulations governing the same have only recently been approved by His Majesty's government, and were received at the Department of Militia and Defence February 4 last. They will be promulgated in next General Orders, being the first orders submitted for the approval of His Excellency in Council since the receipt of the approved regulations. These regulations contain all the information in the possession of the Militia Department on the subject.

LAKE MANITOBA DREDGING.

Mr. BOYD—by Mr. Roche—asked :

Has the following petition been received by the Hon. the Minister of Public Works :—

To the Minister of Public Works of the Dominion of Canada.

The undersigned, your petitioners, would respectfully say :—

1. Your petitioners residing along the west shore of Lake Manitoba are residents, being as shown as opposite our respective names herewith attached.
2. It is understood that next year a regular line of boats will operate on this lake.
3. Owing to our close proximity to the lake and the distance we are located from railway facilities, it is decidedly to our advantage to transport our farm products, etc., to the lake during the season of navigation.
4. There are obstacles in the way that prevent a boat from landing, in the nature of sandbars and rocks.
5. Your petitioners believe that for a very moderate expense these difficulties can be overcome, by dredging the sandbars and removing the rocks, for a landing at or near Lakeland, Big Point and Sandy Bay, as shown on the provincial maps.
6. Your petitioners, therefore, pray that you may, without undue delay, cause an investigation to be made, that facts may be ascertained, and if such facts bear out the above statements, that the work be undertaken with the least possible delay, that we may avail ourselves of the advantages that will be afforded us.

Is it the intention of the government to accede to the legitimate request of the petitioners ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). No trace of such a petition can be found in the department. It may be there, but we cannot find it.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S VISIT TO DAWSON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

Referring to Order of the House, February 12, 1901, and return in compliance respecting His Excellency's visit to Dawson and petitions presented, does this return cover 'all orders in council, correspondence and papers in any way connected with the said address and the requests and representations therein' ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Yes.

CANADA AND NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. GOURLEY asked :

Are there at the present time any negotiations being carried on between the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland with a view of the latter province becoming a member of this Confederation ? If not, is it the intention of the government to open such negotiation during the present year ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There are negotiations now pending between Canada and Newfoundland on the subject mentioned in this question ; and, further, that the time does not seem auspicious for the opening of such negotiations.

YUKON RAILWAY—MACKENZIE AND MANN'S CLAIM.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—by Hon. Mr. Prior—asked :

1. Have Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann filed with or laid before the Minister of Railways and Canals or any other member of the government, any claim in connection with the contract for the construction of the Yukon Railway ?
2. If so, when was such claim filed, or laid before the government or any member thereof ?
3. What is the amount of such claim ?
4. Has any action been taken by the government with regard thereto, and if so, what action has been so taken ?
5. Has the government or any member thereof given any promise, assurance or statement, written or oral, to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, or to any person on their behalf, or to any bank or other corporation, stating the intentions of the government with respect to such claim ?
6. If so, when was such promise, assurance or statement given, and what was it ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann have filed a claim against the government which has been examined and considered, and which, with all the papers relating to it, will be communicated to the House at an early date.

DISMISSAL OF MR. W. F. SCARTH.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette) asked :

1. Has Mr. W. F. Scarth, formerly postmaster at Virden, Manitoba, been dismissed from that position ?
2. If so, for what reason ?
3. Have charges been made against Mr. Scarth and has an investigation been held into those charges, if any, since 1896 ?
4. If investigation has been held, what was the result ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND :

1. Mr. W. F. Scarth has been removed from the postmastership of Virden, Manitoba.
2. Mr. Scarth was removed from the postmastership of Virden on representations, which were considered satisfactory, that the post office, when under his charge, was not properly managed.
3. Charges of political partisanship were made against Mr. Scarth in April, 1897, which were investigated by the post office inspector.
4. The result of the inspector's investigation was that the charges brought forward were not sustained.

ASHCROFT AND CARIBOO MAIL CONTRACT.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. What company or individual had the contract during the year 1900 for carrying the mails between Ashcroft and Cariboo, in British Columbia ?
2. What was the mileage covered by said contract ?
3. What amount per annum was the contract for ?
4. How many trips per week did the contract call for ?
5. Has the said contract expired ? If not, when will it ?
6. Has the government renewed said contract, or given a new one to any person or persons ?
7. If so, to whom has it been given, at what price and on what terms ?
8. If said contract has not been renewed, or a new one given, is it the intention of the government to call for public tenders for said mail service as soon as the contract in force last year expires ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND :

1. The British Columbia Express Company were the contractors for this service during the year 1900.

2 and 4. Between Ashcroft and Barkerville, 287 miles, semi-weekly from May 15 to October 31, weekly for the remainder of the year.

Between Ashcroft station and Clinton, 32 miles, semi-weekly from November 1 to May 14, weekly for remainder of year.

Between Alkali Lake and Clinton, 90 miles, weekly throughout the year.

Between Ashcroft and Lillooet, 63 miles, weekly throughout the year.

Between 150-Mile-House and Horsefly, 40 miles, weekly throughout the year.

Between 150-Mile-House and Keithley Creek, 80 miles, weekly throughout the year.

Between Soda Creek and Alexis Creek, 90 miles, weekly throughout the year.

3. Rate of pay is $23,250 a year.

5. The contract will expire on September 30, 1903.

6 and 7. The present contract was made with the British Columbia Express Company on October 1, 1899, for four years from that date.

8. As the contract will not expire until September 30, 1903, the department has not yet considered its future action regarding it.

METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. LEMIEUX asked :

1. Is the government aware that on an annual revenue of $344,158 the lapses of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in Canada are of $5,695,372 ?
2. Has the actuary of the Insurance Department made inquiries as to this abnormal proportion of lapses ?
3. Is the government aware that the largest proportion of the business of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company is carried on with the mechanics and the poor class of the population ?
4. Is there in the Insurance Department any information given by the life companies as to the reasons that are given to the heirs in order to make settlement at less than the face of the policies issued ?
5. Is the Insurance Department informed of the reasons why claims are resisted by life companies—more particularly in cases where this information is denied to the widows having claims against said companies ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

1. The government is aware that the lapses of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in Canada for the year ended December 31, 1899, amounted to $5,695,372, and that the income of the company in Canada for the same year amounted to $344,158. The figures were published in the report of the superintendent of insurance for that year.

2. No special inquiry has been made as to the proportion of lapses, but the returns made to the government show that the proportion of lapses is large.

3. The government is not informed as to the class or classes of the population insured by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, but is aware that the larger portion of the company's business in Canada is known as industrial insurance.

4. The superintendent of insurance is not aware that any attempts at settlement have been made at less than the face of the policies issued. No complaints of this kind have been received at the department from policy-holders or others.

5. The department is not informed of the reasons why claims are resisted by life insurance companies.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER FOR EAST ELGIN.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. The following answers were given to questions 1, 2 and 3 on February 12, 1901, by the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture :—

Census Commissioner for East Elgin.

Mr. Ingram asked :—

1. Who is appointed census commissioner for the electoral district of East Elgin ?

2. How many applicants applied for the position and what are their names ?

3. How many applied for the position of enumerator, what are the names, and how many have been selected up to date ?

The Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) —Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman's question, I would say that Mr. A. D. McGugan will be the census commissioner for the electoral district of East Elgin. In reply to questions 2 and 3, I would say that there have been no applicants.

Mr. Ingram—Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) say Mr. McGugan for East Elgin or West Elgin ?

The Minister of Agriculture—A. D. McGugan for East Elgin.

Will the hon. Minister of Agriculture say if these answers are correct to day ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). The second and third answers are correct. The answer to the first should have read 'No one.' Mr. McGugan is recommended for West Elgin. My officer made a mistake by saying for East Elgin. No appointments are made.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman say who is for East Elgin ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No appointments have been made.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. Has the government considered whether the establishment of a system of technical education falls within the jurisdiction of the Dominion ?

2. Is it the intention of the government to decide this question promptly ?

3. In case the Dominion has jurisdiction, is it the intention of the government to establish such a system ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). From what consideration we have been able to give to this subject, we are not satisfied that the subject of technical education falls within the jurisdiction of the Dominion government.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the Prime Minister answer the second part of the question ?

The PRIME MINISTER. If the subject is not within our jurisdiction, we cannot take any action. We are not satisfied that the subject of technical education is within our jurisdiction. We think it is within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

FOREST RANGERS.

Mr. WILSON asked :

How many forest rangers are in the employ of the Dominion government, what are their duties, where are they located, and what are their salaries respectively ?

How many forest fire rangers are employed by the Dominion government, where are they located, what are their duties, and what are their salaries respectively ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Eleven homestead inspectors who act as forest rangers when required, and in addition to the homestead inspectors, there are three persons employed by the department. One at Boissevain receives a salary of $900 per annum and is in charge of the permanent timber reserve at Turtle Mountain ; one at Winnipeg, at $600 per annum, whose work is confined to the timber north of the Canadian Pacific Railway and east of Winnipeg, and one at Carlyle, at $600 per annum, who has charge of the Moose Mountain permanent timber reserve.

The duties of forest rangers are principally to prevent illegal cutting or destruction of timber. Their services are also utilized in collecting dues on timber cut illegally, and investigating and reporting upon cases of reported illegal cutting of timber.

There are no forest fire rangers employed by the Dominion government permanently, but the above officials assist in performing the duty, and men are employed when it is felt necessary to protect timber from fire. They are located at the most convenient point, and their duties are generally to protect the timber by taking every necessary precaution to that end. They also distribute copies of the law respecting prairie and forest fires. They are paid, when so employed, at the rate of $3 per day for man and horse, including all their expenses.

In the Department of Indian Affairs there is one forest bailiff employed from time to time as required in the Saugeen Peninsula. He makes seizure of timber illegally cut on Indian lands, and when on duty receives a daily allowance for himself of $1.50. Other forest bailiffs are employed on Indian reserves for the purpose of protecting the reserves and making seizures where timber is illegally cut.

SYDNEY INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton) asked :

1. Has any effort been made by any person or persons to secure possession of the Indian reserve in the town of Sydney ?

2. If so, by whom ?

3. Will the government lay on the Table of the House all official correspondence having reference to this matter ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) :

1 and 2. Applications have been received to be allowed to purchase the Indian reserve at Sydney from Wm. McDonald, M.P., in February, 1884 ; J. A. Gillies, M.P., in October, 1899 ; the Town Council of Sydney in February, 1900.

The question of surrendering the land was submitted to the Indians in December, 1899, but they refused except on conditions that could not be acceded to by the department, and the land is not, therefore, open for sale.

3. Yes.

BUIES' PAMPHLET—PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. In what printing office was the pamphlet entitled 'Animals, &c. of Canada,' by Arthur Buies, distributed at the Paris exhibition last year, printed ?
2. What was the total issue of said pamphlet ?
3. What was the average cost per pamphlet ?
4. What was the total cost of said pamphlet ?
5. Who supplied the paper for the work ?
6. If printed in any establishment other than the Government Printing Bureau, why was this done ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher) :

1. Government Printing Bureau.
2. 10,000 copies.
3. A fraction over 9 cents per copy.
4. $906.49.
5. Government Printing Bureau.

OFFICIAL CATALOGUE PARIS EXHIBITION.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

1. Has the government seen the following editorial comment in a recent issue of the Ottawa Free Press :—

'Another query was put yesterday with regard to the printing of the official catalogue of Canadian exhibitors at the Paris exhibition, and the information was given that the work was done in the office of the Montreal Herald, which supplied 5,000 copies, together with the paper. Further, the House was informed of the reason why the procedure was followed. It appears from the reply of the Minister of Agriculture, that such work is done "through the Printing Bureau, as owing through pressure of work it could not be done there." This must necessarily occur at times of pressure. But previous answers given to similar questions, all of which indicated that other work of various kinds had been sent to Montreal, leads to the conclusion that the Printing Bureau is decidedly partial in its selection of "donkey engine" printing establishments. The Secretary of State should instruct it to give other publishers with equally good, and perhaps better equipped offices than are to be found in Montreal, a show.'

2. Is it the intention to give 'other publishers' a share of the departmental printing ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher). I have no knowledge of the statement referred to. The departmental printing will be treated in the future as it has been in the past. It will be referred to the Printing Bureau and each case taken up on its merits and treated accordingly.

HOUSTON PERMIT.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Does the hon. the Minister of the Interior require a formal motion for papers asked for in question No. 20 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). No, I will bring them down to-morrow or next day without a motion.

LONG WHARF, ST. JOHN.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Hughes (Victoria)—moved for :

Copies of all orders in council, correspondence, contracts or agreements between the government or the Department of Public Works or any member of the government as such, or any officers of any department of the government and Nicholas K. Connolly and Michael Connolly, contractors, referring to the building of the Long Wharf Terminal Improvements at St. John, New Brunswick ; also what payments have been made on same and the date of said payments.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). I do not believe there has been any correspondence at all between the Public Works Department and Messrs. N. K. and Michael Connolly. I am under the impression that correspondence, if any, was with the Department of Railways and Canals. Since I have been in office, I am sure that there has been no correspondence between the Department of Public Works and these gentlemen, and no work carried on by them in my department. My hon friend must be mistaken.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I do not know anything about it, but merely put the question in the absence of Mr. Fowler, and at his request.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Copy of all correspondence between the Canadian and British governments relating to commissions to be granted Canadian officers in the British army.—Mr. Bourassa.

Copy of all correspondence relating to the recruiting of the South African police force in Canada; also copies of all offers or requests made since last session of parliament for new Canadian troops for South Africa, including correspondence with the British government on both matters.—Mr. Bourassa.

Copies of all correspondence with the Department of Railways relative to the building of a line of railway between Sydney and East Bay, in the county of Cape Breton, and copies of any reports made to department having reference to this matter.—Mr. Johnston (Cape Breton.)

Copies of all papers, correspondence and claims made in connection with the alleged non-observance of the fair-wage clause in the contract for the construction of the St. Andrews lock.—Mr. Puttee.

Return of all correspondence between the government or any officer thereof and Col. Van Wagner, relating to the retirement of that officer from the command of the Hamilton Field Battery; and also the authority for considering Col. Van Wagner as a 'commanding officer,' and thus bringing that officer under the operation of the 'five years tenure of command law.'—Mr. Hughes (Victoria.)

Copies of all contracts connected with the improvements at Sydney Railway yard and at North Sydney Junction ; also a statement of all prices paid per cubic yard for earth (different kinds) and rock (different kinds), and for borrowing for embankment under said contract and in connection with said improvements ; also how much was paid for ditching, clearing and close cutting and grubbing, per acre or per hundred feet ; also for culvert masonry, retaining walls, cattle guards and crossings, fencing and gates.—Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, by Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Return showing: (a) Net receipts and expenditures of the Intercolonial Railway for each month from 30th June, 1899, up to the 1st day of March, 1901. (b) The expenditure on capital account with respect to the Intercolonial Railway for each month from 30th June, 1899, up to the 1st day of March, 1901.—Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Copies of all correspondence, reports and certificates in regard to the application of Robert Gray, late lighthouse keeper at Entrance Island, British Columbia, for superannuation; also statement showing how long and what amounts he had paid into the superannuation fund.—Hon. Mr. Prior.

Copies of all orders in council, regulations and other documents since the 1st day of January, 1897, presenting or showing what percentage or proportion of value of goods entitled to the advantage of the preferential tariff could be created in foreign countries, and what percentage or proportion of such value must be created in the United Kingdom; and also setting forth and showing what declarations, statements, affirmations or oaths must be made, declared or sworn to by exporters or other persons consigning such goods to Canadian importers, or by persons in Canada importing such goods from Great Britain and Ireland.—Mr. Clarke.

Return showing the quantity of Servis railroad tie plates purchased by the government since June 30, A.D. 1887, the persons or companies from which the purchases were made, the quantities purchased, prices paid, dates of contracts and times of delivery.—Mr. Fowler, by Mr. Wilmot.

Copies of all rules and regulations and all correspondence in the Department of Marine and Fisheries relating to fishing berths and the shore fishery in West Halifax, more especially within the polling district of Prospect and Dover.—Mr. Roche (Halifax).

DUTY ON LUMBER.

On the motion :

Mr. Bennett—That, in the opinion of this House, duties should be levied upon lumber imported into Canada corresponding with those now existing upon lumber entering the United States.

Mr. BENNETT. Stand.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am obliged to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that the next time this is called, it must be proceeded with or it must be dropped.

Motion allowed to stand.

P.E.I. COMMUNICATION.

Mr. ALFRED A. LEFURGEY (East Prince, P.E.I.) moved for :

Copies of all reports, letters or other correspondence between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the boards of trade of Summerside and Charlottetown, or with any other person or persons acting in regard to the subject-matter of the motion, during the years 1899-1900 and 1901, regarding the placing of the government winter steamer Stanley on the route between Summerside, P.E.I., and Cape Tormentine, N.B., for the conveyance of mails, passengers and freight.

He said : When this motion came up a few days ago, I asked to have it stand over because the Minister of Marine (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) was not in his place. I am sorry he is not here to-day, as he is probably more familiar with the matter in hand than most of the other hon. gentlemen on the government benches. However, I wish to draw the attention of ministers and of members generally to the unsatisfactory, in fact the deplorable state of affairs which has existed in Prince Edward Island ever since confederation in regard to the transmission of mails, passengers and freight to and from the mainland, and more especially to a period lately passed, and to which reference has already been made in this House, and which is far from satisfactory to a country entering the twentieth century. I wish to point out further that it is a condition of affairs which is due not to the lack of opportunities or even of facilities to remedy it, but to causes which reflect most unsatisfactorily upon the heads of the departments who have been cognizant of the situation, and could have improved it had they been determined to do so. The most ludicrous part of the miserable situation is that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who, during the time that he wandered in the wilderness of opposition, declaimed year after year about the treatment to which Prince Edward Island was subjected, is the head of the department at whose door chiefly lies the responsibility for the conditions Prince Edward Island has had to face this winter. I shall not deal with this subject at length, because it has been before the House, I suppose, every year since confederation. I merely wish to lay before the House some facts presented by the Board of Trade of Summerside, at whose request I deal with the subject this afternoon. I shall lay before you communications that have passed between the Minister of Fisheries and the Board of Trade of Summerside, and reports and recommendations from captains of winter boats Minto and Stanley, and from the government engineer, Mr. Schreiber, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which together with subsequent events will present a case of incompetence or wilful neglect. I should be recreant in my duty to my constituents did I not take this opportunity of placing this matter before the House.

Prince Edward Island, as you all know, entered confederation in 1873, under definite terms. One of the terms of union was as follows :

> Efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers to be established and maintained between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of the Dominion, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of the Dominion.

That has not been carried out. I do not wish to treat this as a matter in which the Dominion should be forced to fulfil the terms of its agreement. I simply read this section to you to show that the condition exists, so that it will be seen that the Dominion is in honour bound to carry it out. It is to the feeling of justice and fairness that I would appeal for a remedy for existing evils. We in Prince Edward Island are not complaining because millions are spent in opening up the trade of the country at various points, nor because facilities are given by rail and water for the development of the resources of the country. But what we want, gentlemen, is a fair treatment of the provinces down by the sea.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I must ask the hon. member to address the Chair.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the island and the other provinces down by the sea should receive a fair treatment at the hands of the government. Prince Edward Island came into the confederation in 1873, and for the first few years we really got no consideration as regards communication. Later on a steamer by the name of Albert was put on, which did not meet the requirements of the situation at all. In 1876 we were given the steamer Northern Light, and for a number of years she plyed between the island and the mainland, but like the Albert she gave very little satisfaction. In 1887 we got the Stanley. The government had experience of the Northern Light and put on a boat which really did good service up to 1899 ; but of course after having been battered up by the ice during all those years, she began to go down, and a second boat was indispensable if service was to be kept up. Then the Minto was put on in 1900, during the late parliament. One would have thought that the government would have taken pattern by the Stanley and put on a first-class boat with all the modern improvements ; but instead of having her built by the people who had experience of building the Stanley, for the sake of saving $30,000 or $40,000 they had the Minto built in a second-class yard ; and a proof of this is that an answer given on the floor of the House to an inquiry in committee showed that the sum of $12,000 had to be voted for repairs in riveting after she had only been running one year. Of course she was a vessel of great power, but what was the use of putting more power into a hull that was not capable of resisting the impact of the ice ? Moreover, after the Minto came out to the island before she could go on service and do the freight and passenger business required by that service, she had to be altered in many material respects. Surely the government in charge of her should have known this before accepting her and bringing her to the island. I do not know why this was done, unless it was that the present government did not wish to take pattern by the boat which had been supplied by the Conservative government. They have pursued a similar course in the matter of the fast Atlantic service ; but one notable case in which they did not do it was in respect of the national policy, for in that question they followed the example of the Conservative government.

At present, Mr. Speaker, we have two boats available, and that at the time when we should have our best service, is when the bungling of the opportunities at hand occurs and calls for some explanation, which I trust the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will give. A large number of business men, both in the province of Prince Edward Island and the county of Westmoreland contiguous, have for a number of years been advocating the Summerside and Cape Tormentine route as the natural and most favourable route for steam communication between the island and the mainland during the winter season. This project was advocated for some time, and finally we had a boat called the Petrel which came down from the lakes, a boat which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should have known, which any reasonable man with a proper knowledge of the straits should have known, was not of sufficient power to break through two or three inches of ice, let alone keeping open navigation across the straits. And so we had that miserable failure which, I suppose, served the election purposes. Possibly up to the advent of the second steamer, the Minto, we cannot attach too much blame to either government for not experimenting with this route ; but after we got the steamer Minto it was only fair that the people of the western end of the island should have the benefit of her for freight and passenger traffic, and the conveyance of the mails. In 1900, promises were made that route would be tested, yet the Stanley was lying tied up at Georgetown wharf, when there never had been a more favourable time in the past twenty-five years for a steamer to test the expediency of this route. The Stanley remained tied up there the whole winter, and the government gave the old excuse that there was not enough water in Summerside harbour, and that there were not landing facilities at Cape Tormentine. But in May last, when the Dominion elections were in sight, promises came from the head of the department that these conditions would be remedied; and, wonderful to relate, a dredge did come to Summerside to prepare the harbour for the Stanley. But stranger still the $500 or $600 necessary to repair the pier at Cape Tormentine to receive the Stanley was not forthcoming. I know that a circular was sent through the district a couple of days before the election, saying that $15,000 would be spent in Summerside each month during the winter season while the Stanley was on the Summerside and Cape Tormentine route. Yet they subsequently use this very neglect in repairing Cape Tormentine pier as an excuse for removing the boat. I only mention this because this whole subject of communication betwen the island and the mainland appears to have been treated merely from a political point of view; it has not received that due consideration which these matters should have, and which the people down on the island deserve. Now, I am going to bring to the attention of the House some extracts of a report that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries received from his engineer, Mr. Shewen:

Mr. Shewen, in his report of September, 1900, referred to the work at Cape Tormentine as follows:—

That the Stanley required a vertical face 175 feet long on the outside of the return, or southern arm of the pier. And he used these words as to the route. The experiment proposed to be made with the Stanley between Summerside and Cape Tormentine is of the utmost consequence to the whole province of Prince Edward Island and to the other provinces with which the island does business, and at the narrowest part of the strait is found the greatest current and the current assists in loosening the ice. In the neighbourhood of Cape Tormentine the currents meet and part twice a day.

That was the report of the engineer, Mr. Shewen, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The hon. gentleman was not altogether satisfied with that, and so he wrote to the captains of the winter boats, the Stanley and the Minto, and asked the following questions:

1. Is Cape Tormentine pier in a condition to receive the Stanley, or could she make it as a landing?

This is the answer:

Cape Tormentine pier or breakwater is not in a fit condition to receive any steamer; on account of it being built with a slope, a steamer could only bear on it with her bilge, which would be certain to injure her, and break her propeller. In summer, or before the ice makes, she could get round inside of the breakwater, but after the ice forms it would be impossible to put her inside, because it requires more space to turn in ice, and deeper water than there is inside of the breakwater.

Mr. LEFURGEY.

Generally, is this route feasible under present circumstances for winter; if not, what would be required to make it a feasible route?

Answer. We cannot tell whether the route is feasible or not without a trial.

3rd Ques. Can you suggest any circumstances under which an experiment could safely be made to test the feasibility of that route?

Answer. The only thing, in our opinion, that can be done to test the route is this: after the steamer Northumberland stops running, place the Stanley at Summerside and have her all ready and let her remain there until the bord ice in the vicinity of Cape Tormentine breakwater is sufficiently strong to hold the steamer; then a landing can be made on the ice. This has been done at Souris and Georgetown on several occasions.

This reply is dated November 1, 1900, and is signed by the two masters of the winter boats, Capt. Finlayson and Capt. Brown, on whom every reliance is placed, and on whom the minister is accustomed to rely and would shift responsibility in all cases. When the harbour of Summerside had been frozen over for about a month, or on December 22, the Stanley came into Summerside harbour, and continued to make daily trips between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, occupying from one hour and a half to two hours each trip, until on January 3 we find that news comes from Charlottetown that the Stanley is to be removed from this route and is in fact taken away to Georgetown, under the excuse that the facilities at Cape Tormentine pier are not requisite to land passengers, mails and freights, and on account of an epidemic of smallpox in Westmoreland, N.B. I want to show, from the data which I will put before the House, that we did not receive fair treatment in the matter of this trial, and I desire to point out that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not act up to the recommendation of the persons who were experienced in the matter of winter communication. When the board of trade found that the boat was going to be removed from Summerside, they addressed the following correspondence to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Summerside, December 26, 1900.

Hon. Sir Louis Davies,
Ottawa.

Crossed with Stanley yesterday, Summerside to Cape Tormentine and return, making round trip under four hours, encountering ordinary winter conditions of ice. There can be no doubt about feasibility of daily communication, weather permitting. The only present difficulty is absence of bord ice is Tormentine pier, which requires piling and trestle work, as recommended by Captain Brown in November, 1899. In consultation with Mr. McGlashing, your official at Tormentine, he says work can be done at a small cost in a few days. Will you kindly instruct him to have work done immediately.

R. C. MACLEOD,
President of Board of Trade.

On December 26, the following message was also sent to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

In view of the success and rapidness of trip of Stanley here yesterday, we would suggest that mails be sent by her. The Minto being relieved of carrying mails and passengers, could easily handle all the freight. There were no mails here for four days till last night. The mails by the Stanley could be easily landed daily. Until pier is repaired or bord ice makes, mails and passengers can be landed at low tide by boats if necessary.

R. C. MACLEOD,
President Board of Trade.

The following telegram was received from the hon. minister on December 26 :

R. C. Macleod, Summerside.

Am inquiring with respect to epidemic smallpox in country surrounding Cape Tormentine. Fear will have to withdraw Stanley.

L. H. DAVIES.

The board of trade replied to the minister as follows :

Smallpox scare greatly exaggerated. Was on the ground yesterday. Do not withdraw Stanley. Sending delegation to-morrow to fully investigate health conditions. Will report.

R. C. MACLEOD,
President Board of Trade.

In the meantime the hon. minister replied that nothing would be done until he received the report of the delegates. The delegates reported that the infected district had been fully quarantined and every precaution taken by the health officers :

New coaches have been substituted for those used on the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railroad when epidemic was discovered, and no local passengers, freight or mails are permitted on the trains between Sackville and Cape Tormentine. The nearest case to Cape Tormentine is eight miles distant. There are several cases known, but of a very light type, and the epidemic is now thought to be under control.

They also reported in regard to Cape Tormentine pier that Mr. McGlashing, in the employ of the government there, informed them that the repairs could be completed in a few days, if ordered, at a cost of from $200 to $300.

In face of this, Mr. Speaker, the boat was taken away, and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in reply to these communications, telegraphed on January 3, 1901, as follows :—

Letter received; regret impossible to make promises suggested, owing to absence of terminal facilities Tormentine combined with smallpox scare. Stanley is carrying little freight, few passengers and no mails. See no prospect her being much public service remainder of winter on this route while tremendous congestion of freight at Pictou demands her presence there to relieve it.

I contend that a reply of this kind, in the face of the evidence that has been presented to this House, is a barefaced excuse. The want of terminal facilities was known to the hon. minister ; it was pointed out to him, and the necessary repairs were recommended by his engineer. These were also pointed out by Mr. McGlashing, the engineer at Cape Tormentine in charge of the work, who reported that they could be made at a cost of from $200 to $300 ; yet, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries goes back to the excuse of the want of proper terminal facilities, after promising, in the fall of 1900, to have these same repairs made. Then, he goes on to say that there was a scare of smallpox. He takes care to say that it was a scare, because the facts proved that it was nothing else. Whoever heard of a smallpox scare, or even of a real case of smallpox stopping the trains ? Are you not having smallpox cases in Montreal and in Ottawa every season, and do you stop your trains because of this ? The excuse is too small to be put forward by any gentleman who holds the position of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. As to there being no orders for passengers, freight or mails, I have read you the communications that passed between the board of trade and the minister, asking that the mails be transferred to the Stanley in view of the quick trips she was making. As regards passengers and freight, I may say that at this time in Summerside, there were between twenty and thirty cars of freight, composed of frozen fish, poultry and pork, manufactured lumber, &c., waiting. The board of trade could get no satisfaction from the authorities as to whether these goods could be shipped by the Stanley, and the Stanley had some 400 tons of coal on board during the time she was on this route. The result was that very little went in the way of freight or passengers, because the passengers could not depend on the movements of the Stanley, or whether or not she was likely to be taken away at any time. The congestion of freight, to which the hon. minister referred, did not exist at all. One of our merchants, a prominent member of the board of trade, wired to Pictou on hearing of this reported congestion of freight at Pictou, asking if he could get freight accommodation on the Minto, and the reply came back that two days would remove the congestion of freight at Pictou.

Furthermore, I myself was at Pictou about this time, and I inquired as to the congestion of freight there, as I had also heard that the Stanley was going to be removed. I was informed that the Minto could relieve any congestion of freight in a very few days, providing the mails were transferred to the Stanley. These excuses did not amount to anything with the people of Prince Edward Island, who are so vitally interested in receiving their mails and freight. The result of the arrangement made last winter was that both boats were caught in the ice for ten days, and from 1,200 to 1,500 bags of mails were piled up at Cape Tormentine and Pictou, while the ice-boat service was not even called out to relieve the congestion until after some days. I am informed by trustworthy people in the island and at Cape Tormentine, that there has not been a single day this winter when the Stanley could not have made return trips to Prince Edward Island from Summerside to Cape Tormentine, and we have the same reports at the present time. It was not my intention to rebuke the government, but in view of the bungling and mismanagement to which the people of the western end of the island (indeed all over the island) were obliged to submit during the last winter, some explanation is required from the government. I would be more pleased to think that it was the result of neglect than that the Minister of Marine (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) had been influenced by any political pull coming from West Queen's. I do not want to make any political capital out of this matter because the people of the island and of the whole Dominion, irrespective of political parties, are deeply concerned. We have the facilities at hand, and what we complain is that they are not utilized in the best interest of the people. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the people of Prince Edward Island are an intelligent people, and since they entered confederation in 1873 they have been a long-suffering and patient people as regards this matter, but patience must have its limit. There may be some hon. gentlemen here who do not know that Prince Edward Island is a most fertile province, and that we have resources there in almost every line of agriculture. During the last few years the dairying industry has made marked progress, but that progress must necessarily be retarded unless we can send our products to the markets at all times of the year. I wish to emphasize that the route which I advocate is better than any other route which has been experimented upon, or which is known, and it will receive the approval of seven-eighths of the people of the island, for the following reasons: Three-fourths of the freight and passengers and mails must pass through Sackville before coming to the island, and Sackville is a great many miles removed from Pictou, so that a great deal of time would be saved. As to the steamers themselves they would have from 24 to 80 miles less ice breaking, because the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine is only 15 miles whereas between Georgetown and Pictou it is about 50 miles. There would be consequently less wear and tear on the steamers by the shorter route. It is 132 miles shorter from Charlottetown to Sackville than via Georgetown. It is 182 miles shorter from Summerside and the west, than by going around via Georgetown, and it is 40 miles nearer to Sackville going to Georgetown via Summerside and the Cape than it is to go around via Pictou and Georgetown. The route, therefore, has many advantages in the saving of distances. Mails and passengers arriving by the Intercolonial Railway express from Montreal get to Sackville at 12.23 p.m., and by the Canadian Pacific Railway from Halifax at 11.50 a.m., so that by proper train connection they could reach Charlottetown at 7 p.m., or 24 hours sooner than by the route now used. Take the example of two men leaving Charlottetown for the main line of the Intercolonial Railway in the morning at the same hour. The man going by Summerside and Cape Tormentine would be at Sackville when the man from Charlottetown and Georgetown would arrive at Pictou. In other words, he would be 24 hours ahead on a trip to Montreal or any point west. Another advantage is that the winter boat from Summerside to Cape Tormentine is never out of sight of land, and if the steamers carried ice-boats the passengers on that dangerous trip could be landed in a few hours without any delay. As the engineer pointed out to the Minister of Marine (Hon. Sir Louis Davies), the tide meets there twice daily and consequently the ice is kept loosened up. The winds also favour this route, because at Charlottetown and Georgetown we have the north and north-east winds, which completely block up the straits at times, while at Cape Tormentine this does not occur, or if we had a boat at either end it would more nearly carry out the terms of confederation, because if one boat was tied up on the Georgetown-Pictou route with north-east winds we would have the other route absolutely free of ice, or, on the other hand, if westerly winds blocked the western route the eastern would be open. Another point in favour of this route is that if there was any congestion of freight while there was open water we could have a boat ply from Summerside to Cape Tormentine twice daily. There is no business man in the House, nor any man of common sense, who, in view of the conditions that exist will deny in the face of these facts that the people of Prince Edward Island have not been treated fairly in this matter. We would like the assurance of the hon. the Minister of Marine—who, I regret, is not here—and the hon. the Minister of Public Works, that this matter will be remedied in the near future, and that this pier at Cape Tormentine will be put in repair, as was promised time and time again, and not be kept for use as a political machine during election time. Furthermore, we would ask that the steamer Stanley be put on a Summerside and Cape Tormentine route at the earliest possible moment. I have letters from reliable persons every day telling me that there has been open water on that route almost every day this year, and that the Stanley could have made round trips between those points without interruption the entire season. I thank the House for its kind attention, and would again ask the consideration of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the government and the members of this House to the topic I have brought before them.

Mr. EDWARD HACKETT (West Prince, P.E.I.) Before this motion is carried, Mr.

Speaker, I desire to say but few words, as my hon. friend from East Prince has dwelt so ably and exhaustively on the subject that he has left me very little to say. There is one thing we regret in connection with this matter, and that is that we have not the pleasure of seeing the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) in his seat. This motion was allowed to stand on the Order paper a week ago because of his absence, and now we find that he is again away from the House, and that we have to press this motion on the attention of this House in the absence of the minister in charge of the department. We are thus compelled to address ourselves to hon. gentlemen who are unfamiliar with the details, and it is very unsatisfactory to us to be placed in this position, representing as my hon. friend and myself do the majority of the people of the island and the intelligence and views and desires of that majority. We are the more disappointed, because we were led to believe by the hon. minister, who is not here to attend to the affairs of his province that he was going to revolutionize affairs once he obtained a seat on the treasury benches. Why is the hon. gentleman absent to-day ? The reason is not far to seek. There is a by-election on in Prince Edward Island, and he is more anxious to bring back to this House a supporter of the government than to remain here and attend to the business and wants of the people. The other day, on his return from a trip to the island, the hon. gentleman complained that he had been imprisoned in that province, and we had the hon. the Postmaster General, when asked for an explanation of the delay of ten days in the mail service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, telling us that he would explain the delay as soon as his colleague returned. We know why the Minister of Marine went to the island at that time and sympathized with him. He went down to the bed side of a sick father, and we know that with his characteristics of filial love and affection, he would not leave that bed side as long as his father remained ill, and we would have to wait until his return for the information we required. When the hon. gentleman came back he told us how he had been imprisoned owing to the ice blockade, and yet we find him going down and risking imprisonment again in his native province, but this time his object is to bring back a supporter to himself. He is not here to attend to his duties and the affairs of his province, but is down at the island trying to elect the candidate who was defeated on the 7th of November last, and bring him back to vote for this government.

This question we are discussing is one of great importance to the people of Prince Edward Island. One of the principal inducements at the time of confederation to Prince Edward Island to become a part of the Dominion was the promise held out to the people that the Dominion would establish uninterrupted winter communication between the island and the mainland. We were told by both parties that the Dominion, having means at its disposal, would, if the island entered the union, provide the continuous steam communication in winter and summer, so necessary to the welfare of that province, between the island and the mainland. In bringing this question to the notice of the House, we therefore make no apology, because it is not one which affects our province alone. We have in that province a population of about 120,000, intelligent, fairly prosperous, and mostly composed of farmers and fishermen. We have no manufacturing industries of any importance, and consequently have to buy from the other provinces the manufacturing goods we require, and to-day, notwithstanding the ice blockade, we find commercial travellers from Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, St. John and other cities of Canada visiting our province and selling their goods to our people. This question therefore is not one which affects the island alone, but the whole Dominion, and consequently we require to make no apology when bringing it to the notice of the House.

My hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) has dwelt so fully upon what has been done that little remains to be said. We know that the government has been approached by the local government of our province and shown that a large amount is due us by the Dominion because of the non-fulfilment of this article of confederation. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) replied that we have now one ice boat—I think that was in 1898—and that next year he would provide another one, and thus fulfil the terms of union. He sent away the delegation, and we have received no compensation for the non-fulfilment of those terms although they have been so long left unfulfilled. Another steamer was placed on the route, but to provide the continuous communication, guaranteed us by the terms of confederation, the two boats should not be kept on the same route between the same two points. It has been shown that the route between Cape Tormentine and Summerside harbour is the natural one. Between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse is really the natural route, as the distance across is only eight or nine miles, but as there are not proper facilities at Cape Traverse, communication cannot be kept up between those points. But Summerside harbour, lying some fifteen miles east, is easily accessible. That crossing was experimented upon by the steamer Stanley, which was sent there on the 22nd December, after ice had formed in the harbour, and she had no difficulty getting to the wharf and made the round trip in three hours, taking from Summerside a number of people and bringing back a number of passengers from the other side, thus clearly establishing the feasibility of that route. At that point, we have the best information obtainable that there has been open water there all this winter, and no solid packed ice as there is at the eastern end of the island. The engineer, Mr. Shewen, assures us that by the action of the currents and the tides, the ice is separated and loosened all the time, and consequently easily navigable by a good ship.

But it is somewhat amusing to review the history of this matter. When I had the honour of a seat in this House in 1896, I asked the hon. the Minister of Marine what he was going to do in order to keep up navigation between the island and the mainland, and he replied that he had a scheme which he had no doubt would get the support of the hon. member for West Prince. What that scheme was he would not make known then, but he said that he had a scheme, and had $20,000 voted to carry it out. The scheme was this: He hired a tug boat, a boat that would do for towing rafts on Lake Ontario, and had her brought to Prince Edward Island to keep up steam communication. I happened to be in Summerside when that boat came into the harbour there. The people were assembled on the house tops and on the streets watching her coming in. They were able to get her up to the Queen's Wharf, the lower wharf, and a party of tourists boarded her—this craft that had been hired from some pets of the minister up in Ontario. These people took passage to Cape Tormentine, intending to return the same evening. This was in the month of November, and, unfortunately, a little frost came on, causing a light coating of ice to form—and the new boat remained at Cape Tormentine, while the tourists were obliged to go around by Pictou, and return by the old Stanley, that had been built by the Conservative government. And that was all this new boat did. I had occasion to cross in the ice boats from Cape Traverse about the end of February. They were expecting the Stanley. There was open water, and no doubt about the boat running. In the morning I was aroused by the whistle of a steamer. I rose, dressed rapidly, and rushing down stairs, asked the host if the Stanley had arrived, and if that was her whistle that I had heard. He said: 'No, that is the government whistle. She has been there whistling all winter; she whistles us up in the morning and whistles us to bed at night.' And she did nothing to keep up communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Now, as I have said, if the minister would place the Minto between Georgetown and Pictou at the eastern end, and have the Stanley run between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, you would have an ideal system of communication. To have the two boats on the same route as at present is most unwise. Both were stuck in the ice about February 1. If you had one of these boats plying between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and the other on the other route, there would be no detention of mails, passengers or freight. But the hon. minister has seen fit to keep the two boats at the eastern end of the province, having no means of communication direct with the western end. This cannot be on account of politics; we do not want to make this a political question. It is a question that interests every man on Prince Edward Island, and every man in the Dominion of Canada as well. I do not know who is to take the place of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and give an answer to our question. I saw the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) here a few moments ago, but he also has disappeared. He went to Prince Edward Island during a by-election two years ago, and barely escaped being imprisoned in the ice also. He came across from Summerside to Point Du Chene, N.B., just in time to escape. He ought to be able to give us a little information on the matter. I see the right hon. Prime Minister is in his place, and I would remind him that in any conversation he has with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he should impress upon him the necessity of having terminal facilities completed at Cape Tormentine, and have the Stanley on the route between Cape Tormentine and Summerside, P.E.I., leaving the Minto at the other end of the province. This would enable the government to keep up communication. It should be impressed upon the Minister of Fisheries that a north-east wind which packs the ice in the gulf at the eastern end of the province, loosens it at the western end, so that you always have one route with open loose ice through which a winter boat can navigate. I am glad to see that the Prime Minister is paying attention, and I hope that he will impress this matter upon his colleague. And even if the independent electors of East Queen's do reject his candidate, I hope that both these hon. gentlemen and the government generally will see the necessity of doing something for Prince Edward Island.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry that my hon. friend and colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, is not here, and that he has not had the advantage of hearing my hon. friend. But, in that hon. gentleman's absence, I can assure my hon. friends that I have taken their remarks all in, and I shall be happy to report everything that has been said to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If I correctly understand the view of my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett), it is that the Minto should be left at the eastern end of the island, and that the Stanley should do service between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and that this is the ideal service—almost as good as a tunnel would be. I shall report that faithfully to my colleague. Meanwhile, there is no objection to the adoption of the motion.

RETIRING PENSIONS TO MEMBERS OF PERMANENT CORPS.

On the motion :

Hon. Mr. PRIOR :

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when the best interests of Canada demand that the government should without further delay introduce a Bill embodying a workable scheme looking to the granting of adequate retiring pensions to the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the permanent corps of the militia of Canada.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Stand.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Does not the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Prior) move this ?

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Several hon. gentlemen on the other side wish to speak on the subject, and have asked me to allow the motion to stand. Do I understand that if I ask that it be allowed to stand now, it will be taken off the Notice paper ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I will give another chance. I said at the opening that we would allow motions to stand to-day if desired, but at the next sitting I will ask that those not moved be dropped. I may remark that the session is advancing, and the hon. gentleman's chances of getting his motion forward are becoming more slim.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I would move it to-day but for the absence of supporters of the right hon. gentleman, who wish to speak upon it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well, let it stand.

Motion allowed to stand.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF RIFLE SHOOTING.

Mr. S. HUGHES (North Victoria) moved :

That in the opinion of this House it would be in the best interests of the militia of Canada were the government or the Minister of Militia to authorize the payment of ten dollars annually towards the expenses of one man, selected under departmental regulations, from each company, squadron and battery, or other unit of the active militia, to attend the provincial rifle Association annual rifle matches, each in his own province ; and that the sum of fifteen dollars annually be granted to each of two men of the foregoing number from each battalion of two hundred and fifty men and corresponding number of cavalry and artillery and other arm of the service while an additional man should be selected for each extra one hundred and twenty-five members of any arm of the service) toward expenses in attending the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association matches annually ; and further, that a liberal supply of ammunition should be granted to each active militiaman free, for practice under proper departmental regulations on local or home ranges.

He said : In placing this motion upon the paper, I am actuated by a desire to bring the importance of this question to the attention of the House and the country. I will not dilate here on the great importance of rifle shooting for the defence of any nation, it is not necessary to enter into any sentimental discussion of that aspect of the question. All the arguments have been advanced in years gone by in favour of rifle shooting, and they have been vigorously opposed by those who have taken the opposite view, opposed on the ground of red-tape and other reasons. But all these reasons have been exploded by the recent war and the absolute necessity of encouraging rifle shooting has been made abundantly plain. My object is simply to draw the attention of the minister and of the country to the necessity of the government and of the Militia Department taking cognizance of rifle shooting. I understand that the government are bringing down some scheme of rifle associations. I have not seen the scheme yet, it may be a good one, but I very much fear that a mere scheme of establishing rifle associations over the country, unless they are under the control of the Militia Department in some definite way, will not redound to the benefit of the militia of the country. What I fear is that when these associations are organized these men will disassociate themselves from the militia of the country, at least so far as they can do so under the regulations. We have already existing very good associations, but I feel they can be much improved. I desire again to impress upon the minister the scheme I had the honour of bringing up a number of years ago. Why not offer a prize to each militia company all over Canada, that prize to be a certain payment—I have only put down a nominal sum here, that need not be adhered to—but a certain prize to go in payment of his expenses towards attending the provincial rifle association matches which receive the sanction, the cognizance and support of the various provincial governments all over Canada, and rightly so ? Let the government set apart, say, two men from each unit all over the country to attend these provincial matches, and then pick out say one or two of the best of these men from every battalion or certain sized units to attend the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association matches. The expenditure of money, I am satisfied, would be more than returned to the government in the impetus given to rifle shooting, At present, with the long range rifle, and these long range targets that we must necessarily have now, and expensive targets too, rifle shooting as a science, has largely become centered in the cities. It is almost impossible in a rural district to get a range that will not be objectionable to some one. After you get a range, the first thing you know is an appeal from the township council that it is dangerous, somebody kicks, and unless the militia is strong enough to control the council, the range has to go. Indeed there is not that incentive to rifle shooting in rural regiments now that there formerly was. One reason is the expense of providing a rifle range, and you cannot expect rural men, with little time at their disposal, to go in for this expensive training.

I take the liberty of drawing the minister's attention to a point which has been considerably discussed by militiamen, and I think he has considered it in the plan that he is carrying out, although I have not seen his plan, in relation to rifle associations throughout the country. I am satisfied that possibly he will be able to adopt some framework of my suggestion here in his new range regulations, if I may call them so. At all events, I trust that the minister, in framing his resolution on the question of rifle associations and ranges, will give this matter his serious consideration.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monk). Mr. Speaker, in regard to the motion of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes), I have a very few words to say. Personally, I am much interested in the subject of rifle shooting from having had a long connection with the militia of Canada. To my mind, this subject has been, to some extent, neglected in the past, owing to the fact that the people of Canada have not sufficiently realized its importance. One of the good results arising from the South African war is that the people have had called to their attention the fact that good soldiership means the ability to use the weapon of the day. If we go back in history we find that in very early times the ability to use the particular weapon of the time was the fact upon which the winning of the battle largely depended. We find that in the battle of Flodden Field, where, for once the English got the better of the Scotts, the victory was owing largely to the fact that the English had in their ranks the better marksmen. While holding the views I do upon this subject, I have no wish to see adopted in this country a military system that would bear heavily upon the people. We do not, in Canada, want to be ground under the militarism of the old lands, but we want a citizen soldiery which will be effective and which, if need be, can take the field and give a good account of itself and will do so if we have better facilities for rifle practice. I am not in favour of confining the opportunities for rifle shooting merely to military organizations. When I use the term military organizations, I may say that I am speaking of the active militia which is necessarily small in number, being composed of some 40,000 men, which, after all, represents a very inconsiderable proportion of the force upon which the country depends. I have heard it stated by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Mr. Borden), who has always done a great deal ever since he took the portfolio, in the interest of the militia, that rifle clubs are to be organized and facilities given to men to shoot, although they are not active members of the militia. I believe there are limitations imposed to the effect that these men should agree to sign a document that in the case of their services being required they would give them. That, to my mind, would be an entirely unnecessary precaution. I feel convinced that if Canada were in trouble her sons would come promptly to the front and give their services in her defence. When the North-west Territories rebellion broke out the great difficulty was the choice of men. So great was the number of applications that the men were struggling for the places. The same thing occurred when this country offered to send troops to take part in the South African war. I believe that if you teach men how to shoot with the rifle of to-day you will have provided the best means of defence for this country. Take the little country of Switzerland where they have between 500,000 and 600,000 men who are fair shots at from 600 to 800 and 1,000 yards. There is an immense force in that country to guard its frontiers in time of need. I am heartily in accord with the motion of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), and I hope the hon. Minister of Militia will take this matter seriously into his consideration and give the members, if not absolutely free ammunition, at least cheap ammunition—ammunition at cost, or even at, perhaps, half cost, and that everything will be done to promote rifle shooting in this country.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I would say, in reference to this expenditure that is foreshadowed for crack shots, that we do not want to forget the general militiamen or volunteer, because, what we want are not a few men that can shoot well, but the encouragement of many men who can shoot fairly well. Otherwise, we would be in danger of paying too much attention to these few men and neglecting the great body of our militiamen. I think it would be well for the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Mr. Borden) to bear that in mind. While I am heartily in favour of both the Dominion and Provincial Rifle Associations, it seems to me that we should pay more attention to securing a large number of men that are capable of shooting fairly well than to get a few who can shoot excellently well. From year to year men grow older, and while they may still have an interest in the subject, they lose the capability of rendering active service which devolves upon the young men who are growing up. Therefore, in my opinion, it is better to have plenty of shooting that is fairly good so that this marksmanship will be available for the defence of the country. The money would be better expended if some system were evolved that would encourage all of the volunteers and the militia, whether on the reserve or active list, to be able to master their weapons and shoot fairly well than by giving too much encouragement for a few men in the different battalions who might be able to shoot particularly well.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I am heartily in accord with the resolution moved by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes). I wish to say a word in regard to what the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) has stated. He says he does not think that any agreement should be asked from the men who join these proposed rifle clubs because Canada always can find plenty of men who are willing to fight for her in the time of need. It seems to me, that, although we can find plenty of men, we cannot always find plenty of men who are first-class rifle shots, and these clubs are proposed for the express purpose of teaching men how to shoot. Why should any man, when he joins one of these clubs, object to signing an agreement to serve? He knows that the reason that the club is formed is to make men first-class rifle shots so that, in case of need, his services would be worth something to the country. If it were not for that nobody would wish him to join that club. I cannot see any reason why a man who joins a club of that kind should object to signing an agreement to serve in case his services are required. I am perfectly well aware that the governmnt can find plenty of men, as it has done in the past, but it is those men who have proved themselves to be first-class shots that should be the first asked to join when they are required. I do not see any hardship in calling on a man, when the government assists him, either with money, or with ammunition, or by giving him a first-class rifle range, to come forward as a militiaman in the defence of his country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). Mr. Speaker, I think we should all be very much obliged to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) for having brought this matter up. I assume, however, that in doing so, his object was simply to discuss the matter and not with any idea of tying the hands of the department by the actual passage of this resolution. There can be no question as to the vital importance of rifle practice to the militia. The fact is that without it the militia amounts to nothing. That being the case, as I have said recently in another place, the department has been considering the establishment of rifle associations in the country. I expected that before this the proposals would have been formulated and published in the Gazette, but owing to a discussion which took place at the rifle association meeting the other day, I thought it was desirable to give a little more consideration to the matter. I hope before the militia estimates are considered that the regulations will have been published. I think my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) will, perhaps, change his opinion later as to the desirability of applying no test to the men who become members of the proposed associations. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) that it is desirable that a test of some kind should be applied in order to make sure of the good faith of the men to whom we supply rifles and free ammunition to learn the art of rifle shooting. It is the custom of a good many people in the Dominion to pursue rifle shooting simply as a pleasure without any idea of carrying it further in case of necessity. I have no objection to that, but I do not think that we should supply these persons with free ammunition, and it is to make it necessary that those to whom we supply the rifles and ammunition should put their marksmanship to some practical use that we apply the test. Now, that my hon. friend from North Victoria has attained his object in bringing about the discussion I understand that he will withdraw his motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to ask from the minister whether or not his department has under consideration the desirability of training young men throughout the country in the art of riding and managing horses. I know that progress must be gradual in these things, but it seems to me that this is a matter which the department might take into consideration. In connection with that, the question arises as to whether we can train men throughout the Dominion to shoot from horseback. That also seems to be a very desirable, if not a necessary part of a soldier's training in these days.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This matter will be discussed on the estimates. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) will remember that last session the question of establishing mounted rifles was thoroughly discussed, and I stated that we would make a beginning in Manitoba and the North-west. I think a school will be established, probably in the city of Winnipeg or some part of Manitoba for a corps of the kind designated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I think the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Hon. Mr. Prior) as well as the hon. Minister of Militia slightly misunderstood the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson). I am sure I voice the opinion of the House in congratulating the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) on the very masterly manner in which he handled the subject. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) did not at all object to the rifle men signing themselves. He took it for granted that every man who trained for rifle shooting would be ready to come to the front in case of necessity. At the same time there are a great many young fellows who might not in the immediate future wish to enroll themselves in the militia, but who would wish to have a rifle training and would in case of necessity come to the front. I stated at the outset that all I wished to do was to place this matter before the minister so that in the framing of his rifle association regulations he might keep it in view. With all due deference to my hon. friend from Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), what we want is a large number of men who can shoot well. I am of the opinion from a rather long experience in the business, that the battalions and companies which make the best general average in shooting are the battalions that include among them a few of these good shots. You must have a few enthusiasts to set the lead so that the others will follow. My motion touches the men who have already signed and are already in the ranks. The highest prize of riflemen in this country is the Bisley team, and numbers of our militia men are prohibited from competing in that under present conditions. The country battalions have no rifle ranges and not a tithe of the opportunities our friends from the cities have. I should not wish for a moment to deprive the city corps of the advantages they have, but I would like to see some encouragement given to the boys on the side roads who have proven to be quite their equals—I will not say the superiors—of the lads from the cities and towns. The experience of the South African war is that the men who could shoot straight, mighty soon taught the Boers to fear them. The Boers learned the corps that could shoot straight just as soon as the British themselves did, and when these gentlemen were around the Boers avoided them most religiously. Now, that I have drawn the attention of the Minister of Militia to the subject, I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

Motion withdrawn.

THE STAFF COLLEGE COURSE.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria) moved :

That in the opinion of this House it would be in the best interests of the active militia of Canada, were the books and data used in the staff college course of the Imperial service placed at the disposal of such officers of the Canadian militia as might wish to have the reading thereof.

He said : This is a very simple motion, Mr. Speaker. We have had in Canada for a few years past a kind of staff college course. If you look over the list of nearly all those who attended that school you will scarcely find the name of a man outside of the permanent corps, or else some one who has nothing to do. You will hardly find one of them who is a free citizen of Canada. If they are members of the permanent corps they should have had this training before they entered it. With all due respect these are not the type of men we want to have in the leading militia positions of this country. Very few of the men in the active militia can afford to spend three or four months taking this staff course, and what I want is that the department should furnish to each of the officers, say above the grade of captain, the books that are on the list of that staff college course. I do not say it with any disrespect to the staff college course, but if any one who has taken an interest in militiary studies—as every officer of any standing in the militia should—reviews the books in that staff college course, he will be surprised to find that the great bulk of them will be in his own library.

My suggestion is that those books should be placed at the disposal of those officers who do not enjoy access to them, and do not know just where to write to get them. We must have a democratic militia. I have always contended in favour of our adopting such a system, but my arguments have been generally sneered at and frowned upon. To-day, however, the best men in the British army have expressed themselves in favour of that policy, for advocating which I was met with all sorts of hostile prejudices in the days gone by. And in order to carry out that policy, you must give our rank and file the opportunities to read at their own homes at night or on Sundays and week evenings, these works which are used in the staff college course, and I do not know that an evening could be better spent at our annual camp meetings than by having it devoted to an examination on these works, with an occasional lecture on them by some one of the officers. I have no desire to press this motion, but simply wish to draw the attention of the minister to the matter, in the hope that he will give it his consideration.

Motion withdrawn.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 5.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 12, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

VISIT OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CORNWALL AND YORK.

Hon. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the right hon.

leader of the government to a paragraph that appears in the Victoria Daily Times, of Tuesday, March 5. It is headed : 'The Duke is coming—Aulay Morrison telegraphs that his visit is practically decided upon' ; and reads as follows :

Upon the opening of the House to-day the premier read a telegram from Aulay Morrison, M.P., stating that the visit of the Duke of York and Cornwall to British Columbia was practically fixed. The announcement was greeted with great applause.

That was on March 5. On March 7, I called the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the fact that the people of British Columbia would like to know whether their Royal Highnesses were going to visit that province or not, and the right hon. gentleman replied as follows :

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I stated some time ago to my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) that we are corresponding at this moment with the Colonial Office upon the subject of the visit of their Royal Highnesses, that the correspondence is not concluded, and that I would not like to make a statement until the correspondence has been concluded. But in the meantime, I think, without divulging any secret, I may assume to say that it would be, I think, quite proper and fitting that their Royal Highnesses should visit Vancouver, B.C.

Now, Sir, I cannot believe that the hon. member for Westminster (Mr. Morrison) sent that telegram without having some——

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. member will not make any discussion ?

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. If I am assured by the right hon. gentleman——

Mr. SPEAKER. I wish also to state that my mind is not clear that such a question should be brought before the House just now. I cannot see that it is either a question of privilege or a question of urgency. The question may, perhaps, come up later on.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. I only want to get some information.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am simply stating the rule, which is that when the Orders of the Day are called, the only matters which may be brought up are questions of privilege or questions of urgency. I do not see that this is a question of urgency. Besides, if I may be permitted to suggest, when a question of urgency is raised, it might be better to have an understanding with the government, that the question should be answered without notice being given.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if you rule it out of order, I cannot say anything more. I wish to get the information from the right hon. First Minister as to whether Mr. Morrison was authorized to send such a telegram as that——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR—or whether the right hon. gentleman was treating the House in a manner——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR—which, I do not think, was at all proper, in stating that he had not the information to give.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, I gave to the House the only information I could give pending the correspondence, which had not been concluded. I gave no information to Mr. Morrison or anybody else. I never saw Mr. Morrison on the subject at all.

SUPPLY—S. A. WAR—CANADIAN INTERVENTION, &c.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Since I have given notice of the motion which I am now to propose, a double accusation has been brought against me.

On one hand, I am pointed out to the eyes of my English-speaking fellow-citizens as a French demagogue; and, on the other, I am denounced to my own countrymen as a dangerous British Imperialist.

Of course, having made up my mind to say what I think, as I think it, on all matters of national importance, I will not trouble myself with the opinion of this paper or that one: it would be easier to get a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than to bring a political sheet to appreciate an idea with complete independence and good faith.

In the course of my remarks, I will have occasion to deal with the charge of French demagogy, to which, I must say, I never attached any importance. The intention of raising a racial agitation on this matter has always been so foreign to my mind and so totally absent from my utterances, that I never took the trouble to confute that accusation. I thought I could rely on the common sense and straightforwardness of English Canadians to do justice on that slander.

As to my imperialistic tendencies, they should not call for much argument either. Nevertheless, the problem has received so little serious consideration, from the Quebec representatives especially, that some explanation may be required. The preamble of my motion sets out my intention clearly enough, I think. I do not recede for one moment from the position which I have taken and kept from the day the Canadian government decided to take part in the South African war; that position being identical to that occupied by the cabinet till the 13th October, 1899.

This proposition therefore does not imply an admission on my part that the government had a right and a duty to interfere in South Africa. I shall never admit that the country could be thrown in any war by order in council. I shall never acknowledge that the government was excusable, for the sake of power or popularity, or even in order to avoid the nightmare of racial agitation, to open, by a mere cabinet decision, a new era in our relations with Great Britain, without at least enlightening the people upon the real consequences of their action. I still assert that Canada is not bound and should not be called to any other military action than the defence of her territory.

Such principles being reserved, there is no necessity for my insisting any more upon them at present. The point I want to make is this: We, Canadians, have been taxed, some wilfully and some forcibly, to defray the cost of this expedition; we have, therefore, the right to pronounce on the outcome and the settlement of the conflict in which we have been made a party, and we should not allow the British government to presume and decide arbitrarily of our opinion without even consulting us on the matter. As I have stated when I moved my anti-Imperialist resolution last year; as I repeated the other day in support of the motion of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) requesting the abolition of the anti-Catholic declaration forced upon the King on the day of his coronation: I believe it is our right and duty, as representatives of a self-governing British community, to express an opinion and to make suggestions on any matter of vital interest to British power—provided always we impair in no way our full liberty and complete self-control of action.

Strange to say, no traces of Imperialism were pointed out in the help given by Canada to soldiers wounded in the Crimean war; nor in the part played by Sir John A. Macdonald in the settlement of the Alabama claim at the expense of Canada; nor in the three resolutions in favour of home rule for Ireland discussed in this parliament; nor even in the motion of sympathy with the gold miners and speculators of the Transvaal adopted by this House at the request of Mr. Rhodes's agent. But now, Imperialism is declared to be the basis of a proposition asking that a conflict in which we have taken an active part should be settled upon the same principles that have made Canada happy and prosperous and which this parliament wanted, some years ago, to be applied to Ireland. Stranger still, I am told that Canada has not the right to say that an end should be put to a war in which her required contribution of 500 men has been raised to over 3,000, and her national expenditure of a few thousand dollars to more than two millions. And finally when British authorities are unable to find police recruits in the United Kingdom, in New Zealand and in Australia, when the Cape Colonists themselves, for the benefit of whom that force is organized, refuse to enlist—I am denied by Imperialists and by anti-Imperialists as well, the right to say that Sir Alfred Milner and Mr. Chamberlain should not have been allowed and helped to play any longer upon the candid and enthusiastic naivety of Canadians.

The principles upon which I have based this proposition are not new; they were born with the British nation itself; they were brought by the Saxon pirates from the dark forests of Teutonia to the Celtic island of the north; they were laid down as the corner-stone of the British constitution by a section of that robust Norman race of which the French Canadians are to-day, perhaps, the most direct and thorough offsprings. Many a blow was struck at them; they were reddened by the blood of powerful assailants and of heroic defenders; I hope they will stand the present craze as they stood the attacks of monarchs and mobs, of oligarchists and aristocrats. I mean the right, for all British subjects, of petition and remonstrance to the Crown, and the right of directing the use that shall be made of their money.

The new Imperialism is the very antithesis of these rights. The tendency of Mr. Chamberlain's ideals, favoured, either wilfully or blindly, by most colonial public men, is to centralize gradually the political, military and economical ruling of the empire, making it as free as possible from independent local action. In order to set asleep the susceptibilities of the Canadian or of the Australian, and to kill their colonial vanity by swelling their jingoistic pride, it is whispered that the capital of the new empire may not stay where it is. But that does not matter: whether worshipped at London or at Toronto, at Melbourne or at Calcutta, the Buddha of the Imperialists will remain the same omnipotent fetich, and the choir of the faithful shall have to howl the same hymn. One of the most remarkable features of the new Britisher is that the more he swells in ambition the less tolerant he grows towards differing convictions.

It has been said, printed and sung on all tunes for over a year, that this war has raised the past subservient state of British self-governing colonies to the rank of free nations allied with Great Britain. Eloquent periods have been thrown to the four winds, celebrating the proud position which we occupy now in the British Empire.

Those triumphant effusions of colonial pride recall forcibly to my mind the decadent years of the Roman empire, when poets and rhetors, forgetful of the rude but free life of their forefathers, were extolling the glories of Cæsar and worshipping his golden image, because they were allowed to share in his refined debaucheries; because the old warriors of Gaul and Brittany, of Iberia and Germania had become the best legionaries of the empire, and could help in conquering more lands, in looting more herds, in burning more farms, in ravishing more women and starving more children for the everlasting glory of 'Cæsar, imperator et deus' Rome held a vaster empire, her provinces were better subdued, she boasted more of her power on the eve of her downfall than at any other period of her history. But we know now, and her clearsighted citizens knew then, that the time of her greatest moral and material strength was when her statesmen thought more of curing evils at home and of keeping the old Roman spirit of liberty, than of plundering the world and worshipping brutal force and insatiable greed in the person of the Emperor.

But I do not want to add fuel to the fire of jingo feelings. I will simply remind the members of the House, those especially who are most proud of the position we occupy in the empire, that, if we do not want Canada to be considered by the British government as a mere colonial field for profitable speculation, it is most urgent that we should make ourselves respected not only on the battlefield, but also in His Majesty's councils. The time has come when we should tell Mr. Chamberlain that, having had at leisure and unreservedly the blood of our blood and the flesh of our flesh, the tears of Canadian mothers and the sweat of Canadian farmers and workers, in order to enrich himself and his brother and his son and the whole of his tribe, by selling guns and ammunition, he should at least respect the language of the Canadian people, and not distort as he pleases the documents which are sent to him by the Canadian government.

I exposed before the House, at the last session, the strange course followed by the Colonial Secretary; his using our Transvaal resolution of 1899 to say that we were in favour of his provoking and arrogant policy; his acceptation of our offers of help before they had ever been tendered ; the publication by the London papers of his official despatch to Lord Minto before it had reached our government ; and above all, his insolent reply to the order in council of October 13th. Since then, we have had another manifestation of the growing audacity of the master of the empire. Last year, on the 4th of June, I put the following question to the government :

> Has the government, or any of its members, been consulted as to the conditions upon which the South African war should be settled? Is it the intention of the government to offer any suggestion or opinion on the matter?

To which the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) replied :

> Neither the government, nor any of its members, have been consulted as to conditions upon which the South African war should be settled. They are not considering the advisability of offering any suggestion or opinion upon the matter.

And the reply was noisily applauded by the opposition. This session, on the 18th of February, I put the following question :

> 1. Was the Canadian government, or any of its members, consulted by the British government on the South African question since the 1st of June last?
> 2. Did the Canadian government, or any of its members, offer any opinion or make any suggestion to the British government on the matter?
> The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Canadian government was not consulted, nor any of its members, by the British government on the South African question since June 1st last. No member of the Canadian government offered any opinion on the matter.

Let us now cross the ocean, enter Westminster Palace, the mother of parliaments, the source and safeguard of British liberty, of British justice, of British truth. On the 7th day of August last—I read from the Times' parliamentary report :

> Mr. Faber (York) asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, considering the part taken by Canada and Australia in the South African war, it was proposed to ascertain the views of the government of those countries in regard to the settlement and government of the Transvaal and Orange State when the war was over.

And remembering the declarations made by the Prime Minister of Canada on the 4th of June, 1900, and on the 18th of February, 1901, let us hear the reply of the oracle of the new British world :

> Mr. Chamberlain.—I have already made myself acquainted with the views of the colonies of Canada and Australia in regard to the main points of the future settlement, and Her Majesty's government are in complete accordance with them as to the necessity for annexation, the establishment of a government supported by military force, with the ultimate expectation of an extension to both colonies of representative self-government. (Cheers.)

Yes, cheers on both sides of the Atlantic, —but which is which ?

One would be tempted to qualify such a flagrant contradiction in terms that would call for your ruling, Mr. Speaker. But, after all, this was not much worse than when being told officially that the Canadian government were permitting the enlistment of the first contingent because they considered that the colony was not committed to any future action, the Colonial Secretary replied officially that the British government were accepting our troops as an evidence of our willingness 'to share in the risks and burdens of the empire,' and as a proof of our sympathy with his policy in South Africa. That first distortion having been tacitly accepted here, the Colonial Secretary was only encouraged in his methods. But I think it justifies me in appealing to the members of this House in the name of Canadian self-respect to put a stop to that arbitrary treatment. I appeal to those at least who have not reached that point of devotion to Mr. Chamberlain that to be made tools of in his hands is to be considered a great honour to Canada.

In that new alliance with Great Britain which has changed our state of humble servility into a glorious matrimony, I would like to know how long we are called to play the part of a deceived but contented husband. In national intercourse as well as in private life that role is not yet considered as one to be much boasted about—by the husband at least.

I do not see that I have to apologize for anything I said in the past on this question. My course has been twice endorsed and emphatically approved by my constituents. It has been said that the almost unanimous voice of the people of Canada approved of our intervention in South Africa, and therefore, that we, the few members of this House who condemned that intervention, must be in the wrong. I deny this proposition in toto. It is false both in principle and in fact. First, number does not make right what is wrong. Majority rules, but not always in truth and equity. I am an optimist. I firmly believe that, on the whole, good is prevalent and that right conquers might at the end. But there are periods of moral depression when thousands and millions of men, when entire nations seem to lose the path of justice and even the sense of self conservation. If it is but an accidental attack of fever, a reaction follows which restores health and common sense in the body politic. If it is the last illness, the nation disappears and a new one takes its place under the sun. And the world goes on under the guidance of God. Fortunately for Canada, signs of reaction are already noticeable; and I can foresee the day when the judgment of the people of Canada, English as well as French, will not be so hard on me as the speeches, the votes, the songs and the howlings which illustrated the debates of last session. That reaction is not yet of such a character to warrant the confidence of my Quebec Liberal friends who naively believe that Imperialism is a fake or a dead issue. But the change is strong enough to give hopes to those who dread for our rising nation the brutalizing effect of soldiery rule, the development of the spirit of conquest and plunder, and the heavy burdens of Imperial militarism. Even in England the reaction is manifest. In fact the wave of jingoism never reached there the point it attained here. As usual, the true colonial jingo outdid the loudest London cockney. Before going to the polls, Mr. Chamberlain the master of the British administration, made of his war the main, nay the sole issue of the electoral contest: 'A vote against the government is a vote for the Boers,' said he in his peculiar Bismarckian way. And in reply to this passionate appeal, and in spite of the disorganization of the Liberal party, 1,603,537 suffrages were given for the Boers—to use the Colonial Secretary's own stamping—in 427 divisions, and eighty ridings returned oppositionists by acclamation. And every one admits that the vote would be far more favourable to the Liberals now than last fall. The change effected in the editorship of the Daily News is quite an indication of the change of sentiment. We may see before long a repetition of the anti-war feeling which followed the deplorable Crimean expedition. Now take the result of the London county council elections just held last week. The Moderates, despairing to get a majority on straight municipal issues, dragged the khaki cry in the contest. 'Do you want a pro-Boer council?' was their war cry; and what was the reply? An increased majority for the Progressists.

As far as Canada is concerned, the verdict of the electorate has been interpreted by the people of Great Britain and of the empire at large with such an ignorance of the real issue that it is most proper to make a short analysis of the situation. In order to give to the House an idea of the way British opinion was misguided on Canadian feelings, by the leading Tory organs, I will just quote a few lines from the London Times. In a letter from its special correspondent in Toronto, dated September 24, and published on the 6th October, the political situation in Canada and its bearing on Imperial affairs is very ably considered. After saying that the French Canadians are more thoroughly Canadian than all others, and consequently less interested in British and Imperial concerns, the writer adds these words, which I commend to the attention of the House:

> It was a singularly fortunate circumstance that at this critical time in national affairs a French Canadian statesman was at the head of the Dominion government. Without his leadership, Quebec might have caused trouble. A French member of the cabinet and more than one private member of parliament objected to the conditions on which the Canadian contingents were sent to the front.

Then speaking of the hesitations of the Prime Minister in sending the troops:

> No doubt he (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) felt that his compatriots required to be educated by degrees to the full demands of British citizenship.

I would like to hear from the right hon. gentleman on what lines and how far he is prepared to carry on that course of education. After the elections, the great English Tory organ thought it was good policy to interpret the Liberal majority as a victory for Imperialism. In an editorial dated November 10th, it said:

> Both parties in Canada are Imperialist; and we believe that the Conservatives, if they had been in power, would have pursued, in this respect, the same course that was pursued by the Liberals. Nevertheless, it fell to the Liberals, as a matter of fact, to do the work, and it was done with a promptitude, a gracefulness, and a liberality which could not have been surpassed, and which Great Britain will never forget. As far as obtaining popularity in this country was concerned, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his cabinet had a magnificent opportunity and they employed it to the full. That they should do so was the more gratifying when we consider that the back bone of their strength is derived from the French population of the Dominion and especially from Quebec which from circumstances which we, perhaps, do not fully understand, was less strongly represented in South Africa than some other provinces.

I think this is rather hard on hon. gentlemen opposite who are mostly stout Imperialists but whose Imperialism would have no doubt been greatly strengthened by access to power, even at the hands of French dominators. But the most peculiar appreciation by the Times of the electoral result in Canada appeared in its Toronto letter, dated November 10, and published on the 24th. I quote the following words :

> On one point of national importance the election has cleared the air. It is now manifest that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has not been injured among his French Canadian followers by his British Imperialism. So far as Quebec is concerned, the sending of the Canadian contingents to South Africa was fully ratified by the vote of last Wednesday. The Premier had never shirked the responsibility which he assumed in the matter, and the issue was fairly before the French electors. . . . So far as Imperial politics are concerned, therefore, the decisive attitude of Quebec is satisfactory.

The conclusions of the two last quoted articles are utterly false, and the intelligence of Canadian affairs displayed in the former is an evidence of the wilful bad faith of the two others.

The question of Imperialism was put neither squarely nor fairly before the people of Canada. In the English-speaking provinces, it was kept on the ground of sentiment where it had been placed in this House, each party claiming the first prize in their competitive devotion to the mother land ; but the constitutional aspect and the ultimate consequences of our military expedition were not discussed.

In the province of Quebec, when the issue was raised, both parties were simply charging each other with being the cause of that display of jingoism which had forced the hands of the government. What was claimed in one part of the land as an act of virtue, was denounced in the other part as a crime. I may tell, in passing, to all those who are sincerely seeking for peace and harmony between the two races who compose the Canadian nation, that they vainly endeavour to reach that happy result so long as they keep up that double-faced system of treating great national problems. I will come back to this point later on.

Let me now place before the House a few facts which prove that the sentiment of the English-speaking people was not so decidedly one-sided as it has been stated in this House and throughout the country. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) was quoted as having said at a public meeting shortly after last session :

> I voted for the expenditure of $2,000,000 in South Africa, although I admit the justice of the position taken by Mr. Bourassa, and believe there is nothing in the constitution to warrant such expenditure. I simply voiced the wishes of my constituents in this matter.

On the eve of polling day he was bitterly denounced in the organ of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). The above words appeared on nearly every page of the Winnipeg Tribune in heavy type with headings and comments like these :

> No Contingents for Him.
> Puttee Stands with Bourassa.
> Voted Against his Convictions.
> Too British for Him.

> If Mr. Puttee had had his way, there would have been no contingents sent to South Africa in defence of the empire. His sympathies were with Mr. Bourassa.
> Winnipegers want a representative at Ottawa who is a Britisher at heart and who will stand by the empire on principle.

These are ultra-loyal appeals——

Mr. PUTTEE. The paper that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) has quoted was incorrect on that occasion and admittedly so.

Mr. BOURASSA. I was just coming to that point. I do not say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) used these words, but I simply say, that, on the eve of the polling day, if the passions of the people had been aroused to the point that was stated, if there had been such a current of public opinion, a man simply supposed to be what is called a pro-Boer, and supposed to have said that the government should have hesitated a little before committing this country, would have been swamped by his opponent. What was the result ? The hon. gentleman was elected by a majority of 1,183, while, ten months previous, when he had the strength of two governments behind him, he was elected by 8.

In the east riding of Lambton the member-elect (Mr. Simmons) was denounced by the local Liberal organ, the Petrolia Topic, as a pro-Boer. True, the hon. hon. gentleman denied the accusation ; but the paper kept it up and, in reply to the hon. gentleman's denial, published half a dozen interviews with residents of the town affirming that, in several instances, the hon. gentleman had not disguised his disapproval of the position taken by the British government on South African matters. I do not pretend that the statement was founded ; but nobody will deny that, had the war feeling been overwhelming in that riding, such accusations would have proved hard against the Conservative candidate. And here he is, returned by the majority of the people in a constituency which was represented last session by his opponent, a worthy and honourable citizen no doubt popular in his riding.

But here is a case still clearer. Dr. Weldon, who represented the riding of Albert, N.B., in this House from 1891 to 1896, is a distinguished professor of international law in the loyal city of Halifax. His disapproval of British policy in South Africa was widely known. He went as far as dedicating one of his lectures to the interpretation of the conventions signed between Great Britain and the South African republic; and his conclusion was a thorough condemnation of Mr. Chamberlain's attitude. I was told that he even dissuaded his son from starting for South Africa and taking part in a war which he considered unjust. This did not prevent that honourable and distinguished gentleman from being chosen as the Conservative candidate in the county of Albert and from being accepted as such by the very men who nearly fell into fits of apoplexy in this House when I gave expression to similar sentiments. True, Dr. Weldon was defeated; but in a contest where the Liberals have made tremendous gains in that province, he reduced his minority of 243 in 1896 to 116 in 1900.

These are the only three cases where it may be said that there was a slight indication in the English-speaking provinces, of what jingo prophets call pro-Boer feelings on the part of candidates. And I do not think the results show that to differ on this question with Mr. Chamberlain and even with the leaders of both parties in Canada has been considered a national felony.

Other indications of reaction against military jingoism have been manifested in our English provinces since the election. On a previous occasion, the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) spoke of the enthusiastic reception tendered in Halifax to volunteers returning from South Africa. I know Halifax to be very sentimental. Even its dry fish and hardware dealers cannot refrain their poetical ardour and introduce patriotic rhymes—not home-made, I must say—in their board of trade reports. But elsewhere, the enthusiasm was not quite so pronounced. Commenting on the arrival of our boys in the metropolis of Canada, the Montreal Gazette of December 25th last, said very philosophically:

> The second detachment of the Canadian infantry received only a moderately warm welcome on its return from South Africa. The country is getting used to heroes, it would seem. It does not esteem them less, but it is less demonstrative of its feelings.

Of course this was in disloyal Quebec. But let us cross the Ottawa river and penetrate to the heart of the good old sister province, the bulwark of loyalism. Woodstock is an Ontario town, and if I am not mistaken, not largely peopled with pea-soup eaters—unless my hon. friend from North Oxford (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) has educated his constituents to the taste of that healthy food. Here is a description of the quiet way in which returned soldiers were received in Woodstock, according to the Sentinel-Review of December 26th last:

> When the train moved in yesterday morning about one person in twenty cheered; a minute after the men had alighted and before the band recommenced playing, there could hardly have been greater quietness at a funeral ceremony. Have we forgotten how to cheer?

I could contrast that funeral reception with the warm welcome which greeted Major Fiset on his return in the French town of Rimouski. I would suggest to the hon. member for North Oxford (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to get our colleague from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to deliver there some essays on Krugerism and Huttonism. And if these stimulants do not succeed in infusing enthusiasm in the Woodstockians, let him secure the musical services of Mr. G. E. Foster and Dr. Montague to sing the National Anthem in Woodstock three times a day in open air for the length of time they used to pass here.

Speaking in a general way, the Toronto Star, one of the Canadian papers which kept best its cool senses during the jingo spree of last year, gave this advice to our returned heroes on December 31st last:

> Get Back to Business.
> The men who have come from the war have received welcomes that greatly surprised them. People in country places especially are generally very slow to exhibit enthusiasm over young men who belong to their own towns. Yet in a great many cases young men in khaki have been welcomed in royal style, banqueted and presented with watches and sums of money. They should not harbour the hope that they can continue to walk on air.
> The wise ones will get back to earth as soon as they possibly can, will put away their regimentals and get to work again. An old saying may be amended to read that nobody is a hero to the people of his own village.

I must beg pardon to the House for multiplying these quotations from English papers. But I am bound to do so. Should I make such utterances on my own account, they would be called 'manifestations of French disloyalty.' In the same copy of the Gazette which I have just quoted appeared a long editorial dealing with the alleged mutiny of some colonial troops in South Africa. The whole thing is a lecture to British authorities on what they should expect and not expect from colonists:

> Lord Kitchener's statement, published in our yesterday's issue, makes it clear that all that occurred was the refusal of some time-expired men to go on duty when ordered to do so. . . . If they are not willing to serve any longer, they cannot be blamed, certainly not by men who were unwilling to serve at all. . . . They were in the field before the C. I. V. and the Household Cavalry, and they have seen the latter return home not without suspicion that social influence had weight in the preference. . . . . It has evidently taken some of the British officers a long time to learn how the colonial troops should be handled. . . . The enthusiasm for the war is waning, and the men are probably right in the belief that the rest of the campaign will be mainly police work. . . . . They have done all they promised to do, and have done it in a way to make us proud of them.

But the best expression of sentiment in that sense was given by the Evening Telegram, of Toronto, on October 25 last. It appeared as the leading editorial, under the title :

'Did Well to Come Home.'

It was not exactly Col. Otter's duty to accept on behalf of the Royal Canadian Regiment Lord Roberts' cordial invitation to remain in Africa until the war was technically over. The instincts of a professional soldier like Col. Otter, do not seem to be in line with the inclinations of all the volunteers under his command. They have their rights and did well to exercise these rights, and not be browbeaten into staying in Africa when they wanted to come home. They gave the empire good service in the hour of danger, and could well afford to leave professional soldiers to complete the remaining stages of the campaign.

This gem of common sense must have been a cause of amazement to all those who heard here its responsible author, the late member for East Toronto, Mr. John Ross-Robertson, lecturing the government for not voting sufficient money to pay for the total maintenance of our troops in South Africa, even if England refused our alms.

Every man of good faith will admit that we are far from the frantic appeals of October, 1899, for troops and horses, for guns and cartridges.

My conclusion to all this is that loyalty is almost as elastic as a politician's conscience. At the start of the war, when nobody in Canada expected it could last more than a few weeks ; when the British government wanted only 500 men from Canada —not to fight, but to express our sympathy with Mr. Chamberlain's policy—I was branded as a traitor because I wanted the government to pause a few weeks and give to the representatives of the people an opportunity to discuss the consequences of this new military policy. A year later, when the situation was darker than ever, when the British army found it hard to hold its few positions, and could not prevent the enemy's invasion in British territory, the very men who put me under the ban of British opinion, plainly said to their beloved mother land : 'Get out of the mess the best you can ; for us, we have enough of the game. Come back home, boys ; God save the Queen !'

At the end of December last, it was announced that some more Canadians would have a chance to go to Africa, and this time for a long period and a good pay ; with full opportunities to loot cattle, to burn houses and farms, to steal clocks, mirrors, jewellery and money, to chop pianos just for the fun of it, to turn penniless, on the veldt, women and children at the mercy of barbarous and lustful natives. I take all those words from letters from Canadian volunteers. At the risk of being called a 'little Englander,' I venture the opinion that Lord Wellington's humane methods of warfare will remain in history as more glorious to the name of Great Britain than Lord Kitchener's improved system. And, perhaps also, the military glory of the wise tactician of the Torres Vedras and of Waterloo will not be totally eclipsed by the ferry trade of Sir Redvers Buller.

Anyhow, when it was decided to raise Canadian recruits for the South African constabulary, the explosion of enthusiasm was not defeaning. On December 31 last, the Toronto Star published an article entitled : 'We need our men at home,' in which I read the following lines :

This country cannot therefore regard as a favour that a thousand of our young men are to be accepted as volunteers for police duty in Africa, Asia, South America, England, or anywhere else. We need them at home. This country has no reason to consider a kindness, either, that commissions are offered our young men in the Imperial army, for these are prizes that wean them away from the tasks for which this country educates them. We need more young men than we can grow and we grow better ones than we can import.

It is all right for this country to jump into the middle of the ring in a time of crisis and strike a few blows for the credit of the family, but what we have to remember is that in making Canada what she ought to be, one native is worth a wagon load of immigrants.

At the risk of abusing the patience of the House, I will also quote two articles which appeared in the Canadian Military Gazette. I take for granted that this publication is neither an anti-militarist organ nor a French disloyal mouthpiece. The first article was published on January 15 last, and read as follows :

The South African Police.

Now that recruiting depots for the South African police are to be established in different sections of the Dominion, much unfavourable comment is heard. Surely the Canadian government did not express a desire to the Imperial authorities that such should be done, and if the latter acted on their own initiative, they certainly took a step that was ill-advised. Our aim in this country is to get population not to send our young men abroad. It appears that ranchers and other of that class, to be found mainly in Manitoba and the Territories, are the men preferred and by holding out the inducement of big pay it is hoped to entice away one thousand or more of the flower of our manhood. Canada can ill spare these men, and as a term in the South African police means, in the large majority of cases, that they will ultimately settle in the country, the Dominion is actually being denuded to populate another portion of the empire.

The Imperial government should be plainly told that, if it is absolutely necessary to have men from Canada to fight for British supremacy in the dark continent, this country will send not 1,000, but at least 10,000, but we have no men to spare for doing routine police duty, while millions of acres of the finest land in the world lay untilled for want of population. Until the men are urgently required, the Canadian authorities should not hold out any inducements to recruits in the country. Canadians wishing to join the police of their own free will should be permitted to do so, but it is not fair to the Dominion that they should be encouraged to enlist.

On February 19, the same paper came again to the front and said :

The S. A. Constabulary.

According to the Army and Navy Gazette, of London, Eng., usually one of the best-informed service journals published in the United Kingdom, the basis of all applications for membership in the South African constabulary is taken to be that 'those sending in their names desire to settle in South Africa after service with the force.'

Such has been strongly suspected in Canada, although the authority have taken the utmost pains to conceal the fact from the public, and the Gazette, after reading the article referred to in our English contemporary, is more strongly than ever opposed to the action of the Canadian militia authorities in encouraging the virtual deportation from our country of a large number—for us—of the best settlers obtainable anywhere in the world.

As has been said on several previous occasions, this journal is not by any means opposed to sending men to fight the empire's battles, if they are required for that purpose, but in this instance it is not even pretended that such is the case, the statement being that they are required for doing police duty in the conquered country, the ultimate aim and object, doubtless, being at the expiration of their three years' term of service that they will be induced to settle in Africa, to the exceeding great detriment of the Dominion.

In this connection, it may be said that the government of New South Wales, being evidently better seized of the facts than ours at Ottawa, have emphatically refused to permit an Imperial officer to recruit for the force in that portion of the empire, and the Gazette is of opinion that recent developments justify the course.

Let all who desire to join the force of their own volition do so without throwing obstacles in the way, but to cajole and encourage men to enlist is not fair to the land we live in.

A few days later, on February 25th, the Montreal Witness, following along the same line, said :

Canadians seem to be taking all too kindly to the establishment among them of recruiting depots, whose object will be to withdraw the most vigorous of our youth from nation-building to the adventure of war. We presume that in every community as full of virility as the Canadian people there will be a certain proportion irresistibly drawn towards such a life. The wild beast has not yet died out of our human nature. If there are some called by nature to military life, and there certainly are many who seem better adapted to success in that than in any other calling, it is better that they should enlist in the service of their own empire than in that of strangers. We cannot, however, look on the whole thing without much regret.

With regard to the attitude of the government of New South Wales, I have gone through the London Times to ascertain the truth ; and the first thing I find is a despatch from Sydney, dated February 17, as follows :—

Sydney, N.S.W., Feb. 17.—Sir Alfred Milner having notified the government of New South Wales of his intention to send an officer to recruit in Australia for the South African constabulary, the government has replied that the colony objects to such a proceeding.

From the London Times of February 20, I find the following despatch :

Cape Town, Feb. 18.—There is no foundation for the statement contained in telegrams from London to the effect that Sir Alfred Milner proposed to recruit men in Australia and New Zealand for the South African constabulary, and that the New South Wales government had objected.

For those who have followed the course of Imperial authorities on this war question, it is easy to read between the lines of these despatches. It is now said that no applications were made in Australia or New Zealand for recruits ; but the fact seems to be that the British government, having confidentially asked for the opinion of the governments of those colonies as to the feasibility of recruiting, and learning that they were not willing to be played upon by Sir Alfred Milner, the statement was put forth that the request had not been made. I may here also read the following despatch which came in the month of January :

New York, January 14.—The London correspondent of the Tribune says: The announcement is made by the Post that the scheme for raising a colonial police force has been abandoned for the present. The rates of pay were not considered tempting enough by the people living in South Africa, and of 16,000 men who applied to the United Kingdom to join the force, only 500 or so were selected as suitable.

Sir, I was perfectly justified in the opening of my remarks in saying that the British authorities, having found that they could not obtain in South Africa or in Australia recruits for the constabulary organized for the protection of South Africa, they came to this rich land of Canada to ask from us what other British colonies declined to give, and what the only colony directly interested in this war is not able to give.

I may add that the attempts on the part of Imperial authorities in South Africa to keep our young men as settlers is not a new feature of this war. As early as the 24th November last the Montreal Herald's special correspondent with the Strathcona Horse wrote from Potchefstrom a letter which appeared in the Herald of January 5. It begins as follows:—

The eye of the Canadian volunteer is turning towards Rhodesia, the most northern inheritance of the British South African Company, as a prospective place of settlement, attracted by the exceptional inducements offered by the Chartered Company, and the tales heard on the march or by the camp-fire, of the mineral and agricultural wealth of this portion of South Africa. In the ranks of Lord Strathcona's corps are twenty or thirty Canadians who are at present deeply interested in the country, and may yet make it their future home. . . . The special inducements to settlement extended by the British South African Company are offered only to Canadian, Australian and New Zealand volunteers and English Yeomanry who will volunteer for the defence of Rhodesia.

With the Military Gazette, I regret strongly that the Canadian government, which is taxing the people of this country to bring in foreign immigration, should have assisted British authorities in the draining of our best blood for the benefit of Mr. Rhodes. And again that step has been taken without the consent and knowledge of parliament. The cabinet cannot invoke this time the excuse of popular will. I did not hear of the slightest protest against the articles of the Toronto Star and of the Military Gazette which, I think, expressed the general opinion. And it cannot be pretended that this is another case of urgent necessity. On the 8th of January last, Lord Raglan, Under Secretary of State for War, said to a representative of the Associated Press :

> The condition of affairs in South Africa absolutely forbids prophecy. You cannot call it war, yet in some respects this is worse than war. . . . . The secret of the whole thing consists in horses. We have enough men there, but not enough mounted men.

A strange war indeed ! At the outset, the defeats of the British army were attributed to a lack of strategic science on the part of the mules ; and now we are told that the Imperial forces being unable to conquer this remnant of a handful of peasants, horses only can do it. Anyhow, since horses only were required, why did not the government offer to the British authorities all the horses they wanted, and told them to leave here where they are badly needed the men they do not want.

I go further : I say that the moment the government were convinced that the war was over—and convinced they were as early as the 7th of June last when they congratulated the Queen on the end of hostilities—it was their duty to notify the British government that Canadian soldiers should be sent back here at the expiry of their first period of engagement, that is, after six months of service. That duty became imperative when Lord Roberts annexed the two republics and every minister in England boasted that the war was over, and that the few Boer desperadoes who were still foolish enough to keep on fighting should not be considered as belligerents. If I understood well that popular voice which forced the hands of the government, our soldiers went to Africa and we paid them for the defence of the empire. But our purpose was not, I presume, to keep there at the expense of Canada a force of men to loot farms and do police work in a war which is not a war, as Lord Raglan termed it three months ago, or but a 'technical war,' as Mr. Ross-Robertson, of the Evening Telegram, would qualify it.

Coming back to those articles of the Toronto Star, of the Military Gazette, of the Montreal Witness, I am most happy to observe the revival of that robust common sense and of that practical spirit which every true observer of modern nations admires as the backbone of Anglo-Saxon strength, and to which the Anglo-Saxon shall have to come back if he does not want to see his power vanishing. But, to be impartial, I must point out the weakness of reasoning which characterizes those articles. If we admit the desirability of military expeditions outside of Canada, even scarce and accidental, we must prepare for them. Not only must we go in expensive purchases of weapons and ammunitions, we must also develop a military spirit in our peaceful community. If we make ours the quarrels of Great Britain ; if we wish to have at least 10,000 young men ready to start at England's first call in Europe or Africa, in Asia or Oceania, we must prepare the youth of this country for such emergencies. From the cradle, through the kindergarten, the school, the college, the university, the ear of the Canadian boy must be made familiar with the clang of arms and the strident appeal of trumpets. He must be taught to drill and to shoot and to love camping and loafing with spurs at his boots and a sword at his belt. Instead of war being painted to his eyes under its true colors as one of the chastisements of God over a sinful humanity, as one of the worst social scourges, more cruel and detrimental to the welfare of nations than cholera or famine, his young enthusiastic mind must be imbued with the barbarous, anti-Christian notion that war is the true path to glory, the most healthful and noble aim of a strong people. And the result will be that, not only by loyalty, not only in cases of imperative necessity, not only to defend the flag and the land, but simply to follow its new instincts, the 'flower of our manhood' will be ready to start at any time, for any cause, good or bad. In time of peace, that new martial education of the youth will lower to their mind the ordinary but fruitful occupations of life. And thus will be lost to our country the best of its blood, of its intelligence, of its vital strength. Military passion is brutal, and cannot be controlled easily by reason. I am glad to find out that some organs of the English-speaking community are beginning to agree with me ; but without any desire to discourage their honest and well-directed efforts, I may be allowed to say that if they want to avoid the consequences they must try to extirpate the causes. They have helped in throwing a bad seed to the national ground ; if they dread the harvest, let them go and unroot the crop ; cutting a few of the heaviest ears is but a childish and useless game.

Coming now to the province of Quebec, the attempt made by the London Times to interpret the almost unanimous vote given to the government in that province as an approval of the war, or of the participation of Canada in the conflict, is simply preposterous. I regret that some members of the cabinet have contributed to propound that false impression. They may have done it with a good purpose ; but what is the use ? Not only good intentions, but honesty, clear-sightedness, and frankness, are the best policy always.

At a banquet which was tendered to him at Toronto, on the 11th of December last, the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) was reported by the Toronto Globe as having said on Imperial issues :

In the province of Quebec the main attack that was made upon the government was on account of the Imperial policy which was followed by our right hon. friend. (Hear, hear.) The issue that was mainly raised there between the Prime Minister and his supporters and their opponents was as to whether Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the French Canadian Prime Minister, who had inaugurated the British preference, who had sent the troops to South Africa, whether he was to be supported in taking that action ; and we have only to look at the newspapers which were circulated by our Conservative friends in the province of Quebec, at the literature which was circulated by those gentlemen in Quebec, to see that that was the main issue upon which they appealed to the province of Quebec, and their appeal was that the people of Quebec should declare against Sir Wilfrid Laurier because he was an Imperial statesman, because he had thrown in his lot with the British empire. (Hear, hear.) What did the people of Quebec decide? What was their verdict? Was it for the men who attacked our hon. friend? No ; it was an endorsement of everything he had done to cement Canada more closely to the British Empire.

The hon. gentleman appealed to the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and to the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) to uphold his views. But these two gentlemen remained perfectly silent on that point, and for good reason : both of them were too polite to contradict their colleague and too sincere to strengthen him in his delusion. Of course, this opinion of the Minister of the Interior was an after-Toronto-dinner thought, and this may be pleaded as an extenuating circumstance. The hon. gentleman is, I know, a total abstainer, and the very opposite of a jingo ; but it may be he was affected by the Toronto atmosphere in the same way as a friend of mine who was once visiting the London docks : just by passing through the huge warehouses where all sorts of liquors are stored, he was nearly intoxicated by the alcoholic emanations which filled the air. In Toronto, jingo microbes are such in quality and quantity that even when stimulated only by Apollinaris water, they can affect the most solid brain.

The case of my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) is harder to diagnosticate—unless I call it an outburst of juvenile enthusiasm. Not that I don't acknowledge and respect the experience and solid mind of the hon. gentleman ; but in every man there are two men, and in every minister there are at least three—unless the man is perfectly null by himself and takes all his brains in his portfolio, which is far from being the case with the hon. minister. So that a member of the cabinet may very sincerely entertain and express quite opposite views on the same subject, according to whether he uses his personal brains or his ministerial mind. In spite of his keen experience and sound judgment as a man and as a politician, the Minister of Inland Revenue is officially the Benjamin of the cabinet. I think he relied exclusively on his young and fresh ministerial brains, naturally excited with the joy of victory, when he gave his opinion of the Quebec vote on the 9th of November last. He was reported as follows by the Ottawa correspondent of the Montreal Herald :

It was not at all a question of race or contingents. Even Mr. Chauvin, who voted in the House against sending contingents, was defeated by Mayor Préfontaine, who supported their going, while the majorities of both Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Monet were materially reduced.

After having referred to the Manitoba school question as one of the most important issues in the contest, he added :

The second topic of most opposition speakers was the increase of debt resulting from sending soldiers to South Africa at a cost of $5,000,000. This was the complaint against Laurier; Mr. Chauvin's defeat was the answer of the people.

And by the Ottawa Evening Journal :

The two great issues which the opposition had put forward were the Manitoba school question and the sending of the troops to South Africa. The opposition asked the electors to condemn the Laurier administration because the school question was not satisfactorily settled by the government, and also because the premier had sent the contingents to South Africa. It was Sir Wilfrid particularly who was held responsible for this. The vote has shown that the government has been endorsed for its action in regard to these questions. Mr. Chauvin, Conservative, who voted against sending the contingent, was defeated. The majorities of Monet and Bourassa were reduced. . . .

I regret, or rather I rejoice, that in my case, the hon. minister spoke under misinformation. My majority was larger by a few votes that in 1896, in spite of the fact that the lists were much less favourable and especially that 1,000 voters at least were absent from the localities where I took the strongest vote.

Mr. COWAN. You were lucky.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes, I was lucky to represent an intelligent constituency. My friend from Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Monet), whom I am so happy to see here again, ready to fight with me for the Canadian flag, should we even remain for some time yet in a glorious isolation, could tell to the House that the reduction of his majority was due to causes entirely foreign to the war question. In fact, his opponent took the same view as he did of the war question and said he would have voted in the same way as my hon. friend did on this matter. I could also point out the vote in the counties of Two Mountains, Bagot, Charlevoix and Maskinongé, where members who voted with us on this question were all returned by increased majorities. I do not think that any of those gentlemen receded, during the electoral campaign, from their former position on this question. I know that in Charlevoix and Maskinongé especially, the members-elect (Messrs. Angers and Legris) fought the battle straight on our lines. And I know as a matter of fact that before going to his political death in Maskinongé, Sir Adolphe Caron vainly endeavoured for several weeks to get the nomination in his former constituency, Three Rivers and St. Maurice ; and if he could not succeed, his position on the war question was to a certain extent an obstacle in his way.

Since the Minister of Inland Revenue has mentioned the defeat of Mr. Chauvin in Terrebonne as the result of his vote on my motion of the 13th of March last, and as an evidence of the sentiment of Quebec in favour of our military expedition to the Transvaal, I feel bound to give a few details about that election. I have here the political manifesto of the present member for Terrebonne (Mr. Préfontaine), who represents at the same time the riding of Maisonneuve. It is a long and interesting document treating of the Manitoba school question, of the financial prosperity of the country, of the progress in agriculture—but not a paragraph, not a line, not a word about the war, or the sending of contingents, or Imperialism. It appeared in L'Avenir du Nord, a Liberal paper published at St. Jérome, and largely circulated not only in Terrebonne county, but throughout the whole district. This paper, ably edited, has not a little contributed to the liberalizing of the counties of Terrebonne and Two Mountains, those old fortresses of the Conservative party. It is one of the strongest anti-Imperialistic publications in Quebec, one which denounced most bitterly the sending of troops to Africa, approved all along of my position, and congratulated Mr. Chauvin on his vote of the 13th of March last. I may say even that it has gone very often much farther than my own sentiments would lead me. I am anti-Imperialistic, but strongly attached to British institutions ; this paper is almost a secessionist. One may think that it changed its tone in order to support the Liberal candidate against Mr. Chauvin. Not at all ; on the contrary. First, in the same copy announcing that Mr. Préfontaine had been chosen as the Liberal candidate, Mr. Chauvin was denounced as a cowardly capitulator on the question of Imperialism. The article dated September 13, begins as follows :

Mr. Chauvin, Capitulard.

The county of Terrebonne is represented at Ottawa by a 'capitulard';

I do not know if my hon. friends whose native tongue is English quite understand the meaning of that word. It means not merely a capitulator, but a coward capitulator, one who capitulates without reason.

—Mr. Adolphe Chauvin himself.

At Beauharnois he declared that he was following Sir Charles Tupper's flag with the whole Conservative-yellow-blue-Tory party united as one man . . . . Ha ! Mr. Chauvin has tried to play the man of character at Ottawa with the Bourassas, the Monets and the Ethiers ; but our representative was really not built to keep up that role. He has capitulated ! Nay, he has surrendered without striking a blow. He does better : He goes back with arms and baggage to the camp of the militarists and the mountebanks of Britishism.

In the next issue L'Avenir du Nord published an article on Mr. Préfontaine's candidature. After a well-deserved eulogy of our worthy colleague, it goes on as follows :

One may tell us : 'All what you say is very true, but Mr. Préfontaine is an Imperialist.'

What evidence on this point can be given to us ?

No, we do not believe that Mr. Préfontaine, who has in the past given so many striking evidences of patriotism and of national zeal, may have, as a wish in his heart and as an article of his programme the participation of Canada in the foreign wars of the British Empire. No, we do not believe that Mr. Préfontaine admits, that in principle, we should give millions and shed our blood to defend England in conflicts, the motives of which are more than suspicious. We do not believe that Mr. Préfontaine is in favour of a military Imperialism which would afflict our peaceful country with the horrible wound of militarism, and this for the benefit of another nation.

Then, after proving that the government's policy on that question was less dangerous than Sir Charles Tupper's, it says :

Well ! Mr. Préfontaine who, as a supporter of the government, has approved the sending of contingents, but under the condition that this action shall not commit us in the future, is yet to be preferred to Mr. Adolphe Chauvin, who, after having pronounced himself against the sending of contingents in the House, walks now on the steps of Sir Charles Tupper whose Imperialistic ideas he endorses without restriction . . . . On that question of Imperialism which we have fought and shall always fight, Mr. Préfontaine is less to be feared than Mr. Chauvin.

Then, on October 4, appeared an article, the third of a series, in which the Imperialistic tendencies of both parties were cleverly analysed—the conclusion being that Tory Imperialism is worse than Liberal Imperialism, that between the two evils the less should be chosen, and Mr. Préfontaine preferred to Mr. Chauvin.

Then, on October 11 :

Is Mr. Chauvin of the same opinion as Sir Charles Tupper, his leader, who solicited the government to send contingents to Africa—or is he not ?

Then, on October 25, appeared a leading article on 'Responsibilities as to the sending of contingents.' The three following paragraphs give an exact idea of the whole :

The responsibility of the military expedition to the Transvaal falls entirely on Sir Charles Tupper and the whole English Conservative press . . . . The responsible authors of the contingents are Sir Charles Tupper, Mr. Bergeron and the Conservative party . . . . The great culprit in the contingent question is Sir Charles Tupper, of whom Mr. Chauvin is now the candidate.

And, finally, on November 8, appreciating the result :

Mr. Chauvin is defeated and he deserved it. Men who denounce Imperialism and who brand themselves as the most faithful supporters of declared Imperialists, cannot expect their electors to accept to be laughed at more than five consecutive years.

One can hardly find in all these quotations any trace of the slightest approval of the sending of Canadian troops to the Transvaal. And I do not believe that the present member for Terrebonne (Mr. Préfontaine) will claim his victory as a triumph for Imperialism.

Speaking now of the province at large, the truth is that the question was minimized almost to the point of annihilation in most of the constituencies. On September 24, there was a large meeting at St. Hyacinthe, the residing place of the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Bernier), the county seat of his constituency, and the centre of an extensive and prosperous district. The Prime Minister was there and addressed the meeting in his usual eloquent and convincing manner. He dealt at length with all the issues of the day, including the school question ; but not a word fell from his lips touching the African question or any of its sub-issues. The Minister of Inland Revenue referred briefly, but not enthusiastically to that subject. He was reported as follows by La Presse of the following day :

It is stated that Laurier is an Imperialist ; but is it because the Liberals are loyal subjects that they are so accused ?

Is it because the government has allowed the sending of a contingent to Africa that its members should be branded as Imperialists. . . .

As you see, the title of Imperialist was not accepted in Quebec by ministers of the Crown with the same pride as by their honourable colleagues and supporters in Ontario, where it was set up as a most glorious and brilliant plume.

It is possible that some electors see a danger for the future of our country in the sending of a contingent ; but the government has but acceded to the wishes of the Imperial government and allowed the recruiting of volunteers and nothing else. Can the government be reproached with having decided to pay the expenditure of those volunteers ? But, is it said, supposing the thing reoccurs ? Well, said Mr. Bernier, let us wait for events to come ; the government will study then the necessity of sending a contingent. What would have been the result of Sir Wilfrid Laurier refusing to send a regiment to Africa ? He would have been thrown down from power and Tupper would be now in office. He indeed is the one who would have sent contingents ; 5,000 men would not have been sufficient for Sir Charles !

La Patrie of the same day gave a shorter but similar account of that speech :

He (Mr. Bernier) then treats the contingents question, saying he approved of the attitude which his leader had taken on that matter and that the sending of troops did not mean Imperialism. Is it because Canadians went freely and voluntarily to the secession war that they became by that fact Americans ? Have those who went to the Philippines, or to Cuba become Philipinos or Cubans ? We are not Imperialists, but we are loyal subjects of the British Crown and of the free institutions under which we are living.

His own organ, La Tribune de St. Hyacinthe, after a week's time, left to the friendly supervision of the editor, gave a report of the hon. gentleman's declarations almost identical with that of La Presse. A few days previous, the hon. minister had spoken at St. Hilaire, in your own riding, I believe, Mr. Speaker ; and his short remarks on the war question were reported as follows by his organ, La Tribune, on September 21 :

Our enemies say that the Laurier government has sent volunteers to South Africa ! It is not correct; the government gave orders to nobody. It simply lent its help to good wills. Had they been in power, what would have been done by those who denounce us? Ask Mr. Bergeron, who has just cried out at Alexandria that England would have only to ask in order to receive, should they be in power.

In another column of the same copy of the same paper, a leading article, entitled 'Soyons Francs—Let us be straight,' discusses the war question with its Conservative antagonist, Le Courrier de St. Hyacinthe. The following paragraph shows the spirit of the article :

But the argument which has above all played upon the nerves of our confrere is the one, very clear indeed, which proves that the country has been most fortunate to have as its leader Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the time the contingents were sent. We shall have $2,000,000 to pay above our share of the bloodshed in that unfortunate Transvaal war. Every French Canadian knows that had Tupper directed the affairs of the country at that moment, he would not have stopped there, in spite of his furious denunciations.

I could keep the House for hours on similar quotations ; these are sufficient to define the position taken by the government organs and supporters in Quebec, and to show that their victory in that old Canadian province can hardly be counted as a triumph of Imperialism, and even as an approval of our military expedition to the Transvaal. The straight ministerial candidates, the devout believers, as I may call them, did not approve of the war or of the sending of Canadian troops to South Africa. They kept aloof from the subject as much as possible ; and when attacked by their opponents and questioned by their followers on that point, their invariable reply was that the government could not resist the movement, that Canada was not committed to any future contribution to English wars, and especially that, had the Tory leaders been in power, they would have sent more men and expended more money than the government. They made their contention good by quoting Sir Charles Tupper's telegrams and speeches, and his leading supporters' utterances. They divulged to the people the scant hypocrisy of the Tory party, and proved, with undeniable evidence, that while their opponents in Quebec were accusing the government for having dragged us in Imperial concerns and sold Canada to England, their compeers in Ontario were denouncing in rabid terms Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the traitor Tarte and his French-dominated cabinet, which had consented but reluctantly and meanly to go to the rescue of the empire, and when forced to do so under the powerful and patriotic pressure of Sir Charles the Great.

I may have hurt the feelings of the ministerialists in showing the somewhat double game they have played on this question; they have undoubtedly shown through all this crisis a lack of nerve most painful to all those who had been attracted to the old Liberal party by its moral courage, its disinterested attachment to principle and its joyful disposition to prefer truth to success. I leave to my friends on this side of the House to decide for themselves if this softening of their temperament must be attributed to the effects of la grippe or to the sweets of power. I hope the former cause is the real one; because the latter would prove that their stern virtue, like that of certain vestals of old and modern times, simply waited for a propitious occasion to fall.

But, the government and their supporters may find some solace for their weakness by contemplating the perversion of their rivals. While the Liberals had the excuse of being on the defence, and only played that double game with a certain timid and blushing indecency, the Tories threw themselves soul and body into the abysses of sin. Members of the late parliament will remember the very patriotic attitude of the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), his speech on the war, and his noisy handclapping when the Prime Minister refused to accept my motion ratifying the constitutional reservations contained in the order in council of October, 1899. I would respectfully advise the right hon. gentleman, when he is applauded from the other side, to repeat, silently if he likes, what I say openly when I am afflicted with the same evil: 'Timeo danaos et dona ferentes.' I say silently, because, on this question of Imperialism, the right hon. gentleman would be more exposed than I am to become fastidious at quoting the Virgilian verse.

Now, I will quote a few words of the speech of the hon. member for Montmorency on that war question:

> It was an evidence that all the colonies were united with each other to prove not only their patriotism and their loyalty to the British Crown, but to prove that the empire cannot be attacked in any one of its parts without all the other parts coming to its rescue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOURASSA. But wait a little to see whether you will approve the second quotation:

> Sir, the people of all the provinces of the Dominion are carried away by this patriotic conception of their duties, and I as a French Canadian will not stand aloof and remain an indifferent spectator of the tremendous struggle which the British Empire is engaged in at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOURASSA. I now invite hon. gentlemen who say 'hear, hear' to listen to another declaration from the same gentlemen whom they applauded last session as one of the patriotic French Canadians standing for a united empire.

A few days after the session was over, there was a big Conservative rally at Kamouraska, where Messrs. Casgrain, Chapais, Bergeron and other pontiffs of that dying worship once called the Quebec Conservative party, gathered and fulminated their first excommunication decrees of the season. The member for Montmorency made an appeal to the electors of Kamouraska against the Imperialistic tendencies of the Liberal party, and in a most pathetic display of paternal sentiment he cried out to the people:

> I am ready to see my only son fly at the defence of my country; but I refuse to sacrifice him for the quarrels of England, though just they be.

Why do not hon. members opposite applaud now? They are silent.

But I need not go out of my own constituency to give an illustration of the tactics of the Conservative party. Of course, in Labelle, the ground was much clearer than in most of the other constituencies. I fought the battle on that question, though I had great trouble in keeping my opponent on these lines; he wanted to do as all the straight party candidates in Quebec, and try to shift the issue. His position was that the cause of our expedition was to be found in the Prime Minister's speeches at the jubilee; that the honour of the country was engaged, and that, after all, the inconveniences of the war were well compensated by our sales of hay, cheese and horses; a business point of view, as you see. In fact, he approved more than he disapproved of our participation in the war. But his eloquence dealers were more decided in their opinions. In the English-speaking section of the county, the Tory committee sent a young patriot, who said that in Labelle it was no question of Liberals or Conservatives, of Laurier or Tupper, of good or bad administration; it was and should be:

'Down with Bourassa, who opposed the Canadian contingents to South Africa!' In the northern extremity of the county, all French-speaking, Mr. Nantel, an ex-provincial minister—the same gentleman who, for over a year, in his organ, Le Monde Canadien, and in his public utterances, had been denouncing the war, the contingents, and the Imperialistic movement—came full of ardour and denounced me as a hypocrite, because, although I voted against the war and declared myself ready to oppose any future military expedition, I still called myself a Liberal and a supporter of the government on its administrative policy. He admitted that Sir Charles Tupper had some slight Imperialistic tendencies, but almost imperceptible compared to the deep Imperialism of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The former was only in favour of commercial Imperialism, based on reciprocal terms; whilst the latter was in favour of commercial Imperialism, all in favour of England; of political Imperialism, swamping our legislative independence; and of military Imperialism, committing us to participation in all Imperial wars.

In a letter to his constituents, published shortly after the crushing defeat of his party and the downfall of his dynasty, the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said:

> No one would be surprised, still less complain, that natural sympathy existed in Quebec for a French Canadian leader, but when the French Canadians have almost to a man rallied around him, can we believe that this result has been due to any other cause than race feeling, so fostered, manipulated and developed by Messrs. Tarte, Bernier, Bourassa, Monet, and others, skilfully played upon by the Prime Minister himself. At any rate, our French Canadian friends who have been swamped by this temporary craze of Quebec, tell us so.

I am ready to give to the hon. gentleman the benefit of extenuating circumstances. A convict is allowed twenty-four hours to curse his judges. A defeated leader, hurt not only in his political and personal ambitions, but also in his filial sentiments, for which I can but admire the hon. gentleman, may be given a few weeks to exhale his bitterness. But that natural explosion of bad temper should not have gone to the point of slandering his opponents and a large proportion of his fellow-citizens. As to the general accusation of racial appeals made by the Liberal party to the French Canadians, and as to the reply given to those appeals, I will say a word later on. As to my personal position, the hon. gentleman should apologize to at least one of the gentlemen with whose names he coupled mine in his letter. I mean the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier). I have for the hon. minister the greatest personal esteem and friendship, and I trust he entertains the same feelings towards my humble self. But to put him and me in the same canoe, as far as this question is concerned, is rather grotesque. Why? Ever since the hon. gentleman entered the cabinet, we paddled in the very opposite direction. He wanted to run down the stream, and I persisted in facing the current. The chief French Conservative organ in Montreal, Le Journal, even announced one day that I would accept the candidature against him in St. Hyacinthe. I must say, however, that this was a pure Tupperism.

As to my appeals to the electorate, I defy the hon. member for Pictou here and now to quote one sentence of my public or private utterances justifying his accusation. Let him search all the newspapers in which my speeches throughout the whole province were reported—and I give him free access to respectable organs of all shades of opinion, both English and French; let him unearth any witness, French or English, Scotch or Irish, Italian, German or Belgian—all those nationalities are represented in my constituency; let him pick the man, credible under oath, who will say to my face that I have resorted to any racial appeal in my election or previous to it, within or without my county. He will never find that man; because such appeals I never made; and I could not have made them for two excellent reasons: First, the idea that the Transvaal question and all its incidents and consequences in Canada could be discussed on racial lines, always appeared to me as most foolish and absurd; second, nothing is more repugnant to my heart and conscience as that basis of political argument. And what is not in my heart has never reached my lips. I do not expect to ever be a minister of the Crown or a Knight of this or a Commander of that; but I cherish the ambition that my humble name shall never be used to enrich the Canadian glossary with a synonym to Tupperism. True, racial prejudices were aroused in my county during the last campaign; they fermented constantly from the day I resigned my seat to appeal to my constituents on this question in October, 1899, until the very last polling hour of the 7th November, 1900. But they were not raised by me, nor on my behalf; they were set against me by a small group of English-speaking Liberals and Conservatives, who denounced me for a year as a French rebel and a traitor, and thereby gave votes to my opponents, the candidate of gentlemen opposite. In all justice to that gentleman, I must say that if he profited by those tactics, I do not think he was responsible for them. That campaign was started long before he was a candidate. I could have retaliated and made counter appeals to my French-speaking constituents, who represent at least two-thirds of the electorate of Labelle. But, I did not, and I would not have done it, had even my success depended on those tactics. Sir, it is my pride, my legitimate pride that the position which I took on this question, I kept it rigidly on the solid ground of respect to the constitution and of true devotion to Canadian interests in preference to Mr. Chamberlain's political aims ; and in doing so I remained all along faithful to the true traditions of British Liberalism. I am happy to say that my attitude was well understood by the free citizens who sent me here. Although I lost a good many English-speaking supporters, the true old Liberal Scotch stood by me. I never felt prouder in my life than at a public meeting held in a thorough Scotch settlement of my county, two days previous to the election, when two of the leading residents, one Conservative and the other Liberal, told me with the approval of their fellow-citizens : 'We are especially satisfied with your position on the war question. You stood independently for Canadian rights. England is rich enough to look after her quarrels ; let us mind our own business and live peacefully in Canada.'

Speaking now of the general position taken by the Conservative party on this question : I hold in my hands two electoral pamphlets which were largely circulated by Tory heelers in Ontario and Quebec. The former is a leaflet entitled 'The Case of Bourassa and Monet;' it contains extracts from our speeches carefully stripped of the context which only could give our correct and complete views on the war question, and it denounces the government for not having excommunicated us. The copy I have has been sent to me by an elector of the riding of West York. The other document is the famous pamphlet No. 6, being one of a series of brochures prepared, printed and sent broadcast to the four corners of the province of Quebec by the Central Conservative Committee of Montreal. This pamphlet is well known to all the members of this House. Apart from the school question to which it refers, it arraigns the Liberal government for having dragged us in English wars ; it reprints my motion of March 13, 1900, and extracts from the Prime Minister's reply to my speech ; and it contends that the Liberal party is responsible for the introduction of Imperialism in Canada. The title is in itself a poem:

Imperial Federation—Laurier approves of it, Tupper condemns it.

South African War—Laurier says we shall take part in other British wars if needed.

And, mind you, the trade of this gem was not lessened for a moment after the pious denunciation of Sir Charles Tupper. I really think that this very denunciation lost more votes to Sir Charles Tupper in Quebec than any of the other blunders he and his friends committed—and indeed they were numerous and gigantic ! It opened the eyes of the few Conservatives who still naively believed that their leader was the great opponent of Imperialism ; but above all, it convinced a great many more that the Tory party in its desperate effort to climb to power was prepared to resort to any means. The result was that many votes given to Liberal candidates were not inspired so much by love and admiration for the party in power than by a thorough disgust for Tory tactics. This may seem hard on the opposition and doubtfully flattering to the government, but it is true. I hope the selection of the present leader of the opposition, whom I am pleased to honour as a broad-minded man and a true patriot, means that the Conservative party is opening its eyes to its misdeeds of late years and preparing to go back to its most respectable traditions, those of the time of Macdonald and Cartier. I am one of those who believe in the necessity of a sound opposition as well as of a good government. But a bad seed has been thrown to the ground and it needs to be exposed thoroughly in order that it may be sterilized. Like the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), several Conservative leaders and organs attributed their defeat to the French cry in Quebec. It seems as if they did not realize that the people from that province do not only read their French newspapers, but follow up closely at the same time the movement of ideas in the other parts of the Dominion. It is true that the people of Quebec voted largely in favour of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The right hon. gentleman will pardon me for naming him. It is the best way to express the meaning of the vote given in favour of his government by all the French-speaking groups of Canada. But I deny utterly that this vote implies a spirit of French domination or racial exclusiveness. The French Canadians did not vote for the Prime Minister because he was a French Canadian ; but the Prime Minister having been led to the pinnacle of power by the people of Canada, they did not want to see him thrown down simply and solely because he was a French Canadian. Mr. Tarte having been selected by his leader as Minister of Public Works and having done good service in that capacity, they did not see why he should be scouted because he was a French Canadian, and thought fit to say so. And I claim emphatically that it was the right and the duty of my countrymen to do so. Had they done otherwise, they would have proved basely unworthy of the free institutions which their fathers struggled so long and so painfully to obtain ; unworthy of the noble flag which guarantees the equality of all nationalities and creeds in this land ; unworthy to be the subjects of the Queen, who was herself a living example of toleration. The French vote is not the challenge of a race to another. It is the calm, dignified, constitutional reply from a worthy class of citizens, from one-third of the Canadian people, to the frantic appeals of fanatics. It is an assertion of liberty, of equal rights, of true British citizenship. And as such it should be applauded by all men of good-will who sincerely wish the welfare of Canada. And no one should speak of garrisoning British troops at Quebec to face possible emergencies. If our word of honour kept true for 140 years, and sealed twice with our bloodshed in defence of the British flag when assailed by the English-speaking Puritan fathers, uncles and cousins of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), is not a sufficient guarantee of our loyalty, a British garrison in Quebec would not make it any better. A few red coats would just be the proper thing to make us, not pro-Boers, but real Boers.

But to interpret the French Canadian vote as an approval of the special action of the government in sending Canadian soldiers to the Transvaal, and further still, as an expression of Imperialistic sentiment, is so absurd that nobody from that province, I think, will venture to make that assertion here—unless one cares very little for truth or accuracy. On the contrary, I affirm categorically that the strength of the Liberal vote in Quebec was largely increased by the anti-war feeling, though, I repeat, the question was kept as much as possible as a side issue. As the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said in France, 99 per cent of the French Canadians detest this war, as the whole civilized world does, as nearly one-half, if not more, of the United Kingdom does. They think that it could have been averted by arbitration ; they believe that the political difficulties in the Transvaal did not justify it ; they are convinced that Mr. Rhodes's rapacity, that Mr. Chamberlain's arrogant and brutal refusal to arbitrate, were the real causes which precipitated the conflict ; they wished that it should be stopped. The Colonial Secretary and his faithful may call them pro-Boers. They are pro-Boers, just as Mr. Bryce, Mr. Morley, Mr. Courtney, Sir Robert Reid, Sir Edward Clarke and millions of Englishmen and Scotchmen. They are not pro-Boers because they are anti-British. But their instinctive sympathy goes to a small nation struggling for independence. Their fathers have been forced to rebellion and led to exile or dragged to the scaffold by a policy similar to Mr. Chamberlain's, and a repression similar to Lord Kitchener's ; they still remember of Lord Colborne and his farm burnings at St. Eustache and St. Benoit. Peace and liberty were restored here by a policy the kind of which Lord Grey and Mr. Gladstone inaugurated in South Africa and his true disciples are urging now to be applied anew. Supposing their feelings went as far as rejoicing at the success of Boer arms, they should no more be taxed with disloyalty than William Pitt when he openly vowed for the triumph of American rebels, because, in his opinion, that triumph would open the eyes of the British nation and crush down that spirit of arrogant domination which had seized at that time the rulers and the people of England, and was leading the kingdom to its perdition.

Now, as far as the contribution of Canada in this war is concerned, it is no use to make any mistake about it. Inasmuch as it was discussed before the people of Quebec, the action of the government has not been approved but excused ; and excused on the ground that it was not a precedent and that the Tories were more to be dreaded on that question than the Liberals.

There is a fact, a great national feature which our English-speaking neighbours do not realize perhaps, but upon which they should open their eyes. While they have been wandering between narrow provincialism, whence we all started, and unbounded Imperialism, we have been developing quietly but constantly on the solid ground of Canadianism. We may be from their standpoint less British, but we are more thoroughly, more exclusively and, I may be allowed to say, in all good spirit, better Canadians than they are.

I have quoted the London Times previous to the election and its false deductions of the vote after it was taken. I will now commend to the attention of the members of the House a series of letters written from Canada to the Manchester Guardian by a distinguished English journalist, Mr. Harold Spender. That gentleman came to Canada and remained here during the electoral contest in order to study by himself the real sentiments of the Canadian electorate and especially of the French Canadians. He very soon grasped the true situation. I may be permitted to quote a few extracts from that interesting correspondence :

> With some similarity to our recent struggle in Great Britain, both Conservative and Liberal candidates, with very few exceptions, tumble over one another in applauding the empire and waving the flag. 'But behind all these party appearances is the solid, sombre fact, which neither party can conceal, that the French Canadians hate the war and are using most of their political influence to oppose the war policy. . . . . In short, like their friends in Great Britain, the Tories out here are just trying to crush the Liberal party by the cry of ' pro-Boer.' Another bond of empire, indeed! But under this there are tragic possibilities, for by all this they are gradually alienating the French Canadians and dividing race from race.

In another letter, speaking of the lack of interest which the war question, as it was discussed in Canada, would offer to his English readers, he says :

> They may even prefer that the Canadians should reserve to themselves the right of discussing, a year after the event, whether Sir Wilfrid Laurier sent away the Canadian contingent a month too late or too soon. It is not for us to enter into that domestic quarrel, which is really the only form in which the war question has been seriously raised here outside the constituency of Mr. Bourassa . . . .
>
> I have said that the Canadians have not fully considered the issues of the South African war, and if any Canadian reads these words I shall probably be fiercely blamed for this opinion. Well, I have talked to many on the subject, and I could number on the fingers of one hand those whom I have found familiar with the causes of the quarrel or the details of the despatches. . . . .
> Of course, the majority of Canadians support Laurier in the ' contingent ' policy. But if Tupper had been in power the opposition of the French Canadians, whose sympathies are with the Boers, would have made it impossible. As it is, Laurier persuaded Quebec, and Ontario had already taken the lead in urgency. But though the French Canadians follow their idol, even in his South African policy, their real mind is voiced by Tarte, with his 'no precedent' cry. That is the issue of the future—Is the South African war to be a precedent? The Imperialists of Toronto are raising it by pressing that arms should be stored and barracks built in order that Canada may become a military power ready to support the empire in any venture. Quebec Liberals are sullenly but obstinately opposed to all this. . . . . But men like to know what they are fighting about, and thus the war has raised the profoundest issues of Imperial government. How is it that none of these issues have been raised in the political warfare here? I have already noted that there is no discussion and no real knowledge about South African questions in Canada; the war is now scantily reported, and no interest is taken in the settlement. This is partly parochialism——

I draw the attention of my hon. colleagues to the following words :

—but partly also due to a certain lack of courage that runs through all Canadian politics. As in the States, so in Canada ; politics are much dominated by electioneering. Perhaps we ought not to preach, but there is in English politics a tradition handed down from men like Bright and Cobden, and sometimes dimly followed, that principle is more important than party or place. Canada still wants that tradition of political martyrdom.

I will end these quotations by the following remarks on the subject of Imperialism as viewed in Ontario. They were written from Toronto after the elections :

The majority of business men know that peace is the most important asset to Canada, and many look askance on the whole Imperialist movement as dangerous to the progress of the country. 'How do we know,' said one to me today, 'that we may not be drawn into trouble any day? One never feels safe.'

This is an expression of opinion with regard to Canada; and the other day the statement was published that the New Zealand government were urging the British government to use their influence in the Asiatic sea to acquire a couple of islands in the neighbourhood of New Zealand, because of that swelling sentiment of aggrandizement which is now seizing the whole British world. New Zealand also wants to form its little confederation; it wants to enlarge and expand. Suppose the British government acceded to that request, and suppose on its way to realize it, it came into conflict with the interests of some other European power, and war were declared, we Canadians, in pursuance of this new policy which has been entered upon, might be called upon to expend money and send soldiers to help New Zealand in her schemes of extension and aggrandizement.

I have dealt with military Imperialism at some greater length than I wished to do. But, I felt bound to set myself right, at the opening of this parliament on that vital question of the relations between Great Britain and her colonies. In spite of the efforts of scared politicians to shift the issue or to convince themselves that the question is not at stake, this is to be the great political and national problem of the near future throughout the empire. The so-called statesmen and their followers who scorn the idea and pretend to believe that this is only a temporary movement of opinion, are simply imitating the ostrich in the desert, when being chased by the hunter, it conceals its head under its wing and thinks it is safe because it does not see the danger. I thought it my duty also to tell the truth—not the political truth, not the party truth, but the plain truth—about the real feelings of the French Canadians on that question. The eccentricity of my position in this House allows me that freedom of speech. I did not do it with the purpose of arousing racial feelings; on the contrary. The best way to avoid national frictions is not by imagining that all sections of this country entertain the same opinion, should even that opinion be the best; but by looking thoroughly through the minds and hearts of all the racial groups which form the nation in order to prepare a sound public opinion based on mutual respect and conciliation. My utterances have not been inspired either by a sentiment of animosity or indifference towards the British flag and British connection; on the contrary again. It is because I prize highly the advantages of British institutions which we have made ours—in spite even of British authorities—that I believe it is an imperative duty to us all to prevent any danger that might threaten them in the future. Should we leave the British government and the British people under misapprehensions as to what they can expect from Canada—not in a time of enthusiastic ferment, but when the popular mind will set again on its normal basis—the moment might come when they thought they could rely upon us for more than what we would be ready to give. A mistake of that kind would be the cause of serious complications which for my part I wish to be avoided.

I go further. This war and its bearing on British and colonial concerns have led me to a new and deeper study of British history, of British institutions, of British politics, of British character. And the more I have analysed the vital parts and the solid limbs of that splendid body politic, its strong nerves and its rich blood, the wider has grown my admiration for Great Britain. I used to be a contented British subject, as most of my countrymen are ; I feel now the full pride of British citizenship. But the Britain that I love and admire is that noble, progressive, industrious, peace-loving nation which has done so much for the development and the welfare of humanity; that mother of true liberalism who, from the time of Simon de Montfort down to the days of William Ewart Gladstone, through good and bad fortune, under the sun of her glorious days as well as in the midst of political storms, worked slowly, but steadily, to the betterment and the reform of her laws, of her constitution, of her political and social life. The Britain that I love is that great apostle of liberty, who preached and practiced the worship of freedom for herself, but who respected also the rights of others. The Britain that I love is that steady, laborious, persevering community of workers, of settlers, of tradesmen, who while enriching themselves have thrown open to the world so many hidden treasures. The Britain that I love was boastful of her qualities, but she did not refuse to listen to the voice of her conscience and never hesitated to correct and to expiate her crimes and her weaknesses. And the more I have known to love that Britain, the true Britain, the more I have hated and cursed the vampires who are now trying to suck and to poison her blood.

Under the guidance of her statesmen, that great nation had extended her power on all seas. She had found on the globe the space required for the natural growth of her magnitude. Her petty tyrants of to-day, like that of the Fable, are torturing her body either to shorten it to the size of their patriotism or to lengthen it to the measure of their ambitious madness. When ruled by true British statesmanship, England may have excited the jealousy of other nations: she was at least respected, admired and feared. The canker worms of to-day are endeavouring to make her an object of hatred, of derision, of contempt to the world. Refusing to accept the patriotic and clear sighted warning of General Butler, they have been forced to immobilize on the ungrateful soil of Africa the best of her armies and to send her bravest sons to die of fever under the commandment of incapable officers. In the meanwhile, Great Britain was obliged to humble herself under the tutelage of Germany and of the United States, and to become a silent accomplice of the monstrous barbarity of Russian Cossacks, in order that her name should not be totally forgotten in China, where she ruled for half a century under the wise policy of the so-called Little Englanders. If I were the Anglophobist that so many charge me with being, I could not wish for better means to be taken for bringing the downfall of British power. But although some of my words may have fallen hard upon those who look at things from a different standpoint, they should at least have the good faith to admit that my vehemence or my bitterness or even, if they like, my rudeness is not caused by disloyal sentiments nor by racial animosity.

Now, I think my motion should receive the support of all fair-minded men in this House—whether they agree fully or partially with me on the merits of this war, or on the Imperialistic movement, or whether they we differ totally on either of those questions. This resolution does not deal with the causes of the struggle ; it does not revive old and irritating controversies ; it does not discuss the political consequences of our contribution to the war ; it does not treat of Imperial federation or of Canadian independence. It leaves to every one a free hand and an uncompromised position on all those matters. It does not even trace a rigid line of conduct to the British government on the settlement of the war ; it simply lays down the principles upon which that settlement should be effected, leaving to the British parliament a full sway of action as to the point where such principles can be carried under actual circumstances. It is simply intended to express the wish of a peace-loving British community, praying that a long and cruel war should be stopped, and that this new century, which has seen the death of a noble and kind-hearted Queen, and the accession of her worthy son, should not be a century of race hatred and struggles in His Majesty's possessions in South Africa. As Canadians, as loyal subjects of the British Crown, we are all interested in the peace of every part of the empire. If peace can be made in South Africa, let peace be. And the only peace that can be made to last must be of such a character to cure the deep wounds inflicted to the heart of the Afrikanders, not only those of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, but those also of Cape Colony and Natal. Such peace is not the brutal and pagan crushing of the vanquished by the conqueror. It is the kind, generous, Christian treatment of the weak by the mighty, the forgiveness of offences suffered so that committed offences may be forgiven.

For the last sixteen months I have been branded, not only in Canada, but throughout the empire, as a disloyal subject, as an ungrateful beneficiary of British favours, as a traitor and a rebel. I have been hissed and hooted in this parliament because I refused to throw ridicule upon the British Crown by celebrating the end of a war which is yet raging ; because especially I refused to slander our noble Queen by making her responsible for Mr. Chamberlain's policy. Nine months have passed since we declared that the war was over, and the struggle is fiercer than ever. The death roll gets longer and longer every day ; the stream of blood is overflowing ; the public exchequer of Great Britain is neavily strained, and we may feel here before long the effect of financial depression in England.

It is no more a war between combatants ; it is the beginning of a savage conflict of races. Should even General De Wet and his heroic followers be captured to-morrow, I say the war is not over. The actual fight may be ended, but this is only the first act of the tragedy. For every Afrikander homestead burned by order of British commanders, one hundred brands of hatred have been lighted up ; they may be covered for some time with the ashes of defeat and repression. But let a blast come from the Orient or the Occident, from the north or from the south—a rebellion in India, a conflict in China, a war in Europe ; and, the occasion may not be far away, if jingo rule is to be left a free hand for some time yet in England—and the blaze will again be lighted ; and once more shall the decimated compatriots of William the Silent astound the world. Do you want to extinguish that fire for ever, go to those stern, ignorant, fanatical Boers—give them the epithets you like—but make them to understand that Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Rhodes, that Lord Kitchener and Sir Alfred Milner are not the British people ; that behind and above the unscrupulous politicians, the money-grabbers, the brutal soldiers, the bureaucratic martinets with whom they have come in contact for the last ten years, there is a broad, generous nation, upon which they can rely for the safeguarding of their national and individual existence.

'Oh, but Mr. Chamberlain is in power, the empire is safe,' cry out the jingoes ; 'let us teach those brigands a lesson they shall never forget.' Take care only that they do not remember it too long ; you may pay later on with your own blood the cost of that bloody education.

Yes, Mr. Chamberlain is in power, and the war is not stopped—but Queen Victoria is dead ; and the public rumour, and the public conscience, and the public sentiment tell us that her days have been shortened by that disheartening and unglorious war. Up to the day of her death, two thoughts had always kept me lighthearted in the midst of insults and slanders. I knew that I was actuated solely by the pure love of Canada ; I felt also that I was in no way responsible for the bloodshed on the veldts of Africa nor for the tears shed in so many Canadian homes. Now a new thought fills my heart with happiness ; I am not an accomplice of murderers of the Queen.

I sincerely believe that in urging the House to support this proposition, I am simply asking the parliament of Canada to respond to one of the last and most heartfelt desires of her late Majesty. I move it as a tribute of homage, of admiration, of love to her memory. It is modest, compared with the magnificent and pompous necrologies that have fallen from the lips of kings and statesmen. But, it is free and sincere ; it has not been paid and does not expect to be rewarded by any prize or honour ; it is pure of all speculation upon the name of that noble and venerable woman. It is simply the wish of a true Canadian and a true British subject, and in that spirit I move, seconded by Mr. Angers :

That, whilst strictly adhering to the fundamental principle of Canadian autonomy, and refusing to admit that the intervention of Canada in South Africa has committed this country to any future participation in the wars and policy of Great Britain,

This House thinks that the contribution of Canada in the South African war, both in armed help and public expenditure entitles the Canadian people to express an opinion on the matter.

This House, therefore, humbly reminds His Majesty, King Edward VII., that the glorious reign of his august mother, Queen Victoria, whose memory shall ever be cherished by Canadians of all origins and creeds, was inaugurated in bloodshed and rebellion in this part of her dominions ; that peace and prosperity were subsequently restored for ever when Her Majesty's advisers understood, as Lord Grey told in his instructions to Lord Elgin, Governor of Canada, that it was 'neither possible nor desirable to carry on the government of any of the British provinces in North America in opposition to the opinions of its inhabitants' ; that since that time, Her Majesty has found in no portion of her empire a more faithful, devoted and contented people than her French Canadian subjects.

This House, therefore, expresses the hope and desire that His Majesty's government will endeavour to conclude in South Africa an honourable peace founded upon the law of nations which guarantees independence to all civilized peoples and upon the true British traditions of respect to all national and religious convictions and to the spirit of colonial autonomy.

This House further declares that there is no necessity for sending any more Canadian troops to South Africa, and that the enlistment of recruits for the South African constabulary should not be allowed to take place in Canada.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that it is with a great deal of regret and with some surprise that I have seen my hon. friend persist in his determination to move the motion of which he gave notice some few days ago, and which he has now placed in your hands. Well remembering the uncompromising hostility which my hon. friend showed to our policy, nearly two years ago, of sending contingents to South Africa, well knowing from a long acquaintance and a long friendship the logical mind of my hon. friend, remembering also that he had on more than one occasion announced himself as entirely opposed to what he calls Imperialism, remembering also that he had somewhat ostentatiously and most persistently refused assent to the policy we advocated of sending troops to South Africa for the prosecution of the war, I must say I was little prepared for the present attitude of my hon. friend. I would have supposed that he would be a stalwart to the end, and that, having refused to send troops to South Africa he would not ask us to send advice to England. But my hon. friend has taken an attitude altogether different from that. He would not allow us to offer troops ; he now wants to send advice. He would not fight for the cause of England, but he is willing to sit at the council board in discussing the cause of England to-day. How this conduct of my hon. friend is in keeping with his former well-known views is a problem, as to which I shall offer no opinion of my own, but which I shall leave for his own pondering. As to the right on our part, asserted in this motion, of making representations to the Imperial authorities on all questions that may affect the British Empire in whole or in part—that is a right which is no longer in question. We asserted it nearly thirty years ago, when, on the 20th of April, 1882, we passed a resolution in favour of home rule for Ireland. We asserted it again a few days ago, when we passed a resolution on the coronation declaration. The fact that we sent contingents to South Africa almost two years ago does not in any way affect our right in this respect. It is to-day what it was before ; it has not been altered in any way ; it is no larger and no smaller than it was. We have a perfect right to offer advice, and we claim we have the privilege of making representations to the Imperial authorities. Therefore, we can approach the question submitted by my hon. friend on its merits and on its merits alone. The question which we have before us is not so much the speech of my hon. friend, but the motion itself. Shall we adopt this motion or shall we not ?

Before I approach this subject, let me say that I care not, to go into the long speech which my hon. friend made us. Eloquent, as all his speeches are, it yet has no relevancy to the question placed before the House. I care not to go into the question of the significance of the late election. I care not as to the attitude of any portion of the community. And certainly it is not fair nor right to judge any of the issues which have been involved in the last election simply by the comments of isolated newspapers. Why, my hon. friend himself gave us an idea of the little value which we must attach to the comments of interested newspapers on one side or the other when he told us at the very outset of his speech that he had been misrepresented on both sides of this question—that as to the very motion which he now has brought before us on one side he was represented as a demagogue, and on the other as an Imperialist. That being the case my hon. friend will permit me to say we can dismiss all the arguments he has brought forward to prove a thesis which he has not placed before the House. The question before the House is : Should we adopt this motion ? The conclusions of it are to be found in the last two paragraphs. First, let me read the last one :

This House further declares that there is no necessity for sending any more Canadian troops to South Africa, and that the enlistment of recruits for the South African constabulary should not be allowed to take place in Canada.

As to the first conclusion of this proposition, that there is no necessity of sending Canadian troops to South Africa, I must say I altogether agree with my hon. friend —not for the same reasons that have prompted him, but for the reason that the war is at an end. There may be still some guerilla warfare, there may still be some brigandage under the name of war, but the war is no longer at issue. Though my hon. friend pretends to be very much in doubt as to the issue of the war, for my part I am ready to leave the issue in the hands of the men who have it in hand now, and to say, with my hon. friend, that there is no necessity for sending Canadian troops to South Africa. As to the other portion of the conclusion that enlistment of recruits for the South African constabulary should not be allowed to take place in Canada, I ask my hon. friend what reason can there be why the enlistment of men for this force should be put to an end in Canada ? If there are men in Canada who—I care not for what motive, whether high or low, whether dignified or undignified, whether because they desire to get a living, or from a spirit of adventure, or from the nobler impulse of fighting for their sovereign—wish to take service in the South African constabulary, on what principle should a Canadian government interfere to prevent their liberty being so exercised ? My hon. friend has spoken well and eloquently upon the cause of liberty, on which he has constituted himself the champion in this House, and almost alone ; but I must ask him, what kind of liberty is it which will not permit a British subject, if he so chooses, to offer his King to serve him, no matter in what capacity ? I am a Liberal as my hon. friend declares himself to be, but my idea of liberty does not agree with one that will not allow that freedom to every British subject in Canada. But, Sir, the gist of the motion of my hon. friend is in the last paragraph but one, which reads in this way :

This House therefore expresses the hope and desire that His Majesty's government will endeavour to conclude in South Africa an honourable peace, founded upon the law of nations, which guarantees independence to all civilized peoples, and upon the true British traditions of respect to all national and religious convictions and to the spirit of colonial autonomy.

If this means anything, it means that we are to invite the British authorities to restore to the two republics, the South African republic and the Orange Free State their independence. My hon. friend will not deny that this is the meaning that he has in his mind, but, strange to say, he never said a word as to that proposition. I would have expected him to deal at length with this point which, after all, was a noble subject to consider, and one which might invite discussion. I would have expected him to give his reasons and arguments why the British authorities should be invited by the Canadian parliament to undo what they have done and to restore to the two republics the independence which they forfeited on the 9th October, 1899. My hon. friend did not speak a word upon that subject.

Sir, perhaps I might sit down here. And I would do so, and not utter another syllable upon the subject, were it not for the fact that my hon. friend, in some of his arguments has been so unjust, so unfair, to the British government, that I feel constrained to place before the House the other side of this question. My hon. friend, if he means anything, means this, that the two republics, the republic of South Africa and the republic of the state of Orange, should be restored to their independence, should be restored to the position which they occupied on the 9th of October, 1899 ; that the supreme arbitrament of war which they themselves invoked should be set aside ; that all the blood which has been shed should count for nothing ; that all the suffering which has been endured should be forgotten ; and that Mr. Kruger and Mr. Steyn should be restored to the positions of which they made such an abuse.

My hon. friend spoke eloquently of the miseries of war, of the destruction of farms, of the burning of houses, and I agree with him, I take no exception to what he said in that respect. Miserable indeed is the condition to-day of the once proud South African republic, miserable by reason of its ruined farms, its closed mines, its cities arrested in their growth, its people impoverished, and its aged president a fugitive in Europe, a fugitive from the misery which he brought upon his own country. Miserable indeed is the condition of the once happy state of Orange, which had no quarrel with Great Britain, but which was precipitated into the horrors of war and of invasion by the man to whom it had entrusted its destinies, himself to-day a self-constituted outlaw in his own country. These men appealed to the God of battles, and the God of battles has pronounced against them. They invaded British territory, their territory was invaded in turn, and it was annexed to the British domain in consequence of the terrible logic of war.

If I understand my hon. friend aright to-day, he would have the government and parliament of Great Britain undo what has been done and bring the rebellious Boers back to the position which they occupied on the 9th of October, 1899, and which they had forfeited. My answer to the hon. gentleman is a very simple one. Whether he will agree with me or not, I am sure everybody else will agree that in the terrible uncertainties of war, in the series of successes and reverses which generally make up the history of war, the leader of the defeated people has no right to complain if he receives from his victorious opponent the same treatment which he had previously applied to his opponent in the hour of victory. Now, the hon. gentleman knows very well that when Lord Roberts invaded the state of Orange and raised the British flag in Bloemfontein, when subsequently he invaded the Transvaal and raised the British flag in Pretoria, and when he annexed the state of Orange and the Transvaal to the British dominions, the hon. gentleman knows very well that Lord Roberts then and there applied to the vanquished the very same law which had been proclaimed as a law of war by the Boers, in the first stages of that war. Sir, my hon. friend is aware of the insolent ultimatum by which President Kruger went to war with such a light heart on the 9th of October, 1899, he is aware that the following day the state of Orange, which had no quarrel with England, joined hands with the Transvaal Republic, and that President Steyn called upon the Free State burghers to stand shoulder to shoulder against what he called the oppressor; my hon. friend is aware that that very same day the Boers invaded the British colony at Natal; that within the following week they invaded several other places, they invaded Newcastle, Laing's Nek and Harrysmith. My hon. friend is aware also that within a week of that time the Free State burghers invaded the British colony of the cape, that they occupied no less important a place than the district of Kimberley; and that by a series of proclamations, which I have here, from the commandants of the invading army, they annexed the district of Kimberley and the state of Orange. Well, Sir, those things took place in the beginning of the war. My hon. friend pities to-day and laments the condition of the Dutch citizens. Sir, I have here in my hand the evidence of British subjects in the district of Kimberley, who were forced to serve in the Dutch army, and when they appealed to President Kruger were told that the district of Kimberley henceforth would be part of the state of Orange. I will quote for the information of the House upon this subject a most suggestive affidavit which has appeared in the last blue-book on this subject, and which I think my hon. friend will agree with me affords a justification to the British government for all that they have done :

Stephen Strydom, sworn, states :—

I am field cornet for ward No. 4, Albert district, and reside at Leeuwplaats. I remember the Free Staters entering Burghersdorp about the middle of November last. About three days after this I received orders from Landdrost Rensburg to report myself the following day at the Landdrost's office. I came to Burghersdorp and saw Rensburg. He said to me, 'We want you to commandeer the people in your ward.' I understood him to mean he wanted me to commandeer men to take up arms. I said, 'I don't understand this thing,' and told him I was a field cornet under the British, and had taken the oath of allegiance. This conversation took place in the Landdrost's office. He told me to go outside and read the proclamation on the blackboard in front of the office. I went out and saw a proclamation, signed by Commandant Swanepoel, of the Free State, declaring the district of Albert Free State territory. I again saw Rensburg and said that I still did not understand. He said, 'This is Free State territory, and you are a subject of the Free State. After further conversation, I refused to have anything to do with them. The same day my assistant field cornet, Jan Hendrik Coetzee, of Nooitgedacht, commandeered me to go to the front. I refused to go and returned to my car. In January I was again commandeered by Jan H. Coetzee. I refused to go. I then made up my mind to go to Bloemfontein and interview President Steyn on the subject. About the 10th of January I obtained a pass to go to Bloemfontein. I was accompanied by Geo. Aldrich, of Groot Vley. We arrrived at Bloemfontein and met President Steyn in his office. I told him that I had been commandeered to go to the front. I also told him that I was a British subject and a field cornet under the colonial government, and that I had taken the oath of allegiance, and I explained to him about the commandeering in my ward. I asked him for protection, as Commandant Grobler had promised all British subjects protection. He said, 'You are not a British subject any more or a field cornet or justice of the peace, but a private burgher of the Free State.' I told him that Albert had been declared Free State territory. I asked him if annexing the district and commandeering the people was according to international law. He said it was, and that precisely the same thing had taken place in the Franco-Prussian war.

Well, Sir, those were the first stages of the war. But the tide turned. The Boers who invaded British territory were repulsed, and their own territory was invaded and annexed to the British territory. They again invaded British territory and were again repulsed. Now, I ask my hon. friend what injustice can the Boers urge against the British government, when the British government treated them exactly as they had treated British subjects and British territory. What injustice can they urge in receiving exactly the same treatment as they had meted out to their opponents when they were in the ascendant? Mr. Speaker, I believe that there was logic in the method followed by the burghers. In the opening stages of the war they laid down the principle that South Africa had to be either Dutch or British, and the verdict of the God of armies has been that it should not be Dutch, but that it should be British.

I could go on multiplying these examples. Let me give another argument. If I understood my hon. friend aright, and I think I did in that respect, he would like the British government to go back to the policy of Mr. Gladstone in 1881. Mr. Gladstone was magnanimous towards the Boers in 1881, magnanimous, perhaps, to a fault. When he had the Boers in his power he treated them with the greatest generosity, expecting that when they had British subjects in their power they would treat them with the same generosity. That was a mistake, he measured the men with whom he had to deal with the measure of his own great soul. If magnanimity be a fault, and if that was a fault with Mr. Gladstone, everybody must admit that magnanimity has never been a fault of Mr. Kruger. If Mr. Kruger had had the slightest touch of the magnanimity of Mr. Gladstone, there would have been no war; if Mr. Kruger had shown towards British subjects the elementary principles of justice there would have been no war; if Mr. Kruger had simply kept his pledge towards Mr. Gladstone and his commissioner, there would have been no war.

What are the facts upon this question? They must be recalled in the face of the speech we have heard to-day from the hon. member for Labelle. In 1881, when the Boers had gone to war against England and after their ephemeral success at Majuba Hill, the government of Mr. Gladstone filled the country with British troops. Lord Roberts was ready to take the field and the issue could not have been in doubt, but Mr. Gladstone, in his great soul, resolved to give the Boers another chance, to give them their independence, retaining only the British Crown suzerainty. Commissioners were appointed to settle the terms of peace. The commissioners were Sir Hercules Robinson, Chief Justice de Villiers, a Boer, of French descent, like my hon. friend and myself. He is of Huguenot descent. The third commissioner was Sir Evelyn Wood. This commission had to settle the terms of peace, and the terms of peace implied the independence of the Transvaal, and the independence of the Transvaal implied that there were British subjects who would become Dutch citizens. Naturally, the commissioners were anxious as to what should be the position of these British subjects under the new regime, and naturally, the British commissioners negotiated upon this point. There were negotiations, and Mr. Kruger was questioned as to what would be the fate of the British subjects who then became Dutch citizens, and here is the answer which was given by Mr. Kruger. Sir Hercules Robinson, addressing himself to Mr. Kruger, said:

> Before annexation had British subjects complete freedom of trade throughout the Transvaal? Were they on the same footing as citizens of the Transvaal?
> Mr. Kruger—They were on the same footing as the burghers; there was not the slightest difference, in accordance with the Sand River Convention.
>
> Sir Hercules Robinson—I presume you will not object to that continuing?
>
> Mr. Kruger—No; there will be equal protection for everybody.
>
> Sir Evelyn Wood—And equal privileges?
> Mr. Kruger—We make no difference as far as burgher rights are concerned. There may, perhaps, be some slight difference in the case of a young person who has just come into the country.

That was on the 10th May, 1881, and a few days later, on the 26th May, Dr. Jorissen explained what was meant by a young person.

According to our law a new-comer has not his burgher rights immediately. The words 'young person' do not refer to age, but to the time of residence in the republic. According to our old Grondwet, you had to reside a year in the country.

There you see all the rights of citizenship were reserved for British subjects and a residence of one year was enough to entitle them to these rights. But, my hon. friend knows that this pledge given by Mr. Kruger was not kept, that the rights of British subjects were abridged, that the period of probation which prevailed at that time was extended from one year to five years, from five years to ten years and from ten years to fourteen years. Naturally, this caused a great deal of comment and of complaint on the part of the men who had gone into the Transvaal at the instance, afterwards, of Mr. Kruger, to develop the country, who were taxed mercilessly, who founded cities over which they had no control whatever, and who, when they asked for the privileges of citizenship, were told that they could not have any. It is no wonder that the best men in the Transvaal and in South Africa protested against that treatment. My hon. friend has laid the blame of the war upon Mr. Chamberlain and the British government. It is not part of my duty to defend Mr. Chamberlain, who has shown that he can take care of himself upon every occasion It is not part of my duty to defend the British government, but I may say to my hon. friend with all frankness—and he knows the great friendship that I have for him—that, notwithstanding that friendship, the attitude which he has taken is so unfair and unjust to the British government that I deem it my duty to place the facts, which he had left to oblivion when he had brought that question up, before the House. Who is responsible for the war ? I deplore it as much as he does, but, I ask him again : Who is responsible for the war ? Is it the government of Great Britain ? Sir, the man who is responsible for the war is Mr. Kruger himself. He was the president of the South African republic. A great deal of light has been shed upon the Transvaal question by the correspondence found at Pretoria after its occupation by Lord Roberts. Amongst the ablest men in South Africa today is Sir Henry de Villiers, chief justice of Cape Colony. Amongst this correspondence letters written by Sir Henry de Villiers proved that in the summer of 1899, when negotiations were going on between Mr. Kruger and Mr. Chamberlain, Sir Henry de Villiers went almost on his knees to Mr. Kruger to induce him to make concessions to the Outlanders. Here is a letter which he wrote on the 21st May, 1899, addressed to Mr. Steyn, President of the Orange Free State :

I sometimes despair of peace in South Africa when I see how irritating and unjust the press is on the one side and how stubborn the Transvaal government is on the other. On my recent visit to Pretoria I did not visit the president, as I considered it hopeless to think of making any impression on him, but I saw Reitz, Smuts and Schalk, burghers, who, I thought, would be amenable to argument, but I fear that either my advice had no effect on them, or else there opinion had no weight with the president. I urged upon them to advise the president to open the Volksraad with promises of a liberal franchise and drastic reforms. It would have been so much better if these had come voluntarily from the government instead of being gradually forced from them. In the former case, they would rally the greater number of the malcontents around them; in the latter case, no gratitude will be felt to the republic for any concessions made by it. Besides, there can be no doubt that as the alien population increases, as it undoubtedly will, their demands will increase with their discontent, and ultimately a great deal more will have to be conceded than will now satisfy them. The franchise proposal made by the president seems to be simply ridiculous.

He goes on to say, and I call the attention of the House to this further part of Sir Henry de Villiers' letter :

I am quite certain that if in 1881 it had been known to my fellow-commissioners that the president would adopt his retrogressive policy, neither President Brand (Orange Free State) nor I would ever have induced them to consent to sign the convention. They would have advised the Secretary of State to let matters revert to the condition in which they were before peace was concluded; in other words, to recommence the war.

I ask the hon. member for Labelle to-day : Is not the conduct of the British government justified when Chief Justice de Villiers, himself a Boer, told President Steyn, in 1899, that, if he had conceived when he was acting as peace commissioner in 1881, that Mr. Kruger would so abuse the power vested in him, that, instead of advising the independence of the Transvaal, he would have advised the British government to go to war again ? There never was a greater justification of the policy maintained by the British government than this letter of Chief Justice de Villiers. I could go on multiplying these letters. There are four or five published in the same book which I have now in my hands, but I will give simply the letters of a man who is a friend of the Boers, Mr. Merriman, a member of the government of Mr. Schreiner, himself an Afrikander of extreme views. In 1888, Mr. Merriman wrote to President Steyn in these words :

One cannot conceal the fact that the greatest danger to the future lies in the attitude of the president, Kruger, and his vain hope of building up a state on the foundation of a narrow, unenlightened minority, and his obstinate rejection of all prospects of using the materials which lie ready to his hand to establish a true republic on a broad, liberal basis. The report of recent discussions in the Volksraad on his finances and their mismanagement fill one with apprehension. Such a state of affairs cannot last; it must break down from inherent rottenness, and it will be well if the fall does not sweep away the freedom of all of us.

In another letter, written on the 1st of January, 1899, and addressed to President Steyn, again Mr. Merriman uses this very singular language :

I had the opportunity the other day of a long talk, or rather several talks, with Lippert about the Transvaal. He takes a very sane view of matters there, and is very hopeless. He represents Kruger—as others describe him—as more dogged and bigoted than ever, and surrounded by a crew of self-seekers who prevent him from seeing straight. He has no one to whom he turns for advice, and he is so inflated as to have the crazy belief that he (Kruger) is born to bring about peace between Germany and France. If he falls or dies, who have we to look to? All this plays the game of Rhodes and his brother capitalists.

In the last letter written just after the outbreak of hostilities, on November 14, 1899, to Mr. Piet De Wet, who was a member of the Cape legislature, Mr. Merriman said :

If the republics had not made the fatal mistake of sending the ultimatum when they did, things would have gone differently; but it is of no use going back on what might have been.

There was the mistake. It was the sending of this fatal ultimatum which brought all these calamities upon the Boers which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) deplores now. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the responsibility for this does not lie upon any other head than on the head of the late president of the Transvaal republic, who has himself been the first victim of his own doings. And notwithstanding all his faults, and notwithstanding that he has brought all this on his own head, considering his great age, I cannot help feeling for Mr. Kruger a great deal of sympathy. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) deprecates the war. I do not deprecate it to the same extent that he does ; but I do believe that it is, perhaps, the greatest calamity which has befallen England within the last forty years, because it places on England the burden and the duty of governing South Africa, with its two races estranged, perhaps for generations, by the cruel memories of war. But, Sir, even so, we must take the situation as it is. The problem of South Africa is this : That you have in that country two races so mixed and so intermingled that it is not possible to separate them. These two races must be governed by the same power and the same authority, and that power has either to be the power of England or the power of the Dutch. It has either to be the liberal and enlightened civilization of England of to-day, or the old bigoted and narrow civilization of the Dutch of two hundred years ago.

Let my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) forget for the moment that he and I are British subjects ; and in the name of civilization, in the name of humanity, I ask him which is the power that ought to govern in that distant land. Is it the enlightened power of England, or is it the semi-barbarous civilization of the Dutch

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is but one future for the Dutch. They have been conquered, but I pledge my reputation and my name as a British subject, that if they have lost their independence they have not lost their freedom.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is but one future for South Africa, and that future is a grand confederation on the pattern of the Canadian confederation. It is a federation in which Cape Colony and Natal, and the Orange Free State, and the Transvaal, and Rhodesia, shall be united together under a federal constitution, under the British flag, and under the sovereignty of England.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) will agree with me that when they have the British flag over South Africa, they shall have that which has been found everywhere, during the last sixty years, under the British flag : liberty for all, equality for all, justice and civil rights for English and for Dutch alike.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. For these reasons, I have to ask the House not to agree to this motion and to vote it down.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock, I had obtained the floor for the purpose of making a personal explanation in regard to an allusion made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and also for the purpose of making some remarks on the question before the House. While I do not suppose that a very large number of members agreed with my hon. friend, even among his own fellow-countrymen, and while perhaps it is not necessary to attach a very great degree of importance to the position he has taken, yet I think the question is one of such great importance that a full discussion upon it, now that it is under the consideration of the House, is not only proper, but in the highest degree desirable.

I can compliment the hon. member for Labelle upon his eloquence and his evident sincerity, although I do not feel able to pay as high a compliment to his discernment.

I think he is radically wrong, and I believe that the positions he advances are untenable. The hon. gentleman at the outset took the government to task for having acted in the matter of sending a contingent to South Africa without first having consulted parliament. Now, governments must in every case of emergency be prepared to assume responsibilities. Under our form of government the action taken by a ministry is subject to review by parliament, and if that action fails to command the assent and approval of parliament, the government of course suffers the consequences; and the government of my right hon. friend, in determining to send a contingent to South Africa, determined at the same time to assume all responsibilities and face all the consequences of that determination, and if they failed to secure the approval of parliament for their action, there was no course left open to them but to resign.

Then the hon. gentleman contended that we have a right to participate in the settlement of this war. Mr. Speaker, we are participating in the settlement of the war. The war is being settled exactly on the lines we desired when we sent our contingent to South Africa. Those troops were sent to South Africa to help to maintain the British cause, to assert the supremacy of Great Britain in that country; and if that object is secured and the rebellion suppressed, we are aiding in the settlement of the war upon the lines we designed.

The hon. gentleman also told us that it is desirable to settle this war upon principles that have made Canada happy and prosperous. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what the British government proposes to do. It proposes to settle this war upon the same principles that apply in the Dominion of Canada. It proposes to give to all classes in South Africa, whether they are Boers or English or Germans or Americans or natives —it proposes to give to every man, woman and child in South Africa the rights that pertain to British subjects under the law—the same rights enjoyed by His Majesty's subjects here in Canada. So my hon. friend's desire in that respect will be met.

The hon. gentleman will, I think, upon reflection, perhaps regret that he cast aspersions upon the conduct of British officers and British soldiers and upon the conduct of the British government in the management of this war, by comparing their career and conduct in South Africa to the conduct of Rome at the time her mercenary legions were guilty of ravage and rapine and all kinds of outrages. He tells us that our troops availed themselves of opportunities to burn and loot and turn out harmless and peaceful citizens from their homes. Sir, I must take exception to this assertion; I believe there is not a shadow of foundation for it. I believe the conduct of the British troops in South Africa has been marked in the highest degree by kindliness, by abstaining from outrage and violence, and, so far as the laws and the necessities of war would permit, by respecting the rights of combatants and inhabitants of the country.

The hon. gentleman proceeded to tell us that there is evidence that this war is growing unpopular, that there is a degree of public coldness manifested, that our soldiers when returning from South Africa do not receive that same effusive greeting which characterized their going forth. Well, I suppose it is a characteristic of warlike operations always and everywhere that men tire of the slaughter that is necessary, tire of the efforts and the sacrifices that it is necessary to make; and that is a test of the endurance of a nation—when it stands up under these untoward circumstances and pushes the contest through to the end. And while there may be a lack of that effusive enthusiasm which characterized public sentiment at the outset, there still remains that grim determination which will put this thing through to a triumphant issue.

The hon. gentleman gave expression to some criticisms about permitting recruiting in Canada—criticisms which were answered so magnificently by my hon. friend the leader of the government; and stated that this was not permitted in Australia. If I am not misinformed, the objection to recruiting in Australia was that the Australian government desired that the force raised in that country should be officered by Australians. There was no objection to recruiting there, but it was a mere question as to how the force should be officered.

The hon. gentleman desired to treat this question, not on the ground of the interests of the empire, but on the ground of Canadian interests. I would inquire whether it is possible to separate the interests of Canada from the interests of the empire. As long as we are a portion of the empire, as long as the British flag waves over Canada, our interests are identical with the interests of the empire; and the empire can suffer in no part, in no interest, in no manner whatever, without injuriously affecting our interests. We depend upon Great Britain to a great extent for our market. We sell to that country 64 per cent of our exports. The prosperity of the British Empire, its commercial and manufacturing prosperity, and its territorial integrity, are matters in which we are directly and intimately interested; and if we aid in maintaining the integrity of the empire, and in averting disaster from it, we are shaping our conduct on the lines of Canadian interest as well as upon the lines of Imperial interest. Then the hon. gentleman told us that he had a great admiration for Great Britain, but the Britain he loved was the peaceful, industrious, non-combative Britain; the Britain which flourished and grew by the exercise of the arts of peace. That is very well. But the steady, progressive, industrious Britain has risen to the position she occupies to-day by asserting her rights, by meeting her foes if necessary on the battlefield and triumphing over them ; she has reached the position she occupies to-day by guarding her rights and interests by the sword; and, while she is a peaceful nation and desires peace and desires to prosper by the avocations of peace, nevertheless she is a nation that must and will defend her rights. And, when the day comes when she has not the courage to defend her rights if necessary on the battlefield, the day will speedily follow when she will no longer be the progressive, the prosperous, the industrial Britain that the hon. gentleman tells us he admires.

Then, he advises us to go to the Boers with the olive branch and with the assurance of kind regards, if we want to end the war. Why, Mr. Speaker, attempts to carry the olive branch to the Boers, if I am not mistaken, have resulted even in the death of the envoys. Messages of peace have been sent, and overtures from the officers of the British army and from the Imperial authorities, representing to them the hopelessness of the struggle and urging upon them the fact that Britain was ready to grant them every privilege that could be enjoyed by British subjects. The envoys have been met, as white flags have been met, with mauser bullets. The only way to reach these men is to subdue them. There is no other course open than to put down the war and subdue the force of the Afrikander element in South Africa. Only when that is done can peace be restored to the country.

I was struck with the similarity of the views expressed by my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) and those expressed in a recent article by ex-President Benjamin Harrison. The ex-president, in dealing with foreign affairs, takes up the question of the war in South Africa. He takes the ground that the British were the aggressors, and he draws his comparison. He says that in Texas there may be an altercation between two men, and one of the men will say : I will not discuss this matter with you any longer, and reaches to his hip pocket for his revolver. The other man, anticipating his intention, gets, as they say there, the drop on his opponent and shoots him. The law and public opinion justify the man for killing the one who had attempted to draw his revolver. So, the ex-president says with regard to Britain in the Transvaal—the Dutchman commenced active hostilities by shooting first, but England was the aggressor, having reached for her revolver. A little later on I will deal with this view of the case, and I will prove that Britain had no intention of drawing her revolver, that she was merely putting herself in position to resist aggression, to prevent outrages upon her citizens, to resist invasion of her territory, and to defend her power in South Africa. The assumption of that position by Great Britain, I shall show later on led to the precipitation of hostilities by Kruger.

Now, it might be well, at the outset, to inquire, what are Britain's rights in South Africa ? That is a question of some importance. If Britain is in South Africa as an aggressor, if Britain is there as a robber, if her title is not good, then we might bestow upon the Boers a degree of sympathy that we would withhold from them under other circumstances. Now, England occupies South Africa, first, by right of conquest ; second, in consequence of a long period of occupation and discovery, and, thirdly, by purchase. She conquered South Africa in 1796 ; she ceded the country to the Netherlands in 1803 ; reoccupied it in 1806 ; and purchased the right of the Netherlands in South Africa in 1814 for the sum of £6,000,000 sterling. During her occupation of the country she has pressed forward the work of exploration and discovery. Livingstone, the great missionary—a man, by the way, whom the Boers hated, and whose library and effects they looted when he was absent on a missionary expedition to the natives of the interior—pushed discovery northward, and was the first to show that the idea that the interior of South Africa was a sandy desert was a mere mith. He found beautiful rivers, and fruitful and salubrious uplands. He reached the Zambesi, and discovered the great Mosi-oa-tunya fall ; pushed north and discovered Lake Nyassa ; later discovered Lake Tanganyika, and finally died on the shores of Lake Bangweolo. His explorations of the Zambesi were carried on under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society, and there is hardly a foot of what is now known as Rhodesia that was not naturally secured by the explorations of Livingstone. Then, there were the discoveries of Cumming and many others. Britain does not occupy a foot of that country to which she has not a title of exploration and purchase as well.

From 1833 to 1837, the ' great trek,' as it is called, took place. A portion of the Dutch population of Cape Town were restive under British rule. They were slaveholders. They had the kind of religion which is taken from the old testament, if it is not enlightened by the spirit of the new. They believed in hewing Agag in pieces before the Lord ; they believed in exterminating the nations of Canaan ; they believed in making bondslaves of the sons of Ham. And so they trekked off to the remote wilderness, where they could own their negroes and manage their own affairs in their own way. In time civilization reached them, and there was contention in the Orange Free State, as represented by British institutions, and that of mediavilism, as represented by the institutions and ideas of the Boers. There was a contention in the Orange Free State. Finally, England abandoned that country, and gave it to the Dutch in 1854, the Orange Free State thus becoming independent. The Transvaal never became independent. There was a collision between England and the Transvaal in 1881. There was a settlement in which British rights, I fear, were not stood up for as they ought to have been. But, by the terms of that settlement Britain retained the sovereignty over the Transvaal on a basis of suzeranity, settled by the conditions of a convention which gave her, perhaps, in some indefinite way, paramount authority over that country. And that paramount authority never was surrendered.

Now, after the incident at Majuba Hill and subsequent to 1884, England proceeded to acquire great territorial possessions in South Africa to the west and to the north of these two Dutch states. She acquired first of all Griqualand, then Bechuanaland, then Matabelaland, then Mashanoland, and that brought her possessions up to the Zambesi, extending from the Portuguese possessions on the east to the Portuguese possession on the west. She then pushed across the Zambesi and obtained what is known as Northern Zambesi, a vast country of over half a million square miles, a beautiful country, the finest inland country in Africa, not only a rich agricultural country, but a rich mineral country, with beautiful undulating hills 5,000 feet above the level of the sea, and a country rich in coal, in iron, in copper and in gold. This region of Northern Zambesi reached to Lake Nyassa on the west, 350 miles long, it reached to Lake Tangyneka on the north, 400 miles long. It swept around and embraced Bangineola lake about one-half the size of Lake Ontario. Now, all those who are familiar with South Africa are well aware that these acquisitions of territory are pregnant with the most important results in the future, for those vast, fertile and salubrious regions possess greater mineral wealth than any other section on the face of the globe. This region extends from the head of the Zambesi to a point about 300 miles from its mouth. England has secured from Portugal the right of way for railroads across Portuguese territory that intervened between this vast region and the Indian ocean on the west, and the right of the free navigation of the Zambesi.

Now, the Orange Free State and the Transvaal if assuming an attitude of hostility or unfriendliness to England could cut communication between Cape Town on the south and the vast and important region to the north which I have described. The extent of this great South African possession of England, aside from the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, was 1,350,000 square miles, or with the Orange Free State of 42,000 square miles, and the Transvaal with 114,000 square miles, which we now pronounce unhesitatingly to be British territory, this vast country embraces an area of 1,500,000 square miles.

Now, from a very early date the hostility of the Transvaal was manifested towards England. The Africkander Bond, as the organization is termed, which embraced the population of the Transvaal, the population of the Orange Free State, and a large portion of the Dutch population of Cape Town, aimed at securing supremacy in South Africa. The Bond was organized for that purpose. There was a deep laid plot, the purpose of which was to expel England from this vast region. The English colonial office was well aware of the existence and the purpose of this Bond, and of the danger that threatened British supremacy in South Africa in consequence of its machinations. About fifteen years ago gold was discovered in the Transvaal, and Mr. Kruger invited immigration. He promised to immigrants who came into that country equal rights, as we have been informed this afternoon by the leader of the government, equal rights to those of the burghers. Immigration poured in. It soon became apparent that this volume of immigration would be very large. It was feared, and there was good ground for the fear, that the Uitlander population, as it was termed, would outnumber the Boers, and very speedily a change of policy was adopted by Paul Kruger. The Uitlanders' rights were trampled upon, not at first perhaps, in a very flagrant manner; but these outrages became more and more pronounced as time passed on. During all this time, and especially after the rich mines of the Witwatersrand yielded Kruger a large amount, the Dutch Transvaal were making active and extensive preparations for war, were importing arms, were importing artillery, were importing munitions of war, and were erecting fortifications to command Johannesburg and Pretoria; and it was evident to any man who had ordinary power of observation that a crisis was impending.

The operations of Paul Kruger embraced a system of most onerous taxation. The output of gold in the Transvaal was taxed to the extent of about 35 per cent. These Uitlanders, it must be remembered, were mostly British subjects, and the South African republic about which we hear so much, was a republic only in name. It was an oligarchy ruled by a despot, a despot who had neither breadth of mind nor intelligence, as we count intelligence, but was a narrow, bigotted, stubborn old Dutchman, disregarding the rights of men in every respect where those rights stood in the road of the accomplishment of his own purposes. His course was marked year after year by an arbitrary disregard of the rights of the subjects of the Queen.

Now, I want to inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether, under these circumstances, we are to suppose that Great Britain, having supreme control under her right of suzerainty, was to stand idly and passively by and submit to the outrages upon their own subjects without protest, or without attempt to remedy the difficulties that existed in the Transvaal? Between January, 1896, and December, 1898, Paul Kruger was guilty of the following abridgements of British liberty, and the following outrages upon the rights of the Uitlanders in the Transvaal:

First of all, he abolished the high court, which stood in the way of carrying out his arbitrary and unlawful purposes. Then he gagged the press; then public meetings were prohibited, and the Uitlanders, if they assembled in numbers of more than three or four together, were liable to arrest, and were arrested. Then the president took upon himself the power to expel from the Transvaal, by his own edict, any person he pleased, without any reference to an edict of the court, without any legal proceedings, without any reason whatever except his own will. Then military service was established, and the Uitlander was liable at twelve hours notice to take up arms on behalf of the government that was depriving him of all his rights, and to serve without pay, sundered from his family, dragged from his business, and put into the ranks of the Transvaal soldiery at twelve hours notice. Then the taxation of the municipal government was oppressive. The city of Johannesburg, with 100,000 inhabitants had 250 voters, and these voters were all Dutchmen. The taxes collected in that city for school purposes could only be applied in schools where the teaching was in the Dutch language; and the great proportion of the men who paid the taxes in that city were entirely disfranchised and were at the mercy of a few Dutch burghers who happened to reside in that city. Then taxation without representation was increased. New monopolies were established, dynamite monopolies, a monopoly of transportation, a gunpowder monopoly. Any business or anything in the Transvaal that could be made the subject of a monopoly for wringing money from the Uitlanders, was made a monopoly; and the money drawn from the Uitlanders in this way was squadered amongst the Dutch burghers. Then, the acquisition of the franchise was made impossible by the fact that when the Uitlander had lived in the Transvaal for fourteen years he could have the franchise if three-fourths of the burghers in the municipality where he lived voted that he should be invested with it. This condition made it absolutely impossible that any Uitlander, after residing fourteen years in the Transvaal, should exercise the right of the franchise.

Mr. GOURLEY. Then they would have shifted it instantly to twenty-four years.

Mr. CHARLTON. Every one of these outrages was the result of a settled, deliberate purpose on the part of Paul Kruger. What was declared to be the purpose of the Afrikander Bond? I have a work here on the South African question by Mr. Bell and at page 31, I find this statement as to the purposes of this organization known as the Afrikander Bond:

The bond knows no other nationality but that of Afrikanders, considering everybody as such, no matter what his origin may be, who shall bind himself to advance the welfare and prosperity of South Africa.

The object of the Afrikander Bond is the establishment of a South African nationality by fostering true patriotism.

This object shall be attained by encouraging Afrikanders, from a political as well as a social point of view, to assert themselves as a nation: (a) by establishing this Bond in all the states and colonies, and by creating an organization throughout South Africa.

Now, this Afrikander Bond was hostile in every purpose and in every movement to British supremacy, or to the continuance upon any terms of British authority in South Africa. Paul Kruger declared in a despatch to the New York Tribune, to use his own words, that the trouble in South Africa —was a struggle for supremacy in South Africa by a combination against the English.

There was talk about an independent federation of states, and Mr. Chamberlain, of whom we have heard a good deal to-day, in dealing with this question, made the following statement:

It is an inspiration which cannot be accepted by the people of this country, and until it is frankly abandoned, there cannot be a final and satisfactory settlement, but, short of this, we are ready now, as at all times, to give the fullest and most favourable consideration to the wishes and sentiments, even to the prejudices, of all parties in South Africa, and to co-operate with them in all measures for the good of the whole community.

Could anything more be asked than that, any broader or more liberal condition of settlement than this foreshadowed in the statement I have just quoted? Sir Alfred Milner, at the Bloemfontein conference, used the following language:

It is my strong conviction that if the government of the South African repupblic could now, before things get worse, of its own motion, change its policy towards the Uitlanders, and take measures calculated to content the reasonable people among them, who, after all, are a great majority, such a course would not only strengthen the independence of the republic, but it would make such a better state of feeling all round, that it would become far easier to settle outstanding questions between the two governments.

Again he says:

I know that the citizens of the South African republic are intensely jealous of British interference in their internal affairs. What I want to impress upon the president is, that if the government of the South African republic, of its own accord, from its sense of policy and justice, would afford a more liberal treatment to the Uitlander population, this would not increase British interference, but would enormously diminish it. If the Uitlanders were in a position to help themselves, they would not always be appealing to us under the convention.

Later on he says :

No doubt it is a difficult business to get different races to pull together inside one body politic. That is the problem all over South Africa. But it is solved in other parts of South Africa more or less. It would be solved altogether and for ever, if the principle of equality could be established all round. It is the one state where inequality is the rule which keeps the rest in a fever. . . . . I see it suggested in some quarters that the policy of Her Majesty's government is one of aggression. I know better than any man that their policy, so far from being one of aggression, has been one of singular patience, and such, I doubt not, it will continue. But it cannot relapse into indifference.

True it is, Mr. Speaker, that the British policy in South Africa has been a policy of singular patience. Since Majuba, in 1881, the British government have borne and foreborne, and they never made an effort to place a military force in South Africa until rebellion had reared its crest, until two states had given unmistakable signs of an intent to raise the flag of rebellion against British authority. Well, the Bloemfontein conference was held, the negotiations failed and wrongs went on unredressed. Then came the ultimatum to which the Prime Minister has referred this afternoon, issued upon the 9th October, 1899, and I think it well, Mr. Speaker, to place the demands of this ultimatum upon record in this House. This ultimatum, in two instances, spoke of the independence of the Transvaal republic being threatened. The ultimatum was as follows :

That all points of mutual difference shall be regulated by the friendly course of arbitration, or by whatever amicable way may be agreed upon by this government with Her Majesty's government.

That the troops on the borders of this republic shall be instantly withdrawn.

That all reinforcements of troops which have arrived in South Africa since June 1, 1899, shall be removed to the sea coast, with an assurance that they will be removed from South Africa within a reasonable time, to be agreed upon with this government, and with a mutual assurance and guarantee on the part of this government that no attack upon or hostilities against any portion of the possessions of the British government shall be made by the republic during further negotiations within a period of time to be subsequently agreed upon between the governments, and this government will, on compliance therewith, be prepared to withdraw the armed burghers of this republic from the borders.

That Her Majesty's troops which are now on the high seas shall not be landed in any port of South Africa.

Well, this is a refreshing piece of assurance, a refreshing piece of impudence. One wonders, in the light of subsequent events, what the burghers of the Transvaal and what Mr. Reitz, the Secretary of State, who penned this ultimatum, imagined the feelings of the British government would be—the troops on the borders of the republic to be instantly withdrawn, troops that had been landed since June 1st, of that year to be sent to the sea coast, troops then on their way from Great Britain to South Africa to be diverted from their destination and sent somewhere else. Why, the most powerful nation of Europe, the greatest empire in the world, would not have ventured to dictate an ultimatum of that character to a first or even a second rate power. This ultimatum left no doubt—if doubt had previously existed—of the tendency and the trend of events and the inevitable struggle that was at hand. And immediately upon the issuing of this ultimatum, the Orange Free State wheeled into line. There was concerted action between the Orange Free State and the Transvaal. It was perfectly well understood that the two were to act in concert, and the sympathy of a very large portion of the Dutch inhabitants of Cape Town were in the same direction. Then came the invasion of Natal following almost immediately by the investment of Ladysmith, Kimberley and Mafeking, and the annexation, as the right hon. the First Minister told us this afternoon, of British territory to the Orange Free State. Then came the flight of the refugees, which was characterized by the infliction of great cruelty and barbarity on the part of the Dutch inhabitants of the Transvaal. Here is one little incident mentioned in the work of Mr. Bell :

The cause of the assaults was that the refugees left the trucks or carriages for the purpose of obtaining sustenance on their long and painful journey. For this they were lashed and assaulted by armed Boers of the Free State, although they offered no provocation, and although no state of war existed between the republics and Great Britain. Women in the crowded trucks, in some instances, gave birth to children, passengers were spat upon, and in one case, of which I have particulars, the father of a thirsty child was beaten back to the train, only to witness the death of his child from thirst, although water was obtainable at the station at which he endeavoured to procure it.

This is a specimen among many that might be cited of the atrocities that were perpetrated by these men, on whom the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) expends his sympathies, the Boers of South Africa.

The issue, whatever the hon. member for Labelle may believe, of this war, has been from the outset plain and clearly defined. The issue has been and is to-day : Is South Africa to be Dutch or British ? That is the issue, and there is no middle ground between these two conditions. South Africa must be the one or the other. If we insist upon staying in that country, it will be British, but if my hon. friend from Labelle has his way, it will be Dutch, and we will retire from South Africa in disgrace.

England's South African Empire is a possession of such importance that no nation in the world would permit its surrender without a struggle to the death. Its possibilities are untold. From the Witswaterrand 11,000,000 pounds stirling in gold were extracted the last year before the war, and it was estimated that £25,000,000 or £30,000,000 annually would be extracted in a few years to come. The wealth in that mining region is not a tithe of the wealth of gold possessed by this country. The region of Mashonaland and Matabelleland is the old Ophair, with vast indications of ancient mining—drifts, shafts, ruins, indications of the operations of the ancient miner in days gone by upon a very extensive scale. The country abounds in reefs of gold, rich gold washings, and in copper and iron. I repeat that no portion of the world is as rich in mineral treasure as southern Zambesi or the region north of the Transvaal. The value of this country cannot be computed. There is not only the value of these 1,500,000 square miles, but there is the probability of great future expansion in that region. England has a scheme of running a railway from the cape to Cairo, a distance of 5,000 miles, and the time will speedily come when she will bridge the gap between the head of Lake Pangauska and Uganda by acquisition of a strip of territory of the Congo Free State on the west side of Lake Pangauska and have territorial possessions from end to end of Africa.

To permit the independence of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State would be to place in Central South Africa a hostile barrier to all England's communications between the north and south. The law of preservation has decided the attitude which England must necessarily be compelled to take, and there will be in the future no more incidents like Majuba Hill, and the surrender of the Soudan, when Gordon was killed at Kartoum, but Great Britain will hold a firm grip upon the possessions she already has and obtain more as circumstances permit, and the more she obtains the better for the interests of humanity. The struggle of course has been a costly one, but the result is inevitable. The war perhaps has lasted longer than many of us anticipated, but it is practically ended, and whatever it may have cost in treasure and in life, the result is more than adequate for the cost that has been incurred. There is evidence that the Dutch Boers and prisoners realize that they have been made victims of misplaced confidence and are disposed to condemn the Afrikander Bond and the leaders who have precipitated upon the country grievous disasters, which have culminated in the capturing of these thousands of men who are now prisoners.

A Dominion of South Africa will be the realization, in all probability, of the near future, a dominion, where these states will be confederated provinces, where this Boer population, now discordant and hostile, will settle down into peaceful and loyal citizens. We have already in history one instance of the absorption of a Dutch colony—the colony of New Amsterdam forming now the state of New York. This colony was conquered by England. The same bitter hostility existed among the New Amsterdam Dutch that exist to-day in the Transvaal and Orange Free State, but this population became assimilated with the Anglo-Saxon and merged with the other population of the United States. The Knickerbocker element in New York is distinct to-day to some extent from the other elements, but it is as thoroughly loyal, thoroughly Americanized, thoroughly English—speaking in the broad sense—as any element in the United States, and the same results will be produced in the case of the Dutch element in the Cape Colony, the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. It will be one of the great works in which England is engaged to assimilate, to render the different elements of the population homogeneous, to introduce amity and goodwill among them by the influence of British institutions which will give to all these people their rights, under which no one will have the advantage over another, but all will be equal before the law—all British subjects, secure in the possession of their rights and property. These very misguided Afrikanders will in the near future realize the mistake they made in resisting an authority which will confer upon them blessings such as they have never enjoyed or even dreamed of in the past.

These contrasts exist to-day between the purposes of those two elements. The Boer leader desires to oppress the British, the British leader desires to grant every human and every natural right to the Boer. I do not need to dwell upon the impertinence of this resolution which professes to instruct England in the proper course for that great nation to pursue in the settlement of a matter with which we really have no direct connection. The effect upon our interests in Canada of our participation in this struggle has been most salutary and beneficial. Canada has secured a recognition from the world at large that she never had before. The world realizes that in this vast region north of the United States there is growing up a nation; the world realizes that this country now has a population which possesses energy and courage and devotion to the interests of the empire, and is worthy of respect and worthy of consideration. The cost of sending the contingents from Canada to South Africa is infinitely more than recouped to this country by the beneficial influences which are the result of that action, and which will redound in so many ways to the credit and to the advantage of the Dominion. Our interest in this matter is a direct one. It is not a matter of pure sentiment, although sentiment had much to do with it, but our material interests are of a character to have rendered the participation of Canada in this struggle a natural thing to do. As I have said, England is our great market. We can only maintain that market by maintaining the power and the prestige and the prosperity of the empire that affords it. We have been driven to seek that market. We have been driven from the markets of the United States. We market to-day $70,000,000 worth of farm products in Britain out of a total of $80,000,000 that we produce. We cannot afford to lose that market, and it is a matter of the most vital importance to Canada that England and all her interests shall be maintained inviolate. And so it goes beyond the sphere of sentiment and comes down to the sphere of actual material interests, when we take our position as a portion of the British Empire and are prepared to bear our share of the sacrifices, and of the cost in blood and treasure, if that be necessary, for the defence of those interests. The integrity and the glory of this empire is our individual interest. We have a sentimental interest, but speaking from the low standpoint of material interest alone we cannot afford to see Britain's career in Africa, or in any other quarter of the globe, hampered or made to fail. These, Mr. Speaker, in brief, are some of the thoughts I wish to present to this House in reference to this great question which has been brought up for discussion to-night in the manner in which it has.

In dismissing this question, I wish to refer to a personal matter. My warrant for doing so is an insinuation or direct charge rather, made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I am sorry, Sir, to trouble the House or to take up the time of the House with a matter of such trivial consequences to the country as the one I am about to allude to, and I shall allude to it as briefly as possible. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) with an evident animus that did not indicate the possession of the most friendly kind of feelings, referred to the report that has been circulated with regard to an alleged utterance of mine during the late election in a speech made at Delhi, in the north riding of Norfolk. I suppose I need hardly say to members of this House that in the heat of an extempore speech upon the hustings, men sometimes undoubtedly make use of expressions which, if they had time to carefully weigh their words, and had an opportunity afterwards to revise their speech, would appear in a different shape before the public. At times the reporter who is giving a synopsis of the speech may unintentionally convey a false impression or an impression not warranted by the language of the speaker. He may at times misunderstand the speaker. The speaker may in the hurry and excitement of an extempore speech fail to express in language exactly the idea that he intended to convey. In the speech in question, if I remember correctly, I distinctly made the statement in reply to the chairman, that I disclaimed any intention to cast an aspersion or an insinuation upon the loyalty of my French Canadian fellow-citizens. This House is no doubt aware that I have on different occasions spoken highly of the loyalty of the French Canadians? I remember upon one occasion referring to their loyalty, when thirteen years after the conquest of Canada an attempt was made at the time of the revolt of the thirteen colonies to detach them from their allegiance to Great Britain, and when that attempt signally failed. The French Canadians then, with only thirteen years experience of British rule, proved steadfast and true in their allegiance to the institutions of England. I have spoken of their loyalty upon other occasions. On the 5th day of March, 1900, in conection with an attack made in this House upon my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) growing out of certain incidents that arose in the riot at Montreal, I referred to this question, and without quoting from that speech, I ask my French Canadian fellow-members to do me the kindness to read the speech which is reported in 'Hansard' of the 5th of March. I state here now that that speech expresses my sentiments and that I stand by the assertions made therein.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, the great importance of maintaining friendly relations between the diverse races in this Dominion. I realize that the man who would do anything to disturb these friendly relations; the man who would wantonly create bitterness and friction is an enemy of his country. I realize that we must go on together side by side and hand in hand in the development of Canada, if we are to make a success of the experiment of British institutions on this North American continent. Of course I am not of French descent; I am an Anglo Saxon; I am a Protestant, and all I ask is to have my own particular views respected and be allowed to entertain them, while I grant equally and fully the same privileges to the man who does not agree with me. We have got to build up our institutions upon the broad basis of civil and religious liberty. We cannot make religious tests here, and a few days ago I spoke from this point of view in a manner which will clearly indicate the position I take with regard to religious tests and declarations which are offensive and unfair to any body of Christians, or any sect in the Dominion of Canada or in the British Empire. But, Sir, I say again that in taking this position I surrender no tenet that I hold, no principle that I entertain, and I ask no other man to surrender any of his. I repeat that I ask of him to respect my rights under the broad principle of civil and religious liberty, and I pledge to him that I will endeavour to respect his. So much for that point.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question as to whether, in the speech referred to, I gave expression to the opinion that it would be a good idea to have a British garrison at Quebec, I say I did express that opinion; and the difficulty arises when there is attributed to me, for the expression of that opinion, the belief that disloyalty in Quebec rendered such a step necessary. It was not upon such a ground that I expressed the opinion that it would be a good thing in the interest of Canada to have a garrison at Quebec. On the contrary, Sir, I believe it would be in the interest of all Canada to have the great strategic position of Canada garrisoned.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. Mr. Tarte). Why not Toronto ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Why not Toronto, or any other place ? Why should it be taken as an imputation on the loyalty of any place that a garrison is stationed there ? Is it any imputation on the loyalty of Halifax that there is a garrison there? Is it any imputation on the loyalty of Victoria that there is a garrison at Esquimalt ? I would make Quebec the military headquarters of the Dominion ; I would put the arsenal of the country there for the store of arms ; I would make that citadel an impregnable stronghold. I would do it for the purpose of bringing into contact with the French Canadians influences that would have a tendency to make the two races better acquainted with each other—for the purpose of letting the French Canadians see the British flag, mingle with British officers, and enjoy the social relations that would naturally grow out of that circumstance. I go further : I believe in making Quebec—and I hope the Minister of Public Works will pardon me—the great commercial centre of this Dominion ; and I think my hon. friend the premier understands that to be my belief——

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON——for I once waited upon him with a delegation for the express purpose of promoting the commercial interests of Quebec. It seems to me absurd to dig a hole in the bottom of Lake St. Peter, when we have a harbour 130 miles further down the river, which can be kept open two or three months longer than the harbour of Montreal, possibly the whole year. Vessels from Port Colborne can go to Quebec as well as to Montreal to transfer their cargoes to deep-draught ocean steamers.

So, upon commercial, social and political grounds, I am in favour of making the city of Quebec the headquarters of the military system of Canada, and the commercial headquarters of Canada, bringing it great prosperity, running a railway line to James Bay, and diverting the trade of that region and of other regions to Quebec by through lines to the interior, and centering at Quebec great resources, great buisness interests, great prosperity, and a great population. What will be the effect of that, in a political sense ? It cannot do otherwise than accelerate that process of assimilation and the creation of that homogeneity and affinity which we all desire, and which must be the precursor of the full exercise of the powers of the Dominion in the line of progress. It always makes me sad to reflect that there are, perhaps, a million people in Quebec who cannot speak the English language, who are deprived of the opportunity to test their powers, who are deprived of the opoprtunity to make headway in the world, who cannot do justice to themselves because they are not in touch with the race which has the commercial transactions, the business transactions and the capital.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I did give utterance to the opinion that there should be a British garrison in Quebec, for the purpose of bringing into contact with each other, to the extent that a garrison would do so, the two branches of the population. Quebec ! Why, I have love for Quebec, Mr. Speaker. Queenly Quebec, beautiful for situation, with its white hamlets and its green fields, surrounded by its mountains ; Quebec, the impregnable old fortress ; Quebec, the strategic centre of North America, Quebec, the gateway of the north, at the foot of whose citadel-crowned promontory the waters of the great inland fresh water seas and the Atlantic mingle, and from whose harbour there extends westward the shining pathway over which her early explorers and voyagers sought the far west and founded the French posts around in the rear of the English settlements along the Atlantic. Historical Quebec, where one of the great epochs of history was wrought out, and the hand of fate decreed that the course of an empire should be changed. I should not like to contemplate the possibility or the probability of retaining that grand historic spot as a city where there would continue to be ten speaking French to one speaking English—as a city which would not fulfil the destiny which Providence designed for it. I want to see Quebec the great centre of this Dominion, in commerce, in wealth, in activity ; one of the great factors in assimilating the two populations whose united efforts, if they do unite, will be so conducive to the prosperity, the wealth and the advancement of Canada.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that these explanations which I have made with regard to this matter will set at rest the aspersion which has been levelled against me, that I insinuated that we wanted a garrison at Quebec because, forsooth, we wanted to keep a disloyal population overawed and in order. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that under all the circumstances it would have been just as prudent for me, at the time that speech was made, to have said nothing about a garrison at Quebec; it gave opportunity for misconception. If I were making the speech again, I would no doubt avoid saying anything about it. But, nevertheless, I do not take back water, and I am in favour of putting a garrison at Quebec, centering railroads there, centering business there, and making Quebec a great business and social centre.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Mr. Speaker, I really do not think I should interfere in the little family party that has been going on this afternoon on the other side of the House. We first find the very eloquent and charming member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) introducing a rather radical resolution. Then, we find the right hon. premier coming on with his silver-tongued oratory, completely setting at nought the arguments of the young member for Labelle; and I must congratulate the right hon. gentleman on the very excellent, patriotic and really loyal speech he made. Then, we find our good friend, the independent member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), coming on to-night, and, I believe, from his conclusion, that the real object of his speech was to square himself for a speech which he delivered on a previous occasion. He says that if he had to do it over again, he would not deliver that speech. I have heard it whispered that that speech won him a very easy election. Inasmuch as it has been referred to, I have a copy of that speech, which I will read to the House, in order to let the House see whether the speech in question has justly caused this little turmoil or not. It is taken from the Toronto Globe, of October 20, 1900. The hon. gentleman starts out in that pious manner which is characteristic of him, by saying :

God forbid that he should say anything against the French or call their loyalty into question, but he could not be ignorant of the fact that the tri-colour is shown in Quebec a thousand times where the Union Jack is shown once. These people look back with regret to the time when the empire passed from the hands of France to England, and the history of North America was changed, and while he would not abridge one iota the privilege the French Canadian possesses or insinuate aught as to his loyalty, yet he would say that the safety of Canada lay in Anglo-Saxon hands, and realizing that, he felt it would not be improper to have a British garrison stationed in Quebec——

Mr. BOURASSA. To make it a commercial centre, or perhaps apply the provisions of his Seduction Bill.

Mr. HUGHES (reading)—

—ready at any moment to assert British authority under any circumstances or emergencies that might arise.

Did I hear some one say something about commercial union ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I said it was to make of Quebec a commercial centre, or perhaps apply the provisions of his Seduction Bill.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I thought it was a commercial union that was spoken of. However, I was glad to hear to-night the right ring from the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and I was sorry this afternoon to hear the hon. member for Labelle waste his eloquence in the way he did. I thought that he would have presented the other side of the question—because every question has two sides—in a logical manner, and one characteristic of that hon. gentleman on most occasions ; but I think the House will agree with me that little pickings from newspapers here and there, up and down the country, could not be considered argument in any sense. I trust, however, that he will see the error of his ways, and that when another session rolls on we will find him on the floor of the House using his splendid eloquence along the right lines, in building up the British Empire and defending everything noble in the cause of humanity.

Had it not been for one or two statements, I would not have spoken to-night, because a short time ago I spoke in this House, at considerable length, on this question from a historical standpoint. My hon. friend stated that Britain was unable to find recruits for her forces in South Africa, and therefore had to call on the colonies. But surely my hon. friend, who has evidently been reading the papers very assiduously, must have found out in the course of the last few weeks, in the English and Canadian newspapers, items by the score, showing that Great Britain does not know what to do with the number of men who have volunteered to serve in South Africa.

I was very sorry to hear the hon. gentleman this afternoon join in the slanders that have been cast at the British troops in South Africa. He referred to the conduct of British soldiers in insulting women. I was more than pained to hear a member of this House, who should have been inspired by the chivalric instincts characteristic of the race from which he springs, speak the way he did. The city of Ottawa has furnished an instance of how these slanders have arisen and how they have been utilized by the pro-Boer party in England. We have Lieutenant Morrison, an officer in the artillery, of this city, quoted all over the United States and the British Empire as having written certain things slandering the British troops, showing how cruel they have been in their treatment of the Boer women and children. Yet we find that Lieutenant Morrison was misquoted, and when what he did say was put alongside of the garbled version of his utterances, the conduct of those who circulated the slander is clearly shown to the light.

Let me give an instance that came under my own personal notice when in South Africa. One of the officers in command at one of the stations received a letter from a Boer lady, whose husband had been one of the chief members of the war committee, and was a prisoner. She complained that her house had been broken into the previous evening, and that she had been insulted by two British soldiers. The matter was taken promptly in hand and a patrol visited the place. There was not found the slightest sign of the house having been broken into, and when questioned the woman said that it was not her house, but a neighbour's. Her letter was produced, in which she had alleged that it was her own house, but she pleaded that she had written it in a state of great excitement, and had intended to say it was her neighbour's, a woman by the name of Mrs. Schalkurjk. A visit was made to the neighbour's house, and Mrs. Schalkurjk told the patrol that her only ground for saying her house had been broken into was that two soldiers had stopped there the previous evening, as they rode by, and made some inquiries. These men had never offered the slightest word of insult, yet this woman had the hardihood to write to the officer in charge of the station that her house had been broken into and herself insulted. All these facts are on record, but if that story had been allowed to go uncontradicted it would have afforded campaign material to be utilized by gentlemen of the views of my hon. friend from Labelle.

That hon. gentleman spoke of the failure of the British army in South Africa. Well, I took occasion recently in this House to point out that the rule in war is that one man behind a fortification breast high is equal to eight or ten advancing against him. And when instead, the ordinary fortification on the plain, you have fortified the mountain fastnesses and kopjes, you can quadruple the strength which each defender has against the enemy. The House must not forget also that Great Britain was upwards of 7,000 miles from the scene of hostilities, and had to transport men and materials all that distance. Hon. members must equally bear in mind that the Boers had 95,000 men in the fighting line, and in order to cope against a force of that size, with all the advantages in their favour that the Boers possessed, Great Britain required to have about 500,000 or 600,000 men in the fighting line. But, instead, she had less than 325,000 men. Little disasters did occur, as will occur in any war, but in the history of the world the qualities shown by the British army in South Africa have never been surpassed. I do not pretend that the generalship on all occasions has been good, but there never has been a war yet where it has always been good, and there never will be. But the fighting qualities of the British soldier, and the general success of the British arms, have never been surpassed, when we consider the difficulties under which the troops laboured.

The hon. gentleman has referred to New Zealand and New South Wales. I like to believe him honest, for I think he intends to be, but he must know as well as any man in Canada that New Zealand has repeatedly sent contingents to Africa, and New South Wales has sent five contingents to fight there.

Mr. BOURASSA. But no policemen.

Mr. HUGHES. New South Wales sent five men to one sent by Canada.

Mr. BOURASSA. Soldiers, not police.

Mr. HUGHES. These policemen whom we are sending are to be in the service of His Majesty, and not in the service of the colonial government, and may be utilized for fighting purposes if necessary.

I take this opportunity of summing up my hon. friend's position. He is always ready to give advice to Great Britain. The other day he wanted to amend the coronation declaration. Then, some years ago, he voted in favour of the motion, asking that home rule be granted to Ireland ; but he accepts the advantages of the British consular service ; he benefits by the guarantee of the British Empire for the Canadian loan in the money markets of the world ; he profits by the advantage to Canada in the guaranteeing of her national debt, and by the expenditure of British capital in the development of this country.

But he, as a French Canadian, and his fellow-countrymen, enjoy under British rule liberties and advantages that they could not have under any other country that ever existed on God's green earth. And yet, while he enjoys the protection of Britain's army and navy throughout the world, he stands in this House and slanders His Majesty's soldiers fighting the battles of the empire in South Africa. And he says we must not fight. That is not the kind of patriot we want. That is the kind of patriot we saw in France at the close of the eighteenth century ; for instance, in Robespierre, one of those gentry who would weep if he trod on the foot of a cat, one of these tender-hearted men who, did not believe in quarrelling, but who preached the doctrines advocated by my hon. friend from Labelle, and who brought France to the position of which the poet speaks when he says :

> But France got drunk with blood to vomit crime,
> And fatal have her saturnalia been
> To Freedom's cause in every age and clime.

Liberty is not secured or advanced by the doctrines preached by the hon. gentleman this afternoon. I shall not go into the details of the causes of the Boer trek. I spoke of that here the other night. We are told by the hon. gentleman that the Boers trekked from Cape Colony on account of British tyranny. They trekked because Britain freed the slave, because the Wilberforce Act passed in Great Britain had freed the slaves wherever the British flag flew. The credit of British discovery was not due, as my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said it was primarily, to Livingstone, because he had not reached there when this work was begun by Moffat and other devoted missionaries who had preceded the Boers on the fertile lands beyond the Orange river and the Vaal. It was through the discoveries of these men that the Boers knew that to the north there was pasture land infinitely better than the barren karroo in the southern part of Cape Colony. The Boers trekked to escape British taxation, or rather that they might have the levying of taxes themselves. As one of themselves puts it, the Boer believes in no taxation except that levied by himself on the British and the Kaffirs. They trekked there that they might see no other white man's smoke, and that they might lay the foundation of a Boer republic with Durban as its seaport. And history from that day to this proves that the Boer has never given up his hope of driving the British into the sea. As I pointed out on a previous occasion, the lack of a seaport in South Africa was Britain's weakness there. In 1795 and 1796 no less than 1,500 British merchantmen were captured by French cruisers operating from Mauritius alone, this being made possible by the fact that Britain had no naval base in South Africa. The fact that Britain must have a naval base in that country makes it absolutely necessary that the country in the rear must be friendly ; and for that, if for no other reason, Britain must control the whole of South Africa from the Zambesi to the sea. I fully expected that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) would enter into the causes of the war. Both the leader of the House and the member for North Norfolk have pointed out the disabilities under which the Outlanders laboured. But there was one reason, chief of all, to which these hon. gentlemen did not refer. The American war of Independence was in the main an assertion of the principle that there shall not be taxation without representation. That principle was ruthlessly violated in the Transvaal, and that fact alone was sufficient justification for the Outlanders to resist and for Britain to step in to the assistance of her people. There is another point—in 1877, when Britain annexed the country, Kruger could not pay his own taxes. But to-day he is worth more than Her Majesty was at the time of her death. And Kruger's sons and grandsons, as has been aptly said by a prominent Afrikander, possess more power in South Africa than Queen Victoria's sons and grandsons do in Great Britain. Notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) says in his speech, the last thing that Kruger and his oligarchy wanted was an independent republic. Kruger knew that the moment that the people had a voice in the management of affairs, that moment he and his oligarchy would disappear. Why, in that whole country, there were only 15,000 voters—not as many as in one ward in the city of Toronto. Here was the real motive that was at the root of many poor fellows being brought into the war. The agitators held out before them the vision of Kruger's wealth and told them : Let the Boers join us in a republic and you will soon become wealthy out of her mines too. They went to those farmers who were in debt to mortgagees or shopkeepers—nearly all the money being owed to English people—and said to them : Join us in this war and when it is over your debts will be wiped out, for we shall drive the English into the sea. They commandeered the poor people. On every farm there were a number of poor whites. I reasoned with some of the women folk of these poor people. I remember one family, three of whose men were slain one morning. Reasoning with the women as to why they had allowed their men to go to war, their answer was something like this : Even in times of peace we are slaves, we have not laid by enough to move us to the next town much less resist these burghers or to take an independent stand against them ; they have the power over us even in times of peace. How much more is their power when martial law is declared ? For, Mr. Speaker, this territory had all been annexed to the Free State or the Transvaal and the condition of these poor people was worse than slavery. There were some Boers who were patriotic, who fought for what they regarded as a principle ; but their patriotism was of the negative kind—they fought rather for hatred of Great Britain than for love of their fellows. I agree with much that has been said with relation to these people. I am sorry that my hon. friend did not do them justice. They are a great people, and when they become civilized, when they come in contact with the people of the world I am perfectly satisfied they will make a great race. History shows them to be descended from the greatest races the world has ever seen, the Huguenots of France and the Dutch—races that resisted tyranny for ages. Yet, as soon as the Huguenots reached South Africa they were persecuted by these very Dutchmen, and were compelled to give up their language and adopt the manners and customs of the Boers. Consider how the Kaffirs are treated by the Boers. A Kaffir dare not walk upon the sidewalk, but must take the middle of the road. He could not own an acre of land ; he must not carry on a trade in vegetables ; until two years ago he could not be married legally. More than that, he had to be attached to some baas and wear a bandage on his arm with his number on it. If he did not wear this bandage, he might be arrested and be made a slave of the state. The system has not always worked very creditably, for they really had indirect slavery in the Transvaal. However, I will not go into these details.

Reference has been made here to-night to the reception accorded to the soldiers returning from South Africa. I want to tell the hon. member for Labelle, that the returned soldiers do not look for receptions. The soldiers who went to South Africa realize that they have done their duty, and that is all the reward they look for. No doubt many hon. gentlemen present have read this old adage :

When war's proclaimed, and danger's nigh,
'God and the soldier,' is the cry ;
When war is over, and wrongs are righted,
God is forgotton and the soldier slighted.

The soldier realizes this, and he looks for no favours. He knows that there are people in any community, especially a community such as this, who oppose soldiering in any form; he knows he will get no sympathy from them. He knows, moreover, that for every one who went off to the front there were fifty others anxious to go, and these will naturally look with a little jealousy if exceptional favours should be showered upon those returning. As a consequence, if he is a sensible soldier, he will, on coming home, go back to his business, and by respecting himself endeavour to command the respect of the community. I tell my hon. friend from Labelle that he would do himself credit, he would do credit to the chivalrous race to which he belongs, were he to rise in his place to-night and ask the indulgence of this House while he retracted the foul slander that he has cast upon the British soldier in South Africa for his conduct towards women. I say he would command the respect of this House and of the people of this country also, were he to retract the foul slanders which he has cast upon the soldiers of His Majesty in calling them loyal murderers. I trust my good friend will accept these suggestions and act accordingly. I could quote copious extracts from Afrikanders and Boers to refute the slanders of the hon. gentleman; because all Boers are not disloyal. Many have been loyal to Britain, and have fought manfully for the British flag in South Africa, and have spoken manfully, and used their efforts in every way to put an end to this unhappy war. But it is not necessary to quote these extracts under the circumstances, inasmuch as the hon. gentleman made no attempt to defend his assertions. I have merely taken this opportunity to reply to the hon. member for Labelle on account of his slandering of British soldiers.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (Elgin). Inasmuch as I have a resolution on the paper which has a bearing upon the question now before the House, I shall content myself with saying only a few words. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) spoke this afternoon for something over two hours, and although he spoke loudly, it was difficult for me to learn all his sentiments, but I did learn sufficient to convince me that his sentiments are not the same as my own.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

I think that the time of this House has been taken up this afternoon to very little purpose, and I do not think that any good can come to this country from the discussion that has taken place. The hon. gentleman from Labelle told us how loyal he was, how much he loved Britain for her noble traits, for the character of her sons, for the noble work she has done in civilization, and in carrying the standard of freedom, of liberty and of justice over the world. He told us how much he loved her for all this, yet he has moved this resolution condemning Britain for making war on those republics, and condemning her for refusing them their independence. He has been ably answered by the Prime Minister, who has shown very clearly why the people of the Transvaal and of the Orange Free State are not entitled to their independence. Sir, as an Englishman and as a Canadian I would have been very sorry if England had not accepted the challenge that was thrown down to her by the Boers when they gave her only forty-eight hours to leave South Africa with the alternative of being driven into the sea. I say if Great Britain had not accepted that challenge, I should have been ashamed to call myself an Englishman.

Now, Sir, I think we all appreciate what Britain has done for the world, and like the premier we love that dear old flag that has braved the battle and the breeze for a thousand years. Sir, when any one tells me that the French Canadians are not loyal to Britain I deny it emphatically. There may be a few exceptions, as we have seen here to-night; but since 1763, when the treaty of Paris was signed, there was never known a French Canadian, with one or two exceptions, who was not loyal. Through good report and through evil report they have stood true and loyal to Britain. Sir, what I dislike above all is to hear hon. gentlemen get up in this House and use so much vituperation against Britain.

Now, as to the first clause of this resolution I think it has been answered already by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. But the second clause of that resolution has not been answered, and I intend to answer it. If the parents or the ancestors of the hon. member for Labelle had held the same ideas that he holds, that gentleman would not be here to-night to move his resolution, because it was only brave men who dared to go across the seas in a desire to improve their condition, and their descendants are here to-day. I tell him that unless his forefathers had more spirit, more pluck and more venturesomeness than he is willing to give Canadians credit for he would not have been here. Therefore, I think I have answered that objection. Now, why do we love the British Empire ? Because it has for a thousand years stood the test, and it will stand the test if we be true to ourselves. You know well the proud empires that have gone to destruction. The deadliest foe always come from within. I wish to put myself on record as protesting against such a resolution as this being introduced into this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the House ready for the question ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I shall not abuse my right to reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) has no right to reply.

Mr. BOURASSA. Is this not a motion ?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no right to reply on a motion in amendment to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BOURASSA. I will submit to your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, there are one or two words that I would like to address to the House in regard to this motion. I think there is a great deal of point in what my hon. friend (Mr. Robinson, Elgin), who has just spoken, has brought to the attention of the House. It is that this resolution was very unnecessarily introduced, and that we really have wasted a whole day in this House without any possible benefit, so far as I can see, that can in any way accrue from the introduction of the resolution. I am bound to assume that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) intended some good by this resolution ; I am bound to assume that, because I have the pleasure of that hon. gentleman's acquaintance, and I have seen nothing of him which would induce me to think that he brought this resolution before the House without some definite aim, but, I am equally bound to say that I cannot, for the life of me, conjecture what idea he had as to any good which could result from the introduction of this resolution. I cannot believe that the hon. gentleman supposed that this resolution would pass the House. A very large portion of the speech he delivered in the House to-day I have heard before, certainly on one occasion, and, I think, on two occasions, in the last parliament. The hon. gentleman obtained, on those occasions, an expression of the opinion of this House, which, I think, should have convinced him that no possible good could result from the introduction of this resolution, and I regret that the ability and talents that we must all concede to that hon. gentleman in a high degree have not been put in this House to a better use than they were put by that hon. gentleman. I say this to my hon. friend without in the slightest degree desiring to be offensive to him, and I assure him that I say these words to him in all possible sincerity and friendship. He dealt with all manner of subjects, from the customs and laws of our Teutonic ancestors to the causes of Mr. Chauvin's defeat in the province of Quebec, and he dealt with the causes of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire as well as with the position of both political parties in the late election in the province of Quebec. Well, I do not quite see, as the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was unable to see, the relevancy of all this to the particular motion which we are invited to pass in this House. And, I would go further——

Mr. BOURASSA. I think the leaders did not like it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I trust that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) did not take up the time of the House merely for the purpose of saying something that would be displeasing to both leaders. For my part, I am bound to say that a portion of the hon. gentleman's remarks was displeasing to me, not that portion of his remarks which reflected upon the political party which I have the honour to lead in this House, because, I intend to let those remarks of my hon. friend pass without a single word ; but, I do regret that the hon. gentleman introduced into his speech certain remarks which seemed to me to invite controversy along certain lines which, I, for one, do not desire to see introduced in this House.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. leader of the House has stated that the speech which was made by the hon. mover of this resolution was irrelevant. I entirely agree with that statement, and I go farther; I say that the resolution itself, so far as the preamble is concerned, is absolutely irrelevant to the conclusion. How does the hon. gentleman invite us to deal with this subject ? He invites us, in the first place, to bring to the attention of His Majesty that we are not committed to any future participation in the wars and policy of Great Britain. Well, that is a matter as to which I, at once, concede the hon. gentleman is entitled to have his opinion. I find no fault with him because he differs possibly from my opinion in regard to that. He proceeds to say :

> That the contribution of Canada in the South African war, both in armed help and public expenditure, entitles the Canadian people to express an opinion in the matter.

Well, it may entitle the Canadian people to express an opinion in the matter, but, certainly, it does not entitle the hon. member for Labelle to express an opinion in the matter, because he has from the first to the last held that we should have nothing at all to do with it, and should not be expected to contribute to it.

Mr. BOURASSA. As long as the contribution was not paid I objected to the payment of it, but the moment our contribution was made, as well as the contribution of all British citizens, I became entitled to express my opinion on the matter as well as any one else, whether I pay willingly or am forced to pay.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the hon. gentleman may be regarded as having waived his former position. He is willing to take advantage of the contribution we have made for the purpose of introducing this resolution into parliament. I am very glad to know that the hon. gentleman has been converted to that small extent, but the hon. gentleman was not very logical, as the right hon. leader of the House pointed out, because, while he is very desirous of giving advice to the Imperial government, he is not at all dsirous of giving any assistance in the wars of the empire. I think the hon. gentleman was hardly worthy of himself when he suggested, that, no matter what force assailed the empire, we, in Canada, were to stand to one side until the soil of Canada was assailed. Does the hon. gentleman expect that the empire will stand to one side when only the soil of Canada is assailed ? Suppose that such an eventuality should occur, as it may possibly occur, although we all hope and trust it never shall, that the soil of Canada should be assailed by an armed invader, whom we were unable to repel, would the hon. gentleman then think that the remainder of the empire should say : We have nothing at all to do with Canada, we are not assailed, we shall stand to one side ? Unless we are prepared to accept that position, how shall we say, while enjoying as we do all the protection of the British Empire, and the British navy, that we are never to join the forces of the empire unless the soil of Canada is assailed ? I known my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) has a generous nature, and I trust and believe that when he comes to consider this matter in its true aspect, he will not always adhere to some of the opinions which I have heard him express in this House in regard to it. Let us look at the rest of his resolution. He then proceeds as follows :

> This House therefore humbly reminds His Majesty King Edward VII. that the glorious reign of his august mother, Queen Victoria, whose memory shall ever be cherished by Canadians of all origins and creeds, was inaugurated in bloodshed and rebellion in this part of her dominions; that peace and prosperity were subsequently restored and for ever when Her Majesty's advisers understood, as Lord Grey told in his instructions to Lord Elgin, Governor of Canada, that it was 'neither possible nor desirable to carry on the government of any of the British provinces in North America in opposition to the opinions of its inhabitants;' that since that time, Her Majesty has found in no portion of her empire a more faithful, devoted and contented people than her French Canadian subjects.

Possibly I would be inclined to say that my hon. friend might have simply used, with regard to that, the word 'Canadian subjects.' I think that would have expressed his meaning just as well, and would have been equally true.

Mr. BOURASSA. I would not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman too frequently, but I may be allowed to state that my intention was to point out that in countries where there are different races, the government of these races could not be conducted unless by the application of those principles which I contend are not applied in South Africa. Therefore, I wish to point out that the non-British population of this country have come to love the British flag on account of the application of these principles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I must remind my hon. friend that it was not French Canadians alone who were in rebellion in 1837, because in the province of Ontario English Canadians, if I may so designate them, were in rebellion also. Therefore, the hon. gentleman's views as expressed in this resolution have no more application to the French Canadians than they have to the inhabitants of the province of Ontario, who were endeavouring in the same way to obtain redress of the grievances under which they believed they were then labouring. But I desire to ask the hon. gentleman: what has all this historical reference to wrongs which were suffered in Canada in 1837 to do with the invasion of British territory by the Boers—because my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) proceeds afterwards to say in his resolution : therefore, we are to resolve so and so. Two hostile states, the Orange Free State and the Transvaal invaded British territory in South Africa, and Britain used force to repel them. They not only invaded British territory, but it is beyond doubt that they invaded British territory for the purpose of making that territory their own. I will not ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) to take my statement with regard to that, but I will ask him to accept the statement of the Boers themselves and here is their own language ; the language of the Boer Peace Committee, addressed to the people of Cape Colony, and reported in the London Times of the 9th of January last. Referring to the misery and desolation that had been brought about by the war, they say this :

> All this misery is caused by a small and obstinate minority who will not bow to the inevitable and who make the majority suffer. Any encouragement to the men still on commando to continue the hopeless struggle can only injure us and cause us further misery.

I call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) to what follows :

> We have done our best and fought to get Africa under one flag, and we have lost.

There is the Boers' statement that this war was precipitated for the purpose of bringing all the British possessions in South Africa under the Boer flag. Does my hon. friend suggest, in view of that, that when that invasion has been repelled, when (as has been pointed out by the right hon. the Prime Minister), British territory has been declared to have been annexed to these hostile states; does my hon. friend suggest that we are to hold our hand and leave the British possessions in South Africa still menaced by the very same danger which has been present during the past ten years, and which has recently assailed them. This letter continues as follows :—

> Let there be no mistake about this. England has spent millions and sacrificed thousands of lives, and no reasonable being can believe for one moment that she will now give up the fruits of victory. It is, therefore, a duty for us, her beaten foe, to accept the terms offered by our conqueror. . . . England has definitely announced that she will not restore the independence of the two republics.
> Let us, in the interests of lasting peace in South Africa, accept this announcement as final, and let us work for conciliation on that basis.

There is a suggestion in these words which my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) might well have taken to heart before he ventured to make the speech which he has made in the House this afternoon, and before he ventured to introduce this resolution. For my part I do not think that the speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) really required any answer in this House. I would have been content to vote on the question, upon the basis that the hon. gentleman had confuted himself. I do not think that the question of the causes of the war comes properly under discussion at this present time, and while I do not say that it was not advisable for the right hon. the Prime Minister to go into that, yet I do say that it was not necessary. Under the circumstances which now exist in South Africa; in view of the fact that the Boers themselves admit that conquest of British territory was the object of the war they began; in view of the fact that the great majority of the Boers admit that they are beaten; in view of the fact they they admit (as they do admit in those letters) that the terms which are offered to them by England are fair terms—it was not necessary to introduce such a resolution in this House at all. I venture to think that we have work to do in this parliament at this session which is more worthy of our attention than matters of this kind. It has been our hope and our expectation that we should finish the business of this session within some measurable time, and for my part I say in all sincerity that I have endeavoured to expedite the business in this House, and I intend to do so in future. But if we are to take up a day or two days at a time for the purpose of discussing matters which are of purely Imperial concern, it seems to me that we are going to have only a very moderate amount of time to devote to subjects that really do concern this parliament. I am prepared to vote against this resolution, and I would have been prepared to vote against it even if I had not heard the very able and eloquent speech which the right hon. the leader of the government delivered to this House, as well as the speeches of the other hon. gentlemen who followed him.

SUPPLY.

Government of the North-west Territories—Insane patients $45,000

Mr. LaRIVIERE. There is a decrease of $5,000. How does that come about ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under an arrangement made by order in council some years ago, we pay a fixed amount per day for each patient to the Manitoba government, who provide for the patients in the provincial asylums. We simply estimate the amount which we think will be necessary, and according to the number treated, a bill is rendered to us, which we pay.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What was the amount expended last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $39,992.22.

Schools in unorganized districts, including clerical assistance $6,500

Mr. WILSON. I would like the hon. minister to tell us how many schools there are in the districts occupied by the Doukhobors. I have seen articles in some newspapers, in which it was stated that there were practically no schools located among the Doukhobors, and I would like to know what portion of this vote is for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. None of the schools referred to are in the organized parts of the territories. None of them therefore are amongst the people to whom the hon. member refers. This vote is for the purpose of assisting in carrying on schools in the far northern portions of the country which are unorganized. The schools are mostly conducted by the different churches among the Indians and half-breeds, under an arrangement that has been in operation for some years. I can give the hon. gentleman a list of schools if he desires it.

Mr. WILSON. No, but what I would like to know is what provision the government are making for the education of the Doukhobors.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are not making any special provision at the present time, because the work of education in the organized territories is carried on by the North-west government. They are required to look after the education of the people out of their subsidy.

Grant for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c. $332,979

Mr. WILSON. Under this item perhaps the hon. minister can give us some information with reference to the schools established by the territorial government. I am of opinion that something ought to be done in some way for the education of the Doukhobors. They ought not to be allowed to live in communities by themselves without some provision being made for their education.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The North-west government have had for years past a school Act under which they organize school districts just as is done in other portions of the western country; and they give a special grant to each school district in proportion to the amount of work done. I do not know that I have any special information with regard to the arrangements they are making for school districts amongst the foreign settlers; but I can give the hon. gentleman the statement made by the North-west government with regard to education in applying for this grant. During the year just closed they have expended in all $187,591. Petitions were received during the year for the erection of ninety-nine new school districts, of which forty-nine have been erected and fifty are in process of construction. The heavy immigration of the past two or three years causes a rapid increase in the expenditure on schools.

In discussing the estimates with the members of the North-west government, they urged very specially upon me during the last couple of years the necessity for an increase in their grant on account of the increased amount of educational work to be done in the new settlements. Last year an increase was given, but in this vote there is no increase. My impression, however, is that next session we will have to ask an increase.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Are the children taught the English language ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No other language is taught.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to have a statement from the hon. gentleman as to the erection of the portion of the Territories into a province. Is that likely to happen after the census is made ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A deputation consisting of two members of the North-west government, Mr. Haultain and Mr. Ross, were in Ottawa some time ago on other business, and took the opportunity of discussing this question. I may say that while during the last three or four years they have not addressed any official communication to the government, yet from time to time they have discussed with myself and my colleagues the question of giving the Territories provincial status, and lately they handed us a memorandum on that subject. We have not officially replied to that memorandum as yet, but expect to do so shortly. This is a matter, of course, requiring serious consideration, but I may say in a general way that I am of the opinion that it will have to be dealt with in the very near future. The people of the Territories are as capable of self government as any other people in Canada, and have shown their fitness by the admirable manner in which they have carried on their present administration. Of course the financial question is a serious one. The subsidy required for the Territories in the course of a few years would have to be greatly increased, and there is the question of the control of public lands and matters of that kind which would have to be settled.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the hon. member for Selkirk, who knows a good deal about school matters among the Doukhobors, would favour us with his views.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not think that any schools receiving assistance are yet established among the Doukhobors. In some of the outlying villages they attend some of the schools that were established before they arrived; and there are one or two private schools started by the Society of Friends of Ontario. Some provision should be made with the government of the Territories for the establishment of schools among those colonists, and I think there should be a condition imposed on this vote providing that the North-west government should assist those foreigners in the matter of education as they do English settlers. Any one who has been up there will understand the situation. In two or three months there will come into a district sufficient children to start a new school, and in some cases to start three or four schools, and yet in such cases these people have had to do without schools for two or three years. I have known of one family which came out from Ireland and seriously contemplated returning just because of this lack of schooling facilities. There is no doubt that with the increased immigration, the government of the Territories will not be able to provide adequate schooling facilities unless it gets a larger grant.

Salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the Yukon territory $270,000

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the reason of the increase of $25,000 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is entirely due to the fact that we have had to make a readjustment of the living allowance. We have made a readjustment under which the officials are allowed $50 for rent in addition to their salaries. The salaries amount to $104,140, and the living allowances to $118,090. There is a vote of $45,000 for contingencies to cover travelling expenses, care of officials in hospital, freight and express charges, printing, advertising, stationery, telegrams, the contingencies of the Crown timber and land office, and the gold commissioner's office, and to pay expenses incurred with the bank for handling gold.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. minister state the policy of the government as to the issue of liquor permits in the Yukon ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I laid on the Table of the House the other day an order in council providing regulations for the introduction of liquor into the Yukon. Under that order, provision is made for the issue of wholesale licenses in the territory, and permits may be granted to the holders of wholesale licenses but not to any others.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the practice to be discontinued that has heretofore existed of issuing permits from the department for parties to take liquor in ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That has been abolished by the order in council to which I have just referred.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it to be the rule in future that, on application being made, wholesale licenses will be issued to the parties for the sale of liquor ? And if these are wholesale licenses, what conditions are made with regard to the retail sale of liquor ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No permission is given to the retailers to import. They buy from the wholesalers. The holder of a wholesale license may, on application, get a permit.

Mr. BENNETT. Do we understand that there will be indiscriminate sale by retail, and that all that will be necessary will be for a party to go to a wholesaler and purchase from him and sell ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The local council have a liquor license ordinance, under which they issue retail licenses, just as is done in any of the provinces, and parties holding these licenses will have the right to sell.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it necessary to the issue of a retail license that there should be a petition from the inhabitants of the locality, as in the case of the province of Ontario, Nova Scotia and perhaps, some others ? Or is it issued merely on application from the party who desires to sell ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Speaking from recollection, I do not know that there is any provision in the liquor licenses ordinance for a petition from the ratepayers. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will see that the conditions are not the same as in an older place, and that a petition there would not be the same safeguard that it would be here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Quite so, but I wanted to ascertain what safeguards there are with regard to the character of the person to whom a license is given, the manner in which he is likely to conduct his establishment and his observance of the laws generally. Does the council pass upon these matters without evidence of some sort, or do they make an inquiry, or do they depend upon their own knowledge ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Provision is made for inspection by an officer appointed for that purpose, and on that a license is granted. That is my recollection of the liquor license ordinance, though I have not read it for something like a year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any restriction as to the number of licenses granted in a particular district ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not recollect at the moment, but the ordinance was laid upon the Table of the House last session in pursuance of the statute in that regard.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was it printed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think so, but, if not, I will furnish my hon. friend with a copy to-morrow.

Dominion Lands—Chargeable to Capital—Surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, and including $13,000 for irrigation surveys, &c. Salaries of temporary officers and clerks may be paid out of this sum at rates exceeding $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $240,000

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I made an inquiry the other day from the minister with regard to a survey that is required in the south eastern portion of Manitoba. We have a railway there which has been partly built and which is attracting the attention of the public, running from Winnipeg in a south-easterly direction. There is a large tract of land there that is still unsurveyed, while there are a large number of settlers who are seeking to settle upon these lands, but who cannot locate them for want of a survey. In fact, I believe the whole of that district east of the Red river, and between the river and the Lake of the Woods should be surveyed. It will all now be available for settlement, and it is only natural that when the settlers come into these districts they should be able to locate their lands. I hope that orders will be given to have all that part of the province surveyed before another season.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the list of surveys provided for under this vote I have provision made for one part of that country. We have also a miscellaneous vote for unforeseen requirements to the extent of $18,000. I am quite satisfied that we shall be able, with the money which we have asked parliament to vote, to provide for the surveys to which my hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) refers. Our object in dealing with the surveys as we do is to keep ahead of settlement. We cannot at all undertake the policy of a systematic survey of the whole country. We get the best information we can and send surveyors to those parts of the country into which settlers are going and in which, therefore, surveys are required. Our effort is to keep ahead of settlement.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am sorry to say the hon. gentleman has not kept ahead of settlement in this case.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In some cases, we have not been able to do so ; but if my hon. friend will call my attention by letter to any particular part of the country where surveys are required for settlement, I think we can provide for the work that is necessary.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It is along the Canadian Northern Railway—the line that used to be the South Eastern.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Has the whole amount of the appropriation of last year been expended ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy informs me that there was a small amount left over from last year's vote.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. In connection with this survey, I would like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that in some cases, cases that I have been apprised of, surveyors coming from the east hire people in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and they do not pay them. I know an instance where a man was employed by one of those surveyors who owed him $178, which is a big sum for a poor man. Upon inquiry in the office of the Surveyor General, I ascertained that this surveyor was paid in full, and, therefore, the amount cannot be collected either from the government or through the government. I think the surveyor who is responsible for such an act should not be given a contract in the future unless he pays his accounts. If the government contractors do not pay their men, I think the government might be liable. I hope the minister will see to it that in future no claim such as the one I have mentioned will have to be brought before the attention of the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend will give me the particulars of any case, I will be happy to do what he says.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I have communicated with the officials of the hon. gentleman's department, and the correspondence is there. I do not care to divulge the facts before the House, but an official of the department informs me that this man has been paid in full, though he has not paid the men he had employed.

Mr. McCREARY. I regret the minister has not seen fit to put in a larger amount for these surveys. There were 8,000 homesteads taken last year, and suppose there are 40 homesteads in a township, 200 townships would require to be surveyed. I understand a surveying party can do in a season about five townships, consequently, they are not going to be able to keep up with the requirements of the people coming into the country. In my opinion, within two years there will be no surveyed lands ready for occupation, because, as the member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) has stated, not only have new surveys got to be made, but a great many of the old surveys, both east and west of the Red river, and in the North-west Territories, have got to be made over, because the men cannot find the posts, the fires have destroyed them. Even in surveys made only three or four years ago, it is almost impossible to establish the posts. Now, in one township alone there are twenty-two Swedes from the United States who have settled, and I am aware that many of them have built their houses off their own quarter sections. This is a great hardship. I understand last year the department had twelve parties in the field doing survey work upon homestead lands, whereas, to keep pace with the actual homesteaders coming in, even if the number should not be increased, it will require forty parties of surveyors to do five townships each. This ought to be taken into consideration before we reach that particular point that we cannot go any further, because a great many of those townships surveyed, or portions of them, are unfit for settlement. I would like if the minister could see his way clear to increase that amount. I think I drew the attention of the government to it when I was an official.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We had something over twenty parties at work last year, and we are preparing this year to send out thirty-one. I am aware that in the future we shall have to make preparation for more surveys to keep pace with increased emigration.

Mr. McEWEN. The hon. gentleman says that these posts were burned out two or three years ago; why should we not put down iron posts? Iron posts would be very nearly as cheap, and would not require to be renewed in consequence of fire.

Mr. WILSON. Last year there were 6,680 homestead entries. The report says there were 7,426, but you must deduct from that number 746 that were made in the previous year.

Mr. McCREARY. I have not got the report with me, but I think my figures are correct. I have got the figures for the months of January and February of this year, and there is an increase of 40 per cent over last year.

Salaries of inspectors, Dominion lands and Crown timber agents, sub-agents and clerks in the outside service $74,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman explain the reason of this increase of $8,500?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have been in the habit, for some time past, when there was a pressure of business, of employing temporary assistance. At present we are adding clerks in the following offices, but they are not permanent: One at Winnipeg, $480; one at Calgary, $480; one at Edmonton, $360; one at Lethbridge, $600, and a forest ranger for southern Manitoba, $900. We have had a system drawn up during the last four years, in consequence of the increase of settlement, under which we have had sub-agents. In order to make entries at the land agencies, settlers would have to travel a considerable distance, and we have inaugurated the practice of appointing sub-agents at points where a good deal of settlement is going on.

We have had the system of requiring the settlers to pay fees to these subland agents. We are abolishing that system and we propose to give the subland agents regular salaries, $300 being the largest salary paid. There are eleven of them altogether, and the total salaries will be $3,000. We have additional clerks to appoint at some of the land offices. There is an additional clerk at Yorkton at a salary of $900, an additional clerk at Red Deer at a salary of $720, an additional clerk at Regina at a salary of $900, and an additional clerk at Brandon at a salary of $1,200, making altogether $3,720. But $2,500 was provided for these items last year, thus making the net increase only $1,220. Then, increases have been given to the following clerks: Mr. A. J. Fraser, land agent at Lethbridge now, increase $105. He has been in the service for a great many years. Mr. B. H. Humphrys, in the commissioners office at Ottawa and, who has also been in the service for a great many years, will receive an increase of $128.75. Mr. Richard Breen, another official gets $120 increase. Mr. R. C. Kisbey gets $180 increase, Mr. E. W. Burley $200, Mr. E. Trudel $200, Mr. W. McMillan $200, and Mr. G. A. Hogarth $200, the increases in all amount to $1,333.75. The total of these items, $2,820, $3,000, $1,220 and $1,333.75, is $8,373.75. The salaries in the Dominion lands branch, although the work is fully twice as much as it was in 1895-6, are not yet as large as they were then. The salaries then amounted to $82,500, whereas last year they amounted to $71,550.55. With these increases they will still not be as much as in 1895-6.

Mr. WILSON. I see there are eleven homestead inspectors. Would the hon. minister explain what the duties and salaries of these officials are ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The homestead inspectors are a class of officials who are provided for and have always been since the homestead system was introduced under the Dominion Lands Act. Their business is to examine the homesteads of such settlers in respect to the applications which they may make for their patents. When a settler finds that he is in a position to apply for his patent, having fulfilled the settlement duties, he notifies the nearest land office that he is in a position to make his application, and the land agent notifies the homestead inspector. The homestead inspector makes an inspection of the homestead and he has a printed form in which certain information has to be given. He makes his report to the land agent, the land agent makes a report and these reports are forwarded to the commissioner's office where the case is adjudicated upon. If the duties have been performed, the settler gets his patent. These are the principal duties of the homestead inspectors. In addition to that, wherever necessary, they act as forest rangers, taking precautions in regard to fires where the land is timbered. They also make valuations of land where they are required to do so by the department, and they do any additional work which the department may require them to perform. They get $1,200 a year each and actual expenses.

Mr. WILSON. Has there been any increase in the number lately ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Lately a man who was appointed a forester has also been appointed an inspector. His name is McMillan, and he lives at Treherne.

Mr. WILSON. The reason I asked this question was that from general report a very great number of people are going into that country, and I did not see how the same number of inspectors could be doing so much more work than they have been doing heretofore. I thought perhaps there had been an increase in their number. I do not know how many the hon. gentleman had before. They certainly appear to be well paid at $1,200 and expenses.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the hon. gentleman will find in that evidence that these homestead inspectors are doing more work than they did formerly.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior if Mr. J. W. Thompson, homestead inspector of Marquette, the gentleman that the hon. minister induced to resign his position in order to contest Marquette with myself, was reappointed to his office as soon as the election was over, and if the hon. gentleman does not candidly think that he comes within the term of an active political partisan ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Thompson was reappointed. I have not under my hand the exact date when he was reappointed, but it was a couple of months after the election. I have no information before me that Mr. Thompson has acted the part of an offensive partisan since he was appointed, but I presume that he acted somewhat as a partisan when he contested Marquette with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche). I hope my hon. friend will not take it as an offence if I express some regret that Mr. Thompson was not more successful.

Mr. CLANCY. This is rather an extraordinary attitude that nothing has come to the notice of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to indicate partisanship. One of his own servants, a gentleman in the employ of his own department, resigns his seat, contests a constituency, is defeated, and then he is rewarded. A string is put on Mr. Thompson when he goes out in order that he will be able to go back in the event of his defeat. Mr. Thompson had nothing to lose by contesting this constituency, and I want to say to the hon. gentleman that he has set an example that does not contribute much to the public morals of this country. The hon. gentleman has his officials, occupying responsible positions throughout the country and living on the public funds, in training to be candidates for the hon. gentleman when the election comes on. I think there are several hon. gentlemen holding seats in this House who came in under such circumstances, who resigned their positions and who equally had a little rope upon them. I have no hesitation in saying that no more vicious principle could be thought of or adopted than the one which is now being carried on in the hon. gentleman's department. Just let the hon. gentleman picture the case of his own officials who are in daily contact with the people who go into that country and try to imagine the undue influence that a man is able to exercise under such circumstances. To say the least it is scandalous in its character. I say it is scandalous inasmuch as it is manifestly unfair and unjust and must detract from anything that one would consider in the light of justice, fairness, or right.

Let the minister look at the other side of the question, and see how it would operate. Why, the heads of officials who did absolutely nothing are falling into the basket every day. All that is necessary is to hatch up a charge against some innocent official, and his head comes off, and there is not even the pretense of a trial. Yet, the minister (Hon. Mr. Sifton) brings out his own officials in a campaign and he brings them back and takes care of them when they are defeated. There is no defence of any kind for such a proceeding, and before these estimates go through the minister must explain whether it is the policy of the government, and his own policy in particular, to continue that state of affairs. Is he going to lay down the policy that an official may look forward to his promotion because he is the candidate of the minister ? I would like to know whether, under such circumstances, an official will serve his country or will serve his political master. He must serve the latter, and do as he is told, because he is not depending upon the merits of his service, but upon the smiles of his superior. I am bound to say that the Minister of the Interior has not been hard-hearted, and that he has rewarded his friends. Does he enunciate to this House that that is to be his policy in the future.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is asking me to enunciate a policy upon a very large question. This particular gentleman was offered the nomination by a party convention and he accepted it and resigned his office. I was at the convention, but I had not the least idea that the gentleman had any intention of being a candidate. If he had I knew nothing about it. When I went to the convention I had not the least idea who was going to be nominated. I have had very little acquaintance with this gentleman, and I am not sure that I ever saw him before the occasion of his nomination. If I did I certainly had no particular acquaintance with him. So far as my knowledge goes, and so far as the knowledge of the department goes, he is a competent officer, and I do not see that the fact that he was a candidate in the election is any reason why he should not be reappointed. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) that if the department systematically went into the business of appointing candidates it would be objectionable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that the minister (Hon. Mr. Sifton) has dealt with this question in the way it should be dealt with. We had an announcement of policy from the right hon. the Prime Minister as far back as 1897, in which he stated that if any public servant of this coutnry desired to be a politician he would give him every opportunity of doing so by dismissing him. The doctrine which the right hon. gentleman enunciated then is particularly applicable to this case. The Minister of the Interior says there is no reason for not appointing this official because he was a candidate at an election. That is not the point raised by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). What he denounces is the vicious principle of giving an opportunity to a public servant to resign his position for the purpose of being a candidate for one political party or the other, with the understanding that he will be appointed again if he is unsuccessful.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was no understanding of that kind directly or indirectly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That may be, but I have a pretty strong opinion that this gentleman felt sure in his own mind that if he were unsuccessful he would be appointed again. At all events, it is not a good precedent to lay down, and the thing has a very suspicious look in the face of it. We have had many criticisms of offensive partisanship, made by hon. gentlemen opposite. Postmasters getting a salary of $50 or $60 a year have been dismissed by this government because they attended political meetings or something of that kind. For my part I never favoured any such action by one government or the other, because I think a man who gets $50 a year for discharging duties of that kind might very well take such part in public affairs as he thought fit. But the policy of this government has been to turn these men out of office for what they call political partisanship. The pretention of gentlemen opposite is that it is unpleasant to the feelings of Liberals that the man who gives them their mail in the post office should be a man who takes an active interest in public affairs. How much more is that applicable to cases of this kind ? Take a public servant performing the duties referred to in this case, and he may be using his office for three or four years, looking forward to a candidature, while the public, whether of one party or the other, are entitled to the services of that man without any bias. Are they likely to get his services without bias, if that official is looking forward to be a candidate with the expressed or applied understanding, or if you like confidence, that if he be unsuccessful he shall stand a good chance of retaining his office ? The Minister of the Interior might very well act upon the principle which his leader has laid down : that if any public servant in this country desires to be a politician he shall be placed in a position to devote the whole of his time to thaf particular business. That principle would not justify the minister in reappointing an unsuccessful candidate to this position.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The peculiar feature about this is that Mr. Cox, the predecessor of Mr. Thompson as homestead inspector, was dismissed because it was said he was an offensive political partisan, and the only thing Mr. Cox did—and he was a very successful and experienced officer—was to write a letter to one of my committee stating that he was going into the Dauphin district, and that if he while there could do anything on the quiet to assist my candidature, so long as it did not leave him open to the imputation of being a partisan, he would do so. He wrote in words to that effect. This letter was stolen out of the office of one of my committee men, and it was sent to the Minister of the Interior, and, as the minister admitted on the floor of this House, Mr Cox was dismissed on the strength of that. There was no other charge against Mr. Cox. The minister (Hon. Mr. Sifton) admitted he was a first rate officer. No investigation was held. Mr. Cox offered to do something, but the letter was not even replied to. Mr. Cox did not lift his hand in my interest, but in this letter he showed his favour towards me, and therefore, he was considered by the government an active and offensive partisan, and his position was given to Mr. Thompson. Every person who lives in the town with Mr. Thompson, Liberals as well as Conservatives, know that there never is an election held, whether provincial or Dominion, without Mr. Thompson being one of the most active workers in the Liberal ranks. I told the acting minister last session that I could give him the name of a homestead inspector, if he wished, who had been most active in the last provincial election. Mr. Thompson has always been told off to look after the Scandinavian vote located some twenty miles north of the town in which he resides. He was sent up to look after that, and did look after it, while homestead inspector, one year ago last fall, at the time of the local election, and he openly stated that if there was a change in the Dominion government, he would not wait to be dismissed, but would resign ; he did not make any bones about it. Still, he can do all this and not be considered an offensive partisan. I presume the Minister of the Interior attaches the same meaning to that term that ex-Attorney General Cameron did in the local legislature, when accused of keeping in the government employ Mr. McDonnell, a member of this House, and an offensive partisan. Mr. Cameron's reply was : 'He was not offensive to us.' So, I presume the Minister of the Interior discriminates according to the particular party this man is offensive to. As I stated before, I would not bring this case up if it were the only one. Mr. Jérome, one of the hon. gentleman's forest rangers, was allowed to resign his position and run as a candidate for the local legislature. He was successful, and yet got his position back, and he is a member of the local legislature to-day. Is he not an offensive political partisan ? This homestead inspector will be using his position as a lever for getting votes for himself at the next election. I do not object to his being a candidate, because there is no other gentleman I would prefer to have as an opponent.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the Minister of the Interior does not propose to sit silent in the face of a charge so grave—that he goes to a public nomination meeting by accident, that he did not know this gentleman, but that by his presence he gave his sanction to one of his own officials being a candidate. Yet, the hon. gentleman sees no wrong in it, and does not think it worth while to make a statement to this committee about it. It seems to me one of the most appalling things I ever heard of. The hon. gentleman cannot laugh this matter away. If he found his political opponents taking a course of that kind, there is no gentleman who would put more energy and heat into his protest than the hon. gentleman, and very properly too. My hon. friend cites a case of a gentleman being dismissed because he wrote a letter expressing his strong sympathy, and declaring what he would do under certain circumstances. The circumstances never arose, no proof was given that he ever acted, and yet he was dismissed. What followed ? The very gentleman who dismissed him puts up one of his own officials, who was at that time, as the leader of the opposition stated, paving the way for his own election, to be a candidate. No official need hereafter ask permission to run, because, from what has been stated to-night, we can see that it is the policy of the hon. gentleman to allow his officials to do that. I would again ask the hon. gentleman to say whether he disapproves of the candidature of Mr. Thompson, and whether he proposes in future to permit actions of that kind ? I think that is a fair question to ask, and the committee has a right to have a straightforward, unequivocal answer from the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not see that the hon. gentleman or any one else could prevent a government official resigning and running as a candidate for parliament. That is what the hon. gentleman is finding fault with.

Mr. CLANCY. No, I am finding fault with the hon. gentleman appointing him afterwards.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not see why he should not be appointed afterwards. If the leader of the opposition had said that I had gone to this man beforehand and asked him to be a candidate, and promised him, if defeated, he would be reappointed, there is no question that that would have been a very reprehensible transaction. I said to the hon. leader of the opposition that there was no understanding between Mr. Thompson and myself, directly or indirectly, in any shape or form ; and that Mr. Thompson had not the least reason to believe, from anything said by me or by my authority, or from anything said by any person on my behalf or on behalf of the government, that he would be reappointed. When he made his application to be reappointed, he stood in the same position as any other applicant. He might or might not have been appointed. If he had not been appointed, there would have been no grievance against me.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Did the hon. gentleman appoint any one in his place while he was away during those two months ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, one of the officers of the staff went up and discharged his duties. Of course, I see the point my hon. friend desires to make, which is, that the fact that there was no permanent appointment made was due to my wish to keep the office open for Mr. Thompson. There was no idea of that kind in my mind, and no understanding of any kind that if he was defeated he would be reappointed. Mr. Thompson was offered the nomination and accepted it. When he made application for the position again, I appointed him. I had no obligation to do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long after the election was it before Mr. Thompson was reappointed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. About two months, I think.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long before the election did he resign ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He resigned on the same day he was nominated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long was that before the election took place ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The convention was on September 3.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). When Mr. Thompson was nominated, was the position promised to any other person ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. CLANCY. When the position was vacant, were there any other applicants for it besides Mr. Thompson ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say positively, but I think I shall be safe in saying that there were a large number.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman did not touch on the other portion of the partisanship which I refer to, that is, the part he took in the provincial election.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I never heard of it. I was in that part of the country and took an active part in the provincial election, but never heard of Mr. Thompson doing so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there not any one of those numerous applicants capable of filling the position ? There were a great many applicants after Mr. Thompson resigned and his resignation covered a period of two months before the election. Was none of these applicants capable of taking his place ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Speaking in a general way, there was a number of applications. I do not remember the names of any of the applicants, but I recollect receiving a great many letters from different people. At the time in British Columbia a couple of elections took place after the general election, and I went out to take part in those elections. As soon as I got back and learnt the details, the appointment was made. There were no delays but those which occurred in the natural order of things.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It was remarkably fortunate for Mr. Thompson that the hon. gentleman was so busy during these two months that he was not able to make the appointment.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am afraid my hon. friend is skeptical.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not at all. I am accepting his word and am simply mentioning how extremely fortunate it was for Mr. Thompson that the hon. gentleman happened to be so much engaged during these two months. I have no doubt that Mr. Thompson will always select an occasion of that kind when he again decides to resign, an occasion when the hon. gentleman will be too much engaged to deal with the numerous applicants for the position, and Mr. Thompson will thus be amply safeguarded. And when the matter does come up before the hon. gentleman afterwards, Mr. Thompson will have had his election matters disposed of and his name will be at the head of the list. There will, of course, be no understanding expressed or implied, but without any such understanding Mr. Thompson will always be moderately safe. On that account, I can rejoice on Mr. Thompson's behalf that things will be made smooth for him without any understanding expressed or implied.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). Such actions as those will make every official in the North-west an active politician, because if he is not elected he will be sure to getting back his office. It is a very wrong thing to do, and I am very sorry that this government should have done such a thing.

Mr. CALVIN. Did this man receive any remuneration for any portion of his time after his resignation ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). There is another matter I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. gentleman. The land agent at Minnedosa is an over-worked official. He had an assistant, Mr. Jarvis, who was a very faithful official and occupied the position about nine years. In the North-west rebellion he met with an accident which entitled him to an annuity from the government. There was no charge of any kind ever made against him, but he was dismissed without cause, and his dismissal was justified by the hon. gentleman on the ground of economy. Yet, strange to say, the land office at Dauphin, the work of which was largely done through the Minnedosa office by Mr. Jarvis, required a new man, and instead of removing Mr. Jarvis to the Dauphin office the hon. minister appointed a green hand, from the same town, The treatment of Mr. Jarvis was certainly not fair. If he was not required in Minnedosa he should have been utilized at Dauphin.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When was he removed ?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). In 1897, just when a new man was required in Dauphin.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The appointment at Dauphin was some time after that.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Hogarth was sent to Dauphin just about the time Mr. Jarvis was dismissed. Mr. Jarvis certainly should have been taken on at Dauphin instead of a new man who knew nothing about the business. Mr. Fletcher, the present land agent, has to get help from Winnipeg at the end of each month. Mr. Stevenson has admitted that Mr. Fletcher has too much to do and on more than one occasion said he would report it to the department. Mr. Thompson, the homestead inspector, has frequently to be taken from his regular duties and placed in this office to assist Mr. Fletcher, and Mr. Fletcher should be given permanent help.

Mr. HACKETT. It may appear strange that one coming so far from the east should inquire into what is going on in the North-west, but a friend of mine from Prince Edward Island went to the North-west some seventeen years ago and was appointed inspector of homesteads. He worked under the government for a number of years until the present administration came into power. He was a Frenchman, John J. Arsenault, a most capable man, and was dismissed without cause and without any investigation. I would ask the hon. minister to deal with him fairly and not have his head go into the basket without an opportunity of being heard.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The case of Mr. Arsenault is one I happened to be personally acquainted with. I do not think the hon. gentleman or anybody else could complain of his dismissal. He had practically been the election agent of the Conservative party in the part of the country where he lived for some years before his dismissal, and I do not think that his own political friends expected the government to retain his services.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the date of the resignation by the hon. member for Selkirk of the position he held prior to his election and the date of the appointment of a successor ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember the exact date. It was about the time he was nominated, and his successor was appointed a month ago.

Mr. BENNETT. Then his resignation was in at the time of the official nomination or a week prior to the 7th of November ?

Mr. McCREARY. I was nominated on the 25th December. I had not seen the Minister of the Interior for six months, nor had I any letter from him when I ran for Selkirk. I was appointed in 1897, and was mayor of Winnipeg, and had been alderman a number of years, and was requested to be mayor the following year. I had a salary of $1,200 which I resigned. During the entire time I occupied the position of commissioner of immigration—you will pardon my referring to it to-night, but I do so because it has been referred to by one or two members—during the three years that I occupied that position, not a Conservative in Manitoba or the Territories would venture to say that I took any part in politics. At a meeting of the whole board of trade, with over 400 citizens of Winnipeg present, Mr. A. M. Nanton and Mr. E. L. Drewry respectively, formerly president and vice-president of the Conservative Association—the deputy minister was present and will recollect it, and the papers of that time will bear out what I say—stated that I have never taken any part in politics while I held that office. And let it be noted that while I was in office I did not work under the civil service rule. It was not a case of going to the office at ten o'clock and quitting at half-past four. I was at my office generally at 8.30 in the morning, and I was there until six o'clock in the afternoon ; four out of the seven days of the week I was there in the evenings until ten o'clock; and we never had Saturday afternoons. The office of the commissioner is open every Saturday afternoon, and five or six of the staff are there for half the day on Sunday. It was not my intention when I accepted that office to remain for ever a civil servant. I had ambitions ; and when I was offered a county I accepted it. I did not know, twenty-four hours before, that I should be nominated. After I was nominated, my work being behind, I went to the office of the commissioner and remained there for the following week or ten days, I think that my resignation took place on the 1st of October. I asked the deputy minister to credit me with three weeks holidays for each of the four years I had been a civil servant, and allow me salary for that time. He refused. I said to him: Why not allow me, then, for the extra hours that I have put in? But he would not do it. I do not think it any disgrace to be a civil servant, if one is a conscientious one, as are many in Winnipeg and the Territories. In that immigration hall, in the office to which I was attached, 95 per cent of the employees are as conscientious people as you could put into office.

Hon. Mr. PRIOR. Who said they were not ?

Mr. McCREARY. Well, reflections have been cast. If I, as a civil servant, earn fairly every dollar paid me by the government, and I say that I will retire and run for the Commons or for the local legislature, surely that is all right. And suppose I run and lose, and there is no blot on my record in any way, is it wrong for the minister to appoint me to another office ? If there is anything wrong in that, I would like to know it. For my part, as I see it at present, I do not know what there can be wrong in it, supposing, of course, that while a civil servant, I did not use my position in any way to advance my own political interest.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not reflecting on the hon. gentleman, and simply asked the question to know the circumstances of his resignation. First impressions are always lasting, and I think the impression the hon. gentleman has shown as to the chances or prospects of returning to a position in the event of defeat must certainly have been in his mind at the time for his resignation, and, no doubt, there were facts to bear out that impression.

Mr. McCREARY. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) that if I accepted any position or had it been offered to me I did not think that it would be the same position. If the hon. gentleman were as tired of a position as I was of that, he would not accept reappointment. When you handle from 25,000 to 40,000 people a year 8,000 or 10,000 of whom cannot speak English, you get pretty tired of it.

Mr. CLANCY. We have had splendid exhibitions of innocence. The minister is innocent, the officials are innocent. An hon. gentleman has declared that he resigned his position without the knowledge of his superior, but thought that if he failed in gratifying his ambition to become a member of the House he might be given a position again. I do not blame the officials who acted on that view, because they understood, without being told, just what the minister would do. I would like to know whether, supposing a Conservative official, one appointed under the late government, had thought fit to accept a nomination, and had been defeated, no matter how good an official he had been, he would have been appointed. The Minister of the Interior, I venture to say would not have consented to his resigning his position to allow him to be alternately an official in the department and a candidate in an electoral contest. I do not wish to misrepresent the Minister of the Interior. It is well that we should have his view embalmed in 'Hansard,' to use an expression of a former member of this House. He declared in most unmistakable terms that had he been a consenting party to Mr. Thompson's resignation and to his candidacy for election, and had he then appointed him after his defeat, he would have been guilty of a most reprehensible act. What, then, would be the difference in case he had found one of his officials nominated as a party candidate and had neither protested nor disapproved, or had written a letter declaring his full approval of that gentleman becoming a candidate, and then, after his defeat appointing him to another ? Was not this merely carrying on a sort of pantomime ? He did not make the arrangements in words, but acted it. Will any one say that Mr. Thompson did not understand that if he were defeated he would be reappointed ? And in this have we not a state of things that is far from creditable. I have not reflected upon those gentlemen who were formerly officials. If hon. gentlemen opposite wish to find shelter behind such a plea, they must set up that shelter themselves, for no one has alleged anything against these former officials. At the same time, I have not deprived myself, should the occasion arise, to consider the question, and to express my views as to whether these gentlemen were good officials or not.

But at this stage no such allegation has been made. The allegation has been made of unseemly conduct on the part of the government. I do not blame the hon. gentlemen who took advantage of it. They had the assent of their minister, and the minister to-day has made a statement that I think is a very alarming one. The hon. gentleman has been accused of permitting his officials to become candidates. Before they became candidates they must certainly have had the consent of the minister. I repeat that the minister might just as well have written a letter calling him into his office and saying to him: You may become a candidate, and if you are defeated, just come back to me and you will have your office again. I am glad the hon. gentleman has put himself on record, and the country will judge accordingly :

Inspectors' expenses, travelling expenses of commissioner, superintendent of mines and homestead inspectors, contingencies of Dominion lands and Crown timber agents, and at head office, removal expenses, stationery and printing, &c. $36,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman kindly explain the reason of this increase of $5,000 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That consists of the following items : First, there are nine homestead inspectors and five forest rangers continually employed, and to provide for their travel and living expenses it is estimated that the sum of $8,000 will be required. It is proposed to make a more frequent inspection of the Dominion lands and Crown timber offices, which will cost probably $1,000. Provision has been made for temporary help at agencies, should there be a rush of work, $2,500; expenses of inspector of agencies, $1,000; expenses of superintendent of mines, $1,000; contingencies of Dominion lands and Crown timber agencies, $14,000; printing and stationery, $6,000; express and freight charges, $700; legal expenses, $600; temporary help, $1,200; miscellaneous and unforeseen, $1,000.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Who is the commissioner of Dominion lands ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. J. G. Turriff.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Is he in the city now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, he is out west with one of the immigration agents of the department. He went about a week ago in company with an English journalist who is writing a series of letters in the English papers. Our immigration agent came across with him, and I sent Mr. Turriff along with him for the purpose of assisting him.

Mr. CLANCY. How many Dominion land agents are there and how many homestead inspectors ? How many perform the double duty of homestead inspector and Dominion lands agent ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am informed there is one homestead inspector in British Columbia, in the Kamloop district, who takes entries from settlers, but he is the only one. None of the other homestead inspectors are permitted to take entries.

Members of the board of examiners of Dominion land surveyors, including contingent expenses of board $300

Mr. SCOTT. On the previous item respecting surveys, I wished to ask a question, which I will ask now. I understand that representations were made to the department asking that further subdivisions be made of the Cypress Hills country, in the Medicine Hat district. I wish to ask if that work will be provided for this year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Provision is made for that survey.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the minister say how many extra clerks there are, and how much is paid for the clerks, and how much for advertising ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The increase in the salaries, $7,000, is made up altogether by the appointment of temporary clerks at the head office. I need not read the names, but I have the list here. There are two subjects especially which have caused a very large amount of work in the department. One is the issuing of half-breed script in the North-west, which has entailed a large amount of clerical work; the other is the issuing of patents for the railway land grants. The amount of clerical work that has to be done in connection with both is very large. These clerks have been appointed only lately, and we are taking a supplementary estimate for the purpose of paying them for the balance of the present year. We will require to keep them on during the next year. They are all known as temporary writers. There are thirty-two clerks. The total salaries will amount to $14,607.50; advertising, $2,392.50.

Protection of timber lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and tree culture in the North-west Territories $15,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is an item as to which, I understand, there will be some discussion, not so much in regard to the item as in respect to the subject it refers to. Possibly this particular item might be allowed to stand for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I would be very glad to leave that over.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps we may go on with the next one.

To provide for extra service in connection with Dominion lands, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act $5,000

Mr. CLANCY. That covers, I think, somewhat the same service.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am asking for this vote in connection with the preparation of patents for railway land grants. The department will have to have some special assistance other than the young ladies who are hired as temporary writers. We will probably have to have one or two men of some experience in work of that kind.

Mr. CLANCY. This item involves a very considerable question, as a new service is being entered upon in regard to the work of reforesting the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no objection in allowing the previous item to stand.

Mr. CLANCY. I take it that this item has no relation to the one provided for reforesting ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, none whatever.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I understand that the item respecting reforesting remains, and that the other item is adopted.

Mr. CLANCY. The item of $15,000 remains.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only one we reserve is that for the protection of timber lands, &c.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister of the Interior has not stated what is the nature of the extra services that he requires.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This item has reference to the work of issuing patents for railway land grants. I have explained to my hon. friend that we will require some special assistance in connection with this other than that of those parties who are simply temporary writers. We will have to get, probably, the services of a solicitor, and possibly two, in order to check the work that is done by the others. We do not want to make permanent appointments, because this is not permanent work.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that that $17,000 is additional to this sum for extra services ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am asking $5,000 separately, because there is a clause which says 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.' The other appointments are made under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Do I understand that the hon. minister intends to employ clerks who are already employed by the government for their services ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will use the staff of the department to the extent we can, and then we will have to secure some additional assistance. There will be no extra pay to any officers of the department.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Then, why put in these words 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That will enable us to appoint a person at more than $400 a year. We cannot appoint a person and pay more than $400 a year, as we have no authority to do so under the law. The law requires that we shall start a temporary writer at $400. We do not want to make permanent appointments, because this is not permanent work. We simply want to appoint temporary help.

Some resolutions reported.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900.—(Hon. W. S. Fielding.)

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I would like to mention to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that the meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, which has been called for to-morrow, has been postponed. We are desirous, for the purpose of expediting the business of the House, that that committee should meet at once, and I understand from hon. gentlemen who are more familiar with the work of that committee than I am, that they desire that there should be at least two meetings each week. I am not, I think, a member of the committee myself, and, therefore, I am not familiar with its work, but that is what I understand from hon. gentlemen who are familiar with its work and who know what it will be called upon to do. I would like also to mention, on behalf of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), that the papers respecting the pay of 'C' Battery have not been brought down. He desires that they should be brought down at an early date, so that they may be used for purposes connected with the estimates. I understand from the hon. Minister of Finance that we may look for the budget on Thursday.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the budget speech will be delivered on Thursday. In regard to the Public Accounts Committee, I may say that as the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee was out of town, I told my secretary, that if he could find whoever was acting in his place. I would be glad if it should be found convenient to postpone the meeting to-morrow, as I was anxious to be present. I received notice that the postponement had taken place. I may say, in regard to future meetings, that I do not anticipate there will be any difficulty after this week.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 13, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 63) to amend the Franchise Act, 1898.—Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) asked for leave to introduce Bill (No. 64) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.

He said: This Bill provides for amendments to the section respecting the posting of proclamations in the Territories. It also provides that in the case of the deposit required with the returning officer, a certified cheque on a bank will be available as deposit. Then it provides for a change in the form of the ballot to obviate difficulties arising in certain sections of Ontario where some of the voters marked their ballots outside the space opposite the name. It also provides that in the case of manhood suffrage voters, those who move from one district to another will not lose their votes, and makes provision that in the event of manhood suffrage registration lists having been prepared under the Dominion Act within the year previous to a by-election, they may be available for that new election, and do away with the necessity of making a new list, as is the case now with the lists in force in the provinces.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman intend to make any provision for Mr. Thornton getting the seat to which he has been elected, and for the reference of cases arising out of little imperfections in carrying out the law, to a county judge, where speedy justice can be obtained, as in the case of a recount and in municipal election cases?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The paraticular election of West Durham is a matter which does not come within the purview of my powers, but within the powers of the House generally. The hon. gentleman's second point deserves consideration, and when the Bill comes up I will try to provide some short method of disposing of preliminary objections.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). All my hon. friend meant was whether the provision of the Bill with respect to a certified cheque would be made retroactive.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would have to ask my hon. friend's opinion as to the propriety of such retroactive legislation.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MEDICAL COUNCIL IN CANADA.

Mr. THOMAS G. RODDICK (Montreal, St. Antoine) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 65) to provide for the establishment of a Medical Council in Canada.

He said: I am very glad to have the opportunity of explaining this measure which, I think, is one of very considerable importance, and somewhat misunderstood in some quarters. Confederation had hardly been consummated when the medical profession of the four provinces, then constituting the Dominion, made up their mind that a mistake had been probably made in leaving the profession in the hands of the provincial governments. While common school education, grammar school education, and academy education, might well have been left in the hands of the provincial governments, it is questionable whether it was good policy or advisable to leave the professions, especially the profession of medicine, entirely under their control. Medicine, which is so cosmopolitan, it was thought, might well have been left to the central or Dominion government. In fact so thoroughly convinced on this point did the profession appear to be, that immediately after the British North America Act was passed, representatives of the profession from Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, met in the city of Quebec, as early in the history of confederation as 1867, the year of its birth. The president on that occasion elected was Dr. Tupper, now Sir Charles Tupper, and representatives of all nationalities and creeds were present. It was decided, after some discussion, to draft a Bill which should be presented to the Dominion government, to the effect that so far as the profession of medicine was concerned, the British North America Act should be amended so as to give the profession of medicine over to the central government. This Bill was worked up very thoroughly for two years, and in this city, in 1869, a meeting of the profession was held, then under the name of the Canadian Medical Association. This Bill was discussed at very considerable length during several days, but was not passed by the Canadian Medical Association and was practically killed. I believe that the want of success on that occasion was due to the fact that an attempt was being made to override the British North America Act by taking away from the provinces all power in connection with the medical profession and the granting of medical degrees. Another reason, I think, was that too large representation was asked by the universities. On that account the Bill was killed, and very little further was done in that direction. But, on many occasions, at the annual meetings of the Canadian Medical Association, this subject was brought up; and, at last, about seven or eight years ago, it was decided to attempt to bring about a scheme of interprovincial registration. That means that the provinces should have an understanding among themselves that a man having a license to practice in one province should be allowed, on crossing the imaginary boundary line, to practice in the next province. This scheme went on fairly well until the Ontario Medical Council enacted that, before anything of that kind could be done it was necessary that a central examining board should be established in each province. Up to that time some of the provinces had no such examining board. Quebec never had from the very first. This central examining board was necessary according to the Ontario men, in order that the licentiates should receive recognition by the province of Ontario. There was a very strong feeling on the part of the profession in the province of Quebec in favour of bringing this about if possible, and establishing a central examining board in Quebec. The profession in that province went so far as to frame a Bill, which was presented before the local government at Quebec. But during that session of the legislature of Quebec, and when the Bill was about to come up, the heads of the three universities in the province of Quebec—McGill, Laval and Bishop's—appeared and opposed this Bill. They said that they could not allow their charter rights to be disturbed. According to the present usage, and from the time of confederation, it has been customary for the diplomas of these three universities to be accepted by the licensing body of the province of Quebec as sufficient to allow the holder to practice medicine in that province. Having discovered that it was impossible to meet the conditions of the Ontario Medical Council, and considering also that this provincial reciprocity would simply be a kind of understanding among the provinces which might have been destroyed at any moment, and also that it would stand in the way of a measure as general as we should like, thus preventing reciprocity with Great Britain and probably with France, the interprovincial scheme was dropped. Then, at a meeting of the profession in the province of Quebec three years ago, it being found that the scheme proposed was impracticable, the association representing the profession in the whole Dominion passed the following resolution :

> Your committee desire to recommend that further steps be taken to ascertain the practicability of further legislation leading to the establishment of a federal qualification which will also place the profession in Canada on an equal footing with that of Great Britain, and that Dr. Roddick be authorized to take the necessary steps in the matter.

On the same occasion another resolution was passed, appointing a strong committee representative of the various provinces to assist and strengthen Dr. Roddick's hands before the government. With this committee, Sir, I began to look about for a scheme. I consulted the law officers of the Crown, the parliamentary law officers and other legal friends, with a view to getting as much information as possible. I found that there were only two ways in which this parliament could interfere in this matter to gain what we sought. One was to bring about an amendment to the British North America Act. That, you know, Sir, is a large and heavy contract, and probably would never come to anything. An amendment to the British North America Act means that you must have, first or all, the assent of the two Houses of parliament in this country, then of the House of Lords and the House of Commons in Great Britain —and then, after all, the chances are, that when the matter was brought before the Privy Council it would be annulled and destroyed. So, that idea had to be given up. Then, I found—or rather, these legal friends found for me—another way out of the difficulty. Under section 91 of the British North America Act, the Dominion parliament has power to make laws—— > —for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislature of the provinces.

Under this section, the Canada Medical Act and the Adulteration Act have been worked out since confederation. And I think you will agree with me, Sir, when I can prove, as can easily be done, that a medical man cannot cross the imaginary line between the provinces, cannot cross a river such as the Ottawa, without running the risk of being fined and, perhaps, imprisoned when he is atempting to save the lives of citizens of Canada, that the peace, order and good government of Canada are violated.

In order to bring about the change we desire, it will be necessary, of course, to get the co-operaiton of all the provinces. It would be a mistake, in fact, it would be suicidal, to attempt anything without that co-operation. The autonomy of the provinces must not be disturbed in any way, nor need it be disturbed if the method that I shall propose is pursued. It will be necessary, either before or after the passage of the Bill in this House, for the medical board in each province of Canada to have an amendment made in the Medical Act of the province to the effect that, after the establishment of a Dominion medical council and a Dominion examining board, any one having the qualification which that council and that examining board will give him may go to another province in Canada and ask for admission to practice medicine in that province. Each medical board will have to have a short enactment tacked on to the present Act in order that this may be carried out. Whether we have a permissive Bill here, a Bill which will anticipate or precede the local enactment, or whether it shall succeed it, I think is a matter of very little consequence. There is one advantage in having it precede the local enactment, and that is, that it hurries up the local boards and the local parliaments in making their enactment. But, of course, it is a disadvantage in that it appears to be forcing the hand of the provinces, which I should be very sorry indeed to do.

Probably it does not occur to you, Mr. Speaker, or to other members of this House that it would be quite competent for this parliament to establish a Dominion medical board. It would be quite competent for the Minister of Militia and Defence to insist that every militia officer under the control of the Dominion government shall be examined before a Dominion examining board: it would be quite competent for the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice to insist that every penitentiary surgeon shall pass an examination before a Dominion board; it would be quite competent for the Minister of the Interior to insist that his mounted police, those under his control, shall have a Dominion qualification; and in every new territory which is established by the Dominion of Canada under the control of this parliament, the same conditions might be exacted. Therefore, Sir, I think it is quite competent for this parliament to establish a Dominion examining board, and to pass a Dominion Act of this character. Of course, men who would have that qualification would, on the strength of that, have no right to practice in the various provinces, where provincial rights exist, and on that account it is too contracted in its character, and I should not advise that anything of the kind should be done.

Now, Sir, I think it can be proved that a Dominion medical council can be established. How is that council to be constituted? That is a very difficult question, and one which has given me more thought than any other. Shall this council be established on the principle of representation by population? Shall it be established on the principle of the province having the greater number of medical men being represented in proportion on that council? Worked out on a scheme of representation by population, it would mean a very large and unwieldy board. Ontario has 2,500 medical men; Prince Edward Island has only 90, so taking Prince Edward Island as a unit, Ontario would be entitled to 28 representatives on this board; Quebec with its 1,400 doctors would have 15; Nova Scotia with its 476 doctors would have 5; New Brunswick with its 243 doctors would have 2 and a fraction; Manitoba with its 344 doctors would have 3; British Columbia with its 214 doctors would have 2; the North-west Territories with their 95 doctors would have one and a fraction.

Now, Sir, would this be fair to the smaller provinces, considering the fact that we are not going to disturb the status quo, that the medical boards of the provinces shall exist as they have always done? There is no intention to disturb them in any way; they must exist under any circumstances for the purposes of discipline and taxation; because the federal medical council could have nothing to do with discipline, that must be left entirely to the provincial boards. Considering the fact that we are not disturbing the provincial boards, do you think it would be necessary for Ontario to have 27 representatives on this board, for Quebec to have 15, for Prince Edward Island to have one, and so on? I think not. I think a fairer way, under the circumstances, would be for each province to have the same number. That seems odd; but we know that when the American constitution was drafted, the little state of Rhode Island was given two representatives in the Senate of the United States, and the great state of New York only two, and that system still exists.

I think a scheme would answer every purpose under which there would be three representatives on this council from each province of the Dominion, including the North-west Territories, and making altogether 24. I would propose this method of electing them: The president of each medical council in each province would be ex-officio a member of this council, one would be elected from among the council, and one would be appointed by the Governor General in Council. That would give a representation of three from each province. Of course the question will be asked, why have a representative appointed by the Governor General in Council? I will give you my reasons for making this proposition. This board of 24 with three others to be added, as I will explain in a moment, should become and will become what the British Medical Council is to Great Britain, and what the Council of Hygiene is to France, namely an advisory board to the Dominion government, a board that can be called upon in case of dangerous pestilence or incursion of disease of any kind, to give the best possible advice under the circumstances to the health officers of the Crown, and to the health officers of the various provinces. Of course the best men should be selected, and I think we could trust any government to see to it that politics would not enter into the selection. I am satisfied that every government would feel bound, in recommending these men as their advisers, to select those who were eminent in their profession, men who were perhaps professors in universities, men who would possess special qualifications. Under this scheme of three from each province you have a board of 24. But I am satisfied that three men could do the work which is required as well as 30 men. They are only expected to see that the conditions are carried out which are mentioned in this Bill. They are to see that the standard of education is not lowered, that the examination is at least as high as it would be in any province of the Dominion of Canada. Three men, who have their local board to fall back upon for advice and counsel will do the work as well as thirty. I think that three will be quite sufficient.

Besides these we require to have three more. A question which met me in working out this scheme was that the homeopaths and those who practice homeopathy in this country have certain rights in all the provinces and that these rights must be respected. On that account I would suggest, and the suggestion did not come directly from me but from the homeopathic body, that three homeopaths be added to this council. In every province in Canada they have rights ; of course these rights must be respected, and I think it would be only fair to give them three representatives. I would have these three representatives elected by the homeopaths themselves by ballot from the whole Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Wherever there are homeopaths let them have a vote and be allowed to select their three representatives on this council. They should also, besides that, have the right to examine in certain subjects which especially have to do with the practice of medicine, and they should have the privilege of having examiners. That will make a board of 27.

Mr. HYMAN. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether the homeopaths are satisfied with the provisions spoken of ?

Mr. RODDICK. This is their own suggestion. A prominent homeopath, Dr. Campbell, of London, the city which my hon. friend (Mr. Hyman) represents, himself drew up the resolution, which I will not read because it is long. This body, composed of twenty-seven medical men, representing all the pathies having rights in the country and all the provinces in the Dominion, would meet under the ægis, to begin with, of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). He has usually charge of matters of that kind, and to begin with, at any rate, he would have to be constituted the convener of this body. This body would meet in Ottawa, for instance, and with the co-operation of the provinces, would make arrangements for carrying out the scheme of examination. They would not be a teaching body ; they would only examine. They would appoint examiners, the best men to be found, to examine students having passed a certain curriculum; that is to say, that a medical student who expects to get a Dominion qualification, which will give him the whole Dominion to roam in, in fact the empire to roam in, would be expected and obliged to spend five years in the study of medicine. At present many of the provinces, in fact nearly all, with the exception of Ontario, exact only four years. but we think that five years should be spent in the study of medicine, the last year in the study of practical medicine, and besides it is necessary to have a fifth year in order to be admitted to practice in Great Britain and to get registration in Great Britain. I reach now the point where reciprocity with Great Britain becomes possible. Hitherto Canadians have been prevented. without taking at least a year's study in Great Britain and sometimes more, from receiving a license to practice in Great Britain or in any of the colonies of Great Britain outside of Canada. That, Sir, places a young Canadian medical man at a very great disadvantage. He has hitherto been unable to cope with the Australian, as I shall presently explain to the House, and has been prevented from entering the service of the empire. According to the British Medical Act of 1886 :

On and after the prescribed day, where a person shows to the satisfaction of the registrar of the general council that he holds some recognized colonial medical diploma or diplomas (as hereinafter defined), granted to him in a British possession to which this Act applies, and that he is of good character, and that he is by law entitled to practise medicine, surgery and midwifery in such British possession, he shall, on application to the said registrar, and on payment of such fee, not exceeding £5, as the general council may from time to time determine, be entitled, without examination in the United Kingdom, to be registered as a colonial practitioner in the medical register.

There is a definition which follows of the expression 'British possession,' which I should like to bring to the attention of the House.

The expression ' British possession ' means any part of Her Majesty's dominions, exclusive of the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands; and where parts of such dominions are under both a central and a local legislature, all parts under one central legislature are for the purposes of this definition deemed to be one British possession.

The British Medical Council in 1886 met us more than half way in arranging for the admission into the empire of our Canadian doctors. Australians, from the fact that they have had autonomous provinces up to this time, have been admitted and registered in Great Britain without further examination. The consequence is that you will find an Australian student, a graduate of an Australian university, coming to London and settling down in Harley street, or Piccadilly, or any other street, simply on the presentation of his colonial degree, while we, from the fact of our provinces being under one confederation, have been debarred. The British Medical Council says : We will not recognize provinces ; we will recognize only a qualification from the central or Dominion government. Therefore, I contend, this is another very strong argument in favour of this Bill becoming law. This would mean that to our young Canadian doctors the army and navy of Great Britain would be open without further examination. To them would be opened the colonial medical appointments, some of which are well worth having, the West India medical appointments and the appointments in India and in every British possession over which the British flag flies. They are now debarred from these prizes, and I say it is hardly fair, considering that we have the students and graduates of another colony where the facilities for teaching are not any better, if as good as they are in Canada, enjoying these privileges. Of course, I cannot speak authoritatively, but in a conversation which I had three years ago with Dr. Charles Richer, who is well known as one of the ablest scientists in France, who is the professor of physiology in the University of Paris, and who is on the committee on constitution of the University of Paris, I had from him the assurance that if we had established in this Canada of ours, a Dominion board, qualifying for the practice of medicine, he had very little doubt indeed that he would be able to persuade his colleagues to accept those having that qualification. Therefore, not only would our English medical men have the British empire to roam in, but I feel satisfied from what I have learned that our French graduates would have France and her possessions for their field of labour. These are very strong reasons why this Bill should be well and favourably considered.

Of course, I am satisfied that the financial aspect of the question has to be taken into consideration. This medical council cannot be started, or at all events operated at the beginning, without some assistance, and when the matter is better understood I hope we will be able to persuade the right hon. the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance that it would be nothing outre to give a grant towards this object at any rate for the first three or five years. This grant need not be very large; $3,000 or $4,000 would probably suffice. It would be necessary to pay the expenses of the examiners who shall be called on to hold examinations in the great centres of the country, and especially where there are hospital facilities. This being a Dominion measure and the government having practically the power to appoint one of these examiners, we may I think hope for some assistance from the Dominion treasury.

I have, of course, only glanced superficially over the provisions of the Bill, but I might further state that there is a clause which has reference to the profession of to-day. There is what you might call a retroactive clause in the Bill, to the effect that when any medical man has practised medicine for a certain number of years—the number of years has not been settled upon yet as to whether it shall be five years or seven years or longer—but when a man shall have been a practitioner of medicine in any province in the Dominion for a certain number of years he shall be allowed to take advantage of this legislation, and by paying the registration fee he will be allowed to practice medicine in any province he may choose.

Now, to sum up the advantages of the Bill. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that we may expect from it a higher standard of medical education, and from the fact of having five years to study, we may hope to get a better class of medical men than under a four years course. One great point to be remembered in connection with this measure is, that it is going to break down the barriers which at present exist, between the various provinces. It may not be known to every member in this House, that at the present time it is illegal and practically impossible for a medical man to step across an imaginary boundary line from one province to another to practice his profession. I know a doctor living at River Beaudette, who has been fined three times already for crossing the imaginary line into the province of Ontario to attend to his patients. That man cannot go out at night without entering the province of Ontario; his patients are in the province of Ontario and within sight of his own house, and yet it is practically impossible for him to avoid the operation of this existing law. It is the same way between Hull and Ottawa here. If you, Mr. Speaker, lived in the city of Hull, and for some personal or business reasons you were obliged to come to the city of Ottawa and to bring your family with you, it would be impossible for you to have your own medical man to follow you, unless he had a license to practice in the province of Ontario. That is unquestionably a very great hardship. Some one may ask me: why does he not get a diploma in the province of Ontario. The answer is: that it may have been impossible for him to do so. If a student begins to study medicine in one province by complying with the provincial enactment in reference to matriculation, he may be debarred for ever from getting into another province, so absurd are the regulations to-day. These barriers exist in no other country under the sun, and it is the object of this Bill to break them down. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that between the unfriendly countries of France and Germany, (and you know they are not very fond of each other), they have a neutral zone of fifteen miles on the frontier especially arranged for medical men to pass the sentries in the discharge of their professional duties; while here in this enlightened Dominion, a medical man is unable to cross an imaginary provincial boundary to save life. When you think how cosmopolitan medicine is; that a broken leg is a broken leg in Canada as in Russia and Siberia, and that pneumonia is treated on exactly the same principles here as elsewhere; it does seem hard that some more satisfactory arrangement cannot be made for our profession. I can understand that in law where you have the Code Napoleon in the province of Quebec and the English civil law in the other provinces, it might be difficult though not impossible to have interprovincial reciprocity in that profession ; but such difficulties do not exist in connection with the practice of medicine. Another very great advantage of having a medical examining board empowered to give diplomas to practice in any part of the Dominion or of the empire, is, that you would relieve the congestion which no doubt exists in our profession in the Dominion. If all the fields for the display of energy which I have referred to were open to Canadians it would place our men in a far more advantageous position. Instances in connection with the South African war have been cited to me time and again, in which our Canadian doctors who accompanied the regiments were debarred from attending any but Canadian soldiers. They were good enough and as able as any other doctors in the field, but they could not attend any soldiers other than Canadians. That places the profession under a very great disadvantage. It throws a slur on our Canadian doctors. As I have stated, many of our Canadians were as capable as any medical men in the field, and it is too bad to think they were turned down simply because they did not have a diploma which they could not get, but which they will be able to get should this Bill become law. I hope that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will consider this Bill of sufficient importance to appoint a committee of the medical men of this House to consider it. There are some thirteen or fifteen of us here now, all of whom would I am sure be pleased to assist in [illegible] a measure which would be satisfactory to all; and of course we would like to have them supplemented by others, especially members of the legal profession. I apologize to the House for occupying so much of its time.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). The Bill which the hon. gentleman has introduced raises the question of the benefits of a legislative union as compared with those of a federative union, such as we have in Canada. There are cases in which a federative union is a disadvantage ; and we ought to consider not only how best to cure the evil which has been pointed out in reference to the practice of medicine, but other difficulties which are constantly arising in this country ; for instance, the question of our divorce and marriage laws, and the definition of an insolvent, a creditor and a debtor. In each of these cases there are a number of definitions, one province adopting one and another province another. The day is coming when a way out of these difficulties should be found. It is absurd that a practitioner of medicine cannot practice in every province of the Dominion. I believe the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick) has found a solution of that difficulty ; but he has only touched the margin of a very important question. I do not think we can now ever come to a legislative union ; but I believe the cure will be found in appointing a royal commission of eminent men—say one of the judges of the Supreme Court, a man like the Clerk of this House, a representative of the Quebec judiciary, a representative of the Ontario judiciary, and so on, to study the question ; and when some kind of constitutional revision comes, as it must come in this country before many years, we shall have a fund of information collected which will be of the greatest value. There is something else coming. There is a great deal of talk, not only in this portion of the empire, but in every other portion, of the value and merit of Imperial unity. Imperial unity to my mind will have its value and its strength when the same laws obtain throughout the empire rather than in any kind of an Imperial federation. Why should there not be a code for the whole empire which would define, for instance, what a husband and a wife are, what a debtor and a creditor are ?

Mr. OSLER. That is a pretty tough thing.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, it is not. The right of a husband or a wife differs very largely in all the provinces of the Dominion. The same thing applies to the parties connected with a note and the parties connected with an insolvency. We will have to straighten out all these things in Canada, and some day throughout the empire; and when we have them straightened throughout the empire, and have an Imperial code that defines them in the same way in every part of the empire, then we shall have a bond of Imperial unity, uniting all the people of the empire together. It is an important question. But in regard to the particular matter before the House, the time has come when this parliament should deal with the question and enable a Canadian doctor to practice, not only all over Canada, but throughout the empire, just as doctors in the old country have a right to practice in Australia. I hope the suggestion made by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick) will receive the consideration of the government ; that he will get the committee he asks for, and the assistance of the government and the legal gentlemen in this House in the direction of securing uniformity throughout the Dominion.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

PRICES OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

At what dates were the changes made in the prices of binder twine during 1900, and what were the changed prices ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). In the absence of the Solicitor General, I beg to answer. In January, 1900, the prices for twine were fixed as follows :—

Quantities.	Manila.	Mixed.	New Zealand.
In lots of 50 tons and upwards.	.12½	.09½	.08½
In car-load lots (less than 50 tons)	.13	.10	.09
In lots of one ton up to a car-load	.13½	.10½	.09½
In lots of less than one ton....	.14	.11	.10

Terms in all cases cash on delivery.

In June the prices were fixed as follows :—

Quantities.	Manila.	New Zealand.
In lots of 100 tons	.12	.07½
In lots of 50 tons	.12½	.08
In car-load lots (less than 50 tons)	.13	.08½
In lots of less than a car-load.	.13½	.09

Prices for mixed twine (Beaver) as follows :

Fifty tons and over	.09
Car-load lots	.09½
Ton lots	.10
Under a ton	.10½

On July 11, the prices were as follows :

Quantities.	Mixed Manila Beaver.	New Zealand Standard.	Pure Sisal.	Pure Manila.
In 50 ton lots..	.08	.06¼	.08¾	.10½
Car-loads	.08¼	.06½	.09	.11
Ton lots	.08½	.06¾	.09¼	.11½
Less than a ton	.09	.07	.09½	.12

MR. WM. MOORE.

Mr. CULBERT asked :

1. Has William Moore been dismissed from the position of caretaker of the public buildings at the town of Brockville ?
2. If so, when ?
3. When was he appointed ?
4. Were there any charges preferred against him ?
5. If so, by whom ?
6. Was there an investigation ?
7. Has a successor been appointed ?
8. If so, whom ?
9. Have any complaints been made against the present caretaker for neglecting his duties ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. Mr. Moore's services were dispensed with.
2. December 15, 1900.
3. January 8, 1896.
4 and 5. The minister satisfied himself that the dismissal of Mr. Moore was required in the public interest.
6. No.
7. Yes.
8. Wm. Purvis.
9. None, so far as known.

MR. J. GALLANT.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. From what place did F. Gallant, deputy returning officer at poll No. 6, West Prince, claim mileage fees for taking vote at said poll on November 7, 1900 ?
2. What was the amount of travelling fees claimed ?
3. Was the claim paid ? If not, why not ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. F. Gallant, deputy returning officer at poll No. 6, West Prince, P.E.I., claimed mileage from Chatham, N.B.
2. The amount claimed was $25.25.
3. The claim was not paid, because section 13 of the Dominion Elections Act provides that 'no person shall be appointed deputy returning officer, election clerk or poll clerk who is not a resident of the electoral district within which he is to act.'

ALBERTON, P.E.I.—POSTMASTER.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Who is the postmaster at Alberton, Prince Edward Island ?
2. When was he appointed and what is his salary with or without office room ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND :

1. Mary Jane Clark is postmistress at Alberton, P.E.I.
2. She was appointed on April 1, 1900. Her salary is $450 per annum. She has also a rent allowance of $60 per annum.

SAFES TO POSTMASTERS.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

Is it the intention of the government to supply safes to postmasters at places of considerable importance, as Tignish, P.E.I., when salary of the postmaster is too restrictive to permit him to provide one for himself ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. It is not the intention of the government at present to make any change in regulations hitherto prevailing, according to which postmasters in offices not located in public buildings have been required to furnish suitable protection for the mails under their charge at their own cost.

PORT COLBORNE.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. What was the total expenditure by the government on Port Colborne harbour since June 30, 1896 ?
2. What is the amount expended each year on said harbour since June 30, 1896 ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. Expenditure by Department of Public Works, $1,706.72.

2. In 1898-9, $598.43 ; 1899-1900, $340.25 ; to March 1, 1901, $768.04.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the expenditure by the Department of Railways and Canals ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no further information. We will let the question stand.

LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Have tenders been asked for the construction or extension of the Montreal new lock of the Lachine Canal ?

2. If so, have any tenders been received, and from whom ?

3. On how many different occasions have tenders been asked for ?

4. What was the amount of each tender of each person tendering on each occasion ?

5. Has the contract been awarded to any person ? If so, to whom, and for what amount ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The contract has not been awarded.

MAIL CARRIAGE—SIMCOE.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Have any contracts for the carrying of mails in the ridings of East, North or South Simcoe been renewed since the 15th day of July, 1896 ? If so, what ones were so renewed ? Have any temporary arrangements been made in any cases ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. Some contracts have been renewed, but it would be quite impossible, with the staff we have in the department, to prepare the answer at the present time. If my hon. friend will move for a return, the whole information will be brought down.

MISS ELIZABETH CAYOUETTE.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. Has Elizabeth Cayouette, formerly postmistress of Langevin, county of Dorchester, province of Quebec, been dismissed?

2. If so, for what reason ?

3. If dismissed, who is her successor ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. She has not been dismissed.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Copies of all petitions, papers, directions, letters and other correspondence relating to the change in the situation of the Pearl street subpost office in Hamilton, or to the age and reputation of the late postmaster, Mr. Hull, or to the situation of the new post office and the appointment of Mr. McDonell; also for copies of all communications and papers which led the inspector to make inquiry with regard to any of these matters.—Mr. Barker.

Copies of all correspondence, telegrams and reports of engineers, or other persons, referring to the improvements to be made at Grand Bend, on the east shore of Lake Huron, in the electoral district of North Middlesex.—Mr. Sherritt.

Copies of all specifications, tenders, &c., in connection with the contract for the Montreal harbour works, which was awarded to Messrs. Malone and Company, of Three Rivers, indicating what changes have been made in the contract as compared with the original specifications.—Hon. Mr. Haggart.

ANTICOSTI—CORRESPONDENCE WITH IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence, telegrams and reports that have passed between the Dominion government and the Imperial government respecting the Island of Anticosti.

He said : In presenting this motion, I wish to draw to the attention of the House some correspondence that was placed in my hands with reference to the subject of the motion. A letter has been placed in my hands which appeared in the Montreal Witness of 10th January last, which gives a history of the Island of Anticosti which, I presume, very few have read before. The letter reads as follows :

Sir,—The establishment by Lloyd's of a signal service at Belle Isle to supersede the present signal station at the east end of Anticosti Island, 462 miles below Quebec, at this juncture, renders the question of the ownership of the Island of Anticosti a subject for the home as well as the colonial government, for two reasons. In the first place, the transference of this island, which has over 300 miles of seacoast, is about 140 miles long and about thirty-five miles broad in the widest part, with an average breadth of twenty-seven and a half miles, and comprising a territorial area of 2,460,000 acres, to private French ownership, thereby divesting British subjects of their rightful property, and, in the second, depriving the River St. Lawrence and its gulf of the most valuable natural harbours for naval defence existing at the front door of the great water highways of the Dominion of Canada, for the island possesses three harbours, one at Ellis Bay, a second at Fox Bay, and the other at South-west Point. The harbour at Ellis Bay at the upper end and that at Fox Bay at the lower end of the island, are capable of accommodating a large fleet of the largest sized sea-going ships and steamers with safety in all kinds of winds, having an excellent holding bottom of gravel and mud, and the other, South-west Point, could easily be made safe by the construction of breakwaters. These harbours offer peculiar advantages for purposes of naval defence, because all vessels bound up or down the St. Lawrence must pass close to the island. When it is mentioned that upwards of 2,000 vessels arrive from Europe in the season, embracing several of the finest lines of steamers afloat, besides a large fleet of coasting and fishing craft, all of which must necessarily pass within view of the island, the national importance attachable to the position and capabilities of these harbours for commercial and naval stations becomes apparent; and they are in the most convenient and central spot for commanding with a few steam vessels or gunboats the two entrances of the river, and for the despatch of cruisers either up the stream or down to any of the gulf ports.

The whole Island of Anticosti was first granted by the Crown of France in 1680 to Louis Joliet, a Frenchman, in consideration of his discovery of Illinois, now the state of Illinois, and for other services rendered to the government. After the conquest of Canada by Great Britain it passed into the hands of wealthy English families, and for upwards of a hundred years the English heirs of Langan, Dunn and Stewart owned the island—the Langans one-half share and the others a quarter each—and in 1873 Captain Forsyth, late of the 7th Hussars, one of the heirs of Langan, made an organized attempt to settle the island, and during the next two years over 1,000 immigrants made their home there, a hardy race of Newfoundland fishermen settling at Fox Bay under the seigneurship of Captain Forsyth, whose policy was that all who applied for particular lots of land were told that they could occupy the land, and as soon as a survey had been made they would be granted the land at a reasonable rate. In addition to the settlers, there was likewise a floating population which visited the island during the fishing season, of some three or four thousand people. These people or their forefathers had visited the island for over a hundred years. During the season they occupied themselves in fishing and drying the fish they had caught. They were given the privilege of cutting what timber they required for their own use, and of shooting what game they needed. Stores and supplies of all kinds were established on the island, and the settlers and floating population were allowed the highest market price for fish, furs or anything they had to sell. Unfortunately for Captain Forsyth and the welfare of the settlers, his enterprise was ahead of the times, and having to bear all the expense, and the island being undivided, it was decided to bring it to licitation sale.

Four years ago Mr. Henri Menier, of French chocolate fame, purchased this island of Anticosti, which, as any one who will take the trouble to look at the map will see, commands the entrance to the River St. Lawrence. His object, as stated then, and many times since, was to provide for himself and his friends a game and fishing preserve where they might spend their summers with profit after the exacting operations of chocolate making in France. Mr. Menier acquired the island from an English company which had purchased it from a Mr. F. W. Stockwell, who in turn had bought it at the licitation sale, and Captain Forsyth claims that the licitation sale was illegal on the ground of conspiracy between the purchaser and the party who instituted the proceedings in licitation, and that judicial proceedings are not barred by the ordinary ten years' proscription, but come under the thirty years' statutory proscription.

However, Mr. Menier has got possession of this island, which, in the event of war between Great Britain and France, would be a valuable point for an enemy of Britain and Canada. While Anticosti was in the hands of good British subjects it was one thing; now it is in foreign hands, it is high time that the home government stepped in and demanded that the colonial daughter shall not forget her duty to the mother country by the alienation of any of her territory from British relationship. And this has been painfully emphasized by Mr. Menier's actions. His first act, what was it? To warn the English-speaking people on the island that they must move; that they no longer had any rights there; that all their years of labour in making a home for themselves and their families must go for nothing; and so he appointed Mr. Commettant governor, who cruelly evicted from their peaceful homes the English-speaking settlers of Fox Bay. It was nothing to him that these poor people had made their homes out of the wilderness of this once barren island, that their children had been born and their parents sepultured there. It is true the courts decided in Mr. Menier's favour as against the settlers, and so the provincial police were requisitioned to expel these people from the island and to tear down their houses, not because they were pirates or invaders, but because they could not be subject to Mr. Menier as absolute sovereign of the island and its waters. He demanded not only seigneur's fee of right of occupation, but they were forbidden to trap or shoot, or take any fish excepting codfish. He forbade any one to leave the island or to land upon its shores without his permission. He forbade them to trade with the outside world, or the outside world to trade with them. They must sell all to him and buy all from him, or forfeit their residence on the island. After twenty-seven years' freedom on Canada's free soil, they refused to sacrifice their manhood to be made serfs to a foreigner coming in and claiming what no citizen of Canada ever claimed in any part of this Dominion—an extensive right of ownership, as if he were the irresponsible king or the autocratic sovereign of that possession.

The Imperial government has already recognized that there is something of national importance to this Dominion, this celebrated Frenchman getting possession of the entrance to the St. Lawrence. The whole case is one of hardship and of interference with the rights of Canadian citizens and British subjects settled upon British soil, as was amply proved by the testimony of Edward Osborne and Hoyles Whiting, of Fox Bay, who were delegated by their brother-settlers to appear for them in the court at Murray Bay to show cause against eviction, and corroborated by the Rev. A. B. Argue, a resident missionary. Whether ultimately the Menier right of ownership be confirmed or upset by the courts, the question paramount to-day is, 'Shall the open door to the great River St. Lawrence be closed at the mere caprice and whim of an alien to Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada?' It is absurd to urge that merely because Mr. Menier has paid a mere bagatelle for and taken possession of the Island of Anticosti, he cannot be disturbed. Under the Militia Act of Canada the island can be expropriated by the Dominion government for military purposes, and with modern guns mounted on suitable sites no vessel could enter the St. Lawrence, for they could knock out anything attempting to go up or down this waterway.

This is a burning question to-day in Canada. No one here desires to dispossess Mr. Menier without compensation; the provincial government is impotent to move in the matter; the Federal government would like to do so if certain of national approval; therefore, the home government should lose no time in bidding the Dominion parliament to expropriate the island, place it in a condition of strong and ample defence, both from a naval and military standpoint, and so restore British soil to British possessors, who will see that its colonists live in peace and contentment. Canada, uninvited, went to the succour of the mother country; now the mother country can well afford to reciprocate in the direction indicated in this article.

In an interview with the writer, Captain Forsyth said: 'I am personally very fond of the French, and admire them as a great military nation, consequently I do not think it right to throw temptation in their way by permitting Mr. Menier to control such an important strategetical point as the Island of Anticosti. I am not acquainted with Mr. Menier, but judging from his treatment of the Fox Bay settlers, which from a rational view of the case was quite as bad, if not worse, than any Irish eviction, and the arbitrary policy he has adopted towards the fishing population in general, I see trouble and danger ahead. Indeed, had the evicted settlers not been a law-abiding and God-fearing class, instead of the pirates and wreckers he and his abettors tried to make the public believe they were, Mr. Menier and his agents would assuredly have been shot or thrown into the sea.'

That letter is signed by W. H. C. The Montreal Witness of the 5th of January, published this letter, and the following editorial concerning it :

We cannot add a word to the singularly clear and extremely interesting statement of the position and the history of the Island of Anticosti, which appears in another column of this paper under the signature of 'W. H. C.' We do not think the writer has attached any false seriousness to the national and Imperial aspects of the case, which he has so ably set forth. Assuming Mr. Menier's title to the island in fee simple to be perfect, though that is disputed by Captain Forsyth, and assuming that the limitations which he has placed upon residents by arbitrarily dispossessing English-speaking settlers, upon fishing off the shores and upon traffic with the island to be all within the law, it must still be admitted that there are national interests connected with so vast a domain in so prominent and strategetic a position, that are in no wise wiped out by the mere fact of private ownership. Nor is the fact that the ownership is foreign, and, under possible circumstance, anti-British, entirely without significance. It seems to us, therefore, the part of statesmanship, both Canadian and British, to give careful consideration to the facts presented, and if the proposal made by our correspondent fails to meet with approval, to inquire how otherwise the public interests of Canada and the empire may be safeguarded from possible damage.

That is an editorial of the Montreal Witness dated the 5th of January, stating that it is the duty of this government and of the British government immediately to expropriate the Island of Anticosti, and to take it into the hands of British people, so that it may not be a menace in future. I could read editorials from the Yarmouth Times, which are pretty strong, but I will not do so. However, I will refer to an interview which was copied in the Montreal Star of the 23rd of February, taken from a Paris correspondent under the same date. Mr. Menier, being interviewed, made use of this language :

Henri Menier was interviewed yesterday regarding the statement that a petition had been addressed to Mr. Chamberlain asking that Mr. Menier should be expropriated from Anticosti, and that the Colonial Secretary had referred the matter to the Canadian government to take such action as the interests of the empire demanded. Mr. Menier declared that the first information that he had in regard to this was in a telegram to the Daily Mail.

He is, he declared, on the best terms with the Canadian government and British authorities and is convinced that the incident is a very common place one, and that Mr. Chamberlain has nothing to do with it. 'He has,' said Mr. Menier, 'probably received, as has happened before, a petition from one or two of squatters of Fox Bay, who cannot console themselves for having been expelled from Anticosti, and has confined himself, according to his custom, to sending it to the proper quarter to be examined. It is just as if I had received from one of my workmen, which I would send to the manager of my factory to see what could be done with it. But the people of Anticosti since expulsion by the government——

That is the way that Mr. Menier puts it. He says that the people of Anticosti were expelled by the Canadian government, which, under cover, in my mind, was the fact because the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), after making his visit there, came back and said that the government should confirm Mr. Menier in his title to Anticosti. Mr. Menier continues :

But the people of Anticosti since expulsion by the government, of the squatters who wished, in spite of my rights, to take up their residence there, are quite reassured as to their position, on which the courts have pronounced several judgments, judgments which affirm my rights. Neither Mr. Chamberlain nor the Canadian government with which, I repeat, I am on the best terms, has, I am sure, any arrière pensée in the matter, and the incident is without importance.

That is what Mr. Menier says. He says that he is on the best of terms with the Canadian government. I fancied so when the question was put the other day as to how many licenses for catching lobsters were issued for the Island of Anticosti, and the answer was given that one had been issued at a fee of $100 to Mr. Dagget who is, I presume, one of Mr. Menier's men on the Island of Anticosti. This is a question of importance both to the British Empire and to Canada, as is stated by the writer of this letter who signs himself W. H. C. That island, if owned by a foreign power, or by a party whose interests are opposed to those of Canada, as no doubt Mr. Menier's are, could, with very little expense, be so fortified that no boat could pass up or down the River St. Lawrence. I am anxious to see what the correspondence is that has passed between the British and Canadian governments in reference to the matter of expropriating that island and taking possession of it. When once taken possession of I think these Fox Bay settlers who have been ejected from that island by this government should be restored to the lands that they have occupied for over 100 years. I think it is a case of hardship, and I will always think so. The people of Fox Bay were treated unfairly from first to last. I have another motion on the paper upon which I will deal with that question more fully. At present I confine myself simply to getting the correspondence in order to see what has passed between the British and Canadian government in reference to the island.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no objection to bringing down the correspondence that has passed upon this question between the British government and the Canadian government. So far as my memory goes at present, I do not think there has been any correspondence exchanged as to the expropriation of the Island of Anticosti from Mr. Menier. There have been some representations made which will be brought down. The Imperial authorities, however, have never thought of calling our attention to the fact that Mr. Menier's property should be expropriated on the ground that there is danger in his possession of it to the British Empire or to Canada. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) may say, that, if batteries were placed on the Island of Anticosti no vessel could enter the St. Lawrence, I must say that the wildest stretch of imagination could not support such a statement. I am not very familiar with the Island of Anticosti, but I believe there is, on each side of the island, an open channel at least sixty miles in width and certainly no batteries could command sixty miles of water. It is preposterous to think that the Island of Anticosti could be so fortified as to command the channels on both sides of the St. Lawrence. That it is of strategic importance is without doubt, and if, unfortunately, we were to have hostilities, it might be a point to consider whether or not we should take possession of it, but to say that this action ought to be taken to-day is out of the question altogether. At all events, as I said a moment ago, I do not remember at this moment that the Imperial authorities have ever made any representations of that character. That would be enough for the motion of the hon. gentleman, but, let me say, in passing, that he makes in regard to Mr. Menier, some observations which it is just as well for me to notice and to answer, not because we are on the best of terms with Mr. Menier, but simply because the remarks of the hon. gentleman may prejudice the public mind against Mr. Menier. Mr. Menier is a French citizen, and he says he is on the best of terms with the government. I do not say that there is anything wrong in that at all, either on the part of Mr. Menier, or the government. We cannot but be on the best of terms with all citizens of this country and with all those who have interests with us. I do not know that the terms upon which we are with Mr. Menier are better than the terms upon which we are with any other citizens. I do not think that I ever exchanged a single line with him and I am not aware that he has had any communication other than the official communications he has had to exchange with the government as being a citizen of another country having interests in Canada. In regard to the statements made by the hon. member for Leeds that Mr. Menier has arbitrarily dispossessed British citizens and that they have been expelled by the government, let me say that Mr. Menier, and I want the hon. gentleman to take particular notice of what I say, has treated all the squatters on the island whether they were English or French, in the same way. He has asserted his rights to the property against them all, against the Fox Bay settlers, who happened to be of British origin and against those who settled at L'Anse aux Fraises, who happened to be of French origin. He took legal proceedings against them all. The Fox Bay settlers were the only ones to resist the process of law. All the others came to terms and the terms to which they agreed were that Mr. Menier required from all the squatters that they should acknowledge his authority, that they should take a lease from him and he paid every one of them for the improvements they had made upon the property. The Fox Bay settlers would not accept these terms. They went to law and lost their case. They were expelled, not by this government, but under the authority of the courts and this government came to their rescue so far as they could. We gave them transportation from Anticosti to the city of Quebec, and from Quebec the Canadian Pacific Railway gave them transportation to the North-west Territories, where they are now settled. That is all there is about the Fox Bay settlers. My hon. friend stated a moment ago that the Fox Bay settlers had been in possession of their land for more than 100 years. The Fox Bay settlers, if they had been in possession of their land, not for 100 years, but only for thirty years, would still have remained in possession, because, under the law of the province of Quebec, thirty years' possession is equivalent to a title. They had been in possession only twenty-five years, and they were expelled by the courts. It was a very hard case, I admit, but a case of expulsion is always a hard one. However, there was nothing else in that case than must take place in every civilized country where a citizen choses to assert the rights which he is possessed of under the laws of the country in which he lives.

Motion agreed to.

THE LAW OF DIVORCE.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston) moved :

That the House is of opinion that the present practice of applying to parliament for a divorce is in many ways objectionable, and virtually gives in certain cases redress to the wealthy which is denied to the poor.

That jurisdiction should be given to some one court of each of the provinces of the Dominion, or a court should be established in each of the said provinces for the trial of cases for divorce, and that such court should have exclusive jurisdiction to decree a dissolution of marriage.

He said : There is no need of any apology or excuse for again bringing this most important subject, namely, 'Divorce in Canada,' to the attention of parliament. It affects the well-being of society ; the personal happiness of many in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It touches home-life. It involves the services of obedience to, or violation of law. Connected with it are parental duties, and the rights of women and innocent children ; their rights to property, and their rights to social position and recognition.

I do not intend to treat this subject exhaustively, nor do I intend to speak so long as to weary the House if I can help it. This question has been dealt with in a book which is to be found in the library, written by Mr. Gemmill, barrister, of Ottawa, and after reading that book with a good deal of care I can commend it to any one who is interested in the subject. There is in that work a collection of cases that have been before parliament, as well as a digest of the laws of the various provinces, and a little treatise on the origin of divorce courts in England ; the whole giving information well worthy of perusal. There is a prefatory note to that work by Sir John Bourinot, and of course it goes without saying that what Sir John says on matters of this kind will be read with interest, and a good deal of importance will be attached to it. Now, what is the law of Canada at present in reference to divorce. The whole subject of marriage and divorce is given to this Dominion parliament by the British North America Act, and we have exclusive legislation, or rather the authority to legislate on that subject. Of course, as every one knows, some of the provinces on coming into confederation had divorce courts established, and these are continued. Section 129 of the British North America Act deals with that matter as to provinces entering the union at confederation, and section 146 extends to other provinces which may afterwards be brought in. I shall not discuss the constitution of these divorce courts existing in certain provinces at confederation, nor as to how they have exercised their jurisdiction. There was a divorce court in Nova Scotia at confederation, and from the date of confederation up to 1888, I am informed that 52 divorces were granted by that court. There was then and there is a divorce court in New Brunswick, and from the date of confederation to 1888, it granted 40 divorces. There is a divorce court in the province of Prince Edward Island, and that court is singularly constituted. It is a court of the Governor in Council, as I understand it, and a legal question arises as to whether its jurisdiction is to be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or by His Excellency the Governor General in Council. Whether because of this difficulty as to its jurisdiction or not, I am unable to discover the number of cases, if any, that have come before it from the date Prince Edward Island entered confederation down to 1888. There is also a divorce court in British Columbia and there is a divided opinion amongst the judges as to the jurisdiction of that court. There are strongly expressed opinions against the validity of the decisions of that court. I express no opinion myself. I only say that there is an important question as to the validity of the divorces which this court has assumed to grant, and 15 cases have been dealt with by the court in British Columbia. The province of Ontario, the province of Manitoba, and the North-west Territories have no divorce courts. It so happened that the laws introduced in the province of Ontario were the laws as they existed in England in 1792, and at that time the courts in England had no jurisdiction in divorce cases. Prior to confederation the province of Ontario never assumed to deal with the question ; since confederation it has no authority to deal with it, and hence no court in Ontario has authority to dissolve the marriage tie. The courts in Ontario have assumed jurisdiction in cases where the allegation was that the marriage itself was a nullity, where fraud was practiced on one of the parties, or in cases of lunacy and such where the marriage was void ab initio. In Ontario, Manitoba, the North-west Territories, and, of course, in the province of Quebec there is no court with power to dissolve the marriage tie, although the courts in Quebec deal with the question as to whether or not the marriage was validly solemnized, and that question is now under discussion in the Delpit case which is watched with a great deal of interest throughout the Dominion. In these provinces I have mentioned, there is no divorce court at present except the court of parliament which is a legislative divorce. Every one who has studied the question knows that prior to 1888 the proceedings in order to get a divorce from parliament were of a most cumbrous and expensive character. They are so yet, in my opinion, but they are less so since the new rules adopted by the Senate in 1888. But even yet the dealing with the subject by parliament is difficult and expensive. Sometimes cases are disposed of by caprice, if I may use such a word with regard to so august a body—not disposed of, as the senators say, on their merits ; and some new plan ought to be adopted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can the hon. gentleman give us any information as to the ordinary cost of procuring divorce through the Senate ?

Mr. BRITTON. I will speak of the cost before I get through. When I had this matter in mind, I noticed that there was something on the subject by 'Bystander' in the Weekly Sun of the 20th of February. It is not necessary to say who 'Bystander' is; his opinion on any such subject always commands attention. He says:

It is surely time that the marriage and divorce law of Canada should be placed on a rational footing and administered by regular courts. Marriage is a civil status. By the state its rights and privileges are guarded and its duties and liabilities are enforced. For the civil power, not for the churches or the clergy, it is to determine by whom and how matrimony may be lawfully contracted; in what cases, when contracted, it may be lawfully dissolved. At the same time the union has a spiritual aspect, in virtue of which cognizance may rightfully be taken of it by a church. A civil marriage, constituting and regulating the connection in the eye of the civil law, ought in the first instance to be universally required. A religious ceremony might follow, such as the parties desired and their church required; and the church would be at liberty to withhold its benediction in case the union were at variance with its spiritual law. Divorce, in the same way, ought to be in the jurisdiction of the state so far as its legal validity and consequences, including the liberty of legal remarriage, are concerned. The church would still be at liberty to withhold her sanction from the divorce and to refuse to recognize remarriage as a title to continuance in her membership and participation in her rites.

Divorce by the Senate is preposterous and belongs to a bygone age. It is the ghost of the old law, or rather of the old mockery of the law, in England, where in former days you could be divorced only by an Act of parliament originating in the House of Lords. Judge Maule, the laughing philosopher of the Bench, had to try a poor man for bigamy. The man was proved guilty, but pleaded the unfaithfulness of his wife. 'Prisoner,' said Maule, 'you are to understand that in this country there is not one law for the rich and another for the poor. If your wife was unfaithful, your proper course was to bring a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for divorce "a mensa et thoro." Having gained this suit, you should have a bill brought into the House of Lords for a divorce "a vinculo." This proceeding would have cost you at least a thousand pounds, and you probably in the whole course of your life never possessed a thousand pence. You see then how in this country there is not one law for the rich and another for the poor. The sentence of the court upon you is, &c.' It was thought that this joke had not a little to do with the establishment of the present divorce court. If we are to have no divorce court in Canada, the result may be increased resort to the wild-cat divorce courts of some of the American states.

After I put the notice of motion on the paper, I found that a good many persons had been thinking of this subject, and I have received many communications with regard to it. I do not propose to trouble the House with all or one tithe of what has been said to me; but there is one letter from which I propose to read some extracts, because it is written by a lawyer of Toronto, named Mr. Heighington, who appears to have considered the matter, and therefore his opinion ought to be worth something. He published a letter in the Toronto Globe of the 2nd of March, in which he said:

A Divorce Court for Canada.

I have noticed with great pleasure that Mr. B. M. Britton, the hon. member for Kingston, is about to introduce in the House of Commons a resolution which is to test the opinion of the House upon the advisability of establishing a divorce court in Canada. I hope the expression of the House will be in favour of such a course, and that when the resolution has been carried, it will be followed by the introduction of a Bill to establish a divorce court in this country during the present session.

I believe that the country is ripe and ready for the introduction of such a measure. It is one which will contribute in no small degree to the domestic welfare and peace of many homes in this wide Dominion, which at present are divided and unhappy and must remain so until relief is given by a divorce court, where a person of ordinary means shall be able to obtain a divorce at the same outlay as in ordinary law suits.

Although this is an important measure, there is no reason why it should not be brought forward at the present session. We have a remarkable precedent for such a course. The Bill establishing the divorce court in England was introduced into the Commons for its second reading on the 30th of July, 1857, and became the law of the land on the 28th of August following, less than a month. The reason for that was that the country was ready and looking for it. It did not raise any party question and the issue was never doubtful. It is a question of domestic economics and good government. I believe the proceedings in committee were very spirited, and although Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli both opposed it on religious grounds, and that the Bill was being pushed forward with 'unprecedented levity,' the Bill passed. . . . .

It has been my lot to draw a great many deeds of separation, beginning, 'Whereas, certain unhappy differences having arisen,' &c., but it has also been my lot to settle and adjust many of these marital differences by a little judicious advice, but still I know of many husbands who are bringing up their children without a mother, and I know also of wives who are living a life of desolation and loneliness worse than widowhood who would rejoice if it were made possible, by means of a divorce court, to obtain release from their legal bondage. My experience is doubtless that of many other solicitors in active practice, who could endorse the position I am taking. As to the particular form the court should assume and the procedure which should be followed therein, I would leave in the hands of our able and experienced Minister of Justice.

We already admit the principle. We do grant divorces in Canada, but in an antiquated and primitive fashion before a committee of the Senate. But the cost of this procedure is so great as to be practically prohibitive to a great many. What is the result? Our people go to the states in scores and seek and obtain divorces in the mistaken idea that they are valid here. Many remain there and others come back and take their chances. All this is productive of evil, scandal and disgrace. To a lawyer it seems only reasonable that when we do grant divorces that we should do it by the procedure and machinery of a decorous and dignified court of justice. I would be the last person to rob the marriage relationship of any of the sanctity which now surrounds it, but is it not infinitely worse for people to continue to lead lives which are a living lie and contradiction to every sentiment of the marriage tie? Why should there be one law for the rich and another for the poor? With judicious and wise discretion kindly exercised, and with proper restrictions as to the publicity of its procedure, a divorce court can at a small cost dispense justice by affording speedy and effective relief to many of our suffering and unfortunate people.

Without reading what has been written by others, I may say that there is an unanimity of expression on the part of the legal profession in favour of the establishment of a divorce court. My information may not be correct, but I am told that there are forty or fifty persons in Toronto who, if the law were rigidly enforced, would be prosecuted for bigamy. But the law is not rigidly enforced, and simply for the reason given by Mr. Justice Small in the case cited in the paper I have just read. In these cases the property question comes up, the parties holding property, dealing in and transferring the same, when as a matter of fact they have no legal right to do so. Other questions also arise in this matter, as any one can easily see.

What is the objection to a divorce by the Senate ? The objection is not only the question of extent, but the trouble in dealing with cases before that body. First, there must be, for what reason I know not, six months' notice given of the intention to apply for a divorce—given not only in the Canada Gazette, but in two papers, and in the province of Quebec and Manitoba, the notice must be published in French as well as in English. Then, after the six months have elapsed, you have to deposit an amount sufficient to print six hundred copies of the Bill in English and 200 in French, and you have also to deposit with the Clerk of the Senate $200. Having done all that, which will exhaust the resources of most ordinary people, you have, if your petition is entertained and the Bill introduced and referred to the Senate committee, to bring your witnesses to Ottawa, from no matter how remote a distance, to appear in person before the committee and give evidence. Some witnesses may come perhaps without being paid the exact amount to which they are entitled, but if they get the amount to which they are entitled, a large item of the expense depends on the distance they have to come. But apart from the witness fees, the amount paid in for printing and the counsel work preparatory to submitting the Bill, will not be less than $500, and if the witnesses come a long distance, the average expense would not be less than $1,000 in any ordinary case.

If hon. members should be opposed to the establishing of a divorce court in every province or giving jurisdiction to courts already existing—suppose they think it is better to safeguard this whole matter by leaving it to parliament, what objection can there be to allowing the judges or other judicial officers in each province to act as referees before whom the evidence could be taken and forwarded to the Senate committee. A great deal of expense would thus be saved, and it seems to me that if the government is not willing to go the whole length of the reform asked for, they should go the length of having the evidence, in cases where the parties reside at long distances from Ottawa, taken by competent judicial officers and forwarded to Ottawa.

I am not bringing this matter before the House for the first time, and I am aware that in years gone by it was dealt with in some instances in rather a summary manner. In 1870 the question was brought before the House by the late Sir John A. Macdonald, who introduced a Bill to provide for the absence of a judge of the court in New Brunswick. The whole question was then opened and discussed in such a way that after a lengthy debate, the Bill was withdrawn. In 1875 the matter was brought up again. A motion similar to the one before the House was introduced and defeated by a very large vote. In 1879 a motion was made for leave to introduce a Bill to enable the Court of Chancery in Ontario to dissolve the marriage tie in certain cases. It seemed to be favourably considered at first, but the then Speaker took the point that it was introduced too late in the session to be properly discussed, and the government taking the same view, it was voted down. In 1888 discussion took place to which I wish to make a little more lengthy reference, because that debate was taken part in by Mr. Jones and the Hon. Sir Louis Davies, and the latter gentleman, now being in the government, will be able to argue the convictions he then entertained, and give effect, if possible, to the views he then held, and which I am now advocating. That debate will be found in the 'Hansard' of 1888, pages 1414 and 1415. Mr. Jones, of Halifax, objected to the Bill on principle, and objected to the evidence that was published in reference to it. Sir John A. Macdonald rather poked fun at him for having read the evidence, and made one of his characteristic jokes, which any one who cares can read. The Hon. Sir Louis Davies replied to Sir John A. Macdonald as follows :—

I differ with the hon. gentleman. I think the arguments he has used to-night are the strongest I have yet heard in favour of the establishment of a divorce court. We are asked here to grant divorces, as we pass any Act of parliament, and the hon. gentleman says that we grant these without reading the evidence. Can anything be conceived more pitiable than the fact of this parliament passing a vote on a serious case of this kind, where the matrimonial bond is to be dissolved, without, as the leader of the government states, anybody reading the evidence in regard to it. . . .

The hon. gentleman suggested that one hon. gentleman who had read the evidence had done something which was improper, and he took credit to himself for voting without reading the evidence. If the leader of the government has done that, what may be expected from the rank and file? I was led to the conclusion, which I have expressed, very largely by the discussion in the other Chamber on the case which we have just voted upon. I read the speech of the leader of the government in the Senate, and I found that he argued that the Senate was not to be bound by any of the rules adopted by the House of Lords before the divorce court was established in England; that there was no legal rule guiding their decisions to which any ordinary member could look, or under which he could act, pro or con; that every man could use his own judgment and do what was right in his own eyes; that the decision was to be an arbitrary decision in every case; in fact, that the man or the woman who canvassed the hardest in the lobby was the one who would win. After reading that, I judged that there was no rule guiding the Senate, and I came to the conclusion that a rule should be adopted and that a tribunal should be established which would be guided by fixed principles, in the hands of judges, so that in this very important matter we might know what we are doing. I know that there is a large section, a religious section of our people, who are opposed to the granting of divorces altogether, but it must be evident to them that at present divorces are granted year after year, not because facts show in the greater number of cases that these should be granted, but because the parties on one side or the other have evoked a certain amount of sympathy: that they are granted, not because of the evidence taken, but simply because those who are promoting the Bill are more or less active. I think it would be far better that we should leave these questions to trained judges and trained lawyers. Draw the line as closely as you like, but leave it to these trained men to carry it out. If that system were adopted we would not see the absurdities which I have seen during the short time I have been in this House, and which we witness year after year. I venture the assertion that there are not a dozen gentlemen here who have read the evidence in this case from end to end; I doubt if there are half a dozen; and yet we are voting pro and con on the question of whether this divorce Bill shall be passed or not.

This discussion in the Commons and the Senate led, apparently, to the making of the new rules which I referred to as having been adopted in 1888. I suppose it was that discussion, though, I may be guilty of anachronism in that. It happens to be the same year, and I have drawn that inference, but I may be wrong. In 1891 Senator McDonald introduced a Bill, which, however, did not get beyond its first reading. The object of this Bill was to give jurisdiction to the different courts of the provinces I have mentioned—leaving out the province of Quebec—the High Court of Justice in Ontario, the High Court in Manitoba and the High Court in the North-west Territories, to deal with matters of this kind. There was a very little debate on the Bill apparently, and the matter dropped. Now, we have arrived, it seems to me, at a stage when something should be done. Parliament considers it to be its duty to grant the relief in certain cases. It is not a question of religious sentiment as to whether divorces should be granted or not—we do grant divorces; and I assume that it is right to grant them. It is, then, only a question where the jurisdiction for the trial of these cases and their proper disposal should rest. I am not asking any extension of the rule, any opening of the doors or loosening in any way of the marriage tie. I am not asking that we should bring about the condition of 'divorce made easy,' such as is said to exist in some states of the union. I am only asking that in those cases, in which parliament grants divorces, the jurisdiction should rest with the courts, and that these matters should be disposed of by the courts instead of by a Bill introduced in the Senate and disposed of in the first instance by a committee of the Senate. I think the time has come when a person who is not able to bring witnesses, say, from the North-west Territories to Ottawa, but who has a just cause to claim a dissolution of the marriage tie, whether that person be man or woman, should be given relief—when relief should not be confined to those who are able to meet the requirements now demanded of such people. We ought to try to stop a state of affairs under which people from Canada go, as they do from all our provinces, to the United States, become domiciled and live there long enough—or say they do—to get a divorce. Their divorces are not recognized by our courts under such circumstances, but they recognize them and they come back to this country and marry. That state of things exists to a greater or less extent in the country, and it is to remedy this that I introduce this resolution, in the hope that the government will see their way to dealing with it in a different manner from that in which it has been dealt with hitherto. The divorces granted by parliament up to 1888 were 23 for the one statutory cause and two for other causes. Parliament also granted the relief of separation in one case without granting a divorce. The applications rejected number 10. Since 1888, 35 divorces have been granted by parliament. Thus, while 25 divorces were granted in the 21 years after confederation, that is from 1867 to 1888, there were 35 divorces granted in the next 12 years. And the applications are on the increase. Why is that? The inference I draw—perhaps I am wrong—is that the same cause exists, but, in the increasing population and increasing number of people who are financially able to seek the redress provided, more applications are made to parliament. I am not putting forward the argument that this shows a greater demand for the remedy that I am asking, though I think it would show that to some extent. The argument that I use is that there is no reason why this particular subject—admitting the right to have the divorce—as distinguished from all others, should be dealt with by parliament instead of by the courts. There seems to be no logic in it and no reason in it. In the absence of reason to the contrary, this, like all other matters of contract, should be dealt with as I suggest. We cannot draw much of an argument from what is done in the United States. Every state of the union has its own divorce law, and the laws are administered differently in the different states. Divorce is comparatively easy to obtain in some of the western states, while it is not so easy in New York and some of the eastern states. The fact that there has been an abuse in the administration of the law in some states ought not to prejudice the case I am trying to make for the administration of the law by our courts in the different provinces. It will be borne in mind that I am not touching the question as to marriage, but simply dealing with the question of divorce and how divorce ought to be granted. If the remedy should be allowed at all, it should be allowed without the burden of expense and the great delays that result from coming to parliament under the rules of the House and under the law as we have it. I commend this matter to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. MACLEAN. This is just one of that class of cases I referred to an hour ago when the proposition of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Dr. Roddick), was up in regard to the practice of medicine. There must be a remedy found for the grievance mentioned by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton). It is a grievance that is felt all over this country, and we must take up not only the question of divorce, but also the question of marriage. I believe that both these questions, so far as we have jurisdiction in this House, ought to be put on a satisfactory basis before the whole country. If we do not deal with the question as it ought to be dealt with, we will ere long find ourselves in the same condition of confusion that prevails in the United States to-day. The greatest social discord that exists in the United States to-day arises from the laxity and the diversity of laws in the various states in regard to marriage. I have been reading recently the deliverances of some of their leading men upon this subject, and they all point out the absolute necessity of a federal law dealing with marriage and dealing with divorce, defining the rights of the husband and of the wife, of the parent and of the child, so that one law shall apply all over that country. It is a fact that more social disorder lies ahead of the people of the United States by reason of the laxity of their divorce laws than from any other source, and the trouble will extend to this country. Of course we will not have the same variety of laws that they have, because the provinces cannot deal with this subject; but we have trouble coming, and unless we deal with it in a large and broad way, in a manner such as this parliament has power to deal with it, social disorder will come. Now is the time to deal with it, and I hope the resolution before the House will receive due consideration, and that later on we will have a law dealing with the whole question. I am not saying on what ground divorce ought to be granted, that is a question to be considered; but, as the member for Kingston has pointed out, the law as it stands to-day is very unsatisfactory, and worst of all, it is not fair to the poor man or to the poor woman.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The House, I am sure, will feel obliged to the hon. member for Kingston for again calling attention to a subject which, from time to time, has engaged the deliberations of parliament ever since confederation. My hon. friend has related the different attempts which have been made since 1867 to have a divorce law in this country, but those attempts have never been prosecuted with very much vigour. Evidently public opinion is not much in sympathy with attempts to have a divorce law introduced into Canada. It may be that the facility with which divorces are granted in the United States has produced in this country a sentiment rather hostile than favourable to divorce. If I remember the figures given by my hon. friend, he says there have been thirty-five divorces granted since the beginning of confederation. Confederation has now lasted thirty-three years, that means one divorce a year, or thereabouts. These figures show that the population of Canada is not much in sympathy with divorce. I do not know if there have been any divorces granted in the divorce courts of the other provinces, but I know that in New Brunswick, where they still have a divorce court, divorces are very few, less than one a year, according to the information I have.

Under such circumstances, the question arises, Would it be advisable for us to depart from the policy which we have hitherto followed? Would it be advisable for us to change the system we have, cumbrous though it is, difficult though it is, but which has the advantage of discouraging divorce? The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), who is a stalwart in everything, is perhaps a stalwart in this also—though I do not know he would particularly favour a divorce court; but he will agree with me at all events that divorces are not to be desired. For my part I would rather belong to this country of Canada where divorces are few, than to belong to the neighbouring republic where divorces are many. I think it argues a good moral condition of a country where you have few divorces, even though they are made difficult—a better moral condition than prevails in a country where divorces are numerous and made easy by law. These are, at all events, the views which I hold, and I think I am simply echoing the public opinion of Canada. Divorces are not looked upon with favour as a rule in the province of Quebec from which I come, and in the church to which I belong. In other religious denominations of Canada where divorces are allowed, I am glad to say that as a rule they are not favoured, that they are discouraged, and that fact speaks well for the moral condition of our people.

Of course divorces are difficult and expensive. I do not know that they are much more expensive in the Senate than they would be in any other court in Canada. The chief item of expense which perhaps is greater in the Senate than it would be in other courts, is the necessity of bringing witnesses to the seat of government from long distances. My hon. friend has suggested that that difficulty might be got over by authorizing the judges to take evidence in the different localities and report this evidence to the Senate, and then the Senate might take action upon it. That is a view which can be taken, and it might be adopted by altering the rules that now prevail in the Senate. I must, however, say frankly to the House that for my part I am not disposed to favour much any alteration from the present practice that we have had since confederation. My hon. friend from East York will excuse me if I do not adopt the views with which he has favoured the House. For my part, so far as the work of confederation is concerned, I am a Conservative of the Conservatives, though a Liberal; I do not want to touch our constitution except in cases where the defects have become absolutely glaring and must be remedied at all costs. I think it will be better to suffer some little inconvenience than to commence to alter the constitution. My hon. friend from Kingston, I think, will agree with me in this respect, and for this reason, though the government would be willing to consider all the views which he has presented, I would advise him not to press this motion, but rather to withdraw it for the present.

Mr. BRITTON. I suppose I have got to bow to the First Minister in matters of this kind, because I cannot carry the motion without his consent. Let me say, however, in asking leave to withdraw the motion, that the number of divorces granted in Canada since confederation is sixty.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is only two a year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. MACLEAN. How many Canadians have gone over to the States to get divorces because they could not get them in their own country?

Mr. BRITTON. A great number. And what trouble it is causing in this country because our people have to go over there to get divorces.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Prime Minister did not touch that point.

Motion withdrawn.

Bill (No. 66) to amend the Canada Evidence Act.—Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick.

PAYMENT OF FISHING BOUNTY.

Mr. EDWARD HACKETT (West Prince, P.E.I.) moved for:

Copies of all letters, papers and other correspondence between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and J. Albert Brennan, of Tignish, Prince county, P.E.I., regarding the payment of a fishing bounty cheque, made in favour of one Joseph Reilly, and for which the said J. Albert Brennan held the order of the payee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in making this motion I desire to say that it is a very important one, as it refers to the distribution of the fishing bounties in the maritime provinces. In the year 1882, the Dominion government set aside the sum of $150,000 to be distributed annually amongst the fishermen of the maritime provinces. This sum was supposed to represent the interest on the amount received from the United States in consequence of the fishery award. You will remember that under the Washington treaty, the subject of Her Majesty, including Canadian fishermen, were allowed certain privileges along the coast of the United States, while American fishermen were allowed to pursue their calling in the inshore waters of Canada. This lasted for twelve years. At the same time the treaty provided, that, inasmuch as the privilege granted to American fishermen to fish in the inshore waters of Canada was greater than that accorded Canadians fishing in American waters, the commission should decide the amount of the difference to be paid. The commission sat at Halifax, and $4,500,000 was awarded to Canada for the use of these inshore fisheries. During that period of twelve years, commencing with 1870, the purse seine was largely used in the inshore fisheries by the American fishermen. The use of this engine of destruction resulted in driving from the coastal waters one of the most valuable fish that resorted to these waters, the mackerel, and the fishermen found that while, in 1870, and up to 1874, an abundance of this fish inhabited the coastal waters, by the use of the purse seine for so many years they were driven away and the fishermen were obliged to resort to other fisheries to make a livelihood for themselves and their families. They were deprived, to a certain extent, of the means that they had previous to the year 1870, of earning a livelihood, and as a consequence of this $4,500,000 coming from the fisheries of the maritime provinces, it was considered only right by the government of the day that the money should be returned to the fishermen whose waters had been depleted and who had been deprived, to a large extent, of the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their families. The money was granted and an amount was to be distributed annually under regulations to be made by the government from time to time, these regulations to be by order in council. We know that at the time this money was granted, when, I had the honour of being a member of this House, it was opposed by the hon. gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches. It was opposed in the country by their supporters and opposed because they said it would be of no advantage to the fishermen. I remember, while contesting my county, in 1882, my opponent declared that the money to be distributed to the fishermen would not buy each of them a fig of tobacco. The regulations were to be enforced and the money distributed, and now we find after an experience of eighteen years that the supporters of those people who were so much opposed to the distribution of this money, those gentlemen who vote the Liberal ticket, tumble over each other to share in the amount to be distributed. They come in a grand rush to get this money. While they are acting in this way a great many of them have no claim to it. While they cannot pretend to have any right to it they file fraudulent claims to share in the bounty thus preventing honest fishermen from getting fair-play. They are using it, as I will show the House for advancing the political interests of their own party. In regard to the question under consideration at this moment, I want to read part of a correspondence that has taken place between Mr. J. Albert Brennan, of Tignish, P.E.I., and the Department of Marine and Fisheries, in connection with a claim for payment of a fishing bounty on the order of the payee. Mr. Brennan is a merchant in Tignish, and when a young man was leaving the village, being short of money, Mr. Brennan bought his bounty cheque and advanced him a certain amount taking his order for the cheque. The young man went away, became sick and died, and Mr. Brennan supposed that he was the legal representative of this man who had given him an order for his bounty cheque. But, he found that when the fishery officer came to Tignish the organizer of the Liberal party, W. W. Wickham, had seen the fishery officer before Mr. Brennan saw him and had received from him the cheque without the order or authority of Mr. Brennan who held the order of the payee. Mr. Brennan very naturally complained of his conduct and he wrote to the Department of Marine and Fisheries in this way :

Tignish, P.E.I., April 10, 1900.

F. Gordeau,
Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I desire to bring to your notice the manner in which I have been used by John Davidson, the fishing bounty officer, and Dr. Wickham, of this place, with regard to cheques for bounty which I claimed. The facts are as follows :—Joseph Reilly, a fisherman, who had filed his claim for bounty in last season, was obliged to go away, and before leaving gave me an order for his cheque. This man since then died in the hospital. When Mr. Davidson came here to distribute the cheques a few days ago, I presented my order and was told by him that the cheque was given to Dr. Wickham, who had no authority to receive the same. I have, therefore, through the collusion of those parties, been deprived of this cheque to which I am honestly entitled. I want to complain generally against John Davidson and Dr. W. W. Wickham in connection with the distribution of bounty cheques this season. I have been caused great trouble in obtaining my rights in the matter of bounty cheques, and consider in justice the matter should be fully investigated. With regard to Reilly's cheque, I still hold the department for it, and trust that you will see that I obtain my just rights. As Dr. W. W. Wickham seems to have charge of the bounty distribution and gives or withholds cheques at his own pleasure without any authority whatever, the people here are naturally very indignant. I may say that Mr. Davidson seems to be only a figurehead in the matter. I make those charges fully conscious of their gravity to officers of your department, and demand the fullest investigation. My legal rights in this bounty claim question are beyond dispute.

Yours truly,

J. ALBERT BRENNAN.

The department replied that the instructions of the fishery officer were to the effect that he could not pay the cheque on an order. Mr. Brennan replied in another letter, and I am not going to weary the House by reading all the correspondence; I will hand it into the reporter because I want to have it placed on record.

Mr. HAGGART. You cannot do that unless you read it.

Mr. HACKETT. Well, then I shall have to go through all the correspondence. The following letter was sent to Mr. Brennan in reply :

Ottawa, April 24, 1900.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 10th instant, complaining that Mr. John Davidson, the fishery officer for Prince county, refused to deliver to you the fishing bounty cheque of John Reilly, for which you say you hold an order from the payee, I may state that in withholding the cheque the officer was acting in accordance with his instructions, which prevent him from recognizing orders or assignments of any kind in the matter of the distribution of the bounty.

As an order conveys no authority to the person to whom it is given to endorse a cheque, the department cannot recognize your claim to Mr. Reilly's bounty.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
JOHN HARDIE,
Acting Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

J. Albert Brennan, Esq.,
Tignish, P.E.I.

Mr. Brennan wrote in reply :

Tignish, May 3, 1900.

John Hardie, Esq.,
Acting Deputy Minister
Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, No. 2370 F.B., having reference to my fishing bounty cheque not paid me in accordance with the regulation governing the delivery of similar cheques at this place. I am surprised to learn that the officer's instructions from your department are not to deliver such cheques on an order from the payee, as he has grossly violated the same in the delivery of cheques here. I may say that I have received large numbers of cheques on orders both this season and last, and so much has this been the rule that every business man here received them under the same conditions. I do not complain at all at this manner of their disposition, as under the prevailing conditions here, I believe this to be the most feasible way of delivering cheques. What I do strongly object to is the fact that the cheques for which I had an order for money advanced to a sick man on his way to the hospital, and who died there, was delivered to Dr. W. W. Wickham, who had no order or other authority to receive the same. Another complaint I wish to make in this connection is that I held an order for the cheques of Mr. Lawrence Gallant, of Tignish, and this cheque was also delivered to the aforesaid Dr. Wickham, who had no order, and Mr. Gallant had great trouble in finding Dr. Wickham and obtaining the cheque for me. This conduct of the official is evidently a flagrant violation of his instructions, as well as a great injustice to me. In view of the fact that the man Joseph Reilly is deceased, and I am the only legally authorized person to receive the cheque in question, I must ask the department to forward me the amount. If you do not deem the above sufficient, I request an investigation by a responsible official of the department, when I will substantiate all the statements herein made. In this connection, I would suggest that Mr. A. Lord, agent of the department at Charlottetown, be appointed to investigate the matter.

I am, yours truly,
J. ALBERT BRENNAN.

To that letter he received the following :

Ottawa, May 14, 1900.

Sir,—I am to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant, in which you ask to be paid the amount of James Reilly's fishing bounty for 1899, for which you hold an order from the payee.

In reply, I have to state that as the order has no legal validity, the department cannot comply with your request.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
JOHN HARDIE,
Acting Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

J. Albert Brennan, Esq.,
Tignish, P.E.I.

To this Mr. Brennan replied :

Tignish, P.E.I., May 26, 1900.

John Hardie, Esq.,
Acting Deputy Minister
Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 14th inst., No. 2370 F.B., and am surprised at its contents. In reply to my letter of the 3rd inst., you say that the order received by me from Mr. Joseph Rielly, since deceased, is not valid, and the department will not deliver me his fishing bounty cheque. If my order is not valid, how can the department justify the handing over of this cheque to Dr. W. W. Wickham who had no order or authority of any kind to receive it. As the legal representative of Joseph Rielly, I claim that I am entitled to his fishing bounty cheque for season of 1899, and before relinquishing my rights I intend having the matter thoroughly investigated. In my last letter to you, I charged Mr. John Davidson, the bounty officer, with having paid this same W. W. Wickham several cheques without authority, and that the parties entitled to said cheques had great difficulty in obtaining the same. It appears to me to be outrageous that the department should attempt to shield one of its officers in conduct of this kind. If, as you say, my order is not valid, how do you justify your officer in delivering cheques on similar orders, and as I have shown above, even delivering the cheques to Dr. W. W. Wickham without an order or authority of any kind. I have again to ask that you order an impartial investigation into this matter, and see that justice is done. As a citizen of Canada, doing business here, I claim this as a right, and trust the department will see that my claim is paid.

I remain, yours truly,
J. ALBERT BRENNAN.

The House will see that Mr. Brennan, simply because he was a Conservative, was deprived of his bounty check. Dr. Wickham, who was the organizer of the Liberal party in the village of Tignish, went to the fishery officer immediately on his arrival in the village to distribute the cheques, and got from him this cheque without authority, without an order, having no claim whatever to it, and Mr. Brennan, who was the legal representative of Joseph Rielly, the man who died away in the hospital, could not get his bounty cheque. It was done for the purpose of placing in the hands of this organizer of the Liberal party certain funds to use as he might think best. This went on and other parties were treated in the same manner. Men who had orders for the bounty cheques were told that Dr. Wickham had the cheques and that they should go to him and receive them. Mr. Brennan asked in his letter that there should be an investigation held by an impartial disinterested and responsible man, and that he would substantiate on oath every statement made by him in connection with this cheque and others. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, previous to the 7th November a very hard fight was put up in the maritime provinces and especially in the province of Prince Edward Island. There were all kinds of attempts made by the government to deprive me of the vote of the people. The Railway Department, the Fisheries Department, the Public Works Department, had their agents all through the riding previous to the 7th November endeavouring to influence people to vote against me. I was elected by a majority of only nine votes after my opponents, who had asked a recount, had stolen a ballot box in which I had a majority of 33, and tried to deprive me of my seat. But I had a just judge ; Judge MacLeod, of the county court, and he said : I am going to count the vote of that polling district. I will take the statement turned out by the returning officer on the evening of the election, and although it is only secondary evidence as the ballot box has disappeared and the ballots are not before me, I will declare Hackett elected. I was declared elected then for the second time. I was petitioned against. I say, Sir, that it is a disreputable thing to use this money that belongs to the people of Canada, which belongs to the honest fisherman, to the man who toils and is entitled to it ; it is a disreputable thing that this money should be used by the government of Canada to debauch the electors. My opponent McLellan, against whom I have nothing to say, petitioned against me and after I had been petitioned against an honest fisherman came to me and said : You have been petitioned against, you had a hard fight, you beat them notwithstanding they stole your ballot box and if you desire to petition against your opponent I can give you such evidence as will disqualify Mr. McLellan. I replied to him : Mr. McLellan and myself have gone through this election campaign as men ; we came out of it as friends and I have no desire to pursue Mr. McLellan further, but you can tell me your story. He said : I will, and this is the story he told : A month previous to the election of the 7th of November I was passing in front of Mr. McLellan's premises and he came out and accosted me. He knew I was a Conservative and he asked me to vote for him. I told him that he knew I was a Conservative, that my friends were Conservatives and had always voted that ticket, and I saw nothing that had been done by the present government to induce me to change ; and moreover, I am a Conservative fisherman, I have earned the fishery bounty and your party have deprived me of my just claims to the bounty during the last few years, and I cannot think of voting for the candidate of a party that would not do me justice. Mr. McLellan said : I am sorry to hear you have lost your fishery bounty, but I will try to have it rectified, and if I do you will vote for me. The fisherman replied : I will see about voting, but this is only the same talk as we have heard before, and the same promises not fulfilled and I will not take your word. Mr. McLellan said : I will arrange it for you. Now, Mr. McLellan's house is not far from the church, he being a good church-goer, and on the Sunday before the election this fisherman was at church and he was called aside by Mr. McLellan who asked him to come to his house. Mr. McLellan took him into his house and took out of his pocket-book a bounty cheque for $3.50 that was sent to him by the Fisheries Department at Ottawa. Mr. McLellan said: Here is one cheque for the year 1898 and you will receive a cheque for the year 1899 in a short time when the fishery officer comes to St. Louis station on the line of the Prince Edward Island Railway. In about a week Mr. Davidson came with a bounty cheque and this fisherman received the two cheques, the one paid by Mr. McLellan of which he was deprived for two years, and the other paid by Mr. Davidson, both of which he had been deprived of because he was a Conservative and which were only given to him when they tried to bribe him. If you give this investigation demanded by Mr. Brennan, I am prepared to produce evidence to substantiate every word I have said in this House to-day. But, notwithstanding that the government played with loaded dice in the last election and expected to win the game, I am proud to say that the intelligent electors of West Prince saw through the schemes and tactics of the present government and returned me here to represent them. I am in parliament in the interest of these fishermen ; these men who toil from early morn until late at night going with their small boats out to sea endeavouring to make a living for themselves and their families. The fishing bounty paid by the government is only the interest on the award that was given to the government in consequence of the depletion of our fisheries by the American people, and whether he be a Liberal or a Conservative the man who proves his claim before the official should receive that bounty. It is a nefarious act on the part of any government to deprive the honest fisherman of his just claims in this regard. I demand, in the interests of justice and fair-play, that a disinterested and responsible man be appointed to go down to Prince Edward Island and investigate these transactions. I am prepared, as I said, with the best of evidence to substantiate every statement I have made.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 24) respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 31) respecting the Orford Mountain Railway Company.—Mr. Parmelee.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 8) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On section 5,

Mr. GEOFFRION. It has been asked by the company that the words 'interfere with or' be struck out, as they are completely useless, and may interfere with the effect of clause 6; so that the clause will read: 'This Act shall not lessen the borrowing powers of the Grand Trunk Railway Company,' &c.

Amendment agreed to; Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 48) respecting the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill (No. 49) respecting the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 50) respecting the Canadian Mutual Aid Society.—Mr. Sutherland, (Essex).

Bill (No. 51) to incorporate the Clergue Iron and Nickel-Steel Company of Canada.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 52) respecting the Vancouver and Lulu Island Railway Company.—Mr. Maxwell.

Bill (No. 53) respecting the Manitoba and North-west Loan Company (Limited).—Mr. Britton.

Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Fort Qu'Appelle Railway Company.—Mr. Douglas.

Bill (No. 59) to incorporte the Similkameen and Keremeos. Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

Bill (No. 61) respecting W. C. Edwards & Co. (Limited).—Mr. Rosamond.

THE BUDGET.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, would the right hon. leader of the House tell us whether the budget is to be down to-morrow or not?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes.

Mr. HACKETT.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman when I may expect the return in reference to the Halifax and St. John elevators, that I moved for on the 13th of February?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will make a note of it.

MONEY-LENDERS.

On the order:

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 3) respecting Money-Lenders.—Mr. Madore.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), I beg to move:

That the Order of this House that it go into Committee of the Whole to consider Bill (No. 3) entitled an Act respecting money lenders, be revoked, and that the same be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

I understand that at the last consideration of this Bill it was understood that the hon. member for Hochelaga would either move that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, or that it be referred to a special committee. He chose to have it referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, so I beg to move this motion.

Motion agreed to.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT.

On the order:

House in Committee on Bill (No. 10) to amend 'The Weights and Measures Act.'—Mr. Smith (Wentworth).

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). As there are a number of hon. gentlemen who would like to discuss this Bill, I would ask that it be allowed to stand.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is a very important measure, and perhaps the House will understand, if convenient to my hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Wentworth), that the Bill may be taken up this day week, next Wednesday evening.

Order allowed to stand.

VICTORIA DAY.

Mr. E. H. HORSEY (North Grey) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 33) respecting Victoria Day.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the second reading of the Bill entitled 'An Act respecting Victoria Day.' As I explained when asking the permission of the House to introduce it, this Bill provides for the setting apart of the 24th of May—the birthday of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, as a permanent public holiday throughout Canada.

I desire to trespass upon the patience of the House for a short time only, in order that I may state some of the reasons which, it has appeared to me, would amply justify this parliament in making permanent the holiday which heretofore—to as remote a day at least as the memory of any one present can well revert—has been considered the holiday 'par excellence' of Canada.

So far as the present generation is concerned, we who have been the personal subjects of Her late Majesty, who have been witnesses of the exercise of Her many good qualities of mind and heart, and who have felt the better for having lived contemporary with her. I take it, Sir, that we need no argument in order to agree that nothing we can reasonably do to honour her memory, should be left undone.

At the same time, it is right that we should realize that in passing this Bill we are legislating not only for ourselves, but for posterity as well, and therefore, in thus seeking to honour the memory of our late sovereign, we should, I think, satisfy ourselves of two things; that the process by which we propose to honour her memory, and the memory of the era in which she reigned, should be such as will, with reasonable certainty, be commendable to the good sense and convenience of future generations, as well as of our own, and we should also, I think, satisfy ourselves to the same degree of certainty, that the personality of the monarch, and the achievements of Her era will in the light of historic perspective stand out in sufficiently bold relief, and with a sufficiently unique grandeur that posterity will agree with us in saying that great was Victoria and glorious was her era. With regard to my first point—the fitness of the manner proposed in the Bill for the commemoration, I have only this to say, that in passing this Bill we are not attempting to force upon the people of this country any innovation the expediency of which may be doubtful. Not at all—for more than sixty years the people of Canada have enjoyed this holiday, and I think I am within the mark in saying that with each succeeding year it has grown in favour with them, until to-day the great masses of Canada could better afford to have any other holiday struck from off the calander than the 24th of May.

I do not think I am saying anything disrespectful to His Majesty the King, in stating, as I do, that from the very nature of things, the 9th of November can never take the place of the 24th of May in the hearts of the people of Canada. The season is not one so favourable for all the outdoor pastimes with which tradition in this country has associated the Queen's birthday.

And just here, Sir, I might pause to ask how hon. gentlemen who may oppose this Bill, propose to square themselves with the rising generation of both sexes, and with the picnickers, the excursionists, the devotees to our national and other games, and with the amateur fishermen as well. It will be no laughing matter, Sir, if hon. gentlemen antagonize these classes who constitute the overwhelming majority of our people. But to be serious, Sir. In passing this Bill we are not laying down any cast iron law by which the whole mass of the people will be obliged to celebrate, whether they will or no. The law will only apply strictly to public institutions and public offices, the will of the people will still decide with what measure of unanimity the day will be observed. All we ask is that by making it a legal holiday, the will of the people may have the opportunity of asserting itself. As to its probable fitness for future generations, I have only to say that every advance in science heretofore which has made locomotion and travel cheaper, easier and quicker, has added to the sum of human happiness derived from the day, and we may reasonably hope that the still greater progress yet to come along these lines, will make the day more necessary and more enjoyable even than it has been heretofore. The objection may be raised that we have enough holidays already in Canada. I answer that in two ways. In the first place I am not so sure that we have enough, for the whole tendency of the age is to keep humanity at high pressure—necessitating more breathing spells, and if that do not suffice, I answer it is unnecessary to make it an extra holiday, as no more suitable day than the King's Birthday, November 9th, could be had for our annual thanksgiving.

I have heard it suggested that we should not legislate in this matter until we learn what the home government proposes to do regarding it.

If, Sir, it were purely a matter of sentiment I could understand the force of the suggestion that the initiative should come from the heart of the empire. But combined with the question of sentiment there is also the question of expediency, and therefore, because in this country the day has always been kept as a holiday by the whole people in a way entirely unknown in England where it was simply a formal holiday observed by public institutions only. I do not see why we should await the initiative of the home authorities. The unanimity with which it has always been observed in this country demonstrates its usefulness and its suitability to the people and conditions of Canada. And, now as to my second point—the fitness of the personality and the era for so important a commemoration. It is not my purpose to attempt to add one word to the splendid panegyrics which have been uttered in this House and elsewhere throughout the world upon the life-work and character of Her late Majesty. I think that on this point Lord Roseberry exhibited even more than his usual propinquity, when he said the other day in Edinboro that 'All that can be said on this subject has been said and what yet remains to be spoken is apt either to be fulsome or to partake of platitude.' But, I submit this proposition to the judgment of this House, that what has been already said—and truly said—is ample to justify us in deciding—with reasonable certainty—not only that in all history heretofore, her personality and her life-work have been superbly unique among all earthly monarchs, but also that for long years to come hers will be the standard by which others in high places will be judged, and those approaching nearest to which will be deemed to have done themselves most honour and their country most good.

Nor do I intend to say anything in reference to the greatness of the achievements of the Victorian era as compared with those of any other former time, I do confess the theme a most inviting one, one which, I am bound to admit, I have had difficulty in restraining myself from entering upon ; but I have thought, that, after all, even though I succeeded in further convincing some hon. gentlemen of the supremacy of the Victorian age over all former periods in the world's history, I would probably have accomplished little that would be germane to my argument. Such a review would come with more reason from one who might be advocating the convocation of a national festival for the purpose of celebrating once and for all the great achievements of the Victorian age. My object, I confess, is more far-reaching, and therefore it is better that I should invite your attention, rather to those features in the achievements of Victoria's reign, which may make it worthy of special honour in future years, when all the recent progress in the sciences and in the arts will be as nothing in comparison to the inevitable marvels which will yet be revealed by man to men. I propose to refer to only three events in this connection, one more particularly confined to Canada, one to the empire and one to mankind at large. This portion of my task I confess to be the difficult one. In order that we should feel the necessity for the exercise of care in attempting to forecast what will in future years be considered the really great events of the Victorian age, we have only to recall one of the most elementary facts of historical teaching—that very often names and achievements which in their own day were considered truly great and imperishable have, by the sifting process of time, gradually lost their importance and their lustre, and have, in many cases, been consigned to innocuous and, in some, to dishonourable oblivion. I would, therefore, hesitate to suggest any particular achievement as having the necessary historic vitality for my purpose, but that I think a rule may be laid down by which, with reasonable precision, those achievements which will surely live in history may be separated from those which may not survive. It will, I think, be found that in almost every case those achievements which, in their own day, were judged really great, and whose reputation failed to successfully withstand the impact of time have been such as have appealed more especially to the tastes and opinions of their own day ; while, on the other hand, no achievement in history, I think, which has tended to the uplifting, to the ennobling or to the emancipation of mankind, which in its own day was considered really great, has ever in any history been entirely lost sight of, however its relative prominence may have been modified by historic perspective.

There are, I think, no more enduring landmarks in British history than those which mark the slow and painful progress of the British people from their condition of serfdom, prior to the days of John, down to the constitutional freedom we enjoy to-day. Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights, Habeas Corpus are historically imperishable, and therefore it is that I suggest, with considerable confidence, to this House, an event in Canadian history, which, I believe posterity will agree with us in saying was a great event—great because of its splendid effect upon the feelings and aspirations of the people and great still more because it marks the finish of the great struggle which, commencing with Magna Charta that guaranteed some few limited rights to the people at home terminated in so signal a triumph for freedom, as to secure, not only for the people of the parent state, but for their colonists as well the utmost limit of self-control. I refer to the establishment of responsible government in Canada.

In the wider sphere of British affairs the Victorian age will perhaps be deemed by posterity as worthy of very special recognition not only because it marked the end of the struggle for constitutional government, but also, and it may be still more, because it was in this age that the first germs of an Imperialism took root, which, I think, we may reasonably hope will be all powerful for good throughout the world based as it is upon the broad principle of democracy and backed up as it is by the united force of every British commonwealth. An Imperialism sufficiently strong to unite all parts of the empire in matters of common interests and questions of common good, and at the same time sufficiently elastic to permit of absolute freedom of action on the part of each portion of the empire in the local concerns of each.

And in the still wider field of universal human effort it may be stated that in days to come the era just closed will be recalled as that in which the philosophy propounded by Bacon was first practically applied to science and art, which, after all, is perhaps responsible not only for the marvellous advance in the sciences and arts in recent years, but which must, in the nature of things, be deemed the ultimate exciting cause of all future progress as well even to the time when everything will have been laid bare even to the uttermost limits of the finite. On this account it may be, though in this I hazard a guess only, that the nineteenth century will for all time, irrespective of what marvels the future may have in store, be looked upon as the greatest era in human affairs. The era in which human effort was first guided by a trained and progressive intelligence.

These are the only matters which I intend bringing to the attention of the House to-night. I recognize fully, none more than I, how inadequate my argument has been to the purpose, but for this I am sure you will not have far to seek the cause. I am very grateful for your kind indulgence to me a novice to these environments, and before I sit down let me recapitulate my reasons for asking the favourable consideration of the House to this Bill. The Bill should, I think, pass because the events of the Victorian era, in Canada, in the empire, and in the world at large are in many ways worthy of special commemoration, because the person of Her late Majesty, whose name it is proposed the day shall bear, is held in affectionate remembrance by us all and will for many years to come be the model for future monarchs, and is worthy of special commemoration, and because the way suggested of commemorating is one which suits the tastes and convenience of the Canadian people, and lastly, but by no means of the least importance, because the people of this country, I believe, want it so. I beg to move the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am altogether in sympathy with this Bill, if for no other reason than that it recalls to me boyhood recollections when we used to say at school :

The 24th of May is the Queen's birthday,
If you don't give us a holiday, we'll all run away.

And the hon. gentleman who proposed the Bill said that is one reason why we ought to have it. The children of this country think more of the Queen's birthday than of any other in the history of Canada. The 24th of May is really the May-Day of Canada. They have their May-Day in England, and the Queen's birthday in this country has been our May-Day, and I would not like to see that disappear. But I have heard another reason within the last two or three days why the number of holidays ought to be increased in this country, and that is because it would add another day of grace to those who have notes coming due. But there is one thing that we ought to bear in mind and which I hope the government will take into consideration, and that is that the King's birthday will now come in November. Thanksgiving Day comes about the same time, and there will be something of a clash between those two holidays. There will be a good deal of inconvenience to the business community if they have to celebrate the 9th of November and Thanksgiving Day about the same time. I hope the government will keep that in mind when they make their proclamation for Thanksgiving Day, and make it at least a month before or after the 9th of November. The feeling of the country is that Thanksgiving Day has been too late in the season, and ought to come earlier, probably early in October.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have nothing to add to the eloquent remarks with which the House has just been favoured by my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Horsey). The sense of the House seems to be in favour altogether of such a Bill being enacted, and that we should continue henceforth as in the past to celebrate the 24th of May. There is a good deal of force in what my hon. friend said a moment ago that we have been accustomed to look upon that day as almost sacred—not only by children but by men and women also. I will allow the second reading to take place to-day, but I would suggest to my hon. friend not to press his Bill to the committee stage until another sitting because its phraseology may require to be looked into.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

On motion of Prime Minister, the House adjourned at 8.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 14, 1901.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 67) to incorporate the Quebec Terminal and Railway Company.—Mr. Malouin.

QUESTIONS.

P.E.I.—AGRICULTURE, FORESTRY, ETC.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Who recommended a Mr. Kinsman as a scientific horticulturist to work in Prince Edward Island during the summer of 1899 ?
2. What amount did his mission cost ?
3. Was the minister satisfied with the result of his work ?
4. What is the government doing in order to secure steamships with proper cold storage for Prince Edward Island exports to Great Britain the coming season ?

5. Has the government any special plan for the aiding of agriculture in Prince Edward Island this year ? If so, what ? If not, why not ?

6. Has the government decided to do anything to prevent the impending loss of our forests or to arrange for restoration in sections already almost denuded of woods ? If so, what ? If not, why not before it is too late ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney A. Fisher) :

1. Mr. Kinsman was recommended by gentlemen whose acquaintance with him was sufficient to justify their recommendation and in whose judgment I have confidence.

2. His work cost $563.43 for expenses, and $304 for salary.

3. The report which he gave of his work was satisfactory.

4. The matter is under negotiation at the present time.

5. The government has no special plan for Prince Edward Island, but is dealing with it along with other parts of the Dominion.

6. The forests in Prince Edward Island are upon Crown lands or private property and thus are under control of the local government.

POSTMISTRESS OF DRAYTON.

Mr. McGOWAN—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What was the date of the appointment of Miss Schneider as postmistress of the village of Drayton, Centre Wellington?

2. What was the date of Miss Schneider's dismissal ?

3. What were the reasons for such dismissal ?

4. Were any complaints made to the department as to Miss Schneider's management of said post office ? If so, was any investigation held as to such complaints ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND :

1. Miss M. E. Schneider was appointed to the postmastership of Drayton, county Wellington, C.R., on the 30th June, 1896.

2. Miss Schneider was removed from the postmastership of Drayton on the 13th October, 1898.

3 & 4. It was deemed in the public interest that the change should be made, and the Postmaster General accepts full responsibility therefor.

MAIL CLERKS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked :

Whether it is the intention of the government to reward Messrs. T. B. Beddell, of New Brunswick, K. H. Murray and Captain W. R. Ecclestone, of the province of Ontario, Joseph Lellier, of the province of Quebec, and Rowan Johnston, of the province of Manitoba,—all five of them mail clerks, who served in South Africa, as forming part of the Canadian postal service for the several Canadian contingents, by promoting them to first-class positions in the civil service?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. The matter has not yet received the consideration of the government.

DUNDAS RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth) asked :

Why has the annual grant to the Dundas Rifle Association, for which appropriation was made, not yet been paid, though heretofore usually paid in September or October ? When may the association expect it ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). There is no association known as the Dundas Rifle Association in receipt of an annual grant from this department.

If the 77th Regiment Rifle Association is meant, this association was paid its annual grant last year.

CONTRACT WITH THE B. C. EXPRESS CO.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. What is the present contract price per annum paid to the British Columbia Express Company for carrying the mails from Ashcroft to the several places in Cariboo District ?

2. What mail routes does this contract cover, and how many trips per week are called for on each route ?

3. Had the previous contract expired by efluxion of time when the present contract was made ?

4. On what date was the present contract signed, and for how many years was it ?

5. For what reason was the contract renewed on October 1, 1899 ?

6. Were public tenders called for, or were any parties asked to tender other than the British Columbia Express Company ? If so, who ?

7. If not, why not ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND :

1. $23,250 a year.

2. Between Ashcroft and Barkerville—287 miles—semi-weekly from 15th May to 31st October, weekly for the remainder of the year.

Between Ashcroft Station and Clinton—32 miles—semi-weekly from 1st November to 14th May, weekly for remainder of the year.

Between Ashcroft and Lillooet—63 miles—weekly throughout the year.

Between Alkali Lake and Clinton—90 miles—weekly throughout the year.

Between 150-Mile House and Horsefly—40 miles—weekly throughout the year.

Between 150-Mile House and Keithley Creek—80 miles—weekly throughout the year.

Between Soda Creek and Alexis Creek—90 miles—weekly throughout the year.

3. No.

4. The contract was signed by the British Columbia Express Company on the 9th October, 1899.

5. Because the department had secured contractors who were performing the work in a satisfactory manner and at a reasonable rate, the amount previously paid being $27,445, and as they were willing to continue the service on the same terms and conditions, it was thought to be in the interest of the service, as prices were getting higher, to continue the contract with the same contractors.

6 & 7. Public tenders were called for in 1897, and the present contract is a renewal of the one made on the 1st July of that year.

MADOC MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CARSCALLEN asked :

1. Who is the contractor for carrying the mails from Madoc village to Central Ontario Railway station at Eldorado ?
2. When was the contract entered into, and for what length of time?
3. What amount is paid for the service ?
4. Were tenders advertised for, and for how long were such advertisements posted ?
5. Were any tenders received, and the amount of tenders, if any ?
6. Did the lowest tender receive the contract ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND. The service is performed by Mr. Joseph Vassau under a temporary agreement entered into on the 1st July, 1900. Mr. Vassau's contract expired on the 30th June, 1900, and it was proposed to put the service up to tender, but it was represented to the Postmaster General that the Eldorado Railway would be reopened within a short time, and that it would be better to postpone the making of a new four years' contract until the question of utilizing the railway for the conveyance of mails could be considered ; and the service has been performed since that time on the terms and conditions of the former contract.

The service is semi-daily, distance 7 miles, and the rate of pay $400 a year. The inspector in reporting on the service stated that the rate of pay was reasonable, and that the service had been satisfactorily performed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

He said : Mr. Speaker, for several years in succession, on occasions similar to this, I have had the good fortune to be able to congratulate the House and the country upon periods of great and steadily increasing prosperity. I rejoice to know that I am at liberty to make a similar statement to-day with respect to the affairs of Canada for the past year. In almost every department of industry in which the Canadian people are engaged there was a gratifying activity, and trade, commerce and manufactures flourished. Here and there, as may always be expected in a country of such vast extent and varied interests as prevail in Canada, some local condition was unfavourable, some drawback may have occurred. But in summing up the affairs of the country, we are able to describe the year as one of unexampled prosperity. Prosperity in trade and manufactures has brought prosperity to our national finances, and enabled me at the close of the year to announce results which it is not too much to say formed the most satisfactory financial statement that ever fell to the lot of a Minister of Finance to make in the Dominion of Canada. At a time of very considerable financial stringency, at a time, too, when our expenditures were being conducted on a very liberal scale, we found our revenues so generous that we were able to provide for all our needs without having resort to fresh loans, or even to an issue of treasury bills.

A glance at the receipts and expenditures in comparison with the previous year will show that there was a general increase all along the line. I have the honour to present this statement :

	1898-9.	1899-1900.	Increase.
Customs	$25,316,841	28,374,147	3,057,306
Excise	9,641,227	9,868,075	226,848
Post office	3,193,777	3,205,535	11,758
Miscellaneous	8,589,404	9,582,237	992,833
	$46,741,249	$51,029,994	$4,288,745

It may be remembered that in speaking of the prospects of the year in the budget speech of last March, I expressed the opinion that the receipts for the year would pass the $50,000,000 mark ; the figures I have just given will show that that anticipation was realized, the receipts of the year having been over $51,000,000. The chief increase, as may be readily understood, was in customs. That increase, to some extent, was due to the increased imports, and to some extent, no doubt, to the higher values which prevailed. We have increases in the post office which are very gratifying. Of course it is well known that a year or two ago the post office revenues fell off—not a matter of regret altogether, because we know that that falling off was caused by the very important reform brought about by my hon. colleague the Postmaster General, who is now absent, wherein he established a two-cent rate instead of a three-cent rate, one of the most important reforms in the Post Office Department, and one which I am sure the country has fully appreciated.

If, for a time, therefore, our revenue from that source fell off it would not be altogether a cause for regret. I am glad to be able to say that we have now reached the point where we shall be able to make comparisons with previous years under the three-cent rate. In January last past, we had turned the corner in that respect. Up to that date, our revenue was, under the two-cent rate not quite so large as it was under the three-cent rate ; but, in January, 1901, under the two-cent rate, the revenue of the Post Office Department was $398,289, while in the corresponding month of January, 1898, under the three-cent rate the revenue was $368,941, showing that now, under the two-cent rate we are receiving more money in the way of revenue in the Post Office Department than we formerly received when the three-cent rate prevailed. Under the head of miscellaneous revenues there is a considerable increase, the largest item being in respect to railways. There is an increase of $828,344 under that head. It is well to remember that, while we are spending largely increased sums upon the Intercolonial Railway in particular, we are also having largely increased receipts, and it may be well in this case to make a comparison between 1896 and 1900. The revenue of the Intercolonial Railway in 1896, being the year ending the 30th June, was $2,957,640. The revenue for last year was $4,552,071, showing an increase in the receipts of the Intercolonial Railway between 1896 and 1900 of $1,594,-431. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has to come to the House frequently for increased appropriations for this road, and it is well that when he shall do so we shall keep these facts in mind, and realize that owing to the greater development of the Intercolonial Railway, and of the trade of the country generally, the receipts of that important public work are now much larger than they were before. Our total revenue for the year which has passed was $51,-029,994.02. Our total expenditure, chargeable to consolidated fund account, that is our total expenditure for what may be described as the ordinary purposes of government, was $42,975,279.51, showing a surplus on the year's operations of no less a sum than $8,054,714.51. This surplus, Mr. Speaker, was the largest that has ever been known in the history of the Dominion of Canada. I have prepared a statement showing the surpluses and deficits for the last four years, and the following are the figures :

In 1897 there was a deficit of $519,981.44, in 1898 there was a surplus of $1,722,712.33, in 1899 there was a surplus of $4,837,749, and in 1900 there was the surplus that I have just mentioned of $8,054,714.51. Our surpluses thus have aggregated $14,615,-175.84. Deduct $519,981.44, the deficit for the first year, which was, however, hardly under our control, but we will pass that point now,—deduct the deficit of that year from the surpluses of succeeding years, and we find that there has been a net surplus for the four years as between the revenue and the ordinary expenses of government of $14,095,194.40. So far I have dealt with what we call the expenditure on consolidated fund account, which represents the ordinary expenses of government. There is, of course, another class of expenditure which figures in our account, which is commonly called capital expenditure, including public works, railways, railway subsidies and various special items of an unusual character. These expenditures for the year ended June 30, 1900, were as follows :—

Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways	$3,308,894 31
Canals	2,639,564 93
Public works	1,089,827 29
Dominion lands	199,470 09
Militia	230,850 51
Canadian Pacific Railway	236 11
Total	$7,468,843 24

To this must be added for railway subsidies, including $340,000 paid during that year to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, $725,-720.35, and there is a further item to be added, being the expenses of the South African contingent and the Halifax garrison, amounting to $1,547,623.74. These capital and special expenses for the year amounted to $9,742,187.33. Now, with these large expenditures for the liberal maintenance of the public services, with large expenditures for railways and public works, and with special expenditures in connection with the South African war, it would not have been a matter of surprise if it had been necessary to increase the public debt. Yet, we have the gratifying statement that we have provided for all these large expenditures, and that we have been able not to increase the public debt, but actually to reduce the public debt to the extent of $779,639.71. The net debt on June 30, 1899, was $266,273,446.60 ; the net debt at the same date in 1900 was $265,493,806.89, showing a decrease of $779,-639.71, as already stated.

Now, that is a very gratifying statement, but it is one which it is only possible to make in very prosperous times. In only two years prior to this, in the history of the Dominion of Canada, was the Finance Minister able to make the statement that there had been a reduction in the public debt. This occurred in the year 1871, when my predecessor in office was Sir Francis Hincks, and it also occurred in 1882, when Sir Leonard Tilley was Minister of Finance, and when there was a reduction in the public debt of a very considerable sum. It is not therefore reasonable to expect that this reduction in the public debt can frequently occur. In a country like Canada, which after all is a comparatively new country in which there will always be demands for public works, and in which there will be expenditures outside of what may be called the ordinary expenses of government, it is only reasonable to suppose that we shall incur obligations which will necessitate occasionally some addition to the public debt. I think that if the addition to the public debt should only be a moderate one we will have no reason to complain.

Turning now to the affairs of the current year, which is to close on the 30th June next, I find that our revenue up to the 10th March was $34,942,177.95, an increase over the corresponding date last year of $1,227,693.01.

The customs revenue, which is always an item of chief importance, remains up to date substantially the same as it was a year ago, and I do not expect that from this time forward we can expect any material increase in that item. In railways and post office and excise there has been a considerable increase, and we anticipate that there will be some further increase before the year closes.

Mr. WALLACE. How much increase in the excise ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the figures at hand, but I will give them to the hon. gentleman later. I estimate that the total revenue for the current year, to end on June 30 next, will be $52,750,000, or an increase of $1,720,000 over the revenue of the previous year.

Coming now to the expenditure account for the current year. The expenditure up to March 10, on consolidated fund, was $27,731,602.04, so that, if we had an increased revenue, we have also had some increase in expenditure as well. We have some supplementary estimates yet to bring down for the current year which will, of course, swell our existing appropriations. I estimate that when the year's affairs are closed, including these supplementary appropriations, we shall find the expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund amounting as near as may be to $46,400,000. With an estimated revenue of $52,750,000, and a probable expenditure of $46,400,000, I reach the conclusion that at the close of the present year we shall be able to show another surplus amounting to $6,350,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This, Sir, is not so large a surplus as that of the past year, but I think we shall all agree that if the accounts when closed will show a surplus as large as that, it may be regarded as very satisfactory.

The capital expenditure of the current year, to March 10, was $6,584,309.42. We have still to pay very considerable sums on account of railway subsidies, canals, and so forth, and I estimate that the total expenditure chargeable to capital for the current year will reach $10,700,000. If we deduct from this our surplus and our sinking fund, I am of opinion that we shall have to make some addition to our public debt, but I think it will be a very moderate one, and will not exceed $1,800,000. That is not a very large sum, especially if we take into consideration the additions to the public debt in days gone by. Our administration is four years old, and as one naturally wishes to prepare a statement concerning the period of his own government, I have prepared a statement of the state of the debt in these four years.

Debt statement for four years.

	Increase.	Decrease.
1896-7	$3,041,163
1897-8	2,417,802
1898-9	2,317,047
1899-1900		$779,639
	$7,776,012	$779,639
	779,639
Total increase in four years..	$6,996,373
Average increase for four years	1,749,093
Average increase for 18 years, 1878-1896	6,563,075

Therefore, deducting the decrease, we find that in the four years we have increased the public debt to the extent of $6,996,373. The average increase for the four years is therefore $1,749,093 per annum, against an average increase in the previous eighteen years of $6,563,075 per annum.

With regard to the next fiscal year, beginning on 1st July next, it is too soon for us to attempt to make anything like a close estimate. I have already submitted to parliament estimates on account of consolidated fund amounting to $44,102,323.56, and on capital account amounting to $6,296,500, making a total of $50,398,823.56, including both capital and consolidated fund. We have supplementary estimates yet to come which must considerably add to these appropriations, and there are special expenditures likely to come upon us in the next year of which we must take note. We shall have to provide, in addition to considerable expenditures in the usual way on railway subsidies and so forth, for a very considerable sum in the shape of bounties on iron and steel. Hitherto these bounties have not in any one year amounted to any very great sum, but hon. gentlemen are well aware from what we have seen in the public press as well as from the discussions in this House, that the iron and steel industry is now being developed on a very large scale and as a consequence of that we shall be called upon to pay a very considerable sum as bounty. It is difficult to form any definite opinion as to what this will amount to. We know the amount of bounty that is to be paid per ton, but the quantity that will be produced is of course a matter concerning which we have no means of knowing definitely. I assume, however, that we shall have to pay next year at least $1,000,000 in bounties on iron and steel, and I shall not be surprised if the sum has to be somewhat larger. Therefore, we shall be obliged to provide for a very considerable expenditure for the coming year. As to revenue, I do not expect that we can keep on at the rate of increase which has been so marked during the past three or four years. I think we have probably now reached about the crest of the wave of prosperity. I do not expect that we shall have any serious reverses. I think the business of Canada has been developed during the past four or five years upon very safe and sound lines. I think there has been to a very large extent an absence of that inflation which is so apt to mark a period of good times. I am of opinion that the business of the country as a whole has been so carefully conducted and is on such a sound basis that we are not likely to suffer any serious reverses, but I do not think it is reasonable to expect that we can go on increasing our business as rapidly as we have during the past few years. What may happen is that we might suffer a check. Perhaps it might be best described as a period of rest, not of going backward, when Canada like a young giant will gather new strength and advance again by leaps and bounds as she has during the past four years. Perhaps, I will be pardoned if I give somewhat hurriedly a few of the leading facts which mark the great prosperity of the past year. These facts can, of course, be obtained by those who take the trouble to go through the Trade and Navigation Returns, but, they may be conveniently presented in a condensed form in the budget speech. It was indeed a banner year so far as the trade and commerce of the country is concerned. The aggregate foreign trade of the year 1900 was $381,517,236. In the previous year it was $321,661,213. The increase in the aggregate foreign trade of Canada over the previous year was $59,856,023. When I remind the House that the increase in the whole eighteen years of the national policy was only $66,000,000, and when I show that in one year only of the present administration, the increase was over $59,000,000 and nearly $60,000,000, hon. gentlemen will be able to measure the vast progress that has been made in trade of the country.

Mr. COCHRANE. When you abandoned the national policy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, our hon. friends opposite have been abandoned; we are still here. The following summary is interesting and instructive :

In view of the discussions which have occasionally taken place in the House with regard to the increase of the imports from Great Britain for home consumption, I have placed together the figures for a series of years :

1895.....	$31,131,737
1896.....	32,979,742
1897.....	29,412,188
1898.....	32,500,917
1899.....	37,060,123
1900.....	44,789,730

It will be observed, Sir, that the imports from Great Britain had been declining steadily when the policy of the present government, including the preferential tariff, was adopted. That decline was immediately arrested, and from that time on the imports from Great Britain began to increase, so that now, as compared with 1897, they show an increase to the extent of about 50 per cent.

I confess that I hardly know just how this increase of imports may be viewed by some of our hon. friends opposite. Sometimes the criticism is that by our preferential tariff we have allowed goods to come in from Great Britain and have thereby injured our own manufactures.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear, says my hon. friend opposite. But at other times the argument is that the preferential tariff has made no difference in the trade with Great Britain, but that trade has increased generally and that the imports from Great Britain have only kept pace with the general increase of business throughout the world; and when we have contended, as we have, that the preferential tariff has been an instrument in increasing the imports from Great Britain, we have met the reply that it has not had that effect at all, but that the increased trade with Great Britain has come about by means altogether irrespective of the preferential tariff.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman give the increase of imports from the United States during the same period?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, Mr. Speaker, but if it will help my hon. friend very much, I will make an admission at once. We import from the United States a large quantity of the things we require, not to please the United States, but to please ourselves. We import the raw materials from the United States, which go to make the manufacturers of Canada prosperous. If it be the policy of our hon. friends opposite to keep out the raw materials which our manufacturers require, that is not the policy of the present government.

In this connection perhaps I may be permitted to say a word as to a contention which has been advanced at times, and which has found a suggestion this session in the form of several questions by our hon. friends opposite. The argument has been used sometimes in the public press, and sometimes on the floor of this House, that our preferential tariff is admitting a large quantity of foreign goods—goods which are not British at all. Now, that is a fair matter for investigation. It was no part of our intention to extend the benefits of the preferential tariff to these foreign nations. The intention was that goods coming from Great Britain and purporting to be British goods should be bona fide products of Great Britain. But, of course, we have to remember that Great Britain imports great quantities of raw materials and articles in the first process of manufacture, and improves or finishes them; and then she is the great shipping mart for those goods throughout the wide world; and it has been suggested by a question put by one of our hon. friends opposite that perhaps we ought to provide that the preferential tariff shall apply only to British goods, meaning materials which are grown or produced in Great Britain and undergo all the processes of manufacture in Great Britain. I had to reply that such a policy would amount to a practical repeal of the preferential tariff, because Great Britain has to import large quantities of materials out of which she produces her manufactured goods. But it has been represented that the preferential tariff is evaded, and that goods of Belgian or German or other foreign origin are brought in under it. I want to say that if any information can be furnished by any hon. gentleman in the House or by any gentleman outside, it will help us to investigate that matter; for we have every desire to see that the intentions of the preferential tariff in that respect are carried out in good faith. As to whether our present regulation for distinguishing between British and foreign goods is sufficient may also be a fair matter of inquiry. We think we have probably reached a sound conclusion in that respect when we have determined that 25 per cent of the value of an article being of British labour or industry shall give it the stamp of a British manufacture and entitle it to the benefits of the preferential tariff. But while we think we have probably reached a sound conclusion in that regard, I quite admit that it is a matter for investigation and inquiry; and if any information can be furnished which will lead us to believe that the intention of the government with respect to the preferential tariff is being evaded, either through fraud on the part of importers or through error in our own calculation as to the proper proportion of British labour, we shall deem it to be our duty to give the matter every consideration. I have a statement here, again taking a period of four years for convenience, showing the exports of the produce of Canada for two periods of four years each, and have classified them so that the exports of each class are shown. The statement is as follows:—

The question of the rate of taxation under the customs tariff has been frequently discussed, and perhaps a word or two concerning it, based upon the figures of the past year, will not be out of place. If we take the imports for home consumption and the duty collected, we will find that the proportion of duty in 1896 on all imports for home consumption was 18·28, and by the same statement for 1900, it was 15·98, making a difference of 2·30 or one-eighth of the whole duty.

If that were to be taken as a correct statement of the whole matter, it would show that the difference between the operation of our tariff on the imports of last year and that of the old tariff, were it still in operation, would have amounted to $4,161,918.

But there is a point concerning which we have occasionally had a discussion here with regard to the imports of corn, and I wish to qualify the statement I have just made in the light of what has happened with respect to our trade in corn. Under the old tariff corn was dutiable, and consequently it was important that the man handling it should discriminate very carefully between the corn for home consumption, which paid a duty and that in transit for exportation, which paid no duty. But when corn was made free the necessity for that careful discrimination no longer existed. There being no duty, the man who imported the corn might enter it at the customs for home consumption and export it a week later. If we take the quantity of corn exported and thus try to obtain a fair comparison with the former condition of affairs and make allowance in that way for the portion of the corn which increased the value of our imports, when in reality it was sent abroad and did not enter into home consumption—making allowance for that, we shall find that the average rate for last year was not 15·98 but 16·41, and I am content to take that statement instead of the former one for the purposes of comparison. Taking the rate 16·41 as the rate for the past year as against 18·28 in 1896, we shall reach the conclusion that if the old tariff had remained in operation and been applied on the imports of last year, the duty levied would have been larger to the extent of $3,292,230. In other words, if the old tariff had been in operation as applied to the imports for home consumption last year, it would have levied and taken from the pockets of the people $3,292,230 more than was taken by the tariff of the present government.

I am going to ask the House to bear with me a few minutes while I present some statistics which are likely to be tedious, but which will bear study.

It will be remembered that on several occasions in connection with budget speeches, series of diagrams were published which served to show very graphically the growth and progress of the business of the country from year to year. I have not done that this year. An attempt to make a statement following up the growth of business every year since confederation would be very tedious. But I am quite sure that in the convenient form of a budget speech, we should like to have some figures which would give an idea of the progress Canada has made since confederation to the present day, and if I can do that in a condensed way, it will be useful. Instead of giving a yearly statement, I propose to take leaps of five years and only make the statement for every fifth year.

One measure of the growth of the business of the country is commonly considered the circulation of Dominion notes of all denominations.

I thought, Sir, that, in the absence of diagrams, these condensed statements would give us a hurried review of the progress of Canada in these various departments from the time of confederation down to the present.

So much has been said about the Yukon, that I am sure that the House will be interested in knowing something about the receipts and expenditures of that district. I have first made a statement of the royalties, because that is a special item, and, perhaps, should be separated from the general receipts :

Royalties—Yukon.

1898	$287,423 55
1899	575,812 79
1900	730,771 99

	$2,040,192 61

Showing that in the three and a half years, we have received in the way of royalties alone from the Yukon the sum of $2,040,000, I have had a larger statement prepared, however, which is not confined to royalties, but will show briefly the receipts and expenditures of all classes on account of the Yukon territory :

It is but fair to state that the Yukon should be credited, I think, with a further sum. These figures represent only the actual collections in the Yukon. But we all know that a very large proportion of the goods imported at Vancouver or Victoria, or, for that matter, in the eastern cities also, while paying duties at these respective ports of entry, are afterwards shipped to the Yukon, and, in that way, I have no doubt, the Yukon has added very largely to our revenues in addition to the sums I have stated. As to expenditures, the following table will give the figures :

EXPENDITURE.

Excess of receipts over expenditure on consolidated fund	$697,382 96
Public Works capital	568,874 90
Excess of receipts over all expenditure	$128,508 06

Thus we find, if we take all the expenditures chargeable to consolidated fund and this extra sum chargeable to capital, our revenues from the Yukon, without counting the indirect revenues I have referred to, amount to $128,508.06 over and above all expenditures in that district.

Now, it was the policy of the government, at the beginning—to use an expression which has become current—to make the Yukon pay for the Yukon; and that has been carried out. And, now, Sir, in view of this very handsome financial statement to the credit of the Yukon, and in view also of the desire of the government to encourage the development of mining in the Yukon as a permanent business, now that the first rush for rich creeks has passed, my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has been able to announce a very important step—that is, that the royalty in the Yukon district instead of being 10 per cent, shall hereafter be 5 per cent. That, I have no doubt, will be a very important concession for the development of the country. We do not think that a reduction was needed earlier. So long as the first flush of the Yukon excitement was on, the people were ready to go in and pick up their nuggets and pay the royalty cheerfully. But that is over, and, if that is to be a permanent mining district, mining must be carried on under better conditions than heretofore. Everything that increases the cost of mining is a disadvantage to the miner and to the development of the district. So, my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has concluded to advise that this reduction should be made and we have accepted it. This does not necessarily mean that the revenue will be reduced by half. For my part, I am a great believer in the idea that you can sometimes get as much money out of a low duty as out of a high duty. I am not prepared to say that it will be so in this case, but, undoubtedly the tendency of high duties is to lead to smuggling. Therefore, with a less royalty than we have heretofore had we shall be able the better to collect the revenue, and I trust we shall not have so great a falling off in the revenue from that source as might seem probable from the mere announcement of the reduction of the duty.

The House will be glad to be informed as to the expenditure on the South Africa contingents and the garrison at Halifax. We appropriated two millions for the war in South Africa, and the probability is that that will just about cover our expenditure.

The following figures show the expenditures upon the contingents :

Expenditure on South African Contingents.

1899-1900—
First contingent	$ 305,503 57
Second "	946,714 48
General	185,387 77
	$1,437,605 82
Less refunds	8,247 22
Total expended 1898-1900	$1,429,358 60
Expended to Feb. 26, 1901, from June 30, 1900	539,356 77
Estimated further expenditure	35,000 00
Probable total expenditure	$2,003,715 37

Thus it will be seen that the expenditure will probably be very slightly over the amount already appropriated. Over and above that, however, we have made provision for a special item with respect to the garrison at Halifax. It will be remembered that it was the desire of Her Majesty's government to withdraw the Imperial regiment from Halifax in order that they might take part in the war, and the suggestion was thrown out that Canada might garrison Halifax. That was very cheerfully done. What may be the future of the arrangement we have yet to know and to announce to the House. The following figures will show the expenditure on the Halifax garrison :

Halifax Garrison.

1899-1900	$116,265 14
Expended between June 30, 1900, and Feb. 26, 1901	184,711 73
Estimated further expenditure, 1900-1901	85,000 00
	$387,976 87

Recapitulation—South Africa Contingents and Halifax Garrison.

The expenditure on the South African war and Halifax garrison may be summarized thus :

Expended in 1899-1900 for South Africa contingents and the Halifax garrison	$1,547,623 74
Expended from June 30, 1900, to Feb. 28, for South Africa contingents and Halifax garrison	724,068 50
Estimated further expenditure to June 30, 1900	120,000 00
Total	$2,391,692 24

So that at the close of the fiscal year the account will probably stand, $2,000,000 expended for the contingent in South Africa and $387,000 expended on account of the garrison at Halifax. I am glad to be able to make a very satisfactory statement with regard to the credit and standing of Canada abroad. Happily, under all governments Canada's credit for a long time has stood strong, and we have reason to congratulate ourselves that during the past two or three years circumstances have helped us to add to that strength. The House will remember in the last parliament we passed an Act whereby, in conjunction with an Imperial Act, arrangements were made for placing Canadian securities upon what is called the Trustee List of England. It has happened that during the past year or two the condition of the money market in England has been one of considerable severity. If we were merely to look at the quotations for our loans without reference to the conditions surrounding them, we might easily reach the conclusion that Canada had merely held the credit she had several years ago. I think, however, we can comfort ourselves in the belief that we have strengthened our position somewhat. Our 2½ per cent loan, which I had the pleasure of placing in London in 1897, was issued at a little more than 91½, £90 10s. and a fraction. These stocks went as high in 1898 as 94½, and they have been as low at times as 89. In the latest quotations our Canadian 2½ per cents are quoted at 92, which is only a fraction better than they were when they were placed on the market in 1897. But if we would correctly understand our position in this respect, we will look at the price of standard British securities, the consols, as they stood in 1897, and as they stand now. We find that in 1897, when our loan was issued at 91½ and a fraction more, British consols were quoted as high as 113⅞. To-day Canada's securities stand a fraction better than they did when they were placed on the market in 1897, but British consols, which were quoted as high in that year as 113⅞, in consequence of the stringency of the money market and the difficulties arising from the war, have fallen as low as 97¾. So when you come to compare the conditions as they were in 1897 and the conditions to-day, you will discover that while in the actual condition of the money market all securities have fallen to a considerable extent, while the standard security of all British consols has fallen in a very marked degree, the securities of Canada have held their own and stand to-day a fraction better than when the loan was placed in the year 1896.

I have referred, Mr. Speaker, to the question of the bounties on steel and iron. There is a matter in connection with that subject which I should now mention to the House. The policy of paying bounties on steel and iron was adopted a good many years ago, and by some strange process, the exact reason for which one cannot easily find, that was never made a direct payment from the treasury. A curious process was adopted whereby these payments were treated as refunds or drawbacks in the Customs Department. Now, if a man pays duties under an error and has to have a refund, that is right ; the amount should be deducted from the customs revenue, because it affects the customs revenue. But the payment of a bounty on steel and iron was certainly not a refund, because the money never went into the treasury, and why it should come out of the treasury in the form of a refund or payment in that way, I have not been able to ascertain. However, that was the method established and we have followed it up to the present time. The consequence has been that our actual revenue for customs has been stated somewhat less than it really was, because it was charged with these sums. Hitherto they have not been much, they have been much in the aggregate, but in any one year up to the present time the amount has not been large enough to become a matter of any considerable consequence. But with the prospect of having to pay very large sums now and for several years to come for that service, I think the House will agree with me that it is time there was a change in the method of book-keeping. I propose, therefore, that hereafter, beginning with the 1st of July next, whenever payments are made in the way of bounties on iron and steel, they should be paid directly from the treasury and should be shown in the public accounts in that way, instead of appearing in the Auditor General's Report, which is the only place you can conveniently find them, as a refund of duty, which is of course entirely incorrect. Now, I think the House generally will agree with me that this is a wise policy. There is one other point in connection with the matter. If these bounties were to be paid continuously from year to year as part of our ordinary expenditure, we should of course have to charge them against the revenue of the year, they would have to be charges against income. But the House is aware that we are treating this as a temporary subsidy for the establishment of a great industry, and we propose that that should cease to exist this year in a short time—in six years from the 1st of July next. We propose, therefore, to treat this precisely as we do a railway subsidy, and that it should appear in a statement of the public accounts exactly as a railway subsidy now appears. That will make a slight change in some comparisons that are occasionally made. If we want to be absolutely exact in our calculation with respect to customs revenue and with respect to surplus and deficit, a careful note must be taken by those interested in such discussions, and it will be admitted that it is better that we should make a change in the way I propose than that we should go on paying large sums of money, one million, two millions, some persons say three, four or five millions, in the way that it has hitherto been paid, thus diminishing our apparent customs revenue, instead of paying it as a direct charge upon the country.

Mr. WALLACE. Will it be charged to consolidated revenue fund ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will not be charged to consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. WALLACE. Why ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be treated as a railway subsidy. We have treated railway subsidies, not as chargeable to the ordinary revenue of the year, but to a special revenue, and not as if it were to become an ordinary and annual charge. If it were a continual charge it would be perfectly right to charge it against the consolidated fund, that is, against the ordinary expenditure of the country ; but as it is to be a special charge, existing only for a short period and designed as a subsidy for establishing a great industry, we propose to treat it exactly as the grant of a similar sum of money for the encouragement of a railway.

Mr. WALLACE. Then we understand it will be charged to capital account ?

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, the book-keepers make a fine distinction, which perhaps neither my hon. friend nor myself clearly see, between capital account and railway subsidies. Perhaps the theory upon which that has been done is this : That if you make a public work, even though it is only a hole in the ground, it belongs to the Dominion, but a subsidized railway does not belong to the Dominion. That is the theory, at all events. We do not call it, technically, capital account. It is charged to a special account, but in the sense which the hon. gentleman has in his mind it is capital account, inasmuch as it is not charged in the ordinary expenditure of the year.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to make any changes in the tariff. In saying that I do not for one moment assume that the tariff is perfect, I quite realize that imperfections may be shown, I realize that here and there some special interest would be pleased if we were to make some change. I am not prepared to say that there are not some cases in which there are inequalities which might better be remedied. But there are not many items in the tariff which can stand absolutely alone. Occasionally, a man comes to me and says : Mr. Fielding, I entirely agree with your policy in having a stable tariff ; we do not want to make changes generally, but we want you to make this particular change, and everybody will be perfectly satisfied. But I have not found that everybody would be satisfied with the particular change which my particular friend would desire. As a rule, the tariff items have relation one to another, and it is not easy to make any considerable number of changes without opening the door to a wide revision of the tariff. I think the business men of the country have appreciated the value of some measure of stability in the tariff. I have again and again expressed the opinion that it was better we should bear some imperfection and some inequalities than to be constantly engaged in the process which is irreverently described as tariff tinkering.

Therefore, we say, considering the tariff has only been in force for four years, that we think it is not unreasonable that it shall continue for the present without the changes that some desire to have, for some will always think that it might be a little better for them, and they are patiently waiting for the day to come when there shall be a wider revision than is possible to-day and when possibly we may be able to do some of the things that they desire to-day. I think, that, while, here and there, some particular set of people, or some particular interest, would prefer that we would make changes, the judgment of the country will be that it is better to have some stability about the tariff and not make any changes at the present time.

I have stated that we shall make no changes, but that is not strictly correct, and

I shall qualify that statement in respect to one item, which is scarcely in the nature of a change but rather in the nature of an explanation of a feature of the tariff adopted last year. We have been asked to consider the question of establishing the beet-root sugar industry in this country. We have been asked to grant bounties to that industry and we have not been able to comply with that request. We found that the bounty system, adopted some years ago and put in operation, was not successful, and we are not quite satisfied yet that we would be justified in granting bounties to revive that business. In saying that it is not my wish to discredit, if I could, and I could not because my knowledge would not permit me to do so, the statements of gentlemen who have represented to us that the conditions in the province of Ontario to-day are much better than the conditions were in the province of Quebec and that, therefore, they could probably make the industry a success. We think, at all events, that we have not yet reached the point that would justify us in reviving the bounty system, which was tried before and which was a failure. At the same time, we, last year, made a concession to this industry in the form of free machinery. It was represented to us that they were hoping to secure a bounty from the Ontario legislature, and that if, in addition to that, we could grant them exemption from duty on the machinery, it would be a very valuable concession, inasmuch as machinery is a very large item in the cost of a beet-root sugar factory. Responding to that wish—of course, there are many who would have been pleased had we gone farther, but, responding to that extent—we introduced an item into the tariff for the purpose of making machinery free, but it was qualified with the words that the machinery should be of a class not made in the Dominion of Canada. That is the usual condition of any exemption of that character. It has been represented to us that that qualification, as respects the machinery being made in Canada, prevents the concession becoming of any substantial value to the promoters of this industry. It is represented, and it seems to me to be reasonable, that a beet-root sugar plant is a somewhat delicate piece of machinery and that it is important that it should all be made, or controlled, by one manufacturer or contractor, so that he may be held responsible for the equipment of the whole factory, and if he is obliged to buy one piece of machinery in Canada and another in the United States there is an absence of that harmonious co-operation that is essential to success. Taking that into consideration, we have concluded to interpret our Act of last year, and to introduce an amendment which will make it clear that for one year, reserving the question as to whether circumstances will warrant us in continuing it, we will permit the free admission, under any regulations that may be made by the Customs Department, of machinery of every kind imported for the purpose of equipping a beet-root sugar factory into the Dominion. We think, if the industry is to be put on a basis of business, if the industry is as promising a one for the Dominion as it is said to be, with the bounty which is allowed by the legislature of Ontario, and with this valuable concession, for it is a valuable concession, in respect to the machinery, an opportunity will be allowed for giving that business a fair trial in the province of Ontario. Such, however, is our hope, and I have no doubt my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) will be able to lend the assistance of his department. I am told that one of the greatest difficulties that they have to contend with in this business, is, in the cultivation of a beet of the proper strength and of the proper quality. That is a matter coming particularly within the authority of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and I have no doubt that he will be glad to lend the assistance of his department in the way of instruction, information, lectures, circulars and literature, or in any direction that tends to improve the cultivation of the beet.

Now, a marked characteristic of the present session has been short speeches and I desire to have the budget speech respond to that general feeling. After all, the only question of real importance in the budget speech, outside of the general information it contains and which may be interesting, the thing that always interests people in the budget speech is the question of tariff changes, and as we have no tariff changes to announce, there is no reason why I should occupy the time of the House with an extended speech. The tariff policy we have to offer to-day is the tariff policy which we adopted in 1897 and which we have continued up to the present time. It is a tariff policy based upon the necessities of our revenue, a revenue tariff, which incidentally affords a very considerable degree of encouragement to those engaged in Canadian industries, and having as its leading principle the principle of the British preferential tariff. I am afraid that on that question we are as wide as ever from our hon. friends opposite. Perhaps it is not easy for me to determine how wide the difference is between us, in view of some of the conflicting statements hon. gentlemen have made from time to time, but I suppose I shall not be wrong if I say that the ground taken by hon. gentlemen opposite is, that while they are in favour of the principle of a British preferential tariff, they are opposed to what they call a one-sided preference.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear ; I am glad to receive these hear, hears, because they show that I have correctly described, as I desire to do, the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite. They say that they are opposed to a one-sided preference and they say our preference is a one-sided one.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear; and again I am glad to have it. Surely if a one-sided preference is bad, and if our preference is a one-sided one, there is only one thing for hon. gentlemen to do, and that is to bring down a resolution to repeal the British preferential tariff.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am bound to believe that they will do so, and if so, of course we will have at once the issue joined between us. We can respect their view although we differ from it. But, we will know exactly where we stand and we will know where they stand. They have held that we did wrong in granting a preference to the goods of Great Britain without demanding a preference for Canada in the markets of Great Britain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Again, those comforting hear, hears, which show that I am correctly giving the views of my hon. friends. They have been pleased to try to persuade themselves and try to persuade the public that the preference in the English market, which they desire, can be had for the asking. Year after year they have endeavoured to persuade themselves of that. I suppose, that, like a man who tells the same story again and again until he persuades himself that it is true, many hon. gentlemen opposite have persuaded themselves they can easily obtain that preference in the English market. We thought that the utterances of the English press, the articles published in the great British journals, the statements of the leading public men in both political parties, and most of all the statements of such men as Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach and the Duke of Devonshire, made it perfectly clear that that preference, which hon. gentlemen opposite believed it was so easy to get, could not be obtained in the English market, and that view we still hold. The only new incident that has occurred that I can recall since I last discussed this subject here, was that which occurred in connection with the meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce in London last summer. There the question was raised in a very gentle and modest form; in the form of a resolution asking Her Majesty's government to appoint a royal commission to inquire into the question of Imperial trade. But even in that innocent form, so innocent and harmless that it is difficult to see how any one would oppose it, we find that when they asked a hearing before the British Prime Minister to present their resolution, he stated that the time was not opportune to consider it and he declined to receive the deputation. And then, discouraged and discomforted by the illustrious Prime Minister of Great Britain, they went to the Colonial Secretary. They made a visit to Mr. Chamberlain, who, I have no doubt, received them with that great courtesy and consideration which he always extends to Canadians. They tried to persuade Mr. Chamberlain that his preference should be granted, and their own records and reports show us—and can be quoted if necessary—that Mr. Chamberlain told them courteously but firmly and emphatically, that the thing could not be entertained for a moment unless they were prepared to give up their tariff protection against Great Britain. That was the basic principle of Mr. Chamberlain's statement, and these gentlemen were not prepared to give that up, nor would I have been prepared to give it up if I had been in their place.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Chamberlain may have to change his mind like others.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Possibly. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will do me the justice to say that I am dealing with things of the past and present, and we will not say too much of the future, but I say that as respects the past, in the year 1897, when we adopted our tariff, that policy of a preference in the English market was not possible. It was not possible in 1898; it was not possible in 1899; it was not possible in 1900, when the Prime Minister of Great Britain refused to even receive a deputation to talk about it; it was not possible when the distinguished Colonial Secretary told the deputation that he could not entertain the matter unless they were prepared to abandon the tariff against Great Britain.

Mr. KEMP. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) where he got his information in reference to his observation that Mr. Chamberlain refused to receive the deputation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) has misunderstood me. I did not say that Mr. Chamberlain refused to see the deputation. I am aware that the deputation of which my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) was a member, called on Mr. Chamberlain. What I did say was that the Prime Minister, Lord Salisbury, refused to see the deputation which only asked the privilege of presenting this bald and not very strong resolution.

Mr. KEMP. There was no deputation to Mr. Chamberlain.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Do you say there was no deputation to Mr. Chamberlain ?

Mr. KEMP. Not this last summer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hold in my hand the report of the delegate of the Ottawa Board of Trade, who was one of the deputation which called upon Mr. Chamberlain, and who describes Mr. Chamberlain's reception precisely in line with the statement I have just made.

Mr. KEMP. A deputation from the Chamber of Commerce did not call on Mr. Chamberlain.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, now, my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) is a new member, and he surely does not mean to distinguish between a committee formally appointed by the Chamber of Commerce and a number of gentlemen who were members of that body. But if it was not a deputation of the Chamber of Commerce, what have we to think of the Ottawa delegate who gives a full report of the whole proceeding, as a part of the proceedings of the Congress of Chambers of Commerce in London ?

Mr. KEMP. Do I understand the Minister of Finance to say that the deputation which called upon Lord Salisbury also called upon Hon. Jos. Chamberlain ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) is mistaken again. I did not say that. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) tries to draw a distinction between a deputation formally authorized by the congress, and a number of gentlemen who were members of that congress, and who, I suppose, were not formally appointed for the purpose of waiting on Mr. Chamberlain. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) will ask us to treat that distinction as serious. I have here the report addressed to the president and members of the Board of Trade of Ottawa. It is of very great length, and the House would not justify me for delaying them by reading very much of it, but I think I will have to give a passage. This is the report of Mr. Thomas Macfarlane, the delegate from the Ottawa Board of Trade.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that the Dominion analyst ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think likely. He seems to have analysed this question over there very well.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. He did not represent the commercial men of Ottawa very much.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was appointed by the Board of Trade of the city of Ottawa to represent them, and my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) is not treating that body with very great courtesy when he says Mr. Macfarlane did not represent them. I presume if he was delegated by them that he fully represented them. This report recites the story of the failure of the deputation to obtain a hearing from Lord Salisbury, and then it goes on to say :

Chamberlain interview.

Quite as interesting as the proceedings of the congress itself were certain events which happened after its close, and in which some of the delegates took part. Most of them received a copy of a printed circular containing the letters from the Premier and the President of the Board of Trade in which they declared the time to be inopportune for discussing the subject of increasing and strengthening trade relations between the different portions of the Empire. This was a great disappointment, and it was, I believe, in order somewhat to make amends for it, that Lord Strathcona arranged with the Rt. Hon. Mr. Chamberlain that he should informally receive some of the Canadian delegates.

My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) will see that they did not go formally. They were not formally delegated by the Chambers of Commerce to go, but a number of the Canadian delegates went to Mr. Chamberlain, and I think they did quite right to do so.

Mr. KEMP. That does not say what Mr. Chamberlain stated.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) is too hasty. He had better wait. I trust the House will pardon me if I have to read a somewhat lengthy extract. The report goes on to say :

This interview took place on the 10th July, when, besides the Colonial Secretary, Lords Selborne, Ampthill and Strathcona were present. Of delegates : Mr. Kemp of Toronto, Mr. Cockshutt of Brantford, Dr. Parkin, General Twigge and I attended, who all had an opportunity of pressing upon Mr. Chamberlain our views regarding trade relations. Messrs. Kemp and Cockshutt spoke generally of the advantages of preferential trade, and Dr. Parkin tried to show the necessity of having the subject properly investigated by a commission of experts. Mr. Chamberlain replied in a quiet conversational way and endeavoured to show that no progress could be made until the colonies abandoned protection as against Great Britain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. KEMP. Will the hon. minister allow me to say, that I understood the Finance Minister to state that the deputation which desired to wait on Lord Salisbury, also wished to wait on Mr. Chamberlain. That is what I meant, but perhaps I did not make my point very clear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) that the deputations were not necessarily the same, but the only point of my remarks was, not exactly what the board of trade did; not what any particular delegate did, but what Mr. Chamberlain said and did. I cannot understand how the force and effect of what Mr. Chamberlain said and did is in the smallest degree touched by the circumstance as to whether the delegation went by one street or by another. I thank my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) who interrupted me, because I know he was present, and I think he did quite right in going to Mr. Chamberlain. The point I desire to make in all sincerity is this: that these hon. gentlemen who have persuaded themselves that this getting of a preference in the English market was an easy and simple thing, have been mistaken, and they must know it now from the highest possible testimony. Again and again it was suggested that Mr. Chamberlain in some mysterious way had given them some encouragement, but here is the latest utterance of Mr. Chamberlain quoted by a gentleman who is known to be an enthusiastic advocate of that kind of preferential trade, and Mr. Chamberlain says distinctly that you cannot get that kind of preferential trade unless you will take down your tariff altogether against England. My hon. friend from Toronto would not be willing to do that, and I am frank enough to say that I would not be willing to do it either.

Now, I have said all this concerning the past. We do not deny that if we did get that preference in the English market, it would probably be of some advantage to the Dominion of Canada; but we say that is a question for the Imperial authorities rather than for us. If we could get that preference, we are as willing to assist in availing ourselves of any advantage which might come to Canada through it as any of the hon. gentlemen opposite. The only difference between us is as to the possibility of getting it and as to the means of getting it. I do not believe, Sir, that it can be obtained to-day. I do not believe, notwithstanding all that one reads in the telegrams from the other side, that we are likely to have a change of front immediately on the part of the Imperial government on the trade question. Yet I would not speak of the future. We live in times of great movements and great changes. I will not say that at no future time in the history of the empire, and the early future possibly, shall this preference be given. Again and again I have stated in this House that that is a question which we must be content to leave to the future. We have believed that the true policy of preferential trade was, not to make demands on the Imperial government which we well knew they could not afford to yield to us. The true policy was to give to Great Britain this preference freely and openly, leaving the Imperial government and parliament to adopt that trade policy which in their judgment was best adapted to the interests of the English people. But, if this preference, which my hon. friends opposite desire to obtain, is ever to come, I beg them to accept my opinion, my assurance, which I give them in all sincerity, that they will never obtain it by the methods they have employed—that they will never obtain it by demands on the home government which are obnoxious to the great mass of the English people. We have much to hope from cultivating the good-will of the English people. I venture to say, as I have said before, that if the time ever comes when we are to receive that preference, we shall not receive it as the result of any huckstering or bargaining between England and the colonies, but as a result of the development of that Imperial sentiment which may override questions of political economy, and in the creation and development of that Imperial sentiment a large and important factor has been the British preferential tariff of the Canadian government.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the Finance Minister and the government, as I congratulate the country, upon the statement of prosperity which the hon. gentleman has been enabled to show to Canada to-day—a prosperity which we one and all delight in, and which the Conservative party claim to have had a very considerable hand in promoting, by means of the policy which they adopted in years gone by. This claim, however, the Finance Minister and the government dispute; they take issue with us on the question of protection and free trade. We as a party claim that protection has materially advanced the interests of Canada. We contend that without protection the interests of Canada would be very seriously impaired, no matter how bountifully Providence might bless us with crops or how rich our mines might be.

The Finance Minister, I am glad to say, has been able to make a very short budget speech. He has quoted comparatively few figures; and I do not propose to object to or in any way challenge the figures he has quoted. Our trade has very largely increased; our imports, our exports, our revenue and our expenditure have all increased. The government are trustees for this country. They are not spending these enormous sums of money, or should not be spending them, as their own, but should be spending them for the benefit of the country. In the last four years they have had a revenue amounting to $30,980,000 over and above the revenue of the preceding four years. This amount they have taken in direct taxation out of the pockets of the people over and above the expenditure. This surplus of revenue over expenditure should be treated in one of two ways: it should go either to reduce the taxes or to reduce the debt of the country. What indication has the Finance Minister given us that he has treated this surplus in either of these ways? He has spent it with a free hand. He has not been able to show us a decrease in the net debt of the country; but, on the contrary, in the last four years he has increased the debt to the extent of $6,900,000, notwithstanding the enormous increase of revenue which he has had at his disposal.

The hon. gentleman boasts of the increased trade of this country with Great Britain. He was asked how the exports of the United States to Great Britain stood. He had not the figures at hand. The exports from the United States to Great Britain show an average increase in the last four years of $105,000,000 a year. Naturally our imports from Great Britain should show an increase; but they have not increased in any greater proportion than the imports of the United States from Great Britain, notwithstanding our boasted preference.

I agree with all the figures which the hon. gentleman has given us as to the increased deposits in our banks and the increase in the circulation of Dominion notes. I give him credit for all the figures he has given as bearing on the prosperity of the country. I give him full credit for the surplus he claims, but I deny that the government have made a good use of that surplus. I agree with the hon. Minister of Finance that we are perhaps on the crest of the wave of prosperity and that it will continue for some time to come. When we have to face a falling revenue, however, how are we going to meet it? It is a very hard matter to cut down expenditure. We have increased our expenditure over the sum which the Finance Minister in the Mackenzie government stated was ample: we have added to that by millions of dollars, yet that hon. gentleman's voice is not raised against it. We have been spending money freely.

The hon. gentleman has no thought for the morrow. Is he going to make no endeavour to restrict the amount of our debt? He tells us that the bounty to be paid on iron he will not consider as a payment out of revenue, but will add it to our debt. Is there to be no limit to this method of conducting business. Where are all the professions of economy and all the platforms of the present government when in opposition, which many of us thought were good platforms. They proposed to reduce expenditure, they proposed to cease bonusing railways and other works which they thought should not now require public money. For many years before I became a member of this House, I protested, whenever the occasion presented itself, against this continued bonusing of railways. That system has become a channel for the wasting of public money. If hon. members will turn to page A—75 of the report of the Auditor General, they will find instances to illustrate my contention. On that page there is some interesting correspondence regarding the subsidy to the South Shore Railway bridge at Sorel, which was given a bonus of 15 per cent on its cost. A claim was made upon the government for $35,000 as the amount of the bonus, but the Auditor General, suspecting that something was wrong, objected, and he apparently had very great difficulty in preventing the payment of this $35,000. He finally obtained reports from the chief engineer of the government and Mr. Keefer on the cost of this bridge. The chief engineer reported that it cost $98,000, and Mr. Keefer reported that it cost $112,000. On the other hand, the company allege that it cost $210,000, or more than double the estimate of the government engineer. The Auditor General then goes on to say:

> I should tremble on account of my responsibility in passing your expenditure if much of your course of action were permeated by a similar complaisance. The views of an interested creditor are not the most reliable help in the interpretation of a statute under which he is to be paid. I was told by one of the gentlemen named, without my seeking his opinion, that in endeavouring to determine the value of the work I was giving myself much unnecessary trouble. There is a name to this kind of advice, but I do not need give it.

Apparently the Auditor General had the greatest difficulty, judging by this correspondence, with the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, in preventing the governmen paying out fraudulently $35,000 of a bonus on that bridge, or 15 per cent on an estimated cost of $215,000, when the bridge really cost only $90,000. Let me further draw attention to the fact that that same bridge was bonused by the Quebec government and the town of Sorel. The Quebec government had paid its $15,000 subsidy and the town of Sorel had also paid the amount of its bonus, and if this government had paid the $35,000 asked for, it would have paid $12,000 more as a bonus than the total cost of the bridge.

Is it not evident, when we have such an instance before us—and judging by the Auditor General's correspondence, it would appear that it is not the only instance—to call a halt in this system of bonusing railways and squandering the public money in the bonusing of railways and other public works. I say it is the duty of the government to cease giving bonuses for the building of railways or other public works in the older provinces. What would be thought of a railway company that would apply to the state of New York or Minnesota or Illinois for a bonus towards building a railway. Yet such an application is equally unreasonable in our older provinces, because if public works of this character are needed private enterprise will be found to build them, just as private enterprise undertakes their construction in the United States. In my opinion, we are quite as able as most of the states of the American union, to build our own railways and public works without government assistance.

It is, of course, only natural that our expenditure should increase as our trade increases, but this increase in expenditure is far outrunning any increase in revenue, and there is not the slightest attempt on the part of the government or any member of it to keep our expenditure within our means. Has the hon. the Finance Minister ever thought what would happen to this country if he should go on as he is doing for the next twenty-five years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I have.

Mr. OSLER. Does he propose going on borrowing as long as he can in the English market ? It seems to me he would do better to try and take advantage of a flourishing revenue to reduce our capital debt and not go on losing all the benefit of the increased revenue by continuing this system of lavish expenditure.

We have in this country one instance of a railway built without government aid, and that is the Ontario and Quebec road, running between this city and Toronto. When that road was built, the country, in the section traversed, was pretty barren, and we were not then as well able to build railways as we are now. Bonuses to the extent of $1,000,000 had been granted it when its charter fell into the hands of people controlled by the Grand Trunk Railway. They refused to build the road and fought hard to prevent it being built, but private enterprise stepped in and supplied the money to carry through the undertaking, which cost $5,000,000. Not a cent in bonus was asked for from this government or from any municipality, although that is one of the most expensive roads built in the country. This shows clearly that private money is forthcoming to prosecute any public enterprise when the necessity is clear.

I submit that all local roads in the older settled parts of the country should be built with private money. There is a very flagrant instance of the abuse of the bonusing system in Essex county, where the government bonused a road four or five miles long, running through a district as rich as any in Canada.

Mr. COWAN. There was no road bonused in the county of Essex last year.

Mr. OSLER. I meant the county of Elgin. A road was bonused by this government which went through that county, one of the richest in this country, and which is paralleled along a distance of forty miles by another railway. That bonus was certainly not given for the good of the country, and I leave it to be inferred by hon. gentlemen what was the sinister influence brought to bear to obtain such a bonus.

There is another matter in which the government have been very remiss. The issuing of scrip to half-breeds in settlement of their claims was begun, I know, under a Conservative regime, but I have always entertained the opinion that that was a most pernicious policy, and why it should be continued I cannot possibly conceive. Last year, from the 1st of July, 1900, to the 28th of February, 1901, the government issued scrip to the half-breeds and others to the extent of $799,798, but almost immediately on receipt of that scrip the half-breeds sold it to the agents and brokers who followed the government agents who were distributing that scrip, and I have no doubt that those who received the scrip from the government did not get on an average 40 cents for it. That would be the outside price paid. Since that scrip has been issued it has been taken in payment of lands by the government at par from the 1st of July, 1900, to the 28th of February, 1901. The government took in $268,990 of that scrip at par.

So, they sold their bonds at a discount of 60 per cent. The hon. Finance Minister says that the credit of this country is good, yet he is authorizing and permitting the issue of government bonds redeemable by the government at par in payment for coal lands and Crown lands generally, and he has sold as much as a million dollars of those bonds to Indians and half-breeds and others at forty cents on the dollar. And he has already retired nearly $300,000 of them at par. Now, either the credit of Canada is not very good in the North-west, or the hon. minister's way of settling with the half-breeds and others who claim scrip is not very profitable to this country.

The government claims all credit for prosperity. I would like to quietly analyse the case and find out what it is the government have done in the last four years for this country. They have made many attempts to improve the trade channels of this country—so they tell us. They have given us —so they say—a fourteen-foot channel from the lakes to Montreal. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) says he knows there is a fourteen-foot channel, because it is marked on a map in his office. But the captains of vessels who go down to Montreal tell us that they cannot find that channel. The minister says in reply that they must be in conspiracy against him and in league with the forwarding companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. Mr. Blair). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) give the names of the captains to whom he refers.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. minister says that the channel must be there, but the captains cannot find it——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Name your captain.

Mr. OSLER. I refer to what the hon. minister himself said the other night. He said that some captains complained, but they must have a spite against him, or were in league with the forwarding companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I said that.

Mr. OSLER. If the hon. minister will refer to his own statement, I think he will find that I am quite right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think you are.

Mr. OSLER. I think so. Now the harbour of Montreal has not been very much improved. We have not had the cheap transportation nor have we had the increased volume of trade going through the Canadian channels that we were promised. We have not had cheaper navigation nor cheaper transportation from this country than we had before.

Now, there is one thing that the Finance Minister claimed credit for on behalf of the government, and I think it is the only thing that they have done, though whether they should ask credit for it is another matter. I refer to the preferential tariff. There is room for difference of opinion as to whether the preferential tariff is a wise thing or an unwise thing. Let us see how it works out. The government first gave a 25 per cent preference. They were so pleased with that that, having nothing else to suggest, they said: Let us go one more, and make it 33⅓ per cent. So, they have given the preference at that rate, which admits German, Belgian or Italian goods, the produce of cheap labour competing with our Canadian labour, the only condition being that it shall be sent to Britain and 25 per cent of British labour added to it. Then the whole amount, of which ¾ is made by foreign cheap labour, comes into this country under a preference of 33⅓ per cent. In reality therefore, this preference works out to give the German and other cheap continental manufacturers a much greater advantage than is given to the manufacturers of Great Britain. But, let us see how it works out the other way about. One result of giving this preference to Great Britain is that Germany at once discriminates against Canada. Let us see what effect this has indirectly, and even directly, upon the farmers of Canada. We were building up a very large export trade between Canada and Germany before this preferential tariff came into effect. That trade is largely increasing in the United States. The American farmers are now shipping large quantities of wheat and other grain to Germany. Now, when the American farmer ships his grain to Germany in competition with the Canadian farmer, the Canadian farmer finds that he must pay higher duties than his competitor. Here are the figures showing how much more the Canadian has to pay on various kinds of grain than the American:

Wheat	9·82	cents per bushel.
Rye	9·16	"
Oats	4·19	"
Barley	1·31	"
Corn	3·27	"
Buckwheat	2·45	"

Now, that is a very nice little bonus for the Canadian farmers to receive as one of the consequences of the preferential tariff. Yet, I do not see that they are paying lower prices for anything they buy. Are they buying their clothes, their agricultural implements, their tea or other groceries, at lower figures than they did four or five years ago? As a rule, they are paying more for what they buy. The benefit they get from Liberal rule is that they have to pay more for what they buy, while that which they have to sell they get less for. In theory, preferential trade is very nice; it looks and sounds very patriotic; but in practice it works out very badly for the unfortunate farmer.

There is one question that, perhaps above all others is interesting to us, and ought to be so, because it is of vital importance to the people of Canada—the question how to get our produce to the port on this continent whence it is to be sent to England, Germany or elsewhere. The government have done their best—and if they had gone about it they could not have done better than they did by bonusing the Grand Trunk, rebuilding their bridge, helping them to double-track their line and put on fast trains—they have deliberately set to work to divert trade from Canadian ports to foreign and rival ports.

Mr. COWAN. How about the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. OSLER. I am not talking about individual corporations, but about the government and what they have done. Individual corporations will go where they can get the best. But if the government can force them to take trade through Canadian channels, so much the more do the government do their duty and so much the more does Canada benefit. Now, the government have been, for years past, spending money on the inland waters. They are proposing to enlarge Port Colborne harbour, with a possible expenditure of four or five millions. They are spending large sums of money on Midland harbour, Collingwood harbour, Depot harbour, and all the channels through which grain comes from our great North-west.

They are trying to get the St. Lawrence canals deepened, they are trying to cheapen transportation to the sea, but they have not yet apparently made up their minds as to whether the future seaport of this country is to be Quebec or Montreal. Let us face that question squarely. Personally, and I think I may speak for all the members on this side of the House, if Montreal or Quebec can be made through Canadian ports from which we can send all our produce, any expenditure the government may ask for that purpose will be ungrudgingly given and endorsed by members on this side of the House. But first let the government find out which port it is to be. The hon. member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell) says that Quebec is the best port, others say Montreal is the best port. Now, if Montreal is to be the port of this country, then we must spend enormous sums of money upon it and upon the approaches. It is impossible that Montreal can successfully compete with the American ports unless you have an absolutely safe channel, a channel well lighted, so that an insurance company will consider it safe enough to justify them in insuring a vessel passing through the St. Lawrence at the same price as they would insure a vessel coming to Portland or other ports. The government must face that question. But instead of doing that, they are spending little sums here and there, though large sums in the aggregate, in enlarging a lock or building a dock, which will in no wise contribute to the promotion of the great scheme of making Montreal a great port, if the government have such a scheme in view. It may be found that Montreal cannot be made the port of Canada—I know nothing about its capability except what I may have learned as a layman, but I am beginning to entertain a strong feeling that we shall have to go to Quebec, and that Quebec will be the port of Canada for all time to come.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One of them.

Mr. OSLER. Now, if it is to be one of these ports, let us find out which, and let us not go on spending all this money here and there, frittering it away, instead of using it for the purpose of building up a national port. We are wasting money on little local railways that will benefit no one except those who receive the bonus, while at the same time that we have no intelligent idea of what is going to be our national port. So far, the result of the action of the government has been to divert trade from our Canadian ports, and to build up American ports; I make the assertion, Mr. Speaker, that the government have materially contributed to that end.

Mr. OSLER.

Mr. HYMAN. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to explain his position, and tell us his ideas with regard to a summer port?

Mr. OSLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose, as I said in the beginning, to enter into a criticism of the figures with which the Minister of Finance has presented the House. I think, as a rule, his figures are all right; but I join issue with him upon the causes which have enabled him to present so favourable a statement. I do not think he is entitled to congratulate himself and his fellow-ministers, or to take any credit for the prosperity with which this country has been favoured during the past three or four years. I contend that the government have entirely misused that prosperity, they have taken advantage of it to inaugurate a rule of extravagance. In no single instance have they attempted to practice economy. They do not seem to have made up their minds as to what they should do with their surplus. I hope that if another year of prosperity should follow, such as we are now enjoying, and if the Minister of Finance is able to congratulate himself upon an enormous increase of revenue, he will also be able to say that he has reduced the burden of taxation upon the people of this country, that he will point out that while our revenue increases, it is the duty of the government in charge to lighten the burden of the people, either by reducing taxation on the necessaries of life, or by reducing the public debt.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, we rarely witness the spectacle we had this afternoon in regard to this debate, probably one of the most important debates during the session, the one in which the public will take more interest probably than all others. When the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) had delivered his budget speech, when he had settled so far as the expectations of the people were concerned any question that may have arisen in regard to the tariff, when he had generally entered upon a discussion of the finances of the country during the past year, and when an hon. gentleman on this side of the House had risen in his place and replied to him, we found, for the first time in the parliament of Canada, I will venture to say during the whole history of the parliament of Canada, hon. gentlemen put on that splendid, but ill-concealed disdain and refused to make reply to the hon. gentleman who answered the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. What have we now? The House is barely graced with the presence of the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is not another minister of the Crown in his place.

Mr. BENNETT. They are in cold storage.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) says that they are in cold storage. I hope that they are in some place that will cure them. I shall not enter upon a discussion of a matter that is not the subject fairly of debate, namely, whether we are living to-day in a period of very great expansion, whether we are living in, to use a common phrase, good times. This has not been at all a matter of dispute. It is a proposition to which both sides of the House will assent and I, therefore, am not going to discuss that phase of the question, nor am I going to discuss the question whether hon. gentlemen opposite have been the authors to any extent of this condition or whether they have been, on the other hand, the means of preventing it. If I should have anything to say in that regard it would be that hon. gentlemen have not made the most of their advantages. Now, Sir, just let me say that there seems to me to be no more critical period in the history of any country than a period of great expansion. What is the effect of great expansion ? The hon. Minister of Finance very aptly said this afternoon : 'We will have periods of depression, but these are periods of recuperation. They are periods for what purpose? There are those periods that must follow periods of great expansion for the purpose of catching up. In other words, we have been discounting the future and I am not disposed to take that rosy view of it that the hon. Minister of Finance took when he was asked if he expected the present state of things to continue and if he would go on with the same expenditures and the same taxation. The answer of the hon. gentleman was that he did propose to go on with the same expenditures and the same taxation. I think the hon. gentleman has given a distinct note of warning to the country that he will take no notice of that state of things, to use a very happy phrase of his own 'when the pendulum swings the other way.' No one can doubt the fact that we will have after this expansion a period of depression. If that were not the case it would be to set aside the rule that has so long prevailed in all countries and nobody would attempt to consider whether that would be a recurring incident in Canada as it has been in other countries and as it has been in Canada. What is the duty of a government during a period of great expansion ? Is it to maintain taxation, is it, professedly under a revenue tariff, to extract large sums from the people and find means of expending them ? We still have a policy of high taxation. When hon. gentlemen opposite had a splendid opportunity to redeem their pledges to the country, when they could have lowered the tariff, when they could have made decreases to a considerable extent in the taxation, what did they do ? They, in the face of every pledge made, turned their backs upon these pledges.

and they are to-day collecting more taxes than ever were collected from the people of Canada. They are boasting of their surplus and they are doing this in the name of a revenue tariff. In 1896, the then Minister of Finance collected from the people under what was said to be a high protective tariff $36,618,000, and in 1900, the present Minister of Finance collected, under a so-called revenue tariff, $51,029,000. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he considers now that he should still maintain the name of a revenue tariff ? The increase, comparing these two years, in the taxation collected amounts to some $14,411,000. The hon. gentleman received a very generous measure of applause this afternoon when he told the House and the country that he had a surplus of $8,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite are on record in this House as to the value of surpluses. Hon. gentlemen, both in and out of this House, set their faces against surpluses and told the people that when you take large sums of money from the people it means that you have taken money out of the people's pockets which should be there. If hon. gentlemen were prepared to say that they had taken less money, that, by economy, or the proper expenditure of money, they had been able to have a surplus after having fairly met all the proper services of the country, that would be a proper boast to make, but hon. gentlemen have taken the opposite course. It does seem extraordinary that they should be found boasting of their surpluses. I do not see the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) in his place, but this is what that hon. gentleman had to say.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is in North Bruce.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) says that he is in North Bruce. Well, he was here at one time, and in 1883, referring to the surplus, he said :

> Sir,—This surplus business is quite understood by the people of this country. If the surplus was paid by the minister himself, if he had some means of taking it out of his own pocket and putting it into the public treasury, or if the combined supporters of the ministry had some means of putting that money into the treasury, then we would hail them as benefactors of their country. But, when the hon. Minister of Finance has put his hand into your pocket, and my pocket, and the pockets of the people of this country, and taken therefrom this $16,000,000, then we claim that he has not accomplished any great feat though backed in his act by the parliament of this country.

I am going to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if that language applies to him. I am going to ask him, if one of his colleagues used that language on one occasion, what is his position to-day ? The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) criticised with great ability the finances of this country. That was precisely the position the hon. gentleman took, and if that is the position he took in the past, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman to explain to-day why he takes precisely the opposite position. Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen may ignore the past, they may turn their backs upon their pledges, but the facts remain just as they were in 1883, when this speech was made and afterwards when several speeches were made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. I leave hon. gentlemen without further discussion to settle that with their own consciences. Let the public read what hon. gentlemen said in the past under precisely similar circumstances, and let them observe the conduct of those who are charged with the affairs of the country now. I expected that the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) would sing the old song and claim credit to his government, that if the good times were not wholly to be attributed to the administration they were at least in great part due to the wisdom of himself and his colleagues. It is just as well that I should call the attention of the House to this phase of the question, so that the government may know something about their past record on this matter. In 1883, there was a period of phenomenal expansion in trade following one of great depression, and this is what the Minister of Customs then said in regard to the condition of the country :

> The Minister of Finance did not raise the price of cheese or butter in Liverpool. That is a matter outside and beyond him. That is the work of the grand eternal law of nature and the law of supply and demand. It was due to the scarcity in foreign countries. We had the articles to sell. The price went up, and the result was that the increased wealth was given to us. Then, Sir, take agricultural products, and what do we find? Why, Sir, we find that in the year 1880 we exported of these products $2,000,000 worth, and in the next year we exported $16,000,000 worth, and last year we exported $11,000,000 worth, or in these three years, as a result of the increased sale at higher prices, we brought back in gold into this country $15,712,000 more than in 1879. Well, Sir, will the hon. gentleman claim, will he dare to say that he was the cause of the rain falling and the sun shining on our fields, that he was the cause of the abundant harvest of 1882. No, Sir, he will not venture to do so. Will he seek to claim that he stands in the room of Providence, and causes the rain to fall in superabundance in England and Ireland and Scotland, rotting the crops, producing a scarcity of them and increasing the price of the articles we have to sell. Sir, he will not dare to say that he was the cause of Providence smiling on us in this land, and by which we are able to show $15,000,000 more of a result.

Does not that language apply precisely to the condition of affairs to-day. The hon. gentlemen opposite were fortunate to come into power on the eve of a great expansion in trade, and to this and not to anything they have done is due whatever prosperity there is in this country. I shall leave that also to hon. gentlemen opposite to settle amongst themselves.

Now, with regard to the value of this preference to England. The Minister of Finance challenged this side of the House, that if we were not in favour of the preference, that the only course left open to us was to introduce a resolution demanding its repeal. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) was sincere in that challenge, nor do I think that on reflection he will consider it a fair challenge. What is the position of affairs to-day ? Why these hon. gentlemen opposite have entered into what we have very properly called a one-sided trade relation with Great Britain ; a trade relation that has not a single redeeming feature, as is shown by the experience we have had of it, a trade relation that imposes $2,000,000 more burden on the people on account of the decreased revenue it brings about, and which $2,000,000 must be recouped from some quarter. The government have entered into this trade relation without getting the slightest return from it. I in my turn will challenge any gentleman opposite to point out some specific instance where Canada benefits to-day by the preference which we give to Great Britain. It is all very well for the hon. gentlemen to make general statements about this, but let us pin them down to laying their hand upon one example from business experience, in which this country benefits, and they cannot do it. They will tell us : Oh, we have gained the sympathy of Great Britain ; we have touched the hearts of the English people and they are yearning to buy our goods. Well, Sir, it does seem to me that such an argument should not emanate from the brains of sensible men. It is only child's talk for public men to make a pretense of that kind. Why, there is not one man in a thousand in Great Britain who knows that their country has a preference in the Canadian market, and there is not one man in a thousand who cares whether she has a preference or not. The buyer in England will buy the most goods he can for the least money, irrespective of where those goods come from, and the buyer in Canada will do the same thing. We have won our way in the English market on the same conditions as we have won our way in the markets of other countries. Our goods must depend upon their superiority in the market over the goods of other countries, and if we have made England and Germany buy our goods, it is because we are able to produce better and cheaper goods than the people of any other country in the world. These gentlemen opposite now tell us that we have touched the sentimental aspect of this question by giving this preference, but as to that we have the evidence of a gentleman who was very profuse in the session of 1897 with regard to how far sentiment went in Great Britain. That hon. gentleman was then quite as cautious and quite as prudent as his friends are now never to go beyond a statement of glittering generalities with regard to this question. Speaking with regard to the tariff of 1879, which was in force in 1883, the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) made this statement, and I want this language placed alongside the language that he and his colleagues are using to-day :

> Now let me say, if it would be of any comfort to hon. gentlemen, that in this matter I speak entirely for myself, and I do not attach or never did attach as much importance to the question of imports from Great Britain and the United States respectively as some hon. gentlemen have attached to them.
> True, I recognize the fact that in England we borrow our money. That her flag floats over us. That her army and navy are pledged to defend us, and therefore it was not exactly the thing that might be called very loyal to Great Britain to put on a tariff that would legislate especially against her. I have gone that far in sentiment, but we all know that in matters of trade there is very little sentiment.

Was that the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite then ? I would venture to say that every one of them took precisely the same view, and I am bound to say that it was a rational and sensible view—a view which all men would take to-day, if they were not enslaved to circumstances of political advantage.

But we are told that by reason of the preference the people of Canada get cheaper goods. We have been told in the past, and I should not be surprised if we are told again, that by reason of the preference goods coming from other countries than Great Britain are, of necessity, correspondingly reduced in price. That is a broad statement, and demands some examination. Let us take the country to the south of us. Hon. gentlemen who have given any attention to the matter know that there are two distinct fields of operation for the trade of the United States and the trade of Great Britain. True, there is a common ground on which they met, but it is a small ground. There is a large ground in which the imports from the United States and other countries do not come into competition with the imports from Great Britain. But suppose they did, will any hon. gentleman go so far as to assert that if a gentleman from New York went to purchase a certain kind of goods in London or Manchester, he would have to pay any more for them than a gentleman from Montreal ? If hon. gentlemen are not prepared to take that ground, then it seems to me they are without any sensible foundation for claiming any advantage for Canada in that respect. Take the case of the United States and Canada. We know that the United States to-day are manufacturing very largely in almost every line of goods that England has to sell. Of course, sometimes a single line of goods not made to any extent in the United States, or a higher grade of goods, are sometimes purchased in Great Britain, while of other grades of the same goods we buy very large quantities in the United States. For instance, would any hon. gentleman say that where a man buys broadcloth and another buys tweeds, the broadcloth comes into competition with the tweeds ? It is absolute folly, it seems to me, for any hon. gentleman to take a position of that kind.

The Minister of Finance stated this afternoon that we cannot hope to get a preference by huckstering or by demanding a preference, or without England being convinced that it is in her interest to give us a preference. What is the position of the two parties on this matter ? One party has given a one-sided preference without any compensation whatever. The other party has demanded, and if it had continued in power and had the control of this country, it would have entered upon a preference, if a preference at all was entered upon, that would have had two sides, and would have commended itself to both countries entering into the contract. Are we to get a preference by hon. gentlemen declaring that it would be madness on the part of England to give us a preference ? Are we to get a preference when we have hon. gentlemen supporting the government declaring that it would be a piece of impudence on the part of Canada to ask a preference ? Read what a gentleman who stands high in the councils of that party has said on the question. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)—I am sorry he is not in his place to-night—speaking on this question last session, and referring to the limited trade Canada had with Great Britain, said :

> This is a very small trade relatively, less than 2½ per cent of her exports to the world, only one mill in excess of 3½ per cent of her exports to foreign countries, 6 8-10 per cent of her exports to British possessions, and yet, we stand up with this comparatively insignificant portion of British trade, and with sublime impudence, ask England to tax herself for the benefit of this little Oliver Twist that is continually calling for more.

Now, I would like to ask how we are to get a preferential trade with Great Britain ? Are we going to get it when we have hon. gentlemen on that side of the House prompted to get up in their places and make statements of that kind ? But the hon. gentleman went further. He said :

> If it can be shown, as it can undoubtedly be shown clearly, that the adoption of the policy the hon. gentleman asks for, would impair the prosperity and strength of Great Britain, why, we would be asking, even if we could obtain it, something actually not in our own interest.

The hon. member for North Norfolk not only declared that it was madness to talk of a preference, but that it was not in the interest of Canada to have such a preference. Well, I believe we are entering upon a period when the statesmen of England must educate the people of Great Britain in regard to the completely changed circumstances of to-day. The people of that country may be slow to take notice of the rapid changes which are occurring; but the British manufacturers are becoming justly alarmed at the prospect of the American people driving them out of their own market. We have to-day an instance of that in the fact that Great Britain, which formerly did nearly all the iron trade of this country, has to-day less than 6 per cent of it. It is an alarming state of things. There never was a period when there was a better opportunity for the people of Canada and the statesmen of Great Britain to prepare for the changed circumstances, and to realize that nothing short of a trade preference between Great Britain and her colonies can protect the mother country against the evils arising to-day from foreign competition.

But we had another evidence from the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He declared in this House, I think upon the same occasion, that we dared not have a preference in England because if Canada obtained preference in Great Britain, we should invite the hostility of her neighbours to the south. Here is what the hon. gentleman had to say:

> Her relations with other commercial powers are of such a character that the introduction of such a policy would be fatal to her interests. It would invite retaliation. It would not only invite it, but it would secure retaliation. England would invite disaster that would surely fall upon her if this unreasonable demand were granted to a country which takes but 5 per cent of her exports and sends but 3½ per cent of her imports.

In other words Canada sends so small a quantity of exports to Great Britain and purchases so small a quantity of goods from Great Britain, that we dared not enter upon trade preference with each other lest we invite the hostility of the American people. The hon. gentleman, in order to make his case stronger, depicted what he conceived to be the state of feeling in the United States:

> We have seen something of the result in the United States. The members of the joint high commission met at every turn that feeling of animosity which exists in the United States in consequence of the adoption of preferential duties of 12½ per cent, to be increased to 25 per cent.

Thus the hon. gentleman argues that we dare not enter into closer trade relations with the mother country because, in the first place, that would prevent all possibility of reciprocity with the United States, and in the second place invite commercial hostility that would be dangerous to Great Britain.

We, however, do not propose to be deterred from the policy we deemed essential to the interests of both Canada and the mother country by these timid imaginings of the hon. gentleman. We propose to call the attention of the people of Great Britain to the advantages that will flow from closer connections in trade matters, and particularly to the fact that a duty imposed by the mother country upon the products of foreign countries would not necessarily advance the price to the English consumer. If Canada were admitted to the markets of Great Britain on specially favoured terms, and if foreign products desired to compete against ours, they would have to be sold at the same prices, and consequently the English consumer would not have to pay a farthing more than he otherwise would.

We have been told that the trade with Great Britain has immensely increased under the policy of the present government. Well, I think it will be admitted that the trade with foreign countries from 1896 to 1900 will be a fair index of the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statement. The increase of exports in 1900 over 1896, to the following countries, were as follows:—

	Per cent.
Belgium	1,121
Italy	359
Australia	214
Portugal	176
France	136
Germany	126
Other countries not classified	71
Great Britain	61
United States	54
South America	43
Holland	34
Newfoundland	20

This shows conclusively that the sentiment in our favour, of which all these hon. gentlemen are boasting, has had such little effect that Great Britain, as a consumer of Canadian products, stands only eighth upon the list. Take the aggregate trade with foreign countries, and the following are the increases in 1900 over 1896:

	Per cent.
Belgium	334
Portugal	112
Holland	74
United States	73
Other countries	71
France	69
Switzerland	59
Great Britain	53
Germany	51
Spain	45
Italy	41
Newfoundland	20

This shows again that Great Britain, as a consumer, stands eighth in the list, and I think is conclusive evidence that the position taken by the hon. gentleman is entirely without foundation.

It would be well, in view of the statement made by the hon. Finance Minister this afternoon, showing the increase by years in trade with Great Britain, that he should give us the corresponding years with the United States. When asked for that information, he replied that he did not have a statement of the trade with the United States during that period.

Let us now compare our trade with the two great trading countries, Great Britain and the United States, in the two periods. First take the exports. The exports to Great Britain increased by a larger percentage than those to the United States. The increase in our exports to Great Britain in 1900, as compared with 1896, was 61·54 per cent, while the increase of our exports to the United States in the same period was 54·34 per cent. On the other hand, our imports from Great Britain increased, in the period I have named, 35·80 per cent, while our imports from the United States increased no less than 87·53 per cent. Now, let me compare the aggregate trade with these two countries. Our aggregate trade with Great Britain increased 53·3 per cent, while our aggregate trade with the United States—no inducement offered, no preference given—increased 73·22 per cent. The Finance Minister or hon. genlemen on his side can hardly answer that by merely saying we bought the goods we needed. That was perfectly true, but it only shows that trade will seek the channels of least resistance, and that to the extent that trade goes on each country produces goods that are required by the other. This is further exemplified by the fact that notwithstanding hostile tariffs, our trade with Belgium and Germany has increased by a greater percentage than has our trade with Great Britain.

Now, I shall not detain the House long, but I wish to make some reference to what I consider a very important statement made by the Minister of Finance. I notice that the hon. gentleman had one way of making his calculations up to the present year and another way of making them this year. In making a comparison as to the rate of taxation, he, very fairly, excluded Indian corn, which was imported into Canada and re-exported, for although, appearing in the returns as entered for consumption in Canada, it was well known that this corn was not for Canadian consumption and should not be included. He also excluded coin and bullion, which is usually done in making these calculations. But, perhaps some hon. gentleman on that side can explain why the hon. gentleman excluded coin and bullion in former years and included coin and bullion to-day. In making his comparison this year he includes coin and bullion for all the years covered by his comparison. And why does he do so ? Because to do so tells in favour of his own position, for the quantity of coin and bullion imported into Canada in 1900 was larger than in any previous year, and the effect of including them is to show a reduced percentage of taxation. I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman's previous basis of calculation, and in making up the figures I have followed up the course which he previously thought the correct one, and have excluded coin and bullion as well as Indian corn, which ought to be excluded, as it merely passed through the country and was not consumed there. I ask your attention to a comparison of the rates of taxation on this basis for the two periods from 1893 to 1896, under Conservative rule, and from 1897 to 1900, under Liberal rule. Take the first period first. In this case, I exclude coin and bullion, but include Indian corn, because under the former tariff corn for consumption was so entered. Here are the percentages of duty actually collected on goods entered for consumption for the years mentioned :

	Per cent.
1893	18·37
1894	17·76
1895	17·76
1896	19·19
Average	18·28

Now, to take the next period. In this I exclude not only coin and bullion, but also Indian corn, as it was admited free, and that which merely passed through the country was entered as for Canadian consumption :

	Per cent.
1897	18·66
1898	18·28
1899	17·92
1900	17·21
Average	17·93

Thus we see that there has been a reduction in the duties of just 35-100 of 1 per cent in the period of Liberal rule as compared with those under Conservative rule. This is the immense reduction of which the hon. gentleman boasts. And what would this reduction mean in money ? In round numbers it means $1,800,000. And this is the net result of this preference modification of the national policy as adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite. We never contended that there were no faults in the national policy. Like every tariff, it had its objections, but in the case of the national policy as adopted and carried into effect by the Conservatives, those objections were merely minor ones. While in the main it was a wise policy—the fact that it built up Canada being proof of it. And when hon. gentlemen came into office they pretended to modify it. When he announced his first tariff the Minister of Finance stated in most explicit terms that it would not lower taxation, but he had a special tariff that would lower taxation—the preferential tariff. And this is the effect of that lowering of the tariff—35-100 of 1 per cent. It is not to be wondered at that the effect of the preferential tariff was so small when we consider that less than 26 per cent of the dutiable goods imported into Canada come in under the preference. I can scarcely find terms adequate to describe a policy of that kind, that we have to-day the national policy as it was understood in the past, modified according to what hon. gentlemen have stated, by a preference, and under which we have achieved such meagre results.

But hon. gentlemen have not been slow in increasing the taxation. I say that apart from that reduction, they have largely increased the tax upon the people. They have increased the customs rate from 1896 to 1900. In 1896 the customs was $3.94 per head and the excise 63 cents, or a combined taxation of $4.57 per head. In 1900 the customs rate had increased to $5.37 and the excise to 83 cents, a total of $6.21, or an increase of $1.64 since 1896 upon every man, woman and child in Canada. Hon. gentlemen may say, perhaps, that is not strictly accurate, that it is open to the objection the Minister of Trade and Commerce has urged upon more than one occasion, namely, the mode of calculating the increase of population. But the hon. gentleman is not in a position to do more than state that the mode of calculation is not accurate. However, whether accurate or not, it applies to both cases, and one side has absolutely no advantage over the other.

Now, let us see what has been the result of this taxation. Take the increase of taxes made since 1896 on tobacco and cigars. The extra taxation has been $1,313,337. We have also an increase on sugar, notwithstanding the position taken by the Minister of Finance when he stated that he was going to give a free breakfast table, that he was going to reduce the duty on refined sugar from $1.14 per hundred pounds to $1, that he was going to allow the duty to remain as it was before at one-half cent a pound on raw sugar. We have an increase in duties on sugar by reason of the law governing the test under which it is imported, of no less a sum than $737,534 more than it was in 1896 under the existing duties. Then we collect an increased duty on rice, another article which the hon. gentleman was going to make cheaper; we collect an additional $26,205. Now, I want to call attention to two facts. One is that by reason of the operation of the preferential tariff, according to the Trade Returns, there has been a reduction of $1,180,325. What have we in the way of increased taxation on other articles? Take tobacco, that is a luxury perhaps to some extent, but to a great multitude of poor men in this country it is their greatest luxury; we have an increased taxation upon that, as I have already stated, to the extent of $1,313,000 a year; in sugar, $737,000 in round numbers; in rice, $26,000; in other words, as against a reduction of $1,180,000, we have an increase of $2,077,466. Surely that is not a very comfortable outlook.

Now, I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to say that we are not paying, under the proposed reduction of hon. gentlemen made on sugar in 1897, nearly three-quarters of a million dollars more in duties than we paid in 1896. Then the Minister of Finance stated that we imported goods from the United States because they are raw material. Is sugar not raw material? If you import iron goods for the purpose of aiding manufactures in this country, and of lowering the price of iron manufactures to the consumers, which was the reason alleged, what is the difference between lowering the duties on raw material that is composed of iron and on raw material that is composed of rice, or sugar, which are necessaries of life? There is, to my mind, a most contradictory position taken by the Minister of Finance. In one class of raw material the duty is not to be lowered, and in another class it is to be lowered, yet in both cases he says they will be equally cheap to the people. Now, by reason of the arrangement of the test under which sugars will be entered for duty, he has laid down a rule by which he takes from the people nearly three-quarters of a million dollars more than was taken in 1896. But what was his declaration in 1897? He declared that he was lowering the duties on sugar to the extent of $400,000 annually. Has he done that? I do not think the hon. gentleman will contend that he has done it. I do not think the hon. gentleman will contend that he has not advanced the duties to the extent of nearly three-quarters of a million dollars over 1896. Then I would like to know where are the grounds for congratulation which the hon. gentleman and his friends claim to possess.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance claimed some credit for reducing the public debt and for having a great surplus. The hon. gentleman went so far as to say that it was really a very gratifying thing that there should be a reduction of the public debt under the circumstances. Now, I desire to call his attention to the circumstances under which he reduced the public debt. Sir, the circumstance is that he has taken $52,000,000 out of the pockets of the people, the largest sum that was ever collected from the people of Canada. Yet he congratulates himself that while he takes $14,000,000 more from the people than was taken in 1896, he glorifies himself for having made a slight reduction in the public debt. He says they have a great surplus of $8,000,000. Let us see now whether the hon. gentleman has a surplus or not. In arriving at his surplus of $8,000,000, the hon. gentleman did not include all the expenditures. Now, it is a mere trick, I will not say it has been confined to one side of the House, but it is a trick upon the public to found the statement of a surplus upon the expenditure under consolidated revenue. Our receipts in 1899 were $51,029,994, our expenditures for the same year were $52,717,466, or a deficit between the two sides of the ledger of $1,687,472.

I am quite aware, Mr. Speaker, when I make that statement, that this is not the first occasion upon which a surplus has been counted in that way. But, I wish to call
