The will of the late Millionaire Over, bequeathing a fund of $5,000,000 to found a free library in that city, has been sustained by the courts, although his provisions are similar to those of the Tilden will, and were contested by the surviving relatives on the same grounds. This similarity was dwelt upon by counsel for the contestants in the trial of the case, but the court does not appear to have been impressed by the point. In its decision it comments on the difficulty under the New York law of establishing wills making bequests to charity, and of the practice in Illinois of construing the law liberally in favor of the wishes of charitable institutions, and accounting for the different conclusions reached in the Tilden and the Over cases.
