Rassia's Important Gains Under ty With China-The Late Marquis of Waterford.

Centenary of the French Institute Cold Weather in London-Bayard and Salisbury.

LONDON, Oct. 24. - The Marquis of Waterford, whose death occurred yesterday, was found on the floor of his study at Curraghmore by a maid at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning. He was lying in a pool of blood and the top of his head had been blown off. He had been seen a few minutes previously emerging from his library, a cigarette in his mouth and seemed to be at that time in his usual condition. It is suggested that floor near him was discharged accidentally. A dispatch to the Times from Paris says that the fetes in calebration of the centenary of the French Institute have commenced. The delegates include Senor Emilio Castelar, the Spanish statesman and author; Lord Kelvin, of Glasgow University; Prof. Max Mueller; W. E. H. Leckey, the historian; and President haure. There were present at the ceremonies most of the diplomats.

A Berlin despatch to the Times says that Baron Hammerstein, the Prussian Minister of Agriculture at Ratisbon, yesterday said that the Imperial government was deliberating how to meet the serious danger arising from the fall in the price of silver. His remarks, however, were somewhat obscure, and it is belived can be scarcely interpreted as favoring measures looking to bimetallism.

The Chronicle says: "Needless comment has been made on Ambassador Bayard's absence from Lord Salisbury's usual Wednesday reception at the foreign office. No discourtesy was intended. ### THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

SEATTLE, Oct. 24,-The agitation of the Alaska boundary survey question has been taken up by the American residents of Juneau, and a move is now being made to form a boundary club to keep the people and the government fully alive to the danger of losing the invaluable Yukon mines. She would undoubtedly relinquish her claim to the rest of the territory to gain her end, and if she succeeded, we might as well give up any claim on Alaska."

W. Otis Smith, editor of the Alaskan, published at Sitka, is also in the city. He says: "All England wants is a seaport at the entrance to the Yukon country, and she has raised this pretended claim on the south ern boundary so that she may figure in the eyes of the world as maguanimous. She will forego this claim magnanimously if the Yuken. But the boundary has long been established and I do not see why we should submit anything to arbitration."

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

London, Oct. 24.-W. T. Stead has a long article this afternoon in the Westminster Gazette on " Monroeism," during which he says: "Englishmen would do well not to belittle the significance of the ebullition of American sentiment on the question of Venezuelan frontier. It must be taken with the usual discount, and is no doubt due to a system by which foreign affairs are discussed by bawling journalists rather than by suave diplomats, but it is serious nevertheless. Its gravity consists in two facts neither of which appear to have anything to pute. In the first place, for the first time navy of which they have some reason to be use against somebody. In the second place it is equally significant, the American press assures us, that the Monroe doctrine has been informally adopted as the national faith of the American people, and the dis-patch sent to the New York World is prob-ably based on truth.

"Considering the disreputable character of the Venezuelan government, it seems ex-braordinary that a civilized power should contemplate such a crime as trying to thrust a peaceable region under the rule or government of Spanish-American advenurers, whose only claim to the sympathy of the United States is that they call their anarchy a republic, and fly a flag which does not fly outside of the Western Hemis phere. We do not fear as bitration, but, before it begins, reparation must be made for the high handed violation of the territory governed by Great Britain."

After dwelling on the manner in which Durrant enticed the unsuspecting girl to the belfry and murdered her he began an analysis of Durrant's action. "Stripping her body of its clothing and even taking from her fingers the rings which she wore," he said, "the defendant laid out the form of this poor girl so that in after years when the skeleton should be found in the belfry there should be nothing to tell that the bleached bones were those of Miss Lamont. Cuba is at our doors, in the highway of our commerce, so near that as the murders go on we can hear the shricks of women and children and can see the horrors in Cuba that were practiced by the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands. We can send our sympathies to Greece, to Poland, to Hungary, but here at home, at our very doors, shall this struggling people toss their fettered arms on high, and groan for reedom's gift in vain?"

New York, Oct. 24.—Reports of a des perate battle in the San Juan coffee growing valley, between Holguin and Barajagua, were confirmed by despatches received by the Cuban junta. The forces were led by Gen. Antonia Marceo, with 3,000 Cubans, and Gen. Echague, with 1,800 Spaniards. The greater portion of the Cubans were not actually engaged, according to the report, but continued to advance towards the west after the battle. Only 500 cavalry defended the rear of the Cuban army and kept the Spaniards from advancing. The Spaniah troops hesitated at critical times, and did not fight with the valor which distinguished their ancestors. About 300 of their number were killed. Gen. Maceo's westward movement was for the purpose of succoring the insurgent forces in Santa Clara province, as he had received word that they were threatened by the columns of Spanish inthreatened by the columns of Spanish infantry. The latter was received by Acting Brig. Gen. Rego, who at Manicara is holding a position in the mountains about midway between Cienfuegos and Trinidad. From Havana comes word that it is the daily practice of the Spanish jailors to take several prisoners from the forts and shoot them. The prisoners are stood in line. Ten men are selected for death. Perhaps it men are not ascertained. They are simply penned up and treated as animals. In the province of Santa Clara, General Luquis is said to be rivaling the reputation of Garrido, the butcher, in the eastern province, according to letters received from Sagua la Grande, on the north coast of Cuba. His force recently captured a mountain hospital near Diego del Valle, after a fierce combat with 200 Cubans, who were guarding the sick and wounded. In the hospital were thirty one insurgents, unable to participate in the engagement. The Spanish soldiers put every one of them to the bay-onet. Not one of them was left alive.

Pancho Francisco Garillo, who is well known in this city, was the leader of the Cubans arrested at Ingoa, Bahama islands. In company with a score of others he sailed on board the Clyde steamer Delaware from New York city on October 12. The vessel was bound for Cape Haiti. The little band were put ashore at Ingua in a small boat at their own request, although they had secured passage to Cape Haiti. They took their boat along on board the steamer, the plan on leaving her being to get the vessel to heave to, launch their boat and allow them to go where they pleased. Immediately on landing the British authorities at Ingua placed the twenty-one Cubans under arrest. They were sent to Nassau, where they will be tried on the charge of violating the foreign enlistment and the laws of neutrality. There is great excitement at Cuban has quarters because of the arrest of the members of the expedition. Sarchio in Las Billas, in the province of Santa Clara, where they were to unite their forces and ravage the sugar plantations.
The Spanish got wind of Gen. Maceo's intentions, and immediately despatched a fermidable column of 2,800 men under Gen. Echague to prevent the junction of the Cuban armies. This column found Gen. Maceo as far advanced on his way as the San Juan valley, in the South of Cuba, be tween Polguio and Basaingus. Gen. Maceo had 3,000 men, of whom 500 were cavalry and 2,500 infantry. The Spanish had 200 men less, but this difference was more than compensated for by the possession of three excellent picces of artillery. The battle began at once and was fought by the Cubans with great fury. After four hours of terrible fighting, General Echague was driven from the field in a disorderly retreat, leaving five hundred killed and wounded men and all his artillery behind him. ### NOVEL WEDDING.

Oshkosh, Wis., Oct. 24.—On next Monday, unless present plans fail, a novel wedding will take place at the Northwestern depot in this city and at St. Cloud, Minn. The bride will be Miss Liddie Kluiz, of Oshkosh, and the groom Duncan Edwards, agent of the road at St. Cloud. They will e married while many miles apart by telegraph. The usual questions will be asked the gentleman over the wire and his answer, made before witnesses, will be returned. The bride will, of course, reply to the minister in person. She will then take a wedding tour to her husband's home by herself. The reason for such an unusual proceeding is owing to the fact that there is no Protestant minister at St. Cloud and the groom cannot come to Oshkosh.

CAPTURED BY INSURGENTS

Spanish Officer Compelled to Surrender-Tried by Court Martial on His Release.

Martinez de Campos Allows Newspaper Correspondents to Accompany His Troops.

HAVANA, Oct. 26.—Lieut. Francisco Galpilot boat, which was captured by the insurgents in Asseradero Bay, near Santiage de Cuba, the officer and crew being subsedence furnished at the trial shows that the Lieutenant left Santiago de Cuba on board the Mayo with a crew of twelve men, under verbal orders from the commander of the Spanish cruiser Reina Mercedes, to which He was as instructed to keep a look out for filibusterers, sharp look out for filibusterers, to watch any suspicious movements ashore and not to communicate with the land. The lieutenant obeyed orders, but on October 9 he went into Asseradero bay in order to fill the guard boat water casks, his supply having run out. At that point he sent a boat ashore with a corporal of marines in charge and with four sailors at the oars. On landing the boat's crew set about filling the water casks they had brought ashore with them, having to go some way inland and among the trees in order to reach a fresh water stream.

While filling the casks the Spanish sailors were suddenly surrounded by a strong force of insurgents and borne down by numbers before they could make any effective resistthe lieutenant ordered the remainder of his crew to quarters, manned the rapid firing guns which formed the armament of the little guard boat, and opened fire upon the insurgents. The fire of the Dos de Mayo, however, had little or no effect upon the enemy as the latter were sheltered by the thickness of the woods ashore and insurgents, Lieut. Gallego ordered the guaners of the Dos de Mayo to cease firing, and The Marcons who recently took forcible sometime later the enemy sent a message to tured would be put to death if the Lieutenant did not surrender with the rest of his crew and give up the rapid firing gun and all its ammunition, and all the small arms and their ammunition. The Lieutenant, desirous of saving the lives of the prisoners, asked what guarantee would be given him that he would not be killed. The messenger thereupon returned to the shore, and soon afterwards the insurgent leader, second in command of the force which had captured the Spanish sailors, went off to the Dos de Mayo, and assured Lieutenant Gallego that the terms agreed upon would be acted up to by the in-

The arrangement to exchange arms and ammunition for the prisoners was then completed. The lieutenant handed over nine rifles and nine swords to the insurgents and also gave up one thousands rounds of ammanition. The quick firing gun for some reason was left on board, probably because grace, reported to the commander of that wasship and was promptly placed under ar-rest. The crew of the Dos de Mayo were other purpose. They arrived here on Thursday last.

Thursday last.

The lieutenant during the course of his trial being asked why he did not arrest the insurgent leader when the latter was in his power, replied that he had pledged his word not to arrest or injure the insurgents and he kept his word. Asked why he did not pull up anchor and get out of Asserader bay so advantageously that their fire would most likely have sunk the guard boat they aimed to establish the boundary line as strongest argument in compelling the Lieutenant to agree to exchange his arms for the prisoners. The captured sailors of the Dos de Mayo were then examined and they tesvified in substance to the facts detailed above. Under the extenuating circumstances claimed in the case against the Lieutenant, the prosecuting officer asked the court to sentence the prisoners only to two months arrest. The Lieutenant is to be congratulated upon having escaped a demand for a much more severe penalty.

Captain General Martinez de Campos has decided to grant the request made by several newspapers for permissions to send correspondents with the troops operating against the insurgents. They will, however, be required to obtain regular passes from the military authorities thoroughly establishing their identity, and be under the restrictions usual in such cases. The correspondents will be allowed the regular rations of the Spanish soldiers in the field, but all luxuries will have to be supplied by themselves.

She screamed when the wea-pen was pointed at her and Farrell had said with a laugh that it wasn't loaded. She told him to put the gun away or she would call in the police, whereat he repeated his statement that there was nothing in it. Carlson, one of his companions, finally induced him to return the weapon to his pocket. As the party stood up, with the intention of leaving the house, Farrell again pulled out his revolver and pulled the trigger, a report immediately following and the girl Georgie receiving the builet in her thigh. Detective Perdue was on the scene almost at once and arrested the prisoner and sent Scow for a doctor. This testimony was practically corroborated by Carrie Stanley, while the Farrell brothers, Carlson

MUNICIPAL CORRUPTION.

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—Keir Hardle, the English socialist, and Frank Smith, M.P., were tendered a supper on Tuesday night by the Chicago socialists prior to their taking final leave of this city. "I like America," said Hardie. "I have been here some time and have heard and read much about the Old-timers express the opinion that next winter will be more than usually long and severe. One of the reasons given for their English and American city councils find belief is that the wild geese are going south corruption of city councils, yet after careful aldermen and councillors work in a quieter way. I know a mayor who turned his concern into a company so that he could get contracts for municipal work in England. I know common councilmen who have relatives who simply represent themselves when contracts involving large sums of money are awarded by city councils. It is the same in America, though it is done more openly here. Yet they both travel the same way, to the loss of the city they represent."
Hardie said he had found the socialists strong in the United States, but they lacked organization. He predicted the downfall of the Populist party after the coming Presidential campaign. In Thessaly a priest of the Greek church died lately at the age of 120 years. During the last years of his life his memory became much weakened, so that often he didn't remember whether he had dined or not, and as a consequence he sometimes dined twice in succession or didn't dine at all.

It was uttered in a voice so low and muffled that we gained no information and rather augured treachery the more. I remember noticing how each took the crisis: how Mistress Anne's face was set hard and her breath came in jerks; how Dymphna, pale and trembling, seemed yet to have eyes only for her father; how the duchess faced the entrance like a queen at bay. All this I took in at a glance. Then my gaze returned to Master Lindstrom as he dropped the bar with a jerk. The door was pushed open at once as far as it would A draft of cold air came in, and with it Van Tree. He shut the door behind Never were six people so taken aback as we were. But the newcomer, whose face was flushed with haste and excitement, observed nothing. You have taken the alarm!" It was to me he spoke, and I was so surprised by that and by his sudden appearance, so dumfounded by his easy address and the absence of all self consciousness on his part, so struck by a change in him, that I stared in silence. I could not believe that this was the same half shy, half fierce young man who had flung away a few hours before in a passion of jealousy.

My theory that he was the assassin seemed on a sudden extravagant, though here he was on the spot. When Master Lindstrom asked: "Alarm?" What alarm?" I listened for his answer as I should have listened for the answer of a friend and ally, without hesitation, without distrust, for, in truth, the man was transfiguredchanged by the rise of something to the surface which ordinarily lay hid in him. "All, I fear," he replied. "You, too Master Lindstrom. Some one has traced your English friends hither and informed against you. I know not on what ground you are included, but I fear the worst. There is not a moment to be lost if you would escape by the bridge before the troop who are on the way to guard it ar-

"The landing stage, you say, is already watched?" our host asked, his phlegmatic coolness showing at its best. His eyes roved round the room, and he tugged, as was his habit when deep in thought, at his beard. I felt sure that he was calculating which of his possessions he could Yes," Van Tree answered. "My father got wind of the plan in Arnheim. An English envoy arrived there yesterday on his way to Cleves or some part of Germany. It is rumored that he has come out of his road to inquire after certain English fugitives whom his government are anxious to seize. But, come, we have no time to lose! Let us go!"

"Do you come, too?" Master Lindstrom said, pausing in the act of turning away. He spoke in Dutch, but by some inspiration born of sympathy I understood both his question and the answer.

Yes; I come. Where Dymphna goes I go, and where she stops I stop, though it be at Madrid itself," the young man answered gallantly. His eyes kindled, and seemed to grow taller and to gain maj-The barrier of race, which had hindered me from viewing him fairly before. fell in a trice. I felt now only a kindly sorrow that he had done this noble thing and not I. I went to him and grasped his hand, and though I said nothing he seemed, after a single start of surprise, to understand me fully. He understood me even better, if that were possible, an hour later, when Dymphna had told him of her adventure with the Spaniard, and he came to me to thank me.

Ordered myself to be idle, I found all busy round me, busy with a stealthy diligence. Master Lindstrom was packing his plate. Dymphna, pale, but with soft, hap-py eyes—for had she not cause to be proud? -was preparing food and thick clothing. The duchess had fetched her child and was dressing it for the journey. Master Bertie was collecting small matters and looking to our arms. In one or other of these occupations—I can guess in which— Van Tree was giving his aid. And so, since the duchess would not let me do anything, it chanced that presently I found myself left alone for a few minutes with Anne. I was not watching her. I was gnawing my nails in a fit of despondency, reflecting that I was nothing but a hindrance and a drawback to my friends, since whenever a move had to be made I was sure to be invalided, when I became aware, through some masterious sense, that my companion, who was kneeling on the floor behind me, packing, had desisted from her work and was gazing fixedly at me. I turned. Yes; she was looking at me, her eyes, in which a smoldering fire seemed to burn, contrasting vividly with her pale face and contracted brows. When she saw that I had turned—of which at first she did not seem aware—she rose and came to me and laid a hand on my shoulder and leaned over me. A feeling that was very like fright fell upon me, her manner was so strange. "What is it?" I stammered as she still pored on me in silence, still maintained her attitude. "What is the matter,

"Are you quite a fool?" she whispered, her voice almost a hiss, her hot breath on my cheek. "Have you no sense left that you trust that man?'

For a moment I failed to understand eer. "What man?" I said. "Oh, Van

"Aye, Van Tree! Who elses Will you go straight into the trap he has laid for you?" She moistened her lips with her tongue, as though they were parched. "You are all mad! Mad, I think! Don't you see—don't you see, "she cried, rocking me to and fro with her hand in her excitement, "that he is fooling you? He is leading us all into a trap that has been laid carefully enough. What is this tale of an English envoy on his way to Germany? Rubbish—rubbish

"But Clarence"-"Bah! It was all your fancy!" she cried flercely, her eyes for the moment flitting to the door, then returning to my face. "How should be find us here? Or what has Clarence to do with an English cn

I tell you!'

"I do not know," I said. She had not in the least persuaded me. In a rare moment I had seen into Van Tree's soul and trusted him implicitly. "Please take care," I added, wincing under her hand.

'You hurt me!' She sprang back with a sudden change of countenance as if I had struck her and for a moment cowered away from me, her former passion still apparent fighting for the mastery in her face. I set down her condition to terror at the plight we were all in or to vexation that no one would take her view. The next moment I went further. I thought her mad, when she turned abruptly from me, and flying to the door by which Van Tree had entered began with trembling fingers to release the pin which confined the bar.

"Stop! Stop! You will ruin all!" I cried in horror. "They can see that door from the river, and if they see the light they will know we are up and have taken the alarm, and they may make a dash to secure us. Stop, Anne! Stop!" I cried. But the girl was deaf. She tugged desperately at the pin and had already loosened the bar when I caught her by the arms, and pushing her away set my back against the door. "Don't be foolish!" I said gently. "You have lost your head. You must let us men settle these things, Anne."

She was indeed beside herself, for she faced meduring a second or two as though she would spring upon me and tear me from the door. Her hands worked; her eyes gleamed; her strong white teeth showed themselves. I shuddered. I had never pictured her looking like that. Then, as steps sounded on the stairs and cheerful voices—cheerful they seemed to ne as they broke in on that strange scene -drew nearer, she turned, and walking deliberately to a seat fell to weeping hysterically.

"What are you doing to that door?" cried the duchess sharply as she entered with the others. I was securing the bar again. "Nothing," I said stolidly. "I am see ing that it is fast." "And hoity toity, miss!" she continued, turning to Anne. "What has come over you shame us all before this Dutch maid? Here, carry these things to the back door. the last averted from me. We all followed, variously laden, Master Lindstrom and Van Tree, who carried between them the plate chest, being the last to leave. There was not one of us, even of us who had only known the house a few weeks, who did not heave a sigh as we passed out of the warm lamp lit parlor, which, littered as it was with the debris of packing, looked still pleasant and comfortable in comparison with the darkness outside and the uncertain future before us. What, then, must have been the pain of parting to those who had never known any other home? Yet they took it bravely. To Dymphna Van Tree's return had brought great happiness. To Master Lindstrom any ending to a long series of anxieties and humiliations was welcome. To Van Tree—well, he had Dymphna with him, and his side of the plate chest was heavy and gave him ample employment. We passed out silently through the back door, leaving the young Dutchman to lock it behind us, and flitted, a line of gliding shadows, through the orchard. It was 2 o'clock; the sky was overcast; a slight drizzle was falling. Once an alarm was given that we were being followed, and we huddled together and stood breathless, a clump of dark figures gazing affrightedly at the tree trunks which surrounded us, and which seemed-at least to the wom en's eyes-to be moving and to be men closing in on us.

But the alarm was groundless, and with no greater mishap than a few stumbles when we came to the slippery edge of the creek we reached the boat, and one by one, admirably ordered by our host, got in and took our seats. Van Tree and Master Lindstrom pushed us off. Then they swung themselves in and paddled warily along, close under the bank, where the shadows of the poplars fell across us, and our figures blended darkly with the line of rushes on the shore.

CHAPTER XII. We coasted along in this silent fashion nearly as far as the hamlet and bridge, following, but farther inshore, the course which Master Lindstrom and I had taken when on our way to bury the Spaniard. A certain point gained, at a signal from our host we struck out into the open and rowed swiftly toward the edge of the marsh. This was the critical moment; but, so far as we could learn, our passage was unnoticed. We reached the fringe of rushes. With a prolonged hissing sound the boat pushed through them. A flight of waterfowl rose, whirring and clapping about us, and we floated out into a dim, misty lake, whose shores and surface stretched away on every side, alike dark, shifting and uncertain.

Across this the Dutchman steered us, bringing us presently to a narrow opening, through which we glided into a second and smaller mere. At the farther end of this leaning back, with her hands clasped penetrable wall of rushes, which rose far above our heads. But the tall stems bent slowly with many a whispered protest before our silent onset, and we slid into a deep water lane, here narrow, there widening into a pool, in one place dark, in another reflecting the gray night sky. Down this we sped swiftly, the sullen plash of the oars and the walls of rushes always with us. For ourselves, we crouched still and silent, shivering and listening for sounds of pursuit, now starting at the splash of a frog, again shudder ing at the cry of a night bird. The duchess, her child and I were in the bows, Master Lindstrom, his daughter and Mistress Anne in the stern. They had made me comfortable with the baggage and some warm coverings and would insist on treating me as helpless. Even when the others began to talk in whispers the duchess enjoined silence on me and bade me sleep. Presently I did so, my last impression one of unending waterways and shoreless, shadowy lakes.

When I awoke, the sun was high, and the scene was changed indeed. We lay on the bosom of a broad river, our boat seeming now to stand still as the sail flapped idly, now to heel over and shoot forward as the light breeze struck us. The shores abreast of us were still low and reedy, but ahead the slopes of green wooded hills rose gently from the stream. Master Bertie was steering, and seeing me lift my head greeted me with a smile. The girls in the stern were covered up and asleep. Amidships, too, Master Lindstrom and Van Tree had curled themselves up between the thwarts and were slumbering peacefully. I turned to look for the duchess and found her sitting wide awake at my elbow, her eyes on her husband.

"Well," she said, smiling, "do you feel better now? You have had a good sleep. 'How long have I been asleep, please? I asked, bewildered by the sunshine, by the shining river and the green hills, by the fresh morning air, by the change in everything, and answering in a question, as people freshly aroused do nine times out of ten, "Where are we?" "You have been asleep nearly six hours. and we are on the Rhine, near Emmerich, she answered, smiling. She was pale, and the long hours of watching had drawn dark circles round her eyes. But the old undaunted courage shone in them still, and her smile was as sweet as ever.

"Have we passed the frontier?" I asked eagerly. "Well, nearly," she answered. "But how does your wound feel?"

"Rather stiff and sore," I said ruefully after making an experiment by moving my body to and fro. "And I am very hirsty, but I could steer.'

"So you shall," she said. "Only first eat something. We broke our fast before the others lay down. There is bread and meat behind you, and some hollands and water in the bottle.' I seized the latter and drank greedily.

Then, finding myself hungry, now I came to think about it, I fell upon the eatables. "You will do now, I think," she said when she had watched me for some time. I laughed for answer, pleased that the ong dark night, its gloom and treachery vere past. But its memories remained. and presently I said, "If Van Tree did not try to kill me-and I am perfectly sure he

"So am I," she said. "We were all wrong. "Then," I continued, looking at her gravely, "who did? That is the question. And why?'

"You are sure that it was not the Spanfard whom you hurt in defense of Dymphna?" my lady asked. "Quite sure.

'And sure that it was not Clarence? she persisted. "Quite sure. It was a short man," I explained again, "and dressed in a cloak.

That is all I can tell about him." "It might be some one employed by Clarence," she suggested, her face gloomy, her brows knit. "True, I had not thought of that," I answered. "And it reminds me. I have heard so much of Clarence"-"And seen some little, even that little more than was good for you.'

Yes, he has had the better of me on both occasions," I allowed. "But I was going to ask you," I continued, "to tell me something about him. He was your steward, I know. But how did he come to you? How was it you trusted him?" "We are all fools at times," she answered grimly. "We wanted to have perons of our own faith about us, and he was highly commended to us by Protestants abroad as having seen service in the cause. He applied to us just at the right moment too. And at the first we felt a great liking for him. He was so clever in arranging things; he kept such excellent order mong the servants; he was so ready, so willing, so plausible! Oh!" she added bitterly, "he had ways that enabled him o twist nine women out of ten round his fingers! Richard was fond of him; I liked him; we had talked more than once of now we might advance his interests. And then, like a thunderbolt on a clear day, the knowledge of his double dealing fell upon us. We learned that he had been een talking with a known agent of Gardiner, and this at a time when the bishop was planning our ruin. We had him vatched, and just when the net had all out closed round us we discovered that he and been throughout in Gardiner's pay." "Ahi" I said viciously. "The oddest thing to me is the way he has twice escaped me when I had him at the sword's point!" "The third time may bring other for-une, Master Francis," she answered, smiling. "Yet be wary with him. He is good swordsman, as my husband, who metimes fenced with him, will tell you."

'He can be no common man," I said. "He is not. He is well bred and has en service. He is at once bold and cunning. He has a tongue that would win nost women and a hardihood that would hain them to him. Women love bold men," my lady added naively. And she smiled on me, yet humorously, so that I blushed.

There was silence for a moment. The sail flapped, then filled again. How delicious this morning after that night, this bright expanse after the dark, sluggish channels! Far away in front a great parge, high laden with a mighty stack of rushes, crept along beside the bank, the orse that drew it covered by a kind of knitted rug. When my lady spoke next, it was abruptly. "Is it Anne?" she asked. I knew quite well what she meant and lushed again. I shook my head. "I think it was going to be," she said agely, "only Mistress Dymphna came upon the scene. You have heard the story of the donkey halting between two bundles of have Master Francis! And in the multitude of sweethearts there is safety."

"I do not think that was my case," I said. Instinctively my hand went to my breast, in which Petronilla's velvet sword knot lay safe and warm. The duchess saw the gesture and instantly bent forward one the way seemed barred by a black, im- about her knees and her eyes shining with fun and amusement. "Now I understand. You have left her at home. Now, do not deny it, or I will tell the others. Be frank, and I will keep your secret, on my honor.' "She is my cousin," I said, my cheeks Yet there used to be several Petronillas about the court in Queen Catherine of Aragon's days, I remember. There was Petronilla de Vargas for one. But, there, guess at random. Why do you not tell me more about yourself, Master Francis? Do you not know me well enough now?" "There is nothing to tell, madam," I said in a low voice.

'Your family? You come, I am sure, f a good house.

"I did, but it is nothing to me now. I am cut off from it. I am building my house afresh. And," I added bitterly, "I have not made much way with it yet." She broke, greatly to my surprise, into long peal of laughter. "Oh, you vain boy!" she cried. "You valiant castle builder! How long have you been about the work? Three months? Do you think a house is to be built in a day? Three months, indeed? Quite a lifetime!" Was it three months? It seemed to me to be fully three years. I seemed to have grown more than three years older since that February morning when I had crossed Arden forest with the first light and looked down on Wootton Wawen sleeping in its vale and rouged the herons fishing in the bottoms.

'Come, tell me all about it!" she said abruptly. "What did you do to be cut off?" 'I cannot tell you,'' I answered.

A shade of annoyance clouded her counenance. But it passed away almost on the instant. "Very well," she said, with a little nod of disdain and a pretty grimace. "So be it. Have your own way, but prophesy you will come to me with your tale some day."

I went then and took Master Bertie' place at the tiller, and, he lying down, had the boat to myself until noon and drew no little pleasure from the placid picture which the moving banks and the wide river presented. About noon there was a general uprising, and coming immediately afterward to a little island lying close to one bank we all landed to stretch our legs and refresh ourselves aftr the confinement on board.

"We are over the border now and close Emmerich," said Master Lindstrom, though the mere line of frontier will avail us little if the Spanish soldiers can by hook or crook lay hands on us! Thereore we must lose no time in getting within the walls of some town. We should be fairly secure for a few days either in Wesel or Santon.'

"I thought Wesel was the point we were making for," Master Bertie said in some surprise.

"It was Wesel I mentioned the other day," the Dutchman admitted frankly. And it is the bigger town and the stron-But I have more friends in Santon. To Wesel the road from En nerich runs along the right bank. To Santon we go by a cross country road, starting from the left bank opposite Emmerich, a road longer and more tedious. But we are much less likely to be followed that way than along the Wesel road, and, on secondthoughts, I incline to Santon. 'But why adopt either road? Why not go by river?" I asked. 'Because we should be overtaken. The wind is falling, and the boat," our late host explained more truly than politely, 'with the women in it, is heavy.'

"I understand," I said. "And you feel sure we shall be pursued?" er he pointed with a smile to his plate chest. "Quite sure," he added. "With that before them they will think nothing of the frontier. I fancy that for you, if the English government be in earnest, there will be no absolutely safe place short of the free city of Frankfort, unless indeed you have interest with the Duke of Cleves. "Ah!" said the duchess, and she looked at her husband. "Ah!" said Master Bertie, and he looked very blankly at his wife. So that I did not derive much comfort from that suggestion. 'Then it is Santon, is it?" said my lady. "That first, at any rate. Then, if they follow us along the Wesel road, we shall still give them the slip." So it was settled, neither Van Tree no the girls having taken any part in the discussion. The former and Dymphna were talking aside, and Mistress Anne was sitting low down on the bank, with her feet almost in the water, immersed to all appearance in her own thoughts. There was little bustle as we rose to get into the boat, which we had drawn up on the landward side of the island so as to be invisile from the main channel, and in the middle of this I was standing with one oot in the boat and one on shore, taking from Anne various articles which we had landed for rearrangement, when she whispered to me that she wanted to speak to me alone. "I want to tell you something," she said, raising her eyes to my face and then averting them. "Follow me this way." She strolled, as if accidentally, 20 or 30 aces along the bank, and in a minute I joined her. I found her gazing down the river in the direction from which we had ome. "What is it?" I said anxiously. You do not see anything, do you?" For there had been a hint of bad news in her voice. She dropped the hand with which she had been shading her eyes and turned to settled, but I was too young to back out me. "Master Francis, you will not think and withdraw my words. I hoped for the me very foolish?" she said. Then I perceived that her lip was quivering and that there were tears in her eyes. They were very beautiful eyes when, as now, they grew soft and appeal took the place of challenge.

"What is it?" I replied, speaking cheerfully to reassure her. She had scarcely got over her terror of last night. She trembled as she stood. "It is about Santon," she answered, with a miserable little catch in her voice. 'I am so afraid of going there! Master indstrom says it is a rough, long road, and when we are there we are not a bit farther from those wretches than at Wesel, and-and"-"There, there!" I said. She was on the point of bursting into tears and was clearly much overwrought. "You are making the worst of it. If it were not for Master Lindstrom, I should be inclined to choose Wesel myself. But he ought to know best. "But that is not all," she said, clasping her hands and looking up at me with her face grown full of solemn awe. "I have had a dream." "Well, but dreams" - I objected. "You do not believe in dreams?" she said, dropping her head sorrowfully. "No, no, I do not say that," I admitted, naturally startled. "But what was your

"Well, well!" I said, with a passing shiver at the picture. She described it with a rapt, absent air, which made me creep-as if even now she were seeing mething uncanny. "And then I thought that in the middle of these woods, about half way to Santon, they overtook us, and there was a great fight ' 'There would be sure to be that!'' I nuttered, with shut teeth.

"And I thought you were killed, and we women were dragged back! There, I cannot tell you the rest!" she added wildly. "But try, try to get them to go the old way. If not, I know evil will come of it. Promise me to try?" "But try, try to get them to go the

"I will tell them your dream," I said. "No, no!" she exclaimed still more vehemently. "They would only laugh. Madam does not believe in dreams. But they will listen to you if you say you think the other way better. Promise me you will! Promise me!" she pleaded, her hands clasping my arm, and her tearful eyes looking up to mine.
"Well," I agreed reluctantly, "I will

After all, the shortest way may be the best. But if I do," I said kindly, 'you must promise me in return not to be alarmed any longer, Anne.'

"I will try," she said gratefully. "will indeed, Francis," We were summoned at that minute, for the boat was waiting for us. The duchess scanned us rather curiously as we ran up. We were the last. But Anne kept her word and concealed here fears so bravely that, as she jumped in from the bank, her air of gayety almost deceived me and would have misled the sharpest sighted person who had not been present at our erview, so admirably was it assumed. We calculated that our pursuers would not follow us down the river for some hours. They would first have to search the island, and the watch which they had set on the landing stage would lead them to suspect rather that we had fled by land. We hoped, therefore, to reach Emmerich unmolested. There Master Lindstrom said we could get horses, and he thought we might be safe in Santon by the following evening.

"If you really think we had better go to Santon," I said. This was an hour or two after leaving the island, and when we looked to sight Emmerich very soon the hills which we had seen in front all day, and which were grateful to eyes sated with the monotony of Holland, being now pretty close to us "I thought that we had settled that," replied the Dutchman promptly. I felt they were all looking at me. "I look at it this way," I said, reddening. "Wesel is not far from Emmerich by the road Should we not have an excellent chance of reaching it before our pursuers "You might reach it," Master Lindstrom said gravely. "Though, again, you "And Wesel once reached," I persisted there is less fear of violence being atempted there than in Santon. It is a larger town." "True," he admitted. "But it is just Will you be able to reach Wesel? It is the getting there. That is the difficulty -the getting there before you are caught.

"If we have a good start, why should we not?" I urged, and urged it the more persistently the more I found them opposed to it. Naturally there ensued a warm discussion. At first they all sided against me, save, of course, Anne, and she sat silent, though she was visibly agitated, as from minute to minute I or they seemed likely to prevail. But presently, when I grew warmer and urged again and again the strength of Wesel, my own party veered round, yet still with doubt and misgiving. The Dutchman shrugged his shoulders to the end and remained unpersuaded. But finally it was decided that I should have my own way. We would go to Wesel. Every one knows how a man feels when e comes victorious out of such a battle. He begins on the instant to regret his victory and to see the possible evils which may result from it, to repent the hot words he has used in the strife and the declarations he has flung broadcast. That dread ful phrase, "I told you so!" rises like an avenging fury before his fancy, and he quails.

I felt all this the moment the thing was best and resolved inwardly to get the party mounted the moment we reached Emmerich. I soon had the opportunity of proving this resolution to be more easily made than carried out. About 3 o'clock we reached the little town dominated, as we saw from afar, by an ancient minster, and preferring not to enter it landed at the steps on an inn a quarter of a mile short of the gates and marking a point where we might take the road to Wesel, or, crossing the river, the road to Santon Master Lindstrom seemed well known, but there were difficulties about the horses The German landlord listened to his story with apparent sympathy, but no horses We could not understand the tongue in which the two talked, but the Dutchman's questions, quick and animated for once and the landlord's slow replies, reminded me of the foggy morning when in a similar plight we had urged the master of the Lion's Whelp to put to sea, and I feared a similar result. "He says he cannot get so many horse tonight, 'said Master Lindstrom, with a long face.

"Offer him more money!" quoth the duchess.

"If we cannot have horses until the morning, we may as well go on in the boat,'' I urged.

"He says, too, that the water is out on the road," continued the Dutchman. "Nonsense! Double the price!" cried my lady impatiently. I suppose that this turned the scale The landlord finally promised that in an hour four saddle horses for Master Bertie and the duchess, Anne and myself should be ready, with a couple of pack horses and a guide. Master Lindstrom, his daughter and Van Tree would start a little later for Cleves, five miles on the road to Santon, if conveyance could be got. "And if not, our late host added as we said something about our unwillingness to leave him in danger, "I shall be safe enough in the town, but I hope to sleep in Cleves."

It was all settled very hastily. We felt

-and I in particular, since my plan had been adopted—an unreasonable impatience to be off. As we stood on the bank by the inn door we had a straight reach of river a mile long in full view below us, and now we were no longer moving ourselves, but standing still, expected each minute to see the Spanish boat, with its crew of desperadoes, sweep round the corner before our eyes. Master Lindstrom assured us that if we were once out of sight our pursuers would get no information as to the road we had taken, either from the innkeeper or his neighbors. There is no love lost between them and the Spaniards," he said shrewdly, "and I know the people here, and they know me. The burghers may not be very keen to come to blows with the Spaniards or to resent their foray, but the latter, on their part, will be careful not to go too far or to make themselves obnoxious. We took the opportunity of supping then, not knowing when we might get food again. I happened to finish first, and hearing the horses' hoofs went out and watched the lads who were to be our guides fastening the baggage on the sumpter beasts. I gave them a hand-not without a wince or two, for the wound in my chest was painful—and while doing so had a flash of remembrance. I went to the unglazed window of the kitchen in which the others sat and leaned my elbows on the sill. "I say!" I said, full of my discovery, "there is something we have forgotten!"

"What?" asked the duchess, rising and coming toward me, while the others paused in their meal to listen.

"The letter to Mistress Clarence," I answered. "I was going to get it when I was stabbed, you remember, and afterward we forgot all about it. Now it is too late. It has been left behind." She did not answer then, but came out horses. "This comes of your foolish scruples, Master Francis!" she said severely. Where was it?" "I slipped it between the leathers of the old haversack you gave me," I answered, "which I used to have for a pillow. Van Tree brought my things down, but over-to me and turned with me to look at the looked the haversack, I suppose. At any rate, it is not here." "Well, it is no good crying over spilt milk," she said. She called the others out then, and there was no mistaking Mistress Anne's pleasure at escaping the Santon road. She was radiant and vouchsafed me a very pretty glance of thanks, in which her relief as well as her gratitude shone clearly. By half past 4 we had got, wearied as we were, to horse, and with three hours of daylight before us hoped to reach Wesel without mishap. But for most of us the start was saddened by the parting-though we hoped it would be only for a timefrom our Dutch friends. We remembered how good and stanch they had been to us. We feared—then h Master Lindstrom would not he at t-that we had brought misfortune une them, and neither the duchess' brave 🦠 's nor Dymphna's blue ones were free from tears as they embraced. I wrung Van Tree's hand as if I had known him for months instead of days, for a common danger is a wondrous knitter of hearts, and he only smiledthough Dymphna blushed-when I kissed her cheek. A few broken words, a last cry of farewell, and we four, with our two guides behind us, moved down the Wesel road, the last I heard of our good friends being Master Lindstrom's charge, shouted after us, "to beware of the water if it was

From THE DAILY COLONIST, October 26. THE "QUADRA" ASHORE.

Piled on Fulford Reef in the Dense Fog of Yesterday Afternoon.

No Serious Damage Anticipated and Hopes She Will Be Floated To day.

The Dominion steamer Quadra, Captain Walbran commanding, ran ashore on Fulford reef, Discovery island, in a dense fog at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, while retion in the Gulf of Georgia. At last reports | November 8 she was taking no water but was held fast and firm, with a falling tide but no wind to complainant and Joseph Blackstead defendthreaten her with immediate danger. Acshe will be brought off and dock without Frank Higgins.

News of this latest and most serious mishap directly attributed to the prevailing fog was received by the agent of the marine department, Capt. Gaudin, late yesterday afternoon, Mate Owen having been dispatched for assistance very shortly after the steamer went on and finding his way to Oak Bay with the steam launch.

According to his report and to the mes-sage from Captain Walbran, of which he hap occurred, and consequently the shock was comparatively slight. The tide was falling, however, and herein the chief danger lies. Fulford reef is chief danger lies. Fullord reef is a wicked ledge of rock fringing one end of Discovery island—itself little more than a patch of sharp rocks lying to the north of Trial island and outside of Oak bay but a

Captain Walbran merely waited to satisfy himself that it would be impossible for the Quadra to accomplish her own release and that she was not making water, before sending his message to the city.

As soon as he had learned all the particulars of the ship's condition in the first officer's possession, Capt. Gaudin hurried the tug until this morning. Vancouver to the scene with two large scows to be employed during the night in lightening the ship. At daylight this morning he will go up in person with the Lorne, with the expectation of returning by the Quadra herself in the afternoon.

THE COLQUITZ HALL MEETING.

Much to their disappointment, the residents along the banks of the Colquitz river were not honored with the presence of either Mayor Teague, Water Commissioner Raymur or any of the aldermen at the public meeting held in the district hall last evening. In consequence the meeting did not advance the question under consideration as much as it had been expected it would. The vitations, and each sent a courteous acknowledgment—that was all.

In the first place, as the Mayor briefly explained, it was a matter entirely outside of the city and with which, therefore, the of the city and with which, therefore, the city could have nothing to do. And in the second place the matter had been fully threshed out and disposed of by arbitration years ago and muld not with propriety be.

After waiting the better part of an hour for some of the city folks to appear, the meeting of residents last night was called to order, and the alleged pollution of the waters of the stream by the operations at waters of the stream by the operations at Beaver lake was fully and freely discussed. The general opinion appeared to be in favor of closing up the stream entirely and substitute of cl tuting a six-inch main connecting with the city water works. At seven o'clock this morning the Lorne will return to the disabled steamer, and it will, it is thought, stay by her until she reaches Esquimalt. Though the Quadra's steel plates are very thin they are said to be unipjured, and the hope is that no southwester or northeaster will arise to do them injury, for if they come, the Quadra's condition would be dangerous in the extreme. Capt. Gaudin, Agent of Marine and Fisheries, remained by the ship pretty much all of yesterday, but besides the presence of officials and steamboat men there were many who went out from the city. How the ship met with the mishap has been discussed by the knowing and the unknowing, but steamboat men who have occasion to pass the place almost daily speak of the dangers of the locality and of the similarity of Ful-ford reef to that of Trial island when encountered in a thick fog such as prevailed on Friday last. The speed of the steamer at the time when she struck is probably the nly part of the disaster which seems to be criticized, for it is stated in unauthoritative quarters that she was going between a en and twelve knot speed.

SAN FRANCISCO AND VICTORIA. The Mechanics' Institute of San Francisco have agreed to the conditions for a proposed match with the Victoria club, and have appointed Friday next as the date of the contest. Three games will be played, with three players at each board, those in charge being entirely independent of outside assistance. Unfortunately for the Victoria club it will not be as strongly represented as in the last match, and it will be further handicapped in having to divide its strength between the three tables. In any event the match will be a fairly interesting one.
