THE EDITOR OF THE RAPID CITY STANDARD, N. W. D., has the 'who-royalty' lower had. He printed a copy of his paper on silk for presentation to Lord Lurgie as a memento of his visit to that rising town.

THE GREAT TRUNK passenger receipts are larger now than ever, in great measure owing to the reduction of rates. Why do not the roads then keep the rates lower? They would do more business.

ANOTHER BATCH OF Q. C.'s has been created. There is now neither method nor reason in conferring this distinction, and instead of making more, the government should close down on such an arbitrary mode of preferment.

DOES THE TELEGRAM REPORTER OWN the Ontario government? At least according to that journal the ministers get into bugles and allow the reporter to drive them whither he listeth. The World some days ago drew the attention of the authorities to the harsh sentence passed on the girl at Kingston.

A MONTREAL PAPER wishes to see well-dressed and pretty girls in the dining and refreshment rooms on the railways, as in England. Like a good many other things, a man can be brought to patronize a railway through his stomach, and those roads which look best after the comforts of its patrons are the ones that will eventually command the business.

THAT THERE are too many teachers is the common complaint at present; and the fact that the intermediate examinations had the effect of preventing for a while at least, a large number from entering an overcrowded profession, will strengthen the department and examiners in their determination to keep the tests at their present tension.

THE CYCLE OF CRIME through which Ontario is now passing is not receiving much attention by way of newspaper comment; it is all narrative. Five or six years ago there was a great deal more comment than narrative. At that time there was a political object to be gained, and many of our newspapers were indifferent as to the means employed. If the exercise of cleanliness in the communication of death sentences at that time was a premium on murder, as some asserted, how are the terrible crimes of the present period to be accounted for? Will the Toronto Mail, the Hamilton Spectator or the London Free Press explain?

AN IMPORTANT DECISION. May a tavern-keeper sell liquor on any part of his premises, or must he confine it to "the bar"? The case has been decided in favor of the tavern-keeper by Judge Hughes of St. Thomas. The proprietor of a tavern and pleasure ground at Port Stanley had set up a bar on his pleasure grounds (attached to the hotel), and was fined by the magistrate therefor. This decision was appealed, and the county judge quashed the conviction.

BRINGING A BOY TO BETRAY HIS FATHER. The murder of Richardson of Buck Lake was a cold-blooded and cruel act. There can be no feeling of sympathy for the man who took his life, nor any feeling of regret that he has been captured. In Vankoughnet's case the law unquestionably takes its course. But what are we to think of the manner in which his capture was effected? The man Downey was not a detective, or policeman, or even constable. He came from a distant locality with Vankoughnet's daughter, who had been ill at his house. He found the fugitive's wife at the house of a neighbor, and tried by threats and wiles to learn his hiding place. He failed, and then drove the woman home. Five or six innocent, rattling children ran out to welcome their mother, who had a burden on her heart which they could not share. Downey noticed a talkative lad among them, and at once set to work to bribe the little fellow to betray his father. He offered two or three coppers—perhaps it was all the blood-money he had—and the child took them and told where his father was hiding. Then, as the child danced to the music of the coppers, Downey forced the unfortunate woman to join him in proceeding out into the lake to make the arrest. We don't think it is necessary to characterize such conduct. It is enough to state the facts. Downey would have revelled in the possession of Downey, and one can't help wishing that Dante had him.

THE WAR OF FARES. At an war of fares on the railways has opened at an opportune time. It is a season of the year when everybody wants to go out for a holiday, and the cheap fares enable them to do so at a nominal cost. The Grand Trunk seems to be making money. Vanderbilt says there is nothing to settle between the rival railways, and all the leading managers are satisfied to let the war go on. The people who travel will certainly not complain, and if the railways find that the present prices pay they may be induced to make them permanent. There is no doubt that many more would go on a journey were the fares reduced, and as each locomotive would draw eight or ten passenger coaches as easily and cheaply as four or five, it is reasonable to suppose that the railways would be amply recompensed in the lower fares by the greater volume of traffic. Men were astonished to learn that the reduction of postage rates increased the revenue of the service. May not similar results follow the reduction of fares on the railways?

GLADSTONE'S NEXT MOVE. Now that the Irish land bill has been disposed of, the English Tories will be anxiously enquiring what the great tribune's next move will be.

That the bill will give Irish agitation its quietus is probably too much to expect. Gladstone continues to be an Irish question as long as there is a home rule party, and so long as Ireland remains a part of the British empire. But with an effective administration of the land law, however imperfect it may be, the Irish peasants will have an opportunity of materially bettering their condition, and will consequently be less disposed to be the tools of agitators and demagogues. For a time at least Ireland is likely to be left alone, and reforming legislation will have to turn for fresh conquests elsewhere.

Whatever else he is, Gladstone is a radical, and no one need fancy that his great brain will stop cogitating with the settlement of the Afghan, the Boer and the Irish questions. With peace abroad and no foreign matter pressing domestic affairs will naturally command his attention. What will he take up first? Will he start a disestablishment crusade, or an English land bill agitation, or set to work reforming the house of lords?

He himself has told us. Some time ago he announced to a deputation of English farm laborers that as soon as he had got the land bill off his hands, he would direct his attention to the assimilation of the county with the borough franchise. Such a measure would be sure to meet with the opposition of the lords, as it would place greater power in the hands of the tenant farmers and agricultural laborers, and perhaps imperil the English land system. Once the franchise is extended among the farming classes in England, the fight against landlordism will begin in earnest. Of course there can only be one issue to the struggle—landlordism will have to go; and when that is gone, what will the house of lords have worth living for?

THE REACTIONARY TORY EDITOR. The new editor of the Mail has taken a contract to write down Mr. Blake. He seems to have forgotten—or perhaps he never knew—that no man was ever written down but by himself. The new editor is certainly proving in his own case how true is that saying of slashing Dick Bentley; he is writing himself down with a vengeance.

Eight years ago he was editor of the Halifax Express, and the Chronicle of that city reproaches his estimate of Mr. Blake as a speaker at that time. The article was written just after Mr. Blake's speech on the Pacific scandal. Here are two or three extracts:

"I have only just come from hearing out to the close the ablest speech I have ever heard in my life, and it was made by Mr. Blake. I do not need to recall myself to any cooler or more critical mood in order to judge of the merits from a point of view purely that of the perfection of the speech of the time." On the conclusion of the speech of Mr. Blake, the whole government side of the house joined in bearing graceful and generous testimony to the eloquence of the orator. But, in spite of all of this, the speaker's speech was marked by scholarly correctness of phrase, an epigrammatic force, an earnestness of delivery, and an eloquence that, at the close, carried everyone with it. It was not this that Mr. Blake's speech, followed by the speech of Smith, of Selkirk, appears to have settled the matter, and that the government is now in a minority."

The writer was a Tory then, as he is now—a "reactionary Tory" he calls himself—but he was not then under a contract to write down Mr. Blake. He is over-acting his part, and it does not need the contrast of past and present to make the contrast of Conservative of his incoherence, or to say that they don't believe nine-tenths of what he writes about Mr. Blake in the Mail.

An Armies Violentist. Signor Urlihan, an army musician, is correspondent of the Chicago Times: He plays the violin and also the cornet between the acts of the opera, and draws a large audience. We accidentally found ourselves in the audience, having gone to hear a new tenor as 'Maurice' in 'Il Trovatore,' and I confess that even a glimpse at his black stockings and legs and bare toes winking the violin bow was more than I could enjoy. But when he broke a string, and to the immense delight of the audience took the small cornet with him, and threading and returning the violin, afterward winking the perspiration from his brow with a cannie handkerchief, he knotted it firmly in his first and second bow. I felt that a wide show at a circus, with the living skeleton and the Circusus girl, was a much more appropriate place for him than an elegant opera house.
