That, Sir, was the concluding sentence which fell like a thunder clap of warning upon the House, and which showed that, as the hon. gentleman did not properly gauge the connecting circumstances which surrounded the question, he had equally failed in gauging, as every statesman, especially one who aspires to be the leader of a party, should be well able to gauge—he failed to gauge the temper of the Canadian people, with respect to this subject. Have we not, then, good grounds for believing that, as he failed then to rightly gauge the importance of the case and the sentiment of the country, he may as certainly fail again. Now, Sir, I shall take up some few points of the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am sorry he is not in his place, but as he is not, it is not my fault. He commences with a warning. Will any hon. gentleman in this House, who has watched him from his seat, year by year, say if he can recollect a single instance in which that hon. gentleman did not commence his speech with a warning? The hon. gentleman is in love and delighted with warnings. An old historical legend, which takes us away back into the times of Greece and the Trojans, tells us that there was once a prophetess by the name of Cassandra. She had the divine gift of prophecy, but it was fated that her prophecies should never be believed. She walked about the streets of Troy, and the burden of her prediction was, "Troy shall be destroyed; woe unto Troy; Troy shall be destroyed; woe unto the city of Troy." Year after year that plaintive cry of Cassandra went abroad in the streets of Troy, until the people became indignant, indifferent; and at last, when she passed by their way, they would simply say, one to the other: "It is only the mad Cassandra, let her rave." It may happen that the multiplied warnings—warnings made when the hon. gentleman was in power, and since—will become wearisome to the people, and to his party, and that when he raises his fruitful succession of warnings, the people may just jog each other as they pass by, and say: "It is only the mad—Cassandra." What are the warnings which the hon. gentleman has given us on the subject of the Resolutions? The first is this: I warn you that if you endorse that bill you will have to pay it. The second one is: I warn you if you pass the Resolutions, the Company is not bound to, and will not, complete this road by 1886. Well, Sir, that warning was effectually voided by the utterances of the Minister of Railways, who has, I hope, set that question at rest in this House. He then goes on to warn us that the road will not be built in four years; he warns the Finance Minister that he may find it hard to borrow money; he warns him that the surplus may give out—and that is a warning upon which, I am bound to say, he is particularly well able to talk. He warns him that the importations may diminish; he warns us—no, he does more, he confidently predicts—and the old Latin line comes to one's mind: ab uno disce omnes—confidently predicts, what? Here is what the hon. member for South Huron says:

"Then we see from declarations in this House—we see in the newspapers of a certain Province, we see in every direction, that one of the great Provinces of the Dominion is seriously dissatisfied with its financial position, and that it is not likely to consent to this $30,000,000 being given, unless other and greater concessions are made, unless other and still greater liabilities are incurred."

That is a statement in cold blood, that if we advance this loan the demands of a certain Province will not be satisfied until another $30,000,000 more are given to it. I give that as a specimen of the extravagant predictions of the hon. gentleman opposite; and as we know how close to probability that one is, we may take it as a fair sample of the probability of his other warnings being verified. Well, Sir, he warns us, first, that this is but the initial instalment, and again, that it may turn out to be simply a Grand Trunk affair. Sir, with reference to this Grand Trunk affair, I think the hon. member for Cardwell pretty well set it in sufficient light when he spoke on that question. I deny that they are parallel cases. I say they are as widely different as possible. In the first place, with reference to the Grand Trunk Railway, it was built by money subscribed by people abroad, which was sent to this country and used in building a road for developing and opening up this country. In the other case, all the assets and money which have been given to the Company for the building of this trans-continental line, is money which has been advanced and land subsidy which has been granted by this country—a magnificent, and I must say a sufficient subvention—one which we are not called upon to increase, and one which I do not think it is the temper of this Parliament or the country to increase, in the way of subvention or gift. Add this to the remarks which were made by the hon. member for Cardwell and the considerations which he adduced, and I think it is patent to most hon. gentlemen that there is no fair parallel between the Grand Trunk Railway and this railway, with reference to the lien we may have upon them. The lien we have on the Grand Trunk was placed where it is because of considerations which cannot now enter into this question. It is still a liability, and the time will probably come when this liability will be met, and the country will get back what it paid into that road in the way of capital. Sir, the hon. gentleman has given these amongst other warnings. Now the only process by which we can arrive at any fair estimate of what importance we are to attach to these warnings, is to go back to the past warnings from the same hon. gentleman. If we have any doubts about the matter they can only be set at rest in that way. Let us go back to his record and collate a number of the warnings he has uttered, and if he has proved a fair and a true prophet in the past, it is possible he may do so in the present instance. But, on the other hand, if he has proved a false prophet in the past, it is quite possible that his prophecies will have the same outcome at the present time. I think if we take the budget speeches which were delivered by that hon. gentleman from 1874 to 1878, we will find prophecy and non-fulfilment running through from the very first to the very last. In 1874 he came down with his budget, and when placing his $3,000,000 of extra taxation on the people, he concluded that he would thenceforward be able to dispense with any additional taxation, and that the prospects of the country for being able to sustain itself were fairly good. In 1875 he had reason to believe that there would be a reasonable surplus for the current year. In 1876 these confident forecasts of the hon. gentleman's are given a new turn, both by the mournful prologue with which he commenced his speech in 1876, and the still more mournful tones in which he alluded to the falling off of trade to the extent of $20,000,000. In 1877, despite his hopeful forecasts, a deficit of $2,000,000 stared him in the face, and he put a tax on tea to help him to meet it. But then he thinks that in that year the country is about coming to clear water, and it will be all right afterwards. But the next year comes, and there is another deficiency, and there is a foreshadowing of the hated income tax. As a man of forecast, the history of the hon. member for South Huron, from 1874 to 1878, will not make us feel that his authority in that regard is of any very great weight. But let us go from forecast to prophecy, and see how he has succeeded. Any man may make a mistake in forecast, but if a man has the divine afflatus breathed upon him, if he has the power of prophecy, there can be no difficulty in his case; if he can prophesy, and is a true prophet, his predictions will come true; if not, they will not come true. The hon. gentleman prophesied in 1878, and the subject of his prophecy was the hon. Finance Minister. He said:

"But when the people come to understand what is now being proposed, the chances of my hon. friend ever succeeding in regaining his place in this House is, if I know anything of the temper of his constituency, problematical in the last degree."

The hon. Finance Minister, however, did come back, and he is here to-day, and the fallacy of the prophecy is shown by the fact. In 1878, the hon. gentleman again lifted up his voice and prophesied—and this time he had two strings to his bow. The subject of this prophecy is the hon. Minister of Railways and the National Policy:

"The hon. member for Cumberland, when he comes back to power, if he ever does, of which I must fain express my doubt, at all events at the next election, will find himself so crippled and confined in every quarter, that if he did make some slight readjustment of the Tariff he will be obliged to settle down on the general Tariff, not affording manufactures one whit more assistance or protection than that which he now condemns on our part."

Sir, the hon. member for Cumberland did come back at the next elections, did help to introduce and to carry forward the very same Tariff policy which he propounded when he was a member of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition. In 1879 this hon. gentleman again lifts up his voice and prophesies, this time about the party. He says:

"The time is coming, and coming fast, when they will wake up from their short-lived delusion to find themselves wiser and poorer by many a million than they are to-night. I warn the hon. gentleman that then he will find that for the sake of obtaining a temporary party triumph, he and those who support him will, in the long result, prove to have utterly and hopelessly wrecked, not only their own fortunes, and the fortunes of their party, but I very much fear the fortunes of the country, that have been most unfortunately committed to their charge."

Sir, the events have spoken after the prophecy, and have shown upon what tenable grounds he prophesied. In 1880, again he lifted up his voice and prophesied, and this time he spoke about the party and the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, saying:

"They will rush upon the fate which awaits them so soon as the people have an opportunity of pronouncing their opinions at the polls."

The people had the opportunity of pronouncing their opinions at the polls. They did it in 1882, and their opinion is shown by the majority of seventy which came to back up and carry through the contract which was introduced by the Government; and, sad to relate, the prophet was left at home. In 1880, he again prophesied as follows:—

"I might recall the doom which, two years later, overtook the men who treated with scorn the warnings we had uttered. I think the country is likely to repeat its vengeance, and that, if these hon. gentlemen do not take care, the doom which overtook them in 1873 will be visited upon them in 1883."

Well, Sir, in this prophecy the hon. gentleman left himself an outlet—he said, "if they do not take care;" therefore, I suppose he will come to the conclusion that they did take care, and so avoided the trouble that he promised for them. So much for the hon. gentleman's prophecies. Now, I repeat what I said before—why should we be plagued with this continual iteration of warning and prophecy? Who can blame the people if they soon come to grow indignant and indifferent, and pass the hon. gentleman by with the words, "it is only the mad Cassandra—let her rave and prophesy." The hon. gentleman was pleased, in the plenitude of his power, the greatness of his mental strength, and the magnitude of his information, to turn to this side of the House, lift himself up in all his dignity, and ask this question: Sir, I wonder if hon. gentlemen ever look at the Public Accounts, or do they put implicit faith in their leaders? If that hon. gentleman were in his place, I would say that once in a while we do look into the Public Accounts. I remember looking at a page on which there were a great many figures, which ran from 1868 to 1883, and the only places where I found a minus sign were opposite the years in which the hon. member for South Huron happened to be Financial Minister. Yes, Sir, we do look at the Public Accounts; we learn a lesson from them, and the lesson bids us beware of trusting the finances of this country to the hon. member for South Huron again. Well, Sir, that hon. gentleman went a little further a short time afterwards and said: "Now, my hon. friends from the Maritime Provinces may not be as well aware of the past history of Canada as I am, and my friends around me." The hon. gentleman credited the members from the Maritime Provinces with much of the effects of isolation—they had not read so much as the hon. gentleman, or informed themselves about the history of Canada. If that hon. gentleman were in his place to-night, I would venture to humbly suggest to him that the members from the Maritime Provinces and the people of the Maritime Provinces do now and then see a newspaper, do get a history of this country occasionally, and are not totally benighted, even with regard to the history of older Canada. I would remind that hon. gentleman that he came down on one occasion to enlighten the people of the Maritime Provinces, and with no very enlightening effect, if we may judge by the extent to which his visit increased the number of his followers there. I would venture to suggest, as he was followed by the hon. Leader of the Opposition and Mr. Huntington, and as neither of these gentlemen seemed to have increased the number of their followers there, that it may only be a way of taking vengeance on the people of the Maritime Provinces, to imply here that they are not very well informed. Well, Sir, we are somewhat informed on the history of Canada. We know a few things, and amongst others we know this—we know that outside of the points I have mentioned, there are bits of history which cling around the hon. gentleman himself. We listen, Sir, to his strong assurances of his patriotism and his indignant denial that he is unpatriotic, and yet we are compelled, from what little information we have, to come to some pretty strange conclusions, in one or two instances. What are these instances? We remember, as we read the budget speeches, that, from 1874 to 1878, inclusive, that hon. gentleman in no single budget speech, refrained from hurling back upon the preceding Government accusations respecting the enormous and reckless and insane expenditures they had heaped upon the country, and the more reckless, enormous and insane obligations to which they had committed the country. But that hon. gentleman went over to Great Britain to ask a favour, and when he reached the Mother Land he had no other words, in presenting his case, to utter, than these:

"The entire debt has been incurred since for legitimate objects of public utility. The indirect advantages from these public works have been found in the remarkable rapidity with which the commerce and the material prosperity of the Dominion have been developed. The revenue has shown a continuous surplus each year since Confederation."

Either the hon. gentleman was wrong in his first statement or he was dishonest in his second, and our opinion of him is not raised when we find that, on his return he gave this reason for his contradictory statements, that it was necessary to show the silver side of the shield in the Mother Country when soliciting a favour, but he kept the brazen side, for his own people at home. The hon. gentleman speaks in indignant tones of his patriotism. On this point I have gathered some information, in a statement made by the hon. gentleman in 1882, when he occupied in this House his position of chief financial critic of the Government. He said:

"Why, Sir, I tell them to-day that Canada is a country in which no man is free to buy or to sell, to eat or to drink, to travel or to stand still, without paying toll to some extortioner or other."

If the eminently patriotic gentleman is to carry abroad statements of that kind, it becomes of the first necessity that a man with equally strong lungs should travel closely behind him, and, as these utterances go forth, cry out with a loud voice: "Nevertheless this is a Canadian patriot of the first water." I think I have taken up most of the objections which have been urged as reasons why these Resolutions should not be passed. But there are a few left out of the abundant surplus—I am glad that the hon. gentleman has a little portion of a surplus in some way—there are a few left from the salient remarks of the hon. member for Queen's which I did not quite overtake before recess and with reference to which I have a few remarks to make now. When the hon. gentleman spoke of the old landlord system of this country, and tried to make it appear that we were introducing into the North-West Territories a revived type and a perfect pattern of the old, exacting, and, in some respects, tyrannical landlord system of the old country, it is only necessary to make that statement where people can hear it to show its inaccuracy. It needs no refutation other than simply to state it. There is no analogy between colonization land companies and the land regulations in the North-West, and the old system of landlord tenure and the like which obtains in the old country. The hon. gentleman said, no doubt, that there were bulls and bears outside who are manipulating the stock of this Company, and naughty men inside who are making capital out of it, and rival speculators who were found in every way plotting schemes in relation to this measure; but I tell the hon. gentleman that Canada has too large a stock in this road, too many of her interests are bound up in its successful completion, for us to sit idly by and see the bulls and bears tearing this to pieces, and naughty men doing their best to destroy the prospects of the Company, and rival speculators trying to obtain an advantage out of this thing in which we are deeply interested. In this question, the motto of Canada is nemo me impune lacessit. The hon. gentleman speaks of the enormous sums which have been expended by the Company in side enterprises. If he will make a calculation, he will see that the amount so expended does not exceed the sum of $1,800,000, so that the sums are not very enormous compared with the expenditure and the estimated cost of the whole road. I protest against the way the hon. gentleman puts the terms of this Resolution. Any stranger sitting in the galleries and listening to the hon. gentleman will suppose that the proposition before the House was to give this Company $30,000,000 in cash as a gift, which will never be repaid. The hon. gentleman begged the question entirely in so stating it. It is a loan which must be paid back to the uttermost farthing, or this Government will have its perfect forfeiture in the taking over of the securities given for the loan. It is not a gift but simply a square bargain. I thank hon. members very kindly for the attention they have given me. I know I have trespassed longer on your time than I should, but I trust you will pardon, in a comparatively new member, what you might not be disposed to pass over in the case of an older and more experienced member. I have never yet had an opportunity of expressing myself with reference to the railway policy of this country, and I thought it would not be amiss for me, at this stage of my political life, to give the reasons why I intend to support these Resolutions. It will not be more than a quarter of a century from this time when the next generation, looking at this completed work and at the multitude of enterprises clustering around it, will come to the conclusion that in the inception and carrying out and completion of this road, the fathers of this Canadian people acted wisely and well, and that they have raised a monument which is more imperishable than bronze, a monument which will stand to their credit and endure to their benefit so long as Canada shall be Canada, and countries shall look upon and honour public spirit.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Mr. Speaker, I shall offer no apology to the House for rising to speak upon this question. It is a question of so great importance that every representative is entitled to speak upon it. I, Sir, feel that I, too, have a duty to perform, and to the extent of my limited ability shall endeavour to do it. You can the better afford to listen to me for a short time, as to-day you have had the pleasure of listening to both Queen's and King's among the speakers, and can now afford to listen to one of the Commons. In the speech just closed by the hon. member for King's, we have seen the work of a master painter, one who has a great command of language, one who is a master in the business, and we have only to regret, Sir, that so great painting ability as he possesses should be used in whitewashing so bad a measure. Eloquence like his tends to soothe, and I presume that in the surgical operation which is to be performed, the deep incision which is to be made in Canadian credit, he will administer the chloroform, to make the cut felt as little as possible. He remarked to the member for Queen's that, at some future time, they would meet and compare notes. I presume he will follow the example of the Canadian Pacific Railway by asking the Government to endorse the notes. There is very much of what the hon. gentleman said with which none of us will disagree. Indeed, for the first half hour of his speech, I understand that those who are more familiar with him than I, say that they always did like that portion of his speech. When he spoke of his late researches convincing him that it was possible and perhaps a proper thing for the Government to control the railways, he came very near sentiments expressed by myself during the last Session, and upon that point we should perhaps agree pretty closely, so far as to their owning and working them to an extent which would prevent the monopolies of which we stand in great danger. He spoke of the energy, the remarkable push of this Company, he referred to their push repeatedly. Sir, there is a legend on the opposite side of the House which gentlemen there are very fond of referring to, called a "big push," in connection with which it is alleged the words were used "come down handsomely." I think from the Resolutions laid before us, that this is a push of that kind on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a big push for us to come down handsomely. He lays out the plan of his argument, the field of his conflict, as between the completion of the railway in 1886 and 1891. I do not understand that to be the question before us. The railway company have not stated that they could not finish until 1891. They have said that with this great advance, they could finish in two years, but they have not stated, as put by the hon. gentleman, that it would not otherwise be finished until 1891. Yet, if that came really to be the test as between the advance and not the advance, I do not think we would change our position. The hon. gentleman alluded to himself as an independent member. Now, Sir, when I become Premier, which, I do not think, will be before 1891, unless I like the railway get a large advance, I hope I may have many such independent members, members who will confine their independence to speak against me but voting with me. Then, Sir, he took us across the ocean, to firesides in Ireland and other countries, and said many were there to-night talking about the pluck of the Dominion. Mr. Speaker, there are other firesides nearer home around which, to-night, they are talking, but it is about the plucking of the Dominion. He became very eloquent indeed upon the question of immigration, regretted that the hand of frost had closed up the rivers and the lakes so that immigrants could not reach their destination. We all know that the dead of winter is just the time for immigrants to go to the North-West—they always go on snow-shoes. He drew a feeling picture of the disadvantages a man would labour under in having to pass through other premises in going from his breakfast table to his library, comparing the North-West with old Canada, but he did not tell us which was the breakfast table and which the library. So far as that question is concerned, it is simply a question of cost. Distances are measured by the cost or passing from one to the other for either passengers or freight, and the time for talking largely about political railways is passed—I think it ended with the Intercolonial. He derives much consolation from the assurance that, of the twenty-two millions and a half to be advanced, fifteen millions is sure to go into the railway. Is it not surprising how easily hon. gentlemen become satisfied after considerable practice? He is quite contented now to know that two out of every three dollars that we vote will go into the railway. Of course, Sir, we never expect that any hon. member will rise from the opposite side of the House without attacking the hon. member from South Huron. That hon. gentleman does not require my defence. He is quite able to defend himself. He has been attacked, and will be attacked, and we know the reason. It is a very sure sign, Mr. Speaker, when you see a dozen boys pitching into one, that it is a pretty big boy they are after. Sir, we have heard much of a railway from ocean to ocean, from sea to sea. I do not understand that such a railway is before us. There is much, indeed, about this railway that we do not see; there is a great deal that we are not allowed to see; there is considerable that is not considered good for us to see; but, the railway from sea to sea is not before the House. Mr. Speaker, I propose to direct my remarks to a railway that has a beginning and an end—not a kind of patent, double-acting, self-adjusting suction railway, that goes down to New York, Boston and Portland, sucks up business there, and discharges it on St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax. This is not the kind of railway I am going to speak about. I shall speak of a railway that is bounded by law, its sections defined by contract. That railway commences at Callander, and ends upon the Pacific Ocean, at a point fixed at Port Moody. Where is Callander? The hon. Minister said it was an unknown place, and he had to go back to Montreal to find a starting-point that would be known. Callander, Sir, is in the Province of Ontario, and is not in the disputed territory. It is a little north of latitude 46, and about longitude 79. It is 345 miles west, and a little north, of Montreal; 223 miles north of Toronto, and was the end of the Canada Central Railway, and is our starting-point. Port Moody is a few miles north of the west end of the northern boundary of the United States. It is on the waters of the Pacific, in longitude 122, and is 2,550 miles from Callander. Such is the railway, and such are its termini. The following is the manner in which it was to be constructed: from Callander to Port Arthur a distance of 650 miles, by the Canadian Pacific Railway; from Port Arthur to Red River 429 miles, by the Dominion Government; from Red River to Kamloops is 1,260 miles, by the Canadian Pacific Railway; from Kamloops to Port Moody 213 miles, by the Government; and the branch from Winnipeg to Pembina 69 miles, by the Government; in all 1,910 miles by the railway company, and 711 miles by the Government. For building this railway, or these two sections of this railway, the Company were to receive $25,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 acres of land; exemption from taxation of road forever; exemption of taxation on land, unless sold, for twenty years; freedom from duties; a monopoly in the North-West for twenty years, and the whole road their own forever. At the time this bargain was made, many considered it a hard bargain for Canada. Tradition says that opinions expressed in the lobby, and the votes given in the House differed. Tradition says that the party whip had to be administered with great vigour to keep members in line. Tradition says that when the contract was finally passed, an old supporter exclaimed: "We have saved the chief, but we have ruined the party." Previous to the contract this work had been carried on as a Government work. The Pembina Branch was built, the Thunder Bay section was being built, and the road reached westward into the prairie Province. The contract was signed, and construction was proceeded with by the Company and by the Government. (All other speakers have given a little history, and I suppose I may, too.) The Company wanted to sell stock, and the Government was applied to to guarantee dividends. The Minister of Finance has been good enough to bring down a paper showing us in what manner the Government may borrow money, namely, by the issue of debentures, by the issue of debenture stock, by direct terminable annuities, and by the issue of debenture bonds. It was the opinion of his deputy that in June last the Government were authorized to borrow to the extent of $18,000,000. He gives this as his opinion:

"The principal in money mentioned in the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to represent $975,000 half-yearly for ten years, was nearly $16,000,000. So far as that amount goes, the Government of Canada was, it appears to me, within their borrowing powers."

It appears, Sir, that the Government were quite willing to borrow $24,000,000, but the Company could not furnish the money, and therefore they only borrowed a portion—they took a portion of it in cash, and securities for the balance. In relation to taking security, the Finance Minister says:

"As regards the acceptance of securities from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for deferred payments, the Government made the arrangement, trusting to the support of Parliament, as the case was urgent."

The Government do not claim it was according to law. They admit it was contrary to law, but trusted to Parliament, "as the case was urgent." Now, Sir, it will be observed that all these powers were given for the express and only purpose of borrowing money. Was this power exercised for that purpose? Let us see. I will read a paragraph from the Speech from the Throne speaking of the arrangement with the Company:

"That arrangement was made on the belief that it would give steadiness and increased value to the shares on the market."

Borrowing had nothing to do with it; it was to advance the stock on the market. The thing was done—done by Ministers; Parliament was not consulted, although it was to meet in about two months. As I have remarked, the thing was done. The railway gun was charged with Government giant powder; loaded with a red hot shot, and the gun fired. But it failed to inflame the stock exchange. It missed the target. But in one sense it made a bull's eye; for it hit the "bulls" in the eye and knocked down the stock. Mr. Speaker, common people must not be blamed if they fail to comprehend how the Company could expect to benefit from this arrangement. And please mark the distinction between the Company and an individual stockholder. The arrangement was to deposit with the Government, within three months, 11½ millions of solid cash—8½ millions cash down, and the balance within three months. And what was this to do? It was to guarantee the dividends on $65,000,000 of stock. But where was the stock? $55,000,000 of it had been sold and had passed from the Company, as a Company, and was the Company's property no longer. The remaining $10,000,000 was pledged for a loan. How could the Company be helped? There is something about this we cannot understand; perhaps it is "One of those things which no fellow can understand."

What was the first result? Let me read from the Speech from the Throne:

"That arrangement was made in the belief that it would give steadiness and increased value to the shares on the market. A combination of unfavourable circumstances has prevented the fulfilment of these expectations, and the Company has not been able to obtain the required capital by the sale of its stock."

Of the first result the President said was this:

"I regret to say, however, that the arrangements so made has not attained its object in any degree."

What was the second result? The President of the Company says:

"The payment to the Government of $8,710,240, in advance of the secured dividends, has deprived the Company of the means of continuing vigorously the construction of the road."

This result was disastrous—a result not uncommon with individuals or companies or governments, when they go out of their proper lines. As gunners on the stock exchange, the Government is not a success. In military matters, when people get dissatisfied with the artillery, they are allowed to exchange into the infantry, where the guns are not so large and not so dangerous. What is the proposition before the House? First, that no part of the $7,500,000 for which security was taken from the Company instead of cash shall be paid until 1888. The second part is, that the Government shall loan the Company $22,500,000; the two items—the one which we are not to receive and the one which we are to give, amount together to $30,000,000. I will deal only with the $22,500,000, and for the purpose of doing so, I beg to enquire what the Company has done? The Company has, upon the section of the line from Callander to Port Arthur, constructed 160 miles, and partially constructed some fifty miles besides. It has constructed on the section from Winnipeg to Kamloops 960 miles out of 1,260 miles. What has the Company expended? The president says:

"It has expended on its main line, including the finishing of 1,130 miles, $23,363,564"

—say $23½ millions. What has the Company received? The president says:

"It has only received out of the entire cash subsidies and land subsidies, $21,318,222"

—say 21½ millions. This would leave the amount of cash furnished by the Company, $2,245,342, or say 2¼ millions. But what has the Company earned by the work now done? It has earned cash subsidy, $12,289,211, say 12¼ millions; land subsidy earned and sold, 3,753,400 acres, sold at $2.36 per acre, amounts to $8,855,024, say 8¾ millions; land subsidy earned and not sold, 10,102,305 acres, which, valued at $2 per acre, amounts to $20,204,610, say 20 millions. It is almost unanimously conceded that it is proper to place the price at $2 per acre. These items together amount to $41,151,845, say 41 millions. Deduct from this the cost of the work, $23,563,568, say 23½ millions, and $17,588,291, say 17½ millions remain. Now, Mr. Speaker, you will remember that the hon. member for King's, in going over those properties constantly used the word "worth;" he said those properties were worth in every instance what they had cost. When he was pricing them as security he valued them at their cost; and as he seems to be appointed valuator for this Government loan society, I suppose we must take his valuation, and, therefore, no objection can be taken to my using these as values in lieu of cost. By these figures, I have shown that up to the present moment the Company have earned a profit on the work they have so far done of 17½ millions, a pretty good two year's work, and still they are knocking at the door of the Treasury for a loan. They are asking the hard-handed artisans of Canada, many of whom are living on four days' labour in the week, to borrow the money for them. Hon. gentlemen can place their own value on these lands, but the matter stands thus, under any circumstances; the Company have 10,000,000 acres of lands for an expenditure of 2½ millions on their own work. But, Sir, that is not all. You have given them the Pembina Branch of 69 miles, a branch which has paid handsomely ever since it was opened. You have given them the Thunder Bay and Winnipeg road, 429 miles, built and ironed. These two together make 497 miles, which cost $19,000,000, and the "valuator" says it is worth it, so there is $19,000,000 to be added to the 17½ millions. And the road they have built is their own. But that is not all. These roads, during the last ten months, have earned, according to their own reports, a net profit of $873,000. The Company must be hard up. But, Sir, the Minister of Railways has informed us that there has been—

The hon. gentleman has invited criticism. I accept the invitation. Let us examine the items constituting those 23½ millions. One of the items is materials and supplies, $4,025,604, or say, 4 millions. Now, Sir, are these supplies chargeable to past work? When they are used and have gone into the railway do not they draw more money and more land? Should they not be charged where the earnings come from? When those materials are used, the Company will have a further cash subsidy, and a further land subsidy. The accountant may strike off $4,000,000. The next item is the dividend on stock. Has the dividend on stock gone into the construction of the railway? I may be answered that a fair charge is interest on the investment, but we are not given what the investment is, and there is but a small amount at best that is invested by the Company. It would be nothing in proportion to the net earnings. This item is $2,128,000, and the accountant will please strike it off. The next item is the deposit with the Government, $8,710,240, or say 8¾ millions. Has the deposit made to secure future dividends to the stock-holders gone into the construction of the road? No man can contend for a moment that it has, and the accountant will please strike off 8¾ millions. It seems to me that the Minister's 23½ millions is getting winter-killed; it is shrinking worse than frosted wheat. In the language of a celebrated railway man, in New York, it seems to be going

There is an item for rolling stock. I may be told that a railway does not amount to much unless it has rolling stock. Sir, in paying these subsidies, does the Government take the rolling stock into account? But we are asked to be liberal—it is the people's money, let us be liberal, and the most recent translation of the word liberal, I believe, is "patriotic." I have sometimes wondered what the "liberal" portion of the Conservative name meant. We are getting light on that subject. For the present I will allow this item of $6,130,792 for rolling stock. There is also an item for tools. Sir, I decline to discuss the question of tools. We were told that the Globe newspaper was part of the rolling stock of the Grand Trunk Railway, and I shall not deal with this question of tools until we have the items. These two items, the 2¼ millions of excess of expenditure by the Company over receipts, as stated by the Company, and the rolling stock, together amount to $8,376,134 cash invested by the Company in building the railway, and in its rolling stock, which has earned $20,000,000 worth of land, and $19,000,000 worth of railway, which we have given them. The Company has invested in building the railway and in rolling stock, $8,376,134. That will never do; and the Government seem to be alive to the fact that this Company must not have any money in the railway. The first 7½ millions of what we are asked to vote is to go to pay their debts. Take the $7,500,000 from the amount they have invested, that is, $8,376,134, and the balance is $876,134. The net earnings for the last ten months only were $976,426, leaving a balance of $102,332 of moneys they will receive more than they have put into both rolling stock and railway. I repeat it, Sir, this does not leave a single dollar of money furnished by this Company, composed of men of such tremendous financial power, for the railway or the rolling stock, up to the date of that paper. And what of the future? The president, in his circular of December 29th, 1883, says:

"It has been ascertained that the cost of finishing the line will not exceed $27,000,000."

What are the Company to receive? They are yet to receive, of cash subsidy, $12,710,788; of land, 11,244,295 acres, equal, at $2 per acre, to $22,488,590; 313 miles of railway which we are building, and which is estimated to cost $9,000,000; a total of $44,199,378. Under the contract as it now stands, the Company would own, of finished railway, from Callander to Port Moody, including the Pembina Branch, 2,619 miles; and 21,246,600 acres of land, for an expenditure of $16,534,555. Valuing the lands at $2 an acre, they have the road for nothing and $25,958,645 besides. Our present contract is very easily and very simply stated. Under that contract, it would cost us: $5,000,000 for surveys, $28,000,000 for road constructed, $25,000,000 in cash bonus, and 25,000,000 acres of land equal, at $2, to $50,000,000, making a total of $108,000,000. And this is the state of matters under which we are asked to borrow money to lend to the Company, to the extent of $22,500,000. Mr. Speaker, we have been forced to deal with millions. They have been tossed about as things of small account. One would suppose, indeed, that they had been toys of the hon. gentleman's childhood. I wish to come down for a time to figures within my comprehension, and for this purpose I propose to divide this $22,500,000 amongst the various constituencies of the Dominion of Canada. We have, I believe, 211 members. Let us see what proportion of this amount rests upon each hon. member of this House, or rather upon the people he represents. I find it to be in round numbers one hundred and six thousand dollars ($106,000). Now, were hon. gentlemen opposite, were any of us, sent here with directions to make this loan? Was it part of our marching orders to lend $100,000 to this Company on behalf of our constituents. If the question were put squarely and plainly to them, divested of all clouds and cobwebs and obstructions: "Are you, a county or section of a county, as the case may be, prepared to lend your money on credit to the extent of $100,000?"—what would be the answer? I think we know what it would be. And why is the loan asked? There is but one reason given for this loan. There are two, but there is one which, to most of our minds on this side of this House, at all events, would be a secondary one—I allude to the effect upon the Conservative party. The one question we have to deal with is the loan for the purpose of completing the railway in two years. Do we feel authorized to compel our people at home to make this loan for this purpose? For one, I do not. I do not find it to be part of my duty. There is another point that must be considered—what will the cool-headed money-lenders of England say? How is it going to affect our credit? We are at present large borrowers, our debt at present amounting, in round numbers, to $200,000,000. This debt is from time to time maturing. Certainly we cannot pay it, and we must borrow again. The rate at which we can borrow depends upon our financial standing; the interest we shall have to pay depends upon our credit; and it requires but little knowledge of business to know that credit depends largely upon the extent to which it is used. We have been informed, time and again, that the progress of the North-West is to be credited to the rapid construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The progress of the North-West did not commence with the rapid construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. No sooner had the North-West ceased to be a muskrat preserve for the Hudson Bay Company, than it began to attract attention, and immigrants began to go in. They went by the Dawson route, by Lake Superior and the railway to Moorehead; thence by Kittson's steamer, and later on by the American railway to the Canadian frontier. The North-West had prospered considerably up to the time it was attacked by grasshoppers—may it never be attacked by anything worse. I think it was in 1875 that the grasshopper made its raid on the North-West destroying every green thing; but following out the principle of insect life, that when an insect becomes too numerous it breeds a parasite that destroys it—I do not know but this applies to governments as well—the parasite attacked the grasshopper and the grasshopper had to go. It took a few years to recover confidence, but confidence was restored, and the North-West prospered. Perhaps the rapid construction had something to do with the boom which, amongst the North-West misfortunes, is not second to the grasshopper. Fever in business is not any better for business than fever is for man. It does not give it any strength. Rapid construction is said to advance the value of labour, to advance the rate of wages. Very likely it did. I do not know what the wages paid were. But to whom were the wages paid? It is a notorious fact that nine out of every ten men at least, of those who worked upon this rapid construction, were from the

Mr. FAIRBANK,

United States. They were not our people, but railway men from the United States. Did these men remain when they had done the work? No, Sir; they obliged the railway to take them back. At first the railway company objected, but in the end they did send them back. The men stopped in Winnipeg, and the reports are that they took sundry drinks there and then went home. The supplies, to a very large extent, came from the same source, as the North-West was too young to furnish the supplies for the new line. Had the building gone on less rapidly, a much larger portion of the money expended would have remained in the North-West. I was speaking of the wages and who got the wages. But there is another point—who paid the wages? I have shown you it was not the Canadian labouring man who got the wages, but it is the Canadian labouring man who pays the wages. Every man in Canada who consumes a dollar's worth of goods, paying either duty or excise, contributes to those high wages. There was another result of rapid construction. Rapid construction caused a rapid payment of the subsidy, and rapid payment of the subsidy caused a rapid drawing upon our banks last season. That rapid drawing was the cause, to a considerable extent, of the contraction which many a man in Canada will remember to the day of his death. There is, Mr. Speaker, such a thing inhuman affairs as going too fast. Much time has been spent in proving the good security that is offered; and, if we take the valuation of the "Government valuator," the security ought to be considered ample. But the man or the company that has good security to offer can always get money at money's value. Let those having this unquestionable security go into the money markets of the world and borrow their money. We are not money lenders. But, notwithstanding the good security, hon. gentlemen opposite have taken a great deal of trouble to show us what condition we will be in, in case of the Company's default. The hon. Minister states sundry expenditures, in which he includes the lands that the Company has sold and got paid for, amounting to some $7,500,000, but he says nothing about the land the Company did not sell among the debit items. He includes the cash subsidy, the money we are now to vote—indeed, we can find no fault with what he includes in money—and he sums up $97,000,000. Then, he asks what shall we do with the lands?—the land that was not sold. Do exactly that which you do with other lands when you sell them. Credit them to wild lands and not to the railway to which you have not charged them. But at the conclusion he says: I credit the railway with the 21,246,600 acres at $2 an acre, making $42,493,200. He credits this to the railway, but he did not charge it to the railway. That is a kind of single entry that will not do. Why did the hon. gentleman stop here in his calculations? Why did he not go on and sell 27,000,000 more acres of public lands and credit them to the railway. Then the railway would have cost nothing. If land business continued good, he might have sold more and made a railway dividend. The hon. gentleman's calculations are wrong—wrong—to the extent of 42½ millions, as the hon. member for West Durham has stated. But, defeated in this direction, he may attempt a masterly retreat by claiming that the lands would be of no value without the rapid construction. The railway adds to the value of the lands, and the lands add to the value of the railway, and settlers add to the value of both. But were the lands of no value before this rapid construction? Providence, in its wisdom, created but one St. Lawrence, with its enlargement of the great lakes, and in its goodness gave it to Canada. The difficulties in its navigation, owing to its rapids and the great falls of Niagara, have been overcome by an expenditure, on the part of Canada, of over $40,000,000. The obstruction at the Sault Ste. Marie has been overcome by the American canal. Through it we pass to Lake Superior and arrive at Thunder Bay, the uppermost port within Canadian territory. At that point we are 1,000 miles west of Montreal, and, calculating from the nearest Canadian winter seaport, St. Andrews, we are two-fifths of the way across the continent. From this point the Government, at our expense, had constructed a railway to Winnipeg, and were constructing a railway into the Prairie Province. Had that key to the North-West been maintained, had we continued to hold the line from Lake Superior, our inland seaport to the Red River, and pressed our railways on into the Prairie Province, throwing out branches by the way, would the land have been of value? I believe it would have been of double the value it is to-day. Permit me to quote what the railway company itself says in relation to the present facilities for reaching the North West:

"The Canadian Pacific, through rail and water route, to the west by Algoma, and Lakes Huron and Superior.

"On the opening of navigation in the spring of 1884, the new rail and water route from Montreal to all parts of the North-West will be opened. In comparison with the all-rail route by Chicago and St. Paul, passengers will be saved the fatigue and expense of 300 miles of travel, and, apart from this, and from the fact that their journey to Winnipeg will occupy much less time than by the railroad, it will be robbed of its monotony by a trip through the world-renowned inland sea."

I have very little sympathy, Mr. Speaker,—I have no sympathy with that sentiment which speaks of the enormous obligations of the North-West to the old Provinces. The old Provinces had debts which the inhabitants of the new Provinces will share with us in paying. Money expended in these rail-roads and other expenditure has been largely borrowed. The settlers of the North-West will bear their share of the payment. The expenditure was by no means made exclusively for their benefit, and I do not think the so-called great sacrifice that the old Provinces have made can justify an export duty being placed upon the wheat produced in the North-West. I know it is not called by that name, but it is the same in effect. I do not think we are justified in denying them their rights to build their own highways; railways are the highways of to-day. I do not think that we are justified in denying them their natural geographical advantages. They have not too many of them. Give the people of the North-West a low freight to Thunder Bay, where they can command and fetch into competition all the carriers of the continent; give them fair railway accommodation upon the prairies, which is easily and cheaply built; remove from them the monopoly, and you will make them contented and happy. I think our true policy in relation to their business is to draw it and not to force it. We are told that one of the reasons for this application for money is that the Company cannot sell its land. Why not? I will tell you, Sir. It is because they retain a mortgage upon it. They retain a mortgage that runs for twenty years, and the terms of that mortgage are that everything that the man who occupies their lands buys or sells shall be carried by them, practically at their own rate. Those are the terms of the mortgage, and it applies not only to the railway lands, but to all the lands owned by individuals or by Government—it applies to the entire North-West. Shall I be told that the railway company is restricted; that it can only charge a profit of 10 per cent.? Does any man acquainted with railway history place one figs worth of value upon that restriction? If I am not wrong in my information, I believe there is just such a restriction upon the most wealthy railway company in the United States, the balance was to go the State. Yet the State has never received a cent, and never expected to, and never will. Ten per cent.! When the railway company shall have received the $7,500,000 which is proposed to be given them, they will not have a dollar in the railway; and during the last nine months, they have received a net earning of $900,000. Will some ready reckoner please tell me what that percentage is upon something less than nothing? They have less than nothing invested in it, and they receive an earning of $900,000. It has got beyond my arithmetic. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) told us that they did not object to the Mackenzie Administration building a railway, but they objected to its building two ends and leaving the centre unbuilt. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no great "political exigency" at the present moment, I believe. I am well aware that this argument was used some five or six years ago, about building the two ends and leaving the middle unconstructed, but really I think it is time for sensible men to drop that argument. There is not money enough in British North America to have built the centre of the railway, until the two or one of the ends were built. What have they been trying to do for the last five or six years? What is their press now reechoing through the country? Talk about building the middle of the railway. Talk about building a railway 200 miles inland from Thunder Bay, taking in your supplies on the backs of Indians and in birch canoes. I should like to see one of these Howe truss bridges taken in that way. The hon. member for Cardwell also gave us an illustration from an editor in Dakota, who, by a freset, was driven to the upper story of his building, and sitting upon a high stool, with his feet upon a chair, wrote: "Magnificent overflow." The hon. gentleman commended that sentiment; he would have us imitate it. I infer from this, that when the flood of Dominion expenditure rises to our arm pits, we are to exclaim "magnificent!" When it rises so that we have to stand on tip-toe, to prevent it from getting into our mouth, we are to shout "glorious!" I suppose, Sir, we may take this as a key to what we may expect from the hon. gentleman himself. When he shouts loudest the floods will be getting highest, and from the manner he shouts now I judge it is getting rather damp where he stands. Mr. Speaker, I like pluck—in fact, I admire it—but when we are acting as trustees for the people we should exercise a little caution and discretion. The hon. gentlemen opposite are exceedingly fond, recently, of lecturing us upon patriotism. It has been my observation that when a man is inclined, constantly, to boast of his piety, the church needs to look after him. When a man is constantly boasting of his honesty you don't want to take that man's note unless it is well endorsed. And when an hon. member is continually shouting patriotism, it is an indication that he has either got his hand pretty near the public chest, or wants to. Whether it is more patriotic to point out and try to avoid a danger or to conceal it? And about this lecturing us upon patriotism. Do the hon. gentlemen opposite own this country? Are we on this side of the House tenants in arrears and liable to eviction? If so, may "our flight not be in the winter." What is the result of these figures? It has been shown that the Company, by its own figures and its own way of putting them, has expended upon construction up to this time, $23,563,564, say 23½ millions. It will cost to finish it 27 millions more, or a total of 50½ millions. Government has paid, and is to pay, 25 millions; cash receipts from land sold, 8½ millions; proposed grant, 2½ millions, making a total of 56½ millions. Take from that the 50½ millions, and $5,000,000 remains. So, at the conclusion, the Company will have a finished road and over 21,000,000 acres of land, not a dollar of money having been furnished by them, and with $5,000,000 in spending money. Mr. Speaker, if we are to furnish all the money, what is the good of the Company? Will this money come back to us? Experience says, no. By entering into this agreement, I fear the Government are forming a dangerous alliance; I fear that we are drifting into the position of having the hon. Minister, king, and the Railway Company viceroy over him. Mr. Speaker, I must thank the House for the attention with which it has listened to my remarks.

Mr. CURRAN moved the adjournment of the Debate.
Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11.45 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 13th February, 1884.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the adoption of the First Report of the Committee appointed to supervise the Report of the Debates.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the recommendations contained in the report.

Mr. WHITE. The recommendations cover the appointment of a French proof reader and a translator from French into English.

Mr. BLAKE. I should like to enquire from the hon. gentleman whether any arrangement has been made for improving the proof reading of the original, the first English edition. He must recognize the fact that the proof reading is abominable—I will not say this Session because I have not looked at the Debates, but it has been abominable in the past. It is apparently done by a person who has a very limited vocabulary. I observe that words which are in the slightest degree out of the ordinary run are turned, irrespective altogether of the sense and application of them, into some other words which the proof reader fancies they must mean, because he does not know what the words are; and really that which we get in the first instance, or rather did get up to the commencement of this Session, is entirely discreditable.

Mr. WHITE. I think if the hon. gentleman examines the reports this year, he will find a very great improvement has taken place in that respect. I quite concur in his condemnation of the proof reading during past Sessions, but the adoption of type-writing has secured better copy for the printers, and they are able to set up the matter a great deal better than last year. So far as I have examined the reports this year, I have found a very great improvement; and I am inclined to think the improvement will go on, and we shall have less cause of complaint than in the past.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 84) to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Pontiac.—(Mr. White, Renfrew.)

Bill (No. 85) respecting the Huron and Erie Railway.—(Mr. Smyth.)

Bill (No. 86) further to amend the Patent Act, 1872.—(Mr. White, Renfrew.)

Mr. FAIRBANK.

THE INDIAN ACT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in introducing Bill (No. 87) further to amend the Indian Act, 1880, said: I will not trouble the House with details of the amendments proposed in the working of the Act; they are a series of amendments which experience has shown to be required.

Bill read the first time.

INTERNATIONAL FORESTRY EXHIBITION.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint a representative of Canada at the next International Forestry Exhibition, to be held next summer in Edinburgh (Scotland)?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the several Provincial Governments have been asked to attend the Forestry Exhibition, and as they own the forests, it is presumed that any representatives to this Forestry Exhibition will be appointed by them, and not by the Dominion.

UNION STATION AT THE TRAVERSE.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) enquired, Whether the Government has come to any understanding with the Grand Trunk Railway Company and with the Quebec Central Railway Company, respecting the joint construction, at the place called the Traverse, of a station which will serve for the three companies, and what is the understanding in question?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The matter has not yet been finally determined.

ST. CHARLES RAILWAY.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) enquired, What is the date, as nearly as possible, on which the Government intends to deliver up the St. Charles Branch line of railway to traffic, and to throw it open to the travelling public?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The date at which I expect the road will be opened will be the 1st of July of this year.

TARIFF OF THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) enquired, Whether the Government has ever bound itself to arrange the tariff of the Intercolonial Railway, between St. Charles and Quebec, in such a way that the distance between these two places should be computed as if the St. Charles Branch was completed? If it has so bound itself, whether the tariff has been amended to accord?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the tariff was lowered in such a way as to carry out that object at the time, and it will probably not be necessary to make a further change during the brief interval which will elapse until the opening of the road.

THE CLAIM OF CHARLES JOSEPH LISLOIS.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) enquired, Whether the Government have in their possession any report whatsoever made by one of the Dominion arbitrators, in relation to the claim presented by Mr. Joseph Charles Lislois, asking for an amount sufficient to cover losses sustained by him from the burning of one of his buildings in September, 1879? Does the said report declare that the said fire was caused by one of the Government locomotives on the Intercolonial Railway? Is it stated in the said report that, in equity, the Government is bound to pay to Mr. Joseph Charles Lislois the amount claimed? Does the report further state that the sum claimed is not excessive? Is it the intention of the Government, if the report is of such purport, to reimburse Mr. Joseph Charles Lislois for the amount of his losses on the occasion aforesaid?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say, in answer to the hon. gentleman, that the Government have a report from one of the Dominion arbitrators on the subject. My answer to the second paragraph of the hon. gentleman's question is, yes. My answer to the next paragraph, is also in the affirmative. In answer to the next, I would say that the report does state that the sum claimed is not excessive. To the last question my answer is, no. The Department is advised by the Department of Justice that they can only pay legal claims.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE WINDSOR CUSTOMS OFFICE.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether W. Bushell, D. Brassard, and J. Lang, or either of them, have received appointments in the Customs office at Windsor; and if so, at what rates?

Mr. BOWELL. None of these were permanent appointments. Mr. Bushell was placed on the temporary list on the 15th of January, 1883; Mr. Brassard on the 15th of January, 1883, and Mr. Lang on the same list on the 1st of December, 1883. They are there still, and each receives $1.50 per day.

H. H. SMITH.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex) enquired, Whether a person named H. H. Smith is at present in the employment of the Militia Department at Toronto; if so, when did his employment commence, what is the nature of the service performed, and what is his salary? Did he occupy any other position in the service of the Government; and if so, for what length of time, and at what salary?

Mr. CARON. I beg to state that Mr. H. H. Smith is not at present in the employ of the Militia Department at Toronto.

STATION ON THE PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. McINTYRE enquired, What steps have been taken for the erection of a booking station at Peake's, on the line of the Prince Edward Island Railway, in accordance with the prayer of three petitions forwarded to the Department of Railways and Canals at various periods? If no steps have been taken, when may such be expected?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No steps have been taken towards the erection of a station at the point named, as it is considered that the present traffic will not warrant it.

ADVANCE TO THE EXCHANGE BANK OF CANADA.

Mr. HOLTON enquired, When the hon. A. W. Ogilvie and Mr. Alexander Buntin offered their personal security to the Government for the last advance of $100,000 to the Exchange Bank of Canada, did the hon. Finance Minister require them, or either of them, to exhibit a statement of their affairs, in order to enable him to determine as to the sufficiency of the proposed security?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. My answer to the hon. gentleman's question is, certainly not.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. REID enquired, Whether the Government has received any communication from the Government of British Columbia in reference to the better defining the boundary line between that Province and the North-West Territory? Is it the intention of the Government to better define the boundary line between British Columbia and the North-West Territory on that portion which follows the general course of the Rocky Mountains; and if so, when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has not received any communication from the Government of British Columbia in reference to this subject. There is, indeed, no necessity for any such better definition, as the statute provides clearly what the boundary is. There has been no communication as to the marking of the line on the ground. I may say, in answer to the last part of the hon. gentleman's question, that it is not the present intention of the Government to better define the boundary, because it is a very expensive work, and there is no immediate necessity for it.

WHARVES AND PIERS OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. DAVIES enquired, Whether the engineers sent to inspect and report upon the wharves and piers of Prince Edward Island last summer, have made their report yet? If so, whether the Government intend to take over any and which of the piers in the said Island, and what sums are to be allowed the Province therefor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I may say that the engineers who have been employed under the Chief Engineer of my own Department, to inspect and report upon the wharves and piers of Prince Edward Island, have made reports to the Department, and that the Chief Engineer is now preparing a report to me on the subject.

GRANTS TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. DUPONT (Translation) in moving for a statement of all sums paid by the Government of Canada on account, or in full payment, of the subsidies voted to the several railway companies mentioned in chapter 25 of the Act 46th Victoria, 1883, said: Mr. Speaker, last year when the hon. Minister of Railways caused the Federal Act of Dominion railways to be amended, one of these amendments was to the effect that the different lines of railways connected with the great trunk lines under the control of the Government, should thereafter be considered as enterprises for the general welfare and benefit of the Dominion of Canada. This amendment was received with favour by this House and by the people. The consequence of this amendment is that these railways being enterprises for the general benefit of the Dominion, it has become necessary to subsidize them, and it became the duty, not of the Provincial Governments but of the Federal Government to furnish the subsidies. This consequence is altogether rational, and flows out of the Act of Confederation itself, because, Mr. Speaker, the Provinces would be in quite an abnormal position if they were obliged to subsidize the building of railways which after all would only be the means of giving greater trading facilities, of opening out the country to colonization, of increasing the resources of the Federal Government and of diminishing, at the same time, the resources of the Provincial Governments. An increase in the population means an increase of the revenue of the Dominion Government, and on the other hand, an increase of the population and the settlement of our unsettled territories, signifies a decrease of the revenue of the Provincial Governments. Now if we wish to act in good faith and to give our constitution its real meaning, we cannot help admitting that those enterprises which are calculated to develop trade and to increase the revenue of the Dominion Government, must also be fostered by that same Government, and not by the Local Governments whose revenues must be diminished by the increase of population and by the lessening of forests in the territories within their jurisdiction. No other construction can be put on the Constitution, otherwise you would arrive at a nonsense. Public works—that is the principle—must be paid by those who are to reap the benefits thereof. On the other hand, this amendment to the Railway Act was followed a few days afterwards by resolutions introduced by the hon. Minister of Railways, whose resolutions were to form the basis of a measure for the relief of certain railways mentioned in chapter 25 of 46th Victoria. These railways were colonization roads, roads built for the purpose of opening to civilization the yet unsettled parts of the different Provinces, and of opening up by this means, to our surplus of population, very rich and very fertile territories in which to send our settlers who, each year, are leaving us in great numbers either to settle in the plains of the western part of the United States of America, or to go and ingulf themselves in the manufactures of the New England States. The Federal Government and the hon. Minister of Railways have on that occasion obtained, for the adoption of that measure, the support, not only of the whole Conservative party in this House and in the country, but also that of a great number of the hon. members of the Opposition who supported that measure, which also received the general approbation of the people of the Dominion of Canada and of the Province of Quebec in particular. By this measure the Government showed to the people of the Dominion what use they intended to do with the large surpluses which the National Policy has been the means of accumulating in the public Treasury. These surpluses, Mr. Speaker, had necessarily to be employed in a profitable manner for the benefit of those who were called upon to furnish the revenue of the Federal Government. Now this surplus could not possibly be employed in a manner more profitable to the people of the Dominion than by aiding the construction of railways calculated to promote and increase our trade. Moreover, by this means the various parts of the Provinces of the Dominion, which were not yet settled although they had a fertile soil, capable of giving a livelihood to thousands and even millions of people, were opened to colonization. In fact, it must not be forgotten that colonization is hardly commenced even in what is called the old Provinces of the Confederation. If we glance over the extent of the Province of Quebec, we find that it comprises 120,000,000 acres of land. Out of this number of acres, what was the extent of improved land at the time of the census of 1871? We find that there was then in round numbers 11,000,000 acres of land owned by people now residing in the Province, and out of this number of 11,000,000, only 5,703,944 acres could be considered as being cleared and fit for farming, or hardly one-eighth or one-ninth of the settling lands of the Province of Quebec. Well, Mr. Speaker, am I not justified in saying that what we are agreed to call the territory of the old Provinces of the Confederation is really a new and virgin territory, since hardly one-eighth or one-ninth of that of the Province of Quebec is actually used for agricultural purposes. As I said a moment ago, there are in all the Provinces of the Dominion immense areas of land which are not yet used for agricultural purposes, and in the Province of which I have the honour to be one of the representatives, I must say that the uncleared lands lie mostly in the valleys containing the best settling lands. Those which appear to offer the greatest advantages to colonization are the valleys of Lake St. John, of St. Maurice, of Gatineau, Gaspesia and the surrounding territory. The valley of Lake St. John is an immense territory situated at a distance of over a hundred miles from the city of Québec, inaccessible to trade, surrounded by a range of mountains, but still excessively rich for agricultural purposes. Thanks to the subsidies generously granted by the Provincial Government, and by the Federal Parliament at their last Session, a railway is now being built in those parts. This territory of Lake St. John is inferior to none of the settled parts of the Province of Quebec, not inferior to the valley of the St. Lawrence, nor to the fertile valley of the Richelieu, nor to that of Yamaska, nor to the Eastern Townships. There is in that region, I repeat it, immense territories, and the unsettled part of it, is as large as all the area now settled in the Province of Quebec. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is important that we should have a railway so as to be able to send settlers in that direction. If it was necessary to quote statistics to demonstrate the fertility of this vast territory, I would have only to refer to what has been written by men who have visited it with reference to its fertility and the advantages it offers to colonization. If we were to make comparisons, it would be found that, as far back as 1871, the agricultural products of the valley of Lake St. John were in no way inferior to those of other parts of the Dominion of Canada, either in wheat, barley, or any other cereals. In fact we find that in 1871, the county of Chicoutimi, with a population of 17,423 inhabitants, produced 136,099 bushels of wheat, or 7,780 bushels per thousand inhabitants. The county of Simcoe, in the Province of Ontario, which is considered as having the most fertile soil in the country, with a population of 57,389 inhabitants, has given, of wheat, in 1871, 509,965 bushels, or 8,886 bushels of wheat per thousand inhabitants. The celebrated Muskoka District, in the Province of Ontario, towards which flows the tide of immigration and where there is a multitude of lines of railway, one of which receives a large subsidy from Toronto, with a population of 3,470 inhabitants, has produced 44,631 bushels of wheat, or 8,836 bushels per 1,000 inhabitants. Now, Mr. Speaker, as will be seen by this statement, the soil of the valley of Lake St. John is inferior to that of no part of the Dominion, even the most celebrated wheat districts. The comparison I have just made is taken from the figures found in the census of 1881, and for all of that, it must be said in favour of Lake St. John that the culture of wheat and other cereals is not pushed there with as much energy as it might be if there were facilities of communication to enable the farmers of this rich country to transport their produce to market. What has been said of the fertility of the valley of Lake St. John may also be said of the celebrated valleys of the Gatineau, the Lièvre and the Rouge, in the counties of Ottawa, Argenteuil and Pontiac. In that region also, there is an immense territory interspersed with lakes, traversed by rivers, and offering immense advantages to colonization, richly covered with timber and fit to receive hundreds of thousands of inhabitants, millions of souls, I may say, if there were only roads to reach these rich valleys and these fertile lands. And what has been said of the Gatineau Valley may also apply to Gaspesia, if not for farming, at least for another kind of production, for that country is also very large, offers immense advantages to colonization, and is, besides, a country where fisheries of various kinds might be carried on with advantage if there was, during all seasons of the year, communication through which the produce could be sent to market. It is true that navigation on the coast of Gaspesia enables the fishermen to transport their produce to the various markets of the Dominion, and even to the American markets, but their commercial transactions are interrupted during the winter months. For five or six months in the year, they are doomed to a seclusion which is very disadvantageous to this numerous class of citizens. Mr. Speaker, if I was called upon to inform the House by means of statistics, of the richness of the fisheries of Gaspesia, I could not quote a better authority than that of the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Fortin), who has always taken so much trouble and who, for a number of years, has given so much attention to the development of the fisheries of Gaspesia. I find a statement of the production of those fisheries in one of his speeches, made in 1871, at the Legislative Assembly of Quebec, when they were discussing the question of subsidizing the Bay of Chaleurs road. This is one of the patriotic speeches pronounced by the hon. member for Gaspé, who has always taken great interest in the development of the resources of that country, and who has succeeded in a great measure. The hon. member showed that, as far back as 1871, there was from the coast of Gaspeia an exportation of fish amounting to over 26,000,000 lbs.; this would go far to furnish the necessary traffic for a railway. But it may be objected that before building railways through those vast territories, the territories themselves must be colonized. Where would we be now, Mr. Speaker, if we had always followed this kind of reasoning? Where would the North-West be? What would be the condition of a great part of Upper Canada? How would it be with the Eastern Townships if, before constructing railways and giving to these settlers the required facilities of communication, we had waited for the population to cross the mountains and go hundreds of miles away from commercial centres? If we had followed such a line of conduct, the result would have been that none of the parts of these regions through which no navigable river flows, would be settled to the present day. But this objection does not hold, for in reality there is already a colonization in those fertile valleys, because to-day the county of Gaspé whose population was only 18,000 souls in 1871, has now a population of 25,000, in spite of all the difficulties of communication and in spite of all the obstacles that stand in the way of colonization in that vast territory. The surplus of population which goes to the United States each year comes out of the counties which are fully colonized. The county of Rimouski, which lies in that direction, had a population of 27,000 souls in 1871; to-day its population amounts to 33,000. The counties of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, which, in 1871, had only a population of 22,000 souls, now have 32,000. In 1871, the county of Ottawa had a population of 36,000 souls, which has now increased to 49,000 souls, or a population equal to that of British Columbia, for whose benefit we are building the Canadian Pacific Railway. The county of Pontiac, which lies in the Ottawa Valley, had, in 1871, a population of 16,000, which now amounts to 19,000 souls. The population of the county of Argenteuil, which in 1871 amounted to 12,000, now amounts to 16,000 souls. So that, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the immense difficulties with which we had to contend in developing this part of the country, there has been found among our fellow-citizens zealous and enterprising men who took a deep interest in the welfare of the country, and who organized colonization societies. These men, by dint of sacrifices and energetic efforts, succeeded in developing those fertile territories and in grouping together those centres of population which now deserve to attract the attention of the Government. These groups of population have even now a right to claim that the Government who are to profit by the large trade that will hereafter take place in these counties, should open out ways of communications. Perhaps it may be asked how it is that such very fertile valleys are not to this day fully colonized. To this objection, I may answer that, if colonization is not more advanced in those parts, it is because it has been almost impossible for settlers to get there; because settlers are constantly drawn to the western plains by the high-sounding puff of the American agents; because others are drawn to the New England States, which are furrowed in every direction by railways which give easier and more rapid communication; finally, because it is impossible to find an outlet for the produce which may be raised by the settlers, and which is the result of their labours in those valleys, so remote from all commercial centres and devoid of communication. Such are, Mr. Speaker, the reasons for which these vast territories have not been colonized sooner. But it cannot be held to-day that the obstacles in the way of the colonization of these territories are serious. Surely a young people like ours, who have constructed the Victoria Bridge in order that the St. Lawrence should cease to be an obstacle in the way of communication by rail; who have undertaken such a gigantic work as the construction of the Pacific across the Rocky Mountains, and the mountains of Lake Superior, cannot be daunted by such obstacles as are offered by the Laurentians to the opening of communications. A certain amount of courage, a certain amount of energy, and of patriotism will enable us to scale those mountains and to cut railways through them. It is high time for the Government to push energetically the policy they inaugurated last year, and the hon. Minister of Railways himself, when he introduced his resolutions during last Session, declared himself fairly frightened with the position taken by that formidable conqueror of civilization, the Rev. Mr. Labelle, who had already got in rear of the mountains, in the county represented by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright.) Labelle, the conqueror, with his valiant army, who last year numbered 10,000 combatants, and which he has probably by this time increased to 15,000, invades the county of the hon. member for Ottawa, who, instead of sending his force to repel the invaders, seems to be trying to establish communications with him. For these two men are working in common in the interest of civilization, and by opening this immense territory to civilization they will ensure the happiness of hundreds of thousands of inhabitants who will come and settle there, where they will find ease, comfort and prosperity. The hon. member for Ottawa, instead of representing, as he does to-day, a vast territory with 50,000 inhabitants only, may perhaps, when communications shall have been opened, come before this House and speak on behalf of 250,000 inhabitants. But let us leave aside all these arguments, which may be invoked by a people who wish to become great, and to prosper by taking possession of the immense domain which Providence has put at our disposal for the settling of their children; let us leave all that aside, and let us see if the imperious necessity has not dictated to the Government this policy of railway and colonization. I perfectly understand, Mr. Speaker, that a debating assembly may sometimes hesitate to make heavy sacrifices to attract to the country a large tide of immigration, because as the character of the immigrants is unknown, we do not know whether they will be satisfied with the position which we are in a position to offer them. I understand that under such circumstances, a Government may sometimes hesitate before making heavy sacrifices to attract immigration. But what I fail to understand, is that a Government should make no effort to keep in the country settlers who are, without the least doubt, most well fitted to develop our country, settlers to whom no other class in the world could compare—settlers of indomitable energy, who were the first to open out the country and who could easily—if they had facilities for communication—complete the glorious work which they had begun. Mr. Speaker, if we examine the increase of population, in the Province of Quebec, we find that there are a great number of counties whose population has ceased to increase, and that in some of the electoral divisions represented by certain hon. members of this House, the population has decreased since the last decade. And why this astounding result, Mr. Speaker? It is because every part of those counties are now settled, and the surplus of their population—which has no other outlet, but to go on the unsettled land of the Provincial Government, no ways of communication by which they could, when once arrived there, transport their produce to the commercial centers—go off. And the consequence of all this is, that the surplus of the population of these counties, now fully colonized, direct their steps towards the western part of the United States or the New England States, where our countrymen go and settle, never more to return. Thus we learn by the last census that the population of the county of Iberville has decreased by an amount of 954 souls; that of the county of Verchères by 325; of the county of Laprairie by 400, Napierville, 1 100; Chateauguay, 2,000; Huntingdon, 900; and there are various other counties in the Province of Quebec where the population has not increased. However, Mr. Speaker, the county which I have the honour to represent, and whose population increases but slowly, because all the land is cleared, has, nevertheless, each year a large excess of population; the excess of births on deaths is from 500 to 800, which, during a decade, for a county having a population of 21,000 inhabitants, as the county of Bagot, would give a surplus of from 5,000 to 8,000 inhabitants, and by applying the same proportion to all the counties in the Province, we would have a surplus of 350,000 inhabitants per decade, taking only into account the farming population. Still, the population of the Province of Quebec has not increased by 200,000 inhabitants during the last decade; and why? It is because the population goes off towards the western plains of the United States, where there are now important groups of populations, important localities formed by Canadians, who have emigrated from the Province of Quebec. There are also in the New England States, cities which are completely under the control of people who have emigrated from our Province, and American statistics show that the French population emigrated from the Province of Quebec to the United States amounts to 600,000 or 700,000 souls. What an advantage it would be for the Province of Quebec, and for the Dominion revenue, if our Province had 700,000 or 800,000 more inhabitants than it has to-day. Mr. Speaker, if it has been a fault in the past not to have constructed colonization railways, there was at least an excuse for such an omission: there was no precedent; the direct consequence of such a course was not yet known, but to day it is impossible to conceal to ourselves the fact that there must not be any more delay, and that each one must bear his share of responsibility, and a very heavy responsibility it is, if we allow such good settlers to leave the Province of Quebec to bring in strangers in their stead. The way to check emigration, the way to diminish its proportion is, as I was saying a while ago, to construct colonization railways. Now, we must of all necessity, and the Government ought—if they were in earnest when, last year, they adopted this colonization railway policy—I say they ought to push vigorously the development of our unsettled regions. They must of all necessity give to that policy a real effect; let it not be a policy on paper; let these grants not be merely in the statutes, but let them be sufficient to enable the railway companies thus subsidized to attain the end for which they were formed—that of furnishing communications to the regions through which the railways are to pass and of opening to colonization territories which are now shut to it although they are endowed with great fertility. Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government, received with applause last year by the House and by the country, and received with applause even by several of the hon. gentlemen opposite, for what concerned their own respective counties or Provinces, was certainly a wise one, since it received such an unanimous support. It was entirely calculated to meet the wants of the country, to meet a pressing necessity, and I hope the Government will do all in their power, so far as the resources of the Dominion will admit, and I might say, by all the means at their disposal, to render possible the rapid execution and completion of the colonization railways now subsidized.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I have much pleasure in seconding the motion of my hon. friend from Bagot. As a good deal of irritation exists in Nova Scotia because $256,000 voted by this Parliament last year was not expended on a railway between the Strait of Canso and Sydney or Louisburg, I deem it my duty to explain the reason why. I shall do so as briefly as possible; but, in order to place our grievance intelligently before this House, it is necessary to give an outline of the railway policy which has existed in Nova Scotia, particularly since Confederation. Before Confederation, the Legislature of Nova Scotia undertook to build a railway from Pictou to Annapolis, at a cost of between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. After Confederation, the Legislature of Nova Scotia found that, on account of the limited revenue at their disposal, it was utterly impossible to pay for the extension of railways east and west, and particularly east. After the agitation in Nova Scotia, between 1867 and 1869, secured better terms for Nova Scotia, the Local Legislature assumed a little more courage, and proposed to aid railways east and west. In order that I may state the policy as it actually existed, in as concise a manner as possible, I shall quote from the leaders of the different Governments in Nova Scotia relative to that policy. The first attempt to subsidize railways in Nova Scotia, east and west, after Confederation, was in 1872. The resolutions, embodying the policy adopted by the Government of the day, were presented to the House on the 5th of April, 1872, by the Provincial Secretary, and were as follows:—

"Whereas, the time has arrived when it has become expedient and necessary that an effort, alike creditable to the public spirit of the Legislature and people of the Province, should be made to extend our railway system—west from Annapolis to Yarmouth, eastwardly from New Glasgow, to Louisburg, in the Island of Cape Breton, and to encourage the construction of additional lines of railway required to develop the mineral traffic and other resources of the country; therefore it is resolved:

"1st. That with the view of aiding in the construction of a railway from Annapolis to Digby, Weymouth and Yarmouth, an allotment of Crown lands not exceeding 150,000 acres, and an annual subsidy of $20,000 a year for twenty years, be granted to the Western Railway Company, or to any other company that may hereafter be incorporated, that will engage to construct said road under such conditions as may be necessary to ensure the completion thereof within three years after this date.

"2nd. That 150,000 acres of Crown land be granted to the New Glasgow and Louisburg Railway Company, or to any company that may hereafter be incorporated, that will construct, within five years from this date, a railway from New Glasgow to Louisburg, in the Island of Cape Breton, together with an annual subsidy equal to one-half the royalty (5 cents) yearly, payable, under the existing law, into the Treasury of Nova Scotia, for all coal raised in the Island of Cape Breton, the said annual subsidy to be paid to such Company for forty years, commencing from the time of the completion of said railway: Provided always, that the subsidy shall cease and determine whenever it shall appear that the said railway pays 6 per cent. on the capital employed in its construction.

"3rd. That with the view of attracting capital to develop the valuable and apparently exhaustless coal mines of Spring Hill district, in the county of Cumberland, a grant of land not exceeding 10,000 acres be given to the Parraboro' and Spring Hill Coal and Railway Company, or to any other company that may hereafter be incorporated, that will engage to construct a railway from Spring Hill to Parraboro', with suitable appliances at that port adapted to a large mineral traffic, together with a subsidy to such company equal to one-half the royalty chargeable, under the existing law, on all coal carried over said railway for fifteen years from the completion of the road.

"4th. That in view of the great importance of extending branch and lines of railway as soon as the means at the disposal of the Government and Legislature of this Province are adequate for that purpose, this House will grant subsidies to such branch and other lines of railway as may recommend themselves to their judgment and approval."

This was the policy adopted in Nova Scotia in 1872, and approved by a majority of the representatives of the people from the Island of Cape Breton. However, it was found that this policy was not sufficient to induce any company to undertake the work on the Island of Cape Breton; so, on the 9th of April, 1874, owing to circumstances which had arisen in the meantime, there was a change of policy in the Province. Besides the additional amount placed at our credit at Ottawa on the granting of better terms in 1869, a further sum was granted us in 1873-4, when the question of the debt between Ontario and Quebec was adjusted, the Dominion Government having assumed the debt and placed an equivalent to the credit of the various Provinces. Under this arrangement, $1,500,000 was placed to our credit in addition to the sum already credited us. On account of that fact, the Local Government of Nova Scotia assented to the policy, and, in reference to this point, I would quote the language of the Provincial Secretary, which is more concise than any I can possibly use :

"It would be remembered that when the Act of 1872 was introduced, the Province was expending from year to year, about the full amount that it could afford upon the public services of the country, leaving a very small balance, even by curtailing the expenditure as much as possible, in the hands of the Government to devolve to the extension of public works, such as railways. And as had been explained when the Act of 1872 was passed in order that the Eastern and Western Extension should be provided for, the Government had introduced an Act giving to the Western Counties Railway Company, $30,000 a year for twenty years, and to the Eastern Extension from New Glasgow to Louisburg, one-half the amount of the royalty on all coal raised in the Island of Cape Breton. The Government had been obliged to adopt that policy in consequence of the fact that the $30,000 devoted to the Western Counties Railway absorbed all the surplus revenue that the Government could then expect to save from the income. The Act in relation to the Western Counties Railway authorized the Government to enter into contract for the completion of the road from Annapolis to Yarmouth within two years; and the company had come forward last year, and entered into a contract with the Government for the performance of the work. They had made very fair progress, and had been working out some ten miles from the town of Yarmouth, and that had been done altogether from the funds subscribed by the town and by private individuals."

The town of Yarmouth deserved greater credit for the enterprise it showed in assisting railway extension west. At the close of the same year, the Commissioner of Crown Lands, who represented Cape Breton in the Government of Nova Scotia, spoke as follows :—

"A Bill had been passed last year to give a subsidy equal to one-half the royalties on coal, together with an allotment of Crown lands, to any company that would come in within two years, and give satisfactory security to construct the road from New Glasgow to Louisburg within five years. The two years had now expired, and therefore that Act was virtually a dead letter. The persons interested in that Bill had made no efforts, so far as he was aware, to carry out the provision of the Act. He had himself taken some trouble to induce those persons to give the security required, or, if not in a position to give the security, to at least offer some encouragement that if the Government bill should be re-enacted, they would do so. His efforts in this direction had been utterly fruitless, and had failed to extract even an assurance that within a reasonable time they would give the security to build the road. Under these circumstances, being desirous to secure construction of the road, and feeling that the object could not be accomplished under the Bill passed two years ago, he had come to the conclusion to support this measure, as he believed that it afforded the only means by which a road could be extended to Cape Breton. The company already chartered, Messrs. Schreiber and Burpee, had offered to build the road to Canseau, provided that the Dominion would give them the use of the line from Truro to Pictou, that the Local Government would give $5,000 a mile, and a certain quantity of Crown lands, and he believed that in three years the work would be accomplished under this Bill. He believed that the members of the House, on both sides, would give the Bill the support that it deserved."

It was about this time that this Government and the Dominion Parliament adopted a new policy and proposed to give the Pictou Branch to aid railway extension east of New Glasgow and, the Windsor Branch to aid railways west of Annapolis. Owing to this additional subsidy granted by the Dominion Parliament to aid railway extension in Nova Scotia, it was found necessary by the Local Government to again change its policy, and on the 20th April, 1875, the then Provincial Secretary introduced a Bill, which he thus explained :

"He explained that the Bill proposed to give $4,000 per mile to the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway, and a like sum to the Broad Cove road, and also to add $2,000 per mile to the subsidy already granted to the Western Counties Railway, as it appeared that the work was in some places difficult to carry on, and the Company required increased aid. In considering the question whether the Province was warranted in granting the sums mentioned in the Bill, he stated the subvention already granted to the Yarmouth road was at $6,000 for 90 miles, equal to $540,000; that of the Spring Hill and Parrsboro' road at $5,000 a mile for 28 miles, equal to $140,000; the New Glasgow and Canso road $5,000 a mile for 80 miles, equal to $400,000; and the Canseau and Louisburg road $5,000 a mile for 80 miles, equal to $400,000, making in all $1,480,000 for 278 miles of road already provided for. The present Bill proposed to subdivide the Nictaux and Atlantic road, 70 miles, with $4,000 a mile, equal to $280,000, the Broad Cove road, say 50 miles, with $4,000 a mile, equal to $200,000, and the Yarmouth road, of 90 miles, with additional subsidy of $2,000 a mile, equal to $180,000. These sums added to the sums already provided for as subventions, gave a total of $2,140,000."

Out of this sum voted in 1875, there was a portion allowed for the Island of Cape Breton as apart from Nova Scotia. It was then considered that of the $2,140,000 voted by Parliament $560,000 was a fair proportion for Cape Breton. This included $5,000 per mile from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, and $4,000 a mile from the Strait of Canso to Sydney. This was the policy adopted in 1875, but owing to circumstances difficult to explain, it was found necessary, in 1876, to again change it, and the change did not prove more beneficial than any of its predecessors. The Bill providing for the change in 1876, was explained by the Attorney General as follows :—

"At the end of last year the Province had to its credit at Ottawa $1,789,213, which, deducted from the total just stated would leave a balance of $350,786 deficiency, supposing that the whole amount payable as subventions to railroads had to be expended at once, which was not the case, as the Acts in relation to the payments of these subsidies all provided for the payment as the various sums in instalments of the various works progressed. But supposing that the whole amount of the subsidies provided for had to be paid out at once there would still have to be deducted from the amount stated the sum of $164,000 paid to the Yarmouth road previous to December 31, 1874, which would leave a deficiency of only $186,786."

This was the policy adopted in 1876, and the policy which failed in securing any railway extension in Cape Breton. In 1882, the Local Government of Nova Scotia adopted a somewhat different policy. The Government of that day proposed to consolidate all the railways in Nova Scotia, from the Gut of Canso to Yarmouth; and in that consolidation it was contemplated to ensure the completion of a railway from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg. On the terms of the proposal of that Company, an allotment of $45,000 of a guarantee was made for the Island of Cape Breton, equal to a vote of $900,000, at 5 per cent., given as a subsidy for the railway from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg. At that time, the hope of the people of Cape Breton was more elevated than at any previous time, because the proposal made had allotted to Cape Breton a larger amount for the purpose of extending a railway to Louisburg than any other policy adopted by any previous Local Government. However, owing to circumstances to which I need not here refer, that policy failed. In 1883, owing to a change of Government, a different policy was pursued; and we find that, on the 11th April, 1883, resolutions were introduced to the following effect :— "First, to raise a loan not exceeding $1,500,000 to pay and discharge the liability of the Province to the Halifax and Cape Breton Railway and Coal Company, under the provisions of the Act of the present Session, providing for the taking over of the Eastern Extension, and to repair and equip the railways mentioned in the said Act; second, to raise a sum not to exceed $350,000 to pay the subsidy to which the Nova Scotia, Nictaux and Atlantic Central Railway Company may or shall become entitled, under the provisions of chapter 22 of the Acts of 1882; third, that a sum not to exceed $50,000 be raised to make the necessary repairs to the Western Counties Railway between Digby and Yarmouth, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the Government and the Western Counties Railway Company; and, fourth, that $500,000 be raised for the purpose of building permanent bridges in the Province of Nova Scotia." This was the policy which the Local Government of Nova Scotia in 1883 adopted, assuming a liability, in round numbers, of $2,400,000 for general purposes, and of $1,900,000 for railway purposes. The obligation of paying this $1,900,000, with the additional expenditure of $2,000,000 on railways in Nova Scotia proper, would give the Island of Cape Breton, if that Island received a fair share of the amount proposed to be expended for railways in Nova Scotia, not $560,000 as in 1875, but double $560,000; in other words, over a million. During the last Session I had occasion to visit Nova Scotia, and, while there, I was informed that the railway company was negotiating with the Local Government with a view of obtaining the Pictou Branch and Eastern Extension on terms that would ensure the construction of a railway from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg; and, owing to reports made to me at the time, I moved in reference to that matter in this House, and I called the attention of the House to the necessity of pursuing a policy somewhat similar to that which had been adopted by this Parliament in 1874; that is, the policy of assisting Nova Scotia as much as possible to extend the railway system east of Halifax. And I was led to believe at that time, and I had reason to believe—on account of interviews between the president and the vice-president of the Short Line Railway Company and the manager of the Company in Nova Scotia, who were then in communication with me—that an arrangement could be made with the Government of Nova Scotia, while they visited Halifax during last March, which would enable that Company to extend their railway from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, with some additional subsidy from this House. I was not the only one, Sir, who was led to believe that such would be the case. I find, by reference to the Hansard, while the subject of these subsidies was under discussion, that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition in this House asked the following question:—

"I would like the hon. gentleman to make a brief statement with reference to the great American and European Short Line Railway Company's system. I observe, in looking at the papers which have been brought down, that the Company's statement is, that considerably the larger portion is already built—some 417 miles. I also observe, on looking at the map which the Company have appended to their proposal, that the eighty miles owned by the Halifax Extension Company, from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, is among the parts which they expect to acquire. I would like the hon. gentleman to state in what position that line now stands, and whether he is aware with whom the negotiations have taken place, and in what state the negotiations are which the Company referred to as having made such progress as to justify them with going on with the links.

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Committee are aware that, under the legislation which has already taken place, the Government of Canada agreed to hand over the branch from Truro to Pictou for the purpose of securing the construction of the line eastward. The Government of Nova Scotia, with an additional subsidy, secured the construction of the line of railway to the Strait of Canso. Under the existing legislation, the whole of that property is, therefore, the property of the Eastern Extension Company; but the Government of Nova Scotia made a contract with that Company, which bound the Company—in case the Government, by a certain time, paid them their actual expenditure, irrespective of the subsidy which had been given to them to hand over to the Government of Nova Scotia the whole property. The arbitration provided for in that contract between the Company and the Government of Nova Scotia is now taking place. It is expected that in a few days that road from Truro to the Strait of Canso will be in the possession of the Government of Nova Scotia, and the Government of Nova Scotia are anxious to utilize that for the purpose of securing the extension of the railway system to Sydney or Louisburg, in Cape Breton. I understand that negotiations are pending between the Company and the Government of Nova Scotia for the acquisition of that line, upon terms that would secure, in connection with the subsidy provided for in this Bill, the prompt execution and completion of the line to Sydney or Louisburg. That is the position. The charter of the Great American and European Short Line Railway provides for running powers over that portion from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, independent of its acquisition in another way.

"Mr. BLAKE. The Pictou and Truro Branch cost about $2,300,000, irrespective of rolling stock, and the Halifax extension subsidy from the Nova Scotia Government amounts to $600,000; so that the Eastern Extension Company have received generally in money and cost $2,900,000. Do these negotiations on the Great American and European Short Line Railway embrace the surrender of the Pictou Branch as well as the eighty miles, or simply the eighty miles?

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it covers the whole.

"Mr. BLAKE. The idea is, that thus, by the machinery through the acquisition by the Nova Scotia of the Pictou and Truro Branch and the eighty miles, we will be able to accomplish that for which we formerly agreed to give up the Truro Branch, a line through the Island."

In this way we were led to believe, last year, that the Truro Branch and Eastern Extension would be given to the Short Line Railway Company, on terms that would insure the building of the road from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg. In order to show this House, and the country, that negotiations did take place between the Short Line Railway Company and the Local Government of Nova Scotia, I have only to quote from the speech of the Mr. CAMERON (Inverness).

Attorney-General of Nova Scotia, who is a representative of the County of Cape Breton in the Local Legislature. On the 12th April, 1883, he spoke as follows:—

"The hon. leader of the Opposition has made reference to the subject of railway construction in Cape Breton, and has stated that the Bill does not provide one dollar for building a railway into Cape Breton."

That is the Bill to which I referred, in reference to subsidies aggregating $1,900,000, for railway purposes:—

"It is true it does not, but it is equally true that by its provisions the Government are empowered to negotiate with any company or companies respecting the building of a line in Cape Breton, and though I may not hope to see it accomplished immediately, I do hope that before very long—I trust within a year—a fair and reasonable proposition will be laid before the House, and will secure the assent of the House, for the purpose of extending the line into the county of Cape Breton. I feel that any person occupying, as I do, the position of a representative of that county, might naturally desire to say to his constituents that he has provided something so distinct and positive that there was no peradventure to prevent the bringing of a railway into the borders of that county; but I may say frankly that I do not hope for that this year.

Now, Sir, he says here that he did not entertain hopes that, owing to some negotiations which took place between the Government of Nova Scotia and that Company, within a year the road would be undertaken between the Strait of Canso and Louisburg. Under these circumstances, I do not think it is very unreasonable that the people of Cape Breton particularly, should feel not a little irritated, because, from causes over which they had no control, no step has been taken for the extension into Cape Breton. There are many people in Cape Breton, and I am among the number, who believe that if the Local Government of Nova Scotia, last year, had transferred the Pictou Branch and the Eastern Extension to the Short Line Railway Company, on terms which we and that Company were led to believe they would do, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the railway on the Island of Cape Breton would have been taken before this day. I say more, Sir, that after the passage of the vote in this House last year, no company—not even the Canadian Pacific excepted—ever moved more vigorously in the construction and completion of the line from Montreal to Louisburg than did that Short Line Railway Company after the passage of the votes of last Session. But unfortunately it was not long after the surveys and actual railway operations were so vigorously commenced, that we were informed that they could not obtain the Pictou Branch and the Eastern Extension on any terms whatever. On that account, Sir, it is not unreasonable to ask why the Short Line Railway Company was in difficulty; and it is easy to understand that every reasonable person in Eastern Nova Scotia will fully realize the reasons why that project continued to be a failure up to the present time. We find, by the correspondence which has been laid before the House, that although we were deluded into believing, as late as the 21st of May last, that the Pictou Branch and Eastern Extension would be given to the Short Line Railway Company on terms that would ensure railway construction to Cape Breton—I say we find by correspondence that the Local Government of Nova Scotia, instead of intending to do what they had unquestionably promised, were negotiating the sale of the Pictou Branch and the Eastern Extension to the Dominion Government; we find by correspondence which is now in the hands of the public, dated 28th May last, that the Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia telegraphed to the hon. Minister of Railways as follows:—

"In the event of delay in London and possible loss of our right, will your Government take both lines, pay Company's outlay, and return our subsidy on Canso line; if not, on what terms will you relieve us?"

This very telegram of the 28th May, even if it could only reach our hands at that particular date, would assure us that our hopes of railway extension into Cape Breton on the terms specified in the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, would be delusive. The offer was not accepted by the hon. Minister of Railways; so that two days later the Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia again telegraphed to the Minister as follows:—

“Halifax, 30th May, 1883.—If we can offer you the Pictou Branch and Extension on payment of Company's outlay and expenses of arbitration, would your Government entertain the proposal?”

Well, the proposal, after a long agitation, has been accepted. We think at present that we have nothing to do. We shall watch the proceedings; but, in the meantime, I feel myself obliged to refer to an agitation which is intended to mislead the people of Cape Breton particularly. Notwithstanding the fact that since Confederation the Government of Nova Scotia have assumed obligations for railway purposes, aggregating in round numbers $4,000,000, we now find that that Government does not propose to expend one dollar, or contribute one dollar, to railway extension in Cape Breton. But that is not all. We find that our political opponents, in Nova Scotia particularly, twitted us for not doing more in securing railway aid from the Dominion Government. They now ignore, notwithstanding the immense obligations undertaken for railway purposes in Nova Scotia, the claim of Cape Breton to a dollar for railway purposes. And what do they say? I find that an hon. member for the city of Halifax, occupying a position in another place, to which I dare not, under the Rules of the House, refer, spoke as follows:—

“The hon. gentleman who now occupies the Chair of this House has on former occasions spoken of the Island of Cape Breton. He is not perhaps now in a position to do so, and I shall try to say a few words on that question. Of course, I have not the eloquence and ability, or the energy, that he has; but I wish to say a few words in relation to the claims of that Island. The white population of British Columbia is about 20,000; the population of Vancouver Island is about 12,000. The population of Cape Breton is 84,000. The Island of Cape Breton was settled before Vancouver Island was discovered. The 84,000 people of Cape Breton have been paying largely into the Dominion Treasury for the last sixteen years, and there has not been expended by the Department of Railways and Canals in that Island up to the present time any sum beyond some $300,000 spent on the St. Peter's Canal, while the amount expended in British Columbia is counted by millions. Now, the Island of Cape Breton is quite as wealthy in mineral and agricultural resources, and in fisheries, as the Island of Vancouver, or any portion of British Columbia; and I cannot understand why so great a difference should exist between the treatment of the East and that of the West. It may be because the claims of Cape Breton have not been put before the Government in the same pertinacious and vigorous manner in the other Chamber that has been used in pushing forward the claims of British Columbia. I propose, a little later on, to show a way in which I think, at the present time, the Government have it in their power to assist the just claims of that section of the country. The people of Cape Breton are more reasonable in their demands and expectations than the people of British Columbia, probably because they have been so badly treated in the past. The Government will not have to spend a great many millions there to make them satisfied.”

Notwithstanding the fact that the Local Government of Nova Scotia assumed large expenditures for railway purposes, they failed to appropriate a dollar for Cape Breton. And there is another significant fact, that the hon. gentleman who spoke thus in the other House is either the agent of the present Local Government or its leader; it is impossible for me to say which, but I can prove out of his own mouth that he was acting in either the one capacity or the other. He refers to a proposition which he would make that would ensure the building of railways in Cape Breton. At the conclusion of the speech from which I have quoted, the hon. gentleman makes a suggestion as follows:—

“If the Dominion Government did not care to hand over the Pictou Branch and to make what I look upon as being a fair and reasonable arrangement with the Local Government of Nova Scotia, and decided to own the roads themselves, it would have been only fair to have repaid the Government of Nova Scotia the sum of $800,000, or thereabouts, which that Government had expended on the extension. If they had dealt with them in that way, they would have treated the Nova Scotia Government somewhat as they are treating British Columbia in connection with the Graving Dock, the Government having agreed to pay British Columbia $250,000, which the Local Government had expended on the Graving Dock; and I think they should have treated the Government of Nova Scotia in the same way, and repaid them the $800,000 which had been expended by them on that road. The House will see the position in which things would have been then. If the Local Government had got that $800,000, they would have been in a position, and it was their intention I understand, to have aided in extending the railway through the Island of Cape Breton; but they cannot do that now, not having the money. If, on the other hand, the Dominion Government had dealt liberally with the Local Government, and that Government had been able to retain the Pictou Branch Railway, and the Eastern Extension, they would in all probability have been able to make arrangements with some company by which they could have secured the extension of the road into Cape Breton, but the Dominion Government had a giant's strength, and they used it like a giant; the Local Government are now powerless to do anything in the way of aiding in the extension of the railway into the Island of Cape Breton, and the responsibility rests with the Dominion Government.”

The hon. gentleman has published some very significant facts. The first fact made public is this: He complains that $600,000 expended on the Eastern Extension should not have been handed by the Dominion Government to the Local Government. For what purpose? I have reason to believe that it was not for railway extension in Cape Breton. At a later stage of the Session I shall be in a position to prove it; at the present stage it is not necessary. There is another significant fact, it is that he endeavoured to create the impression all over the Province, and especially in the Island of Cape Breton, that he has taken that large and important island under his wing; and as an opponent of the present Federal Government and a supporter of the Nova Scotia Government, he would lead the people of Cape Breton to believe that he is their great friend, notwithstanding the fact that he is in perfect accord with the Local Government. In relation to giving the Pictou Branch and Eastern Extension to a company, that hon. gentleman in the speech from which I quoted, further says:

“I presume that the Government of the Dominion propose to extend the road into Cape Breton; and I trust that they will not transfer the road, as it has been said they propose to do, to some company. Our experience of company roads in Nova Scotia has not been satisfactory: the rates will be higher, and the business will be much less, in the hands of the company than in the hands of the Dominion Government.”

He admitted it was a fact that it was the intention of the Local Government to do certain things, by which we may safely come to the conclusion that he obtained a great many more facts from the Local Government. Another fact is, that the Local Government, and other people interested in the Pictou Branch and the Eastern Extension, would persistently refuse in the future, as they had in the past, to give those roads to any railway company as an aid for railway extension into Cape Breton. Having laid these facts before the House, I may conclude by making a few observations in reference to my own faith in the present Dominion Government giving all the aid they possibly can, all the aid that this House will sanction, in order to secure railway extension in Cape Breton. While I am in hopes that the Dominion Government will aid—in continuance of the policy adopted by this Parliament in 1874—the railway from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, I, for one, will not fail to hold the Local Government of Nova Scotia responsible for a proportion of the amount of money expended in that Province since Confederation, by the representatives of Nova Scotia proper. At this stage of the Session it is impossible to say what this Government may do; but this I do say: that they will have no reason to complain—and I believe they have had no reason to complain up to this time—that the representatives of the Island of Cape Breton did not press with all the power, ability, and tact, which they may possess, the claims of Cape Breton for a subvention to build a railway from the Strait of Canso to Sydney and Louisburg. I feel assured that when the day comes, the people of Cape Breton will give us that credit to which we are entitled for doing so, and will not fail, if the representatives of Cape Breton, in Nova Scotia, will not press our claims just as vigorously in another place, to punish them for failing to discharge their duty in that Legislature. With these remarks, I thank the House most kindly for the very courteous manner in which they have received me on this occasion, as they always have received me, when I laboured to present my views to the House.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) deserves the thanks of the country, and the House, for bringing this important matter before them. With every word of his singularly able and eloquent speech I heartily agree. We all remember, Sir, that when the Government, two Sessions ago, introduced what was then a new policy—that is, in addition to the building of the main lines of railway, that they should aid such roads as act as feeders for these railways, the assent of the House was almost universal to that policy. Last Session when the hon. Minister of Railways brought down his Bill granting aid to certain local railways, that policy had again the almost universal assent of the House. The hon. Minister of Railways, as he usually does, made an eloquent and able speech on that occasion. With his singular knowledge of the circumstances he pointed out the great importance which this system would have in opening up new tracts of country, and notably tracts of country lying almost in this immediate vicinity—lying, in fact, almost under the very shadow of this Parliament House; opening up what then was a terra incognita—a new country, to settlement and development. He pointed out the great work which Father Labelle was doing in the rear of that country, and he guaranteed us—for which we were very thankful—that he would liberally aid in the construction of our Gatineau Railway. I think my hon. friend who introduced this measure deserves the thanks of the House for again bringing it to the notice of the country. While we are willing to vote large sums to build Dominion railways and promote the interests of the Dominion generally, I think we should not neglect those sections which lie in our immediate vicinity. My hon. friend, with that eloquence which characterizes him, pointed out the importance of the Lake St. John Railway, and I quite agree with him as to the importance of that railway, and the importance of developing the region of country through which it passes; but I, too, have a railway in which I am very much interested, and that is the Gatineau Valley Railway. The hon. gentleman spoke of the wheat producing qualities of the Lake St. John region. I may say that I have a statement from Father Deleage, one of those excellent missionaries who have for many years lived and laboured in the Upper Gatineau region, and he assured me that he had frequently sown a bushel of wheat, and that from that one bushel of wheat he had reaped sixty bushels; and anyone that knows that excellent gentleman, and the great work he is performing in that region, knows that his word may be implicitly relied on. In my own region the Gatineau River extends some 400 miles into the interior, taking its rise near the source of that great affluent of the St. Lawrence, the St. Maurice; and that country can only be opened by means of this railway, which we have only commenced, and which, without additional assistance, we could never build. The lacustrine system of that country is one of the finest in the world, the lakes abounding in every kind of fish to be found in Canadian waters. There is a large proportion of the land admirably suited for settlement and colonization, and hundreds of miles of fine country upon which millions of Canadian people could find happy homes. Under the circumstances, I have great pleasure in saying a word in favour of the resolutions, and I think they will have the assent of almost every hon. member.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not intend to address the House at any length, notwithstanding the very important sentiments which have been submitted for their consideration by the hon. mover of this motion, the member for Bagot. There is no doubt that it will be impossible to overrate the importance of the various matters which he submitted for the consideration of the House. There is no doubt at all that the opinion is growing from day to day, that the responsibility of aiding the various sections of the country must, to a very large extent, rest upon this Parliament, because by opening up new sections of country, and thereby improving the trade, we increase the revenue of the country, and the direct advantage of these railway movements very largely inures to the Federal rather than to the Local Governments. I am afraid, therefore, that with the exception of the rich Province of Ontario—and even in that great Province they do not seem able to carry on to a much greater extent the aid to local lines of railway—I am afraid that in all the other Provinces we shall have largely to have recourse to such assistance as Parliament can give in opening up the new sections of the country. The grounds for that were very ably stated by the hon. mover of this motion, and I am quite certain that the steps which the Government have taken, especially at the last Session of Parliament, will satisfy this House that we are fully alive to the responsibility that rests upon us in this matter, and that these various efforts at local improvement will receive the most favourable consideration at the hands of the Government that it is possible to give them, and that the financial condition of the country and other claims pressing upon it will allow. We all attach very great importance to attracting immigrants into our country. There is no mode in which we can do that to a greater extent than by opening up the various sections of the country to successful development, and rendering the efforts of persons who come into our country successful in carrying on their industry. But I think we shall all agree, Sir, that great as is the importance of attracting immigration into our country, it is of still greater importance, as the hon. member for Bagot has forcibly and eloquently said, to keep those people we have; and every effort we can make to render their industry successful we are bound to make, in order not only to keep them within our borders, but to attract back to the country those who have been, in the past, unwillingly, from various causes, forced to seek homes in the adjoining country. I can assure the hon. gentleman that it would be impossible to overrate the importance which the present Government attach to every effort that can be made in that direction, and that he may confidently rely upon this and similar representations receiving prompt and careful attention at the hands of the Government. If the hon. gentleman will look at the report I had the honour to lay on the Table, he will find there a detailed statement as to what took place in regard to the appropriations made last Session down to the time at which this report was prepared. Of course there has been some additional money paid out since, but the short time which has elapsed since last Session has only rendered possible the initial steps in any of these enterprises. In the case of many of the roads to which votes were granted last Session, no money has been drawn from the Treasury, for the reason that there has not been time to organize the companies that would be required to carry on these enterprises. In several instances the work has been carried forward, and considerable sums of money withdrawn; and in other cases arrangements are in progress by which it will be found that the objects the Government had in view will be carried out. In some cases it may be found that the amount of aid granted was not sufficient. It will be the duty of the Government, not only to examine the various cases of this kind which may be presented to them, but to review the action the House has already taken, in order to see in what way we can accomplish the objects in view, and perhaps to increase somewhat the appropriations already made. I do not intend to go into the question raised at considerable length by the hon. member for Inverness. So far as I was able to catch his remarks, he was, to a very large extent, criticising the action of the Government of Nova Scotia. Now, Sir, although I have no great indisposition, as the House knows, when there is absolute necessity, to criticize an opponent as well as I am able, I have very great objection to doing so when that opponent is not on the floor of this House, and is not in a position either to justify or defend his action; and I should be very reluctant, especially as the Government of Nova Scotia is not in accord with the Government of the Dominion, to follow the line adopted by the hon. gentleman in his remarks to the House. But I will say that the action of this Government last Session, as on various previous occasions—and not this Government only, but hon. gentlemen opposite when in power—is the best evidence that can be desired that we are not disposed to overlook the importance of extending railway communication in the Province of Nova Scotia, and especially in the Island of Cape Breton; and I am quite sure it will be found in the future, as in the past, that not only both Governments, past and present, but both sides of this House, will be prepared to give a fair and candid consideration to the claims of any section, however remote, as they are placed before us.

Mr. VAIL. I am glad to hear from the hon. Minister of Railways that he is desirous of doing anything that is reasonable to extend our railways in Nova Scotia. I am sorry he could not have given a more positive assurance to the hon. member for Inverness that a certain addition would be made to the grant of last year. I listened very carefully to the eloquent remarks of the hon. member for Inverness, and I could not, for some fifteen or twenty minutes, understand exactly what his object was; but I at last discovered that it was to censure the Local Government for not having done what he knows very well was impossible for them to do, that is, build the road through the Island of Cape Breton. The hon. gentleman did me the honour to read a large portion of a speech delivered by me in the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia, when introducing the Government resolutions in 1872, in which I explained what the policy of the Local Government then was in regard to building railways in Nova Scotia; and I stated explicitly that it was the desire of the Local Government at that time, if possible, to extend the road in the west to Yarmouth, and in the east to the eastern end of the Island of Cape Breton. He also knows that at the time I held office in Nova Scotia we did all that was possible towards carrying out this object. He also knows that the Local Government subsequently actually made a contract for the extension of the road eastward, with the view, if possible, of extending it through to the Island of Cape Breton. He also knows that the road was extended from New Glasgow to Louisburg, some eighty miles in the direction of Cape Breton, and that, although his own friends went into office in 1878, and held office for three or four years, they did nothing towards extending the road through the Island of Cape Breton. He knows that, but he does not acknowledge it to this House, because he would not be carrying out the object he has in view. I see what my hon. friend is preparing for. He knows that he will be called upon very soon to give a vote one way or the other on the important Resolutions before the House, and he is trying to make it appear that the Government of Nova Scotia have failed in their duty, and that the Government of the Dominion are likely to make some grant to Nova Scotia, in order to excuse himself for the vote he intends to give. He said the failure of the Short Line Company was due to the Local Government not carrying out the arrangement of last year by which the Short Line Company would receive the Pictou Branch and the extension from New Glasgow to Canso. Is it worth while to tell the House to-day that they failed on that account, when everyone who knows anything about the Short Line knows that they were not able to half complete the contract through the country represented by the hon. Minister of Railways, that they failed early last year and have not done anything since? I would advise my hon. friend, instead of trying to censure the Local Government for doing what he knows very well it was impossible for them to do, and which the papers, when they come before the House, will show they could not do—I say I would advise him and the other hon. gentlemen representing Cape Breton in this House to bring their influence to bear on their friends in the Dominion Government to get an additional subsidy to the grant of last year in order to extend the line of railway through Cape Breton. If the hon. gentleman will have the courage to stand up and tell the Government this must be done, he will, in all probability, get the promise that that something will be done before very long. It will not do for him to try to make it appear that he and his friends from Cape Breton are very desirous of having this road completed, when they have been in this House four or five years and the only thing they have done is to ask for papers, some of which I believe have not been brought down yet. I have shown my desire, and I believe the Local Government are equally anxious, to have the railway extended through Cape Breton. I gave the hon. Minister of Railways great credit last year for having made even the small grant of $3,200 per mile for the completion of this road. I was sorry to see it so small, and told him it was not possible to have it built for that sum, and that I failed to see why he was not willing to give us as much as he gave to the road west of Callander. I am really in hopes that the Government, now that they will acquire this very valuable property, which I think is about 130 miles in length, will consider the peculiar position in which Nova Scotia, and especially the Island of Cape Breton, are placed, and do what they can in order to further the interest of that Island by an increased grant for the extension.

Mr. STAIRS. I do not wish to take up the time of the House this afternoon in discussing the question of the resolution, but as the hon. member for Pictou has seen fit to attack the late Government of Nova Scotia, of which I had the honour of being a member, I may be allowed to take one or two minutes for reply. The hon. gentleman said that the late Government of Nova Scotia held office for four years, and did nothing towards extending the railway to the Island. I would like to say that the late Local Government were unable to do anything to extend the railway into that Island, on account of the bungling and mismanagement of their predecessors. Every man in Nova Scotia knows that the contracts which were made to extend the road to the Strait of Canso were such weak and miserable instruments that it was impossible for any work to be carried out under them. The same remark applies to the contract which they made with the Western Counties Railway to extend the road.

Motion agreed to.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I was not present on Monday, but I understand that the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made some promise in reference to the resolution that I have on the Order paper. Is it his intention, this Session, to introduce an amendment to that Act, and remedy the evil of which we complain?

Mr. McLELAN. I have put the matter before the Law Clerk, and I think I will be able to meet the hon. gentleman's views.

INDIAN AGENT'S OFFICE IN TORONTO.

Mr. COOK moved for copies of all Orders in Council, departmental orders, and correspondence respecting the closing of the Indian Agent's office in Toronto and the removal of the same to Ottawa, with a statement showing the names of all parties since appointed to discharge the duties formerly performed by the Toronto agency; the name of each such person appointed; the salary of each such person appointed; the names of the localities where stationed; the amount of money paid to the Indians by each; the number of families in each agency; the date of each appointment and the present business, if any, carried on by all such agents. He said: The duty of the Government when making removals of this kind is, I consider, to economize as much as possible, consistent with efficiency. The removal of this office from Toronto to Ottawa has caused great inconvenience to people who have to deal with the Indian Department in connection with that agency, and in removing it I find that they have exercised no economy, but have caused great inconvenience. Mr. Plummer, the head of the Department at Ottawa, had the agency at Toronto where he received $1,700 a year, and Mr. Dalton, his assistant, received $800, which was too small a salary for so efficient an officer. Mr. Plummer now receives $1,800, and Mr. Dalton $1,100, making a total of $2,900. I have no objection to the increase of salary given those gentlemen, but I say that, adding to the salaries in Toronto $400 for office rent, we find that the cost in both cases is the same. A few days ago I asked the Government a question about the appointment of an Indian agent at Penetanguishene, and I received the reply from the Premier that Henry Thompson had been appointed to that agency on the 31st January, 1883, at $500 per annum. I have received information from different sources during Recess that not only Thompson was appointed to this agency, but that other individuals were appointed, and I suppose at the salary mentioned by the Prime Minister. Now, Sir, if there are nine officials appointed—and there may be more for aught I know—and if the nine officials receive from the Government $500 each, we have $4,500 of a surplus to provide for. I find that Mr. Bull was appointed at Cape Croker, in the Saugeen Peninsula, in the North Riding of Bruce; that a Mr. John Creighton, of Chippewa, was appointed in that same district, and I am aware that there is an agency also at Wiarton in the eastern section of the Saugeen District, in the North Riding of Bruce. One would have thought that, if the Government were bound to remove the office from the city of Toronto, the office at Wiarton would have been sufficient to accomplish all that was necessary for the Saugeen Peninsula; but we find that there are two other officers appointed for that place, and I am curious to know—and I suppose the country would like to know—how many Indians these men have to look after and to pay. Why, I understand that the duties of an agency in this respect are to teach these people how to farm, to teach them the different modes of obtaining a livelihood, and that these people should be practical farmers, and should live near the place over which they have jurisdiction. I understand that this Mr. Creighton is a merchant, and insists upon the Indians dealing with him. I understand that he sells goods to them, and, of course, I suppose he does not sell goods to the Indians for very much less than he does to other individuals. Very likely, having the money to distribute to the Indians in his hands, he would, in all human probability, charge a little more than he would to ordinary customers. Mr. McPhee, of Uptergrove, was also appointed, and Mr. Stephenson, of Georgina, Mr. Edwin Harris, of Gore's Landing, Mr. Thackeray, of Roseneath, Mr. Thompson, of Penetanguishene, of whom we have just been talking, and Mr. Hill, of Shannonville—an officer, I believe, who held the position of Indian land agent before this appointment; and, if the Government had to appoint an officer in that place, I believe they were wise in giving the position to a man who held the office before, that is, combining the office of Indian agent with that of Indian land agent. I find also that there was a Mr. George Macdermott appointed at Seugog. There is also an agency at Parry Sound. That agency might have accomplished the work that Mr. Thompson does at Penetanguishene. As far as that appointment is concerned, he might as well live in the city of Toronto as at Penetanguishene, as far as the Indians are concerned. Mr. Thompson is not a practical farmer, and knows nothing about farming. He is a storekeeper at Penetanguishene, and I have no doubt that every time an Indian or a squaw appears at his store door he turns them away, and would not allow them to buy goods. It is so reported in that part of the country however. Now, if it is not true that nine men have been appointed—we will assume that nine men have been appointed—to fill the place that the office at Toronto filled, the country pays just $7,000 more a year for the appointment of these individuals in the different reserves. It may be said by the Government that it is their duty to have an agency as near the reserves or as near the Indians as possible. Well, there may be some truth in that; but, at the same time, the office was held in Toronto for a number of years, and in that office the duties were performed without any difficulty, and without any objection by the Indians. As far as I can learn, the Indians now find a great deal more fault with the local agents than they did with the agent, Mr. Plummer, when he lived in Toronto. Mr. Plummer was a very efficient officer. He always minded his own business in Toronto. He never interfered with any elections while in the city of Toronto; but when he came to Ottawa, under the influences of this Government, he at once became a political bummer, and was sent out to Algoma and Muskoka to canvass and do what he could for the Conservative candidates at the last General Election for the Province of Ontario. Now, I find, by the answer given to me by the Premier, that Mr. Thompson was appointed on the 31st January, 1883, by the Order in Council passed that day. Mr. Thompson was nominated as a candidate in the Conservative interest in the Local Legislature on the 6th February. He was bound that he should get his pound of flesh before he put himself in the position of a candidate. I know as a fact that Mr. Thompson heretofore constantly and persistently refused the nomination in any respect in the county of Simcoe as a candidate, but Mr. Thompson got his appointment before his nomination, or before the convention that was held to nominate him as a candidate. The election was held on the 27th February, and I understand, from more than one reliable source, that throughout the election in East Simcoe Mr. Thompson persistently stated that he had not received a Government office, and that he was not the paid servant of the Government. Of course, I know that my hon. friend the Premier—if I may be allowed to call him my hon. friend—would say, in reply to that, that he was not a paid agent, because he did not receive any pay until the 31st March, or long after he had lost his election in East Simcoe. But I would like to know the position the hon. gentleman would have occupied if Mr. Thompson had unfortunately happened to have been elected in East Simcoe. There was an Order in Council passed on the 31st January, appointing him to the position of Indian Agent at Penetanguishene, to distribute the money amongst, I think, about twenty-three families in the islands of the Georgian Bay, the Christian Islands, etc. We find, from the Consolidated Statutes of Ontario, in an Act respecting the Legislative Assembly, in the 7th clause, referring to the disqualification of hon. members to sit and vote in the Local Legislature, these words:—

"No person accepting or holding any office, commission or employment, either in the service of the Dominion of Canada, or in the service of the Government of Ontario, at the nomination of the Crown or of the Lieutenant Governor, to which any salary, or any fee, allowance or emolument in lieu of any salary from the Crown or from the Province is attached, or accepting or holding any office, commission or employment of profit at the nomination of the Crown, or of the Government, or of any head of a Department in the Government of Ontario, whether such profit is or is not payable out of the public fund."

Mr. Thompson's salary, of course, would not be paid out of the public funds—it would be paid from the Indian funds, I suppose—and my hon. friend may take exception to this. He may say that, because all the agents are paid from the Indian funds, the Dominion funds will not be appropriated in that direction; but, if all the Indian funds should be consumed, we know, of course, where they would have to look for money to pay what would be required for them. I will read the remainder of the clause:

"Shall be eligible as a member of the Legislative Assembly, or shall sit and vote in the same during the time he holds such office, commission or employment."

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were severally read the second time:—

Bill (No. 56) to empower the bondholders of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway Company to vote at meetings of the Company, and for other purposes.—(Mr. White, Cardwell).

Bill (No. 64) to amend the Act relating to the Manitoba and North-West Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Cameron, Victoria).

Bill (No. 67) further to amend the Act to incorporate the Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Bergin).

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Quebec Railway Bridge Company.—(Mr. Bossé).

WELLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. RYKERT moved the second reading of Bill (No. 44) to authorize the transfer of the Welland Railway to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and for other purposes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman please explain that Bill.

Mr. RYKERT. It is to carry out an arrangement made between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Welland Railway in reference to the road—to legalize that arrangement according to the resolutions of the stockholders and bondholders.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Grand Trunk Railway Company proposed then to acquire the Welland Railway, do they?

Mr. RYKERT. Yes; they did have a lease of it for twenty years, and this is to change it into a proprietary right.

LAW OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 3) further to amend the law of evidence in criminal cases.

Mr. TUPPER. Before the House goes into Committee I desire briefly again to trouble the House with my views in regard to this question, which I am sure every member of the House will admit to be a most important one. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that previous to the division which occurred upon the second reading of this Bill, I laboured under the impression—which the result of that division proved to be erroneous—that the sentiment of the House was entirely adverse to placing such an Act as the proposed one upon the Statutes of this country. I gave as a reason, when moving the six months' hoist, for not going into a discussion on the Bill then, and for the confidence I felt that the Bill would not carry, the fact that last Session this Bill, among others, had been discussed at some length by this House, and that the Bill had gone, with others, into a Committee of the Whole, and had never returned from the Committee, it having been thrown out in that way. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) charged me, in the discussion which last took place, with having somewhat misled the House in that statement. I think, if my language is looked at carefully, it will be found that I did not mislead the House, while at the same time, to a certain extent, as I have stated, I was misled myself. I considered it was unnecessary to explain my opinions further, because the Bill contained other objectionable clauses, one of which I remember my hon. friend from Quebec Centre (Mr. Bossé) most eloquently and forcibly discussed, that in respect to admitting Agnostics to testify in the Courts. But I did not think that if the sentiment of the House was in favour of such a Bill at the present, the fact that it contained an objectionable clause would necessarily defeat the whole. I was of the opinion that if the House wished to pass such legislation, if there was a serious desire to make so complete a change in the criminal legislation of the country, a motion would have been framed, as I think it could have been framed, to have saved this clause, if the mover of the present Bill believed the House would support and carry it. As no motion was made to save this part of the Bill, but as every clause was lost, I was correct in stating that when the House rejected the whole of it, it therefore dissented from every part of the Bill. I bow to the decision of the House to a certain extent. I recognize the fact that I counted without my host; that the House was of the opinion that the principle of the Bill should be considered, and considered carefully, by the Committee to which the Bill was sent, and to which Committee the hon. member in charge of the Bill moved on the last occasion to send it. But in justice to myself, considering I did not attempt to argue the question under the circumstances to which I alluded, I hope the House will have sufficient patience to permit me, even though speaking in a losing cause, to express the opinions I hold in regard to this Bill, and which I hold most tenaciously. I am prompted, moreover, to enter into a discussion on the question again, at some little length, owing to the extraordinary statements that were made by the hon. member for West Huron when he moved to send the Bill to a Special Committee. I am well aware that this question has been discussed most thoroughly in many countries. It has been discussed, as we know, in England. It has been discussed on the floor of this Parliament several times. It has been discussed in the magazines of the day; and we know the question has been treated as a serious one everywhere. But I never yet knew or heard any gentleman who had studied it, speak in so emphatic a manner as the mover of the Bill, and with such contempt as he expressed for hon. members who opposed the measure. I was surprised to hear the hon. member insinuate that the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) and myself, in opposing the Bill, were wiseacres, and gentlemen behind the spirit of the age, and not imbued with that tremendous spirit of reform that actuates the hon. gentleman and all those who support him. I was surprised to hear him treat with contempt arguments which, though they came from my mouth, were not original, and which at no time did I attempt to introduce into the House as original. They were arguments used, and eloquent arguments they were, by men who had more experience than I had in regard to the question, and indeed I would confess that, though a member of the bar, I am a very young member, and would not attempt to discuss criminal practice and the administration of justice in this country to such an extent if those ideas were original. I would bow more promptly to the decision of the House under those circumstances, but to-night I wish briefly to go over some of the phases of the manner in which the question has been treated. I stated, last year, that it had been before the British Parliament, and that a Bill in that direction had not become law. I alluded with some pride to the fact that the administration of criminal justice in Great Britain was the most satisfactory throughout the civilized world. That statement cannot be challenged. It has been put to the proof during the last few years and had received the admiration of the world, and I consider that fact a strong feature in the discussion of this question; and though we should not implicitly follow all British legislation, and although I do not for a moment contend that we should wait for the British Parliament before we introduce measures here, I think we may, consistent with our national pride, and a feeling of admiration for our knowledge of the law, bow with great respect to the legal minds in England, and carefully follow in the footsteps of the law reformers of the United Kingdom. I would have much more faith in law reforms carried out by the Reform party of that country than in such measures initiated by Reformers here. The Reform party in England occupies a very different position from the Reform party here, which, when in power, and able to deal with the question now under consideration, which was then interesting the legal minds, was convinced there was nothing to reform. What do we find Reformers in England saying? When the Bill introduced by Mr. Ashley, with the same object as the present Bill, was introduced to the British Parliament, men who were not merely Reformers, but possessed of greater experience of criminal trials and practice than the hon. member for West Huron, such men as Sergeant Simon, who had for many years studied the subject, denounced the measure, and he, a Reformer, denounced it, not as a measure of Reform, but as a retrograde measure; and he was followed up and supported not only by members of the bar, but by eminent men such as Sir E. Wilmot, Sir Thos. Chambers and Knatchbull Huggessen, all of whom, with that eminent man, the late Sir John Holker, then Attorney General, aided in defeating the Bill. That was in 1876. Following that, a member of the Reform party came to this House in 1877 with a Bill which we may call the Dymond Bill. Mr. Dymond introduced a measure, which was the Bill now in the hands of the hon. member for West Huron, and endeavoured to carry it. This is an important fact I consider, because we have the benefit, as I have stated, not only of the experience of the eminent Attorney General of England to whom I have referred, who threw a similar measure out of the British House of Commons, but of the views of a member of this House, who then occupied a high position in it, a member who was charged with the administration of criminal justice and who occupied the position of Minister of Justice in the Reform Government of the day, and he opposed the measure which Mr. Dymond introduced, based on the Ashley Bill. Not only so, but with very able reasoning and arguments he showed to the satisfaction of the House that such legislation was not necessary for the country. I allude to the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). I say that at that time, with an experience far greater in his capacity as Minister of Justice, than the hon. member for Huron has acquired, and with the responsibilities of office weighing upon him, that hon. gentleman advised this House, in response to the then leader of the Opposition, the present Premier, to reject this Bill. I may be answered that the hon. gentleman has probably changed his opinion now, after additional experience; but it is a curious fact that this independent party, of which we heard the other evening, which at that time unanimously supported the member for West Durham, should just as unanimously wheel round and take the opposite position. I have alluded to this fact not only to point out that there are certain inconsistencies on the part of hon. gentlemen in connection with the measure, but more particularly to bring to my assistance the ably expressed views of the leader of the Opposition, who, in 1877, as I have stated, took such a course as to have this measure thrown out of the House, but who in 1884 silently votes in direct contradiction to those views. I also do this for the purpose of enabling the hon. gentleman to explain to this House the reasons which have caused him to change his opinion; and I need not say that as a lawyer I have very great respect for his legal opinions—more, perhaps, than for his opinions on constitutional questions. In the first place the hon. member for West Durham took exactly the same view of the second clause of this Bill which I take, that is, that it is entirely nugatory. I say that when you give a prisoner the option of going into the witness box, you are placing on the Statute Book an absurd and inconsistent measure. I say that such a Bill as the present cannot be, and will not be, supported in the Courts, and that the second clause makes the whole Bill absurd and ridiculous, no matter what opinion may be held as to the principle of the Bill. In effect it says, that if a prisoner does not exercise the option which is given him in the previous clause, of going into the witness box, his refusal shall not be made the subject of adverse comment. Now, Sir, in those States of the Union in which such legislation as this Bill has been passed, this clause is generally to the same effect—that the refusal of a prisoner to testify in his own behalf shall not be attempted to be made a presumption against him. But as every reasonable man would suppose, when that provision has come before the courts, the judges have alluded to it as being impossible to be enforced—that it is impossible to remove the natural presumption in such an event, by any legal rule or statute, no matter how strict. The courts have held that it was impossible to enforce such a provision. In a criminal prosecution under a similar Bill—the case of the State of Maine against Cleaves—an appeal was taken, and when the question came before the court, the judge held in direct contradiction to that clause, held in effect that it was nugatory, and sustained the appeal. Judge Appleton said:

“The silence of the accused, the omission to explain or contradict when the evidence tends to establish guilt, is a fact the probative effect of which may vary according to the varying conditions of the different trials in which it may occur; which the jury must perceive, and which perceiving, they can no more disregard than one can the light of the sun when shining with the full blaze on the open eye.”

That case is cited on a very able work of evidence, edited and written by Judge Best, and it agrees not only with my views of the case, but I am happy to state, with the views of that distinguished jurist, the leader of the Opposition, as he expressed them in 1877. That hon. gentleman said:

“If such were the case, it followed that, as a rule, prisoners would be obliged to give evidence. The question then arose as to whether the law would prove injurious in cases in which the accused was innocent. In the majority of cases it would not be to his injury, but to his advantage. He could conceive of some cases—they had occurred in his own experience in civil suits—in which an innocent man owing to his nervous habit, great excitement at the time, or unhappy mode of giving testimony, would be placed rather at a disadvantage than otherwise.”

He also goes on to state:

“Believing as he did that the fear of cross-examination was such that the prisoner, if untrue, would be demonstrated to be so, he thought that this law could not be calculated to be in favour of the escape of the guilty, though he thought the existing securities for the innocent were as powerful as, and perhaps more powerful, than the protection obtained by the prisoner telling his own story. Upon the whole he believed that the main difficulty in the question was to be found in the question of perjury in the very great temptation which already existed in civil cases, and still more in criminal cases, not to tell the truth. He was satisfied that there was one class of cases in which the accused might be allowed to give evidence, namely, that of assaults between parties to which there were no witnesses."

With that I thoroughly agree. Now speaking of this as a measure of reform, it amused me to hear some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill. If he had looked into the matter thoroughly he would have found, that instead of its being so far in advance of the age, instead of his being so far ahead of the Rip Van Winkles, as he described those opposed to this measure, including his present leader, he will find that this is a retrograde measure, because he would discover that down to the seventeenth century it was the practice in England, and it was a practice that became a scandal, for the prisoner at the bar had not only to be examined by counsel, but was violently harassed and cross-examined by the Judges, who generally had a conviction of his guilt, and would take no answer but that which tended to prove it. But though it existed down to the seventeenth century, without any law on the Statute-Book on the subject, the practice was suddenly changed, and it has been held ever since that a prisoner should be allowed the protection of the presumption which admits him to be innocent until he is proved guilty, and that he should not be tortured, or placed in a position to be so, by a cross-examination which in many cases produced great injury to the interests of justice, and was often fraught with the greatest danger to the prisoner at the bar. Therefore, Sir, this is not such a measure of reform as ought to commend itself so highly to Reformers that they should vote blindly for it simply because it is described in that way. I appeal to those gentlemen who were in the House in 1877, and who voted for the motion to throw out the Bill at that time—I appeal to them whether they have heard an answer to the arguments then urged so strongly by the hon. member for West Durham, sufficient to induce them to vote blindly for such legislation. Not only was this practice discouraged and departed from in England, but though some States in the Union have adopted it—and it has brought a great scandal on the Courts in those States—it will be observed as a significant fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest Court in the Union, permits no such privilege. "In the Courts of the United States," a note to Best's work, says, "a defendant in a criminal case cannot testify in his own behalf, although by Statute his testimony is admissible in the Courts of the State." Therefore, we have these facts—that up to the present day, such legislation is discouraged in England, that it is not the practice in the Courts of the United States, and that no longer ago than 1877, the Minister of Justice considered it his duty to advise the House to throw out similar legislation here. Besides, we have the report before us of the Royal Commission in England, which was composed of eminent jurists in that country, and upon which was Judge Stephen, the most distinguished Judge in favour of this measure in England; and that report shows that they disagreed on this question. They merely submitted it as a suggestion of eminent men, stating, at the same time, that they were divided in the opinion as to whether or not such legislation should be passed. After that report was adopted, it was alluded to by men eminent at the bar, in the magazines of the day, and by Judges on the bench, who universally conceded that the option proposed to be given to prisoners was strongly to be deplored and could not meet with a successful issue when it came before the House. The reasons, no doubt, that actuated people to take that view were reasons which have been urged repeatedly—that while in some cases this practice gives an undue advantage to the prisoner, in other cases it places him in an unfair position before the jury. The hon. member for Queen's, Nova Scotia, (Mr. Woodworth), the other night expressed the opinion that some of my objections were answered by the second clause. I have already told the House what I think of that second clause; but I maintain that my position is quite consistent with that of the hon. gentleman who alluded to another feature of this legislation when he said that instead of being unduly advantageous to a prisoner, it would be prejudicial to him. As Serjeant Simon pointed out, and as many members of the bar will bear out, in certain cases an undue advantage will be given to the prisoner. He stands in the box, defended by counsel, with every presumption in his favour, and his counsel gets out of him certain short points on which the whole case that is to go to the jury will hinge. In such a case as that, the counsel will instruct the prisoner to go on the stand and tell a short, sharp and effective falsehood—and I am not disgracing my profession by stating that a counsel would do that. I noticed that the hon. leader of the Opposition left off reading his paper when I touched upon this point, and began to listen. I mean to say he will not tell the prisoner in so many words to do that, but he will tell him to confine himself to a certain few points, and not go into the whole story—to tell, for instance, where he was on a certain night, in which no person could contradict him. In such a case this legislation will give the prisoner an undue advantage. In other cases, again, I say it will unduly press him—when, for instance, with a forbidding countenance, with a confused manner, or with natural infirmities, he goes on the stand and is unable to tell a straight story; and I say that the more illiterate a man is, the more this law will press upon him, because the more illiterate a man is the more difficult it is for him to tell the same story four or five times in the same way. It is a peculiarity that has often been noticed in our Courts of law that witnesses with the best intentions of honesty, and without any substantial interest in a case, when telling a narrative in the witness box, will be made by the opposing counsel to tell the same story four or five times, and in such a confused manner that the counsel in his address to the jury will rest his case on the inconsistent statements that the witness has made. Well, if that is an evil in civil cases, is it right that we should place our fellow men in such a position that they must go on the rack and tell their story, or take the consequences? That is the view which has been taken by gentlemen eminent in the profession, and a view of human nature in which I am supported by the hon. leader of the Opposition in his speech made in 1877. He, with his great experience at the bar, alluded in that speech to the same fact. He, knowing that parties to a suit had been permitted to testify in civil proceedings, still felt that it would be dangerous to allow a prisoner the same permission. The hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill thinks the whole matter is settled by the fact that in revenue laws and in shipping laws, in which a quasi criminal action is brought against a party, the accused is allowed to testify in his own behalf. He thinks the fact that that permission has been granted by the British Parliament and our own, disposes of this question. I have shown him that the leader of the Opposition was of opinion that, though in civil cases this has become law, it would be only safe to introduce it in criminal cases where there have been assaults between parties to which there were no witnesses. The argument, I have no doubt, that induced the hon. leader of the Opposition to narrow the question down to that, was what is apparent to every one, that the liberty of the subject is not to such an extent concerned, and that the question of perjury would not enter there with the same force and effect as in the cases covered by this Bill. I would, before taking my seat, simply ask whether we cannot afford safely to wait till some case happens, or some case can be brought to the minds of hon. gentlemen, that will show them the necessity of passing such a measure—such cases of prominence as those which induced the British and afterwards our own Parliament to introduce that change in civil practice, which permits parties to civil suits to testify in their own behalf. I ask the hon. gentleman not to tamper with our criminal legislation, or criminal practice, which has stood the test so well in the mother land in difficult times, in times of difficulty, such as we have never experienced in this country.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the question which is now occupying the attention of this House. I wish to make these few remarks in the English language, nevertheless, as we have the privilege of speaking the French language here, I deem it a duty to say in my mother tongue the first words which shall be uttered by me in this House, and I am aware of the fact that my French Acadian countrymen will be glad to know that I have taken advantage of the benefit given to us of speaking our own language here. I further desire to do so in order to show that we appreciate that privilege, and that in it we find one of the advantages of Confederation. These are the reasons why I was desirous first to address the House in my mother tongue and I will now go on in English. I have some diffidence in offering my opinion on this Bill, as a new member of this House rising for the first time to address the Chair. His speech on this occasion is always called the maiden speech, and is looked on by some as a great effort, and by others as a great failure, should it not come up to their expectations. But it is not my intention to make this my maiden speech, for I hope to make my maiden speech at some future time. At present my only desire is to make a few observations on this Bill, which I consider to be one of great importance. When the motion was made the other day that the Bill be read a second time, I did not offer any opinion concerning it, because I fully believed that the motion would be defeated by a large majority. To my great surprise, however, I found myself in a small minority. I have not the presumption now to imagine that any remarks of mine will change the opinions of hon. members who are in favour of this Bill, but it seems to me that the other day it did not receive sufficient consideration. To my mind, there are several reasons why it should not be adopted. In the first place, I would ask who has been convinced in this House, by any arguments advanced, that the administration of justice would be better subserved by the passing of this Bill? or how has it been shown that the administration of justice would be made more effective should this measure become law? Has it been pointed out by showing any crime to have hitherto gone unpunished, or that innocent persons have been punished who would have been acquitted had this principle been in force. I have heard no argument advanced on either one of these points, and on looking at the Bill itself I am strongly of opinion that it will have neither the effect of punishing crime heretofore not punished, or of preventing innocent people who hitherto may have been punished, from being convicted. Why do we endeavour before the Criminal Courts to punish crime—to fasten on one individual the guilt of crime and to punish him for having committed it? We do so for two objects. Firstly, to prevent crime by giving example to the world at large of the punishment that must be undergone by the one who is found guilty by the proper tribunal, and therefore must be guilty in the eyes of the law; the other object is to punish the individual who has committed the crime. If the prisoner be innocent, he will not in my opinion at least—in some instances he may and in some he may not—but taking them altogether, I do not believe that if he be innocent he will place himself in a better position by being allowed to take the stand and give evidence in his own behalf. And, why? Because in the majority of cases, the man who is accused of crime and who is innocent, who may not have mixed much with the world, who may be unsophisticated, who may never have been before a Court of Justice before, who may have been so surrounded by unfortunate circumstances as to have suspicion directed towards him, will come into the Court trembling. He comes into Court trembling; he comes there, perhaps, for the first time in his life, afraid of judges, afraid of lawyers, afraid of every one around him. The very fact of being under arrest, the very fact of being there under the clutches of the strong arm of the law and knowing that he is innocent, and the very fact that he, an innocent man, should be taken before that tribunal, all these things surrounding him will, perhaps, so affect him that, in the eyes of the jury, they may make him appear in a worse light than if he did not take the stand at all. Every word and every look will be interpreted as the action of guilt, whereas it may be the action of frightened innocence, the action of a man who has not been accustomed to this, and who, coming for the first time before a tribunal of this kind, will feel the danger to which he is exposed, and feeling all these things, will appear more like a guilty person, if he is innocent, than otherwise. Therefore, this will not help him, and this may be the result in the majority of cases. I can, of course, fancy cases where it might not be so. I can fancy an educated man coming there, a man who is accustomed to come in contact with his fellow men, and who will not be afraid, but, feeling his innocence within himself, will perhaps, by taking the stand, be able to clear himself very easily. But, Mr. Speaker, if he is deprived of taking the stand, can he not prove his innocence? Are there not circumstances which he can prove by other witnesses, and, if he cannot, the mere fact of his making a statement which is a true statement, which is a reasonable statement, which he is always permitted to make to his counsel, and to make to the Court and jury, by his counsel, if not by himself, a statement which is the truth, which will be plausible, which will be borne out by the circumstances, and which, if corroborated by other evidence, or by the lack of evidence, going to the jury, will have quite as much weight as if given under oath; because what great weight would the evidence have of a person accused of crime, if the jury, in the first place, suspect him of being guilty? The weight of his mere statement through his counsel or by himself will be just as great as his statement under oath. Therefore, in that instance, he would be benefited just as much by not going upon the stand as if he did go upon the stand. But it is not only that. It is the great principle laid down, which I believe will endure as a great principle for a long time yet, that it is better to allow nine guilty people to escape than one innocent man to be punished. Even if it were favourable to the prisoner, is it not better that he should escape through that favour, that a large number of guilty people should escape, than that one innocent man should suffer? I say it would be better. There is another object to be attained by the law. The law is enacted for the purpose of punishing crime, for the purpose of deterring others from committing crime; it is for the purpose of preventing crime from being committed. We will take the case of a guilty person brought before a tribunal, where the case is well proven against him, where the facts are well established by proper and competent testimony, and he has the privilege of coming upon the stand himself. What a great temptation for a man who has already committed a crime, who has already been guilty of a misdemeanor, which is sufficiently proved against him, so that, unless the evidence be contradicted, he will in all probability be found guilty by the jury; what a great temptation do we find for that man to step out of the criminal box and into the witness box; what a temptation for him to add another crime and a greater crime to the one he has already committed. There is the temptation; there is the premium for him to come forward and perjure himself, and so commit a crime which is greater than ordinary misdemeanors. I may be mistaken as to this, because I have not looked through the law sufficiently and my memory does not serve me, but I think the crime of perjury, which is only a misdemeanor after all, is visited more severely than any other misdemeanor on our Statute-Book. That is my recollection of it. It can, I think, be punished to the extent of some fourteen years imprisonment, whereas the general punishment of other crimes of misdemeanor is one, two, three, four, five, six, and up to seven years. Therefore, the crime of perjury is considered by the law as a greater crime, as a crime which should be more punished, because it commits more injury, perhaps, than any other crime which comes into the category of misdemeanor. And it is easy to see why it should be so, because, if the crime of perjury should become prevalent, if people should come to the conclusion that it is a light thing to perjure oneself, where would be the administration of justice, where would be the sanctity of the oath, where would be the regard given by jurymen to the testimony of men under oath, if they thought they had no regard for the sanctity of their oath? Therefore, the law always considered that the crime of perjury should be severely punished, so as to make men feel that the sanctity of the oath is sacred, so that respect for the oath should be always in the minds of the jury, and that the Court should give proper weight to it. We will give to the criminal—I speak of the guilty man, the purely guilty man—that great incentive to go upon the stand and perjure himself. And would he hesitate for a moment? I venture to say that he would not hesitate, because he is already guilty. He sees that he is perhaps likely to be sent for four, five, or seven years to the penitentiary; he is hardened in crime, he is so hardened as to have committed that crime for which he is being tried, and he would not hesitate to go upon the stand and commit another crime by perjuring himself. True, it may not prevent his being punished; it may not prevent his being found guilty; the jury may see through him, and may say, you have added the crime of perjury to the one for which you are being tried, we do not believe what you have said; he may have been broken down altogether by the cross-examining counsel, but still there will be that great crime committed which the law has sanctioned, which the law has invited, which the law has forced upon that man, and upon the administration of criminal jurisprudence in this Dominion. And to say that a man who may refuse to go upon the witness box will not be prejudiced by it, is a thing which I cannot understand how any one of common sense can state, and I do not mean any offence to the hon. gentlemen who have expressed that view, but they may not have considered it; they may not have studied that point. It appears to me that, when they would advance before you, Sir, that the man who is in the criminal box, and has the opportunity of going upon the stand, and refuses to do that, will not suffer, I cannot see how any man can refuse to arrive at the conclusion that such a refusal will be taken as evidence against him. It is true that, if he refuses, the Judge will not be allowed to make any comments upon that fact. Then we must suppose—and it is not a strange supposition—that the Judge will know the law and will make no comments upon it, and that the prosecuting counsel will also know the law and will not make any comments upon it; but, if we think it is not going to prejudice the prisoner, we must come to the conclusion that no jurymen will know anything of the law. We are to discuss the question in this House. It is to go into the public press. Everybody will read it, but, in some mysterious way, the jurymen will not know anything about it until they are in the jury box, and sheriffs will take great care that only those men who have not read anything at all about this matter will try these cases. Jurymen are just as sensible as the presiding judges, though they may not know as much about the law. They may have quite as much sense as the prosecuting attorney, or as the defending attorney, and their perceptions may be quite as bright as those of the gentlemen I have named, and their seeing that a prisoner does not avail himself of the opportunity to go into the witness box cannot fail to prejudice their minds. You may say that that does no harm, because, if he does not go into the witness box, it is evidence that he is guilty, and he suffers no wrong; but, if that be so, there is no necessity for that part of the law which says that no comments shall be made upon that fact. Sir, I have offered to the House sincerely my reasons for believing that this measure would result in great injury and, instead of improving the administration of criminal justice, would result in making it worse; it would result, perhaps, in punishing innocent people, and it might also induce guilty men to commit perjury and perhaps thereby get clear if they were brazen-faced enough to persist in their perjury. I say it would open the door for these evils, and perhaps would more often result in causing the innocent to suffer than in clearing the guilty. Mr. Speaker, I have offered these considerations with humility, and, I venture to hope that they may have some effect on those hon. members who, perhaps, had not given sufficient consideration to this matter when the House voted for the second reading a few nights ago. I do think, Sir, that in all the laws we enact here we ought to have in view their moral influence upon the people for whom we are legislating; and I contend that this Bill offers a premium to perjury, it offers a temptation to perjury, and would therefore have a bad influence. It would tend to lessen the sanctity of an oath in the minds of jurymen and in the mind of the public, and would consequently lessen public respect for the administration of justice. It was stated the other day that individuals who have large fortunes at stake, or whose honour is at stake, are open to the same temptation. That is true to some extent. There is temptation, and so much of it that it is a deplorable fact to-day that there are very few important cases tried in this Dominion, involving a large amount of money, where there is not such swearing on both sides as to make people believe that perjury has been committed, and where the jurymen have the greatest difficulty in arriving at a conclusion on account of the conflict of evidence. It is our duty as legislators not to encourage a state of things that has already become alarming, and is getting worse every year. I believe that there is more perjury committed in Courts of Justice to-day than there was ten, fifteen or twenty-five years ago. Formerly people had more respect for the sanctity of an oath, because the jurymen and witnesses showed more respect for it. To-day, when one's honour or one's purse is at stake, there are very few trials which do not give rise to a great deal of swearing that arouses very strong suspicion of perjury. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope this House will not allow this Bill to become law.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House informed us that this was not his maiden speech. Well, Sir, if it is not the House is to be congratulated on the treat we may expect at his hands when he chooses to address the House hereafter. I will say this much of the remarks he has made, that he has put in the very strongest possible light the case of those who are opposed to this Bill. He has said everything it is possible to say on that side of the question, everything it is possible at all to say against the Bill. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Tupper) has also addressed the House at considerable length, and it occurred to me while he was making his speech that the little combat which took place the other night had, perhaps, spurred him on to additional effort. I have no doubt he felt somewhat annoyed at the remark of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), that he was twenty-five years behind the age; and we find he has loaded the barrel right up, and fired it off. Now, Sir, it appears to me this is a very small question to occasion so much talk. It does not appear to me that the constitution is going to be at all affected, whether this Bill becomes law or not. It is a question that should be dealt with by this House in a calm and dispassionate manner. If it is right, and in the interests of justice, and calculated to elicit the truth, then let it become law, no matter which side of the House it comes from. I sincerely hope that the hon. member from Pictou does not voice the feeling of the Conservative party when he objects to the measure because it comes from this side of the House. I should be very sorry indeed to think for one moment that the Conservative party in this House would reject a good measure simply because it came from a Reformer. On this point, I desire to say to the hon. gentleman and others, that if they will look back over the pages of history, they will find that the very best laws on the Statute Book of this country emanated from, and were passed by, the Reformers.

Mr. LISTER. I say we have passed the Ballot Act, and we have passed an Act against corruption in Elections; and I know that Act does not please the hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, Sir, what is this Bill about which there is so much discussion? It simply proposes to allow parties who are charged with misdemeanors to give evidence in their own behalf. While I say this much, I will add that in the Province of Ontario, and I believe over the rest of the Dominion, in cases of assault, in cases of trespass, in cases of infraction of the revenue laws, parties accused are competent witnesses on their own behalf. In cases under the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, commonly called the Scott Act—a criminal Act, because persons who are convicted of offences are liable to imprisonment—the defendant is not only a competent witness, but one whom the prosecution may call and force to give evidence on the part of the prosecution. We have had some little experience of that law so far as it has gone. In the Province of Ontario, from which I come, we have a law which permits, in civil actions, parties to suits to give evidence on their own behalf. That has been the law for the last few years, and I can well remember that when it was first proposed that a man should be allowed to testify in his own behalf, all the reasons and arguments were advanced against it which hon. gentlemen opposite have advanced against this Bill. It was said that it would multiply cases of perjury, that it would be an inducement to them to commit perjury if they were allowed to go into the witness box. But we knew from experience that many a man who had a just claim was unable to prosecute it, because he had no witness to prove it. We knew that many a man who had a civil action was unable to defend it in a civil court, because he could not give evidence in his own behalf. That was the state of the law, and I appeal with confidence to the legal gentlemen from Ontario if, under any circumstances, they would consent to go back to the state of affairs which existed previous to the passing of that Act. We have found it work admirably; we have found that it aided justice; we have found that criminal prosecutions for perjury have not been increased since that Act came into force. Why, Sir, if the reasons given by hon. gentlemen opposite against this Bill becoming law were to hold good, it would be dangerous to put anybody into the witness box—no witness could be sworn either for the prosecution or the defence. What is asked to be done is to place on the Statute Book a similar law to that which is in existence in some countries to-day, under which the man who knows most about the facts of the particular case, who can throw most light on the case, is no longer excluded from the witness box. This law is in force in our Province, so far as civil cases are concerned, and as far as criminal cases are concerned, to the extent that I have mentioned. Now, what does this Bill propose? We know that crimes are divided into felonies and misdemeanors, and under the criminal law of Canada, almost any crime of magnitude is a felony—stealing and all that character of crime, assault with intent, &c.—and the only serious misdemeanor not within the category of crime is that of perjury. I submit to this House that, in those cases, above every other, it would be proper and right that the man charged with the crime should have an opportunity of explaining the charge made against him. That crime is a question of intent. Five hundred persons may hear a man make certain statements, and every one of them will differ as to what he said. We know that human memory is frail, and that a number of men seeing a person commit a crime will give different statements as to how it was committed. Perjury with other crimes is a question of intent; it is not the mere fact of making a false declaration, but there must be intent to commit crime; he must know and intend to violate the law of the country. In that class of crimes, it is important and absolutely essential that the person charged should have an opportunity of going into the witness box and giving his version of the affair. That is the only crime of any seriousness to which the Bill will apply. Is it right that the party charged should be kept out of the witness box? Hon. gentlemen opposed to the Bill say it is. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper), is not prepared to pass any law in this Parliament except it has already become the law of England. While I have as high a regard for the land from which my forefathers came as he can possibly have, I submit that, with our experience, we are as capable of judging what is suitable for this country as are the people of the old country; and it is not becoming in us as a Legislature to say that because a certain measure has not become the law of England it should not become the law of the Dominion. Has there been a single ground urged why this Bill should not become law? The hon. member for Pictou, the other night, when the matter was up, urged the House to reject the motion for the first reading, because the Bill would give a man the opportunity of putting himself in the witness box and of trying himself. Another hon. member on that side of the question rose and said that it would convict the prisoner; and upon that antagonistic reasoning those hon. members voted on the same side. This House has expressed its opinion on this Bill by a very large majority. Why should it go back to-night on the opinion it expressed the other night? Has there, I repeat, been any reason advanced by hon. members who have spoken on the subject why this Bill should not become the law. If it is right for a defendant to go into the witness box in cases of trespass and in cases under the revenue laws of the country, is there any good reason why he should not go into the box in other cases? I submit to the House that the hon. members who have spoken have not shown any good reason why this Bill should not become law. As I stated a moment ago, the object of testimony is to elicit the truth. No man should be convicted unless he is guilty. The hon. gentleman who spoke second said that every man is supposed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. That is the true ground, and anything that will tend to elicit the truth and show whether the prisoner is guilty or innocent should come before the Court and jury, and not be suppressed. We may carry our minds back to a time less than a century ago and go over cases where men have been tried on circumstantial evidence, and suffered the death penalty because they were not allowed to give their own statements. It is a matter for reflection and consideration as to the position of men convicted wrongfully, who, perhaps, if they had been able to give their own testimony, would have been able to sweep away the cobwebs surrounding the case. Such a state of affairs no hon.

gentleman would desire. Such cases have, however, occurred, and I appeal to hon. members, in a dispassionate spirit, to put on our Statute Book a law which is upon the Statute Books of other countries. We know that in the United States it has been the law for many years. Has it worked badly or been repealed there? Those laws have never been repealed since they were placed on the Statute Books of the different States, and the decision which an hon. gentleman read was a decision given, I think, many years ago. But after practical experience, there is no desire in the United States to-day to deprive the prisoner of the right to enter the witness box and give his testimony. Remember, that on the other side, the law extends to felonies as well as misdemeanors; in fact, to all classes of crime; and yet the law has worked so admirably that no State has repealed it, and no attempt is made to repeal it. In the interest of justice it should become the law here. I think it will facilitate the prosecution of cases. I think it will enable the Court and jury to come to a clearer decision as to the guilt or innocence of the person charged; and at all events, I can repeat that it is only a small step in advance in criminal law, because the cases to which it will apply are insignificant in themselves, except in the case of perjury, in which, for manifold reasons, the prisoner should be allowed to testify. I hope hon. members on both sides of the House will dismiss from their minds any idea of this Bill being introduced by a Reformer or Conservative. That thought is unworthy of hon. members sitting in this House and legislating for the public good, and I trust, so long as I have a seat here, I will never find an hon. gentleman rise and seek to defeat a Bill on such a ground.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I desire to offer one or two words in reply to the observations which have fallen from the hon. members for Pictou and Kent. I supposed that the question had been so fully debated when I had the privilege of moving the second reading of the Bill, that no further discussion would be necessary on the subject. No argument that I am aware of has been advanced to-night which was not advanced on the former occasion, and I think the sense of the House was very clearly expressed, that the arguments and objections to the Bill were fully answered by the hon. member for Queen's, Nova Scotia, and the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe. The principal argument was again repeated for the second and third time by the hon. member for Kent, namely, the perjury argument. I am not going to trespass on the time of the House by going over all the answers which can be very successfully made to that argument. They have been answered so often in the House, in our Local Legislatures, and in England, in dealing with the whole question, that I do not propose to take up time in answering them again to-night. It appears to me that if no other argument can be advanced except that the Bill, if passed, would lead to additional cases of perjury, then the arguments against the Bill are very slight indeed. The hon. gentleman said, as I understood him, that the effect of the change in the civil law, so as to allow parties to give testimony in their own behalf, had been to largely increase the number of cases of perjury. I do not believe that. I do not believe that there is any more perjury now than there was thirty or forty years ago. I believe that people give their testimony in Courts to-day, just as honestly and as fairly as they did twenty years ago; and I do not believe that, as a general rule, if this law should prevail, any more perjury would be committed under it than now. The hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick, asks what reasons, what arguments, exist which convince the promoters of this Bill, or those who are in favour of it, that it is a necessary measure? Sir, that enquiry is easily answered. We have the experience of the past, and the opinions of a man who will not gather lessons of wisdom from experience, are not of much value. I do not know that, in the Province from which the hon. gentleman comes, litigants in civil cases are allowed to give evidence, but the hon. gentleman knows that they are allowed to give testimony in cases of assault; and if the hon. gentleman has been practicing recently at the bar, and has had cases of that kind, I think I can challenge him to say whether or not more perjury has been committed in such cases than there formerly was. My own experience has convinced me to the contrary. As I said, I am not going to take up the time of the House in discussing this question again, but the elaborate argument, indeed I may say the able argument of my hon. friend from Pictou—because he has exhausted that side of the question—demands some attention from the promoter of this Bill. The hon. gentleman, who apparently wishes us to believe that he would like to draw all his inspiration from the Mother Country, says that there this law has not been adopted. Well, Sir, it has not been adopted to the extent which I propose that it should be adopted here; but it was under discussion there on more than one occasion and during several Sessions of the Legislature, and some of the ablest men in the Imperial Parliament, some of those whose practice in the Courts, and especially in the Criminal Courts, gave their opinion the greatest weight, pronounced strongly in favour of the English Bill. But my hon. friend must recollect that the Bill before Parliament was entirely different from this Bill. The Bill there was to abolish the distinction between a misdemeanor and a felony, and it proposed to make competent as witnesses all the prisoners in criminal cases, whether they were indicted for misdemeanors or felonies. At present I do not propose to go that far. My own opinion is that the administration of criminal justice would suffer nothing by allowing prisoners in every class of cases to go into the witness box and tell their own story. Sir, I have no fear that an innocent man, however unsophisticated, will suffer anything by going into the witness box if he is telling the truth. I say that no man need apprehend the strictest examination or cross-examination, either by the lawyer for the Crown or the lawyer for the defence, if he is telling a plain, straightforward, unvarnished story. It is only when a man lies, when his story is a pure fabrication, when he is building up falsehood step by step, and link by link, that he need have anything to fear. Nor do I care how forbidding a man's countenance is, whether he be as black as the ace of spades, or as deformed as the noted hunchback, if he is telling a truthful story there is no danger of his suffering a wrong at the hands of a Court or jury. It is not the appearance of a man's face that counts for or against him, but the evidence which is given; and fair play and justice will be dealt out to him in the criminal dock, even if he is allowed to go into the witness box and give evidence on his own behalf. The hon. gentleman says he would have had a good deal more confidence in this Bill if it had originated with the Reformers. Now, surely the hon. gentleman does not attach any importance to that. I am quite sure we need have no such fear as that Bills of this kind are going to be treated on political grounds; for we know very well from what the hon. First Minister said, that such is not the case. I should be very sorry if such should be the case.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me, if he says I stated that I was adverse to the Bill because it proceeded from the other side of the House.

Mr. CAMERON. What I understood him to say was, that he would have had more confidence in the Bill if it had originated while the Reformers were in power. Of course, if I misunderstood him, I have not another word to say.

Mr. TUPPER. I may just as well say that I only wondered why it did not originate when they were in power, ready to reform, and professing to be Reformers. I merely called attention to that fact.

Mr. CAMERON. I am not going to take up the time of the House in discussing a question of this kind; but the hon. gentleman knows very well that the Bill on the Statute Book, enabling defendants in assaults to give evidence in their own behalf, originated when the Reformers were in power, if that has anything to do with the question. I believe that in May, 1878, the Liberal party were in power, and a Bill enabling defendants to give evidence in cases of assault was passed then, but I attach but very little importance to a question of that kind. When I introduced a similar Bill to this in 1882, the First Minister was good enough to say that the principle of the Bill had his assent. The Minister of Justice in the Senate did the same thing; and this year the Premier stated that the principle of the Bill had his full approval; and though the motion to give the Bill the six months' hoist was moved by a supporter of his own, the First Minister was consistent enough to vote in favour of the second reading of the Bill. The hon. gentleman has entirely misapprehended the line of argument adopted by the hon. member for West Durham. He quotes the hon. gentleman as supporting his views. Why, Sir, he never was in favour of those views. The Bill was introduced in 1877, the first time in the history of Canada that it was sought to enable defendants to give evidence in their own behalf in criminal cases, and not long before we made parties to suits in civil cases competent witnesses in their own behalf. The hon. member for West Durham said, when a similar Bill to the present was introduced, that he was not as sure that public opinion was quite ripe for dealing with that question in the sense in which it was proposed to deal with it. He asked for time; he was not opposed to the principle; he did not so express himself, at all events, and if the hon. gentleman will only refer to the remarks made by the hon. member for West Durham, he will find that what I have stated is borne out. The hon. member for West Durham said:

"He thought that the discussion of that evening would have convinced his hon. friend that the measure was not right, even in the opinion of those who thought it would be a reform to be placed on the Statute Book."

There is nothing there against the principle of the Bill. The only question is whether public sentiment was ripe for its introduction. Now, it seldom happens when a change is made in the criminal law, unless by a Bill introduced on the responsibility of the Attorney General, that the principle of a Bill, changing or modifying or amending the criminal law, passes the first time it is introduced. It requires consideration and discussion; and I have always taken the ground that it is unwise to make these changes without a purpose; it is unwise to make them suddenly, to make them without due consideration; but in this case we have given it every consideration; we have been years over it, and, that being so, I think, to use the language of the hon. member for West Durham, that the time is now ripe for its consideration and adoption. The hon. member for West Durham said further:

"All those considerations left the question in an exceedingly perplexing condition, and his view was that public opinion was not ripe for the introduction of such a system as that proposed. If there was a practical defect in the criminal law, it was rather that the guilty escaped than that the innocent were convicted. That being the state of affairs, he thought Parliament could wait for some time to come—although he did not say that it should wait for an Act to be passed in Great Britain in order to produce a more logical state of things in the Statute Book, and in order to produce more efficient means of convicting the guilty—before the country tried the measure to which the hon. member for North York (Mr. Dymond) proposed to commit the House."

Sir, that is what the hon. member for West Durham said. There is nothing there about his being opposed to the principle of the Bill; and so far as I understand the line of argument of the hon. member in that speech, it is rather in favour of the Bill, but because public sentiment was not ripe for it, he urged some delay. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has given away the whole case. He admits that in the case of an assault, when only the assailant and the assailed are present, it is a proper thing that both parties should give evidence. In making that statement, the hon. gentleman has given away the whole case; because, if the defendant in an assault and battery case ought to give evidence, I fail to see why a defendant should not be just as competent to give evidence in a case of all misdemeanors. The hon. gentleman has quoted largely from writers on this question, to convince the House that the position he takes is right, and with the view, I presume, of asking the House to reverse the vote it gave the other night. I am not going to speak at any length, but the House will pardon me if I read the opinion of two eminent men, who were cited by the hon. member for East York, in 1877—men capable of giving an opinion on the question, from their long practice in courts of criminal justice. What does John Taylor say on that question—a man known by everybody, at least in the legal profession:

"That in all judicial investigations, the object to be attained is the discovery of the truth, and no species of evidence ought to be excluded which can materially aid in that discovery; the rules of evidence, so far as practicable, ought to be the same in civil and in criminal proceedings."

Now, that is the opinion of an eminent man, whose opinion is perhaps worth more than mine or the hon. gentleman's, or even than that of the hon. member for West Durham; for although I have profound faith in the hon. member for West Durham as a political leader and as an able lawyer, yet as a nisi prius lawyer I do not know that I have unlimited faith in him, because I believe his practice has not been in that branch of law. If I were in a criminal dock, I do not know that I would take the hon. member for West Durham to defend me. Perhaps I would prefer the hon. member for Queen's, Nova Scotia (Mr. Woodworth), or the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), both of whom have voted and have given most cogent reasons in favour of this Bill. I wish to go a little further and quote an extract from Sir Joseph Napier, a most distinguished Irish lawyer. I think I can attach more importance to the opinion of men of this stamp than to those of writers in the United States, however much I may respect them in a general way. This is what Sir Joseph Napier says:

"There are cases in which no one but the accused could expose the falsity of the accusation, and there are cases also in which the accusation would not have been made, perhaps not even contemplated, but for the very rule which may screen it from exposure. The accusation indeed should always be sustained by independent evidence, but for this very reason it should be open to the accused to meet such evidence by his account of what alone he may be able to testify; and, moreover, as whatever the accused may state would naturally be received with jealous suspicion, he should be allowed to submit his testimony to cross-examination, that its value may be tested."

Now, Sir, there is the opinion of two noted men on this question, and I think their opinion ought to have some weight with hon. members of this House. I regret that I should have taken up so much time in dealing with the question, for I have high respect for the gentlemen who have spoken, and spoken ably on the question. The House has already pronounced in favour of the Bill, and I shall be very much mistaken if, on the arguments adduced, the House will see fit to reverse its vote.

Mr. DOSSÉ. I beg to call the attention of the House to a feature of this Bill which has not yet been alluded to—I refer to that provision which enables a wife to be heard as a witness for her husband. Bad as this Bill may be, bad as I believe it is being shown to be, I do not think any of its features are as substantially and as completely bad as this one. I did not intend to speak on this question, nor do I intend to make a speech; but I beg the House to bear in mind, before this question goes to a vote, the terrible position in which it would place the wife of the accused. She would stand in the witness box between her love for her husband and her oath, and between the love for her children and her oath. Her husband, if convicted, would be sent to gaol, perhaps to the penitentiary, deprived of his liberty for months, perhaps for years. The result for her would be poverty and starvation. Still, she would have to choose for herself and her children that poverty and that starvation, or her own perjury. I say, Sir, that to place the wife and the mother in such a position would be a great injustice to her, and a great injustice to the prisoner, who would stand in the dock witnessing either his own condemnation from the lips of his wife, or his liberation as the result of her perjury. I say this measure, far from being a moral training for the people, would be the most demoralizing possible. And we are asked to resort to this for what purpose? Is it to be for the good of the accused or for the better administration of justice? I say no, because the oath of a person placed under these extraordinary and very depressing circumstances would not be believed. It would go for nothing, except the misery of the wife, who would be forced to choose one of two evils. Suppose she has perjured herself and saved her husband, she brings home with her for the remainder of her life the remorse of a guilty conscience. Suppose she has not perjured herself, but, true to her own conscience, has related the truth, and sent her husband to prison, what would be the position of that family after the return of the husband from his confinement? What would be the peace and happiness of that family after the return of the husband from the trial? In whatever light we look at this matter, we find nothing but evil, and nothing certainly that will tend either to the good administration of justice or to the advantage of the people.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have a few objections to offer to the passing of this Bill, and I offer them with a great deal of reluctance, in view of the fact that when this Bill was taken up for its second reading, many hon. gentlemen expressed their opinions and recorded their votes in favour of its principle. I did not think then that some hon. gentlemen had properly considered the questions which might be fairly raised for discussion, and I assume to-night that many hon. gentlemen supported that Bill upon that occasion simply for the purpose of allowing it to go before the Committee, because if there were any objections, they considered that was the proper place to discuss them. There is one fact which I do not think has been mentioned so far in this discussion, and that is that none of the Judges of our Superior Courts or of our County Courts, so far as I can learn, in their charges to the grand juries, have stated that any necessity existed for a change in the law, such as the one now proposed. That I regard as a very important fact. With all the other members of the bar in this House and throughout Ontario, I have the very highest respect for the opinions of our Superior Court Judges, and I do not believe that if there was a defect in the criminal law, such as the one that is suggested and is sought to be removed by this Bill, it would have existed so long without comment on their part. Nor do I believe that did such defect exist, it would have been allowed to exist until this late day without some hon. member of this House long before this taking measures to have it removed. There is another objection to which I wish to draw attention. If it is right that a prisoner should be taken from the dock and put into the witness box to give evidence, when his liberty only is concerned, why do you not extend the same permission to the man who is placed on trial for his life, and give him a chance for his life? Surely this principle should also be extended to a man who is placed on trial for a crime in which his life is involved, assuming that it should be at all adopted. I am of opinion that to adopt that principle would be bad. It is unnecessary for me to go over the ground which has been so ably and so eloquently gone over by the speakers who have preceded me against this measure, but I may say, however, in answer to the hon. member for West Lambton, that my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Tupper) did not insinuate, nor intend to insinuate, nor could any such inference be drawn from anything he said, that hon. members on this side intended to oppose this measure simply because it emanated from a gentleman whose political principles are opposed to ours, and who sits on the other side of the House. In all fairness to my hon. friend, I wish to emphasize that fact, because he is too intelligent and honourable and sensible to ever give utterance to such a doctrine. I trust this Bill will not become law. It is bad in principle, and I am satisfied, if it should become law, the effects would be bad, and it would be only a short time before it would be repealed. We should not introduce legislation of this kind until we hear from those who are in a position to judge authoritatively, whether such a measure is desirable in the interests of the administration of justice.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is unfortunate that the hon. gentleman who has last spoken, and the two or three others who preceded him, should have addressed their observations to the House after my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill had spoken. He waited, Mr. Speaker, until you had put the question a second time, and thought he would have had the customary privilege of hearing all that would be said against the Bill before rising to reply. I would not have risen to address the House at all, had it not be for some observations made by the hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick (Mr. Landry), upon which I desire to say a few words, and being on my feet, I will address an observation or two to the House, with its permission, on some of the points taken by the last speaker. I heard with regret what the hon. member for Kent said with reference to the condition of things, as regards the observance of the sanctity of the oath in judicial proceedings, which prevails in the Province from which he comes, and for which, no doubt, he speaks with authority. Had his observations been confined in terms to the state of affairs in that Province, much as I regret them, I should not have felt called upon to say a word upon them; but I have not heard in a long time, a greater slur on the state of society in Canada than that which the hon. gentleman's words, if they were applicable to the whole of this Dominion, would not merely imply but describe. That the condition of the morals of our population was steadily deteriorating, that the crime of perjury was now so rife that it is suspected, with too often good cause, to exist in the great majority of cases that take place is, if it be the true state of things in New Brunswick, a state of things most deplorable. My own experience, up to the time at which I ceased to practice actively, is entirely the reverse of that of the hon. gentleman, so far as the Province of Ontario is concerned. For many years I have had the opportunity of observing the demeanor and of estimating the credibility of witnesses, on a tolerably extensive scale, in Ontario, and I state publicly what I have often stated privately, in conversation, that in my opinion cases of deliberate perjury were extremely rare within the limits of my cognizance and of my practice. There have been, it is true, blameable attempts to suppress the truth. Witnesses have required that the truth should be rather dragged from them; they have been disposed, unless the precise question was put which elicited the fact, not to discover the fact, owing to the partisanship which grows up frequently from relationship, from friendship or from interest. Such things have happened in the course of my experience. But I do not say they are common or general.

They have happened not infrequently, but deliberate perjury is a circumstance, as far as I can judge, of extreme rarity. I have heard of late there is more laxity of swearing in some of the tribunals before which petty cases are tried in the Division Courts. Whether the greater solemnity which prevails, the presence of a larger audience, the presence of counsel in the causes, instead of their being conducted as they usually are conducted in the Division Courts, may tend to a greater looseness in the other Courts or not, I know not; but I do speak of what I think I do know, when I say that that description, that lamentable description of things which the hon. member for Kent, N. B., (Mr. Landry) gave as the prevalent state of things in his own Province would be wholly inapplicable to the Province in which we are now situate. The hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) pointed out, as an objection to this Bill, that we have not heard complaints from the Judges upon the subject. Well, I desire to speak with all the regard which I feel for the judicial bench. I have towards it the feelings of filial reverence and of fraternal affection, independently of those feelings which a man who has practised for the best years of his life before the Judges must have; but, with all these feelings, I will tell the hon. gentleman that, if he determines not to have a legal reform until the Judges cry out for it, he will not be very much troubled with effecting legal reforms in the course of his Parliamentary career, no matter how long that career may last. There is no class in the community which seems to be more set, as a class, with certain exceptions, it is true, in the cake of custom, to be more believers in the perfection of that which is, and less to credit the possibility of mending the things which are, than the members of the judicial bench; and I may say to him that, when we were pressing in the Local Legislature of Ontario, a measure very nearly akin to this one, that, namely, in which the parties were admitted as witnesses in civil cases on their own behalf, one of the difficulties we had to contend with was, not merely that we had no favourable expression from the judicial bench, but also—I will not say with unanimity, for I cannot accurately remember, but, if not with unanimity, almost with unanimity—the judicial bench was entirely opposed to that law. Well, the hon. gentleman, I hope, does not differ from what I think is the very general opinion of the profession in Ontario, that that law has been an extremely beneficial law; that it has conduced to the elucidation of the truth; that it has diminished very much the extent of the controverted questions in cases, and that it has led to that which ought to be the object of all legislation in these matters—a narrowing, as far as possible, of the issues of fact between the parties, and a just determination of those narrowed issues. Now, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) has probably been sufficiently answered by my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron). I should have been very glad if the hon. member for Pictou, instead of giving his own gloss of my speech, had been kind enough to read it to the House, and I think it would have answered the arguments and the commentary he made upon it. The state of things was such that, in my opinion, public sentiment was not at that time, public opinion, at that time, was not ripe for that measure. It had been made in that direction in civil cases many years before we succeeded in placing such a law upon the Statute Book. It had been in advance of public opinion in Ontario, that the law had been put upon the Statute Book, and the consequence of taking that step, so far in advance of the discussion of the subject, and so far in advance of the state of public opinion, was that the law was repealed the following Session, and the old law remained so in force for a great many years. I had before me, and I quoted, in the speech to which he has referred—though his reading of it varies very much from my own—I had before me that instance of legislating in this direction in advance of public opinion, and I stated that I thought public opinion was not ripe at that time for this measure; but I guarded myself from the statement that we should wait here even until it should be possible to have the precedent of an English Act of Parliament. I said, particularly, that I did not say that we should wait until they had legislated in England before we legislated in the direction which Mr. Dymond then proposed to us to legislate. The hon. gentleman thinks it very extraordinary that, after seven more years have elapsed; after we have had seven years' more experience of the working of the Act in civil cases in my own Province, after we have had seven years' more discussion of this question, after we have had six years' experience of the working of an Act of this kind in assault cases; after the discussion of this question in this Parliament on a former occasion, I should not still hold that public opinion is still not ripe for that measure; that I should not be still of opinion that the measure should be opposed. If he thinks that, he is welcome to do so, but I venture to hope that there will not be a great many hon. members who will think so, or who will think that there is any occasion for an explanation from me of the circumstances which I have now stated briefly, and of the reasons why I now support, as I do support, this Bill. The hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Bossé) has referred to one of the details of the Bill which is, of course, open for discussion, but which it is not convenient to discuss on the motion to go into Committee, because we are not now dealing with isolated details. In fact, this whole discussion, though regular, is perhaps hardly opportune, because it is, so far as I am aware, the first case in which, after the principle of the Bill has been sanctioned by a decisive vote of the House—a vote of nearly two to one, drawn from the ranks of both political parties—we should have been treated with a fresh discussion of that principle, just as if it could be expected that the House was going to reverse the solemn judgment to which, by a decided majority, it had already come upon that principle. I quite agree with the hon. gentlemen who have argued that the adoption of the principle does not involve the sanction of all the details of the measure, and that these are open for discussion in the Committee; but we would be reversing the judgment we have already given on the principle of the Bill, if we were to decline to go into Committee for the purpose of perfecting the measure, and of eliminating, if there be any objectionable features, those objectionable features. That, I think, is the present position of this measure, and I do not think that anything that has been said to-night has thrown any further light upon the question upon which the House so unequivocally expressed its opinion a few nights ago.

Mr. WELDON. I had not intended to speak upon this question had not the hon. member for Kent referred to the state of affairs in the Province of New Brunswick. As the only other gentleman of the same profession as himself from that Province, with perhaps a larger experience, extending over thirty years, at the bar, I entirely dispute the proposition he has put forward. So far as my experience is concerned, and I think I have been engaged in every county in the Province, my experience has been that perjury does not exist to anything like the extent to which the hon. member's remarks would lead. No doubt, there are some cases in the experience of every professional man in which no amount of charity can preclude the idea that deliberate perjury has been committed, but those cases are the exception and not the rule in New Brunswick, and I shall be supported by the remarks of some of the learned Judges who have presided in the Province of New Brunswick in the opinion that the legislation which took place some twenty-seven years ago in that Province has led to causes being better tried and the truth being better brought out than before. I am surprised at the statement made by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) as to the state of society in reference to perjury, existing in the Province of New Brunswick. So far as my own experience goes, I entirely repudiate the hon. gentleman's statement, and I believe that no such state of things exists. In criminal trials, as a general rule, I believe parties tell the truth. No doubt witnesses frequently differ in their statements, but those statements may often be reconciled. I believe that, as a rule, persons honestly tell the truth, and that wilful and deliberate perjury is the exception and not the rule.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am sorry I was not in the House when the hon. gentleman who promotes this Bill made his speech in its favour. However, I wish to state my opinion before this House concerning the Bill itself. I think the principle of it is wrong; I think the application of it will prove to be wrong; and I think that those who have had experience in the Courts of Justice in regard to such evidence as that which it is sought to make admissible, will agree that the principle of this Bill is not right. I have practiced for some years before the Courts of Queen's Bench, and I am still of the opinion I formerly entertained, that the legislation and the jurisprudence of England in the matter of evidence in criminal cases, was, after all, one upon which it was difficult to improve. Sir, I have not spent a great deal of time with the ancients, I have not read a great deal of the past, but the little I have read in old books, in very old books, has convinced me that wisdom is not all confined to the present age, and that those who lived before us had also a large measure of wisdom, especially in cases like the one which is now under the consideration of the House. At a time when people were less troubled with politics, with railway schemes, with electricity and other things; when the progress of the physical sciences engrossed less of the attention of men—I think that in those old times men reflected as much, and perhaps more, and perhaps better, than we do, upon those moral questions like the one involved in this Bill. And in the light of the wisdom of the past, I ask myself the question which was so well put, I think, by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), when he said: What is the necessity for such legislation? What representations have been made by those who interpret the law in these cases? What remonstrances have been made by Judges upon this question? My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, says that seven years ago he had his opinion upon this question, and he challenged any one to say that he was not right in changing it, because, during those seven years, public opinion had also changed.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Public opinion, then, was not ripe. But I would like very much to ask the hon. gentleman what causes have ripened public opinion since then? What facts have been elicited before the Courts of Justice which have had the effect of ripening public opinion upon this question? There are grand juries holding grand inquests in the several districts of the Dominion; have any of those grand juries, who are very often led by eminent men conducting prosecutions for the Crown, made representations as to the necessity of amending our law procedure in the sense proposed? Have there been any representations made by any grand jury in the Dominion? I say there have been none, and I go further, and I challenge any one to say the contrary. I am perfectly sure that if we were to consult the Judges of the Criminal Courts of this country; if we were to ask those who have served as grand jurors, or as petit jurors, their opinion in respect to this legislation, they would all answer that this kind of evidence is not one that can be trusted; is not one which should be adduced before a tribunal; is not one which could benefit society or the accused. There is a strange feature in this Bill, and one which the promoter of it, perhaps, has not considered, and that is, that he proposes to adopt a mode of procedure which has been repudiated for many a year by the most eminent jurists in England. My hon. friend is opening the way to the French mode of procedure in criminal cases—the examination of the accused. He goes even further, because the French law, compelling the accused to answer the magistrate in the preliminary investigation, or the public prosecutor, does not subject the accused to the humiliation or danger of giving his evidence under oath. In France, the accused is questioned by the magistrate and is allowed to make his statement. The proposition of this Bill has not only been considered too arbitrary ever to have been adopted by the English Courts of Justice, but even in France, the accused is not put under oath. When the accused comes into Court he is also examined by the public prosecutor, but even then he is not put under oath. I go back to the English method of procedure; and I ask, why was it always held in England that the accused should not be questioned unless he volunteered to make a statement? There must be some reason for that jurisprudence; there must be some wisdom in it—and, as I said before, I believe in the wisdom of the past and the experience it has bequeathed to us—in the experience of learned and eminent Judges who have been the pride of English tribunals, in respect to just such evidence as it is here sought to make admissible in our courts. The reason is this: that if you allow the accused to give his evidence, you perhaps afford an opportunity to a clever scoundrel, to a consummate reprobate, of confusing the jury, who are generally composed of innocent men, who are not accustomed to the rules of evidence, and who would not be acquainted with all the détours which lawyers sometimes resort to in these cases. I heard the other day my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe say that this Bill was greatly in the interests of the accused. I beg to differ with him. It is to be remembered that a great many cases of misdemeanor are equivalent to felonies, because they seem to be punished almost as severely as some cases of felony. Well, I say that in those cases, the accused is not a witness, he is rather his own lawyer; and we may well apply to him the old maxim that the man who is his own lawyer has a fool for a client. It is only the consummate scoundrel, the man who knows the ins and outs of Criminal Courts, who would benefit by the privilege this legislation would give him of being a witness in his own behalf. The old English law said that you must not prejudice the jury against the accused; you must not force him to be a witness in his own case, because the interests of justice might thereby be frustrated; and then there was this other grand reason, that you must not introduce into legislation anything that would tend to increase perjury. The leader of the Opposition may say whatever he chooses about the remarks made by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry), that he had cast a slur upon his Province in saying that perjury was of very frequent occurrence in courts of justice, especially of criminal jurisdiction. Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. leader of the Opposition will admit with me, if he has had practical experience before the Court of Queen's Bench, that unfortunately perjury is a great deal more frequent there than in civil courts, and that in small petty cases, perjury is more common than in the great and important cases in which the hon. gentleman is generally engaged. I say that those who have had experience in Courts of Justice will say that perjury is frequent. And why? Because of the interests at stake; because of the liberty of the accused, because of the sympathy elicited either of relatives or friends or of accomplices. To say this is not to cast a slur upon any part of society or any part of the Dominion, only upon a certain class—that which haunts and frequents the Criminal Courts. The general idea that pervades the old English rule—I have read it—is that the accused should not be examined under oath, that he may be saved from the temptation to commit perjury. Perjury, as has been said, is a most heinous crime. A man may have committed a fault, a grievous offence, sometimes done in a fit of passion, acting under the influence of stimulants. Poverty, indeed, might be the cause of it. If it is his first fault, there is still a strong element of honesty which might remain in his being. But if a man once commits perjury, he is a lost man to society, he is a degraded man to the end of his life, because he has offended against the truth, which is the essence of all that is grand and great. You may place a man in the dock for the crime of having stolen through poverty, or struck a man through passion, and still, after conviction and punishment, he might be an honest man; but, if you tempt and induce him to commit perjury, he is a lost man to society, he is degraded in his own estimation, and when a man is degraded in his own estimation and conscience, he is lost, and lost forever. These were the principles that pervaded the old procedure in England, and after all the investigations that were made and discussions that took place, it was not found desirable to change the law. We are told here: why should we wait until England should have done this or that before we do it? I am not one of those who would treat lightly the position which the old country has acquired in science, in law and in jurisprudence. I bow with veneration, I must say, to the opinions I see expressed in books of English jurists, and hear from the mouths of English Judges; and to those men and to the authority of their doctrine, I do bow. But I come to the discussion of the principle itself, and I take the arguments which were used by the promoter of the Bill. He says: You accept the evidence of the accused in a case of assault and battery, why should you not accept it in a case of misdemeanor? I will continue his argument: Why not accept it in cases of felony and murder? If it is necessary to prevent a man from being convicted in a simple case of assault, why not take the evidence of the prisoner when his life may be taken from him? If the argument is good in one case it is good in the other. But it is bad in the case of felony and is also bad in the case of misdemeanor. In cases of assault, it is the legislation of the old country. An assault takes place. Two men meet, a few angry words pass and a blow is struck. Why not allow the parties who came face to face, with the result that an assault was committed, to come and each tell his own story? It is only a trifle. Generally these assaults happen when two persons only are present. In France, when a man is assaulted upon the streets, you take to the police station, not only the man who committed the assault, but also the man on whom it has been committed. Both tell their stories, and both give security to appear next morning to give evidence in the case to be determined before the Court. In those trifling cases, the evidence of the defendant might be permitted; but even as regards those, I am not prepared to say that such evidence is beneficial in securing the ends of justice. The remarks made by the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Bossé) apply. I do not wish to discuss the details of the Bill, nor do I wish the House, as the leader of the Opposition has said, to reverse its own judgment. It is well understood that Bills should not receive a second reading until they are somewhat fully discussed, and perhaps it was from personal consideration for the promoter of the Bill, that discussion was postponed till the Bill should come before the Committee of the Whole. At all events, in speaking at the present moment, and giving the House the expression of my experience in Courts of Justice—and I have had some experience before the Court of Queen's Bench—I do it, so that if the

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Bill goes before the Committee, it may be amended by striking out certain portions mentioned by the hon. member for Quebec Centre and some portions which I will point out myself. The promoter of the Bill has himself seen, as appears by a proviso which he places in the first clause, that the Bill will not work, and it is provided that a prisoner cannot be called as a witness by the prosecution. Why not? If the principle of the Bill is good, and if truth is to be elicited at whatever cost, whether dangerous to society or dangerous to the accused; if truth is to be elicited even by falsehood and perjury, the system should be made equally applicable to all. But the promoter of the Bill has said that the prisoner shall not be called as a witness by the prosecution, and he says afterwards that this witness can be cross-examined. Difficulty will arise, because the evidence will not be a statement. I will go so far as to say that I do not think it would further the ends of justice that the prisoner should make a statement, as his counsel can make a statement; he is allowed to make a statement before the magistrate and before the jury when on his trial: The clause runs as follows:—

“Provided, that so far as the cross-examination relates to the credit of the accused, the justice or justices, or the court, may limit such cross-examination to such extent as it thinks proper, although the proposed cross-examination might be permissible in the case of any other witness.”

Let us suppose a case in which the husband might be examined against the wife or the wife against the husband. The fact of the credibility of the witness would be a bar to the capacity of any such evidence. The second clause—and I am sure my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, will agree with me—shows the inanity of the Bill—shows that there is something wrong with the measure. You will allow a person to go and give his evidence, and for what purpose? To be believed? No; if a man is called he may tell a false story, he may tell a story which is more to his prejudice than to his advantage. It is provided that in case such evidence is not tendered, no observation shall be allowed to be made as to the non-tender of such evidence. But can you prevent juries from forming their own opinions? Can you prevent them from saying: here is a man who is allowed to give his evidence and does not do so, and he, therefore, must be a scoundrel? Petty jurors may be very good men, but they have not a knowledge of the law, and you cannot prevent them from acting as if the non-tender of such evidence must prejudice the accused. To such an extent is this the case, that the very fact of a man not giving evidence in his own case, when he is allowed to do so, will be regarded as a sure sign that there is something wrong. On the other hand, the man who has a knowledge of the Courts, who may be a consummate scoundrel, who has often been seen in the Courts before, and who can plead as well as his lawyer, will be the one who will reap the benefit, while the innocent man may suffer great prejudice by such a provision. The last clause of the Bill also convinces me that the measure is one which will not work well. It says that if a man is accused of a crime, other than a misdemeanor, and the Court decides at the close of the evidence of the prosecution that it is only a case of misdemeanor, the defendant and his wife, or, if the defendant be a woman, her husband, shall be a competent witness. That is to say, the Judge may change the mode of procedure at the close of the evidence for the prosecution. But why should it not as well be done at the close of the evidence for the defence? Why limit it in that way? The petty jury may say: We have heard the case on both sides, and we are of opinion that the case of felony is not made out. It would then be a case for such evidence, and perhaps the tribunal would be disposed to say that the case was not a felony, but only one of misdemeanor. If the jury, who have heard the whole trial, come back and tell the Judge and the whole world that the prisoner is not guilty of a felony, but only a misdemeanor, why not then allow him to come forward and offer his evidence, to clear himself from the accusation? I say that the measure is impracticable in this respect, as in others, and that if it were to pass, judges and juries would declare before long that it was impracticable. I contend that the Courts would receive no assistance, and that the interests of justice would not be benefited, if this measure were put in force. One of the hon. gentlemen said that the Bill was not so important, and what was the use of having so long a discussion about it? I say, Sir, that the Bill is very important, as it means the introduction of a system of giving evidence which will crush down and destroy entirely the whole mode of procedure in similar cases; that it will extend from misdemeanors to felonies, and that afterwards may be applied to cases of murder. I would like to know what benefit we would have from such a measure, if the legitimate and logical consequence of the Bill were followed up, and it were made to apply even in cases of felony.

Mr. DAVIES. I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, because I was satisfied from what took place the other evening, that the promoter of the Bill, and the various hon. gentlemen on both sides who supported it, had stated the arguments in its favour as strongly as they possibly could be stated. But the question having been reopened by some hon. members, I desire to say a word or two in reply. The hon. member from Quebec (Mr. Bossé) objects to the Bill in almost every detail. He seemed to base his objection to the clause permitting the husband to testify for the wife, or the wife for the husband, on the supposition that that clause was compulsory. But, on the contrary, if he will read the Bill, he will find that, so far as that clause is concerned, it is simply permissive. It allows the wife, in a case in which she has a knowledge of the facts which no other person possesses—as it sometimes happens she has—to go to the stand and give the jury the benefit of that knowledge. Therefore, while there would be a good deal of weight in the hon. gentleman's argument if the Bill had gone so far as he seemed to suppose it did, I do not think any weight attaches to his argument, since, so far as such evidence is concerned, the provision is simply permissive. It seems to me that the arguments against this Bill are not very strong, for this reason, that the principle of the Bill has been enacted by Parliament time and again, and applied by Parliament, not only to the trial of civil cases, but to quasi criminal cases. Hon. gentlemen know very well that for many years—in the Maritime Provinces for at least twenty-five years—we have had the principle of permitting those who are interested, no matter how deeply, to give evidence in civil cases. The arguments which have been made use of on this occasion—that the Bill would conduce to perjury—that such parties might perjure themselves to put money in their own pockets—was made use of to the fullest extent when this reform was introduced. But that prediction has not been verified by experience. I say unhesitatingly that to-day there is not a layman who has been unfortunate enough to have business in the Courts, nor a lawyer who has had any business in the Courts, who would stand up and ask for a repeal of the law which extends that privilege to defendants. Now, you have adopted that principle in all these civil cases; you have gone further, and extended that principle to quasi criminal cases—to assaults and matters of that kind, referred to by the promoter of the Bill. Look at the anomalous position in which we stand with reference to matters in which, after an action is brought, in one way, as a civil case, it may be brought in another, as a misdemeanor. In an action for a nuisance, if a man sues his neighbour, the defendant may go on the stand and give evidence; but if he prosecutes him the next day, for the identical nuisance, as a misdemeanor, the defendant's mouth is closed. Having applied this principle to cases of libel and assault, you are not asked now to make a sweeping provision to apply to all cases of criminal prosecution; you are not asked to apply it to felonies, but, to misdemeanors. The hon. Secretary of State, who spoke last, misunderstood, I think, the remarks of the hon. member for West Durham, as to the position he occupied on this question. He did not oppose the principle of the Bill, when it was introduced in 1877, but he remarked at that time that public opinion was not ripe for its passage. He held that the principle of the Bill was good, and now he thinks that public opinion is ripe. That is the simple difference between his position then and his position now. But the hon. Secretary of State relies very much on the wisdom of our ancestors, and he asks the House to refuse to make this change, because our ancestors did not see fit to make it. Well, Sir, I have a certain respect for the opinion of our ancestors, but I think this can be pushed too far. The hon. gentleman knows that our ancestors did not allow defendants in civil cases to give evidence. We have changed that, and, so far as I know, no one desires to go back to the old system. Our ancestors in their wisdom did not allow a person accused of a crime to have counsel at all. We have changed all that, and I think wisely. Then, again, everyone knows that the wisdom of our ancestors enacted a criminal code so barbarous that, in the light of the present day, it would be regarded as opposed to every principle of natural justice, and would not be allowed to remain on the Statute Book of Canada one day; and we know it took two generations for Lord Romilly and Lord Brougham to wipe out that blot on the Criminal Code of Great Britain. Now, I do not think the wisdom of our ancestors is an entirely safe guide in this matter. We have taken some steps, and the steps so far taken have proven judicious and wise. The hon. Secretary of State appears to me to take a curious position when at one time he complains that the Bill goes too far, and at another time complains that it does not go far enough. The Bill is, to some extent, a tentative measure. The hon. member for West Huron wants to apply to misdemeanors the principle which has been already applied with such success to civil cases and to cases of assault. Everybody acquainted with nisi prius courts knows that it was a monstrous injustice that defendants in assault cases were not allowed to give evidence. You have changed that, and I believe that same principle can be introduced with good results in misdemeanors, such as nuisances and the like. I know of no good reasons for voting against this Bill. I think it is a step in the right direction, a conservative advance which is in accordance with the action taken by the Parliament of Canada some years ago, and therefore I will vote for the Bill.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not suppose this Bill could meet with the opposition shown against it, were it not a known fact that no reform has ever been made in the world without having been opposed. My hon. friend the Secretary of State derived his ideas of jurisprudence and law from old books, written at a time when there were no railways, no telegraphs, or any of the things that constitute the modern world. At the present time, we have telegraphs, railways, telephones, and so forth, and I think my hon. friend will admit that the world is all the happier and better for it, and although I respect as much as anybody the old laws of England, which, in their way, are probably the wisest that have ever been enacted, the hon. gentleman will, perhaps, admit that those laws are susceptible of amendment and improvement. I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend the Secretary of State to the fact that laws which are revered as much as he reveres the laws of England—the civil laws of France, which are in their way just as wise as the criminal laws of England—have been amended in the same direction as this Bill goes, by a man whose memory he holds dear—Sir George Cartier. It is in the knowledge of everybody, at least from the Province of Quebec, that although a suitor cannot offer evidence in his own behalf, still he can be tendered the oath by the adverse party. The plaintiff may put the defendant in the box, and the defendant may put the plaintiff in the box. If this is the law of the Province of Quebec to-day, it has only been so for twenty-three or twenty-four years. The members who sat in the Legislature in Lower Canada remember the Judicature Act of Sir George Cartier. That was the first time that it was proposed in this country to force a party to become a witness against himself. Up to that time, a suitor had to make out his case as best he could, but he could not tender the oath to his adversary. Though I was a boy when Sir George Cartier introduced his measure, I remember perfectly well the storm and the tempest of opposition which was raised against it. I remember the characteristic words of Sir George Cartier at the time, that the principle was a just one, and that he would carry it in spite of bar and bench. It was urged at that time, as it is urged now, that to put a defendant in the witness box was to place him between his conscience and his interest. Well, it is placing him between his conscience and his interest, but the invariable testimony has been that although that is the case, still the truth always prevails; and now there is not one case in ten tried in Lower Canada but the first thing done is to put the defendant in the box and let him tell his own story. I am not aware that this system has been productive of perjury or of injury to the cause of justice. On the contrary, it is a most popular system, and if an attempt were made to go back to the old system, it would fail, because it would receive the most strenuous opposition from both bench and bar, although both opposed the measure when it was introduced. The same result will follow this measure. There is but one fault in the Bill—it does not go far enough. If the principle is a true one, and I believe it is, it ought not to apply only to misdemeanors, but to felonies as well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not rise to discuss the principle of the measure at all, although I must say I am deeply impressed with the able arguments against the principle of the Bill which hon. gentlemen have advanced. I rise to say that I cannot go so far as the hon. member for West Huron, as to the effect of the vote which took place the other day. As a general principle, it is true that the second reading of a Bill is supposed to carry with it the expression of the House of Commons that they accede to its general principle; but that is not universally the case. Not infrequently the reverse is the case. I do not think, in the present instance, that any hon. gentleman who voted for the second reading of the Bill the other day, would be guilty of any inconsistency in reversing his opinion to-day if he thought proper to do so, convinced by the arguments he has heard. Last Session, not only this Bill but four or five others proposing to amend the criminal law were sent to a Special Committee to be dealt with and reported upon. All the second readings of these Bills were carried pro forma, as, according to Parliamentary practice, they could not be sent to a Special Committee unless they received that pro forma consent of Parliament. Then the committee made a report, if I remember a right, affecting all these Bills, embracing them in one omnibus Bill, and this Bill of my hon. friend was lost. In introducing it this Session, the hon. gentleman said, that one reason why it did not receive the approval of the House last Session was, that it was linked with other Bills, and that all those hon. members who were opposed to any one branch of this omnibus Bill, opposed the entire Bill, so that not one single measure embraced in it had a chance.

Mr. LAURIER.

That was a good argument. Before the hon. gentleman moved the second reading, he submitted his list of a Committee to me, and I said I thought it ought to go to a Committee. But I consider that every hon. member who voted for the second reading for the purpose of allowing it to go to Committee may, without any inconsistency, vote against it at this stage. The points raised against the Bill are numerous, and I must say I was rather surprised at the unanimity of the report. The Committee must have just met and said, we will adopt the Bill and throw it before the House; so that, in fact, it comes before the House for its second reading now. I said I would not go into a discussion of the measure. It has been discussed ably on both sides, in a proper spirit, on its merits, without any reference to extraneous matter. I do not know if the House will go into Committee to-night. The Bill will evidently have to receive careful scanning, clause by clause. I do not suppose that my hon. friend will move that the House will go into Committee to-night, because we cannot hope, at this late hour, to make any progress.

Motion agreed to on the following division:—

Bill considered in Committee and progress ordered to be reported, Committee to sit again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Will the hon. gentleman tell me when he will bring down the returns asked for with reference to No. 20 farm, on Fish Creek. I made the charge that not only Lieutenant-Governor Robitaille, but that another Lieutenant-Governor was interested in the purchase of that farm. I now wish to say that to-day I have had a communication from one of the Lieutenant-Governors to whom I referred—not Lieutenant-Governor Robitaille—stating that he had no interest and has no interest now in the purchase of that farm, and of course I am bound to accept his statement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will attend to bringing down the return at once.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. the Finance Minister give me an idea when he can bring down his financial statement.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will let the hon. gentleman know when I am ready.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11:30 o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THURSDAY, 14th February, 1884

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 88) respecting the Real Estate Loan Company of Canada, limited.—(Mr. Beatty.)

Bill (No. 89) to amend the Act incorporating the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company, and to change the name thereof to the Montreal and European Short Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Tupper.)

Bill (No. 90) respecting the Great Northern Railway Company.—(Mr. Bossé.)

REFUND OF SUPERANNUATION CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. CURRAN enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to reimburse to certain persons in the employ of the Department of Railways and Canals, on the Lachine Canal, such persons not being members of the Civil Service, any sums of money that may have been charged against them for the Superannuation Fund, under the misapprehension that such persons belonged to the Civil Service of Canada?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is the intention of the Government to put a sufficient sum in the Estimates for this purpose.

NAVAL STATION AT ESQUIMALT.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, What steps have been taken by the Government with a view to impressing upon the Imperial Government the desirability of the continued maintenance of the naval station at Esquimalt, and of securing the continuous presence of at least one of Her Majesty's ships in British Columbian waters?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has been correspondence with the Imperial Government on this subject, which I think will be found quite satisfactory; and if the hon. gentleman will put a notice on the paper to have the papers brought down, they will be brought down.

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA MILITIA.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, What steps have been taken, or are now under consideration of the Government, with the view of increasing the fortifications in the vicinity of Victoria and Esquimalt; what has been done, or is contemplated in regard to the establishment of a school of gunnery at Victoria; the formation and maintenance of a permanent battery of artillery in said city; and generally to improve the strength and status of the militia in British Columbia?

Mr. CARON. The matters referred to in this question are now under the consideration of the Government. As far as the battery of artillery is concerned, we are now treating for the purpose of securing a site for barracks for that battery.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to form a naval brigade and torpedo corps in the Province of British Columbia, provided the men can be found for reasonable remuneration to compose such much needed adjuncts to the militia defence of said Province?

Mr. CARON. It is not the intention of the Government at present.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, What further aid is contemplated with regard to rifle associations in order to encourage them to become permanent feeders to the active militia?

Mr. CARON. When the Estimates are brought down, I hope to enter fully into an explanation of the matter referred to in this question.

PORT MULGRAVE, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. KIRK enquired, Has Port Mulgrave, Guysboro', Nova Scotia, an out-port of Guysboro', been made a sub-port of Port Hawkesbury, in Inverness County. If so, when was the change made, and why was it made?

Mr. BOWELL. The out-port of Mulgrave was transferred to the Port of Guysboro', by Order in Council of the 5th of July, 1883, because of its close proximity to the chief port and consequently easier supervision, and for the greater convenience of those who had to frequent it.

SALARIES OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

Mr. GAULT enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to put the appraisers in the Customs Department on the salaries to which they are entitled under the Customs Act of 1883?

Mr. BOWELL. The Civil Service Act provides that the salaries of appraisers in the Customs Department shall range from $800 to $2,000 per annum, and in all cases these salaries are regulated in accordance with the duties and responsibilities of the appraisers at the different ports.

FRAUD IN SALE OF PATENT RIGHTS.

Mr. MULLOCK moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 26) for the better prevention of fraud in connection with the sale of patent rights.

Motion agreed to; Bill considered in Committee, amended and reported.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT.

Mr. CHARLTON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 6) to provide for the punishment of seduction and like offences.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CURRAN. I had not the advantage of being present when the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill addressed this honourable House in support of its provisions, but I have read with a very great deal of pleasure the speech that was delivered by my hon. friend on that occasion. I do not think that any one occupying a seat in this House, or any one having a heart in his bosom, or any one who is father of a family, can possibly say otherwise, than that he endorses every word which has been uttered by my hon. friend regarding the enormity of the offence which he seeks to suppress. But I think that he is calling upon us to adopt a measure which the experience of ages has condemned. I have read in his remarks that the Roman law provided punishment against this offence; I have also read in his remarks that the Canon law provides similar redress, and that the law of France meets the case as he desires it should be met. I think that with regard to that branch of the subject my hon. friend has hardly been very candid in his quotations. I think I can place my hand upon the authorities that he has selected, and show that while he has given the arguments adduced in the repertory in favour of his side of the case, he has totally failed to give the conclusions arrived at by the writers in question, who, one and all, agree that this legislation has proved a disastrous failure. First of all, with regard to the Roman law, the cases are not at all similar. The state of society to-day is not similar to that which existed at the time the Lex Julia was passed, which law is incorporated, in so far as its provisions are concerned, in the fourth book of the Institutes, and wherein the penalty which has been mentioned by my hon. friend was prescribed against this offence. I will take the liberty of quoting from Ortolan, in his work entitled Législation Romaine, where he refers to what was the state of society at the time this law was passed, and I think it will be found that no such state of society exists here. On the other hand, we have no commentary, no statement in any book written on this subject to show that the Lex Julia of the Roman law had the effect that my hon. friend hopes his law will produce in the country. I shall first read the following quotation:—

“ Les derniers temps de la république qui avaient offert une dépravation de mœurs étonnante. Le mariage de citoyen (juste nuptiæ) avait été abandonné ou changé en libertinage par des divorces annuels. On pouvait dire alors des dames romaines : elles ne comptent point les années par les consuls mais par leurs maris. Le célibat était chose de mode. Les guerres civiles et les proscriptions avaient laissé de grands vides dans les familles ; et sous le flot des esclaves, des affranchis ou des pérégrins la race des citoyens s'en allait. Plus d'une fois la censure avait signalé le péril. Auguste tenta de remédier par la législation et par la fiscalité à la corruption des mœurs et à l'épuisement de la population légitime.”—(Ortolan, Législation romaine.) Loi Julia, page 278, sec. 63.

Now, Sir, that is what Ortolan says. Another authority, and one equally worthy of respect, which is also in French, but of which I have made a hasty translation, says :

“ The Roman law punished this offence by the confiscation of one-half of the delinquent's goods, if he were a citizen. If he belonged to an inferior cast, corporal punishment was inflicted, and sentence of transportation. The Canon law obliged the seducer to marry the girl, or to grant her a dowry, and this was for a long time in vogue in certain parts of France, but as it frequently happened that the seduced one appealed on the penalty, to procure for themselves advantageous marriages, a declaration of the 22nd November, 1730, pronounced an express abrogation of the enactments, and substituted damages to be assessed by the tribunals in their discretion.”—(Journal du Palais, Voir Attention aux Mœurs.)

Mr. MULOCK.

Therefore, we find that, as regards the statement of my hon. friend, with reference to the law of France, he is labouring under a grave mistake. Following the Canon law, they did introduce into certain parts of France, a law against seduction, but, it was found that this opened the door to all kinds of abuses, to such an extent, that an express provision, as I have shown, passed in 1730, caused this law to be abolished. Now, Sir, what was the effect with regard to the Canon law? The Canon law, I admit, still exists. The Canon law still contains the provisions my hon. friend has noticed in his speech; but I find a very eminent commentator saying, with regard to the Canon law :

“ Le droit canonique, moins sévère que le droit romain, condamnait à épouser ou à doter la fille séduite. Cette disposition qui fut longtemps en usage, finit par tomber en désuétude. Elle avait tellement ouvert la porte aux abus que ce droit avait dégénéré en spéculation effrontée, et l'état de fille séduite était devenu un métier. On s'effraya des difficultés de la preuve ; on recula devant une inquisition dans la vie privée, et on reconnut que par la divulgation, au lieu de remédier au mal, on l'empirait. Le remède était pire que le mal.” (P. Larousse, Dic. 19e siècle.)

I really imagine, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend, when he says that, in twenty-seven of the United States of America, there exist laws similar to that which he now seeks to put upon our Statute Book, with reference to the crime of seduction, is labouring under a very grievous mistake. I have taken the trouble, being interested in this legislation, to look up the authorities upon this point. I have not been able to find the legislation which he refers to. It would have been advisable that he should have pointed out and read the enactments, in order that we might see that these enactments are similar to that which he now seeks to place upon the Statutes of this country. I apprehend he will find that he is labouring under this mistake which I have indicated, and I apprehend still further that he cannot place his hand upon a single authority worthy of one moment's consideration, not upon a single authority of any Judge, or of any jurist of distinction, either in this country or in the United States, or in England or in France, that will endorse the views which he has enunciated, or point out that wherever a law of this kind has existed, it has proved beneficial to the community for whose benefit it was passed. Now, Sir, I contend that when we come to pass laws of this kind, whatever our feelings may be, we are not here to introduce sentimental legislation. We must face this question as practical men with the experience of ages before us. We cannot afford to ignore the teachings of history; and, certainly, when we take into consideration that no one authority has asked for this legislation; when we take into consideration that our Judges—who are never backward in stating from the bench, in their charges to grand juries, any improvements that they think ought to be made in our laws—have never asked for this legislation; when we consider that in no part of this Dominion have we heard an expression of opinion from any Judge, no matter what his position, that he thinks the condition of our society would be improved by legislation such as this, then, Sir, I think we ought to hesitate, and not blindly rush forward and place upon our Statute Books a law, which, as I have clearly and conclusively pointed out, is not calculated to benefit the country, but is calculated to do here what it has done elsewhere, namely, that, as we find it laid down in the books in express terms, it would open the door to the gravest and most serious offences, would open the door to abuses which may be difficult to repress. It is probable, Sir, that if we adopt this measure now we shall have to go back, after having made the experiment, as other countries have gone back, and abrogate a law which I think should never find a place upon the Statutes of this country.

Mr. BOSSE moved that the Committee rise and report progress.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to call the attention of the Government to the provisions of this Bill. There are three totally distinct offences enumerated, as I understand it. One is that to which the hon. member who has just spoken has directed attention, namely, the seduction of a woman under promise of marriage. Now, I quite understand that the hon. gentleman opposite may object to apply the provision of this Bill to that particular offence; but, there are two other offences of a very grave character, and one of these is a fraudulent or mock marriage. Now, Sir, I consider that if our law does not make the entrapping of a woman into a fraudulent marriage a criminal offence, our law ought to do so without any delay; and I think the common sense of the House, and the common sense of the country, will entirely respond to the proposition of my hon. friend, that the entrapping of any woman into a fraudulent marriage is a most exceedingly grave offence. I do not think my hon. friend who last spoke—if he will permit me to call him so—called attention to these provisions of the Bill. I understood his remarks to be wholly directed to the first item, that of seduction under promise of marriage. Now, Sir, the second offence is a very grave one. I think that it was stated here that our present criminal law makes no provision, or no adequate provision, for dealing with that offence; if so, I repeat it ought to be dealt with in the severest possible manner. Then, Sir, the third offence is that of entrapping a woman of heretofore good character into houses of prostitution. That, to my mind, is almost as grave an offence as could possibly be conceived, and is also deserving of very severe punishment at the hands of the criminal law. Therefore, although, as I said, I can quite understand the objections of hon. gentlemen and others also, to the first clause, I think that it would be very much to be regretted indeed if, by reason of their objections to one particular provision, they should go the length of destroying the other provisions of the Bill, in which I think all of us will agree, or ought to agree. As the Minister of Justice is not a member of this House, I think the First Minister might give us the benefit of his long experience, and of his views on this important question—because it is an important question—in the event of the law not being, as I am informed, adequate to the punishment of the two latter offences.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would make just one remark. The hon. gentleman says that we ought, at all events, to vote in favour of that clause which makes the leading of a woman into a mock marriage illegal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not say illegal, I said a crime punishable by the criminal law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think there is any such clause in the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, here it is:

"Any man who shall, under promise of marriage, seduce and have connection with any unmarried female of previous chaste character, or any man who, by means of a feigned or pretended marriage—"

I think that covers the ground.

Mr. COURSOL. During the discussion that took place yesterday on the Bill brought before the House by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), many members spoke of their long experience, and the many years they had practiced at the criminal bar. Well, Sir, I may mention that I, too, have had some experience with cases such as those contemplated by the Bill. I have been over twenty years administering the criminal law in the city of Montreal, for the whole district of Montreal, and many cases have come before me of a similar nature to those alluded to in this Bill. I have been accustomed to look upon our Statutes as the most perfect we could have. They were framed upon the criminal Statutes of England, and certainly no country in the world can boast of Statutes so nearly perfect. Fortunately for Canada, we have copied in our Statutes the criminal Statutes of England almost verbatim, and every improvement that has taken place from year to year in England has been adopted in our Statutes; and it is only by following the Statutes of England that we, in this country, have such a set of Statutes as we possess. But because we have followed English Statutes so successfully, because we are in the habit of copying them, simply changing the United Kingdom to Canada, we have now and then occasion to improve on them, if the spirit of our society asks for and requires it. And in this case I must say there are certain parts of the Bill which, I believe, ought to become law. The second clause refers to women, or rather young girls being allured into houses of ill-fame for purposes of prostitution. It is a well-known fact that in all large cities, especially now that hundreds of passengers, by cars and steamers, arrive in a city during night as well as day, cases of this description come before the Courts. Anyone who reads the newspapers will be struck with the numerous offences of this kind, and there is now no real remedy for them. We hear of respectable girls coming from the country, alone and unprotected, being sent to an address in a certain street either in Montreal or any other large city, and being taken by a carter with some associates to houses of ill-fame. The police and the authorities know well that such cases occur, and we should put a stop to such practices. It is high time the morality of the country should be maintained by such a law as is proposed. At present we see fathers coming to cities in search of a daughter and mothers deploring the loss of their daughter's virtue, and all that for the want of such a law as this. Men looking for these kind of passengers have accomplices; they draw out a plan and wait for their arrival, and when one of these girls arrives and wishes to be conveyed to a certain address a carter will drive her around the city for probably half an hour and will land her in a house of prostitution. I approve of the clause in the Bill which deals with these cases and I will vote for it. As to the first section, I am not afraid of the consequences mentioned. I disapprove, however, of its terms, for I think it should be limited to girls under twenty-one years of age. As drawn, it applies to all unmarried women, whatever their age. If it applied only to minors, I would be prepared to support it. I believe when a girl has attained twenty-one years of age she knows pretty well how to behave herself, and if she does not she will probably never know. Her experience of the world should be such that she should not require to be protected by a law of this description; but a minor, probably fourteen, fifteen or sixteen, and up to twenty-one years, not having mature judgment, ought to be presumed to be under the guidance of the man who seduces her. If this amendment were made I would support the clause and the whole Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not read the Bill this Session, but I take it to be the same as was introduced last Session, and I believe it is. I was, therefore, very positive that there was no clause in the Bill providing that a person should be punishable for a feigned or pretended marriage. In reading the clause I find I am correct. There is no provision in the Bill making it a crime to have a feigned or pretended marriage with a woman; but, if the hon. gentleman will read the clause, he will find the offence is the criminal conversation, and not the feigned marriage.

Mr. FOSTER. I voted in favour of the principle of the Bill introduced last year, which was similar in its terms to that now before the House. I have seen no reason since to change my opinion on the subject. I am very sure the best course for the House to adopt is to give it a candid and deliberate investigation. I do not see any reason why we should hurry this Bill at double speed. It is at least a question in which the mass of the people take some interest; it is a question, as shown by the votes last year, in which a large number of members on both sides of the House take a deep interest; and it is, therefore, worthy of calm and deliberate consideration at the hands of the House. I entertain as much respect for authority as any hon. member. I believe in paying deference to what is old, not simply because it is old, but being old it is the result of the experience of generations which have lived before us. But while I have respect for what is old and will pay respect to it, I still believe we have the liberty to change our methods of procedure, our methods of action, from generation to generation. I do not believe that law is any more a divine thing, so far as we find it on our Statute Books, than that I believe philosophy is a divine thing, as we find it in our books of philosophy. These are simply philosophical formulae, or theological formulae or law formulae, they are simply the result of the best thoughts of the people who collected and concentrated them; and as people's thoughts and sentiments change; it is perfectly right for them to change the expressions of those thoughts and sentiments; and I believe that will apply with respect to law as to other things. So, while a good deal is to be learned from precedents, we have to look at the conditions of the present and the needs of the present. An hon. member who spoke last night gave a pretty full and philosophical definition of what law was meant for. I could not better that; I might vary it by saying something like this: every law is meant to accomplish three things, first, to exalt the right; second, to punish the wrong-doer; and third, to protect the person who is involved. Take the law against slavery and follow out these three lines, and you will see what benefit it was. The law gave freedom to the slave, and exalted the right to human freedom. It did more than that, it punished the person who should go against that canon of right; and it protected those who were liable to be whipped and injured by slave drivers. These things enter into any law, and they enter into the consideration of the question before the House to-day. Is it right between man and man in a community that confidence ought not to be betrayed and that sacred contracts ought not to be violated? If that is right, I say it is right in this particular instance, and that right ought to be emphasized on the Statute Book. In this matter, it is not a question of mere sentiment, which has been pooh-poohed by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). I am surprised at his thinking that in this Assembly, or in any other, we shall not take sentiment into account when making laws. I had supposed that our laws were based on sentiment, and that it was necessary to get down to a right and true sentiment and have our laws based on that before they could be satisfactory. It will be a sad day for this country, and for any country, when the majority of our legislators come to the conclusion that law is not to be based on correct sentiment, that it is to be a mere mechanical thing, something enacted only for convenience sake. I do not believe in that. I do believe in the remarks offered by the hon. gentleman from Montreal East, whose large and mature experience outweigh to my mind all that has been stated in the opposite view of the case by the hon. member for Montreal Centre. So I believe that we ought, by putting this law on the Statute Book, to emphasize what we believe to be right in the matter of confidence and sacred contract, the inviolability of both, so that neither ought to be betrayed or outraged. I say that so long as there is one single wrong-doer—and my hon. friend representing Montreal East stated that there were cases which had occurred in his own experience over and over again—if there be only one such case out of ten thousand; if there be such an example as that; if there be such a scoundrel as that; I say it is a sufficient reason to put a law on the Statute Book to punish that wrong-doer. Then again with reference to the third clause, I think there are persons liable to be injured. All have not the same experience. Girls coming from rural districts are not quite so experienced, quite so able to take care of themselves, in certain respects, as girls who have mingled more in society, and have had better advantages and opportunities in that respect. There are cases which crop up every now and again. No person can read the newspapers for a consecutive week without seeing the records of cases in which we find that innocent persons are wronged, and we cannot do better than place a law on the Statute Book which, so far as we can possibly do so, will make it less possible for the innocent to be wronged. It has been stated that there are States in the American Union which have passed such laws, and the question has been asked, whether or not morals are better there than here. I say that question does not go to the bottom of this matter; it is not a fair parallel. You have to ask whether the conditions of those States are just the same as the conditions here; and you have to ask this other question, whether, if such laws had not existed, the state of morals would be quite as good as they are. If not, it is a pretty fair proof of the wisdom and the necessity of such laws, that men, as intelligent as we ourselves are, have, in State after State, placed them on the Statute Book, and if we cannot point to one of those States where they have repealed such laws, that is a pretty fair proof that they have not worked any harm, but that they have been considered to have done some good. I am in favour of placing this law on the Statute Book. If it is right, let the right be exalted; place the law on the Statute Book, protect the innocent and punish the wrong-doer. Then we can go to work and exercise our ingenuity in preventing any fraud from taking place under that law; make your safeguards against frauds and blackmailing as broad and deep as you please, but after that let the cardinal principle be to punish the wrong-doer and protect the innocent. I hope this Committee will not vote to rise and kill all portions of this Bill. I give to every other gentleman the same right to hold his opinion and to hold it just as strongly as I hold my own; but I should feel that we had done something which I do not think would exalt the dignity of this Parliament in the eyes of the country, if we refused, for instance, to pass a law that where any person, vile and ingenious, makes it a trade to inveigle young girls, or older ones, into a house of ill-fame, there should be some strong and steady and powerful arm of the law to come down for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty. If we vote that the Committee shall rise, we kill every section of the Bill—we have to take the onus of killing the good and the bad. If there are particular sections which we may consider not to be good, let us go on as a Committee to expunge them; let us not vote to rise and thereby kill everything which is good in the Bill.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I do not agree with the opinion of the hon. member for King's, that a law must be based on sentiment; I think it should be based on reason, and it is for that reason that I think the first clause cannot be accepted by this House, as it now stands. By this clause you give a premium to girls of bad character—you reward them for their bad conduct, by allowing them to make a certain compromise after the deed; you endeavour to make the thing good, which you have declared to be bad under certain other conditions. If you think it necessary to punish the act of seduction, why condone the offences of the two criminals, on the condition that they shall marry? If it be a crime at first, it cannot be otherwise afterwards. I do not believe, for my part, that a woman is so much inferior to a man in intelligence, that she cannot distinguish between right and wrong; and if it is so, I do not see why we should reward the woman who has done the wrong by giving her a chance to blackmail, or obtain from her accomplice either her reward, or such a position in society that her character would not entitled her to. It is for that reason that I am opposed to the clause as it stands. I would be willing to punish a man who, through an accomplice, would entrap a woman into a mock marriage. I think in that case, there is a crime to be punished. But I would not go further than that, because I think that in the first case there is the will of both, and I do not see why the law should protect the one and punish the other, when both are guilty. I am in favour of the second clause, and if the first clause is amended so as to limit the enactment to mock marriages I should vote for it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that although the hon. First Minister may be right enough in saying that the mere fact of the mock marriage may be not punishable under this clause, still the consequences which usually ensue in such cases, are distinctly made punishable; and that is a crime, and a very grave crime itself, which, if not at present punished by our criminal law should undoubtedly, I contend, be made a criminal offence. That point seems rather mixed up in the clause to which I call attention; and I think it would be better if a distinct clause should be introduced in which we could make both the mere fact of contracting a fraudulent marriage and any subsequent intercourse taking place in consequence thereof, severely punishable. As to the fact stated by the member for Montreal East, every one who knows anything of large cities, knows that there are in them a number of vile hags who deliberately plot for the purpose of destroying innocent young girls who fall into their clutches. This subject has over and over again been brought to the attention of the English House of Commons and other deliberative assemblies; and I think in most other countries it is made severely punishable by the criminal law.

Motion that the Committee rise withdrawn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am strongly opposed to the first clause, for the reasons which I gave last Session, and which have been given by my hon. friend who spoke first to-day. I am in favour of the second clause, and so stated when the Bill was before the House last Session. The first clause is simply this, that if any man, under promise of marriage, or by means of a feigned or pretended marriage, has sexual intercourse with any woman of previously chaste character, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour. I think it is a great mistake to offer additional inducement to blackmail. At present, if a woman is engaged to a man under a promise of marriage, and there is a breach of that promise, there is a civil action for damages. That is a sufficient protection for a woman whose time has been taken up and whose future has been destroyed by a promise of marriage and a breach of that promise. But the fault of this clause is that it puts every man at the mercy of every woman. To be sure, the clause says she must be a woman of previous chaste character; but every woman must be supposed to be innocent until she is proved to be guilty, and the clause, in effect, puts every man at the mercy of a woman who claims that there has been a promise of marriage, and that improper consequences have ensued from that promise. At present, the woman knows that if there is a breach of promise, she can have an action for damages; but if she wants to hold the young man, she will go further, in order that she may have a double hold upon him—first, in a civil action for damages, and second, in an indictment for misdemeanour. Now, Sir, we can fancy the nature of the evidence that would be given in this case. When the Act was first introduced, there was no such clause in it as the third clause, which relates to corroborative evidence. That was introduced in consequence of the strong expression of opinion in the House that some such protection should be given. I believe, however, that this corroboration would be nugatory. The section provides that the evidence of the woman shall be corroborative as to both the promise of marriage and the seduction. The promise of marriage can be proved, and is proved continually in cases of breach of promise. If there have been certain consequences from the seduction, that is a corroboration of itself. But what corroboration can there be given of the fact of improper intercourse, except such evidence as we cannot well discuss in the House with strangers in the gallery; but one can fancy the nature of the evidence that must be produced in order to prove the fact of the seduction. There is no living proof of it, and there must be in the first place the woman coming forward and deliberately declaring her own shame, when, by keeping her own counsel, she might live before the world as a virtuous and chaste woman. She comes forward and swears to it, and she must, either by contrivance or by convinance with some strange witness, make a corroboration of it; otherwise, there could be no corroboration, unless the parties were actually taken in the fact, or unless by an arrangement made by which the evidence is manufactured. I consider that this clause is altogether objectionable. Now, Sir, the inducement that is offered by this clause to women to force young men to marry them, is increased to an enormous extent by the provision that in the case of an unmarried man, the subsequent marriage of the parties, or a bona fide offer of marriage on the part of the defendant, may be pleaded in bar of conviction. The crime has been committed, the promise has been made, the woman has been seduced, and she can say to the young man now, "You have seduced me, and you must marry me, or I will prosecute you." The inducement to levy blackmail offered by this clause is heightened to such an extent that, I think, both fathers and sons would be very unwilling to allow it to become law. That is my objection to the first clause.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman's objection, however, does not cover the offence contained in the first clause, of obtaining intercourse by means of a fraudulent or pretended marriage. The two offences, as the hon. gentleman will see, are wrapped up together in that clause. I must say candidly that I admit that there is great force in much of what the hon. gentleman has said, and I do not usually say he is correct unless I entirely believe him to be so. But there are the two other offences—the offence of obtaining intercourse with a woman by means of a fraudulent marriage, and the offence, which the hon. gentleman agrees with the mover of the Bill should be declared criminal, of bringing young girls into houses of ill-fame—also provided for in the Bill. These should, undoubtedly, I think, be made criminal offences. But I call attention to the fact that the first clause mentions the two distinct offences.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it does not. There is the one offence of improper intercourse. That is either by promise of marriage or by a feigned marriage. This clause might be made quite effective as providing for the punishment of seduction by means of a feigned marriage, and I have no objection, as a member of this House, that a clause should be prepared and inserted in the Bill, making a feigned marriage a punishable offence.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand, the limit of the clause would be as the hon. gentleman states. It would not be intercourse that would be punishable, but intercourse procured by feigned or mock marriage. What the hon. gentleman intimates is that a feigned or mock marriage should be made an offence, whether or not followed by the intercourse. It would, therefore, be a more stringent measure in that sense than the Bill. I do not object to it, because I think his view is correct. It is hardly conceivable that a feigned or mock marriage should be brought about for any other purpose than to be followed by the intercourse which is conjoined with the offence. It is not the intercourse alone or the marriage alone, but the intercourse obtained by means of a feigned or mock marriage. It would, therefore, be very easy, if it were the sense of the Committee, to drop that portion of the clause which relates to seduction under promise of marriage, and to simply make a criminal offence the procuring of a mock marriage. The question is whether any hon. gentleman is disposed to move an amendment to the clause in that direction, leaving out that earlier part which has relation to seduction under promise of marriage and then recasting the clause in the other sense.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There might be several reasons besides the one suggested in this clause for a feigned marriage, such as the right to property.

Mr. BLAKE. A feigned marriage would not touch that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is something in that. This clause had better be struck out, as it is ineffective for any purpose, and a clause prepared by the hon. gentleman, making a feigned marriage a misdemeanour, and providing that if the feigned marriage be followed by cohabitation, it would be an aggravation of the offence.

Mr. CHARLTON. I consider the crime of seduction under the promise of marriage, the most grievous offence named in this Bill. I am unable to understand how the hon. the First Minister should entertain the fears he does with reference to abuses on the part of designing females arising under this Bill, such as blackmailing. I have looked up the American record of cases of this kind, and from that record I judge that the hon. gentleman's fears are entirely unfounded. I do not believe there would be any danger of successful attempts at blackmailing under this Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have known of several cases in my own practice.

Mr. CHARLTON. Of course false charges may be made in connection with any kind of crime. It is a reflection upon the character of a man to be accused of stealing or perjury, and it is equally possible such charges might be made for the purpose of extorting blackmail. I do not believe there is any greater danger under this Bill of a charge of that kind being made than under the criminal law, in respect to other crimes for which penalties are imposed. With regard to the objection raised by the hon. gentleman, that the Bill provides the woman should be previously of a chaste character and the law presumes this until the contrary is proved. That, I consider, is perfectly proper. It is proper that the onus of proving previous unchastity should rest upon the party who asserts the contrary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The indictment would have to state the fact of the seduction, the promise of marriage and that she was of chaste character, and every material allegation in the indictment would have to be proved.

Mr. CHARLTON. According to the reports of American cases, the law presumes the woman was chaste, and it must be proved that she was not before action can lie. With regard to the contention that civil damages cover the case entirely, that a certain amount of money is a sufficient remedy, there are cases in which to ask for damages would be a mockery. Suppose the woman was driven to commit suicide, or that her character was blasted for life and she became an outcast from society, would any civil damages repay the loss she has sustained? Should the seducer be imprisoned for two years, as this Bill provides, he would not suffer the punishment which has to be undergone by the woman who can never recover her position in society. The man can hold up his head, and with a certain class of men his baseness is applauded; but the contrary is the case with the woman, and this is where the law should step in and say that a few paltry dollars is no compensation, but that punishment must be inflicted. The corroborative evidence required in this matter makes it utterly impossible that blackmailing should be attempted, and besides in being allowed to give evidence in his own behalf, the man is surrounded with a safeguard such as he is not provided with in any other country in Christendom. No law, elsewhere, provides that he may tender his own evidence, and this, in addition to the corroborative evidence which must be furnished by the woman upon every charge contained in the indictment, will effectually prevent the danger feared. With regard to the evidence, the hon. gentleman says the promise of marriage is quite easily proved, but the seduction is almost impossible to prove. I do not see any material difficulty in proving one more than the other, as probably the same class of evidence would be used in both cases. Marriage engagements are not generally made in public, but are matters of as much secrecy, as a rule, as the other matter referred to in the hon. gentleman's remarks. With regard to the provision making marriage a bar to conviction, I am willing to surrender that point. As I said last year, I think where a man obtains conjugal favours under promise of marriage, the promise, if carried out, should be a bar to conviction, but if it is the sense of the Committee that it should not, I am willing to strike it out of the Bill. With regard to feigned marriages, of course, if it is the sense of the Committee that seduction under promise of marriage be not considered a penal offence, I shall gladly retain the other part, although I consider it an insignificant portion of the Bill, because marriages of this kind are very rare. I may say a few words in reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Montreal Centre. At the outset he told us that experience had condemned a measure of this kind. I doubt that assertion. This measure was a principle of the Roman code for many centuries. It is true that under the Empire, great licentiousness prevailed in Roman society. But that was not due to the fact that there was a law prohibiting licentiousness. The prevalence of crime is never due to the fact that crime is prohibited or punished, and it is folly to say that because licentiousness prevailed in Roman society it must be concluded that the existence in the Roman Statutes of a law punishing seduction led, by some occult process, to this state of society. With regard to the law of France, although the Canon law was abrogated in 1730, the law in France still provides that the seducer shall either marry the person seduced or settle a dowry upon her. The following abstract of the French law shows that, though it does not actually provide a penalty for the crime of seduction, it provides safeguards against it:

"The French law, though not actually defining any penalty for the crime of seduction, provides many safeguards for the protection of single women, such as: the rights of minors, filiation, damages, etc. In 1867, the master of a female apprentice, who had been guilty of seduction, was condemned by the Assize Court of the same to settle an annuity on his victim, and this precedent has been acted upon by the different Assize Courts of France ever since."

The hon. gentleman in referring to my remarks about the existence of laws of this kind in the Statute Books of various States of the Union, questioned the truth of that assertion, and said I should have pointed out the enactments. I did not think it was worth while detaining the House with a list of these enactments, but I have here a list of them in twenty-seven States, in every one of which, with the exception of possibly one or two, there is punishment for seduction under promise of marriage, and the penalties are generally very severe. In Michigan, the maximum is as high as ten years imprisonment; and in very few States is it less than three years. In many of the States adultery is punished, and the laws, though differing in many other respects, are uniform in this one respect that they punish seduction under promise of marriage. My friend from Montreal East says he would approve of this Bill if the provision as to seduction under promise of marriage applied only to minors, to girls or women under 21 years of age. I have given considerable thought to that matter, and have been sometimes ready to arrive at the conclusion that that would be a salutary provision. It is a provision in some of the United States, and in some one or two of them the limit is 18 years of age—the seduction of a girl under that age is punishable, but not the seduction of a woman over it. These minor matters—these amendments to the Bill, are matters that can be settled in Committee. Anything that is reasonable I shall be glad to agree to; anything which does not require the abandonment of the principle of the Bill. The member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) does not approve of making a subsequent marriage a bar to conviction. It was not the sense of the House that it was proper to retain that provision last year. It is inserted in the Bill and is left to the sense of the Committee. If it is the sense of the Committee that that should be expunged, let it be expunged, but I hold that we ought to retain the principle of the Bill, as it refers to seduction under promise of marriage. It may be proper to limit the age to twenty-one years, and it may be proper to provide that a subsequent marriage shall not be a bar to conviction, but that the Bill should provide for the punishment of seduction under promise of marriage is my firm conviction; and I submit these views to the Committee, hoping that they will take them into consideration, and, with such modifications as may be proper, will report the Bill.

Mr. MACMASTER. The object of this Bill is professedly to punish offences against chastity, but, while such is its general object, it proposes to punish only offences against chastity in the man, and omits to do so in regard to the woman. It would be entirely illusory, and would bespeak a want of experience of mortals, to suppose that the man is always the misleading party. Are there no designing women, who make designs upon men, and especially upon young men, and lead them astray? And shall women go unwhipped, while a new crime is added to the Statute-Book as against men? Again, the hon. gentleman proposes to make a crime what is really not a crime, and, above all, is not a crime in one party unless it is also in the other. In seduction, both parties must consent. If there be the carnal knowledge against the consent of one of the parties, it is rape, and the criminal law makes ample provisions for it, but it cannot be a crime where both parties are consenting. It look very plausible to say a woman should not be seduced under promise of marriage; but a woman must know, and women do know, that a promise of marriage is not marriage; and, if the temptation is held out to a designing woman, as the First Minister has clearly pointed out, that she will have, not merely for the breach of promise, a civil action for damages, but in addition a criminal remedy, unless the marriage is consummated, a great leverage is placed in her hands to yield her virtue and consent to seduction. I do not think, in the interests of morality, of which my friend from King's is such a zealous guardian, and very properly so, in this House, that a temptation should be placed in the way of women, to coerce a marriage at a subsequent stage by temporarily yielding to seduction. I think the proper rule is the old rule, that eternal vigilance is the price of virtue as well as the price of liberty, as Junius has said. A woman must know that, although marriage is a very fine thing in the prospect, she is not to be permitted to put her virtue in the balance, and to think that the law will protect her with the double remedy of a civil action and a criminal action against a man, because she may think it proper to yield to that man's enticings or to his blandishments. A woman now has the protection of an action for damages. I quite agree with the remarks of the First Minister and I base my opinion not only on his experience and the experience of other hon. gentleman, but on my own experience on the criminal side of the court—that offenses would be very largely increased, and morality would not be served by this Bill, and especially the first clause of it, becoming law.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is competent to me, I should like to move an amendment to the first clause. I move that the first clause be adopted with the omission of all after the words "as hereinafter mentioned," leaving out entirely the proviso, and then it will read:

"Any man who shall, under promise of marriage, seduce and have illicit connection with any unmarried female of previously chaste character, or any man who by means of a feigned or pretended marriage, has sexual intercourse with any woman of previous chaste character, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be punishable as hereinafter mentioned."

Mr. BERGIN. It appears to me that that is not an amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it proposes to omit some words.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). In case this is decided as lost, I presume it does not mean the adoption of the whole section as it is. I would suggest that, instead of striking out what the hon. gentleman has spoken of striking out, it would be better to strike out all after the first four words, "any man who shall," until you come to the word "has," which should be "have" in the fourth line, and then continue until you reach the proviso. Then it will provide against the crime of a feigned marriage and its consequences, and will leave out the first part about promise of marriage and the proviso that a bona fide offer of marriage shall be a compensation. That would be my idea of the section, if adopted at all.

Mr. BERGIN. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should add the words "or woman" after the words "any man."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Several hon. members including my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster), have spoken of their experience, and I suppose my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) is speaking of his experience.

Mr. MACKENZIE. So did the member for Carleton.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the amendment of my hon. friend to strike out the proviso, because the clause is not so objectionable without that proviso as it is with it. At the same time, after it is so struck out I shall vote against the whole clause.

Amendment agreed to, on a division.

On section 2.

Mr. ABBOTT. With regard to this second clause I think it is one that ought to be adopted, but it does not quite satisfy me as to its terms. I am not quite sure I understand what is meant by a person who shall "inveigle or entice any female." The female may be enticed into a place by treaty, by persuasion, by soft speeches, etc., and I think that would not be sufficient to constitute a crime according to the view we have taken in striking out the first clause. I see in former legislation on such subjects we have required that the woman shall be drawn into the offence by some false pretences, or false representation of some kind. In the Criminal Acts of 1869, where a somewhat similar offense is spoken of, the words, "By false pretences, false representations, or other fraudulent means are used" are used. I would suggest that this clause should be amended by inserting these words in the first line of this second clause, and that the clause should read:

"Any person who shall, by false pretences, false representations or other fraudulent means, inveigle or entice any female.—"

I move that those words be inserted there as an amendment to the clause as it stands.

Mr. CHARLTON. I accept that amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the words "of virtuous and chaste character" should be struck out. If a woman, no matter what her previous character might be, should by fraudulent means be induced to enter a house of ill-fame, should be protected as much as the most virtuous woman in the land, for she might be desirous of leading a reformed life. If the clause is adopted with these words, they must be inserted, in the indictment they would form a material allegation, and as such would have to be proved. It would be no answer to say that every person in a criminal trial is supposed to be innocent of the offense until proved guilty. That has no reference to this provision; because this would be the allegation of a specific fact, just the same as if it were stated that a female was of the age of twenty-one years, it would have to be established. For these reasons I move that the words "of a virtuous and chaste character" be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved to strike out of the third clause all the words from "corroborated," in the third line, to "hereof," in the second last line.

Mr. ABBOTT. I think the hon. gentleman should go further, and that these words as to the inveiglement or enticement should also be struck out, as they are essential elements of the crime.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not think these words should be struck out, because the language of the previous clause makes the definition of these offenses clear enough.

Mr. ABBOTT. The purposes of the inveiglement or the enticement are elements of the crime, and therefore there should be corroboration as regards them also.

Amendment agreed to.

On the section 4,

Mr. TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman should allow this clause to stand until the House shall have dealt with the other Bill in relation to this class of evidence.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not think the request of the hon. gentleman is a reasonable one, because the House insisted upon the insertion of this clause as a protection against blackmailing, and it was one of the principles of the Bill most fully discussed, and one which the great majority of members insisted upon.

Mr. TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will not consent to have the clause stand over, I shall be obliged to move that it be struck out.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think since you have permitted any female, no matter whether she is chaste or not, to go into the box and swear away the character of a man, it would only be fair and reasonable that the party charged should be allowed to give his evidence.

Bill reported.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. ABBOTT.

After Recess.

PREVENTION OF FRAUD IN RELATION TO CONTRACTS INVOLVING THE EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation), in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 12) "An Act to amend the Act intituled: 'An Act for the better prevention of Fraud in relation to Contracts involving the expenditure of Public Moneys,'" said: Mr. Speaker, at two different times I have already had occasion to lay before this House the Bill, of which I have now the honour to propose the second reading. The first time I met with a tolerably marked hostility on the part of the Government. Nevertheless, I have not been lacking in perseverance. I introduced the Bill a second time, and I met with more success. I succeeded in having embodied in our Statute Books a part of the Bill I had then submitted; but a particular clause was eliminated. The amendment I now propose to this law is intended to prevent the contractor, having contracts with the Government, from subscribing any money for the purpose of assisting in elections. In a few moments, I shall have occasion to say a few words on the details of this Bill. Two objections were formulated against this Bill, the first and second time that it was introduced, which objections may be summed up as follows: the first partook more of an exception to the form than of anything else, because it was said this law ought to form part of the electoral law. Well, it matters very little whether the law is classified in a particular way or not, as long as it is embodied in our Statutes, and there cannot be any inconvenience to have it put in a special chapter, so that this objection ought now to disappear. The other objection which was made at the time was, that people were waiting the result of a similar Bill which was then before the House of Commons in England, and they wanted to wait after the adoption of this Bill so as to have a precedent to go by. Well, since that time the Bill has been passed by the House of Commons in England, and in a few moments I shall have the honour to refer to that law which aims at a purpose nearly similar to that of the Bill whose second reading I now propose. I may say also—if I am rightly informed, and I have reasons to believe that I am—that a similar Bill, introduced by Senator Pendleton, and of which I had a copy when I introduced my own Bill last year, has been adopted by the Congress of the United States. Well, with these precedents before us, I think I am justified this year in bringing again before the House, the Bill which was rejected last year, and I think I and at the same time justified in saying that I ought to succeed this time, since the reasons which have provoked a vote against my Bill last year have now ceased to exist. Now, will the Bill I have the honour to submit produce the desired effect? I know that it is very difficult to discover the secret practices which take place during the elections; but it is the same with this kind of offence as with any others, which the law seeks to discover and to punish. There are a great number of misdemeanours, and even crimes which remain unperceived, because the law is unable to discover them. This would not be a reason to reject the Bill I now submit, for the moment the guilty party could be found, the law would come in and punish him for the grievous and serious offense which it ought to repress. I think I am justified in stating here, and it will be readily admitted, that in the past, contractors have in fact contributed pretty large sums towards facilitating the elections of their friends, and giving the victory to the party of their choice, with a view to ensuring the success of their own enterprises. It goes without saying that it would be a great anomaly, if, in the body of our laws, which now punishes in a pretty severe manner all offences tending to corrupt the electoral body, there could not be found one law having in view the exhaustion of the source from which flows the evils which I desire to remedy. Now, if we preclude the subscribing of large sums in this manner, it is obvious that we will remove by this means a direct and immediate cause of corruption and of buying of votes. Since the electoral law has been found necessary; we must, at the same time, make it useful and practical by preventing the evil I have just pointed out. There is also another reason why this Bill ought, it seems to me, to be adopted. It is an acknowledged fact that when contractors make pretty large advances to ensure the victory of one party over another in an electoral contest, they do not do it without a mental reservation, that is to say, without the firm intention of being well repaid, or to use an old French proverb: "They give an egg to get an ox." Probably the cause of their superabundant charity, if I may use the expression while speaking of certain candidates, lies at the bottom of this mental reservation. Since it is admitted in theory that the moneys coming from that source are productive of evil, why should we continue this system? Why not immediately put a stop to it? The Bill I have the honour to submit to this House would succeed in hindering the guilty parties, at least through fear of the pretty severe punishment which is the sanction of the law, from continuing to incur expenses which are certainly not made in the interest of the public, but which, on the contrary, are conducive to the gangrening of the electoral body. There has been formulated against this Bill an objection, saying that it would deprive the contractors of the rights and privileges they now enjoy, and which are common to all citizens. Well, I find an apology between the position in which the present law puts the contractors and the position in which this Bill would put them. In fact the law, as it now exists, provides that no contractor having contracts with the Government shall be a candidate or be declared elected as a member of this House. This law is founded on a just and legitimate reason which lies in the object of putting the members of this House in such a position that they will be perfectly independent of their colleagues, and of Parliament. Therefore, we are not depriving the contractors of any of their privileges when we say to them: "If you do not want to be a candidate yourself you cannot create candidates of your own choice; you cannot, out of your own money, or in other words out of the moneys you are receiving by virtue of your contracts with the Government, assist in procuring the election of members." This provision of the law is most wise and does not deprive the contractors of any of their privileges, either in one case or the other. I had occasion a moment ago to say that this principle had been admitted by England and that it had been inserted in the Statute Books of the Parliament of Great Britain. I have in my hand the Statutes of the year 1883, and I shall quote 46-47 Vict., chap. 51, sec. 13. This clause forbids either the payments of subscriptions or the advance of moneys, with the exception of the sums paid in a strictly legal sense. By the way, I may add that this law is extremely stringent; that the expenses of election are reduced to their lowest terms, that is to say, to a sum which seems excessively low when compared to the enormous sums formerly expended in England for electoral purposes. Clause 13 of this Statute says:

"When a person knowingly provides money for any payment which is contrary to the provisions of this Act, or for any expenses incurred in excess of any maximum amount allowed by this Act, or for replacing any money expended in any such payment or expenses, except where the same may have been previously allowed in pursuance of this Act to be an exception, such person shall be guilty of illegal payment."

Well, we see that it is forbidden to pay, subscribe, or give, in order to meet the expenses of an election, any sum of money that will exceed the limit established by the Statute. By analogy, in our country the electoral expenses have been restricted by law and those expenses must be stated in a report certified by the candidate who is returned, they must be given in detail, so that each item of these expenses may be verified. Now, I ask, if we intend to maintain this law in all its integrity, of what earthly use is there to allow the subscribing of enormous sums, or even of any sums exceeding the ordinary limit of those necessary for an election? As the electoral expenses are now reduced to their lowest terms most of the candidates can pay those expenses themselves, and it is not necessary for them to have recourse to strangers, to get the assistance of their money. I shall not repeat, Mr. Speaker, what I have said on two or three different occasions on the subject of this Bill. I will only say, that I am certain that public morals would be better off, if, as is the intention of the present law, the electoral expenses were restricted to an extremely low sum. I will now point out which are the cases which the law is intended to cover. Here is the Bill in a few words:

A contractor during the execution of his contract is really dependent on the Government; he has, in a manner, an official character; he is not fully and perfectly free, as he stands, so to speak, face to face with his creditors, who ought to require of him the full accomplishment of his contract, and who can make conditions, more or less hard, more or less difficult, for the acceptance of the work under contract. Well, by virtue of this law, as long as the contract exists, he cannot subscribe to the election fund. Besides, if after having completed his work, he has not yet received the payment therefor, he will still be deprived of the right of subscribing for electoral purposes. And this limitation will also extend to the twelve months next preceding this election, and to the twelve months next following the election. Finally, if he contracts again, and there is still money due him on this new contract, he will be equally excluded from the right of making an election subscription. Should he violate these prohibitions, he becomes liable to a penalty, which may amount as high as $1,000. But this penalty would be delusive if he was allowed to release himself at once, without any further trouble to him, but the payment of the fine; but if we attach an ignominious penalty to this misdemeanor, if we add to the one an imprisonment which may vary from one to twelve months, at the discretion of the court, it is easily conceived that a man who does not wish to lose his name and reputation will not dare to incur the penalty of imprisonment. If the penalty was only a fine, it is obvious that it would be very easy to get out of scrape, especially for a man who owns considerable wealth; and this happens every day in our police courts, where, a man fined $20 for striking another hits him again and is very glad to get off by paying again, double that fine. Therefore, the mere fine would not be a sufficient punishment, and I think the fear of imprisonment will have the effect of stopping completely these subscriptions, which are not made in the interest of the public, but in the interest of the contractors. With these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I submit this Bill to this hon. House, and I hope that it will this year receive a more friendly consideration than it did last year. I should have wished to have seen the Government themselves introducing this measure, which is in the interest of the public, but I hope that the Government will not oppose it this year, but on the contrary, that they will look at in a favourable light, and that the Bill will become law.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) I do not wish to enter into the merits of the Bill now submitted, but I will take the liberty of asking the promoter of this Bill, if it is constitutional to legislate in this Parliament, on matters connected with Provincial Legislatures. The first clause of this Bill reads as follows:—

“Whosoever, for the purpose of assisting in any election to the Parliament of Canada or the Legislature of any of the Provinces of Canada***”

Mr. CASGRAIN. If my hon. friend will allow me I will tell him that we have discussed that question last year before the Committee to which it had been referred. This point has been very fully argued and we decided that we had this right, and the law was passed both as regards Provincial Legislatures and the Federal Parliament. Therefore, the principle is admitted by the law which has been passed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation). Mr. Speaker' in answer to the hon. member for l'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), I must say that I agree with him that it is wise and proper to prevent corruption in the elections, and such being the principle of the Bill, I have no objection, under the circumstances, to its being read the second time. I am not prepared to admit the Bill in all its details. Although the measure is short it is one which ought to be considered attentively, because it concerns not only the members of this House, but also the electors of the country. Consequently, I must expect that the hon. member will make a motion to refer this Bill back to a special Committee before it is taken into consideration by a Committee of the Whole House, so that the measure may be well digested. I do not pretend that the hon. member has not given the necessary attention to the measure, but as he very well knows, several heads put together are worth more than one, and consequently I will ask him to refer the Bill back to a special Committee, as was done for the first measure a year or two ago.

I would suggest, if the hon. gentleman will agree to it, that the Bill be read a second time and referred to a Special Committee to consist of himself, Mr. Amyot, Mr. Patterson, of Essex, Mr. Rykert, Mr. Mulock, Mr. Brecken, and Mr. Tupper of Pictou. If the hon. gentleman prefers to have a Committee of nine we can add two other names.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says he thinks this measure will affect the electors outside. It is the want of this measure that affects the electors outside.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We may differ about that, but if we look to the past we may find some circumstances on which we might agree. Perhaps it is as well not to give localities or names.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Amyot, Patterson, (Essex), Rykert, Mulock, Brecken, Tupper, (Pictou), Cameron (Huron), Cameron (Victoria), and the mover.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL FERTILIZERS.

Mr. MASSUE, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 38) for the prevention of fraud in the manufacture and sale of agricultural fertilizers, said: The object of this Bill is to protect the farmers against spurious fertilizers by obliging the manufacturer to state what kind of fertilizer he sells, and in case he does not comply with the rule to pay a fine.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. MASSUE moved that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee, composed of Messrs. Farrow, Orton, Bourbeau, M. BERGERON.

Benoit, Allison (Hants), Scriver, Fisher, Trow and the mover.

INDIAN AGENT'S OFFICE IN TORONTO.

House resumed the debate on Mr. Cook's motion (page 269) respecting Indian Agents in Toronto, &c.

Mr. COOK. When the House took recess last evening, I had just quoted a portion of the Ontario Statutes to show that a gentleman holding a position under this Government or under the Ontario Government, or in the pay of either Government, was not eligible for a seat in the Local Legislature of Ontario. I contend that the appointment of Mr. H. H. Thompson, by the Order in Council passed on the 31st of January, 1883, disqualified him from being a member of the Local Legislature. If this be the case—and there can be no doubt it is—it was, to say the least, a great impropriety on the part of the Government to make this appointment, because they must have known at the time that Mr. Thompson was to be a candidate for the Local House. I think the word impropriety a very mild expression. I should say it was an outrage on the electorate of the county of East Simcoe to place them in the position that one of the candidates for that county for the Local Legislature was not eligible; and had he been elected he could not have taken his seat, thus rendering necessary a new election and entailing consequently considerable expense on the people. This gentleman, however, was not elected. I stated on a former occasion, in speaking on this motion, that I was surprised Mr. Thompson should have declared to the constituency that he had not received any appointment at the hands of the Dominion Government. Is it possible that these gentlemen here in Ottawa, in council assembled, passed, without Mr. Thompson's knowledge, that Order in Council appointing him to that position? I would not venture to say whether or not they apprised him of it, but I believe I am only saying what the people thought when this appointment was made known, when I say that Mr. Thompson must have been well aware it had been made. Now, Sir, the two points that I wish to convey to this House in reference to Mr. Thompson's candidature, and in reference to the removal of the office from Toronto to Ottawa, are these, that the expense to the country has been increased to the tune of from $7,000 to $10,000 a year by the removal of the office, and that the appointment of Mr. Thompson was, to say the least, a very injudicious act. I stated on a former occasion that the cost would be about $7,000, but there are, in connection with appointments of that kind, incidental expenses which I took no account of; for instance, fuel and light and house rent and so forth, have to be furnished to the recipients of the offices, in addition to the salary, which would amount to, I suppose, in at least $200 more. That would bring the increased expenditure up to about $10,000. But I suppose that the members of this Government will look upon this as a very trivial offence. When they are the dealing with millions, when they are asking people of this country to advance millions upon millions of money for other enterprises, they will think that the people have almost forgotten the small sums that have been increased by the reckless management of the Government of the day; but I doubt if the people will forget, at the time of another general election, to call these gentlemen to account for this and other expenses that have been increased in the government of the country. I stated on a former occasion that one of the parties who had received the appointment of Indian Agent, had also been appointed the Indian Land Agent some years before. I think, if they found it necessary and had decided upon the removal of the office from Toronto, it would have been a prudent act, on the part of the Government, to have given the appointments to these parties, and so combine the office of Indian Land Agent with that of Indian Agent. I also stated that at Parry Sound there was an Indian Land Agency which did very effective service. Captain Skeene, the gentleman managing that office at Parry Sound, is a very efficient officer, a man who is capable of doing a great deal more work than he has to do. He only has to look after a few Indians on the north shore up as far as Shewanigog, or a little further perhaps, up as far as French River. But the duties at the point are very light indeed. He does attend to the payment of the Indians as well as to looking after the land. His duties might have been extended to the east as far as Christian Islands. It is as near, to all intents and purposes, as Penetanguishene is. The distance may probably be a little greater, but the facilities for reaching this point are very much better than they would be from Penetanguishene, because, from Penetanguishene to the Christian Islands there is an open space which in heavy storms even large vessels cannot reach. I shall look forward with some interest to this return coming down. I do not know but that more gentlemen may have been appointed to the position than I have discovered. As I have already stated, it has been intimated to me that nine of these gentlemen received appointments to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of the office from Toronto to Ottawa, but that may be increased to a very much larger number. I do not know, and I shall not be in a position to know and to tell the country, through this House, until the papers come down, what the extra cost will be with which the people are saddled by the removal of this office. I will say nothing further upon the matter. I did intend to make other statements, which I will not do in the absence of the Premier, who, I see, is not in his seat to-night. Therefore, I will simply place in your hands the Resolution which I move.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will not oppose the granting of this Address, but I am sure that when the papers come down, the hon. gentleman will see that there were good reasons why the change took place.

Motion agreed to.

MAJOR GENERAL LUARD.

Mr. MULOCK, on the Order being called for the following motion, of which he had given notice, namely: For copies of all letters of complaint respecting the conduct of Major General Luard, at Cobourg or elsewhere, sent by Lieutenant Colonel A. T. Williams, M.P., or any person or persons to the Government, or any member thereof, together with copies of all replies thereto, and of all documents and other correspondence in the possession of the Government relating to such matters, said: I would ask the Government to allow this notice to stand, for the reason that the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright) desired to be present when this motion was made, and is unable to be present this evening.

Mr. SPEAKER. Notices of motion cannot stand unless at the request of the Government.

Mr. CARON. If the hon. gentleman wishes the notice may stand.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand the hon. Minister of Militia, on behalf of the Government, requests that it shall stand. That will save the necessity of renewing the notice.

PORT STANLEY HARBOUR.

Mr. WILSON moved for copies of all statements in reference to the collection and expenditure of the revenue of the Port Stanley Harbour, showing in detail the tolls collected on all articles and in what localities, and for what works expenditure has been incurred made by the Great Western Railway Company under the terms of their lease of that harbour, and all reports of Government engineers in regard to the condition of that harbour, and the manner in which the Company has fulfilled its obligations under its lease since the date of the last return. He said: I would like, with the permission of the Government and the House, to add also the following words: "Also, copies of all reports of Government engineers of surveys with reference to the Port Stanley Harbour."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must say to the hon. gentleman that this would be a new motion, because it refers to another subject. The first subject refers to Inland Revenue; this refers to my Department. The hon. gentleman had better give notice of it: I do not think I will object to it.

Mr. WILSON. In any case I may be allowed to give some reasons why I ask for the information that this motion calls for. It will be remembered that a number of years ago a railway called the London and Port Stanley Railway was built from the city of London to Port Stanley. At that time the Government granted a lease of the harbour to the Railway Company, on condition that the Company should expend the tolls and revenue derived from the port in keeping the harbour in sufficient repair and good condition; and it also entered into an agreement to make annual returns to the Government, showing the manner in which the money had been expended, and for what purpose it was so expended. I believe that during the time the London and Port Stanley road was run as an independent road, they did, to a certain extent, make these annual returns; but when the road was leased to the Great Western it passed under the control of that Company, and I have been unable to ascertain from the public records whether since then so full returns have been made as formerly. Since it passed into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company I do not know whether they have made, as a rule, the necessary returns. I feel that it is of very great importance indeed that we should have these returns, in order to know whether the money received by the Company has been expended at that point. It is well known that this port, being situated about midway between the East and the West, is of very great importance to the mariners going up and down those lakes. I suppose, Sir, that if the Government had seen the importance of this port, and could have seen their way clearly to expend a certain amount of money for the repairs of the harbour, the people during the year gone by would have had to deplore far less loss of life upon that lake than has unfortunately occurred. Whatever the faults of the Government may be, and however bad we may regard it, I think, Sir, it is much better that it should have possession of these ports and that the Government should look after their efficiency, instead of allowing them to remain in charge of private corporations. I may say here that I regret exceedingly that we have not had full and ample information brought down in order to ascertain whether this port is kept in as efficient a condition as it ought to have been kept. If everything has not been done that the importance that the port required, then an absolute necessity rests upon the Government of taking some further course to put that harbour into a proper condition. I therefore move this Resolution with the hope that I shall get all the information necessary, and with the hope that the Government may see whether they cannot make that harbour more efficient than it is at the present time, or at least, if something else cannot be done to protect the poor people there.

Motion agreed to.

DREDGING AT JEMSEG, N.B.

Mr. KING, in moving for copies of report of surveys made with a view to dredging at Jemseg, Queen's Co., N.B., and all correspondence relating thereto; also the names of persons employed in making said surveys and the amount paid to each, said: My object in making this motion is to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the importance of completing the work already begun at that place. I may say that previous to Confederation the Local Government of New Brunswick had undertaken the work of dredging the channel at Jemseg, which is the outlet of the Grand Lake and the St. John's River. I may further state that the amount of traffic which is carried on on that lake by sailing vessels and otherwise is very considerable, and that the inconvenience which has been experienced by persons engaged in this commerce, is serious indeed. I think both Governments have spent some money in making improvements at that place. A year or two ago application was made to this Government to complete the work and last Session the sum of $5,000 was placed in the Estimates to be expended, as I supposed, during the past summer at that particular point. I may say, too, Mr. Speaker, that the disappointment which was felt by the people in the neighbourhood was very great in consequence of the very great loss and inconvenience to which they were subjected for want of this improvement in the channel at Jemseg. It is a fact that during the whole of the past season a large number of vessels were engaged in trading between that lake and ports in the United States, making trips which occupied fully a month, and on account of the condition of that channel, they were obliged in many cases to take much smaller cargoes, and during part of the season they could only take two-thirds of a cargo. I am surprised that the Minister should not have thought it desirable to have carried out dredging at Jemseg. The Government have at their disposal in New Brunswick a steam dredge, very suitable for the class of work required to be done in those waters, I refer to the steam dredge "New Dominion." I was anxious to ascertain where that dredge was employed during last season, and on turning up the Report of the Minister of Public Works, I found it was in Nova Scotia waters, across the Bay of Fundy, at Digby, where I do not think it could be very profitably employed. On referring to the same Report I find:—

"On the 12th May, 1883, dredging was commenced at the public wharf at Digby, N.S., and up to the close of the fiscal year, 6,235 cubic yards of clay, blue mud and stone had been removed. Owing to the range of the tide at Digby—from 25 to 30 feet—and the fact that the dredge is arranged to dig to a depth of 18 feet only, about three hours was all the time that could be worked during a tide, hence delay and increased expense."

I am not aware as to how important the work at Digby was, and of course it may have been of great importance. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the dredge should not have been taken from St. John River to Digby, as the representative of that county stands in the same relation to the Government as I occupy. Some special reason must have influenced the Minister in his action, and I am anxious to obtain the report of the surveys made, in order that I may understand how the matter stands. I am very anxious that the Minister should agree to take this subject into consideration and make further enquiries, and I hope he will, if possible, agree to make provision for carrying on the work to which I have referred next year. If he will send the dredge to Jemseg next spring he will find a month's work there, and that it can be occupied its full time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman had been kind enough to inform me that he intended to bring up the question of dredging at Digby in connection with his motion, I would have been able to have answered him. But unfortunately he forgot to mention it, and therefore I am not in a position to state the exact number of days the dredge was employed, why the dredge was employed, whether it was employed all the time, etc. But if the hon. member thinks proper to place another notice on the paper regarding dredging at Digby Pier, I will be able to give him all the information. As he remarks, it cannot have been for political reasons that the dredge in question was sent to Digby Pier, for the county where that pier is situated is represented by an hon. member who sits on the Opposition side of the House, and with him the hon. member for King's is in political accord. If I sent the dredge to Digby it was because it was required there. Perhaps time was lost and more work could have been done elsewhere. That is not our fault. If, owing to the tides, the dredge could not work more than so many hours a day, we should not therefore send it away and abandon the pier, which, being a very important one, should not be neglected. The Government, whether the county where that pier is situated has been represented by a supporter or an opponent in this House, has not neglected that work; and when dredging was required it has been done. In regard to the dredging at Jemseg, the hon. member will see in the reports reasons why the work has not been proceeded with. My attention has been called to the work especially by the hon. Finance Minister, who comes from that Province; but I am not in a position to do what he wishes. I do not say the matter will not be attended to this year; it is now receiving my attention, while I am preparing the work for the year. The hon. gentleman will obtain the papers, and if he wishes more information in regard to the work done at Digby, he has only to place a notice on the paper, and I will give him all the information he requires.

MAILS IN THE COUNTY OF LOTBINIÈRE.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation), in moving for copies of all petitions, correspondence, returns and papers of any nature whatsoever, respecting the establishing of a daily mail service in the parishes of St. Giles, St. Patrick and St. Sylvester, in the County of Lotbinière, said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to remark to the hon. Postmaster General that the mail service is altogether insufficient in the parishes of St. Giles, St. Sylvester and St. Patrick. These three parishes only get their mails three times a week. Besides, the mode of distribution is entirely defective, as is proved beyond doubt by the following facts: The mail arrives at Craig's Road Station at 9:30 p.m., by the Quebec train. The mail carrier starts immediately to go by Craig's Road to the parishes of St. Giles, St. Patrick, St. Sylvester, and as far as Leeds, in the County of Megantic. He comes back the following evening to deliver the mail to the same train, which arrives at 9:30 at Craig's Station, so that the letters and papers of all description take a day's journey to Richmond, and only come back the next morning by the Montreal train, which does not stop at Craig's Station. Thus it happens that the western mail, and that which comes from Montreal, must go down as far as Lévis, to come back only the following evening by the train which only arrives at Craig's Road at 9:30, so that these people only receive their mail two or three days after it has been sent, and it will be easily understood that great inconveniences are the result. I am informed that a couple of years ago the electors of the parishes of St. Patrick and St. Sylvester signed a petition asking that a daily mail via the Quebec Central Railway, be granted to them. This petition was delivered into the hands of the Postmaster General, but the request was never granted. I am also told that, at about the same time, the parish of St. Giles asked for a daily mail, and that those who made the demand were refused. Quite recently—two or three months ago—the three parishes of St. Sylvester, St. Patrick and St. Giles signed joint petitions asking for a daily mail service, and the Government again refused to grant their request. Well, Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty to call the attention of the hon. Postmaster-General to the fact that those three parishes lying on Craig's Road are very important parishes; they are situated on one of the most beautiful sites in the country, and besides they are far advanced in an agricultural point of view. I even think they are further advanced than most of the parishes of the Province of Quebec. There is found there, as in the parish of Leeds, in the county of Megantic, some cattle breeders; I think it is worth while to put up with expense in order to give them a daily mail service. If the hon. Postmaster-General felt disposed to grant my request, I would suggest the following as the easiest and most advantageous mode of distribution. The mail ought to be delivered at Craig's Road at six o'clock in the morning, instead of half-past nine in the evening, on board the train going down from Montreal. Then the mail carrier should start at once and go up to the parishes of St. Patrick, St. Sylvester and St. Giles, to come back again in the afternoon and deliver the mail on board the train coming from Point Lévis at half-past nine. The mail would then go to Richmond to come back to Quebec the next morning. In this manner all these people would receive the western mail at once, and the eastern mail would go to Richmond and return to Quebec on the morning of the following day. In this manner the only time lost would be the night, which would not be an inconvenience, because during those hours people could not get their mail, even if it was at the office. I think this system would be far more advantageous and not any more expensive. It ought even to be more economical, because a mail carrier who travels by day ought to cost less than one who travels by night. Well, if the hon. Postmaster-General wished to establish this mode of distribution and to grant a daily mail service, these people will be satisfied. It is really curious to see that such important parishes should not, to this day, have had the benefit of a daily mail service, and I am satisfied that if the hon. Postmaster-General knew their importance he would not hesitate for one moment in granting them their request, which would simply be doing an act of justice. Therefore, I hope that this demand will be taken into consideration by the Government.

Motion agreed to.

AMHERSTBURG CUSTOM HOUSE AND POST OFFICE.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex), in moving for the reports of architects and all other papers and correspondence in connection with the selection of a site for the Amherstburg Custom House and Post Office, said: I may say that this return is intended to be a supplement to the motion passed the other day, asking for a return showing the lots offered for the purposes of a Custom House and Post Office, in the town of Amherstburg, and the prices at which these lots were offered to the Department of Public Works. I do not think a return of that kind, without any explanation from the architects, who valued the lots, and made a report to the Department, would be at all satisfactory, or be of a sufficiently explanatory character. In 1880, and again in 1881, the question of the erection of a Custom House at this place was pressed on the attention of the Minister of Public Works, and finally, in 1882, an amendment was placed in the Estimates for that purpose. No pretensions have been made that the town is, by its size, entitled to a Post Office, but owing to its position on the main channel of the great chain of lakes, and its importance as a coaling point as well as a point for the purchase of ship supplies, it was considered that it was fairly entitled to a Custom House; and it has been the custom, in such cases, to find accommodation for the Post Office in connection with such a building. The site selected is within 40 yards of the present Post Office, and within less than 400 yards of the building which has been used as a Custom House for the last fifty years. The site is near the river, and it will be found, I believe, by the report of the architects, to have been selected for wise reasons, among them being the convenience of the Custom House to shippers and the owners of vessels touching at that point. It was also found advisable to have it close to the river, for the reason that there was no adequate system of drainage in the town, and no system of waterworks whatever, so that it was essentially necessary that the building should be near the river. Mr. Tracy, an architect from London, Ontario, a gentleman whom I have not the pleasure of knowing, was sent by the Government to inspect the various sites offered. He made a report, and recommended the site which the Government ultimately chose—a property which he valued at from $2,800 to $3,000. About the same time, Mr. Scott, an architect from Windsor, was also employed to enquire into the desirability of selecting that site, or another along the river. He valued it considerably lower—at about $1,800. He advised the necessity of procuring a site near the river, and consulted with the Mayor, Reeve and Councillors of Amherstburg, who were almost unanimously in favour of having a property, either on the side of the river, or close to it. A number of parties were anxious to have the building on their property, in order that they might be benefited by the increased value which it would give their property, but as public buildings are built for the benefit of the public and not of private individuals, these offers, some of which were made at considerably lower rates than the one selected, and which would have been perfectly valueless for the purposes of a Custom House, were not entertained. I think when the papers are brought down, it will be seen that the choice made by the Public Works Department will be fully sustained. I feel quite certain that this choice will be satisfactory to the locality and, what is of more importance, satisfactory to the shippers and those who have occasion to stop there for coaling supplies or other purposes. The hon. leader of the Opposition had occasion to refer, in a speech which he made in the country some time ago, to some remarks of mine, in connection with that building. I have never had an opportunity to refer to his observations before, and while I felt he was justified in the remarks which he made, basing them, as he did, on a report taken from The Mail newspaper, I have only to say that I was misrepresented on that occasion, and did not use the language attributed to me in that report. What I did say in reference to the building was said in jest, and I am quite satisfied that if the hon. gentleman had known that, he would not have made the use he did of my language.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would repeat his joke here.

Mr. PATTERSON. It will scarcely be necessary, I think, to repeat here the remarks made at a jolification which took place just after the elections of 1882. So far as I am concerned and so far as my colleague from the South Riding of Essex is concerned, whatever feeling there might be locally on this subject, we believe that all parties will be thoroughly satisfied that the site chosen was the best one possible for the purposes of the Custom House; and at any rate, we had nothing whatever to do with the selection of the site. That selection was made, as I have stated, by the architects acting independently of each other, and referring their reports to the Chief Architect at Ottawa, who finally decided upon the site. The final decision rests upon that gentleman and also upon the broad shoulders of the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The papers will be brought down. I may say that, so far as I can recollect, the choice of the lot was made on reports from architects who had been sent specially to examine the sites which were offered. The Chief Engineer made a report to me on those reports, and I recommended to my colleagues the site which was ultimately chosen. As my hon. friend says, I suppose I shall carry the weight on my own shoulders if necessary.

SEIZURE OF COAL OIL BARRELS IN ESSEX.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex), in moving for reports and correspondence respecting the seizure of coal oil barrels at Sandwich, Windsor and Walkerville, said: When the complaints respecting those seizures first reached me within the last few days, I thought it was again one of the insidious attacks of my ancient enemy, the Minister of Customs, on certain proclivities of my constituents; but I find that I was wrong, and that these seizures were made under the Inland Revenue laws. These coal oil barrels paid the Customs duties when they were brought in, the coal oil was used, and the barrels were lying in out-houses or sheds; but the zeal and activity of the Inland Revenue officers were so great that they seized them because the brands had not been obliterated upon them. I find that the punishment inflicted on the people for having the barrels in their possession is a fine of from one to ten dollars. I think the Department ought to take care to notify the public of this, because the people who make these complaints have had twenty or thirty barrels taken from them. In writing to me, they complain that they knew nothing whatever of such an enactment; that they had no desire to defraud the revenue in any way, and that they would have taken these stamps or brands off the barrels if they had known that they were committing any offence. Such being the case, I would urge on the Minister of Inland Revenue to deal leniently with these people in this instance, and warn them not to do it again. I do not think they will trouble the hon. gentleman again. There is no desire on the part of any of my constituents to evade the law. We have been so very stringently dealt with by the Minister of Customs and his minions that we have no desire to evade the law, either with respect to Customs or Inland Revenue, particularly the latter. I think, in this case, the fine might be remitted and the barrels returned, and I am satisfied that the present occurrence will prevent any neglect of that kind in the near future.

SALARIES ON THE PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. DAVIES, in moving for a comparative statement showing the names, offices or positions, yearly salary and time of entering the service, of the employés on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, in the following Departments: Superintendent's Office, Road Department, Mechanical Department, Stores Department, Accountant's Office; also, the names and average monthly wages paid to conductors, drivers and station agents on the said respective roads, said: It is believed by the employés of the Island Railway that a very great and unjust discrepancy exists between the wages paid to them and the wages paid to men in similar employment on the Intercolonial Railway. I am not in a position to state to what extent this discrepancy exists, and it is for the purpose of obtaining possession of that information that I move for this return. I shall, of course, have an opportunity at a future time of showing the desirability of removing any such discrepancies, because I am satisfied they will not be approved by the Government or sanctioned by the House. It is unfair that men employed on the Prince Edward Island Railway should be paid only one-half of what persons are paid in the adjoining Province for discharging the same duties. I think we have a right to claim that workmen, particularly those engaged on the railways, who have to pay as much for their living in Prince Edward Island as in the adjoining Province, should be paid at the same rate. We know that men migrate from places where wages are low to places where they are high. On no ground can these discrepancies be justified. I am anxious to know to what extent they exist, and therefore I move for these statements.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no objection to this motion passing, although its tendency is very mischievous. It is calculated to produce discontent and dissatisfaction among the employés of the Government, and although that may be a very interesting occupation for my hon. friend who has made this motion, it is not in the public interest. I will admit at once, frankly, that there is a difference in the salaries paid to the employés of the railway in Prince Edward Island, and those paid to the employés on the Intercolonial Railway; and, I think, I should be quite willing to leave this question to the arbitrament of the hon. gentleman's leader, whose views on a somewhat similar question in this House, I think, will afford the most complete answer to that that could possibly be made to the views the hon. gentleman has propounded. I take exception at once to the statement that similar employment or similar duties, or the offices to which similar duties belong, in different localities, must necessarily be remunerated with exactly the same amount of money. I take the ground that it is my duty, being responsible for the management of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, to obtain the services of competent officials at the lowest rate at which I can obtain them. I deny that the responsibilities of the position or the arduous character of the duties on the Prince Edward Island Railway are at all to be compared to those on the Intercolonial Railway. The one is burdened with a great traffic passing to and fro, and the duties of every person, from the Superintendent down to the humblest official on the road, are much more arduous and responsible than they are on the Prince Edward Island Railway. My hon. friend, I dare say, knows, although he was not in the House at the time, that when I was called to take charge of the Intercolonial Railway, I made a great reduction in the salaries of all the officials of the road, from the highest down to the lowest, because the charge on the Government for the operation of the railway was so great, and the discrepancy between the receipts and the expenditures was so large as to involve the necessity of placing everything on the most economical footing possible. But I stated, at the same time, that whenever we should be able to restore the balance between revenue and expenditure, it would give me the greatest possible pleasure to do the fullest justice in my power to the employés of the road; and when the time happily came when the road was no longer a burthen to the country, and the receipts balanced the expenditure, the old salaries were restored. On the Prince Edward Island Railway, as the hon. gentleman knows, notwithstanding the best efforts that could be made by the Department, the discrepancy is still very great. He knows that while we have been enabled to keep a small balance on the right side of the ledger in the operation of the Intercolonial Railway, the result is very different in the operation of the Prince Edward Island Railway, and the business of the Island is being carried on at a great expense to the taxpayers of this country. Under these circumstances, I think the hon. gentleman will hardly maintain that we should pay to the Superintendent of the Island Railway the same salary that we pay to the Superintendent of the Intercolonial; yet his argument would lead to that.

since he maintains that the same rate of expenditures should rule on the Island Railway as on the Intercolonial. I join issue with the hon. gentleman on the question altogether, especially in the existing state of things. In putting the road in first-class condition, as I am happy to say it is, and keeping it properly supplied with rolling stock and making, as we are, large additional expenditure for extending the railway to Cape Traverse, there is no principle of justice, in my judgment, why we should pay to the employés on the Prince Edward Island Railway larger wages than those at which we can obtain competent and efficient men.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not wish the hon. Minister to have the impression that I contend that the same salary should be paid to the Superintendent of the Island Railway as that which we pay the Superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway. I advanced no such proposition. I understand quite well that the duties and responsibilities of those two gentlemen are very different; that the duties of the one are much more onerous and arduous than that of the other and demand a greater salary, but the proposition I do advance is this, that as regards the labour of men whose work is to a large extent merely mechanical, who are hired by the day to do a certain amount of work, it is preposterous to assert that they should be paid $2 per day in Moncton and only $1 a day in Charlottetown. I do not think the hon. Minister desires that a man should receive only 80 or 90 cents a day in Charlottetown, when, if he crosses the Straits, he will receive for exactly the same work $1 a day in Moncton. I do not think the fact that the hon. member is trying to carry out the terms of the union by building the railway to Cape Traverse, which necessarily involves a large expenditure, justifies him in keeping the wages of men on the Island below the rates paid those doing the same work in the neighboring Province.

THE FISHERY ACT.

Mr. O'BRIEN, in moving that the petition of D. W. Post, and others, interested in the fisheries of Georgian Bay, Lake Huron and Lake Superior; praying for amendments to the Fishery Act, presented to the House, and read and received on the 7th day of February, 1884, be referred to a Select Committee, consisting of Messrs. Dawson, Sproule, McNeill, Cameron (Huron), Lister, McCarthy, Allen and the mover; with power to send for persons, papers and records, said: I make this motion to a great extent on the allegation contained in the petition itself, which I think justifies me in saying that our fishermen of the upper lakes labour under very great difficulties. They state that:

"The large fish are not now found in numbers sufficient to encourage shore fishing, and fishermen have to fish from 20 to 30 miles from shore, with larger boats and more costly nets and appliances, than in earlier days."

It amounts to this, that these fishermen, in their own protection, are compelled to make the allegation that, under the existing system of fishing and the existing Fishery Act, the in-shore fisheries on Georgian Bay, Lakes Huron and Superior are being destroyed, and they are now compelled to go further from shore and use larger boats, requiring larger capital. There are a great many other questions concerning this subject to which I drew the attention of the House last Session. The question of the size of the nets is one, of course, requiring careful investigation, and also that of the protection of the fish. The latter question is one, I think, upon which the regulations of the Department can hardly be perfect, because great doubts exist on the north shore as to whether the close season has been properly ascertained. Great improvements might be effected in the method of protecting the fisheries. I pointed out last Session that the present system of naming inspectors in inland places is altogether ineffective and that the whole of the fisheries on the north shores of Lake Huron and Georgian Bay are practically without any protection, the result being precisely what is alleged in the petition. The greatest trouble in dealing with this question arises from the fact that while we, to some extent, harass our fishermen with restrictions in order to preserve the fish, the fishermen on the other side of the lakes are free from any restrictions. They use pound nets and nets of all sorts without any restriction whatever. The consequence is that the fish are destroyed on the American shore and the scarcity there extends over the whole of our inland waters. These fisheries are too important to allow them to be entirely destroyed, if their destruction can by any means be prevented, and in making this motion I have the support of every hon. member representing the fisheries on our shores of Lakes Superior, Huron and Georgian Bay, including Algoma. If we appoint this Fishery Committee, they will probably be able to collect from independent sources information of great value, and may be able to suggest some means of preventing the destruction of fish. The time has come when the matter should be taken seriously into consideration and an effort should be made to induce the several States on the other side to enter into some mutual arrangement with us for the preservation of the fish, and thus prevent our fishermen from being subjected to the great disadvantages under which they now labour. I would humbly urge on the hon. Minister that if he thinks proper to allow this committee to be appointed, information of great value would be obtained. The evidence of fishermen could be taken on the subject, and satisfactory regulations could hardly fail to be suggested. I do not wish to reflect on the manner in which the regulations have hitherto been carried out, but I hope some improvement may be effected. I think the facts I have stated fully justify a most searching enquiry, whether it be carried on by the Department itself or by a committee of this House. I am sorry that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), who takes a deep interest in this question, and who had intended to speak on it, is not in his place, but I think the facts I have stated, and the facts which are within the knowledge of other hon. gentlemen in this House, will fully justify me in making this motion, which I hope will meet with the acceptance of the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, it is of great importance that something should be done in this matter to satisfy the fishermen of the Georgian Bay and Lake Huron. Complaints have, I believe, been advanced by them for a number of years in reference to the position they occupy, as they say this Government has paid so much attention and so much money to the fishermen of the Eastern Provinces, while the fisheries on our lakes are of equal importance to the country. There are several hundred fishermen on these lakes, and the meshes which they have been in the habit of using have been  $4\frac{1}{2}$ , while the law now insists that the mesh must be at least 5 inches. Now, these fishermen are men who have a good deal of capital invested in boats and nets. The nets are of such a character that they are used one season, and then a great many are repaired and carried on the next season, and it would be a very great hardship to them to have to throw all these aside at any season of the year, and to purchase new nets, which have to be made in England and ordered six months in advance, to be made up and used for the spring fishing. Complaints are also made by them that the American fishermen use any size of mesh, and that they can fish with a smaller mesh than our men can. I understand, however, that the whole complaint has been caused by some of our Dominion Inspectors in the cities, who have found that fish sent from these waters to those cities for sale have been smaller than should have been caught, and complaint has been made to the Department here, that these fishermen were using nets which should not be allowed. Now, I understand that the fishermen say that these small fish are caught in what we call pound nets, that is, nets that are set in deep water and whose mesh is much smaller than  $4\frac{1}{2}$  inches. I recommend this committee to enquire into the complaints of these fishermen, and see if they are right. If these small fish are caught in these pound nets, measures should be taken to prevent their being worked in our water. They also complain that the American fishermen come into our waters, set these pound nets on our shores, and carry off the fish which belong to us into the United States. If these reports are true, I believe the committee should make enquiry, and report to this House, and set this matter at rest; and I hope this House will grant this committee, which is so much needed to satisfy these poor, hard-working men in that part of the country.

Mr. LISTER. Mr. Speaker, representing a county on the lakes, a county in which the fishing industry is carried on to a very large extent, I feel it incumbent on me to make a remark or two in reference to this motion. I do not intend to take up the time of the House by saying very much, but simply to say a few words supplementary to the remarks of my hon. friend who has spoken; and, in what I say, I wish the hon. the Minister of Fisheries to understand that I do not intend for a moment to reflect upon the management of his Department, but I feel that if the fishermen of this country have any complaints it is the duty of this Parliament to listen to them, and, if well founded, to redress them. I have no doubt that, as far as the regulations of the Department are concerned, as to the size of the nets, the fishermen of the inland waters of this country are suffering to a considerable extent. It is true, as the hon. gentleman from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has stated, that the mesh is too large for the fish they are now able to catch. It would be in the interest of the fishermen, and in the interest of the people generally, that the size of the nets should be reduced. There is another thing which has been brought to the attention of this House, and it is the use of these pound nets. I believe that, under the law as it now exists, it is unlawful to use these pound nets. We do know, however, as a matter of fact, that they are extensively used in the United States, and the result is a needless waste of fish. Anyone who understands pound nets can understand how the fish are wasted, those which are too small being injured so as to be utterly valueless. I believe there is a law in this country against using these nets, but that law is not in force in the United States, and as long as they use them, and our fishermen do not, I believe the result will be that the supply of fish will be largely diminished in this country, unless steps are taken to prevent the use of these nets. In addition to this law, we have very good laws regulating the fisheries, but in the United States I believe the laws are very defective. I believe it would be in the interests of the inland fisheries in this country that the laws should be uniform on both sides of the line. I feel that, by the efforts of the committee which is proposed by my hon. friend, representations might be made by the Government, based upon evidence which this committee might be able to obtain, that might have the effect of redressing or removing this grievance. This industry is one of very great importance to this country. No one has any idea of the size of it or of the amount of money invested in it unless he has gone where these fisheries are to be found. It is an industry which, as the Government fosters everything else, I am sure they will be happy to foster. If these men have grievances, it is the duty of this Parliament, as I have already said, to hear them, and I do not know of any better mode to bring these grievances before the attention of Parliament, than by the committee proposed by my hon. friend from Muskoka. I feel that the hon. Minister of Marine will not object to the motion, and I scarcely think he will object, as the effect may be to benefit the people immediately interested in this business, and in that way, benefit the country at large.

Mr. McLELAN. I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, at the hon. gentleman moving in this matter, as I am aware that the fishermen of the various constituencies are continually pressing upon their representatives and upon the Department that facilities should be given to them for larger catches of fish. I have been continually pressed for the extension of the fishing season at various times. I may mention that within a few weeks, the fishermen in one of the counties of the Maritime Provinces, have been pressing for an extension of time to catch a certain description of fish. Before granting their request, I felt it my duty to gather what information I could upon that point, and I find that to accede to their wishes would mean the virtual destruction of that fish. The fishermen were pressing to get another week to catch a kind of fish that is very much sought after in the market, and at the same time there were unsold and on hand in that county, 500 tons of this small fish, enough to supply the market of America for the present season. That is an instance of the efforts fishermen are continually making to get an extension of time to catch all the fish they possibly can, regardless of the effect it may have upon the fisheries in future years. I am, therefore, not surprised that my hon. friend has presented his petition and has made this motion, which has been supported by other hon. gentlemen representing fishing constituencies, for I know something of the pressure that is brought to bear upon members by fishermen. Although the hon. gentleman has not favoured me with a copy of that petition, I gather from the remarks made that they seek permission to use a smaller mesh than the law now permits in the lakes. I think the law fixing the size of the mesh in Canada was first passed in 1858; it stood for seven years, and then a smaller mesh was permitted for a few years, but it was found to work destruction to the fisheries, and ultimately the law was changed and a 5 inch mesh was again substituted. Now, the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Cockburn) says that the in-shore fisheries are comparatively destroyed, and that very few fish are now caught without going out further into the lakes. Now, the House will see that with the 5 inch mesh there has been what may be regarded as a destruction of the in-shore fisheries, and that the better fish are caught at a distance from the shore; consequently, if the prayer of this petition were granted and a smaller size permitted to be used, the effect would be more speedily to sweep the fish entirely from the lakes. Now, the great object we have in view should be the preservation of our fisheries; they should be used and not abused, and from all the information I can gather, to reduce the size of the mesh would just hasten the entire destruction of the lake fisheries, which, as the hon. gentlemen opposite have said, is an industry of very great importance, and is pursued by a large number of men. I have in my possession a letter addressed to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, of which I will read an extract, as showing the importance of the fish industry in the lakes:

"DEAR SIR,—In answer to your verbal enquiry, I beg to state that, I have been engaged fishing on Lake Huron, Georgian Bay, Detroit River and Lake Erie for the last sixteen years; that I employ on an average 200 men, and have a capital of $200,000 engaged in the fishing business, of which $160,000 is invested in steamers, nets, buildings and plant connected with the fishing business; that during the whole of this period I have never used anything but 5 inch mesh, and that I found it not only the cheapest but the safest mode of catching large merchantable fish."

Some idea of the value of the lake fisheries may be gathered from the fact that one single man is giving employment to 200 men, and uses a capital of $200,000. The House will therefore see that an industry of so much importance deserves and receives from the Department the closest attention, and requires that the best means be taken to preserve it and maintain it at its present high standard.

The Department is continually gathering information from those who are practically engaged in the lake fisheries, and those who buy and sell fish, as to the best means to be adopted for the preservation of that important industry, and I think there is no information which a committee could gather in the limited time of a Parliamentary Session which is not already in the possession of the Department, and which is being, from time to time, acted upon by the Department. Reference was made by the hon. member who moved the Address, to the fact that American fishermen have destroyed their fisheries. That is true. They had no restrictions, neither as to time nor mode of fishing, nor size of nets, and their fisheries, as the hon. gentleman has stated, are comparatively cleaned out. The reason why this has been permitted to go on is that the Federal Government in the United States does not attempt to control the fisheries; that is left to each State, and the different States have not taken up the matter until they have found the fisheries destroyed. One of the States adjoining our territory has now a Bill before the Legislature of a more restrictive character than any law or regulation we have on this side of the water. If that Bill should become the law of the State, the American fisheries will be greatly improved and our fishermen will not be able to complain that the American fishermen are unrestricted. It is for the benefit of the fishermen and the fisheries that there should be restrictions, both as to time of fishing and size of mesh. Our officers have not been, in times past, so strict in enforcing the law respecting the size of mesh as they should have been, and in some localities, perhaps in the locality to which the hon. gentleman refers, the size of mesh was gradually reduced down to  $4\frac{1}{2}$  or  $4\frac{3}{4}$  inches; and our attention having been called to that, we have instructed our inspectors to see that the fishermen return to the lawful size of mesh, namely 5 inches. We do not mean to force the fishermen to return to that standard by any arbitrary means. We know that some of the poor fishermen have invested considerable sums in nets with  $4\frac{3}{4}$  inch mesh, and it is proposed that these shall be used for the present season, until 1885, and that all new nets purchased must be of the legal size. I suppose it is the fact that the Department called on the inspectors to look after this matter more closely, that has led the fishermen to move in favour of a change in the law. But I think that all hon. members who know anything of the lake fisheries, of their value and the enormous quantities of fish taken, even with the present size of mesh, will admit that the fisheries should not be wholly ruined and destroyed; and from the experience of the Department, and my own experience, gathered during the short time I have been at its head, I am satisfied that if we keep on reducing the size of mesh we shall destroy our fisheries. If the hon. gentleman will visit the Department we will be able to give him such information as will satisfy him that it would be unwise to reduce the size of the mesh, and that it is not in the interests of the fishermen themselves and of the country which is dependent on a supply of fresh fish, that there should be any change made. The hon. gentleman should be content with such information as we would be able to afford him in the Department, where we are gathering it day by day by all the means at our command, and this will satisfy him that the proposed Committee is unnecessary. Under these circumstances, I hope the motion will be withdrawn.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have listened with some interest to the explanations given by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I think there is no subject at present under the consideration of Parliament of more interest to the country than that which is contained in the motion. The explanations given by the hon. Minister are just such explanations as I would have given, with the slight information I possess of what the fisheries are to-day, or which I would have given when I had the honour to preside over that Department. Everyone knows that no scale of regulations which the Department of Marine and Fisheries could prepare, would be acceptable to the fishermen throughout Canada, whether on the Atlantic Coast or on the great lakes. The regulations which are in existence to-day are regulations based upon years of experience of able men connected with the Department, and they are not regulations which can be made uniform from one end of the country to the other. In each district certain kinds of fish are caught, and the officers have, from time to time, during a long period of years, furnished the Department with material information, which has enabled it to frame regulations suited to the particular localities and classes of fish caught. The hon. gentleman hit me rather hard in the course of his remarks, without specially mentioning my name, and I feel bound to answer what he said. It has been my duty within the last three or four days to present a petition to the hon. Minister from about 500 of the fishermen of my county engaged in the smelt fishery. That industry contributes an immense revenue to the people in my county. The petitioners, numbering as I have stated 400 or 500, represented that owing to the shortness of the season and the open character of the fall, they were unable to utilize the full time, and they asked to have the time extended so as to be able to fish to the end of the present month. The time will expire to-morrow, and I have urged upon the Minister that he should grant its prayer on the ground that these respectable and industrious people were deprived, from the fact that ice had not formed in the early months of the season, and during a portion of the time allotted to the fishery, and therefore no hardship could accrue from such time being added to the end of the season. But when the Minister furnished me with information, and I subsequently obtained similar information myself, that there were in stock, prepared for shipment to New York, Boston, Baltimore, Montreal and other markets, no less than 500 tons of those fish; and that, as my hon. friend represented that the officers who are engaged in the performance of duties in that section of the country had represented to him that the immense quantities of this fish that were taken were likely to deplete in a few years the supply of food for the larger fishes which frequent those rivers, I felt that my hon. friend was right in refusing to grant the request that was made, and I had reluctantly to tell my numerous friends who had applied to me that the hon. Minister of the Department had refused to comply. Within the last fifteen minutes, and before my hon. friend had commenced his speech, I had sent that telegram, and I felt bound also to say to them that I thought he was justified in the course he had pursued. Sir, we all know that it is a matter of great interest to us to protect and encourage the particular industries in the sections from which we come, and we know that it is a very disagreeable thing to have to refuse, especially to a large number of our constituents, a request which, on the face of it seems reasonable; and we know with what peculiar suspicion every request that is made and not complied with, is viewed by the people who make it. Sir, in view of the responsible position of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to-day, looking at the importance of the interest which he has to guard, taking into consideration, not alone the needs of this year or the next, but the needs of the future, in a great country such as ours, I feel it is the duty of this House, when the hon. gentleman has made the statement which he has made, and given his reasons so frankly and clearly, and which I, from my experience of seven or eight years in the administration of that office, so heartily and fully endorse—I feel, I say, that it is the duty of this House, before they appoint committees or commissions, to consider the explanations which he has given and the statements

he has made, and which, in my judgment, seem thoroughly conclusive. Sir, my hon. friend has made a statement relative to the size of the meshes. Who is there more likely to give an impartial opinion in relation to what ought to be the size of the meshes which should be used in the catch of a particular kind of fish, and who is more likely to be correct, than the experienced officers who have had the responsibility of advising the Department in relation thereto, who have had the experience of years in that work? Sir, I know it is a most ungracious and unpleasant duty for the overseers of the fisheries in those localities to have to refuse what the fishermen regard as a reasonable request, or to do something that may seem to them unreasonable in relation to restrictions which are so necessary. Sir, we know that the reduction of one-eighth, or one-sixteenth, and more particularly one-half, an inch in the meshes, in some quarters, makes an enormous difference in the amount of catch, and an enormous destruction of fish. It would be unwise, in my opinion, particularly as the Session is so far advanced, to go to the expense of appointing a committee to take testimony and receive evidence—evidence which must be brought from all parts of this Dominion at an enormous expense. My friends on the Georgian Bay, and upon Lakes Huron and Superior, must know that if such a commission as this is instituted, in the eastern portion of this Dominion, all along the St. Lawrence and on the shores of the Gulf, all around the coast of the Bay of Fundy, extending from Calais to Labrador, there are people with complaints and grievances, and they will feel that they should put in their testimony and have their witnesses here to give evidence. It would be a work of months to accept every statement, and to hear all those witnesses who will desire to come before this House. Sir, if anything of that kind is to be done, if it is felt by this House, or by any hon. gentleman in the House, that the Department does not possess all the information it ought to possess to enable it to lay before us a statement of the facts and to deal with them properly in the execution of the duties devolving upon the Department, the proper way will be to appoint a commission to take evidence, not alone from one of the western lakes, but from all of them; to take evidence over the whole Dominion; to have the thing dealt with thoroughly before we attempt to paralyze the hon. gentleman's Department or to interfere with the operation of the officers in the execution of existing regulations. If any thing of that kind has to be done, if there is to be all this information laid before the House, I would say to my hon. friend that I am not sure that it would not be desirable that it should be done in view of new regulations, and in view of contingencies that are likely to arise at a not very remote period in connection with our fishery relations with the people on the other side of the border. We find that notice has been given of the repeal of the existing Treaty, in relation to the privileges which Americans have enjoyed, of fishing on our coasts; and it would be extremely desirable that, in view of a possible, and a more than probable, effort to create new arrangements, that information of that kind should be obtained. It certainly would be desirable that the most perfect information should be obtained as to our own domestic arrangements; and if any thing is to be done, it should be done, I would suggest, by means of a commission, which should draw information from every portion of the Dominion, which could go through the country, if necessary, from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific, getting its information from every possible source, not merely from the fishery superintendents, but from the fishermen themselves, whose evidence would have to be filtered through the criticisms of the experienced men connected with the Department. I am not going to place myself in opposition to the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution, but if he desires to get that information, it should not be of a partial character, and it should not be hastily submitted, or hastily considered. If not obtained by the means I have suggested, some other means should be adopted, so that the fullest information could be laid before the House, in order that the matter might be dealt with after due and calm deliberation. Reference has been made to some of the reasons why the fisheries have not been as fruitful in some portions of the country as they were in former years. We know that in all the lakes, bordering on the American coasts, while we have protected our fisheries, they have not been so well protected by the American people. And speaking of our own fisheries, I say that the manner in which the fisheries are protected in this country is a credit to us; and though it may be supposed that I am reflecting some little credit on myself in saying so, I will, at the risk of being considered egotistical, pay this tribute, not only to my own administration of affairs, but to the gentleman who succeeded me, and to the gentleman who now occupies the position of head of the Marine and Fisheries Department, notwithstanding that complaints have been made from one quarter and another. What we have had to contend against all along, has been the want of protection on the other side of the border. While our fisheries have been protected all along our coasts, while our fishermen have limited the size of their meshes, the extent of their nets, the manner of killing the fish, the traps and weapons by which they are caught or killed, on the other side of the line they have been practically unrestrained in these respects. Here the central Government at Ottawa controls the regulation of our fisheries, but we find that, on the other side of the border, the separate States deal with their control and regulation, the Federal Government having no control except the very general control, required for the proper administration and protection of the States, which they cannot positively and absolutely control. We find that along Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, the River St. Lawrence, Lake Memphramagog and other Lakes and waters on the borders of the United States, while the people of the country are using all sorts of means of destroying their fish, we cannot protect ours as fully or effectually as we could if we had full control over those waters, as we have over waters in which the control is undivided. That is the great practical difficulty, and if we are ever to have a perfect protection of these fisheries, it must be by some arrangement with the States bordering on waters which partially flow along the United States, and partially on our own shores, by which we should endeavour to press on them the necessity of uniting in a common measure, as to the size and character of the nets, the method of taking these fish, and the seasons for taking them, so that there may be a mutual protection, which will result in perpetuating one of the greatest industries of this country. I may take this opportunity of telling those gentlemen who, not many years ago, spoke of the Intercolonial Railway with something like derision—spoke of it as running in the wrong place, and as of little benefit to the country—what it has done in the country which I have the honor to represent. Before the establishment of that road, the only use which was made of the small fish caught in winter—that is the smelt, which are not longer than seven or eight or nine inches—was in many cases, to manure the land with them, and thus to waste that provident food which a bountiful Almighty has supplied us with, and destroy the natural food of the larger fish. To-day, I could astound this House if I were to tell—as I hope to be able to do before the Session closes—the amount and the value of these fish. I was going to say that they amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars, but they certainly amount to an enormous sum, along the whole coast of the Bay of Miramichi, including Miramichi, Richibucto, Bathurst, Restigouche and other places. Before the Intercolonial Railway was built, these fish were not worth a cent, because we could not transport them to the markets of the world; but to-day we are supplying the markets of Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, and Boston, as well as the inland States of the Union, and the large cities of our own country. There is in store in the county from which I come, according to information which has been sent to the Department, something like 500 or 600 tons of these fish, awaiting the exigencies of the market, so that they may not overstock it, but regulate it in such a way that they may send them forward, as the calls of the market demand and, get prices to suit them. This is one of the most important interests which this House could deal with, and I am glad to have had the opportunity of bearing my testimony to the manner in which the affairs of the Department have been administered by its officers, as well as to the correctness and soundness of judgment which the hon. gentleman at the head of the Department has pursued, in relation to the question of protecting these fisheries; and when refusing requests made by gentleman like myself, who sometimes, in our enthusiasm to meet the wishes of our people, are perhaps apt to seek for concessions which, in his cooler judgment and knowing all the surrounding circumstances, he considers it would be unwise to grant.

Mr. ALLEN. As I am interested in the fisheries of Georgian Bay, I should like to know the name of the party who is extensively engaged in fisheries, who gave the information to the Minister.

Mr. McLELAN. His name is Mr. Gauthier.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Before withdrawing the motion, I should like to be allowed to say one or two words. I think the House is indebted to me, to some extent at any rate, for having given them the opportunity of hearing the eloquent speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Marine; and I think the hon. gentleman is perhaps also indebted to me for having given him the opportunity of making it. I think I owe an apology to the hon. Minister for having, owing to want of knowledge of the procedure or rules of this House, happened to present that petition without having first shown it to him. I am sure he will believe me when I say that no discourtesy was intended. The fact is, that this matter was in the hands of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) before he was compelled to leave, and he handed it over to me and suggested the course of proceeding which I subsequently followed. I think the hon. Minister of Marine somewhat misrepresents my position on this question. He said that I, by no means, acquiesced in the prayer of the petition. What I did say was, that I thought the matter required investigation, because during the period that these 5 feet meshes have been in force, these fisheries have been almost destroyed. If the Government think it would not be in accordance with the practice of the Government to grant this motion, I, of course, accede to their request, and withdraw it. There was one statement made by the hon. Minister of Marine, which will be satisfactory to the fishermen concerned, and that is that they will be permitted for the present season to use the same sized meshes that they are at present using. The nets they are now using have been a long time in use, and if there is to be a change, there should be notice given of it, which is required not only by the fishermen, but by those who manufacture the nets. At the request of the hon. Minister, and believing that the Government will give the protection to the fishermen which I desire for them as much as any one else, I ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

COST OF PRINTING AND ADVERTISING.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for a return of all sums paid by the Government to the Gazette Publishing Company of Montreal, for printing, advertising or any work done or material furnished during the years 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1883, in detail.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to add after the word "Montreal," the words "and other newspapers of the Dominion," and also the years 1874, 1875, 1876 and 1877, so that we shall have a complete statement for the past ten years.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no objection. I simply want to get information, and I am quite willing to consent to the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. Minister promise that that information will be brought down within the next year? Of a great many returns moved for last session, forty were not laid on the Table when the House met. If the hon. gentleman makes that addition with the intention of giving the information this Session, I am sure my hon. friend will be only too glad to get it. But if I know anything about the matter, it will occupy about a dozen clerks for the next six months.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt, it will occupy some clerks, but the hon. gentleman, I am sure, cannot object to getting the full information. I think it will be worth all the labour we shall give, and the hon. gentleman may be sure that we shall take all the pains and give all the despatch possible to prepare this return.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

SURVEYS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved that the items of surveys chargeable to Capital Account in the Public Accounts for 1882, be referred to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what description of surveys he refers to?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The items of Dominion Surveys chargeable to Capital Account, amounting to about $560,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Land surveys in the North-West?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; that is the only item of surveys chargeable to Capital.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR RETURNS.

Motions for the following Returns were severally agreed to:—

Statement showing, in separate columns, the names of the several principal officials in the service of the Government on the Intercolonial Railway; their ages, origin, place of residence, nature of employment, amount of present yearly salary, date of entering the service, and salary at date of appointment.—(Mr. Landry, Montmagny.)

Return showing the number of days and the dates upon which the Intercolonial Board of Commissioners held sittings, from the 1st day of January, 1883, to the 31st day of January, 1884; the number of times each member was absent from meetings, the monthly allowances paid to each member, whether salary, travelling expenses or otherwise, and the total amount paid to each during the time above named; also dates upon which meetings were held outside of Ottawa, and where.—(Mr. McMullen.)

Return of the number and names of the Immigration Agents employed during the year 1883, the dates of their appointment, the length of time served during the year, the salary paid, and the expenses allowed; also the number still employed, their salary and expenses.—(Mr. McMullen.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 10:35, o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 15th February, 1884.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were severally introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 92) to incorporate the Traders' Bank of Canada.—(Mr. Beaty.)

Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Loyal Orange Association of British America.—(Mr. Cameron, Victoria.) On division.

Bill (No. 94) to empower the Sovereign Fire Insurance Company to relinquish their charter and to provide for the winding up of their affairs.—(Mr. Mackenzie.)

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:—

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I acknowledge with thanks the Address you have loyally adopted in answer to the Speech with which I opened the Session, and I rely with confidence on the assurance that the important measures submitted to you will receive your careful and full consideration.

LANSDOWNE.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 13th February, 1884.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOAN.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that from and after this day, the Order of the Day for the consideration of the Resolutions moved by Sir Charles Tupper, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, shall have precedence next after Routine Proceedings, and the disposal of Questions put by Members.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I trust the hon. gentleman does not propose to force this motion through. There are a good many motions still before the House for returns which the Opposition desires to have and which have not yet been brought down. Very important papers have been laid on the Table which are not printed and have not been put in the possession of hon. members generally, and the great importance of the question, I think, to all parties, ought to cause us to proceed with all reasonable deliberation and without attempting to interfere with the regular proceedings of Parliament. The Opposition have no desire to unduly protract or prolong this debate, but they think that certainly it should not be proceeded with until such information as has been asked for and ordered by the House is put in their hands. A very considerable number of motions moved by my hon. friend from West Durham, affecting matters of very considerable importance, have not, I believe, yet been laid on the Table. One important paper has just been laid on the Table, within the last few minutes, by the hon. Minister of Railways, which we would like to have printed and have in our hands, and have an opportunity of inspecting at our leisure before the later stages of this business are proceeded with. Does the hon. gentleman intend to force his motion through?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh yes; I think we must.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I shall be under the necessity of moving:

That all the words after "That" be struck out and the following be inserted:—"Full information on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway has not yet been laid before the House, and the great bulk of papers brought down are still unprinted, that the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as referred to in the gracious Speech from the Throne, is of vast importance and demands ample time for consideration and the most searching enquiry; and it is inexpedient that its discussion should at present be pressed forward in a way which would interfere with the ordinary course of the House, the rules regulating the conduct of public business, and the facilities for obtaining information required to reach a sound decision."

Amendment negatived on the following division:—

Mr. MACKENZIE. In order to avoid any further divisions and loss of time, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to make his motion read "from and after Tuesday." That would give him Wednesday and Thursday of next week, leaving Monday as one day for private business. I hope the hon. gentleman will accept the suggestion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot. As in 1881, in the discussion on the Pacific Railway charter, we propose to go on with this motion until it is finished. We will give every facility possible for private business, but I must stand by my motion, I have already postponed it two or three times.

Mr. WELDON moved, in amendment, "that the said motion be amended by inserting, after the word "precedence," the words on "Wednesdays and Thursdays."

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOAN.

The Order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Sir Charles Tupper, "that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed Resolutions (page 84) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway," being read,

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker, if I do not open the remarks that I have to offer to this honourable House to-day with a lengthy apology, it is not because I am not fully convinced of my own inability adequately to deal with the important question that is now before this House. I presume, Sir, that it is customary, in the first place, to deal with the observations of the speaker who preceded, and in this case I should feel disposed to do so to some extent; but, Sir, I find myself relieved of that important duty by the esteem in which the remarks of the hon. gentleman who preceded me in this debate seem to be held by his own friends, if we judge from the comments upon his speech made by the leading organ of the Reform party in the Province of Quebec. I refer to the correspondent of the Montreal

Daily Witness, in which that gentleman, after having paid a high eulogy to the hon. member for Queen's, and a still higher compliment to the hon. member for King's, who took part in this debate, thus disposes of the hon. gentleman who has preceded me: "Unlike his two predecessors, he departed from the serious into the comicality." And now, Sir, as I have no pretension to be the comic member of this side of the House, I must certainly dispense with paying any attention to the comicalities of the hon. gentleman who has already taken part in this discussion. The question which is now before this House is one of momentous and of national importance. I have no pretension, Sir, to be able to cast new light upon this subject, after the exhaustive speeches that have been made by the hon. the Minister of Railways, by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, meeting him in this combat, and by the hon. member for Cardwell, (Mr. White), and other distinguished gentlemen who have spoken here since the opening of this discussion. My idea is to take, to some extent, at all events, a new departure. My idea is not to seek to enlighten those who are now doing me the honour to listen to me, from my own standpoint, but rather to place myself in the position of an outside observer, of a patriotic citizen, of a spectator of the battle that is now raging between the contending parties on this momentous issue. And, Sir, I think that in doing so, the one thing that must be more pleasant than another to any patriotic citizen, who has witnessed what has taken place in this debate since the opening, is the enthusiasm with which every assertion of patriotism has been received on this side, and also, I may say, the enthusiasm with which our friends on the other side have repelled the attacks that have been made upon their patriotism. But, Sir, I think this question of patriotism does come up in this debate; I think this question of patriotism has a great deal to do with this debate; therefore, I say, that taking the standpoint of an outsider I have taken, I am first of all struck, not by the words of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken here, but I am involuntarily impelled to go back to the history of parties, and to judge them by their acts. What has been the history of these two contending parties to this great contest? The enquirer will not have to go back very far to find that, once the horizon is cleared and the smoke has disappeared from the battles that were fought on mere Provincial issues, the first great question that came forward before the Parliament of Old Canada was that of giving assistance to the then national railway line of Canada; and, Sir, that proposition was supported and contended for by the Liberal Conservative party in the old Province of Canada, and that party in its noble fight were opposed by the predecessors of the hon. gentlemen opposite, who sought to crush in its infancy the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada just as they are now seeking to crush the Canadian Pacific Railway under the heap of opprobrium which they are seeking to cast upon it. If, Sir, without going over too many particulars we come to the next move that was made in the patriotic policy of the Liberal Conservative party of the country, if we look back to the time when the leaders of this party, desirous of giving position and standing to our country in the minds of the people on the other side of the Atlantic, by establishing a great steamship line that would place us in our proper position before the world, and give us that communication which we otherwise would have been deprived of, we shall find that the Conservative party were not afraid to come before the people and to shoulder the responsibility of giving that line the subsidy it required. And again, Sir, the so-called Liberal party, those who are now clamouring to have a monopoly of patriotism, were again found in opposition to this great scheme, and contended against the National Policy of building up this great country, just as they have been doing ever since. Then, Sir, when the great question came up of laying the corner stone of this grand Confederation under which we are now living, who were the men who carried forward that great scheme to its consummation, if not the right hon. the leader of the present Government, and the predecessors of the party who now follow him? And still, Sir, at every step they were met and opposed by the party of hon. gentlemen opposite, who claimed to desire to build up this country, and to possess a noble and patriotic ambition. But, Sir, they fought, not to tear down the flag of the Dominion, but they fought to prevent that flag ever being raised, as the records of history will show. Take up the Confederation debates, and you will find, with one or two exceptions—and those exceptions very soon repented of their course—with what a slight amount of patriotism these gentlemen were inspired. Then again, Sir, if we look at the Intercolonial Railway, the next great step in the National Policy of the Liberal Conservative party, what do we find? We find them battling against that national line that was to link together Provinces that had been divided. They said that line ought never to be constructed, that it would not pay for the grease that would be used upon the car wheels, and they fought against a patriotic policy then as they are doing to-day. They fought against every movement for the consolidation of this Dominion. And again, Sir, when the people of this country were clamouring for a policy that would give Canada to the Canadians, these men were found fighting against the protective Tariff which has given prosperity to our country. They fought, not only against that measure, but, as the event proved, against the sentiment of the overwhelming majority of the people of this country. And now, Sir, coming to this last great scheme which is to unite all the Provinces of this vast Dominion, and to give us a road from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and bring all the riches of the far West into the lap of the old Provinces of Canada, which is to build up this country by means of a continental line, which has been endorsed by all sections of this country. Again, Sir, we are met by these same hon. gentlemen who claim to be patriots, who are opposing this scheme in the manner that they have chosen to adopt. I say, Sir, that if we are to judge a tree by its fruits, the fruits the so-called Liberal party have produced have been nothing but discord and dissension, whilst the fruits of the Conservative party evince a desire and a determination to build up the great Dominion, and to give it the position it deserves amongst the nations of the earth. Now, Sir, to come to the consideration of this great question before us, I may say that I did not, even when I had heard the Ministerial explanations, consider myself fully confident to judge of the full bearing of this question. Sir, I have taken the opportunity of consulting those in whose judgment I have confidence. I went to the city of Montreal, and there I met the leading business men of that great city. I spoke, not to men of one creed, nor of one nationality, nor of one line of business, but I spoke to such men as James O'Brien, J. B. Rolland, Mr. Shorey, of that city, men who have business relations over the whole Dominion. I spoke to several others asking them what they thought of this particular line of policy, asking them what they deemed should be done with regard to the Resolutions now before this honourable House. Not only did I consult those gentlemen I have mentioned, but since that time I have had the opportunity of meeting the President of the Board of Trade of Montreal, and of meeting members of that Board, representing every great interest in the Dominion, especially the manufacturing, the commercial and the financial interests; and I am authorized to say on behalf of those to whom I could not speak, that not one man of all this deputation who have been here in the city of Ottawa, has not asserted in the most positive manner that the interests of this Dominion are bound up in the passing of these Resolutions. What was said, Sir, in connection with this matter? They asked me, have you considered what the investments are that have been made in consequence of the belief that this railway is to be finished within two years? Have you considered how trade has been pushed for the same reason; how immigration has been counted upon? Have you considered that in the event of this policy not being carried out, every rival interest, not only to the Canadian Pacific Railway but to the Dominion of Canada itself, will scatter abroad, not merely at the firesides of the homes of the people of England, Ireland and Scotland, as was eloquently pointed out by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster), but every immigration agent, every steamship agent, every railway agent on the other side of the Atlantic, in England, Ireland and Scotland, in Germany and the whole of Europe, will say, not merely that the building of this railway has been postponed, and that the Company has to carry out the original contract and complete the road in 1891, but they will say that this railway, and not merely this railway, but the great North-West itself has collapsed, that it is a failure, and that failure will rebound upon the whole Dominion and bring a crisis and ruin upon us, I believe and they believe, which by the adoption of these Resolutions we may avert. I can, understand, Sir, thoroughly that it is altogether unnecessary for me at this particular moment to enter into the reasons which have already been given here. I can understand, and this House will thank me for not referring to the great advantages which must flow from the consummation of the present Resolution. My constituents, to whom I am responsible, wish no doubt to hear my own reasons, as well as the reasons of others whom I have consulted, for the position which I intend to take in this debate and in the vote that is to be given upon these Resolutions; I say they will expect me to give an account of my stewardship and state upon what basis I have proceeded. The arguments against this scheme have been, first, that we have no security; and, second, that Parliament if it has, will not enforce the terms of the agreement when the time comes. I contend that what we have to do now as regards the second objection which has been raised is simply this: It is our duty as representatives of the people in this Parliament and at this moment to pass a binding and strict bargain, one that cannot be overthrown by the Company no matter what ingenuity may be employed to overcome it. If we do our duty in this respect, if we make such a bargain as cannot be set aside and voided, we shall have performed our duty; let those who occupy our seats in Parliament at another time do theirs, as no doubt they will, patriotically. As regards the first point, that we have no security, this House will probably allow me to say a few words. What is our position and our security. We have brought the Company exactly to that position in which the people of Canada desire to see it; we have brought the Company out of the position which the enemies of Canada asserted it occupied. They said the Company was stronger than the Government, that it was overawing the Government, that it was the power behind the Throne, and was stronger than the power on the Throne itself. I say in this agreement we are bringing the Company exactly to that position in which we ought to see it, that is to say, within the power and in the strong hand of the people of this country. What is the security, then, they offer to us in this matter? Every asset of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been handed over to the Government. Not merely the work performed on the line which they contracted with the country to build in 1881, but a cash investment, in enterprises essential to the successful operation of the road after its final completion, of about $25,000,000. What are these tributary enterprises? First, 269 miles of completed branch lines. Second, a lien on the extension from Callander to Brockville and Montreal. Third, a fleet of steel steamers unequalled on the lakes of the world.

Fourth, $1,500,000 of South Eastern Railway bonds. Fifth, material on hand of the value of $4,000,000. Sixth, real estate for termini, works, &c., over $500,000. Seventh, rolling stock valued at $8,000,000. Then we have the security of the line contracted for from Callander westward, 1,121 miles completed, worth $23,000,000. We have the capital stock of the Company deposited with the Government, $35,000,000, and we have the lands of the Company, one-half already earned, 21,000,000 acres. Now, Sir, of the proposed advance $15,000,000 goes into the work and becomes at once a security for itself for this amount. No part of it is paid in advance of construction. The Company has to keep the work ahead of the loan and spend thereon the cost of the construction before they can claim one cent of that cost from the Government. Contrast this security with that of 1881, where we had $1,000,000 cash and 5,000,000 acres of land for the completion and operation of the road. The security for the completion and operation of the road for five years, because the loan is not repayable until 1891, five years after the completion of the work, is $23,000,000 on main line, 21,000,000 acres of land, 269 miles of branch lines, $35,000,000 of stock, lien on extension to Montreal, steel steamers, equipment, real estate at termini, workshops and South Eastern Railway bonds. But we may be told we pay $22,500,000 for that security. True; but the lands alone at $1.50 per acre will secure us. In connection with the question of the land I will refer, not to the speeches of individual members of the Opposition, not for instance to the great speech of the leader of the Opposition at what was intended to be a grand indignation meeting of the citizens of Montreal against the first contract of 1881, at which the indignation was so great, but was so great on the wrong side, that its promoters had to admit the audience by ticket lest that indignation should express itself in a way not conformable to their taste. I do not intend to hold them responsible for the absurd statements made with respect to what were called the outrageous terms which were then given to the Canadian Pacific Railway; but I do hold them responsible one and all, for the manifesto which was issued by the Reform party in the city of Ottawa at that time. And in that manifesto it is contended that the land alone given to this Company was worth $79,000,000, and that we were robbing the country by giving these lands. I say that if you refer to that manifesto, for which every member of the Reform party is responsible, you will find that statement made exactly as I have made it. The following is the quotation:—

"According to the valuation of Sir John A. Macdonald and the Department of the Interior the lands to be received by the Company are worth $3.18 per acre, a sum less than the price realized by the railway companies of the United States. This will make the Government subsidy in land for the construction of the central section of the railway equal to $59,625,000.

"The Eastern section of the road is to be aided by a grant in cash of $10,000,000 and 6,250,000 acres of land, which at the Government valuation will be equal to $19,725,000."

I think, Sir, that in the discussion of this question there have been some very fatal blunders made on the other side of the House. I regret extremely that the leader of the Opposition is not in his seat, because I have one or two observations to make in which he is interested, and I would prefer making them face to face with him. The most fatal of all his blunders was, I think, the reference which he made to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I am, Sir, now, as I was 22 years ago, when, at the request of the late lamented Sir George Cartier, I took my stand for the first time on the public hustings—I was then, and am now, a friend of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I say, Sir, that despite the reference made by the hon. gentleman to the Grand Trunk Railway, as a terrible example to this Parliament, despite the amplification of that idea by my hon. friend from Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), who, I believe, knows as much of the history of the Grand Trunk Railway Company as I do about some railway in the heart of Prince Edward Island, of which I have never heard—I say, despite these remarks, the Grand Trunk Railway Company have done more in developing this country—supposing that they had never paid back a single dollar of the money which was handed to them out of the public Treasury—they have done more, one hundred fold, for the commerce and the interests of the country generally than the value of that money amounts to. But, Sir, in this connection I was brought back in imagination to my early days, when as a boy of nineteen, I first took part, perhaps prematurely, in the politics of this country. Those eloquent and well rounded periods of the hon. gentleman seemed to me to be very much like something I heard in those days, and it crossed my mind that his speech was not an original speech. I therefore sauntered into the library of this building, and I turned up the debates which took place on this very Grand Trunk Railway matter, in the month of May, 1855—a memorable occasion when the Grand Trunk Railway Company were asking the Province of Canada for the sum of £900,000. I found in the report of that debate in the Montreal Gazette of that time, something that really startled me, and something which I think will amuse and instruct this honourable House. I found that the objections which the hon. leader of the Opposition raised to the Canadian Pacific Railway, had been made as regards the Grand Trunk Railway, on the occasion to which I refer. If you remember the hon. gentleman said that he complained of the Company because they had failed of their engagements, that they were plundering the country, and were obliged to solicit aid. He objected in the second place to the recklessness of the expenditure which, he said, had characterized this terribly rapid Company. He protested against their investment in branch lines, and their amalgamations with other railways; and finally he turned round to you, Mr. Speaker, and he sneered at the position of the railway. Turning again to the Minister of Railways, with a bland smile on his face, he said, what a pitiful spectacle you present now, when making your present statement, compared with your tone of exultation last year. As most hon. members know, the late lamented John Sandfield Macdonald, then a member of the Reform party, was contending, in 1855, against the Grand Trunk, just as the leader of the Opposition is contending against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to-day. He said that the country was being gulled by speculators; he quoted the Hon. John Young as saying that "to give such a work into the hands of a company, would be to make the Company more powerful than the Government itself." He said: "The Company and contractors had bound themselves to build the works for certain advances from the Provinces. Had they fulfilled their contract? No." These are exactly the words of the leader of the Opposition to-day. He said further: "They entered into bad speculations with the money raised with which the Province had nothing to do, and now, having exhausted their means in this way, they asked the Province to grant them £900,000 of additional aid." Just as it is said to-day that this Company have exhausted every means in speculative enterprises, which were never contemplated, and now, having exhausted those means, they were asking for additional aid. He said further, that "besides these purchases and amalgamations, the money on the works had been expended in a most extravagant, profuse, and ill-regulated manner and with no regard to economy." This is just what the hon. gentleman said the other day. He said further, that "he believed that any further advances of money to be spent by these contractors would meet with universal condemnation out of doors." Exactly the words of the leader of the Opposition, a few days ago. He said: "He believed that no satisfactory or thorough examination of the works had been made." Another statement which was repeated by the leader of the Opposition. That was his statement, when he complained that we had no examination of the works, that we had nothing before us, that we had merely the statement of two employes of the Government, whom he sneered at as being under the control of the Minister of the Department. He said he did not wish to throw any odium on these gentlemen, who were respectable men, but that no reliance could be placed on their statements. In the words of the Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald, he said that we had no satisfactory examination of the works before us; and the Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald then read an extract from the Hamilton Spectator describing the Grand Trunk as a complete swindle, just as the hon. gentleman described this as a swindle. He actually borrowed the sarcasm and the irony I spoke of when he turned around and addressed you, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway; he borrowed these words, which were spoken by the Hon. George Brown, in the same debate:

"The speaker must have been surprised at the change which had taken place between the tone of the last Parliament and the present debate. It was certainly not a little worthy of astonishment to call to mind all the stories which had been told of the wealth of these English capitalists—how they were to finish all the works of the Province by their unaided strength, and then to reflect upon this, as the miserable end."

Exactly the words of the hon. leader of the Opposition in addressing you, Mr. Speaker, the other night in this debate. Now, Sir, I feel that I know what is the ambition of the hon. leader of the Opposition. He would like, Sir, to see himself at the head of the young Canadian party. He would like to see himself at the head and front of all young Canada, and the noble and generous and patriotic men who are growing up in this Dominion; but if he ever wishes to succeed in that ambition, if he ever hopes to bring these young men to his standard, he must offer them some other livery than the tattered rags of defunct Gritism. But, Sir, has this Grand Trunk Railway actually done all this damage? Are these hon. gentlemen sincere when they hold this Company up to public disapprobation as they do? Have they no faith in the statement made by the managing director of the Grand Trunk Company, which was published in the Montreal Gazette, and which is summarized in the Montreal Post in the following words:—

"In a communication to the Gazette this morning, Mr. Joseph Hickson points out that the amount of the advances by the Government to lines which now comprise the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada was £3,111,500. The Company was compelled to construct, as a condition of securing this assistance, the Rivière du Loup line, which cost £1,180,000, the Three Rivers branch which cost £220,000, and to give to lines in Western Canada (now Ontario) £1,000,000. It lost the interest for twenty-four years on the money which it was compelled to expend on the Rivière du Loup and Three Rivers roads, in excess of the Government aid to these lines, about £400,000 at 6 per cent. for twenty-four years—£576,000. It worked these lines (and has one of them still on its hands) at an annual loss of probably £20,000 a year for twenty-two years—£440,000. It was also bound to build the Victoria bridge. Mr. Hickson says that the extent of the real aid secured can, from the above figures, be readily estimated, and concludes by expressing his opinion that it would have been very much better for the Company if it had never received a pound from the Government, considering the conditions on which the assistance was given."

Now, Sir, I have no mission here to settle these little difficulties between the Grand Trunk and the hon. gentlemen opposite who have been attacking it; but I have read the statement of Mr. Hickson, in order that public opinion may not be prejudiced against that institution through the attacks, I believe the slanderous attacks, that have been made upon it by the hon. leader of the Opposition and his followers in this debate. Now, Sir, after the very eloquent observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition, we had an outburst from the ex-Finance Minister of this Dominion. I was surprised to see that hon. gentleman rush in, knowing, as I do, Sir, that the financial record of that hon. gentleman as manager of the fiscal affairs of this Dominion is written in the tears of the wives and the children of the workingmen of this Dominion. I was surprised, Sir, at the audacity with which he rushed into this debate—not in ordinary language, not in the language, certainly, of a man who did not feel that he had been driven to the wall; he launched out in what way, Sir? He launched out, Sir, as no man having the slightest conception of statesmanship—or of statesmanship did I say?—No, Sir, but the slightest consideration for the feeling of the great mass of patriotic men in this Dominion—he launched out against the French Canadian representatives here of their race, and he told them, Sir, that they would be dragged through the mire provided they got dollar for dollar for every step they took. When I heard that statement made, I looked to the other side of the House to see if my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) was in his seat. I think I can call him my friend, and I believe him to be a true and honest and patriotic French Canadian, no matter what his political opinions may be. I looked to see if he was in his place, because I thought if he had been there, he would have raised his voice in protest against this scandalous, this unwarranted and unjustifiable attack on his fellow-countrymen, even though they differed from him in politics. He would have pointed out to that hon. gentleman the sacrifices which have been made by the Province of Quebec in the interests of the railway undertakings of the Dominion. He would have pointed out what the people of the Province of Quebec have done in the interest of this Dominion out of their own Provincial Treasury. He would have shown that his fellow-countrymen did not deserve this slander, for they have raised the name and fame of Canada, not merely in their own country and in the neighbouring Republic, but across the Atlantic, where their historians, their poets, their men of science, and their distinguished ladies, too, have inscribed the name of Canada on the records of every learned society, of every association of literature and art, and of every academy of science. But the hon. gentleman was unfortunately, Sir, not in his seat. The French Canadian members of this House have shown themselves to be patriotic and devoted to the interest of their country, and have followed the right hon. leader of this Government for years and years without bribe or sop or disgrace of any kind. It does not rest with the hon. member, it does not rest with the ex-Minister, of whom I have spoken, to cast this foul and unjustifiable slur upon them. I am not a French Canadian, but in my bosom there beats an Irish Canadian heart which throbs in sympathy with my French Canadian friend, not only in the Province of Quebec, but throughout the broad extent of the Dominion. I stand by the policy of the Government in this great undertaking, but I will stand equally side by side with them in pushing every just and honest claim they may have which they can substantiate; and I know that any such claim will be recognized. I know still more that I stand here behind a gentleman who has always taken care in the past that his Province was justly dealt with, and will see that she shall be justly dealt with in the future—the hon. Minister of Public Works, who sits here as a successor of the late Sir George Etienne Cartier—who will stand by his faith and his fatherland throughout all the emergencies that may arise. Feeling that assurance, knowing that justice will be done to the Province of Quebec and to all the other Provinces in any just demands that may be made, either now or in the future, I, as a member from the Province of Quebec, stand in unison with my friends with whom I have fought for twenty-two years from the days of my boyhood. I am satisfied that neither cajolment on the one side nor sneers, slanders or abuse on the other, will drive these men for one moment from their allegiance to the grand old party that has built up Canada, that has made this country what it is, and will make this country a still greater nation in the days to come. We had still another exhibition from that hon. gentleman, the ex-Minister of Finance. Like all other Grits, when driven to bay, all he could exclaim was: "The Pacific Scandal." Why did he not look around this House? Did he forget the verdict of the people of this Dominion? Why did he not look around, and he would not have forgotten that the grand conspirator, the chief of the conspirators, the chief of the vilest conspiracy against the state that is on record since the days of Catiline—they may laugh, but where is that chief conspirator to-day? He is "far from the land," and the old hero he thought to bury beneath the ruins of his party is not asleep like the hero of the poem, but is alive to-day with a monument erected to him in the heart of every patriotic citizen of this Dominion. He is alive to-day doing battle as he did before, having the confidence and the support of the people of this Dominion. I will not say anything further on this subject, but will merely refer to one statement, perfectly true, which that gentleman made, and which I cannot pass, since it is true and since I have stigmatized those statements which are false and baseless. That statement was that during the ruinous reign of himself and his friends, the lands of the North-West were not worth more than 25 cents an acre. True they were not, nor would anything else in the country be worth 25 cents an acre had he and his friends remained in office. In conclusion of these observations which have been perhaps too long, I would say that viewing this matter as a spectator, weighing calmly all that has been said on both sides of the question, reviewing the history of the past, and witnessing the history of the present which is now being made, there is one reason which must determine every patriotic citizen to stand by this Government, and that is that in the hearts of the people there is the conviction that the right hon. gentleman who is the leader of this Government, who has founded this Confederation, who has carried it on to its present state of progress and prosperity, who has secured for himself the title of Pater Patriæ, would not allow, by one fell swoop, the result of the years of his toil to be swept away for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other company or organization. The people are assured in their heart of hearts that the hon. gentleman would not propose this measure unless he felt confident he was acting in the interests of the country he has served so well. The people have confidence in him, the majority of this House have confidence in him, I have confidence in his policy and his policy I shall support.

Mr. FISHER. In saying a few words upon this question of so great importance which is now before this honorable House, I shall not try to go into the history of the other Pacific projects which have been before the country at various times, but shall try to go as closely and as soon as possible to the question which is really before us. In saying this, I hope you will not think I am going to follow the example of my hon. friend from King's, N. B. (Mr. Foster), who, the other night, after reproving various hon. members on this side for having spent an hour before they reached the question at issue, spent the first hour of his address in giving us a lecture on patriotism and the building up of a new nationality, and then devoted another hour at the end of his speech to delivering a tirade against an hon. gentleman who had preceded him in the debate. If I had ready to my hand a lecture on those questions which I had previously delivered, and was able to repeat on any occasion, I might possibly be tempted to follow the example of the hon. gentleman, but I trust I would remember the difference between a country school house audience which might be instructed and edified by those high sounding and rolling sentences and this honourable House, composed principally of business men who wish to discuss in a practical way a question of importance to the public. If I had wished at the latter part of my address to give this honorable House a lesson in classical mythology, I think that, if I ventured to do so, I would, in describing the story of Cassandra, instead of stopping short before the consummation of that story, have gone on and showed that those prophecies of poor mad Cassandra which she delivered in the streets of Troy, jeered at by the rabble, came true, and that to-day Troy has been so destroyed, that even the scientists and the students have only within the last year or two, been able to find the site which once bore her proud walls. But I shall instead at once come to the question at issue upon which this country is waiting the decision of Parliament. And, Sir, in dealing with this question, I do not wish to mix it up in a maze of figures, millions on millions, such as has been thrown around it by a great many of the gentlemen who have addressed this House from the opposite benches. I confess, Sir, that, not being a business man, not being a man who has been in the habit of dealing with such enormous amounts, it somewhat staggers me to hear the light way in which hon. gentlemen use these enormous amounts in discussion. I think it will be better for the country at large, and perhaps it may be better too for some hon. members of this House, to try and discuss this question simply as to what is really before the House now. I will, too, only bring in the discussion upon the original contract with this present Pacific Railway Company in so far as that discussion and that contract may help to enlighten us as to the proposition which is now before us. Hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, in dealing with this question, take a great deal of pains to tell us that the Company is still in a position to fulfil its original contract, but, if we take a little precaution in examining the line of argument, in examining the general tone of the impression they wish to convey to this House, one would imagine that, instead of this being a question of the time in which our Pacific Railway shall be built, it is a question whether we shall ever have the railway or whether we shall have it within two years. There is another point too in this question which I think is of great importance, and I allude to the question of which party to this new bargain has proposed the present discussion. In reading the circular of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company issued last December, I find that, in that, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves propose that the road shall be finished within a period of two years. I also think it is evident, from the current of the discussion which has come to us from the other side of the House, that the proposition has really come from the Pacific Railway Company, and not from the Government. There is, then, this difference between the relative position of the parties to-day and their positions at the time when the original contract was entered into. At that time it was very clearly shown, not only from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, but also by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, in that debate, that the Government were really forced into that contract for fault of a better. They had no recourse left them but to take the contract which the Syndicate were then in a position to offer them, or to fail of obtaining a contract at all for the building of the Pacific Railroad. This being the case, it is very easy to be seen that the Government were really in a position under the influence and in the power of the gentlemen with whom they were trying to form that contract. To-day we find that the Government is in exactly the reverse position. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down, from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), has told us distinctly that the Company to-day is in the hands of the Government. If that is the case, it is evident that the positions which these two contracting parties held at the time of the original contract are now reversed. We know that, at the time of the original contract, the Government, being in that position, I almost might say, of subserviency to the Syndicate, could not make as good a bargain as they themselves would have wished to do. Hon. gentlemen of the opposite side of the House, on that occasion, themselves acknowledged this to be the fact, that the bargain was not all that they would have wished it to be, but that it was the best bargain which, under the circumstances, they would be able to bring to perfection. This being the case, and it being evident that, at that time, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or rather, as they were at that time, the Syndicate, used that power; certainly, when they now come in the form of suppliants to the Government, they might expect that the Government, in their turn, would exert the power which they have, and drive as hard a bargain as they could. Now, Sir, at the time that the original contract was made, a good deal was made out of the argument that we ought to deal generously with these gentlemen, so that they might be able to carry through their contract, so that there might be no question whatever but that they might be able to carry that contract to a satisfactory completion. To-day again, and in this debate, the hon. gentlemen who have conducted it from the opposite side of the House, especially my hon. friend the representative from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), have appealed to us to deal generously with the Company. The question immediately arises—how long are we to go on dealing generously with that Company? If we were then asked to deal generously with them, and are now again asked to deal generously with them, it is hardly unreasonable to ask whether, in a few years, we shall be again asked to deal generously with them. I think, however, that this, instead of being an occasion when we may be asked to deal generously with the Company, is really a business transaction. We have a Company, who are under an obligation to this Government to fulfil a certain contract, coming to ask from the Government—what? They ask, first, a loan of \$22,500,000, this loan to be repaid at the end of seven years. They ask, secondly, an advance of \$7,500,000, which is to be repaid at the end of five years. Now, what are we to obtain in return for this advance? As far as I can make out from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, as far as I can make out from the statement of the Minister of Railways, all that we, all that the country of Canada, are to obtain in return for this advance is that the Pacific Railroad is to be finished in two years instead of in six years. I think this is a plain and business-like statement of the question before us, and, this being the case, I think that we have only to consider whether it is worth the risk of this country to make this advance for the purpose of obtaining that advance in the period of the fulfilment of the contract. But, when the Government have the advantage to which I have alluded just now, and do not make use of it, I think the people in the country generally will ask why they did not make use of it, why it is that the Government have not made use of the advantage which they thus have evidently over the Company; and the reasons which the people in the country will advance to the Government for requiring of them the use of that advantage are, I think, in short, the following. In the first place, we will ask, who are these gentlemen who require this accommodation from the Government? They are gentlemen who have control of this Company, and who, in the inception of the original contract, issued certain stock and took that stock at a certain price. When the people throughout the country generally know that these gentlemen, after they put their \$10,000,000 into this Company, obtained stock to the value of \$25,000,000 for that \$10,000,000; when they know that that stock which they then took at an average of 40, is now worth 55 or more; when they reflect that in consequence of this operation in the original stock that the Company had at that time, they have made an advance of 15 per cent. on the value of that stock, and that consequently since that stock amounted to \$25,000,000, the people, Sir, will see at a glance that those gentlemen have made in that transaction an enormous fortune. There are some other things which, if closely scrutinized, will show the position in which those gentlemen stand to-day—those gentlemen who are now asking accommodation at the hands of the country. During construction, on this stock on which these gentlemen gave 40 cents on the dollar, they have arranged with the Government that they should be paid 3 per cent. on the par value, that is to say, that they should be paid  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on the value of what money they have put into the Company. In addition to that they have been paying out of the capital which they put into the Company, an additional 2 per cent. during construction, or at the rate at which they took that stock of 40 cents on the dollar, they are getting 5 per cent. on their original investment, making, altogether, that these gentlemen are getting on their original investment, an amount of  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. during construction. Most people in this country would be well satisfied with half this interest on their investments. I think the people of the country generally will be inclined to ask why it is that gentlemen who are making such large sums out of this contract should come here in formâ pauperis and ask the Government for additional assistance. There is, however, another matter which will more strongly impress the people, though their imagination, in this question—I mean this construction company which has been so inextricably mixed up in the construction of this road. So far as we can make out—and I regret to say that at the present stage of this debate we cannot fully understand all the circumstances relating to the construction company—however, so far as we can make out, it seems to be a fact that this construction company is composed, to a large extent, of gentlemen who are interested in the original contract for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and who are, therefore, parties to both sides of the bargain between the construction company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. In view of this fact it is but reasonable that people's suspicions should be aroused in regard to the bargain of this construction company, and in regard to everything connected with it—the more so that unfortunately, the Government has seen fit to refuse us, within a reasonable time, the information necessary to discuss this question reasonably and intelligently. But, Sir, we know enough to understand that by means of this construction company it must have been intended that the members of the company should obtain a very large fortune out of their contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. This construction company was to be paid a certain amount in cash for their contract, and a certain amount in stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As I read the statement about their bargain, they were to be paid altogether, if they had been able to fulfil their contract, something like \$45,000,000 in stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Now, Sir, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that this stock was to have been issued to them in payment for their work. After this bargain was made with the construction company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company obtained from the Government of this country a guarantee of 3 per cent. dividend upon that stock. For what purpose, Sir, did they obtain this guarantee? It is distinctly stated by hon. gentlemen opposite, it is distinctly stated in the Speech from the Throne, and, I believe, it is generally understood and acknowledged, that they obtained this guarantee for the express purpose of raising the value of the stock. This stock was issued to the construction company at 60 cents on the dollar—it was called that in the bargain which they made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. After that stock was issued to them at 60 cents on the dollar, after that bargain was made with the Company, this guarantee being expected to raise the value of that stock, it was very evident that by the rise in the value of the stock the construction company would receive a large advance upon their original bargain. The stock was issued to the construction company at 60 cents on the dollar, and we have the authority of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), for the supposition that it was expected the guarantee would raise the price of that stock to 75 cents on the dollar; but a very little sum in arithmetic will show you that by this means, on \$45,000,000 of stock, this company would obtain an advance of 15 per cent on their whole stock. In this way, Sir, we see that this construction company, not content with the actual profits which would accrue to them for the construction of a large portion of the railway, also wished and expected to make this additional profit on their stock. If, Sir, this had been a profit to be obtained by gentlemen who were entirely independent of the company with whom they were dealing, perhaps no great objection could have been urged to it; but when we find that a large number of the gentlemen composing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were also interested, pecuniarily, in this construction company, I confess it has, to my mind, a most suspicious appearance; and I believe, Sir, that in consequence of this circumstance the people in the country will regard this whole affair with additional suspicion and with additional repugnance. There is another thing, too, Sir, which will tend to cause the people to look with suspicion upon this whole affair. I think it was the hon. Minister of Railways who explained to us that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had been working in the stock of the North-West Land Company. As I understood the explanations, that amount of money was invested in the North-West Land Company for the purpose of keeping up the price of the stock of that company. This, Sir, notwithstanding the explanations of the Minister of Railways on that occasion, seems to me to have been undertaken by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company directly with the intention of deceiving the public. Evidently, if their stock were kept up in price by means of those who are particularly interested in that stock, who were particularly interested in bringing immigrants into that country, and who were particularly interested in procuring the sale of that stock—it is evident, I say, that it was done with the express and avowed object of deceiving the public and of speculating in the stocks. I must say, Sir, that all these things combined have a suspicious appearance, and will tend to cast discredit in the minds of the public on this new proposal of the Government. But there is another view of this question which I think it is fair and reasonable to take—I mean the view that was presented to us by the Government at the time the original contract was made, when they boasted so much of the individual wealth of the gentlemen who were concerned in the contract. At that time one of the strongest reasons which were advanced to us in favour of giving the contract to those gentlemen, and of securing an early completion of the road, was the alleged fact that those who were concerned in it were of such enormous personal wealth that there was no possibility of a failure. Sir, if at this time we find those same gentlemen not drawing on their personal wealth and resources to assist them when they are in difficulty but coming to the Government and asking the country to assist them, what good to us is the personal wealth and resources of the directors and managers of the Company? Surely one might suppose when a corporation got into difficulty they would exhaust their own resources before they would ask for a loan to assist them. But that is not the course which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have taken. We have no reason to suppose that those gentlemen have lost their personal wealth, or that it has even diminished; on the contrary, from what I have said about transactions in stock and other speculations, we may fairly suppose that their personal wealth has very largely increased since the time when the original contract was entered into. Yet to-day instead of drawing on their personal wealth and resources, which were boasted of at the time the original contract was entered into, we find them applying to the Government, asking for assistance now that they are in difficulty. Any reasonable man, looking at this matter from a common sense point of view, will say that such is not the right course to pursue, and that they were bound to exhaust their own resources before asking the country to assist them out of their difficulty. I understand from the speech of the Minister of Railways, and other hon. members on that side of the House, that they insist that the Company is not only perfectly solvent, but is perfectly secure, and that it is able to present such a statement of its affairs as to show that the advance proposed will be a perfectly safe one. If that is the case, how is it that the Company are not able to obtain in the money market of the world the advance they seek? Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us it is on account of hostility on the part of other railway corporations, and of the denunciations which have been published against the Company by a certain part of the press in this country. Do hon. gentlemen opposite mean to say that financiers in the money market of the world are influenced by such considerations; that when a plain statement is put before them in which no flaw is found they will hesitate to risk their money in it? I do not believe it. If such a financial statement can be put before capitalists, showing beyond question that the security is perfectly good, then capital will flow to the Company without difficulty, and they will obtain the aid required without applying to the Government to assist them. There is another reason why this new proposal is very inadvisable on the part of the Government. At the time the original contract was entered into, one of the greatest advantages held out was that the Government would be freed from all responsibility in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway construction. We were then told that the question was taken out of the arena of partisan politics; that it would no longer interfere with the business of the House and the politics of the country. But not more than three years have elapsed before the question is again brought into the arena of partisan politics and we have again to discuss the question in all its bearings. And why? Simply because we are to gain by means of this new advance the building of the railway four years sooner than it would have been built under the original contract. In this connection, I wish to allude to a remark, which fell from the hon. member from Cardwell (Mr. White) in the course of his speech. The hon. member said that he had been through a political campaign immediately after the consummation of the original contract; that gentlemen differing with him in political opinions had been present during the campaign, and that this question had never arisen or been discussed. I believe, that we, on this side of the House and the country at large, believe that the question of the Canadian Pacific Railway construction was finished and done with. We did not suppose that it was again going to be brought forward and re-discussed, and we did not believe that the boasts of hon. gentlemen opposite were going to prove false so soon. The only reason why the question might have been discussed during the General Elections would have been to show the lack of business capacity on the part of those who entered into the contract on behalf of the country. There was no need in the election of the hon. member for Cardwell to have this question discussed, especially when other questions of immediate and equal importance were before the country. But if the Government had decided to again open the whole question of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the contract entered into, why did they not take advantage of the position which the Company occupied to do something to relieve the objectionable monopolies in the original contract, to which so much objection was taken at the time of its ratification. Again, Sir, I shall have to allude to a remark dropped by the hon. member for Cardwell. He perhaps explained the reason why the Government have not done what I have suggested would be a wise act. The hon. gentleman told the House that the demands of the people of the North-West were unjustifiable, that it was simply absurd that people who had such advantages as they possessed should ask for more, and he made use of words, which I shall not attempt to quote from memory, comparing them with the disadvantages under which the early colonists of Ontario laboured. I presume, knowing the hon. gentleman's intimate relations with the Government, he gave the reason why the Government had not attempted, in entering into the new proposition, to relieve the North-West from the disabilities under which the people there have been labouring in consequence of the terms of the original contract. If that is the true reason for not having inserted such provisions in the new bargain, the people of the North-West will not feel that the Government have done justice to them, in not having taken advantage of the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, of which they might have reasonably taken advantage, to assist their supporters, friends, and the people at large in the North-West. But I wish briefly to look at the bargain from the point of view of the Company themselves. We have the Company taking this very serious obligation upon their shoulders that for the next four years they will pay interest at 5 per cent on some \$30,000,000; at the end of that time they will pay the Government \$7,500,000; and at the end of seven years they will pay the Government \$22,500,000. The resources of the Company from which this large amount of interest is to be obtained, are, as I understand, the net profits on their business, and the sales of their land. Judging, Sir, by the statements of their net profits, which have been laid before this House for the last year or so, I conceive that the greatest proportion of this payment of interest and principal, must be derived from the sales of their lands from which within the last three years—about two-thirds have been made to a Land Company, which will now be, therefore, directly rival to themselves, in the future sale of lands in the North-West—we can hardly believe that the sales of lands in that country will amount to such a figure as that which would be required to meet these obligations. But perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite may think that this difficulty of meeting obligations is a reason why we should deal generously with the Company. On the contrary, I think it is a reason why we should not deal at all with them,—a reason why we should not enter into this new liability towards this Company. If, Sir, it is answered, as seems to be implied by hon. gentlemen opposite, that in default of this arrangement, the Company will be obliged to rest for four or five years, and not go on with the work of construction, what will be the great loss to the country? The state of affairs which would result from that fact would be but the condition of things which the party on this side of the House, at the time of the original contract, argued, would be most beneficial to the country. At that time gentlemen who opposed the original contract argued that it would be very much better, instead of hurrying on the construction of the ends of the line—those portions which must necessarily be most expensive, and from which least revenue would be obtained—to postpone that portion of the work; and they proposed that in the meantime the Company should proceed with the construction of that portion of the line which was going really to develop and open up the North-West Territories and Manitoba, into which we might expect a large volume of immigration to flow, so that the country would immediately obtain the whole of the benefit which would ultimately be derived from the construction of the ends. But, Sir, if the present state of affairs were to continue for three or four years, if, instead of giving this advance to the Company, we were to allow the Company to rest during that period—supposing always that this is the alternative—would it be such an unmixed evil to the country as hon. gentlemen opposite have said?

After Recess.

Mr. FISHER. Since you left the Chair, a return has been placed in my hand; and the fact that it has thus been placed in my hands is of itself a sufficient rebuke to the vote which took place this afternoon upon this question. It is evident, when a return of such importance as this is placed on the Table, at such a stage of this debate as we are now in, that the vote was certainly, to use the least strong language that I can, a very inadvisable vote. To think that the Government should wish Parliament to discuss this question with so little information at our command, in comparison what we are assured must be in the hands or within the power of the Government—and that it is in their power, is shown by the fact that they have been able to give us this return—I say this is a proof conclusive that the vote which decided that this question should be pressed on to an immediate decision, is, to say the least, a very inadvisable vote. This return is made to an address of the House of Commons, for a statement in regard to the contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the construction company. I find in it a confirmation of what I alluded to shortly this afternoon. I was not then in possession of the full facts, and since then I have hardly had time to study this return, so as to enable me to speak upon it as I would like. But I find in it one or two things which I shall take the liberty of reading, so that hon. members may understand it as early as possible. First I will read a list of shareholders of the North-Western American Railroad Contracting Company, dated July 1st, 1883. We have the following names: Edward A. Adams, 70 shares; James O. Bloss, 1,955 shares; James H. Coe, 200 shares; J. C. Easton, 80; Peter Geddes, 25; Samuel Gwyn, in trust, 21,267; Charles Lanier, 70; Theodore Marrache, 122; Jeremiah Millbank, 41; Alex. Mitchell, 42; William Rockefeller, 100; A. S. Shaw, 245; Alber Simon, 100; Joseph F. Sweasy, 500; William Trotter, 48; Julius Wadsworth, 25; Edward Winslow, 15; Winslow, Lanier & Co., 95; a total of 25,000 shares. You will observe, Sir, that of these 25,000 shares, 21,267 were held in trust by Samuel Gwyn. Now, Sir, to explain that circumstance, I will refer to a letter which is dated at the office of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Montreal, February 12, 1884. After alluding to some other returns, the Secretary goes on to say:

"I also enclose a list of the shareholders of the North-American Contracting Company, as furnished to us by that Company. You will perceive that it appears by that return that Samuel Gwyn held in trust 21,267 shares. These shares were so held in trust for the entire constituency of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in proportion to the holding of each shareholder.

By reference to the number of shares held in the names of the various shareholders of the original $25,000,000 of stock, we can see somewhat in what proportions and by whom this stock is held. Here again the government have failed to vouchsafe to us that information which I think it is necessary for this House and the country to have in order to come to a proper conclusion on this question. But so far as we do know, we know that the largest proportion of the stock was held by these men. The letter goes on to say :

"But the object being to interest a number of leading financiers in the enterprise, the original holders of the stock transferred to such parties as the Company were desirous of obtaining, as participators in the enterprise, a proportional number of the shares of the Company at cost price."

We have no exact information showing to what extent these gentlemen were brought into the construction company; we only know, from the information at our command, that of the 25,000 shares held in the construction company the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company held 21,267. And here, Sir, I think, is a very distinct proof of the suspicious circumstances to which I alluded before recess. There is another matter to which I wish to refer before proceeding with my argument in regard to the construction company, and that is, that, as I showed a little while ago, the construction company were to be paid not only in cash for their work on the railroad, but also in shares of the Company. The total amount of stock which they were to be paid for their two contracts was some $45,000,000. Now, Sir, at the time this agreement was entered into between the construction company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the stock was taken on the basis of 60 cents on the dollar. After the guarantee of the Government was issued upon that stock, both the Government and the Pacific Railway Company themselves expected that this stock would rise to 75 cents on the dollar, an advance of 15 per cent. on 60, but an advance on the original value of the stock of 25 per cent. but as soon as it was found by experience that the guarantee of the Government failed to raise the price of the stock from 60 to 75, the contract between the construction company and the Pacific Railway Company was cancelled. In other words, those gentlemen who were so greatly interested in the construction company, when they found that they could not make a large profit out of their transaction, cancelled the contract and withdrew from the arrangement. I think, Sir, this is an additional reason, very clear and apparent to the people of the country, for asking the Government why they did not in this new arrangement make use of that advantage which they had over the Company to make as good a bargain as was possible in the interest of the country. Before going on, I wish very shortly to allude to some of the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who preceded me in this debate. I am sorry he is not present, but he will be able to read what I have to say. I was a little amused, as I dare say a great many other gentlemen were, when he alluded to the meeting in Montreal at which the hon. leader of the Opposition explained the policy of the Opposition in regard to the Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman tried to belittle that meeting; he tried to make out that it was packed by partizans of the Opposition. Sir, anybody who was present, as I myself had the good fortune to be, knows very well that on the platform at that meeting were leading gentlemen who supported the Government at the previous election. We know that the chairman of that meeting was a supporter of the Government even at that time, in their general policy, but he was too independent a man to approve of that contract. And every-body must remember the enthusiastic reception which was given on that occasion to the hon. leader of the Opposition—a reception which was never surpassed, and probably cannot be surpassed by any public reception which may be given in Montreal to any public man in the Dominion of Canada. At that meeting the hon. gentleman first explained the terms of the contract, and then declared the policy he and his party advocated on the floor of Parliament in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not wish, Sir, to follow the example of my hon. friend opposite, or I might, perhaps, in terms even more depreciatory than those he used, allude to the meeting held by the hon. Minister of Railways a few nights afterwards in the city of Montreal. At that meeting, a very different state of affairs took place. I think however I need go no further than to simply allude to them, and anybody who remembers the two meetings will appreciate the contrast. There was another thing in the speech of the hon. gentleman who preceded me (Mr. Curran) which brought to my mind again the classical story; that the hon. member for King's, N. B., regaled us with the other night. The hon. gentleman quoted, as being the original of the speech, made the other night by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, a speech which the Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald made many years ago in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway. The hon. gentleman, in alluding to this speech, forgot that almost literally its words came true. He forgot that on that occasion, the Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald, too, was Cassandra—that, although they would not listen to his voice, although they would not heed his warning, still what he foretold took place, and I regret to think that the words of the hon. the leader of the Opposition will also probably come true in regard to the bargain now before us for ratification. The Government are now telling us what will be the result of the ratification of this bargain. They hold out to us a pleasing picture of the good it will effect to the country. They hold out to us a picture of the great benefit it will be to this country that within two years we shall have our railway across the continent. Now I confess, and in this I think I am but speaking the views of that party to which I have the honor to belong, that I do not think it is essential to the immediate prosperity of the Dominion that the portion of this railway north of Lake Superior and the portion through the Rocky Mountains should be pushed at all hazard and cost to a rapid completion. In 1880, when the original contract was entered into, the Liberal party took the ground that although it was of immediate necessity an would be of very great advantage to the country, that those fertile portions of our North-West Territory, over the prairie sections of the road should be immediately opened up and made available for immigration, still that it was not essential for the progress of our country that the portion of the line north of Lake Superior, or the portion through the Rocky Mountains, should, at a serious cost and loss, be advanced to an immediate completion. It is very easy to see why this ground was taken. The hon. Minister of Railways, the other night, gave us the benefit of a very extraordinary computation as to the numbers of bushels of wheat which might be raised in the North-West. The hon. member for King's, N. B., gave us very ordinary computation as to what might be done in the same way by the farmers of the North-West. I suppose these hon. gentlemen wished to declare, or at least to infer, that it was necessary for this production that the railway north of Lake Superior, should be immediately carried through to completion, and that unless these Resolutions passed, without this further contract with the Company was made, the happy picture which they drew of the possible production of the North-West could not come true. I cannot see why it is that with the facilities which we now have for opening up our North-West, with the advantages and the means now afforded for immigration into that country, the prospects of that country being ploughed and worked and brought under cultivation, are not as great as if the railway were pushed to completion within two years. I do not think these hon. gentlemen imagine for an instant that any very great amount of wheat is going to be raised in that portion of the country north of Lake Superior, or in the Rocky Mountains, or in the portion west of the prairie section. If we now have the railway through the fertile portion of the North-West and the facilities by means of our eastern railway system and water communication through Georgian Bay and Lakes Huron and Superior by which the immigrants, at the season in which immigrants do come into that country, can be easily carried into the North-West through our own territory—and that is the point which the hon. gentleman wished to impress on us as absolutely necessary—if we now have those facilities, I do not see that this new bargain is going in any way to facilitate the fulfilment of that charming picture which these hon. gentlemen drew. In connection with this, I cannot help alluding, for a few moments, to the statement of the hon. the Minister of Railways in regard to the way in which our immigrants are going to be brought into the North-West. If it is essential this road should be built in order that our immigrants may be brought into the country through our own territory alone, how is it the hon. gentleman did not dissent from the proposition of his colleague, the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, to bring those immigrants over the Erie Railway? This seems to me to show an extraordinary divergence of opinion between those two hon. gentlemen. If the proposition of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture is to be accepted, praised and acknowledged as good, it fairly may be said that it cuts away the ground from under the feet of the hon. Minister of Railways, in so far as this argument is concerned. But these hon. gentlemen have been, as I say, drawing a beautiful picture of what is going to be the result of this contract. I think we may fairly go back to their forecasts in 1880, and to the forecasts in 1880 of the hon. gentlemen who sit on this side of the House, and see which have been fulfilled. Having done this, we may fairly judge their present forecasts by the result of their former ones. In 1880, the Government first of all foretold and insisted upon it, that the contract which had then been entered into was to be the last occasion on which the Pacific Railway should come into party politics—that this arrangement was a final one and that the introduction of this question into the arena of party politics should never again take place. We see to-day how that forecast was fulfilled. On that occasion the hon. member for West Durham argued that the contract did not secure finality. It is true that on that occasion neither he nor any other hon. gentleman on this side believed that the terms of the contract itself were at all likely to be opened up again, but they reflected and saw that, even with that contract entered into, finality was not secured because the Government were still obliged to work upon and to construct a large portion of the line. As things have turned out, not only have the forecasts of the Government proved to be untrue, but even the worst has happened that could possibly be imagined, for to-day we have the Government still working on those portions of the line which the country had to construct, and are plunged again into the expense and liability incurred in regard to the construction of the other part of the line. At that time, Sir, the Government, too, foretold that, in consequence of these gentlemen to whom that contract was given, being so rich and so powerful in a financial point of view, it was perfectly impossible that they should ever ask any further assistance; that it was quite evident, in consequence of their great wealth, that they would be able to carry out whatever they undertook to carry out. I have shown in the earlier part of my remarks that it is possible, if they did draw upon their personal wealth, that they might be able to carry out what they have undertaken, but they are not willing to do so, and, by the terms of the original contract, I confess they are not called upon to do so; but it seems to me that those boasts and prophecies in regard to their financial power are to-day shown to have been baseless and to have fallen to the ground. At that time, another syndicate was shown to be ready to undertake that contract. At that time accusations were levelled against the financial ability of that syndicate, and at the same time assertions in regard to the stability of the successful Syndicate were made, and their financial stability was contrasted with that of the other. Of course it is idle for me to say what might have occurred had another syndicate undertaken this matter, but I believe truly that, if another syndicate had undertaken it, no such appeal as is now made could possibly have been entertained by the hon. gentlemen opposite. There was another thing which I will not say was foretold by hon. gentlemen opposite, but which was foretold most clearly and precisely by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) on the occasion of that discussion. He clearly pointed out the danger that there would be, in this matter, of a construction company. He pointed to the history of the Union Pacific Railway, and showed in what manner the Credit Mobilier Company, in connection with that company, occasioned not only scandalous financial arrangements, but had occasioned an enormous increase in the cost of that railway. Almost identically to-day we find his forecasts made true. We find to-day that there is a construction company so intimately connected with the Pacific Railway Company themselves, that it is impossible that we should not view their operations and their connection with that company with suspicion. That, too, on that occasion, was scouted by hon. gentlemen opposite as an unlikely proposition. Now it is shown to be true, and I think, on these grounds and for these reasons, we may fairly distrust the forecasts now given to us by the gentlemen who sit upon the Treasury benches and by their supporters. I have but a few words more to add, but before sitting down, I wish to make a few remarks in reply to the statement of the hon. gentleman who preceded me in regard to the Province of Quebec. That hon. gentlemen intimated that harsh language had been used on this side of the House in regard to the Province of Quebec and in regard to the demands which it was believed the Province of Quebec was about to make upon the Government, in consequence, and as a condition, of ratifying this agreement. The hon. gentleman accused parties on this side of intimating that those demands were being made, and of making those accusations. I hold in my hands a public print, which, perhaps, that hon. gentleman will acknowledge, has very little sympathy with hon. gentlemen on this side of the House; I allude to La Minerve, a paper which anybody who is acquainted with the Bleu party of the Province of Quebec, will know has been, and is, their mouthpiece in political matters. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read a short extract from a leading article in this paper, dated the 11th February, 1884. The Minerve says:

“Quand nous aurons fini de payer pour le Pacifique le supplément que l'on nous demande cette année, la dette publique sera de plus de $200,000,000. Si comme le fait prévoir le mouvement commercial des derniers mois, les affaires du pays diminuent, et si les recettes décroissent, le gouvernement fédéral lui-même sentira la gêne et peut-être les déficits, et il sera forcé de nous dire plus tard: “Je voudrais rencontrer vos vues; mais les moyens pécuniaires nous manquent.” La province de Québec ne demande rien d'exorbitant. On veut lui faire voter trente millions de plus pour le Pacifique. Comme elle ne veut pas rester indéfiniment pauvre, elle se contente de dire: Nous voterons peut-être tout cela, si nous avons les moyens de le payer; mais qu'on ne perde pas de vue que nous sommes las de toujours voter pour les autres et qu'avant même d'examiner s'il est juste de donner un montant aussi rond, nous voulons savoir ce qu'il nous restera pour nous-mêmes. Si la situation financière du pays ne permet pas de faire les deux, eh! bien, nous prétendons que le Pacifique n'a pas plus de droit que nous, et il attendra comme nous, ou il passera après nous.”

If the Province of Quebec has made such demands upon the country, if the hon. gentleman had read this, he could not certainly have accused our party of making false accusations against the hon. gentlemen opposite. This is the mouthpiece of the Conservative party of the Province of Quebec, and, if any such views have been advocated in that Province, it has not been by the Rouge party but by the Conservative party, and the gentlemen who have advanced them are the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. But the hon. gentlemen opposite, in all this argument, in all the discussions upon this question, have taken upon themselves more to abuse us on this side of the House, more to abuse the press which supports us, than to defend the position in which they find themselves. The hon. gentlemen opposite have accused the Globe newspaper, in especial, of having decried the country, of having injured the country and having injured the Pacific Railroad at the same time. I will take upon myself to read here a short extract from another paper, a paper which is edited and issued by the Conservatives of the Province of Quebec, a paper which is supposed to be the mouthpiece of that wing of the bleus of Province of Quebec which has for its official head the Secretary of State for the Dominion of Canada—I allude to Le Monde. This article appeared a few days ago, and it is a fair specimen of what they have been printing for the last week. I will read these remarks about the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the opinions which are given respecting this enormous subsidy:

LES SPECULATIONS DU PACIFIQUE.

“ Plus nous examinons les documents relatifs au Pacifique et les explications données, plus nous trouvons la mesure extraordinaire et injustifiable.”

What can be said stronger than this language?

“ L'incapacité de l'administration se révèle dans tous les chiffres donnés. Ces messieurs veulent absolument que le pays fasse leur fortune sans qu'ils aient à se déroiser les bras.”

I will go on and read one more sentence from this same paper:

“ On sait que le Pacifique n'est pas très scrupuleux sur l'exécution de ses obligations.”

Mr. Speaker, I do not think any greater accusation could possibly be made. I am quite sure that neither the Globe nor any other Liberal paper in this country has made such an accusation as that against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, namely, that this Company is not scrupulous in fulfilling its engagements. I think hon. gentlemen opposite, in accusing the Liberal press and the Liberal party of decrying this Company, and through decrying this Company casting discredit on our country, are thus shown to have been, at all events, stating what is not the fact. It is not the Liberal party only, or the Liberal press, that have spoken against this Company and against this proposition. Sir, the hon. gentlemen opposite have been accusing us, or accusing the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me on this question, of having injured the stock of this Company in the money markets of the world. Sir, I do not imagine for a moment that any words of mine can possibly have any influence upon the money markets of the world, but if I did believe that such a thing could occur, I do not think that it would be right in me, I do not think that I would be justified, in keeping silent on such a question as this, simply out of regard to the effect my words might have upon the stock markets of the world. If hon. gentlemen opposite who are advocating this measure are influenced by such things, are actuated by such motives, then a new light has dawned upon me; I can now better appreciate the reasons for which they have advocated this measure, and for bringing down to Parliament such a resolution as this. But, Sir, I do not believe it is right, I believe it is contrary to the duty of any hon. gentleman, representing a Canadian constituency in this House, to be influenced by any such motives, or to allow his tongue to be tied by considerations as to what influence his words may have upon the stock markets of the world. I believe, Sir, that it is my duty, as it is the duty of every hon. gentleman in this house, to look upon this matter, to discuss it, and to decide it wholly and solely as it may influence, and as it may affect, the good of our common country. And, Sir, it is in a feeble endeavor to discharge this duty to my constituents and to the people of this country that I have said these words, and have tried to make plainer and a little more distinct the matter which is really at issue before us; and, Sir, it will be in trying to carry out that duty that I shall feel myself bound to vote against the resolutions which the hon. gentleman has laid before us.

Mr. GIROUARD. As a French member of this House, and as one of the representatives of the Province of Quebec, whose position upon the question now under consideration has been so much misrepresented, whose good name has been so often and so greatly slandered, I feel that I can no longer remain silent. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down has quoted from two of the leading organs of the French Conservative party. Mr. Speaker, when this Parliament is in Session I do not consider that newspapers are the organs which ought to guide us.

Several hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GIROUARD. Hon. gentlemen may laugh; but I will quote in a moment from one of their own papers, and I am sure they will declare that that paper cannot be an organ of the Liberal party. But, Sir, I say that when we are sitting here as representatives of the people, we must not be influenced in our action by what the newspapers may say outside of this House. We are not the representatives of the newspapers, but of the people. That is the position I shall take with regard to that matter. I also wish to say that during this debate, in the House and out of it, the good name of the Province of Quebec has been grievously slandered. I much regretted the other evening to hear the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) say that, in order to induce the members of the Province of Quebec to vote for this measure, the Government of this country would be required to give dollar for dollar to that Province, or, perhaps, to the members of that Province—or words to that effect—in fact his language was rather uncertain and equivocal in that respect; but I presume he referred to the Province of Quebec as a body. Mr. Speaker, as one of the representatives of that Province I wish to say, with reference to the claims which has been laid before this Government by that Province, that the claims are not new, but that they were made last year. No later than to-day every member has received a printed memorandum, signed by the Prime Minister of that Province, and which was drawn up and presented to this Government about ten months ago. These claims of the Province of Quebec are already old, and have nothing at all to do with the subject under discussion. When these claims are brought before the House they will be discussed upon their merits. As one of the representatives of that Province, I am not at all willing to mix up the two questions. One of them is now being examined, and after we have decided it, if the claims of the Province of Quebec are brought forward, I will give to them my best attention. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be influenced in the vote I am going to give upon the present matter by any considerations of what this Government may be likely to do in regard to the other question. Sir, it is not only in this House that we have been slandered; and I want to bring to the notice of hon. gentlemen opposite, the statements of a newspaper which has always been considered as an organ of the Liberal party, but which, at the same time, I am prepared to admit, is also the organ of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That organ has recently gone so far as to insult the members from the Province of Quebec. It said: “ Here in Canada we are accustomed to hear politicians threaten and bully and make noisy declarations, which are usually the outcome of the whisky bottle rather than the calm language of the thoughtful public man.” The slander of this newspaper, I think, is known to all of us. You are acquainted with the French members from the Province of Quebec, and I think you have no reason to be ashamed of their behaviour. When we discussed the License Bill last Session, statistics were quoted showing that whereas wine is more generally used in the Province of Quebec than in the other Provinces, nevertheless the people of that Province are more temperate than those of any other Province of the Dominion. It has been said that this slander, coming from the Montreal Herald, comes from the organ of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I am going to prove it. I want to show this in order to convince the House and the country, and my constituents in particular, that in the vote I am going to give I am not guided by any ill feeling but by the merits of the case. The present Resolutions were placed on the notice paper on the 30th January last. On 1st February, just two days afterwards, the Montreal Herald, the organ of the Liberal party—

Several hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. GIROUARD. Is that paper not the organ of the Liberal party?

Several hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. GIROUARD. You decline to recognize the Montreal Herald, because as representatives of the people you have a right to say that you represent the Liberal party of the Dominion; and we have the same right when we talk about La Minerve and Le Monde. I have been told that the Montreal Herald is not the organ of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Let us follow its conduct since these Resolutions were introduced. On 1st February, as I have said, just two days after the Resolutions were brought in—and in fact, I believe it was before any other paper in the country had published articles on the subject—the Montreal Herald (it has been always stated that Liberal papers are open to conviction), published four leading articles on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the proposed arrangement. In the first article, under the heading of “The Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway,” we read:

“The Government and the Canadian Pacific.—In another column will be found a copy of the resolutions which will be introduced to-day by the Premier, providing further aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. . . . That they provide ample security for the public interest involved will be conceded on all hands. The fact is, the country is not going to pay one dollar more for the railway than was originally contemplated.”

The second article in the same number has the heading: “Is it a failure?” The third article is headed: “An implacable enemy,” and is an answer to the charges of the Montreal Witness. The fourth article is headed: “The people's railway.”

“With Parliament expressing confidence in the Company, the railway and the resources on which security will be taken for the loan that is made, the popular mind will be set at rest and the spirit of the people will rise proportionately. It will be saying to the country and to the world: ‘This is an enterprise in which we have the utmost faith, a measure for the development of our country on which no doubt can rest. We regard it as essential to the country's prosperity, and we back it up with all that the credit and resources of a united country can do for it. It is essentially a Canadian enterprise in its inception and progress and management, and a Canadian Parliament will see it safely through.’ The action of Parliament, which will square with the people, will, we are confident, commend itself to the best judges of the situation, whether in or out of Canada. The Canadian Pacific is the people's railway, and the people's representatives will see that it shall not meet the fate which is befalling private railway enterprises in too many instances in these days of railway trouble.”

On 2nd February there appeared another leading article on the same subject, on 3rd February another, on the 4th another under the heading “The Witness and the Canadian Pacific Railway,” another on the 5th, under the heading “The Globe and the Canadian Pacific Railway.” There were two articles on the 7th under the heading of “The Only Way” and the “Unreliable Witness,” another on the 8th, two on the 9th, and a final one on the 13th, “Interesting Correspondence,” referring to the correspondence between this Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company. If I were going to judge this question from personal feelings, seeing that that paper has more grossly insulted the French politicians of this country than any other paper or politician, I should feel inclined to vote against the railway Resolutions. But there is more involved. Is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a Conservative institution? Do we find a single Conservative in that Company? You find three or four business men whose political colour may be unknown, but at the same time you find that two of the leading spirits, Mr. Duncan McIntyre and Mr. Donald A. Smith, are perfectly well known as leading Liberals. That Company did not help us at the last general elections. We did not get from them even that support which we received from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which to-day stands before the House as an opponent of the Canadian Pacific Railway. What did that Company do with their patronage? Did they give their patronage to our friends? I am not aware that they did. Do you know, in fact, the reason why the Montreal Herald, the leading organ of the Liberal party in Quebec—

Several hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. GIROUARD. Not only is it the leading organ of the Liberal party of the Province of Quebec for Provincial purposes but also for Federal purposes, except with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Do you know why the Herald supports the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

An hon. MEMBER. Because it is paid for doing so.

Mr. GIROUARD. Because it receives the largest portion of the printing patronage of that Company. The facts I mention show that in supporting the Resolutions before the House—I am speaking for myself—we members of Quebec are not going to be guided by personal feelings or by party considerations. I am going to vote for the Resolutions because I believe they are in the interest of the whole Dominion, and in the interest of the Province of Quebec in particular, which is likely to benefit in the greatest degree from the construction of the great trans-continental railway. I do not intend to repeat the arguments which have been adduced on this side of the House as to the value of the security offered by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the loan. I have two principal reasons which induce me to vote for the Resolutions. They are very plain to my mind, and I hope they will be understood by the House, and also by my constituents. I am in favour of the railway Resolutions, first, because they tend to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway by a private company; and, second, because that construction is to be finished within the shortest time possible. Suppose we do not pass those Resolutions. What will be the consequence? That is a question which every hon. member should ask himself. I think the natural consequence would be that the country would have to finish this road. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company would have to surrender their charter and contract to this country. Did we not consecrate the principle, at the very inception of this work, that it should be done by private enterprise, and not by the Dominion Government? In 1871, when this country undertook to build the road within a certain time, this House, on the motion of Sir George E. Cartier, decided:

“That the railway referred to in the Address of Her Majesty, concerning the agreement made with British Columbia, and adopted by this House, on Saturday, 1st April last, should be constructed and worked by private enterprise, and not by the Dominion Government.”

During the same Session, and during the same debate, Sir Antoine Aimé Dorion, then one of the leaders of the Opposition, in order that there might be no misunderstanding on the subject, moved that the following words should be added: “and not otherwise.” That is the policy which has been pledged by this country to the construction of the railway by private enterprise, and are we to-day to interfere with that policy by undertaking to finish the road ourselves? I say further that we cannot finish it as well or as cheaply. I had the good fortune to visit the North-West in 1882. I saw the portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway which was then finished, to near Regina, in company with an engineer, who had been in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and had been dismissed, so that he had no good feeling towards the Company. He told me that that railway was a first class railway, whereas the Company was only bound to build a second class road. Taking the western section, the Thunder Bay section, and the Pembina Branch, and one hundred miles west of Winnipeg, and what do we find that they cost the country. We find that these sections, covering about 700 miles, cost $28,000,000, or at the rate of about $40,000 a mile; and with the exception of about 100 miles west of Winnipeg, this railway is constructed through the most difficult portion of the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Company have about 700 miles to construct in order to finish the railway, through a country which cannot be more difficult than the Thunder Bay or Kamloops sections. Taking the same rate of $40,000 per mile—and we cannot suppose that the Company are going to spend more money than the Government—we will have those 700 miles constructed for $28,000,000—the very sum with which they say they are in a position to finish the road. There is another reason why this contract should be left in the hands of the Company. I have just returned from a trip to Europe, having been through Italy, France, and some other portions of the Continent. I came in contact with some of the men who have stock in the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I found that these men are the best immigration agents that the country can have. Their interest in the commercial success of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and their anxiety to obtain dividends, sooner or later, upon the stock of that Company, impel them to send as many immigrants as they can to the North-West. I have also been to the North-West, and for the sole purpose of ascertaining for myself whether that country justified the great expenditure we are making upon it. I returned perfectly charmed with that country. I have no doubt that in the course of years, for it is only a question of time, the North-West will be the greatest country in the world. The only thing we want is people, and these shareholders who are in different portions of Europe will send us these people, and we have only to provide for their safe arrival to our North-West territory. I now come to the second reason why we should adopt the Resolutions. I say we should finish the road in as short a time as possible, in order that the immigrants coming to this country should not have to stop at St. Paul, or Minneapolis, or other places in the United States, as I have myself seen them stop, while en route to the North-West. It is important, it is indispensable, that these immigrants should go through Canadian territory. It may be said that we will have steamers next year; but for more than five months in the year I doubt if we can reach Thunder Bay; I doubt if we can reach it sooner than the 15th of May, in consequence of ice in Lake Superior. The result is that for some months in the spring, when the immigrants are coming in en masse, they will have to go to Chicago and St. Paul over the old route, which has been the cause of our North-West not being populated as fast as if we had had a road in our own territory. For these reasons I am in favour of the Resolutions. Before resuming my seat I wish to say a word with regard to La Minerve and Le Monde. I think hon. gentlemen have understood me very well when I said that when the House is in Session the party is represented by its members in Parliament. But there is something more to be said. I was not surprised to read the statement of Le Monde which has been well known for the last twelve months to have been the organ, not of the Conservative party, but of one man and a few friends supporting him—I refer to Mr. L. A. Senecal, a speculator, one who is interested in railway matters, and connected with the Grand Trunk Railway Company who are offering all the opposition they can to the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I was greatly surprised, I was pained, to read the articles of La Minerve—La Minerve, which has stood as the organ of the party for years and never made default—La Minerve, which reaches almost every elector in the Province of Quebec. I was more surprised when I considered that one of the members of this Government is, I believe, an important shareholder in that concern. I say I was greatly surprised, because if that member of the Government had been consulted before that article was written, it would not have appeared. Therefore, La Minerve has published that article, not as the organ of the Government, not as the organ of the party; but I am very sorry to say it has been inspired by the same source which inspires and dictates all the articles of Le Monde. Mr. Speaker, it is certainly with a great deal of regret that I have to make these statements. I know the consequences of making them. I know that I shall be personally assailed, perhaps persecuted before my constituents; but, Sir, I believe I owe it to them, to my Province and to the country to say that these articles are not inspired by the Conservative party or published in its interest, but that they are inspired by private interest. I know that I shall meet the same men before my electors; but, Sir, I know the intelligence and independence of those electors. I represent the richest rural constituency in the Province of Quebec, and there is no money that can bribe or prevent them from voting for the man of their choice. As I said before, I am very sorry to have to make this statement; but I am bound to do it in the interest of my Province, in the interest of my constituency, and in the interest of my country.

Mr. FLEMING. I do not intend to discuss the question of the political situation in the Province of Quebec, but I desire to glance for a moment at the important and weighty reasons which the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has given for his support to these resolutions. His first reason is that their passage will secure the construction of the Pacific Railway by a private company. I thought that that object had been reached when the contract was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in 1881. I do not know that it is proposed by anybody that the contract should be taken away from the Company. I do not understand the position of the Company to be that if this $22,500,000 is not given, the contract will pass out of their hands. I understand from those who are said to represent the Company in this House that they do not come to us on bended knees—that they do not come because they need assistance, or because they are unable to finish their contract; and therefore, I do not see that there is any great weight in the first reason which induces the hon. gentleman to give his support to the resolutions. His second reason is that the passage of these resolutions will secure the early completion of the Railway. I do not understand either that the Railway Company put themselves in the position that their contract will not be completed until the year 1891 in case this grant is not made. They have stated, it is true, that the work of construction will be retarded, and that they will not go on with the same rapidity that has characterized their efforts in the past; but neither they nor any one for them have stated that they will take the full time to complete their contract unless this additional money is granted to them. But the hon. gentleman says that by passing these Resolutions we shall enable the large number of stockholders in this Company, who are scattered over Europe, to become active immigration agents for the settlement of the North-West. How many of the stockholders are scattered over Europe? From the papers laid before the House we have obtained some knowledge of where the stock is held. We have not all the knowledge that we should like to have, but we do not find that there are any great number of stockholders scattered over the continent of Europe who are acting as immigration agents to promote the settlement of the North-West. It is said that the Liberal press and the Liberal party have been hostile to the project of the Pacific Railway, and that they have retarded its progress and prevented the Company from securing that financial assistance which they would have had in the absence of that hostility. What, Sir, was the original policy of both parties regarding this Canadian Pacific Railway? The hon. gentleman has said that both parties desired to construct the railway by means of a company. The original policy of both parties was to construct a Pacific Railway having its eastern point at Callander, and its western point on the Pacific Ocean. Why was Callander selected as the eastern point? Because it was unnecessary to have a Pacific Railway running farther east than Callander—because at that point it would form its connection with the already existing railway systems of the country. It was not the policy of either party at that time that the Pacific Railway Company should, in addition to constructing a road from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, also absorb all or nearly all the eastern connections of that road. It never was in the contemplation of either party, at the time of the making of this contract, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should, under the large powers given to them in their charter, enter into competition with the other great interests in the country, in order to absorb and gather up all the avenues of trade to the east. Well, that being the policy of both parties, in 1880, a contract was made with a syndicate of private gentlemen whose ample means were put forth as one of the principal reasons why they were sought out to undertake the construction of this important work. Sir, was any obstruction raised to the construction of a Pacific Railway, even at that time? Did the Liberal party at any time throw obstruction in the way of the completion of this road? No, but when the contract was entered into with the Syndicate, the position of the Liberal party was the same as it is to-day—that a contract was given to this Syndicate for the construction of a railway, and that a subvention was given them largely in excess of what was necessary. We find that the position which they took at that time is fortified by the figures which are laid before the House now by this Government. Upon the ratification of the contract by Parliament and the organization of the Company and the subscription of $5,000,000 of stock, the original Syndicate passed out of view and in their stead the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, incorporated, entered the arena. Now if the members of the original Syndicate had passed out of actual existence, in connection with this thing, it would have been in the interests of the country. It is true these gentlemen had large interest in the stock of the Government, but at the same time they went to work, as private citizens, for the purpose of making the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a source of profit to themselves, irrespective of the interests of the Company and its shareholders. We find that they went to work and proceeded to buy up all the railways of the east. We find gentlemen occupying positions on the Board of the Canadian Pacific Railway, buying up, in their private capacity, the shares and the bonds of the Credit Valley Company at 30 and 35 cents on the dollar, and then arranging with their own Company to value them at 100 cents on the dollar. When we find transactions of this kind—when we find these men absorbing and gathering together the various railways of the Eastern Provinces, putting themselves in rivalry with the Grand Trunk Railway, we are not surprised that they find opposition in the money markets of the world. When we find these gentlemen who hold the controlling interests on the Board of the Canadian Pacific Railway, absorbing for their private interests all the feeders of the Grand Trunk Railway on which they can put their hands, we are not surprised that the latter should oppose them in the money markets of the world. In that condition of things, what is the next proposition this company makes? They came down to the Government in last November and said we are embarrassed, our stock which we have put on the market is not realizing as large a figure as we think its value demands; we are meeting with an opposition which, to a large extent, we ourselves invoked, and we find that the $30,000,000 of stock we have put on the New York market has fallen down below 60, and we ask, therefore, the Government to give us a guarantee of 3 per cent. on the $65,000,000 stock we have issued, in order that we may be put in funds. Is that a good reason? Would such a course put the Company in funds? The Company issued $65,000,000 of stock; $25,000,000 of it went into the hands of the original members of the Syndicate, and $20,000,000 of this $25,000,000 were taken by them at 25 cents on the dollar; $30,000,000 were taken by the New York Syndicate, and we have not the names of the gentlemen who formed that Syndicate; and $10,000,000 were pledged to secure a loan of $5,000,000. This makes the whole $65,000,000 of stock, and any enhanced value resulting from this guarantee which they asked the Government to give, would have gone into the hands of the stockholders. Any enhanced value the guarantee would give to the stock, if it had that effect, would have enabled these gentlemen of the Syndicate, who have passed out of legal existence as contractors, but who still keep such intimate connection with the Company, to sell the stock they had taken at 25 cents on the dollar, at such a figure as would have made them millionaires. The value at which the stock stands in the market of 56 cents, just nets these gentlemen a profit of $9,000,000 on the $25,000,000 stock taken by them at 25. But hon. gentlemen opposite will say that this stock cost them 40, because they took $5,000,000 at par, and $5,000,000 at par with the other $20,000,000 at 25, averages 40 all around. But the $5,000,000 which was taken at par was taken under the conditions of the original contract. It was one of the terms of the original charter. They could not have come into possession at all of this original contract and the Company could not have gone into operation until they had subscribed for $5,000,000 at par, so that this $5,000,000 forms a fund which the country has a right to say must be expended in the construction of the railway. The guarantee of 3 per cent upon the stock did not, however, have the desired effect of so booming the stock as to enable the members of the Syndicate and the holders of the $20,000,000 stock to make what they thought was a sufficient profit on the transaction. Consequently, they now come down to Parliament and ask for $22,500,000 of the country's money as a loan, until such time as the stock market shall be raised so as to enable them to make the profit which they think this transaction should enable them to make. Now, Sir, we hear, in the course of this debate, a great deal about patriotism. In fact, when the country is going to be plundered in any way, the cry of patriotism is the disguise that is adopted. Now, we will see where the patriotism comes in. We have the figures laid upon the Table of the House by the Pacific Railway Company themselves, that they have spent in the construction of the main line of the railway, that is, the contracted line, they have spent in pursuance of their contract, $23,563,564. That is what they say they have spent. But, if I understand the position of things aright, they have not spent so much. If I understand what the hon. the Minister of Railways said the other day, they have only spent $16,063,564, because I learn that there is $7,500,000 of floating debt, and it is to enable them to pay this floating debt that an immediate payment is asked from the Government. Of the amount, then, that is put in construction on the main line or the contracted line of the railway, there is $7,500,000 of work that they have not paid for yet. According to what the hon. the Minister of Railways said, that not a dollar of the money that is asked from the country, not a dollar of the money that Parliament is asked to vote, is to go for any other purpose than the contracted line, then they have incurred this floating debt upon the $23,000,000 odd, and that is to be paid for out of the money that Parliament is now asked to vote. Otherwise, that $7,500,000 of floating debt represents a debt not on the contracted line, but on some of the collateral enterprises into which this Company has gone, and the money asked for from Parliament, instead of going for the contracted line, is to pay debts on those outside enterprises. But, Sir, even if they have spent $23,500,000 upon the main line of the railway, they have got far more money than that from the country; they have got more money now from the country than they have expended on the line. There are $4,000,000 of the original stock—$1,000,000 being retained by the Government as security—$4,000,000 of the original subscribed stock, which was subscribed as a condition of their contract, that the country had a right to say should go into the construction of the railway. They have, then, that $4,000,000; they have received $12,289,211 of a cash subsidy; they have received from the land subsidy, $9,029,093, making a total of $25,318,304. Deducting the amount which they say they have spent—the $23,500,000,—leaves a balance of $1,744,740 still in their hands, moneys of the country over and above all the money that they have put upon the construction of the main line of the railway. I say nothing about the earnings—some $900,000—upon the constructed railway, that they have received, for which they give credit in their statements, because that may possibly be put, and may properly be put, against the interest upon the $4,000,000 stock which I have claimed that the country has a right to have expended upon the construction of the railway. Now, Sir, what are their present necessities? If it is true that the country has advanced more money than they have expended in the construction of the railway, what are their present necessities? They say they require $27,000,000 to complete the railway. They will receive, just as rapidly as they proceed with the construction, the balance of the cash subsidy, $12,710,788. I think I may safely, after the glowing accounts which we have heard from the Minister of Railways and the gentlemen who succeeded him in support of these resolutions, say that the immigration into that territory during the next two years will very far exceed that of the past three years. I think I may very safely say that there will be hundreds, that there will be thousands of people seeking homes in the North-West in excess of what have been going in in the last two years; and yet we find, since this Company has been organized, since it has proceeded with the construction of the railway, that it has realized out of its lands some $9,000,000; and it is not too much to say, with the impetus given to immigration, with the glowing hopes that are held out to us by the hon. the Minister of Railways of the future of that country, that, within the next two years, the Railway Company will be enabled to realize as much out of its land as it has done in the past. Add that to the balance of the cash subsidy, and there is a round sum of $9,000,000 more. Then, the earnings of the Company during nine months were something over $900,000. I presume that it is not estimating too much if we say that, during the next two years, the net earnings of the Company will be $2,500,000. I do not think, if the net earnings during nine months were $900,000, that it is estimating too much to say that $2,500,000 will be the earnings during the next two years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FLEMING. I am glad the hon gentleman approves of that statement. Add that to the figures I have given, with $3,000,000 of postal earnings which the Government say they will earn during the next two years, and these sums, added altogether, amount to $28,955,528, a sum $1,455,528 in excess of what they say is necessary for the completion of the contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FLEMING. Now, if that is their position, why are they here asking for this loan of $22,500,000? Because all these sums will come into their hands, the land subsidy and the sum I have given as sales of land, and the $12,750,000 for the cash subsidy will come into their hands so soon as they construct the railway. They may construct it in one year, and all these sums will come into their hands. There is, therefore, no necessity on the part of the Company for coming to Parliament, and asking the money of the country to be advanced to them for the purposes of this construction. They had too good a thing in the original contract, and they are getting a much better thing now. All these sums that I have given are exclusive of a single dollar of the stock of the Company, except the original $4,000,000 that were subscribed as a condition for receiving the contract. These patriotic gentlemen, whose energy and whose patriotism have been so much lauded in this House, these patriotic gentlemen whose example is held up to the admiration of this House and the country, are now asking that the people of Canada should advance further money for the construction of the main line of this railway, so as to enable them to devote all their private means to the acquisition of other lines outside the original contracted line altogether. Now, Sir, I think we may well ask, I think the people of this country will ask, and I am sure my constituents will ask, when they come to read these propositions—where is the wealth of the original members of the Syndicate? Why, we might as well have given our money to a pauper company. Anybody would be able to construct this railway from Callander to the Pacific on the subvention of the Government. People will ask where are the enormous sums the original contractors made? Where have these gentlemen put these enormous profits which they have made upon this transaction? And after they have made such great profits out of the construction of the railway, why do they not advance out of their enormous fortunes sufficient to carry on the contract as rapidly as possible? Sir, I am satisfied that my constituents will ask why these energetic gentlemen—I believe the term now is, patriotic gentlemen—who clear upon the present value of the stock $9,000,000 upon their little investment of $20,000,000 at 25 cents upon the dollar—I say I am satisfied that my constituents will ask why are these gentlemen now coming back for more assistance? I am sure they will ask why these gentlemen who are making these enormous profits out of the railway stocks, these gentlemen of the construction company that are also making fortunes in their arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, are asking for more money to construct this main line of railway when the enormous profits which they are making are being diverted to other purposes personal to themselves. Before I could see my way to support these resolutions, I would like to see the Canadian Pacific Railway Company put into the construction of the line they contracted to build for the country, the means which the country has placed at their disposal. Before I could support these Resolutions, I would also like to see the stock of the Company organized for the purpose of constructing a railway from Callander to the Pacific Ocean used for the construction of that railway. Although I know that I am guilty of unpatriotic conduct in the eyes of hon. gentlemen opposite because I have a desire to see those who are profiting by this transaction give a reasonable return for their opportunities of making profits; still I must express my disapprobation of the resolutions brought before the House until such time as there is a necessity shown by the Company for the additional subvention that is now being asked from Parliament. This cry of patriotism that we have heard ad nauseam seems to be the only thing which hon. gentlemen on the opposite side have to say. They rise one after another and say very little about the resolution before the House, but a great deal about the patriotism which envelops all the hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. Why, Sir, we had the hon. gentleman from King's, Nova Scotia (Mr. Woodworth) the other night for two or three hours dilating upon the patriotism of the Conservative party and the want of patriotism of the Liberal party. An hon. gentleman remarked that the want of ballast which he displayed in the long speech which he delivered on that occasion was due, no doubt, to the fact that he had disposed of his gravel pit. Then we have heard the hon. member from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) to-day, in a speech which, if it was not patriotic, was not very much of anything else, declaring that all the patriotic acts of the past were due to the great Liberal Conservative party, and that hon. gentlemen belonging to the Liberal party, both in this Parliament and in preceding Parliaments, had decried the country in various ways; that they were the opponents of Confederation and that the hon. gentlemen on that side of the House were its fathers and promoters. I have had the curiosity to look at some of the original documents in reference to Confederation, and I find, in the Session of 1864, when steps were being taken for the Confederation of the Provinces, a report of a select committee to which the question was referred, which was presented to the House by the hon. George Brown. For the information of the hon. member for Montreal Centre who, when he sauntered into the library in search of information, failed to hit upon this book, I will read this report:

"The Hon. Mr. Brown, from the Select Committee appointed to enquire into the important subject embraced in a despatch to the Colonial Minister, addressed to him on the 2nd February, 1859, by the Hon. George E. Cartier, the Hon. A. T. Galt, and the Hon. John Rose, then members of the Executive Council of this Province, while in London, acting on behalf of the Government of which they were members, in which they declared that very grave difficulties now present themselves in connecting the Government of Canada in such a manner as to show due regard to the wishes of its numerous population; that 'differences exist to an extent which prevents any perfect and complete assimilation of the views of the two sections'—that 'the progress of population has been more rapid in the western section, and claims are now made on behalf of its inhabitants for giving them representation in the Legislature in proportion to the numbers';—that 'the result is shown by an agitation brought with great danger to the peaceful and harmonious working of our constitutional system, and, consequently, detrimental to the progress of the Province'—and that 'the necessity of providing a remedy for a state of things that is yearly becoming worse, and of allaying feelings that are daily being aggravated by the contention of political parties, has impressed the advisers of Her Majesty's representatives in Canada with the importance of seeking for such a mode of dealing with these difficulties as may forever remove them';—and the best means of remedying the evils therein set forth, presented to the House the report of the said committee, which was read, as followeth:—

"That the Committee have held eight meetings, and have endeavoured to find some solution for existing difficulties likely to receive the assent of both sections of the Province.

"A strong feeling was found to exist among the members of the Committee in favour of changes in the direction of the Federative system, applied either to Canada alone or the whole British North American Provinces, and such progress has been made as to warrant the Committee in recommending that the subject be again referred to a Committee at the next Session of Parliament.

"The whole respectfully submitted.

"George Brown, Chairman."

It will be curious to hon. gentlemen opposite who may stumble on that document to find that the leader of the present Government on the division in the committee recorded his vote in this way. The committee divided on the adoption of the report, and among the three nays appears the name of John A. Macdonald. Upon the same day the report was presented to Parliament, the Government of the hon. gentleman who refused to accede to the views of the majority on that report in favour of a Federal system for Canada or for the Provinces was defeated; and upon the defeat of that Government, and on the same day, the hon. gentleman changed his views and coincided with the views of the majority of the committee, and organized a Government composed, among others, of the leader of the Liberal party, Mr. Brown, for the purpose of carrying out that Federal system against which he had voted in the committee. Hon. gentlemen opposite are fond of attacking hon. members on this side of the House as having opposed Confederation. The history of Confederation itself, and more than that the history of the agitation which led up to Confederation, show who were its friends and through whose instrumentality it was brought about. The hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) also said that the Liberal party has pursued a very unpatriotic course in opposing the views of the Conservative party on the great question of the National Policy. The history of the National Policy is not yet written, and when it is written and summed up, there will be hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House whose patriotism, I fear, will ooze out with the profits that the policy has enabled some people to make. I shall not detain the House longer, because I observe the hon. member for Wellington is so anxious to speak it would be a cruelty to prevent him. I have shown that the original contractors for the building of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway have departed from their contract. I have shown that they have, with the ample private means at their disposal and the ample means which their contract enabled them to procure, entered into rival projects and brought upon themselves the hostility of other institutions in this country which has, to some extent, embarrassed their financial position. I have shown that the leading members of that Company have, by means of the position which they held as controlling directors, been enabled by the use of the Company's charter, to make for themselves very large fortunes. I have shown that the stock which they have taken, even at the present market value, is such as enabled them to clear on the little transaction of $20,000,000 a profit of $9,000,000; and I think I have a right to ask that some of this money be put into the construction of the road before the country is called upon to loan the Company $30,000,000.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise at this late stage of the debate for the purpose of inflicting a speech upon this House, but merely for the purpose of offering a few observations in justification of the course I intend to pursue upon these Resolutions. I shall offer no apologies to the House for doing so, for I think apologies are odious; I will simply throw myself entirely on the generosity of the House as a young member, and I hope to receive at the hands of hon. members such treatment as they have always accorded to young members. I have listened to the debate so far for the purpose of gathering information on this subject; and the question has been so thoroughly gone over and re-gone over, it has been ploughed, sub-soiled and harrowed to the extent that it is almost impossible to find a lump on which to rest your feet to make a speech. The historical position of the subject has been largely and thoroughly dealt with, the financial aspect has also been thoroughly treated, and it would be unjust and unfair to hon. members if I were to enter into figures, in order to inform the House, for I believe every member is as well informed on that subject as I am myself. What has struck me most forcibly in this debate is the absence of that word of—which the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Fleming) appeared to be so much afraid—that word patriotism. I have failed to find in the discussion on the Opposition benches the first sentiment of patriotism, or the first word of praise for our great North-West country. Those hon. gentllemen have confined themselves to a mere verbal criticism of the speeches on the other side and have given long pages of figures for the purpose of showing something, and each and every one appeared to have a separate set of figures, and to draw separate conclusions therefrom. As I do not think anything is to be gained in the way of information or knowledge, by quoting figures here, I leave them entirely out of the question. Now, Sir, we have no right to doubt, nor do I desire to doubt, the individual patriotism of the hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches; but, Sir, collectively, and as a party, their patriotism is exceedingly questionable, if the speeches I have heard from these hon. gentlemen since coming into this Parliament, are any criterion of their ideas on this subject. I think it would be well for this country if the leader of the Opposition and those who follow him, had the same patriotism which their illustrious predecessor, hon. George Brown had, in years gone by, when the subject of the Intercolonial Railway was before the Parliament of this country. The question of money was talked about, and his patriotism came to the front, when he said that he would rather build six Intercolonial Railways than jeopardize Confederation. That was a noble and a patriotic sentiment, and I wish hon. gentlemen would now come to the conclusion that they would rather build this road, even at a considerable cost, than jeopardize Confederation or the great future of this magnificent country. I think that representative men in this House should give expression to their patriotism, because their speeches, as they are recorded from day to day in Hansard and in the public press of the country, would go abroad and be read by people in foreign countries from which we are to draw our immigration. This is the place for every man to show his patriotism, and to express it freely. I desire, Sir, to say a few words on some observations of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Fleming). He says that under the guise of patriotism we cloak up almost everything. Well, Sir, under the guise of what they call prevention of plunder, they oppose, in every conceivable way, the construction of this great railway. They pretend to say that the country is being plundered, though they have failed to show it, so that in that respect they are under a guise as much as we are; but there is a nobility in being under a guise of patriotism which is not to be found in the other. The whole of the hon. gentleman's argument went to show that the country is not running one iota of risk in making this loan, for he said the Company did not need the money, as they could realize sufficient from the lands and money grant to pay all expenses, &c. Now, Sir, if this latter statement be correct the country can run no risk, as every dollar so realized goes towards the payment of this loan of $22,500,000; that is, if they get all the money they want from the sale of the lands within the two years he spoke about, every cent of the $22,500,000 will have been repaid to this country. So that there can be no risk, and if the argument is good on one side it is certainly good on the other. The hon. gentleman says we might as well have given the money to a pauper company. All that statement needs is to be repeated in order that it may be contradicted. Sir, I say that the great enterprise that the Company has shown in the construction of the road has not been equalled by any company ever organized, since the early history of this or any other country of which we have any knowledge. Could a pauper company have gone into the markets of the world to the extent to which this Company has gone, and organized their affairs so as to have pushed that road as rapidly as they have pushed it? I think they have done wonders; they have done more and greater things in the construction of a railway than any other company or Government has ever done in the history of this world. I think that is a sufficient answer to the pauper company cry. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken, went back to 1864, and spoke about the resolutions of the hon. George Brown with regard to Confederation. Well, Sir, I wish he had gone back to 1858, since he was relating the history of his party, for the further back he goes, the more inconsistency he will find. Let us stop for a moment at 1858. We find, that on the organization of that Government, in 1858, they betrayed and threw to the winds every profession they had ever made in public life. Was not "representation by population" posted on every tree and fence throughout this country, and yet, when the hon. George Brown formed that Cabinet, in 1858, he formed it with seven out of its thirteen Ministers opposed to the principle of representation by population. Consequently, they could not carry a Government measure, and forty-eight hours afterwards, because of their disregard of their former professions, they were quietly voted out of power. I think, Sir, the hon. gentleman might well have left out the previous history of the party to which he belongs. I would say with regard to this $22,500,000, that if that sum of money was granted to the road as a bonus it is the duty of this Parliament, and of this country, to pay it. I say the interests of this country are so bound up with this great Canadian Pacific Railway and the North-West, that we cannot afford at the present time to either drop it or retard its progress. But in place of its being a bonus it is only a loan; and suppose the Company failed, and that the road should come back into the hands of this Government, how much worse off will the Government or the country be, than if they had built the road themselves. They will be better off, because they will have a road more cheaply constructed than any other road on this continent. Suppose it were given as a bonus; the total cost of the road would be only $100,000,000, which would be equivalent to $35,800 per mile. Now take the roads in Minnesota, which I think is a fair and just comparison to make, and we find that in 1880 there were 4,252 miles, including sidings, &c., in existence, costing $235,251,147, or equal to $55,300 per mile, as against $35,800 for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Take next, Sir, the State of Kansas, about which we have heard so much, and we find that the average cost of the roads in that State, where they have no Rocky Mountains to cross, and no eastern section to build, is $48,000 per mile. Indeed, if we take the whole of the western United States we will find that the average cost of their railways was $46,700 per mile, whereas we would be getting this road at a cost of $35,800 per mile, provided this sum was an actual bonus. But it is not, for it will be repaid, every cent of it, and we have absolute security, as I will endeavour to show before I conclude. Much has been said about the great North-West. It has been said to night, and very properly, by an hon. member who addressed the House on the Government side, that all we want there is the people. That is true, and we cannot get the people unless we build the railway. The history of colonization in the United States shows, if it shows anything, that railways must precede and go before either civilization or colonization. In this rapid age, when everybody is living rapidly, it is absolutely and positively necessary that railways should be built before you can get a population into a country. We find, Sir, in the State of Kansas—with its miasmatic fevers and the pestilence that follows, without a solitary drop of water that is fit to drink, without a solitary bit of material for the construction of buildings—in that State, which has, I am told, been lauded highly by hon. gentlemen of the Opposition in days gone by—in that State, where people have to live in dug-outs, the population has increased from 417,659 in 1870 to 1,080,000, in 1880. Take also the territory of Dakota, with a much inferior climate and soil to ours. All I need to do, to show its inferiority in these respects, is to point to the physical features of that country. The territory of Dakota is the water-shed of this continent.

The water runs northward and southward, and that watershed has been pouring its alluvial deposits into the valley of our Red River for centuries. Then, it is the great snow-belt of this continent. We have not half the quantity of snow that they have in Dakota; and it is colder than our country, because its altitude is greater. Yet, with all these drawbacks, the population of Dakota has increased from 14,181 in 1870, to no less than 135,137 in 1880. Why, it has almost multiplied its population by ten in the short period of ten years. Well, just apply these facts to our North-West Territories. Suppose that in ten years you will have 100,000 people there. It has been fairly estimated that each adult individual is worth $1,000 to the country. Say that, out of that 100,000 people, you will have 25,000 who are adults, that population will bring us no less a sum than $25,000,000, or, if you get 100,000 adults, they will enrich the country to the extent of $100,000,000. So, I say, all that is necessary in order to make a country populous and prosperous, where you have so much land to cultivate, is to build railways. Now, the principle involved in this question is not the giving of aid to this railway at all. These people come here with good securities, and they ask for a loan of $22,500,000. For what purpose? Not to enable them merely to fulfil their contract, but to enable them to do so within a period of five years instead of ten. Five years may not be a very long time, but in the history of an individual, or of a country, it is a very great deal; and if we should be as far ahead in 1885 as we should be in 1891, by granting $22,500,000 as a bonus, the country would endorse such a step. Well, Sir, we possess a great advantage over the United States in peopling our North-West country. They had to bring their people from across the water. We have 55,000,000 to draw from on this side. I believe there will be a nice little immigration from the United States into that country within the next five or ten years. The hon. member for Queen's, New Brunswick, (Mr. Davies) said we do not want the road north of Lake Superior. I think it is one of the most important things in the construction of the railway to have that portion of it completed early, for several reasons. We could not, by the part water route he has talked about, move the harvests of the North-West until the following year, for the simple reason that the harvests are taken off in August, and would have to be marketed and taken to the lake shore for shipment in vessels before the close of navigation; and it would be utterly impossible to move that harvest each year out of the country by that amphibious route we have heard so much about. For five or six months in the year that route would be entirely useless to the people of the North-West. Besides, we all know that the people will not travel by a mixed route of that kind when they can go by an all-rail route. The present all-rail route to that country is through the United States. We have already heard so much of the danger of carrying immigrants through the United States, to our North-West, that it is needless for me to add anything further. We want to draw the trade of that North-West to our Eastern Provinces and to our Eastern ports? What has built up New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and all the other cities on the Atlantic Coast of the United States? Has it not been the trade of the great West? The population of these cities has been quadrupled in a short time. We want the trade of our North-West to build up Montreal and Quebec and Halifax and St. John, and to make flourishing cities of them.

An hon. MEMBER. And Louisburg.

Mr. FERGUSON. I do not know where that is, but I suppose it is down in the east somewhere. These large and populous and wealthy cities contribute largely to the wealth of the country. They are large consumers. They gather the wealth from foreign countries, and distribute it among our people, and the only way we can get them is by bringing our commerce down through our own territory, never letting it touch American soil, and delivering it to our own steamships, on our own coasts, in our own country. Hon. gentlemen say: Build the rail way as it is needed. Some say: Let it terminate at Winnipeg, and all that sort of thing. I will not reply to such statements, because they have no force, and do not deserve any contradiction at all. Hon. gentlemen talk about land monopolies and colonization companies in that country. Well, I suppose they are aware that all the Pacific Railway Companies in the United States—at least the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific—have sold their lands to colonization companies for the sake of securing them as immigration agents, and we find that the lands of these colonization companies are settled more quickly than they could be by Government immigration agents. That is easily to be understood. You appoint an immigration agent to act on behalf of the Government in a foreign country. He goes abroad, and feeling that he is appointed by a rich country, he takes his ease and has no interest beyond earning his money as easily as he can. But you get a colonization company, and the members of that company who have an interest in it go home, and they will get ten immigrants for the one that a Government agent would get. I would say build the road, complete it, and if it should fall into our hands, we would be no worse off than if we built it ourselves. On the contrary, we would be better off, because we would have a road more cheaply constructed than if we had undertaken to build it as a Government road. As far as security is concerned, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman this question: If the 21,000,000 acres of land which they are now offering to us, were given to the Company as good payment for $21,000,000, why ought it not to be good security for a like amount of money now? In the land itself we have good security for the money we are loaning. I do not intend to further prolong this debate. I would only say, develop that North-West. I believe it is in the interest of the people of the older Provinces that it should be developed. It is in their interest that they should have in that country a consuming population for their manufactures and as contributors to the revenue of the country. If we get people in there, those people will develop that country and it will become filled with a hardy population, for it is well known that northern climes produce a better people, intellectually and physically, than do warmer and more genial ones. If you only bring in immigrants there, a people will be produced who will do credit and honour to this country. In conclusion, I believe that if the fetters and shackles of party were taken off the opponents of these resolutions, if they would look at this subject for one moment from the standpoint of patriotism, their objections would at once cease, but while it would be reasonable to expect this we can scarcely hope for it. Stamping ground for the next general elections must be prepared and it is now being prepared; for that object alone are they making their lengthy and laborious speeches. I would say this, that unless the opponents of these resolutions come out of their coverts and assume a more patriotic position, unless they can show some better means by which this road can be speedily constructed—I am not very familiar with the duties of an Opposition, but I conceive the duty of every hon. member of this House to be to further and advance legislation in the interest of the country to the best of his power and ability, and if hon. gentlemen on the opposite benches have any suggestion to make which is better in the interest of this country than those Resolutions, it is their duty to make them—until this is done, until something better than these Resolutions is presented, I deem it my duty to support the Resolutions before the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it would be no harm for us to take a brief view of the past history of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and benefit, as much as possible, by the lessons therein to be found. In the first place, I consider that very great blunders have been committed in connection with the inception of this scheme. The Government of the day, at the outset, made a very great mistake, when they committed this country to the carrying out of such an enormous undertaking as the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that within ten years. I claim, that, in the interest of the people, this was a very great mistake. The hon. Minister of Railways, in addressing the House upon this question, said, that when the American Pacific line was building, the world stood amazed at the idea of the people undertaking the construction of a road of such consequence and magnitude. In the case of Canada, also, he said, the world felt surprised to think that we had undertaken the construction of this great undertaking. No wonder they were surprised. I have no doubt that the idea of putting upon the people such an enormous cost, as will be entailed upon them by the construction of this road, and that without a survey, without any exploratory examination of the country through which it is to run, without any effort to see what the ultimate cost would be, without any information whatever, was an unjustifiable act on the part of the Government. After having done so, they began hunting around to see if they could get off their shoulders the responsibility which they had assumed. They tried to form a Syndicate, with Sir Hugh Allan as chief of that Syndicate, and in their anxiety to hold the position they now occupy and remain on the Treasury benches a little longer, they approached him in a manner that eventually resulted in their being obliged to leave office. That was the result of the attempt to form the first Syndicate. After they were driven from power, they admitted they were anxious to see the road completed, and there has been a great deal of talk here with regard to the want of patriotism on the part of the Reform party, because they were opposed to increasing the burdens of the people by the construction of that road. The Conservative party were very willing to aid the Reform party in carrying out this construction, simply because they had committed themselves to that policy, and they wished to get rid of the huge responsibility resting upon themselves. I hold that is the extent of their patriotism. Further, I consider that when they formed the last Syndicate and gave them all the powers they did, the powers they gave them were too great. I believe that they should have confined their powers absolutely to the construction of the road from Callander to Port Moody. I think it was an error, in the interest of the people of this country, that they should not only be permitted to construct the road, but that they should also be empowered to buy or lease or become possessed of, in any way they liked, any lines in this Dominion. I would have had no objection to give them power to build roads in any part of this Dominion, but it was and injustice to the people of the different Provinces when they were empowered to buy lines already built, and built for the purpose of securing to the people of those Provinces competition in railways, and by that power that competition has been very largely done away with. The company complain that, after they were formed, they found, when they entered the markets of Great Britain and other places, that they were met with a considerable amount of opposition. They complain that, through the influence of the American lines, they were prevented from placing their bonds on the market with the same advantage as perhaps they otherwise could have done. The Minister of Railways also, when he made his address, said they had opposition from within as well as from without. I believe that, and I do not wonder at it. If they had confined themselves strictly to the construction of the Pacific from Callander to Port Moody, it is not at all likely that they would have had the Grand Trunk Railway entering into opposition to them; but, the moment they commenced buying up railways in the different Provinces and laying their hands upon these short lines, the Grand Trunk Railway, I presume in self-defence, found it was their duty to protect their own interest, and as a result of that, they commenced to secure for themselves what lines were important to them as feeders, if they had not done so they would probably have been taken up and run alone by the Canadian Pacific Railway. And then they come to the Government and to this House whining like a sick child saying: We have been unable to float our bonds; we have been unable to get, by the sale of stock, the money we anticipated; we have been unable to do everything which we thought we would be able to do. Why, Mr. Speaker, if there is any evidence of the folly which has attended the general transactions of this Company, it is the fact that they did not, it appears, count upon this opposition before they started. They must have thought that the people of the world who had money to invest would have run after them with their money wanting to buy their bonds, instead of their having to seek to get a sale for them. I consider that they are responsible to a large extent for the failure themselves—first, because they commenced to deal in railways. Why, there was a regular auction business in railways commenced after they started. Instead of keeping their funds together for the construction of the road, they were scattered in all directions up and down the country. When the Company was formed, were not the members of this House told, and was not the country told, that the Company was so wealthy and had such a large amount of money at its back that there was not danger that success would not attend its operations? Why was it that the other Company was rejected? Why was it that the Company, which offered to do the work for $3,000,000 less, and 3,000,000 acres of land less, and to cut off all the monopoly clauses of the contract, was not taken? Was it not used as an argument that they had not the financial backbone to carry it through? And where is the financial backbone now? Where is the money now? We are called upon now to come and assist these people by granting them a loan of $22,500,000, or rather $30,000,000. I heard my hon. friend to my left say that, if it was a bonus instead of a loan, he would vote for it. I think it would be better to have it put that way, because I believe it will result in that way, and that, in the case of this road, as well as in the case of other roads in this Dominion, we will find, within a certain number of years, that it will be set behind bond after bond and mortgage after mortgage, and we will occupy the last joint in the tail of the Company's responsibilities, and that is the way our money will be represented. I was also surprised, when I listened to the address of the hon. the Minister of Railways, to hear him state that the Company had asked no change and the Government had asked no change. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Government did not ask a change in the terms upon which the contract was let. As I said before, in their earnest and anxious desire to accomplish what they had foolishly and imprudently undertaken—to accomplish what they had foolishly and imprudently committed this country to—they were willing to give any terms, they were willing to make any concession, they were willing to give any powers that the Company asked so long as they would build the Canadian Pacific Railway. They gave them the powers under which the people of the North-West now are groaning. They are calling meetings and declaring they must be relieved from the monopolies under which they are living, and I say, in the face of that, it looks very bad on the part of the Government of the day, knowing, as they do know, the feelings of those people and the representations which have been made, that they should not have used the opportunity they had of at least relieving them of some of the monopoly clauses under which they are living. But they did not do that. It is just the same as before. Get the road built, no matter who suffers and who does not, so long as the road is built and we are relieved from the responsibility; that is all we expect and all we hope for. Now, I think the great question before this House is this: Is it prudent, under present circumstances, for this country, in its present straitened financial position, to grant this Company the loan of money they require? I think it is not. I think, when you take a view of the very rapid increase of the indebtedness of this country for the last ten or fifteen years, that any hon. gentleman who has the welfare and prosperity of this country at heart will come to the conclusion that it is wise, in the interests of the people in this country, that it is wise in the interests of the labouring classes and the tax-paying portion of the people of this Dominion, that we should very seriously consider this whole question before we put upon them an increased burden under which they will have to groan for many years. I do not think it is right that we should do it. The fact is, and I have been thinking somewhat since this discussion commenced and since this proposition has been brought down to Parliament, that it would be a very great advantage and a very great blessing in the interests of this country if the laws that permit the increase of indebtedness of this kind were subject to the same rules and the same restriction that our municipal laws are in the case of a municipality wanting to increase its debt. Those laws provide that, where it is increased beyond a certain amount which is necessary for the annual expenditure of the corporation, it must be submitted to a vote of the people. I would like most awfully well if the people of this Dominion had an opportunity on the present occasion of pronouncing on this gift, or loan as you may call it whether they are prepared to sanction the handing over of such a large amount of money to these people. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot claim that this question was brought before the electors at the last election. We never heard a word about it, and it is my conviction that, if it had been brought before the people, there are many men on the Treasury benches whose countenances would not be seen there to-night. The people would not have elected them, but would have elected men in opposition to granting this large amount of money and increasing the public debt so much by adding this to an already very large amount. Now, as has already been stated, the question before the House is not whether we are going to build the Canadian Pacific Railway or not. It is not whether the work will positively be stopped and the whole thing abandoned, but whether we are to permit the Company to have the full time for completing their work; whether we will allow them to take till 1891, if that is the year in which they are to finish, or give them this loan and help them to do it some three or four years before that time. Well, in the first place, as I have said, we made a mistake in making the time too short, and the result of that mistake was that we had to pay the people of British Columbia a large amount to get an extension of time. Sir, it will be increasing the debt of this country very seriously if we grant this loan, and it is the duty of the representatives of the people in this House carefully to consider whether it is wise for us to grant it or not. I think it is very much better that the Company should perform the work that we gave them to do, and that we should keep our money, because, from past experience, we know that all investments in railways have been unforunate investments, so far as repayment was concerned; and I do not think it is wise for us to make any more such investments. I notice, by the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways, and by others who have addressed the House, that very questionable speculations are made with the resources of that Company. The Minister of Railways entered into a calculation showing how many millions of acres it would take to grow so many bushels of wheat, supposing it was not cut off with frost, supposing it was properly stacked, supposing it was sold, and supposing it was got to market; and in case of all these suppositions turning out correct, that the railway would reap a large annual profit in carrying that produce. Well, it is all very well to figure in that way. I hope and trust that the North-West is going to be a success, and contribute to the resources of this Dominion; I hope it will be every thing that we wish it to be. It has been said that we, on this side of the House are unpatriotic, that we decry the country, that we have done everything we could to injure it. I contend that is not so. I contend that the Reform party, and the Reform press, have done as much—yes, they have done more—in the interest of that country, that the Conservative party or press have done. I would like to know what journal in this country has called more loudly and more earnestly for the relief of the people of the North-West who are groaning under the heel of a monopoly, that the Toronto Globe has done. I would like the hon. gentlemen opposite to mention to me a single Conservative paper that has appealed to them in the interests of those people. I have not noticed any. I am sure they will not call that want of patriotism. Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the increase of debt in this Dominion by the operation of this loan. Now, I notice in looking over the Public Accounts that the debt of the Dominion has increased about $32,000,000 within the last six years. If you add to that the increased amount that this loan will add to the public debt, you are going to augment it very seriously. We have a very large amount of money expended in railways already. The Intercolonial cost some $38,000,000, out of which we did not receive one single cent toward the interest—it simply pays running expenses. Now, I say that if we can complete the road without making this advance; if the Company can go on and complete it as they ought to do, as they declared they would do, and as hon. gentlemen opposite declared they were able and willing to do, and gave them great privileges and subsidies in order to enable them to do it, why do not they go on and do it? I say they have no right, under present circumstances, to come back to the people of this country and ask the enormous aid they are now asking in the way of an additional grant. There is another matter, Mr. Speaker, to which I wish to draw the attention of the House. There has been an estimate made with regard to the cost of what has yet to be done. That estimate has been handed to the hon. Minister of Railways, and he has told the House that an exact amount has been arrived at, representing what it is going to cost to complete the road. Now, so far as I can learn, the entire line is not absolutely located yet. The final surveys have not been made; the quantities have not been made up; the profile has not been made out. Now, until that is all done, it is impossible—and even when it is done, it is impossible—to tell the exact amount that road is going to cost until it is finished. And I hold that, even supposing the House and the country do make the advance that is now asked for, it is a very great question in my mind whether they will be able to go on and complete it with the amount they are asking, or whether they may not have to come back for more. They have shown such imprudence in the past, they have shown such recklessness in the past, that I question very much if they will be able to complete the road, even with the whole amount they are now asking. I know that they have got a considerable portion of it completed, but the worst portion and the hardest part of the road to build is yet to be done, and they may not have an adequate idea of what it will cost to complete the remaining portion. They do not know yet what it is going to cost. They have just reached the portion of the work that is going to be the most costly, and when they get there they may find after all that their calculations are at fault. I have had a little experience myself of that kind, and there are no men in the world who will differ more with regard to the extent and actual cost of construction of a road, than engineers themselves. You cannot get two engineers on a piece of work who will make an estimate and return to you and tell you exactly the same amount, nor anything near it. They will all make different estimates. The estimates of the work remaining to be done on the Canadian Pacific Railway is only an approximate one, and the result may be that after they have invested the money that they are getting from us, it will not be found sufficient. The hon. Minister of Railways has said that the money to be voted is only to be paid pro rata as the work proceeds. Sir, I would like to know how he is going to apply the money in his calculation so exactly, as to say what sum of money is to be given to the Company for a certain piece of work. It is well known that engineers, as a general rule, will favour contractors, and unless he puts on a staff of engineers at the cost of this country, who will carefully and closely scrutinize the cost of every single foot of work that is done, I question very much if he will not find himself, after the lapse of a short time, in a very bad position. He will find that he has been imposed upon, and that this Company, by the certificates of their engineers, has taken money that they were not entitled to. What will he do in that case? I say, then, that the proposition he has presented to the House for paying the money. If he follows it out strictly is going to entail a large expense to the country, because it will be necessary for him to get a staff of engineers in order to see that it is properly applied. There was another thing he did in connection with this matter. He sent two of his men down to Montreal, apparently for the purpose of inspecting the books of the Company. Now, when he went so far in the way of testing the accuracy of the accounts of that Company, I think it would have been highly desirable, highly necessary, that he should have procured two sworn valuers to make a valuation of the entire plant and rolling stock that the Company claimed to have. They say that their stock west of Callander is worth $6,100,000. I would like to see the entire rolling stock west of Callander valued; I would like to see two men, experienced men, who know the value of work, go along the road and make a sworn return to the Government of this country. I venture to predict that if they did, they would find that the money the Company have secured from the Government from the sale of the lands, and from the stock they have sold, has never been invested in the work west of Callander. I would like to see that done, and I think it is but right. It is but justice to the representatives of the people here that that should be done. I am sorry to think that we have to proceed so rapidly in the dark; that we are to vote these resolutions in the dark. The hon. leader of the Opposition has asked for several returns for the purpose of getting at the bottom of this whole transaction, and I have no doubt that the Government are doing their best to prepare those returns, and get them laid before the House. But after all, I think the Government ought to have consented at least to the suggestion of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) to wait until next Tuesday before rushing through these resolutions, to wait until these returns could be presented, as they could by that time, and at least meet the Opposition that far, in order to give what information they could furnish; but it appears they have proceeded with the determination that information would not be given—that we must take things as we find them. They proceeded on the ground that the majority is all-powerful, that they are bound to cram this proposal down the throats of the people without affording the information sought in a courteous way by the leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Montreal Centre has expressed regret at the absence of the leader of the Opposition. He had evidently a severe castigation in store for the hon. gentleman. I do not know where the hon. gentleman is—I do not speak for him—but knowing that on the last occasion when the subject was before the House, the hon. member for Montreal Centre moved the adjournment of the Debate, and fearing least he should receive a drubbing, he in all probability, thought the best thing to do was to clear out. It is desirable to look at the amount of lands that must be sold by the Company to enable it to pay the interest on the loan. I hope the North-West country will be filled, and that very rapidly, by an industrious population. The hon. Minister of Railways has intimated that during the last three years 149,000 people have settled in that country, and I hope that number will be rapidly increased. In the interests of a tax-paying people of the Dominion as well as of the North-West, such a result is highly desirable. At the same time we must not forget that the only sources from which the Company will be able to pay interest will be the sale of land and the receipts from the operation of the road. The Company will require, in order to pay interest on the loan, to sell a tract of land about 300 miles long and 18 miles deep on each side of the track, each year. There are only sixteen sections in each township which belong to the Company, the balance belonging to the Government and the Hudson Bay Company. In order to pay interest, the Company will have to sell about 300 townships, and have an influx of about 26,000 actual farmers, who shall take up land, each year. I shall be glad if the Company are able to sell that quantity; at the same time, I shall not be surprised, notwithstanding the glowing accounts we have heard of the future prospects and resources of the Company, if they fail to meet the first year's interest, and we have the sorry exhibition next year of the Minister of Railways being obliged to report that the interest on the advance made to the country had not been met. I hope it may be otherwise; but that is just the way the trouble may commence. Some hon. members have said that if we get the road even on these amended terms, we shall have obtained it cheap enough. I do not want the country to get the road. I do not think it is in the interest of the country to have the road, but that it is better for the country for the Company to own it; but we should throw every possible protection round the grant of money made to it. I have very grave doubts indeed as to whether the taxpayers will ever see returned a farthing of the money advanced. The farming community have contributed every largely towards the construction of railways through the country, and I hold it is unfair and unjust that they should be subjected to increased taxation year after year in order to pay the indebtedness. Will any one pretend to say that our farmers are benefitted by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway? The farming community of Ontario and Quebec are not benefitted, but they will be injured. We shall have the same experience as the United States. Before railways were built into Kansas and the North-West, land in Illinois was worth more than it is to day. The same will take place here. When the farmers of the North-West grow wheat extensively and possess abundant facilities for carrying it to the markets of the world, the farmers in the old Provinces will be compelled to accept lower prices for their products, because of that enormous North-West yield. I was quite amused by the remarks of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) with respect to the leader of the present Government having been the originator and great champion of Confederation. That hon. member evidently reads with one eye shut and the other open; he searches the Hansard of the House and the newspapers of the country, with a desire to obtain something that might possibly reflect on the Reform party, while he closes his eyes to anything that might reflect on his party, and particularly on his chief. If the hon. gentleman had read the entire proceedings connected with Confederation, he would have found that if there was one man occupying a prominent position in the country who opposed that measure, it was the leader of the present Government. It is unfair to bestow laurels on a man who is not entitled to wear them. The hon. gentleman now at the head of the Government had, of course, a perfect right to the opinions he then held; but the claim should not now be put forward that he was the originator of Confederation. The question of security was also mentioned, but we have not gone into the question of challenging the security, and I do not know where the hon. gentleman has got his information on that point. I have not heard anything on this side of the House upon that point; the whole question has been as to whether it is in the interest of the country that we should go on and make this grant, or whether we should withhold our hand. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down made a reference, as in fact everyone else on that side has made, to the want of patriotism on the part of the Reform party. He went back a considerable length of time, and tried to show that it has been a characteristic of the Reform party to be unpatriotic. Well it is dangerous to go too far back, and if the hon. gentleman had gone a little further back he would have found something which would have reflected on his own party. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who was it who burnt the Parliament Buildings in Montreal? Who was it stoned the Governor General? Who was it raised the black flag at Brockville? Who was it signed the manifesto? I do not think it was the Reform party. I was rather amused at the address delivered by the hon. member for King's, Nova Scotia (Mr. Woodworth). He entered into a general fit of political kicking, which brought to my mind a story I once saw in a book by Mark Twain. The author went on in a humorous way to speak of the characteristics of the mule, and he said that while the head and the front of the animal displayed all the evidence of docility and good temper, there seemed to be an untamed wildness about his hind legs, which could not be accounted for, and which exhibited itself when it was least expected. I have not very much to say with regard to the speech of the hon. member for King's, but I think on some occasions he exhibits an awful amount of political wildness—he is not evenly turned. I remember that last year he got into a fit of anger, and he directed his venom against the leader of the Opposition in the first place, and afterwards against the hon. member for West Middlesex, who, I regret to say, is not now a member of this House, but whose constituency is worthily represented by a gentleman of the same political stripe. This Session the hon. member for King's delivered an address in which he exhibited an equal amount of political kicking. I think it is better that we should discuss those questions, which are of interest to the House and to the country; we should discuss them from the point of view of the country's interests, and we should not lend ourselves to discussions of another kind, because if hon. gentlemen indulge in them, they must expect that there will be a retort. I had a number of figures with regard to calculations in connection with this matter, but they have so fully gone into by other hon. members that I need not trouble the House by repeating them. I think the whole question dwindles down to this point, whether it is wise, or right, or judicious, for us to go on and make this advance. In my opinion, we are laying the foundation of what I hope will be a great nation; but I am much afraid that, owing to the reckless manner in which we are adding to the burdens of the people, in place of receiving thanks at the hands of those who are to follow us, in this hall, they will point to the acts of the men who have been the means of increasing the burdens of the people, with feelings of disgust and contempt, on account of the enormous debt with which they will be called upon to labour and upon which they will have to pay annually a large amount of taxes. I say we should be careful—we should weigh quietly, carefully, and honestly, every proposition of this kind. We talk to-day as easily about millions as we used to talk a few years ago about thousands. I say there is no necessity of adding this to the other burdens with which the people have to labour. Let the Canadian Pacific Railway Company take the full time to construct the road; let them build it at the time they agreed to build it, and it will answer all ends so far as the interests of the country are concerned, and the people will not run the risk of losing $22,500,000, which they will undoubtedly run the risk of losing, if these resolutions are adopted in their present state.

Mr. STAIRS. I wish to make a few observations upon some of the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I will endeavour to show how absurd and ridiculous many of his statements were. The hon. gentleman said that the Opposition had not challenged the security. In saying this the hon. member gave up the whole case entirely, as the whole question rests nearly altogether upon the consideration of whether the country has sufficient security for the loan we are about to make. The hon. gentleman dwelt upon the question of the large tract of land which the Company would have to sell yearly, in order to pay the interest, and he seemed to be afraid that they would not be able to accomplish it. I think on this point the hon. gentleman was answered by the hon. member for Peel, who endeavoured to show very clearly the large resources which the Company would have at their disposal during the next few years, in the sales of land and in the earnings of the Company themselves—showing us that there was ample—we can take their own words for it—in these resources to meet the interest. Besides, I think it is not amiss to point out that the interest this Company have in this great railroad, extending about 3,000 miles, is so great that this House need have very little fear but that the interest will be promptly met. I could not help feeling a little amused, Sir, at the point made by the hon. gentleman about his now leader. The hon. leader of the Opposition was afraid that the speech of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) would come on this afternoon, and on that account he cleared out. Sir, if report be correct, it would not be the first time that the hon. leader of the Opposition cleared out when he should have come to the scratch in debate or at public meetings. The hon. gentleman doubted whether the Company would be able to complete the railway with the sum they ask, $27,500,000. Like many others of his remarks, this was mere assertion, nothing else. I think the House will be perfectly safe in taking the statement of engineers. Who are better able to judge than the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). The hon. gentleman spoke of the general question of increasing the debt. For my part, I am willing to leave that matter in the hands of the hon. gentlemen who compose this Government, in whose hands I prefer to leave it than to some of the gentlemen I see on the other side of the House; and I think I may say it is absolutely certain that it will be so for many years to come. The hon. gentleman doubted whether it was wise to have the road completed before 1891. I think every man in Canada who takes a fair and impartial view of this question, will come to the conclusion that it is absolutely necessary in the interest of Canada that the road should be completed in the two years, as is now proposed. One very absurd remark the hon. member made, although it did not relate exactly to this case. He said he considered that any increase in the debt, beyond a certain fixed amount, should be submitted to a direct vote of the people. Did any hon. member ever hear a more absurd and ridiculous statement? Does anyone suppose that the ordinary voters in the constituencies could clearly and fully comprehend a question of this kind? The hon. gentleman complains, like many other hon. members, that the funds of this Company have been used in all directions. I believe that the Pacific Railway Company have used these funds in the interest of Canada, and I say this, not only as a Canadian, but as a representative of the Maritime Provinces. Many of the hon. gentleman's observations relating to the old contract, I think, have been fully answered. I do not think there is any use of bringing these old issues before the House, when they were settled, in 1882, by the triumphant majority by which this Government was supported. The hon. gentleman said that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, in their opposition to the Canadian Pacific Railway, will be obliged to protect their own interests. "There is no man in Canada, business or otherwise, who would object to the Grand Trunk protecting their interests, but they should do it by fair means; and I maintain that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have as good a right to protect their interests as the Grand Trunk. Now, I should like for a little while to refer to some of the speeches made in the earlier part of this debate. The hon. leader of the Opposition, in speaking on the question of monopoly, claimed that one advantage a Government railway possessed over a railway owned by a company was, that on a Government railway there could be no monopoly. I will just read his own words :

"As long as it is a Government railway it is the people's railway, and the people cannot have a monopoly in its own concern—not an offensive or objectionable monopoly—because the interest to be served is that of the commonalty that possesses the railway. Does any one suppose that rates too high for the good of a country could be charged by a Government having a railway?"

In answer to that, I think it is only necessary to point to the management of the Intercolonial Railway in 1874, I think, under the management of Mr. Mackenzie. And to show that the Tariff which they inaugurated on what they called commercial principles was really seriously felt in the Lower Provinces, I will, with the permission of the House, just read a short extract from a discussion of the Halifax Chamber of Commerce on the 8th of December, 1874. At that meeting it was resolved :

"That the Tariff lately established on the Intercolonial Railway is detrimental to the best interests of the Province, and that the Dominion Government be respectfully addressed and requested to reconsider the Tariff and reestablish that formerly in force."

On motion, the resolution was referred to the Standing Committee on Railways and Internal Trade, to report on to a meeting to be held on the 8th of January, 1875. I will give you a short extract from the report :

"The Committee on Internal Trade, Railways, etc., beg leave to report that they have given their careful attention to the Tariff now in force on the Intercolonial Railway in this Province, and after comparing the rates with those charged on other lines, and taking evidence from men of intelligence, directly and indirectly interested in the traffic at various points between Amherst and the city, find the sudden and large increase in charge for transit in leading items, not only greatly injurious to the trade in that part of the Province; but will effectually put a stop to several promising fields of enterprise."

And it goes on to particularize as to what industries would be affected. We know that that tariff was modified; but it was not put back to what it was previously, and the ill effects of that increased tariff were felt in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for many years. It was not until the advent of the present Government, and until the present Minister of Railways took charge of the Railway Department, that the tariff was put back to what it ought to be. I think this conclusively proves that it is quite possible, on a Government railway, to have a tariff of a very objectionable nature indeed. The only excuse the Government gave for that increase in the tariff was that they wanted to run the Intercolonial Railway on commercial principles, and I presume they did it also to make the two ends meet.

Every one in this House knows how far they came short of it. Every hon. member knows, that under the management of the present Government, the hon. Minister of Railways, even with the very large reduction in the tariff, has been able to make the two ends meet, a thing that was never accomplished under the objectionable tariff enforced by the late Government from 1874 to 1878. I was very much surprised in listening to the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition, in reply to the hon. Minister of Railways, to hear a quotation which he put in the mouth of the latter, and I very much regret the hon. leader of the Opposition is not here, that his attention might be directed to it. With reference to the disallowance of the Manitoba charters, the hon. Minister of Railways said :

"When the line is constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve—that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting it with American railways to the south."

This is the language he puts in the hon. Minister's mouth :

"That as soon as the railway is actually built, they will be able to review the question of reconsidering the policy, and they really think they will be able to stop oppressing Manitoba and violating the constitution at some period two or three years hence."

I mentioned this, because it struck me at the time that it was impossible the hon. Minister of Railways would ever, for a moment, acknowledge that the Government had been violating the Constitution, by the disallowance of the Manitoba charters. This may seem to be a point of very little consequence, because every hon. member who heard the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways, or read it, knows very well that he would not admit that the constitution was violated. But how is it through the country? There are many people, friends of the Opposition, who will read the speech of their leader and will not see that of the hon. Minister of Railways. No one will suppose that the hon. leader of the Opposition would misquote anyone, and when he attributes language to the hon. Minister of Railways, admitting that the disallowance of the Manitoba charters was a violation of the Constitution anyone would, unless he read the other side, naturally suppose that such an admission had been made. If this had come from a stump speaker, or some one not thoroughly posted, no attention would be paid to it; but coming from the leader of the Opposition, I cannot refrain from pointing it out as a most unfair and objectionable statement of the case. I could not at first account for it, but on looking over the debates since, I find an explanation made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition himself, which I think explains the reason of this misquotation. He said, speaking of the hon. Minister of Railways :

"I have told the hon. gentleman before, that my idea of party exigencies and party leadership entirely differ from his."

Every hon. gentleman in this House will conclude that the hon. gentleman's ideas of party exigencies differ very much indeed, from those of the hon. Minister of Railways, and from what is right and fair. The hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., asked how it was that if the North America Construction Company abandoned their contract of $48,000,000, that same contract can now be completed at $17,000,000 less? Did not the hon. gentleman know very well that the contract of $48,000,000 was composed, to a very large amount, of the stock of the Company. Did he not know that the contract was for a large amount, because the Canadian Pacific Railway knew that it was impossible for the North America Construction Company to put the stock on the market at anything but a very small price? And they could not even do that. It was impossible for them to sell at all, and the contract had to be cancelled. I think that the way in which the country and the world looked at those utterances of the leader of the Opposition was such that they had no effect in hurting the credit of the Government, because those interested in Canadian politics knew, to a large extent, that the utterances of the hon leader of the Opposition during the debate upon the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, were very largely made up for party and political purposes and they were consequently not taken as being the true expression of what he thought. But the same cannot be said of many of his utterances since, for they have had a great deal of effect in damaging the Company. I was a little amused at some of the remarks of the hon. member for Lambton, who gave us a long speech composed of many figures. After giving the House a large array of figures, he tells us in effect that the figures are beyond his comprehension. What can you think of any hon. gentleman who attempts to criticise a financial statement and in the middle of his speech admits he does not know what he is talking about? He made a great mistake in making this admission. Even if he could not comprehend it, he would have taken a wiser course had he kept his ignorance to himself. He divides this $22,500,000 among all the members, and says that it is $106,000 to every constituency. I would like to know what this has to do with the question before the House. This question is one of the most important that has ever come before this House, and to my mind the great point is whether the granting of this loan to the Company for about four years, in the construction of the railway, is going to be in the interests of Canada. I think anyone can argue here to the fullest extent that it is altogether in the interest of the whole Dominion, and consequently in that of the Eastern Provinces. I think, Sir, one of the reasons is that, if we have the railway constructed in 1886 instead of in 1891, the Government of Canada will be enabled, on account of the increased immigration which will take place through this early construction of the road, to sell so much more of their own land than they would otherwise be; that they will be able to repay the Company, to repay the people, to repay themselves, even if the Company were to make default, which I hold is impossible, the $22,500,000 which their loan now proposes to give them; and they will, therefore, be financially in just as good a position in 1891 as they would have been had they allowed the contract to go on and had not loaned this money. I think this is a very important point indeed, and I will just quote a few figures to show the sales of land that have taken place during the last two or three years, and I can get them in a very short time from the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways:

"From the 1st of July, 1879, to the 31st December, 1883, we received $3,572,636, and there is due during the next three years on the exemptions, since 1880, in addition to the $3,572,836, received since the 1st of July, 1880, no less than $4,393,070."

Now, that shows us the land sales in about three years to amount to about $8,000,000, and we may expect, with the increased immigration going into that country, that by 1891, on account of the early completion of this road, we will be able to sell as much more as will recoup the country for the $22,500,000 which is to be loaned, and, therefore, if we never got that money back, we would be in just as good a position as if we were to go on in the slow way which was originally proposed. In the Maritime Provinces, as well as in other parts of the country, we want the construction of this railway, and one reason among other things—and I am only attempting to mention a very few—is that we want the freight facilities. I know that there are great complaints, and that the sugar refineries and the iron works now find a great difficulty in sending goods out to the far West, because, when they go to Montreal, cheaply as they are transported over the Intercolonial Railway, they have not a through connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but are at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Railway; and I know, as a matter of fact, that we had to pay a much higher rate of freight upon goods from Nova Scotia to the North-West, from Montreal, on the Grand Trunk Railway, than we would have had to pay if we could have sent them over the Canadian Pacific Railway. But we could not, because there was not a suitable connection at Montreal, and they would have had to be hauled. I could not sit down without making some reference to the winter port. I think I may be allowed to urge the securing of a winter port in Canada as one reason why the road should be completed in 1886 instead of in 1891. If we allow the completion of that road to hang fire till 1891, where is the winter port for the Maritime Provinces to be till that time? Whereas, if it is completed as quickly as possible, we will have a very good chance—we have now, I feel sure—that we will secure, before the completion of the road in 1891, such through facilities from Montreal to some port or ports in the Maritime Provinces as will make one of those ports a winter port for the whole Dominion. I feel sure, and I think the Government will agree with me in this, that the people of the Lower Provinces have a right to ask this. Before I sit down, I would just like to say to the hon. gentlemen opposite that, if, when we go back to our constituents in the course of the next three or four years, we have to defend this measure, we intend to give them—I intend to give them in the Lower Provinces—as one of the principal reasons why this loan was necessary, the damage that is done to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the country generally by the unpatriotic utterances of the Opposition in this House and the Opposition press throughout the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. Speaker, the first Pacific Railway Bill was passed in the House the Session before I had the honour of a seat here, and I think you will agree with me that, from that time until the present, we have had a great deal of discussion upon this very important subject. The Pacific Railway has called forth the noblest Parliamentary efforts of any subject that has been before Parliament since I have had the honour of a seat in the House. We have had it discussed over and over again. We have had it discussed under different phases, and under different aspects, and under different circumstances. The result of the discussion over the first Bill and the companies that were formed under that Bill is quite fresh in your mind, as it is fresh in mine. You will remember the consequences and the results of the negotiations that took place in reference to that Bill. You will remember also that, in 1874, another Pacific Railway Bill was introduced and carried through this House. You will remember the provisions of that Bill, as will also the gentlemen who were members of the House then, and are still members of the House; and you will remember that one of the provisions of the Bill, in reference to the land that the Government handed over to the parties who might construct the road, was that the Government should have a control in the price of the lands. That was considered one of the most vital principles of the Bill. It was considered a principle that was likely to secure the settlement and development of the great country we have in the North-West. Everything said in reference to the North-West by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and by gentlemen on that side of the House, in reference to the great future and the great prospects of that magnificent North-West Territory of ours, I echo to the full. I believe there is a great future for that country. I believe that, under wise rule, under prudent management, under proper land regulations, under proper railway regulations, there is a future for that country of which we, as Canadians, may all feel proud. Then let us, I say, Mr. Speaker, do nothing—let no act of ours do anything—that will imperil the great future of that country, or retard its settlement, or prevent the rapid and speedy development of that country about which we are all so anxious. I do not know why it is that hon. gentlemen will get up in this House, that one side will get up and charge the other with lack of patriotism. I believe—I fully believe—that in this country there is no party that can claim a monopoly in that principle. I believe that all parties are true to the Queen, true to the Constitution, and that all sincerely desire the advancement and the development, welfare, and future of this country. I say that sincerely. I believe that sincerely. But we differ as to the mode in which the best interests of this country are to be secured. But, we hold ourselves second to no party in this country in our allegiance to the Queen, to the British Government, and to British connection. We are as devoted to the flag that floats over us as are any party to be found; although we do not parade our loyalty, we do not boast of our patriotism on every platform and on every stump. That is not the stock in trade of the party to which I have the honour to belong, and with whom I have been allied ever since I entered political life. Well, after this digression, I would take you back to the Pacific Railway Bill. One of the features of that Bill, as I said, was the public control of the land. If the land is beyond the control of the Government of the day, if it is allowed to be handed over to a Company to sell it at whatever price they please, I say that is calculated to establish in the North-West a system of landlordism such as they have in Ireland, such as disturbs the peace, and mars the tranquility, and happiness and prosperity of Ireland, and has done so for centuries. It is against that principle we have contended. Well, Mr. Speaker, some progress was made under the Act. A railway was constructed from Pembina to Winnipeg; exhaustive surveys of the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway were made by the Government that was led by the hon. and distinguished member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He entered upon the Government of this country under circumstances surrounded with the greatest and gravest difficulties. He entered upon the Government of this country when the past six years had seen an increase in the expenditure of about ten millions a year more than it was at the time of Confederation. The rapid increase of expenditure, the rapid increase of the national debt, had brought about a corresponding depression through the Dominion of Canada. He entered upon the Government of this country under the most unfavourable circumstances. It was a fortunate thing for the country, I say, that a gentleman so distinguished for his patriotism and for his qualities of economy and retrenchment, held the reins of power at that time. He held extravagance in check, he governed and conducted the country on the principles of economy and retrenchment, and he tided the nation through the gravest financial panic any country ever had to pass through, and with the least disastrous consequences to the State. Well, much was done in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway during his régime. Like a man of business, he entered upon the work by obtaining information, upon which he might be able to locate the road, and construct it in an intelligent manner. Having obtained the fullest information, he then proceeded to construct the road, or that portion of it which would most tend to develop and increase the prosperity of Manitoba and the North-West. Sir, it would have been well for the North-West, it would have been well for the Dominion of Canada, had the Bill that he brought forward, and had the views he held, prevailed in the Government of the country and in the building of this railway in the North-West. If the provisions of that Bill had been carried out, and if his policy had been carried out, Winnipeg to-day would have been a second Chicago in the Prairie Province; instead of Manitoba being so sparsely settled, instead of the North West having only a thin line of settlement, we would have seen that country thickly settled and well developed. But, under the present system, under the contract that was made with the Company by the present Government, the hon. Minister of Railways asked this House to grant 25,000,000 acres of land in that Province, and to give $25,000,000. We all remember the feeling that existed in this House and in the country at that time. People thought the undertaking was a great one, they thought, as the Minister of Railways expressed it, that it was a bold enterprise and one that would tax the ability and resources of the taxpayers of the country for many generations to come. The House accepted that contract, and why? The Minister of Railways, the First Minister and the supporters of the Government in the House, stated that the arrangement would secure the full and final completion of the railway to the North-West. The hopes of the country were raised, because, as the Minister of Railways then said, this was going to be a final and complete settlement of this question, that the people would never have to contribute another cent towards this line, or to assist this Company in any way. It is well known that another company offered to take the contract at a lower rate, but the Minister of Railways and his friends stated that this company was but a bogus one—that a company composed of men such as the Gurneys, the Gilmours, the Gooderhams, the Worts, and other distinguished men in this country, were but bogus men—although they were men who could buy out the Syndicate, root and branch. Yet the Minister of Railways and others taunted these gentlemen with being unsubstantial, with being men not representing capital sufficient to enter upon that great enterprise, and they said to the House and to the country: Why, a syndicate composed of men such as these to whom we propose to give the contract, are able to build the road themselves without any money from the exchequer of this country at all. Well, Mr. Speaker, what has been the policy of this Syndicate in constructing the road since they got it? In the first place, they sub-let the contract to an American firm. Under the policy of the Minister of Railways and the First Minister, Canada was to be for the Canadians. This was the boast of the National Policy, that it was to give Canada to the Canadians. Well, they let this contract to American contractors. I have not a word to say against the enterprise or ability of American contractors. They are enterprising. Well, they let it, and they did so in defiance of an important plank in the platform of the National Policy. It was a violation of their promise. They let this contract to American contractors, and what did they do? Sir, they employed American labour on it. They obtained our money for the construction of this great national undertaking, and we were told it should be constructed by the people of Canada. Is this the patriotism they are flaunting in our face? Is this the patriotism of which they are boasting to us every day—to let our national highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific to Yankee contractors, to be built by Yankee workmen! And after they get our money they deliberately go over into Dakota and Montana, and take up land, because the land regulations are more favourable to the settler there. Now, if this road had been built slowly, if it had been let to Canadian contractors, we would have had less reason to complain. I say, knowing full well what I am talking about, that in the construction of a great national enterprise the nation's sons should be engaged in it. I believe that sentiment will find an echo in the bosom of every patriotic man. It may not, perhaps, find echo in the breasts of those gentlemen who get up on every occasion and prate of their loyalty, and their patriotism, and all that sort of thing. But, I say that a national undertaking, begun by a great nation, and off-shoot of the British Empire, ought to have been completed with Canadian money and with Canadian labour. A little while ago what did we find? We found that in that work, most of the men employed were Americans and they left the country taking their money with them. If a different policy had been pursued, if the road, speaking in all candor and fairness, had been built more steadily, if the progress had been substantial, it would have allowed our own sons from Ontario and Quebec and the Maritime Provinces to have had a share in constructing that great national undertaking. They would have sought out lands and settled on them. But the position is changed. The Americans brought in their men, also Swedes, and some of my friends from British Columbia say they brought in also Chinese. The consequence of this action was that Canadians were excluded. Let it be remembered that the contract was let to an American firm, which naturally employed Americans; that the General Manager of the road is an American, that the Chief Engineer is an American, that one of the directors of the Syndicate is an American—no doubt many of those now interested are Americans—and I should not wonder if, instead of the winter port being at Halifax, they found a winter port in the United States. The Government allow this great national enterprise—and no one glories over it more than I do, or is more anxious that the road should be constructed on economical and proper principles—to be built by Americans; but I want it to be constructed by Canadians, and I want them to take an interest in it, because it is a national undertaking. I hope the fallacy has been abandoned that this is not our own money which we are expending, but that it is money collected from the Americans. It is money collected from Canadians by the tariff which this Government has imposed. It is the money of our people which the Government, by these Resolutions, are asking us to hand over to the Company; it is the money of the farmers and all other classes which is being asked to be handed over for the building of the great national highway. It is important to consider what the effect will be on our people. We are told by the Minister of Railways that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are quite capable of building the road, and do not need this money, but it is necessary to give them $30,000,000, or an equivalent, in order to have the road completed within two years. What will be the amount of settlement in that country if there is a delay of five years? The whole territory from Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains will be thickly settled by that time. If it is built rapidly, the country will be but sparsely settled. This is the experience of every new country. If there was delay, settlement would rush out from Winnipeg, Brandon, Calgary and other places, and the country would become thickly and well settled. Adopting the other course, and handing over $30,000,000 to the Company, settlement and prosperity will be alike retarded. The land regulations of which we have heard so much are also calculated to prevent settlement. I regret that those regulations are such as they are. During the past two years, a great many people from my county have gone to the North-West with the object of settling there. They searched through Manitoba and the North-West in order to find lands on which they might settle. Whenever they found an eligible location it proved to be owned by some company or speculator. I can tell the Minister the names of a good many farmers who searched through the North-West for a month, and being unable to find a suitable location went and settled in Dakota, and these were persons with large families. It was almost equal to taking your life in your hand to say anything against the First Minister to those people, but when they returned their tone had changed. It is sad to contemplate that so many of our people are leaving the country and settling in the United States. I should think it would make the hearts of hon. gentlemen opposite, who spoke so much of patriotism, bleed, to know that so many people were leaving. The Minister of Public Works has, it appears, a grand scheme for bringing back to this country those who have settled across the line. I wish success to his efforts and promise him, as an independent member, every assistance in carrying out his proposition. We have had a good deal of experience in Ontario with respect to railways, which have been largely aided. I have here a return brought down to the House which shows what has been contributed by the section from which I have the honour to come. The branches we have form a great national scheme, commenced in 1852—I mean the Grand Trunk. A Bill was introduced by Sir Francis Hincks, then Premier, and a good Reformer, in connection with the scheme, although it is claimed that this was a Conservative movement. $15,000,000 were contributed by this country to the Grand Trunk, which owns 2,500 miles of road. Hon. members will recollect what a cry was raised on that account. What has been the result? The road built up the country very materially. In the early history of the Grand Trunk it was no doubt mismanaged, and I am glad to know that the Globe condemned that mismanagement, as it is ready to condemn mismanagement wherever it finds it. That is the policy of the Reform press of this country; no matter where wrongdoing exists that journal is ready and willing to condemn it. But the management of the Grand Trunk changed; the road became better managed, and there was nobody then readier than the Globe to congratulate them on the improvement in their management, and the Globe did so. That road was built and it tended to advance the prosperity of this country. But what was the condition of things before it was built? The country was thickly settled; industries sprang up; villages sprang up, and in course of time became towns; towns became cities, cities, all the way from Montreal to Windsor. It was found necessary to have feeders to this railway and to the Great Western. The first one was built, I think, in 1869. I refer to the Wellington, Grey and Bruce. We granted to that road a very large bonus. The municipalities along the line, in the Counties of Bruce and Wellington, granted $682,000 to that railway. The country was well settled. It had been settled in 1850 and before—settled perhaps about thirty years. The road was found to be a great convenience, and after it was built a great many enterprises sprang up. It gave an impetus to farming, and to all the other industries. It was almost as good as the National Policy—perhaps a little better; but the consequence was, that it was found necessary to have a competing line. Then the Toronto, Grey and Bruce was built, and the people contributed, for the building of that road, $929,000. That was also a great boon for that country; it tended to build up and develop the country. Nearly the whole country was settled by this time, and these railways went on. But it was found that one road was controlled by the Great Western; the other was an independent line. The people saw the necessity of building another line, to enter into competition with both, and the consequence was that the Georgian Bay and Lake Huron road was constructed; the people took an interest in that. They gave, of their own money, $969,000 to build that road. It was supposed that that was going to pay them by way of competition, lower freights, &c. What was the result? It soon ceased to be an independent line; it became owned and controlled by the Grand Trunk Railway. We had very much advantage from that road entering into competition with the Great Western. In a short time we found that the people who had given, in one case over $500,000, in another case nearly $1,000,000, in the third case nearly $1,000,000, to these roads, were still baffled. A fusion took place between the Grand Trunk and the Western, under the Government of the distinguished gentleman who presides over the destinies of the country at the present time. I believe that if the Government had stood firm, they could have prevented this amalgamation; but the consequence is that now we have the two roads run by the same Company, and although the money they gave may have been usefully spent they cannot get the return for it which they would have got if the Government had interfered in the interests of the people who had done so much to build up that country. One of the townships in the riding from which I come, has given $80,000; another, $65,000; another, $60,000; another, $20,000; and the town has given $32,000. These are very large bonuses, but they were nothing to the bonuses which the hon. gentleman is putting on these townships by these resolutions. I ask him to take $30,000,000, divide it among the 211 members who compose this House, and it will give $150,000 to each riding. I would ask the First Minister, with all the eloquence and the power and ability he has—and he possesses all these qualities in a very high degree—I ask him to submit a by-law to each riding for $150,000, and let him go there with all his force and ability, and I will guarantee that, in my riding at least, he will not carry the by-law. I feel convinced from what I know of the people, that it would be an impossible thing to carry a by-law for any amount no matter how small. This is what the Minister of Railways is paying, and what for? Just to build the Canadian Pacific Railway two years sooner. During all that time, as I have said, the settlers were living in Western Ontario, in what was known as the Queen's Bush, and no Government came to their rescue; no money was expended for them. Now the old pioneers of that settlement are to be asked to come down and subscribe, and what for? To build the Canadian Pacific Railway two years sooner. I think the proposition is an iniquitous one. I think the measure is not conceived in the spirit of justice. I am willing to support any measure to develop the North-West, which is conceived in a spirit of justice and fair play; and while I ask for fair play for the Province from which I come, I want it for every other Province in the Dominion. I am willing to go in for that on every occasion. I ask nothing for the riding or the Province from which I come, but what I am willing to grant to those noble friends of ours in other parts of the Dominion. There is another matter which I wish to refer to in connection with our railways. We have a serious grievance. We have a serious indictment against the Minister of Railways, and his supporters in this House. In the heavy by-laws which we passed we had the advantage of having local directors on these roads who had a voice, to some extent, in charging freights, and the general regulation and management of roads. The people who contributed had a voice in these questions, but the Minister of Railways took away that privilege last Session, by claiming that roads which were Dominion lines, which had acquired branches built by Local Governments, should be under the control of the Dominion Government. Local control is taken away. If the Minister of Railways comes to our part of the country, and if he gets a warm reception, and I hope he will—I would help to give him such a reception—he must repeal that provision, or else, with all his amiability and agreeableness, he will have trouble. In his seriousness, I venture to hope that that distinguished gentleman will do this; I hope he will see that on those roads to which there have been local contributions, there shall be a local directorate. I think the movement was a great mistake. I opposed it in the House, knowing what the consequence would be to that country. The people in our section now find a great deal of convenience from the railways. They would find a great deal more if the Grand Trunk and the Great Western had not been allowed to amalgamate. But much as I desire to see the Canadian Pacific Railway built, I would not like to see anything done to cripple any of the great railways in this country, that have done so much for the early development of the country, and I would not lend my vote to do anything of that kind. If we find that the Government are attempting, by means of these resolutions, to interfere with the progress and development of these roads, which give markets to the people of the old Provinces of Canada, from one end to the other, it is but natural that the people should resent such action. I do not think it is proper that anything should be done to injure the railways that have done so much for this country. Now, Sir, I have talked earnestly on this matter, because I have felt so. I do not know that I have gone over any ground that has been indicated by any hon. member of this House. I have my own course to take here. I am responsible to my constituents for the course I take, and for every utterance I make and every vote I give in this House; and during the time I am here, I want to vote for those measures which I believe to be conducive to the best interests of this country, I do not care whether they emanate from the Government or from the Opposition. I am not so tied down to party as not to support a good measure, no matter from which side it come. If this measure had the elements of fair play in it; if it were not likely to prove such an oppressive burden to the people of the country; if it were not, in my view, going to injure instead of benefiting the North-West, I would support it, but considering the difficulties that the pioneers of the section from which I come had to pass through for twenty or thirty years, I cannot support it. No Government ever gave them a single dollar for a railway until the Government of Ontario did so after 1867. These people taxed themselves in order to get railways, and they are now paying for these railways by-laws, and they are feeling that payment very seriously; and I say I would be recreant to the trust of those who sent me here if I did not speak, and speak as earnestly as I can, against the passage of these resolutions, and if I do not do all I can, by voice and vote, to prevent this burden being placed upon the people when they are already burdened so greatly. I have acted in this matter, at all events, honestly and without partisan bias, as one who thinks well of this country; for we have a great future before us. We have a great North-West and a great future for that country, and every word that is said in this House to the credit of that North-West, I echo to the fullest extent. I am a little surprised that some hon. gentlemen should have referred in this debate to the rapid development that has taken place in the United States, where they have such a bad climate, such a bad atmosphere, such miasmatic influences, and all that sort of thing. That is a wonder to me. They must have better regulations there than we have in the North-West. It is remarkable that under all these disadvantages, those countries should be settled up much more rapidly than our North-West. It shows that there must be something wrong in the Department of the Minister of the Interior. He is not here; I suppose he is getting up another pamphlet in the other House. I say that we ought to have the Minister of the Interior in this House, so that he could inform us of the regulations and the policy of the Government with regard to the public lands, one of the most important Departments of the Government. It is hardly to be expected that the Premier is able to manage that large Department, and to manage all these parties at the same time. And I think the hon. Minister of Railways has about as much in his hands now as he can manage. I do not know whether I should call him the Minister of Railways or the High Commissioner, for I do not want to call him out of his name; at any rate, he belongs to a noble profession—that is the only hope I have of the Government. It is one of the circumstances that would induce him to do right if he could. Thanking you, Sir, and the House, for the kind hearing which has been given me, and hoping to be pardoned for having trespassed on your time so long, I will resume my seat. I would not have spoken at such length, but I feel strongly, and as a Canadian born, and one who desires to promote the growth and development of Canada, I felt that it was my duty to my constituents to make my voice heard on this occasion, in opposition to this measure.

Mr. BRECKEN. Not only owing to the lateness of the hour, but to the very exhaustive speeches that have been delivered on both sides of the House, on this very important question, it is almost unpardonable in me, or any other hon. member, very much longer to delay this House; for I take it, that it is utterly impossible for any hon. member to advance anything new, after all that has been said. There is one feature of this debate, which I have observed, has characterized the speeches of hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches. Some of them have been very able, I will admit, from an Opposition stand-point, but one of the principal features is, that instead of directing their great abilities and experience to the soundness or unsoundness of the propositions contained in the Resolutions; instead of discussing the question as to whether it will be to the interests of the country that this House should adopt the Resolutions or not, they directed their attention to questions which had only an indirect bearing on the subject. I am not going into a history of this railway project, but I think the first time it was seriously contemplated in the Legislature—and I believe the late Sir George Cartier had something to do with it—it was then contemplated the road should be built in ten years. Had the contract then been undertaken, this work would have been completed to-day. My hon. colleague from Queen's made a long and ingenuous speech; but the impression it left on my mind was one of doubt as to whether he spoke as a Canadian or simply as a representative of one of the Eastern Provinces, which from its geographical position, cannot be supposed to take that direct interest in the completion of this work, which the other Provinces on the mainland take. Whenever he spoke of these $23,000,000 to be loaned and the $7,000,000 guarantee of dividend, he always combined the two, and alluded to them as an additional payment of $30,000,000. That is, I think, a disingenuous statement. When the people of the Island read the hon. gentleman's speech—and no doubt it is on its way down there now—they cannot fail in coming to the conclusion that the proposition of the hon. Minister of Railways is not to lend $23,000,000 on good and ample security, but it is to pay $30,000,000 more. I appeal to the candor of my hon. colleague, if he will take up his speech and read it over again, to say, whether I have come to an unfair conclusion. This question is the most important one on which he or I have ever been called upon, or ever will be called upon to vote, and I ask him as a member of this House to play a broader role than that of the representative of a county. Here he is not only a representative of his county, but he is also a representative of the Dominion at large, and in dealing with this question he should deal with it as far as possible from a broad public stand-point, free from the prejudice of party. I know it is difficult for him to do that; I know it would be difficult for myself to attempt to practice what I have endeavoured to lay down, but I will endeavour, as far as I can, to let my practice be in accordance with my precept. I am not going to follow the hon. member for South Grey, because I really do not know how far he went. Like many other hon. gentlemen, he did not confine himself to the point at issue. Though a Free-trader, the burden of his song was that Mr. Van Horne had employed Swedes, Yankees and Chinese. I thought that a Free-trader was not only a Free-trader in manufactures of breadstuffs but in labour as well. In the name of common sense, what has the proposition in these Resolutions to do with the internal management of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Again, the hon. gentleman went into a history of the mismanagement of the Grand Trunk Railway and he spoke of the subsidies given by municipalities, towns and cities in Ontario. What has that got to do with the question under discussion? I intend to vote for these Resolutions and I am going to give my reasons for doing so. I know the tone of feeling in Prince Edward Island, and I am sorry to say that my hon. colleague is responsible, to a great extent, for educating the people to the point, at which they have now arrived on this question. We live a long distance away; we are on the edge of Confederation. We do not follow out the development of the North-West, because it does not confer, directly, any benefit on us, but I hope it is not going to injure it. Some of our young men went to the North-West and no doubt this it was that gave my hon. colleague occasion to speak of the exodus, but a great many of them returned home, and they have found out that the fertile little island in the Gulf has land as productive, though the field may not be so large, and the scope for speculation be so great, as any in the great North-West. We enjoy many advantages not to be found in the North-West. We are nearer the coast, have a fertile soil, and a very salubrious climate. The best proof of those advantages is, that while we have no very great accumulation of individual wealth, take the people in the Island from one end to the other and they are in as comfortable circumstances as any to be found elsewhere. Now, Sir, as I said, I think that is an important point, and I think, when my hon. friend goes down to Prince Edward Island, he will correct that impression. If he looks through his speech he will see that, as I understand him, every time he mentioned the $30,000,000, he spoke of it as $30,000,000 in addition to the subvention that was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company when that contract was signed in 1881.

Mr. DAVIES. Just what it is.

Mr. BRECKEN. That is just the admission I wanted to get from my hon. friend.

Mr. DAVIES. It is not in subtraction from it.

Mr. BRECKEN. Then, I did not read the hon. member's speech wrongly. Let us see whether it is or not. I need not go into a lot of figures to prove it. The Government, when they entered into this contract in 1881, gave, I think, some $28,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway; they gave them $25,000,000, and 25,000,000 of acres of land. The Company have purchased east of Callander these railways that are spoken of, and great fault has been found with the Company by the Opposition for doing so, on the ground, I suppose, that these railways have been purchased out of the subvention that came from the Government. Well, my hon. friend says that the hon. Minister of Railways, by his proposition, is advancing $30,000,000 extra. What is the fact? They ask for $23,000,000, and $7,000,000 for the guarantee—call it $30,000,000. Every particle of that railway, the $23,000,000 of work performed by the Government, am I right in saying the 1,100 miles built by the Company, and the 21,000,000 of acres of land, the railways purchased east of Callander, their stock, their tools, their implements, their everything, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $45,000,000, is to be handed over—the Government are to have a first lien and security upon it, save and except some $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 which I think they are liable to for some of these railway companies, and my hon. friend has the coolness to turn round and say this $30,000,000 is in addition to this subvention. Why, how short his memory is. He had not the honour of a seat in the House when this contract was made. What was the cry which I have heard my hon. friend raise in Prince Edward Island? That these valuable lands were given to this Company, that they had a monopoly of the lands of the country, that they were highly favoured, that it was a monstrous bargain, that the interests of the country were sacrificed, that they were given a great deal more than ought to have been granted to them, and that the Government ought to have constructed the road, and would have constructed it at a much lower rate; and yet this magnificent subvention, this 21,000,000 acres of valuable land, and everything that made the terms splendid to them, are offered to the Government in security for this loan; and we have had the assurance from the hon. the Minister of Railways that one condition of that contract is that that work is to be completed by the end of 1885, and, if one year's default is made in the payment of the interest, the Government are in a position to foreclose the whole matter. Now, what becomes of the denunciations that were hurled at the Government for highly favouring the Syndicate? I remember well when the hon. leader of the Opposition came in with his proposition for the second syndicate. I have heard it called a bogus syndicate, but I will not apply that term to it, as I do not know any of the gentlemen who composed it. But the charge then was that we were giving away this valuable land. What was the value put upon it by the leader of the Opposition? Something like $2.36 an acre? And yet my hon. friend says, in the face of these Resolutions, in the face of the assurance given us by the Minister of Railways, that the $30,000,000 are to be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway in addition to the subvention they have already received. It has already been said, and I believe it, that some $36,000,000 has already been expended by the Company. A great deal has been said as to how this was expended, and what they have done with their stocks. Mr. Speaker, what have we to do with that? What is that to this House, and what is that to this country? The hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), the other day, made the admission, that we all knew to be the case, that both sides of the House were committed to this great work. I believe the hon. member who represents East York (Mr. Mackenzie) bent his best energies, and, I believe, with the assistance of the hon. member for South Huron, and with his supporters and coadjutors at his back, he and his Government were devising, and—I do not say it disparagingly—were puzzling their brains to find the best means to build this great railway, to develop this country. Various propositions have been brought down, but, when this proposition was submitted by the Minister of Railways, we were told by the Opposition that he was sacrificing the interests of the country, that he was too generous in his offer; and now this magnificent property which he placed in their hands my hon. colleague says is not worth anything as security for the money which is to be loaned. We have heard of patriotism. I never like to parade the word, because very often the man who is loudest in talking about patriotism is the least in his patriotic principles. I know the definition given, I think, in Johnson's dictionary. I have no hon. gentleman in my eye when I say it, but I think the old lexicographer defines patriotism as the last refuge of a scoundrel. That is the open-mouthed patriot, the man who is always talking about his patriotism, as I have heard the Opposition do over and over again. But I say seriously that the Opposition have been persistent in their opposition to the Government. From the time this contract was entered into down to the present moment, they have persistently opposed it, and I will give them credit for a good deal of ability and a good deal of ingenuity in the way they have raked and scraped up their objections to it; but I believe, in their inner consciousness, that the feeling which troubles them most is not that that magnificent policy which has been carried out so ably by the hon. the Minister of Railways is not going to benefit the country, as a country, but that it is not going to benefit the Grit-Reform party, as a party. I am not making use of a biased or prejudiced expression, for, if you look at their very ablest utterances, from the time the Minister of Railways came down with his proposition to the present day, strange to say, there is not a feature, not a trivial feature, in the whole transaction that has met with the approval of hon. members of the Opposition. I know that men are frail, and that no man is perfectly wise, and that in the greatest schemes that have ever been propounded there will be defects and flaws, but it is a curious thing that the hon. the Minister of Railways should, in the estimation of my hon. friends of the Opposition, be wrong from beginning to end. When he brought in his contract in 1881, he was wrong; he sacrificed the interests of the country; a warning finger was pointed at the hon. gentleman and, with a gleam of satisfaction on the countenances of these—I will not call them his traducers but his opponents—he was told, and the leader of the Government was told, that the time was coming, and was not far distant, when they would have to appeal to the people, and this extravagant Government, this unpatriotic conduct of the Government in refusing the second syndicate, would be condemned by an indignant people, as soon as they found they had been betrayed by the Government of the right hon. gentleman to whom they had entrusted the conduct of public affairs. My hon. friend was promised that in September of 1873 he would be hurled from power, that an exchange would take place of seats in this House, that the moment the people had an opportunity of passing their verdict, he would be found guilty and condemned. But what was the result? The right hon. gentleman went to the people, and this contract and the whole transaction, were explained to them, aye, there was more than that explained to them; the conduct and policy of the Government were misrepresented and traduced. But, thank God! the school-master is abroad; people read and think for themselves, and with an unerring verdict the people placed these public men in power again. And I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if this transaction is confirmed and this contract is completed in two years, the people of Canada, as a body, will confirm and endorse the policy of the Government. I need not go into the question of security—I think I have put that plain enough. But it has been said that the members of the Syndicate have not put their personal property into this undertaking. I do not know whether they have or not. But, oh! says the hon. member, when this contract was entered into in 1881, it was to be completed in ten years. So it was, and it was considered then the greatest boon that could be conferred on Canada. We were told by the hon. leader of the Opposition, as has been very ably remarked by the hon. member for King's, New Brunswick, that he apprehended this work would not go on. But I venture to say that the performance of this contract has been characterized by speed and rapidity that is not to be found in the history of railway building in any part of the world. Now, as to the effect of refusing this loan. It has been published throughout Europe that the Pacific Railway is likely to be built in two years, and that fact, Sir, is known to every country that has an overcrowded population, whose inhabitants are looking for a home in the New World. We have heard of the wonderful capabilities of that country, for producing purposes. I think the hon. Minister of Railways stated that from the year 1871 to 1880, the immigration to that country was 64,755, and since the contract has been in existence, from 1881 to 1883, it has been 149,560. Now, Sir, is it a matter of no consequence to this country that these Resolutions should be rejected and that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should no longer be in a position to execute their contract within the time promised? Is it no injury to this country that the tide of immigration should be checked for that reason? Is it no injury to this country, Sir, that the great national capabilities of the North-West should remain undeveloped? Now, in view of the peculiar state of affairs in the old country, now that very recent representations have been made by the Minister of Railways, acting in the capacity of diplomatic representative of the Dominion, and in view of the valuable and kind efforts that are now being made by our late Governor General, Lord Lorne, and now that an amount of attention is being directed towards the Dominion such as has never been directed to this country since it came under the British flag—in view of all these circumstances, is it of no consequence to this country that the multitude of people in the old World who have been looking to the North-West as their future home, as the home of their children and grandchildren, should be told that this great project, which has been represented to them as likely to be completed in two years, is to be arrested, and that the opening up of that country is to be checked for a number of years to come? Is it no injury to the country to have these intending immigrants discouraged from coming here? Is it no injury to this country that the hopes of our own people should be blasted, and that their anticipations of the rapid development of that great country should fail to be realized? Is it no injury to this country, I repeat, that the people of Great Britain and Ireland, of Germany, and of the continent of Europe generally, who have had recently brought to their attention the great advantages which this country offers to the new settler, should be turned back from their intention of coming here, and that this great tide of immigration should be checked? Now, that the ardour of these people to come to this country is so strong, is it wise for us to take such means as will discourage them? And for what purpose? Because we refuse, as my hon. friend puts it, to assent to the proposition of the Minister of Railways to give $30,000,000 to the Syndicate in addition to the subvention; and because he proposes to this Parliament that a certain sum of money should be advanced—not equal in value, if the representations of hon. members on both sides of this House are to be taken as a guide—to the land alone that they offer as a guarantee. My hon. friend said the Government of Canada ought not to demean itself by becoming a loan company. I do not know any more praiseworthy, any more statesmanlike direction, towards which the funds of the Exchequer of a country can be expended, than in developing its resources and increasing its population. The hon. member for Welland, in the admirable speech he made to-night, spoke of the value of the immigrants. He said that every stalwart immigrant that went into a country was worth a thousand dollars, and he was quite right. Why, Sir, I was astounded when I heard the calculation made by the hon. Minister of Railways as to the capabilities of the North-West, and the quantity of grain that could be raised there per acre——

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRECKEN. Hon. members may laugh, but I am sure that, when all things are considered, there is precious little honest merriment to be got out of the present condition of affairs. The laughter sounds hollow. I was astonished at the capabilities of the country when I heard him speak of these millions of bushels, but I did not discredit his statement. I was even astonished at the much more moderate calculation that was made by the hon. member for King's, New Brunswick (Mr. Foster). I must say that, if my memory serves me right, I have heard very little from my hon. friends on the Opposition side of the House as to the great capabilities of that country. Whether they properly appreciate it or not, I do not know, but as members of this House I have heard very little from them in praise of the North-West. I, myself, Mr. Speaker, am a strong believer in party government. I believe that, as long as we have representative institutions in the country, we must have party government. I also have had some experience in political life. I have been two or three times in the Government, and more frequently in Opposition. I know that, very often, the duties of an Opposition are confined to opposing everything, and proposing nothing. Looking at the bitterness which has characterized the utterances and the conduct of the public men in this country in regard to this Pacific Railway question, it is hardly to be expected that hon. members on the Opposition benches will deal less frankly with this question as those on the Government side of the House. As a member coming from Prince

Mr. BRECKEN.

Edward Island, from a Province which will not be benefited by this undertaking, my vote may be looked upon as an independent vote in an equal degree with any which will be given in this House. It may not perhaps, at the first blush, please some of my constituents. They may think that some of the $23,000,000 might be very advantageously expended in Prince Edward Island, and I should not be sorry to see it done. Still, I think in all seriousness that when we look at the importance of this question, how far this country has been committed to it by both political parties, the fact that all politicians have desired that it should be in the hands of a private company and not in the hands of the Government, the necessity of going forward and completing the road is obvious. When the term of ten years was fixed for the construction of the road, the hon. Minister of Railways would have been laughed at if he had announced that it would be built in five years, and now that we have the work so far advanced that only 650 miles require to be completed, and now that we have a Company which has already invested $36,000,000 in the enterprise, the House will feel the importance of adopting the Resolutions. What has given the the North-West land their value? The construction of the railway. In view of the fact that the advantages of Carleton to the over-populated countries of Europe has been forcibly presented, that the capabilities of the country to afford happy homes to the hard-working but poor people of the old countries, increases the difficulty of declining to advance to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company money to complete the work, it has been suggested that default may be made. If the work has to be taken from the hands of the Company, the Government may do so with $36,000,000 already expended on it. My hon. colleague from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) alluded to the colonization companies in the North-West, and spoke feelingly of the system of absentee landlordism in Prince Edward Island, declaring that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were going to perpetuate that system in the North-West. That was an ill-considered statement. The facts about Prince Edward Island were these: The lands were leased by absentee proprietors to tenants for 999 years, at a moderate rental. They were forest lands, and those who went on them cleared only an acre or two the first year. The rental was allowed to accumulate, and after a man had toiled and spent a lifetime on his small farm, and laid his head on his dying pillow, he did not know but that the landlord would step in and take the property. That was our grievance. I was in the Local Legislature, and introduced the Bill which remedied this grievance, and in passing that measure I received valuable aid from my colleague, who is always, however, opposed to me politically. What is a colonization company in the North-West? It is an aid to the settlement of the country, and the hon. gentleman should have considered the matter a little more before he expressed so much virtuous indignation in regard to these organizations. The even-numbered sections are held for free settlement, while the odd numbered sections are sold to the company at $2 per acre, a rebate of one-half being allowed if the settlement conditions are fulfilled. The colonization companies sell the lands outright, and there is no question of tenancy. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company also sell their lands and do not rent them. I was going to read to the House some of the hon. gentleman's utterances in Prince Edward Island, but I will refrain——

Mr. DAVIES. Let us have them.

Mr. BRECKEN. I will let the hon. gentleman have one, because when he talks of patriotism his remarks appear to be somewhat inconsistent. The hon. gentleman is acknowledged to be leader of the Liberal party on the Island, and when the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was entered into, he held meetings throughout its length and breadth. I congratulate him upon the moderate tone of his speech in the House the other day; he has wonderfully improved, and two years hence, when the railway has been completed and the North-West settled by happy and prosperous farmers, who will share taxation with the inhabitants of the other Provinces, I shall expect him to disavow the sentiments which I will now read. The hon. gentleman stated that the only course open for the country would be to cast in its fortunes with the United States. This, he said, is an escape which no politician likes to talk about, but it will come one day, and when it comes we must take our chances to make the best bargain we can. I am sure we are all disposed to make every possible allowance for the hon. gentleman's utterance the other night; but is it not a matter of great congratulation that he should have toned down in so short a time? My hon. friend said, in speaking of what would have been the result of these Resolutions, if they were not carried, that the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), had indicated three such results. The first was that the work would be stopped; the second, that 9,000 men would be thrown out of employment; and the third, that the Conservative party would be injured. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe made a very able speech, well constructed and brimfull of information on that point. My hon. friend spoke of him, in a fit of generosity, as holding a brief for the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am sure my hon. colleague under-rated my hon. friend on that occasion, and if he will turn to the pages of Hansard, and read one or two of the able speeches made by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, he will find some able and original calculations on that subject. The question of the consequences to the Conservative party is not one which, I think, should be considered in this matter, though I am sure that the question of whether it will benefit or injure the Reform party has received a good deal of attention on the other side. The Conservative party do not deserve to be taunted in that way. The contract was entered into fairly and openly; it was thoroughly discussed here, and the leader of the Government hastened on the elections sooner than the Constitution required, in order to obtain the people's verdict upon it. I have always believed—though I know that party names are often political nicknames—in the soundness of public opinion; and I always thought it was the proud boast of the party which flaunted the flag of Liberalism, that they bowed to the voice of the people. But this contract was introduced in the Session of 1881, and I willingly give my hon. friends all credit for the energy and industry which they displayed, for there was not a nook or a corner of the country, not a hamlet in the Dominion which was not crammed—I will not say with Grit—but with Reform literature on this question; but the people rejected them. Hon. gentlemen come here as the people's representatives, and the people's friends and reflectors. We have heard them, time and again, when they were getting the worst of an argument, taunt their political opponents with being Tories. The people had considered this matter for twelve months, and they came to the deliberate conclusion that the contract was a good one. Another remarkable feature of the election was the fact that some of the leading men on the Opposition benches—men of acknowledged and exalted ability, who denounced the conduct of the Minister of Railways—left the House and they have never been able to find their way here since. I say that hon. gentlemen who call themselves Liberals—reflectors of public opinion—should accept that verdict. They should not taunt my hon. friend with stealing a march on the people, or squandering the people's money. In the name of common sense, what object has the leader of the Government, or the Minister of Railways, in giving the Company these magnificent subventions? Personally, I am acquainted with but one member of the Company, but I am given to understand that when these men were in politics, they saw eye to eye, with hon. gentlemen opposite—they belonged to the great Reform party. I have been listening, and I expected to hear that they had influenced the elections in 1882. I do not know that there is one of them in sympathy with the Government, but I believe that they are high-minded, energetic and thoroughly business men, and the work they have done is a credit to them. When the contract was made in 1881, I thought there was the possibility of finality about it, but that point has been amply explained. I think, however, it would have been better if my hon. friends, instead of taking up such issues, had directed their attention to one important point mentioned by the Minister of Railways, and that is the hostility of American railways—the dread of competition, by our trans-continental road, the “bearing” and depreciating of the stocks—thereby piling up obstacles in the way of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and preventing them from realizing from their stock, as they had a right to expect they would realize. Circumstances occurred which could not be controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or by the Dominion Government or by Parliament. And it would have been a more patriotic course—one which would have been more fully appreciated by every independent elector in the Dominion—if my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House had recognized the difficulties with which the Canadian Pacific Railway had to contend, and for which they were in no way responsible—difficulties which are liable to arise under the best managers, and in all public works; it would have been better if, recognizing the crisis which took place in the stock market, they had come forward and said, we believe this is a great property, and that we should, as sometimes happens in the Mother Country, when the honour, the territories, or the interests of Great Britain are invaded, drop the petty arms of petty warfare and stand shoulder to shoulder to save the country. This is a commercial warfare against the best interests of the country, and we would not prove to be the true friends of Canada, if in this particular instance, no matter how much on other questions we may differ from the First Minister, we did not help to tide the Dominion over this little crisis. I say that two years hence every man whose heart beats true to Canada will feel proud of raising his voice in favour of and giving his support to a measure which will tend more to benefit the country than all the measures which have accumulated on the Statute Book for the last ten years.

Mr. LISTER moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

THOMAS TEMPLE, Esq., Member to represent the Electoral District of the County of York (New Brunswick) having previously taken the oath, according to law, and subscribed the roll containing the same, was introduced by Sir Leonard Tilley and the hon. John Costigan, and took his seat in the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:10 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 18th February, 1884.

METHODIST CHURCH UNION.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I beg to move that the petition of the Rev. Emerson Bristol, and others; of the Rev.

J. F. Durkee, and others, and of James Hawkins, and others, presented this day, be now read and received. The reason for this motion is that the Committee to whom the question of incorporating the union of the Methodist Churches is referred meets to-morrow, and I believe takes up the question. These petitions are in the same category as those already presented, with one exception, that of the Rev. Emerson Bristol and others, who state in detail the nature of their objection to the union. They desire to be heard on the subject before the Committee, and the reference of their objections to the Committee under the motion I propose will obviate the necessity for my asking for the delay of the Bill, in order that their statement may be heard.

Motion agreed to ; and petition read and received

MOUNTED POLICE FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, Is it the intention of the Government, owing to the recent troubles with the Indians at Metlakatla and the near approach of the Canadian Pacific Railway, through the Rocky Mountains, into British Columbia, to detail a troop or squad of Mounted Police for service in that western section of the Dominion? If so, how soon? And of how many would such troop or squad consist?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By the present law, the functions of the Mounted Police are confined to the North-West, and, without an alteration of the law, no portion of that force can be used or compelled to go to any portion of British Columbia or any other Province of the Dominion.

EMIGRANT SHEDS AT VICTORIA.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to erect emigrant sheds in Victoria for the temporary accommodation of the increased number of immigrants who will arrive there this spring, consequent upon railway construction, the prosecution of the public works, and the throwing open of railway lands to settlement?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the intention of the Government.

DUTIES OF IMMIGRATION AGENT AND QUARANTINE OFFICER ON VANCOUVER ISLAND.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, What instructions have been issued to the immigration agent, and the quarantine officer on Vancouver Island, in regard to their respective duties, other than the usual printed regulations?

Mr. POPE. No instructions have been given to the immigration agent there, except those of December last, defining his duties and desiring him to give all the information in his power to enquirers from abroad. The same remarks apply to the quarantine officer, whose duties, besides the printed regulations, were defined in the letter of instructions of the 12th December last.

SALARIES OF IMMIGRATION AGENT AND QUARANTINE OFFICER ON VANCOUVER ISLAND.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) enquired, What are the dates respectively of the appointments of the immigration agent and quarantine officer on Vancouver Island, what salary and allowance have been authorized by the Department, and what occasioned the delay in making said appointments after the Estimates were passed by Parliament, to take effect from 1st July, 1883?

Mr. POPE. The immigration agent was appointed by Order in Council of the 4th December last, at $1,000 a year, Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex).

and any ordinary expenditure will be met by the vote of contingencies for Canadian agencies. The quarantine officer was appointed by Order in Council of the 18th August, at a salary of $1,800, and the Estimates provide $500 for his contingencies.

WELLINGTON LIFEBOAT HOUSE.

Mr. PLATT enquired, By what person or persons were plans and specifications for life-boat house at Wellington, Ontario, submitted to the Government, and whose plan was accepted? Were tenders for construction of said building invited by public advertisement or otherwise? How many tenders were received, and what is the name and amount in case of the highest, the lowest and the accepted tender?

Mr. McLELAN. I visited the locality during the past season in company with Mr. McCuaig. I ascertained what would be necessary for the repair of the boat, and directed the officer to ascertain the price of material necessary to build a small boat-house. He sent forward an estimate of the quantities and prices. These were submitted to the engineer of my Department and approved by him, and the work was carried out upon that approval.

RANGE LIGHTS AT WELLER'S BAY.

Mr. PLATT enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to make any change either as to relative position or dimensions in what is known as the Range Lights at Weller's Bay, Ontario?

Mr. McLELAN. It is not so decided.

THE TARIFF ON GRAIN.

Mr. WHEELER enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to readjust the Tariff on grain, so as to allow four and a-half bushels of wheat, the quantity required to make a barrel of flour, to be imported at the same duty as that charged on a barrel of flour?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The intentions of the Government will be communicated to the House when I make my financial statement, on this subject, as well as on others relating to the Tariff.

LANSDOWNE POST OFFICE.

Mr. JACKSON enquired, has the Government acted on the petition of C. C. Olds and others, of the township of Woodhouse, in the county of Norfolk, Province of Ontario, asking for a post office in said township, to be called Lansdowne? If so, have they decided to grant such petition? If so, has the postmaster been appointed for said office? What is his name? When will the office be opened for the transmission of mails? Does the Government intend to furnish a daily, tri-weekly, semi-weekly or weekly mail for the convenience of the people in that vicinity?

Mr. CARLING. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I may say that the matter is now under consideration.

THE EXCHANGE BANK.

Mr. HOLTON enquired, 1. Has the Minister of Finance, since the suspension of the Exchange Bank of Canada, demanded or obtained any security for the repayment of the $100,000 advanced to that institution upon the strength of the hon. A. W. Ogilvie's letter of guarantee, and if so, what security? 2. If the Minister of Finance has obtained no such security, has he caused any legal proceedings to be taken for the recovery of the said sum of $100,000, and if so, what are they? 3. If no such security has been obtained and if no legal proceedings have been taken for the recovery of the amount of said advance, is it the intention of the Government to institute such proceedings, and if so, against whom, and when?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No additional security has been taken from Mr. Ogilvie. I am advised by the Minister of Justice that the debt due to the Crown is entitled by law to precede other debts of the same degree. Instructions have been already given to seek to enforce this right as against the assets in the bank. Should the Government not be able to realize the full amount of the claim in this way, Mr. Ogilvie will be called upon to make good the deficiency.

PAYMENT OF LIQUOR LICENSE INSPECTORS.

Mr. IRVINE enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make provision for paying the inspectors appointed or to be appointed under the Liquor License Act of 1883, in counties which have adopted the Canada Temperance Act or the Dunkin Act, and whether by salary or otherwise?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the intention of the Government so to provide by a pecuniary allowance.

MEASUREMENT OF LOGS AND LUMBER.

Mr. HALL enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to take any steps to establish a uniform standard rule for the measurement of logs and lumber?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not the intention to make any change in the present system of measuring logs and lumber.

THE HON. HECTOR FABRE.

Mr. CASGRAIN enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to retain the hon. Hector Fabre in the position he now occupies in Paris? Whether that gentleman has made out the reports required of him respecting his labours and their results? When did he do so? What is the salary and the disbursements, and expenditure on contingencies connected with his office? Whether that gentleman receives in addition any remuneration from the Province of Quebec for doing the same duties?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. Hector Fabre is an officer of the Quebec Government, and was appointed by them. With the consent of that Government, Mr. Fabre performs certain duties connected with the office of High Commissioner, and certain duties connected with emigration. For that he receives $2,000 a year. His appointment is for three years, and is to end next year. He has made certain reports respecting his labours and their results; and if the hon. gentleman will move for the papers they will be brought down.

BENEFIT MUTUAL INSURANCE SOCIETIES.

Mr. LISTER enquired, Is it the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to introduce legislation affecting in any way Benefit Mutual Insurance Societies, now doing business in Canada?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may state to the hon. gentleman that it is the intention of the Government to introduce a Bill referring to this subject during the present Session.

FUNDED DEBT, 1883, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOAN.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) enquired, Is the sum of $14,951,863, 4 per cent. funded debt, 1883, Canadian Pacific Railway, mentioned in the 5th page of the Estimates of 1884-85, recently laid upon the Table, a new loan, and if so, when was it contracted and where, and at what date is it repayable?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is interest on the guarantee to the Canadian Pacific Railway. On the 17th of August, 1884, $305,729.06 will be due; on the 17th of February, 1885, $292,344.56 must be paid, making $593,074.52 to be paid during the next year.

MONTCALM CONTROVERTED ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to announce to the House that I have received from the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada the judgment of the said Court in the matter of the Controverted Election of the Electoral District of Montcalm, by which said judgment the sitting member is declared duly elected and returned.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

The Order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Sir Charles Tupper, "That the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to consider certain proposed Resolutions (page 84) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway," being read,

Mr. LISTER. In rising to make a few observations on the question now before the House, I am conscious, Sir, that at this late stage of the debate it will be possible for me to add but little to what has already been urged against the passing of these Resolutions. But, Sir, I feel that I would be faithless to my constituents who sent me here, I would be unmindful of my own convictions, did I fail to stand up in my place in Parliament and protest against the passing of these Resolutions. Before I enter into the merits of the questions, I desire, for a few moments, to advert to the speech of an hon. gentleman who preceded me, I refer to the hon. member from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). In that speech he undertook to criticize the speech delivered by the hon. member from East Lambton (Mr. Fairbank), and in doing so he used these words:

"I presume, Sir, that it is customary, in the first place, to deal with the observations of the speaker who preceded, and in this case I should feel disposed to do so to some extent; but, Sir, I find myself relieved of that important duty by the esteem in which the remarks of the hon. gentleman who preceded me in this debate, seem to be held by his own friends, if we judge from the comments upon his speech made by the leading organ of the Reform party in the Province of Quebec. I refer to the correspondent of the Montreal Daily Witness, who, after having paid a high eulogy to the hon. member for Queen's, and a still higher compliment to the hon. member for King's who took part in this debate, thus disposes of the hon. gentleman who has preceded me: 'Unlike his two predecessors, he departed from the serious into the comicality.' And now, Sir, as I have no pretension to be the comic member for this side of the House, I must certainly dispense with paying any attention to the comicalities of the hon. gentleman who has already taken part in this discussion."

In criticising the speech of the hon. member for East Lambton, the hon. gentleman felt that it was consistent with his dignity and self-respect as a member of this honourable House, to quote only a portion of the report in that paper concerning the speech made by the hon. gentleman for East Lambton. I propose, Sir, to read what that newspaper really said:

"Mr. Foster made a very favourable impression, and was loudly applauded on concluding. Mr. Fairbank, unlike his two predecessors, departed from the serious into comicality. He here put out his statistical arguments in opposition to the Resolutions in a happy way, and they had telling effects."

Sir, it has been a matter of surprise to me that an hon. gentleman occupying a position in this honourable House should, for the purpose of securing a brief victory, as it were, undertake to misquote, or only partially quote, what has appeared in the newspapers. Well, after the hon. member has criticised the speech of the hon. member for East Lambton, and read from a report in the newspapers, I suppose, Sir, I may also be permitted to criticise his speech by reading a report of it in the Toronto News, an independent paper, but I shall differ with him in this, that I shall read the whole of what is there stated instead of a part. Sir, that paper; on the 16th of February, referring to the speech of the hon. member for Montreal, says :

"When, however, Curran rose in his place and commenced to shout his patriotism to the dome, it was apparent that he was about to clothe his actions in the garment of hypocritical cant, and support the Government as usual. It was rather hard lines that the noisy and self-complacent advocate was being ground between the upper and nether millstones of the power of two corporations, and if the interests of Canada were not being considered it should be reckoned meritorious that he chose party rather than corporate selfishness. But the speech itself was a hollow screaming of patriotism, and a redaubing of the Grand Trunk Railway with taffy, which doubtless was intended to excuse his actions to his constituents. Not satisfied that this amount of demagoguism would lift him over these 500 votes he turned and slobbered over the French Canadians, and then striking with his hand the neighbourhood of his liver, he roared: 'There beats in this breast a loyal and patriotic Irish Canadian heart.' Thus the blatant professional patriot gave oratorical taffy to the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the ordinary Canadian, the French Canadian, the Irish Canadian and French Canadian. Though he tore passion to tatters, and ranted and roared through the most absurd speech delivered in Parliament this Session, he utterly failed to score a point. He said he would not deign to notice the speech of Fairbank, of Lambton, but in one sentence of that speech there was more sense than Curran talked in half an hour."

Sir, as the hon. gentleman is not here in his place to-day, I do not propose, in his absence, to do any more than he did regarding the popular member for East Lambton. Since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, I have observed, on more than one occasion, that hon. gentlemen, in quoting former speeches of hon. members of this House, have apparently not had the courage to quote them in full. I think it is unfortunate and unworthy of any hon. member to resort to such a device, for the purpose of securing temporary victory. Hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, as well as hon. members on this side, have referred to the question before the House as one of momentous importance. I can agree with what hon. gentlemen have said in that regard. I feel there has not been since this Parliament commenced a question so important and possibly so far-reaching in its effects upon Canada, and I believe during the present Parliament no question of anything like equal magnitude will have to be considered by this House. In considering this question I propose to go back in the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway for a few years. I was not in Parliament in 1872, and I am not here for the purpose of discussing what took place at that time; but I am here for the purpose of discussing this question before the House and this question only. We know that after the defeat of the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite at once set about the task of having the Canadian Pacific Railway built by a private company. It is a matter of history that in 1880 the hon. leader of the Government went to England for the purpose, as was then stated, of having a company organized to carry out this great work. We know also that in the fall of that year the leader of the Government returned to this country, and that he was met at Hochelaga by a deputation from the Jacques Cartier Club of Montreal. We know that the hon. gentleman made a speech to those young gentlemen in which he announced to them and the country at large that he had succeeded in forming a company, and that he had succeeded in making a fast contract with capitalists in England for the construction of that railway. The country believed he had done so. Sir, the country believed the hon. gentleman had made a contract which was in the interest of the country; but he did not deign to state to the deputation what the terms were. The hon. gentleman, however, stated to them that he was an old man, and that it was unlikely, in the natural course of events, that he would live to see the contract completed, but he expressed the hope that when in another sphere he would look down on those young gentlemen and see them speeding over the Canadian Pacific Railway at a rate of 25 miles per hour. I sincerely hope that when the hon. gentleman leaves this sphere, he will go to one where he will have an opportunity of looking down; but I venture to predict that when he reaches that happy place, instead of looking down at young men of the Jacques Cartier Club speeding over that railway at 25 miles an hour, he will have some more interesting occupation. Sir, the country believed that the hon. gentleman had entered into a contract, that a fast contract had been made, that English capitalists of unbounded wealth had been secured for the purpose of carrying out the great national undertaking of which the Minister of Railways talked so much. Parliament was summoned early, ostensibly for the purpose of ratifying the contract which the hon. gentleman had made; but when Parliament met, it was found that no contract had been made in England, but that a contract had been entered into on this side of the Atlantic with men living in Canada who professed to be capitalists, and the statement made by the hon. gentleman at Hochelaga was in fact not true. The contract which was laid on the Table of the House contained the most extraordinary provisions of any contract ever laid before Parliament. It proposed to give and did give to the Company a fabulous sum of money for the construction of the railway, and conferred on them monopolies and rights which had never been granted by any free country to any corporation in the last five hundred years, and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to produce a single instance. Although the Opposition on that occasion took a patriotic stand and made a noble fight against the iniquitous provisions of the contract, it was hurried through Parliament and became the law of the land. We had reason to believe at that time, after the contract was executed, that there would be no more trouble about it, although the leader of the Opposition took occasion more than once to point out to the Government the liability there was for the contractors coming back again and asking for more money, whereupon he was assured over and over again by the hon. Minister of Railways, by the hon. Minister of Public Works and by the hon. leader of the Government, that no such event could possibly take place. Sir, in order to verify what I have stated, I will take the liberty of reading extracts from speeches made by the hon. gentlemen whom I have mentioned. The Premier, Sir John Macdonald, in his remarks in reply to Mr. Blake's criticism of the Speech at the opening of Parliament, on the 10th of December, 1880, said :

"The contract with the Syndicate would be received by the whole country 'as a relief from the apprehension that the country was going to be plunged into an unlimited expense.' Further, that 'the Syndicate are resolved to build this road, and they are able to do so' and in doing so, they will relieve this country of the immediate responsibility of expenditure in building the road."

Sir Charles Tupper, in moving the House into Committee on the contract, December 14th, said :

"We are in a position to state not only that the entire construction (of the Canadian Pacific Railway) from end to end, but that the responsibility of operating it hereafter, is to be taken off the shoulders of the country, and that she will be relieved from the expenditure of a single dollar in connection with the construction or operation of this railway. I say that this company embraces capitalists both of our own and other countries, whose names are the best guarantees that could be offered the people of Canada that any enterprise they may undertake will be successful; that no greater injury could have been inflicted on the people of Canada than to have made the conditions of the agreement so onerous that instead of ensuring their successful fulfillment they would have led to failure. And I would ask this House whether this contract is one to sit down and cavil over and to drive the most difficult bargain that could be driven and perhaps lead to what occurred when we made the contract in 1873."

Further on Sir Charles said :

"Under this arrangement we have the best guarantee that the work will be pushed rapidly to completion under the contract as now proposed. There were two things we had to consider. One was to make the best bargain we could for Canada—the other was not to impose terms that would be likely to lead to disaster in the money markets of the world when the proposition was placed on them."

The Minister of Public Works referring to Mr. Blake's objections, said :

"What does he want? Does he want to drive a hard bargain with these gentlemen? What sense would there be in attempting to cut them down to make a poor company. It was to our interest, and to the interest of the country that the company should be able to construct the railway, and work it afterwards, so that they should not come back to us year after year, and ask us for new terms."

Sir Hector continuing, said :

"We want once for all, to settle the whole question, so as to say to the company, this is the settlement—you build that railway for that amount of money and land and work it."

Sir Hector further said :

"If we starve them now by giving them a small subsidy, in land and money, the result would be that they will come to us afterwards and say—We cannot go on. We do not want that; we want a good and great railway, and also to put it on a proper footing, so as to prevent its owners coming back to us and saying, 'you starve us to death, and we want more money.'"

Sir Hector further said :

"We have the guarantee, no doubt; but perhaps the hon. gentleman would prefer to see them come to ask for better terms. I am not of that opinion, nor is the Government."

These are extracts from speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite when it was pointed out to them that, fabulous though the contract price was, there was a probability that, before many months or years had elapsed, the Company would come back to Parliament and ask further aid. The predictions of the leader of the Opposition have been fulfilled within the short period of three years, for the Company have come back to the Government, and they are saying, "We cannot complete this contract unless you provide us with further funds." That is the real position of the matter; for although the Government may say that the Company are able to build this railway, that their means are quite sufficient for that purpose, we know that it is the fact, according to the statements which have been laid on the Table of this House, according to the facts which have come to the knowledge of this House, the Company are not able to construct the road without further assistance. And of course, to justify the advance, or the loan, which the Government proposes to make to this Company, it is necessary for the Government to say that there is some consideration moving them from the Company; and they tell us that if the advance is made the road will be constructed within two years, but, if not, it will not be completed before 1891. Let us examine for a few moments the particulars connected with the guarantee, and the circumstances which surround that somewhat shady transaction. We find that the Government of this country, the trustees of the public funds, without any authority of law, without any authority at all except dependence on their majority in Parliament, entered into a secret agreement with the Company and guaranteed the stock of the Company to the extent of $65,000,000 at 3 per cent. That agreement was an illegal agreement, one which the Government should never have entered into. But the worst fact in connection with it is, that the first intimation that the country had that such an arrangement had been entered into, was a telegram from the other side of the water. It is a somewhat significant and suspicious circumstance that at the time that telegram was received gentlemen occupying high positions in the country, occupying confidential relations to the Government, who must have known of such an agreement, were in the city of New York. It was perfectly well known—the merest novice in finance must have known—that the effect of such an announcement in New York would be to "bull" the stock—to temporarily advance it; and that was exactly what happened. Sir, there is a suspicion in the country that the men to whom I have referred, have made large sums on the stock boards by their operations in Canadian Pacific Railway stock; but, true or not, it is, as I said, a significant fact that these gentlemen were in New York at that time, and it is equally well known that during the few days the stock was in the market, it advanced from 50 to 62 cents. That, Sir, was an improper transaction, one which this Government had no right to enter into. The Government has no right to interfere with the stock market of this or any other country, or to do anything by which the stock brokers can make money out of the acts of the Government. But bad as that transaction was, we did not suspect, the people of the country did not suspect, that this Company would come to the Government again, and ask them to advance them $22,500,000 by way of a loan. But, Sir, when Parliament assembled, we find that the Minister of Railways laid on the Table a proposition to lend this Company that amount, and to assume a further liability of $7,500,000, making in all $30,000,000. The hon. gentleman has argued in favour of that proposition in very eloquent strains; he has put the case on the part of the Company and the Government in the strongest possible light; he has urged every argument which it was possible for ingenuity to urge, to justify this extraordinary transaction. Allow me for a few moments to enquire into the position of this Company when the work is completed and its present position, and to ask the House and the country if, under those circumstances, the Government is justified in advancing or lending the Company this amount, or guaranteeing them any sum whatever. The length of the railway is 2,550 miles, and the work done by the Company is upon the line from Callander to Thunder Bay, and from Red River to Kamloops, or 1,910 miles altogether. The Company is to receive for this amount of work, a cash subsidy of $25,000,000 and a land grant subsidy of 25,000,000 acres, equal to $75,000,000 in all. They receive in addition to cash and land grant subsidies, 711 miles of road, completed and to be completed by the Government, namely, from Thunder Bay to Red River, from Fort Moody to Kamloops and the Pembina Branch, making 711 miles, at a cost to the Government of $38,000,000; so that the Company, for constructing 1,910 miles are to receive $103,000,000, not including the cost of surveys, which amounted to about $5,000,000. The Company have expended according to the statement of the President $23,563,564, and estimating the cost to complete the work at $27,000,000 we have an amount equal to $50,563,564. This sum taken from $103,000,000 leaves a balance of $52,536,436, the net profit of the Company. If we add to this the amount which it is proposed to lend the Company, which I say is a gift, one which this Government, or any other Government, will never be able to extract from the Company—if we add this amount, to the profits of the Company, these profits will aggregate $74,936,000. I shall now glance for a moment at the present position of the Company. According to the statement of the president, they have expended $23,563,564; they have received $21,318,222; so that they have expended over and above the amount they have received, $2,245,342. Against this they hold a land subsidy of 10,000,000 of acres equal to $20,000,000, at a very low valuation, because the lands already sold have brought an average price of $2.36 per acre. Deduct from the $20,000,000 the amount they have expended, $2,245,000, and there is left a profit of $17,755,000. But the roads completed by the Government are valued at $19,000,000, so that the Company have, as they actually stand to-day, a profit of $17,755,000, together with the $19,000,000 worth of completed roads, or a total profit of $36,755,000. In addition, they are to receive, for the purpose of covering current obligations, the sum of $7,500,000;—I do not take the full amount, because the hon. Minister says that is to be expended in constructing the balance of the road. That would bring the amount of their profits up to $44,255,000, or, if you deduct from that $7,500,000 the $2,250,000, they still have cash in hand amounting to over $5,000,000. So that, Sir, taking that statement as correct, it shows that that Company have never put one single dollar into the construction of the road, and they are making, as they stand today, a profit of $44,255,000. And these are the men, Mr. Speaker, who come to this Parliament and say that they cannot construct this road unless they get this immense loan. These are the men who, the hon. First Minister told the people and the country, were able to construct the road out of their own private means if they never should receive one dollar from outside resources. These are the great capitalists we have heard about from every platform in the country since 1880. These are the men for whose benefit the taxpayers of this country are asked to put their hands in their pockets and pay over this large amount of money. These are the contractors who possess such an influence over this Government as to force them to hurry through these Resolutions without bringing down to Parliament the proper amount of information necessary to enable us to understand them. This is the Company who, despite the opposition of the French-Canadian press, despite the hostile attitude of certain other corporations, are able to induce the Government to hurry these Resolutions through. Is it a far-drawn inference to say that there is a power which the people of this country know nothing about, forcing the Ministry on in a way which their better sense and feeling must disapprove of? These are the men who come to this Parliament and ask that the people of this country should mortgage their farms and their properties throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion for the purpose of helping them to bind down the people of the North-West with greater fetters than ever. These are the men who are retarding the progress of that country, and crushing out its very vitals. They are not willing to surrender their great monopoly or one of the many privileges they possess. They demand this favour from the Government, and the Government, without asking for a single concession, are willing to accede to their demand. I say that the people of this country will pronounce this transaction to be a most shameful one. Although they condoned, to a certain extent, the contract of 1880, they will not condone this transaction, but the Government, when they go before the people, will have to answer for their conduct.

Mr. HESSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman who interrupts me is no doubt a very loyal citizen—he is willing that all his friends and relations should serve the country. He has a great many of them feeding at the public crib now, and I do not doubt that he would be willing to take the portfolio of the Minister of Agriculture if he could get it. Sir, it is urged by the Government, as a reason why this transaction should be carried out, that in order to develop the North-West, it is necessary that that road should be speedily constructed. It is said that that is necessary, in order for us to get an entrance into the country. It is also urged, as a reason for the speedy construction of the road, that the Northern Pacific Railway is obtaining the through trade, and that unless the Canadian Pacific Railway is speedily completed, that trade will be permanently diverted from it. Let us examine this plea for a moment. We were told the other day that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be the shortest and best of all the transcontinental lines, and with the easiest grades. Under these circumstances, I say that no matter what other railways may be constructed across the continent, the shippers of freight will seek the shortest and cheapest route; and whether that road is finished by 1885 or 1891 makes no difference whatever to the country. But hon. gentlemen say that, in order to attract immigration to the North-West, it is necessary that the road should be speedily constructed. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), when he controlled the Government, recognized the importance of making connection with the North-West Territory; and with that view he constructed the Pembina Branch, and immediately set about the construction of the Thunder Bay Branch. These two branches are running to-day, and they are the very routes by which the Canadian Pacific Railway carry all the immigration into that country. As an hon. member said the other night, no immigrants go into that country in mid-winter; they go there in summer; and the preparations which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made are such as to offer greater inducements to them than they would have if there were only an all-rail route. They point out to immigrants that they are able to avoid the tiresome journey of an all-rail route by taking the boats to Port Arthur, and there changing to the cars, to be carried on them to the great North-West. Therefore, I say, so far as immigration is concerned, that every facility which it is possible for the Company to offer to immigrants now exists; and if the speedy construction of the road is desirable, it is in the interest of the Company, and not in the interest of the country. But, Sir, do hon. gentlemen opposite think they are going to attract immigration? Do they think for one moment that they are going to induce immigrants to settle in the North-West, in the face of the fact that that country is under a grinding monopoly? Do they believe that people will go into that country, while they have before them the prospect of paying a yearly tribute to that Company of $6 or $7 an acre on all the land they cultivate? Do they think that immigrants are likely to settle in that country, in the face of the oppressive land regulations that exist and in the face of their uncertain administration? No, Sir; if hon. gentlemen calculate on a large immigration into the North-West, I think they will be greatly mistaken. Let us look at the past, which, perhaps, affords the best indication of what the future will likely be; and what do we find? That railway facilities have been opened up through that country for the purpose of encouraging immigration. And with what result? Let us look, for a moment, at the census statistics of the Dominion of Canada for 1881. According to them the population of Canada in 1881 was 4,324,811; and in 1871, 3,635,024, an increase in ten years of 689,787. I think every one will admit that the natural increase of population should be at the rate of 2½ per cent, which would give, as the natural increase during those ten years, 896,451. The official returns show that the number of immigrants who arrived in Canada during the last ten years was 261,205. Adding this immigration of 261,205 to the natural increase of 2½ per cent, 896,451, you have a total increase of 1,157,656; yet these census statistics show that the actual increase was only 689,787. There is thus left to be accounted for 467,869. We find in the report of the British Minister at Washington that he estimates the emigration from the United States to Canada at 64,000 in 1873. If we take up the American statistics, we will find that these 467,000, unaccounted for on our Canadian returns, have gone to the United States; or that double the number of people who have come into this country during the last ten years, from 1871 to 1881, have left and settled in the United States. Looking at the statistics for ten years, we find that each year the number of people who left for the United States was as follows:—

Mr. LISTER.

1876.....	22,399
1877.....	24,065
1878.....	25,490
Total.....	128,781

During the five years the late Government was in power. In the five following years, the record is as follows:—

1881.....	125,391
1882.....	98,295

In the first two years, 1874 and 1875, the emigration is only calculated on those who left the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, so that, according to American statistics, it showed that during those ten years 418,666 people left Canada and settled in the United States. Deducting 128,781 the emigration to the United States under the Mackenzie Administration, from the 418,660 that left in the last five years, and we have an emigration during the last five years of 289,879 over and above that which took place when the hon. member for East York was in power. It will be said these American statistics are not correct, and I am aware a gentleman named Lowe has been travelling through the western parts of the country, pretending to gather statistics for the purpose of showing what the real emigration was. I understand the way that was done. It is not necessary to repeat it here. I may also say there is a very large difference between his statistics and those furnished by the American Government; but I call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that during the years in which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was head of the Government, they were willing to take these statistics as correct. You can scarcely take up a copy of the Montreal Gazette and Toronto Mail, during 1877 and 1878, in which you will not find these hon. gentlemen saying that the country was becoming depopulated, and proving their statements from the American statistics. These statistics are proved to be correct beyond peradventure by the fact that we should have a population of 467,000 more than we have to-day, according to the natural increase in the immigration, and the American statistics show that 417,000 of our people have settled in the United States. Do hon. gentlemen opposite think they are going to attract immigration to the North-West, in face of the fact that in the United States they have competing railways and every facility is offered to the settler to make himself contented with his home? I say no, and I say that the predictions of hon. gentlemen opposite for the last two or three years have not been verified, because they have given us to understand that thousands of people would rush into the North-West and settle up the country. The returns however show that scarcely 25,000 went in there during the year 1882, and I venture to say the immigration into Manitoba during the present year is much less. I was pained to hear the hon. member for Cardwell make the reference he did the other night. Although I am prepared to admit that no hon. gentleman in this house is calculated to give a better opinion upon the spoon-feeding business than the hon. gentleman, I do not think he showed any reason in applying this epithet to the North-West. He said: "The grievances in the North-West, what are they? Hon. gentlemen opposite have manufactured most of them. The people there grumble because they have not a railway to their own doors, and are not spoon-fed by the Government." Hon. gentlemen opposite were willing to applaud this statement. The hon. member for Cardwell talked of the differences between the present time and the time when our fathers settled in this country. You can draw no parallel at all between them. In this age, when settlers can go to almost any portion of the United States and have all the railway facilities they require, when they have telegraphs, and everything that modern civilization supplies—is it proper to say to the people of a country who have been accustomed to this state of things and have abandoned them, that they are spoon-fed people; The people of the North-West are not spoon-fed; they are suffering from real grievances; they are suffering from the high taxation imposed on them by this Government, and the railway monopoly which only reduced its rates a few months ago, because they have an application before the Government, but the moment that application is granted I venture to predict the old rates will be established. This generous Company when it wants a favour from the Government is prepared to make concessions, but when it has received that favour is equally ready to withdraw its concessions. Under these circumstances, it is not at all likely that you will be able to attract immigration to the North-West, unless you wipe out entirely the monopoly in that country. That you must do or you will never settle that country. In this nineteenth century it is monstrous to think that a Government of free men, living in a free country, can be found who will fetter the people by such a monopoly. If the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury Benches had lived 300 years ago and had attempted to create a monopoly of that kind or any other monopoly they would have been hanged. Why, Sir, it was a penal offence in England, three hundred years ago, to attempt to create monopolies, but that law is not in existence now, and we are going back to a state of affairs which then existed, and, if we go on as we are going on now, the time will not be far distant when it will be necessary to re-enact those laws. I have a word or two to say in reference to the speeches of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe and the hon. member for King's County, New Brunswick. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) says:

"The Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, in 1873, entered into an arrangement with Sir Hugh Allan and his associates for the construction of this railway. Sir Hugh made an effort to raise the necessary capital; but, as every one knows, he failed. He was met by much the same opposition which has turned up against the present Company, and he had also to contend with this: that the country was then a comparatively unknown wilderness."

The hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth) says:

"In 1873, it is well known that the Allan contract, so-called, was made. That contract gave 54,000,000 acres of land and $30,000,000 to a company to build a railway from Lake Nipissing to Burrard Inlet. Everybody knows the fate of that contract. Everybody knows how it collapsed. Everybody knows the reason why it collapsed, and that we were unable to gain what all parties in the State declared was a very great object to gain, namely, a railroad to the Pacific Ocean on Canadian soil."

Now, Sir, these hon. gentlemen by those speeches declared to the House and to the country that the reason why the Allan contract failed was the opposition of hon. members on this side of the House. I desire to inform those hon. gentlemen, if they do not know it, that these are not the reasons why the Allan contract failed. I desire to tell them that the Allan contract failed because of the unearthing of one of the most flagrant and revolting cases of political immorality that ever disgraced the Legislature of this country. Sir, as I stated a moment ago, I do not desire to enter into the details of that transaction—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. LISTER. If hon. gentlemen desire that I should go on, I will do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. LISTER. We know that, in the year 1873, the Government entered into a contract with Sir Hugh Allan for the construction of that road; we know that, as a consideration for that contract, the Government of this country received from Sir Hugh Allan $358,000; we know, as a fact, because it was proved before the Royal Commission which sat upon the case, that, in consideration of that money, he received the contract; we know that, on that account, the people of this country were so shocked at the developments that were then brought forward, that the hon. gentleman's own followers in this House—and he had a large majority—were so shocked, that they abandoned him, that they deserted him, that they were willing to place their country above their party, and the hon. gentleman, in order to escape an ignominious defeat, resigned the position he then held. These are the circumstances, these are the facts under which the Allan contract was set aside. This telegram will live as long as Canadian history is written and read—"I must have another ten thousand; last time of calling." That telegram is addressed to the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott), and I have no doubt that the other $10,000 was sent. That hon. gentleman's handiwork was to be seen throughout that contract and that arrangement, and the same hon. gentleman who then brought disgrace upon our country is here to-day, the paid solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, receiving, they say, a salary of $12,000 a year, and he is the main manipulator in this transaction.

Mr. SPEAKER Order. I must ask the hon. gentleman not to allude to any hon. member of the House in such language.

Mr. LISTER. I withdraw, Mr. Speaker. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman who was then acting, the hon. gentleman to whom I have alluded as acting for the Canadian Pacific Railway, is still the solicitor for that same railway, and I have no doubt, if the original papers could be seen, it would be discovered that they are prepared by him; and, if, in 1873, that gentleman brought such disgrace upon the country, is it improbable that there is now something behind the scenes that we do not know? How is it that this matter is hurried on with such indecent haste? How is it that, in face of opposition from the people of the Lower Provinces, in face of opposition from the Province of Quebec and from all parts of the country, the Government force this on, and how is it that they will not place upon the Table of the House the information which is necessary to enable hon. members to understand this question? Why are these things? Is there but one answer? I believe the answer is that the Government are not able to resist the importunities of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that they are in the palm of the hand of the managers of that Company. Sir, these are the circumstances under which the Allan contract was lost in 1873, and, when the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was called upon to form an Administration, he at once, in 1874, passed an Act authorizing the then Government to form a company for the purpose of constructing this road. We know that he attempted to form a company, and we know that he failed, and I assert here that it was a good thing in the interests of this country that he did fail, for he then propounded a policy and followed it out which, if it had been followed by his successors in office, would have been in the interests of the country. He said: "We will construct that road as the finances of the country will warrant, and will not tax the people." But, even if the road had been given to a company to construct, what would have been the result? We find that the Act of 1874 carefully protects the settlers in the country, protects the people who might go into that country in their right to get their land, for only one-third of that land was to be given to the company, and the other two-thirds were to be held by the Government as trustees for the company, and to be sold at a price of a dollar an acre. So that, if that policy had been carried out, the people who immigrated to that country then and since would have been protected in their rights to the land. But he proposed another course which was still more in the interests of the country. He proposed to construct the line by the Government as the finances of the country would warrant, and, if that had been pursued, we would have been as far advanced to-day as we are under the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Minister of Railways tells us that this is a great national undertaking. It is a great national undertaking, but it could be carried out as well by the Government as by the Company. He takes great credit to the Company for having constructed the road on the prairies in such a very short time, but every one knows, who knows anything about the construction of railways, that it is nothing at all to construct a railway through the prairie section of the country. The real work is yet to come, along the north of Lake Superior and across the Rocky Mountains. But to take credit for the construction of the 900 miles, as they have done in the space of two years, shows to what straits they are reduced. It amounts to nothing, they are not entitled to take credit for it at all. That, Sir, is the difference between the policy of the late Government and the policy of the present Government. I again state that under no circumstances, judging from the information now before the House, should the Government assist the Canadian Pacific Railway further. I say that the reasons that have so far been given us for assisting that railway, are entirely insufficient. There is nothing binding upon the Company to construct the road; if it is constructed it will be in the interests of the Company and not of the country. I say that it will not assist immigration; the danger which the hon. gentleman pointed out does not exist, namely, that of diverting the traffic; and therefore these reasons having failed, there remains no other reason why the Government should assist this Company by mixing themselves up in its private affairs, or by becoming security for the Company. I say this is quite outside the proper functions of the Government. They have no right to do it, and if they do it they will be acting wrongly; and yet, according to the Resolutions, this is what the Government proposes to do. The hon. gentlemen opposite on every conceivable occasion charge hon. members on this side of the House with being unpatriotic, because they do not agree with the policy propounded by the Government. Sir, I take it that we have heard the last of the loyalty cry. I think, Sir, that the speech of the hon. member for Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Brecken) is a sufficient rebuke to those who harp upon the loyalty cry. That hon. gentleman is one of the strongest supporters of the Government, but so sickening was this cry of want of loyalty, which is repeated over and over again, that that hon. gentleman could not resist quoting a remark of Dr. Johnson "that patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel." That hon. gentleman is one of the strongest supporters the Government has in the House to-day, yet so disgusted was he with the utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite that he felt himself forced to administer to them that rebuke. Why, Sir, the man who is truly loyal is the man who points out to the Government their mistakes; the man who is truly patriotic is the man who points out the mistakes of the Government, and also points out the remedy. But, Sir, to cover up wrong with a cry of patriotism, is to commit a double crime; and I think, Sir, that it will be long before we hear this cry again from hon. gentlemen opposite. I desire to say that hon. members on this side of the House are as loyal as, and a great deal more loyal, than those of the other side, and I trust that as long as I have a seat in this House I will never hear this ostentatious cry of patriotism again. I have only one word more before I conclude. I see the hon. gentleman for King's, New Brunswick (Mr.

Foster) sitting opposite me, and I can hardly conclude without making some reference to the very eloquent speech he made the other night. Sir, I think that hon. gentleman is a most remarkable man. He told us that in the early days when he was a boy at school, and when most boys were up to mischief or anything but study, he was engaged in poring over the maps, and looking forward to the day when he would have a country that he could be proud of. Sir, it is an extraordinary thing to see that hon. gentleman grown up to manhood after he had such ideas in his youth. We are accustomed to read that good little boys always die young, and that it is only the bad boys that grow up. Sir, in conclusion I desire to say that, as a member of this House and representing a county composed of loyal and intelligent Canadians, I must strongly protest in the name of my constituents, as well as on my own behalf, against the passing of these Resolutions.

Mr. ORTON. After these Resolutions have been so exhaustively discussed during this debate it cannot be difficult for hon. members of this House to make up their minds with regard to the important points involved in the question before us. Sir, before touching upon the question generally, I wish briefly to refer to some remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lister). In the early part of his remarks he stated, with a boastful air, that the predictions of the hon. leader of the Opposition, with regard to the evils to result from the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, had been fulfilled. I think, perhaps, in the course of my remarks this evening, I shall be able to show that the beneficial results predicted for that enterprise are likely to be attained. I wish to refer to one remark of the hon. gentleman, to show how contradictory he has been in the speech he has delivered here to-day. That hon. gentleman stated, that neither he, nor, I suppose, his party, believed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would ever come back to this House with such a monstrous request for further assistance—showing that he, at least, had no faith in the boasted prediction of his leader. The hon. gentleman has used language here to-day which is certainly of a very extravagant character, and which, I think, would better become a Communist in France, or a Nihilist in Russia. That such language should be used in this House with regard to the Government, I think is simply monstrous. When he stated that if a law had been passed by any European Government, such as that giving to the Canadian Pacific Railway a monopoly in Manitoba, the members of that Government would be hung—I think such language ought to be denounced by every candid, honest, and careful man in this country. Enough injury has already been done by agitators of the class of those who use such extravagant language, as is used by the Communists and others, and which, of course, I do not wish to attribute to my hon. friend. He then went on to state that the Government of Canada were in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and were forced to carry out their wishes and their desires, and that it was by means of that power that they had forced the present Government to come to this House and ask for this loan. Sir, I think if he had watched the course of events he would have seen why the present Government were forced by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to come to this House with these Resolutions, and in the course of my remarks I hope to be able to show him why the Company have asked for this assistance. The hon. gentleman then, in a very careless manner, referred to the fact of this Company constructing 900 miles of railway over the prairie section, as a mere nothing. Why, Sir, the construction of this immense distance by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is a feat which has never been surpassed by any other company under the sun. If he had travelled over that country as I have done, and as he has not done, he would know that obstacles exist—that there are wide rivers to cross and valleys to fill up; and, when he recollects the character of the country from Regina, I may say, to the Rocky Mountains, especially, he must admit that the Company have had great and serious obstacles to encounter. When he recollects, also, the character of the country from Calgary to the Rocky Mountains, I think, if he had wished to deal candidly with this question, he would have acknowledged that the construction of this 900 miles by the Canadian Pacific Railway was a great and successful feat. Another question we have to consider is, will this loan entail upon this country additional taxation? I have no hesitation myself in stating as my opinion that it will not increase the taxation of the people one iota. We are not asked to vote money, to give a bonus; we are asked simply for a loan, and I think it will be time enough for hon. gentlemen opposite to talk about heavy burdens of taxation being imposed upon the people when we are brought face to face with the question as to whether this loan shall be made a bonus, or whether the Company have failed to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken, should Parliament grant this loan. Now, it has been acknowledged by quite a number of hon. members opposite, indeed it is used as an argument by those hon. gentlemen, that the very fact that this railway has proved itself a paying concern is a reason why the Company should not have come to Parliament and asked for a loan. In my opinion that is a very strong and sound reason why it will be utterly impossible that the Company can ever have any good reason to come to Parliament and ask that this should be a bonus instead of a loan, or ask for any extension of the terms granted. The security for the advance is, I think, ample. It seems to me totally absurd to talk about the want of security. Why, Sir, when we consider that we shall have as security all the money and land which the Government have granted for the construction of the road, also the portions of the railway constructed by the Government itself, besides which we shall have the branch lines which the Company have purchased, and the steam vessels which they have recently placed upon our upper lakes, and also over $22,000,000 invested in improving the property, which of course increases the security instead of diminishing it, no man with ordinary candor can help acknowledging that the security is full and ample. Under such circumstances it is very natural to ask, why should the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with such abundant security have come to Parliament for a loan; why did they not go to the money markets of Europe and obtain the money they required? The reasons have already been enumerated, but I may be permitted again briefly to refer to them. In the first place, it may be stated that the great depression in railway securities in Europe, and especially in American securities, in consequence of the collapse, I may say, of the Northern Pacific Railway, added to which was the fact of a partial failure of crops throughout this continent, combined to form one reason, no doubt, and a strong one, why it was difficult to float the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's bonds. Another reason, and it is one which I think will bear dwelling on for some time, is the discontent which existed, and the outcry which was raised in the North-West. Having some little knowledge of that country and of what occurred there, I may be pardoned if I dwell at some little length on that subject. Sir, it is a fact that some dissatisfaction has existed, and some may still possibly exist. But the reason is not very far to seek. We know very well that the North-West has suffered a partial failure of crops, but only a very partial failure as compared with the rest of the Dominion, and only a very partial failure as compared with the United States. But the fact that a partial failure of crops in that country occurred at the very time when they had so large a surplus of good grain to dispose of, and the fact that for the first time they had been brought face to face with a surplus, and that at a time when provision was not made for exportation of the surplus of the country, intensified the situation. Buyers, either millers from the eastern Provinces, or buyers for foreign export, were not in a position to go into the market of that country, and indeed, they were not thoroughly cognizant of the fact that there was actually a large surplus to dispose of. They had not warehouses ready, and the result was that the people of the North-West had to bear not only the depression caused by a partial failure of crops, but also the fact that prices were exceedingly low in consequence of the lack of accommodation. The farmers were in the hands of monopolists, two or three millers being the only buyers in that country, and they managed to club together so as to ensure that the farmer should receive as small a price as possible for his grain. That is a good and sound reason for all the dissatisfaction existing in that country. There was some dissatisfaction, no doubt, in regard to the extension of branch railways. People settled in the back districts want branch railways, and we hope they may soon have them; but that result will not be obtained by denouncing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and endeavouring to destroy its credit in the money markets of Europe. There is another point in connection with this question of dissatisfaction in Manitoba, to which it is proper to refer. I think a great deal of credit is due to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government for the prompt manner in which they came to the relief of the people of the North-West. The rates for the transportation of grain eastward to Port Arthur were promptly reduced by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Company also offered buyers the use of their warehouses and elevators at Port Arthur free of charge, so as to enable the millers of the eastern Provinces, especially of the Province of Ontario, to send there and buy grain, because it is well known that the short crop in Ontario gave rise to an increased demand on the part of millers for North-West grain. They not only did this, but they gave 30 per cent. of the ordinary rate for undamaged grain, for the transportation of grain which had been injured to any extent by frost. They also promptly endeavoured to obtain the co-operation of United States railways, to assist in getting relief to the farmers of the North-West, thus showing in the most marked way that their interests were thoroughly wrapped up with the interests of that country. But, Sir, while this was the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway, what has been the course pursued by the Grand Trunk, and the railways in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the other side of the line? We find that they used the temporary misfortunes of the farmers of the North West, in order to try to injure the reputation of that country in Great Britain and Europe. Not only do they do that, but they used political agitators in the North-West to increase the agitation, by raising cries of the most unreasonable and absurd character among the people, with regard to both the Canadian Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. These political agitators were headed by a political adventurer, who is well known to hon. gentlemen who sat in this House under the regime of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and who is particularly well known to the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), and the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron). We all recollect what that political agitator and adventurer, who was elected by the Conservatives of Huron to represent them in this House, did, when he came to Parliament. It is also within the recollection of hon. gentlemen here, that after he was unseated for bribery and corruption, he gave way to the hon. member for West Huron; and it is said that a very valuable consideration was in question. At any rate what we do know is, that the hon. member for West Huron owes his place in this House very largely, to the course, and what I call the dishonourable course, pursued by that political adventurer. I shall not say that the mission of the hon. members for West and South Huron to the North-West was to assist in pulling the wires so as to increase the flames of that agitation. I do not believe that such was the case. I believe that it was their business, in connection with their property in that country which caused them to visit our great North-West about that time. But, Sir, I do not think it would be a loss of time to refer to the intrigues of the Grand Trunk, of the railways opposed to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and of the political agitators, in order to enumerate reasons why the Canadian Pacific Railway could not float their bonds in the British or European markets. Sir, what was the result? We all know that almost every stockholder in England has Grand Trunk bonds in his possession, and such was the influence of the Grand Trunk, and of other railways, who assisted them in bringing their influence to bear on the money lenders of Europe, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were unable to float their bonds; and even when the Government of Canada came to their aid, and guaranteed their bonds at 3 per cent., they were still unable to float them. The Government were driven—not by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I would wish my hon. friend from West Lambton to bear in mind—but by this combination of circumstances, to ask the Parliament of Canada to grant a loan to the Company. It is not an uncommon thing to see times when the owners of money become so frightened that they will not invest their money in the very best securities. We have seen it the case in the past, in this country, where there is not a very large accumulation of capital, that the best securities will not be realizable; it has been the case in the United States, where there is a larger accumulation of capital. It has been the case in France, and other European countries, that the best investments could not command money, in consequence of the condition of the money market through some such "scare"—to use a common expression—as that which now seems to possess the money brokers with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway and other securities. While referring to this matter, I may be permitted to refer to what appears to me the somewhat absurd position of our present banking and financial facilities, for the purpose of showing the danger which may occur to the country, through the existence of our banking institutions in their present position, and the total dependence of the Government of Canada upon foreign money owners. I would ask hon. gentlemen, as well as the members of the Government, to consider a few facts on this point. Bismarck and the Emperor of Germany, knew well wherein lay the safety and greatness of their country. It was in delivering their country from the bondage of gold owners and gold loaners. To-day, the Emperor William of Germany has accumulated for his own use and the use of the Empire something like £40,000,000 of gold. We know that that very fact adds to the prestige and strength of the German Empire. It is also well known that the extraordinary prestige of the United States is owing not alone to the vast tracts of land, the vast resources, the great, active, and intelligent population of that country, but also to the fact that during one of the most prodigious internecine wars that has ever afflicted a nation, that country was able to do without foreign gold by issuing a currency of its own. And, Sir, were we in such a position, and not so dependent as we are to-day upon foreign gold owners, the Government of Canada would not occupy its present humiliating position. The trickery and intrigues of a Grand Trunk Company or of other rival companies could not have so impaired and impeded the policy which the Canadian people calmly and deliberately adopted in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway. But, Sir, what do we find? The Government found themselves face to face with a difficulty. They had promised the business men of Canada that by the year 1836 the Canadian Pacific Railway would be constructed from ocean to ocean, which should be a fitting adjunct to the National Policy which had been adopted for the protection of our own people, and which had been followed by the development of our manufacturing and other industries on a larger scale than before. The Government had also promised to immigrants that this road would be completed by that time for their accommodation. This promise had been proclaimed not only in Canada, but in Great Britain and in every other European country from which immigration was to be expected, and it was thought, and properly thought, to be a marvellous exhibition of the energy and vigour and vitality of the people of Canada. I say, then, that when the Government found themselves face to face with this difficulty, they could not preserve the prestige and the honour of the Canadian people had they done otherwise than come to this House and ask the representatives of the people to vote the assistance proposed, to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to carry out their contract—not in the shape of a bonus, but in the shape of a loan, until the money markets of the world possess a little more confidence in our great Canadian Pacific Railway scheme. It is well known to all commercial men in this country, that had it not been for the deposit in the banks of Canada of something like $15,000,000 in connection with the guarantee, the depression in Canada to-day would be much more terrible than it is, and perhaps many people would have been out of employment because the banks would have been unable to give the usual accommodation to business men. And why did that occur? Partly from the fact that the enterprise of the people had been stimulated by the promise that this road would be speedily constructed. Sir, we had some experience of a depression caused by want of action, by want of that intelligent foresight which characterizes the present Government, during the dark days when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. We well recollect the intense suffering of the people of this country from 1874 to 1878. The fact of those terrible times seems to haunt the memory of the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) like a horrible nightmare. He could not help referring to them when discussing this Canadian Pacific Railway question the other evening. We all remember how, out of that capacious cranium of his, he drew out the statement that a certain politician had told him that the best way to tell a story was to give a historical narrative; and in order to exemplify that precept to the House, he endeavoured to make us believe that the depression at that time was caused by the taxation imposed on this country by the reckless and insane expenditure of the Government which preceded that of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). I could not help thinking of the statement he made when he went to borrow money in England. Was he telling a historical narrative when he went to the money lenders of Great Britain and showed them the silver shield, and informed them that all the money which had been expended by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald had been expended upon useful and remunerative public improvements? But, Sir, when he came back to Canada he told the historical narrative he stated in this House and on every platform what he stated the other night, that the debt of this country had been increased by the insane and reckless expenditure of a former Government. I could not help thinking that had he desired not to tell a historical narrative he would have referred to the reckless and insane expenditure on Port Francis Locks, on the Goderich Harbour, on steel rails and other reckless expenditure which has entailed heavy burdens on the people and which to-day would be depressing us in a very marked manner had it not been for the success of the policy adopted by the present Government. I shall just refer to another point in reply to this question, whether it is wise and in the interest of Canada that this road should be built in the slow manner in which it would be constructed were this loan not given. I will take first the interests of the Province of Ontario. Although I do not think it necessary to refer particularly to any one Province in this connection because I believe that what will benefit all the Provinces is in the interest of each, still what would be the result as regards Ontario it is not difficult to ascertain. We all recollect very well that from the pressure brought to bear by the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway had very nearly fallen into the hands of that road and thus the Grand Trunk Railway threatened the people of this country with a huge monopoly. We know well that Ontario has given large bonuses from every important municipality for competing roads; we recollect the eloquence with which the hon. leader of the Opposition in the Local House introduced the railway resolutions there and the unanimity with which people endorsed his action. What was the most cogent reason for these Resolutions? It was that we might get opposition to the Grand Trunk Railway. I was rather astonished that the hon. member for North Wellington who lives in a town where he ought to know the importance of keeping up two lines of railway instead of one—in a town where his own fellow citizens have voted immense sums of money in order to have not only the Grand Trunk Railway but the Canadian Pacific—now the Toronto, Grey and Bruce—take the line of argument he did. To show that this is followed keenly by the people of Ontario, I will just read an extract from a letter which I received previous to the bringing down of the previous Resolutions—previous to the time the Government stated what assistance they were going to give the Canadian Pacific Railway. This gentleman who is largely engaged in business in my county writes:

"I hope some scheme will be devised to push to completion the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1886 as Canada would be under a cruel master if left to the tender mercies of the Grand Trunk Railway. I hope whatever may be done will be a scheme to complete the whole road at once."

We well know what was the result of the absorption by the Grand Trunk Railway of the Great Western. We all know that no sooner was that done than up went the rates all through Ontario. That means that every farmer in Ontario has to pay a higher rate for the transportation of his grain to the markets of the world; and had the Grand Trunk succeeded in absorbing the Canadian Pacific Railway and thus have obtained a monopoly of the whole business of the West, every farmer in the North-West would be obliged to receive five to ten cents per bushel for his grain less than he otherwise would; it meant, in fact, destruction to the prosperity of the North-West. What has the policy of the Grand Trunk Railway been in the past? Have they ever shown their gratitude to the Canadian people for having loaned them $15,000,000 of money? While referring to this I wish to state that I believe the people of Canada themselves desire to uphold the honour and integrity of our country—that it is just as important we should be considered honest abroad and an upright people in Parliament assembled as in our general business transactions—that we should try and perpetuate the name and the fame which made England so great, the honesty and the uprightness of her merchants. These qualities characterize the people of Canada. I do not wish to be too harsh in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway, I know the people of Great Britain did give us their money—the monied men of Europe gave us their money to construct this road and expected to get large returns; but when we recollect the reckless manner in which that money was expended, when we recollect that to-day many of the large monied men of this country owe their fortunes to the reckless manner in which that money was expended, when we recollect that that road cost per mile no less than $130,000, without any difficulties to contend with as on the North Shore of Lake Superior and in the Rocky Mountains—when we recollect these facts we must conclude that it would be unfair to ask the people to suffer for all time to come for the reckless expenditure in connection with the construction of that road, nor do I believe that the men who originally invested the money in the Grand Trunk Railway would be benefited, even should this House refuse to loan the $22,000,000, to the Canadian Pacific Railway. While, however, desiring, as I believe every honest man does, that the Grand Trunk Railway should prosper by doing all the legitimate business it can, I think it is unfair to ask the people of Canada to pay for their unwise expenditure. Further than that, the Grand Trunk Railway have to blame themselves a good deal if the people of Ontario and the people of the other provinces do not view their rule in Canada with the feeling with which they perhaps otherwise would view it. On every occasion they were ready to put up the rates sometimes to an enormous extent. You may talk about the water competition between Toronto and Montreal, but we know that as soon as that is locked up, the Company nearly double their rates. I had some experience myself of this in business. We also know, as is known to all the business men in Ontario, that they not only do that, but they give preference to their own favourites engaged in business. It is true we had last year a large body of the business men of Ontario brought down here, but I repeat what I said then before the Railway Committee, that more than half of these men were brought down because they dared not stay at home. I was told by numbers of men engaged in business, who have suffered gross and great wrongs from the Grand Trunk Railway, and yet they were afraid to stay at home. Some did stay at home, though—a good many. They were urged, and urged in a way that was not very delicate, at any rate, to come here. Then, Sir, ought they not to blame themselves for destroying as much as they have the effects of the National Policy on the farming interests of Ontario. What are the facts to-day? Notwithstanding that 50 cents a barrel was put on flour under the Tariff, and 15 cents on wheat, still, through the privileges they have given to American farmers over Canadian farmers, in moving their produce, the duty of 50 cents per barrel on flour is comparatively nugatory. Why, I find that they give a rate from St. Louis to Montreal of 42 cents per barrel for flour, while from the town of Guelph in my county they charge 45 cents per barrel for flour. Their rate from Chicago is also cheaper than that from the city of Guelph. In this way, as I say, they have ever disregarded the vital interests of the people of my Province, and also of the people of other Provinces, and to-day they find themselves face to face with the fact that the people have come to the conclusion that it would be the most dangerous thing that could ever occur to the people of Canada were the Grand Trunk Railway to become the owners of the Canadian Pacific Railway. And there are other reasons why Ontario desires the construction of this road, and the completion of it as rapidly as possible. Reference has been made by hon. gentlemen opposite to that portion of the road through the Rocky Mountains, and they have stated that that might be delayed. They made very little reference to another difficult portion of that road—that portion between Thunder Bay and Callander, north of Lake Superior. The people of Ontario think it of vital importance to their interests that they should have railway communication with the North-West as rapidly as possible. They have been promised it. They expect the fulfilment of that promise. They have gone into manufacturing enterprises in anticipation of the fulfilment of these promises. And the people of Manitoba also desire to see that portion constructed as rapidly as possible, in order that they may have communication during the winter with the Province of Ontario. They know very well that the grain they produce in Manitoba and the North-West is peculiarly suitable for flouring purposes—makes the best flour in the world,—and they also know well that many millers in Ontario are most anxious to obtain that wheat to manufacture it into flour. Therefore, their interests and Ontario's interests are wrapped up in the rapid completion of that road, and it appears to me astonishing that any member from the Province of Manitoba should for a moment hesitate in regard to his course in this matter. While referring to Ontario's interests in this light, I may just draw the attention of the Government to one fact. It is stated that the connection between Ontario and the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be made by the construction of a road from Gravenhurst to Callander. Now, it has been pointed out to me by others, and it appears to me to be a very good idea—why should not that connection be with Sudbury Junction instead of with Callander? A saving would be made of some fifteen or twenty miles—some say thirty or forty, but I think it would be at least twenty miles. That would be a great saving and a great benefit in the long run both to the manufacturers in Ontario and to the wheat-growers in the North-West, and I think the Government should bear in mind that point. I think my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition should hesitate before he finally, and for ever, I may say, casts in his lot—because he cannot be considered as doing anything else—with those who desire to place us under one huge monopoly. I think it would be the gravest mistake he had ever made in his life. I recollect that, some years ago, I had the honour of a visit from that hon. gentleman in my riding, and that his meetings were advertised throughout the length and breadth of my riding, and the whole county and the neighbouring counties, and in the notice he was called "Big Edward—Canada's greatest statesman." I recollect well the thousands of people who assembled to hear that hon. gentleman at a time when the hon. member for East York was in power, and I recollect how very enthusiastic they were in regard to the future course that hon. gentleman would take, and the reforms he would inaugurate, had he the opportunity, in this country. It does appear to me to be a humiliating conclusion of his career when we find him to-day the advocate—I do not apply that term in the sense of the paid advocate or the legal adviser, but the advocate in Parliament—of the policy pursued by the Grand Trunk Railway, which means the absorption of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the creating of one huge railway monopoly in this country. There could be no excuse for him; there is no possible way in which he could apologize for such a course, except one, and that is that it might possibly be a way—but it would be a very expensive way of doing it—of bringing about what so many people desire, that the railways of Canada should be run by the Government of Canada. I hope that he will consider well, and hesitate, and try, at any rate to wash off a stain which, whether with truth or not, has attached to his party, or to some leaders of his party, the reputation, I may say, that they are ready on every occasion that presents itself to sell the best interests of their country—I do not refer in that manner to any hon. Member of this House, I would not do so, but to others outside, to some of the strong wire pullers, of whom it has been said, I do not say correctly, that they are ready at any moment to sell their country, to sell the most vital interests of their country, for the success of their party, in order to get their party into power. I hope that the hon. gentleman will try, by his course on this question, to disabuse the minds of the public of that impression. Sir, before sitting down I desire to refer to a paragraph in the Globe newspaper. It has been said that the Globe is the paid organ of the Grand Trunk Railway, and that it shapes the policy of the Reform party; I do not believe that, because, if it were true, it would make the Reform party simply the political advocates of the Grand Trunk Railway—which I do not believe. However, in that paper of Friday last, February 15th, is a striking article headed "Is it a crisis?" It refers to an article in the Minerve from which it quotes as follows:—

"Before we even enquire if it is right to grant so large a sum, we wish to know what will be left for ourselves. If the financial position will not permit of both, then, indeed, do we insist that the Pacific has not better rights than we have, and it shall wait with us or step behind us."

Then the editor goes on to remark on the above:

"If there is one point upon which the French Conservatives pride themselves, it is a devotion to their own provincial rights, and it is not improbable that they may take a firm stand against Sir John on this occasion. If they choose to do so they can be the means of saving the Dominion from an appalling calamity."

I suppose the calamity here meant is the remaining in power of the Conservative party.

"Why cannot they unite with the French Liberals for once in assisting Mr. Blake to stem the tide that threatens to overwhelm us all, and after that national danger is averted, let them state their grievances with confidence that no wrong shall be done them."

Now, Mr. Speaker, our French fellow countrymen know the interests of their Province better than I do, and it would be improper for me to speak of them. But, Sir, as an admirer of my French fellow countrymen I cannot help regarding that article as one of the greatest and grossest insults that have ever been offered to the French people of this country. Sir, I have been taught, and properly taught, to look upon our French fellow countrymen as loyal to the best interests of this country. We know that they have proved themselves such on many trying occasions, ever since Canada became a dependency of Great Britain. I have always looked upon them, and still look upon them, in the same light, and shall ever do so, as ready to fight for the best interests of this country, either by taking up arms or otherwise. I have always felt, Sir, that they are an honourable and a chivalrous race, a race that would rather die than sacrifice their honour; therefore I regard such an article as the grossest insult that could be offered to the honour of the French people. Sir, when we find in the newspaper organ which is supposed to be the exponent of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, such an article as I have just read, it is enough to make any honourable and honest man feel the greatest contempt for men who would for a moment condescend to such a policy as that indicated in the words I have just read. Sir, before resuming my seat I wish to refer to one point to which my hon. friend for West Lambton alluded, namely, the exodus to the United States. I was sorry to hear him do what his confères on the other side of the House have so often been doing—trying to run down this country. If he had made himself familiar with the facts he would have known that an investigation has been made at Port Huron with regard to the actual exodus from this country, and that instead of the 80,000, or 100,000, that we have been accustomed to hear the hon. gentlemen opposite speak of, there has not been during the last three years an average exodus from this country of more than 4,000. This has been satisfactorily and conclusively proven after the most careful investigation. There are one or two other points in connection with the rapid construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway which I think are worthy of the attention of the House; one is the fact which has been brought to our attention this afternoon. Upon the notice paper there was an enquiry with regard to the use of the Mounted Police in quelling Indian troubles in British Columbia. Now, Sir, we know that in case of a large influx of white population into that country there is a possibility of the Indians, who are very numerous in British Columbia, giving trouble. Now, if any trouble of that kind occurred is it not wise, and is it not in the interest of the Dominion, in view of these possible difficulties, that this railway should be pushed on as rapidly as possible to completion so as to give us easy communication into that country? Then there is another point worth considering—the bonding system which we now have and by which we can transport our goods from Canada to Manitoba and the North-West, which is a privilege granted to us by the United States under the Washington Treaty. In two years from this we expect that the people of the United States, through their representatives, will come to us and ask for a reconsideration of the terms of the agreement between that country and Canada, including this matter, amongst others. Well, Sir, if the Canadian Pacific Railway is not constructed in two years, we shall again have to ask them as a favour to give us the bonding system to enable us to take our goods through the United States to Manitoba and the North-West; whereas, if this loan is granted, and that road is completed in two years, when the Americans come to us to negotiate another treaty, we shall not be obliged to ask them for a renewal of bonding facilities. Sir, it does seem to me that when we consider that these Resolutions propose to give a loan and not a bonus; when we consider that we are not asked to expend any money that we are not likely to get full return for; when we consider that at a time when Canada was comparatively poor, when her revenue was very small, we loaned the Grand Trunk Railway $15,000,000, and have not yet received a cent of it back; when we recollect that the request for a loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway of twenty-two and a half millions is a mere bagatelle compared with the loan made during our financial weakness to the Grand Trunk Railway, then, Sir, I think we need have no hesitation about acceding to the proposals of the Government. I recollect that only a few years ago the United States Government gave something like $70,000,000 for Alaska, a country of ice and snow, without any agricultural lands, and they considered they had got a very cheap bargain. When we regard the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a means of developing our vast North-West with its millions upon millions of acres of the richest arable soil of the world, where wheat can be grown to greater perfection than in any other country under the sun, it appears paltry on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to offer such opposition to the proposed loan. In conclusion, it is my opinion that the interests of the Dominion as a whole, the interests of every province, and the prestige and honour of Canada unite to call upon every candid member of this House who desires to serve his country to vote for the Resolutions now under consideration.

After Recess.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at what may be called this late stage of the discussion, to enter minutely into the arguments that have been advanced by hon. members on the other side of the House. In fact, Sir, when a question, however important it may be, has been discussed for three or four nights in succession, all that can fairly be said on either side of the question has been said. I agree to some extent with what the Minister of Railways said some nights ago in answering the speech made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) that the debate was practically closed the night on which the hon. gentleman submitted his proposition to the House. The debate was practically ended at the close of the able, I may say the magnificent, speech delivered by the hon. member for West Durham. So far as I have been able to gather, and I have listened with some considerable attention to what has been said on both sides of the House, no hon. gentleman on the other side of the House has undertaken to grapple with the mass of facts and figures submitted to the House by that hon. member. That being the case, I agree with the hon. Minister that the debate was then practically closed, and those of us who have the misfortune to discuss the question at a long subsequent stage always labour under the disadvantage that the ground has been thoroughly gone over, the arguments fully and fairly adduced upon both sides of the House. Sir, I do not propose to discuss at length the arguments advanced by all the hon. gentlemen who have spoken from the Government side of the House. If the position assumed by the Minister of Railways is met and answered, if the prophecies and predictions which that able and eloquent gentlemen made to the House in 1880-81, when he was submitting his original proposition respecting the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway are answered, every speech which has been made in the House by hon. gentlemen who have followed him has been answered; because, Sir, every speech made in the House by gentlemen who have followed him has been answered, because they did nothing more than regularly repeat what the hon. gentleman said, and just as regularly weakened what the hon. gentleman said. Now, Sir, I have only a word or two to say to the hon. gentleman who preceded me. I shall not undertake to answer his arguments, or to controvert the position he laid down, I am not going to discuss the banking system of the country to-night; I am not going to deal with the propriety of establishing banks for farmers; I am not going to say very much about the nature of the soil from Brandon to the summit of the Rocky Mountains discussed by the hon. gentleman; and, therefore, I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman in his so called line of argument. One thing he did say, which I wish to controvert. You, Sir, will recollect that my able predecessor in the representation of South Huron was characterized by the hon. gentleman as a political fraud, a political humbug, a political adventurer, and the hon. member stated that to that gentleman was largely due the measure of discontent which now prevails in the North-West Territory. Sir, I did not know that my friend, Mr. Greenway, had such extraordinary influence in that country that he could mould and shape political opinion to the extent described by the hon. gentleman. I have known Mr. Greenway for many years; he was for many years opposed to me in politics, but I say it is an outrage on common decency to say that he was either a political fraud, or a political adventurer. I say further, in answer to the charge made by the hon. gentleman, that Mr. Greenway was elected as a Conservative, and that he came down to Parliament and supported the Liberal party—I say, in justice to Mr. Greenway, that he was not elected as a Conservative, but as an Independent—elected to give his voice and his vote in favour of the party which in his judgment would best carry on public affairs in the interest of the country. He came to Parliament and saw and heard for himself, and having seen and heard, he saw fit to cast in his lot with the Liberal party. Many great men have changed in their politics. My hon. friend, the always bland and smiling hon. Minister of Finance, changed his politics—many hon. gentlemen on that side of the House have changed their politics. I do not think it is any reflection on a man's honesty or ability that he has changed his politics. There is no greater fool than the man who never learns. Mr. Greenway learned to do what is right, and the only difference between him and the hon. Minister of Finance is that the latter learned to do what is wrong. I cannot pass on to the discussion of the question before the House, without congratulating hon. gentlemen on the other side, on the marvellous harmony which appears to reign supreme on the Ministerial benches—the singular unanimity of sentiment which appears to exist between the different members of the Government, and the different organs of the Government outside of Parliament. One is curious to know, Sir, whether the old spirit of rivalry which used to exist between the Secretary of State and my always esteemed and able friend the Minister of Public Works—whether these political battles, and political duels, which formed the little side warfare of the Government have all been settled—whether they are all harmonized, and in thorough sympathy with each other. Perhaps they are; but it is quite clear that they have not been able to reconcile the expression of opinion of the party organs outside, with the expressions of opinion by the hon. gentlemen themselves. One would gather from what my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) said the other night; that the little difficulties are not all yet settled. One would rather be inclined to believe from the thunders of denunciation which one hears occasionally from the Canadian House of Peers, and re-echoed from the public platform, respecting the actions and conduct of the Secretary of State, that all these little difficulties are not yet reconciled. Sir, the hon. gentleman, however, sits there, he occupies a seat as a member of the Government on the Treasury benches, notwithstanding all these rivalries and jealousies, notwithstanding the denunciations of the public press controlled by himself, he sits there like a fly in amber and one wonders how the mischief he is there. There, however, he sits, as a Minister of the Crown. Now, Sir, I have always admired the genius, the ability, and the power of controlling men, which are possessed by the First Minister. It is one of those traits in his character which is unparalleled in the history of any other man in this wide Dominion. But I think the hon. gentleman has a little difficulty just now. His colleagues may be submissive, they may yield when the proper kind of pressure is brought to bear upon them by the right hon. gentleman, they may lend an unwilling hand to him in carrying out the different schemes he may see fit to devise, but still, I think, the hon. gentleman has a difficult task before him. He has not been sleeping on a bed of roses for the last four weeks, nor has he after the labours of the day sunk quietly into the arms of Morpheus during that period. How could he, with the Secretary of State on one side, and the Minister of Public Works on the other, with La Minerve and Le Monde, in the great Province of Quebec, denouncing the Ministry as dishonest and the Minister of Railways as an utterly incapable Minister. The hon. gentleman has his difficulties, as I have said; he has difficult material to deal with, I sympathize and with him. He has got the fighting member for Cumberland, he has got the always bland and suave gentleman who is called the honest Minister of Finance. He has got the handsome man from London, and he has got the gallant man from the county of Quebec, as well as the not very handsome and not very gallant man from the great county of Compton. Then he has the Minister of Public Works, and the Secretary of State, and I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, if they do not make up quite a museum of curiosities. He has birds there of rare and noble plumage, both alive and stuffed. Then he has the organs of his party denouncing him, and pronouncing the Minister of Railways incapable. I do not agree with the organs in that respect. I say that the Minister of Railways is quite capable—that he is always able to take care of himself, and does take care of himself. I repeat that I do not agree with the organs of the party in saying that the Minister of Railways is incapable, or that he has exhibited his incompetency in the Resolutions which have been submitted to the House. But these are not the only disturbing elements—in fact one looks round and finds nothing but disturbing elements. For instance, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier threw a bomb-shell into the ranks of the happy family the other night. Let me tell my hon. friend that it is a dangerous thing to carry dynamite about him when he comes into Parliament. It is an explosive substance, and it may explode inopporttunely and destroy his friends. The hon. gentleman's speech the other night was a living illustration of this. Now, Mr. Speaker, if you had the good fortune to occupy the place I did the other night while my hon. friend was pointing out—honestly pointing out—the anomalous position in which the Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau) was placed, with the organ that he owns and controls denouncing the Government in the strongest possible language for the proposition submitted by the hon. Minister of Railways to the House—I say if you had sat in my place, and glanced at the countenances of the Secretary of State and the First Minister, you would have agreed with me that they were a study for a physiognomist. Why, a photographer would have made a fortune if he had caught the profiles of these hon. gentlemen at that particular moment; and Barnum, I venture to say, would have given millions for the picture, because “there were millions in it.” My hon. friend from Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Brecken) is another dynamite carrier, and, in his burst of fervid eloquence the other night, he threw a bombshell into the ranks of his friends which they did not like a bit; it did not rebound on this side of the House as intended, but remained on the other side where it properly belongs. Now, let us see what is the result of all this little wrangling, this little struggling, this little quarrelling. While we are here, listening to the differences of opinion between the members of the Government, while they are airing their grievances and washing a portion of their dirty linen before Parliament, what are the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company doing? They, Sir, are quietly looking on from the gallery at the duel that is being fought on the floor of Parliament—happy, satisfied, and contented with their position, because they know perfectly well that they have got matters in such a shape that it is difficult for them to lose. Sir, like Iago in the play, they may well say: “Whether Cassio kills Roderigo, or Roderigo kills Cassio, or each kills the other,” the Railway Company must win. That is just the position those men occupy, and they look on the scene below contented and calm and satisfied. Now, Sir, when engaged in a debate of this kind, one expects to hear arguments that are pertinent to the question. I submit this proposition to you, Mr. Speaker, as an independent member: did you in your long parliamentary experience, ever hear a great question discussed on the floor of Parliament, when the Liberal party joined issue with the Conservative party, when the Liberal party pointed out what they believed to be some job on the part of gentlemen on the other side of the House, and gentlemen on the other side of the House attempted to defend the job, when the Liberal party undertook to expose some alleged or actual fraud perpetrated by the Government and the Government undertook to defend or justify that fraud, when legislation was being forced through Parliament which was dangerous to the best interests of the country and the Liberal party pointed out that danger, and gentlemen on the other side of the House defended it—I say, did you ever hear the Government, on such occasions as these, when they felt that the charges made by the Liberal party were unanswerable, and that their statements could not be controverted—I say did you ever hear the Government answer charges of that kind except by taking the one old ground, by raising the one old cry of disloyalty and the want of patriotism? Now, Sir, I know from your experience of the last twelve or fourteen years, that you must agree with me, that upon almost every occasion, and under all possible circumstances, the one argument put forward by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House was the argument of disloyalty. If anything is bad in their policy, and you point it out, you are unpatriotic; if anything is fraudulent and you expose it, you are unpatriotic; if you do not agree with some particular line of their policy, you are unpatriotic. Now, I want once for all to show the fallacy of this line of argument. I do not lay it down as a rule that one party should be credited with patriotism because that party finds fault with the policy of the other party; but I say that if there is one party in Canada justly entitled to be charged with want of patriotism and with disloyalty, it is not the party that sits on this side of the House. Now, I propose to deal with this matter for a few minutes. I do not say that it has any particular bearing on the question before Parliament, except as illustrating the relative position of the Liberal and Conservative parties—the one exposing, the other defending misconduct and mismanagement. Sir, if our speaking of the necessities of the great North-West, if our pointing out the faults of the Government in initiating and carrying out their policy in that country, if our criticising that policy is a want of patriotism, then I think some of us are open to that charge. Sir, I am going to deal with this question somewhat exhaustively, and I am going to bring the charge of a want of patriotism home to the doors of hon. gentlemen opposite. If they will not admit what I say with the mouth, I intend to make them admit it in their hearts. I do not lay down a proposition that I cannot establish to your entire satisfaction and to the satisfaction of hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), for whom I entertain great respect, whose judgment is usually sound, and who is a man of intellect, was not above using this argument. I was much pleased with the opening speech of the Minister of Railways on these Resolutions, because for the first time in his life, he omitted to charge the Opposition with a want of patriotism. He was moderately civil, he was not aggressive, but behaved himself reasonably well, and his speech, on the whole, was a speech which surprised me, coming from the hon. gentleman. But I knew exactly what kind of a man he was, and I know that he was lying low, and that it would not be long before the dynamite exploded. It came when my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) moved his motion for information. I saw the hon. gentleman nursing his wrath, to keep it warm, and then, Sir, we had the old story, repeated over again, of want of patriotism. We had the same old argument, the hon. gentleman knows so well how to use, when he desires to arouse the enthusiasm of his followers. I hoped, I expected that this discussion would have been carried on without any recrimination of that kind, but the hon. gentleman followed the example of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, and, of course, every other hon. member from the other side down to the hon. member for Centre Wellington, took precisely the same course. Let us see what the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe said on that occasion and what justification he had for making the statement he did. He said:

“I maintain that the opposition which has been directed by hon. gentlemen opposite against this enterprise has directly tended to depreciate the securities of the Company and to prevent capitalists from investing in these securities. That opposition, also, has the tendency to prevent immigration to this country—not that hon. gentlemen opposite intended it should, for I do not believe that, wittingly, they could take so unpatriotic a course—but the course they have taken has had that direct result. How have the members of the Liberal party in this House prevented capitalists from buying stock? They have done so by exaggerating the cost of the construction of the railway; by under-estimating the area of the fertile portion of the country; by magnifying the extent of the mountain portion; by telling us, day after day, that British Columbia is a sea of mountains; by minimizing the volume of emigration; by magnifying the so-called exodus, and by under-estimating the probable receipts from the sale of lands in the North-West. How have they prevented immigration to this country? They have done so by preaching that such high rates are charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway, under the monopoly clause, and that such high rates will be charged by that Company, that it is a matter of indifference to any one going into that country whether he raises a good or a poor crop; they have done so by preaching that the Government land regulations in the North-West are so unjust that it is impossible for immigrants to prosper under them, and that those who go there invariably leave for Dakota and Minnesota; and they have done so by lauding the beauties of Dakota and the delights of Texas.”

I ask the hon. gentleman, if he is in the House to-night, or the hon. Minister of Railways: when and on what occasion did the Liberal party, as a party, exaggerate the cost of the railway? Why, if we ever exaggerated the costs, the fault is the hon. gentleman's. We took our figures from the hon. gentleman's own statement and from the reports of his engineers; and if there is any exaggeration in the matter, as the hon. gentleman from Richmond and Wolfe says there is, the responsibility rests on the shoulders of the hon. Minister and his officials, and not upon ours. When did we under-estimate the area of fertile land in the great North-West?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to tell him when the party to which he belongs exaggerated the cost of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will refer the hon. gentleman to the Budget Speech of the hon. the Minister of Finance of the late Government in 1874, where he will find that that hon. gentleman estimated the cost of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway within ten years, at from $150,000,000 to $160,000,000.

Mr. CAMERON. That may be so, but the hon. gentleman conveniently forgets to add that the whole circumstances of the country have changed since then. In 1874, the hon. gentleman valued the picked lands in the North-West Territory at from $1 to $5 an acre. What does he value them at now? If his valuation then was correct, how much is he giving the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build this road? He is giving them nearly $200,000,000. The hon. gentleman went back to the Budget Speech of 1874. I do not go back that far. I do not care much about that sort of ancient history, except as it bears on the hon. gentleman's policy to-day. To-night I propose to satisfy the hon. gentleman on that point, before I get through with this branch of the case. I challenge the hon. gentleman again to point out the circumstances under which the Liberal party at any time depreciated the value or extent of the fertile belt. The hon. gentleman knows well—if he does not he ought to know—that the Liberal party in Canada were always strong advocates of the acquisition of the North-West. Why? Was it because the lands were not fertile enough for settlement? Because the country was unfit for immigrants? No; we advocated its acquisition because we believed the lands to be boundless and fertile, because we believed we had only to open up that country in order to encourage the tide of emigration from the Mother Country, and the great countries of population in Europe, to flow in and develop our great North-West.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman like me to answer his challenge now?

Mr. CAMERON. If the hon. gentleman will just remain quiet for a while—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will answer the challenge of the hon. gentleman now and give him day and date.

Mr. CAMERON. I see I have touched upon a raw point but I am not going to be driven from my line of argument by interruptions. I am not going to skin the hon. gentleman altogether, but I will give him enough to answer before I get through, and he will have an opportunity of answering me when the time comes. I ask him again, I ask it now, and I want the hon. gentleman to answer me, not by vain declamation, not by general assertions, to name the time and place where and the language in which the Liberal party ever depreciated the extent, the value, or fertility of the soil of the great North-West. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe said we minimized the number of immigrants that had gone into that country. When did we minimize them? The Minister of Railways has said that in thirteen years, 214,000 people had gone into the North-West. I tell hon. gentlemen now that had it not been for their policy, a policy calculated to retard the growth and progress of the country, a policy which has retarded its growth by at least twenty years, the population, instead of being 214,000 in the last thirteen years, would have reached 1,000,000 to-day, and if we have not got the population there to-day that we should have, it is simply because the Government have so mismanaged and misgoverned that country that immigrants will not go there. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe said that we magnified the exodus. Did he read the letter published by a professor in one of the Winnipeg colleges, some time ago, pointing out that he had visited Dakota, and stating the number of Canadians he had found there? I suppose the hon. gentleman has read it. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do—he cannot ignore the fact—that the exodus has not and cannot be magnified. Unfortunately for the interests of our people and the interest of the Great North-West, it has been very large. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe goes on to say:

"Then, Sir, besides the opposition of hon. members in this House, there has been the opposition of the Liberal press, which has been iterating and reiterating the arguments of hon. members in this House, of the points I have mentioned, and, being under less restraint, have gone one better, and have given the world the earliest information of blizzards and droughts and frosts in the North-West; and for fear that the world would not observe these reports, they have always given them a prominent place on the first page, and have drawn attention to them by heavy head-lines. Besides, there has been the publication of bogus experiences of supposititious individuals in the North-West; and these have been cut out and sent to a foreign press, subsidized for the purpose of discrediting the country and discrediting the Canadian Pacific Railway."

The hon. member for Cardwell had a hand in it too, but I do not think he improved the situation very much. He charged the Liberal members and press with precisely the same conduct. If the country has been decried, its advantages minimized, if immigrants have not entered it with the rapidity and in the numbers we would all like to see, I charge hon. gentlemen opposite with being the cause. I charge their policy and their conduct for the last five years as being the direct cause of any misfortunes—if misfortunes there be—that have overtaken the North-West. If the property of this gigantic corporation has been lessened in value, if they have not been able to sell their stock in the markets of the world, I charge hon. gentlemen opposite, by the policy they have pursued, by their utterances in the past and their conduct in the present, with being the cause. I make this charge against hon. gentlemen opposite, and I propose to prove it out of their own mouths. Sir, everybody knows in Canada the distinguished position that the First Minister occupies. Before he took his seat this evening, I was complimenting him in the highest possible strain upon the wonderful power which he possessed over men, and in the moulding of men's minds, and in securing their allegiance to his own train of thought. That hon. gentleman is known not simply in Canada. He is known abroad as a distinguished gentleman. He has been honoured by our gracious sovereign with a distinction conferred upon few men. He is a Privy Councillor and a Knight of the Bath. He is known in Canada—too well. He is known in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. His name there is as familiar as household words, and every word that hon. gentleman utters on the floor of Parliament, or in the public arena, or on the public platform, is wafted across the ocean to the other side of the waters, and there finds a place in the public press of the country. I say, therefore, that the words that hon. gentleman makes use of, if they are in the interests of the country, if they praise up and laud the country, have their full weight and effect there; and, if they deery the country, if they deery the public men in the country, they have their full effect there; and, when you find a public man holding that position, with all the responsibility that rests upon his shoulders, holding the distinguished position he does, giving utterance to the sentiments which I shall read to you, I think any unprejudiced man will come to the conclusion that he has done nothing to build up the reputation of the country. In 1878, speaking as the leader of the Opposition, he said:

"We have no manufactures here. We have no work-people here. Our work-people have gone off to the United States. These Canadian artisans are adding to the strength, to the power, and to the wealth of a foreign nation, instead of adding to our own."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMERON. There is the utterance of the hon. gentleman. He repeats the same now. What cares he whether his statements benefit the country at home or abroad, so long as he can serve a petty, paltry political purpose by them? Nothing; and that is the spirit that actuates hon. gentlemen opposite. He goes on, in the same speech, to laud the United States of America as a fine country to live in, the people all prosperous, the artisans all employed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They had a National Policy.

Mr. CAMERON. Then he compares it with the picture on this side of the line.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Surely he did not say that?

Mr. CAMERON. He did say it. You will find it all in Hansard. My curious friend will find it all there. "On the other hand," he said, "our people are suffering from want of employment. Have not their cries risen up to heaven?"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMERON. Now, there are the patriotic utterances of the patriotic First Minister. When his opponents were sitting on the Treasury benches and he was languishing in the cold shades of opposition, he did not think anything about patriotism then. All he wanted was to have a slap at my hon. friend the then leader of the Government and my hon. friend the member for South Huron.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I wanted to carry the National Policy, and did carry it.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, he wanted to carry the National Policy, and in order to do so he was prepared to sacrifice his country. He was prepared to sacrifice the best interests of the country. What cared he? His purpose was served. He so managed to blindfold and draw the wool over the eyes of the people for the time being, he so managed to manipulate men and political movements, as to effect his purpose. And in order to effect that purpose it was wholly immaterial to him whether he ruined his country or not. Nothing cared he. But that was not all that he said. The hon. gentleman proceeded:

"The hon. gentlemen opposite sneered at the statements that thousands of our people had left this country to seek for employment in the United States. Let anybody look at the Gazette. Let anyone look at the number of insolvencies in Montreal, at the daily account of bankruptcies in Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other places, sufficient to disturb and affect the honest traders who suffer from the insolvency of their neighbours by the sacrifice by assignees of insolvents' assets, in the same manner as so many are ruined by this country being made the slaughter market of the United States."

There again, for the purpose of party, he was prepared to sacrifice the best interests of this country. So, again, he is followed—followed in this case; usually led—by the Minister of Railways. In denunciation and abuse, the Minister of Railways follows nobody—he is always first. Now, the Minister of Railways is a pure patriot. From the first day he entered political life in his native Province of Nova Scotia up to the day when he was decorated with the distinguished honour of a cross upon his breast, the hon. gentleman has been a pure patriot, never did anything but for the interests of the country, sacrificed himself and his relations to the fourth generation in the interests of the country. Let us see what he said in 1878:

"The policy the Government has pursued has had the effect of depopulating the country; it has sent away the most skilled and intelligent labourers, the finest sons of Canada to a foreign country, to obtain employment that their own country denies them."

The hon. the First Minister was equally patriotic on another occasion. You have heard, Mr. Speaker, of the Amphitheatre. That was a great political arena, where the lions of party were let loose at each other. The lion of the camp of the Tories occasionally visited the place, and made more than one speech there, and he was not particularly choice or select in his language. Let me read an extract from a speech of the First Minister delivered in that Amphitheatre in Toronto:

"Why, is not our population leaving the country? (Cries of 'No' and 'Yes,' and 'A Voice—' They are coming back every day.') It is said that this is a cheap country to live in. Property is becoming so valueless that you can purchase property for comparatively nothing, and the shrinkage is so great that a man who thinks himself wealthy one year finds that he is unexpectedly poorer the next. I ask whether wages have not fallen; and the value of property fallen? Whether there has not been a decrease in the population—whether there has not been an increase in the number of insolvencies? The young men full of skill, full of energy and enterprise, have been compelled to leave the country; to go where such skill, energy and enterprise is better rewarded and more protected than here."

The hon. gentleman was followed, at a respectful distance, by the Mail newspaper, the organ of the Government. Let me read an extract from its columns to show what these patriotic gentlemen, encouraged by their patriotic organ, said of the condition of the country, at a time when it was just as prosperous as it is to-day:

"Our factories are going one by one, our population leaving us, our finances yearly growing worse, our lumber resources not far from an end. We shall soon be but a country of grass-grown towns, and impoverished farmers, undersold in foreign markets, and even at our own doors, in all we can raise, and forbidden to enjoy our manufacturing and mining resources, which would change our poverty to riches."

Now, Sir, I propose to read another extract from a speech of a distinguished gentleman on the Treasury benches. I will not submit the name of this distinguished person at present. I submit it as a conundrum to you, Mr. Speaker. As you are considered an adept at solving such mysteries, kindly solve this one:

"Where wealth, prosperity and happiness were in Canada, he will find gaunt poverty and distress pervading the country from end to end. I do not envy the hon. gentleman's feelings when he casts his eyes over the horizon of this country, and finds here and there spectres gaunt with famine and distress, poverty where wealth existed, famine where plenty was to be found."

Now, who do you think gave utterance to these patriotic words? Why, Sir, look at the bland, pleasant, smiling countenance before me—would you imagine he was the man who uttered these words. Yes, Sir, the Minister of Finance is the very man who uttered them.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is all true.

Mr. CAMERON. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not care to hear more of his language and policy in the days gone by. Let us come to a more recent period. What did the hon. gentleman state upon the floor of Parliament the other day? I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there has not been a sentence uttered on the floor of Parliament since I have had the honour of a seat in Parliament eighteen years ago that was more calculated to destroy the credit of the country than the sentence the hon. gentleman gave utterance to within the last week in this House. I say, Sir, that there never was a statement made by a Finance Minister in Parliament on his responsibility to the Crown and to the people of this country as Finance Minister, more injurious to the best interests of the country, and more calculated to destroy the credit of the country, than the statement made by that hon. gentleman. What did he say, Sir? He said: "We all know, by looking at the returns, that if to-day two-thirds of the banks of the Dominion were suddenly called upon to redeem their circulation, where these banks would be, and where the business of the country would be." I say, Mr. Speaker, that it was a scandal for the hon. gentleman, in the face of the fact that was staring him in the face, in the face of the knowledge that he must have had of the solvency of these banks—it was a scandalous statement for the hon. gentleman to make, and especially to make just upon the eve of his having to go to the money markets of the world for the purpose of borrowing money, to carry on the business of the country. Sir, we all know the result that is likely to follow from statements of that kind being made. I am sure the hon. gentleman now regrets it and wishes he had never given utterance to the expression. So much for the Minister of Public Works, the First Minister and the Minister of Finance. Sir, one of the ways in which we convey information to the world of our western possessions is through pamphlets and newspapers. Now, Sir, much good may be done by scattering pamphlets over the country if they are properly written, and the proper material inserted. I recollect that in the Session of 1880, twelve pamphlets were sent to me from the Department of Agriculture. I opened one of these pamphlets on the new territories and found the following statement:

"In the State of Dakota, the Government gives twenty years to pay for the land and charges $1.20 per acre and 6 per cent. interest till paid; and if the settler plants ten acres of trees in his quarter section, the State exempts him from taxation for ten years. This is a more liberal policy than that laid down by the Government of Canada, who only give eighty acres of a homestead and a right to preempt a like additional quantity, but none of it within certain distance of the railway, called the six mile belt."

I found another statement inserted in one of these pamphlets and recollect these pamphlets were scattered by the thousand broadcast over the country. I am aware they were subsequently recalled, but I am just as well aware that before they were recalled the public had access to them, and the objectionable statement I have referred to got into the public press. Sir, another statement was as follows:—

"Fertile lands, cheap and healthy homesteads, in the famous Red River Valley, State of Minnesota. The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company offers for sale, to actual settlers, about 2,000,000 acres of the best wheat lands, chiefly in the Red River Valley, and contiguous to their lines of railway, running from St Paul to the Manitoba boundary line, at prices ranging from $3 to $5 per acre, and easy terms."

Here is another extract:

"The settlers in the Red River region are of the most substantial character, well-to-do farmers from the older States, from Iowa, Wisconsin and Canada, and especially from the best parts of Ontario. The dominant nationalities settling on the Minnesota farms are Americans, Scandinavians and Canadians, in about equal proportions."

Now, Sir, where do you think these extracts came from? Sir, these extracts were culled from a pamphlet bearing the imprimatur—the name of the hon. Minister of Agriculture on the title page. They were, some of them, scattered through the length and breadth of the country, and extracts from them appeared in the papers. Yet hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, in face of the evidence I have given them of their utter want of patriotism, when they are sitting in the cold shades of opposition, have the hardihood, the impertinence to charge gentlemen upon this side of the House with being unpatriotic, because they see fit to denounce the conduct of gentlemen opposite when their conduct deserves condemnation. Now, Sir, there is something more upon this subject. I found in the Mail, a newspaper organ of the Government, the other day, a notice of valuable farming lands for sale in the State of Michigan. Now, the superlatively patriotic gentlemen who sit on the other side of the House and control this newspaper, you would think would not do such a thing; they would not be guilty of it, but here it is:

"MICHIGAN.—Farmers find the best markets in the world right at their own doors. Blizzards and tornadoes do not devastate their crops and ruin their homes. I have 300,000 acres for sale. Easy payments; long time; low rate of interest. O. M. Barnes, Lansing, Michigan."

Now, the hon. gentlemen know where the public got the information about the blizzards, the frosts, and the cold that occasionally prevails in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Sir, I could give you extracts innumerable from Conservative speeches and in newspapers supporting that party. Does the hon. gentleman not know that the Winnipeg Times, the creature of the Government, sustained by the bounty of the Government, denounced the policy of the Government in the North-West Territories, until it was brought to book for it? Does he not know that the Regina Leader, another organ of the Government in the Province of Assiniboia, pointed out over and over again that the policy the Government was pursuing in the North-West Territories was calculated to ruin the country, to drive immigrants from that country over to the freer soil further south, on the American side of the border? Does he not know that these journals, from day to day, from week to week, for months, were teeming with articles of this kind, begging, praying, and beseeching the Government to desist from the mad course they had entered upon and to pursue a policy that was more in the interests of the North-West Territories? The hon. gentleman knows it, but it was not until these organs were brought to book by hon. gentlemen opposite, that the Government saw fit to instruct them to retrace the course they were pursuing. We know that the Premier of Manitoba, a man who is kept there by the breath of the nostrils of the First Minister, within the last few weeks, used expressions with reference to the policy of the Government that were calculated to alarm any persons who really had at heart the best interests of the country. The hon. Premier said: "At present here we are on the verge of a crisis from which we must emerge in a better or worse condition." The verge of a crisis! What, Sir, is the crisis? I tell the hon. gentlemen opposite, with some little knowledge of the North-West, that they are not aware of the gravity of the situation. I would that those who are in charge of the Departments connected with the North-West should take the trouble and the labour of visiting that section of the country; because I make bold to say in my place in Parliament to-night, that no Minister, I do not care upon what side of the House he sits, can govern that country wisely and well, without visiting it, without visiting every region of it, and understanding its wants and requirements. It will not do for a Minister to go up to Winnipeg and have one of the buffalo bulls killed in his honour, and be feasted upon the flesh of the animal. It won't do for him to go there and be wined, and dined, and feasted, and then come back and think he knows everything about the country. He must go through the various sections of the country, and go there with a view of ascertaining what are the real sentiments of the mass of the people. Why, Sir, I tell the hon. gentlemen they are on the brink of a volcano in respect to the North-West, and it will require the wisdom of our best men to tide over the difficulty. What does the Premier say:

"At present we are on the verge of a crisis from which we must emerge in a better or worse condition. Not, however, until the masses were made aware of the situation, would they stand up and maintain their rights. The time had arrived when Manitoba must be placed on a level with the other Provinces of the Dominion."

Now, Sir, I think I have shown pretty conclusively what the loyalty of those hon. gentlemen amounts to. I hope

I have heard the last of it, and I hope hon. gentlemen will cease making these reproaches, and discuss questions upon their merits. Now, Sir, I have a word or two to say to my hon. friend from King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster). That hon. gentleman is a man of ability. Nobody denies that proposition. I should be sorry to say, otherwise than that I enjoyed moderately the speech made by the hon. gentleman, and especially that part of it which was delivered during last summer in the Province of New Brunswick, and entitled "My Ain Country." It was good, it was polished, it was ornate, the sentences were well put together and the periods were well rounded.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman can speak when I have finished.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman wishes to correct the hon. member.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to state most emphatically; first, that the first part of my address in this House was not a part of any address I ever delivered. I wish to state also that I never delivered a lecture by the title of "My Native Country" or "My Native Land," so that the hon. gentleman is not stating facts.

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman is evidently not a Scotchman, and he did not catch my statement. I did not mean to say that the address was any discredit to the hon. gentleman. I said it was good. A good lecture will bear repetition more than once. There are parts of his lecture which I would go down to the Opera House to hear delivered by the hon. gentleman. Part of the lecture was not new; but when the hon. gentleman touched upon new and untrodden ground, it is no disgrace to him to say that better speeches preceded that delivered by himself. There was the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways, and there was the speech of my able and distinguished friend, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). Let me give the hon. member for Queen's a word of advice. A man never adds anything to the strength of his argument by introducing stale Latin quotations which everybody knows. I like plain English, as plain as I can speak it; it is always the best. The hon. gentleman undertook to air his knowledge both of modern and ancient history. He told us a great deal about heathen mythology, and about Cassandra, the famous prophetess of Athens.

Several hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. CAMERON. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that I have given hon. gentlemen opposite the opportunity for a little cheering. I venture this prediction, that there are not four men on that side of the House who could now tell you whether Cassandra was an Athenian or a Trojan prophetess. I am pleased I made that slip of the tongue, it so amused the hon. gentlemen, and they have not had much in this discussion to be amused at. But let us go back to the old Trojans. They were a fine old race. The hon. gentleman undertook to air his knowledge respecting Cassandra. You know, Mr. Speaker, the story of Cassandra. It is an interesting one. It has a conclusion, and it has a moral. The hon. gentleman did not give us the conclusion; he did not give us the moral. It is interesting to follow the history of Cassandra. Where is the Minister of Finance? He is thoroughly conversant with the history of the old prophetess. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that Cassandra was tempted. She resisted the temptation. The hon. member for King's was tempted by the Minister of Finance. But he did not resist the temptation; the Minister of Finance caught him and secured him. His virtue was not equal to Cassandra's. You know, Mr. Speaker, that Apollo promised to confer the gift of prophecy on Cassandra if she would yield to his embraces. She did not do so. The hon. gentleman was promised the representation of King's and the reversion of another position. Apollo was deceived; so may the hon. gentleman be. Apollo did not get all he bargained for; the other Apollo may also be deceived. We know that Cassandra was found when young in the temple of Apollo. The House will recollect that she was found there with serpents twisted round her body and licking her ears, and thus the gift of prophecy was conferred on her. I always find the hon. gentleman in the embrace of the hon. Finance Minister, and licking his ears. But the Divine gift of prophecy has not been given the hon. gentleman. Sir, there is also a moral to the story of Cassandra. The prophetess prophesied. Her prophecies were unheeded, her warnings were dinned into deaf and dumb ears; but every prophecy she made came true. She prophesied the downfall of Troy. Her predictions were unheeded—her warnings disregarded by the Trojans. But Troy fell all the same. She prophesied the death of Agamemnon. He paid no attention to her predictions, but the prophecy came true. There is just the same difference between the utterances of the prophecies and the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the criticisms of the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright). Every prediction and every prophecy he made has been absolutely and literally fulfilled to the letter. What did he tell us? He declared that the financial policy of the Government would ultimately prove a failure. To-day the Minister of Finance is forced to admit that there is a falling off in importations and a falling off in revenue, and that if the banks of the country were called upon to redeem their circulation a serious state of affairs would occur. He pointed out that the enormous grants, monopolies and immunities bestowed on the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under their charter would cause a rebellion in the North-West. To-day we have the Premier of Manitoba telling us that the Province is in a critical position. Then the hon. member pointed out that there was no guarantee for the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway taken by the Minister of Railways. To-night we have the hon. Minister practically admitting that he has got no guarantee for the ultimate completion and working of that road. He pointed out that the fact of entering into the contract would not relieve the Government from further demands being made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. To-day we have clear evidence that we are not relieved to the slightest extent from such claims being imposed on the country. Let us now see what the Minister of Finance predicted? He told us in 1879 that it was his mission on earth to regulate the trade and commerce of the country; that his mission was to equalize the balance between exports and imports, so that there should be a Canada for the Canadians. His promise was to so regulate the balance of trade that our exports might be larger than our imports. What is the condition now? The balance against us is $34,168,119. In 1878-79 the imports were $7,491,251; last year they were $132,354,022, or a balance on the wrong side of the ledger of $60,762,767. Hon. gentlemen told us that they would keep Canada for the Canadians, and they have certainly done it in a most marvellous way. The predictions they made when they came into power have been scattered to the winds. Let me tell my hon. friend who was so fond of telling us on this side that all the false prophets were here, that we were nothing but "might-be's" and "may-be's," and that our predictions had never been realized, that the false prophets are to-day sitting in his immediate neighbourhood, not far from his right or his left hand. I tell the hon. gentleman to "Beware of false prophets, which come in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." I tell my hon. friend that the apostle had in view gentlemen on the Treasury benches when he said, "Many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many." I tell my hon. friend to beware of those false prophets. Sir, I can bring some comfort to my friends on this side of the House—none to my hon. friend—in the prophetic enunciation of that stern, sturdy, rugged, old prophet Jeremiah, who tells us that the false prophets shall become wind, and until that happy period arrives I fear the country will not become prosperous. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman appears never to have heard of Jeremiah, and I have the satisfaction of giving him something now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are hearing his Lamentations now,

Mr. CAMERON. Now, Sir, Let us see what the Minister of Railways says with reference to the security we are to get for this advance of $22,500,000 in addition to the guarantee. I say, that Parliament and the people should have some reasonable guarantee from the hon. gentleman when Parliament is asked to carry through these propositions, that his statements are true, that he knows them to be the truth, that what he states as facts are facts, and that his predictions will be realized. The only way in which we can tell whether or not we may rely upon the hon. gentleman's assurances is to go back to his record. Let us see what the hon. gentleman said in 1880-81, when he was rushing through Parliament what he is now pleased to call his magnificent scheme. He says now :

"When the $2,500,000 is exhausted, together with the $12,000,000 of cash subsidy remaining in the hands of the Government, the Government shall have the certainty of the work being completed from end to end."

What does the hon. gentleman mean? Does he mean that when the present advance of $30,000,000 is exhausted, when the balance of cash subsidy is exhausted, when the proceeds of the lands are exhausted, we shall have security for the completion of the road. The hon. gentleman knows that they cannot get this subvention and grant until the road is completed; and when the road is completed, then, and not till then, will the last payment be made. When the road is completed is there any security that the road shall be kept in proper repair, that it will be properly equipped or fairly well run. No, Sir. The hon. gentleman has not the scratch of a pen from this Company to justify the statement. He has not a dollar of money, or a particle of security, that the road will be kept in proper repair, or that it will be properly equipped or properly run. He says further :

"But while they do not ask the House to give them a single additional dollar, they ask us to give the credit of this country—which, thanks to the management of my colleague, the hon. the Minister of Finance, never stood in a higher position—to obtain the means of accomplishing this great national work by the end of 1835; and that without imposing the slightest shadow of a shade of additional burthen upon the Government or upon the country for the repayment of every dollar by the time the contract was to be completed, the 1st May, 1891. I say that if this is the position in which they are—and I think, I may venture to say that hon. gentlemen opposite will not controvert the soundness of that position, will not question the fact that the security offered to the Government for this temporary advance in order to quickly complete this great national work, is abundant—we should not hesitate a single moment in giving that measure our support."

What does the hon. gentleman mean? He says that under the management of the Finance Minister that not the shadow of a shade of an additional burden will be placed on the people of Canada by this loan. Does the hon. gentleman want us to believe that he is honest and sincere in stating that we can advance this $22,500,000 by way of a loan, and $7,500,000 by way of guarantee, without adding a dollar to the burdens of the country? The hon. gentleman knows that it cannot be done. He knows that he cannot put his hand into the public coffers and take out $22,500,000, and hand it to this gigantic railway Company without thereby, and to that extent, increasing the burdens of the people. What then does the hon. gentleman mean? Is the hon. gentleman a magician, or his Finances Minister a magician, who can, by waving his wand, make out of nothing the $30,000,000 which we are to hand over to this corporation? I say that the statement made by the hon. gentleman must have been made thoughtlessly, carelessly, and recklessly, and without a due regard to the truth or consideration of the effect which it would have on the people of this country. The hon. gentleman said, in 1881, when asking us to support him in carrying his former propositions through Parliament, that we would have an undoubted guarantee for the completion of this work in the standing and financial ability of the members of the Syndicate. I will quote his words; I like to quote them, because they are always eloquent, and they always bear the impress of sincerity, but, unfortunately, they have nothing else but the impress of sincerity to commend them :

"Hon. gentlemen do not like the Company, but we would suppose that their ideas had undergone a revolution upon the question. One gentleman who had undertaken this work stands before the people of this country to-day in the strongest position that it is possible for gentlemen to occupy in relation to a great enterprise such as this. The Canadians engaged in this enterprise are men who are second to none in respect of commercial standing and capacity, and by their success in carrying out their great railway enterprises, they have afforded us the best possible guarantee for the manner in which they will fulfil their engagements with the Government and Parliament of Canada."

The hon. gentleman's followers were carried away by his earnest and eloquent words, and if I had not known the hon. gentleman better than some of his followers knew him, I might have been carried away by his enthusiastic and eloquent statements. If my faith had been bound up in him, as hon. gentlemen have their faith bound up in him, I might have been carried away; but fortunately for me, and for my political integrity, I knew the hon. gentleman better than his followers did. I was not carried away. The hon. gentleman went on. He emphasized; he always does. The hon. gentleman is nothing if not emphatic; he is always emphatic, always strong and always powerful. He found it necessary to be so then, and he finds it necessary to be so to-day. He found it necessary to be strong in his language in order to induce his followers to carry the original contract through Parliament. He finds it equally important to take the same line of action to-day. He finds it a good deal more so. Then the hon. gentleman had an undivided and a willing support; to-day, the hon. gentleman knows that he has not an undivided, and that he has an unwilling support. Why, Sir, his own friend the hon. member for Kings, N. B. (Mr. Foster), intimated that he regretted that this proposition came before Parliament, but that being before Parliament, he was bound to deal with it in the way he thought most in the interest of his country. Sir, the hon. gentleman finds it necessary to take high ground, to use strong language to-day, when he finds the public press of his party—a press that never found fault with him or his Government before—pointing out the utter incapacity and the utter inability that has swayed the counsels of the Government of this country in dealing with this whole question. Sir, the hon. gentleman went a step further. He said :

"I say that this Company embraces capitalists both of our own and other countries, who are men of the highest character—men whose names are the best guarantee that could be offered to the people of Canada that any enterprise they may undertake will be successful."

The hon. gentleman went still further :

"We have reason to know that all that a command of capital can do, they have the advantage of, and we have reason to know that all that skill and energy and a knowledge of precisely such work can do, has been secured in order to make this a successful contract, and I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite what more is desirable or necessary."

Now, Sir, that is the kind of argument iterated and reiterated over and over again, by which the hon. gentleman induced his followers in the House to swallow the policy they were then called on to swallow. The same argument was pressed by the First Minister. He told us why they gave this contract to the old Canadian Pacific Railway Company. He told us that they were men of enterprise, men of commercial standing, men of capacity, men of marvellous success in other great undertakings, men of the highest possible character, men whose names were the best guarantee we could have that they would carry out their contract—men of skill, of energy, of knowledge, and of great wealth, and that with that class of men the country had nothing to fear. Sir, where are those men now? Where is the old Syndicate? Where are the members of the old Syndicate? Financially dead, and gone. The hon. gentleman tells us they are dead, and that the old Syndicate is merged in the new Company—composed of whom we know not, with means to what extent we know not, to what extent controlled by the Government we know not. The members of the old Syndicate have slipped from the grasp of the hon. gentleman, and he has not got a scrape of the pen from them to-day by which we can compel them to implement the contract they made. Sir, the best men are out of the concern. The man the hon. gentleman most relied on and most boasted of as the man of practical skill and experience, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe tells us, is now out of it altogether. To this Company Parliament is now asked to grant $30,000,000 more by way of a loan, without a tittle of information to explain the financial position of these men. We were assured when the contract was first made, we are assured now, that these were men of enterprise, of ability and energy, and would carry out the contract. We were assured then, and we are assured now, that if we gave them what we were then asked to give them, we would never be asked for another dollar. The hon. Minister of Railways has been proved to have spoken falsely when he said that, and I now undertake to say that in a few years the hon. gentleman's present predictions will prove equally false. The hon. gentleman at that time also stated:

"We shall soon have the proud satisfaction of seeing Canada assume an advanced and triumphant position, but she will be delivered from the expenditure of a single dollar in connection with the construction or operation of this railway."

And then we had a speech from the hon. Minister of Public Works, for whom I entertain great respect. I do not think he would make a statement which he believed to be incorrect, or that he would make a statement to deliberately mislead the House. The hon. Minister of Public Works said:

"Thus, according to our plan, we shall have the whole Pacific Railway built for $78,000,000. I will not weary the House with long columns of figures, but will show that, under the present contract, the railway, completed and in working order, and with the condition that it will be worked for all time, will cost but $78,000,000. Under the contract of 1873 it would have cost $81,000,000."

Now, that does not agree with the statement the Minister of Railways made a little while ago that the contract of 1874 would have cost $73,000,000. The hon. gentleman also gave us his solemn assurance that if Parliament sanctioned the old contract the Government would be relieved from all responsibility on account of this contract, that we would not have to advance another dollar, that $78,000,000 would complete the work, and that with that Canada would be relieved from all responsibility. When the hon. gentleman made that statement his followers cheered. They cheered the other night when he said that the money and lands which were given to the Company in 1830-81 would not be sufficient to enable them to complete their contract, but that they wanted $30,000,000 more. The hon. gentleman is in the happy position of being able to get his followers to cheer, no matter what proposition he makes. We warned hon. gentlemen opposite of the result sure to follow; they did not heed our warning; but subsequent events have proved that we were right and they were wrong. The hon. gentleman said that the road would cost $78,000,000 and no more. Subsequent events show that he was a false prophet, an unsafe guide. Let us see what the Company got. We gave them completed roads to the value of $28,000,000; we gave them a cash bonus of $25,000,000; we gave them 25,000,000 acres of land, which the Minister of Railways estimates at $2.36 an acre—although I am not sure that I should attach much importance to that hon. gentleman's estimate of the land, for at one time he put it at $2 an acre, another time at $5, and another time at $1—but, estimated at $2.36 an acre, the land would be equivalent to $57,750,000; we gave them in surveys nearly $5,000,000; and they are now to get this subvention of $30,000,000 more. So that this road, when completed, will have cost us $135,750,000. Of course, if the Company pay back the $30,000,000, it will only cost $105,750,000. But the hon. gentleman, when he made his estimate, forgot to mention several important items. He forgot to mention all the monopolies and privileges we gave the Company—the exemption from taxation for all time to come, the exemption of their lands, or part of them, from taxation for twenty years, and the monopoly of the construction of railways south of the Canadian Pacific Railway. These monopolies and privileges and exemptions possess a value to this Company which cannot be estimated in dollars and cents; and when we talk of giving them $30,000,000 more, do we remember that in giving them the monopoly they possess, we are giving fully as much in addition? If the hon. gentleman wanted to deal honestly and fairly with the people of this country, when this railway company came to him asking for an additional $30,000,000, he would have firmly put his foot down and said, "Yes, I will give you a loan of money." But if you get the additional loan of money, you must give a quid pro quo. You must release your monopoly and deal generously with the people of the North-West country upon whose industry and trade you expect to live." The hon. gentleman stated further that these were men of wealth and there would be no danger of their coming back to us for additional assistance; or to quote his own words:

"He would relieve Canada of all additional responsibility in the further construction of the railway."

"And I ask when we were lifting from our shoulders to the shoulders of a private company all responsibility, I ask this House in candour to tell me whether they do not think that, as far as we could, we ought to put these gentlemen in as favourable a position for the construction of the road as we occupied ourselves."

He gave the most positive assurance that we were to have no further responsibility, that the burden, whatever it might be, was to be removed from the shoulders of the people of this country. He gave this House the most positive assurance that the statement was correct, and he was followed in the same line of argument by the First Minister and the Minister of Public Works, but I shall not trouble the House with quoting their statements. There was to be no further connection between the railway company and the members of the Government, but I say to you to-night that I believe, from the evidence disclosed in Parliament, from the returns brought down to Parliament, that the connection between the Government and the railway is closer to-day than it was three years ago. I venture to make this prediction, although I am not a prophet, that, as the years roll on, and time, which unfolds many mysteries, will unfold this one, before many years roll over the heads of the people of this country, we will have such disclosures in connection with the construction and management of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the people will be startled and astounded. Hon. gentlemen opposite express their disapproval of what I say in derisive cheers. I can understand hon. gentlemen opposite. They, too, did the same thing in 1880-81, and they will do the same thing now, when we are asked to give $30,000,000 more to the Company now knocking at the doors of Parliament, and to this Company asking this additional subvention. Hon. gentlemen opposite, who back up unhesitatingly the Ministry of the day, will cheer to the echo whatever statement or proposition the hon. Minister of Railways may see fit to submit to Parliament. The Syndicate, this gigantic Company which we were assured had got a magnificent subvention, and would require no further grant, are now here asking for additional assistance. Although we gave them grants, taking the value of the lands at the valuation put on them by the hon. Minister of Railways, amounting to $105,000,000, they are asking to-day for $30,000,000 more. What guarantee have we that the statements and assurances of the hon. Minister to-day will be more fully verified than those he formerly made. Where is the security for the construction of the road? Is it ample security? It is no security at all. What is the financial standing of the Company? No one can tell. We were told there would be no additional subvention. We see now that there is. We were told that we would be relieved from all responsibility in the construction of the road. To-night we are asked to grant additional sums for its construction. The hon. gentleman now plays a different tune from the one he played in 1880 and 1881, and he is backed up now, as he was then, by hon. gentlemen opposite. I know of no position in which a public man could be placed, so utterly untenable and inconsistent, as that of the hon. Minister of Railways. I challenge him, I challenge this House, I challenge you, Mr. Speaker, to find me a single parallel to the conduct of the hon. gentleman, and the inconsistency of the hon. gentleman, in the whole course of human life. There is no parallel to it. The hon. gentleman's former statements are in utter contradiction to his statements now. The hon. gentleman's predictions have not been verified by the facts as disclosed to us now, and I challenge any man to give a single instance of a case which displays such utter inconsistencies as are to be found between the hon. gentleman's statements in 1881 and 1884. The only parallel I can at all remember is the case of the woman in the parish workhouse of Kent, who was brought to bed of a white baby and a black one at the same birth. The hon. gentleman was delivered of a white baby in 1881, and he was brought to bed of a black one on the 5th February, 1884. Sir, the statements are wholly inconsistent and unreliable. I am sure that if there is one man in Parliament who will vote against these Resolutions it is the hon. member for Lincoln. Nobody can make me believe that he will vote otherwise. When we were pointing out, in the Session of 1881, that the Government took no security for the completion of the road, that hon. gentleman got up in his wisdom and said: "Oh, the Court of Chancery will compel that Company to a specific performance of the contract." The hon. member for West Durham doubted that proposition, but the hon. gentleman said: "There is no doubt at all about it. I lay down the proposition that the security is ample; if not the Court of Chancery will compel these magnates to a specific performance of their contract," and he was backed up in his law by the hon. the First Minister. Well the company have failed in their contract and where is the Court of Chancery now? Do we hear anything about it? Is the hon. member for Lincoln to fyle a bill in Chancery to compel them to carry out their contract, and is the First Minister to be leading counsel in the case. No; the Court of Chancery is powerless, but there is another court they appeal to, and this Parliament is the court that is asked to enforce the specific performance of this contract by the Company, by giving them an additional grant of $22,500,000. The hon. Minister of Railways says he is only going to loan the money, but I say, as the hon. member for Lambton said, that no Government is justified in dealing as bankers with contractors. When a Government descends to that position, it is abrogating its functions as a Government. What supervision and control can this Government bring to bear on the Canadian Pacific Railway that will be at all effective in enforcing the completion of the contract. None. This Company is the creature of the Government, living, day by day, on the bounty bestowed upon it by the Government? Let us see what the hon. Minister said on that subject, and what he did with respect to other contractors financially embarrassed. He was not always of the opinion that it was the duty of a Government to come to the assistance of the contractors. When Section 15, a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was under contract to Mr. Whitehead, he became financially embarrassed, he applied to the Government for aid. The hon. gentleman stated in his sworn testimony before the Railway Commission:

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

"That it was of the first possible consequence to the country that Section B should be constructed with the greatest possible rapidity."

He said further:

"Mr. Whitehead got into financial difficulties and made applications to the Government for securities. The security he offered was ample for the loan he required."

What was the hon. gentleman's reply to Whitehead's application? Did he yield a willing assent to the application made to him by Mr. Whitehead, although in the interest of the country it was important the road should be constructed rapidly, and although the security offered was ample to cover the loan required? Not at all; the answer of the Government was that the Government "Cannot act as your bankers." It is true that the hon. gentleman yielded. It is true, when there was a little pressure brought to bear from the proper quarter, a power behind the Throne, that the hon. gentleman yielded to the demand made on him by Mr. Whitehead, when the proper influences were brought to bear and the hon. gentleman was properly canvassed. What are we asked to do now? We are asked to assent in Parliament to this loan of $22,500,000 and this guarantee of $7,300,000. I say, and I say it boldly, that no Government who had at heart the best interests of the country would yield to such a demand as that, upon the information and upon the facts that have been submitted to that Government by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I say, further, that no independent Parliament would yield to a demand of that kind without the most thorough investigation, without the most careful examination of every statement made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and without the most thorough investigation as to the reasons why they are here now, mendicants, as it were, at the doors of Parliament. I ask you what information have we got? What do we know of the cost of the road from Winnipeg to Portage la Prairie? If we knew that, it would give us some idea of what these people spent on the prairie section westward. What do we know of the cost of the contract with Langdon, Shepherd & Co.? What do we know of the actual cost of the road west of Medicine Hat? We have not a scratch of a pen to show it. Has the Minister of Railways got it? Have his engineers got it? Do they know to-night how much the Canadian Pacific Railway Company paid the North-West Construction Company for the construction of that road west from Medicine Hat to the summit of the Rocky Mountains? If they do, there is not a member of this House who does. We can guess what it costs approximately, but we want it with certainty. Yet he wants us to agree to these Resolutions without that information. What do we know as to how much hard cash the Syndicate, this wealthy and munificently endowed Syndicate, put of their own money into the Pacific Railway? Absolutely nothing. The hon. gentleman says $10,000,000. What evidence have we, outside of the Minister's statement, that they put a single farthing into it? What do we know as to how much hard cash they realized out of the sale of their bonds and the sale of their stock? We know nothing about that; and, without a particle of information upon all these points, the hon. gentleman is forcing this proposition on Parliament, and forcing his supporters to swallow it, whether in the interests of the country or not, and without the necessary information. But the hon. gentleman yielded to the demands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as he yielded in 1881. As his followers yielded to the demands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company before, his followers will yield to the demands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company now. Sir, by the sheer force of the hon. gentleman's own energetic nature, by the whirlwind of words by which he attempts to cut off all opposition to his statements, the hon. gentleman, I fear very much, will induce this House and this Parliament to force these Resolutions on the people of this country. I say the Pacific Railway Company did well and acted wisely in their own interests when they induced the hon. gentleman to surrender the ease and the dignity and the emoluments of the mission to England, and to come to Canada once more and engage on the floor of Parliament in the active strife of keen political contests. I say the railway company did well, because there is no man to-day in Parliament, and there is no man out of Parliament in Canada, who could afford to have made the speech the hon. gentleman made on the 5th day of the present month of February. There is no man in Parliament, or out of Parliament to-day, who could induce his followers to carry this measure through Parliament, except the hon. gentleman. There is no man in Parliament to-day, there is no man out of Parliament to-day, who would, with the information that he has got in his hands, or, at all events, with the information he has vouchsafed to give to the people of this country, have attempted to carry this measure through Parliament, and it is only by the force of the hon. gentleman's energy and power that he is able to induce this Parliament to sanction his propositions. The hon. gentleman is known among his admirers as the Rupert of debate. The hon. gentleman will permit me to regard him as the Red Indian of debate. With a liberal use of the political tomahawk, the hon. gentleman cut his way, in his native Province and here, to place and power, and a recurrence to the use of the political scalping knife the hon. gentleman hopes to hold his place on the Treasury benches, to hold his place in the English mission, and to hold what he now holds—the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by the throat. The hon. gentleman went further. He made a calculation. He told us what this road would cost us in case it passed into our hands. I am going to trouble you for a moment, not because I think it is necessary, but because, in my place here as a representative of the people, I think it my duty, as far as I am able to do so, to expose the hollowness of the pretensions made by the hon. gentleman. He said 3,393 miles of railway, if the Company failed, would pass into our hands for a sum of $54,508,128. What did he say on that point:

"The whole total is $97,001,328. That is what the road would cost the people of this country. Now, Sir, what more? What shall we do with the lands? I have charged the land they have used at $2 per acre, and put it on the other side of the account, and showed equally what the lands have realized, and what our position would be, and what the road would cost us. I credit the road with the 21,246,600 acres of land at $2 per acre, making $42,493,200 of cash that will come back to us out of the $97,000,000; and I take the completed road of 3,393 miles without a charge of a dollar upon it, from Montreal to Port Moody, costing the people of this country $51,508,128. That is the total. So, Sir, I say, that in that position, there is no intelligent man that will say, in the first place, that there is a shadow of ground for supposing that every dollar of this principal, and every dollar of this interest, will not be returned as provided for in these Resolutions, to the coffers of Canada. And I say further, that in case of that impossible contingency arising, we would stand in the position of having the lands—at the value these gentlemen have put upon them, the lands that would come into our hands, along with the 3,393 miles of main line and branches, from Montreal to Port Moody—at a cost to the people of this country of $51,508,128. That is what the hon. gentleman said. It is a glowing picture; it is a bright picture; it is a profitable speculation if his statements are correct. But he goes further. He says:

"What will that road cost us, assuming that to-morrow after this arrangement is made, assuming that to-morrow they make default, assuming that to-morrow the Company were to abandon the work, what would be our position? And, Sir, it does not matter whether default is made now or at the end; the position, so far as these figures are concerned, will stand the same."

In other words, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, we would get back a road that had cost us $97,001,328, for $54,508,128. I ask the hon. gentleman now, without meaning to be offensive, did he really understand, did he appreciate, the nonsense of the proposition he was laying down? We expend $97,000,000 on a road; we give the money, we spend the money; the road falls back into our hands, and costs us $54,000,000. Now, the answer appears to me to be so self-evident that I am only amazed that the hon. gentleman should have submitted such a proposition to the House. Was he trifling with us? Was he imposing upon our credulity? Was he attempting to deceive anybody? If not, one cannot understand his making such a statement. He went a step further than that:

"Now, let us see what that is going to cost the people of this country under this Administration."

He is now dealing with the calculations of the expense of the road from Callander to Port Moody—the former calculations was from Montreal to Port Moody:

"The 457 miles of main line and branches between Montreal, Brockville and Callander cost $23,550 per mile, amounting to $10,762,736. The 305 miles of branches west of Callander cost, as shown by the Company's accounts, $3,759,792; with the steamers, $152,351, making in all as the cost of the road from Montreal to Callander, and the branches in the North West and the steamers, $15,074,828. Take that from $51,000,000, which included them, without one dollar charged against them, and you have standing as the cost to the people of the country, assuming failure and defeat, and that every dollar of principal and interest does not come back to the Canadian Treasury, of the 2,541 miles of Railway, between Callander and Port Moody, $39,343,348."

Now, Sir, according to this calculation, we would have 3,393 miles of railway from Montreal to Port Moody at $97,132,000. The road from Montreal to Callander was to cost, and did cost, $15,074,823, which would make the expense of the road from Callander to Port Moody, $81,936,500. Then he tells us this would have been the condition of affairs, no odds whether we took the road back now, or whether we take it back after it had cost us the further sum of $30,000,000. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do, that if the road is built, the company will get every dollar of the subvention and the $30,000,000. So we must give them the $30,000,000 and the balance of the subvention more when the road is built than they have thus far received. Let us see, for a moment, what the road will cost us, adding the present subvention. When the road is built it will cost us the following sums: We gave the Company, in completed road, $28,000,000; we gave them in cash subsidy, $25,000,000; we give them now, by the way of a loan and guarantee, $30,000,000; cost of surveys, $5,000,000; with 25,000,000 acres of land, which the hon. gentleman himself estimated would be worth $57,750,000. Now, it is plain as the nose on a man's face, that when this $30,000,000 is advanced the road will cost us exactly $145,750,000. Of course, if the road comes back to our hands, we get our $30,000,000; therefore the road is entitled to credit for that sum. The amount the road will cost us if it comes back to our hands, is $115,750,000. Now, I say that it is the worst kind of folly to try to make the people of this country believe that when they expend $115,000,000 in the construction of a railway, and that railway passes back into their hands, the road will only cost them $54,000,000; and the hon. gentleman knows it just as well as I do. Sir, if we are to advance this money to this Company, if we are to make this loan, if we are to give them this additional guarantee, I say, Sir, if we are to vote away the money of the people—because I set aside as unworthy of consideration the statement made by the Minister of Railways, that you can loan $30,000,000 to the Company without adding to the burdens of the people—I say, if we are to do all this, don't let us be led away by miscalculations, and by figures that have been cooked. Let us, if we are going to do it at all, look the matter squarely in the face; let us do it with our eyes open. If we are to incur all these liabilities, if we are to incur all these obligations I say, let us do it with our eyes open. The obligations we have incurred, and the liabilities that rest upon the shoulders of the people of this country, are becoming perfectly appalling, and they are enough to startle the strongest and the sturdiest patriot upon either side of the House. Sir, let us cast our eyes over the country just as it stands now. Let us see the effect of the financial policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, let us see the effect of that policy as it is shown to-day by the bankruptcies and the bank failures, and by the unfortunate condition in which the Finance Minister tells us the other banks are in. Let us, I say, consider the position in which the great mass of the people of the country are labouring to-day, ground down by a system of oppressive taxation; so looking one will be reminded of the words used by the old Hebrew prophet to his son: "Isaachar is a strong ass crouching down between two burdens," I say the Dominion of Canada is to-night crouching between two burdens—the burden of the policy and the course pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite, and the burdens that have been imposed upon us and that are now about to be imposed upon us, by the construction of this railway. Sir, when these demands were made upon the Government of the country by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, what was the duty of the Minister of Railways, the responsible head of that Department? His plain duty was to have stood between the people of this country and this great, gigantic corporation, as a wall of adamant. The hon. gentleman was but clay in the hands of these men, and they modelled him to their will. They have succeeded, and to-night we are asked to vote an additional loan of $22,500,000, with an additional guarantee of $7,300,000. Now, Sir, what is the next statement of the hon. gentleman? He asks for time—time. The hon. gentleman was good enough to tell us that they had no claim upon us, that the people and the Parliament of Canada were under no obligation to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway. Time was what the hon. gentleman was struggling for—the completion of the road in two instead of seven years. Time was of importance, because the immediate construction of this road would develop the resources of the country, and the tide of immigration would roll in there and fill it up, and the country would so grow and become so developed that the burden about to be imposed upon us by this advance would not be felt by the people of this country. Sir, in defence of the hon. gentleman's line of argument, he was good enough to give us a series of figures and, among others, the receipts from the Customs Department in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories during the last year and the years 1881-82. The hon. gentleman was treading upon dangerous and delicate ground when he undertook to deal with the Customs receipts in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. He knows that that Province is a purely agricultural one; he knows the people depend upon the production of the soil for their subsistence; he knows that his Government, during the last Session of Parliament, increased the duty upon agricultural implements from 25 to 35 per cent.? He knows that almost every implement used for years, were imported from the United States; and, Sir, it is no wonder that the revenue increased from $1,106,356 in 1882, to $1,832,942, in 1883. But the hon. gentleman congratulates himself upon squeezing the last dollar he can squeeze out of the farmers of the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Sir, it is not a subject for congratulation, it is a subject, rather, for serious reflection, a subject for pondering, a subject for regret, that the hon. gentleman was enabled to exact from these people an increase in customs alone of over $600,000 during last year. But the hon. gentleman tells us that time is of great consequence; time will open up the country; time will help us to fill the country rapidly, and an enormous number of immigrants will go in there if the road is constructed during the next two or three years. Sir, how is time going to help the hon. gentleman, the road is already completed through the fertile belt? Does he expect immigrants to settle on the Rocky Mountains or on the shores north of Lake Superior? The hon. gentleman knows that every foot of the ground for settlement on the line of the railway is now open to settlers, and when the countless thousands the hon. gentleman expects to flow in from the Mother Country, and from the crowded centres of population in Europe—when these are all there, the hon. gentleman will then be able to make his calculation upon some basis of fact; and to say that time is of consequence for the purpose of inducing immigration situated as we now are, is to say what is not the fact. I do not believe we have gained anything from the rapidity with which the road has been constructed. Assuming all responsibility for the statement I make, I say that judging by the opinion of the people of that country and personal observation, it would have been far better to have proceeded more slowly with the construction of this road, to have had our centres of population within reach of us and not scattered all over the vast region extending from Winnipeg to the summit of the Rocky Mountains as now. Not so did old Ontario settle her vast and fertile region. Hon. gentleman should know that in Ontario the whole Province was not thrown open to settlement at once. It was only as townships and counties filled up with thriving settlers that additional townships and counties were opened up for settlement. If the hon. gentleman had pursued that course, and had forced the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to have followed that course, the Company would not have been here soliciting assistance at the hands of Parliament. I say further that we ought not to pass these Resolutions on the information that is before us. Hon. gentlemen opposite have vouchsafed no information. Let me ask the House what information have we got as to the truth of the statement contained in Mr. Stephen's letter of 29th December, 1883? Not a particle. I ask the House what information we have got as to the stock jobbing by the old Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate. We know they sold $55,000,000 of stock. We know that $5,000,000 was sold at par, that $20,000,000 was sold to members of the original Syndicate at 25 cents on the dollar. We know that $30,000,000 was sold to another syndicate, of which the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate formed an important part, at 51 cents on the dollar. We know that the stock was placed on the markets of the world and realized or would realize from 55 to 61 cents on the dollar. Let us see what profit they made in dealing with the stock of the Company under these transactions. They obtained $25,000,000 and could have sold it at 60 cents on the dollar on the European or New York market. If they sold it at 56, that would give them a profit of $6,200,000, a nice profit to have made on that little speculation. Then there was the $30,000,000 of stock purchased by them from the Company. That could have been sold at 60 cents on the dollar, and they could, or did, make a profit of $2,700,000. Putting these two items together, apart from casual advantages, there was a clear profit of $8,900,000. Did that account for the $10,000,000 which the gentlemen put of their own money into the Company? Where did they get the money? I believe it was by those speculations, as is shown by returns submitted to Parliament. We have complained, and we have reason to complain, that without full information on all these transactions, we are asked to vote the Resolutions through Parliament. Let us see what further information we want on this subject. What information have we as to the contract with Shepard, Langdon & Co. We have not got a particle of information as to that. What has become of the North American Construction Company? Is the company dissolved? We have evidence that the contract is dissolved. But the company still holds its charter of incorporation, and I fancy the moment these Resolutions are passed through Parliament, the company will again be in a position to take another contract. By means of this company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been able to contract with themselves. The Mail and Gazette, organs of the Government, tell us, but hon. gentlemen opposite do not tell us—they may have the information, we have not—that Mr. Van Horne says that the construction of the line from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops will cost $10,100,000. We do not know what the cost of the western section for 45 miles east of Medicine Hat to the summit did cost. The Government have refused to give any definite information regarding it. The information, so far as given—and it is given in a return brought down—shows that $2,506,000 were paid in cash, that the amount for material and supplies for this part of the western section was $1,790,000, that for transportation charges there were paid $1,378,000, making in all an amount paid on the 45 miles east of Medicine Hat to the Summit, $5,674,000. This is an outside figure, because a large portion of the material, supplies and transportation charges may have been incurred on other divisions, but I give the Company the benefit of the whole amount. The contract between the railway Company and the construction company for the section 45 miles east of Medicine Hat to Kamloops, was $17,880,000. There was spent on it $5,674,000, and according to Mr. Van Horne's statement, it will take $10,100,000 to finish it. These together, make $15,774,000, leaving a profit of $2,106,000 on this section in cash alone. They would get, however, more than that. They had, besides, as part payment for this contract, stock to the amount of $25,000,000. That, at 56 cents on the dollar, would equal $14,000,000, so that the total profit would reach $16,106,000. What information have they furnished in regard to this matter? None. This is the condition of affairs, so far as we know. We want additional and fuller information before we sanction this loan. It is an insult to the members of this House to ask us to vote on the resolutions without furnishing information on this subject. What information have we as to the cost of the road west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains? Are there surveys and estimates submitted? There are none. The Minister of Railways made a reply to the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), which is as follows:—

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would be glad to know from the hon. Minister of Railways if we are to understand from his recent statement that Mr. Schreiber has made a full examination of the western section which is to be built to Kamloops, if I remember aright. Heretofore, most of us have been under the impression that no final survey of that route has been made. Are we to understand from the hon. Minister that we were in error; that an actual location survey has been made, and that Mr. Schreiber has estimated, with the minuteness which is usual in such cases, the cost of constructing the road from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops.

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, when he asked the question, that no such location survey has been made."

Well, Sir, without a survey, without a location, without an estimate, we are asked to vote $30,000,000 to this Company in addition to what we gave them before. I ask the hon. Minister of Railways this question: is it settled to-day beyond a doubt, that this Company will ever cross the Rocky Mountains by the Kicking Horse Pass or the Howse Pass. I ask the hon. Minister of Railways if it has not been a matter of serious consideration for the last six months, whether or not there is a practicable route across the Selkirks through the Kicking Horse Pass or the Howse Pass? I ask him whether or not it is a matter of consideration to-day, whether it is not even now desirable to abandon this route altogether and adopt the line which crosses the Rocky Mountains by the Yellow Head Pass. I venture to ask the hon. gentleman these questions, with some knowledge of the position of affairs in that country, and some knowledge of the country itself. If the matter is settled beyond the possibility of a change what is the meaning of the answer given by the hon. gentleman, that not a single foot of the line west of the Summit was located? And what is the meaning of the regulations issued by the Minister of the Interior in November last, to the effect that he will not open lands for homesteading or preemption west of the fourth Meridian, because, he said the land there is not fit for settlement? What is the meaning of that regulation? Is the hon. gentleman paving the way so as to enable this Company to divert the line to the old Mackenzie route, and are they now asking this grant to enable them quietly to do so? I submit these questions to the House, and I say that they require and deserve the gravest consideration. I say to the hon. gentleman that if he wants this great transcontinental railway to be a financial and a commercial success, he must have that road managed and run so as to be in harmony with the interests of the people in that country, and in sympathy with the views of the people in the great North-West. If he wants that road to be a success in any way, if he honestly desires that portion of the western section of this continent, which belongs to us, and is under the British flag, to become what Providence and nature intended it to be, the home of countless millions of industrious and contented settlers, he must change his financial policy, his policy with respect to this railway; he must bring them in harmony with the views of the people in that country; he must not crush and stunt the growth of that country, as he has been doing for the past five years; he must leave the land there, the inheritance of the people, for the people; he must not encourage any landlordism in the wide regions of the great North-West. He must do more. He must open up every section of that country for free homesteads for the people who are living in that country, and those who are going there to better their condition. He must abolish all monopolies in that country; he must deal with the people as if they were independent Britons, and not hewers of wood and drawers of water, to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or to hon. gentlemen opposite. In a word, until the hon. gentleman changes his course, until he deals with the people as he ought to deal with them, he must expect that his whole policy will prove a failure. When the hon. gentleman has changed his policy, when he pursues a different course, when he gives us the information to which we are entitled, I may deal with this question in a different sense; but until the hon. gentleman has done that, I for one will raise my voice and record my vote against these propositions, and in order to be consistent with myself, in order to put myself right before the people of this country and before Parliament, I shall move the following amendment:—

"That all the words after the word 'That' in the said motion, be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"before this House shall be called on to grant the further aid of a loan of $22,500,000, and of a guarantee of $7,300,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a Select Committee be appointed to make a full and searching inquiry into the condition and affairs of the Company, and particularly as to its operations in stock, and in respect of construction contracts—the real cost of the works done—and the proper estimate of costs of the works remaining."

Mr. RYKERT. I think every hon. member of this House who has spoken on this subject has recognized the importance of the question now under consideration. But while most of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the Resolutions have spoken at great length, very few, if any of them, have referred at all to the questions under consideration. I think, Sir, as all the hon. gentlemen who have spoken before me have stated, that this is the most important question this Legislature has ever been called upon to discuss. It is important, because it involves not only the good faith and credit of this country, but its welfare and prosperity to a very great extent. No person more than myself regrets that we are called upon to re-open the consideration of this question. I think every person on the Ministerial side of the House, who is supporting the Government, and is determined to support them throughout, have felt that it is an unfortunate thing that we should be called upon, on this occasion, to discuss this question for the second or third time. We all hoped, I am sure, that when the agreement was made with the Syndicate, that that would be the last we would hear of this great question, until the road was finally completed. But, Sir, if we are called upon now to discuss this question, if the necessities of the case require us to consider it, I say, that as men having the interests of the country at heart, we should not shirk the responsibility of it. If, in considering this question, the interests of our country are involved, I say that whether it results in the increase of our ordinary expenditure, or of our capital account, it makes no difference, so long as the interests of the country require that we should take this matter into our consideration and deal with it as proposed by the Government. When I read the letter of Mr. Stephen, the President of the Company, in December last, in which he stated that the assets of the Company were, in his judgment, sufficient to carry out that great undertaking, I felt some relief; but still, at the same time, when I read the letter I saw that it depended entirely upon the position of the money markets of the world whether they would be able to realize and carry out that great undertaking. It so happens that the Company now say, that they cannot raise the funds required for the completion of that great work, and they come to this Parliament and tell us plainly, and I think in the most satisfactory manner, the position of their affairs, and they say: We are ready to carry out in its entirety the contract entered into between you and us, but if you desire the road to be completed in the time we told you we could complete it in, namely, two years, it is necessary for the Government of Canada to come to our assistance and lend us a sum of money by which we may carry out that undertaking; if you think it in the interest of the country that the work should not be completed in that time, we shall go on and carry out the contract to the letter. That is the position of the Company; but hon. gentlemen opposite have not approached this question in the spirit in which it should be approached. They have started up in opposition to it, and their opposition has been of a purely party character. Instead of lending their assistance to the Government and helping to extricate it from its difficulties if this enterprise should fail, these hon. gentlemen say: No, we have got the Government in a corner and we will try and crush out this scheme, and if we can crush it out we shall crush out the Government. What do they care for the prosperity of the country if their party interests can be served? A party who have always placed party first and country afterwards cannot be expected, on this occasion, to lend their assistance to this Government in carrying out this great undertaking. Why have we so many questions of past history brought before us on this occasion? From the very commencement of this discussion hon. gentlemen opposite, who have been opposing these Resolutions, have brought up the old history of this question. They have gone back to old Pacific Scandal time, and we have heard repeated, over and over again, questions of a financial character having no bearing on this question. They are doing this for the purpose of drawing a red herring across the trail, in the hope of deceiving the public and drawing their attention away from this important issue.

Mr. RYKERT.

In so doing, they hope to convince the people that the Government are carrying out a scheme that will result in injury to the country. In discussing a question of this kind, I do not like to wander from the subject under discussion. I like to see hon. gentlemen confine themselves to what I consider the argumentative aspect of the case. But we find ourselves in this position: these gentlemen have made reckless and random statements which are not borne out by the facts, and if to-night I feel called upon to follow these gentlemen to some extent to show how mistaken they are, I do it because I feel that the country should have the antidote along with the poison. If these gentlemen, with no regard for the reputation of public men, make calumnious statements on the floor of Parliament, and these go forth uncontradicted, some portion of the public, at any rate, will have the idea that they are correct; and when I heard hon. gentlemen in the course of this debate make those statements which are at variance with the truth, I felt that it was my duty to send out the antidote along with the poison. I think we ought to discuss this question from a public and not a party point of view. Now, Sir, from whom does this opposition emanate? Not from the leaders of the Opposition, or from the Opposition side in this House; but from the outside. We find that the organs of the party, which appear to be subsidized by some person, have raised a hue and a cry against this scheme; they declare that the money to be loaned to this Company will be money thrown away, and that we shall never see it again. We find this opposition instigated by the organ of the Grand Trunk Railway. I do not wish to use any offensive terms towards the management of the Grand Trunk Railway. If they desire, in the interest of their company, to take a stand against the Canadian Pacific Railway, they are justified in so doing, provided they do not interfere with the interests of this country. If Mr. Hickson, for whom I have the highest admiration as a manager, who has done a great deal to elevate that railway from the unfortunate position in which it once was, to the high position it now occupies—if he opposes the Canadian Pacific Railway in the interest of his company—so long as he does not infringe upon our rights and privileges, I have no fault to find. But what do we find? We find the opposition to this scheme coming from the Grand Trunk Railway in particular, and they coolly ask this House to assist them in carrying out a project which would result in a greater monopoly than these gentlemen predict as the result of carrying out this scheme. They coolly ask this Parliament to throw into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway the whole railway system of the Province of Ontario. Let me ask hon. gentlemen in this House if they will give their influence to establish a great monopoly like that? If we accede to the demands of that pamphlet which has been instigated by the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, what will be the result? Ontario will be in the hands of one great monopoly. But, Sir, it is rather extraordinary that we find the leading organ of the party suddenly changing front. Why, Sir, for years and years, almost every issue of that paper had large black lines describing accidents on the Grand Trunk, more bungling on the Grand Trunk, and things of that kind, and those who have watched the proceedings of Parliament will know that when railway projects were brought before Parliament, if they were at all antagonistic to the Grand Trunk Railway, that paper would use its influence in favour of these measures. It was only a short time ago that a charter was applied for in this Parliament for the Ontario and Quebec Railway, and another for the Toronto and Ottawa Railway, the latter being in the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway. The Globe strongly denounced the scheme of the Grand Trunk Railway, and called upon this Parliament to crush it out and give the charter to the other Company. Now, however, we find that paper suddenly changing front and asking this Parliament to adopt a scheme by which Ontario may be placed in the hands of this huge monopoly. Now, Sir, on this occasion it is necessary to examine in detail the objections advanced by hon. gentlemen. So far as I can gather, the chief objection raised by hon. gentlemen is that undue haste has been exhibited by the Government in pushing this question in Parliament, and also that there is no necessity of building the railway so rapidly. That seems to be one of the strong positions assumed by gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. Now, Sir, I shall feel it my duty, though at the expense of being somewhat tedious, to meet those objections, and to show that not only the Reform party, but the leaders of the Reform party, have on all occasions desired, if we are to judge by their opinions as expressed on the floor of Parliament and outside of this House, that the road should be built in a speedy manner. Now, Sir, it will be necessary to discuss the opinions of the Reform party, and also of the leaders of that party to a certain extent, in order to show that they have agreed with the Conservative party that it was necessary to make considerable haste in constructing this road across the continent. Now, there is one thing that I think is a very remarkable circumstance, that while the organs of the Opposition have endeavoured to excite a feeling of hostility against the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the scheme now before Parliament, no petition has been presented as yet to this Parliament against it. We have heard of no public meetings held throughout the country against it. The people seem to be perfectly satisfied that the country must come to the rescue and grant the aid asked for. I think I am speaking the sentiments generally of the people when I say that in a question of this great magnitude the people feel the Government is bound to see that what the Company asks for is in the interests of the country. We have had an opportunity, during the last few weeks, of testing the opinion of the people. In the county of Kent, where an election was held, after this scheme was promulgated in Parliament, it cannot be said that the people were not informed on this important question. We had the Rouge element there and the Grit element there. We had the hon. member for North Norfolk making a strong and pathetic appeal to the electors not to give their support to a gentleman who intended, if elected, to support this most extravagant and corrupt Government, and which had propounded a scheme that would entail a vast amount of expenditure and a heavy burden on the country. No man knows better than the hon. gentleman how to make a stump speech. No man in this Parliament or out of it is better able—I was going to say, to deceive the electors, but perhaps that is going too far—no man can better gull the electors, tell a more plausible story, talk longer and louder than the hon. member for North Norfolk, and if anything were necessary to show what an extravagant set of men are on the Conservative benches, no gentleman is more capable of discussing that question. The people had the whole question discussed before them in all its bearings, yet knowing all the charges made against the Government, having a full copy of the indictment laid before them, they returned a supporter of the Government by a large majority. So that at the very first opportunity of testing public opinion, public opinion declared in unequivocal terms that the Government is acting in the best interests of the country. We had also an election in the county of York, and I presume the people of that county had the advantage of being possessed of the same means of information as the people of the county of Kent. Yet the result of the election there was that a former Liberal majority of 912 was reversed, and a Conservative majority polled of 176. If public opinion, therefore, be worth anything at all, we must come to the conclusion that upon this important question the people are in accord with the Government and are satisfied that the Government are acting in the very best interests of the country. What have we been looking for, for the last fifteen years? From the earliest inception the people have declared that without a line across this continent through British territory, this country would never attain any position of consequence. American statesmen repeatedly declared in Congress and elsewhere that unless the American people were alive to the importance of this question, their Canadian friends, having the best and shortest route, would lead the march in the van of civilization as regards the eastern trade—that they would in a short time have a line across the continent, and thus divert from the American channel that great trade, to secure which is the ambition of the whole of the United States people. We recollect a speech which has been referred to here on more than one occasion, that of Mr. Seward, in which he declared, in language that bears repetition, and which justifies this Government in their desire to have this road rapidly completed:

"The route through British America is, in some respects, preferable to that through our own territory. By the former, the distance from Europe to Asia is some thousand miles shorter than by the latter. Passing close to Lake Superior, traversing the water-shed which divides the streams flowing towards the Arctic Sea from those which have their exit southward, crossing the Rocky Mountains at an elevation of over 3,000 feet less than at the south pass, the road could be here constructed with comparative cheapness, and would open up a region abounding in valuable timber and other natural products, and admirably suited to the growth of grain and grazing. Having its Atlantic sea-board at Halifax and its Pacific near Vancouver Island, it would undoubtedly draw to it the commerce of Europe, Asia and the United States. Thus, British America, from a mere colonial dependency, would assume a controlling rank in the world. To her, other nations would be tributary, and in vain would the United States attempt to be her rival, for she never could dispute with her the possession of the Asiatic commerce, nor the power which that commerce confers."

It seems to me that if any reason can be urged for expedition in building this great road, it is the views expressed by that gentleman, reiterated throughout the whole of the United States, and concurred in by other gentlemen to whom I would refer if I had the time. The consensus of opinion has been that across the Canadian portion of North America there could be built a line which would be 1,000 miles shorter to the seaboard than the line through the United States, and which would be the means of drawing the traffic of the east to the west. Those who in years gone by had the pleasure and gratification of listening to the great leader of the Reform party—I do not mean the hon. gentleman who leads it to-day—but the great leader of the Reform party who has passed and gone, will remember how eloquently he held up to the people the great desirability of having a road across the continent. I cannot better trespass on the time of this hon. House than by reading an extract from one of his speeches:

"It must be pushed through at whatever expense; we believe it can be pushed through, not only without being a burden, pecuniarily, upon Canada, but with an absolute profit in every point of view. Without such a line, a great British North America would turn out an unsubstantial dream; with it, and with ordinary prudence and wisdom on the part of her statesmen, it will be a great, glorious and inevitable reality."

We have there the opinion of eminent men from both countries. We have men living in this country to-day who have looked forward to the time when that road will be completed, and that, too, at an early day. That, I say, has been also the position of the Reform party. They have claimed that the road should be completed at an early day. But, when the opportunity was in their grasp, and they had the power to place that road under construction, they threw every impediment in the way. When the hon. the leader of the Government, in 1872, when he was also the leader of the former Government, propounded a scheme for the early completion of the railway, the hon. gentleman who is now the leader of the Reform party, the member for West Durham, thought there was too much haste in it. That was when the Bill was before Parliament in 1871. Then, when the Bill was passed and the House had determined that the road should be built, upon a question as regarded the charter and how the road should be built, that hon. gentleman then declared that the opinion of the country had been expressed upon it, and that opinion was irreversible. Upon several occasions he so expressed himself, that he desired that the road should be completed speedily, and that the House had no alternative but to carry that measure through. In 1872, upon May the 8th, the hon. gentleman delivered himself in Parliament of a speech upon this question, and he then showed conclusively that he felt the country was pledged to the early completion of that road. He said:

"Such having been the case last Session, and the objection having been overruled, it did not now become the duty of this side of the House to say a single word, no matter how great the difficulties might appear; but it was their duty to give their earnest endeavours to carry out in good faith the obligations we have incurred. He apprehended that it was solely in reference to the mode in which the Government proposed to carry out the undertaking that a difference of opinion could arise."

Now, Mr. Speaker, listen to the language of the hon. gentleman. Then he was a true patriot; then he felt that the country's interest was paramount to that of his party; he then exclaimed:

"I think that it behoves us all, on whichever side of the House we are, to extend to the Government that has to deal with this enormous question, the most generous consideration."

Now, if there was a necessity ten years ago to extend to the Government most generous consideration in the discussion of that question, why cannot he do that now; why cannot he draw himself entirely out of the loop-strings of his party; why cannot he say: I am bound to be a patriot and to act in the interests of my country? No, he still hopes that, although he appealed to a tribunal of the people three years ago, and hopefully too, he may again appeal to the people on some other occasion, and that, upon this question, perhaps, their verdict may be reversed. We find that all these gentlemen were desirous that that road should be built rapidly. I think I can show another proof of it. It is at the time when the hon. gentleman jumped away from his party a little, became a little restive, because there are times when the hon. gentleman has been restive in his party. He has not been always in accord with the Liberal party. He is somewhat in advance of them in his views. And, when the hon. member for Lambton was endeavouring to push a Bill through Parliament in relation to the Nanaimo and Esquimalt railway, he took exception to that railway, that it was paying too dear for the whistle, and at that time he voted against the leader of his party, and it is said by some who profess to know about the question that the hon. gentleman exercised an influence in the Upper House. At any rate, the Bill was defeated in the Upper House, and did not become law. But, on that occasion, the organ of that party seemed annoyed at the hon. gentleman's action in Parliament, and came out the following day with a thundering article in which it condemned the present leader of the Opposition, and complained that he had not acted in a patriotic manner, when he endeavoured, by a catch vote, to defeat the Government, and in that endeavour was backed up by the member for South Huron. The Globe of March 31st, 1875, says:

"The defeat of the Bill under discussion would simply have destroyed the compact, thrown British Columbia into a ferment, and produced at home and abroad the worst possible impression as to security of bargains made with Canadian Governments and of the national spirit of the Canadian House of Commons. If ever there was an enterprise which justified a liberal expenditure of public funds, it is our great Canadian highway across the continent. The necessity for the construction of that line is evident to everyone who takes—we shall not say a statesman-like view of what our Dominion is and what it will become, according as that railway is constructed or not. It is never to be lost sight of that Canada was solemnly and officially pledged to that bargain. The compact was deliberately and explicitly entered into, though technically the present Government might have repudiated it as a whole, and have told British Columbia to go out if she likes. It would have been neither for the profit nor the credit of Canada to have followed such a course. It is not a prudent proceeding for any Government to repudiate engagements of its predecessors."

And mark the censure which the hon. gentleman then got:

"The attempt to catch a majority against the Ministry on the point of the contracts not being submitted to Parliament was equally unworthy and transparently factious."

That, Sir, is the character which the hon. gentleman got from the Globe at that time, and since that time his course upon that question has been somewhat restive—not at all times consistent. Upon another occasion, we recollect that an attempt was made to show that Sir Hugh Allan wished to build the line to Sault Ste. Marie, and thereby make it a Yankee road, a road subservient to the Northern Pacific Railway. At that time, an objection was taken by a great many persons in Parliament to that proceeding, to that plan of building the railway. At that time, those who favoured that scheme were denounced in most unmeasured terms. I want to add another witness to the long list I have of gentlemen whom I shall call and ask for their opinion as to this question of making haste in the building of this railway. We had here during the last Parliament a gentleman whose departure, no doubt, hon. gentlemen on the other side regret, though I cannot say that we on this side feel so very sorry, unless for this, that, when he is in Parliament, it gives us an opportunity of exposing sometimes to a greater extent the fallacious arguments of those hon. gentlemen. The hon. member for West Middlesex, in 1876, was anxious to have this road completed at an early day. He stated as follows:—

"It had been said it was a great mistake to undertake the construction of this railway—that the resources of the country were not sufficient for the work. That is not the question now. This House had to consider that, in order to keep faith with British Columbia and discharge the obligations we had undertaken with that Province, we were bound to proceed with the work as quickly as possible."

That sentiment was concurred in by a gentleman who is sitting opposite to me now, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). In 1880, that hon. gentleman was enthusiastic in regard to having the road completed at an early day. That hon. gentleman sometimes speaks on both sides of the question. He does so on this question particularly, and on the National Policy he has also spoken on both sides. He has mistaken his profession; he ought to have been a lawyer; then he could have taken a brief on either side. That gentleman, on page 1041 of the Hansard, delivered himself in this style:

"We want this region traversed as rapidly as possible. We want to see its productions flowing in vast and ever increasing volume along our commercial routes, giving employment to our railways and our lake and ocean marine. When all this is realized, our great North-West will have become an element of greatness and strength to Canada, and our policy should be shaped with a view to hastening in the most rapid manner the development we desire."

And, Mr. Speaker, he grows still more eloquent. As he went on, the House cheered him to the echo, feeling that these sentiments were the sentiments of the people, and the hon. gentleman waxed more eloquent, and on he goes:

"We must bear in mind that we have a rival on the south of us, through whose territory the tide of immigration seeking our North-West must pass, and immigrants, while passing through to the North-West, will have laid before them all the advantages offered by our neighbours as an inducement for immigrants to settle on their lands."

Sir, that is one of the arguments we now advance; that was one of the most important reasons to which I shall allude by and by, why we should keep faith with the people in the building of this great trans-continental railway: it is that emigrants may not be waylaid in going through the United States to the North-West, that they may not be turned aside from their road in going through the United States to that great country which we are now endeavouring to open up. As I said before, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has a happy faculty of going back upon himself. We find that in 1881, he was not exactly of the same mind; he was, if I were to use an unparliamentary expression, playing the political hypocrite. Perhaps it might offend the hon. gentleman, and therefore I would not like to say it; at the same time a person can almost say it, and in quoting the hon. gentleman's own language, one can almost make a person believe that he was such. We find him delivering this language in 1881, and I think that is one answer I can give to the challenge made by the hon. member for South Huron. I intend to take up that challenge, and I will satisfy the hon. gentleman that there is no necessity of making any more challenges. Well, Sir, this is what the hon. member for North Norfolk said, in 1881:

"In 1874, we estimated that the North-West was to a great extent worthless, and in 1880 this was proved incorrect. If, in consequence of the changed relations, we believe the country has a value which we believe it did not possess in 1874, we should all agree to rectify mistakes in the past."

Now, Sir, that is the position these gentlemen assume when their previous record is challenged. We find these hon. gentlemen to-day rising in their places in Parliament and giving their word that a certain statement of fact is correct. They make statements here that they will vouch for, and yet three or four years hence, on the floor of Parliament, they will say: "Oh! circumstances have changed. We thought differently at that time; we were misinformed; we had not the information necessary." That was the position of the hon. gentleman then. Then he went on to say:

"True, in the North-West we had, indeed, millions of acres of land. In the North-West we had lands which would give sufficient sustenance for from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000. Let them get inhabitants for it as soon as possible."

In 1880, while decrying the country and the 100,000,000 acres, to build the railway:

"And at the risk of being considered unpatriotic, I wish to place before the House some facts which have a very intimate bearing upon our own interests. I wish to make some comparison between the present condition of this country and the present condition of the United States. I wish to show to this House and to the country that we are at this moment in a critical condition."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that if there was any argument wanting to show the necessity for making haste in the building of this railway, I have extracted that argument from speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite and their leader. I would ask this House this question: If there is no haste in the building of that railway, if there is no desire to have a railway across the continent through Canadian territory, why was it that upon the eve of a general election the hon. member for East York advertised for tenders to build that road from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean? Why was it, Sir, that that hon. gentleman, on the eve of an election, sent to the Pacific coast 5,000 tons of steel rails, if there was no necessity for the building of that road? Now, Sir, in the face of these facts, is it possible for any person to come to any other conclusion than that there is a necessity for building that road, and that, too, as rapidly as possible? If those gentlemen would pursue a patriotic course, if they could for one moment, or for one Session of Parliament, lift themselves from the mire of party politics, if they could feel that they represent the people, that there is a great responsibility resting upon them as representatives of the people, I think, Sir, that in the language of the hon. member for West Durham, they would join hands with the Government and give their hearty consideration to a question of the importance of this railway to the interests of our country. Sir, the hon. gentlemen know what has been the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it does not lie in their mouths to say that we are going to increase the burdens of taxation. It is true they recognized years ago that it should not be pressed forward if it had a tendency to increase the taxation of the people. That is the cry they raise now. They say it is going to increase the burdens of the people. I would like to ask those gentlemen if they thought so in 1878, when they stood helplessly in the face of the people, when they stood with their arms folded and said: "We are helpless; our credit is ruined; we have run the country into extravagance; we have not a dollar in our exchequer; our credit is irretrievably impaired." If they at that time made a proposition to build the railway, if they expended a large amount of money upon estimates to build that railway, surely, Sir, they are not the men now to cry out against the promotion of this enterprise on the ground of expense. Surely, if they could build the road then, we can do it now. Now, Mr. Speaker, in discussing this question there are certain things which we ought to consider. In my judgment, the first thing we have to consider is, whether the demand made by the Company is a just and reasonable demand; secondly, has the Company satisfactorily shown to this Parliament that they are not, at present, in a position to complete their road, and if so, then in what time can they do it? Has the Company shown satisfactorily the true state of affairs, and what has brought them about? Are they responsible for it? Has it arisen from circumstances over which they have no control? Will the country be benefitted by the granting of the concession? Has the Company offered satisfactory security? And can we assist them within the spirit of the Resolution of 1872, recognized by all Governments, that is of not increasing the burden of taxation? These are the questions I propose to consider briefly. I think these are the questions for the consideration of this House, and not the random statements of the hon. gentleman made here, that this Parliament and the other Parliament were in favour of one measure or another measure—not the Pacific Scandal that turned one Government out and may turn out another Government. These are not the questions for discussion, although the leader of the Opposition made a long and eloquent speech upon them; although, Sir, the hon. gentleman sailed about as close to the wind as any person possibly could sail in an argument; although he made a speech of three or four hours' duration on subjects that have nothing to do with the question before the House. Sir, I sat patiently listening to him and taking notes—I have a great volume of notes here—and I waited three mortal hours hoping he would come to the question. I took down twenty-six objections he had raised of a fanciful character, which I wish briefly to touch upon later on, and I suddenly heard him close with a peroration, but with not one single word against the resolution, not one single argument advanced against the security offered by the railway. Now, the hon. gentleman can make a speech, use highly polished language; but, Sir, he can plead a case upon one side or the other to suit his convenience. The hon. gentleman can make, I say, a polished speech, make an impressive speech; he can make a speech that the people who listen to him for the first time, but who do not closely scrutinize his arguments, will call a magnificent speech, but when it is stripped of its verbiage, you see what it is made of. Now, Sir, I propose briefly to give some reasons why, in my judgment, the Railway Company is justified in asking for this assistance from the Government, and why the Government is justified in granting their request. I propose briefly, even at the risk of being a little lengthy, to refute some of the arguments, or statements, made by hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, although it is putting the cart before the horse in every sense of the word, I will first take up the speech made by the hon. gentleman who last preceded me. It seemed to me, Sir, when the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) was making his quotations, it was very much like Satan quoting Scripture. I have heard speeches made in this Parliament, I have heard speeches made in other Parliaments, but I never yet heard a more vulgar, a more abusive speech. I never heard a speech abounding with such gross ignorance; and never heard a speech surrounded with so much pride, so much presumption, so much conceit, and delivered in such a theatrical style. I do not wonder the leader of the Opposition went to sleep. From eight o'clock till the hon. gentleman closed, he never raised his head from his desk. And why, Sir? The hon. gentleman knew it was a disgrace to Parliament, a disgrace to his party, that any member who sits here as a member of Parliament should be found who would make such an outrageous speech as that hon. gentleman made. The hon. gentleman, in a theatrical style, has thrown down a challenge on this side of the House. What does he take us to be? Does he think we have been playing Rip Van Winkle, for the last fifteen years? Does he think we have not been keeping track of him? I can tell him I have been doing so. Does the hon. gentleman think we have forgotten the record? That hon. gentleman challenged hon. members on the Government side of the House to show that the Liberals had ever been extravagant in their estimates of the cost of building the railway, and that they had depreciated the value of the land in the fertile belt. I always regret in this House and in court being compelled to call a witness in whom I have no faith; and it is the last resort of a lawyer to be compelled to depreciate the value of his own witnesses. I am going to call witnesses and see what they have to say about the matter. In the first place, did hon. gentlemen opposite make extravagant estimates as to the cost of building the railway? Let me take the leader of the Liberal Party, in the first instance. Let me call his attention to a time when he met the late distinguished member for Halton (Mr. McDougall), in the county of Welland, in his famous four hours speech in which he dealt with the extravagance of the Government in entering into such an enormous and outrageous scheme as that of building the Pacific Railway. What did the hon. gentleman then say:

"Mr. Blake then proceeded to criticise the Pacific Railway scheme, which was one of the maddest schemes ever thought of. The cost of equipment, construction and stock of our present railways ranged from $80,000 to $100,000 per mile. The first section of the railway from Ottawa to Fort Garry, at this rate, would cost $100,000,000; the next was intersected by great rivers, which would necessitate costly bridging; and the third section, from the base of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Coast, was full of mountains, and one of the most difficult in the world for the construction of a railway. He showed the dangers attendant on the carrying out of the Act passed last Session, the probability that the road would cost $100,000,000, the inadequacy of the present grant, and the dangerous power conceded to the Government."

Then we have a statement by another high authority, the Speaker of the Grit Government, Mr. Anglin, on March 30th, according to the report of the Globe newspaper, used the following language:—

"He thought the estimate of $100,000,000 would be found small enough. At any rate, the Government knew very little about what it would cost. The member for Wentworth has estimated the cost at $200,000,000. The member for Lennox (Mr. Cartwright), who was well known as a careful calculator, had estimated it at $240,000,000. Who could say that the Dominion, with its present resources, could pay the present debt, and assume a debt of $240,000,000. * * * But in addition to that, it would cost at least $2,500,000 to run the railway after it was built. * * * The cost of carrying a railway through British Columbia would be money thrown away, and a millstone on the neck of the Dominion."

Then we have another witness, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He is reported in the Globe of November, 1873, to have said:

"I may also add, that I hope we shall be able to devise means by which this shall be accomplished at a very much less cost than was contemplated by the company of Sir Hugh Allan. You are, perhaps, not aware that it was contemplated that the expenditure under this scheme would be $180,000,000. That fact is not generally known."

Then we have the hon. gentleman still further delivering himself of a speech at Glencoe. He said:

"That gentleman (A. P. McDonald) saw no difficulty in undertaking to spend at least $100,000,000, and he believed very much more, in the construction of the railway. It cost over $300,000,000 to build the American, which was one-third shorter and had less natural difficulties in the way than ours, except in one portion of it. From the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, through British Columbia, was exceedingly rough, and from the Lake of the Woods and Winnipeg River to the head waters of the Ottawa, the country was undoubtedly the roughest on the continent."

Then we have a statement by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), made in a Budget speech, in which he said:

"I entertain no doubt that if it were incumbent upon us to push the line through within the time specified (if it were possible) the revenue would be enormously increased, and that a moderate estimate would reach $150,000,000 to $160,000,000."

I submit to the House that I have proved—I will not say by reputable witnesses—that hon. gentlemen opposite made extravagant estimates of the cost of building the road. What do they now say? They tell us it can be constructed for from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000; and they talk about millionaires engaged in the work rolling up money. The next challenge is contained in this question: When did they under-estimate the extent and value of the lands? That is rich. At page 1965 of the Hansard, of 1879, we have the following statement by Mr. Rymal:—

"It was evident from the nature of the discussion, that they were not ready to commence the construction of the road. He had always looked upon this scheme as one calculated to outweigh the capacity of Canada. He did not believe there were 100,000,000 acres of fertile land in the North-West, and he feared that the price of $2 per acre, placed upon the land there, would turn the tide of emigration to the United States."

Take another witness; ex-Speaker Anglin, at page 1590 of Hansard, 1880, says:

"The hon. member has clearly proved that the net proceeds of all the lands to be sold in that country would be entirely insufficient to pay the cost of this railway. He showed that if the road is to be such a one as we were led to expect; if, even on the prairie land, we were not to have the construction slighted, and the road made a mere colonization road, it must cost much more than the amount the hon. gentleman stated."

Another witness is the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He always inserts a reservation—provided I do not change my mind. That hon. gentleman said, at page 1556:

"From the estimates as to the extent of the arable land in that country, given by the hon. member for Lambton, it would appear that the total amount of arable land south of the north line of the railway belt really does not exceed seventy millions of acres. I have no doubt this is a very liberal estimate."

"It is barely possible that it may reach 95,000,000 acres. I believe this is a liberal estimate."

He goes on:

"Taking all of the land of the North-West, it is barely possible that it may reach 95,000,000 of acres. I believe that is a most liberal estimate."

The hon. member for East York also expressed his opinion on that question. He said:

"Having thus satisfied myself—indeed, I do not require any additional information to satisfy myself—on this point, that it is impossible for the Government to build the road from the produce of the land in the North-West, I have to consider what is the best course to be pursued. I have always held that whatever revenue is realized from the lands will be absorbed, mainly in settlement and Governmental expenses, and that the money must be contributed by the people of Canada for the building of this railway; that, therefore, any extravagant expenditure would simply involve us in an amount of debt such as we cannot venture to carry."

The same hon. gentleman made a speech at Cornwall, when claiming to speak by authority—because he said he had consulted General Palliser—he said: "I give you my word there are 44,417,235 acres." I think I have proved my position, in accepting the challenge of those hon. gentlemen, who assert that they have not under-estimated the extent of the country; for I have called them as witnesses, and out of their own mouths I have convicted them. I have shown that not only when time and occasion suited, but at all times, they have exaggerated the cost of building the railway, that they have in the most unpatriotic manner run down the credit of the country, and under-estimated the extent of the fertile lands in the North West, and that no person has been more keen and zealous in so doing, than the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). As to the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), I hope the next time he quotes anything in history, he will be careful to understand, before he starts, exactly what the story is, for I should gather from his remarks that he could not tell whether Cassandra was a man or a woman. I hope he has found out by this time; and I hope that when he next quotes history, he will previously rehearse it in the room, at the other end of this building. The hon. gentleman said that I would vote for these Resolutions. I tell him that I shall do so with all my heart, believing, as I do, that I am voting in the interests of my country. He said further, that I had stated that we would invoke the Court of Chancery to compel the Company to build the road. What I did say was, in answer to the hon. member for West Durham, who said the Company would build the prairie sections, and abandon the other, I said that the courts would compel them to build both, if proceedings were invoked, and I proved it. I showed conclusively that if the Company accepted the bargain, they must accept it in its entirety. They cannot take the good and reject the bad. But we are not in that position to-day, the Company has not failed to carry out the contract. They have five years to do it, but the wisacre from Huron says: Why they will invoke proceedings in the Court of Chancery; but they cannot do it, it is utterly impossible. I think I need not trouble the House further with regard to that hon. gentleman. With regard to the speech made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), I venture to assert, that when that hon. gentleman read the report of his speech next day he was astonished to see how a man could talk so long and say so little. Then we had a speech from the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I would like to say with regard to that speech, if it were parliamentary to say it, that it was the most blundering speech that was ever delivered in this House. If that hon. gentleman were present, I think I could show, even to his satisfaction, that the statements made by him were so much at variance—I will not say with the truth, but with the Parliamentary records—that he would be ashamed of himself when he came to examine them. He said:

"Well, in the first place, as I have said, we made a mistake in making the time too short, and the result of that mistake was, that we had to pay the people of British Columbia a large amount to get an extension of time."

What did we pay them? Who ever heard of it? We paid them in promises. Why, Sir, the hon. member for West Durham, who desired to conciliate the people of British Columbia, said to them: We will give you $750,000, though we are running rapidly in debt, if you will only give us time. The hon. member for East York, at one time, bought his peace with British Columbia, by promising to give them a railway costing $3,500,000, and by guaranteeing to expend $2,000,000 in that Province; and that is all I know of the many promises to pay which were made to British Columbia. The hon. gentleman says again, that the Liberal press have not abused the North-West. In answer to that, let me read what the hon. member for South Huron said:

"As to the Liberal press, he had hardly any words too strong to convey his disapprobation of their conduct towards the North-West and towards the railway. Now, Sir, I am not responsible, nor are my friends responsible, for all that the press of Canada choose to say."

I leave the hon. member for Wellington, and the hon. member for Huron, to settle their difficulties on that question. The hon. gentleman stated further, that the cost of the Intercolonial Railway was $38,000,000; but if he will turn to the schedule of the Public Accounts, page 24, he will find that it cost $28,080,650, and that he was astray only to the extent of $10,000,000. The hon. gentleman said further:

"I notice, in looking over the Public Accounts, that the debt of the Dominion has increased about $32,000,000 within the last six years."

Now, Sir, if it were a parliamentary expression, I should like to say that that was a "whopper;" but as perhaps that is unparliamentary, he can understand me as having said it. The total debt of the Dominion at the end of the year 1878-79 was, $179,483,871; and in 1882-83 it was $202,159,104, or an increase of $22,675,230, instead of $32,000,000. If the hon. gentleman had only gone further and given the net debt, he would have found himself still further astray. The net debt of the Dominion in 1878—going back to the 1st of July of that year—though we claim credit for 1874 as belonging to this Government, as they say they have the right to claim 1879 as theirs; but, at any rate, the net debt of 1878 was $140,352,069; the net debt of 1879 was $142,990,187; and the net debt of 1883 was $158,166,714. The net debt had only increased $15,476,202, instead of $32,000,000. This shows how close those hon. gentlemen can sail to the wind, and how anxious they are to deceive the country. As I said before, I propose that the antidote shall go along with the poison. But, Sir, the hon. gentlemen gave up the whole case. The only member of that side of the House who has spoken with the courage of his convictions, who had the honesty to declare what his convictions really were, wound up by saying:

"The question of security was also mentioned, but we have not gone into the question of challenging the security, and I do not know where the hon. gentleman has got his information on that point. I have not heard anything on this side of the House upon that point. The whole question has been as to whether it is in the interest of the country that we should go on and make this grant, or whether we should withhold our hand."

The question we consider the most important is the question of the security; but the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says that we have all the security necessary, and that they are not now discussing that question. He is the only member who has expressed himself so plainly. Now, let me refer to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Fleming). That hon. gentleman has stated that in the conception of building this railroad it was intended that it should start at Callander and be carried to the Pacific Ocean. The reason was that it was unnecessary, he says, to have a Pacific Railway run further east than Callander, because at that point it would form its connection with the existing railway system of the country. I would like to know where the railways were at that time. The Canada Central was not built that far; and yet the hon. gentleman says the Pacific Railway was to connect with the existing railway system of the country. I think that hon. gentleman also gave up the case as regards the value of the security when he said that the earnings of the Company for the next two years would be $2,500,000, and $8,000,000 for postal service, which I think is somewhat exaggerated, but he shows that the earnings will be so great that the debt must be paid off inside of six years. Now, Sir, there is only one other gentleman to whom I shall allude: that is the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin). Although he is an old member of this House I am somewhat older than he is in parliamentary life, and I would advise that hon. gentleman that when he wants to make a stump speech, he had better make it in his own county than on the floor of Parliament. When the hon. gentleman falls into the groove of the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) and makes the assertion that the expenditure has increased $10,000,000 in six years, I just wish to ask him to read the speech of the hon. member for South Huron on that question. But when the hon. gentleman says that the Railway Company has employed outsiders and foreigners to the detriment of Canadians, he states what he must know is not true. The hon. gentleman ought to have informed himself on that question before he spoke. If he had, he would have found out that of the 9,000 people at work on the Pacific Railway in the direction of Port Arthur, there are nearly 7,000 French Canadians, and the hon. gentleman must know that in no season during the last ten years have farm labourers been so scarce as they were last season. Under these circumstances, we can understand the difficulty of obtaining labourers to complete the railway in the North-West. I think the hon. gentleman ought to have posted himself on that question before attempting to enlighten the House upon it. Now, Sir, I propose to allude briefly to the position taken by the hon. member for South Huron upon the financial question. Every speech that the hon. gentleman has made in this House he has prefaced with attacks of the most outrageous character on the present leader of the Government; and I was surprised, that you, Sir, who are so distinguished for fair play and impartiality, should have allowed these infamous attacks on the oldest political leader in this Dominion. I say that nothing will justify the shameful language that hon. gentleman used towards the leader of the Government. In 1873 he went to the polls condemning the right hon. gentleman. He went again in 1878 holding him up as one of the greatest villains this country ever produced; but the country told him: you have foully maligned that man, and we are prepared to follow him. The dose was repeated two years ago, and I say that hon. gentleman ought to be ashamed to repeat those expressions with reference to a gentleman who is entitled to the respect and esteem of every man on this continent. That hon. gentleman declared in this House the other day, that the expenditure had increased during six years to the extent of $10,000,000. Sir, that assertion was well met by the hon. gentleman who followed him. But I want to send out to the public, side by side with that speech of the hon. gentleman, a speech he delivered a few years ago, which will show what kind of a man we have to deal with. It is true the people thought they had sent him to oblivion a few years ago, but by the grace of Mr. McMillan he sits here again. Now, Sir, if he has any shame at all, I will give him an opportunity of showing it. We have heard of the silver shield, and I asked him the other night while he was making his speech which side of the shield he showed this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite must know that they have among them, as one of their leaders, a renegade from the Conservative party, and they must feel ashamed of his speeches in Parliament. The hon. gentleman's language is:

"I say that hon. gentlemen who support a Finance Minister, who in six years, from 1867 to 1874, added $10,000,000 a year to the annual expenditure, and left a further liability of $60,000,000, and who has since added $8,000,000 to the annual expenditure, should know well what great risks the country runs from such insane expenditures."

When the hon. member denounces in Parliament, the Government, he ought to recollect that, in the year 1872, before he knew whether his talent would be appreciated by the Reform party or not—when he was standing between heaven and earth, as it were, awaiting to see what party would take his wares—he then placed on record his views with regard to the right hon. the leader of the Government. He said: "I am prepared to place in his hands the expenditure of $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land; I am prepared to take his word for it; I have entire confidence in him," yet to-day he has the audacity to stand up here and criticise the hon. gentleman in unmeasured terms. Upon that occasion, a resolution was moved by Mr. Woods and seconded by Mr. Mills, as follows:—

"That all the words after 'be' to the end of the question be left out and the words, recommended to a Committee of the Whole House, in order to amend the same, so that so large a sum as $30,000,000 of money and so large a quantity of land as 50,000,000 of acres shall not be at the disposition of the will of the Government of the day, and so that the said money and lands shall only be disposed of by specific annual votes of Parliament, from time to time given, as shall seem to appear right and proper, so that Parliament shall not be divested of its most important constitutional function, namely, control over the public expenditure of the country, inserted instead thereof."

Mr. RYKERT.

He had that much confidence in the right hon. gentleman that he was prepared to trust him with the control of $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres, yet to-day he has the audacity to say that that hon. gentleman committed an infamous act and was unworthy the confidence of the people. I was referring to the statement made that the expenses had increased $10,000,000 from 1867 to 1873, and that it was due to the reckless management of the Government of that day. But what did the hon. gentleman say with reference to that increased expenditure. He said, when Minister of Finance, in his circular, which he sent to the English stock market:

"The whole of the debt has been incurred for legitimate objects of public utility. There has been expended on:

Canals, about.....	£ 5,500,000
Railways, including advances to and the cost of those actually owned by Canada.....	12,000,000
Lighthouses, river improvements, harbours, roads and public buildings.....	2,000,000
Compensation to the various Provinces for property and revenue surrendered to the Dominion, the purchase and organization of territories, and the freeing of lands in the Province of Quebec from the feudal tenure &c.....	5,000,000

He then goes on to say:

"The revenue has shown a continuous surplus during each year since the Confederation in 1867, although it has in the interval been charged with much heavy expenditure of an exceptional kind, such as outlay connected with the several Fenian attacks on the country, the acquisition or organization of new territories, and providing an adequate defensive force for the Dominion. The eight years since Confederation, therefore, exhibit an aggregate surplus of £2,448,111 (not including the Sinking Fund), which has been partially applied in the redemption of debt and partially expended on new works."

That was the circular of the hon. gentleman in England, but what did he do when he came out here? He made a speech a short time afterwards at Alymer, on the 22nd of September, where he forgot all his references to the bright side of the picture, and presented instead this dismal view:—

"Sir, I have asked myself more than once, and I now publicly repeat the question: was this done in sheer brutal ignorance and recklessness? or was it done of malice prepense? Did they design to scuttle the ship after they had plundered it? or was it only the last mad folly of the drunken crew before they had ran upon the breakers? Whatever the cause, that was the position of affairs when we came into office; those were the difficulties to which you have alluded in your address, and with which my hon. friend has been struggling ever since. Now there is no doubt the position was a critical one."

He was then referring to the $10,000,000 of increased expenditure from 1867 to 1873, which he had formerly characterized as having been expended in public works of great utility to the country, but which expenditure he now characterized as the last act of a drunken crew. Let us see what was the estimate formed of that hon. gentleman by his own friends. We have been compelled upon different occasions to listen to quotations from that side of the House taken from a very distinguished writer in this country, a writer of current events in the Bystander. If ever there was a member of this House properly gauged and a proper estimate of his character formed, that was done with reference to the hon. gentleman by that writer, who has so often had occasion to write about different members of this House and the other Parliament. I can point to nothing that, to my mind, more conclusively shows the real position that the hon. gentleman occupies in the estimation of his countrymen. Bystander says:

"Perhaps the recent political history of Canada has never been so boldly travestied by one as intelligent audience as the Finance Minister attempted to travesty it at Strathroy. His facts are almost invariably wrong, and his figures—well, his figures are plastic and accommodating. No public man, certainly since Confederation, has less right than Mr. Cartwright to attempt a show of consistency. Whether the souperon of personal pique against the Conservative leader, on the ground that his claims as a financier were contemptuously set aside, be true or not, there is certainly a verisimilitude about it, read in the light of the Minister's vindictive speeches against his former chief, which cannot be blinked. The attempt to play upon popular ignorance, or rather popular indifference, not merely to him and his antecedents, but to any party politics more than a year old, is futile. He is now responsible for the financial status and credit of the Dominion, and we have no hesitation in saying—although there is not the sign of a suitable successor on the other side—that he is not the man to play ducks and drakes with the future of the Dominion. His policy has been all wrong from first to last; he has borrowed money at ruinous rates, when he should have imposed taxes; he blames his predecessors for not imposing taxes when they were not wanted; his forecast of the future has egregiously failed in every year of his tenure of office; and, in addition to all his other deficiencies, he has the foulest tongue, save, perhaps, Mr. Francis Jones, in the Dominion. Incompetency is stamped upon the whole course of his Administration, and if posterity will not say of him what Sir Francis Dashwood expected contemporaries to remark, 'There goes the worst Chancellor of the Exchequer that ever lived,' it will be because they have forgotten all about him. * * * Mr. Cartwright is so eaten up of personal antipathies that he could not do any good as a Minister, if he would."

I think that I can safely relegate that hon. member to the position he ought to occupy in this House and the country. If ever there was a proper estimate of a man's character and ability and financial success, it is the one I have just read. When the hon. Minister of Railways spoke of the increased expenditure being in consequence of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in 1874, the hon. gentleman says it was not true. Let us have the proof. There again I must take a witness in whom I have not much confidence—the Globe newspaper. In a quotation which appeared in the Globe newspaper, taken from an Order in Council, passed 23rd July, 1874, by the late Government, I find the following language:—

"So anxious, however, were the present Government to remove any possible cause of complaint, that they did take means to increase the taxation very materially, in order to place themselves in a position to make arrangements for the prosecution of the initial and difficult portions of the line as soon as it was possible to do so; and, at the same time, a special confidential agent was deputed to British Columbia for the express purpose of conferring with the Government of that Province, and to endeavour to arrive at some understanding as to a course to be pursued which could be satisfactory to British Columbia and meet the circumstances of the Dominion."

Let me read another quotation from that Order in Council; and I think, when I have read that, the hon. gentleman will be ashamed of himself for having attacked the hon. Minister of Railways, if he has any shame in him at all. This, Sir, is a paragraph I have taken from the Order in Council. I have the documents here, for I generally arm myself with them when I face the hon. gentleman. I will make the quotation from it, and you will be able to see then whether he is right or not in contradicting the Minister of Railways.

"In order to enable the Government to carry out the proposal, which it was hoped the British Columbia Government would have accepted, the average rate of taxation was raised at the last Session about 15 per cent., and the excise duties on spirits and tobacco a corresponding rate, both involving additional taxation exceeding $3,000,000 on the transactions of the year."

What is the statement here? That they increased the taxation by $3,000,000. It was not true, said the hon. member facing me. Here are the records of his own Council. Now, I think I may safely let that member take the position he ought to take, and did take, when the electors of Centre Wellington took hold of him at the last election. And let me refer again to the other hon. member for Huron, his mate. He said they were fond of prophesying, and their prophecies were generally correct. Now, the gallant knight from Huron made a prophecy during the last Parliament, when he prophesied in reference to this Syndicate contract that it was not going to turn out as members upon this side expected. He thought he had a real bonanza in it, and the member chuckled over it like a little boy with a piece of candy. He said:

"This Bill would, to us, be a real election bonanza. I have no doubt that some, at any rate, of these gentlemen may expect to find it an election bonanza in quite another sense."

Did he find it an election bonanza? The electors of Centre Wellington knew all about him, they had heard his history, they heard from his own lips, and those electors, intelligent men as they were, said: You are unworthy of the confidence of the people, go back whence you came; and they sent him back accordingly. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to make another reference, and there is the difficulty we have in following preceding speakers. I have endeavoured to steer clear, so far, of what other hon. gentlemen have stated, but, after the eloquent speeches of the Minister of Railways and my hon. friend from Cardwell and other hon. gentlemen beside me, I found it difficult to decide upon what points I should address this House. I have endeavoured, so far, to steer clear of what those gentlemen spoke of, and I hope I may leave something for those who may follow me. The member for Huron spoke of the admirable speech of the member of West Durham, of that magnificent, that eloquent speech, which he said was one of the grandest efforts that Parliament ever heard. Well, I am prepared to say it was a very highly polished speech; I am prepared to say that no hon. gentleman could have exceeded him in sailing as close to the wind as he did on that occasion, that no other hon. gentleman could have appeared to meet the arguments and yet have avoided them as he did, and that no hon. gentleman could have strung together the English language in more beautiful style, but, strip the tassel of its tinsel, and you see the ingredients it is made of. That is all I can say of the hon. gentleman's speech. It is composed altogether of side issues, and I defy the hon. gentleman to point out one argument he advanced against the value of that security; I defy him to point out one argument in reference to the resolutions now before this House. He talked about the lack of information, he talked about the Syndicate contract being signed as a finality, he talked about the financial ability of the capitalists, he talked about the enormous expense of the prairie section of the railway, costing $3,000,000, he spoke about making speed at the expense of cost, he spoke about the Railway Act not being complied with, he spoke of the Syndicate members being members of the construction company as a violation of the Act, he spoke of the law requiring tenders—he made some twenty-six objections which had no more bearing upon the question than upon the building of a railway to the moon. But he did mention one or two points which I shall briefly touch upon before sitting down. One had reference to the monopoly and one to the eastern connections. He says, what right had they to the eastern connection. Where is he going to place them? Is he going to land the Company at Callander, in the midst of a wilderness? Are they to have no eastern connection at all? It was a matter of necessity, surrounded as they were by hostile railways, railways which had no sympathy whatever with the Pacific Railway, that they should in self-defence build their own railways and have an eastern connection. Was it in contemplation, when it was decided to build a line from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, to have a portion of it the Pacific Railway, and another portion something else? Not at all. It was always intended that they should have a railway through, although it is true that in the charter it was stated that they should form a connection with lines at Callander. Passing over the numerous objections of the hon. gentleman, I will take the most important ones to which he alluded, and one is the question of monopolies. He speaks of monopoly as something unheard of in this House. Let him turn to the Act of 1878, introduced by Mr. Mills, and he will find one of the greatest monopolies that could be conceived by any Government. It was handing over the whole of the North-West to lines running in all directions, east, west, north and south, as stated by the hon. gentleman, and giving the control to any body of corporators, no matter who they were, of 6,400 acres a mile. Was not that a greater monopoly than they say exists in the North-West under this Pacific Railway Company? The hon. gentleman says he has no objection if the Government are going to have the railway. If they run it, he says, there is no monopoly. I cannot see the force of that. It is just as much a monopoly in the Government as in a company.

What do the Company do with their lands? We have an evidence. This Company, although they are possessed of 21,000,000 of acres of land, cannot raise a single dollar on the English or American market with which to carry on their enterprise. Were they to hoard up their lands for all time to come? No company would do that. Their duty was to sell their land and make it valuable. They talk about a monopoly in reference to this land in the North-West. Who are these gentlemen who are crying out against monopoly? If any one takes up an Act of last Session and the preceding Session, and will go to the Committee Room and see the Acts of Parliament printed and not carried through Parliament, he will find a whole host of Grit members of Parliament asking for charters over that country, and not one of them placed a single plan before Parliament or said where they were going. They wanted to gridiron that country in every direction. And, because they failed to get charters, they are crying out against the monopoly. These are the men. It is because they could not get the railway charters and could not get control of the lands themselves that they are finding fault. Another class who are finding fault with the monopoly are the great promoters of colonization schemes, and I shall later on refer to these colonization companies. But these are the men who to-day are raising a rumpus in this country, and crying out against the great monopoly which they say is formed by this railway grant. They are disappointed because they could not get possession of this land themselves. We find also that the men who are now complaining of the monopoly in the North-West are the very ones who to-day would place us at the mercy of the United States, men like the member for North Norfolk, and other members of this House, whom I could name, who have interests in the North-West. What do they desire? They desire railways running from the North-West right through to the United States, sapping the life-blood of that territory, drawing the whole trade of the North-West to the United States, instead of bringing it through Canadian territory. Those are the men who are complaining about the landlordism there. Then we find speculators, who are disappointed because they cannot make money there. They are too lazy to make money in a proper way. They are men who have laid out town plots and cannot sell them. Persons who have bought these town plots in every direction are commencing to cry out about landlordism and terrorism—that the Government is trampling on the North-West. These are the people who are to-day villifying the Government. I have had the pleasure of going over the whole length of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I went there as spectator desirous of knowing what the country really was and what were its resources, and the sentiments of the population. Sir, I feel that no member has a right to stand on the floor of Parliament and discuss these important questions who does not know something about that country. What did I find? I know it is reported in the newspapers that I had villified the North-West. I did nothing of the kind. No man ever heard me say so. What I did say was this: In a private conversation in the presence of a reporter I said: "Rather than exchange my own happy home and go to the North-West to take a judgeship, I would rather stay at home; and that I would not sacrifice my own home for the whole North-West." I went on further to say, that I had for twenty-five long years been fighting the Grit party in my own county, and I would not surrender that county for the whole North-West Territory. But they would not publish that statement; if they had published the whole I would not have cared. I, Sir, do not villify my own country; I do not belong to the party that villifies its own country; I do not belong to that nationality that villifies its own country. On the contrary, I have done everything I could to encourage young men whom I found were desirous of going to the West, to go to the North-West Territory, where I thought they would have abundant opportunity for improving their condition. But, Sir, I did not find my own country all bad; I found good land and bad land. I attended public meetings and mingled with the settlers in order to ascertain what were the causes of the grievances of which they complained, and what did I find? A few speculators, a few politicians, who were circulating reports of the most damaging character all through the country. Let me refer to a statement made a few days ago in my own county by a man who was settled beyond Moose Jaw. He told me that before he left that place, about Christmas, he had a gathering of all the friends in the neighbourhood, and 120 heads of families sat down to dinner at Christmas. That did not show anything like the North-West being depopulated. It did not give evidence of the fact that they were crossing the line to the south. There is another thing we have heard complaints about. People are crying out about landlordism and terrorism. Sir, there is a set of speculators in our country, there are men to-day in Canada—I can name several if I choose to do so—men in my own town, who have large tracts in Dakota and Kansas, and who are waylaying every person going to the North-West Territory and trying to induce them to go to Dakota and examine the land. You will find many railway officers who are emigrant agents, so far as those territories are concerned. You ask for a ticket and you will find that ticket to be a prospective land ticket, given to you, either by the Albert Lea Route, or by the Chicago and North Western, to Crookston—no further. They will give you thirty days to go and select land. On these tickets you find that if you go to Dakota and take up land they will pay your expenses. And what is worse than all, I believe that railway companies in Canada encourage the dissemination of literature of that kind, which is doing no good to Canada. We find in every railway station cereals and grain of all kinds, put in bottles, exhibited before the general public, as advertisements of Dakota and Kansas. These are the people to-day who are doing all they can to cry down the country. I will venture to assert that if any right thinking man in Canada would take an impartial view of this question in all its bearings, he would come to the conclusion that the cry of landlordism and monopoly in the North-West emanates from a few disappointed Grit politicians and speculators who have lost the coveted opportunity of bettering their own condition. A great deal is said about the colonization schemes. Sir, these very men who are crying out about colonization schemes are the means of encouraging landlordism in that country—members of Parliament it may be; I see some of them facing me now—are themselves interested in colonization schemes—some of them. Consult the Canada Gazette and you will find names by the score of those patriots who are applicants as members of colonization schemes to purchase land in that country; and because the right hon. leader of the Government, as Minister of the Interior, saw fit to refuse their application, those gentlemen are now crying out in their disappointment about the danger of colonization schemes. Now, what are these companies doing? Are they doing good or bad work? Why, Sir, how many have been granted? Only twenty-eight companies have been formed there, with 3,000,000 acres of land and one half that land belongs to the settler. They are simply immigration agents as regards one half of it, and instead of their taking large quantities of that territory and locking it up in colonization schemes, only 1,500,000 acres are so locked up. But in what manner is it locked up? Let me again call hon. members of this Parliament as witnesses. Take an article of a few weeks ago in the Globe, November 2nd, 1883, and what do you find? This paper, of course, always says what is right, and it always condemns what is wrong. Now, speaking about colonization companies, hear what that paper says in the same issue in which they publish a letter from Mr. Armstrong, Managing Director of the York Farmers Colonization Company :

"It appears that this Company has a grant of 175,000 acres. It was projected, not for the purpose of speculation, but with the honest intention of settling up land. It has already placed some 150 persons on the land, and is doing everything in its power to make them comfortable. The whole of these companies, save about a score of them, were projected with purely speculative intent."

Now, only twenty-eight of these have acts of incorporation although hundreds applied for same, and among these speculative gentlemen—let me read you the list, and you will see what noble patriots they are. You will see how disinterested they are, when it comes to a question of their own pockets. I see an hon. gentleman staring in my face now who has been speaking about landlordism in that country, and who is disappointed because he could not get all he wanted there. It is, perhaps, well that while these colonization schemes are held out as creating landlordism—it is well, I say, to know who are the gentlemen applying for them, and who occupy positions as stockholders. First, we find on the list, the partner of the leader of the Opposition, Mr. J. K. Kerr. We also find the amiable member for Kingston (Mr. Gunn)—I only wish he had five colonization companies; every member in the House desires him to have good luck, no matter where it is. Then we have our esteemed, our venerable brother, our noble friend, from Perth, James Trow, M.P.

Mr. TROW. I never applied for an acre in my life, and never got an acre.

Mr. RYKERT. Your name is there. Now let us see. You will find in the Canada Gazette an application made by the High Wood Ranch Company, among the incorporators of which are Alexander Gunn and James Trow, M.P.'s. Now, I am quoting from the Canada Gazette. We find, going further on, the Settlers' Colonization Company, John Dryden, M.P.P. Then we find the leader of the Reform party in the city of Toronto, William F. McMaster. Then we find Carroll Ryan, of the Free Press, Ottawa, who was not satisfied with one Company—he goes the whole hog or nothing. He was not satisfied with the Birch Hills' Colonization Company, but he also had to strike for the Saskatchewan Forks Company. We find Charles W. Mitchell, proprietor of the Free Press, Ottawa, and John Cameron, editor of the London Advertiser—all high-minded and disinterested patriots when it suits their own interests. And yet these gentlemen are villifying the country when it suits their party interests. I also find, as stockholders, the names of Alfred Jaffray, of the Globe, H. S. Howland, the hon. member for North York, W. Mulock, M.P., the hon. David Reesor, and that noble patriot who sold himself—I won't say for a mess of pottage—the hon. R. W. Scott. We find all the opposition there is in this House to these schemes comes from gentlemen who were disappointed in their little enterprises. Many of them have succeeded; they have got their hands on that land which is going to result in a monopoly, and a stamping under foot of the people of the North-West. Sir, it is just as well the House and the country should know the exact kind of people we have there. Why it is put down as of untold value? I do not know whether the hon. member for Perth is responsible for this, but he is father of the pamphlet at all events. I find in a certain pamphlet sent out to the electors, with Mr. James Trow's compliments, this remark with respect to the question of monopoly :

"With respect to the transportation monopoly of the North-West for twenty years, the value is unknown, but it is greater than the whole cash bonus."

That is another reason why I say that if we are compelled to pay $22,000,000 to-day, out and out, for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and take it off the Company's hands and get rid of this gigantic monopoly, it is worth, according to the pamphlet, $25,000,000. Why should we not make haste in building the road? If we make haste and build the road in two years, we save a monopoly for five years. That must surely lighten the burdens of the country somewhat; but hon. gentlemen opposite do not see it in that light. There are other objections raised to which I shall not allude, because, no doubt, hon. members who will follow me, will be able to take up points I have omitted. Hon. gentlemen opposite have, I think, in a manner not creditable to them as members of the House, or members of the Reform party, stigmatized members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as men almost worse than scoundrels. They have spoken of Mr. Stephen's great work, and of the large amount he has spent in building a dwelling house. I know no member of the Company personally, but I do say that the best estimate I can form of their character is derived from the estimation in which they are held by the country. In the commercial world these men stand high, their record cannot be impeached; but hon. gentlemen have the audacity and meanness to criticise them as scoundrels and robbers, because they come here and state that they are in a position of financial difficulty, brought about not by their own conduct, but by men who have undertaken to decry and depreciate the position of the Company. It is unfair and unmanly to abuse men after that fashion. I have spoken of Mr. Hickson, of the Grand Trunk Railway, as a gentleman who has distinguished himself as one of the greatest railway men in Canada. I do not know him personally, but at the same time I have the highest admiration for him, and he is perfectly right to promote the interests of the great corporation of which he is the head, but at the same time he must not trample on the rights of our people or encroach on the rights of Parliament. I come now to ask myself, among other questions, have the Company shown satisfactorily what has brought about the present state of affairs? I have briefly alluded to the fact that the Company has been placed in an unfortunate position. They say that on account of the depression in stocks, which has prevailed since December, they have been unable to raise the amount of money they require. Hon. gentlemen opposite say, why does not the Company go to Europe and raise the money. It would be useless to go to England, as did Sir Hugh Allan, only to fail. It is the duty of the Company to show that they are not responsible for the present state of affairs. Have they done so? We find by reference to the Grand Trunk pamphlet that that Company have been most determined opponents to the Canadian Pacific Railway. They have been fighting the Company in every direction, and if the Government were able to take away from their lips the seal of secrecy, they would acknowledge that the Grand Trunk, backed up by leading men in England, had done what they could to decry and depress the Canadian Pacific Railway stock. We find in a document from Mr. Van Horne, other evidence of what was being done to depreciate the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. A telegram is in the following words:—

"LONDON, 4th February, 1884.

"Most determined opposition. All Canadian Pacific and kindred securities being organized in press and other places here on account Government money being used to help former to compete with Grand Trunk by Ontario and Quebec. Are Pacific authorities still unwilling to enter into any arrangement with Grand Trunk for joint working of Ontario and Quebec? Think we might negotiate for joint lease. This is different to former proposal for sale of road absolutely to Grand Trunk. If reply favourable, would send out experienced man to negotiate when thought necessary."

So we see that the Grand Trunk is not leaving a stone unturned to depress the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Then we find the leading organ of the party decrying the credit of the Company and the credit of this railway company, doing everything possible to depress the stock by saying that they would not pay a dollar of the guarantee of the stock, but that the directors would put the money into their own pockets. What more do we want on this point than the opinion expressed in Bradstreet's circular, which is a high authority in the commercial world. On November 3rd, 1883, that circular, which, to my mind, clearly gave a very strong reason why this House should not hesitate to declare that the Company has given a sufficient reason why it is not responsible for the present state of affairs. The circular of 3rd November says:

"One stock has sprung into prominence this week which, since it was placed on this market a year ago, remained obscure until this time. This is Canadian Pacific. The circumstances attending its manipulation reflect extreme discredit on the Canadian Government officials at Ottawa, who must certainly have acquiesced in this business, and must infallibly have a very prejudicial effect on all Canadian securities. The stock had been greatly advanced in price by the clique who work it, and, at the proper time, they caused a despatch to be sent from Montreal stating that the Canadian Government had guaranteed 3 per cent. dividends on the stock for the period of ten years. Upon this they evidently expected to be able to sell out, and, by well-recognized tricks of the stock market, they made quite a hurrah over it; but the tricks were exposed in time to prevent their being successful. A great deal of mystery seems to surround this guarantee business, but the only thing which does seem to stand out clear is that no such guarantee can be given without the sanction of the Canadian Parliament, which does not meet for a month or two. The misrepresentations made, and the evident control the Canadian Pacific Syndicats have of the Canadian press and the party in power at Ottawa, are matters of grave import to the Canadian people. It is quite evident that reform is urgently needed there. Wall-street is used to the tricks of corporations, and knows how to discount them; but the introduction of a Government as a factor in stock speculation is something new. Meantime, investors had better leave Canadian Pacific severely alone. Things seem to be shaping for an explosion up north."

That is one reason why the Canadian Pacific stock is not so high as it should be on the American market. We find also our own papers expressing antagonistic views. The Shareholder of February 15th says:

"There seems to be no power to galvanize Canadian Pacific upwards, the highest price reached this week being 55½, and so little is the demand that on Wednesday there was not a single transaction in this much-shunned stock."

The same journal went on to say, at another date, February 1st:

"Those numerous and influential London and New York papers, which so frequently reproduce our comments on the Canadian Pacific line, may now be able to judge how far they would be justified in recommending the particular stock in question to their readers while the present gloomy state of things prevail."

Hon. gentlemen will see from this, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, from the outset have been met on the stock market by the most outrageous statements, made by persons supposed to be high in authority, statements of a character which certainly could not meet with the approbation of right-thinking men. But we find further that these gentlemen are constantly crying down the country. I do not wonder that they should feel it necessary to speak about their patriotism, for they know right well that on no occasion has any party but their own rejoiced to know that Canada was not prosperous. Last year the member for South Brant was making his speech on the finances, when he was occupying the position, which no doubt will be occupied in a few nights hence by the gallant Knight from Huron; and he looked forward to the time when Canada would not be prosperous. He used the following language, which, I say, is unworthy of any parliamentarian, or any man having a respect for his own country. He said:

"This country will, as I have said, pass through a period of stringency and trade depression as well as of prosperity, and I venture to prophecy that in two years from now, the hon. Minister, if he still retains his position as hon. Minister of Finance, will find that he will be compelled to offer apologies; he will explain how this factory and that factory was closed; how wages in this department were lowered, and how it occurs that the exports have declined. I believe this, and I am confirmed in my views by writers in commercial journals, equally well informed with the hon. Minister of Finance. And then we, on this side of the House, will have the satisfaction of knowing that though we may have had to wait a few years, till a period of trial came round, yet it was bound to come at last."

MR. RYKERT.

These are the sentiments of a budding Finance Minister, and I repeat, that they are unworthy of a gentleman occupying a position in this Legislature as a representative of the people. I find, further, that the organ of the Grit party in this city, in order to cry down the credit of the Government, says that the expenses of the Government increased in one year by the sum of $30,000,000. The writer of that article knew very well that he was telling what was untrue; he knew that the Government were simply exchanging one security for another, that is, 4 per cent. securities for 5 per cents., and yet this writer was mean enough, and contemptible enough, to try to make the people believe that the Government had increased the expenditure of the country by $30,000,000 in one year. History repeats itself. Let me quote from the hon. member for West Durham, and I think the House will acknowledge that it is a parallel case. It was complained, and with reason, that the Company under the Act of 1874, was not in a position to put its stock on the market, and to raise funds to carry on its affairs. In 1881 we find that the hon. member for West Durham used these words:

"The collapse of the Northern Pacific Railway has occurred, and has precipitated a general collapse of credit in that country. That collapse had principally affected railways and railway enterprises, so that it was almost impossible to get European capitalists to look at a railway—at any rate in the United States. I do not believe I exaggerate when I say that hundreds of railways in the United States defaulted in the payment of their bonds; scores of them fell into the hands of receivers and were foreclosed, such was the discredited state of railway enterprise on this continent. There was a general crisis and depression. There was, therefore, a scarcity of capital available for such enterprises, even if they had not been discredited by the circumstances to which I have alluded. These were then the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman, more slightly than I did, allude as clearly bearing on the non-success of the tenders at that time."

He was speaking of the failure of the hon. member for East York to get tenders from the people of England to enable him to build that railway, and he gave as a reason, that railway enterprises in the United States had failed, that commercial bankruptcy had followed, and that these roads were in the hands of receivers. To-day we find that the stock of the Northern Pacific road, which brought down one of the richest men in America—that stock which sold in November, 1865, at 60 or 70, is now selling at 40 and 41, which is an evidence of what the people in the stock markets in the world think about the stocks of the country. I again ask myself whether the country will be benefited by the granting of this concession, and I may say that it will be benefited by opening up a direct communication across this continent without crossing through American territory, thus preventing immigrants from being deceived and decoyed by the American people. I say further, that while some people speak of Ontario as being sacrificed, no other Province is so much benefitted as that Province will be. I find that from the records of Parliament, out of the $14,000,000 which have been spent on the North-West Territories during the last two years, $6,000,000 have been drawn out, and that we have received on our money expended in that way 40 per cent., and yet they say Ontario is being sacrificed. The result of its construction would be that it would form feeders for all our railways. In the Local Legislature years ago, that Province was called upon to pass charter after charter for railways running in the direction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the country through which they pass, instead of being a rough and rugged country, the home of the wild cat and the hyena, as predicted by the hon. member for East York a short time before, is possessed of enormous resources; that its agricultural and mineral resources are being developed to an astounding extent, and the building of the railways will open to the Ontario Government a tract of land comprising at least 15,000,000 acres. I believe that instead of Ontario being sacrificed, that road will afford a safety valve for that Province. Let me call another witness on that point—I mean the hon. member for South Brant. This is not the first time we have heard of Ontario's interests being sacrificed. In Parliament, some years ago, this question was discussed, and I find in the Hansard of 1875, when some members on that side of the House were speaking in a depreciatory way, and saying that Ontario was going to be sacrificed, the hon. member for Brant spoke in these words:

"He failed to see where Ontario's interests had been sacrificed. Were they to be told that a subsidy for the construction of 180 miles through Ontario was opposed to Ontario's interests? The construction of that road would develop a country not now settled, but which would be settled, and the scheme could not be adverse to the interests of Ontario. * * * Looking at it from an out point of view he saw a railway was to be constructed for 200 miles through a portion of his Province which has never been opened up, and which was fit for settlement."

The late Government placed in their Estimates no less a sum than $6,500,000, in aid of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the railway on Vancouver Island, surveys, and a portion for the line north of Lake Superior through the Nipissing district, in spite of the resolution passed in 1872, declaring that they should not raise the rate of taxation to carry on that road. On that occasion, when the hon. member for West Durham was complaining of the amount which was being uselessly spent on the railway, as he claimed, the hon. member for Brant came out, as I have stated, in favour of Ontario. I say that the more you analyze that question the more you will find that Ontario will not suffer, but that it will get the lion's share of what is coming from the North West. Now, Sir, the next question I come to consider is, how shall we stand if this road is surrendered, as predicted by hon. gentlemen opposite? We shall have the completed road, worth $28,000,000; surveys, $5,000,000; the Canada Central, $1,500,000; telegraphs, $500,000; and the subsidy in cash, $25,000,000; making a total of $60,000,000. In addition to that, we shall have from the land sold, $8,858,024, making a total of $68,858,024, which has been expended in the building of that road; and if we add to that this loan of $22,500,000, as a bonus, the road will have cost us $91,358,024, a road built which hon. gentlemen opposite themselves have said would cost $103,000,000, and which other gentlemen have alleged would cost upwards of $150,000,000. I say that if the Company fails to redeem this loan, we shall receive the following:—

Main line completed.....	23,563,564
do to complete.....	27,000,000
Branch lines.....	3,827,092
Improvement of Government line.....	353,601
Equipment of line and branches.....	8,638,306
Callander to Brockville.....	3,203,050
Material, rails, etc.....	4,025,604
	$98,611,217
21,246,600 acres, at $2.....	42,493,200
	$141,104,417
For an expenditure of.....	91,358,024
Or an excess of.....	$49,746,393

I have omitted vessels and some other articles from this calculation, but I think it is sufficient to show that the security will be ample. Now, as regards the value of that road, I do not think I need say very much, but I will call into the witness box some gentlemen from the other side of the House. We find that in the Reform manifesto issued by these hon. gentlemen to the Reform electors, the value of the road independent of that gigantic monopoly was placed at $147,415,397. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite will not dispute their own statements, and I am sure my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow) would not, with his honest countenance, get up on a public platform and state that the security for this loan is not sufficient, in the face of the declarations of his own party as to the value of the road. We have also the testimony of the leader of the Opposition. That hon. gentleman, speaking of the Syndicate contract, said:

"The ascertained profits for the work in the prairie section, as far as we can gather them, are then a cash subsidy of $10,000 per mile for about 600 miles; 6,000,000 and 5,000,000 acres, which sold at an average of $2.68 an acre, $20,000,000 aggregating $26,100,000—while so far as we have been able to gather, the cost of the prairie section is $7,000,000, leaving a profit of say $19,000,000, apart from certain specialties to which I have already referred and which would add considerably to that profit."

Speaking of the value of the land and of the various assets of the Company, the hon. gentlemen, in the same speech, stated that the Company would be worth $135,000,000, and that they would have a profit, as between their expenditure and the value they were to receive in cash and lands and works, of from $37,000,000 to $42,000,000. If the property of this Company is so valuable, I venture to say that no hon. gentleman will assert that this country has not a fair security for the money we propose to advance. Then, we have the opinion of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who is always strong in his views. That hon. gentleman, speaking of the land grant, in 1881, said:

"If the Syndicate land grant is, as I assert it is, worth double the grant of land per mile made to the Union Pacific and Canadian Pacific, then we have an advantage of the Syndicate of 6,250 acres per mile, which at $4 amounts to $25,000 per mile, or at only $2 to $12,500."

The hon. gentleman goes on further to say:

"Well, we have seen such reference to the management and the aid granted this railway that practically the aid would amount to a sum sufficient to build the road, and leave the Company $73,000,000 to speculate upon in other directions, as duty, taxation, &c."

The hon. gentleman further says:

"The grand outcome will be, that the Company will have 2,700 miles of railway clear of cost and from $48,000,000 to $73,000,000 to boot."

Now, Sir, can any person, in the face of that evidence, dispute the value of the assets and securities which the Government have in making this loan to the Company? Now, Sir, I come to consider the last portion of my proposition. I propose to consider, are we in a financial position to make that loan? If, in 1874, we were able, in the state of our finances at that time, to make a grant of $29,777,000, and to guarantee 4 per cent. for twenty years on at least $4,000 per mile, or $11,980,000, besides granting 55,940,000 acres of land—it, in addition to all that, we were able to build a line of railway on Vancouver Island at a cost of $3,500,000—surely at this late date, when the prosperity of the country is notorious, and when our credit is higher than it ever has been before—surely we are able to go on and build this railway. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) speaking of the railway at that time, said:

"He did not propose to do anything but what he believed they could do, and he did not propose to do anything but what he believed to be within the preamble of the Bill of last Session, which was to the effect that the tax of the people, as it was when the original agreement was made, should not be increased."

We have there the positive declaration of the leader of the Government, that the country was in a financial position at that time to build the railway at an enormous cost. Then we find the organ of the party stating, on March 31st, 1878:

"The expenditure annually of two millions in the Province during the progress of the railway is another item in the new terms, and we are disposed to believe that this will not in practice be found to have imposed any greater burden than can be met by our present rate of taxation."

We also find the Finance Minister of that day, the member who represents Mr. McMillan in this House, stating:

"My advice is in view of these contingencies which always occur in a country like this, that we ought to consider the natural growth as a fair offset against the inevitable expenditure which must occur in the Dominion."

I would ask you if in the great march of commercial progress, the great march of the development of this country, as shown by the vitality it has displayed during the last two years, whether we are not in a position, with our capacity and our population of 4,000,000, to carry this out in 1885. The Minister of Finance went on to say:

"We have completed the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway, and are therefore free to turn our undivided energies and attention to the task of enlarging and improving our canals and constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have succeeded in making such arrangements with British Columbia as, though involving us in very considerable liabilities, are yet quite within our power to perform, and may add that although many of us thought from the beginning that the demands made upon us by that Province were unreasonable and unduly onerous, we are, nevertheless, prepared to discharge our obligations fairly, provided they can be brought within due bounds and in accordance with the spirit, if not indeed the true letter, of that contract. I have no doubt, therefore, that, if we persevere in the course I have indicated, in a very short time we shall be in a position of the highest credit. That such an enterprise is one which will require our utmost energies, I do not for one moment deny; but although I admit this, and admit also that while engaged in its prosecution we must be willing to forego other works of much greater immediate advantage, yet I hold that it is far better we should do so than even seem to fail in meeting the obligations to which I have referred. I believe that every man who has paid any serious attention to the future of Canada knows right well that with us this matter is a struggle for the possibility of carving out a distinct national existence."

These were sentiments applauded by every hon. member in this House, and they were expressed with a deficit of $1,900,000 staring them in the face. Yet they were not able to say no. I think that I have shown abundant evidence of our financial ability to advance the $22,500,000 without increasing the rate of taxation, but I will go further. We have, as a test of our financial position, the debt we have incurred since the Conservative Government came into power in 1878, amounting to $15,476,537. During that time we have expended in public works no less than $37,949,904. Is not that evidence of vitality and financial ability? Take, as a contrast, a corresponding view of the position of this country when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. In that brief space of time they increased the public debt by $34,665,623, and they expended on capital account $33,812,000. It seems to me, that if the question is considered in all its aspects, we must come to the conclusion that we are able, financially, to bear this burden. Let us look to this great North-West, which was spoken of so disparagingly by the hon. member for West Durham when he went down by the sea a few years ago and coquetted with the Maritime Provinces in the hope of gaining their support. The North-West, he said, is the cause of our deficits. I pointed out that instead of the North-West being the cause of our deficits, it was, I considered, the safety valve of this Dominion. In five years of Grit rule, the sum of $14,855,459 were expended, and we received back $1,499,472; in four years under Conservative rule the expenditure was $23,411,195, and we received back $7,526,158; or in other words, during the five years the Grits were in power they received 10 per cent. back for the money they invested in the North-West, whilst during the four years we were in power 33½ per cent. was received back of the amount expended. Does not that speak volumes for the North-West? showing, as it does, an increasing ratio of revenue, year after year, so that we can rely on their gradually not only meeting the disbursements we are called to make, but to pay the loan back. We find that while we have expended in the North-West $14,097,880 in two years, we have received back $6,247,190; or, in other words, we have received enough to pay off the interest at 4 per cent. on the whole investment and still have $5,683,315 towards the principal. It seems to me that at the rate we are going on in the North-West, the increased revenue which, in a few years, will amount to four or five million dollars, ought, in the course of five or six years, to pay off the whole loan of $22,500,000. The more that is analyzed the more it is evident this country has a great future before it. Those hon. gentlemen opposite loudly protested, they were going to appeal to the people. But hon. gentlemen know their protestations are but empty form. They have no desire to appeal to the people, and if they did they know what the result might be. They appealed in 1878, and with what result we all know. What was the answer they got from the people? The people said to them: You are constitutional grumblers; we gave you an opportunity in 1873 of distinguishing yourselves, of showing what you could do to build up your country; we placed you in power with a full Treasury, after a succession of surpluses, you were in a favourable position to carry out your measures, but the moment you got into power, with all your professions of sincerity and economy and honesty, you began to increase the expenditure, and in two years your extravagance had increased our expenditure by over $1,000,000. At the end of the five years you said you were nothing but flies on the wheel. Trade was paralyzed, the country was discouraged, and you took no means to build it up. The people soon found out who composed the crew that was bringing the ship to destruction. The hon. member for Grey then said he rejoiced that the hon. member for Lambton had an opportunity of holding the reins of power to put in practice his economical professions. He, like the rest, went down before the face of an indignant people. He, like the rest, who had given their subservient support to the Ministry, who proclaimed loudly their professions of economy, who pointed out the fact that the men who had preceded them, had increased the expenditure by $10,000,000, had the gratification of seeing it increased by another $1,000,000. Two years ago, we were told by the hon. leader of the Opposition he wanted a chance to come before the tribunal of the people. That hon. gentleman sent to the country a manifesto showing exactly what the position of affairs was. That hon. gentleman stated that the record of the Conservative party was a record of extravagance, a record of debauchery, a record of corruption. He went to the country crying out "Pacific Railway," but the very moment they took the hustings, the very moment the member for South Brant, and the member for Grey, and the member for Perth took the hustings, they did not proclaim the extravagance of the Government or refer to the Pacific Railway; but, instead of arguing the Pacific Railway question before the people, or saying how recklessly they had acted in giving the contract to the Syndicate, they changed their tactics, and shouted: "Ontario is invaded, Ontario's rights are in danger, the autonomy of the Province is destroyed, you are going to vote for a Government which put a veto upon the Streams Bill, a Government which is going to rob Ontario of its best interests, a Government which has refused to ratify the boundary award." Well, the people heard all the facts, and we have the results—there. I think these hon. gentlemen must be satisfied that, when they went to the country, they went with false cries and false promises, and that an intelligent people took a proper gauge of what their position really was and of what their promises were worth in consigning them to a position which they will occupy for a number of years to come. I regret having occupied the time of the House so long, but I felt that the occasion was one of such great importance that I should, before casting my vote, express to the people whom I represent, through this Parliament, the reasons for the course I felt called upon to take upon this occasion. I feel justified in saying that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have come to this House and made out a good case, that they are in a position of financial embarrassment so that they cannot possibly carry out this road in two years under present circumstances, that they are not responsible for the causes which have brought about that unfortunate state of affairs, that they have shown sufficient assets to justify us in loaning them our money, and I think we are justified in saying we will add this money, if necessary, to our capital account, and will lend them this money, for a term of years, and without adding to our taxation. I feel that I am justified in going to my constituents on these grounds, and that, if the vote were to be taken again to-morrow, the people will be satisfied, as they were two years ago, that the course which has been adopted is one in the best interests of the country. I have felt it my duty to consider the question, not in a political point of view, but in the best interests of the country. I believe this country has a noble future, I believe that, in the march of progress, this country has taken gigantic strides, and that, working alongside of our American neighbours on the other side of the line, with a less number of people, we have shown greater capacity than they have, and have proved that we are capable of doing more for the advancement of the best interests of our country. We are a people characterized by our industry and independence, and the future of the country will be great if we pursue the same course as in the past. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot do better than vote for the Resolutions, in regard to which everyone will say that we have redeemed our credit and acted in the best interests of our country.

Mr. CHARLTON moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been fully discussed for several days, and, I think, thoroughly discussed on both sides. Of course, the Government is in the hands of the House, but I think, in a measure of this kind, there must be some understanding across the floor as to when the vote shall be taken and we shall go into Committee. I think we must come to some understanding upon that. I would like very much to hear from the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition on that point.

Mr. BLAKE. What does the hon. gentleman propose?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I propose to-morrow—in the course of to-morrow's session. I think I shall be obliged to ask my friends to remain in the House until the Resolutions are carried. It is too important a question. It has been fully discussed, and the whole operations, or much of the operations, of the road are paralyzed until this question is decided one way or the other, whether the House is going to adopt the Resolutions, the relief proposed by the Government, or not.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman who spoke a few days ago laid down the rule that each speaker ought to answer the speech of his predecessor, the gentleman who spoke before him. If it is expected that that should be the case to-night, I shall, for once in my life, have to show the white feather, and admit my inability to do so, not because I am afraid of the job, but because I am not the fortunate possessor of a scrap-book. And at this late hour of the morning, even if I had the last ten years' files of the Globe and Mail, if I were to attempt to read a fair equivalent of what we have listened to, it would be a burden too great for the House to bear. In the few remarks with which for a few minutes I am going to take up the attention of the House, I shall confine myself altogether to the Resolutions before the House, and to one or two of the arguments which have been advanced in favour of those Resolutions, and which, in my humble opinion, are faulty. I wish to say that, so far as I am personally concerned—and I think I feel about the same as the other gentlemen on this side of the House—I for one have no personal feeling against the Syndicate. Almost every gentleman on the other side who has addressed the House has either stated in so many words, or assumed, that all who vote against these Resolutions are the declared enemies of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I wish to say more than that. So far from being opposed to the Company, so far from feeling any enmity, any dislike to the Company, I feel well disposed towards it. More than that; for a long time I have looked upon the acquisition of a road up through Ontario as the only hope we had of relief from the monopoly of the Grand Trunk Railway. More than that; I was one of a few individuals who felt that monopoly so bitterly that I was induced to spend a great deal of money and great deal more of valuable time in order to get a charter to relieve us from that monopoly. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has entered into an agreement to carry out that charter and build us our road, and, of course, if these Resolutions fail, our road will not be built. More than that; I see a draft of a Bill before the House in which that same Company ask for a charter to carry their line on to the other end of the Province, and that is intended to run through the constituency which I have the honour of representing. If these Resolutions fail, and the Company fail, that must be abandoned; and, were I to consult my own personal feelings, or the money benefit of those whom I represent, I would be induced to vote for the Resolutions. But it is quite possible, although gentlemen on the other side do not seem to understand—seem as though they could not understand—that a man may be no enemy to that Company, it is quite possible that he may be a well-wisher of the Company, and yet love his country better. And, Sir, it is quite possible that not only a man but a party may feel that the interests of the country are paramount to all other considerations—to the interests of any corporation or any body of men; and, so far as I know the hon. gentlemen with whom I am acting on this side of the House, that is exactly the position they are in now. Well, we have no enmity against the Company. While we wish them no embarrassment, we feel that the interests of the country are paramount to the interests of the Company. Now, Sir, I shall give a few reasons why I do not intend to support the Resolutions, but on the contrary to vote against them. The first is, that I am one of those who believe that the Company has received enough already, all that they are honestly entitled to. Let us see how much it is going to cost this Company to carry out their undertakings. The hon. Minister of Railways made rather merry over the leader of the Opposition the other night, because, as he said, he had made a very great mistake in estimating the cost of building the railway. He said that the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), had also been even more astray in his calculation—that these two gentlemen had put the figure a long way above $100,000,000. We have heard various statements, various estimates, of what this road is going to cost. I saw one made by the president of the road himself in January, 1884, in which he estimated the actual cost of the road at $85,700,000; and we have the assurance of the hon. Minister of Railways, that that included the equipment of the road; that it not only included that, but it included a very large sum of money that had been expended in making connections to the east to secure an outlet for that road; not only that, but it included some millions that had been set apart to pay dividends on the stock. I am speaking subject to correction, but as I understood him that is what he said. So it seems the road will actually cost the company a long way below $85,000,000, somewhere between $60,000,000 and $70,000,000 of actual outlay for the Company. Now let us look for a moment at what that Company has received. They received 25,000,000 acres of land, which has netted for the portion sold, $2.36 per acre. Supposing that it is all sold at the same price, and when the railways are built and the country is settled up—we have no reason to suppose the remainder will sell for any less—it will yield an aggregate sum of $59,000,000. They have received a cash subsidy of $25,000,000; add to that what they have received in road finished and handed over to them, $28,000,000, making a total of $112,000,000—far more than the road would ever cost them. It has been pointed out again that when this contract was given to this Company, the chief reason of the Government for giving them such liberal terms was the fact that when the road was finished the Company would have to run it for several years at a loss. It was stated on the floor of this House, it was stated on a hundred platforms, and reiterated by the newspapers, that the simple and sole reason why the Government had given this enormous amount was because, for many years after the road was constructed, they would have to run it at a loss, and therefore it was absolutely necessary that the Company should have sufficient to enable them to do it without pecuniary loss to themselves. But, Sir, that reason does not hold good now. We had a statement from the hon. Minister of Railways the other night, that from the very start this road was not only going to pay working expenses, but going to pay a large profit besides. For fear of misrepresenting let me just read what he did say :

"That the road, when constructed, will be a valuable property, there can be no reason to doubt. That the road, this coming year, will earn a very large amount of net profit over and above expenses of its operation, there cannot be a question; and when opened from end to end it is perfectly obvious that the Canadian Pacific Railway will be placed upon a complete and thoroughly sound foundation, as one of the best lines of railway communication that is to be found in the country."

So that there is no reason why the already enormous grant to this railway—nearly one and a-half times what the railway is going to cost the Company—should be implemented now. Then, Sir, there is the other objection, that this Company is giving no security, that they will not come back in a year or two and make a similar demand for increased subsidy. Now, we have been assured that this is not the case, that we have sufficient guarantee that this sum is going to finish the road. Well, Mr. Speaker, the same assurance was given when the charter was first granted to the Company. We were assured that beyond all peradventure, beyond all contingency, enough was given to the Company to finish the road and to run it during the time they would have to run it at a loss, that the Company would never be asking again for another cent. Now, I state my firm conviction that if these resolutions are carried, as I have no doubt they will be, we have no guarantee that before twelve months are passed the same demand will not be made to Parliament. Not only that, Sir, but the main reason given for coming to Parliament now and asking for this increased subsidy is that doing so will enable the Company to finish the contract in two years, and we are told that if it is not given they will have to fall back on the original terms of the charter, and take till 1891 to finish the road. Well, Sir, if time is all they want, we on this side of the House are quite willing to give them a little time. So far as I am concerned, I cannot see, after the reasoning I have heard, that the country is going to suffer any great detriment if the road is not finished for two or three years after the time mentioned. It has been pleaded that this assistance is necessary in the interests of the North-West, that it is necessary to have that country settled up as rapidly as possible. I admit it is necessary that that country should be settled up, but I question whether the rapidity of the completion of the road in two years is going to hasten the settlement of that country. I go a step further, and I say that from the knowledge I have of the sentiment of the people of this country, I do not believe that the rapidity of construction which we have had on that road through the prairie section has been any advantage to the North-West. We all know how necessary it is when people are settling in a new country, that they should have the aid and sympathy of neighbours, not only in developing the resources of the country, but from a social point of view.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

They need schools, they need churches, they need one another's assistance in carrying out their labours, and above all, they need a market. Therefore, Sir, I hold that instead of having settlers scattered here and there over 1,000 miles, it would have been far better if they had been congregated together somewhat, both from a financial and a social point of view, which would have been the case if the road had been built more slowly. It has been argued that its immediate construction is necessary in order to secure the Asiatic trade. But the Northern Pacific has been finished for a considerable time; both of the other Pacific Railways have been in operation for nearly twenty years. Trade has therefore got as firmly established in those channels as it can possibly get. When the Canadian Pacific Railway is finished, whether in two years or in five years, it will have to draw trade from other competing lines. So that argument falls completely to the ground. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) advanced an argument that I have not heard any hon. gentleman notice or attempt to answer. He said that British Columbia—if I quote his words correctly—is entitled to have this road finished at that time. I admit that British Columbia has a considerable grievance of which to complain. I admit that owing to the manner in which she has been treated, she is entitled to compensation. Let us look back at the circumstances of the case. In 1871, when British Columbia came into the Confederation, as one of the terms on which she came into Union, the Government agreed to build the road in the short time of ten years. I do not hesitate to declare my firm conviction that that was the most insane bargain that any Government of a civilized country ever made. What are the facts? Over 3,000 miles of a wilderness, an unknown country most of it, had to be traversed. It took the greater part of ten years to find if it were possible to build a railway through it. It took more than the balance of the time to find what was the best route on which to build the railway. I say again without hesitation, that it was one of the most insane bargains into which a Government ever entered, and it is a pity that the faith and honour of this country should have been so trifled with. But so far as British Columbia is concerned, that Province was a party to the bargain, and it has a legal right to insist that the bargain shall be fulfilled, otherwise that it shall be compensated. As I understand the remarks of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), the completion of the road within two years was going to be the compensation afforded to British Columbia. I have a document here which purports to be a report by the Minister of Justice who visited British Columbia for the express purpose of ascertaining the compensation to which they were entitled for the failure to build the road within the prescribed time. Allow me to read what the Minister of Justice says on that subject. After reciting what was to be done, he says :

"The above includes all to which there is any dispute or difference between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of British Columbia, and when carried into effect, will constitute a full settlement of all existing claims on either side, or by either Government."

Then this is to be embodied in legislation. An Act is going to be introduced and carried through, and I will have great pleasure in voting for it. In the preamble it is stated :

"And whereas, for the purpose of settling all existing disputes and difficulties between the two Governments, it has been agreed as follows."

It winds up in this way :

"This agreement is to be taken by the Province in full of all claims up to this date by the Province against the Dominion, in respect of delays in the commencement and construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in respect of the non-construction of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, and shall be taken by the Dominion Government in satisfaction of all claims for additional lands under the Terms of Union, but shall not be binding unless and until the same shall have been ratified by the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of British Columbia."

So we see, as regards British Columbia, that a claim for compensation does not enter as an element into the case at all. I desire briefly to notice a matter upon which much stress has been laid since the discussion began. We have been charged, over and over again, with being unpatriotic, because, forsooth, we have found fault with the Government land policy in the North-West and with the actions of the Syndicate. We have been called unpatriotic, not only by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), but also by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), who stated that the whole blame for the trouble and excitement prevailing there was chargeable to members sitting on this side of the House, and to the Reform press of the country. I hope, as regards both of those hon. gentlemen, that it was rather a slip of the tongue than a deliberate statement, because if it were a deliberate statement it would do more credit to their imagination than to their judgment. But supposing it were true—and I admit and I glory in the fact, that we have a press and a party which are not afraid to speak out when they see abuses existing in Governments and corporations: I have read that eighteen hundred years ago there was a class of men that hated the light, because their deeds were evil. That class was not confined to that age. There never has been a time in the history of the world when men who found fault with wrong-doing, especially wrong-doing in high places, were not denounced as traitors and unpatriotic men, and been persecuted and put to death itself for a manly vindication of the right. It is about time that the press and the party spoke out. What has been the course of the Government with respect to land settlement in the North-West? They have ground down the people with taxes. A man who goes there must, in making a start in life, pay from $400 to $500 taxes to the Government. The Government thus discourages settlers. It has long been known by the House and the country that when a man goes in and settles on a new farm and improves it, he pays enough for that farm. We, who have settled in Ontario, have found that to be the case. We entertained the hope that the Government would take warning by the Canada Land Company in Ontario, by the seigniorial tenure in Quebec and by absentee landlordism in Prince Edward Island, and have avoided the blunders committed a century ago. But no; for a long time, instead of the Government holding land for the benefit of the settler, it seemed as though it were given up to speculators and land companies until it became almost impossible for a man who went into the North-West and honestly desired to obtain a farm to find a place on which to rest the sole of his foot. But, Sir, it was just because the party press pointed out the abuses that the Government were compelled to change the regulations, and at last to re-open the railway belt and southern Manitoba for settlement. Has the same not been the case so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate is concerned? It is only a short time since public opinion, expressed through the press of the country, and at meetings of the inhabitants of the country, compelled them to lower the almost prohibitory rates that they were charging. Yet we are told that we are unpatriotic, that we are to blame, and that it is the party and the party press that is stirring up the feeling in Manitoba and the North-West. Do these hon. gentlemen mean to say that these men in the North-West are such fools, that in the middle of the winter they can be induced to leave their homes and travel hundreds of miles in order to discuss imaginary grievances; or that they sent a deputation to Ottawa to talk about evils which existed only in their imaginations? One more statement I wish to make, and that is, that the present is a most inopportune time to incur such an additional responsibility as the one which the Government is seeking to impose upon us. The hon. member for Cardwell—and I have a great respect for his abilities as a financier—stated the other night that this proposition was not going to add anything to the debt of the Dominion. More than that, he said that it was going to deduct an enormous amount, something like half a million of dollars, from our debt. For fear, however, that I should be accused of misrepresenting him, I will quote what he did say:

"It is true, the hon. the Finance Minister has to go to England, but he goes there to redeem $33,500,000 of the debt of Canada which bears to-day 5 per cent. He will be able to make an arrangement by which it will be no additional charge upon the country. It is simply a transfer of 4 per cent. for 5 per cent., and if he succeeds in doing it, he will further reduce the annual charge upon the people of this country by $131,470 by that transaction. Is that the thing to be alarmed at? Is that an evidence that this country is overburdening itself, is increasing its debt in such a way as seriously to imperil its future? On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, as regards $33,000,000 of that $50,000,000, to obtain which the hon. Finance Minister will have to go to England, it will not be an increase of our debt—measuring our debt by the annual charge upon the people, which is the true and proper way to measure it. It is actually a transaction by which we are to reduce, by over $100,000, the charges of that debt upon the people of this country; and as to this $22,500,000—the balance of this money—that is a sum for which we are actually to receive 5 per cent. I attach no importance to the fact that we may be able to borrow money at 4 per cent. and loan it at 5 per cent. That may be an incident of this bargain. But what I do attach importance to is, that this advance of $22,500,000; that this $34,000,000 which has to be borrowed on the English market; that this addition to our debt of $50,000,000, which we are asked to contemplate with horror by hon. gentlemen opposite, is an addition to our public debt which, so far from increasing our annual burdens, will reduce them by about $500,000."

Such is the statement which the hon. gentleman for Cardwell challenges us to controvert. What is the state of the case? Hon. gentlemen will have noticed how careless he is in handling his figures—four or five or even thirteen or fourteen millions are nothing to him; and thirty three and twenty-two and a half millions together make fifty millions according to his loose calculations. It is evident to every hon. member that if the Finance Minister can go home to the old country and borrow money at 4 per cent, instead of 5, he will save exactly 1 per cent. on $33,500,000, which amounts to $330,000. But, Sir, the interest on $22,500,000, at 4 per cent., amounts to $9,000,000. All he can save is $330,000; and instead of deducting from the yearly burdens of the country, the transaction adds to our yearly burdens $570,000, in the interest he will have to pay. I admit that by replacing our 5 per cent. securities by 4 per cent., the change would be one which would be a great boon to the country; but we must always bear in mind that suggestive word "if." We must bear in mind that our securities are constantly falling due, and that during the last three or four years there has been an unprecedented cheapness in the money markets of the world. In Canada we never had money so cheap before. Six per cent. county debentures, which six or seven years ago, were selling at 90 cents on the dollar, have been sold at 112 and 113. Not only so, but farmers and labouring men throughout the country, who were forced to encumber their property by mortgages, during the past three or four years, up to a recent date, were able to get money in many cases as low as 6 per cent., while they formerly paid 8 or 10. But all that has changed; and it is a notorious fact that in Ontario, at least, you can hardly effect a loan on first-class farm property, short of 8 per cent. Not only so, but there is a general stringency in the money market; and if hon. gentlemen want to know how it has been caused, I reply it has been caused by the National Policy, by means of which, money which should have gone to carry on the legitimate business of the country, is locked up and lying idle in various manufacturing enterprises, and it must lie there, because the banks dare not attempt to realize upon it. Well, Sir, I ask, in view of that fact, have you any right to assume that when our Finance Minister goes home again to borrow money, he will be able to obtain it at 4 per cent. And even supposing he will, is the argument of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) a correct one, that the simple fact of lowering our interest is equivalent to lowering the debt of the country? Would a farmer, for example, who has a mortgage of $3,000 at 8 per cent. on his farm, in the opinion of any sane man, not have increased his liabilities if he had changed his mortgage for one of $4,000 at 6 per cent? Suppose he went into the markets of the country to effect a further loan upon it, would he find any use in the plea that his debt was no higher now than when the mortgage amounted to only $3,000, because he was paying no more interest? Is that the way the public creditors of the country will regard our position? No; they will look at the sum total of our debt. Then, so far as the amount on that debt is concerned, I need not tell you that it is now nearly as high per capita as the debt of the United States. In twenty years after the people of the United States finished their tremendous war, we find this difference between them and us, that while they are paying off their debt so rapidly that they have decreased it one-third, we are increasing ours as fast as we can. I am convinced, and I believe the people throughout the country feel also, that next to dishonour, the most dreaded thing for a nation is debt; and, Sir, it is not the part of patriotism, under these circumstances, to do anything to increase the liabilities of the country. On the contrary, it seems to me that it is the part of patriotism now for us to ask the question, whither are we drifting? In view of the fact that the prediction uttered a year ago by the hon. Financial Minister that we had seven years of inflation and of plenty before us, has already been falsified, and that we are on the verge of a crisis through over-production—in view of these facts, I say, it is the part of patriotism to consider whither are we drifting, and to see to it that we are adding no unnecessary burdens to an altogether over-burdened country.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland), moved the adjournment of the debate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can only repeat what I said before, that I hope we shall be able to come to a conclusion on this question to-morrow, and with the consent of both sides, we should be able to do so. I feel it my duty to urge upon the House the importance of coming to a conclusion on this question as soon as possible.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think there will be any difficulty in coming to a conclusion on Wednesday, but I think there will be in doing so to-morrow night.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:25 o'clock, a. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 19th February, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at a quarter to Four o'clock.

THE HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, before any business is proceeded with, I desire to call your attention to the fact that it is more than three-quarters of an hour past the usual time of opening the House. I think this unusual delay in opening the House deserves remark, particularly on an evening when there is such an important debate in progress, and we are told that it is to close before we adjourn. I know that the responsibility does not rest upon you, Mr. Speaker, but on hon. gentlemen opposite, but I feel bound to protest on the part of independent members against the time being wasted in this manner.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

The Order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Sir Charles Tupper, "That the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed Resolutions (page 84) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway," and of Mr. Cameron's (Huron) motion in amendment (page 359) being read,

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). The few observations, Sir, which I propose to make on this question may not add anything to those which have already been advanced. I am well aware, Sir, that, at this stage of the discussion, it would be quite impossible that anything which I can say should throw new light upon this subject, or give even any additional weight to the views which have already been so ably presented. This discussion, however, Sir, has taken a somewhat wide range, a number of matters have been introduced which, to my mind, at least, have not had any direct bearing upon the question at issue, and it may, under these circumstances, not be considered amiss if I do nothing more than remind the House, lest any present have forgotten it, that the question we are considering is the desirability of making a loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and, before we vote upon this question, take one more glance at some of the leading features of this transaction. It is important, Sir, in considering a question of this magnitude, that we should look at it from every possible standpoint, that we should look at all the results which may flow either directly or indirectly from the action which we take at the present time. But it is also of equal, if not of greater importance, that we should direct our attention chiefly to those matters which are of primary and vital importance, and give to other considerations the relative weight to which they are fairly entitled, if we wish to arrive at a correct and intelligent decision. For these reasons, Sir, I shall not review many of the remarks which have been made by the other speakers. I shall not weary the House—and I am sure the House will thank me for this—by repeating the figures and the numerous calculations which have already been submitted to them. I may, in some cases, refer to the results of those calculations, but I shall endeavour to give a short and simple statement of this matter, and to refer to some considerations which I consider of importance, and by which I feel our judgment should be chiefly influenced. It is important, Sir, at the outset, that we should fix clearly before our minds the position of the Government, and the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and their relations to each other. When this question arose, you remember the main provisions of the contract that was entered into between them, and which still exists, by which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company undertook to complete the construction of a line of railway from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, to do it within a specified time, and for which they were to receive from the Government a fixed consideration. At the present time, a large portion of that work has been completed. Three years of the specified time have elapsed, and seven remain for the completion of the contract. It is under these circumstances that the Company have approached the Government with the proposition which is now before us, a proposition which may be briefly stated as follows: An offer to complete the work in two years from the present date, instead of seven, and that the Government, to enable them to do this, should make them a loan amounting to some $30,000,000. This they offer to repay in seven years, and for its repayment they offer security and a fair rate of interest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with that simple proposition before us, what are the propositions of first and vital importance which we, as a Parliament, are called upon to consider? I take them to be these: Whether it is in the interests of this country that we should make this loan; whether the advantages which may reasonably be expected to result from the more speedy completion of this contract are such as to justify the Government in granting the aid asked for; secondly, whether the position of the Government as one of the original contracting parties is in any wise affected or prejudiced by the arrangement that is now proposed; and thirdly, whether the security offered is sufficient to insure the repayment of the loan, and protect the Government and the country from ultimate loss. Now, Sir, with regard to the first of these questions, the advantages which we may expect to follow the vigorous prosecution and rapid completion of this work—these have already been pointed out; indeed they have been most exhaustively discussed by the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me. Among the more important of them I have noted these: The impetus that will be given to the trade and commerce of the country; the wealth that is always created where a line of railway is built and operated; the increase of population that follows the numberless domestic industries that spring up as if by magic all along the line, the early and rapid settlement of the country, the development of its resources, and the consequent increase in both our inter-provincial and our foreign trade. Mr. Speaker, with the history of the last two years fresh in our memory, I had supposed that every gentleman in this House would have admitted that these results must follow the vigorous prosecution of this work. Why, Sir, there is no one who has the least knowledge of the principles that govern trade and commerce but must admit that to arrest the progress of this work at the present time would be most disastrous to the trade of this country. We must all know that our progress and our prosperity in the immediate future are largely dependent upon, and must be proportionate to, the speed with which we push forward this great work to its completion. Our own experience in the last two years, the history of railway enterprises throughout the world, are lost upon us if we fail to recognize these facts. And yet, Sir, hon. gentlemen who have addressed this House in opposition to this measure, have suggested that we make progress at a less rapid rate, that we wait for slower growth and more gradual development. I will do these gentlemen the justice of stating that they express those views with a cautiousness and timidity that, to my mind at least, betray a want of confidence in the cause they are advocating; and I will say, Sir, that if there are hon. gentlemen in this House who entertain such views, I take direct issue with them upon this point. I counsel in this emergency no wavering or hesitating policy. The policy which has been propounded by the hon. Minister of Railways, though it has been assailed from every quarter, has not been shown to be either reckless or dangerous. It is a wise, prudent and progressive policy; the measure that has been submitted is a plain, practical and business-like transaction. It may be of advantage to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; it is at the same time a great advantage to this country. It is a policy which fully meets the emergency with which we are now brought face to face; it is a policy which insures permanence to the prosperity which this country now so happily enjoys, and as such, Sir, it is fairly entitled to our support. Then, with regard to the second question,—whether the position of the Government is prejudiced by this arrangement. I do not find, Sir, that it is affected or changed in any essential or important particular. Reference has been made to the fact that the $1,000,000 originally deposited by the Company to insure the performance of this contract, is to be withdrawn. But, Sir, that is not in consequence of, or in any way connected with, the transaction we are now considering. As has already been explained by the Minister of Railways, that is done in accordance with a principle that has been adopted in other contracts of this kind—that of returning the deposit to the contractors as the work progresses. Reference has also been made to the fact that a change is to be made in the mode of paying the subsidy. The mode that it is now proposed to adopt is that which hon. gentlemen opposite contended should have been adopted when the original contract was entered into; they should not object to its adoption now. But, Sir, it is not the mode of payment, but the amount that we are to pay, which is the important question for us to consider in this case; and, Sir, I find that that has not been changed to the extent of a single dollar, nor has the amount of work which the Company has to perform been diminished in the least degree. The main provisions of the original contract remain unchanged. The Company is relieved of none of the responsibilities which it then assumed; it assumes the additional responsibility of engaging to effect the earlier completion of this important work. Then, Sir, I pass to the third question, the question which, perhaps, above all others, demands from us careful and close consideration—that is, the nature and extent of the security that we are offered. Let us glance for a moment at the principal items in this security. First, we have the land. Various estimates has been made as to these lands. We have the estimates based upon former utterances of hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, estimates which have received the sanction of the public press, representing both the political parties in this country. We have had better estimates still, based upon the sales of land which have actually been made; and these estimates all tend to show that this land, at a fair estimate at the present time, is worth the full amount that we are asked to vote the Company. Indeed, had the Government submitted to this House a proposition to purchase back these lands, to take them from the Company for the sum we are asked to loan, the price would have been equivalent to about $1.50 an acre. I do not believe, I cannot believe, that there would have been a voice raised in this House against it. Had this proposal been to pay the Company in cash the estimated amount required to complete their contract in lieu of the 21,000,000 acres of land they are yet to receive, I believe, Sir, that such a proposition must have received universal approval and sanction throughout this country, so well known, and so definitely known, is the value of these lands at the present time. Then we have the line of railway itself with its branches. The value of this as a security, I admit is a subject which may give rise to considerable discussion. It is a subject upon which there may be difference of opinion, depending as it does upon the value of this undertaking as a commercial enterprise. Let us see, Sir, what evidence we have upon this point. We have the evidence which has already been given in the estimates before the House of the prospective traffic of the road, in the figures which have been submitted to show that the surplus products of the North-West will be sufficient to furnish it a profitable traffic. We have also had our attention drawn to the advantages which it possesses and which place it in a position to become a successful competitor for the great trans-continental trade that must in the future be developed. We have had also estimates based upon the experience of the last two years, statements submitted to the House in respect to these, showing that the net earnings of this road now average some hundred thousand dollars monthly, and that the earnings of 1883 have been largely in excess of those of 1882. We have still further evidence in the same direction, evidence which may be drawn from the very nature of the transaction we are now considering. It is well known, Sir, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have thus far been engaged in the construction of the least costly and most remunerative portions of their line, that the more costly and difficult and less profitable portions remain to be constructed; that it is to enable them to construct the latter that they are now making application to Parliament for aid. Now, Sir, I ask hon. members to consider whether the Company would place themselves in this position, whether they would come before the House with the proposition now submitted, if they had not the fullest confidence in the ultimate success of their whole line. Is it reasonable to suppose they would assume the responsibility of completing and operating the more difficult and costly and least profitable portions of their line, five years in advance of the time they were obliged to do so under the original contract, if they had any reason to suppose they would prove a burden upon their resources or that they would not at least be self-sustaining at an early date. Why, there are no persons in the world to-day in so good a position to form a correct opinion of the financial character of this great enterprise as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves, the men who are at present charged with its construction and its management. The fact that they have come to Parliament with the proposition before us; the fact that they are ready and willing to assume the responsibility to which I have referred; the further fact that in order to obtain the means to accomplish that end they are willing to offer, and do offer to pledge all they have on this great enterprise, the whole capital stock of the Company, the subsidies they are to receive from the Government, the entire land grant under their contract, the branch lines they have constructed and the property they have acquired in steamships and in connecting lines of railway—the fact that they submit this proposition is the strongest evidence which they can furnish of their confidence in the eventual success of the enterprise in which they are engaged. And here, Sir, it may not be amiss to direct attention to the wonderful change in public sentiment shown during the last few years on this point. We all remember when we dare scarcely hope that the receipts would be sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditure; when fears were entertained, and I believe honestly entertained, and opinions were openly and publicly expressed, that even if the road were built, the cost of operating it would be such as to involve the whole country in financial ruin. But to-day all this is changed. There is a confidence in the future of this country, and a corresponding confidence in the future of this great work; and I am glad to say that confidence is each day growing stronger. Then if we have before us such evidence as this of the sufficiency of the security which is offered, if we have good reason to believe that this will prove in the future a profitable investment, if we have reason to believe that the stock of this corporation will have a future value in the great stock markets of the world, if the lands, at a fair estimate, are worth the whole amount Parliament is asked to loan, if the position of the Government under the original contract is not prejudicially affected by this loan, if the advantages which we may expect to receive are so numerous and important as they have been shown to be, we have ample reason to justify us—more than this it becomes the duty of this Parliament to sanction the Resolutions which are now before the House. I do not intend to reply, at any length, to the arguments which have been used in opposition to this measure. I will merely refer to them to point out one or two important particulars in which their line of argument is defective. In the first place, while they ask us to reject this measure, they have not submitted any alternative proposition to ensure the speedy completion of this great work. They have taken a wide range in this discussion. They have criticised the original contract, they have offered objections to some of the details of the arrangement which is now proposed; but they have not assailed the position of the Government in regard to either the one or the other in any essential or important particular. And, Sir, they have not suggested, or attempted to suggest, any better method by which that most desirable object, the speedy completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway could be accomplished. And, Sir, their line of argument is open to another and even more serious objection, and that is its weak, indefinite, do-nothing character. The position which they assume is simply this: That in this emergency we take no action whatever, that we let the contract stand and ask the contractors to work it out as best they can, and when they can, regardless of the consequences to themselves or the country. It is admitted that it is desirable this great work should be speedily constructed; but they raise objections to the plan proposed. It is, no doubt, true that disastrous results would follow if the progress of this great work were stopped; but they ask us to wait and investigate. And after we have investigated, they tell us that it is impossible to state what may happen in the future. It is possible these estimates may not be accurate; it is possible the sum asked may not be sufficient to complete the line; it is possible the Company may return to Parliament at some future time for further aid. These are serious matters; this is a great responsibility to assume, and upon the whole they decide it is not wise to interfere; let matters take their own course, no doubt they will all come out right at the end, at all events let us hope so. That is about the line of argument which hon. gentlemen opposite have pursued upon this great question, this question which is of such vital moment to the people of this country. But, Sir, I am bound to say that that is not a new line of argument, for that is their general policy on questions of this kind. Sir, we must all have observed in the course of this discussion, the striking similarity between the policy which is advocated now, and the policy which those hon. gentlemen followed, when they were in power. During those years when the cloud of commercial depression spread darkness in the country, when business was almost at a standstill, when our industries were paralyzed, when our revenues were not sufficient to meet the annual expenditure, and our debt was yearly increasing, we were told the same story. In reply to every suggestion which was offered, we were told that the Government were powerless to afford relief; that it was unwise to attempt it, it was dangerous, it was impossible. Indeed, we were told it was necessary to pull down the whole fabric which political science had taken centuries to build, before it would be possible, by any legislative action, to remedy or improve the existing state of things. Under the circumstances which then surrounded them, they deliberately resolved to adopt, as they would have us do now, the policy of the illustrious Micawber, of waiting for something to turn up. They waited, then, and something did turn up, for when the people had an opportunity of expressing themselves on that policy, they denounced it in language so emphatic that it will never be forgotten. They hurled hon. gentlemen from power, and they have not since expressed any desire to reverse that verdict. My hon. friend from King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster), in his address, referred to the many warnings which had been uttered in the course of this debate. I venture to utter one more, and only one. I will warn the Liberal-Conservative party to beware of following the policy which hon. gentlemen followed then, and which they are advocating now, if they wish to escape their fate. Now, with regard to the reasons which may be urged in favour of adopting these Resolutions. There are some in addition to those I have already alluded to. Besides the favourable financial features of this transaction, there are other considerations of an important character, which should not be overlooked. The influence of the railway policy of this country is not correctly estimated, if we regard it only in its effects in our material prosperity, if we measure it simply by the wealth it creates, and the number of immigrants it brings to our shores. It has exerted in the past, it is exerting now, and it will exert in the future, a most powerful influence on the national life and the national character of this young country. Twenty years ago the Provinces which are represented here to-day, in this common Parliament, were comparatively strangers to each other. The Union was happily conceived and successfully accomplished. The construction of the Intercolonial Railway followed, and it has become the strongest among the many ties, commercial, social, and political, which unite the older Provinces at the present time. Since then there is no one event to which we can point in the history of this country, which has contributed so largely to create a national feeling among the people of Canada, which has done so much to foster the growth of national pride, and a spirit of national independence as the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. And, Sir, we may well regard with pride a work so grand in its conception, that the people of this country entered upon with so much courage, and in the face of so many difficulties, which has been prosecuted with so much vigour, and brought so near completion, and which promises such great results in the future of this country. Why, Sir, there has been created from east to west, through this whole Dominion, a feeling that in this great work we have a common interest, and that for its success we must lay aside all sectional prejudice and all local interests; that it is a work of such magnitude as to be worthy of our ambition as a people, and demands from us united action. It has done more. It has fixed upon this country, hitherto comparatively unknown, the attention of the world, and it has gained for Canada a fame and influence abroad which we have never had till now, and of which we justly may feel proud. Shall we then, Sir, I ask, venture to arrest the progress of this great work at the present time? What, I ask, would be the effect upon ourselves—what the effect upon the world? Shall we venture to wound the pride of the people of this country, to mar the reputation, and prestige we have gained, by hesitating now? The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) in the eloquent address which he delivered at the opening of Parliament, said that the feeling in the country was that the Canadian Pacific Railway must be built, and built as speedily as possible. I endorse that opinion. I feel that that hon. gentleman has rightly voiced the public sentiment of Canada. The people of this country loyally supported this undertaking at its inception, amid the difficulties and doubts which then surrounded it. They watched its progress from that time to the present with unabating interest, and with daily increasing confidence in its success, and they are looking for, and will demand, its completion without unnecessary delay. I have alluded, Sir, to the railway policy of the present Administration, as a progressive policy. I have alluded, also, to some of the results which have been achieved. But, Sir, there remains much yet to be accomplished. I feel, Sir, that we have in this Dominion advantages which place it in our power to take a leading part in the future development of the railway system of this continent; and, Sir, these advantages are slowly but surely being forced on the recognition of ourselves and of the world. One year ago, a company of foreign capitalists submitted to this Parliament a proposition to construct a line of railway to connect Montreal and the great West, by the shortest possible route, with St. John, Halifax and Louisburg. It was claimed, by the promoters of that scheme, that, were that line constructed, they would be enabled to materially shorten the time required for the journey between the great business centres of Great Britain and America. With that advantage over their competitors, they claimed that they could command a great volume of travel between this continent and the old country. The fact, Sir, that the amount of aid asked from the Government of this country was but a small proportion of the amount required for that great enterprise, and that the Company were willing to invest largely of their own capital in that scheme, was a strong proof of their confidence in its success. I am not aware that the statements which were made at that time have since been contradicted. I am not aware that the theory which was then advanced, and upon which the success of that scheme rests, has since been called in question. On the contrary, Sir, since public attention has been directed to that project, there has been a feeling created in its favour, and, there is to day a growing conviction in the public mind that the scheme has in it the essential elements of a sound commercial enterprise. It has been said that it may be unwise to connect our railways with the railway system of the great Republic to the south of us. I, Sir, for one do not apprehend much danger from that quarter; for I feel, with the facts to which I have referred before us, that it will yet be found that we have in this Dominion, not only those vast fertile plains which are capable of affording a profitable traffic to more than one great line of traffic, but that we have in our seaports upon the Atlantic coast advantages which will yet attract within our borders the mail and passenger service, as well as a fair share of the freight traffic of this great continent. It has been stated also in the course of this debate, that in these great enterprises speed means cost. From the standpoint from which I look at these questions, delay means loss, the full extent of which it is impossible for us to estimate. I was glad to learn, Sir, from the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways, in opening this debate, that he had already directed his attention to the important scheme to which I have just referred—that, with his usual quickness of perception, he has fully recognized the advantages we possess, and is alive to the importance of rendering them available at an early date; and, Sir, knowing as we do the great ability with which he deals with questions of this magnitude, knowing the decision and promptness with which he enters upon these great enterprises, and the untiring energy with which he carries forward to successful completion every scheme to which he is committed, I feel that this Parliament and the country may confidently expect that the Canadian Pacific Railway will be completed within the time now promised, and that we may also look for an early and rapid development of railway extension eastward, as well as the development of every other important portion of our railway system.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should apologize to the House for occupying its time in this discussion which has already dragged along at such length, and which is so thread-bare; but I trust, Sir, to be able to present a few thoughts in an original line, and perhaps to bring to the notice of the House some points which have not already been elicited in the course of this discussion.

Before entering upon the line which I have marked out for myself, I may be permitted to refer very briefly to some of the points made by one or two of the speakers who have more immediately preceded me. I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) last night, and I crave the indulgence of the House while I refer to a few points made by that hon. gentleman. Perhaps it is unnecessary for me to refer to his somewhat jocular allusion to my visit to Kent. I did visit that riding, Sir, and gave to the electors there, I think, some good advice, and I am fearful that the effect of that advice was counteracted by means the reverse of the character that I used to influence the electors. However that may be, the question now before the House was not an issue in that contest, and no disgrace attaches to the Reform party for failing to carry a riding which has long been a distinctively Conservative one. The hon. gentleman also referred to a speech made by me in 1876 with regard to the development of the North-West by railway construction. The Reform party have always been favourable to that policy, and the difference between them and hon. gentlemen who sit opposite is not as to the policy itself, but as to the mode of developing the country, as to the character of the measures best adapted to the purpose we all have in view. The hon. gentleman also spoke of the exaggerated estimates of the cost of this railway made by leading Reformers in 1873. Exaggerated estimates then made simply prove that the nature of the country was to a great extent unknown in 1873 to those who were speculating as to the cost of the road. It also proves that the calculations at that time, based upon the cost of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, to a large extent were made in ignorance of a certain matter which has since been developed, that is, the science of watering stock, which was brought to perfection by the gentlemen who constructed those roads, and which made the nominal cost nearly three times as great as the actual cost, and we based our calculations upon that nominal cost. The hon. gentleman also alluded in complimentary terms to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), to the hon. leader of the Opposition, and to several other hon. members on this side of the House, because their estimates of the quantity of arable land in the North-West were below the mark. Well, Sir, estimates of the quantity of arable land in the North-West were made at that time on the best data then obtainable, and based upon that data those estimates were correct. The hon. gentleman referred to my calculation of 95,000,000 acres of arable land, and proceeded to show that that calculation was incorrect. Well, Sir, we have assertions as to the quantity of arable land in that country, but these are mere assertions which are not based on ascertained facts to any great extent. It is true that as we open up the country we find that there is more good land there than we had expected; but what the extent of it is I hold that we have at present no means of knowing, and any estimates of its quantity are merely guess-work.

The hon. gentleman then had a fling at the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) who, he said, was prepared to support the hon. leader of the Government in 1872, and is not prepared to do so now, and is therefore inconsistent in his conduct. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong as a matter of fact. The hon. member for South Huron was not prepared to support the policy of the Conservative Government in 1872, but had for years ceased to be a supporter of that Government. In a speech delivered in the town of Simcoe, in my own constituency, in September, 1877, the hon. gentleman used this language:

"If I did support Sir John Macdonald in 1863, I supported him when his cause was desperate, when every man with a gleam of political sagacity knew that he had not a chance of bringing back a dozen members from Ontario at the general election in 1864. When I left him, remember that it was in the zenith of his power—when, if he had exercised common prudence, he would not in all human likelihood have been dislodged from the position he occupied in 1869 and 1870 for many years. It was at that time that I chose, publicly and openly, to withdraw my support and allegiance from him."

He left, not when his fortunes were falling, and it was becoming apparent that he was losing power; but, as the hon. gentleman says, when he was in the zenith of power, when there was no inducement for him to leave the Conservative party, in hopes of another party coming into power. The circumstances under which the hon. gentleman left that party are honourable to him, because he cannot be accused of expecting to receive place or power in consequence of his defection from their ranks. So much for the assertions of the hon. gentleman. As I do not wish to detain the House I will pass over other points made by the hon. gentleman, and only refer to them incidentally in the course of my remarks.

I may compliment the hon. gentleman who has spoken to-day most sincerely upon the logical and well delivered speech with which he has favoured the House, and on the whole, I must say, he confined himself to the question pretty closely. He did however digress on one or two occasions. In the matter of the National Policy, he descanted upon the condition of things that existed in this country at a time when the whole world were labouring under a great commercial depression, from 1874 to 1878, condemning the policy of the late Government and implying that that depression was due, not to the world-wide stagnation in trade that then existed, but to the policy of the Government. It is a singular circumstance that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) during all those years, was a supporter of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He actually presided at a meeting held, in 1881, by the hon. Edward Blake, leader of the Opposition, and his conversion is certainly of a more recent date than 1878. The Finance Minister shakes his head, I may be mistaken as to the matter of fact that the hon. gentleman presided at a meeting held by the leader of the Opposition.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is quite true.

Mr. CHARLTON. That was in 1881, yet that hon. gentleman stands up here to-day and talks of the evil results of the policy of the party which he supported from 1874 to 1881. The hon. gentleman also tells us that we asked this House to reject the measure now under consideration, but have submitted no alternative proposition. There is an alternative proposition. There is a motion in your hands, Mr. Speaker, calling, not for the rejection of this measure, but for a postponement of action until more definite information can be obtained by this House as to the character of the operations of the Company; until we can obtain information as to whether they have used the funds placed in their hands judiciously and honestly, and are entitled to the confidence of this country or not. That is the alternative proposition, and no reasonable man can deny the justice of the demand made by the Opposition in the resolution formulated that a committee of investigation shall sift to the bottom the affairs of the syndicate which was endowed with grants sufficient to enable it to accomplish the purpose it contracted with this Government to accomplish.

So much for the points made by the two speakers who have immediately preceded me; I will proceed now to consider some of the points at issue in this question. In doing so, I shall endeavour to confine myself to the question, and avoid diverging into a wider field. But I may be permitted to say at the outset that the tactics used by the hon. gentlemen opposite are calculated, and, in my belief, designed to mislead the country. They make glowing appeals to the country—appeals based upon the importance of opening up the North-West. But the North-West is already opened up. It is penetrated by a railway traversing it from the Red River to the base of the Rocky Mountains, and is connected by a railway line from the frontier of the United States with the whole American railway system. The North-West is as accessible to-day as it would be if the eastern section of the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior were constructed, and so far as the necessity exists of having a line to take our immigrants into the North-West, without passing through the United States, that can be done now. Immigration does not flow in during the winter season, and during the rest of the year we have our steamboat lines, connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Port Arthur, which gives us ample facilities to pour into that country hundreds of thousands of immigrants, through our own territory, if they choose to go in there. The argument, therefore, that additional expenditure is necessary for the purpose of developing the North-West is a fallacy because the North-West is thoroughly developed already, so far as the railway is concerned. We are told of the importance of securing the trans-continental trade which shall flow over this road when it reaches the Pacific Ocean. That is the merest bosh. The American Pacific railways, the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, the Northern Pacific and the Southern Pacific—all these roads get an insignificant portion of their traffic from the Chinese and Japanese trade, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, so far as the trans-continental trade is concerned, will never be benefited to any material degree. But, they say, it is highly important to reach British Columbia. No doubt, it is important. When we reach British Columbia we reach 20,000 people who will give additional business to this road. Yet the people of British Columbia were content with the provisions provided in the contract for the completion of the road in 1891. Their representatives in this House voted for that contract. They are not grumbling now because they cannot get the road sooner, and it is not, I believe, in the interests of the people of this country that the road should be constructed so rapidly as proposed. This question must be discussed on its own merits and not on side issues. Hon. gentlemen opposite endeavour to divert our attention from the real question at stake by raising a number of side issues. They raise the question of depreciating the value of the stock and of outside investments; they raise the question of dividends guaranteed on land grant bonds; they raise the question of making outside investments and sustaining outside investments; they raise the question of the construction company. We have the figures of this Canadian Pacific Railway Company presented to us, manipulated by skilful hands in such a manner as to mislead us and conceal the truth, and it is evident the intention of these parties, in presenting their case, is to mislead the people and divert their attention from the main facts.

There are certain leading facts that should be kept constantly in view, and by keeping which in view it is an easy matter to arrive at a just and proper conclusion. We made a contract, as a Government, with a syndicate to perform certain work, and we agreed to give the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate certain aid to enable them to perform that work. It will be found, when we examine into the case, that the syndicate have stepped outside of the line in which they contracted to act; it will be found that they are doing more than the Government asked them to do; it will be found that the aid the Government bestowed upon them was ample to enable them to do that which they contracted to perform, and that in appearing before this House and asking additional aid they are simply asking the Government to give them the means of carrying on a gigantic speculation outside of their contract. They are simply asking for the means of establishing a railway monopoly in the whole Dominion—a railway monopoly east of Lake Superior as complete as that which the charter grants them west of Lake Superior. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, a few nights ago, told that both parties were committed to the construction of this road in the same method and by the same mode. The Reform party were not committed to the construction of this road in ten years from 1871, as was provided by the articles of admission of British Columbia; they were not committed to the method and mode for the construction of the road adopted in 1872, when the charter for its construction was sold for the purpose of securing funds to be used in corrupting the electorate of Canada. They were not committed to that method and mode and to that scandal which resulted in the falling from power of hon. gentlemen opposite, and which resulted further in a still greater scandal, in a scandal which showed that the people of this country were debauched, morally, by twenty-five years of political corruption—that the apathy existing in the public mind was so great that crimes against the public interests such as that could not arouse it, and that men guilty of this failure to perform their duty and discharge their trust were returned to power. The Reform party were not committed to the method and mode adopted in 1881, when this contract was made without advertising for tenders and made under circumstances that exposed the Government to grave suspicion and on terms most onerous and oppressive to the people of this country.

Much has been said in the course of this debate about the policy of the Administration that preceded the Administration now in power, with reference to this railway. The Act of 1874 has been quoted and the attempt has been made to prove that my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), in the policy he adopted, was acting not in the interest of the country, but acting in a manner which was imposing heavier burdens, and securing the construction of this road at a greater expense than under the present contract. The Act of 1874 contained two permissive alternatives. That Act permitted the Government of the day to build that road under contract upon certain terms, putting a limit to the bonuses in land and money that might be paid to a company; or, the Act of 1874 permitted the Government to proceed with the construction of that road as a Government work. Now, the plan adopted by the Government was not to build that road under contract, not to contract with a company for the construction of the road, but to proceed with the construction of the road as a Government work; and when the gentlemen now in power came into power, they proceeded at first to carry out that plan, with certain modifications. The first proposal, in 1879, was to carry on the construction of that road, but to lessen the burden upon the people of Canada by procuring an Imperial guarantee. In 1880, they came down with a new proposal, still proposing to carry on the construction of that road as it had been carried on under the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie, and setting apart 100,000,000 acres of land, the sale of which was to form a fund for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. One year after that time, they adopted the plan of constructing it by contract, and they made a contract, and let the country bear in mind that they made that contract in violation of the law, they made that contract in violation of the Railway Law of 1871, they made that contract in violation of the Public Works Act of 1867. The one provided that no contract should be let upon the Canadian Pacific Railway without tenders having been first advertised for. The Public Works Act provided that no contract whatever should be let for a sum of more than $10,000 without tenders having been advertised for. But, in violation of both those Acts, in secret, without letting the country or Parliament into the secret, these gentlemen made a contract which, on the 11th December, 1881, they laid before the House; and I venture to say that there was not a supporter of the hon. gentleman who was not astounded at the extravagant, at the outrageous provisions of that syndicate contract. Sir, subsequent developments showed that the hon. gentlemen, in making that contract without advertising for tenders, had not discharged their duty or acted in the interests of the country, for, in a few short weeks after the terms of the contract were made known, they received an offer to build that road upon better terms.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hear a derisive "hear, hear." I say that the Government received an offer to build that road for $3,000,000 less money and for 3,000,000 less acres of land, and it was an offer from a more responsible company, a company higher in character, a company possessed of greater means, and a company who had, not as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agreed to put up a deposit of $1,000,000, but who did put a deposit of $1,600,000 as evidence of their good faith. If that was a bogus company, as was said, why did not the Government offer to take them at their word, why did they not offer to close with them, and so demonstrate the bogus character of that proposal, and permit my hon. friend, the Finance Minister, to sweep that $1,600,000 into the Treasury to swell the surplus? No, Sir, it was a bona fide, honest offer, an offer too high in itself, but an offer that was much better than the other, and I quote it to show that it was an offer which demonstrates that the Government in making this contract without advertising for tenders, failed to make as good a bargain as they might have made, and failed to do their duty to their constituents and to the country.

Referring to the plan adopted by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) and to the procedure under that plan, I may say that he was proceeding to give the North-West railway communication. Before he left office, he had completed a line from Pembina to Selkirk, he had also placed under contract, or provided for the construction of a road from Port Arthur to Selkirk, he had also placed under contract 100 miles of line from the Red River westward into the prairie region. Now, I propose to show—and this is a point which I believe no previous speaker has alluded to—that the natural result of the policy adopted and pursued by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) would have been to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway for many millions less than the plan which was adopted. The line from Port Arthur to Pembina is estimated to cost, with the branch from Emerson to Selkirk, $16,261,000. That is the estimate placed upon that work in the Department of my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways. I estimated that it would cost the Government of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) $17,000,000, but it would probably have been better constructed, because I believe some money has been expended in order to complete and perfect that line. This road would have been continued westward—it was being continued westward—and the question which would have arisen here, when we reached the Red River, would have been how rapidly we should proceed westward. I have always held that the building of a road with extreme rapidity through a wilderness is injudicious and unwise, and if the Canadian Pacific Railway had been constructed and pushed into the interior from the Red River in advance of settlement, it would have been pushed with sufficient rapidity. If it had afforded to the settlers who poured in there, railway facilities, the means of reaching market with their products, and the means of getting to their farms, the Government would have discharged its duty in affording railway facilities to that country. In 1881, when we were discussing this syndicate contract, I presented a plan to the Government. I do not know if my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, will recollect it or not—I urged upon the Government the advisability of constructing the prairie section first; I pointed out to them that probably a bonus of 2,000 acres of land per mile would secure the construction of the road from the Red River to the Rocky Mountains, with the road from Port Arthur to the Red River added to the bonus; I pointed out to them that, when the road had reached the Rocky Mountains at that moderate cost, the country would have been partially developed, the difficulties which beset the enterprise, those difficulties which were imaginary would be shown to be imaginary, and that the construction of the balance of that road—the portions from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific and from Port Arthur to Callander—could have been procured in five years at greatly less expense than at that time. Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not recollect that I urged that proposal. It was a policy of precisely this character which was being pursued by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He was pushing the road through the prairie section, he would have continued to push it through the interior to the mountains, and, as that road progressed through the interior towards the mountains, it would have developed a large trade, the Government would have been encouraged in carrying it on, because the road would have paid from the outset. Let us see what would have been the probable result of this policy. Bear in mind that the North-West was already opened; bear in mind that that country was accessible; bear in mind that the land policy of that country was in the hands of men who would have been governed by common sense ideas, who would have adopted regulations calculated to promote the immigration to the settlement of that country, who would not have been guilty of such an insane policy as to place the price of public lands in that country 75 cents an acre higher than the price in the United States, our rivals for the immigration to the West, who would not have hampered the settler in his attempts to reach that country, who would not have imposed taxes upon his lumber, or upon his agricultural implements, who would not have handed him over to the tender mercies of a monopoly for the prices he would have to pay, outward for the carriage of his productions, and inward for that of what he would have to buy. And bearing in mind the differences that have existed between the policies of the two parties, and you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, the greater rapidity with which the North-West would have been settled under the auspices of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie). Well, Sir, under the impetus that would have been given by this common sense policy to the settlement and development of that country, this road would have progressed towards the mountains. We will suppose the Government had continued to construct this road until it reached the mountains, that it had built the 1,000 miles to the mountains, that in the meantime it had constructed lateral branches of 500 miles in length, and along with the Thunder Bay and Pembina line, with the 500 miles of branches wholly equipped, let us see what that road would have cost. We will allow $12,000,000 to have built the 1,000 miles to the mountains. The Minister of Railways once estimated the cost, at the utmost, at $13,000,000, probably $10,000,000—we will call it $12,000,000. We will estimate the cost of the 500 miles of branches at $10,000 per mile, or $5,000,000; the Thunder Bay and Pembina section at $17,000,000; we will estimate the cost of the equipment of the 2,000 miles of road and branches from Port Arthur to the mountains, at $6,000,000 and we would have $40,000,000 representing the cost of road from Lake Superior to the mountains, with a connection with the American system of railways, with 500 miles of branches, and with ample equipment. Now, when that point had been reached, when that road had been pushed to the mountains in advance of settlement, say, in 1885, do you believe that the natural outcome would not have been that the Government could have secured the construction of the eastern division and of the western division by bestowing this road equipped, by giving a road costing the Government $40,000,000 as a bonus for constructing the rest? Why, Sir, we are told that the Canadian Pacific Railway last year, although pushed through the prairies, although bridging great distances where there are no settlers, although a thousand miles of road had been constructed to afford facilities to the settlers that might have settled along 200 miles of that road, that notwithstanding all that that road last year earned, including transport of materials, $5,420,000; and that its net earnings the last nine months were $978,000, if that were the case the road built under the circumstances I have named, a road equipped in this manner, a road paying handsome dividends on the cost of $40,000,000, if offered as a bonus in 1885, would inevitably have secured the construction of the rest of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There would have been no difficulty about it at all; and had my hon. friend the Minister of Railways listened to the advice that was given him in 1831, when the contract was under discussion, and had he proceeded to construct that portion of this road that crosses the prairies before he had arranged for the construction of the rest, he would have saved to this country scores of millions beyond a shadow of a doubt. Now, Sir, what would the balance of the road cost? By present estimate it would cost about $43,000,000—that is if we bestowed a road costing $40,000,000, and a paying road, it would have secured the construction of the balance of the road costing $43,000,000 more. No difficulty whatever would have been experienced in securing the building of the balance of the road upon those terms. The road could have been secured in the following five years and would have been ready by the year 1890. What would have been the saving under this plan? Well, Sir, we give to the syndicate $25,000,000 in cash; we build for the syndicate $23,000,000 worth of road—and those estimates, I fear, are likely to be exceeded; that represents $53,000,000. If, by pursuing the policy I have laid down, we had built this road to the mountains, and then give it as a bonus worth $40,000,000, we would have secured the construction in this manner of the balance of the road from Callander to the Pacific Ocean in 1890 at a cash expense of $40,000,000; we would have saved $13,000,000 in cash, and the entire land grant of 25,000,000 acres. Now, Sir, this calculation is a reasonable one; this calculation, I have no doubt, would have substantially been realized, this result would have been attained, had the policy that was being pursued by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) been continued by him, or by his successors, up to the present time.

Having made this digression, which, I think, is a pertinent one, having pointed out to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, how he himself might have saved the country $13,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 acres of land, my next question is: What did this Syndicate contract to do? We have this Syndicate before us to-day asking for millions of money to enable them to buy lines in the United States, to buy lines in Quebec, to buy lines in Ontario, to lay the foundations of a syndicate empire extending over the whole of this Dominion. It is for these purposes they require the money, not for carrying out the contract made with this Government. What did they contract to do? Why, Sir, they contracted to build a line from Nipissing to Port Arthur, and they contracted to build a line from Red River to Kamloops. They contracted to complete this road by 1891, and the estimated cost of performing this contract was $50,000,000. They contracted, furthermore, to maintain and operate a line from Nipissing to Port Moody, when it was completed, for ten years. These are the simple provisions of that contract; these are all the stipulations that the syndicate made; all that they undertook to perform; all that they were bound to perform by that contract. And, Sir, what was the Government to do and to permit in return for this? The Government was to give the syndicate the benefit of all the surveys, amounting to $5,000,000; it was to give the syndicate 707 miles of completed railway—all but about 200 miles in the most difficult portion of the road—the 707 miles costing $23,000,000; to give in cash $25,000,000; it was to give 25,000,000 acres of land, which my hon. friend the Minister of Railways estimates at $50,000,000; it was to give to the syndicate a monopoly of transportation in the North-West for twenty years; to give exemption from taxation and from duty on material; it was to give the syndicate the privilege of dividing 10 per cent. dividends on capital; but it neglected to make any provisions or restrictions as to watered stock. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways says this was a magnificent subvention; truly, it was, Sir, I shall be able to show that this subvention was more than sufficient to build the entire road; I will be able to show that this subvention was millions more than the syndicate required to carry out the terms of the contract they made with this Government. They were to expend $50,000,000 to complete a portion of the road for themselves. They were to receive from the Government in cash $25,000,000; they were to receive in road completed, $28,000,000; they were to receive in land, $50,000,000; total, $103,000,000. Now, deducting from this the entire cost of the road, and the syndicate would have a road from Nipissing to the Pacific with $25,000,000 in their pockets. These were the conditions. This was the condition upon which the syndicate contracted with the Government, and this was the amount of aid that they were to receive. Now they had additional resources. In addition to the land grant, in addition to the cash subsidy, in addition to the expenditure by the Government of $28,000,000, they had the power to issue bonds upon their road to the amount of $10,000 per mile, a source from which they could have realized $26,000,000. They had power to issue preference stock to the extent of $26,000,000. They had power to issue ordinary stock to the extent of $25,000,000. From these three sources they could have realized $77,000,000, in addition to the $25,000,000, over and above the cost of the road with which the Government presented them, making a total of $102,000,000 of resources in the hands of the syndicate in excess of the amount the entire road would have cost them, less the amount of equipment. Or, if they confined themselves to the issue of $25,000,000 in common stock and issued neither bonds nor preferred stock, they would still have the road clear of cost with a balance of $52,000,000, counting the land at $2 per acre. Now, were these resources sufficient to enable the syndicate to carry out their contract? Is the Company with that magnificent subvention, as the hon. gentleman termed it, a subvention $25,000,000 greater than was necessary to build the entire road, without counting on their powers to issue common stock or bonds of preferred stock, justified in coming before this House to-day and asking for further aid to the extent of $22,500,000 in cash and the postponement of payments due to the Government? I maintain they are not.

What did Canada contract to pay for under this bargain? Did it contract to pay for a road from Nipissing to Montreal? It did not; and it was unnecessary for the syndicate to secure such a road until they required an outlet. Any road running in that direction would have been glad to have made terms with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to carry their traffic. It would have been an easy matter in the case of the Canada Central to have made a consolidation, and to have taken that road in as part of the Canadian Pacific Railway system after the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed. It was premature to purchase the road in advance of the time when the Canadian Pacific Railway required an outlet. Did we contract for a road to Portland, in the State of Maine? We did not, and it was unnecessary for the syndicate to have acquired such a road. Did we contract with the syndicate to acquire a road to Brockville? We did not. Did we contract with the syndicate for a road from Ottawa to Detroit? We did not. Did we contract with the syndicate for a road from Toronto to Owen Sound? We did not. Did we contract with the syndicate that we should back them up in making war upon the Grand Trunk and become a party to that conflict? We did not. Did we contract with the syndicate to establish a railway monopoly east of Lake Superior as perfect and galling as the monopoly existing under that contract west of Lake Superior? No; that was not a part of the contract. Did we contract with the syndicate to build a palace for its president, and endow its members with millions of dollars for investment in stocks in England, and other enterprises? We did not. Did we contract to stand sponsors for the ambitious and far-reaching designs of railway kings, to make the whole Dominion subsidiary and tributary to them? No, we did not. We are not parties to any such contract; but it is to carry out a contract of that character, to aid them to realize their designs, that they come and ask Parliament for an additional subvention to the amount of $23,500,000. Were the syndicate able to carry out the contract stipulations? The syndicate were able to carry out their contract; they were endowed with ample means to carry it out. What have they expended? What did the Minister of Railways tell us the other day they had expended—expended on legitimate portions of the work which they contracted to perform? The hon. gentleman told us they had expended on the main line: Nipissing division, $3,249,791; Lake Superior division, $2,299,783; western division, $17,529,175; equipment, $6,130,792; being a total of $29,209,549 as the amount expended by the syndicate upon the legitimate contract which they made with the Government. How much of that is water we do not know. Of that $17,529,175 presumed to represent the cost of the prairie section, we have reason to suspect that millions of dollars are represented by water, that that portion of the road cost millions of dollars less than represented, and that the actual bona fide expenditure given as being over $9,000,000 would probably fall short of $25,000,000. But what have they received from all sources, admitting they have honestly made this expenditure? They have received, cash subsidy $12,289,000, bonuses $250,000, sale of town sites $1,000,000, net earnings during the last nine months to January 15th, $978,000, sale of land bonds $10,000,000, deducting land sales $8,858,000, $1,142,000, land sold $3,858,000, the proceeds of $55,000,000 stock sold $25,300,000, loan on $10,000,000 stock pledged—I do not know where, I should like to know where—$4,950,000, making in all the total cash receipts of the syndicate $54,247,000, while the expenditure upon the legitimate portion of the contract only amounts to $29,209,541. It appears therefore that the syndicate have received in excess of the amount they have expended on the main line, being the work covered by the contract, $25,037,459. The figures are incontrovertible. They may show what they please as to certain expenditures outside of the main line, as to expenditures on railways in the United States, on railways in Ontario, on railways in Quebec, on terminus sites, on palaces, on investment in funds; but keeping the leading fact in mind that the syndicate contracted with the Government to build the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and received a subvention to enable them to do that; that upon that contract they have expended $29,209,541 and have received from all sources in cash $54,247,000; keeping in mind the further fact that they have received $25,037,459 more than they have expended on the work professed to be performed—I say it is an outrage on the people of the country and upon this Parliament that the Company which have already received $25,000,000 more from the Government than they have expended on the contract, should appear before this Parliament and ask for $22,500,000 more.

Sir LEONAD TILLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Minister of Finance says "hear, hear." I suppose his financial ability so far transcends that of ordinary mortals that he is able to see the propriety of this transaction. I am unable to see it. And, Sir, the position of the road is even more favourable than I have indicated, because a portion of the expenditure, or the money counted as expenditure, was made on unfinished portions which are entitled to draw both land and cash subsidies so soon as the sections partially completed are entirely finished. The estimated cost of completing the road upon which this expenditure of $29,000,000 odd has been made is, we are told $27,000,000. We will accept that estimate. They have received in excess of the amount they have expendent, as I have said, $25,037,000. They are entitled to receive when the road is completed in cash $12,700,000 more, which brings up the amount to $37,737,000 to cover an estimated expenditure of $27,000,000. Clearly, Sir, the syndicate are not under the necessity of calling upon this House or this country to furnish them the means to complete the road, when they actually have in hand, or will have in hand, in cash when the road is completed $10,747,000 more than the main line is to cost. And in addition they will have the unsold lands of the land grant amounting to 21,241,000 acres. And if they require more funds they have power to bond the road for $10,000 per mile, to issue preferred stock to the extent of $10,000 per mile; they have $35,000,000 of the unissued common stock to place on the market; and these amounts with the surplus from the main line, $10,747,459, make a total of $97,747,459 in cash, without trenching on their resources, when the road is completed. So much for the ability of the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate to carry out their contract. Why, the position of that Company was so strong when the contract was made, that with the cash subsidy, with the $25,000,000 of stock issued at par, and with $25,000,000 of bonded debt placed on that road, they would have been enabled to build it, and have $25,000,000 with which to equip it. There is no excuse for this Company—no reason why they should be in financial difficulties, no reason why they should be compelled to come to this House, seeking help to bridge over these difficulties. Their resources were ample and abundant. They had millions upon millions in excess of the sum required to enable them to discharge the contract which they made with the Government of Canada.

To what then, Sir, are these embarrassments due? As I have said, one cause of this embarrassment is the desire to own the entire railway system of this Dominion. They have reached so far towards a realization of that desire as to own all the roads in this Dominion, except those belonging to one particular system, and that system they are now making war upon with a desire to sweep it into the great maw of this all-devouring maelstrom. I say it was a mistake to deposit $8,710,000 with the Government to guarantee future dividends. Why, Sir, if that was a good policy, it would have been better policy to have deposited the whole proceeds of the bonds, in order to secure dividends for a longer term of years, or at a higher rate of interest. They locked up this $8,710,000, which they required to use, and should have used, for other purposes. It was bad policy to pay dividends on capital before they were earned, for they used their capital to the extent of $2,128,000 with which to pay dividends. The haste with which the road has been constructed has involved the Company in difficulties; the recklessness of the Company, and their hostility to other roads, have also involved them in difficulty. They have acted the part of an Ishmael, whose hand was against every other road, and they may expect that the hand of every other road will be against them. They are involved in difficulties in consequence of their Credit Mobilier transactions, and the suspicions that are attached to them, because the men connected with the Company were not above suspicion, and because the country had fears that they intended to unload upon the innocent stockholders, and slip out with millions upon millions of dollars. It is for these reasons that this Company with its magnificent subvention—a subvention of $25,000,000, of money, land subsidy and railway completed, more than was required to build the whole road—it is for these reasons that this Company with its ample resources, is to-day a mendicant, knocking at the doors of Parliament for $22,500,000. Sir, are we called upon to pay for this wild career of extravagance? Are we called upon to uphold this monopoly creator? Are we to endow these railway kings with the millions they now possess, and the added millions they expect hereafter to possess—are we to pay the cost of their incapacity? Are we to launch out millions more because these men have proved totally inadequate to the task they had before them, and have demonstrated their incapacity to every railway and business man in the Dominion?

I propose to examine more fully the claims of these gentlemen to public confidence, but before doing so I have a few words to say about a species of rascality that these men have perpetrated upon this country—a species of rascality for which the perpetrators deserve the condemnation of every honest man. I refer to stock-watering.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) ever heard of the operation called stock-watering? I understand that he once watered the stock of a company somewhat different from a railway company. In 1844 a Bill was introduced by Mr. Gladstone, and passed by the English Parliament, prohibiting dividends of more than 10 per cent. being paid by railway corporations. The origin of the operation called stock-watering, was an attempt to evade that law in England, by increasing the amount of stock, so that dividends of more than 10 per cent. could be distributed to stockholders by the nominal increase of the stock. This was the origin of the modern science of railway stock-watering. That sort of thing, like almost all kinds of rascality, has been improved upon in the United States. It has been carried on there to a vast and almost unlimited extent, and our friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate are apt scholars, and have shown that they comprehend the system thoroughly. They have not only learned the lesson, but they have learned to act upon it, and they did act upon it. I propose to call attention to a few examples of stock-watering. At this juncture they will no doubt, be interesting to the House and to the country. They will also be instructive to the country, and they will show the magnitude of the crime which has been perpetrated against the interests of the country, perpetrated with comparative impunity until recent years in the United States, but perpetrated here by the syndicate, with the connivance and knowledge of the Government.

An hon. MEMBER. With their assistance.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, with their assistance.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CHARLTON. I beg pardon, Mr. Speaker, if in stating a fact I have transcended the limits of parliamentary propriety. I shall first call attention to the Western Union Telegraph Company of the United States, and invite the attention of hon. members to the figures I am about to give them. It affords one of the most prominent examples of stock-watering ever known in the history of corporations. That company has been manipulated by men fully the equals, in ability to manipulate things, of the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Jay Gould was one of them, and I might recount the name of several eminent men of the same kind. In 1857 the Western Union took over the Ezra Cornell Company telegraph line, which cost $150,000, and they stocked it at $2,000,000. That was a pretty fair degree of watering. They next purchased the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Louisville line, costing $400,000, which they stocked at $5,000,000. They next purchased a Pennsylvania line, and one from New York to Buffalo by way of Albany, and they issued three shares of stock for each share of cost. They next bought the Atlantic and Ohio line, at a cost of $200,000, and they stocked it at $800,000. They next absorbed eight small lines in Ohio, which cost $200,000, and they stocked them at $600,000. In 1863 the capital stock was increased to $11,000,000. The plant had actually cost

$2,250,000, and they proceeded to issue scrip dividends for 100 per cent., thus doubling the stock, and making it $22,000,000 upon an actual outlay of $2,250,000, and they went on to pay 8 per cent. on the watered stock. They then purchased the Pacific and Atlantic Company's telegraph line, at a cost of $500,000, and they paid interest upon $2,000,000. They then leased the Southern Atlantic for 99 years at a cost of $250,000, and they issued bonds, paying 5 per cent. interest on $9,500,000. In 1877 they purchased the Atlantic and Pacific line belonging to Jay Gould, which cost $1,000,000, paying for it $9,000,000 in stock of the Western Union. They next bought the American Union line for $15,000,000 in stock, it costing less than $4,000,000. They next issued to the original stockholders of the Western Union, to compensate them for their steals in these various companies, $15,500,000 in stock. At this time the stock stands at $80,000,000, no less than $6,000,000 of which was watered, and the whole plant of the Western Union could be replaced for $22,500,000. Now, Sir, we in this country have the privilege of paying tribute to this gang of thieves—for they are nothing more or less, and the people of the United States are paying 8 per cent. dividends from year to year upon stock of which $63,000,000 out of $80,000,000 is watered. They are paying these men $5,040,000 every year upon fictitious stock. This interest compounded amounts to $63,000,000 in nine years, and then the people commence paying the sum again, so that the long suffering people of the United States and Canada are paying these plunderers this large amount of money over and over again in each recurring cycle of nine years. This stock-watering it is thus seen becomes a permanent tax on the people. Now, I propose to cite to the House one or two instances of stock-watering in connection with railroads in the United States. The New York Central Railway has to-day a capital stock of $89,428,000, of which experts say that $53,000,000 is water. The public are paying to the New York Central Railroad 8 per cent. dividend every year upon $53,000,000 of stealings, and every nine years if these dividends are compounded, the people are paying the whole amount over again. The original cost of the Erie Railroad was $16,500,000, and it has added to this the enormous amount of $30,500,000 of watered stock. By whom was this stock of these roads watered? Why, by Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jay Gould and other swindlers, who are only different from ordinary swindlers in the greater amount in which they swindle their victims, and that is the policy that is being adopted by this Canadian Pacific Railway Company with the concurrence of this Government. I may read some extracts from a report of the New York Chamber of Commerce, with regard to this great abuse that exists in the United States. In the report of the Committee of the New York Chamber of Commerce on railroad transportation, for the year 1881, I find the following:—

“This practice of creating fictitious values in public enterprises is perhaps the most detrimental to the public interest of all the abuses attending the uncontrolled management of railroad and telegraph corporations. It is accomplished by many different methods. Construction or development companies are a favourite method. The Credit Mobilier, in connection with the Union Pacific road, is a case in point, and a more recent instance is illustrated by the following, from the Graphic, of March 16th, 1881. The Central Construction Company is now paying at its office, No. 80, Broadway, a final dividend in Western Union Telegraph Company, new stock at par of 150 per cent. on the $5,000,000 of subscriptions made last year for the construction of the American Union Lines. With the previous dividend of 150 per cent. in American Union Stock, this gives to the subscribers the equivalent of 300 per cent. in a New Western Union Stock at par on their investment. This was the first of the construction companies established by Jay Gould, and whose subscriptions have been so eagerly sought by the wiser class of investors. The others are said to promise to pay fully as well as this, capitalizing surplus earnings in another form of stock watering, which is described by the Legislative Committee of 1878, which investigated the coal combination, as follows: ‘During the receipt of these enormous profits many of the coal corporations, as was the case with railroads not engaged in the coal carrying trade, unable, under their charters, or for other reasons, to declare dividends upon their stock that would absorb their unexpended surplus, issued additional stock to the stockholders, for which they paid nothing—in-argued what is commonly known as stock-watering, or a capitalization of surplus earnings, which is in substance exacting money from the people, creating an indebtedness representing the same, and making this the basis for forever asking the public to pay interest upon their own money so exacted. Even stealings have, in the past, been capitalized, prominent examples of which are found in the former management of Erie and New York and New Haven Railroads. The Schuyler frauds of the latter were at one time famous. The president of the road, Mr. Schuyler, issued and sold a large amount of bonds, applying the proceeds to his own use. It might be thought that the stockholders would have assessed themselves to make up the deficiency caused by the unfaithfulness of their own servant, but instead of doing this they increased their capital, or in other words issued and sold stock enough to cover the fraudulent bonds, and since that time have maintained rates high enough to pay dividends, generally of 10 per cent. upon the whole amount of stock thus inflated. What would be thought of a merchant making a bad debt who assessed the amount upon his paying customers? and even this would not compare to the injustice of the other, for when the bad debt had been assessed and paid, that would end it, but in the case of the increased stock of the New Haven and other railroads, it remains a burden upon the public so long as rates for transportation are maintained high enough to yield dividends upon it."

But, Sir, it is unnecessary to multiply examples. I have given enough details to show to the House and the country the character of these manipulations, and I wish now to present, in one general view, the result of their manipulations in railway property over the whole United States. I find by Poor's Railway Manual for 1883, that for the three years ending December 31st, 1882, the increase in capital and indebtedness of the railways of the United States was $2,023,646,000; and that the actual cash expenditure was $1,050,000,000. The water represented in this expenditure was $973,646,000, or 48 per cent. of the assumed capital and indebtedness of the roads constructed in the United States those three years. Well, Sir, if we apply the same ratio to the entire capital of the railways in the United States, what do we find? And with reference to that ratio, I presume it is below the actual fact, for during the last three years public attention has been awakened to this subject, and the difficulty of watering stock has become somewhat greater than it was in previous years. Yet, applying the ratio of 48 per cent. to the whole railway stock in the United States, I find that at that time the total number of miles of railway in the United States was 112,412, and that the total amount of money invested in railways was $6,895,663,000. Of this, $3,456,078,000 was capital stock, $3,184,415,000 funded debt, and $255,170,000 was floating debt. This represented an average cost of $61,342 per mile. Taking 48 per cent. of this as water or $29,444 per mile, the actual cash cost per mile was $31,898; so that the total amount of water in railways of the United States on the 31st of December, 1882, amounted to the almost incredible sum of $3,309,918,000, and the actual cash investment was $3,585,745,000. Now, the net earnings upon the nominal investment for the year 1882 was 4½ per cent.; and upon that basis, Sir, the people of the United States were paying upon the water included in the stock of the various railway corporations $148,946,000. Sir, it is something stupendous that frauds of this kind should have attained such a great magnitude in that country as to impose an annual tax of that enormous amount upon the people. This is the irresponsible and dangerous power that the hon. Minister of Railways gives. What may become of the condition of the country if the people are not alive to their interests, if the rulers of the country are not honest enough to guard the interests of the taxpayers in place of playing into the hands of syndicates and monopolies, it would be difficult to predict. Railway manipulators are willing to pay liberal sums for aid. There is one instance in which they paid a bribe of $150,000 to one member of the New York Assembly. These corporations are willing to pay for privileges that enable them to tax the country. $148,000,000 a year was worth something, and they were willing to launch out money enough to put these schemes through. I find in the same annual report of the Chamber of Commerce that I quoted from some time ago, a quotation with regard to the designs of these railway corporations in thwarting the ends of justice. The quotation is in reference to the denunciation by President Stanford, of the Pacific Railway who, in unmeasured terms, denounced the decision of the Supreme Court, in the Central Pacific Railway case—a company which possessed a property valued at $186,000,000, built altogether out of funds supplied by the people. The president of that company had the effrontery to assail and denounce the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Railway interest came dangerously near securing the appointment of Stanley Mathews, the most prominent railway attorney in the United States, as one of the judges of the United States Supreme Court. This article says:

"It may, however, account for the recent attempts to place upon the Supreme Court Bench a prominent railway attorney, and in the face of such utterance it behooves all patriotic citizens to jealously guard against the preferment in any department of our Government of men who have been the servants of great public corporations, who are likely to sympathize with these corporations to the detriment of the public interests."

Have we any men in this House who are the servants of great corporations, who sympathize and whose interests are identical with great railway corporations? I do not give the answer, I ask the question; the country will ask the question; the country will weigh the evidence with regard to the question and arrive at a conclusion on this matter. In the United States public sentiment has been keenly aroused on this subject. The people there are alive to the fact that they are paying millions upon millions upon watered stock in the shape of charges upon transportation. I find in this same report of the Chamber of Commerce that David Davis, a United States Senator, says in reference to this matter:

"The rapid growth of corporate power and the malign influence which it exerts by combination upon the National and State Legislature, is a well-grounded cause of alarm. A struggle is pending in the near future between this over-grown power, with its vast ramifications all over the Union, and a hard grip on much of the political machinery, on the one hand, and the people in an unorganized condition, on the other, for the control of the Government."

That struggle which is pending in the United States is a struggle from which we are free. It has never come here. The struggle as to whether the people or the railway corporation should control the Government in the United States is not at issue here to-day because one great railway corporation in this country does control the Government of this country. They have dictated their terms and the Government are their creatures, if we can judge by their acts and their subserviency. We have no such disturbing element in our politics, unfortunately for the country. But this question will be discussed in the Legislature of this country. We will discuss it, although we are few in numbers; and although we can exercise no influence upon that majority that wait at the back of the Government, we may, perhaps, in some small degree, arouse the people of this country to a sense of the danger impending over them. But whether we may or not, we will at least discharge the duty that devolves upon us of protesting against this outrage on popular rights. I hope the press will discuss this, and I hope that public sentiment will ultimately be aroused, even if there is a degree of apathy existing now which is discouraging to those who have the best interests of their country at heart.

I spoke a few minutes ago on the enormous bribe paid in the Legislature of the State of New York of $150,000 to a member for his vote and influence. That is but a specimen of the influence exercised by these railway corporations upon the legislative bodies of the United States. I do not know whether we have anything of that kind here, and I am fain to believe that we have not, for the simple reason, perhaps, that there was no necessity to use such pressure for the purpose of obtaining privileges that the Government seem only too willing to accord. But I think I will be able to show, whether undue influence has been used or not, that the Government have accorded this Company privileges far exceeding any bonuses or any privileges granted by the legislatures or the Congress of the United States to any railway corporation in that country. The Government themselves are stakeholders in the ventures of this Company. They have in their hands to-day $35,000,000 of stock unissued, waiting for manipulation that will enable certain rings to take it at perhaps 5, 10, or 15 cents on the dollar; the Government has played into the hands of this corporation by giving it a monopoly clause and by allowing it to expand the limit of its common stock four-fold in order that they might secure four times the dividend that they are authorized to secure under the 10 per cent. dividend limitation of the contract. The Government have allowed the Company to expand their $25,000,000 of stock to $100,000,000. The first $5,000,000 was placed at par under the provisions of the contract; the next $20,000,000 was taken at 25 cents on the dollar. That was a pretty fair degree of water; we do not know whether anything was ever paid on that stock, and that is one of the things we would like to have a committee enquire into—to ascertain whether this $25,000,000 of stock was placed in the hands of men who paid nothing on it, or what amount they did pay. $30,000,000 were placed at 61, making a total issue of $55,000,000, on which was realized $25,300,000. $10,000,000 of stock has been pledged to secure an advance of $4,950,000. What is this North American Construction Company of which we have heard so much? It is four-fifths syndicate and one-fifth water. If this construction company had been enabled to carry out their designs, the result would have been that they would have secured $35,000,000 and $10,000,000 or $45,000,000 of unissued stock at 15 cents on the dollar and $100,000,000 of stock would have been floated, representing the resources placed in the hands of the road, of $30,000,000 of cash and $70,000,000 of water; this water representing something more substantial than wine, but the process of converting it from one to the other performed not by beneficent miraculous intervention, but by a disgraceful piece of rascality, and, upon this water, this $70,000,000 of water, the business of this country would pay annually, in 10 per cent. dividends, $7,000,000, and at the expiration of every seven and a-half years, they would have paid the whole $70,000,000, and would commence paying it again, and so ad infinitum, if Providence permitted the Syndicate to exist long enough. And, Sir, as I said before, the Government is an accomplice in this matter; the Government is playing into the hands of these men, the Government is enabling them to do this. They authorized them to raise their common stock from $25,000,000 to $100,000,000, presumably for the express purpose of enabling them to water their stock, and enabling them to saddle upon the people of this country $70,000,000 of water, for the people of the North-West to pay dividends upon. Sir, is there any surety that the thing will stop here? Is there no possibility that this is no more than the commencement? Have we not the possibility in the future of farther swindles? Are not further swindles possible in the issue of preferred stocks? Are not further swindles possible in connection with the placing upon this road of bonded debt? Are not further swindles possible in connection with further increases in the common capital stock of this Company? I tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is practically no limit to the outrages, the betrayal of the interests of the people in this matter, that may be perpetrated. The watch-dogs of the flock are ranging the hills with the wolves; the flock is scattered without a protector.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Bow-wow.

Mr. CHARLTON. Somebody says "bow-wow." Well, it may be well enough; that is what the dogs say, and it comes from the dogs' side, those who watch the flock. But they are saying "bow-wow" in the wrong direction; they are not "bow-wowing" at the wolves, but at those who are attempting to protect the interests of the country.

The next thing I wish to refer to is, the war which this Company is making upon a rival institution. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that we have any connection, or that there is any need that we should have any connection with the rivalries of railways. Railways will have their rivalries, and cut rates, and it is proper for us to leave them to settle those rivalries as best they may. But we protest that the Government should back one of the combatants in one of these rivalries. We hold, or I hold, that with the Grand Trunk placed in the position it is, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, seeking to drive it to the wall and entering the lists as its competitor, the Government, is taking an unfair position as to the Grand Trunk Railway, when it becomes the backer and sponsor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, as it were, enters the field itself as a combatant against the Grand Trunk. The Government is worthy of condemnation for this, and I have shown that the difficulties of the syndicate result largely from its rivalry with other railway lines. The chief difference between the two roads is that one is an example of successful management, an example of retrieving itself from great difficulties through the best use of the means at its command, and the other an example of falling into difficulties through recklessness, incompetency, and want of ability to perform successfully the task entrusted to it. That is the difference between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, owing to its unfortunate position in consequence of incapacity, the Canadian Pacific Railway feels called upon to appear before us to-day to ask us to give it aid. It may be held that the construction of a line from Ottawa to Toronto, a parallel and competing line is a great benefit to the country. I wish to say a few words about certain fallacies which exist as to the construction of parallel lines. The construction of a parallel line may temporarily afford to a country lower rates, but, so long as the business of a section of a country can be performed by one line of railway, if a parallel line is constructed through that country, the result must inevitably be that the business of that country must pay the cost of the management of two lines instead of one. There is no possibility of preventing the ultimate combination and consolidation of parallel and competing lines, and the experience of the United States has shown that, in all cases where parallel lines have been constructed for the purpose of doing business which one line can perform, the ultimate result has been to the detriment of the public, it has been consolidation with the necessity imposed upon the railway of charging rates to enable it to maintain two or more lines to perform the work which one line could perform; and the consequence is that the adoption of a policy which will lead to parallel lines being constructed through Ontario or through any other part of the Dominion, so that there will be two or more lines to perform the work which one is competent and adequate to perform, will result, in this country, as in the United States and all countries where it has been tried, to the detriment of the people themselves, by placing upon them the necessity of paying the rates necessary to maintain one or more useless lines.

After Recess.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, at the time you left the Chair, I was just about to consider that most modern, that latest refinement of railway chicanery—the construction company. I wish, Sir, to direct the attention of the House to the manipulations that have been performed under the operation of construction companies in the history of various railway lines, and to draw certain inferences as to the operations of a company of that character in the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. And, first, Sir, with reference to the construction of the Central Pacific. I shall to-night refer to but two American roads—the Central and Union Pacific. I find, in this report of the Committee on Railway Transportation of the New York Chamber of Commerce for 1880-81, reference to the operations of the company which constructed the Central Pacific Road. In that report, I find the following language:—

"Nor can the necessity of securing a fair return for the money invested by the Central Pacific Railroad owners be urged in explanation of their extraordinary charges. When they began the construction of the road, they paid taxes in the aggregate of property of all kinds amounting to less than $150,000. To-day their railroad property alone with the indebtedness standing against it deducted, is valued by them at the enormous sum of over $185,000,000, but it cannot be shown that they ever advanced money enough from their own pockets to build a single mile of the road. The bonds of the Government and the subsidies and gifts of the people were more than sufficient to build and stock the road entire.

"The original incorporators paid in 10 per cent. on $1,000 a mile for 115 miles, the estimated distance from Sacramento to the Nevada line. 1,250 shares of stock were subscribed at $100 per share, of which Messrs Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker took 600 shares. Assuming however, that they advanced the required 10 per cent. on all the shares subscribed, and their original investment did not exceed $12,500 all told. On this small investment the gentlemen have done well—so well, in fact, that in 1877 President Stanford reported the property of the Central Pacific to be worth $187,003,680 66, while Mr. Crocker, president of the Southern Pacific, valued the property of that road at $115,354,011 94, making a total valuation of $302,362,692 64. The indebtedness of the Central Pacific was given by Mr. Stanford at $85,391,350 64, and the indebtedness of the Southern Pacific was placed by Mr. Crocker at $ 0,415,392 45, making the total indebtedness of the two roads $115,806,683 59. The account then stood as follows:—

Value of the property of both roads.....	$302,362,692 64
The indebtedness of both roads.....	115,806,683 59

Assets over liabilities.....	$186,556,009 05

"A part of the wealth of these railway gentlemen two years ago consisted of $54,000,000 of watered stock of the Central Pacific, being an aggregate of $90,000,000 in stock, which cost them only the cost of printing, and upon which they are compelling the public to pay them 8 per cent. yearly in dividends."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the manipulators of this scheme, the gentlemen who, on an investment of $12,500 have made a fortune of $186,000,000, are the gentlemen who are about to build a short line of railway for my right hon. friend, are to build the Island Railway upon Vancouver Island; and I shall point out to you that these gentlemen although the result of their investment has been so vastly profitable, although upon an insignificant investment of a few thousands they have accumulated a fortune of $186,000,000—I will point out to you, I say, that the opportunities afforded to these gentlemen by the Government under which they constructed the Central Pacific Railway, were inferior to the opportunities afforded to the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate. I will point out to you that the terms accorded to them by the United States Government were not as liberal as the terms accorded to the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate by the Government of this Dominion. They received a land grant of 12,800 acres of land to the mile. That land grant extended along the entire line of road. It was in alternate sections, but much of that land grant was worthless. The Central Pacific Railway passed over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and continued for a long distance through an alkali country in the Humboldt Valley, and the land grant was of comparatively little value as compared with that of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, selected in the fertile belt. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company receives 12,500 acres of selected land to the mile; the Central Pacific Railway received 12,800 acres to the mile, taking it as it comes whether in mountain, or alkali plains, or in the fertile belt of the Sacramento Valley. In addition to this land grant the Central Pacific Railway received United States Government bonds to the amount of $25,885,000 upon 883 miles of road which amounted to about $29,000 per mile. Now, the Canadian Pacific Railway will receive in cash $25,000,000; subsidy in money expended by the Government in building 707 miles of road, $28,000,000; it will receive in cash from these two sources an amount for 2,000 miles of road which exceeds the number of miles they will receive in cash by $26,500 per mile. This, in their case, is a gift. The $29,000 per mile to the Central Pacific Railway was a loan, a loan that that road is called upon to repay, a loan that it is regularly paying interest upon, which is a lien against the property of that road; it is an asset of the Government of the United States which will be paid. Then the Central Pacific Railway, on terms actually $29,000 per mile worse than the terms received by the Canadian Pacific Railway, have accumulated a fortune of $186,000,000 upon an investment of $12,500. Yet this Company, endowed by this Government, this Company with a subvention so much greater than the Central Pacific Company, where such vast results have been obtained, this Company is here asking for an additional grant. Now, Sir, how did the Central Pacific Company succeed so admirably in its operations? Well, while building the road, while expending the subsidies of the Government, they did not reach out to acquire other railways. They contented themselves, first, with building the road they had in hand, as the Canadian Pacific Railway ought to have done. Having built a road from Sacramento to Ogden, 883 miles, and having equipped it, then they were ready to undertake other enterprises, to undertake one after another until the result is that shown in this quotation, until the result is the accumulation of $186,000,000. Had these men shown the incapacity and the recklessness of the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate, they would have ruined their prospects at the outset, as the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate have done. Now, Sir, with reference to the Union Pacific Railway—that also was a road aided by the United States Government. It was a road which received a grant of $26,000 to the mile for 1,038 miles, making a total of $27,236,000. Here, Sir, was a Company that received less, even supposing the bonds were given, than the Canadian Pacific Railway does; because it is to be borne in mind that these bonds at that time were payable in depreciated currency; their gold value was not more than 80 cents on the dollar, perhaps not as much. The Union Pacific Railway Company, then, with a grant of 12,800 acres to the mile, much of that land in a sterile country, with that loan of bonds to the extent of $26,000 to the mile, which that Company will repay and is repaying—that Company also went and accomplished great results. That Company built at first the line from Omaha to Ogden, 1,038 miles. It then proceeded to build a line from Cheyenne to Denver, a distance of 100 miles. It afterwards built from Denver to Kansas City, some 900 miles, and built branch lines in various directions, all belonging to this corporation, all the result of that grant made originally by the United States Government of 12,800 acres to the mile, and a loan of $26,000 to the mile in bonds. Neither of these roads were aided to the extent, neither of them were endowed so magnificently, as has been the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Now, Sir, having referred to the results that have been accomplished in these two cases, showing what might have been done by proper business management by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with the subvention and aid it has received, I proceed to the consideration of the question of the manipulation and performances of construction companies. We find in the case of the Union Pacific Railway Company an exemplification of the operations of companies of this kind. The construction of that road was undertaken by a company called the Credit Mobilier. It was a ring within a ring. It was something like the construction company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, four-fifths syndicate and one-fifth something else. The Credit Mobilier was composed of directors, the manipulators, the owners of the Union Pacific Railway. I find in an article of Charles Francis Adams, junior, railway commissioner of Massachusetts, some information relative to the operations of this company, an extract from which article I will read. I would commend this extract to the attention of this House, to the attention of this country, for it exposes the true inwardness of operations of this kind; it shows what are the manipulations of construction companies like that of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the operations of which I am bound to say are permitted by this Government, the operations of which are shielded by this Government, the operations of which this Government is not prepared to condemn. Charles Francis Adams says, in relation to this:

"Whoever originated this anomalous corporation, it is currently reported to be the real constructor of the Union Pacific."

This article was written while this company was constructing the road. It continues:

"And now to have got into its hands all the unissued stock, the proceeds of the bonds sold, the Government bonds, and the earnings of the roads, in fact, all its available assets, its profits are reported to have been enormous, reported only, for throughout all this there is nothing but hearsay and street rumor to rely upon. Sometimes it has been stated that the dividends of this association have amounted to forty per cent. a month, and they have certainly exceeded one hundred per cent. per annum; at any rate, it has made the fortunes of many, and perhaps of most of those connected with it. Nor are these profits temporary; every dollar of excessive dividend of the Credit Mobilier is represented by a dollar of indebtedness of the Pacific Railroad, with both principal and interest charged to income, and made payable by a tax on trade. Who, then, constitute the Credit Mobilier? It is but another name for the Pacific Railroad ring. The members of it are in Congress; they are trustees for the bondholders, they are directors, they are stockholders, they are contractors; in Washington they vote the subsidies, in New York they receive them, upon the plains they expend them, and in the Credit Mobilier they divide them. Ever shifting characters, they are ever ubiquitous—now engineering a bill, and now a bridge—they receive money into one hand as a corporation, and pay it into the other as a contractor. Humanely speaking, the whole thing seems to be a species of thimble-rig, with this difference from the ordinary arrangement, that, whereas commonly the little joker is never found under the thimble which may be turned up, in this case he is sure to be found, turn up which thimble one may. Under one name or another a ring of some seventy persons is struck, at whatever point the Union Pacific is approached. As stockholders they own the road, as mortgagees they have a lien upon it, as directors they contract for its construction, and as members of the Credit Mobilier they build it. Again, what is the community to pay for it? That they will pay many-fold what the work need to have cost many have long suspected; that, however much they may pay, they will pay more than it is materially worth, few will assert. Here, however, is every vicious element of railroad construction and management; here is costly construction, entailing future taxation on trade; here are tens of millions of fictitious capital; here is a road built on the sale of its bonds, and with the aid of subsidies; here is every element of cost recklessly exaggerated, and the whole at some future day is to make itself felt as a burden on the trade which it is to create, and will surely hereafter constitute a source of corruption in the politics of the land, and a resistless power in its legislature.

Sir, were the operations of the Union Pacific Company an evil? If so, is not the adoption of the same sort of tactics in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway not likely to prove an evil? And is the Government that permits this, is the Government that is in league with the operations of a construction company, as well as being a partner and party to the watering of the stock of the road to the extent of millions on millions, not deserving of condemnation at the hands of the people of this country?

A few words as to our own North American Construction Company, the name for our Credit Mobilier. What did it propose to do? It proposed to complete the eastern section for $14,100,000 and $20,000,000 in stock. How much would it have divided on the transaction? As near as I can arrive at the amount it would have been as follows: The stock was supposed to cost less than $5,000,000, or 5 cents on the dollar. It proposed to build the eastern part for $17,880,000, and $25,000,000 in stock. How much did the stock cost. It is supposed not to have exceeded $1,500,000, or not more than 6 per cent., on the face value of the stock. And what would have been the result? The result would have been that the construction company would have been the possessors of the $35,000,000 of unissued stock, and of the $10,000,000 of stock pledged, at a cost of about $6,500,000, or about 15 cents on the dollar. Are the people of this country prepared to sanction an arrangement of that kind? Were the Government ignorant of that arrangement? They were not; they were fully cognizant of it, and they must accept the responsibility of this scandalous state of affairs existing, as we have shown. The contract with the construction company, we are told, was annulled. It took into its number one or two Americans, giving them sufficient interest to float its bonds. They were unable to perform their duty for the contractors, and consequently the contract of the construction company was annulled and dissolved. But the construction company is in existence yet. The construction company is prepared at any time to make a future bargain. Have we any reason for supposing that when the construction company makes an arrangement with itself, makes an arrangement with the construction company under the guise of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, it will be less mindful of its own interests and more careful of the public interests than it has been in the past? We have no right to suppose so. On the contrary, the Company will make all they can; but we have a right to condemn the Government for permitting that state of things to exist. Not only may the construction company monopolize the $45,000,000 of remaining bonds, but there is no limit to the bonds which may yet be issued by the Company. All they require is to get this complacent Government which consented to a four-fold increase in the capital of the Company, to consent to a still greater increase, to a two-fold increase, to an increase to $200,000,000 instead of $100,000,000 or the Company may issue preferred stock, or manipulate its bonds. Positively there is no bar to the extent of manipulation that may be performed by the Company if the Government of the day, who are custodians of the public interest, do not discharge their trust and check the Company in its proceedings.

One word with respect to the fate of the participants in the American Credit Mobilier. There was not a public man connected with that scheme who was not driven from public life. The vice-president of the United States, Schuyler Colfax, had subscribed for a certain number of shares of that stock and paid $500 upon his subscription. He afterwards ascertained what the character of the scheme was, and he informed Mr. Oake Ames, the manipulator of the affair, that he would go no further, that his connection with it would cease, and that he would forfeit the amount he had paid. And he did forfeit that amount. There appeared, however, in Mr. Oake Ames' private memorandum book an entry, "S. C. $1,500." No one claims that Mr. Colfax had received money, and that little memorandum was the only circumstance to cast suspicion on the character of Mr. Colfax, who was one of the foremost men in the United States. Yet it led to the downfall of Mr. Colfax. He has never been invested with public honours or has the confidence of the people of the United States been reposed in him since that time. So sensitive is public opinion there that when a breath of suspicion was cast on the character of the vice-president, he was driven from public life. A senator who was proved to have had connection with the Credit Mobilier was expelled, and there was not a public man in the United States who was proved to have had any connection with the transaction who was not placed in his political grave. We act very differently here. If the same degree of jealousy existed here, how many Ministers of the Crown would remain in their positions in this House? If the same degree of jealousy existed here, how many members of Parliament, when they returned to the people for re-election, would be rejected in consequence of their connection with circumstances just as scandalous as those attending the operations of the Credit Mobilier?

Mr. CHARLTON. I see this does not suit my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House, but the parallel is a perfectly just one. The public sentiment that drove men from public life in the United States is a public sentiment of the same kind as would drive scores of men having seats in this House from public life if they were to appear before the people and ask for their support, sanction and endorsement.

My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) last night made reference to the difficulty of floating railway securities, owing to the depression in the stock market. There is a depression in the stock market. There is a depression in the stock market arising from the general belief among capitalists and investors that railway stocks and railway bonds are the toys and playthings of monopolists and scamps who place the securities upon the market upon a fictitious basis. The fact that 48 per cent. of the railway stocks of the United States are watered, and the further fact that $3,000,000 out of the $80,000,000 of the Western Union stock is watered, are arousing alarm in the minds of investors in the United States and England. They have discredited the railway securities of the United States; they have discredited the railway securities of Canada, and that suspicion, and that discredit, is growing day by day. Day by day the difficulty becomes greater in placing loans on the market, for while there is a superabundance of money seeking investment, the suspicion which exists with regard to these manipulations, manipulations precisely the same as those indulged in by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, renders the floating of railway securities more and more difficult. And what will be the effect, in all human probability, of the alliance of this Government with the railway syndicate? If the securities of railways, in consequence of these acts of rascality, are depreciating in value, will not the same result happen to the securities of a Government which becomes the tool of this syndicate, and a partner in one of the worst specimens of railways of this class? I think that will be the effect, and I think, therefore, that the proposition that the Government should advance $22,500,000 on a loan, and take a mortgage on the road, is one which should not meet with the favourable consideration of the House.

I wish to refer to a matter to-night for the special benefit of my right hon. friend the First Minister, though I do not know that is pertinent to this question. That hon. gentleman—although I am sure he could not have felt what he said—was not above appealing to the prejudices of the members of this House against me, last Session, on the score that I was an American. This was an appeal which, I think, the hon. gentleman must have considered rather beneath his dignity, but one which, perhaps, produced a certain effect. I wish to point out to him, what is the character of the staff of this road to which he proposes to lend $22,500,000. If it is a prejudice to a man to be an American, I call his attention to the fact that there is rather an undue proportion on Americans to the staff of that road. I have a letter from a correspondent in Winnipeg, written on the first of February, which reads as follows:—

"Sir,—Now that the Canadian Pacific syndicate are on the eve of receiving some twenty-two and a half millions of dollars out of the pockets of the Canadian people, it might not be amiss to let the general public of the Dominion know the manner in which Canadians are treated on the western division of the road. Out of the fourteen principal offices of the division, ten are held by American citizens, and the balance by Canadians. The general superintendent, two out of the four assistant superintendents, the auditor, the superintendent of bridges and buildings, &c., and his four assistants and the general storekeeper are all Americans, whilst the positions of assistant traffic manager, the two remaining assistant superintendencies, and that of the fuel agent are held by Canadians. Were this caused by a scarcity of Canadians competent to fill the positions, no blame could attach to the syndicate, but such is not the case, hundreds of Canadians being at present out of employment in this Province, many of them perfectly capable of fulfilling the duties of any position of the road, whilst in nearly every instance where Americans are the heads of departments, they are merely nominally so, the duties of the positions having to be performed by some one of the few Canadians under them, and who receive small salaries therefor, their more fortunate American cousin, from the mere fact of their nationality, having, no matter how incompetent, to be well remunerated for holding the office, if only in name. The positions of the two divisions under the control of the American assistant superintendents are almost completely filled by American citizens, a Canadian, Irish, English, or Scotchman being a rara avis, whilst if on the two remaining divisions they do not outnumber, they at least equal in numbers all the four last named nationalities combined."

As I said before, I do not know that this matter is worthy of being referred to, but still it strikes me that it indicates that this syndicate is essentially an American corporation, that it is under the control of Americans, which, I believe, is the case; and I point out to my right hon. friend that if he is not above a reference to the fact that a member of this House has the misfortune to have been born in the United States, certainly he should look after the staff of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Now, Sir, one word as to the antecedents of the gentlemen who compose the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate. I am sorry to say—perhaps my language may be rather strong, because I feel strongly on the subject—that I cannot characterize the methods adopted by these men as honest. The fact that they have watered the stock of the road, the fact that they have organized a construction company for the purpose of building that road at a rate nominally much greater than its actual cost, and various other facts in connection with their operations in the matter, leave me under the necessity of saying that I do not believe that their manipulations of the matter are honest. Now what are the antecedents of some of these gentlemen? I am sorry to have to refer to anything in the character of these men which must be discreditable to them, but we are dealing with questions in which it is our duty to enquire carefully into the character of the men making this application, because we are acting in this matter as the trustees of the people of Canada, and as $22,500,000 are at stake, it is our duty to act carefully and to see that the money is dispensed judiciously, and in accordance with the interests of the people and not in accordance with the interests of the applicants. A member of this Company was once President of the Bank of Montreal—a responsible position. When in that position he took $8,000,000 from the chest of the Bank of Montreal, without the consent or knowledge of the directors of that bank—at least he is reported to have done so. He is reported to have invested it in the St. Paul and Minneapolis Railway. Now, supposing this gentleman when he removed this money from the bank and invested it, had lost the money, he would have been a defaulter to the extent of $8,000,000; but I hold that, though the investment was successful, though he was enabled to return the money, morally, his conduct in this matter was just as reprehensible as if he had lost every cent. I say he had no business to take $8,000,000 belonging to a corporation of which he was president, without the knowledge of the directors, and use that money in any speculation whatever. He is reported to have invested that money, as I have said, in the St. Paul and Minneapolis Railway, and, through collusion with the Receiver of that road, it is said he procured a report as to the conditions of its affairs which was sent to Holland, where the stock was held, which report induced the Dutch bondholders and stockholders to part with their interest in the road at less than it was worth, thus enabling them through this collusion to buy the road at less than its value. And having used the Receiver as his tool, he forgot the old adage that there should be honour among thieves. He is charged with having forgotten to give the Receiver his share of the plunder, and the Receiver is said to have brought suit in the United States Court at St. Paul. The Court refused to entertain the suit on the ground that it would not degrade itself by giving a decision as to how plunder should be divided among the different members of a gang. This is one of the gentlemen the Government wish to aid to the extent of this loan, one of the gentlemen upon whose figures we are asked to make up our opinion.

Now, I hold that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, has already received too much. I have shown that it has received too much. I have proved that the subvention that it has received from the Government was more than sufficient, by many millions, to enable the Company to carry out the contract which was made with the Government—to wit, to secure the construction of a railway from Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean. It may be said that the Company is not able to go on. Great stress has been laid on the alleged fact that the interests of this country would receive a severe blow if the syndicate were unable to prosecute the construction of the road. Suppose they are unable to do so, what then? I do not know that it would be a very great disaster if we were to take back the road. What would follow? It would follow that we would be released from the monopoly clauses, that this watered stock swindle which has been issued, and which may put a tax of $7,000,000 a year on the people contributing to the business of the road, would be wiped out. It follows, Sir, that we should be released from the grasp of a clique of railway kings. It follows that untold difficulties and troubles in the future in connection with this road would be avoided. It follows also that a demoralizing alliance between this Government and a great corporation would come to an end. I say, if these men were unable to proceed with the road, it would be a godsend to the people of the country. If they are unable to go on, let them disgorge, and if they do not propose to do that, let them go on.

It is noticeable, Mr. Speaker, that whenever this Government are about to perpetrate anything particularly bad, they raise the cry of patriotism. What a cry was raised, Sir, in 1880-81 when this syndicate contract was under consideration—why, the unworthy men who opposed that beneficent measure came in for unmeasured rebuke and condemnation. We were unworthy sons of Canada; we were not deserving of being considered as citizens of this country—why? Because we did not wish to see the Government grant to a great railway syndicate vast powers and privileges and franchises that were sure to prove detrimental to the best interests of the people of Canada for all ages to come. Because we said that that contract was a bad bargain for the country, our patriotism, our loyalty were impugned, we were condemned as men unworthy of seats in this House of Commons; and to-day, when this Government propose to give to this same corporation $22,500,000 more, the same cry is raised; when objections are made on this side of the House, again we are disloyal, again we are lacking in patriotism, again the people of Canada are called upon to repudiate and condemn us on the ground that we are standing in the way of the progress and prosperity of the country. Sir, when the leader of the Opposition in his matchless manner points out the mistakes the Government have made, when he criticises their policy, and shows that it is detrimental to the interest of the country, do they thank him for his advice? Do they treat him with the courtesy to which he is entitled? No, Sir; wild attacks are made upon him and his followers as men who desire to drag Canada down, who, in pointing out the bad features of the Government's land regulations and railway policy, are, forsooth, playing into the hands of the United States.

Sir, whither are we drifting? We may not be drifting to ruin, but we are drifting in that direction. We are spending the people's money by millions; we are creating a great railway monopoly and increasing its privileges, and to-day it stands on the threshold of its vast designs, and threatens to establish a monopoly over this whole broad country. And the Government of the day are playing efficiently into the hands of these men who, finding that all the millions they have already received are not sufficient for the accomplishment of their designs, come down to Parliament and ask for $22,500,000 more; and if that proves to be insufficient to carry out their purposes—purposes which are inimical to the best interests of this country—I do not doubt that hon. gentlemen will be ready to supplement all these grants by $22,000,000 more. Early in the course of my remarks, Sir, I lamented that apparent degree of apathy that exists in the public mind of this country. It is time, Sir, that the suspicion and the hostility of the people of this country had been aroused at the reckless policy of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. In the United States in 1882, although the sins of the Government there were venal and trifling, compared with the sins of the Government here, although the trouble consisted of a few frauds in Post Office contracts, called star route frauds, and of a little trouble with what is called bossism—that is, of rings composed of Conkling and a few others controlling the patronage of the Government—although that was all, yet the people rose in their might, and by a popular majority of 587,000, gave notice to the Government that those sins must cease. The State of New-York, which had been republican in 1881, went democratic by 197,000 majority; and for the first time thousands voted the democratic ticket to show that they would not stand any nonsense of this kind. If we had an element of that kind in Canada, these men on the Treasury benches would be more cautious in the measures they bring before Parliament; but it seems, in the apathy that exists, that they have no fear before their eyes, no twinges of conscience, and their acts are such as they are. I might hope that there was some political honesty in the huge majority at the back of these hon. gentlemen. I might hope that there are men among them able to rise above party considerations on such an occasion as this. I know that there are men who know that this policy is wrong, who cannot fail in their own consciences to condemn the act the Government are about to perpetrate, but these men are not able to act as statesmen. They must come down to the low grovelling level of partisan politicians. They are afraid to lift themselves up above the mere requirements of party and act from statesmanlike and patriotic motives. For that reason, this measure, which every man must deplore, which every man must know is not conceived in the interest of the people, but in the interest of a great corporation, is likely to pass.

Now, Sir, there are certain things about this matter that we know. We know that a construction company was formed for the purpose of vastly increasing the cost of that road, and of putting the increased cost into the pockets of a ring of speculators. We know that the stock of this Company has been watered most scandalously, and that the result is that the people of this country will be called upon to pay 10 per cent. in perpetuity upon all the water injected into that stock. We know that this Company have stepped out of the limits of their contract, and have engaged in various undertakings that their circumstances did not warrant. We know these facts, and we know many other things; but there are things about this Company that we do not know. We do not know what rings there were within rings. We do not know what has been paid upon the stock that has nominally been sold. We do not know what the resources of this Company are. We do not know what the officers of this Company have put into their own pockets as the owners of the Canada Central which was sold to them as the owners of the Canadian Pacific. We do not know what has been done with the $600,000 which the construction company owe to the railway Company. We do not know what the members of this Company may have drawn out of the funds of the Company and appropriated to their own use. These are a few things that we do not know but that we require to know, in order to give an intelligent verdict upon the proposition before the House. In 1881 when the syndicate contract was before this House, the whole power of the Government was exercised in order to force that in quitous contract through Parliament without delay; and to-day, when that same syndicate are here again, asking for $22,500,000 more, again the power of the Government is brought to bear, again the determination of the Government is manifested to force these Resolutions through with indecent haste, again the Government refuse to allow the House to become possessed of facts that the House is entitled to possess, in order to be able to give an intelligent verdict upon this question. Sir, there is something about this syndicate matter that I do not understand. How is it that this syndicate exercises such unbounded power over this Government? How is it that the syndicate issues its dictates and the Government seems bound to obey? Does the syndicate possess some secret which, if breathed to the public, would blast the reputation and blacken the characters of its servants who are pushing this scheme through at its dictation? I will make no such charge, but I say the indecent haste manifested by the Government, the refusal of the Government to consent to a full investigation upon all points demanded by the Opposition—the refusal of the Government to agree to this demand is an outrage upon popular liberties and the rights of the people. For this reason I shall vote for the resolution of my hon. friend demanding that full investigation shall be made with reference to all matters in connection with this Company, before the House be called on to act upon this proposal and grant the Company the further aid of $22,500,000 in cash.

Mr. DAWSON. Although the question now before the House has been discussed in nearly every possible way, still I believe there are some points that have not been sufficiently dwelt upon. At all events, many hon. members are no doubt desirous to state their views in order that their constituents may be in a position to judge of the action they have taken in regard to this great question. There have been many estimates made by writers in the press and by hon. members, but they have all differed very widely. None of them agree, and no one has suggested anything better than the Resolutions before the House. When this question was before the country and before the House in 1881, the then Opposition brought forward a scheme which enabled hon. members supporting the proposition of the Government to see how far their views had gone astray, and it turned out that the difference was just 3,000,000 acres of land and $3,000,000 in money. They brought forward a scheme essentially the same as that which the Government proposed. There was no difference in it except in the amount, and hon. members then supporting the Government saw how far they had gone astray in the opinion of the Opposition. There was as much eloquence expended on the subject then as there is now and as there has been in the past few days. However, I will say this, that in the discussion on this subject there has been a great deal of able argument and a great deal of sound reasoning, but I think that some hon. members, and among them the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House, went a little too far in the matter of denunciation. I shall, however, go on to notice the remarks made by several other hon. members of the Opposition before adverting further to what he said. Now the other day the hon. member for West Lambton proved, to his own satisfaction at least, if not to that of the House, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had not expended from the first a single dollar of their own money. His speech was filled by what was very aptly termed "ancient history," by another hon. member. He went back to the early history of the Pacific Railway, a history which has long since been pronounced upon by the country, and dwelt upon that for a considerable time. I do not think, although his speech was very eloquent, that the hon. gentleman enlightened the House much on these old matters. The hon. Member for West Huron made a very able speech yesterday in which he dwelt on a great many things. For fully an hour he spoke on everything possible under the sun before he once alluded to the subject of the Resolutions. He was exceedingly witty, or at least tried to be so, and, as he said himself, he wanted to skin the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. Minister of Finance. Whether he succeeded or not, I do not know, but they look none the worse for it. He referred to ancient prophecies which he rather mixed, and we found figuring in his speech Cassandra, Agamemnon, Jeremiah, and I know not what besides. But in the exuberance of the hon. gentleman's mirth, he had a fling at the physiognomy of the hon. the Finance Minister. Now when he did that, I turned to admire his own, and I must say that it was rather too bad of the hon. gentleman to whom nature has been so lavishly beneficent, in regard to physiognomy, to try to ridicule the visage of another. He referred to the exodus of Canadians to Dakota and Minnesota. Now that is all very easily explained. When did the exodus occur and what was the cause of it? Hon. members of the Opposition attribute it to the land regulations in the North-West. I say that it was due to an entirely different cause. From 1875 up to 1879 and 1880, immigrants were sent into our North-West by way of Minnesota, and in passing to Manitoba, they had to go through land in the valley of the Red River—a belt of the most beautiful land—similar to what we have at Winnipeg, and that extending to a considerable distance on each side of the river, and they were naturally attracted by that land. There were agents of American companies and land agents in any number trying to induce them to settle there, and I believe a great many of them did settle there. But that has been stopped long ago. The tide has turned and is now the other way. At what time was it that that exodus, as it is called, was at its height? It was in 1875, 1876 and 1877, at the time the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and it ceased and began to flow in another direction when the works on the Pacific Railway were begun. I have a letter here which, perhaps, may throw a little light upon it, and I shall read a short extract from it. I find this in the Thunder Bay Sentinel, of the 9th instant:

Mr. CHARLTON.

"We always find a pleasure in perusing the North-Western Lumberman. Its columns are always full of well selected news, and the skill with which statistical matters is arranged makes the paper a reliable, indeed an invaluable one to lumbermen. In the last number to hand the editor says: 'Woodmen from Canada have met with much disappointment in the States this season. Formerly, all they had to do to obtain higher wages than they could get at home was to cross the line. Now, it is different. There are some men in the woods who are working for their board, and many others receiving from $14 to $15 a month. We hear of several Canadians who failed to obtain work and returned home.' If the writer of the above were living on this side of the line, he would hear, not of several, but of a good many who returned from under the wing of the eagle from the same potent cause."

Now, Sir, that shows clearly that the exodus is not from Canada alone, but that there is an exodus from the United States to Canada, and I believe that a great many people have come over from the United States to Canada within the last few years. The member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong), in winding up his speech—and a very eloquent speech he made—in what I suppose he intended to be its very climax, said that it was absolutely insane, absolutely wild on the part of the Government, in 1872, to say that the railway could be completed in ten years. Now, we see that there was a possibility of that. The Pacific Railway Company has shown in how brief a time the work can be done, and I positively believe that, in ten years, such a Company as is now at work would have completed it from one end to the other. Then [he says] the country was unknown, was not surveyed. Was it surveyed when the Pacific Railway Company made their line? They have not availed themselves of one yard of the surveys previously made. Those surveys were mostly thrown away, as far as the line is actually concerned. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) made the suggestion that, in his part of the country, supposing that the whole amount of $22,500,000 were divided among the different constituencies, and that the constituencies were asked to warrant the outlay, it would be rejected by his constituency. Well, perhaps he may be right, but I have information from gentlemen connected with that constituency and who are evidently tolerably well acquainted with it, who say it would be accepted by that constituency. It is said that American contractors and workmen are chiefly employed on the Canadian Pacific Railway. I shall have something to say on that subject by-and-bye. In the meantime, I would make a few remarks on the speech of the hon. member who last addressed the House. He says it is not in the interests of this country that the road should be rapidly constructed. I differ with him entirely in that. I believe that rapidity of construction means economy of construction, and, from long experience in seeing works carried on in a wilderness, I think I could establish that. He has thrown out a good many insinuations in his very eloquent speech, and says that the matter has been so manipulated as to conceal the truth, and that, if the road is carried on, they will establish a monopoly east of Lake Superior. I do not believe that any railway company can establish a monopoly east of Lake Superior, because there is a water communication which will compete with the railway, in summer at least, and I doubt very much if any railway can be built that, during the summer months, will compete with that water communication. It would be impossible to establish a crushing monopoly such as he spoke of, to the eastward or northward of Lake Superior. Then he goes on to relate things about Pacific scandals and all that, ancient history, as the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) called them. Then he went on to show how much better it would have been if, when the present member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was in power, his schemes had been carried out. I believe that, in that part of the line between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg, the hon. the then Premier of the Government, was on the right track at first, but he left it and made an immense sweep round by Rat Portage—it was a hasty location, notwithstanding all the surveys—which now lengthens the distance for all time from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg by thirty-five or forty miles. If the water stretches and the lock at Fort Frances had been adopted as a temporary expedient to supply the road as it went on, and a more southerly route had been taken by the head of Rainy Lake and crossing at the Narrows of Lake of the Woods, where there is an excellent crossing, the line would have been thirty five or forty miles shorter; but he left his own line and took another. It is very easy to expatiate, Mr. Speaker, on what they would have done, but they were five years in power, and the question is not what they would have done, but what they did. What did they do? They were five years in power, having the whole control of everything. That is a great deal more than the length of time it has taken the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build 1,300 miles of road, and the result was the Pembina Branch, which was a very necessary one, and the other two sections between Lake Superior and Manitoba. I think that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) expressed himself in a manner that is rather peculiar—rather unusual even in this House—when men in the position of the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are described by him as mendicants knocking at the door of Parliament. It is all a matter of taste. I suppose it does not affect these gentlemen very much. Again, he talks of a great many swindles and things of that kind, and goes on to tell of American lines. We have a very interesting array of figures, hundreds of millions, in connection with American lines and watered stock, and things of that kind without end. Then there are imputations thrown out that the Government is in league with the Company, that everything is very scandalous, and that is about all his speech amounts to. A great many figures and estimates have been laid before the House; we have estimates from the leader of the Opposition, who delivered a very eloquent speech in opposition to the Resolutions, and by others; but they differ very widely. They are founded in a great measure on conjecture. Now, Mr. Speaker, I prefer facts to conjecture. I prefer estimates which have the sanction of Government, which have been investigated by the Government and laid before the House. These show that the total expenditure on the main line was $45,539,304, being $23,745,305 over all the Company have received. But, they have expended $3,759,793 on branch lines showing a total expenditure over all they have received from Government of $27,503,000 west of Callander, chiefly, no doubt, from foreign capital. What influence this may have had on the prosperity of the country, it is easy to understand. It is, no doubt, from outside sources that this capital came, and it has, had a very great influence in bringing about the good times we have recently enjoyed. On the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, they have expended $3,270,351, or a total expenditure between Montreal and the summit of the Rocky Mountains of $54,728,500. Deduct from this $22,687,874 received from all sources, and you have a balance of $32,040,620 expended by them over and above what they received from Government. But including the lines leading to the seaboard they have expended in all $58,695,365, against cash received from Government and all other sources, amounting to $22,687,876, showing a balance of expenditure over receipts of $36,007,491. Now, Sir, the Opposition have challenged the accuracy of these figures. Not a member on the Opposition side of the House has spoken who has not challenged these figures and tried to show that the Company have not expended a dollar of their own money. Figures have been put into every possible shape to show that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have expended none of their own resources at all. But, it is clearly evident that they have brought into the country and expended in the country, $36,000,000, and who shall say how much the expenditure of that sum, and the manner in which it was expended all over the country, has had to do with the prosperous times which we have enjoyed. Sir, we have evidence of the accuracy of these figures which cannot be impugned. Is it to be supposed that men who have grown gray in the public service would enter into a league to conceal facts, and deceive the public? Certainly not. The Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, were sent down to investigate the books of the Company, and what do they report? They report that these books were admirably kept, and that the statements before the House truthfully show the condition of matters as exhibited in these books. Sir, I prefer to take statements of that kind, verified by men of high position, whose honour has never been impugned; I prefer them to the vague and wild statements which we have heard on every side for the last few days in this House. In a work so great as this there must always be something to cavil at. In a work which embraces a line of railway extending from ocean to ocean, and, with all its branches, has a length of over 3,300 miles, it is surprising that there is so little to cavil at, instead of so much. Really when you come to look into the matter the objections raised vanish away. The whole question resolves itself into this: Are we getting value for the money? Is the country getting the value of the money? Is the security ample and sufficient? That it is ample there can be no doubt. They offer to make over to the Government every mile of the railway, the rolling stock and everything they possess, and surely such ample security as that ought to be sufficient. But, Sir, there is a further security which, of itself is ample, and that is that not a dollar of this $22,500,000 is to be handed over to them except as the work proceeds. It will only be paid for work done. The money is not given to them to spend on any other project, but as the engineer reports a certain amount of work done, this money is to be handed over. Surely that of itself is a security which ought to satisfy the House. Now, the Minister of Railways has given us an interesting account of the increase in the revenue arising from the outlay on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and from the population which has been drawn into the North-West by its construction. He shows that as fast as the country is laying out money on the railway, it seems to be getting it back from other sources. But, there was one little item which was not brought to the notice of the hon. Minister, and I may be pardoned, perhaps, for drawing attention to it now. The Minister showed the receipts from Customs duties and otherwise, at the Port of Winnipeg. But, there is another little point which he omitted, and that is Port Arthur. If the House will bear with me for a moment, I will read the official returns from that port.

This port formerly gave a revenue varying from $10,000 to $12,000 per annum; but here is a statement as to the present revenue, and I am informed there is now a sufficient quantity of goods on the way to raise the amount of duties by the end of the fiscal year, 30th June, to $240,000. The development arising from the opening of the line has not been confined to the North-West, but has been felt in that part of the country also, and settlement is going into the back country there, a country very often described in this House as being exceedingly barren. A branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that going down to Algoma Mills, is entirely within my constituency, and let me assure hon. gentlemen that there is a great deal of good land in that section, that of late years population has been pouring into the country on the north shore of Lake Huron, which is a country admirably adapted for wheat growing, and we have now between Sault Ste. Marie and the lower end of Manitoulin Island, which latter point is oppos to Sudbury Junction, an agricultural population of 20,000 souls. The wants of such a large population will of themselves furnish considerable traffic to this branch to Algoma Mills. Algoma Mills is admirably situated for taking the trade of Lake Michigan and a large portion of the trade of Chicago; it is now said that the steamers are not to run there, but that the branch will be extended to Sault St. Marie. When the railway is extended to the navigable waters of Lake Superior, at Sault St. Marie, an immense traffic will be brought down to that point. There are 400 miles of navigable water on Lake Superior, which extends to Duluth, and almost taps the wheat lands of Dakota and Minnesota, and the day will come when a vast quantity of wheat and produce will find its way across Lake Superior to the foot of the lake, from which it will take the shortest route to the ocean. So that the Algoma Branch, which is so much criticised, will eventually prove to be one of the best paying portions of the Canadian Pacific system. It could not be within the power of a Government to carry on the work with the vigor with which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are now pushing forward the railway. A Government cannot always put the right man in the right place, but this company does so; and it is astonishing to see, and I have been over a portion of the line, how every officer is so fully conversant with his duty—a man of long experience; in fact, they are all veterans, as it were. According to the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways, the Company have at present an army along the line, the number at present working on the road, being placed at 9,000. To my own knowledge there are from 6,000 to 7,000 men at work on the different sections between Nipigon Bay and the Pic; they are pushing on the work with the greatest possible vigor. To disband that army or stop in any way the rapidity with which the railway is being constructed would be like stopping an army on the march to victory; and it is actually an army marching to victory, a victory against the opposing forces of nature, such as forest, swamp, rock and mountain, and if they are supported a little longer, there can be no doubt that within two years, as they themselves specify, they will carry the railway to completion. We have large areas of good land along the line in Algoma, and I am sorry to see how members on the Opposition side, and indeed on the Government side, have spoken of the country north of Lakes Huron and Superior as a rocky and wild country. Let me tell the House that there are large areas of the very finest land in that country. Before coming down here last fall I met the chief officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a man of great energy and experience, who is carrying on the work in that quarter with a vigour I never saw equalled. I happened to mention to him about the character of the country and the general reports that the land was poor. "Why," said he, "you have an immense extent of the very richest land. I have been travelling for the last six days in the valley of a river, the Pays Plat, which falls into Nipigon Bay, and it is one stretch of level land as far as I could judge. I asked him what the extent would be—whether there would be enough for a township. He said there was enough for half a dozen townships there of the very finest land. And it must be remembered this is not a solitary instance. Even in the valley of the Pic River, a branch of which comes near Heron Bay, there is a considerable tract of very good land. Once you pass Michipicoten and continue eastward to Sault St. Marie and along the north shore of Lake Huron, the country will compare very favourably with many counties now cultivated in other parts of Canada. The hon. member for Biome (Mr. Fisher)—I do not suppose he wished to disparage our country—spoke of the Lake Superior region and the Rocky Mountains in the same breath, as if one was not more valuable than the other. But let me tell that hon. gentleman that there are vast areas of land north of Lakes Huron and Superior which will compare very favourably with the Eastern Townships where he himself resides. To retard or stop the work on the railway would be to return to the old state of things. Surveys were carried on during eight or ten years, and little progress was made. Year after year we had surveyors in the field, and yet the then Chief Engineer sent in a report at the last to the effect that nothing reliable was known. That officer seemed to have borrowed the expression from the Greek sage who, after a life of research in every branch of human knowledge, came to the sad conclusion that "all that we know is, nothing can be known." While "nothing reliable known" was the expression of our sage Engineer. Sir, are we to go back to that state of things, now that this work is going on so rapidly, when we have an army pressing forward, under the best generalship and with the best of men, thoroughly experienced in the work? And now a word about the employment of Americans. I have only to say that it is not the case that Americans are employed to the exclusion of Canadians, on the north shore of Lake Superior, at any rate. There are a great many contractors on the north shore, and as I know them all I am able say that with a single exception they are Canadians. They came from the United States with the Chief Engineer of that part of the road, the gentleman to whom I have alluded, who had been all over the continent making railways. These men were with him in the United States, and having followed his fortunes there, they followed him back to this particular work, upon which he knew exactly where to place them, so as to have the advantage of their experience. These men were Scotchmen, like himself, and not Americans. So much upon that point. There are some other matters in connection with this question with which I might deal, but as many hon. members have spoken upon them, I shall not detain the House. There was one matter, for instance, which was alluded to—and very properly alluded to—the other day by the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), and that is that the settlement of this question will settle the Indian question. We heard some few years ago of the terrible results which might follow an Indian insurrection, but the construction of the Pacific Railway to British Columbia has settled that question forever. There is another aspect of the question which I might mention, as I have not heard it referred to by any other member. Long as we have been at peace, and long as I hope we may remain at peace, with the United States, still it is but right and reasonable that we should look at this road in a military point of view. It connects the Atlantic and the Pacific Ocean, and renders every part of our territory available, without passing through a foreign country. It may be still within the recollection of some hon. members that there was an insurrection in the North-West and that when we sent forward troops to suppress it, the Sault Ste Marie Canal was shut against us. I believe that it was not intended by the Federal Government that the canal should be shut; but looking at the matter in a national view, I think we may rejoice that the road has been made. Before and above everything else, it will connect all these scattered Provinces together, from the Atlantic to the Pacific; it will render access easy between them, and if anything can bind us together it will be a most powerful influence to weld all the provinces into an undivided nation. A great deal has been said about patriotism in this House, but I have nothing to say on that subject. I believe that true patriotism is consistent with any political opinions whatever. I believe that true patriotism exists on both sides of this House, and I believe that it is maintained by every hon. member present, no matter what political opinions he may express.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Bearing in mind the statements that the First Minister made last night to the House, that he should ask his supporters to remain with him to-night, until the vote was taken upon this subject, I feel it would be improper for me to speak at any length, as other hon. gentlemen wish to speak before the debate is closed; and therefore, in order to afford them an opportunity of doing so, before they are entirely worn out by a night session, I shall endeavour to speak as briefly as I may upon the important question which for some days past has been engaging our attention. It will be remembered, Sir, that the Minister of Railways in introducing these Resolutions, and that the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), after their introduction, took the line of reciting to the House the different projects which had been entered into, and the different plans adopted for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Both those gentlemen ventured the statement that it had been the deliberate policy and plan of each Government to build this road only by a company; and they instituted comparisons between the terms which were offered to a company, under the Mackenzie Administration, and the terms offered to a company under the previous Administration of Sir John A. Macdonald, in 1872, as well as the terms offered, given, and ratified by contract, with the Syndicate to whom was finally allotted the building of a portion of this work. Now, Sir, the statement is hardly correct that it had always been the plan of all the Governments of Canada to construct this work through the agency of a company. It is not correct, as I read the history of the country, and as I understood the utterances of the Minister of Railways, and the First Minister, not many years ago. I desire for a short time to recall to the memory of hon. members, another plan which was devised, another scheme which was propounded, a scheme which was being acted upon, not by the Mackenzie Administration, but by the Administration which now occupies the Treasury benches, the Administration which effected the contract with the Syndicate to build a portion of that road. And what was the scheme? Why, Sir, in 1880, in the very year the contract was signed with the Syndicate, the Minister of Railways rose in his place in the House, and laid down the policy of the Government with reference to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway—not that their policy was to be to secure the services of a company to construct it, but that they would, as a Government, acting directly as a Government under Government supervision, and paying directly out of Government funds—build this road. The Minister of Railways not only told us so, but the First Minister told us. The First Minister went further, and he told us the reason the Government determined to build the road as Government work. He said when they came into power after the fall of the Mackenzie Administration, he found that that Government had undertaken the work of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway as a Government work. He found that the Pembina Branch was built. He found that the contracts were let out for the ends of the Thunder Bay Branch; he found the work rapidly progressing upon that difficult part of the undertaking, that part of it which is now completed, that key to the whole North-West country; and the language of the hon. First Minister on that occasion was, that when they came into power, finding that the Mackenzie Government had built the more difficult portion of the work as a Government work, it would be folly, it would be an act that could not be justified on the part of the Administration, then to hand over the construction of the comparatively easy prairie section to a company, but that the Government should retain it in their hands, and build it and make money out of it. Sir, they did more than that. The hon. Minister of Railways gave us a close and elaborate calculation upon that point. He gave us the exact items of the cost of the different sections of that road, and I have them in my mind now, so clearly did the hon. gentleman lay them down. What are they? After giving the cost of the portions of the road that the Government were to build, have built, and are building, he detailed to us the distances, and the cost of constructing the different portions which have been handed over to the Syndicate; and what were they? From Jasper to Kamloops—for that was the line decided upon at that time—335 miles, the cost was to be $15,500,000. The 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper, over the prairie country, were to cost $10,000 a mile. He put the cost at $13,000 a mile, which he said included a light equipment, which would be all the equipment required for years. That made the cost of that section $13,000,000. The 600 miles of the Lake Superior division he gave as costing, in round numbers, $20,000,000. This was the statement of the hon. gentleman that $48,500,000 would complete the building and equipment of the portions of the road which, under this contract, we gave to the Syndicate to complete. He then detailed to us the cost of the other portions of the road which, under the contract, the Government had to build, have built, and are building. The hon. First Minister gave us a calculation at that time as to how the cost of the railway was to be met. He told us he had a plan by which he could sell his land at a certain price per acre, and the result of it would be that at the end of ten years, when the road would be completed, he would have $32,000,000 of cash in hand and $38,000,000 as good as cash in the security of the land. Thus the road was to be built. We were in ten years to sell lands that would net us $70,000,000 and to pay for those portions of the road which the Syndicate are to build for $48,500,000. And yet, with that plan before us, detailed in the House by the hon. Minister of Railways and the First Minister, and Parliament having accepted and ratified that plan, and having warranted the Government in going on with the Railway as a Government work, these hon. gentlemen, without the authority of Parliament, without any advantage for the country that we can conceive of, in a short eight months afterwards, deliberately entered into this contract with the Syndicate, in which, for building what they had declared would cost only $48,500,000, they gave $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land, agreed to build the road from Thunder Bay to Selkirk and hand it over to them, agreed to throw in the Pembina Branch, which was finished, equipped, and running, and paying a large dividend; contracted to build the road through the Rocky Mountains at a cost of some $9,000,000, and to construct the section from Yale to Kamloops and hand it over to them—and all this was given to them for doing a work that would cost only $48,500,000. I may be laughed at for these figures, but let hon. gentlemen opposite beware of laughing at them, because if they do, they laugh at figures solemnly given in Parliament by the hon. Minister of Railways, and not at my figures. If they wish, I can give them the page of Hansard in which they can read these figures for themselves. In addition to these vast amounts of money and property, however, they gave to that Syndicate powers and privileges and rights which I hesitate not to say ought not to have been given to any corporation by any Government in a free country. From this very fact—and I may be pardoned for it—I view with no little suspicion and distrust any move that is made on behalf of this Company—that every transaction we have had with this Company has been pressed on with such hot haste through this House. When the contract was first entered into by the Government with the Syndicate, all other business was suspended, and precedence was given to the consideration of that question over every other question, and day by day, night by night, it had to be discussed and forced along, in order that that bargain might be ratified. We have had a repetition this Session of that circumstance in the new demand which is made by the Government on behalf of this Company. All other business has to stand aside, and precedence has been given to the question of lending our credit to a firm that contracted with us to perform this work, and got such an immense bargain when they made that contract. To-night, we are told, must close this debate, the body must be worn out if necessary in order to force this question to a decision. There is another thing connected with the measures introduced in regard to this matter that makes me a little suspicious, that is the lack and the refusal of information which is necessary in order to enable the members of this House to form an intelligent judgment on this subject. When the contract was first entered into, papers were moved for by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and his motion for those papers, which were necessary for the proper consideration of the bargain, was voted down by the representatives who then occupied seats in Parliament. While I will not say that during this Session papers have been refused, I will say—and I believe I am within the strict line of truth—that papers moved for and not objected to, have not come down, and we have not the information that we ought to be in possession of before we enter into the negotiations now pressed upon us. Sir, why are we asked at this stage to aid this Company? It is not wonderful that we should be suspicious when we recollect that one of the strong reasons given at the time the bargain was made why it should be ratified by the members of this House, was that the Syndicate were a wealthy body of men; that they were possessed of unbounded resources, and were able to complete their work; and that we should give them a good bargain, because we should never hear from them again. The hon. First Minister on a public platform is reported to have said—and he admitted the substantial accuracy of the report—that the Company were able to build a dozen railways. The hon. Minister of Railways said the same thing, and he pointed out in this House that we were securing finality in this matter—that we should not be called on again. And the First Minister, heaving a long sigh of relief as he uttered his words—feeling, in common with the rest of the people of this country who had been borne down by this great enterprise, but more than others, because he bore at the same time the burdens of State—said that we should breathe easier, because we should be relieved from the responsibility of this enterprise. We breathe easier because we are relieved of the responsibility of this, said the hon. Minister of Railways, in the discussion across the floor; and when the hon. member for West Middlesex, discussing the proposition made by the second Syndicate, said they were men of wealth and standing in the community, men of ample means whose claims ought to be considered, as they were offering better terms than those offered by the first Syndicate, the hon. Minister of Railways replied that there were Canadians in the first Syndicate, one of whom could buy out the whole batch that formed the second syndicate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman says, "hear, hear;" but if he had been with me in the thriving town of Strathroy, not many weeks ago, he would have heard his colleague, the hon. Finance Minister dilate, as he only can, upon the wealth, energy and enterprise of one of the men who were members of that second syndicate—a man of unbounded resource the hon. Minister of Finance described him, and yet we are told—although he was only one of the many men in this second syndicate—that there were men in the first Syndicate, one of whom was able to buy out the whole of them. Why then are those men here knocking at our doors for a loan if they are men of such unbounded resources? Why do they not do that which the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. First Minister and all the members of the Government led the House to understand they would do—that if there was not money enough given them out of the public Treasury to carry out this bargain, they would put their hands in their pockets and build the road out of their own resources. Three short years have elapsed, and here we are in Parliament, day after day, night after night, discussing, as a matter of urgency in the interest of the Company, whether we will advance them another $30,000,000. Why has it come to pass that such is the case? Is it because we were wrong in estimating the cost of the work they undertook to do? Is it because we have failed to carry out our part of the bargain with reference to it? Nothing of the kind. I stand here to-night and repeat what I said when that contract was under consideration of this House, that to my knowledge, never was such a bargain given to any men under the sun, as was given to the Syndicate in that contract; and I think it is capable of demonstration that their running out of funds at present is not due to the fact that they have undertaken the work at too low a price, but to the fact that they have taken the funds which were devoted for the purpose of building this great national work and have diverted them to other uses. They now come to Parliament and whine, through the members who support the proposal, because in doing so they have awakened hostility to themselves. It is rather amusing to hear hon. gentlemen opposite, with scolding tongues, berate members of the Opposition because we desire a little information with reference to the doings of this Company and the use they have made of the money that has been given them, and the stock they have issued, and all their operations in regard to the matter. It is rather amusing to see this Company come here, and through the mouth of the Government tell us: We are in this pitiable position because the naughty American roads that are our rivals have actually gone and opposed us in the London and the New York money markets and have damaged our credit. Did these men of unbounded resources, these men of great enterprise, these railway kings who entered into the construction of a great trans-continental road, imagine that they could do so and not awaken animosity on the part of rival roads? Why, they must have known such would be the case. Energetic men like them must surely have known that they could not build a competing line with another road and not find that other road doing what it could to protect its own interests, even to the decrying of the prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. Minister of Railways was, as the hon. member for West Huron said, mild, for him, when he introduced the Resolutions. He alluded to the opposition the Company had met with from the Northern Pacific Road and other roads in the United States, and he stated besides that there had been opposition from sources nearer home. But he did not declare what those sources were. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe succeeded the hon. Minister of Railways in the debate, and received his inspiration from him, and in saying that, I mean no discredit to the hon. gentleman, because he presented his case well, and the hon. Minister of Railways did well in selecting him—but I say he received his inspiration from the hon. Minister of Railways. I do not blame him, because it was not in the power of the hon. gentleman, any more than it was in the power of the leader of the Opposition and those who spoke in the early part of the debate, to know fully what to say on this subject, for the hon. Minister of Railways came down with his proposition to this House and desired to press it through, before he had submitted to the members of this House any information, before he placed them in a position necessary to deal with it. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe—I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Railways suggested to the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe that, as he could not well make an open attack on the Grand Trunk Railway, or the Liberal party, or the Liberal press, since he was making a statesman-like speech, and it was not in his interest to awaken hostility—the hon. member could now, when the debate had reached the right point, supplement that lack; that he need not have the delicacy the hon. Minister had, but might allude to the hostility of the Grand Trunk Railway, and the unpatriotic conduct of those members of the Opposition who asked for information before they would vote, who absolutely refused to shut their eyes and swallow down a proposition to give $30,000,000 to the Company before knowing something about it; but the hon. gentleman proceeded, at any rate, to take this course. He pointed out that the Grand Trunk Railway had damaged the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway because they had used their influence in London and the other money markets against them. What did these energetic, shrewd men of the Canadian Pacific Railway expect the Grand Trunk Railway to do? Did they expect that they could take the moneys which had been voted so lavishly by the people of Canada to build a great international road across the continent on British soil and use it instead in acquiring branches, in leasing all the existing lines of railway in Ontario on which they could lay their hands, and which would give them fully half the control of the trade that was being done by the Grand Trunk Railway. I am not pronouncing judgment upon the wisdom or the contrary of this, but I say these men in doing this, these men in undertaking by this means to damage the stock of English capitalists who have tens of millions invested in the Grand Trunk Railway, must have known that they were sure to arouse a feeling of hostility on the part of that company. Now, Sir, it is not their place to come to Parliament, and, with whining mouths, through the representatives who argue their case here, say: We could have gone on all right, but we had Grand Trunk rivalry. They should have counted the cost before they went into it, and, if—and I will deal with that later on—there has been anything said against the operations in which they have been engaged, which has tended to damage their credit, by members of the Opposition and by the Liberal press, then, before, they entered into the questionable transactions which have been pointed out by the Liberal press and by the Liberal party, they should have counted the cost, and should have known the effect it would have upon them. Surely, the Liberal party are not to be blamed if, in pointing out what has been done by this company, it redounds to their injury, for it can only redound to their injury if they have been guilty of acts which, in themselves, would not bear scrutiny and investigation. Now, I come to consider what are the reasons urged why we should aid this Company, and in the first place I will consider the reason that is urged with reference to time. The whole question turns upon that. The hon. Minister of Railways says they are able to go on and finish their contract, but unless you give them this $22,500,000 as a loan, and defer the payment of the $7,300,000, a portion of which they should have paid in on the first of this month, and in which they are defaulters at this present moment, you cannot get your railway completed before the end of the term of the contract; but if you do, you will have the road completed within two years from date. The sole reason that is urged in reference to this matter, or the one on which they rely, is the early completion of the work four or five years before the date mentioned in the contract. And I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you did not fail to observe, with your shrewd observation, that in the Resolutions we are asked to approve in the House, the Company are not bound to complete the road at the end of two years. They are not bound to, and the whole case rested on the fact that this $30,000,000 was to be given to this Syndicate in order to accomplish that end; and yet, in the Resolutions we are asked to adopt, it is not provided that they are to complete it then. True, we had a little bye-play between the hon. the Minister of Railways and the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), but the debate had gone a long way before that. The Minister had spoken, but he did not, in the whole length of his speech, intimate such a thing as that the Government would bind the Company to do it. It was pointed out by the leader of the Opposition, that gentleman who is attacked so much in the House, and certainly we ought to give him credit for that, if for nothing else, that he saved those gentlemen who proposed to vote for these Resolutions from the ridiculous position they would have been in of voting of thirty millions of money to have the road built at the end of two years, without having the Company bound in the slightest degree to do it. And that it was an after-thought is very evident, not only from the fact that it was not mentioned in the speech of the Minister of Railways, but even after the hon. the leader of the Opposition had pointed it out, it was not mentioned by the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) who followed. The Minister of Railways, I fancy, had not at that time had an understanding with the railway Company that there was a necessity that that clause should be put in, or I think the member for Richmond and Wolfe would have been careful to give the information to the House at the first opportunity. But when the hon. member for Cardwell came on, whether it was arranged or not I do not know—I must infer that it was not known between them, because the hon. gentleman said he did not know—he was expressing his desire that something of that kind should be put in, when, very opportunely, just waking up to a realization of the announcement, the Minister of Railways rose, begged his hon. friend's pardon, his hon. friend at once granted it, and took his seat, and the Minister of Railways went on to say that it was impossible in Resolutions of this kind to embody every point, but they meant to do it in the Bill. But surely, Mr. Speaker, Resolutions of this kind, in which we are being firmly bound to give $30,000,000, room ought to have been found for a few words to compel the Company to fulfil their part of the contract. The hon. member for Cardwell sat back in his seat satisfied. But I tell the hon. gentleman from Cardwell that he must watch the Minister of Railways—and I am speaking in a parliamentary sense now. I warn him to be on his guard, I warn him by his own past experience, with reference to the expressions of hon. gentlemen who lead his party, to remember what scrapes they have got him into. He must watch the Bill when it comes down, and see that nothing is forgotten or omitted. He has a reputation made in the country and in this House, and by trusting implicitly the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches, and deeming that they were speaking without any reservation when they made important statements, he committed himself to a statement, to a line of policy and action, in this House, which stands recorded against him upon the public journals, and which has cast a blot upon the fair fame he had achieved for himself. Surely he heard the First Minister say, when this contract was under discussion, with reference to the clause affecting the North-West Territories—he heard the First Minister say: We cannot check Ontario. He heard him say: We cannot check Manitoba; and his mind grasped it at once. He thought he could obviate a great objection in the mind of members opposite by elaborating that point, and showing that this monopoly clause only gave power to this Company over the North-West Territories, but did not give power to them in the Province of Manitoba. And he enlarged upon it: he explained to the House and the country, that it was beyond the power of the Government, that it was unconstitutional on their part, that they could not, if they desired, check Manitoba in any way; that Manitoba was free to grant a charter at any time, from Winnipeg, to connect with any system of American railways that might choose to tap it. And under that persuasion, I dare say, strong scruples on that point in the minds of many members were removed. And yet, that hon. gentleman knows that having uttered those words, he to-day follows an Administration that has disallowed charters that have been granted by that Province, and which does not give to it the rights that he promised on behalf of the Government. I say to him, with his past experience, to beware when the Bill comes down to see to it that that becomes a part of the Statute Law of this land; that it be not repeated upon him again, that he may not be deceived once more by statements the Minister may have made. Now, Sir, there is another reason assigned why we should complete this road in two years. I have heard arguments advanced on the part of the supporters of the Resolutions before the House—I do not say on behalf of the supporters of the Government, because I am in no position to judge that the supporters are, all of them, in this case to support the Government; it is a question which is to be left to the free judgment of the people's representatives here—but I have not heard from those who have justified the Resolutions any strong reasons why it is in the interests of the country that this road should be built in two years, and that we should not allow the eastern and western ends to be built within the time mentioned in the contract. True it is that we heard the hon. member from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) tell us that it would promote emigration; true it is that we have Mr. Schreiber, one of the gentlemen to whom this question was referred, giving us his view in reference to it; and I propose to call the attention of the House to the manner in which the Minister of Railways fortified himself in bringing these Resolutions down to Parliament by the reports of his subordinates. I think it was the 28th of January that he referred to his Chief Engineer the consideration of the last proposals of Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I think it was on the 2nd of February that he received a reply from that officer, which he submits to this House as a reason why these proposals should be accepted. The report is a remarkable document, but I submit, with all deference to that gentleman, that he was not in a position in which it was desirable he should be placed, in order to enlighten the Government with reference to the expediency of these propositions. I find he said this:

"With regard to the proposal as a whole, I beg to state that in my opinion too great importance cannot be attached to the early completion of the railway which is to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by way of British territory. It is an absolute necessity for the development of the country in every respect. It is the only means whereby the North-West can be peopled with any degree of rapidity. By its means the Rocky Mountains would be filled by a mining and lumbering population. The fisheries of the Pacific Ocean would be developed and the trade of China and Japan, which now finds its way into and through the United States, would no doubt follow our line as the shortest and most favourable route to the East."

The engineer of the Government viewing these propositions as a whole, bases his recommendation of their acceptance on these sentiments that he says he entertains, and has here expressed. With all respect to that gentleman for his engineering skill and for his energy, to which I would differentially submit, as would every other member of this House, I still venture to remark, that when he comes to speak of the utility of this road, and its effect on settlement, and the development of trade, he knows no more on these questions than do the commercial men who occupy seats in this House. Does any sensible business man believe that it is essential for the early and rapid settlement of the North-West country that the end of a road toward British Columbia should be built? Has the Minister of Agriculture had another wonderful stroke of genius like the one he had in England, that the Minister of Railways told us about, and has he devised an arrangement whereby immigrants from Great Britain and Europe are to be sent round and brought into the North-West by way of the Pacific Ocean? Are they to bring in our immigrants in that way? If not, how is it that the completion of that end of the road is to facilitate the introduction of immigrants into that country? True it is, he may have immigrants coming in that way, but they will not be immigrants from Europe. If they do come into that country, and settle in the North-West they will not be Europeans but Asiatics. Therefore, I suppose we must assume that in order to bring in a large immigration of Asiatics, this Parliament must vote $30,000,000 of the people's money, contributed by the working men of this country, in order to bring in Asiatic foreigners to compete with them. The Government certainly will not bring European immigrants in that way. Then, with reference to the Lake Superior division, will the Government tell us that, in order to people that country with immigrants, it is absolutely necessary that they shall go in over the section that is being built north of Lake Superior? Why the Minister of Railways has told us himself that arrangements are effected now by which immigrants go from Quebec to Winnipeg through our own territory, by the mixed rail and water route, for the sum of $12 per head, and I venture to say that, when the road is completed north of Lake Superior, he will not be able to make better or cheaper arrangements for depositing those immigrants in that country than he has at the present time. Therefore, talking about its being a means of settling the North-West, is to me talking clap-trap. We have now the means of access and of ingress to that country reduced to the minimum of costs, and quite as cheap as it will be when the ends of the line are completed; and, in urging that as a reason for making haste, and in making haste, for giving $30,000,000 more of the people's money, we have an argument which, properly considered, will not carry any value at all. Oh, but it will develop the Pacific fisheries, we are told. Well, I do not know that the fishermen of the Atlantic coast, the fishermen of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, find the price of fish too high now that they need give $30,000,000 of their money to bring fish from the Pacific down to compete with them. Then, as to the Rocky Mountains being filled with miners and lumbermen, they can go to the Rocky Mountains now over the portion that is constructed. What we desire, and what we have ever advocated, and what we are in favour of to-day, is the speedy opening up and settlement of the fertile plains of the North-West, that they may be opened up, that happy homes may be given to the sons of all Canadians, from all the Provinces, that may go there to settle on land bought with their own money, and that is their inalienable right; and that, when they settle on those lands and endeavour to hew out a name, a fame and a fortune for themselves, Government restrictions and the shackles of this railway monopoly shall be knocked off them, and they shall be given all the freedom of communication that is requisite to build up a great and powerful people there. And, when these gentlemen opposite charge, when they dare to charge upon the leader of the Opposition or upon any members of this side of the House, that they have not favoured the speedy opening up, the speedy peopling of the fertile plains of the North-West, I say, and I say it here boldly, that I challenge them to the proof. In vain they will search the records of this country for it. If I might talk in a party sense in this House, though the party spirit should be dropped when we are considering a great subject of this kind, if I desired a party victory on this point, I might remind them of facts they could not deny—I might remind them that, while many of them were opposed to the acquisition of that territory, the late lamented George Brown, at one time the grand leader of the Liberal party, with his powerful organ, the Globe newspaper, which at times says things that do not suit the hon. gentlemen opposite, and at times says things that I myself would not have said, this grand old organ, that has stood firm for the cause of liberty, justice, and right, advocated it time and time again, and he was followed and endorsed by the people on this side of this House. And I say boldly that there has been no greater friend and advocate of the opening up and settlement of the North-West country than that gentleman who sits before me now, the hon. member for East York. Sorry I am that the powerful voice that once filled this chamber is not his for the time being. That it may soon be restored to him, that he may rise to his own feet, and, with his own voice, defend himself again, as he has done time and again, against the men who from the other side have dared to say he was lacking in the spirit of patriotism and did not carry on the affairs of the country as he should, is my earnest wish. Now, what was the view of my friend from Richmond and Wolfe, in reference to this subject of the speedy completion of the road, a few years ago? When the contract was under discussion, my friend, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) made a very good speech, and one of the best things he said was a joke which told against the members of that party to which I belong. It was very well done. Referring to the First Minister, who had said that from serene heights he hoped to gaze down and see railways running through our North-West country, he told us that, unless we changed our ways, all we should know in the other world would be to hear the rumbling of the cars overhead. We are not there, and I trust we are not to be consigned to that place. In that speech the hon. gentleman deliberately laid it down as his view that the 90 miles from Yale to Port Moody should not be built for some years—at all events, until we had finished the portion from Yale to Kamloops. If you do not do that, said he, with the immense impetus which will be given by the National Policy, and the good times which will be brought about by the expenditure of large sums by the Canadian Pacific Railway, we shall have such an overflowing Treasury that we shall not have to borrow a single additional dollar. He was cautious in those days; he was desirous of exercising a prudent economy; he was desirous of exercising that common prudence that should weigh with every member of Parliament. Proceed in that way, he said; do not go too fast; do not touch the portion between Yale and Port Moody until you have finished the portion from Kamloops to Yale, and all you will pay is $6,700,000 this year, and next year, and the next year, and the next year, and $3,900,000 per annum for the remaining years of the ten years. And doing this, you will, out of the surplus, through the great impetus given to the trade, build and complete the road without borrowing a dollar. Now, we have the Minister of Finance telling us that he will have to go to England—he has not told us, but we know he will have to go—to borrow the money required for this loan, and we shall have to pay interest on it. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe is now one of the most earnest advocates of this scheme, which involves an entire change of base on his part. The Minister of Railways, in 1880, did not propose that we should proceed with the railway north of Lake Superior at once, but he thought before a great many years had passed the demands of trade would require it to be built. Now, Sir, the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), has offered an amendment to the House. He has recited that it is desirable we should have a Select Committee to inquire into the affairs of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company before we are asked to ratify the Resolutions before the House. He asks for a Select Committee, because he thinks a full and searching enquiry into the affairs of the Company is necessary. He thinks more information with respect to the stock dealings of the Company, and with respect to the contract made with the construction company, and with respect to the amount of money expended, is absolutely necessary. I appeal to hon. members, not on one side of the House, or on the other, but I ask all hon. members to put this question to themselves and answer it honestly and faithfully: Do you know the whole ins and outs of the stock transactions of the Company? Have you seen the returns, partial though they be, submitted to the House—and they have not been printed? Are hon. members prepared to vote when only partial returns have been submitted, the most important part being withheld? If they answer the question honestly, that they are not in possession of the information required to enable them to know all about the stock operations of the Company, I submit they are not in a position to say they are justified in voting for the Resolutions now before the House. What have we learned by a cursory glance at these partial returns? We find that the original stockholders took $5,000,000 stock at par; that at a subsequent period—I do not know the date, the month is given, but not the year—appropriated to themselves other $20,000,000 stock at 25 cents on the dollar. Well, what did they do? They came to the Government. And what did the Government do? The Minister of Railways told us the Government agreed to guarantee 3 per cent. interest on the stock, amounting to $65,000,000, the Company depositing a certain sum of money, and agreeing to deposit a further sum; but they have not done it. and they ask us in the Resolutions before the House to postpone the date of payment. What did this operation mean? Was it a proper operation? I think the Minister of Railways admitted that the Government had transcended their legal powers in guaranteeing the stock. But what an operation it was for the Government, to mix itself up in such a transaction! It may have been all right, but it excited alarm among men accustomed to dealing in stocks in the money markets of the world, and the effect was, instead of the results desired being obtained, the stock fell into a worse position than before, and necessitated the Company coming to Parliament, unexpectedly, I believe, by the Minister of Railways himself, to submit the proposition now before the House. Mark what the effect would have been—I do not say that it was—but it is open to this construction. Taking the average of the $5,000,000 stock which the Company took at par, and the $20,000,000 they took at 25 cents on the dollar, the original shareholders allotted themselves $25,000,000 stock for which they gave $10,000,000. Then they come to the Government and obtain a guarantee of 3 per cent. As the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe told us, they had a right to expect that under the guarantee the stock would go up to 75 cents on the dollar. There was the transaction. This would have enabled the original shareholders to have sold out that $25,000,000 stock at 75 and realized an enormous profit. I understood the Minister of Railways to admit that the statement of the leader of the Opposition was correct, namely, that the Government had transcended their legal power in giving the guarantee, the effect of which was expected to raise the value of the stock to 75 cents on the dollar, and we know the original shareholders obtained the $25,000,000 stock at an average of 40 cents. Is this information which commends this Company unreservedly to our confidence? We want more light and explanations in regard to this matter, and I support the amendment of the hon. member for West Huron on the position he has taken. Then it is desired that we should have more information regarding the transactions with the construction company. I confess I am at a loss to understand from the partial returns submitted to us the dealings with the company, and I propose to submit to the House certain figures given in that return, which only work out in a certain way, but the result of which proves that there must be something wrong in the figures, something not straightforward, which requires explanation, and if the Minister of Railways thinks it worth while to give his attention he will see the difficulty, and perhaps he may be able to help me out of it with the knowledge he possesses, which may not be in the possession of myself and other hon. members. Now, Sir, we find in the returns which came down the other day, a statement of account with the construction company. Mr. Van Horne, General Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, admitted, in a conversation he had with a correspondent of the Mail newspaper, in this city, and which conversation the correspondent has published in his widely spread journal, for the information of the people of this country—he admitted that there had been in connection with construction companies, in some cases, that which was far from being straightforward and right, and that it would not be unreasonable—I think that is the tenor of his argument—that there might be a little suspicion attached to the construction company peculiarly formed, at any time, or wherever it might be found, but that so far as this Company was concerned, it was all right and straightforward. So it may have been; I will not say it was not, but it is a remarkable thing that a railway company having a large contract, should form a construction company to carry on the work, and that out of the 25,000 shares of that construction company, the Railway Company should hold about 21,000 shares. This, on the face of it, is a transaction which requires more explanation than we have at the present time. Here, however, is a statement of account with the construction company, as furnished by the return I have referred to: Sundry small vouchers for supplies and labour, $127,340; Langdon, Sheppard & Co., $1,118,528; Thomas Ross, Manager, $1,260,831; total, $2,506,700; that is on the Western division. On the Nipissing Division, we have labour, fuel and small supplies, $1,389,127; on the Lake Superior division, labour and small supplies, $2,064,608; or, taking the three amounts together, we have a total of $5,910,436. Then we have other items, as follows: Material and supplies furnished, $4,184,511—less material and supplies returned, $2,373,620, leaving a net amount of $1,790,891. Labour furnished before date of construction contract, $78,432; transportation charges, amount paid out for back charges on freight, $103,315; Canadian Pacific Railway Company's charges, $1,274,970, and putting those two together, we have $1,378,286, and this and the other items together, with cash advance to construction company $600,000, makes a total of $9,753,096 paid to this construction company; or leaving out of consideration the $600,000 advance, for purposes as to which we are entirely in the dark, as to which we know nothing, we have an expenditure $9,158,096 made to the construction company. I have to ask the Minister of Railways that he will be kind enough to give his attention for a moment to a point which strikes me as a difficult one, with reference to these figures. I desire to place nothing before the House which is not correct, but hon. gentlemen who have spoken will agree with me, that it is a difficult matter to speak with positive accuracy, because of the partial information we have with reference to this question. But the cash advances on the western division are $2,506,700; I add to this the sum of $1,493,300 for the western division, out of the total sum of $1,790,891, material and supplies. I do this because the statement does not say how this item of material and supplies is divided between the Eastern and the Western Divisions. Then I add for fuel and labour furnished before the date of the construction contract, $78,432. Of the item for transportation charges, amounting to $1,378,286, I add $921,518. Adding these items together, I find we have a total paid to the construction company of $5,000,000 for work done by them on the western part, according to the figures which have been furnished. You will observe that the construction company, on this western part, built 345 miles of road, from the point of commencement, 45 miles east of Medicine Hat, to the summit. This would give us for the $5,000,000 expended on that portion, the rate of $14,500 per mile. That includes the bridge over the Saskatchewan, it includes mountain work between Calgary and the summit. Then the Minister of Railways has given us the total cost of the western division, and the amount is $17,529,175. If we deduct the $5,000,000 paid the construction company for the 345 miles of their contract, we find that the expenditure by the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves is $12,529,175, for a distance of 615 miles, or at the rate of $20,372 per mile, and this is over the easy prairie section, which the Minister of Railways estimated would be built at $10,000 per mile. Let us look at it in another light. What were the construction company to get for building this 345 miles, and the 290 miles—or, as the Minister of Railways put it, the 300 miles from the summit to Kamloops? They were to get in cash $17,880,000 and $25,000,000 of stock, which we will estimate at 60 cents on the dollar. That will not be out of the way, when my hon. friend said it should bring 75 cents. That will give us $15,000,000 for the stock, or a total of cash and stock amounting to $32,880,000. That was the bargain made with the construction company. Now, we find that the amount paid to the construction company for the 345 miles was $5,000,000. Mr. Van Horne says to the Mail correspondent, and the Mail correspondent has given it to the world, and I am glad he has done so, for it will be useful in this discussion—Mr. Van Horne says they will finish for $10,100,000 the intervening space between the summit and Kamloops. In other words, they would have a profit of $2,780,000 out of the cash subsidy alone, and a clear present of $25,000,000 of stock. Will the hon. Minister of Railways say that this House is prepared to vote on these Resolutions while it has figures before it which gives a result like that? In case it should be said that I have not added a fair proportion to that western division for supplies and transportation, I have made a second calculation in which I have added the whole cost of transportation of material, supplies and labour to that western section, so that I could make no mistake at all; and let us see how it works out: Cash advances, $2,506,700; add all material and supplies, $1,790,891; add all labour furnished before the date of the construction company's contract, $78,432; add all transportation charges, $1,378,286; and you have a total advance paid to the construction company of $5,754,359. Now, Sir, I have added everything in this statement, except the two items which the record says are specifically for the Lake Superior and Nipissing division. How do these figures work out? The contract with the construction company for the western part provided that they were to get in cash $17,880,000 to finish that contract. The construction company were paid $5,754,359, and Mr. Van Horne says that they can complete the balance for $10,100,000; so that the construction company were to receive $17,880,000 for work that could be done for $15,854,359. That would give a balance of $2,025,641 in cash, and $25,000,000 in stock besides. And yet the hon. Minister of Railways asks us to proceed with these Resolutions, and the First Minister says we must vote on them to-night. I venture to say that these figures have not been seen by a large majority of this House. I throw on them the responsibility of voting for these Resolutions, in the face of these facts, and I tell them that there are strange things in the figures submitted to this House, and they ought to make themselves acquainted with them before they cast their vote. Let us look at these figures again. The total cost of the western division, as given by the hon. Minister of Railways, was $17,529,175. Deduct the cash paid to the construction company, according to my second calculation, $5,754,359, and you will have 615 miles of prairie road built by the Company themselves, costing $11,774,816, or $19,143 per mile; while the 345 miles built by the construction company, including the bridge over the Saskatchewan and the work in the mountain region, cost only $5,754,359, or only $16,680 per mile. Sir, these figures require explanation. If they are correct figures, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have, by some kind of manipulation, expended thousands of dollars per mile more in constructing the easy prairie section than the construction company were paid for building a large portion of the line running through a mountainous and expensive district. That is one of the alternatives I present to the Government, and the other is that this House has been given figures that are not correct; or, if correct, require to be explained and added to in some way or other. Now, I come to another consideration in this matter. I wish to point out to the hon. Minister of Railways and to the hon. members of this House, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have had from the Dominion Parliament more than enough to build all the line that they have built under the contract without one single dollar of their own, and to have millions of dollars besides. I notice one remarkable thing in this debate. I notice that hon. members opposite, in criticising the speeches of hon. members on this side of the House, have fought shy of the figures given by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fairbank). One hon. gentleman so far forgot himself—and I will do him the credit to say I think he did forget himself—as to attempt to break the force of that hon. gentleman's argument by reading a portion of an item from a newspaper without its connection with this matter, but was designed to leave the impression on the minds of hon. members that the hon. member for East Lambton had not been able to effect anything by his argument. It was an easy way, if not an honourable way, for that hon. gentleman to get around the arguments of the hon. member for East Lambton, but to this present moment his statements and his arguments have not been met. That they were worthy of consideration was shown by the attention that the hon. Minister of Railways paid to them. I propose to follow out the same line. If our figures vary at all, they vary because there has been a little discrepancy between the figures published in the newspapers, which he was forced to use, and mine, which are taken from the return. Substantially they are the same, and what do they show? The official return brought down, reinforced by the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways himself, gives the amount expended by the Company on their main line—and mark you, in the discussion of this question we have to confine ourselves to the main line, and the contract we made with the Company. We did not contract with them to acquire roads to the east, to the west, or to the seaboard. We did not contract with them to build branches here, there and everywhere, but a main line reaching from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, and we must confine ourselves to the operations of the Company under that contract. Now, the total cost, as given by the Minister of Railways, and by the return of that main line is $23,078,951. Now, what have they received from the Government alone, leaving out the bonuses from Winnipeg and the other towns, leaving out all receipts from the sale of stock and from other sources? They have received cash $12,289,212; they have realized from sales of lands, 3,753,400 acres at $2.36, or $8,858,924. Then there is the proceeds of the land sold in transactions not embraced in operations connected with land grant bonds—such is the language of the returns—I suppose it means town sites, $147,775—making a total received from the Dominion Government, without putting in one cent of their own and without including the bonuses of any municipalities, or the proceeds of the sale of stocks, or anything of that kind, of $21,625,011 in cash lands. This leaves them but $1,453,940, to provide to pay the entire cost, and every single dollar they have laid out on the construction of the line they have contracted to build. Yet these gentlemen come to us and demand that we should give them aid. In that calculation I have only figured up the land they have sold, and have not attempted to make any calculation as to the land they might have sold had they asked a reasonable price and placed less galling restrictions on the people of the North-West. Let us look to the expenditure they have made and the total receipts they have got from the Government. Their total expenditure was $23,708,951. They received from the Government, $12,289,212; they received from the sale of 3,753,400 acres, at $2.36, $8,858,034, and from the sale of town sites, &c., $477,775; and they have retained yet 10,002,305 acres of land they have earned, and which I estimate in this calculation, not at $2.36 but at $2, leaving out the 36 cents to defray costs and charges. This land will give them $20,004,610. In other words, the Company's receipts from the Government alone amounted to $41,629,621, deducting from which expenditure as given by the hon. Minister of Railways, $23,078,951, and they have a profit on the amount given by the Dominion Government for the work done, without embracing the proceeds from the sale of stock or from any other source whatever of $18,550,670. But the hon. Minister may say you have not included the rolling stock; they have to furnish the rolling stock. Sir, when you contract for the construction of a road the cost of the road does not include the rolling stock. But I propose to give the hon. Minister of Railways the utmost he can ask for—although I maintain he has no right to ask for this—and I will add to the entire expenditure made on the main line the total cost of their rolling stock, $6,130,792. What do we find? We find that we have paid every dollar they have laid out on the main line, including their rolling stock, and they still have a profit of $12,419,878. I challenge the hon. Minister to take these figures, to confine himself to the contract, and work out if he can any different result to the one I have given. All this lugging in of money deposited with the Government, and money expended in the acquisition of other roads, is beside the question. What we have to consider is the contract and only the contract. What we have to consider is the money expended on the road they contracted with us to build, and in considering that we find that the Dominion Government has paid all so expended and the Company have a profit of over $12,000,000 besides. I do not desire to weary the House further with figures or to take up much more of its time.

Mr. RYKERT. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. I have really succeeded in tiring the hon. member for Lincoln. But if I have succeeded in tiring him to anything like the degree he tired me last night, I pity him from the bottom of my heart. I do not claim that I have made a speech as eloquent as the hon. gentleman—his speeches are always eloquent because they contain very few words of his own. He does not give the House the benefit of his own ideas, but he has a happy way of giving the views of more intelligent and able men—of course I exclude myself—who have spoken on this side of the House, and hon. members on this side would have no objection to his quotations if he would only show a little more fairness, and in reading the eloquent comments made from time to time by the leader of the Opposition and other hon. gentlemen, give them in their proper connection, and not give us statements taken out of their connection, and thus at times be made to bear a different construction. I am glad he is the only hon. gentleman opposite who is tired, or that no other hon. gentleman opposite has expressed his fatigue, because, they have more respect for my feelings than has the hon. member for Lincoln, and I venture to say that, tired as the hon. member for Lincoln may be and other members may be, they will not deny me the right of saying a word or two in defence of the party with which I am associated, and which hon. gentlemen opposite have attempted to vilify. Hon. gentlemen opposite who, in default of argument, have been using the tongue of a scold and berating hon. members on this side, for what they are pleased to term lack of patriotism, ought to know when making a charge of this kind—if they are speaking of that patriotism which is alone worthy of the name, and that I believe dwells in the breasts of hon. gentlemen of this side—they are endeavouring, as far as within them lies, to insult hon. gentlemen on this side. You have, Mr. Speaker, deemed it your duty to call members of this House to order for expressions used in the heat of debate with reference to members sitting in the House, but I think you will agree with me that no more insulting language can be used by one member of this House to another—if he really understands what patriotism is—than to charge a lack of it to any hon. member here; but when hon. gentlemen opposite charge us with lack of patriotism, do they mean that patriotism which the hon. member for Queen's describes as the last resort of a scoundrel? Similarly described, I am told, though I had not the pleasure of hearing him, by a gentleman almost as cultivated and intelligent as the hon. member for Queen's, who spoke in the Opera House the other night—I mean Matthew Arnold—who gave the same definition. If it is that kind of patriotism they charge us with lacking on this side of the House, we plead guilty to the charge, and we glory in it. We do not admire that kind of patriotism that was manifested, as we read in one of the city newspapers the other night, that kind of patriotism that dwelt in the breast of a certain major who dwelt in a city in the State of Mississippi. That gentleman was very fond, as hon. gentlemen opposite are very fond, of at all times parading his patriotism. His unalterable love of the constitution, his unalterable love of the United States, and whenever he was caught in a more shady transaction than usual he paraded his patriotism a little louder. He died. One of his friends pronounced the funeral oration. He said: "I remember a touching incident in the history of our deceased friend. Our departed friend at one time was the president and cashier of the Wolfsburg Savings Bank, and the Savings Bank broke, and a committee of depositors waited upon him, and asked what had become of the funds they had placed in that institution. Our departed friend drew himself up to his full height, and his breast swelling with patriotism, he said: 'Gentlemen, I forget what I have done with the funds, but I cannot allow this auspicious occasion to pass without assuring you of my unalterable devotion to the constitution and laws of the United States and to the flag that floats over us.'" That may be the kind of patriotism that dwells in the breasts of hon. gentlemen opposite. That, at all events, is the style of their argument. They rise to debate a question, a serious question, a financial question, a question of great import, whether we shall add to our public debt nearly one-fifth more than it is now; they rise to discuss that, never having, judging from their utterances, taken the trouble to read what partial returns are before us, and they think they are making argument and replying to us enough if, when we ask them: "Have you read the returns in reference to this matter; do you know anything in reference to this stock operation?" they say: "Oh, no; we do not want to know, all we care to know is that our devotion to the flag is unalterable; we are patriots." If we ask them: "Are you prepared to shut your eyes and vote this money blindly?" they say: "We do not care about the money, but we assure you there is a feeling in our breasts of undying patriotism." If that is the patriotism that these gentlemen are talking about, this patriotism for revenue and for revenue only, then we deny having it on this side, and we desire not to have it; long may we be without it; for, if there is anything more disgusting or revolting, if there is anything which is more of a stench to the nostrils than another, it is a man who, when unable to maintain his own in argument, will, in the guise of either religion or patriotism, seek to cover up crimes or misdeeds that he may have been guilty of. But, if they mean that patriotism which is true patriotism, if they mean that love of country that should be deep in the heart of every citizen of a free country, if they mean to charge upon the members of this side of the House that we are lacking in that, I hurl back the charge in their teeth, I defy them to the proof, either by word or by deed. I charge not upon them anything of that kind. I merely remind them of this fact, that they made two statements, one of which must, I think, not be true. They charge that the Liberal party and the Liberal press—and they admit its powerful influence for evil if not for good—are damaging and destroying this country, that we, in part, have helped to wreck the credit of this Company, that we are decrying our country and preventing immigration from coming in, and doing vast harm to this country; they charge that upon us because they say we point out certain things which we consider are not right in this country, because we say there is a railway monopoly that holds within its grasp men who ought to be free in the North-West country, and they say we are doing harm to our country by pointing out evils which exist in it. What effect then must the utterances of these hon. gentlemen have upon the well-being of this country, if they believe what they say or think anyone else will believe it, when they proclaim broadcast to the people of the world that one-half, or nearly one-half of the people of Canada, and the most influential portion of the press in Canada, are without a spirit of patriotism and are working for the destruction of their country. That is what the hon. gentlemen opposite are doing. They must think that no one would believe what they say, or they would forever hold their peace from saying that the Liberal party and the Liberal press are crying down their country; for they would, if men believed them, do more to injure their country in that way than by anything else. People would rather come to a country where there was a monopoly clause and a charter than to a country where the people were divided, one-half of them seeking the destruction of the country in which they dwell. They know that, in making this charge, they are but seeking to cover up a case they are not able to argue upon its merits, and I would propound to the hon. gentlemen this question: if they want to evince that spirit of patriotism which they say dwells in their breasts to such an extent, as they charge us with unpatriotism and say we only voice it when we are in opposition on this side of the House, and are doing such injury to the country, why cannot they, out of the depths of the patriotism of their patriotic souls, say, "True, we are on the Treasury benches; true, it is nice to be here; but there is such a spirit of patriotism in us that, as we can stop your unpatriotic cries if we let you into our places, we will step out and invite you into them?" They are not capable of a spirit of patriotism of that kind, but they will remain over there, and cling to their benches, and, introducing measures that are questionable, and in my judgment, more than questionable in the best interests of the country, will seek to make up for lack of argument by endeavouring—I use the word advisedly—to abuse the men who sit opposite to them, and stand their peers in Parliament, and have a right to express their views, and do it, they believe, conscientiously and in the best interests of the country. We have been taunted as being a small band on this side of the House, as a party it is not worth arguing with, for we are but a small handful, and time and again hon. gentlemen opposite have not thought it beneath their dignity to rise and point to the smallness of our number and taunt us with it. The member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) hesitated not to do it last night. In his most offensive way, he referred to the member for South Huron as a gentleman who had lost his election and could not find a seat in the House. He was unable to carry his county, and why? Because of an Act that ought to bring the blush of shame to that gentleman's cheek. Does he not know that he was one of the party sitting in the last Parliament that used their powers as a majority to perpetrate and put upon the Statute Book, to enact and put on the Statute Book of Canada, a law that I say, Mr. Speaker, ought to bring the blush of shame to the face of every man who voted for it, whenever he hears it mentioned. It was conceived in the spirit of—I do not know whether I am allowed to use the word cowardice in Parliament or not, but it was a law that was conceived in that spirit which lacks that element of fair play that is so dear to every Briton. When, by their overwhelming numbers these hon. gentlemen introduced a measure that had been meditated upon day and night, presided over, I was told, by the hon. Minister of Customs in a secret committee, introduced in the dying days of the Session, and voted for by the majority of this House, and by which almost every hon. member of the Opposition in the Province of Ontario was struck at that it was possible for them to strike at, because they dared not face the Liberal party before the electors of this country—I say, Mr. Speaker, cannot the word cowardice be applied to that Act? And we have the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) talking about the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) being out of this House for one Session! And why not? He, unlike myself, and many others in this House, had not his constituency remodelled, but he had it wiped out altogether; and so effectually was it wiped out that the hon. gentleman himself, while speaking last night, did not appear to know who represented South Huron and who represented West Huron; and some hon. gentleman sit there, not by virtue of the will of the people of this country, but because they passed a law by which the mind of the people could only be unfairly expressed, and they consequently sent a small minority to this House to represent almost a majority of the people. Yes, the hon. member for Lincoln was one of those gentlemen. Sir, I say to you that it would not have been so bad for members on that side of the House, including the hon. member for Lincoln, had they simply done this in the spirit of craven fear that beset them; but they went to the electors in the last election, having taken care, as they generally did, to have Conservative territory added to their own in order to keep their seats. I believe, Sir—I speak subject to correction, I may be mistaken, but I believe I am correct—I believe that that hon. gentleman sits here to-night as a representative of the people by virtue and by grace of the Gorrymander Act, that gave him strength he would not have otherwise.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I would have had a majority of seventy-five in the old territory.

Mr. PATERSON. I have spoken subject to correction; I hesitated to make the charge because I was not positive. I am not therefore in the position of one who has anything to retract. But what I have said, speaking under correction, has been heard by the members of this House, and what he has said has been heard by the members of this House. The returns of the General Election of 1878 can easily be had, and will show the townships that his county now comprises, and we can find out whether, by the alterations that were made by that Act, that hon. member strengthened himself thereby. And having strengthened himself in that way, he has the manliness to rise here and taunt men on this side of the House that were legislated out of their seats, with misrepresenting the people. If he had a particle of feeling in him he would be the last man that would ever attempt to cast such a taunt across the floor of the House. There are hon. gentlemen beside him who sit there by virtue and by grace of the Gerrymander. They did not dare to go before the electors until they had strengthened themselves by this sort of legislation. But, Sir, they went further than that. Not content with taking care of themselves, they determined that the men of this side who had to go before their constituents, should go there bound by the legislative fetters they have placed upon them, and in an unequal combat. Sir, in spite of all that, there are still a band of Liberals in this Parliament, undaunted and undismayed by the overpowering numbers that are against them, who will every time stand up in their place, and when they see a measure introduced by this Government that they conceive is opposed to the interests of the country, they will rise and, in parliamentary style, but with all the force and vigour they possess, they will oppose that measure; and if they fail in opposing it successfully, they will not, at any rate, in the future have to regret that they did not put forth their efforts and do their duty in that direction. I do trust, Sir, that before this debate closes it will be found that not alone the members of the Liberal party, who have criticised these Resolutions, but that on the other side of the House there are also many who, weighing well the responsibility upon them, knowing in their inner consciousness that they know scarcely anything at all of the operations of this Company, will vote for the amendment of the hon. member for West Huron, who does not say we will not give them the money, but who does say: Before we do this it is necessary to have a Committee to enquire fully into the transactions of this Company, and report its position to this House. For that amendment I shall have much pleasure in recording my vote.

Mr. ROSS. In rising to address the House on these Resolutions, I do so with much diffidence, inasmuch as I am a young member, and as so many able speakers have preceded me. But when we consider the importance of this question to the North-West, and that the interests of the North-West are so nearly identical with those of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I think it but right that some member from the North-West should be heard on these Resolutions. Now, Sir, a good deal has been said with reference to the North-West by some hon. gentlemen who are not fully posted as to the facts. I propose to point out some mistakes that have been made. When this charter was granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Government had completed a line of railway from Emerson to Selkirk, and east from that to Cross Lake, and from Winnipeg west to Portage la Prairie. The moment the Company got that charter they commenced the construction of a road from Portage la Prairie westward, with a rapidity that has been a source of pride to the people of the North-West. I think the hon. member for South Huron said it was a great disadvantage to the people of the North-West that this railway was built so rapidly. To a certain extent he is correct. To those people who were in the North-West previous to the granting of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, it has been a source of dissatisfaction and grumbling; and for this reason, that previous to the granting of the charter, there were two streams of emigration flowing into that country, taking Winnipeg as a starting point, one to the south-west, towards the Pembina Mountains and the Turtle Mountains, and the other by Portage la Prairie on to Shell River. The people who went in there expected a line of railway to pass their doors. The people in the south-west expected the road then controlled by Mr., now Senator, Schultz, to pass their doors; and the people in the north-west expected the Canadian Pacific Railway to pass their doors, because the Government in their maps laid down the line of Railway they were about to construct as running in that direction, and the people therefore settled there. When the work of construction began, people, instead of striking out in a north-westerly direction, settled along the line of railway. What was the result? The people already settled, instead of finding markets, found no markets; there was a lack not only of a railway market, but they were not able to sell their produce, as previously, to incoming settlers. But I take it that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have their duties and other interests to look after than merely the interests of the original settlers in that country. The interest they had to serve was the interest of the whole Dominion. They had to build a railway from ocean to ocean as rapidly as it could be built; and in that rapid construction they have developed a country which otherwise would not have been developed as it has been. This is a very important consideration, looking at the matter from a Dominion standpoint. Some hon. gentlemen have said that this has been a disadvantage. I agree that it has been a disadvantage to the original settlers, but not to the new settlers and not to the Dominion as a whole. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) made a statement which I was sorry he uttered, because the paper which he edits and controls has shown a fair amount of justice to the North-West during the past years, so far as I have traced the course of that journal. The other night the hon. member made use of an expression which, as I have said, I was sorry to hear, for when the hon. member used it it was not spoken out of his inmost soul, but in doing so he was pandering to the prejudices of certain people in eastern Canada. When he compared the people of the North-West with the early settlers of Ontario, he forgot that they were placed in entirely different positions. We are now at the end of the nineteenth century. Who were the original settlers of Canada? People who had to leave England, Scotland and Ireland, in order to make room for sheep farms. The hon. gentleman said he had heard the tales of early settlers in Ontario. I have not only heard them, but I have seen the difficulties for myself, and I know what the early settlers had to put up with. The settlers who went from the north of Scotland had to make room for sheep farms, and on leaving they saw the smoking ruins of the cottages in which their forefathers were born. They crossed the ocean after a three months' voyage. When they reached this side, the bridge was broken, and there was before them either destitution or success. These people settled up Ontario and made it what it is to-day. But at that time the United States had no field for immigrants to compare with Ontario. At that time their great West was a sealed book, and was unknown; but, to-day, when inviting people to go to the North-West, we have competitors in the great western States, and in the north-western States, which have equal and similar advantages with our country, a better climate, and more favourable conditions, but not so fertile a soil, and we must make ready use of our advantages. When the early settler came into Ontario, he carved out a home for himself, although many men were digging their grave by so doing. What capital did they require? Their only capital was an axe, a harrow and a few other things of trifling cost, and even on these there was no National Policy. They went to work, built a cabin, made fences, and put in crop, and in the winter they were able to go and earn money in the shanties, and they did not require much. What does the settler in the North-West require? He requires lumber, at from $25 to $30 per M. for his house, wire for fences, posts, and all sorts of agricultural implements; and these are difficulties with which the people in the North-West have to contend, and which they never experienced in Ontario. I would ask the hon. member if he would be satisfied to go back to the old days and travel in a stage coach, because his father did? If the Grand Trunk had a strike on hand and an election were pending in Cardwell, and the electors were as anxious as the hon. gentleman for him to visit the constituency, would he be satisfied to take a stage coach, because his father in Ontario did? I think not. We must offer similar advantages in the North-West to what the Americans offer, and that we are endeavouring to do, by opening up the country and making land laws and regulations to suit settlers. A great deal has been said with respect to the misrepresentations of the press. As a Reformer in the North-West, I feel very strongly on this subject. I say that the Reform press throughout Ontario has misrepresented the North-West. I have pointed it out to leading members of the press, that they are misrepresenting and doing a great injustice, not only to the country but to the farmer, and that if they adopted a different course, nine-tenths of the people in the North-West would be in thorough accord with the Reform party. But they have adopted an entirely different course. The Globe, the leading Reform newspaper, was one of the very first to advocate the interests of the North West, and it pointed out that it had a great future before it. But a change came over that journal. After the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was passed, some of the papers, I will not say all, misrepresented that country. Last winter the London Advertiser, one of the most influential Reform papers, started into circulation a report that a whole family in my constituency had been frozen to death. It went into the facts that a blizzard came on, that the family were frozen to death, not possessing any firewood. It mentioned the man's name, and where he came from—in Ontario. A long time elapsed before the truth was found out. The leading Reform paper of Manitoba, the Winnipeg Free Press, set itself to work with vigour and energy to find out what amount of truth was in the statement. It found out that there was no such man in the part of the constituency to which reference was made. The man lived in Winnipeg; he and his family were comfortable; they had never seen a blizzard in their lives; they had never suffered from want of wood, and whenever they required it, they went to the market and bought it. I found that this lie travelled not only through Ontario, but when I was in England, last summer, it was being circulated all over the United Kingdom and was being copied by the press. The same paper last fall, when the report was in circulation that there was very serious damage done by frost in the North-West, took credit to itself for being one of the first to let it be well known that serious damage was done in the North-West. This was done for selfish purposes, to make a few hundred thousand dollars from buying grain in the North-West. It is a falsehood, as far as the amount of damage really done by frost is concerned. The report was circulated first by the largest grain buyer in the country. It was conceived in greed and brought forth in iniquity, properly clothed, and nourished, and started forth in the world by a petty party press. It was first circulated here, and is now being circulated all over England and being republished through Europe. That journal said:

"One of the reasons for a large wheat crop in the North-West is the slowness with which it matures, but this is wholly due to the fact that the ground freezes to a great depth; that it takes the whole summer to thaw out. The temperature of the soil is therefore kept at a very low point throughout the season, and the risk from frosts is proportionately greater. If your correspondent could prove that there are no greater risks than here, he would at the same time prove that the productiveness of the country, as a wheat region, has been grossly exaggerated."

I would simply state that the writer's argument is all false. To begin with, he says that the frost goes down a great depth in the ground. But it is for that very reason we have an abundant harvest. The experience in Russia, which, is the great wheat-growing country in Europe, is that when they have very little snow but heavy frost during winter, in the following summer there is a heavy wheat crop. The same experience prevails in Minnesota. In the North-West, no doubt, the frost goes down deep, and when the hot season approaches the frost is coming out of the ground and stimulates the growth of the grain, and it is on this account that the growth in the North-West is more rapid than in any part of Canada. Sir, the whole argument is a fallacy. He goes on to say in another part:

"When our correspondent says that the wheat crop of Manitoba and the North-West will average twenty bushels to the acre, we believe he is altogether mistaken. We are certain that the winter wheat crop of this western peninsula will not average anything like ten bushels to the acre, and our information convinces us that the estimate of our correspondent is altogether erroneous. One farmer from the vicinity of Turtle Mountain informs us that his average this year will be about twelve bushels, and the average beyond the boundaries of Manitoba in some places are reported as high as twenty, but in others much less. But whether believed to be more or less, is a matter of no consequence. It cannot change the result."

What has the average of crop of one single farmer to do with the average of the whole country, or the average of the crop in the western Peninsula to do with that of Manitoba? I wish to speak about this damage by frost. The leader of the Opposition made use of an expression which I wish to have explained. He said there was a liability to frost in a certain portion of that country. Now, I would like to ask him what portion of the country does he refer to, because our territory extends to the Arctic Ocean, and he may mean the Mackenzie River. Or does he mean that what happens once may happen again? If that is what he means, I accept the statement, because that frost not only visited us, but extended far south, as far as Iowa and other States where frost had never been known before. If he means that, then the liability to frost extends not only to the North-West, but over a large portion of this continent, and we are not more liable to frost there than in any other part of Canada. I have seen nine harvests reaped in the North-West, and I never saw the effects of frost before. I have seen delicate varieties of flowers growing in my own garden at the end of September, and even as late as the 5th of October. Last year, however, it was different; but, as I have stated, this was an exceptional year not merely in Manitoba but for a long distance south of it. I would also give the evidence of Senator Sutherland, who is a native of that country, who has lived in it a lifetime, and who informed me that he has never seen damage by frost for the last thirty years; and if that is the case, I think we can safely say that so far as any liability to frost is concerned, we share that liability with the rest of Canada and a large portion of the United States. Now, Sir, there was a statement made in a letter to the Globe the other day, to which I wish to refer. The writer said:

"The people and Parliament of Canada would do well to consider the fact that the building of the Pacific Railway is a national speculation at best. The North-West has certainly not yet been proved a country in which agriculture will flourish, or be more than a most precarious occupation. If 1882 and 1883, were years of normal climate in Manitoba, grain-growing there is a lottery with a very large proportion of blanks. Before pledging the credit of the country for $35,000,000 more, it would surely be well to wait for evidence that the frosts of 1883 and the floods of 1882 did not make them abnormal years. Mr. Stephen says that his Company can fulfil their engagements, but if not granted aid now must call a halt for five years. A halt is just the thing that will suit the general interest. It cannot harm any public interest or any interest that Parliament can legitimately befriend, while it will give time to learn the truth as to the capabilities of the North-West before making the expenditure of many millions that should not be expended, unless the North-West will certainly return the money, principal and interest."

Now, Sir, that statement is most damaging. With regard to the floods in the North-West, that is another matter as to which the newspapers have exaggerated to such an extent, that it is wonderful to find that their statements are believed by anybody. I believe they had floods in Montreal the other day, and to talk about the injury by floods in the North-West is about the same thing as to say that the floods in Montreal injured the whole of Canada, the whole of the eastern States, and nearly all the midland States, as far as the Mississippi. The floods extended over a few thousand acres along the line of the Red River, and were very limited in extent. I was astonished at meeting some of my friends from Ontario, who came up to that country who owned land 40 or 50 miles away from the Red River—I say I was astonished at their asking me the following summer how many feet of water was on their land at the time of the Red River floods. Their idea seemed to be that the whole country was covered; and when you take into account the fact that the portion which was flooded at that time was but the merest fraction of the whole country, and that even at places a short distance away from Winnipeg, such as Portage la Prairie, Brandon, &c., the floods were unknown, you will have some idea of the effect of these floods, and of the amount of damage that is likely to be done by similar floods in future. The Globe says again in an editorial article:

“What benefit has Ontario derived thus far from the opening up of the North-West, or what benefit is it likely to receive that would justify the imposition of burdens so heavy upon our people? We have seen the very flower of the youth of this Province allured to the West by what was said of the fertility of that region and of its vast resources, and we saw thousands of those young men, after much of their means had been wasted, forced to return, or driven wholly out of Canada, by the monstrous regulations framed in the interest of speculator and monopolist. We have seen the value of real estate in this Province greatly reduced because of the outflow of the population.”

Now, Sir, I maintain that a paper of the standing which the Globe has in Canada, advocating the rejection of these Resolutions, and giving as a reason for so doing, that the young men of Ontario had gone to the North-West, and that, therefore, this Province should not be called upon to do any more for that Company, is something like the position the New York Herald would occupy if it argued that Congress should not pass any Bills in assistance of a line of railway passing through that country across the Rocky Mountains, simply because the young men of New York State, and other States, in the east, had gone to better their condition in Colorado and Wyoming, and that, therefore, it was a damage to the country. Another question has been referred to, and that is the colonization companies and the monopoly provisions, as they are called. Here is what the Globe of October 19th, says:

“A correspondent of the Globe is quoted to prove that larger quantities of free lands ready to be homesteaded have been discovered in Liegar, and that there has been a rush for them. That this discovery is made only now, shows how bad the management has been. That there was such a rush for those lands only proves that settlement would have proceeded more rapidly had it not been obstructed by monopoly.”

Now, Sir, with regard to these very lands, I have only to say that they have nothing whatever to do with the monopoly; that they are outside of the railway belt, and that they are not covered by the colonization companies' grants. I tried my best to settle those lands years ago, but could not. The people coming in then were determined to rush westward, and nothing could stop them; they were bound to get ahead of the construction party on the railway in order to get first choice, and when they reached the Rocky Mountains, then, and then only, did they come to the conclusion that they had better get lands in the eastern part of the North-West. Then it was that these settlers wisely decided to settle on these lands within 40 miles of Winnipeg. With regard to what was said by the hon. member for Grey, the other evening, that some young men from his part of the country had gone there, and could not get land, I have only to tell him that to-day I can take his friends and place them on as fine land as the sun shines upon within 50 miles of Winnipeg, and that I can place settlers on these lands to the number of hundreds or thousands. The truth is, that I have seen people going up there like the wandering Jew, going over as fine lands as could be found anywhere, not once or twice, but five or six times, and they still remained unsatisfied, and would not be satisfied even if improved farms were given them. These are the kind of men who try to find an El Dorado, who try to get perfect farms. I saw a party of them in the neighbourhood of the Souris settlement, in as fine a country as the sun shines upon, searching amongst thousands of acres of magnificent country, and still they could get nothing to suit them. These same gentlemen have come up there, and they have come back; and if they ever get to heaven, they will not be satisfied to stay there, because some of the choicest seats, in their opinion, will be taken up. Another question has arisen with regard to the North-West. Various newspapers have published articles to show that our land laws are not so favourable to settlement as those of the United States. Although some mistakes have been made, I say that the regulations in settlements where there are no reservations, are more favourable than those of the United States. The Globe of the 17th of October last, says:

“The right of preemption was one of the most effectual means of promoting settlement in the western States. This was abolished by statute last year. The effect of such abolition must be to discourage settlement.”

Now, Sir, I hold that preemption as it is known in Canada, does not exist in the United States. What is called preemption there is an entirely different thing, although we have in Canada also what passes for preemption in the United States. I wish to settle this matter once for all, because a great deal of discussion has taken place upon it which need not have taken place. I will read the laws of the United States on this subject:

“Heads of families, widows or single persons (male or female) over the age of twenty-one years, citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intention to become such under the naturalization laws, may enter upon any offered or unoffered lands, or any unsurveyed lands to which the Indian title has been extinguished, and purchase, not exceeding 160 acres, under preemption laws.”

Now, Sir, there is no such thing as the privilege of getting a preemption alongside of a homestead. Any man who gets a preemption in the United States cannot get a homestead. The United States law further says:

“A preemptor may submit proofs of residence at any time after six months and obtain title to his land. At any time before expiration of time allowed for proof and payment, the settler may convert his preemption claim into a homestead. No person who abandons his residence upon land of his own to reside upon public lands in the same State or Territory, or who owns 320 acres of land in the same State or Territory, is entitled to the benefits of the preemption laws. The latter provision does not apply to a house and lot in town.”

Now, what is the meaning of this law? That if any man wishes to take up land in the United States he can do so, and he can get that land in one year as a preemption by paying for it; but he must not own even 320 acres in his own right, and, moreover, he cannot leave his homestead and take up a preemption, for a homesteader must live on his homestead, and a preemptor must live on his preemption. Therefore, no man can have a homestead and a preemption in the United States. That is the pre-emption law of that country. Another advantage we possess over the United States is that we have second a homestead entry, while they have not. We provided for this last Session, so that any man can now take up a second homestead in the North-West, after he has got his patent for his first one. Therefore, I claim that our land laws are, on the whole, much more liberal than those of the United States. Now, Sir, the course taken by certain portions of the press, and by those who are opposed to the Canadian Pacific Railway, has been identical. Both are opposed to the North-West, and the effects of their opposition have been most disastrous in England, not only to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but to the North-West, for the interests of both are identical. I believe a great deal of the abuse which has been published against the North-West, with regard to frosts, &c., has been published in order to injure the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The effect is to injure both, to impair the value of the Canadian Pacific Railway stock in the English money markets, to check immigration and the investment of capital in the North-West, and to cause general stagnation of business over the whole of that country. There have been other causes for that stagnation, but these things have helped to increase it. Is there any foundation for these attacks which have been made on the Canadian Pacific Railway? Is there anything in the nature of the North-West to show that it would not support a railway? I hold that in Manitoba alone there is going to be business enough to support the Canadian Pacific Railway. Take the statistics of last year, which have been collected by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture for the Province, who has been very active and painstaking in collecting them. They show that last year there were 457,216 acres under cultivation, of which 208,674 were under wheat, yielding an average of 23.69 bushels to the acre, making a total yield of 4,799,571 bushels. It was thought at the time these reports appeared that the average yield claimed was too great—that the result would not bear it out. The Deputy Minister, with his accustomed energy, went to work and got returns from the threshers in the different parts of the Province, and they bore out his report within a fraction. Our export this year is about 2,500,000 bushels. Now, Sir, we have an estimate that next year there will be 377,624 acres in wheat which, at twenty bushels to the acre, will give a total product of 7,552,480 bushels. In addition to these, I have got statistics from the assistant land commissioner of the Canadian Pacific Railway, showing the amount of breaking and back-setting in the North-West Territories. The statement he furnishes shows that 87,000 acres of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands alone are broken and back-set, ready for seeding next spring. If they yielded twenty bushels of wheat to the acre, that would add 1,740,000 bushels. I have not been able to learn the exact number of sections of Government land which have been settled in the North-West, outside of Manitoba, but a large addition can be made on that account. These figures show that the total yield of wheat in the Province and the territories next year under ordinary circumstances will be 9,293,480 bushels, so that we shall have at least 6,000,000 for export. That may not seem a very large amount; but when we consider that during the past year the total exportation on the St. Paul and Manitoba road, which has the largest percentage of the wheat carrying trade of all the railways in America, and has two lines of railways besides running parallel through the Red River Valley, amounted to 13,000,000 bushels, and that that road will carry this year no more than 16,000,000 bushels, we may conclude that the North-West will do pretty well if, in the second year of its exportation, it will have a surplus of 6,000,000. In the following years the product will increase much more largely. At this rate of progress, I estimate that the wheat yield in five years from to-day will be over 20,000,000 bushels in the Province of Manitoba, of which we will have at least 16,000,000 for exportation, or as much as the St. Paul and Manitoba road have carried over their line this year. This is more than the Canadian Pacific Railway could really carry out of the country. Taking the 30,000 farmers now in Manitoba, and supposing that each cultivated only thirty-five acres of wheat, and that each acre gave twenty bushels, we will in five years have a yield of 21,000,000 bushels, that is if immigration should entirely cease, and these farmers should only cultivate thirty-five acres each; but with the large number of immigrants coming in every year it is impossible to give even an approximate amount of the production in the time. Yet we are told that there will not be sufficient traffic to make the Canadian Pacific Railway pay expenses. I hold, on the contrary, that the traffic on that road is going to be so great that the Canadian Pacific Railway will not be able to carry it all. The hon. Minister of Railways, I think, went over the mark when he said that 320 acres would be cultivated by a single man; but supposing in seven years from to-day there would be 100,000 farmers in the North-West—and this would only give us 50,000 a year of increased population—and supposing that each one cultivated 80 acres, yielding twenty bushels an acre, that would give 160,000,000 bushels. If we cannot do this in seven years we can do it in twelve, for it is certain there will be more than 100,000 farmers there then. Take the wheat grown in India. It is not ten years ago since wheat was begun to be exported from that country. In 1875 1,500,000 bushels were exported from India to England; last year 35,000,000 bushels were exported. From the American continent the exportation last year was about 75,000,000, making a total of 110,000,000 from India and the whole American continent. I am satisfied that under favourable circumstances and with the progress our North-West is making, we will be able in twenty years at furthest to send as much wheat to Europe as was sent from the whole American continent and India in the past season. This means that the Canadian Pacific Railway will not be able to do the work in a few years, and before long they will be building a double track from Winnipeg to Port Arthur; in five years they will have more trade than they can carry, and it is important that other outlets for the carrying trade should be provided, for the growing trade of the North-West is not confined to wheat alone. We have a large cattle trade in the ranches of the West to develop, and a lumber trade, and the minerals and mines to be developed, which will furnish a large amount of traffic. Next season, I am satisfied, we shall have 10,000 men prospecting in the Rocky Mountains and opening up new avenues of trade. Look also at our large coal fields. In one section of land alone there are 11,000,000 tons. And when I say that we have thousands of those sections, you will be able to form some idea of the vast amount of coal in that region. The lumber and coal trade will furnish a large traffic for the railway, and these products will be all sent to the eastern part of the territory, while the cattle will be sent to eastern Canada. In view of the rapid development that is going to take place in the North-West, it is more necessary to the people of eastern Canada that the road should run to the north of Lake Superior than it is to the people of the North-West, who, to-day, have their outlet by Port Arthur, which gives them all the outlet they require, and a winter outlet by St. Paul. But if the people of eastern Canada want to control the trade of the North-West, it is absolutely necessary the line should be built north of Lake Superior. How is the general trade and merchandise of the country to be carried if not carried over that road, otherwise a large portion of it will go by St. Paul and Chicago. It is said that the construction of the Hudson Bay road would be disastrous to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I hold the contrary opinion. I believe that if the construction of that road were started to-morrow it would give such an impetus to enterprise, it would so develop the energy of the people, and trade would so rapidly increase, that the Canadian Pacific Railway would, in the meantime, receive great benefits; and if the road were built to Hudson Bay the traffic would be so great that both roads would have all they could carry. It would be very important to the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the Government, and the whole country, that the Hudson Bay road should be started as speedily as possible, and the more we consider the North-West the stronger must be our conviction that not only two but a dozen lines of railway will be necessary there in the near future. A great deal has been said about the land along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, west of Moose Jaw, and I was prejudiced myself against the land owing to the reports made of it. But I have since travelled over it and I have travelled over the land along the lines of the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and the Northern Pacific, and I can state from my experience and from the knowledge I have of the soil—and I profess to have some knowledge of soils—that the land along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is better than that along the lines of the three American roads. There is no line of railway in America of the same length as this 900 miles, which passes through such good average land as that through which this passes. For 300 miles west of Moose Jaw, there is better soil to be found than along any 300 miles of railway in Canada. The soil, Sir, is excellent. But here comes the question about the dryness of the climate. I have my own opinion about that. I saw farms cultivated on the Union Pacific and on the Northern Pacific, with drier climates, producing good and fair crops, and if they can produce fair crops in that climate, I do not see why we cannot produce as good crops in the North-West, where the climate is not so dry, where there is more moisture, and where the soil is infinitely better. I examined the grass in the North-West country, and I came to the conclusion that, where such grass as that can be grown, though it does not compare with the grass in the western part of that vast plain, there is moisture enough in the soil to produce any quantities of crops we wish. The great thing for the settlers in the North-West to do is to sow their grains either late in the fall or in the early spring, or on the snow, and I am satisfied that, with the moisture of the snow and with the early rains, the crops will be prepared to stand any drought in the summer. People in travelling across that country come to the conclusion that, because the grass is short, the country must be poor. If you took a gentleman from Kansas, who never saw a wooded country in his life, and brought him through Canada and showed him a hemlock and pine forest, and the magnificent trees in it, and then showed him a forest of beech and elm, with its underbrush, he might, in the same way, come to the conclusion that, in the hemlock forest, where the trees were so large, the soil is very fine, and that, in the smaller forest, the soil is inferior. It does not follow, but the reverse is the case. The grass which grows in the North-West plains is peculiar to the country along the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, and it does not follow that, because the grass is short and apparently withered, the soil is poor. That grass is peculiar grass, and when people travelling over that country in August or September, or even in July, see the grass brown and coloured, they come to the conclusion that the country is withered up and good for nothing, whereas the grass is hay with its roots attached to the soil, which is undergoing or has undergone a curing process. That is why it is fit for ranche purposes. If it did not undergo that curing process in the summer months, it would be good for nothing in the winter for stock; and that is not confined to the North-West, but is the case throughout that plain, and extends down to Texas, and that is why the people do not understand the nature of the soil in that country. I hold, further, that in no part of the American continent—and I think I have travelled on most of the line through the best parts of the United States—do you find so much good land in one solid bulk as in the North-West, and this is the country that is to support the Canadian Pacific Railway. Why, Mr. Speaker, in that vast country we have a heritage that the people of the North-West themselves have not yet commenced to realize, and the people in eastern Canada have not commenced to dream about. The people in eastern Canada seem to think they know all about the North-West because they have read about it. They know no more about it, they have no more clear and defined idea of it, than they have of heaven from reading about it. They have a vague and indefinite idea, but they must go there and see for themselves before they can realize what it is. The extent of that country is so vast, its resources are so varied, that we who have been there for years have not yet commenced to take in the situation and realize the future which is in store for us. In that country there is an infant, in swaddling clothes, if you will, spoon-fed, perhaps, but he feels within him the power of a mighty giant, which, in the future, will be felt in eastern Canada, as well as throughout the world; and we hope that, when that day arrives, when that power is felt by eastern Canada and the rest of the world, the people in eastern Canada will take pride in it, and recognize the fact that it is part of one common heritage. We are only now beginning to feel the dawn of inspiration of our future greatness coming over us, and before it rises into meridian splendour, we hope the people of eastern Canada will begin to see some faint streaks of that future splendour. I hope and trust they will. One question that comes home to us is, what is going to be the cost of transportation of grain in that country? Is it to be so cheap that the farmers in the North-West can make a living? If not, then the country is a failure, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is a failure also. I find that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be able to take grain from Winnipeg to Montreal, via Port Arthur, for 25 cents a bushel at most. Take grain in Chicago. It takes about 8 cents to 9 cents a bushel, take it year after year, to bring grain from Chicago to Montreal. Now, the grain in the North-West, our hard wheat in the North-West, is worth about 10 cents a bushel more than the grain of Chicago, showing that they have only a few cents the advantage over us in the wheat-growing trade of our country in the future. Take the prices to-day in the Winnipeg market. First-class grain that has not suffered from frost is only 13 cents a bushel less than wheat sold in Chicago. If that is the price to-day, if the Canadian Pacific Railway sees fit in their wisdom—and I believe they will—to build large elevators for the storage of grain at Port Arthur, elevators which will store millions and millions of bushels, to bring it down in the winter time and store it and send it on by lake boats in the summer, I feel satisfied that grain can be taken in that way from Winnipeg to Montreal nearly as cheaply as it can be taken from Chicago to the same port, taking into account the superior quality of our grain. Thus, I believe that the farmers in the North-West, if they get over their present troubles, if they get upon their feet again, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company acts with wisdom in regard to that country and in preparing proper elevators for the storage of grain, have a bright future in store for them, even if no other railways were built in the very near future. The opening of the line north of Lake Superior is very important to the people of Ontario. By that line grain urgently required by eastern millers will be conveyed, and a large share of the implements required by North-West farmers, purchased in eastern Canada, will go over this line before the opening of navigation, and the amount of passenger traffic will be very large. A great many people have said you were building this road for the North-West. You are doing nothing of the kind. The people in Winnipeg are satisfied even if the money is not to be spent there. Not one dollar of that money is to be spent there, but most of it on the line east of Port Arthur, in the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec, or, at least, it will filter through those channels. We may get some of the money spent in the Rocky Mountains, though, judging from the past, it will be only a small portion of the money paid on construction in the mountains that will be spent in Winnipeg. But it is not for the people of Winnipeg, but for the people of Canada that that road is to be built. In the Province of Ontario, the railway is opening up and developing 8,000,000 of acres of arable land along the line. We in Winnipeg do not grumble at that. We only hope it will open up 80,000,000 of acres of arable land, and so make it more successful than it otherwise would be. We have been bearing our fair share of the burdens of the country. We went into Confederation knowing we should have to bear our full share of those burdens. We are prepared to do so. We have paid more per capita than the rest of the people of Canada.

We have put up with the National Policy, and this is the first year we have ever grumbled, because the people of the North-West believed that, in the interests of Canada, the National Policy was necessary, in view of the vast expenditure of money which was going on. As all the rest of Canada believed, in its wisdom, that the National Policy should be passed, we did not grumble, though we were the principal sufferers. The farmers of the North-West were buying their implements, but they did not grumble nor complain. The increase in duty was made last year, and the result was that the farmers, who were suffering from other causes, who were suffering as well from severe frosts, found the duty a grievous burden, in their opinion, and it is only now they are beginning to complain and wish the duty thrown off. We are prepared to take our fair share of responsibility in connection with the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we are not so interested as some people in eastern Canada imagine. A great deal has been said about the monopoly clause in the charter. That is not so important to the people of the North-West as some people seem to think. The monopoly clause does not affect the old Province of Manitoba, which was exempted from the operation of that clause. This is held by the Company, by the Government, and we hold it in the Local Legislature. But the Government considered it for the best interests of the country, and saw fit in their wisdom as they saw it to cancel some of these charters. But if you struck out the monopoly clause it would not make the position of Manitoba any better, because the Government could still exercise the power they have under the British North America Act, to cancel any charters connecting our country with the other Provinces, or with the United States. To do away with that monopoly clause would be of no benefit whatever, unless we had an assurance from the Government that they would never exercise that right again. But there is only one line of railway outside of the Hudson Bay Railway that could at all begin to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that is a railway that would come down to Duluth, and reach the nearest watering place where vessels can be loaded with grain. Therefore, I do not think the interests of Manitoba are so much affected that the monopoly clause should be struck out, because the Government can still exercise the same power under the British North America Act. Now, what would be the consequence of rejecting these Resolutions? The consequence would be a general paralysis and stagnation of business all through the North-West. To-day there are millions of money in England ready for investment in Canada, but capitalists there are waiting to see what we are going to do with these Resolutions and watching the future season in the North-West. In the past, English capitalists have invested in Canadian securities only to a small extent—excepting Government securities. They have invested in Grand Trunk securities, and we all know the result. They were dissatisfied; it is not a paying security; and the consequence is that English capitalists have been disinclined to invest in Canadian securities. They prefer to send their money to India, Australia, New Zealand and the United States. If you go to London you will find many business houses exclusively engaged in financial operations in these countries I have mentioned, but very few engaged in similar operations with Canada. But to-day English capitalists stand waiting to invest millions in our North-West in case the Canadian Pacific Railway Company succeeds in opening up that country. In the city of Denver, even, you will find many buildings erected by British capitalists, and that State and others have been developed almost entirely, or very largely, by English and Scotch capital. It is well known to-day that, if this railway goes on and develops that country as we expect it will, millions of money will flow into it, and we shall soon be independent of any foreign capital. In that country, Sir, the people of Canada have a heritage so great that they scarcely deserve it, because they do not appreciate it. It is in that country that a true Canadian sentiment, of Canadian nationality, is to arise. It is there that the sons of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario are to be found labouring side by side, working out their own destinies, and at the same time working out the destiny of their country. And, Sir, if there is to be a Canadian national sentiment, a national sentiment such as is possessed by the people of the United States, you will find it growing up and taking root in the great North-West. To-day we are but a bundle of twines, and not a strong rope. I say that the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway will contribute to the rapid development of that country, and to the growth of a national sentiment. I hold that one of the most important needs of this country is to have one common feeling of sympathy and pride uniting the people of the several Provinces. We want a country that we, as Canadians, can feel proud of, and I think the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, giving us a line of railway from ocean to ocean, the largest line of railway in the world, with a country unsurpassed for fertility, and a climate almost perfect, I say, I think when we have a country thus opened up and developed, we shall be proud of it, and the national sentiment will become strong. Sir, there is no more intelligent and progressive people in this country than are to be found in Manitoba and the North-West. There are no more enterprising people anywhere than are to be found there; and none, Sir, so intelligent ever settled any Province or any State in the Union. I think, Sir, that if ever a Canadian sentiment is to arise at all, it will arise in the North-West. If there is ever to be a question on which we can all unite as one man, that question should be the development of the North-West, along with our national highway, and if we cannot agree on that, then, I say, Confederation is a failure. If the North-West is a failure, then Canada is a failure, and the sooner we realize that fact the better. Sir, the destiny of Canada, for the next five years, is involved in these Resolutions, is involved in the question now before the House, and hangs upon the vote to be given here to-night. If that question should be decided in a certain way, disaster and ruin would overtake, not only the North-West country by keeping back emigration and retarding its prosperity for many years, but disaster and ruin would overtake the whole of Canada. I say it would be very difficult indeed, for many years to come, to give such an impetus to the development of that country as the construction of this railway has been giving it for the last few years. It would shake the confidence of men who have invested there, or intend to invest there, and would seriously check emigration, and send a chill through the whole of the business circles of Canada. And, Sir, it is of the utmost importance that, just at this moment, when capitalists are thinking of aiding in developing our common country, we should not only throw no obstacles in the way and shake their confidence, but show that we had faith in that future ourselves. Mr. Speaker, I shall have much pleasure in supporting these Resolutions, not only, as I said, from a North-West standpoint, but from a Dominion standpoint, because I believe that if they fail, the result would be disastrous to both the North-West and the whole Dominion.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not propose to take up many minutes in discussing the question before the House, not that its importance would not justify me in doing so at a considerable length, even at this late hour, but, after so much has been said, I do not deem it necessary that I should address the House at any length now. With regard, however, to the remarks which have just fallen from the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), I may say, I am sure he has given us a most pleasing account of the natural resources of the North-West, and I am sure that no one will more rejoice in the full development of those resources, than the hon. members who at present fill the important position of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in this House.

Several hon. MEMBERS. Oh, Oh!

Mr. MULOCK. Hon. gentlemen on the other side appear to question that statement. They appear to think that they are the only friends whom the North-West has. I think that the future will show who are the best and truest friends of that great country. At all events, I think that it would be quite becoming hon. gentlemen opposite to allow gentlemen on this side of the House to express their views without interruption. I would prefer to hear the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) express his views on the floor of this House in the usual manner; he should recognize the fact that at present the member for North York is addressing the House. I was about to remark that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) has chosen to give his opinion as to the effects of the monopoly clauses on the interest of the North West. I am sure when he goes back to Manitoba the people will be pleased to learn his view as to the effect of those monopolies on their interests. He tells you that he attaches no value to the fact that these clauses are in the contract. He thinks it is no disadvantage to have them in the contract. And why? If they were not there, he says, the Federal Government, by virtue of their power to veto, could veto any Act granting a charter to a railway in Manitoba. Why, we are told every day now that, but for the vested rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, those powers would be withdrawn; and the Minister of Railways himself told us that he trusted, at no distant date, to be able to give relief to the North-West in this respect, and that Manitoba especially would be benefited by that concession.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to correct him, as he labours under an entire misapprehension. I stated distinctly that the contract had no bearing on Manitoba; and why we propose to revise the policy of the late and present Government was not in regard to any provision in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but because we arrived at the conclusion that the interests of the country will be subserved by taking a different course.

Mr. MULOCK. When the Government exercised their power to disallow the charter for a railway from Winnipeg to the border line, it was disallowed as being an infringement of the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. MULOCK. That is a matter at which we are at issue. The hon. member for Lisgar pleaded that one of the serious consequences expected to arise in case the contract was not rapidly completed, and in case the Resolutions were not passed, would be to paralyze the trade of that country. I ask the hon. gentleman what will be the position of the country at the end of two years. At that time, having gone ahead at break-neck speed, we shall come to a halt; and what hon. gentlemen opposite are now doing is but to postpone the event, which the hon. member for Lisgar says will certainly follow when work on the railway ceases. The hon. gentleman says he knows there are millions of money coming in for investment if these Resolutions are passed and the railway put through. Why, it is but a short time ago, in 1882, on the eve of the general election, since we were told officially that untold millions were awaiting investment in this country if the present Government were again returned to power. Has that prediction been fulfilled?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. No; I leave the country to pronounce on that question.

Mr. MULOCK.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Many millions have come in.

Mr. MULOCK. As I understand it, we have a simple issue before us to night. We have had but one official utterance from the Government, setting forth exactly their position in this matter. Supporters of the Government have expressed their views and have made numerous statements—as to their correctness I do not know—but we have only one official statement from the Government, and that is the statement furnished by the Minister of Railways, in moving the Resolutions, and on some subsequent occasions when he took the opportunity to address the House. If one reads these speeches of the hon. Minister, the burden of his remarks is to this effect: The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are able to complete their contract, they are seeking for no assistance whatever, they do not ask for the variation of a single feature in the contract, they are willing to be held to it in every letter; but the hon. gentleman says, it is to the interests of Canada to accelerate the time for the completion of the work, and for that consideration, and that consideration alone, he asks the country to place this large sum of money at the disposal of the Company. That, I believe, is the issue which he presents to the House. Now, I present this proposition: Before this Parliament ought to grant the desired aid to this work, even admitting the reasons assigned by the hon. Minister to be cogent and satisfactory reasons, Parliament must be satisfied that the Railway Company cannot, in the ordinary money markets of the world, obtain that financial assistance which will be necessary in order to enable them to accomplish what the Minister of Railways desires they should accomplish. I submit that they have not yet satisfied this House that they are in that position. The Minister of Railways has told us that they have in one way failed to obtain money—that they have failed in their efforts to sell sufficient stock to place them in funds to carry on the work. That is, so far as we know, the whole extent of their failure. It is true in passing he desired, and I think with some degree of unfairness, to charge that failure upon the Opposition and the Liberal party and press of the country. I think that the plan adopted on behalf of the railway Company to float their securities was in itself the cause of failure. It is well to be wise after the fact; but certainly, without assuming that they could have foreseen the future, there is the fact before us that they did adopt a certain policy which would convince anyone that they adopted the very worst policy in order to lead the public to take their securities. Having issued twenty millions of stock at a very great depreciation as regards its nominal value, namely, 25 cents on the dollar, is it reasonable to suppose that the general public, the money men of the world, are willing to become shareholders at very much higher prices? It is absurd to suppose that investors will be prepared to become shareholders and give 50 cents or 60 cents on the dollar, when they will only rank equally in the dividends with those who paid only 25 cents on the dollar. The failure to float their stock is attributable, then, I think, entirely to the mode adopted by the Company in order to dispose of their stock. But I say there is another course by which the Company might obtain relief, the course ordinarily adopted by railway companies in this country at least, and that is to endeavour to raise money by bonds. We see that the land grant bonds of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are saleable and negotiable to-day—I think the quotation is about 98, a fraction under par. Why have not the Company attempted to raise money on the bonds in the usual way? Persons might be quite willing to advance money on bonds, thus obtaining priority over stock, while quite unwilling to come in as shareholders. Therefore, I say that until the Company has satisfied the House, until the Minister of Railways has satisfied the House, that money cannot be obtained in this, the ordinary, regular way which railways adopt, the Company should not approach the House in the manner which has been adopted. I observe an attempt on the part of the hon. gentleman opposite to introduce into this question a false issue, to try and influence minds within this House and without it, by presenting to the public the alternative of passing these Resolutions or running the risk of the Grand Trunk Railway absorbing a large portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not aware that such is the issue before the House. I would frankly admit that the country should make very considerable sacrifices to prevent what I would consider as not much less than a national calamity. On this point I believe all men must be agreed, that it would be detrimental to the interests of this country that there should be a complete railway monopoly; but when I say that, for I speak only for myself, I do not admit that the passage of these Resolutions is going to prevent that result. On the contrary, unless some further protection is afforded, the passage of these Resolutions will bring about that very result. It will enable the more powerful Company in the end to crush out the less powerful. From our present state between those two institutions, we will then be in the position of having enabled one railway to absorb the other—we will be in the position of having deposed King Log and set up King Stork. For these reasons, we should have that full enquiry which is asked for by the amendment; and unless it is granted, it will certainly appear that this House has been called on with undue haste at this season of the year to pass these Resolutions. Looking at the situation of things at present, I would ask what probability is there that this Company is going to stop the work. It is true we have a vague statement accompanied by a semi-official letter. But what evidence is that by which to establish to the House that the Company intends to stop work. On the contrary, I think the evidence furnished by the Minister of Railways goes to satisfy every reasonable man that the Company intend to continue the work. That hon. gentleman says that an army of 9,000 men are engaged in the work on the north shore of Lake Superior, that they did not stop on account of financial difficulties, and in fact have only discontinued operations in the mountain district by reason of the winter season having overtaken them. The whole position of the Company indicates, so far as one can judge, that they propose to carry on this work with their accustomed vigour. Certainly it is to the interest of the railway Company that they should do so. They have valuable franchises which are expiring; every year they have the road in working order is a year of profit to them, and therefore their interest is to finish it as rapidly as possible. The position of affairs indicates that they are completing it, and intend to complete it, as rapidly as they can. They have not furnished us with evidence that they are not able to complete it, that they cannot get money by bonding the road; and, therefore, I submit that the amendment is a most reasonable one, and that no harm will be occasioned by the adoption of the amendment which will enable a Committee of the House to obtain such evidence as in the absence of which this House will not be justified in pledging the credit of the country to such an enormous extent as is asked for.

Mr. LAURIER. Though this debate has already been protracted for a long time, and although hon. gentlemen opposite have certainly been prolific of arguments in favour of disposing of the Resolutions before the House, still they have been abstemious of explanations of the real question before Parliament, and that is, whether the reasons given to the House for advancing this large sum of money to the Company are adequate to the magnitude of the sacrifice which it is resolved to impose upon the country. The demand made upon the country is for no less than $30,000,000.

That is a large sum for even the largest or wealthiest nation, but for a young nation like this, already burdened with a heavy debt, with liabilities ever increasing, with a revenue ever diminishing, such an additional burden might prove a cause of danger, and perhaps disaster, if the finances of the country happen to be otherwise crippled. The advance is one which should not be made unless it can be justified on the most urgent reasons of public interest. It is remarkable, Sir, that while the Company come here they do not pretend that they are unable to carry out their work according to the terms of the contract. They pretend, on the contrary, and assert, that they have abundant means to complete the works within the specified time, and the only reason they give is this: They say they have set to work to anticipate the time by five years, and that they want to complete the road by the end of 1885, and for these reasons, and for these reasons only, they ask the Government to grant them an advance of $30,000,000. And the Government accede to their demand. Now, it is manifest that this is a departure from the policy adopted by the Government three years ago. The Minister of Railways, while introducing these Resolutions, said that nothing was changed in the contract, that it remained as it was. But everything is changed in the contract—there is a radical change. On the one hand you have the fact that the obligations of the Company are altered, and you have the fact on the other, that the obligations of the Government are also altered. But the question is, will this be the last change? If we are to gauge the future by what has taken place in the past, we may safely assert that this is not the last change, but that other changes will follow the present one. Without referring back to the policy of the Government, so far as the time when the policy of building the Canadian Pacific Railway was initiated, but only going back to the time when the present Government resumed power in 1878, we find that they have altered their policy no less than four times. In 1879, after resuming power, they came to Parliament with a new policy, and this policy was, that they were to build the railway with the price of the lands, supplemented, if possible, by aid from the Imperial Parliament. They had Resolutions passed by this House, setting apart 100,000,000 acres of land. These lands were to be placed in the hands of a Commission, and on that Board of Commissioners, the Imperial Government was to be represented. If that meant anything, it meant that the pulse of the British Government was to be felt, and if it was in sympathy, then the price of the lands was to be supplemented by good English money. The next Session they came with another policy, which was that the Government of Canada should build the railway and build it with the price of the land alone. That policy lasted for six months. In the fall of the same year, they came before this Parliament with the contract with the Syndicate, and we know the terms of that contract. The road was to be built by 1891, and the Government was to give to the Syndicate the constructed portion of the line, the parts under construction, $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land. That policy lasted for three years, and now we are in the presence of a new policy; that is, that the road instead of being completed in 1891, must be completed by 1885. Terms which were sufficiently onerous are to be supplemented by an advance of $30,000,000. I repeat, is this to be the last change? There is at present through the country a feeling of uneasiness, and I believe that feeling is also pervading this House, that this is not the last change, but that the next change will be, that what is today before the House as an advance will turn out to be a gift. For my own part, looking at the power already wielded by the Company, looking at the appetite displayed by them, and their capacity for engulfing public money, I would as soon believe that the waters would flow back from the sea to the lakes as that one cent of that money will ever come back from the Pacific Railway exchequer to the Dominion exchequer. In saying so, I do not mean in any way to impugn the sincerity of the Government. I am bound to believe that they are sincere. I am bound to believe that when they say that this is simply an advance, they mean that it will be simply an advance. But if I am sure they do not intend to deceive the House, I am sure they do deceive themselves; and is it unfair and unwarrantable to suppose that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches are deceiving themselves when we recollect their past conduct? Why, Sir, no one supposed three years ago that they were not sincere when they told this House that this contract was to be final, that not one cent more was to go out of the Treasury of Canada for that road, but that henceforth the Canadian public would know what the road would cost. They did not intend to deceive the House at that time, but they deceived themselves. Now, what are the motives urged on this House for the advance of this sum of money? One motive, and the only one, advanced is this—that it is in the interest of Canada to anticipate by five years the terms set forth in the contract. Another motive has been put forward, though somewhat timidly—that we should make this advance, because if we do not do so, the Company will be bound to close their works, and their army of men would be left without employment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, I do not conceive that this is a very strong argument, and if it were pressed upon this House, it would be a dangerous precedent indeed. It is the communistic argument that the State is bound to give labour to those who have no labour.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no, no.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways takes issue with my statement. May I ask him what is the difference between the conduct of the present Government, who say to the House you must advance this money to that Company, because if you do not their employees will be without labour, and the conduct of the agitators in the streets of Paris to-day, who say to those who are out of employment: go and knock at the door of the Legislature and they will have to give you work. The difference is in the application, but not in the principle.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the difference, then? If I understand the hon. Minister, he gives this as a reason why we should vote the money, if we are to vote the money. Upon what reason do we vote it unless that when men are without employment we must give them employment?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, no.

M. LAURIER. Well, I shall be glad to hear at a future time for what reason this advance is to be made. At present, it seems to me that if we are to make this advance to the employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there can be no reason why the House should not furnish them with labour after the work is completed; and if we are to vote this money to give labour to these people, why should we not do the same for the operatives who have been thrown out of employment by the closing of the cotton mills since the National Policy has failed to give them the work that was promised them. The only motive adduced in favour of this grant, which has any force, is that we anticipate by five years the terms of the contract in regard to the completion of the work. Now, I am ready to admit that the speedy completion of the road would be of some advantage to Canada. That is not admitting much.

Mr. LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And under this arrangement will not cost us a dollar.

Mr. LAURIER. I think I shall show, before I close, that the hon. gentleman is totally reversing his policy by asking the House to make this advance. I say I am ready to admit that there is some advantage in having the road speedily opened; but what is the advantage? What substantial advantage has been shown to exist? No advantage that I can see, except that it is in the interest of the country that the road should be built when it is not built. I could understand the cogency of the motive if it were a fact that the North-West Territories were without access, if those fertile lands were locked up, and inaccessible to settlement. If that were the case, I would say that it would be worth a great sacrifice on our part to get that country opened for settlement. But am I again to repeat what is in the knowledge of everybody, that the North-West Territories are tapped by the railway system of the continent, and that there is communication with it by the lakes, and therefore not one more settler would go into that country if the road were opened through its whole length. It is true, we have heard it urged many times upon the floor of this House, as a reason why the road should be speedily opened, that settlers are liable to be enticed away from their destination by American agents, by passing over American territory. Well, Sir, it must be admitted, that that is a poor argument at best, because it is unlikely that more than a few stragglers will lag on the way, when we are told that immigrants are going into the North-West at the rate of 30,000 or 50,000 a year. I could understand the cogency of the argument if it were shown that the speedy construction of the road would have the effect of lowering the freights under which the people of the North-West Territories are now grumbling. But it is well known that the speedy completion will not have the effect of creating competition and of lowering the rates. It is known that all the lines of access to the North-West are now in the hands of this one Company, and therefore, whether we have three or four different lines, or only one, there will be no competition, and the freight tariff will remain the same as it is now. What exists to-day existed three years ago. Three years ago Parliament, knowing the facts which are presented to-day, deliberately entered into a contract for the completion of the road inside of ten years, at a cost of so much and no more; and nothing has since taken place why this policy should be departed from. If there is no valid reason in favour of these Resolutions, there are strong and potent reasons against them. The advance of this money means the early completion of the road, and the early completion of the road means an increased cost of construction. It is not in the interest of Canada that the road should be speedily built, if it should be dearly built. It is, on the contrary, in the interest of Canada that the road should be cheaply built, because it is manifest that if it is cheaply built it will have over all its competitors of the continent an advantage which must be a great benefit to the people of this country. It is manifest also that if the road is built at a dear price, that will be a permanent obstacle to a reduction in the freight rates under which the people of the North-West now grumble. The freights which to-day are imposed out of greed, will then have to be maintained out of necessity. Moreover, I hold that it is a vicious policy for a Government to run into debt and to mortgage its road, though the object be to speedily build it, and I can substantiate this argument by an authority which generally commands weight in this House—the authority of the hon. Minister of Railways himself. Last year he had occasion to give to this House his views with regard to a railway which mortgaged its property in order to carry out its undertaking. Speaking of the sale of the stocks of a company, he said:

"They are not bonds, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that he and every Canadian may thank God that they are not. I will tell him why. If they were bonds, when this great national road was completed, it would be in the position that the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, and the Northern Pacific, and those inter-oceanic lines of railway were in. That having a bonded debt of an enormous amount hanging upon it, upon which interest must be paid, the interest must be found by obtaining it from the traffic of the road, because it is a mandatory claim which must be met, or the road will pass out of the hands of its possessors; whereas, if the money be raised by the sale of stock, as it is in the present instance, the hon. gentleman will see that although they pay—and justly pay—interest on the stock during the process of construction, the moment the construction is completed, there is no mandatory debt upon the property—the property is not compelled to raise a single dollar of interest, because all the interest that has to be paid, is going into the pockets of the owners of the road itself—there is no mortgages of any kind. And what is the result? The result is that, in Canada, we shall be able to point to a great inter-oceanic line of Canadian Pacific Railway that can compete, as I said before, even between San Francisco and Chicago, for the transport of the traffic of the Pacific coast, down through a large portion of country, for the reason that having issued no bonds, having only issued stock, the road is entirely in an independent position—in a position to deal by competition with other roads in a manner that no road could deal if it had a heavy bonded debt upon it—if it had a mortgage upon it and had to raise the interest under any circumstances."

The policy of the Government to-day is the reverse of what the hon. Minister then said. Their policy now is to bond that road, to mortgage it, to put a mandatory interest on it. Last year we were invited to thank God because the road had no mortgage on it; this year, thanks to the hon. Minister of Railways, our cause for thanking God will be taken away. We shall have no more cause to thank Him unless hon. gentlemen opposite are so pious that they will find cause to thank God even for the reverse of what they thanked Him for last year. Last year the road was to be in a position different from the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, the Northern Pacific and all other oceanic lines. Last year, therefore, it had a unique position, but now all that is reversed and it is placed in the same category as the other. All the advantages which were to flow to us last year from the unique position in which the road then was, is lost to us this year. I think that if I had to choose between the two policies of the hon. Minister of Railways, I would choose that of last year. I would say to the Company, let your motto be festina lente; take your time but build your road, and it will be for your advantage and the advantage of the people as well. Again, I submit that whatever advantages may be derived from the speedy completion of the road are more than counterbalanced by the possible consequences of the policy which is initiated to-day. What was the basis of the policy suggested by the Government three years ago and adopted by Parliament? The basis of the policy when submitted, and the reason for which this Parliament adopted that policy, was that it was more in the interests of the people that this road should be owned and operated by a company than by a Government. That was the basis of the argument urged upon the people and the Parliament of this country, and that was the main idea that induced this Parliament to assent to the terms of this contract. Now, what is contemplated by the present contract arrangement? It is contemplated that, if the advance which is to be given to the Company is not recouped, the road shall revert to the Government and be operated by it. A good deal has been said upon the question of this guarantee, and I will not discuss that now, because I think it has already been discussed to the satisfaction of everyone. Is it unfair to suppose that this great Company, knowing the aversion of Parliament to have the road owned and operated by the Government, will show no very great desire to pay their liabilities, and if they should fail, what will take place? One or two things will take place—either the Government will refuse to enforce their claim, and then we lose our advance, and it becomes a gift, or if the Government choose to enforce their claim they will take back the road and the very policy which was initiated as the basis of this contract will be there set at nought; and we will have this result; that in order to anticipate by five years the completion of the road, the Government has deliberately put itself in the possibility of defeating the intention and basis of the contract altogether. It has been asked, and it has been the cause of wonder to many, why the Government thus reverse their policy—because this is certainly a reversal of the policy hitherto pursued by them. We can see no other reason than this, that the Government are to-day controlled by a power mightier than they. They are like the wizard of old, who, through his incantations, gave life to a monster which made him its slave and in the end destroyed him. The Government are in the hands of a Company which it must obey, just as the servant in the Scripture, to whom his master said: "Go, and he goeth; come, and he cometh." What is the wish of the Company which has not been gratified? Why, Mr. Speaker, three years ago when they made the contract, the Company insisted that they should be paid by the mile; they were paid by the mile. Now they insist that they shall be paid according to construction; they are going to be paid according to construction. Last fall, three or four or five months ago, the Company asked the Government to guarantee the interest on their stock; at once the Government complied with their demand. The Company went on further; they asked the Government to become their bankers, and the Government consented to become their bankers. Now, they say, "We will not bank our money," and the Government say: "Here is your money." Last year they said; "We are determined to complete this road not, in the time specified by the contract by the year 1891, but in the year 1886; the Government said: "Glorious, we accede to that." Now they say: "But, in order to carry out our wishes, we must have an advance of $22,500,000." Again the Government say "Glorious, here is your money." If that is not a justification of the statement I have made that the Government are altogether in the hands of the Company, what can it be? I am very much of the opinion, which is expressed in the French Conservative press in Quebec, that the power of the Company is too great, and we have not had a good reason for making any further advance or giving them any more advantages at the hands of the Government. The Minister of Railways, the other day, speaking on this question, said that the Globe newspaper had been the systematic enemy of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that the hon. gentleman repeats the statement now. He cannot certainly make the same reproach to the French Conservative press of Quebec. They have not been hostile to the Company, they have been just as devoted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as any member of the Government, or the Government, as a whole. Yet the hon. member is aware that the opposition of the French Conservative press of Quebec to these Resolutions is just as determined as the opposition of the Globe newspaper. In order that there may be no doubt about it, let me quote from one of the French organs of the Government, in the Province of Quebec. I cite from Le Monde of the 1st February. It is stated there as follows:—

"In what position will the Dominion be when it has yielded to this last demand of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? The position will be this—already paid by the Dominion for the portions of the road under construction before the transfer, $28,000,000; cash subsidy, $25,000,000; land subsidy, $50,000,000; present loan demanded, $22,500,000; total amount furnished by the Government, $125,500,000; total amount furnished by the Company for the main road, nothing. In those conditions, if it is that the Government choose to pay all the cost of construction, it would be just as well and better that it should have also the property of the road, since the Company gives itself so little trouble to get out of its embarrassment. If I now enter into all these details, it is not that I am animated by any bad will towards the Company. Nothing of the kind. But, in showing the Company under its true light, I show that the Government does not grant its favours to the Company because the Company deserves those favours, but simply that the Government wants to give some encouragement to these gentlemen."

These, Mr. Speaker, are the words of a correspondent, it is true, but the statement is endorsed by the editor, and has been followed by numerous articles written in the same manner. Again, in the same paper of the 15th February, an article is written in answer to L'Etendard, which is the only paper in the Province of Quebec which supports the Government in the present position. The article proceeds as follows:—

"The calculations of L'Etendard are most ridiculous. It is this, that it imagines that the Government will pay 4 per cent. upon the $22,500,000, and that the Pacific will pay the Government 5 per cent., thus netting a benefit of $220,000 a year. It is a good joke to promise interest at 5 per cent., when it is well known beforehand that not a cent will ever be paid. As to the figures of L'Etendard concerning the gain, the advantage of the public by the North Shore Railway instead of the road by Chicago and St. Paul, it is enough to split one's sides. Who tells us that the Company will transfer passengers and goods at a cheaper rate than the American line? The Pacific Railway Company, without any competition on the north of lake Superior—can we reasonably expect that they will treat the public any better than the three or four lines that compete on American territory? Why should it be so, when it is well known that, notwithstanding the high Tariff, the service of the western section, that is to say, the section of British Columbia, will prevent it during many years from meeting the expenses. Moreover, if the only care of L'Etendard is to bring in immigrants to the North-West, why should we hasten the construction of the section so expensive in the Rocky Mountains? When we gave the contract in 1881, we then established the delays within which the road was to have been completed. Let us follow our agreement. Why should we make any haste? Does L'Etendard know that of this, $900,000 a year in interest alone will be added to the liabilities of the country, simply by advancing the subsidy of $12,500,000 by three years? What can the crossing of the railway over the Rocky Mountains do for the colonization of the North-West? Do you expect the Chinese or the Japanese to go and settle in the North-West?"

Now, Mr. Speaker, it was stated the other day by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) that this paper was not the organ of the Conservative party, but the organ of a well known railway speculator. It is generally understood, indeed, that this paper is in the hands of Mr. Sénécal; but, be this as it may, this is no isolated language. The language I have just quoted is the language of the whole of the Conservative press of Quebec, with the single exception of L'Etendard. All the other papers, all the papers which generally give their support to the Government, are hostile to the present Resolutions, and all endorse the language here spoken by Le Monde. And I submit that there is great meaning in that language. That language comes from men who have been unswerving in their allegiance to the present Government; but it also comes from men who have been witnesses, in their own country, to the fatal consequences which may follow lavish expenditure—that is to say, expenditure not calculated upon a good basis, and the note of alarm here sounded by these men is the note of alarm which should be heeded not only by gentlemen who come from the Province of Quebec, but by all those who value the counsel of experience.

Ferguson (Leeds & Gren),		Wright.—182.

On the main motion being put,

Mr. COSTIGAN. Before this motion is declared carried, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope my hon. friend will not press that motion. I think it desirable for the House to go into Committee as soon as possible. We might pass these Resolutions pro forma, and on taking concurrence, the hon. gentleman, or any other hon. gentleman, will have full opportunity for speaking upon them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I understood the question would not be settled to-night. I wished to say a few words on the subject before taking the vote. It is a very important vote. But there has been so much discussion, and at this hour, I do not feel like speaking to-night. I would prefer not to be forced to go on, but I must speak, and if I must go on to night, why, of course, I will do so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, we will let them stand over.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:45 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 20th February, 1884.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOAN.

The Order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Sir Charles Tupper, "That the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed Resolutions (page 84) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway," being read,

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the debate last night, I desired to say a few words. I wish to say now that it would not be interesting if I were to make a speech in the present condition of my voice. With the consent of the House, I will therefore reserve my remarks until concurrence.

Mr. VAIL. As the hon. member has decided not to speak on this question, and as I conceive it to be very important that this House should come to a direct vote on the question in a proper parliamentary way, I beg to move the following resolution:—

That all the words after "that" be omitted, and the following inserted, "This House resolve itself into said Committee on this day six months."

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take advantage of the opportunity afforded me by the motion of my hon. friend to say a few words upon this question. I do not propose, after the very full discussion which has taken place, to trespass again on the time of the House by repeating in detail every argument which I had the honour to address on the former occasion; nor do I intend at this time to discuss some of the replies to those arguments, however disputable they may be, both with respect to the facts on which they were supposed to be based and the consequences which were argued as flowing from those facts. I desire rather to call the attention of the House to a phase of this question which has not been, if at all, very fully presented as yet, and which nevertheless it seems to me to be of very great consequence we should consider before reaching a conclusion in favour of proceeding further with these Resolutions. And if, for a moment, in the discharge of my present duty I should seem to deal with questions which have been already discussed, the House will bear with me, because I think hon. members will see, before I conclude, the import of my first observations upon the point which I shall have the honour to present. I said on the former occasion that the element of finality was one which had been very much pressed at the time when the original contract was proposed for our adoption. I pointed out that it was the consolatory ingredient in the cup of many sorrows which we were asked to drink. We were told, whatever were the difficulties, whatever the expense of the engagements to which we were called upon to commit ourselves, at all events we knew them; there they were, great or small, light or heavy, we knew them. It was no longer an undefined engagement to construct the Pacific Railway; it was an engagement to give certain dollars to complete a certain partially constructed work, and to give certain acres of land, in consideration of which once and for all, finally and forever, we implemented our obligations with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway. My hon. friend who sits on my left (Mr. Laurier), in his speech last night recapitulated with great terseness the various and changing policy of the Administration, and pointed out when he came to the era of the contract this element of finality, and he showed how very lacking in this prospect the contract was as viewed by the light of the propositions which are now submitted to Parliament. It is so, Sir. To-day we are called upon to deal with a supposed final obligation in a manner entirely contradictory to the notion that the obligation is final. But what I complain of is, that although we are asked to-day to largely commit the credit, and engage the resources of the country, in order to complete the contracted line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is obvious that we have not before us, as we ought to have before us, all the proposals, and all the information which ought to be submitted before we are asked to acquiesce in or to reject this particular proposal. It is true that in a modified sense, and to a limited extent, the Government have recognized the soundness of the view that Parliament is entitled to have all the parts of this Canadian Pacific Railway policy presented for its consideration—to know the whole business through, I say, to a limited extent. We have before us on the paper, Resolutions designed to close one other element of the Canadian Pacific Railway bargain. We have before us Resolutions designed to settle the claims of British Columbia in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway; and we see from them what it is that is proposed to do in that direction; and, therefore, I am not able to complain that the proposition the Government have laid before us is in this single particular, incomplete. They have shown us, in so far as the extreme west of the country is concerned, what, besides the proposal which is now on the Table, we are to be called upon to do in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is quite true—without dealing with that proposal, which it would be quite improper to do at this moment—that that call does open a very serious consideration. I well remember listening to the Minister of Public Works when he declared, at a comparatively late stage of the controversies which have raged since the original bargain with British Columbia, that Esquimalt was, and must be, the Pacific terminus of that railway. How far that view is consistent with the arrangement under which the road, by which Esquimalt is to be reached, has surrendered to a rival Pacific railway, one of the American Pacific railways, I shall leave it to the astute mind of the Minister of Public Works now otherwise engaged, I am sorry to observe, to settle. There is another question which looms up now much more prominently, much more immediately, much more pressingly than we supposed it would, up to recent dates. I have said that there was a Pacific Railway terminus suggested by the Minister of Public Works, under the old Government, when he was in Opposition, and, so far as I can remember, in the new, at Esquimalt, as the true terminus for the through trade between the east and the west. But, Sir, even assuming that that view is abandoned, and that the Pacific terminus of a great trans-continental railway, which is to carry so many thousands of tons of precious freight eastward and westward, from the European to the Asiatic continent, even assuming that that terminus is to be found on the mainland of British Columbia, it is quite clear from the concurrent and undisputed testimony of the engineers, not unfrequently cited in this House, that Port Moody is not, and cannot be such a terminus. English Bay and Cove Harbour, further down the indentation in which Port Moody is situated, have always been stated to be the points to which the railway must attain, if it is to do a trade with the large steamers plying on the Pacific Ocean. And now that we have arrived at this point, that Parliament is to be called upon to deal with this question as a trans-continental question; that we are to sacrifice much, to engage much, to do much more than the people of this country ever supposed they would be called upon to do, in order that that consummation of a completed trans-continental railway doing a through trade may be achieved, within two years, it is certainly important to know what provision has been, and what provision is to be made, for a real available terminus for that portion of the trade which is to reach and leave the Canadian Pacific Railway on the Pacific coast. Yet we know that the expenditure, according to former estimates, according to the views of Mr. Fleming, Mr. Smith and other engineers, who alone have spoken on the subject, to reach even the mainland of the Pacific from Port Moody, is no insignificant sum. If I rightly remember, speaking now of a recollection some years old, it is somewhat between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000. Well then, Sir, going a little farther east you find that there are other questions with reference to the railway yet unsolved. I have pointed out—and I just avert to it without discussing it—the circumstance that to-day when we are called upon to deal with this question as one finally settled, or one finally to be settled by the proposals now before us, we are dealing with a crossing by the Kicking Horse Pass—a crossing of the Selkirk Range. We are dealing with a crossing the possibility of which, from an engineering point of view, has not yet been demonstrated. We are dealing with a crossing the cost of which has not yet been ascertained, if it be at all feasible. It is proposed to us to accept the estimates of an unlocated, unsurveyed mountain line, when it is still within the range of possibility that another route across the mountain may have to be adopted. It is proposed to us to accept this estimate; and I am obliged just to infer, in the absence of that information which we had a right to expect, upon this proposal being brought before us, but which is not yet before us, I say I have to assume the accuracy of a statement, reported in the Toronto Mail and the Montreal Gazette, said to have been communicated to the Mail by Mr. Van Horne, as to the cost to complete from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops. He stated it at $10,100,000. We are called upon to agree that there is sufficient evidence that this cost of the 290 miles, the 300 miles, or the 270 miles—for all these figures are given to us—of the unsurveyed and unlocated mountain line, when we know—once again dealing by estimation—subtracting, so far as we can ascertain it, the amount paid to the construction company for the work which has been done in the west, from the total to be paid them on their western contract—that the sum of $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 in cash, and $25,000,000 of stock, were, a little more than a year ago, agreed to be paid for the construction of the work from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops, which we are now told can be built for $10,100,000. For less cash by far than the cash which was to be paid for it before, taking into no account whatever $25,000,000 of stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was to be thrown in as a bonne bouche—as something very nice to look at if it was not very much to have. Then, Sir, when we come to the prairie country, we know that facilities for transport at moderate rates over a widely extended range of that country are of the last consequence to the future of the North-West itself, and to the future of the whole Dominion, deeply committed as the whole Dominion is to the future of the North-West. I do not myself suppose that there exists any question connected with public improvements of equal practical consequence to the question of what is to be done within the next two or three years in the way of lowering the rates and increasing the mileage of lines of railway in the fertile prairie country; and I need do no more than allude to the observation of the hon. Minister of Railways himself, in opening the debate upon these Resolutions, that the branch lines which he was defending were of greater consequence than many sections of the main line itself. Although we were called upon to make so many sacrifices for the early completion of the main line, he gave to the branch lines, not merely the absolute but the relative importance which I have just now described. But, Sir, in proposals of the Government, so far as they have been laid before Parliament, so far as we have been enabled to consider them, in none of the points to which I have alluded, running from Esquimalt into the prairie country, is there any suggestion for adjusting these questions. They are left unadjusted. Rather may I say, particularly with reference to the question of branch lines, that the putting in the forefront of the battle the construction of the main line through the two uncompleted links, the arrangement that the resources of the Company are to be applied either in that work or in reconquering the Government for the advance now made towards the execution of that work, are indicative that a policy of little or no construction of branch lines in the next two or three years, instead of a very liberal construction, either by the Railway Company itself or by other corporations unfettered by the exercise of the power of disallowance, is to be adopted. Then, Sir, getting farther eastward, we come to the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, and the importance of that branch is recognized, I think, by all. It certainly was recognized at an earlier date by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, who laid down as a part of their policy, the construction, first of all, of a branch to Sault Ste. Marie, and afterwards of the main line by way of Sault Ste. Marie, and ultimately of a branch line to Algoma Mills, on the way to Sault Ste. Marie; and the line is now within eighty miles of that point. And that the view of making connections with American lines to be built and reaching towards the Sault, was entertained—aye, that even obligations have been entered into of that description, is shown by the interviews which have taken place between the president of the Company and the municipal authorities of Portland in the month of October last, when Mr. Stephen is reported to have said:

“It has just occurred to me that I have forgotten a point which I should not have forgotten, that of seeing an article in to-day’s paper from my friend, General Washburne, of Minneapolis. I will now simply say that we have about completed a branch line of the Canadian Pacific that is now within eighty miles of Sault Ste. Marie, the point General Washburne contemplates; and we have undertaken to build there eighty miles and reach the sea as soon as they are ready to meet us. We have engaged to meet them at Sault Ste. Marie, and when that connection is made it does not require a very fertile imagination to see what is going to be the effect on the ports of the Atlantic receiving flour from Minneapolis in enormous quantities. If we can manage to get the flour manufactured at Minneapolis shipped to Portland, you will have a very busy harbour.

“Alderman MARR. I would like to ask the gentleman the condition of this road from Minneapolis to Sault Ste. Marie. Is it merely contemplated or under process of construction?

“Mr. STEPHEN. I know nothing about it, except what I have heard from General Washburne. All the Minneapolis millers, I understand, and St. Paul people are interesting themselves in it. General Washburne says they are certain to build it. That is all I know about it. We have undertaken to meet them at Sault Ste. Marie, and we have only eighty miles to go.

“The MAYOR. I understand you to say they have undertaken to build the branch line.

“Mr. STEPHEN. It is beyond the region of talk now. I cannot tell how far. We are ready to build there whenever we have any object to build there. We shall only be too happy to take their flour when they get there.”

But here again, in the policy which is presented to us—which, as I have said, is a policy practically of a devotion of the resources proposed to be supplied to the now-existing Company to the completion of the main line, and the reconpment of the money to be advanced by the public for the main line,—we find no resources for the completion of these particular enterprises. Going further east, we come to the question of the Gravenhurst and Callander connection—a question of very great consequence—acknowledged to be one of very great moment to an important section of the Dominion—upon which we have been told from time to time that the Government would produce results satisfactory to us, and in respect of which we were told last Session that unless perfect independence could be secured, and absolute freedom from control on the part of either of the rival undertakings, a larger expenditure would be advisable than would be involved in the mere construction of the railway, under less favourable conditions, for the commerce of the country. But we have not now before us the result of the action of the Government upon the powers with which we invested them last Session; we do not know what the consummated policy with reference to the Gravenhurst and Callander Branch is; we do not know what guarantees are given; we do not know what cost is to be incurred; we do not know, in fine, whether the plan adopted last Session has been found feasible or not; or whether the Government itself is to build that link. Again, we have before us a private Bill proposing to invest the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with authority to lease and acquire branch lines in various directions—a power of an indefinite character involving obligations of an indefinite description, which obligations will be debts of the corporation and may affect its power and capacity of paying. Upon these we have not the policy of the Administration developed. Going still further east we have the question of the summer terminus of the railway. Upon that subject, we know that varying opinions have been held. We know that the original notion was Callander and a connection with the lines which were to be built from Callander towards the Pacific; we know that a subsidy was granted to the Canada Central with the express view of its reaching Callander, or, rather, reaching whatever might be the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and it was supposed that the ocean would be reached by means of connecting lines. We know that when the contract was made, it was in contemplation that they might acquire, and they took the power to acquire, by amalgamation or purchase, the line of the Canada Central Railway and the line of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental, thus reaching to Montreal; and for a time it seemed as if the terminus that was intended, was to be a Montreal terminus, at any rate, as the summer terminus. But other ideas have, for sometime, taken possession of the public mind; other ideas have taken possession of the mind of the railway Company, other ideas have taken possession of the mind of important sections, and it is well we should understand in what these are to result. I was amongst those who regretted very much the step that was taken by the Quebec Government when they sold the line between Montreal and Quebec in such form as to render possible that it should, as it ultimately did, pass under the control of the Grand Trunk Railway. I believe that it would have been better in the interests of Quebec and better in the international interest, had that road been sold for a very much smaller price to the Canadian Pacific Railway than that it should be sold for the price at which Mr. Senecal bought it, and the enhanced price which he afterwards received from persons who are supposed to be in the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway. But that has been done, and the question is complicated by that transaction. Now we are aware, not in the proper manner, not in the manner in which Parliament ought to be aware of it, but we are aware, from the ordinary sources of information, that claims have been made and presented to the Administration with reference to this portion of the connection from ocean to ocean to which I am now advertising. First of all, the newspapers tell us that the Quebec Government has advanced a claim to be reimbursed, as a proportion of aid towards the construction of the national highway, $12,000 a mile for the railway which they have built from Ottawa to Montreal or to Quebec, I do not very well understand which from the newspapers. But one or the other claim, the newspapers say, was preferred lately by the Quebec Ministers—first of all by a written communication, and subsequently in a conference here. We know also, from the same source of information, that other portions of the complicated question which is involved in this part of the whole subject, have assumed a dimension more than Provincial, because we see that the commercial authorities, the Boards of Trade, or Chambers of Commerce, if I remember aright, of Halifax and St. John, as well as that of Quebec, have made joint representations upon the subject of the importance of having an independent line between Montreal and Quebec in connection with the great trans-continental line. It seems as if the error which was made when control of that line was parted with, is now about to assume serious proportions, and we have before us the question what ought to be done, what can be done, if anything ought to be done, or if anything can be done, to redress that error and to obtain that freedom of communication between the Intercolonial Railway and the west, between the ports of the east and the west, the original opportunity for which was lost for a time when the roads on both sides of the river between Montreal and Quebec passed into the hands of one corporation. We know that in the same connection, claims have been advanced in order to the completion and consummation of this great scheme of a railway bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec, to make a free connection between both sides of the river and between the railway system as it is projected. Now, the views which are taken upon this subject may be very divergent, but what is certain is that strong views are taken, and that, as the months roll on and the schemes of the Government develop themselves, we find still greater importance attached to the notion of a great trans-continental railway, and larger and larger views as to what the obligations of the Dominion are, and what the duty of the Dominion is in furtherance of the scheme of a great railway across the continent with Canadian termini. The question whether Quebec, as well as, or to the exclusion of, Montreal, shall be the summer terminus, is one of these questions, and the consideration of that question and of the claims which have been made, as I have said, that the Government shall secure the independence of the highway between the two cities by building a bridge across the river, and that the Government shall recognize the right of the Province of Quebec to a larger mileage subsidy for the work they have constructed, are claims which are to be measured, not by thousands but by millions, and probably engagements of one kind or another in connection with them, will come to the sum of something like $10,000,000 or $12,000,000. Having got so far, we deal only with one half of the question. We deal only with the question of what the summer port or ports shall be, and what shall be the obligations of the Dominion, in order to obtain the consummation which is to be the policy of the country—to obtain a Dominion summer port. We yet have before us the question of a winter port. Now, upon that subject, at the same interview of the Company with the municipalities of Portland, to which I have already alluded, Mr. Stephen made this statement:

"In addition to that, we shall have by January or February, of this coming year, a line of railway from Montreal to Chicago, connecting at St. Louis with the Canadian Railway, giving us a through road from Montreal to Chicago. That brings us under the control of the Canadian Railway, and from the Pacific Ocean to Montreal, a line from Chicago, and it is not unnatural, having reached Montreal, and, as you are well aware, Montreal being only a six months' port, we should be looking to the question of reaching the Atlantic, and it is not unnatural that our eyes should be cast upon the most direct way, and whether we shall be able to accomplish our object will depend a little upon yourselves. We think, as I said before, that Portland has great capacity in that respect, and I may say for my colleagues and myself, we are anxious to do all we can to endeavour to get a foothold here. What the advantages, direct or indirect, of our coming here you are as able to foresee as I am. It is with that object in view that we are here to-night."

And once again the Mayor, addressing Mr. Stephen, says:

"The Canadian Pacific, who are represented here, speak for themselves, and say they intend to use it," that is the Portland and Ogdensburg Railway, "as a through line in connection with their road, is that what I understand, Mr. Stephen?"

"Mr. STEPHEN. Yes, sir."

"I would ask," says the Mayor, "how you are going to connect with your road when you get up through the mountains."

"Mr. STEPHEN. It is not very easy for me to answer the question the Mayor has put to me. The arrangement is anything but complete yet. We do not know very well how we are going to do it. All our efforts so far have terminated at Montreal. A bridge has got to be built which will take about eighteen months, and when we get across the bridge to Montreal we will find some way of getting down to connect with this road; and as to the connection we have that. A very good connection is over the St. Johnsbury and Ogdensburg, but, as I said before, we have not given these matters very much consideration yet."

So that it is very plain, both from the papers which have been laid before us, the very large expenditure of some $1,500,000 or $1,600,000 which has been made in acquiring an interest in the South-Eastern and the Montreal, Portland and Boston, the efforts to obtain the Portland and Ogdensburg, and the declarations of the president of the Company, as late as October last, which I have just read, that what the Company seeks and thinks most direct is a Portland terminus, and perhaps they might have a slight leaning towards Boston as another terminus. Well now, even so early as the time of the contract itself, these were not the views that were represented to the House as those which ought to be adopted. The hon. the Minister of Public Works, in the course of the debate in December, 1880, announced contrary views; the First Minister, in the course of the protracted debates which then occurred in the month of January, announced contrary views; and, last year, in proposing the policy of subsidizing railways, which the Minister of Railways brought down, he elaborated at great length the rival claims of the various Canadian ports on the Atlantic seaboard, and declared that it would be a great calamity if the Canadian Pacific Railway should find its winter terminus in our neighbours' territory, and he pointed out, as a reason why some assistance should be rendered to the construction of divers lines, that they would tend to place the various ports which he enumerated on such a footing that they might compete with, at any rate, the port of Portland. Well, a year has elapsed, and the schemes of the hon. Minister, which he assured us he had made such enquiries about and reached such conclusions upon that the financial propositions which he presented to us would ensure their construction and completion, have failed, and we do not find it possible that, unless some other arrangements are made, those schemes can now be carried out. And, therefore, we must hold that the policy of the Government upon the subject of a Canadian winter port for the Canadian Pacific Railway is one which has been further considered, and which requires remodelling and readjusting, as so many other parts of their policy, when submitted to the rude test of actual experience, have required remodelling and readjusting. Now, Sir, there may be all sorts of opinions with reference to these various schemes, with reference to their practicability, with reference to their importance, with reference to their justice, with reference to their absolute merit, with reference to their relative merits; but there can be no doubt that, in one shape or another, they have attracted attention; there can be no doubt that, in one shape or another, a policy has to be proclaimed, a conclusion has to be reached; there can be no doubt that, if that policy is one of further expenditure, of further obligations on the part of the Dominion, it is the bounden duty of this Parliament, as true representatives of the people, to insist that they shall have before them, in one complete whole, the various parts of a policy of this description. That policy is now, you may say, if you look to the various speeches to which I have referred, to the various transactions which have occurred, to all the symptoms which display themselves, one policy. I differ from those altogether who say a transaction can be carried through piecemeal. My opinion is that, on a large financial operation, engaging the credit of this Dominion and calling upon its resources to the tune of thirty millions of dollars, it is of vast consequence that we should have before us what other proposals of a financial character may be made, so that we should be able to view the whole scene, and to consider, with the total extent of obligations which are proposed to us before us, whether we will accept the whole whether we will reject the whole, whether we will accept part or reject part. It has been said by the greatest master of finance of this and, I believe to-day I may say, of the last generation as well, by the present Prime Minister of England, that it is utterly useless for the House of Commons to attempt that control which it is essential it should have over the national finance unless the statement of annual expenditure and charge is a single statement; presents at one view the whole operations of the year. It is obvious that that observation is well founded, and I deeply regret to know that, in our ordinary transactions, we have so far departed from it. But, Sir, this is not an ordinary transaction. This is one single transaction of gigantic magnitude, with many parts, it is true, but they are all parts of the whole; and what we ought to know is what is this whole, this comprehensive whole. If it is to be said that nothing is to be done in the direction of further financial engagements or assistance towards any of these objects, there is a policy; we understand it, and we know then—and we know then for the first time—that, so far as the Government contemplates it, our obligations, enhanced as they are by the proposals of the day, are yet limited by the proposals of the day, and we are called upon then to consider whether, in our view, any other of these elements of the great problem of the Canadian trans-continental railway is of such paramount importance that some different application of the funds which the Government proposed to apply, should to some extent be made. On the other hand, if the Government does propose that there should be further assistance of one kind or another, that further public engagements should be made in order to carry out this grand idea, surely we are entitled to know what the plan of the Government is, what its proposals are, and to know it before we are called on to vote on these Resolutions; because, as I have said before, I now repeat, they are parts of a whole, and we want to know what the whole is before we vote on the parts; we want to know what is the sum of the obligations that the country is to be called upon to commit itself to. There may be, Sir, many views with reference to all the points to which I have alluded; there may be many differences of opinion upon them. I have not at any time expressed or implied, I am not now expressing or implying, an opinion upon any one of them. I recognize the responsibility and the duty of the Administration of the day, having the conduct of public affairs, having the confidence of a vast majority of the people's representatives, to propound this policy, to submit it to the House and to the country, and to challenge upon it criticism and investigation. I recognize that proposition with peculiar and added force as applicable to the question of expenditure which, under the wholesome and salutary rule of the British Constitution, incorporated by a hard and fast clause in our Constitution, forbids proposals for public expenditure otherwise than with the assent of the Crown—given, of course, upon the advice and suggestion of responsible Ministers of the Crown. What I am pointing out is, that in order that Parliament may discharge its duty of deciding upon the merits of the proposals of the Administration, it is right that Parliament should have before them the whole policy of the Administration, that we should not have it piecemeal, that upon a financial question of this description, we should know the end before we are asked to vote for the beginning; we should know what these plans are, once for all. If the question is settled there is nothing more to be done, so far as the Government is concerned. If there is something more to be done, what more is to be done? Upon that question we are entitled to be informed before we are asked to decide whether or no it is fitting to accede to the proposals which are now before us. I feel, Sir, that I would have been doing less than my duty if I had not stated these propositions for the consideration of the House; I feel that I would be doing less than my duty if I did not endeavour to take the sense of the House upon them formally, and with that view I move in amendment to the amendment, to leave out all the words after "following" in the amendment, and insert the following:

It is fitting that before asking this House to proceed with the consideration of the Resolutions for aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Government should lay before the House its proposals with regard to any further subsidies to be granted to Provinces or Companies, or any further aid to be provided, or any further works to be secured, in connection with the great scheme of a trans-continental railway with Canadian termini.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad to learn by the address which the leader of the Opposition has just delivered to the House, that the result of the long and interesting debate which we have had upon this very important question, has been to convince that hon. gentleman that he would be discharging his duty if, instead of adhering to his position of antagonism to the great measure before the House, he confined himself to a criticism of some of the details. I am glad the hon. gentleman has at last come to the conclusion, that, instead of joining issue with the Resolutions, as has been done by my hon. friend the mover of the amendment, in a bold and clear antagonism to those propositions, the hon. leader of the Opposition finds it necessary to amend a resolution of his own supporter proposing to read those Resolutions this day six months, and confines himself to qualifying the position he had taken, by asking for further details as to the policy of the Government. Now, Sir, I am not at all surprised that the hon. gentleman should have come to that conclusion. I am not at all surprised that this should be the case after the hon. gentleman had found, not only that the judgment of the vast majority of this House was in favour of the propositions that I have had the honour of laying before it, not only that a large majority of this House was prepared to sustain the propositions submitted by the Government, but that from his own supporters, from some of the ablest and most independent supporters of that hon. gentleman, he has had a lesson read to him in this House such as no leader of a great party should have needed in discussing a great measure like this. There is no hon. gentleman in this House who does not recognize, that in the able, the exhaustive, the argumentative and conclusive statements submitted to this House last night by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), this question has been placed in a position that shows the hon. gentleman that he is not only in antagonism with the Government, that he is not only in antagonism with the great majority of this Parliament, but that he is in antagonism with the public sentiment of this country. Sir, I have no hesitation in saying, that in my knowledge of parliamentary discussion, I have never witnessed an occasion upon which an hon. member of this House has discharged—discharged at the cost of party ties and obligations and friendships—a duty more ably, more independently and more efficiently, than that hon. gentleman discharged his duty last night. Do we not know that the object and aim of the hon. gentlemen opposite have been, instead of aiding us to develop the great North-West, instead of aiding us in carrying on this great national work in which Canada is so deeply and vitally interested, that they have endeavoured to thwart that undertaking? Does the hon. gentleman not know that, line by line, in the most conclusive manner, the hon. member for Lisgar convicted those hon. gentlemen of having, by the organs of their party, the great leading organs of their party, one of them edited by an ex-Minister of the Crown (Mr. Mills), and another organ of their party to which they all bow with deference, the Toronto Globe—that they done all in their power to put obstacles in the way of the promotion of this great scheme? The hon. member for Lisgar took up these two great organs of the party, and he proved to this House in the most conclusive manner, by the most conclusive demonstration, that these organs of gentlemen opposite were engaged in the unholy work of, not only endeavouring to break down the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but seeking to destroy the confidence of the public, and of the world, and of every person, in the great North-West. That is just the position of the question. If ever there was an occasion which warranted a man in forgetting everything but what he owed to his constituency and the country, it is the position of this question to-day. What is the result? The late ex-Minister of Militia, the colleague of the leader of the Opposition, presents an amendment to-day, after last night's debate, during which an argument was advanced which I have no hesitation in saying will sink deep into the minds of members on both sides of the House, a presentation of the case, a defence of the great North-West and a defence of Canada, a statement of the case that will be heralded everywhere as of vast importance and value as meeting in the most full and efficient manner, by an hon. gentleman who knows whereof he speaks, all those calumnies and slanders which have been hurled at the North-West in order to break down the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I am not surprised, under these circumstances, that the hon. leader of the Opposition should find discretion is the better part of valour, and when his former colleague, the late Minister of Militia, ventured to ask this House to throw out these Resolutions and read them six months from to-day, the leader of the Opposition should say: "No, no, that is going too far; let me move an amendment which will prevent that disaster to the country, and ask the Government to bring down a little more information." The hon. gentleman is becoming so alive to the magnitude of this question that he actually proposes to go far beyond anything that the Government have asked the House to do. The hon. gentleman is not content with furnishing $30,000,000 for the purpose of completing this great work; the hon. gentleman feels we have fallen short of our duty—I am not certain but that he is right—in not presenting for fair and just consideration the claims of other sections of the country in connection with that great enterprise. Finding himself in that position, the leader of the Opposition seeks an opportunity to place himself right on the question, to recede from the position of antagonism to these Resolutions from the position of stopping the construction of the railway of retarding its rapid completion, from the position of being placed before Parliament and the country in the attitude of combining with the organs of his party outside of the House to lower in the estimation of the world, the resources of our country in order to prevent the consummation of that great work. I am not at all surprised that the hon. gentleman should have taken that position, and he would have been wanting in tact and sensitive appreciation of public and parliamentary sentiment if he had not felt, what every other hon. member feels, that the result of this discussion has been to leave no doubt on the mind of any intelligent man in this House or out of it, who has an opportunity of reading the debates or hearing them, that the Government would have been wanting in the last degree, in what they owe to the country if they had failed on the present occasion, and in the present emergency, to come forward with the propositions we have submitted for the consideration of the House. The hon. gentleman is very anxious on the question of finality. He said the great argument which was used in support of our proposition when we laid it before Parliament, was that it would dispose at once and forever of the obligations on the Parliament of Canada in connection with the construction of the Pacific Railway. I say so now. I say we have evidence before us more conclusive than we ever had, that that contract has in it all the essence of finality, and it has been established beyond doubt that every dollar of obligation that would ever fall on the country in connection with this work has been embraced within the terms of the contract itself. Do we ask for an additional dollar of subvention? No. Do we ask the country to jeopardize a dollar of the advance proposed? Let the leader of the Opposition take his answer from the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Fleming). I listened with great interest to the able address of that hon. member, and it was with no little satisfaction that I found him breaking away from the trammels that his associates of that side of the House had been endeavouring to weave around this question and himself. It was with no little pleasure I found that the hon. gentleman, rising superior to the arguments used by his leader, and iterated and reiterated by various hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, and showing that this Company had abundant means and abundant resources to complete the railway. Not only so, but that the security of 21,000,000 acres of land which they were placing in our hands was a security from which we might confidently expect to obtain a return of $9,000,000 in cash within two years. That was the statement of the hon. member for Peel. Let the hon. leader of the Opposition take this answer as to the question of security from one of his own followers, without regarding one word of the unanswerable arguments used on this side of the House. Let him take the statement of one of his own supporters as to the resources of the Company, and there cannot be a shadow of doubt in the mind of any person that the Government does not ask Parliament to contribute a single additional dollar for the purpose of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway over and above that which the contract provided the Government should pay to the Company, that there is the most perfect finality in regard to it. We base our proposition to advance additional money to the Company, not on the ground of the inability of the Company to carry out the contract, but on the value to Canada of a continuance of the rapid progress of the work, and of its completion by the season of 1886. I repeat that the ground on which we rest this application is that, while we are not called upon to add a dollar to the Company's subvention, and are not called upon to jeopardize a single dollar, having the most perfect, ample and complete security for the return of the money, we would be wanting in our duty, knowing the vast importance of having the work proceeded with the same rapidity which has hitherto marked it, and of having it promptly completed, if we should hesitate to carry out this proposition, especially when the hon. gentleman's own friends tell him that from one source of security given by the Company we are going to secure a return of $9,000,000 within the next two or three years. The hon. gentleman has referred very briefly to the terms of the proposal in respect to British Columbia. I need not follow the hon. gentleman into that matter. The hon. gentleman said himself that he did not propose to discuss the question, but only to allude to it; because I suppose his followers expect him to stand on his feet for a certain number of minutes and speak in regard to the resolution he moved. I utterly fail to see the bearing of his remarks on the question before the House. As to whether Port Moody or English Bay is the best port for the terminus, all I can say is that the Government selected Port Moody as the terminus of the railway, and in doing so they selected a port accessible from the Pacific Ocean, and which is declared to be the best port that is to be found on the Pacific coast. Her Majesty's vessels have, during the past year, surveyed the harbour, and we have the declaration of the officers who have been there—and they are the most perfectly independent and able sources of information—that we have made the most wise and judicious selection which could have been made, that the port is simply perfect, and that there is nothing on the Pacific coast superior to it. And they have now represented to the Admiralty the propriety of making Port Moody the headquarters for the Admiralty on the Pacific coast, as being the best location which is to be found there. The hon. gentleman, I dare say, would like us to go down to English Bay, because it would have compelled the expenditure of $1,000,000 to get there, in the first instance, and another $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 to make a harbour out of an open roadstead, where there is comparatively no anchorage. I say, the Government feel that they have done all that is necessary, in relation to that question, when they carried the Canadian Pacific Railway to a terminus which was declared by the highest naval authorities, to be unequalled on the Pacific coast. Then, the hon. gentleman ventured to say that we did know whether we could get through the Kicking Horse Pass and the Selkirk Range. I could hardly believe that he was so unacquainted with what is going forward, as to make such a statement. I told him that we know everything that is necessary to be known, in relation to the Kicking Horse Pass, and it has been stated in the fullest manner to the House. There is no doubt that it was not desirable to have as heavy grades as we have been obliged to encounter, there being, for a short distance, a grade of 116 feet to the mile. I wish, however, to refer for a moment to the grades of the Union Pacific, and every person knows that when I speak of it, that the line from Chicago to San Francisco is composed of the Union and Central Pacific, and that you cannot get to the Pacific ocean by the Union Pacific alone; you have to go by the Central Pacific as well, though they are under different charters and different companies. On the portion called the Union Pacific the grade is ninety feet to the mile, and on the Central Pacific portion it is 116 feet to the mile, and there is a great deal more of that grade than is to be found on the most severe parts of the Kicking Horse Pass and the Selkirk Range. On the Northern Pacific, the maximum grade is 128 feet to the mile, and in the Southern Pacific, it is also 128 feet to the mile. So that in point of grade, though it would have been desirable if possible to have avoided those heavy grades, yet when we are able to shorten the Canadian Pacific Railway something like 100 miles, and are only obliged to encounter for a limited distance grades of 116 feet to the mile, I think no person who knows anything of railways will hesitate to say that we would have adopted a most unwise course, if we had secured the lower grade at the cost of an increase of distance, amounting to 100 miles. The hon. gentleman is very anxious about the branch lines. I am glad that he is; for as he knows I have always attached the greatest possible importance to the branch lines. I have always said in speaking of the amount the Company were to receive for the construction of the prairie section—I have always kept prominently in view the fact that they would be compelled to construct branch lines all over the various portions of the prairie section, in order to make their lands valuable, and in order to make traffic for their trunk line. And as the branch lines were entirely constructed at their own expense, I have always felt that a fair subject for the consideration of this House is the expenditure involved in these branch lines. As to what the hon. gentleman has said, the only conclusion I could arrive at from his remarks—and I followed him attentively, as I always do when listening to words of wisdom—was, that we are asking too little money—I could not find any reasonable foundation except that, for the statements which he made to the House. He complains that we are not providing for the branch lines. He says, it is true you are providing for the rapid construction of the main line, but the branch lines are important, and what is to become of them? Well, Sir, that is a very important point, and I beg to tell him that it is one which has not escaped the attention of the Government; and I think he will not contradict me when I say that he and I have had no understanding that he should raise that question, and that I should answer it. I have no doubt that he will be delighted when I tell him that the importance of extending these branch lines has engaged the attention of the Government, and that it is provided by a private Bill which is now before the House, that in regard to these lines, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall be enabled to bond that portion of the branch lines which is constructed, in order to provide the means for their steady and continuous extension. If we look at the district of southern Manitoba, we know that there are a vast number of people who have gone in there under the impression that they would soon be reached by railway communication; and we felt that for the development of the North-West, and for securing the traffic, which is the foundation of the success of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is absolutely necessary that these branches should be extended. I am sure the hon. gentleman will give us a hearty support in the measure which we intend to submit to Parliament, and which has already engaged our attention for the purpose of steadily and profitably carrying out the branch lines in those sections of the country where there is a demand for them, and where their construction will not only develop the country, but secure a valuable traffic for the Canadian Pacific Railway. I may say, in reference to the speech of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Fleming), that I was glad that he dealt with this question with a frankness which did him great credit, so far as that portion of his speech is concerned, by saying that these lands would give a return of $9,000,000 in two or three years. He knows that under the Resolutions every cent of those $9,000,000 will come directly into the coffers of Canada in meeting interest and extinguishing this debt. The hon. gentleman made a sound calculation and I repeat that it is a pleasure to be able to listen to gentlemen on that side of the House who break away a little from the trammels of party, which seem so to limit the mental vision of some hon. gentlemen—and discuss so great a question in the business-like way in which they would discuss any other practical question outside the field of politics. He said, you will not only get $9,000,000 from the lands, but you will have over $2,000,000 per annum of net profits from the working of the railway. I commend to my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, this remark of his friend, the hon. member for Peel. We are not only to give them assistance for promoting the construction of branch lines, so as to enable them to issue bonds on the constructed portion of the line, for the purpose of being applied to their extension, but, as the hon. member for Peel says, they are going to get $2,000,000 of net profits per annum on the operation of the railway, for the purpose of carrying out and extending the branch lines in any direction which may be absolutely necessary in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway. My hon. friend is very anxious about Portland and Sault Ste. Marie. Well, I do not think it was a very extraordinary thing that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should have paid a visit to the harbour of Portland. The hon. gentleman knows that it is the nearest port on the Atlantic to the port of Montreal. No person requires to be told that one of our difficulties with regard to the Atlantic port for the Canadian Pacific Railway, is the advantage, which unfortunately for us—I was going to say nature, but I believe it was something of a more personal character which gave that which formerly, and rightfully belonged to us, to the adjoining country—that great misfortune placed the nearest Atlantic port to Montreal in the United States. Does the hon. gentleman think that if I, as Minister of Railways, found that to-morrow default was made, and this road were to come into my hands, and I were called upon to operate it—does the hon. gentleman not suppose that I would feel it my duty to get all the trade and traffic that comes from the old world into the port of Portland, and draw it to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and carry it away to the Pacific coast, if I could? I should be wanting in my duty to the country and to the enterprise in which I was engaged, if I did not do so; and I am quite certain, if my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition were himself the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, he would have been down at Portland making arrangements for this trade, and directing attention to the fact that if the people of Portland consulted their own interest, they would give their traffic to the Canadian Pacific Railway instead of to any other trans-continental line of railway. What more, Sir? The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Stephen pointed out the advantages that would be derived by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the people of Portland if Minneapolis and St. Paul and the western States were brought nearer to the ocean by way of the harbour of Portland. Well, Sir, would there be any great harm in the extension of the road from Algoma Mills to Sault Ste. Marie, which is not a very heavy work? Mr. Stephen told them frankly that if the American road was brought to Sault Ste. Marie, the Canadian Pacific Railway intended to meet it there in order to attract through Canada all the trade of the western States that he could obtain. The hon. gentleman knows that there was nothing very surprising in that, and there would be nothing very injurious to Canada if all that trade were carried through this country down to Montreal and even to the harbour of Portland. But the hon. gentleman says there is no provision made for the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie line. Well, Sir, he has been already told that if those railway magnates engaged in the construction of the railway in the United States, bring down their line to Sault Ste. Marie, means will be found to meet it there. The hon. gentleman has also referred to the proposed line from Gravenhurst to Callander. I may tell him frankly that the Government have not lost sight, and will not lose sight, of that question. We owe it to the North-West as well as the great commercial centres of Ontario, that we should get the cheapest and shortest and most efficient line of communication between the great commercial centres of Ontario and the North-West, just as we have provided for communication with the great commercial centres of the Province of Quebec. But the hon. gentleman is very anxious about this line to Quebec, and he has raised a very important and interesting question. Well, the House will remember that I have stated emphatically that since Confederation has taken place, since all, or the great bulk of the benefit that results from increasing the trade and business of any section of this country inures to the Federal Treasury, and not to the Local Treasury—I have stated my opinion again and again to this House, and I repeat it now, that you have not a right to ask, you cannot fairly demand, that the Local Governments of these various Provinces of which Confederation is composed shall deplete their resources by building a national line of railway for any portion of this country; and I say that if the Government of the Province of Quebec put their hands into the treasury of that Province, and, at their own cost, burthening their own treasury, built a line of railway that forms a most important link in the trans-continental line from the harbour of Quebec to Port Moody on the Pacific Ocean, it does form a just and fair ground for consideration on the part of the Government and on the part of this Parliament; and I am glad to find, from the enlarged sentiments which the hon. gentleman has thrown out, that, when we feel obliged to come to this House and ask fair consideration for the great expenditure made on an important section of our trans-continental line of railway, the hon. gentleman will be prepared to give us that hearty support which his statement here to-day shows that he will give. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the question of a bridge across the river at Quebec—because, as I said, he seems inclined to devise means by which we shall be in a position to come to Parliament with larger demands on the exchequer. He says, this parliamentary sum that you are asking amounts to nothing. No person knows better than the hon. gentleman that it forms no burden, and he uses his fertile imagination to conjure up means by which it may be made a little larger, and by which still greater national enterprises may be engaged in. No person doubts that would be the value of a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec, to connect the Intercolonial Railway, a thousand miles of which or thereabouts we are operating, and the Lower Provinces by the most direct communication with the old and important city of Quebec. No person doubts for one moment the advantage that there would be in bringing the city of Quebec on to that direct line of communication, and I take it for granted that when the Government are able to devise any means or to suggest anything by which so important an object can be accomplished, we may rely upon the hearty support and co-operation of my hon. friend opposite. But he has very much favoured a winter port in the Maritime Provinces, and I was a little amused at the hon. gentleman growing facetious at my expense—though I must say he does not often sin in that way—because I pointed out that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are fully alive to the great importance of reaching the city of Quebec as an ocean port; and I am in a position to state that they do attach such importance to that subject that I have no doubt whatever that arrangements will be made by which the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway in summer will not stop at Montreal, where it now is, but will steadily go on until it reaches the great ocean port of Canada, the harbour of Quebec. From the very first hour that I have been in communication with that Company, I have not ceased to point out the importance, in my opinion, of making Quebec, the great ocean port of Canada, the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I know they are fully impressed with its importance, and the Government realize, not only the importance of having the Canadian Pacific Railway carried down to the port of Quebec, but what is still more vital, of seeing the city of Quebec reached by something more than lines under the control of one single Company. We regard it, Sir, as demanded by the interest of the country, that not only that Province, but the great Province of Ontario, should not become subject to one huge and giant monopoly in the hands of one Company, a policy the hon. gentleman knows, he and his party behind him are at this moment endeavouring to promote. The hon. gentleman knows that if that great Province of Ontario is not placed under the heel of a giant monopoly, which is to control every railway constructed within its borders, it is because this Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have stood in the breach, and have met all the hostility that has appeared in England, in Canada and in this House, and have stood by what we regard as the interests of the people of this country. It is very well to talk to us about monopolies in the North-West, where at this moment there is only 100,000 of a population; but even there we have recognized the importance and necessity of, at the earliest moment, taking measures to sweep away any such monopoly. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite, whilst shouting down monopoly in the North-West, to be banded together in a solid phalanx with a great corporation for the purpose of bringing the great Province of Ontario under the control of one powerful monopoly and preventing competition by other lines of railway in that Province. While it is our duty to stand by the rights and the interests of the great mass of the people, to protect them against any monopoly of that kind, it is equally our duty in the interests of the people that we should extend the same principle further, and see that the great and important harbour and city of Quebec shall be reached by something besides lines of communication under the control of one monopoly which can deal with the traffic as they choose. I do not intend to allude at any length to the communication that has been addressed by the Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway to this House or to my right hon. friend, but I may say this, and I cannot say less than this—I say that during my experience in Parliament of nearly twenty-nine years, I have never witnessed any attempt to overawe the Parliament of Canada to the same extent as this. I state this—and I know what I say will meet with universal assent—and every hon. member in this House knows that the Grand Trunk Railway have never had a firmer or more steadfast friend than myself. Every hon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

gentleman here knows that I have quarrelled with my own friends on this side of the House in relation to measures introduced which I thought were likely to cripple or interfere with the advancement and interests of that company; everybody knows that I consider that company has great claims upon the people of Canada, for the expenditure they have made in the country and the extent to which the commerce of this country has been carried on through their agency and by that expenditure; but while I say that I am prepared, as a member of this Government, to give the fullest and fairest consideration to every reasonable representation in their behalf, I trust the time will never come when that or any other company will be able to overawe this Parliament, and cause any step to be taken that the sober judgment of the Government and the Parliament of the country does not feel, can be taken in the interests of the country. To return, however, to the subject of which I was speaking, the necessity of a Canadian port in the winter season, there is but one opinion, and I have stated it frankly and fully to the House as I am accustomed to do when dealing with any question. I have said that we found it utterly impossible to rival the proximity of Portland by the Intercolonial Railway, despite everything that has been done, and a great deal has been accomplished in carrying a vast volume of freight over that road. During the last year, notwithstanding the position in which we stood, 299,000 tons of freight were carried over the Intercolonial Railway more than were carried over that road during any previous period of its history. Everything the Government could do has been done, and everything the Government can do is being done for the purpose of accomplishing that end which we had in view in the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. But when we find that we cannot rival Portland as an ocean winter port, in consequence of its proximity, we are bound to take such measures as are found to be absolutely necessary in order to make our own ports second to none in that respect, in order to make St. Andrews, St. John, Halifax and ultimately Louisburg, 200 miles nearer to the old world than any of them, we are bound, I say, to take every measure we can to cause all the Canadian traffic possible to be carried over the lines that will come down to these Canadian ports; and I have no hesitation in saying that I believe this House is prepared to give full and fair consideration to any proposal necessary to accomplish so important and so desirable an object. My hon. friend was very facetious in referring to my statement that the Canadian Pacific Railway, in securing the control of the South-Eastern Railway, had secured the shortest line to New York and Halifax at the same time. That statement is perfectly correct. Let the hon. gentleman look at the map and examine where this road lies, and he will find it lies in an air line from Montreal to Halifax, and that, if they had no other object in securing it, they had this most important object in view—and one which they have always regarded as of the utmost importance in connection with this great trans-continental line of railway—that they should have, not a port in the United States, but an open port all the year round to be found within the borders of Canada. I say that road at Sherbrooke will connect with the international road. That road is also on an air line to the cities of St. John and Halifax and by its extension across a small portion of the State of Maine, it can be carried down to these ocean ports of Canada, and those ports can thus be brought nearly two hundred miles nearer Montreal than at present. The fact that the South-Eastern road rendered the Canadian Pacific Railway independent of the Grand Trunk Railway in their course to Portland, Boston or New York, was no reason why it should not, at the same time, be made to subserve the desirable object of drawing all the traffic possible out of the United States to Canadian lines, and also give the shortest and most direct route to the ocean ports in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I am glad this subject has attracted the hon. gentleman's attention, because I know from the mode in which he will deal with it, from the deep study he will give it, that he will be prepared to give the Government any aid that may be found necessary to accomplish so important and desirable an object. The hon. gentleman says he wants to know the end before beginning. That is just the fault I find with the hon. gentleman. These men who want to know the end before beginning never do begin; and if we were not to have the Canadian Pacific road until we could get to the end of it, I am sure we would have to wait a long time before commencing it. But I say this, and I say it with a good deal of pride, that the Government is able to point to the fact that from the first time we submitted this great proposition to the consideration of Parliament, not only had it all the elements of finality about it, but that every statement we have asked Parliament to accept has been verified and maintained. I told the hon. gentleman that we would not give over $28,000,000 to complete that portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was under the control and was being constructed by the Government, and I am glad to be able now, upon the very threshold of the completion of the whole of that work, to say that we shall not require more than the amount we estimated, but that the entire cost will be brought within the $28,000,000. I ask my hon. friend and the House to accept that as an evidence that in submitting these estimates for the consideration of Parliament, the Government are entitled to some confidence and consideration at their hands. But, Sir, there is another point in this connection which is perhaps worthy of a moment's notice. The hon. gentleman says we know nothing as to whether we can get a pass through the Rocky Mountains. Why, the hon. gentleman ought to know that that pass has not only been surveyed, but that Mr. Sandford Fleming went through that pass himself from end to end during the past season, and cabled me to London that it was a splendid pass and he was perfectly delighted with it. The hon. gentleman ought to know that I could not very well have better evidence than that of a gentleman of such high standing and attainments as Mr. Sandford Fleming, after he had himself personally gone over the road and seen the engineers and examined everything in connection with it from end to end, and I give that to the hon. gentleman as the evidence that we not only know that there is a practicable pass, but that we know it is one of a very admirable and excellent character, and that its adoption has given the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and has given Canada, the enormous advantage of shortening our trans-continental line, and increasing our position to compete to that extent, by something like 100 miles. Now, there is a somewhat curious coincidence in reference to these estimates which I have now submitted to the House as to the cost of this work, when I am asking the House to accept my estimate at $27,000,000, and it is this: No one knows better than my hon. predecessor the enormous difficulty and increased cost of the construction of the road between Prince Arthur's Landing and Red River, owing to its inaccessibility. My hon. predecessor knows that one of the great difficulties in the construction of that work within any reasonable time, one of the great difficulties in the construction of that work at any reasonable cost, was the fact that it was an entire wilderness of rocks and swamps from end to end of the 400 miles, that there was no population upon it whatever, but that it was an unsettled wilderness, and of as untoward and intractable a character as ever an engineer went over, I suppose.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose the hon. gentleman heard his follower from Cardwell the other night say that the great mistake made by my Administration, and the mistake which was found fault with by the Conservatives, was that we did not begin at the middle instead of at the two ends.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know too much of my hon. friend from Cardwell to imagine that there has not been some error in the report of his speech.

Mr. BLAKE. There was—a great one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite certain that my hon. friend from Cardwell could not have committed so great an error. I think it is probable that what he said was this—

Mr. MACKENZIE. No; he said what I have quoted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it is probable that he may have said that it was incumbent upon the Government not to construct 228 miles of railway of a very expensive character at two ends, which were entirely useless until the middle was put in, without providing for the early construction of the middle.

Mr. MACKENZIE. So I did. That is not what he said.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is what he must have intended to say, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me that there is some reason in that. As I was saying, the work was of a very difficult character, and its expense was enormously increased owing to its inaccessibility. Why, the cost of getting material, of getting men, of getting machinery of any kind, of constructing roads of any kind to get access to it, was fabulous, and only persons who are acquainted with railway construction can form any idea of it, as my hon. friend knows. Then he knows that the cost of the Pembina Branch was very great. It arose from a variety of circumstances. It was thought wise to do the grading a long time before it was followed up and the track laid, and from a variety of causes, from the fact of its completion being hurried so as to get the rails down and the track over it, the construction of the 86 miles of railway from Selkirk to Pembina was very expensive indeed. The hon. gentleman knows, because he has given his attention to it, that the most expensive and difficult portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway from end to end is that portion lying in the gorges of the Fraser River. He knows that through that country engineers had to be slung down by ropes fastened to trees, in order to locate the road; he knows, that it was one of the most inaccessible, one of the most difficult places in which it was possible for any person to undertake either to locate or to construct a railway. Let me draw the attention of the House for a few moments to a comparison between that work which the Government have now all but completed, and which three years ago I estimated would cost twenty-eight millions of money, and the work now before the House, based on my estimate to cost twenty-seven millions of money, and I think hon. gentlemen will see that we have good grounds for entertaining the belief we do entertain that our estimate of twenty-seven millions of money to complete this work is a very safe and reliable estimate. I take first the road built and being built by the Government, the 708 miles of road. From Prince Arthur's Landing to Selkirk the total is 407 miles. I am sure my hon. friend from East York will agree with me that 105 miles of that may be fairly classed as very heavy work. Then I class 182 miles as light work, and 102 miles as moderate work. I divide it into these three classes, and I am quite certain that my hon. friend's recollection will concur with me in the statement that it is a very fair division. Then, from Savona's Ferry to Port Moody, there is 90 miles of very heavy work—the heaviest work found on the Canadian Pacific Railway from end to end, and that portion in the gorges of the Fraser River—80 miles of heavy work, and 43 miles of moderate work, making a total of 213 miles. Then the Pembina Branch I call 86 miles of light work, and that cost $1,496,798. The Colville Branch is two miles of moderate work, making a total of 708 miles, which I estimate to cost $28,000,000, and I am in a position to state that I believe my estimate will be equal to the charge. Now, as to the work remaining to be done by the Canadian Pacific Railway. From near Sudbury Junction to Nepigon, 95 miles of very heavy work, 175 miles of moderate work, and 210 miles of light work. I may tell my hon. friend that I have been pushing as rapidly as possible the copying of the profile which we have from end to end, and I shall be able to lay it upon the Table at once, so that any hon. gentleman can see for himself how far the statement I have made is verified by the profile. Then, from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Savona's Ferry, there are 15 miles of very heavy work, 211 miles of moderate work, and 30 miles of light work or 286 miles in all. This makes the total to be constructed by the Company, 766 miles. That my chief engineer has estimated, after the most careful consideration, at $30,000,000, and, of the work done on the section from near Sudbury Junction to Nepigon, the grading is completed, ready to receive the track, on sixty-five miles, which we put down at $1,200,000 of work done. That leaves $28,800,000. There is one-third of the grading done on the ninety-five miles of heavy work, which I put down at $1,800,000, which, deducted from the former sum, will leave $27,000,000 to finish the work, and I believe that there is no engineer, that there is no railway contractor, who is acquainted with the character of the work which the Government engaged to do, and which will be accomplished within the $28,000,000, and this work which remains to be done by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and which is estimated at $30,000,000, $3,000,000 having been already accomplished, who will not say that that is a fair estimate.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say what is the estimated cost from the Rockies to Kamloops?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not divided here. I have estimated the total 706 miles at thirty millions, basing it upon the experience we have had with similar work elsewhere: and I mention that now because I think it would meet the point which the hon. gentleman spoke of as to having deficient information. I do not intend to detain the House any longer, but before sitting down I will say to the hon. member for East York, that what Mr. White is reported to have said, as stated here, is, "That what we complained of was—and it was the complaint everywhere—that the hon. gentleman milked the two ends and left the centre untouched, not that he did not build a railway. That was the cause of our complaint." I will only say in conclusion, that I did not expect to have added another word to this discussion. I thought the subject was pretty well exhausted by the able addresses upon both sides of the House. I thought, on all the most important points connected with this question, that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition had been answered by more than one hon. gentleman behind him whose statements I thought fully met every point that required to be met in regard to these Resolutions. I leave these Resolutions in the hands of the House to be dealt with, quite certain that we will be gratified to find that the hon. leader of the Opposition is not able to give his support to the motion made by the hon. ex-Minister of Militia, that at any rate, he is satisfied that it is only necessary to have a little more information and further expenditure to make these Resolutions perfectly palatable to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. VAIL. We have heard the same old story and the same old charge made this afternoon by the hon. Minister of Railways. Almost every hon. gentleman who has risen to speak in opposition to the Resolutions, has been charged with being disloyal, and with being enemies to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. gentleman has thought proper to say that because I moved this amendment to defer for six months the consideration of this question, I must necessarily be an enemy to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I deny the charge, Mr. Speaker. This House has now been occupied for the last fortnight in the discussion of these Resolutions. We know, Sir, it must be very important for the Company to have this matter settled one way or the other as soon as possible. I say I am not an enemy to the Company, in fact I hold certain members of that Company, whom I know very well, in high respect—in much higher estimation than any hon. gentleman who sits on the Treasury benches. I would be the last man in this House to say one word against the gentlemen composing the Company, or do anything at all to interfere with the progress of the great work in which they are engaged in completing our line of railway to the Pacific coast. Now, Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said on both sides of this question. I am not disposed, nor do I care, to follow members who have preceded me in this debate, and go over the same ground. It has become tiresome to me, and I suppose it has become tiresome to yourself. But there are two or three little matters I desire to refer to before you leave the Chair, and I will put them in the most concise form I can. In the first place I would ask, why are we charged with being enemies of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? Do the Canadian Pacific Railway Company own this country? Are we bound, as representatives of the people, to do as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company want us to do? Are we bound to take $30,000,000 out of the Treasury and give it to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company because they ask us to do it? Are our mouths to be shut on this side of the House from speaking against these Resolutions, by the charge that we are enemies of the Company? For myself I shall give my opinion on these Resolutions, undeterred by this charge. Now, if the House will allow me, I will refer to a few points in the past history of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When British Columbia came into Confederation the Government of that day agreed to commence in two years, and complete in ten years, a road through the Rockies to connect with the system of railways in the Province of Ontario. Subsequently, when that agreement was being ratified by this House, a resolution was passed which bound the Government not to go on with this work to an extent which would increase the taxation of the country. We know, Sir, what took place afterwards. We know that the Government of the right hon. gentleman fell in 1873, that my hon. friend from East York was called upon to form a Government. We know that after he formed that Government he found himself in a very awkward position in consequence of the arrangement with British Columbia. The first thing to which he had to turn his attention was the agreement with British Columbia, by which the Government was bound to build this railway. On the one side he was pressed by British Columbia, backed up by the British Government, to go on and complete the work and carry out the terms of the agreement: on the other side he found this resolution staring him in the face which debarred him from proceeding with the work if it increased the taxation of the country. He however succeeded in making a modified arrangement, by which he agreed to go on with the work as a Government work; and, instead of completing it in 1881, as the first arrangement provided, he was not to complete it till 1890. I mention this now, because I desire to show the House and the country that we are not bound, under our arrangement with British Columbia, to complete this road before 1890. Well, Sir, we know what took place at that time. We know that these patriotic hon. gentlemen on the other side—or their friends—fomented discord in British Columbia. They induced the people of that Province to call public meetings and insist on the Mackenzie Government carrying out the contract. We know that in order to allay that feeling the Government went as far as they could in the direction of commencing this road, and that Mr. Mackenzie very soon afterwards took power from Parliament to commence the work. His policy was to commence it at the western end of Lake Superior, to build on to Winnipeg, and then to proceed with the road into the interior of the country and open up the North-West as fast as the country could be settled. This, I think it will be generally acknowledged to-day, was a common-sense policy, and the proper policy for the Government to pursue. He had till 1890 to complete the road to the Pacific, and it was not until near the end of that time that he intended to turn his attention to building the road north of Lake Superior. He made great progress in that work, had reached Winnipeg, and had done a good deal of work on the Pacific side. He had let the contract west of Winnipeg, and was prepared to go on and carry out his policy, utilizing the water stretches in order to reach the North-West. And, Sir, nothing more was required at that time for the North-West than a route by which immigrants could reach that country in summer. In 1878 the Government of my hon. friend was defeated at the polls, and hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. After they came in they began to let contracts that covered hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars. We know that the country became alarmed at the fabulous sums that were being spent on this road; we know that the country was anxious that the road should be built, and we know that the people were desirous of ascertaining what their obligations would be, and how much this road was going to cost. We know very well that it was urged that the road should be taken out of the hands of the Government. We know the supporters of the right hon. gentleman insisted that the Chief Engineer should be removed; he was removed. Report stated that the followers of the right hon. gentleman insisted on his removal; I may be wrong in that, but he certainly did retire from the position. They, it was said, induced the right hon. gentleman to place the road in the hands of a company. He spent a summer in England trying to get a company to take up the enterprise. It was only a short time before Parliament met that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agreed with the Government to complete the road on the terms of a certain contract. We know when the contract was submitted to Parliament that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, and the Minister of Railways especially, told the House that it was a very favourable contract for the Company and the country as well. The Minister of Railways said it was a gigantic work—that the Company must have sufficient money to build the road, otherwise they would be coming back, by-and-bye, for more money, and he wanted to settle the matter once for all, and the House and the country agreed that the contract should be ratified. It was ratified, and the Company were bound to complete the road in 1891. It is not necessary for me to refer to the indorsement of the bonds spoken of the other day—but when I heard the passage in the Speech from the Throne setting forth that some assistance was to be asked from Parliament for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I made up my mind that they were in extremis, that they required aid, and that the country, would perhaps, be justified in giving them some assistance, provided they could show good grounds for their application. But I was astonished, I was surprised, I may almost say, as a friend of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I was disappointed when the Minister of Railways, instead of telling us the exact position of the Company, the only reason why Parliament was asked to vote $30,000,000, was because the Government want the road finished in 1885 instead of 1892. Had the hon. gentleman told us that the road had cost much more than they estimated, that they had gone on very rapidly with the work and that under the circumstances they must either stop work or the Government must render them some assistance—I say for one, as an Independent member of this House, if the matter had been put in that way, I would have hesitated some time before I would have voted against assistance being granted. But when the hon. gentleman stated that it was merely a question as to whether the road should be completed in 1891 or 1885, I say he gave up his case. When he asked the country to vote $30,000,000 for the sake of getting a railway completed round Lake Superior in five years before it was required in the interests of the North-West, he was asking the country to do that in which no man ought to support him in. I ask my hon. friends from Nova Scotia—who, I am sure, are desirous of doing anything they can both for the Government and the Province they represent—if they have looked at the Public Accounts and the amount of the public debt, if they have noticed that in 1867, when the Provinces were confederated, the whole gross debt amounted to $93,000,000, and that in sixteen years we have increased that amount to $202,000,000, and it is now proposed by the Minister of Railways with one stroke of the pen to add $30,000,000 more. I ask them again to consider whether, if it took 100 years for the four Provinces first confederated to roll up a debt of $93,000,000, which has since been increased to $202,000,000, it is not proper, as an hon. member said the other evening, that we should pause and ask whither are we drifting? I had hoped for the last year or two, as the protective policy introduced by the Minister of Finance a few years ago presses especially heavily on Nova Scotia, as it has been like a canker eating into the hearts of the people of that Province, that the time was not far distant when he would, considering the peculiar position of the Maritime Provinces, reconstruct his Tariff, or revise it so as to make it bear less heavily on the people of Nova Scotia; but I see no hope of this if the Resolutions carry. I ask my hon. friends who represent Nova Scotia if they have looked into the Trade Returns? If not, let them refer to the year 1878 and notice that the taxes paid by the people of that Province in that year amounted to about $1,200,000, whereas, last year it reached $1,833,469, an increase of 50 per cent. in the last five years. I do not wish to detain the House at any length, but I desire to ask the hon. Minister of Railways why it is that in asking for this grant of $30,000,000, he did not, at the same time, ask something from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in return? He has stated that the Company would by-and-bye give up the monopoly, and that they would probably make a winter port in British territory. I ask why did he not insist on those conditions? Why did he not tell the Company: "If we grant you this money, you must give up the monopoly and adopt a port in British territory as your winter port." If he had done this, and I claim the Company were bound to do this, I would have been rather disposed to have supported the Resolutions. The bargain is, however, all one-sided as respects the Company. I do not see, while the Company were asking the Dominion Government to grant $30,000,000 more, there was anything secured in return, except the completion of the road four or five years earlier than the date mentioned in the contract, which to my mind is a matter of no importance. In regard to the return of this money: I ask the hon. Minister of Railways, with his experience as to the difficulty involved in getting money back into the Treasury from a railway company, whether he really and honestly expects that the money will ever return to the Treasury?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, every dollar.

Mr. VAIL. The hon. gentleman told the country when this contract was made that the railway would not cost the people a dollar beyond what the House was asked to vote, and the House would not be called upon to grant another dollar beyond that stated in the contract. Yet the Government are now asking $30,000,000 more. How then can I have any confidence in the hon. gentleman's statement? No doubt he intends now that such shall be the case, but he may change his mind by-and-by. He will then put the case to the House in this way: The Company expended a large amount of their own funds on this gigantic work in which the country is interested, and we cannot ask them to pay it off now; they will probably pay the interest and we will give them ten or twelve years more to pay it. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company will say you have not collected the millions which you advanced to the Grand Trunk, why, therefore, should you ask us for this money. What answer can be given? Can we deal differently with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from what we have dealt with the Grand Trunk? I say no.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the fact that we furnished all this subvention, out of which the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be built, makes no difference between this case and the case of the Grand Trunk? There is not the slightest parallel, and I am astonished at the hon. gentleman.

Mr. VAIL. I cannot see that it makes any difference as to the question of getting back the money, for we have no security whatever that we will get it back. The Grand Trunk gave us security, but it is now down at the bottom of the list, and that is where the Canadian Pacific Railway will be before many years. I do not suppose if the country was properly secured for the repayment of the money that they would be disposed to refuse it, provided there was sufficient evidence laid on the Table to show that they were in such a position that they could not go on without the money. The complaint I make against the hon. Minister of Railways is, that he refuses to give us the requisite information in connection with the subject. What would a bank say, for instance, to an individual who, after having received from it a sum of $50,000 to carry out a certain contract, and the individual, after having spent the money, should come to the bank and ask for $50,000 more? The bank would say: What have you done with the $50,000 which we advanced you; you must convince me that you have done the work for that amount before we can advance you any more? And would not that be a reasonable request? That is what we ask the Government to do. We ask for a tabulated statement, showing the cost of the work and the position of the Company—showing that the money has been honestly and properly expended—expended in the interests of the country, and on this contracted line when they have done that it will be time enough to say that $30,000,000 shall be taken out of the Treasury of the Dominion and given to the Company. Referring, to the motion for a six months' hoist, I think it is one in the interests of the country, and one which cannot be said to be opposed to the interests of the Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am anxious to lay on the Table of the House the profiles of the entire line. I wish to say, however, that these profiles are originals, and I hope any gentleman examining them, will be careful that none are mislaid. It would be extremely inconvenient if any of them were lost.

After Recess.

Mr. McNEILL. I am desirous of saying a few words expressing the reasons for the vote that I feel obliged to give on this occasion. I intend to make my remarks very short, for the debate has already been protracted to a very considerable length, and I am sure hon. gentlemen are not desirous that it should be protracted unduly; and for that reason I do not intend to enter at any great length into a reply to the remarks which have been made by the speakers who have preceded me. I do not intend to enter into a discussion as to the nature of patriotism. The hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Paterson) pleased us all very much last night; I am sure we all enjoyed very much the magnificent oration which he made upon that subject. For my own part I feel a little difficulty in deciding whether I most admired the fine frenzy of passion into which he worked himself on that subject, or his remarks upon the subject of the gerrymander. As to patriotism, I would only say that I do not know that there has been any special charge levelled against hon. gentlemen opposite as to the kind of patriotism which he resented. He quoted Dr. Johnson who said that patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel; but I do not know that that kind of patriotism, or any other has been charged against hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. But, Sir, I quote just two lines with reference to this subject from one of the most famous writers of Dr. Johnson's own age, concerning an element of patriotism which I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to. The lines are to be found in the Traveller, and they are:

"The patriot's boast where'er I roam,
His first best country is his own."

I hope hon. gentlemen will lay these lines to heart, and act upon them. I would have attached somewhat more importance to the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition in which he asked for further particulars with regard to the moneys expended on the railway and a number of other matters, had I been able to believe that any information which the Government could afford him, or anything that could be said upon the question, could have induced him to alter his opinion with regard to these Resolutions. From the observations which fell from the hon. gentleman when he spoke previously in this debate, it seemed to me almost a little farcical that he should suggest that any information, or anything that could be said by the Government, or by other hon. members on this side, could in the smallest respect alter the determination to which he had come, which was, if possible, to vote down these Resolutions, and keep back the completion of this great national enterprise. With regard to the hon. gentleman who spoke last, I was very glad to observe that he had, in one respect at all events, answered the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who last night stated that the members of the Syndicate were as bad as bad could be. The hon. member who last spoke said that on the contrary he had the very highest esteem for them, which was very satisfactory as far as it went. Now, Sir, I am one of those, as you know from the observations I have addressed to this House, who think that railway companies have too much power in Canada. I think they have it in their power to a large extent to treat the public of Canada very much as they please, and I think it is the duty of the Government to attempt to devise means for their more efficient control; and, Sir, when I learned that it was the intention of the Government to supplement the great powers which this Company already possessed—powers which, whether rightly or wrongly, they are accused of having used very improperly—at all events, complaints are very numerous and very loud against them—when I heard that, I must confess that I was very much surprised and a good deal alarmed; and just as I felt it my duty, from my place in this House last Session, to oppose the views of the hon. Minister of Railways, and just as I would have felt it my duty, though very reluctantly, I confess, to vote against his views on that occasion had I had the opportunity, so I believed, when I came down to this House this Session, that it would be my duty also to record my vote against the proposals of that hon. gentleman. But, Sir, in approaching a great question of this kind, a question which is admitted on all hands to be charged with results of the first importance to the people of this Dominion, I think it is one's bounden duty to endeavour as far as possible to lay aside all pre-conceived opinions, to get rid of all prejudices, and to view the question purely upon its merits. Now, I venture to say—I am sorry to say it, but I am obliged to say it—that that is by no means the spirit in which this great question has been approached by hon. members on the opposite side of this House. What has been from first to last the burden of their complaints? Has it not been, Sir, that this Company come back to this House to ask for more money? Now, Sir, I venture to say that it would be impossible to present this matter in a more unfair or misleading light than to put it in that way. Has this Company come here to ask for an additional grant of money to enable them to complete in the time specified in their contract this colossal work, which is admitted on all hands to be of such great importance to the unity, the prosperity and the development of this country? If they had come back to ask for a further grant of money to enable them to do this, then there would have been some reason in the statements made from the other side of the House; but as we know they have done nothing of the kind. We know that, owing to convulsions in the stock markets, and owing to other causes over which this Company had no control, they have been obliged to encounter difficulties in the completion of this work which, to gentlemen of less ability and less energy, would probably have proved altogether disastrous. Do they come here, then, to ask for further time in which to complete their contract? If they had done so, there would have been some reason in the charges preferred against them from the other side of the House. But, Sir, it is very well known that they ask nothing of the kind. It is well known that they ask to be relieved in no degree whatever from the provisions of the contract into which they have entered. We know that this Company have astonished, not the people of Canada only, but the people of the whole world, by the rapidity with which they have prosecuted this work. We know that they have astonished, not only the people of Canada, but the whole world, by the statement made a short time ago that they were prepared to complete this colossal work in about half the time in which they had agreed to complete it; and though hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House may endeavour to minimize the effect of that promise, gratuitously made on the part of these gentlemen, it is a fact that it was received with delight, not only by the people of Canada, but by all the friends of Canada in Europe. Well, Sir, the Company found that, beset with the difficulties to which I have referred, they were unable without assistance to fulfil this gratuitous promise, and they come here and say—we are unable to do this without assistance, but we are still prepared, to complete our work within half the time laid down in our contract, if you will only do—what?—not give us one solitary dollar—but if you will advance to us on security which the hon. leader of the Opposition has not ventured to say is not ample security, the sum proposed, and upon terms which will not add one single dollar to the burdens of the people of this country. That, Sir, is the proposal these gentlemen make to this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite say: "Oh, the Government said they would not come back, but we warned the Government and this House that they would come back, and here they are back." Well, the hon. leader of the Opposition is a great logician, and he must know very well that a more perfect example of the vulgar fallacy called equivocation or ambiguity, could not be produced than was produced by almost every speaker on his own side of the House. They come back, it is true, but they come back to offer Canada better terms than she had under her original contract; they come back to say that, without adding to the burthens of the people in any respect whatever, they will build this road, which hon. gentlemen opposite declare they could not build in ten years, in half that time and give the people of Canada the benefit of that early completion. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite spoke as if the proposal of these men were something monstrous; as if they were asking for some wonderful favour. As if they could not fulfil their contract, although member after member on their side has risen in his place to state that the Company were in possession of funds sufficient even out of the profits they have made in this transaction to complete the work in the time specified in the contract. What we have to consider is simply, as I have already pointed out, whether they are likely in the first place to complete the work in the time they say they will, and whether in the second place the security they give is sufficient. As to the first we know that they have done a great deal more than they promised to do; we know that they have proceeded with the work much more rapidly than it could have been expected they would and that they have performed it with a degree of perfection which was altogether unexpected and which is beyond anything required in the contract. It is only fair therefore to give these gentlemen credit for what they have done in the past; it surely is only fair to give them fair play even though they do happen to be a railway company. Now hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured as far as possible to get rid of this remarkably plain case which is presented to this House in two ways. They have endeavoured to get rid of it by talking about a great many other matters in no way connected with this question, or at all events not in any way involved in it, and by the very usual process adopted in such cases of endeavouring to create a prejudice against the gentlemen who come here to ask us to agree to these terms. They have endeavoured to create prejudice in several respects. In the first place they have said that these gentlemen have expended the money which they have received from the Government, not upon the work they contracted to perform, but upon the purchase of other lines of railways. As has been already pointed out it certainly is a rather remarkable coincidence to find hon. gentlemen who have been inveighing against monopoly endeavouring to saddle the people of Ontario with the most gigantic monopoly known in modern times. In the first place with reference to the allegation that these gentlemen have expended the money they received in the purchase of other railways. It was absolutely necessary to the proper carrying on of the work they were in the act of constructing that they should secure an eastern extension. And in the next place I say it is not the fact that they have expended on these lines money which they had contracted to expend upon the main road. I say that it is patent that they have expended upon the main line west of Callander, a great deal more money than they have received from the Government. They have expended $23,000,000 on that line as is not denied by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Lambton whose speech was so highly complimented by the hon. member for North Brant admitted that that amount has been spent on that part of the line. But he argued that they had only spent between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 more than they had received from the Government. His argument in that respect was somewhat original I think in this House but we cannot say it was ingenuous. It amounted simply to this that he calmly suppressed those other items of expenditure which had been laid out on that part of the line. He altogether left out of consideration the fact when he stated that the Company had expended $23,000,000 on that part of the line that they had also expended $6,500,000 in rolling stock which was a part of their contract and that in the material of construction they had also expended over $4,000,000 cash making nearly 11,000,000 without speaking at all of the hundreds of thousands of dollars which they had expended in the improvement on the Government line and without speaking of the amounts they had expended on the branch lines which were all beneficial to the North-West. I am not speaking of the line down to Algoma Mills. In those three items the $23,000,000 expended in the construction of the road the $6,500,000 on rolling stock and the $4,000,000 in material of construction they had expended on that main line west of Callandar about half as much more as all the money they received from the Government, that is than the $22,000,000 which hon. gentlemen accept as the amount received. Therefore I say that the contention that these gentlemen had deceived the people by expending the money which they had received from the country upon work not contemplated in their contract and then coming here to ask for more money to enable them to carry out their contract is altogether unfair, untrue and misleading. But I am prepared for the purpose of cutting short this discussion to make hon. gentlemen opposite a present of this contention. I will not follow them into the thicket of figures and details in which they have endeavoured to involve this question. There is a little fish we all know of that is in the habit when he is closely pressed and nearly captured of darkening the water around him. Just in the same way hon. gentleman opposite knowing the position in which they stand in regard to this question, knowing that the question is one of the simplest ever presented to the people have endeavoured by throwing out a cloud of figures and details to darken the subject and to escape under the cloud they have raised. I will make them a present of the creditable insinuations they have made that these gentlemen are coming here with cooked accounts and on bended knees after having expended the money they received from the country in purposes outside the contract, and will simply refer to figures which on both sides of the House are admitted to be correct. Before doing so, I wish hon. gentlemen opposite to bear in mind two facts; that in the past the Company have completed the work they have done very much more rapidly and very much better than they were obliged to under their contract, and that, in the second place, the money which I hope and believe is about to be handed over to these gentlemen, the loan that is about to be made to them, will only be handed to them just in proportion as the work is done and not until after it is done, and then I will make hon. gentlemen opposite a present of this creditable contention that the accounts are cooked. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the Company make default. Suppose that they do not complete the agreement that they now make, and that we are obliged, if the worst comes to the worst, to take over this road. I wish to point out to the House and to hon. gentlemen opposite, upon figures which are admitted by themselves, what the cost of this road to this country will be under those circumstances, and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to controvert these figures, because they are figures that are notorious to every one. In the first place, there is $28,000,000 which the Government line will cost the country; in the second place, there is $25,000,000 of the money subsidy; in the next place, there is this $22,500,000, which, we may consider, as my hon. friend from Cardwell said, is exchanged for the lands which, under those circumstances, we will get back again; in the next place, there is $9,000,000—I believe it is a little less, but I am dealing with round figures—which they have received for the lands sold; in the next place, there is the $7,500,000 which will be due in November, 1888; then, there is the $5,000,000 of a charge on what I call the eastern extension of the road, and there is $1,000,000 of a charge on the lands which we would receive back again in the case of the failure of the Company to complete their contract. These figures all added together, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to say there is one solitary dollar more paid by this country for this road, amount to $97,000,000 or thereabouts—I believe a little less—and that includes the whole line from Montreal to Port Moody. The hon. the leader of the Opposition last Session and this Session, from his place in this House, has distinctly stated that this line was worth to the country $120,000,000, and that is without taking into consideration the Eastern Extension at all. Let us leave out of consideration that part of the road, which the hon. gentleman does not deal with, and the branch lines also not included by him. The branch lines have cost the Company something like $3,250,000. It is notorious that the Eastern Extension has cost the Company $8,500,000. That makes $11,750,000. Subtract that from the $97,000,000 which the whole line would cost, and you have the result, that this road, which the hon. gentleman told us is worth to the country $120,000,000, will cost this country $85,250,000. That is the frightful result which will take place if the Company make default; that is the terrible result we have heard inveighed against so strongly from the other side of the House; that is the terrible result the hon. gentleman who spoke before me lamented over, and his speech reminded me of the dismal dirge of the melancholy ocean, from which, I suppose, he took his inspiration. But the leader of the Opposition says that there will be no exaction of the penalty. He refers to the Grand Trunk, but my hon. friend from Cardwell has I think very satisfactorily disposed of that matter, and has shown that there is no similarity between the cases at all. I wish to call attention to one other matter which has not, I think, been referred to in this debate before. It is that the Government have no option in the matter at all. They have in this particular case no option if the Company make default in regard to taking over this line. The very fact of the default vests the property of the Company in the Government, and I venture to say the Government cannot get rid of that property without coming here to ask for an Act of Parliament to divest them of it. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that we are constructing this road too fast. Sir, I think we all admit the hon. gentleman's great ability. I think every one on this side of the House admits that he is a great debater, a great lawyer, and a great destructive critic. I do not hesitate to say, myself, although I differ from the hon. gentleman essentially on many questions, that he discharges his duties in this House, mainly—though on this occasion he is not doing so; I have a right to think so—but I think he mainly discharges his duties in this House in his position as leader of the Opposition, with great advantage to the people of Canada. I believe, Sir, that the people have confidence in the hon. gentleman as leader of the Opposition in this House; I believe they admire his great ability, I believe they think the cast of his mind is well adapted to this position, and that they will keep him in that position for a long time to come. But I say that when, in order to make out a case against the Government, this great lawyer, one of the greatest lawyers in this country, is obliged to advance the extravagant assertion that this road is being built too fast, then all I can say is that I think it is one of the most extraordinary positions in which a man of his ability can be placed. When, in spite of all his great ingenuity, in spite of all his legal acumen, and in spite of his experience in debate, he is obliged to take such a position as that, I think it shows what a very bad case he has got. Aye, Sir, the hon. gentleman says (he is forced to say) that it would be better to delay for seven years the completion of the work. Well, if it is wrong to complete the work in two years it would be still worse to complete it in a month. He thinks it would be better to delay for seven years to come the completion of this great means of communication between Province and Province, this great highway which hon. gentlemen opposite admit to be so essential for the solidarity of the Dominion. It would be better, the hon. gentleman says, to force these poor people in the North-West, whom he loves so much, the poor people with whom he sympathizes so much under the cruel exactions of a grinding Tariff,—it would be better to force them to pay the enormously increased freight rates which they must pay for seven long years to come, when navigation is closed, for want of the completion of that part of the line north of Lake Superior. It would be better, the hon. gentleman thinks, that these poor people should be forced for seven years to pay these increased freight rates than that the line should be completed. It is better, he thinks, that the Company should be prevented for seven long years to come from devoting their energies to the construction of these branch lines that the hon. gentleman says are so essential; it would be better the hon. gentleman says that this should be done. Sir, I cannot help saying to myself that if the hon. gentleman belonged to a different party from the party to which he does belong, I should almost be inclined to think there was some reason unknown to himself which actuated him with reference to this matter; I should be inclined to think the hon. gentleman, perhaps unknown to himself, was desirous that these difficulties should continue in the North-West; I should be inclined to think that he was desirous, for some reason unknown to himself, that the people in the North-West should suffer a little longer from the difficulties and inconveniences from which they are now suffering. I know very well the party to which he does belong; I know very well that it is not such a party as that to which I have referred. If it were a party that had been teaching the people of this country to set one class against another; if it were a party that had been endeavouring to teach the labourer that the employer of labour was his natural enemy; if it were a party that had been endeavouring to teach the farmer that the manufacturer was his natural enemy; if it were a party that had been endeavouring to set creed against creed, Province against Province, race against race, in this country; if it had been a party that had been endeavouring to teach the people of Ontario to view with suspicion and dislike, if not with positive hatred, their fellow countrymen of the Province of Quebec; if it had been such a party as that, that the hon. gentleman belonged to, I might have thought that if he had searched in that chamber of his mind in which the motives of his actions dwell, he might have been able to find there some lurking desire that that difficulty, that these inconveniences, should, for party purposes, still continue in the North-West. I know the hon. gentleman does not belong to such a party as that. He belongs to the great party of progress, the great part of patriotism, the great party of purity, that party which has unfurled to our gaze the banner of political purity—"mystic, wonderful," indeed! But, Sir, the hon. gentleman thinks it would be better that the people should be forced to pay these additional freights, that they should not be provided with these branch lines for seven years longer. He thinks it would be better to give competing lines seven years longer to consolidate their traffic, and to secure their trade; because the hon. gentleman is not sure whether, in the competition that is to follow, it would be any advantage to them at all. Therefore, he would give them seven years longer for the purpose of consolidating their traffic and consolidating their business arrangements. I have always understood that it was one of the most difficult things in the world, in any kind of trade, if it was once thoroughly established, to lead it to flow into other channels. But the hon. gentleman does not seem to think that the Canadian Pacific Railway would have any difficulty. He says that eventually, if they have better opportunities, if they can offer better advantages to those desirous of sending their freight over these other lines, he thinks that eventually freights will come to the Canadian Pacific Railway; but it does not matter a straw whether the Canadian Pacific Railway has in its infancy to contend with these difficulties or not. The hon. gentleman thinks also that it would be much better to risk the effect on European opinion of a sudden cessation of the work; he thinks it would be better to risk the effect upon the credit of the country of a sudden announcement that we were not going to complete the work in the time we had stated to the world that we would complete it. He thinks that it would be better to risk the effect on immigration also. Now, Sir, I have ventured to speak of the credit of the country, and I say it would be most injurious to our credit if we were suddenly to announce to the world that the work which we had stated we were going to complete in the course of two years, would not be completed until the end of 1891. Because, hon. gentlemen will remember that it is to Canada that the credit or discredit belongs. It is not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that is looked upon in Europe with reference to this work—it is Canada; and the result will be, if this work suddenly ceases, that it will be said that the resources of this country have not been sufficient to complete the work in the time we said we were going to complete it, and this argument of the detractors of Canada could be pressed home with crushing effect by reference to a speech delivered on the floor of this House in the course of this debate by the late Finance Minister of Canada, because he told us in effect that he did not consider that the resources of this country would warrant our endeavouring to complete the road in that time. That hon. gentleman has the courage of his opinions, as it is said; he has the courage of his convictions with a vengeance, because he tells us distinctly that, in his opinion, it would be far better than that the work should have been prosecuted as rapidly as it has been if it had been left to the settlers there to do the work, to build it out of their own lands, I think he said. It naturally occurs to one that, under these circumstances, there would have been very few settlers to build the road, but I suppose that would have been all the better, because then the road would have been built all the slower, and that would have satisfied the hon. gentleman so much the more. But the hon. gentleman has necessarily opposed these Resolutions, because, irrespective altogether of the peculiar nature of the question, irrespective altogether of anything that may be said with reference to this particular subject, it is essential to the hon. gentleman, it is essential to his consistency, that he should oppose this loan. There is only one argument that can be adduced by the Government, to warrant them in making this loan, and that is that the loan will advance the interests of the country. It is the hon. gentleman's rooted conviction, it is an essential element in his political creed, it is one of the fundamental principles of his philosophy, to which he adheres with all the adhesiveness which is so characteristic of him, that a Government cannot advance the interests of a country at all. The hon. gentleman had stated so in words which have been impressed upon the minds of the people of this country, in words which have become almost proverbial in Canada; he has stated that any one who says that a Government can advance the interests of a country knows nothing of what he is talking about. Therefore, it is natural that he should oppose this vote, which was to advance the interests of the country. I will read the hon. gentleman's words. He lays down the duties of a Government, and the capabilities of a Government. He says:

"The country may stand or fall, may be prosperous or the reverse, and we are flies on the wheel; and those who say that the Government can advance the interests of a country know nothing of what they are talking about. The Government of a country is utterly helpless to advance its interests. All that they have to do is to draw their salaries, discharge the administrative duties of their offices, and leave the country to stand or fall, as the case may be, without putting out a hand to save it or give it relief in any way.<sup>17</sup>

Those are the hon. gentleman's words. That is a fundamental principle of his political creed, and it would be unreasonable and unfair to expect the hon. gentleman to support these Resolutions. But, although the hon. the leader of the Opposition may be assumed to hold this view also, because he has gone to so much trouble to get the benefit of the advice and assistance of the late Finance Minister, although he must be supposed to hold those views with respect to the Government of the Dominion, I am happy to know that the supporters of hon. gentleman opposite in the country do not hold those views, because when I ventured to publish them in a printed address to my constituency I was almost reviled by a personal friend of the leader of the Opposition, the late local member for North Bruce, on a public platform for having dared to have said that the late Finance Minister was capable of having used such language. It was alleged that the statement was simply concocted and manufactured by the hon. Minister of Railways, and a gentleman who was a supporter of the late Finance Minister made use of this very ingenuous argument in order to prove that the hon. gentleman never made use of those words. He said Sir Richard Cartwright is a clever man, and I ask you whether you think a clever man would make use of such words—he used an expression which I will not repeat. It was a very short word, however, which did not imply that the person holding such views was very clever. That is how the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite met that statement of the hon. gentleman whom the leader of the Opposition has taken such pains to bring back into his counsels. I do not agree with the gentleman who spoke in such disparaging terms of the ability of this utterance of the ex-Finance Minister. I think it is very clever. I think he has made a clever and logical deduction from, and a reductio ad absurdum of the principles on which he founds his whole political creed. I think it is not a stupid statement on his part; it may not have shown a great deal of wisdom but it has shown a good deal of cleverness. The hon. gentleman, as I have said, holding the views he holds was obliged to oppose the Resolutions, because the only argument in their favour was that they were for the advancement of the interests of the country, and he placed no reliance on any such argument. If the hon. gentleman considered that this advance was to be made simply for the benefit of the Company, he was of course in duty bound to oppose the Resolutions. I think the Company are by no means unworthy of our consideration. They have conferred great benefit on the people of this country already, and I believe if this money is advanced they will confer still greater benefit on the people. But in the consideration of these Resolutions I do not regard the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but I regard the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not know whether this enterprise is likely to be profitable or unprofitable to the shareholders of the Company. If it should be profitable to them, it would for them be all the better, and I venture to say it would be none the worse for Canada. I do not know how that may be, but this I do know, that we, the people of Canada, have a glorious heritage committed to our charge, a country which, while it possesses a climate as healthful and as agreeable to many people at least as that of any other country, is also endowed with a wealth of resources in mine, and plain, and forest and river unsurpassed I venture to say in magnitude and majesty by any nation of the world. Sir, this country, I believe, is destined to become, and will soon become, one of the most potent factors in the noblest empire ever known to man. And, Sir, in the consideration of this question we must remember that into our hands her destinies are committed. A great trust is committed to us. To us, Sir, is the peril that we may, in the measures we adopt, do that which will hinder or prevent the development of her magnificent resources; and to us also belongs the glory that we may, by the measures we adopt, promote and hasten their full development; and I feel in common with every man of intelligence in this country, that the prosecution of this great national enterprise is essential to their development. I see that the work already accomplished has been followed up by such an inrush of immigration, such an opening up of the country, such an unveiling of hidden treasure, such an unfolding of unsuspected riches before the eyes of the people of Europe as even the boldest advocate of this railway could not have ventured to predict; and for my part, I feel, that I cannot, I dare not, by opposing these Resolutions do that which might tend to stem that great tide of immigration, to divert it into other channels or hinder or impede that great development which is so successfully progressing in this country.

Mr. AUGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to occupy much of the time of the House at this late stage of the debate; but I cannot give a silent vote to this question. It is a most important question; it is a question involving $30,000,000; it is a question involving even more than that sum, because I think while this is not the beginning, it is the middle, but not the end of these applications. I have listened with much attention to the speeches delivered on both sides of the House, especially to the speech of the Minister of Railways, and I endeavoured to find in what he said good reasons for giving away this money to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I call it giving away, because it is well known that money lent to these companies never comes back. Now, I have failed to gather from the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways, any good reason for supporting the Resolutions; and when I heard that hon. gentleman make the eloquent speech which he did make, when I heard him speak of the magnitude of the work, and the magnitude of the country which we were settling, saying that the Company was well able to fulfil its contract, saying that they did not come before the country, and before this Parliament, as beggars; and when, on the other hand, I heard him say that their stock was down on account of the cries of the Opposition, when I heard him raise the party cry, I felt I had to look closer into the matter, because I knew there must be a "nigger" on the fence somewhere. If the case had been a good one in itself, all the Minister would have had to show, would have been a true statement of what the Company had done, and what they were going to do, and then ask the House to vote $30,000,000. But, as I said, when I heard so many words, when I saw the hon. gentleman trying to raise the party cry, I mistrusted that he had no good reasons, and that he took that means to attract the attention of the House. Now, we on this side of the House have been accused of being unpatriotic, of running down the name of the Canadian Pacific Railway, of running down this Government and our own country. Mr. Speaker, for one, I deny the charge. I think we are as patriotic as any gentleman on the other side of the House. I say that we never have decried this country; and if the country has been decried, if this Company has met with opposition on the money markets of the world, we have not done it. I must say, however, that I do not believe that this Company has received any more opposition on the money market than any other Company of the same grabbing disposition. Who commenced this war with the Americans, and with the rest of the world? Was it not this Government who by their National Policy began to raise the cry against the Americans? Did they not try to run down the Americans, their laws, their lands, their country, their morals? Everything far and near that was American in its character, was run down by the party who sit on the other side of the House, and they praised this country. But what did the Company do? Did they not try to run in opposition to all other railways—to the Grand Trunk, and the American railways, and because they have been worsted in the fight, they come here whining and crying and saying you must give us some more money. I think if the Company had used the money we gave them for the purpose for which it was given, they would not now be obliged to come before this House for more money. I will speak of only one railway, one in which I am interested, namely, the South-Eastern. That railway, from what I could understand from the Minister of Railways, was a road which ran pretty nearly everywhere—it was like the gun of a certain hunter who bent it because he wanted the ball to go all round, and hit everything. What did the Canadian Pacific Railway Company do? They bought the South-Eastern. Did they get it for the purpose of running that great line from the Pacific to the Atlantic? No, Sir. But more than that, they advanced money to a certain party, and then by not keeping their word, they have forced the president into bankruptcy, and many hundreds of men in my own town and county suffered by the loss of their wages; men who had been furnishing ties and wood to this Company lost their money by means of this Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, how should I be able to go back to my county and face my constituents, if I voted to give more money to this Company? I could not do it. The hon. Minister of Railways in his speech to-night said that by the South-Eastern Railway he could go down to the Lower Provinces. Of course he can do it by going around, but if he went by the South-Eastern Railway he could not do it. The South-Eastern Railway runs from Montreal to Newport, and of course if he were to go by way of Boston he could do it. They have also purchased a branch line from Sorel to Sutton Junction, which is of no earthly use for them to get to the sea. Besides they have taken over from the South-Eastern the lease of about 30 miles of the Montreal and Portland Railway, which is the only portion of the South-Eastern they can use to reach the Lower Provinces, passing by Sherbrooke. So the excuse given by the Minister of Railways is not a good one. We heard the Minister of Railways say that the Company were more than able to finish their contract, and almost at the same moment he said that their stock was run down; and we were given to understand by that that they could not go on. Other hon. members in their speeches have said that if we did not grant the money, the work is going to be stopped, and that this would do a great deal of damage to the country. This shows that the Company are coming here as beggars. One hon. member says they are not coming on their knees. No, they are straighter than that; they are powerful, and I rather think they are forcing the Government. I am afraid the Government is in the hands of that Company already, and I am afraid that by granting this $30,000,000 we will add more strength to that Company, so as to make it easier for them to force the Government hereafter. Now, several speakers on the other side of the House have raised a great cry about the monopoly of the Grand Trunk. Well, who has made the Grand Trunk what it is but the Government? And if the Grand Trunk is a monopoly, the Government are going to treat this Company in a way to place it in the same position. Some hon. members have spoken about the grievances of the people of Manitoba, on account of this Company's monopoly, and on account of the way they treat the people there; but are the cries from the poor settlers of Manitoba heeded by hon. members on the other side? The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) exclaimed that he was almost indignant that these people should dare to come and ask redress for their grievances because their fathers, the first settlers of Ontario, had not a railroad, but had to carry their meal and flour on their backs, and I suppose he wants the people of the North-West to do the same. He says those people are spoon-fed. Well, this Company are not spoon-fed; I believe the Government feed them with a shovel. Now, Sir, I am not going to give you figures. I believe you have heard figures enough in this debate; but when I heard the hon. Minister of Railways state the amount that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company required to finish the road, I was reminded of a story I heard of a school inspector who went around to examine school children. He came to a little boy, and asked him what was the circumference of the earth. The boy told him in round numbers. The inspector patted him on the head, and asked him, "My boy, how did you find that out?" The boy answered, "I guessed half, and multiplied by two." I think the hon. Minister of Railways must have guessed half of the amount required by this Company, and multiplied by two. One reason given for the rapid building of the railway was to help immigration, and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), who was praised a good deal by the hon. the Minister of Railways, told us that the building of the road so fast was injurious to immigration, because it had the effect of scattering the people all over the country. He told us that a great many people who went far west, found that they could not do well, and they had come back and settled within sixty or seventy miles west of Winnipeg; showing that the policy of the hon. leader of the Opposition was the true policy for settling the country—the policy of building the road more slowly, which would induce the people to settle up the country closely as the road was built, instead of being scattered here and there. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Brecken) said the other night that a great many of the people of Prince Edward Island had gone west, and had come home again, because they could do better at home. If that had been said by a Liberal, we would have been shouted at by the Government party, but it was said by one of their own friends. I do not wish to decry the North-West. I know it must be a great country, but I am afraid we are boasting of it a little too much—saying that we are the greatest nation in the world, that we shall be everything, and everybody else nothing. That brings to my mind the speech of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster). He boasted of being an Independent member, which touched me, because I claim to be Independent. If he had boasted of that to his grand-children, it would have been better, because it is well known that he always votes confidence in the Government. Of course, on other questions, he votes according to his reason, and the fact that he often voted with us shows that we had reason on our side, and that if he was not bound to the Government, he would always vote on our side. Now, I am in favour of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I think it is better for this Company to use their own energy and means than to use ours. It would do them good. I have boys, and I have noticed that when I do the work and let them look on, it is not so good for them as when I make them do the work while I look on; and if the Government made the Company do the work, they would not have so many bad ideas about construction companies and things of that kind.

An hon. MEMBER. And palaces.

Mr. AUGER. I am willing that they should build palaces if they do it with their own money, but let them build the road before they build palaces. But while I am in favour of opening the North-West, I do not believe it is prudent to beggar the east for the sake of the North-West. If we have a great North-West, we must also remember that there are Provinces in the east that have not been built up by the North-West, but have built up themselves. We are in debt now. We are not lords. I am afraid there are more beggars than lords in the eastern Provinces, and I am afraid that the policy of this Government with reference to this railway will have the effect of making lords and beggars in the country. Now, in my county we have built two railways, and we have paid for them.

The Government has helped us only for one. We felt the need of those roads, and we built them, and are now enjoying them. I am sure if the Government use more of the people's money in connection with this Pacific Railway, their course will not meet with their approval. Hon. gentlemen opposite say the people approved of it. I deny that statement. The Government never went to the country on this question. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) said they did, but the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) said they did not. Now which of those hon. gentlemen tells us the truth? It is well known that the Government went before the country in 1878 on the National Policy and on nothing else. They came into power. They appealed to the people again in 1882, although they should have waited until 1883, but they were afraid the National Policy would not last so long so they went in 1882 before the people on the strength of the National Policy, and were again returned to office. There was nothing then said about the guarantee of 3 per cent. or these Resolutions. If there had, I am sure the country would have been opposed to it, and the best proof that the country is opposed to these Resolutions is that the press of the country almost unanimously—if you take off the mercenary press which is paid for supporting the Canadian Pacific Railway—is opposed to granting this additional aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The leading French papers of the Conservative party, all the independent English papers, and the Liberal press are opposed to it. What better evidence can we have that the people are against it? From what I have heard from speakers on the other side, I have found out the reason why this money is required. It is to enable the Government to tide over the present commercial crisis. If these $30,000,000 are brought into and expended in this country during these hard times it will help the hon. Finance Minister greatly in his financial report, and in three years from now when, of course, the times will be a little better, because fair weather always follows a storm, we will have new elections. They will say nothing then about the $30,000,000, but they will say the country is prosperous because we have the National Policy. I will not detain the House any longer, as this question has been well discussed already. A great many have found fault, and among them the last hon. gentleman who spoke, with hon. members on this side, because, as they say, they have spent time in discussing subjects foreign to the question; but I think the hon. gentleman himself and his friends have been the greatest sinners in this respect. They have travelled a great deal outside the subject under discussion; they have taken us to Rome, France, Ireland, everywhere except where these $30,000,000 are coming from—the pockets of the people. The time is coming when the people will see the enormity of this transaction, but then it may be too late. Many will be blamed, but there will be no verdict against any one in particular. The guiltiest will have left the arena of politics, but the people will always remain to foot the bill.

Mr. SPROULE. In occupying the time of the House by taking part in this important debate at this late stage of the discussion, I make no apology, for although I may not succeed in changing a vote on this question, or in changing the minds of any hon. gentleman who is directly interested in this discussion, still, outside of that, I have a duty to perform to my constituents and to the country. I have to justify the course that I have taken and that I take to-night on this question. A stranger sitting in this Chamber, unacquainted with the history of this country and listening to the debate which has been carried on for several days in reference to this question, would be led to suppose that never was it known in our history that a great corporation had failed in carrying out its undertakings. One would almost imagine, from the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that it was unknown in the history of this country that a corporation ever had to appeal to the Government or any outside power for assistance. If we look back over the history of this country, we will find that such appeals have not been at all uncommon—that they have been made repeatedly. Considering the uncertainty of many of these undertakings, the impossibility of estimating them correctly, the impossibility of correct human foresight with regard to events that transpire from day to day, or that naturally arise, in any country—considering these things, it does not appear to me at all unreasonable that men should fail in carrying out their undertakings, especially in an enterprise of this kind, the magnitude of which is probably unparalleled in the history of railway undertakings. The Grand Trunk Railway, a corporation not nearly so large as this one, with a work to perform not nearly so extensive, had to appeal to the Government for assistance to enable them to carry out their great work; and had the Government refused that assistance, as hon. members opposite wish this Government to refuse the assistance asked to-day by the Canadian Pacific Railway, what would have become of that undertaking? Where would the Grand Trunk Railway be to-day? And where would be the benefits the country has received through the construction of that line? The Northern Railway, another short line, scarcely 125 miles long, was, at one time, so crippled as to be compelled to apply to the Government for assistance to keep it afloat; and in like manner many other undertakings have had to fall back on some source or power for assistance, and had that assistance not been granted the result would have been greatly to the detriment of the country and would most probably have led to insolvency of those companies. In considering the question now before us, there are certain things connected with it which we require to know to enable us to decide correctly whether it is in the interests of the country that this additional aid should be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, whether the money already voted has been judiciously expended or not, and whether the Company, in the event of the aid not being given, can go on and finish the work inside the time in which it is essential in the interests of the country that it should be completed. This involves two other questions. One is the ability of the Company and the other the time in the interests of the country within which the road should be finished. Again, I think we were entitled to ask what remuneration will the country receive for this additional money if we vote it now, and is it any injustice to other incorporations in the country if we give this additional aid? There are various methods of reasoning that may enable us to arrive at satisfactory conclusions in our own minds. If we accept the calculations of hon. gentlemen who have opposed this scheme, they would lead us to believe almost anything or everything. One hon. gentleman has endeavoured to prove that, if the Company received no additional aid, they have already made out of the transaction $35,000,000 at least. Another hon. gentleman, who appeared to be as well versed in arithmetic as the hon. gentleman who had sat down a short time before him, endeavoured to prove that they had made $9,000,000; another made it $3,000,000, and others made it different figures; but I noticed that not two amongst the whole number who spoke against the Company, were able to arrive at the same conclusion from their calculations. The impression created upon my mind was, that their figures, like their logic, were entirely at fault. I have noticed that every hon. gentleman who has addressed this House on the opposition side during the course of this debate, has made it his first duty to tell the House and the people of the country that he was a patriot. They found it necessary to defend their patriotism in this House; their patriotism was assailed, and they were so jealous of their patriotism that they must tell the world that they were patriots. Some two or three of them went on to explain, that according to the celebrated Johnson, the definition of patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel. If one kept a record of their speeches through the country, and of the press which supports that party, he would come to but one conclusion, that one of the main objects of their lives was to avoid getting into the scoundrel's refuge. The question upon which we are entitled to satisfy our minds, is, first, has this money been judiciously expended? We are enabled to estimate about the cost of building railways in different parts of the world. We know what it cost the United States to build the Union Pacific Railway, the Northern Pacific Railway, and the Central Pacific Railway, roads which run through a country almost similar to our own, and, when we remember that these roads were built at a time when labour was much cheaper and material was much cheaper than at the present day, I say that, in making a comparison in the cost of building these roads, one must reasonably make an allowance in the event of our road costing a little more than they cost. But we find, on looking at Poor's "Manual of Railways," that the Union Pacific is estimated to have cost $113,000 a mile. An hon. member, no longer ago than last night, gave us a very interesting piece of information in reference to the mode of watering stocks in the United States, and I have no doubt that the watering of stocks accounts for the very high price which the Union Pacific cost. But the Northern Pacific Railway also cost a very large amount, and, if we look over the number of railways in the United States, taking them as a whole, we find that the average cost of railways, in the United States, since they commenced to build the first railway, is $44,255 a mile. The average cost of railways in the Dominion of Canada up to 1871, as stated by Trout in his "Manual of Railways," is $75,350 a mile. If we take the amount of money spent by this Company—and we can calculate closely what they have spent—we find that, on the line of the railway which they have built and completed, leaving out the amounts paid for branches to enable them to connect their railway with the market centres of Ontario and Quebec, so as to get an outlet to the seaboard, the balance spent on the main line of the road, was $36,028,962, and with that thirty-six millions of money they built no less than 1,400 miles of railway. If we divide that $36,028,962 by 1,400, we find that the average cost of the railway, already built, is somewhere about $25,750 a mile. If we compare this with the cost of railways in any other part of the country, either in the United States or in the Dominion of Canada, it will prove to us conclusively, that the money has not been squandered in the building of the Railway so far. Again, we have heard from some hon. gentlemen in this House, and many of them have endeavoured to prove, that the amount of money which the Company has got from the Government was quite sufficient to build the road without additional aid at all. What are the facts of the case? Up to the present time, they have received $21,318,222 in cash from the Government, and with that, they have constructed of their main line 1,400 miles, that is only giving them a Government subsidy of $13,400 a mile, not quite $1,000 more than was given to the Canada Central Railway, to assist them to build that part of the line through a country which was well settled, and where it was easy to build a railway. If we look to either of these calculations, we must admit that the company has judiciously expended its money, and that the Government subsidy had to be largely added to from some source or it would have been impossible to build the road. I think that is all I need say with reference to the judicious expenditure of this money, because I apprehend that the arguments that have been brought forward in justification of the purchase by this Company of the lines of railway necessary to enable them to connect their system with the seaports of the country, have been sufficient to satisfy any reasonable-minded man that the money so spent, was judiciously spent, that it was necessary that they should have these connections with the sea-board and with the great commercial centres, especially of the western part of the Province of Ontario. The next question is, is the security offered sufficient? There are many hon. gentlemen in this House who have taken part in the discussion, who appear to assume at the outset that this money is given away. They seem to forget that it is only a loan for a very short time, seven years, and that, when two years of that time are up, and the last portion of this loan will not be advanced until then, over one-fourth of the time within which it is to be paid back, will have elapsed. It must be borne in mind that the country has not to pay the interest without any return, for the Company pays it. If we calculate again, and look at the securities offered for this work, I think there is no reasonable man but must admit that the security is all that can be desired. The line when built from Pembroke to Port Moody, and against which there will be no lien or debt, is 2,664 miles. If we divide the $30,000,000, the additional aid that is to be given to the road to-day, by the number of miles, we find it only amounts to something like $3,445 per mile. Now, if the Grand Trunk Railway had been in that position at the time the Government came to its aid, with a new road built and equipped, and a traffic before them that would ensure a permanent return for the running of that Railway, over and above the cost of operating the road, we would not have been, as we are to-day, without any return for the aid given to that railway. I would like to ask any man if he does not consider that road, which will cost $40,000 a mile as a whole, will be a good security for $8,000 per mile, which it is proposed to loan it? An hon. gentleman who spoke before six o'clock, said that if he could satisfy himself that there was good security for this money, he believed he would be justified in supporting the Resolutions; and he cited the Grand Trunk as an instance, to prove that it was not good. But the Grand Trunk had no land grant whatever, and if it was enabled to make something out of the operations of the road, it was heavily bonded at the time, and with no other resources to fall back upon, its profits would not be more than sufficient to pay the cost of operating and interest, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is evidently in a much better position. If the Canadian Pacific Railway never made a dollar out of the road until it was built, if they only made enough to keep the road running, they could still make sufficient money out of the land, and a great deal more, inside the time the money is to be paid back to this country than would pay this claim. I apprehend there is not the slightest danger in the world; there is no reasonable probability that every dollar of this money will not be paid back, inside the time mentioned. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Auger) said there was no probability of this money being paid back; it was always the case with Governments. Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard the same argument made when the proposal was first made to this House to enter into the first contract with the Company. It was said we were saddling on this country a heavy burden, for which we would receive no return. The Minister of Railways replied that, according to the arrangement, he believed we could secure enough from the sale of the lands to pay every dollar back to the country. Almost every member who got up and opposed that Bill, said it was unreasonable to expect that it could be done, that this money would never be paid back, that the money from the sale of these lands would be all eaten up in the cost of administering the lands. But what does the experience of the last three years prove? It has proved the fallacy of the logic of those gentlemen. As from year to year this money is paid back to the Treasury, we have the satisfaction of knowing that the contract is being fulfilled, and also that in a short time every dollar of the expenditure that has been incurred in building this magnificent railway will be recouped to the people of this country, and there will not be a dollar of taxation imposed upon the country for that purpose. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask, what is the remuneration the country will receive in return for this outlay, provided we give it. But, I might here make a remark on the question as to what were the necessities of the country. Was it necessary in the interests of the country that this road should be constructed rapidly or slowly? I think if we remember the situation of the people in Manitoba, if we look at the hundreds and thousands of people in the North-West to-day, upon whom the hon. gentleman has been pleased to say there is the heel of a monopoly that is grinding them down, if we look at their condition, we must agree that it is of the utmost importance this railway should be opened at the earliest possible date. What is that monopoly under which the people of the North-West are groaning? Most of the hon. gentlemen who addressed this House say it is the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir, the injurious monopoly that that people have to contend with to-day comes, not from the Canadian Pacific Railway, but from the American lines of railway over which we have to send our goods, and over which we have to go ourselves to get there, during seven months of the year. If you travel over the American lines you reach the Canadian Pacific Railway at Emerson and how much do you pay? On the St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba road, you have to pay 4 cents a mile; but when you reach the Canadian Pacific Railway, 3 cents a mile; and yet we have no control at all over the actions of those men who control that road. We cannot compel them to reduce their freight rates, we cannot in any way interfere with them. But we find that the Canadian Pacific Railway are lowering their freight rates, and giving every consideration for those parties who are settling in the North-West to-day. Now, I might give a single instance of how the Canadian Pacific Railway Company get blamed for what they cannot help. Two years ago this winter a car was sent from my part of the country destined for Winnipeg. The agent at that station said the car would be taken at a certain figure for freight rates. When that car was sent on to Winnipeg it was found by the party to whom it was consigned that there was $75 more against it than he had been told. The parties who sent that car blamed it on the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I look upon as, in many instances, a long suffering company; in this case it did not come to its own defence, but the only thing they said was that it was something over which they had no control. The fact is when this car reached the St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba road, they refused to take it without imposing this additional amount, and it had to be paid, but because the Canadian Pacific Railway had to collect it, they received all the blame. Now, Mr. Speaker, from my view of the subject, I apprehend that this is the injurious monopoly, that is hurting the people of Manitoba and the North-West to-day. It is an injurious monopoly that is equally affecting the trade of the people of the older Provinces, especially of Ontario and Quebec, because, although we are endeavouring to supply the people of that country with the goods and produce which they do not produce themselves, we are handicapped in that commercial enterprise; because every car of stuff that goes there costs more than it would if this line was built north of Lake Superior. The people of Manitoba, in sending their grain east, stand in the same position. If grain is raised to-day in large quantities in Manitoba, it has to pay such heavy freight rates as to leave little or no margin of profits for the farmers. Again, they are virtually shut up for seven months in the year, during the winter season, grain cannot be taken over these American lines without at exorbitant prices; and the people of Ontario and Quebec who were sending stuff up there, have to go to the trouble, annoyance and expense of sending their goods in bond, and then paying a very high figure in freight rates after that, before they can send stuff to that country. As a consequence, many people who desire to send freight up there do not attempt it at all in the winter season. I next ask, are we doing any injustice to other railway companies, or any other corporation, by giving this additional aid? The greatest opposition we find from any company appears to emanate from the Grand Trunk Railway. We have had pamphlets distributed among the members of this House, containing a number of letters that have passed between the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway and the leader of the Government, with reference to the question. After failing to accomplish all they desire, they have adopted what they are pleased to call the constitutional means of appealing to the people to defend them in their position. And what is that position? Now, we might allow some of the arguments to pass that have been advanced by certain parties against the Grand Trunk Railway; because when we remember that they are directly interested, as railway operators themselves, an argument coming from that source does not appeal to us with the same force that it would from disinterested parties. But there are many disinterested parties, who have had some reason to know the grievous monopoly of the Grand Trunk in various parts of this country. That company has petitioned the Government to give into their hands the control of the whole system of railways in Ontario and Quebec. What would be the position of Ontario to-day provided the Government saw fit to acquiesce in that proposal? What would be the facilities of its trade centres in shipping produce and manufactured goods to the markets of the world if they were entirely under the control of that monopoly? My knowledge of the Grand Trunk is about this: For the last quarter of a century they have been fighting strenuously every enterprise launched to give us increased railway facilities. One after another, the lines projected have been burked or so crippled in the money market as to render their promoters unable to carry out the undertaking and give the advantages of competition so much desired. Why did we find Ontario municipalities granting such large bonuses to railways? It was to counteract this oppressive monopoly. Many of them have railways to their doors, but they do not serve the purpose desired. Parallel lines run through the same sections of country controlled by the same company. We find in some parts of the country, take the county of Grey for example, that the people were so anxious to secure competition that they have taxed themselves in large amounts, one township having agreed to give a bonus of $80,000, another $65,000, another $60,000 and a town $32,000. This is in the constituency which the hon. member for South Grey represents. I have said the people feel the importance of having competition so strongly that they are willing to impose heavy taxes on themselves to secure that object. What, I ask, would be the result to-day if the Government saw fit to grant what the Grand Trunk asks? It would destroy the competition which is thought to be a boon to the people. I have a word to say in regard to the arguments of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) when addressing the House on this question. He said: That the Minister of Railways by those resolutions would impose taxes on the people far greater than the municipalities had imposed on themselves; that the House being composed of 211 members, the $30,000,000 would give $150,000 to each constituency. The hon. gentleman's figures, like his logic, are entirely at fault, because a calculation shows that instead of the amount being $150,000 it is only $142,000. The hon. gentleman went on to say that this tax is a great deal heavier than the taxes imposed by the people on themselves by municipal bonuses, and he asked the First Minister to submit a by-law in each Riding for $150,000, declaring that in his Riding at all events, it would not be carried. I have taken the trouble to make the calculation. Whereas the average of the bonuses distributed over the six municipalities comprising his Riding would give an average of about $51,000, the amount of the proposed loan, if distributed in like manner, would give $21,000 for each municipality. That suggests to my mind that some hon. gentlemen who have dealt with this question have not apparently desired to deal with it fairly, but have thrown figures together in a hap-hazard way with a view to create the impression that great injury was about to be inflicted on the people. But where is the parallel of comparison between these cases? The one is a direct tax, the principal and interest of which must be repaid in twenty years; the other is a loan arranged by the Government, involving no tax, because the Company will pay back both principal and interest. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) told the House he had had some experience in railway building; and therefore I presume he thought his argument would have correspondingly more force with the House. I might say of his experience, as an hon. gentleman said a few Sessions ago in regard to that of another hon. member, who said that he had some experience in railway operating. He has been connected with a line of railway, which was so extensive that he could stand on an elevated stump and survey it from one end to the other. Although he was the financial centre of that great scheme, did the hon. gentleman carry it through without making a second appeal? He did not get it graded and the track laid, even though he obtained bonuses from the municipalities, before he had to come back to the people for more money for that very extensive and enterprising scheme. Yet the hon. gentleman condemns the Minister of Railways because he is willing to assist a Company which has undertaken a scheme that stands to the hon. gentleman's undertaking as one thousand to one. I was very much amused at the line of argument he adopted. He said the farming community would not be benefitted by that railway but would be injured. He stated that our experience would be the same as that of the United States, where, after the railways were opened in Kansas, the price of land in Illinois was lower than before those roads were built. From my knowledge of the arguments used by that hon. gentleman when he went before the farmers of North Wellington to get a bonus for the scheme in which he is interested, he endeavoured to prove that the railway would enhance the value of the lands, in some cases double, and in some cases one-third more; but in every case ten times more than the amount of money they were going to give to the work. The argument used to-day is a very different one, that it will not enhance, but rather depreciate the value of lands. I wonder that an hon. gentleman with his experience, knowledge and astuteness, should pretend to tell the people of this country, who know what has been the result of railway building, that the construction of railways will not increase the value of land. If he had been as honest in discussing this question before the House and the country as he was when he was endeavoring to convince the farmers in North Wellington that it was their interest to build a railway to Durham, he would not have adopted the line of argument which he followed. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) said that if he were convinced that the railway would be in the interest of the North-West and would tend to the settlement of the country, he would be disposed to support it. He says:

“What will be the amount of settlement in that country if there is a delay of five years? The whole territory from Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains will be thickly settled by that time. If it is built rapidly, the country will be but sparsely settled.”

Who ever heard of the rapid building of a railway having an injurious effect upon the settlement of a country? Is not the knowledge that men can get all the modern conveniences for transportation into and out of a country one of the strongest inducements to settlement in it? He goes on to say:

“This is the experience of every new country. If there was delay, settlement would rush out from Winnipeg, Brandon, Calgary and other places, and the country would become thickly and well settled. Adopting the other course, and handing over $30,000,000 to the Company, settlement and prosperity will be alike retarded.”

I have yet to learn that the expenditure of a large amount of money in the building of a railway, in any country, will have the effect of retarding the settlement and prosperity of a country. That is contrary to common sense, and it is contrary to the experience of every railway project and of the experience of every hon. gentleman present. He says that the system adopted by the late Government was the correct one, and that if the same principle had been carried out the settlement of the country would have been more rapid. Let us look into the facts. Statistics show, that from 1871 to 1880—a period of nine years—there were only 64,755 people taken into that country. This was during the period in which, according to the hon. member, the right policy was being pursued, and which he declared would result in the rapid settlement of the country. But let us take the period of three years from 1880 to 1883, and we find that no less than 149,000 people have gone into the country, as against 64,000 in the preceding nine years. Could any stronger evidence be given of the fact that rapid settlement of the country would result from the rapid building of the railway. But there is another question involved, and that is the amount of wealth brought back to the country. If we take the trade and navigation returns, we find that the amount of settlers' effects taken into that country from 1880 to 1883, was no less a sum than $15,000,000; that being the case, if the road is built to completion at the same rate as it is going on now, we may expect to find when it is finished, that we will be able to recoup ourselves to a large extent by the quantity of settlers' effects which have been taken in by the large number of immigrants going to that country. The next question we may reasonably ask, is what remuneration are we likely to have for the expenditure of the money? At present, settlers are handicapped by the monopoly of the railway system in the United States over which they and their effects have to pass, during seven months of the year; by the competition of this line that will be done away with forever, and that accomplished in two years, but refuse this, and it must continue for seven years. This is a matter of importance to the people in the western part of Ontario; and I am rather surprised to find that a most every hon. member from that part of the country, sitting on the opposite benches has condemned the rapid building of the railway. To-day we have manufacturers producing every kind of stuff that is wanted in the North-West, but we have to pay a great deal more than we would have to pay if that railway was built, in taking these manufactures to the markets of the country. We have other checks put in operation which very materially tend to handicap those who are competing for that trade. Besides, we find that a great amount of the produce which is being used by the men who are building that road is supplied from the western part of this Province. Will hon. gentlemen who oppose the rapid building of the road deny that it is in the interests of our part of the country that this large outlay for supplies to these men should be distributed among us during the next two years? Or will they deny that it is one of the greatest sources of prosperity that we have? Where is the food coming from which supplies those 9,000 men who are building the road north of Lake Superior? It all comes from the western part of Ontario. I am surprised at the hon. member for South Grey opposing this scheme, because a very large portion of these supplies are from the county which he and I have the honour to represent. I find, for instance, that during the last year there was shipped from Owen Sound, no less than 22,217 tons of freight, and that from the same port, 3,160 head of cattle were shipped, bought largely in the part of the county of Grey represented by my hon. friend. While we have an eastern market to fall back upon, it is a great advantage to be in the position of having a market both east and west, so that we can select the one at which the best prices can be obtained. During last season's operations, no less than 760 vessels came into the port of Owen Sound, principally for supplies for the men working on this railway north of Lake Superior and in the North-West, and the tonnage of these vessels amounted to 307,152 tons. Notwithstanding these facts, hon. members will rise in their places and state that it is in the interests of the people of that country that they should oppose giving them additional aid and prevent the construction of that road at the rapid rate at which it has gone on during the last two years. The figures I have given represent only one port, but there are a number of others, among them Sarnia, Windsor, Kincardine, Southampton, Port Elgin, Wiarton, Meaford, Thornbury, Collingwood and Midland, every one of which employs a line of steamers to carry stuff from our Province to supply the army of men who are building that road, and the trade of the north-western county resulting from this road being built, and money is paid for everything that the former has to sell for these supplies. And yet we are told that it is of no benefit to these people that that large number of men are employed there, and that this money should come back to the farmers of my section at least. I have one word to say with reference to the reports that the Grand Trunk Company will soon control the whole railway system of Western Canada. If there is one evil to be guarded against in this country, more than another, it is the granting of what is asked by the Grand Trunk Railway. That Company have insidiously taken under their control one railway after another, until there are only three roads in Western Canada to-day that are not under their control, and they are still attempting to buy up more lines and control more ports. They now control Windsor, Port Colborne, Sarnia, Southampton, Port Elgin, Wiarton, and Midland, and there are only three or four ports left which they do not control, namely, Collingwood, Owen Sound, Meaford, and Penetanguishene, yet they are anxious to get these. Yet hon. gentlemen would ask this House to hand over the control of the entire traffic of Western Canada to that corporation, who have been strenuously opposing almost every railway enterprise that has been introduced into this country for the last quarter of a century. What did we find when the Credit Valley Railway was being built? The people were willing to impose on themselves municipal taxes to the extent of $1,000,000 for the purpose of getting competition; and yet, when Mr. Laidlaw was carrying out that project, he was opposed at every step by the Grand Trunk Company—both when he went to the municipalities to get their aid, and when he went to the financial markets of the world to raise the money necessary to complete that work; and had it not been for the fact that Mr. Stephen, a gentleman connected with the corporation which is building the Canadian Pacific Railroad to-day, came to the assistance of the Credit Valley, I believe the Grand Trunk would have been successful in killing out that enterprise. I can only say that I am glad that there are three railways in Ontario to-day that are not under the heel of that corporation; those are, the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, leading to Owen Sound, the Northern, leading to Collingwood, and the Credit Valley, leading to the West.

Mr. SPOULE.

Now, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are in the happy position of knowing that they have an outlet to the east and an outlet to the west, and that consequently they will be a successful competitor with the Grand Trunk Railway so long as they hold the roads which they at present control, and which I have reason to believe and hope they will long control. I think it will not be out of the recollection of hon. members of this House that a few years ago there was a Bill before the Railway Committee of this House to revive a charter which had been granted some years before, for building the Toronto and Ottawa Railway; and the history given to that Committee was to the effect that for nine years the company holding that charter had been making every effort to raise money to build that road, but that every time they tried to do it they were opposed by the Grand Trunk, which had tried to balk them or buy them out, and that until then they had never been successful in doing anything afterwards it was brought up. The Ontario and Quebec railway was also chartered for the purpose of giving competition, and no sooner was that scheme projected than we found the same corporation trying to buy it up; and to-day they are very magnanimously, I am told, offering to build the remainder of the Canadian Pacific Railway, provided the Canadian Pacific Railway Company hand over to them the Ontario and Quebec system of railways. Had they been able to carry out their avaricious scheme, we should not be to-day in the enjoyment of the blessing of competition in Ontario, that we possess, small as it is. Sir, this country, I believe, can never estimate the damage that has been done to it by the opposition of that great railway corporation to every railway scheme launched in this country during the last twenty-five years. I can only say that I sincerely hope and trust we shall live a long time before we shall see that corporation controlling any more of the lines in the western part of Canada than they are controlling to-day, for I believe it would be a sorrowful thing for the people of this country if they did. It is important that this road should be rapidly built, especially to the western part of Canada. What does it mean? About four-sevenths of the line yet to be built is in the Province of Ontario, and, as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) said last night, the money to be spent for the building of this part of the line will not go to Manitoba or the North-West, but to Ontario. It means that the supply of the men will come from the east, and the money will go back there. It means that we are opening up for settlement a part of the Province of Ontario of the extent of between 500 and 600 miles, which is not yet eligible for settlement. In addition, the line from Gravenhurst to Callander, a distance of 120 miles, will be opened up in two years, if this road is constructed in that time, for the purpose of securing for Ontario its share of the trade of the North-West, this means an expenditure of $3,000,000 more in Ontario during the next two years. We must remember, that this Company, to complete their line, must spend about $13,000,000, and four-sevenths of that money will be spent in the Province of Ontario in addition to $3,000,000, which is the estimated cost of the Gravenhurst-Callander Branch. In attempting to account for the depression that existed from 1873 to 1878, the hon. member for North Norfolk said it was largely due to the fact that the Union Pacific and the Northern Pacific had been checked in their operations. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if, because these roads, through financial straits, were compelled for a short time to desist in their work of construction, so great a depression was caused in a country composed of over 45,000,000 people, how much greater would the paralysing effect be here to-day if a stoppage of the operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway were caused. I have always thought, and I now think, that had the foresight of the late Government been such as to induce them to carry out the same principle of completing the railway as that which is being carried out to-day, and thus caused to be made from 1873 to 1878, the expenditure of the money that is now going on, we would never have experienced the hard times we then passed through. We would not have had tens of thousands of men in the country unable to find employment which would furnish them with the means of support to themselves and their families. This country would receive the greatest paralytic stroke it ever received or can receive, if the Government should decide not to assist this corporation in carrying out the great undertaking they are now endeavouring to carry out, and which I believe they will succeed in successfully carrying out. I have no doubt at all that these Resolutions will be carried, and that, in the experience of a few years, we will find out the fallacy of the arguments that have been used to prove that it is against the interest of the people to grant the loan asked for. We will find that every dollar will be paid back, that not a burden of one dollar will be imposed on the people by giving this additional aid, which is only a loan for a short time. The security is ample and the Company have given every reason to lead us to believe they are sincere and that they will carry on their operations at the same rapid rate as heretofore. I feel that I will be fully justified in going before my constituents and defending my position and the action I intend to take in supporting these Resolutions, and if after a few years, I should go back to my constituents again and ask them to re-endorse the opinions I have expressed here to-day, I have no doubt they will return me to the position I now occupy. I think I can safely rely on their support,—as I believe can also every hon. member on this side on the support of their constituents—in voting for these Resolutions, and that my conduct to-day will receive the same approval that it did in the past when I voted for the first Resolutions giving this work to this important and able Company.

Mr. PLATT. The extreme length and I may say the extreme breadth, to which this debate has already extended affords ample reason why I should speak briefly, but I think it affords no reason at all why I should remain silent. There can be no doubt that the discussion, long as it has continued and broad as it has become, has been of immense value, not only to the members of this House, but to their constituents throughout the country. We know, Sir, that upon occasions like this, when vast amounts of public money are to be taken from the public Exchequer and put into any great public work, the people of the country themselves feel a deep interest in it, and look particularly to their representatives, to see that they act cautiously and prudently in allowing the Government to handle their hard earnings. For this reason, the fact that this is a genuine money vote, the fact that a large amount of money is to be extracted from the public Treasury, the representatives of the people, above all others, are expected to take an active interest in the debate. Hon. gentlemen on both sides will, no doubt, feel pleased when I announce that I am not going to follow the usual course of debate by referring at any length to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has preceded me. Were I to do so, I would not only take up useful time, but would not perhaps succeed in making as good an impression on the House as if I took my own course. There is one expression, however, which fell from the hon. gentleman's lips that to my mind is worthy of notice. I think that the hon. gentleman's friends in this House will not thank him for having referred to the history of the moneys given to different railways in this country. I refer to his allusion to that unhappy circumstance of the money that was given to the Northern Railway and to his statement that dire consequences would have occurred if public assistance had not been given to that line. I suppose he meant that dire consequences would have occurred to the Conservative party. We know that if public money had not been given to that road, the magnificent testimonial to the chieftain of his party would not have been so magnificent by $4,000, and that the subscription to the chief organ of hon. gentlemen opposite would not have been so munificent by $5,000 or $6,000. I suppose, on the same principle, the hon. gentleman believes that the public chest should be relieved of $30,000,000 in order that the Canadian Pacific Railway may be benefited, and that thereby the Conservative party in this country may suffer no very great disadvantage. I have referred to the necessity of a lengthened debate on this question. The people have the right to expect that when they have been deprived of information on this subject, which they had a right to reasonably expect from the Government at the earliest possible moment, their representatives here to continue the debate until the country, if possible, can become awakened to its importance and have an opportunity of expressing their opinion. The country has been accustomed to occasions like this, when large sums of money are taken, in the middle Session of Parliament, and when election comes round we hear very little about it. Party strife and party differences will arise, and the chief questions which agitate the public mind during the Session of Parliament may not be brought into discussion at all during the elections. It seems to me, that the spirit of our constitution, and the genius of our system of Government demand first, the earliest possible information upon all questions of this kind. Have the people been afforded that early information? The Speech from the Throne delivered at the opening of this Parliament, indicated to us that the intention of the Government was known, at that time, to themselves. If so, what reason was there why that information should not have been vouchsafed to the people then? Not only Parliament, but the people of this country, have the right to demand full information. Full and complete information has not even yet been given. What mean all these various motions and amendments which have been made, especially by the leader of the Opposition, since this debate commenced? What mean these various motions for papers and returns on various subjects cognate to the subject which is under discussion but this, that we have not at the present time full information on this subject? What means the amendment upon which we are shortly to be called upon to vote? It means that, even on this night, when we are expected to decide this great and important question, we have not all the information the country has a right to demand at the hands of the Government. The position of that political party in this House, to which I have the honour to belong, has been assailed in the manner in which we met this question on the very onset, and to-day the Minister of Railways, with all the vehemence he is capable of commanding in this House, says he believes that by this time every hon. member in this House must be convinced of the righteousness, and the justice, and the necessity of the Resolutions which he asks us to vote upon, thereby intimating that any hon. gentleman who votes against these Resolutions or opposes them in any way, must be either incapable of comprehending the fullness of the question, or is going to vote and speak against the dictates of his own conscience. Now, I am not prepared to silently occupy either of those positions. I believe that the position that has been taken by the leader of the Opposition, and the position which I, as an individual member of that Opposition, have taken upon this question, is one that will be justifiable before my constituents, at least. We have been accused of flying at the throat of this proposition the very moment it was laid upon the table of Parliament. I do not think the Debates will justify any such conclusion. The ground that was taken, the very first ground that was taken by the leader of the Opposition, was that there were reasons to doubt the propriety of passing these Resolutions at that time; that we must fully consider whether it was in the interest of the country to grant this proposal. We have demanded time to consider them, and we have demanded information, and that is all that has been done; and, as fast as that information has been vouchsafed to us, as fast as that information has been given to this House by the hon. gentleman, the discussion has proceeded, and, as I stated before, we have not yet sufficient grounds upon which to grant the Resolutions which the hon. gentleman proposes to the House. We think, perhaps, that, in the absence of full and complete information, the fact that there is a necessity for passing them is not apparent, and it is our duty in the interest of our constituents to oppose these Resolutions. That is a sensible and a reasonable ground for us to take. There is one part of our position which, it is true, may appear a little unpleasant to us. We are placed necessarily in the position of being apparently opposed to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its interests, but that opposition is only apparent. We are forced to that position by opposing these Resolutions, and although we may be well-wishers of that Company, and although we may not wish to detract from their reputation or standing in the country, or to retard the progress they are making in their great work, we have still one duty to perform, regardless of the Company's interests, our duty to the people of this country; and if, in protecting the interests of the people, the interests of the Syndicate suffer, so much the worse for the Syndicate. We have no quarrel with the gentlemen who constitute that Company. We respect them for their ability. One of them, at least, has a history; "That fellow Smith" is well known in this country, and there are particular reasons why he still has a warm place in the hearts of gentlemen on this side of the House. We cannot blame them at all for watching with such intense interest this debate, almost from the beginning. This, to them, is an important Session. To use the cant phrase, it is to them a Session when the goose is expected to lay the golden egg, no small nugget, to be sure, but one to the amount of $30,000,000; and, when the cackling of the flock announces that the feat is accomplished, these gentlemen may be expected to descend from the galleries and take up the prize. I dare say, if many gentlemen on the floor of this House were equally interested, they would attend the debates more attentively than they have done. The position, as I understand it, which the opponents of these resolutions have taken up on the main question is, that there is no absolute necessity for this extreme measure being passed at this time. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of the Opposition, and those who have generally supported him in Parliament, have always taken the ground that there was no necessity for mad haste in building the two ends of this railway. We contend at the present time that all we wished to have accomplished in that respect we have accomplished already. We have in Parliament, and out of Parliament, stated that the advantage of this country demanded the speedy building of a railway that would supply a means of ingress to the North-West country, and would be extended across the prairie regions of that country as fast, or even a little faster, than the settlement demanded. We have all that, and why should we be called upon to conclude that there is an absolute necessity for spending $30,000,000 more at this particular juncture of our history, simply to speed the building of the two ends of the road? I am satisfied that our opinion is very largely endorsed by the people of this country, and even by this Parliament. The present Opposition are not alone in the expression of that opinion. I suppose I may be allowed to call supporters of that opinion even from the Ministerial benches themselves. I remember having read a pamphlet some years ago, issued by an hon. gentleman who now holds a position which may justify his being considered the gentleman chiefly interested in the adoption of these Resolutions, for the Minister of the Interior is supposed to know as much about the requirements of the North-West as any hon. gentleman in the Cabinet or in the House. That hon. gentleman issued a pamphlet, and in that pamphlet we have the cool, deliberate opinion of a gentleman expressed, not in the heat of debate on the floor of this House, but the cool, deliberate opinion expressed in a pamphlet which was spread broadcast over the country, purporting to be addressed to the people of Simcoe, Grey, and Bruce. That hon. gentleman says:

"My opinion always has been that we should have been content for a time to use the United States lines for our all-rail route to Manitoba and begin our Pacific Railway at Pembina, thence to Winnipeg, and on through Manitoba and the North-West, combining with its construction a comprehensive and attractive scheme of immigration, under which immigrants would be assured of employment first and lands afterwards. The lands retained by the Government, owing to the settlement of adjoining lands, would have been enhanced in value, and their sale would have produced funds to aid in extending the railway, as required, without overburdening the Dominion Exchequer. In this way, the Canadian Pacific Railway east of the Rocky Mountains could have been built as fast as required for very little money, and our prairie country would have become thickly peopled. * * * * Had this policy been adopted, the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, would have been more prosperous than it is to-day. We should have been free from the heavy engagements that weigh upon us, and free also from the financial peril that stares us in the face—imminent, if not inevitable. Our expenditure to this time upon the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been small, and would increase only as might be convenient, for it would be subject to our control."

Here is an opinion expressed by a gentleman, in cool deliberation, who now occupies a seat on the Treasury benches, and I regret that he has not a right to sit in this House, because I would like to hear an explanation from him, or from some gentleman who represents him here, as to whether his views at the present time coincide with the extravagant views of his colleagues. Now, Sir, I think I have shown you that the Opposition in this House and country have a right to urge that it is not an absolute necessity that this money should be voted at the present time. But, even granted it were necessary, even granted that the Minister of Railways is correct in the opinion he expresses as to the requirements of this Company—granted it were advisable to construct the two ends of that road as speedily as possible—even then there has been no proof given of the absolute necessity of passing these Resolutions. We are told that the security offered for this loan is abundant. Well, I am sure there are not many on this side of the House who will waste time in discussing that question; it is not a matter of particular moment to us just now. I am sure, however, that the Minister of Railways and many of his supporters were disappointed that a grand rush was not made at the security. Most of the speeches on the other side of the House have been filled with very large, extensive, and exaggerated figures in order to prove the abundance of that security. Well, Sir, let us take for granted that that security is good. We were told, I think, by the hon. member for Kings, N. B. (Mr. Foster), that the security was ample, that it was $5 security for every $1 they wished to loan. Well, if this security is good for the Parliament and people of Canada, I think it ought to be good for the money lenders of the world. If that security is useless in the money markets of the world, have we not reason to doubt that it is of very much value to us? The money lenders of the world are just as shrewd, probably, as the Government of this country, and what they have refused to accept as good security, we may at least look upon with a certain degree of suspicion. But, Sir, we have not been told that that security has been offered to the money lenders of the world, and consequently we cannot know whether the money could have been raised upon this security if it had been placed upon the money markets of the world. If it has not been placed upon the money markets of the world, why has it not been so placed? Why are this Parliament and Government called upon to constitute themselves money brokers, instead of the Company applying to the usual sources for loans? Why, Sir, I believe it is almost a maxim, that Governments, whether of this country or of any other, have no right whatever to engage in speculation simply for the sake of speculation; and if these gentlemen have not shown that they have made every possible effort to secure a loan in more legitimate quarters, they have no right to come here, and tell us that it is an absolute necessity that this country should advance this loan. Now, Sir, I am going to call evidence that I am not alone in this opinion, and that hon. gentlemen opposite held the same opinion. I repeat, this Government should not at this juncture be called upon to make that loan, until the Company have exhausted all their resources, and all their efforts, to get a loan from the money markets of the world. Do we wish to benefit the Company? Is it from any love we have for the Company, that we are going to step in between them and the money lenders, and offer them greater advantages? I can see an advantage in borrowing money at 4 and lending it at 3; but here it is proposed that we borrow money at 4 and give it to them at 5 per cent. If we are not giving them an advantage by making this loan to them, then what is the use of the country being called upon to make that particular risk? I state again that this Government has no right to speculate with the people's money. In evidence, I will call the hon. Minister's pamphlet, and I am very glad he wrote it, because of the opinion expressed there by himself. The Minister of the Interior says: "I think it will be admitted that Governments have no business to speculate with Government funds," that is, "they have no right to spend the people's money until it is absolutely necessary to do so." Has it been shown that it is absolutely necessary that the Government of this country should make this loan of $30,000,000 at the present time? I submit that no proof has been offered to that effect, and consequently, I submit that it is unwise and inexpedient for us to do so. It may be contended, of course, by the Government, and adopted as a policy, that wherever they find a sinking institution, wherever they find a Corporation in need of money, it is their duty to rush to the assistance of that company, no matter at what risk. Well, Sir, some Governments and some men may, at times, be particularly bold, financially, when they are handling money that is not their own, but I do not believe the people are prepared to endorse the policy which says that the Government are justified in rushing to the rescue of either a sinking railway company or a sinking Exchange Bank. But, Sir, we have been told that in the interests of immigration, this was a matter of great importance, indeed. Why, Sir, immigrants used to go into that country before we had a Canadian Pacific Railway at all. Most of the people that are now in the North West got there by some other means than by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and thousands of emigrants can now be accommodated by the route already provided. Now, Sir, it seems to me to be a very weak argument to say that, in order to take immigrants to that country over Canadian soil exclusively, it is necessary for us to entail a great risk upon the country by making this loan. It has been shown by members upon the floor of this House that for the season of the year when immigrants arrive here we have already a continuous route to the great prairies of the North-West. Take the advertisements of the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves; take the folder of that company that has been laid upon our desks, in this House, and there you find described in glowing terms the beautiful passage, and the quick, expeditious and cheap trip, that can now be made from the seaboard, even to the prairies of the North-West. There is only one disadvantage mentioned, and it is this: The very title page of the folder which has been so extensively circulated throughout this country and Europe is enough to frighten immigrants from our shores. We read on the first page, these remarkable words: "The Canadian Pacific Railway, the only route to the great North-West." I say, Sir, that this must have a chilling effect on the intending immigrant who reads it: "The only route to the great North-West!" If there is only one route into the great North-West, there can be only one route out of it. I think this will give a bad impression in England to intending emigrants and they will say: "We will wait until there is one or two other ways of getting into the great North-West." It is said to be very important that these emigrants should be got there without being exposed to the seductive charms of the United States. In fact, Sir, the policy seems to be laid down that it is the duty of this country to get these emigrants there under false pretences; that the advantages which we hold out to induce them to go there are not as great as the advantages offered by our American friends; therefore, it is necessary that immigrants, destined for the North-West, go through no portion of American territory. Why, Sir, I might suggest as the simplest method of carrying out this policy to make some arrangements whereby these poor people should be blindfolded when they are passing through American territory, so that they may not know what kind of a country they have passed through until they have got to Manitoba. We boast that the North-West is a great and magnificent country, but if we have such a country and are able to hold out such inducements to intending immigrants, why should we fear their passage for a short distance through United States territory? I think that is a very weak argument indeed to advance for making this loan. Well, Sir, the hon. Minister of Railways, in introducing these Resolutions, left us in great doubt as to whence this proposition came—whether he had discovered it in the interests of the Company, or whether the Company had discovered it and proposed it in the interests of the country. He described in such glowing language the great advantage it was going to be to this country, that one would almost have thought that he had made the proposition to the Company, and that they had reluctantly accepted it. But we heard as the debate progressed, a different tale. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company were in actual difficulty, and that they required this loan in order to enable them to complete the remainder of the line. I am sorry for the Company if they are in difficulty, and every member of the Opposition feels alike regret. But there are a great many people in difficulty in this country, and I do not suppose that very many of them expect the Government to come to their relief. What have been the causes of that difficulty? It has been shown on the floor of this House that the first cause was the too rapid construction, and consequently too great cost. Bad management and extravagance constituted another cause of difficulty. They looked more to immediate profit than to the future good, either of themselves or of the country. By the organization of what is termed the construction company, they took from the hands of the Railway Company proper the funds which should have gone into the completion of the road. Then we have lately their quarrel with the Grand Trunk. Who is responsible for the quarrel between the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? Who inaugurated that quarrel? I do not think the people of the country feel called upon to interfere. There is competition, we know, going on between those two great corporations; but what business has this Parliament or the country to express, by a vote of $30,000,000, their favouritism for one side or the other. Let the corporations continue the quarrel, and it may prove in the interests of the country. But to check the competition and crush one of the competitors, the country is now called on to grant a loan of $30,000,000! Is that fair play? May not the Grand Trunk justly complain that the people are not acting impartially? Give them a fair field, grant money no more to one than the other, stand aside, and perhaps the interests of the country will be advanced. I believe the people will not be content to have been forced against their will to interfere in this great contest. We have been told, in addition to the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are in difficulty, that they did not come begging to this Parliament, but that they came here walking erect on their feet. That was a most astonishing statement. I never heard it seriously charged that those gentlemen were in the habit of walking on their heads or hands; but we now know that they came to Parliament walking on their feet, standing erect and looking straight with their eyes. I believe they have been guilty of moral obliquity in certain transactions, but we never heard that it was owing to their being cross-eyed. There are two ways in these modern times of getting money. When a man, woman or child wishes to obtain a small pittance, he or she comes with hat in hand and humbly implores it. There is another class of gentlemen who, when they wish to get a large sum, at one particular time, do not come with hat in hand, but, "walking erect on their feet and looking straight with their eyes," they say, "stand and deliver—$30,000,000 or your life!" Is that the way in which hon. gentlemen wish us to understand this Company comes before Parliament and the country? I think, Sir, that is more correct than to say that they came imploring the Government and the people for this loan. I fear it is too true that those gentlemen stand in a position in which they can come to the Government and say, "your money or your political life." But if that be the case, the sooner the people know it the better for the country, and perhaps the better for the Government also. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, after all, have not so much to complain of, even if they do not get the proposed loan. There is one thing they have obtained in addition to the $25,000,000, "that outrageous bargain," as some hon. members have ventured to call it, and that is free advertising. No other corporation has had the amount of free advertising which has been vouchsafed to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. On all times and occasions, in season and out, the Government and their supporters have taken every opportunity to talk about the trans-continental, ocean-to-ocean railway, and to praise their energy and the manner in which they were acting in the interests of themselves, and especially in the interests of the country. On the floor of Parliament, praise of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been introduced in the preface of the hon. gentlemen's speeches, or dovetailed into the context, or sandwiched between the paragraphs of the peroration with as much ingenuity and as little regard to relevancy as the puffs of St. Jacobs Oil, or Holloway's Pills are sandwiched into the newspaper articles of the day. That has been going on for a long time. What about other corporations? Do we hear praises of the Grand Trunk in the halls of Parliament? No; all the praise is given on one side. The money is also given to one side only, and that is the fair and impartial way in which this Parliament is called upon to act between the two great corporations struggling for the trade between the east and west. Let me say that the tendency to monopoly at present existing on the part of the Grand Trunk has only existed since the Canadian Pacific Railway Company commenced the game. The Grand Trunk did not commence to gobble up smaller railways until after the Canadian Pacific Railway Company began that course, and the Grand Trunk was forced to do so in self-defence. If there is any complaint to be attached to these great corporations in this regard, the fault lies with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and not with the Grand Trunk. As I have said, I should like to be an onlooker in the contest between these two great corporations, and I am not prepared by my vote to take position against one or favour the other. There is another reason Mr. Speaker why I feel justified in rising on the floor of the House here at this late hour. I will refer very briefly indeed to that part of the debate which has been strongly characterized on this side of the House—I refer to the manner in which the debate was opened, not only by the Minister of Railways, but also by his supporters, who made sinister allusions to the patriotism of members of the Opposition. I noticed, however a very great depression in that kind of stock after the hon. member, for Queen's had made his speech. And after a certain learned gentleman gave a lecture in one of the halls of this city, it fell flat, and we heard little more of the patriotism on that side of the House, or the lack of patriotism on this. The hon. member for Brant, last evening, gave us the key note as to the effect of that kind of discussion on the floor of the Canadian Parliament. He told us that there could be but one effect upon the minds of the world, one effect upon the credit of Canada, and that was that the people of the world would be called upon to believe one or other of two statements: either that one-half of the people of this country were traitors to the interests of their country, or that the other half were falsifiers of the facts, and traducers of the characters of their political opponents. One or other of these two positions must be true, and I ask which is the worse to go to the world—the belief that certain gentlemen at certain times, have stated the facts in connection with the condition of the country, or the belief that certain other gentlemen are their traducers and their slanderers. I hope that hon. gentlemen see the force of these remarks, and if they do, I do not think that the charges they have made as to our lack of patriotism will be repeated, at least during the present Session. But I have no doubt that when occasion requires, they will be referred to again; when argument is lacking, these substitutes for arguments will be resorted to. If it were not for occupying the time of the House to tediousness, I think I could show that by the conduct of hon. gentlemen in the past, they have laid themselves open to the charge which they have been hurling so frequently at us. We all remember distinctly the caterpillar brigade of 1877-78. We know that in those years the caterpillars, the grasshoppers, the potato bugs, the midges and other pests, were magnified by hon. gentlemen and were looked upon as curses brought on this country in consequence of the evils of the then Government. But now that they are safe on the Treasury benches, we find that a change has come over the spirit of their dreams, and instead of grasshoppers and caterpillars, potato bugs and midge being pests to the country, these interesting little insects appear to be welcome additions to the science of entomology. We have the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), lecturing this side of the House as to how they should conduct themselves in their speeches with regard to the misfortunes of the country; but we all remember well how that hon. gentleman, in the press and on the platform, told his story with regard to the misfortunes of the country in 1878. When, however, his party regained power, a great change came over that hon. gentleman, and to-day he rises to applaud the man who described the floods of his country as a magnificent overflow of the Red River. Instead of lamenting the wonderful exodus of our people in the W. States, we may expect him to speak of it at a delightful trip to the wilds of Dakota, and should a deluge unfortunately overwhelm the North-West so that steamers would be able to ply athwart the railway tracks of that country, we may expect him to describe it in the newspaper which he so able conducts, as a heavy dew in the prairie province. I do not think it is necessary at this late stage of the debate that I should enter into a consideration of the figures which I have noted, as I think enough has been given to prove the necessity of obtaining further information as to the financial condition both of the Company and the country before we endorse the Resolutions now before the House. In conclusion, allow me just to draw the attention of members to what they might justly do on this occasion. We have not time, of course, to find out from our constituents exactly how they feel on this matter. But suppose every member had command of a telephone, and suppose he should tell the people of his constituency that a vote was about to be taken, and should give them a summary of the facts, what would be the answer? We might remind them, and remind them honestly, of the fact that the debt of this country is nearly $200,000,000. We might remind them likewise, of the debt of their own particular Province. We might remind them—if it be true—that they have barely enough revenue to carry on the Government of their Province, and that direct taxation stares them in the face. We might remind them—if it be true—that there is no revenue to spare even more, that they are now labouring under a heavy taxation in order to meet the engagements entailed by municipal bonuses granted years ago to railway schemes. We might remind them with truth, that this grant is, in fact, but another bonus asked by the Government from their own particular county; and though I shall not take up time disputing the figures of the hon. gentleman who preceded me, relating to his discussion with his colleague from the county of Grey, I say it makes but little difference whether the amount be $142,000 or $150,000 for each county. Let us, for the sake of peace, come down to $100,000, and suppose hon. gentlemen were to enquire whether or not they should vote to inflict such an obligation upon the country, what answer would they get? They can tell their constituents honestly that there is no finality about the matter—that we are not promised that this is the last time of asking—that the probabilities are this same Canadian Pacific Railway Company will again approach Parliament and, perhaps, looking straight with their eyes, and walking erect on their feet, will demand another thirty millions! Nobody can tell; but we do know that the security they pledge for this loan exhausts their supply of that commodity and shuts them out of the markets of the world, and having no security to give, in order to obtain funds elsewhere, they will of necessity, if more is needed, make their appearance again at the doors of this Parliament. And if the same gentlemen should be at the head of affairs then, the request will be acceded to without a word, and we on this side will be accused, as we are today, of a lack of patriotism if we refuse to give them another $30,000,000. Mr. Speaker, the conception of duty to my constituents and to the country in this emergency afford good reasons for the position I have taken, and the vote I intend to record, and I shall have great pleasure in voting for the amendment to the amendment, and, failing to carry that, I shall have equal pleasure in opposing the Resolutions of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. HOUE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a lengthy speech, as the House seems to be tired, having already heard a very lengthy debate. On the other hand, it would perhaps be difficult to throw upon the subject now discussed any more light than that which has already been thrown on it by the hon. members who spoke before me. I do not rise to make a speech. I simply wish to explain the vote which I am called upon to give. I simply wish to give a short and simple explanation, which I owe to myself, and which I owe to the electors whom I have the honour to represent here. At the very outset of the discussion, Mr. Speaker, I declared to all those to whom I had occasion to speak on the subject, that I had made up my mind to examine this important question, and to deal with it according to its merits, and independently of all other considerations. Now, my opinion has not varied from this point. I have always been in favour of the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because I considered this great work as being conducive to the development and progress of the country, and to the binding up together of all parts of Confederation, but I was in favour of it, provided that the work could be carried on in a prudent manner, and with a view to national interest. I say in a prudent manner, inasmuch as it ought to insure the existence of a great trans-continental railway, built entirely on Canadian territory. Such has been, Mr. Speaker, from the beginning, the double standpoint from which I have considered this question, and to illustrate this fact, I beg to quote two short extracts of an humble speech, which I had the honour to deliver in this House on the 13th of February, 1880. I said then :

"The construction of 120 miles of railway, to be commenced early in spring and vigorously proceeded with, is a tangible proof of the desire of the present Government to do justice to the inhabitants of that Province. The country will approve of the course of thus redeeming, as far as possible, the promise given in its name; as it must see with satisfaction that the Government seems to be of opinion that these works are proportioned to the resources of which it can at present advantageously dispose, and that, before putting the remainder under contract, they will, as I fancy, endeavour to procure the necessary means, otherwise than by new foreign loans, so as to avoid too much drawing on the future or incurring the risks of burdening the present inhabitants of the old Provinces for the over-exclusive benefit of a population not yet located in that country, and which, when they come to dwell in it, will have contributed least to these costly public works."

And a little further on I added :

"The public will learn with satisfaction that, thanks to the able and economical management of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, the Intercolonial Railway, which those who opposed its construction said would be the ruin of the country, has already ceased to be a serious charge upon the public chest. There is now no doubt but it will become a lucrative undertaking for the trade of the country, whereby the completion of the Canada Central and the extension eastwards of the Pacific Railway to the western terminus of the latter, or of some equivalent branch, will have placed the Q. M. O. & O. Railway in direct communication with the North-West, and a suspension or other bridge across the St. Lawrence, above Quebec, will have linked the latter with the line from Lévis to Rivière du Loup. This would be a sure means of largely increasing the traffic on the Intercolonial, while doing justice to the Maritime Provinces, and the Province of Quebec, and of avoiding the danger of the trade of the West being diverted from our railways, waterways and ports, in order to replenish the railways, canals and ports of the Americans, after passing through but a small part of the Province of Ontario."

Well, Mr. Speaker, having frankly taken this position four years ago, and having never had since any occasion to alter my mind, could I consistently, could I logically, could I honestly vote in favour of the Resolutions now submitted to our consideration? I do not think I can do it, for if I look at the question from the original standpoint, from the point of view which I took in the first instance, I find that, in order to meet the unreasonable requirements of the Company, we are obliged to negotiate a large loan abroad, which I do not think is in the interest of the country, but which, I think would, on the contrary, burden the tax-payers of the old Provinces. On the other hand, as I have always been in favour of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because, among other reasons, it has always appeared so very important to this Parliament, and to the country, that this railway should be built, so as to secure for us a trans-continental line, built entirely on Canadian territory, can I be satisfied with the policy followed by that Company, which has refused on every occasion to use our Canadian sea-ports as its eastern terminal point, and which has spent so much money, in a manner that is useless, and even dangerous for the interests of the country, to reach the American ports, to our detriment—I mean to say, at least in so far as the trans-continental traffic is concerned? In 1881, Mr. Speaker, when the contract with the Pacific Syndicate was submitted for our ratification, I had serious objections against it, and the hon. Ministers remember it, for I made them aware of my opinion on the subject. There were in that contract clauses which I did not like, and it lacked clauses which I should have liked to have had inserted. Still, I finally gave it my support, in consideration of the general features of the scheme, which were better than the details, and in consequence of the representations which were made to us that that would be the end of our sacrifices. But, Mr. Speaker, it was not the end, as is evidenced by the present Resolutions, which propose to loan a sum of nearly $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that at a time when we will be obliged to go and borrow from abroad another very large sum to redeem part of our public debt, and at a time when Canada shall need all its credit to borrow with advantage. Yet, one thing makes me a little less diffident on this point, and it is the success which has heretofore crowned the financial policy of the Government. When these Resolutions were introduced in this House, Mr. Speaker, I found myself in a state of great perplexity, and on the 7th of February, inst., I deemed it my duty to inform the hon. leader of the Government, for I desired then, as I desire now, to be able to reconcile the allegiance I owe to my party with the dictates of my conscience and the duty I am bound to discharge towards my country. I have listened with great attention and I have tried to examine with impartiality the reasons invoked in favour of the present Resolutions, but despite the great confidence I had in the skill of the hon. Ministers, and in their desire to promote the interests of the country, despite the sincere devotedness I felt towards them, I have not been able to arrive at their conclusions. I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at this moment I find myself in a very painful position, so much so that, after the expressions of opinion which I have heard until now, I shall be about the only one—out of the numerous phalanx of friends with whom I have agreed until this, and with whom I still hope to agree on other points of Governmental policy—to disapprove of these Resolutions. I foresee that I shall be about the only one to dissent from my friends on this important question, but I was placed in the alternative to dissent from my party, or to sacrifice what I believe to be in the interest of the country. Now, I do not believe that the Ministers would think more of me if I sacrificed the interest of the country for the party, for I have once heard the leader of the Government himself saying, that the interest of the country should be preferred to the interest of the party; and at all events, Mr. Speaker, this has always been my principle, and it is by acting in accordance with this principle that I have always found the best reward for the work, sacrifices and annoyances inherent to parliamentary life, and to journalism, a profession which I have followed for several years. To be as short as possible—besides I have not the strength to speak lengthily, for I am suffering with a severe bronchitis, as you perceive—and to state in as few words as possible the reason why I take this position to-day, I shall say that I feel it my duty to vote against the Resolutions now submitted to the House, because I have no confidence in the promises made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; because I consider that the reasons invoked in favour of the adoption of these Resolutions can always be invoked with as much force whenever the Company, in consequence of its carelessness, of its extravagance, or of other reasons, will be pleased to come again and knock at our door to ask further aid; that is to say, whenever the Company may feel disposed to threaten us with stopping the work, thus involving for the country unfortunate consequences—consequences which, in my opinion at least, are more or less imaginary in the present case. It has been said that the Company had the means required to promote the execution of their original contract. Well, I regret that it has not been thought proper to compel them to carry out their agreement, and that these Resolutions have been introduced to give them the additional aid which they are claiming to-day, and which, in my opinion, ought not to be granted to them. I am, furthermore, opposed to these Resolutions, because I cannot understand, judging from what is taking place now, where the unreasonable claims of the Company may lead us. For my part, I think that we have got far enough, and I cannot go any further unless I turn a deaf ear to the dictates of prudence, and unless I sacrifice the true interests of the country.

Mr. GILLMOR. In speaking of this important question, I do not, of course, expect to affect the decision of the House. But this is my eleventh Session in Parliament, and I think that during the time I have been here I have heard every speech that has been delivered on every important question. Hon. members who remain silent until the close of the debate are no more obliged to ask permission to speak than those who have spoken first. We cannot all speak at the same time, and those who have anything to say on the subject have just as good a right to be heard at the close of the debate as those who spoke before. I did not at first intend to speak on this question, but the turn the discussion has taken has convinced me that it is my duty to make a few remarks before the vote is taken. The speech made by hon. Minister of Railways this afternoon brings before the House and the country very definitely the question of the winter port. That is a question which has occupied the attention of the Maritime Provinces ever since Confederation, and for some time before. We have been told that this railway is a great trans-continental highway. I believe, since so much money has been granted, and so much more is asked, we have a right now to ask that it should be finally determined where this road is to begin and where it is to end. I think we in the Maritime Provinces are entitled to be told whether one end is to be there, or at Portland, in the United States. During the eleven years that I have been a member of this House, that question has met me on every occasion, because the port of St. Andrews is in the county I represent, and it has been urged against me at every election, that I was not able to get the winter port of Canada located there. The hon. Finance Minister and the hon. Minister of Railways both have residences at St. Andrews, and have resided there. At every election, it has been put forward as a reason why I should not be elected, that I had no influence to get the winter port located there; so that this is a question of local importance to me. I am aware that it is difficult to determine which is the best winter port for this great trans-continental railway; but I think the Government have had time enough to define it, and I think the people of the Maritime Provinces ought to be informed where it is to be before they are called upon to advance $7,000,000, which is about their share of the $30,000,000 now proposed to be given to this Company; but they do not know yet whether the winter port is to be in the Dominion of Canada or in the United States. I think, however, from all that has been said in this discussion, and from the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways, that the evidence is that the winter port of this great railway is going to be at Portland, in the United States. The Government have decided where the terminus of this railway shall be on the Pacific Coast, and I think they have had time and opportunity to decide, and they ought to have decided before this, where the Atlantic Coast terminus is to be. I agree with the hon. Minister of Railways that, for commercial purposes, perhaps Portland would be a preferable port; but this is a great national work, to which all the Provinces have contributed; and although the people of the Maritime Provinces are now asked to contribute $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 more, we do not know whether the road is to go there or not. We know that it is to start at Port Moody, and that it is going to avoid the United States all the way to Montreal, but from that point it is to be a commercial enterprise, and from that point the interests of the Syndicate are to be considered, instead of the interests of the people of this country, and especially of the Maritime Provinces. Is this not a matter of importance to the people of the Maritime Provinces? What mean the meetings of boards of trade and other bodies? What mean the deputations sent to Ottawa, and the pamphlets issued on this question on so many occasions, if it is not important? And ought the Lower Provinces not demand that the Government shall define whether the Atlantic port of this great trans-continental road is going to be in Dominion territory or not? The importance of this question is the reason that has induced me to make a few remarks upon it to-night; but while I am on my feet I may say something on the Resolutions which have been discussed for so many days. I am quite well aware that discussion does not amount to much in the way of convincing any member of this Parliament. Party Government is no doubt the best system that we can adopt; but as for this being a deliberative body, I have long ceased to have any faith in it. Yet our discussions are valuable, because they go to the country and the electors get information that they would not get but for those discussions. I do not suppose that our talking ever changes a vote, party lines are so strictly drawn in this House. Now, I do not intend to take up the time of the House in reading extracts; I only wish to express certain thoughts that have occurred to me while sitting here day after day, listening to the discussion. One of the points urged by hon. gentlemen opposite is, that this idea of a great trans-continental line of railway was conceived by the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches; and those opposed to them have no credit for anything they have done. Of course, having decided to undertake that work, it is of little use now to discuss the wisdom of it. I think myself that it was premature to begin this work at the time it was undertaken; but whether it was or not, it was undertaken, and the Government of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) did all that they could do, consistent with the ability of the country, in carrying out this great work. And they laboured under very great difficulties at that time. I need not repeat what the House has so often been reminded of, that the business of this country was depressed and the revenues very much reduced; but notwithstanding all that, the Government went on vigorously to open up the North-West, and every reasonable man will admit that they did everything that was necessary. The first immigrant that went in to the North-West went on the line that was built by the late Government—the Pembina Branch. They proceeded to build the road from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, and conducted their operations upon that part of the line as long as they continued in power. They proceeded far enough and fast enough to meet all the requirements of settlement of the North-West. In every respect, they did their duty faithfully and fully, and instead of being blamed they ought to get credit for what they did. I shall not trouble the House in regard to the contract under which this Company is now acting, as we all know the history of that. I believe it to be one of the most profitable contracts ever given to any company since the inauguration of railways. It was so profitable that with a very few days' notice another company offered to do the same work for $3,000,000 and 3,000,000 acres of land, which land is now worth $2 per acre, making $9,000,000 in all; and as a guarantee of their readiness to carry out that proposition faithfully, they deposited $1,500,000 with the Government. But that company failed to get the contract and the country lost $9,000,000 by refusing to give it to them, although that company was in every respect equal to the present one. That, however, is past and gone and there is now no remedy for it. The Canadian Pacific Railway then began their operations. I knew nothing about the gentlemen who compose that Company; I had nothing to blame them for in having made the best bargain they could, and I desired they might succeed. I do not know the reasons why this Company may be now embarrassed financially, but I do know that when they were before this Parliament asking for an Act of incorporation and about to enter into this contract, they were represented as men of vast wealth and financial skill and ability—as men of unbounded resources. I believed at the time and I believe still that they were men of wealth and skill, but I believe they have failed to manifest their skill in this matter. How is it that with so profitable a contract and with so great resources, they have not been able to raise the money they require in the markets of the world, where there is plenty of money seeking investment, and are obliged to demand Government aid in order to complete the work? I do not know why they have failed on the continent, in England and in America. That is a matter I know nothing about further than what I have learned from various opinions expressed here and elsewhere, but that they have failed to inspire confidence in capitalists, who are always ready to invest in safe speculations, shows there is something lacking in this Company. I regret this on account of the gentlemen who compose the Company, and on account of the work, but I do not regret it enough to vote for the Resolutions and tax the people $30,000,000 more. Hon. gentlemen talk about these sums as though they were of little importance. They talk about $30,000,000 as though it was an amount of little importance, yet if the Dominion of Canada were called on to pay $30,000,000 out of its own capital, it would take every dollar in circulation in Canada to do so. In every branch of business and trade in Canada, there is not more than enough to pay this amount down. I do not know who is to blame for this, but I know this application is before us. It is a pleasing feature in human nature that when an appeal for benevolence is presented before them, almost all men would like to contribute. That is the first impulse, but in matters of this kind second thoughts are best. There is another feature in human nature which is not so pleasing, and that is, while we are disposed to aid those who are in want we are always more disposed to aid them with other people's money than our own. I am not surprised that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches should wish to aid this Company, nor am I surprised at the peculiar form of their benevolence. We had a specimen of their benevolence last Session, when they went back seventeen years, to pay claims outstanding, for which they of course had their own good reasons. I must confess that I had some leanings myself towards this Company, and felt that now, when the Company was embarrassed, and in want of means, they should be helped, without taking the people's money, by the Government entering into the guarantee. I had no doubt when that guarantee was given, that this Company would have no trouble in getting all the money they required, and was not disposed to blame the Government for taking this action. I would, perhaps, have been inclined to go still further, if I found the Company, from whatever reason, were unable to succeed in the money markets. I do not say what I would have done, but I would like to see them helped to a moderate extent over their difficulty. If their floating debt were $6,000,000 or $8,000,000 in addition to the guarantee, I do not know but that I would justify the Government in helping them to that extent to enable them to get over the difficulty; but when the Government comes before this House and say this Company are abundantly able to carry out its contract, that they have all the skill and the resources necessary to complete the road, but that they cannot complete it so soon without this aid, I say let them go on and complete it under the terms of the contract, and no other. Almost every hon. gentleman who spoke on the other side said it was so important this road should be completed within two years, that we should lend them this money. I differ from them in that respect. I do not think it is very important that this road should be so speedily completed. I do not believe that the country will suffer in any respect if that Company are allowed to go on under their contract and have the road completed in 1891, and if they want any more time, I think it would be better to give them more time rather than advance the $30,000,000. I believe this country, if consulted calmly, outside of political excitement and party feeling, would say give them any time they require, but do not tax us any more if you can possibly avoid it. You have facilities enough now to carry immigrants, all that we can get—I only fear we are not going to get half enough—into that country; you have ample facilities to carry on trade between that country and the other Provinces; you have everything required to promote the industry and the prosperity of this country, and there is no real advantage in having this road finished sooner. I cannot see any advantage to any industry in any part of the country that will be materially benefitted by completing the road north of Lake Superior or through the Rocky Mountains in two years. All that is necessary for the Government to do is to help the Company over their present emergency. That is the way the question strikes me. I have no feeling against this Company. I do not know anything against them, and if I did, I am slow to say anything against anybody. I think, and I am very sincere in that, that there is no necessity, in the interests of the country, to urge on that road so rapidly. I think the argument made use of in reference to that matter has been exaggerated. If men are sincere in what they say about it, I think they are mistaken. That is my opinion, and I would say to them, "By all means, in the interest of the country, take your time; you only agreed to build it in 1891; take all the time the contract gives you, but do not press us for so large an aid as this." Taking the guarantee as well, it amounts to $30,000,000. It was thought that $25,000,000 was an enormous sum three years ago, and so it is an enormous sum, but now they are getting $5,000,000 more than the cash subsidy given them under the contract, and for that reason I am opposed to this vote. The tax-payers of the Dominion of Canada have done a great deal for the Canadian Pacific Railway. They have advanced in cash a great deal for that enterprise—all they are able to advance. They advanced to that company—of course I speak nothing about the lands—the tax-payers of this Dominion have put $5,000,000 into that undertaking in the way of exploration and surveys, they will have spent $28,000,000 in construction on the Government division, when that is completed, and they have given $25,000,000 in cash, when it is earned, making $53,000,000 in cash up to this time already, given to subsidize that great work. That is a magnificent subvention, as has been remarked by the Minister of Railways, so many times, and now we are to give $30,000,000 more—it is going to be voted, I know—that will be $83,000,000 in cash given to the Company. And, if the land is worth $2 an acre, as hon. gentlemen who are well capable of judging have stated over and over again, that will make $50,000,000 more, making in all $133,000,000 that the people of this Dominion have given for the purpose of building that trans-continental railway, and that has all been given to this Syndicate. I am surprised that this Parliament should think it necessary now to give this last $30,000,000. The sum, if these Resolutions are carried, that the people of this Dominion will have to give to this railway, will be more than twice our national debt, when we entered into Confederation. We had been a people, we had been colonies for a hundred years. We had gone on with our enterprises and our railways and had been creating a public debt for all that time, and we are putting into this one work alone, more than twice as much as we had put into all Governments works previous to that time. It has been stated by hon.

members that this is only a loan. Hon. gentlemen will not interrupt me. The debate up to the present time has been conducted very fairly. I think the majority have behaved magnanimously on the whole, better than I ever knew them to behave before, and I hope they will maintain their good character and behave so to the end. They can afford to be generous. They are going to have their own way, and, if this is as just and noble and patriotic as they say, they will get a great deal of credit, without annoying me in the few remarks I am going to make. They say this is only a loan. It may be so. I am not a prophet. I cannot say whether the Company will pay it back or not. But there may be great securities offered which are not very valuable. If the canals of the Dominion, upon which we have expended forty millions, were in private hands, were in the hands of a company, and they proposed to give them as security for twenty millions, or for ten, or for five millions of dollars, do you think, with all the forty millions expended on the canals, that were going to be such a paying investment, that that would be a good security? I do not think any capitalists would think so. I do not think it is any security at all. Then there is the Intercolonial, on which we have spent forty millions. Is that any security, if it were owned by a company and they wanted to borrow any money upon it? It would not be accepted as a security at all. Look at the loan made to the Grand Trunk Railway. It is no security. Is the Prince Edward Island Railway any security? By no means; and I do not think this road is a very much better security than that is, and that is my honest opinion. I do not think it is any security at all, and I do not believe this money will be refunded. I hope it may be, but that is my impression. However, I would have the Company go on more slowly, and not call upon the people of this Dominion to mortgage their property to raise this money to loan it. I know that, when you are talking upon great national questions, it is not considered very patriotic to refer to anything that is very local. It is considered in this House to be rather a limited view to take of matters, and altogether too local, and not patriotic. Now, in regard to New Brunswick—and, whatever you may say about Confederation, New Brunswick is still a separate Province, no doubt about that, and we have to look after the interests of those we represent and of the Province we represent—New Brunswick bound for four millions of dollars of the cash that has been put into this undertaking; quite a large sum for that Province. They are paying the interest now upon $1,000,000 in that enterprise. We are asked by these resolutions to increase that by $2,000,000 more, to make our contribution in New Brunswick $6,000,000 to that great undertaking, and, if we were going to get the winter port at St. Andrew's or at St. John, there would be some propriety in asking it, because we would get some return—we would get some remuneration for this contribution. New Brunswick, I believe, has not been often before this Parliament asking for aid. New Brunswick has gone into Confederation, and she has got to live, and carry on the business of the Province, and make her advances to public works as best she can out of the revenue at her command, and therefore I think we ought to be very careful, knowing that we want railways, and other public improvements that will tax our resources to the utmost—I think we ought to be very careful how we tax our people to carry on this work, unless it is absolutely necessary, unless we can see that we are going to get some return. Now, take the county I represent, the county of Charlotte. The proportion of the debt we have contracted which would fall to my county would be some $300,000, and we are asked now to add to that $200,000 more, according to the calculations I have made, which are subject to correction. This is cash, mind you—no land. If we had our proportion of the land according to population it would increase the contribution of the county I represent to $800,000. Now, I wonder what the people would think if their municipal council or local legislature were to place upon them liabilities of that extent without consulting them. This is a consideration that influences me. The people who pay these bills are not considered enough. I do not always sympathise with these appeals to the people that play upon their prejudices, but when you come to the question of taxation, the people ought to be considered. In other countries, older and richer than ours, the whole nation would ring with indignation if this was done without submitting it to the people. These questions are never submitted to the people by the present Government. When the original contract was made was that submitted to the people? No; it was not their policy. They entered into the contract, and the Company was in operation two years before the Government went to the people, and now they tell us that it was submitted to the people? What did the people say? I put the question to my people and they returned me, but I do not know whether they approved of the contract or not—I do not think they did. The policy of the present Government is a very cunning policy, and it succeeds well. They are going to vote $30,000,000 now, and they pretend to tell us the people know all about the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir, the people know nothing about this $30,000,000. It has only been for a few weeks under consideration and there is no time for members to consult the people on any of these questions now. This expenditure has become so large that the people seem really not to be alive to the question at all. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have heard some arguments about this great national highway for at least seventeen years, ever since Confederation; all these speeches and all this spread-eaglesism, all these fine sayings were presented to the people at the time of Confederation. I have heard them, and I always thought that they were extravagant. We have heard about this great national highway, and what a wonderful people we are. Yes, we have heard that we were on the high road to greatness, that we were the germ of a wonderful nation, and that Confederation and the trans-continental railway were going to build us up into a great nation. We have been seventeen years in Confederation, and I think, so far as nationality is concerned, that Confederation has been a failure. That is my opinion. I think there is no more national feeling to-day than there was seventeen years ago, when we entered Confederation. I know that there is a good deal more party feeling, but I pretend to say that so far as the real principles that constitute a nation are concerned, we are not to-day any stronger than we were then. I think Confederation might have been made a success. I was opposed to it. In great questions of that kind I want to be true to myself. I thought there were some reasons for Confederation, but I thought the reasons against it preponderated—at least they did in my mind, and I opposed it. I have been willing to make the best of it, but when hon. gentlemen pretend here to talk in this high-flown strain, and with these far-fetched, magnificent sentences, I don't believe it. It is not railways that constitute a nation; it is not these great expenditures that help to make a happy and contented people. The most important thing to build up a national feeling is to make the burdens on the people as light as possible. That is the way to make a happy people. You may under excitement, carry your schemes for increased taxation, you may deceive the people and the country by party warfare and party excitement; but the real elements that constitute a nation have not been advanced since Confederation. The burdens of the people, instead of being lightened, have been enormously increased, and we have gone on in that direction at railroad speed. Now, we are often pointed to the United States—to that great nation which I venture to say is now the greatest nation on earth, at least it will be in another decade. That nation, in 1860, with a population of 35,000,000, had a debt of only $64,000,000. They are a progressive people, but that was the extent of their national debt. We, with 4,000,000 of people began Confederation with a national debt of $70,000,000, and we have now a debt approaching $200,000,000. Now, I think this Dominion has a great many places that are very desirable to live in. I have travelled a little over the Dominion, and from all I have seen of it, I think the valley of Annapolis, in Nova Scotia, is the garden of this Dominion. There is no place in this Dominion, notwithstanding the praises of the great North-West, that I would go to live in so soon as to the Annapolis valley of Nova Scotia. We shall continue to live here, and our children after us, from generation to generation, but to say that this country, geographically and climatically, is to be compared with the United States, is extravagance and a mistake. It makes people extravagant in their opinions, and extravagant in their expenditure, and makes them try to be what, I think, they will not soon become. This country would make a very excellent border, a very excellent fringe, for a nation and that fringe is ornamented for a very large part of the year with beautiful white snow. But notwithstanding all that, we have a great many resources, and we could become a happy, industrious and progressive people if you would keep the taxes down. But if you go on increasing the people's burdens, you make them dissatisfied, and after the excitement of it over they will begin to think about paying the bill—as a good many representatives do. The United States had 35,000,000 of people before they undertook to construct a trans-continental railway, and I think they did not give much money, but a land grant. They had a large and thriving population on the Pacific coast; in a word, they were a great nation before they undertook the task. They waited until they were able to carry it out before they undertook an enterprise of such great magnitude. I think we are entirely too hasty. The United States undertook to aid a railway of something like 2,000 miles in length; we have undertaken to construct a railway 2,550 miles in length, to Montreal, to say nothing about the distance to the sea board; and we have given $88,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 of acres of land, which, at $2 per acre, would bring the amount up to $138,000,000, a sum altogether beyond the resources of the country. All our revenues will pretty soon be consumed to pay the interest on our public debt which bring no direct revenue to the Treasury. I know something about the workingmen, about the people who elect me. We forget, when dealing with the people's money by millions, to think of those who have to pay the bills. In our population of four millions the producers of wealth constitute a very small proportion. The Ministers of the Crown do not produce—the workingmen have to pay the money for their salaries. Doctors, who are very necessary, do not produce, and the working people have to earn enough to pay them; and lawyers are also non-producers—even my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) who is a very industrious man, appears before the Courts, attends tribunals, such as the Fishery Commission, and argues cases in the Supreme Court—does not really produce a single dollar. The interest on the public debt has to be paid by those who use the spade, shovel and hoe, who go upon the ocean and catch fish—these are the men who produce wealth. They have to pay, not only for their own maintenance, but to support us here and give us our $1,000 and travelling expenses each. All the civil servants, and the army of officials round Ottawa, do not produce a cent; and when you take out all the lawyers and doctors and politicians, all the lazy ones, all the professors and temperance lecturers, and all the spongers, you reduce the number of the wealth-producing class to a very small proportion. I do not mean to say these men are not necessary, or that we can get on without them; but when we come here and vote away the public money, we have to look at the class which has to work and pay it. I am a workingman myself; I feel the taxes, and I know how others feel them. We have thousands and tens of thousands of people who have not a dollar of surplus at the end of the year, after working hard all through it. I know plenty of industrious families who have trouble to obtain their contributions to the clergymen, and often go without doctors when they need them—I do not pity those who employ lawyers in every occasion. Now, this class we ought to consider; and we consider them just about the time of elections, with hearts overflowing with kindness. We enjoy their hospitality, but we care more for their votes. We are going to be very economical and we talk about the extravagance of every one except ourselves. How soon we forget all this after we get into Parliament, when we want to vote money to the Pacific Railway Company, composed, as it is, of men possessing vast wealth.

Mr. GILLMOR. An hon. member says, hear, hear. I think he is the gentleman who thought a great deal of the National Policy because it would cause the hens to lay larger eggs. If he has to depend for his eggs on the success of the National Policy he should be very careful how he votes $30,000,000. We are puffed up with the idea that we are bigger than we really are, and that our country has grown much faster than it really has. We think we have the best half of the continent; I think we have not. But because we think we have the best half, we enter into extravagant expenditure. I do not know much about the United States. I do know, however, that 100 years ago it had a population of 5,000,000, while to-day it has 55,000,000. We have been going on in the same way and have now a population of only 4,500,000. They must be terrible fools on the continent of Europe, and in England, Scotland and Ireland particularly, to go to the worst half of this continent and leave us in the cold. They have been going there, and continue to go there, and you tax the people of this country a great deal too much to bring emigrants here. Our efforts in regard to emigration are, to a great extent, objectionable. We have a great many people here who would have been better at home. Emigrants who, in this age, and with the information before them, who cannot get out of a bad country into a good one, had better stay at home. I would offer facilities to come here, but I would not tax the people of the country to bring the people here. I would give information, tell them the whole truth, and let them judge for themselves; if they cannot get here, let them stay at home. We are making an unnatural effort to create a nation before the proper time. We are taxing the people beyond their resources and pursuing a course which will prevent progress and growth. I heard some remarks made about an expression which slipped from the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). Somebody said we had the best half of the continent, and that hon. member said we had the worst half, and this has been harped upon as though the hon. gentleman were unpatriotic, and did not seek to promote the best interests of this country. He simply told the truth. I do not believe in spreading our defects abroad, in giving information that will injure us; but when a man opens his mouth he should speak the truth. I say it is a humiliating position for any man to be placed in; that he has to lie when he speaks about this country, in comparison with any other—that a man has to lie to bolster up his country. Sir, we cannot afford to do it on this side of the House. No, we cannot afford to lie, and we cannot afford to exaggerate, and we cannot afford to do a great many things which hon. gentlemen opposite can afford to do. We have not got the majority to lean upon, as they have; and we have not got the public purse to lean upon, as they have. They got the majority of the people to think with them, but we believe we are acting honestly, and in the people's interest, and we cannot afford to do anything but what is fair, square, honest and above-board. Yes, I have heard those references to our becoming a great nation, through Confederation, and this great trans-Atlantic railway—we have heard these high-sounding strains, for seventeen years. This country is to be the home of untold millions, this railway is to be built from ocean to ocean—not exactly from ocean to ocean in the Lower Provinces, but from the Pacific to somewhere on the Atlantic—anywhere between New York and Whitehaven. This is to be a great national highway from Montreal to Port Moody, but when it comes down through to the Lower Provinces, the great Chinese wall seems to be broken down, and we cannot tell where the deuce we are going to there. I think, myself, that the Company intend to go to Portland, and I think the Government should not let them. I think the Government should say to them, this is a great highway, and it is to be a highway from ocean to ocean, in Canadian territory. I think this work has cost enough, and is great enough to have that defined. The policy of the Government is imperfect, unless that is defined. I think the representatives from Nova Scotia should insist upon that point, and the representatives from New Brunswick as well. We should not be satisfied with these vague intimations that St. Andrews, and St. John, and Halifax, and Louisburg, have splendid harbours. The Company state that Portland is the better harbor, and I think the hon. members from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should be satisfied, before they vote, where the road is to terminate on the Atlantic coast. This reminds me of an anecdote which was told in our Local Parliament on one occasion when a rather serious vote was expected—an occasion which the hon. Finance Minister well remember. One or two members were a little doubtful—they did not know how they were going to vote. A witty son of Erin who was in the House, said the position reminded him of a circumstance which happened in London, when a man gave out that he was going to jump over St. Paul's Cathedral. The people were anxious, and they assembled by tens of thousands. The man stood there; he did not seem ready to make the jump. They asked him why he delayed, and his reply was: "Well, I would like to be satisfied that there is a little straw on the other side." He did not feel disposed to jump, unless there was something to break the fall. The discussion which is going on in this Parliament reminds me of the story. We have seen what has been going on among hon. gentlemen opposite; we cannot help looking at you, and knowing something about your troubles. There was a great leap to be taken, and I think last night a good many had concluded that there was some straw on the other side for Quebec Bleus. Now, I want to ask the members from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick if there is any straw on the other side for them. I would like to ask the Ontario members if there is any straw on the other side for them? I think Quebec, on the whole, has acted a wise part and I think their men are better and wiser men than those who are jumping without any straw. I think, Mr. Speaker, they are more honest men, because they see that this Dominion is going into an enormous debt—and Heaven knows, in Quebec the necessities are great, and they are not much better down in Nova Scotia. I tell you, I rather approve of their course. They were determined to know if the straw was there, and they know it is there. And we know it too from the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways to-day, that straw was not there three days ago. But the straw is there now; the Minister of Railways told us it was there. I do not think it was a very magnanimous or high-minded thing, but when they see that we are going to pay millions of money, for which their people are to be taxed, I do not blame them. When the devil wants to catch Quebec Tories he baits the hook. But New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Ontario Tories will take the naked hook. But these hon. gentlemen are trembling in their shoes, they hope to blind the people, and they likely will; they have done it before. But there is an end. "The mills of the Gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine." You have to pay for it; if not in this world, you will in the next. Mr. Speaker, what are we going to get for all the money? Where are the returns? We entered Confederation seventeen years ago with a debt of $5,000,000 in our Province. It was expended on the Government railways, on that part of the Intercolonial which is the only paying part, which is a good asset for the money, and our entire public debt independent of our railway expenditure was not more than $100,000. What is our debt now? It is $15,000,000. That is our proportion of the national debt, and we are paying interest on that sum. We came into Confederation with a Tariff of 12½ per cent.—and 2½ per cent. of railway impost. Under that Tariff there was a large free list; nearly all the raw materials which enter into our manufactures and all our flour, corn, meal, coal and other things of that kind were free under that Tariff. We came into Confederation with an understanding implied, and expressed, that our Tariff was not going to be raised. What is the result now under Confederation? We have doubled our Tariff in seventeen years. It is now nearly 30 per cent., and I think, on the whole, if you take the free list in comparison with what they were before, it has more than doubled. What are we getting out of this whole affair? Of course we are getting treated like the rest; but we have been deceived, and the Confederation has not tended to make us love the Union. Our burdens have been increased, our taxes have been doubled and our commerce hampered and we get no return. I was pleased to hear the other night that the right hon. leader of the Government had opposed Confederation. I do not know that I ever had a warmer feeling towards any opponent than I had towards him when I heard that statement. It has changed my opinion of the hon. gentleman very much. It is one bright spot in his character, one oasis in the desert. And I wish that he had continued to hold that opinion; but he saw how things were going, I suppose—that there was more straw on that side than on the other. Now, Sir, with the best attention I could give to this whole discussion, I have come to the conclusion that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with all their wealth, have not put one single cent of their own into the road which they agreed to build under the contract; and if they get this $30,000,000, and the road does not cost more than $27,000,000, as they have estimated, I do not think they will put one cent of their own money into it. I think this country has given enough subsidy to build the whole of the road. With their other railway enterprises, I do not think we have anything to do. They and the Grand Trunk have got into a fight. I do not know any of the parties. I have heard of a man who was driving through a wood one day; he heard a fight going on behind his waggon; he stopped his horse and saw it was a coon and woodchucker; he said: "Curse you, fight away, for I never saw two animals before, that I had no choice in." Now, I have no choice of those two companies. Let them fight. After they get the people embarrassed and taxed as much as they can stand, they will conclude, like a man and wife, that it is best to make it up, but they will fleece you all. Therefore, I think, the less we have to do with those two companies the better. Although my sympathy has all along been with the Canadian Pacific, I must confess that I have now a little sympathy with the Grand Trunk, because when two parties are contending and a third person comes along and takes one of the men: a blow under the short ribs it is unfair. I do not know how it was possible for any power to interfere with these gentlemen's credit abroad, if their resources and credit were what we were told they were when we entered into this contract. You give us too much credit for influence. We have not much influence at home, but it seems that we have a mighty influence abroad, according to your representations—an influence that keeps all the Scandinavians at home—and we do a great deal by our speeches here to affect the money markets of the world. I never thought my speeches had much effect in that way, and I do not think any of our speeches have any effect whatever, so far as affecting the credit of this company. Notwithstanding all that, I do not want to see this Company fail, and I would give them all the assistance that I felt we could. Notwithstanding that, I think it was a bad contract, that it was cruel to the people of this country to take from them so much money and land and give it to that Company, yet I have no bad feeling towards them—the feeling is all directed to those who gave it. Now, I listened to the speech of my hon. friend from King's, N.B., (Mr. Foster) the other night. He is a very fluent talker, there is no doubt about that. Talking is very good, but it is a sort of thing that people can learn the same as playing on a banjo, and he has learned it to perfection. I do not envy him his skill, but I did feel a little offended when he undertook to criticise the speech of our hon. leader in the way he did. He is a great reader, and he must like to read, when he would read over a three hours' speech three times. He says that although he read it over three times, he did not find anything in it but "maybe's" and predictions. I gave the hon. gentlemen credit for more discernment than that. When he said he read it over the first time and did not find anything in it but "maybe's" and predictions, I thought that was extravagant; when he said he read it over the second time and could not find anything in it but "maybe's" and predictions, I thought that was a stretch; but when he said he read it over the third time—that long speech—I just made up my mind that that was a whopper; and I just thought to myself, now, if the liars have their place in the lake—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GILLMOR. I think I am going to be in order—if I am not, stop me, and I will apologize—I thought then if the liars have their place in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone, I would pity the liars. I know it is unnecessary for me to rise as an advocate for my hon. friend and leader, but we think we have a very respectable man as a leader, and we think that he does not speak for three hours and utter nothing but "maybe's" and predictions. We think he is very thorough. I think the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth) was nearer the truth when he said that he shot at everything, even at a feather; but he never fails of his mark. I think my hon. friend need not have resorted to that style of argument. We do not fawn upon our leaders, and lick their ears, as some member has said, the supporters of the present Government do; we do not put our arms around our leaders necks and embrace them. We have nothing of that kind to waste upon the male sex. But we respect and support our leaders, because of their intellectual and moral worth. When the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster) was describing his study of our leader (Mr. Blake's) speech, I did not believe he was searching for truth, but like the scavenger he was hunting for garbage and offal. Like the bird of prey which floats aloft on the wings of the wind, surveying the landscape below, but not to see and admire its beauties. Hill and dale, green fields and flowery lawn have no attraction for the vulture, but if in some shady nook it discovers a carion, the remains of some putrified dead horse, it at once descends and sticks in its beak to the eye, and revels in putridity. Such was the object of the hon. member in reading our leader's speech. I have read speeches of the leading gentlemen opposite and I can see a considerable amount of argument and a great deal of eloquence in them, and I do not get up here to depreciate the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite. I have enough to do to take care of my own. We have able men on the front benches on both sides of the House, and I do not think it becomes the hon. member for King's, with his experience, to pretend to criticise the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition in the way he has criticised it. I have trespassed too long on your patience, although if I were to follow all the notes I have taken I should be here until this time to-morrow, so I will content myself with declaring my intention to vote for the motion before the House, because I think it is a reasonable one and against the Resolution to lend $30,000,000 to the Company.

Mr. HOMER. After the many able speeches we have heard, there is little more to be said. With regard to the financial part of the question, the Government are receiving from the Canadian Pacific Railway a guarantee of $5 for every dollar they are lending the Company to enable them to complete this gigantic enterprise in two years instead of extending its construction over a period of seven years. There is one point to which I wish particularly to refer and which I do not think any previous speaker brought out during this debate, that is, the immense benefits which must naturally accrue to the young and growing manufactures of this Dominion by their early introduction to the markets of Japan, China, India, Australia and the numerous islands of the Pacific Ocean as well as the entire western coast of America, extending from Behring Straits to Cape Horn, containing in all a population of upwards of 700,000,000 of souls. One would suppose this would be a special reason, independent of the many others given during this debate, why we should construct this Canadian Pacific Railway at as early a date as possible. The day on which the first Canadian Pacific through train will reach the Atlantic seaboard from the Pacific will be to the Dominion of Canada like the discovery of a new continent already far advanced in civilization and trade. Shall we then vote for these Resolutions and complete this great national undertaking in two years, or vote them down and leave their completion to an indefinite period? By voting for these Resolutions, we open up new markets for the productions of our country and will give employment to the people and general prosperity to the whole Dominion. By voting them down, we will bring, however, ruin and misery on the whole Dominion. By constructing this road within five years from the time it was commenced, we show to the world that we have completed an undertaking of greater magnitude than has ever been attempted by the most powerful and wealthy nation of the world; it will also give us a standing among foreign nations which it would otherwise take us a century to acquire; it will also stand as a monument through time of the vigour of this growing Dominion; lastly, by voting the sums asked for in these Resolutions, which will enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry out this great gigantic undertaking, the present Administration show their intention to fulfil the terms of the Union with British Columbia as far as possible.

Mr. COOK. I have no doubt but that hon. gentlemen opposite are very anxious to take the vote as it is now very late, and this discussion has been prolonged for a number of days, but I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without expressing my views for a few moments. A few nights ago, in discussing this question, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), diverging from the subject, looked across the floor of this House and singled out two gentlemen who had extensive interests in the North-West—the hon. member for Kingston, and the hon. member for South Perth. The hon. gentleman stated that he looked all through the Gazette and he happened to discover that these gentlemen had interests in the North-West. I have been told by these gentlemen that they have an interest in the North-West to the extent of about $1,000 each in the stock of a company formed by a Tory clique. They had a good deal more confidence in the formers of that corporation than I would have had myself. I could not be induced under any circumstances to have taken a dollar in any enterprise of that kind in that country—not because the country is not a good country to invest in, but I knew that the men who had the formation of that Company would have had the lion's share, and I would have come out at the small end of the horn. The hon. gentleman stated that he had been up through the country, that he had found this, and discovered that, but he forgot to tell the House that he found a timber limit, a valuable timber limit, and that he sold it for a large amount of money—that he got it from this Government for $2 a square mile, and sold it for $100,000 or $200,000, which money should have been in the public Treasury, and have gone to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in constructing their road. A few years ago this Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or the Syndicate of that day, applied to Parliament to build this road. At that time another syndicate made an application on better terms—for less money and less lands. But, Sir, that syndicate was characterized by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, the Minister of Railways and the member for Cardwell—the gentleman for Cardwell, who would like to be a Minister, and who, I think, will never warm the Treasury benches—he is sitting for his constituency by the grace of the leader of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. COOK. That gentleman said this. I do not wish to trespass the Rules of this House. If I said anything that is wrong, I am willing to withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. Hon. members have been called to order in previous Sessions for saying that any member is sitting in this House by the grace of any other person.

Mr. COOK. A portion of the gentlemen who formed that Syndicate had been members of Parliament, and had been defeated. That hon. gentleman, the member for Cardwell, thought that was a crime; that hon. gentleman thought that a man who once sat in this House as a member representing a constituency should not be represented in any public works, if he had been defeated. He should not engage in any enterprise, I suppose, because he thought they were incapable of doing anything. Well, now, let us see, look back a few years, and examine the record of that hon. gentleman in reference to this very same matter. I find by the "Parliamentary Companion" of this House, that that hon. gentleman has been defeated on several occasions. That hon. gentleman was defeated for the Legislative Assembly in the Province of Ontario, in South Wentworth, in 1867. We find that that gentleman offered himself again for a constituency in Lower Canada, in the city of Montreal, where he lived, and we find they rejected him there. We find that that same gentleman ran again for the city of Montreal in 1876, and still they rejected the gentleman. We find that he then came to Ontario, thinking, perhaps, it was a little better place. He was not so well known, and he ran down in the county of Prescott and was defeated again. I wonder what the hon. gentleman thought when he was maligning the gentlemen who had at one time had a seat in this House, and had happened to be defeated at that time. I remember at the time that the Mail newspaper, that organ of the party, that always speaks so truthfully and so plainly, stated that I was defeated in North Simcoe, that my opponent, Mr. McCarthy, was elected by the small majority of fifty out of a constituency polling nearly 6,000 votes, and that I would never hang my hat upon the peg in the corridor that was once consigned to me. But the predictions of that paper were like the predictions of some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side. I am here again, and I am here to stay. Now, it was stated that these men were paupers. The Minister of Railways got up and stated that, after looking over the whole of Dun Wiman's, he could scarcely find that any one of them was worth a dollar. I believe he discovered by a microscope that one had something like $600. That was the report given to the newspapers. I have not consulted the Hansard, and I do not suppose I should find it there if I did, for hon. gentlemen make utterances reported in Hansard that are afterwards corrected, so you would not know the speech. It is like a Bill that goes to a Committee, and, when it comes out of the Committee, it would not be known by the party who introduced it unless he followed it through all the stages. I want to mention the names of some of the gentlemen who formed that syndicate. I do not, Mr. Speaker, decry the other Syndicate. I do not object to them endeavouring to get that bargain, because it was a good bargain, and, if properly managed and looked after and conducted on the principles that any ordinary business should be conducted upon, they would not be back here to-day asking on the floor of Parliament for a loan of $30,000,000. But I will revert to that again. But it was stated that the members of the first Syndicate were men of great wealth. It was stated by my hon. friend from North Norfolk, the other day, in his speech, but I know nothing about it; but, if his statements were correct, that one of the gentlemen forming that Syndicate acquired means of wealth in a questionable way, he had means of making money very rapidly. I know nothing about that. I would not say anything against Mr. Stephen's character. It may not be so. I do not know that it is so. But, if it is so, I think it is the duty of the Government to enquire into a matter of that sort, and not to entrust a man of that character at the head of any corporation with such a very large amount of money as they propose to give to him now. Well, Sir, who was in the second syndicate? In the first place, Sir, we had representatives from the city of London, the city of Hamilton, and we had Mr. Hendrie, and it was a Grit concern; the second syndicate was composed of men who had no ability, no commercial ability, no ability of any description, and no money, and why should they pick up paupers on the street, and put them in a position by which they could make large amounts of money? Well, Mr. William Hendrie, of the city of Hamilton, is known to be one of the greatest and most successful railway men in the Dominion of Canada. Mr. Hendrie is not a Conservative, but he is a blue-blooded Tory, the worst kind of a Tory, and he was one of the gentlemen. Then we have Mr. John Stuart, a man also of great ability and a man of very great wealth. We had Mr. Proctor and Mr. A. T. Wood, and I would like to hear the hon. gentlemen in this House get up and individually select either of these men to-day and say they were not men of ability, that they had not railway ability, that they had not means to carry on an operation not so stupendous as this, but as much probably as the gentlemen who did get the contract. Then we have Mr. Jas. Maclaren, of Buckingham. Perhaps he is not worth anything. No, only six to eight millions, but that does not amount to anything with gentlemen on the other side of the House; he must be a great millionaire, worth a great deal more money than that. Then we have Mr. Allan Gilmour, a man without any money, a man who has not been a successful man. No; he is a pauper. But we find he is, if not a millionaire, approaching it very closely. I could go to work and speak of the gentlemen who form that syndicate. They were scattered from the western part of the Province of Ontario to the seaboard. Who did we have at the seaboard? We had a gentleman who only a few days ago—and

I am sorry he had confidence enough in the National Policy to build the institution he did build—built a cotton factory that cost $1,000,000, and he is sorry for it; that is Mr. Gibson, another of the paupers the Minister was talking about. Of course, they are not so wealthy as the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Railways is, because they have not had opportunities in such gigantic scales to make money as they have had. Then we had Mr. Ross, of Winnipeg, clean from Winnipeg; and Mr. Ross was applauded last night. The cheers that went up when he turned that somersault, when he denounced the very platform that he stood on when he was elected, when he denounced himself, as it were, then he was a great man, cheered by the Minister of Railways, and the Minister of Railways to-day applauded him for what he did. Well, Sir, why was he not as good a man then as he is to-day? I think he was a great deal better man than he is to-day, in more senses than one. Why, Sir, the gentlemen who formed that second syndicate, myself excepted, were men of wealth, men of ability, men of standing, and of railway as well as of commercial ability. I, Sir, venture to say that if this contract had been given to them they would not have come knocking at the doors of Parliament for aid. They would have done their work judiciously and economically, and they would not have got Yankees from the United States to work upon the road. No, Sir, I am not one of those who decry the Americans; I am not one of those who oppose Americans coming into this country. But at the time of the National Policy, the cry on the other side was: "Canada for the Canadians!" We heard that cry from the whole crowd of political hacks from one end of this Dominion to the other. "Canada for the Canadians, and drive out the Yankees. We want none of them here." Sir, we have a great depression just now. Our friends on the other side said: "The expenditure of this money is going to allay all that depression." But it has not done so, because the money is taken by the Chinese, and taken by the Mohicans and every other nationality in the country. We, in Canada, have not the benefit of it, and the result is we have a calamity, and why? Because of the injudicious actions of these gentlemen—not alone because of the National Policy by which they squeeze out of the poor working men the last cent they can get, but because they cannot give them work. Look at the city of Toronto to-day and what do we find there? Look at the soup kitchens all over the country. Why does not the hon. Premier establish soup kitchens now? When he was leader of the Opposition he had a soup kitchen, but he does not take so much interest in it now. As my hon. friend who has just taken his seat said: "Oh, how they do love these men at election times!" I could not help looking across the floor when he mentioned that to see the smiles on the faces of those hon. gentlemen who sit here, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, by the grace of the workingmen. We find these poor working men all over the country working for almost nothing, and to-day men can be hired to go into the woods for $10 per month. Only a few days ago, coming up to the Parliamentary Buildings, I met a man who formerly worked for me. He said: "I have been begging and praying all winter to get a day's work. I have a wife and six children. I have not been able to get any work all winter, but finally I succeeded in getting a week's work here pitching snow from around the Parliament Buildings." I said: "Who gave you that?" "Well," says he, "it was done through the influence of hon. Mr. Skead." "Mr. Skead is a friend of mine." I said: "You could not have a better friend, I am sure he will assist you through the winter."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COOK. Gentlemen who cry hear hear, had better do it this Parliament, for they will not have a chance the next. This $30,000,000, and the taxes that are grinding the poor working men will keep you at home. Now, I was very much pleased with the eulogies which were showered upon the present Company—the eulogies of hon. gentlemen all the way from the Minister of Railways down to the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). They all spoke in the most eulogistic terms of the members of that Company. They were men of reputation, men of standing, men of ability, and, above all, men of good character—splendid fellows they were. Who of the hon. members who were in this House in 1878, does not remember when the hon. Donald A. Smith rose in his seat and denounced these gentlemen for the Pacific Scandal? What did they think of him then? What did the Premier of the day say to him within the corridors of this House? Sir, I am sure you would say it would be unparliamentary if I should use that language now, but he threatened to thrash that man and send him to a very hot place that would scorch him. But to day he is a splendid fellow, a man of undoubted ability, and of good moral character. I did not know the word “coward” sent from one hon. member to another, was parliamentary, but in looking over the Hansard of 1878, I saw where the hon. Minister of Railways, called Mr. Smith a “coward! coward! coward!” three times in succession—without breathing, I have no doubt. Now, Sir, Mr. Smith expressed his opinion of these gentlemen. He stated upon one occasion, that they were a pack of liars, and they stated he was a liar; lying went back and forth between these gentlemen, and I have no doubt—I have no reason to know, Mr. Speaker—but Mr. Smith has the same opinion of these gentlemen to-day that he had then. But, Sir, he has his revenge. Time always brings its revenge, and the fine speeches made by these gentlemen, and the donations that are given him, though he was the worst man in creation a few years ago, now prove that he is a splendid fellow, and they stuff his pockets full of the poor people's money. But I forget the second syndicate. The head of that syndicate was Sir W. P. Howland, of the city of Toronto, a gentleman who these men denounced with the rest as being unworthy of consideration, not to be considered at all, to be thrown into the waste paper basket. “What do we want of anything of that sort? Throw him into the waste basket.” How did he stand in the estimation of the Premier at one time? Why, Sir, he was the recipient of favours from that gentleman. He sat on the Treasury benches and occupied the position of Finance Minister. He was the Finance Minister in whom the leader of the Government had the utmost confidence, and after Confederation he was the recipient of the honour of being appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario, but the office of Lieutenant-Governor has now dwindled down into that of a political hack. Then what did the hon. gentleman from Cardwell (Mr. White) think of Mr. Smith? Will he refer to his paper? Will he refer to that sheet that sometimes tells the truth and sometimes don't? Sometimes it vilifies when it is right to do so, and sometimes when it has no right to do so. But on this occasion it vilified Mr. Smith, and when the hon. Mr. Smith went to his office, and met him face to face, he had not the manliness, nor the boldness, to say that he would stand by his article. The only excuse he made was: “The exigencies of party sometimes require a man to say what is not strictly correct.” Now, the hon. gentleman has a good deal of political expediency; there is no doubt of it; I am aware of it; would he like me to read the record? I would not like to take up the time of the House by reading so much trash, such trash as is every day to be found in that newspaper. After the rejection of the second syndicate, and the formation of the first Syndicate, and the establishment of the Company under an Act of Parliament, we find, within the short space of three years, these men coming back, these men possessed of all that wealth which was asserted, with all that ability and all that astonishing reputation which hon. gentlemen opposite gave them. And why? They ask for $30,000,000 more. What does that mean? I have in my hand a newspaper published in the city of Montreal, a newspaper which almost entirely, I believe entirely, supports the Conservative party. It is a Roman Catholic paper published in the interests of the Roman Catholic people of that city, but it is a Conservative paper. In an article we find these words. Referring to the Syndicate it says: “The Dominion never should entrust those men with the public funds for the purpose of wrecking and squandering recklessly, and buying lands in which Ministers are interested.” What does that mean? That refers to the Cabinet—one or more members. If that is a falsehood and a slander on their characters they should take legal proceedings against the paper. If that article is not true they should vindicate themselves, they should take legal proceedings against the newspaper, as the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) did, when a paper in Lambton vilified him. He took legal proceedings against that paper and punished it. It is a serious charge, it matters not where it comes from, and there are many people besides the editor of the Post who have opinions of that kind. I am afraid a good many of the outside world have opinions of that sort. I should be sorry to think so myself, because I could not believe that men occupying such important and responsible positions as members occupying seats on the Treasury benches, would stoop to such acts. Whatever they might have attempted before Confederation, now that we have come together, they should rise above anything of that kind. We should have no scandals either among members on the Treasury benches or in the House. It will be different from that some day. The atmosphere will be purified; if we have to wait for three more years, then I have no doubt it will. Hon. gentlemen are rushing this thing through at a rate which is unwarranted and indecent. Hon. gentlemen on the other side have offered Resolutions. Nobody knew anything about those Resolutions until the House met. We had not an opportunity of discussing them in our constituencies. If we had known it a year ago, when we had an election, we might have discussed it and got a verdict from the people. What did hon. gentlemen say before they dissolved the House? They dissolved the House a year before their time. Why did they do it? Because Americans offered to bring in $2,000,000 of capital, and they wanted to see the National Policy established for another five years. I have not seen the $2,000,000, and hon. gentlemen opposite have not seen them; but millions on millions have gone out of this country, and out of the Treasury of this Government to the Syndicate and to the United States. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt hon. gentlemen would like to make it short, but I can tell hon. gentlemen that the members on this side of the House have no desire to make it short. They want to have an investigation. They want to know exactly what it is necessary to have the money expended on. They want to know how the money will be expended. Hon. gentlemen may sit in the front seats and may shut their eyes, and they think we will shut our eyes and go it blind. We never go it blind. No, Mr. Speaker, we have two statements by the President of the Company. The President appears to be a political writer. He is constantly writing letters and is always putting his foot in it. He wrote a statement last year. He said it would cost so much to build the road. He made another statement this year; there is a difference of a $24,000,000 between the two. That does not amount to anything; oh, no. The people of the country are beginning to think, as my friend who preceded me said, there is a nigger in the fence. They begin to think there is something wrong. I ask any gentleman on the Treasury benches, and some of them know something about business, though not a great deal—I will ask some members behind, who, I think, know a good deal more about business—I will ask them. I ask business men, if you have a man who takes a contract for any purpose, and when the contract is about half completed and he has done the easiest part of it, and he comes back and wants double the money he asked for it, would you quietly give him the other amount he asked for without investigating his books?

An hon. MEMBER. We would if the man gave security.

Mr. COOK. Security! I imagine the Minister of Railways thinks the people of the country are fools. They have drawn the wool over the eyes of the people on one or two occasions, but the people are getting alive to the actions of those hon. gentlemen. They are getting alive to the means which hon. gentlemen adopt to carry a constituency, and they cannot do it again. But what would you do? Any man, unless he were a fool, would investigate that man's books and look into the contractor's affairs thoroughly; would scan them, and if he did not carry on the contract as he thought he should, he would send him adrift. Now, in my humble opinion, the quicker these men are sent, the better for the country. They will get $30,000,000, but they will not run the road as it has been intended to be run. What reasons have we to know they will do it? Everybody who has any sense at all, any knowledge of the road or the country it traverses, knows it will not pay for a number of years. It will tax the resources, not only of the Company, but probably of the Government, to pay the deficits which will constantly be made from year to year from the running of that railway. I do not believe, as some hon. gentlemen believe, that this railway is going to pay right from the word go. The Grand Trunk was built through a well-settled country, drawing trade from the towns and cities, from Quebec and Windsor and Sarnia and Point Edward, until now it goes to Chicago. But up to that time what money had they made for the shareholders? Not a cent; they never will. I am told my hon. friend who is interrupting me does not deal much in water or much in whiskey. Perhaps the reason is that hens never take to water. They are always in the barnyard. Now, Sir, I say this Company is an incapable Company. I say it with a knowledge of what I am saying, and I say it is extravagant. I say the management of it is something such as never was known in the country. It has been stated on many an occasion that they never knew what they wanted until they required it, and then it cost them double what it would cost if properly looked into. Now we have all these manufactures in the country to build everything required for the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite have built a Chinese wall about Canada, so that we can live within ourselves. Now how much do these men bring from the United States? I was told by a good Conservative last night, within these walls, that at least two thirds—and he was almost sure three-fourths—of the engines and rolling stock of that road have been brought from the United States. My hon. friend from Grey, who spoke this evening, said, what would be the effect on the provisions of this country. Why, Sir, they bring almost all their supplies from the United States. The hon. gentleman has not a great deal to boast of, because his county could not furnish enough to supply themselves. They had a great deal of frost in his county, and not much wheat to spare.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only to tell the hon. gentleman that it is the highest county in Ontario to-day, for wheat, by the last Provincial exhibition.

Mr. COOK. Had they any frozen wheat there?

Mr. SPROULE. They had frozen wheat all over the country.

Mr. COOK. We had none in Simcoe, for we keep it hot there, and we never have anything of that sort. But, Sir, we were not to have any more frosts, or beetles, or potato bugs, or midge—they were all to be exterminated by the National Policy. Still, the hon. gentleman confesses that he had frost in his county. Why does he not apply to the leader of the Government for exemptions from such evils. And when I travel through that country I shall endeavour to make these people know that he did not apply to the leader of the Government to stay the frost and preserve the wheat. This Company built a road to Algoma Mills. I know that country as well as I know these legislative halls. I know whereof I speak, and I can assure my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways, that if he will go up there and select the most unlikely place for a harbour on the north shore of Lake Huron, he would take Algoma Mills, as I have been told by a party who understands the question, that it will cost $1,000,000. If they had stopped 20 miles east of that they would have found the finest harbour in the world, one which would take in all those large vessels. But they would not stop there, and why? God knows, for I do not. They went on up across the Spanish River, which is a wide river, and it would cost a good deal to build a bridge there. They went 8 miles beyond, and they stopped very suddenly, and why? Well I suppose it is within the recollection of the House that the Grand Trunk Railway diverted their line to go to Point Edward to suit a political friend of the Government. I say, that a political friend of the Government, and a member of this House, owned property at Algoma which that member has sold, I am told, for an enormous sum of money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. COOK. You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours. I say if the scandals of this syndicate with the Government could be unearthed, I do believe, and the people believe, that it would be a greater scandal than the scandal in 1872, in which these gentlemen were driven from power so ignominiously. I say if what is in my mind could be unearthed, it would astound the people of this country, but the day is coming when it will come out, for iniquity is bound to be punished, and sometimes it is punished on this earth. I say this Company have spent half a million dollars more than they should have spent going to Algoma Mills, and people believe that it was done to reward a friend of the Government. What else do we find? Immediately after the defeat in 1873, when those men were driven from power, when they had not a corporal's guard behind them, when they squirmed before the people, they went back to the city of Toronto and they erected a building. It was not a Solomon's Temple, but a den of iniquity. It proved to be so, and in it some of the young men of the city of Toronto cultivated habits which made them ready for the penitentiary by frequenting that establishment. It was stated there, and I do not know but the utterances were made from the pulpits of Toronto, that even on the Sabbath day, gambling in all its iniquity was practised in that institution—the U. E. Club. I say they have no right to call it a U. E. Club, for it was not a U. E. Loyalist institution—it was just the contrary. It was a united pack of political bandits. Why, Sir, it is reported that that building was sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for offices in the city of Toronto. There are plenty of buildings to be got in the city of Toronto, and large establishments too, which would suit as well and probably better than that, for less money. But there has been a good deal to do with this U. E. Club. It has been in the courts; it was necessary that something should be done; and they got it off their hands. It is said that it has been sold to the Syndicate. I do not know; I will let the Syndicate answer that for themselves. I know that when I was in Toronto a short time ago, and was passing the building, I was told that they were cleaning it up, and it would soon be occupied by these gentlemen. Now, there was a great deal said about loaning money to the Grand Trunk. The people of Canada did loan money to the Grand Trunk; it was said that it was to be a loan; but it stands to-day as an asset. Why should it stand as an asset? I know it from the lips of a Privy Councillor himself that it was discussed time and time again that this loan should be wiped out, but it was decided by the Government to keep it there. They knew that they could never recover it, and the Grand Trunk Company came here year after year and asked Parliament to place it back, so that they could put another loan ahead of it, and they have got it back so far in their books that it may be regarded as lost altogether. The Grand Trunk was looked on by this country as a very extravagantly built road, and the management as well. But what do we find? Taking the managers and the engineers and the whole staff together, the cost of management only amounted to about $30,000 a year. What does the cost of management of this Syndicate amount to? About $255,000 a year. The Grand Trunk was a road of 1,000 miles in length. This road is longer, but it is not all being built at once. We find that it has been admitted by the General Manager himself, or by his friends, that he received $50,000 a year. Why, Sir, we find the President of that road in receipt of a salary. It is said that Mr. Stephen gets $50,000 a year, Mr. Angus $40,000 and Mr. McIntyre $40,000 a year. I am not saying how true these statements are, but if they are not true they ought to be contradicted. Now, Sir, it has been said by hon. gentlemen that there is no exodus from this country. There was an exodus in Mr. Mackenzie's time—he was a great reprobate, driving the people out of the country—there was an exodus then. Well, I happen to know something of this matter from practical observation. I had an ocular demonstration of it. I was in Michigan last summer, and I found the whole country settled by Canadians, all of whom went there since the D. M. & M. railway was built. When I was there, I felt like putting myself up for election; and I know they would have voted for me, because they knew that these gentlemen had driven them out of the country. There were not only Reformers there, but Tories too, who would have voted for me if it had been possible to send me back to Canada as their representative. I do not wish to descend to the stories and the reports that are going in reference to these great railway kings—these men who have so much money that they could build the road without the aid of the Government, if necessary—these gentlemen who would and could complete the road—who said this would be the last time of asking, just as on a particular occasion, when the leader of the Government telegraphed to Toronto for another $10,000—give us $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 of land, and we will ask no more. Well, after the short space of three years, they are here again. Well, I suppose the Government thought that if they did not give it to them, they might be in the same position as the conductor was at Buffalo. The conductor was caught in the act of pilfering money, and the superintendent threatened to dismiss him. "Why," said the conductor, "if you dismiss me—do you see that house up there on the hill?—You will have to build such a house as that for my successor." Did the Government have in their minds that they would have to build another palace in the city of Montreal for another President? I do not want to descend to that, but such is the talk there. When I was in Montreal a few days ago, I had a conversation with a gentleman who was a Tory, and who said, "I thank the Lord they did not ask for $50,000,000 because they would have got it just as quickly as $30,000,000." And I believe they would, because I do not believe the Minister of Railways knows anything about the affairs of this road—how can he? He was away in England last year; but he sends his engineer down to inquire into them, and he has got the authority of his engineer. Of course the engineers report just as they are told. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman would do such a thing as that—oh, no—he would not. ask his engineer to report unfavourably—oh, no. Now, I want to say a little about those steel vessels, we hear so much of; and really to the country it is a steal. Sir, these vessels, when completed, I suppose will cost the country $600,000. They can float on Lake Superior, but there are very few harbours that they can go into; they draw too much water. There was a mistake made in their build. They are too long for the Welland Canal. Why these gentlemen are making blunders all the time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. COOK. Well, the gentleman who has got his hair parted in the middle and wears a black moustaché had better keep his mouth shut. It is sometimes said that the parting of a man's hair shows what is under the skull. Now, I was talking about these steamboats. They have got the steamboats and they have no use for them unless they go to other harbours, and they are now abandoning Algoma Harbour and are going over to Owen Sound; they are building elevators there; they had started to build wharves, docks, elevators, immigrant sheds, and even hotels at Algoma. But when they got part of their material there for the construction of all these buildings, they changed their minds and of course a very heavy loss occurred. It has been stated there was a very large number of men waiting for the work of construction and they had to wait for months under pay. This is a matter we have a right to deal with. These gentlemen are using the money of the people in a manner not at all calculated to advance the interests of the people, and it is our duty to denounce their conduct, and the man who does not is not worthy of a seat in this House. I believe there was a deputation from Owen Sound to the Government, and a large amount of money is to be given to deepen the harbour there for the Canadian Pacific Railway. No doubt it is right to change from Algoma to this other place, but they commenced the construction there, and should have finished the work. If they wanted these steamers, what did they want of a railway? Did they suppose the people were going to travel through that country in the winter, over that road? No man is a fool; he would endanger his life by it, and I guarantee that neither the First Minister nor the Minister of Railways will go over that road in the winter time. They may take a pleasure trip in the summer and do some shooting and catch some trout, but they will not go in the winter time. A man would be safer on snowshoes if he knew how to wear them, because he does not know where he would stick, and the road will run through a country not fit for settlement; and when I say that I am not decrying the North-West lands, for those lands belong to Ontario, and the members for that Province know that what I say is true, and I know something about that country. I say it is impossible for it to be settled. They will have a railway running in the summer and not in the winter. In the winter there is nothing to carry, and in the summer the steamboats will be running as well. Is not that a steal all around? Certainly it is. We have the opinion of eminent men on that subject. If I mistake not, we have the opinion of Mr. Sandford Fleming, a gentleman to whom the Minister of Railways referred as one whose word and opinion were unequalled. I agree with the hon. Minister of Railways. I think as much of Sandford Fleming's reports as of any other man's in the Dominion. He made a report of which we all know. The thing is absurd that they should build a great railway through that country. The starting of this road in 1873 was a sad affair in the history of this country. It was a sad affair to the Tory party. But could it be possible that Mr. Stephen, in going home and launching his Canadian Pacific Railway on the money market—could it be possible that the people in that country who had money to invest, and large quantities of it, referred back in their mind to the iniquity perpetrated which this brought to their recollection—the iniquity perpetrated by the leader of this Government in 1872, recalled to them by the very name of the railway project and that of the Pacific Railway Scandal. If the Government will not dissolve Parliament, and go back and ask their masters for the privilege of expending $3,000,000 more of their money, they could, at least, give their supporters in the House an opportunity of investigating this matter. But, when an amendment was offered, asking for a Committee of investigation, to be formed of members of this House, who are capable of investigating matters of this kind, we are told: You are impudent, you are insolent; how dare you? What do you mean? Why, you would think these gentlemen were the potentates of this country; you would think the First Minister was king of this country. The old family compact was nothing to this. It was an improvement on the present management of this Government. They have not improved upon it. They have retrograding; they have gone back; they will allow no inquiries. Of course we understand that is the Tory principle. We know they do things only when they are forced, and that they will do anything to retain the reins of government. They do not care for the interests of the country; what they want is power. Let me have a pliant Finance Minister that I can handle on the one hand, and a Railway Minister that I can handle on the other hand, and I can run this country. I do not care where—I can run it to the dogs. Let us have a chance of running this country with a railway king on the one side, and a finance king on the other side—he, the great potentate, greater than any Eastern potentate is running it, and the expenses of the management of this Government have more than doubled since Confederation, for it was only $13,000,000 then, and to day it is $29,000,000 or $30,000,000. But what does this Government care about a few millions? They are going into higher figures; they have transcendent ideas. I will not detain the House longer.

Mr. COOK. I will go on half an hour or an hour longer if you like. It makes no difference to me. I do not imagine that hon. gentlemen will think I have given them any new light. I do not think I have advanced many new ideas. There have been so many ideas given before, and I had not the opportunity of speaking earlier in the debate and giving figures. I have not gone into figures, but I have them here, and if hon. gentlemen want them I will give them. All the figures I have given is the difference in calculation made by the President of the Company of $24,000,000. After that there should be an investigation. If gentlemen outside or inside this House have an idea that I, for a moment, entertain feelings of hostility to this Company, they are very much mistaken. I, Sir, do not feel hostile to this Company, because they have what they would term, in common parlance, a Yankee manager—I should call him a gentleman from the United States. I have no hostility because the manager of that road comes from the United States. I have no hostility to that Company, because their superintendent comes from the United States. I have no hostility to the Company, because the whole retinue of the officials under these gentlemen, almost the whole of them, come from the United States. Why, a letter which was read here from Winnipeg the other night stated that two-thirds of the employees on the road were from the United States, and I have no hostility to them on that account, or any other account. I say, if the second syndicate had got that contract, probably they would have got the best labour and the best management they could have got, even if they had to go to England for it, and I am sure these gentlemen would not object to that, because we know every time in the Local Legislature there is an appointment made in the educational institutions in the Province of Ontario, the Tories [are always crying: "Why do you not take people from our own country?"] It makes all the difference in the world with these gentlemen whether they are in power or out of power. It is all right. I have a the Hansard report of the last day of the Legislature, the dying day of the Legislature, of 1878, on the 10th day, I think it was, of April—the discussion that took place that day. If the gentlemen are anxious to hear it, I will read it, but I have gone over it. The leader of the Government was not in his place at that time. If he had been, I would have read the statements that were made by the gentleman at that time, the beautiful and flourishing and rosy language made use of by that hon. gentleman on that occasion. I would have read the words he gave utterance to, and the gentleman sitting alongside of him gave utterance to, in reference to our friend, Mr. Donald A. Smith—their friend now, my friend then and now, my friend always, but their enemy then, and they are stuffing his pockets to-day. And they laugh. He says: "What a good thing I have got; I have got them by the throat now; they had me in a tight place once, but the time has come when I have got my revenge, and I have them in such a way that I can hold them by the throat with the right hand and stuff my pockets with the left, and when I get my left pocket full, I will get them by the throat with the left and stuff my pockets with the right." It is unfortunate, because it has to come out of the people of the country, and, as has been said by my hon. friend who just took his seat, that lawyers and doctors did not contribute to the revenue of the country, they were barnacles, I go further, and say that the Government are not contributing to the revenue; the Government of the day are barnacles; they are sapping the foundations of the people, and they are robbing the country in such a way that our children and our children's children will curse the name, when they look back on the history of this age and see how they mismanaged the affairs of this country, and trampled on the rights of its citizens.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Having the misfortune, Mr. Speaker—and it is a very great misfortune—to be one of the constituents of the gentleman who has last spoken, I desire to make only two remarks. The first is that the hon. gentleman said one true word when he said that time brings about its revenges. It has brought about this conclusion, at all events, that the gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches were justified, and more than justified, in refusing to give their confidence to a syndicate of which the hon. gentleman who made that speech was the champion and principal representative. The other remark I desire to make is, that another thing is quite evident that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is not in his place to-night, or that hon. gentleman would not have ventured to make a speech which the very reporters at the table must have blushed to place upon the pages of Hansard.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott) has not voted.

Mr. ABBOTT. I should prefer not to vote on any question connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. With the permission of the House I desire to abstain.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to the remark of the hon. member for Argenteuil, I desire to observe that if that hon. member has such an interest in this matter that he is not entitled to vote upon it, according to the Rule of Parliament, of course, he does not require our excuse. If not, our Rule is that any member who is in his seat, votes.

Mr. ABBOTT. I have not referred to the Rules of Parliament, and I do not know what interest I should possess in order to disqualify me from voting. I have not the Rule before me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Rule 16 reads as follows: "No member is entitled to vote upon any question upon which he has a direct pecuniary interest, and a vote of any member so interested will be disallowed."

Mr. ABBOTT. I beg to state, then, that I have no direct pecuniary interest in this question. But at the same time, I do not feel that I am in a position to vote impartially upon it, and I ask to be excused from voting.

Amendment (Mr. Vail) negatived on the following division:—

Mr. Cook.

Main motion agreed to on same division reversed; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On Resolution 2.

Mr. BLAKE. It is not possible, in the absence of information for which returns have been accorded by the House, to get an idea of the estimated cost of the various sections and of the various divisions with reference to the heavy and the light work. I merely state the fact that the materials for an intelligent discussion have not been provided by the Government.

On Resolution 4.

Mr. BLAKE. I should like to know what information the Government has as to the amount of the floating debt of the Company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman. The amount is as stated here.

Mr. BLAKE. It says, "to such an amount not exceeding $7,500,000."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So far as I can ascertain, that is the amount stated by the Company. My hon. friend will see that we do not provide for paying any specific sum.

Mr. BLAKE. The information of the Government is that the floating debt is about $7,500,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I made an observation in the former discussion, with the best ascertainment we could have of the figures, that the floating debt would include the amount of the borrowing of the $10,000,000 of stock. I could not place that asset, the $4,950,000 which was obtained by the temporary borrowing of $10,000,000 of stock, unless it was placed amongst the floating debt.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the floating debt is outside the loan of $4,950,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. member speak positively on that subject?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I can.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the debt of the Company is $12,500,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not exactly, because the $10,000,000 of stock, of course, is pledged for the amount of that loan.

Mr. BLAKE. I am quite aware there is a security for that, and there may be security for the $7,500,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is very much the same as the sale for that amount.

Mr. BLAKE. But if it is, as stated, a debt of $12,500,000, although the $7,500,000 is floated, the $4,950,000 is secured by a temporary pledge of the stock?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, that is as I understand it.

On Resolution 5.

Mr. BLAKE. I would desire to learn from the hon. Minister of Railways whether the language that is used in this Resolution is intended to embrace the interest of the Company in its leased lines.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is not intended to charge the interest of the Company in the leased lines with the security?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman considered the peculiar position that the Government would occupy in the event, which he seems to contemplate with some complacency, of the Government becoming proprietors of the Canadian Pacific Railway under these circumstances?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I look on that as a remote contingency.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman give us any information as to what the obligations of the Company are in reference to their leased lines?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend will see that in the event of the lines becoming, under these Resolutions, the property of the Government, we will not be at all responsible for any engagements they have made in respect of leased lines. It is the property described that becomes ours, not the obligations.

Mr. BLAKE. That would depend entirely on the terms of the agreements and papers in the hands of the hon. gentleman, and which have not been submitted to the House. We have before us a private Bill for the ratification of certain agreements connected with the leasing of the lines, and for all I know those agreements may make us responsible for the rentals of the lines. I do not know what relation the obligations of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would have to other property in that remote contingency occurring.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will take a note of that point, and at a later stage I will give the hon. gentleman the information.

Mr. BLAKE. There is another point. Is it intended to take security upon, or in any way to appropriate in respect of this line, the $10,000,000 of stock to which reference has been made as being temporarily pledged for $4,950,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I understood the Minister rightly to-day, he stated in his speech that it was contemplated that certain bonds should be issued for the purpose of constructing branch lines. Now, if I understand the terms of the Resolutions rightly, all these branch lines would become part of the security pledged to the Government. In that case, we should not provide to allow bonds to be issued, I imagine, on those branch lines, or at all events the Company should not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What I said was this: That if they were allowed to issue bonds on the portions of the branches constructed for the specific purpose of extending those branches, it would not in any way interfere, because in case of the trunk line and branches becoming the property of the Government, we should have the property created by the bonds issued on the existing branches. We should have the extensions that would be created by the money raised from the bonds issued upon the existing road, as the hon. gentleman will see.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the Company would not issue under this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But I said that would require to be provided by legislation.

Mr. BLAKE. It is proposed to authorize the Company to create a charge upon the branches already constructed, upon the Algoma Mills branch for instance, and other branches in the North-West which now exist and will be built with this money.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I meant to speak in general terms as to the mode by which it would be practicable to provide for the extension of those branch lines, the effect of which, if sanctioned by Parliament, would be to put the money raised on branch lines for extensions, and this would accomplish the object of providing the means for extending the branch lines, and at the same time, in case of the property reverting to the Government, they would have all the property of the private Company.

Mr. BLAKE. But the hon. gentleman stated, with great distinctness, that if the bonds were issued upon existing branch lines for the purpose of extending the branch lines, and if we had to take the line, we would have the property. I want to know whether that is an accurate statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is proposed to authorize the Company to bond lines which cost $10,700 a mile for $12,000 per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. That is what the private Bill is.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are not responsible for the private Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman speaks pretty much as if he were responsible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It requires to go through the Railway Committee, and the Government will have an opportunity of reviewing it there.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the present proposal. I say once again, what residuum of value there will be on the North-West branches when, after costing $10,700 per mile, they may be charged with $12,000 per mile, I leave the hon. gentleman to decide. But it seems a rather serious statement with respect to the security and the statement which the hon. gentleman made in the former part of this discussion, as to what security the Government was going to obtain, that the existing branches should be subject to be charged at the will of the Company with so large a sum of money. It is quite clear they are to be charged with the amount for which they would practically be saleable; and the observations which the hon. gentleman has made as to the character of the security, the Algoma Mills branch and the North-West branches, amounting to between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000, is most materially altered by his present statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not in the slightest degree. I will assume that there is a branch of 100 miles, and that money is raised from bonds on that branch, every dollar of which is to go into an extension line. You have the same valuable property remaining then, as now, with this difference: you have the railway facilities given by the extension of the branch, you have the country opened up, the traffic brought to the main line of the road, and that without the slightest deterioration in the value of the existing property as a security.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has any provision been made to guard against issuing bonds at a depreciated value; against issuing bonds at very much more than their face value, and encumbering the road with a debt that will swamp both the original branch and the amount created by the issuing of the bonds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All that will be provided for. I have said that legislation will be required and that legislation will secure that every dollar paid upon existing branches is expended in actual value on the construction of whatever amount of work can be constructed for the money raised.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is hardly an answer to my question, which is whether there will be a provision to guard against the issuing of bonds at depreciated value?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly.

On Resolution 9.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a very general statement giving power to the Government to permit the application of the $35,000,000 of stock either to the improvement or extension of the railway or to its equipment, or to the repayment of the indebtedness of the Company to the Government. Would the hon. gentleman give some little better definition as to the character of either the extension or improvement to which it is intended to apply this money? Is it the improvements to the main line or to extensions authorized by charter, or what is to be the nature of the control which the Government will exercise over those funds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, it is pretty distinctly covered by the statement which is contained in the Resolution. It says it shall be for the improvement or extension of the railway, its equipment or the redemption of the indebtedness of the Company.

On Resolution 10.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman made allusion, in the course of the prior debates, to some point, as I understood him, which rather escaped him formerly, with reference to some greater power to be given the Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will be embraced in the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. What will it be?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The power of issuing land grant bonds, under certain restrictions, for the payment of the debts of the Company.

Mr. BLAKE. Further land grant bonds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To extinguish them and put on new land grant bonds, the amount going towards extinguishing the debt.

Mr. BLAKE. To what amount?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That necessarily cannot be stated. It will be to an amount which is approved by the Government, and will be the extent of so much per acre.

Mr. BLAKE. How much per acre?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know that that is positively settled.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought these things were all arranged.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. OUIMET. Before the House adjourns, Mr. Speaker, I beg to draw your attention, and the attention of this hon. House, to an article which appears in the Toronto Mail of this morning, and which I consider an insult to myself, and other representatives of the Province of Quebec, who generally act with me. The article is entitled, "A base but unsuccessful conspiracy." I will read a few lines which will give an idea of the article:

"One of the basest attempts at wholesale bribery in the annals of Parliamentary Government has just been unsuccessfully practised at Ottawa by hon. Edward Blake, which appears to have been no less than the purchase of the whole of the Conservative following from the Province of Quebec. It is no secret that the Government of that Province is in financial straits, and that representatives of that Government have been for several days at the Dominion Capital for the purpose of endeavouring to secure 'better terms' from the Dominion Government. The demands of these gentlemen were not recognized by Sir John Macdonald, and this fact becoming known to Mr. Blake, that gentleman, prompted by some diabolical agency, made corrupt overtures to the supporters of the Dominion Government from that Province, with a view to securing their opposition to the scheme for assisting the Pacific Railway Company, and the consequent defeat of Sir John's Government. The Quebec members met and considered the overtures, but notwithstanding the fact that the Premier did not interfere with their consultations, to their credit be it said, they spurned the bribe, and remained true to their allegiances. One member of the Government, it appears, succumbed in a moment of weakness, and believing, no doubt, that the Government would fall, sent in his resignation. This was hon. John Costigan, Minister of Inland Revenue. His place will be easily filled by a more worthy man."

Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair to myself and those members from the Province of Quebec, who have acted with me from the beginning of this Session, and who, I hope, will act with me in the support of this Conservative Government, to say that it is entirely false that we ever had any opportunity of meeting to consider an overture of the hon. Mr. Blake. I suppose the paper means the hon. leader of the Opposition; and I suppose that the hon. leader of the Opposition—if, as I supposed, that is the hon. member specified—must have more respect for us than to think he would be justified in offering us a bribe of any kind. And it is fair to add, even if we had any overture of that kind, that the representatives of the Province of Quebec would consider it their duty not to meet or consider any bribe of that kind. In acting as we have, I may add—for some of our actions have looked strange to some members of the House—that we have acted in a constitutional way, making to the Government what we considered fair representations, as loyal supporters of, I would say, a just Government. We made our representations thinking they were good, and we insisted on them, and we shall ever insist on them as long as we think they are good. And we will never receive, nor shall we consider any attempts of that kind as a bribe for our support, or for changing our allegiance to our party or to the duty we owe to our country and to our Province. I think it is also fair to the hon. leader of the Opposition to say, that never any offer of that kind was made. I never expected to be treated either by the Government, or by the Opposition, as if we could be tempted by such a base bribe. I will say, Mr. Speaker, before I resume my seat, that I consider any attempt of that kind from the press, of what ever party—I consider any attempt of that kind, of intimidating members of this House, or of either side of this House, as an attempt to blackmail, and nothing else. I regret sincerely that the name of an hon. Minister whom I respect as one of my best personal friends I have in this House, and one of the best friends the representatives of the Province of Quebec have in this House, and have had since 1867—I regret that his name should have been mixed up in this matter. And I must say that the hon. Minister has never, to my knowledge, or to the knowledge of any of my friends, come near us either to seek to know what we were doing or what we were attempting to do. And I must say, that this last part of the article deserves an equal reprobation from the members on both sides of the House.

Mr. SCRIVER. I must regret that while the hon. gentleman was calling the attention of the House to the article of the Mail, he did not at the same time call its attention to the same statement which was made in the correspondence of the Montreal Gazette, and extend to the statement in that paper an equally emphatic contradiction to that which he has given to the statement in the Toronto paper.

Mr. BLAKE. As the House knows very well, it is not my custom to notice newspaper attacks; and on this occasion I would not have made an exception of that custom; but as my hon. friend has spoken on this subject as became him, I think I may in one word thank him for the language he has used. He and those with whom he acts have been opponents of mine for a great many years. We have not learned to agree with one another in opinion, but I trust that we have learned mutually to respect one another, and I should regard it as entirely beneath the sense of honour which ought to belong to any member of this House to suppose for one moment that he would be open to such overtures or suggestions as the article which my hon. friend has just read, speaks of having been made; and if I had thought that the hon. member and his compatriots had fallen so low as to be capable of being so approached, I should have had too much regard for my own honour to meddle in such a way with such persons. So, on both sides, it is entirely impossible that this could have happened. It is true, as the organ has said, there has been a base but unsuccessful conspiracy —and, as the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) says, it has now extended to the Montreal Gazette—to confound in a common dishonour the humble individual who now addresses you and the Conservative members from the Province of Quebec.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I shall only say, in addition to what has been already said in this matter, that I can, of course, vouch, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that there has been no unconstitutional or improper pressure brought upon the Government by those gentlemen who have been alluded to from the Province of Quebec. Some of them, in the exercise of their privileges, and I have no doubt, to other members of the Government, and their duties, have stated to me, certain matters which they thought, as representatives from Quebec, they ought to press upon the Government; but that there was anything like a bargain or improper suggestion, anything like force, moral or immoral, is directly untrue and erroneous. I will also say, in reference to my colleague, who was alluded to in that article, that his conduct is unexceptional in every possible way. He is now my colleague, Sir, and I hope will long remain so. And I would say, Sir, as his offer of his resignation has been alluded to in the press, it has been from personal motives altogether, not in the most remote degree connected with the Resolutions before the House. I regretted very much that he did so, and almost refused to present his proffer of his resignation to the Governor-General; and after explanations between him and myself, he has withdrawn his resignation and he stands a member of the Government as he has done ever since he has joined it.

Motion agreed to; and (at 3:15 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 21st February, 1884.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were severally introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 96) to amend the Law of Evidence in Criminal cases.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

Bill (No. 97) to amend the Criminal Law, and to declare it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded and exposed holes, openings, &c., cut in the ice on any navigable or frequented water.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

Bill (No. 98) to amend the law with reference to procedure in criminal cases and the duties of Justices of the Peace out of Sessions in relation to persons charged with indictable offences.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

Bill (No. 99) to consolidate and amend the Acts for the more speedy trial of persons charged with felonies and misdemeanors in the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

MR. SMITH'S SERVICES IN THE MILITIA DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex) enquired, Whether H. Smith, of Cobourg, was in the employment of the Militia Department at any time between the 1st of July, 1883, and the 1st of January, 1884; if so, in what capacity; if in more than one capacity, the nature of his employment in each capacity, and the length of time, and his salary or emoluments in each?

Mr. CARON. The services of Major H. Smith, are as follows:— He was appointed Lieutenant of the Cobourg Rifle Company, on the 16th March, 1866; Adjutant of the 40th Battalion on the 5th of October, 1866; Brigade-Major in District No. 3, from the 12th January, 1872, to the 1st of May, 1876, at a salary of $800, with $8 efficient company allowance. He was reappointed Adjutant of the 40th Battalion on the 11th August, 1882; with pay of $3 per day and allowances of rations and lodging. He was attached to a regular regiment at Halifax for three months prior to his appointment as Captain in the Infantry School Corps. He is stationed at Toronto.

ASSUMPTION OF WHARVES AND PIERS BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. DAVIES, in the absence of Mr. KING, enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to take over all or any of the wharves and piers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and to refund to the Local Governments of these Provinces the moneys laid out by them on these wharves or piers since Confederation?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government has come to no decision in this matter.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, What is the Government Engineer's estimate of the cost of construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops? What is the estimated distance? What is the estimated cost of equipment?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Chief Engineer's estimate of the cost of construction from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops, is $12,000,000; rolling stock $800,000, making altogether $12,800,000, which provides also for rolling stock sufficient for the line from the crest of the Rocky Mountains to Port Moody.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, What is the Government Engineer's estimate of the cost of construction of the remainder of the Canadian Pacific Railway on the Lake Superior and Nipissing divisions? What is the estimated cost of constructing the heavy section of from 95 to 100 miles? What is the estimated cost of equipment?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Chief Engineer's estimate of the cost of construction on the Canadian Pacific Railway on the Lake Superior and Nipissing divisions, 450 miles, including all the work done hitherto, is $16,300,000, rolling stock, $900,000, making together $17,200,000. The Chief Engineer's estimate of the cost of constructing the heavy section of the road, from 5 to 100 miles, is $7,400,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will notice that I asked specially for the cost of the remainder of the Lake Superior and Nipissing divisions, exclusive of that already constructed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will allow the question to stand, I will supplement my answer by that information to-morrow.

Mr. BLAKE. The question need not stand, but the hon. gentleman can let me have the present information and give the other to-morrow.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Is it the intention to run the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers next season from Owen Sound? If so, are they to touch regularly at Algoma Mills?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would say, that it is not yet quite determined from what point these steamers will run during the present season.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex).

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT OF 1883.

Mr. KIRK enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to provide for the salaries of Commissioners and other expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of the Liquor License Act of 1883, in districts where the License Fund will be insufficient to meet the same?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That matter is under the consideration of the Government, and a measure will be brought down on the subject.

CARRYING DANGEROUS WEAPONS.

Mr. McMULLEN enquired, Whether a Justice of the Peace is authorized to empound a pistol, carried on the person, in the event of committal under chapter 30, of 40th Victoria?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a question of law which I do not think the Government should be called upon to answer.

PARLIAMENTARY PRACTICE.

Mr. SPEAKER. Before calling the Orders of the Day, I wish to state that since the last sitting of the House, I have looked into the practice relative to members in the Chamber being called upon to vote, and I do not find any recorded instance of that kind since Confederation. Prior to that date, the practice seems to be well established, that a member who is in the Chamber can be called on to vote, and must vote unless he has a direct pecuniary interest in the question upon which the vote is taken, or unless he is excused from voting by the House, in which case a resolution should be proposed and recorded on the Minutes. I think in future, perhaps, it would be well that that rule should be adhered to.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it was well, Mr. Speaker, that you have made this announcement, and I have no doubt it is in accordance with parliamentary law. Of course there is one difficulty which arises from a strict observance of this rule, and one upon which we should have a clear understanding, and that is with reference to the question of pairs. In England, from which we obtain our parliamentary practice, any member who is in the Chamber at the time of voting cannot excuse himself by declaring that he has paired; consequently, the only mode in which a pair can be made available is by a member absenting himself from the Chamber. If we are to adopt the modification which practice has created on this subject, of course that is a question for the House to consider, and there is no doubt that it is only by our practice, and by objection not being taken, that the validity of an excuse for not voting by pairing has remained up to this time. I merely take this opportunity of saying that perhaps it would be as well to come to a clear understanding on the subject, else there might be some confusion when a member is called upon to vote, as it might be held that it would be no excuse for him to refrain from voting, that he had paired.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt the hon. gentleman has spoken correctly with regard to the practice in England, because pairing is recognized in England as well as here, but here a member is bound to absent himself if he has paired. I am not at all sure whether their practice is the better one. In the English Parliament the pairing goes on and the pairs are announced, as arranged by the whips, the next morning—that Mr. so and so, has paired with Mr. so and so. It occurs to me that if an hon. gentleman has paired, it is infinitely more satisfactory, if he be called upon to vote, that he should up and say that he had paired. I think it is a great deal better if a man has paired that he should state so from his place, so that his constituents may know that though his vote does not appear in the division, he has not neglected his duty, because he has paired with a gentleman who has a different view on a particular question.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That has been our practice.

Mr. BLAKE. There is one respect in which the English practice is more satisfactory than ours, and that is, that when a member pairs there, the statement that he has paired includes also the fact as to what question, and what side of a question, he has paired for or against. You find that those particulars are stated, and you know therefore the mode in which the hon. gentleman would have voted. I remember an occasion on which the hon. gentleman paired with a late colleague of his, Sir George Cartier, and no one could find out which way he would have voted; and until the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) moved his Bill the other day, there always existed some doubt as to what were the sentiments of the hon. gentleman and those of his colleague, Sir George Cartier, on that question. Therefore, I would suggest this amendment—that when any hon. gentleman is called upon to vote and excuses himself on the ground that he has paired with an hon. gentleman, he should state the way in which he would have voted had he not paired.

Mr. SPEAKER. There might be some rule established from this time in this way—that when an hon. member declares that he has paired with another member, it shall be recorded in the Minutes that he has paired with some hon. member for or against the motion.

RETURNS.

Mr. PLATT. Before the Orders of the Day are taken up, I wish to enquire of the whereabouts of a certain return ordered in the early part of last Session, in reference to the carrying of mails in Prince Edward County. The Secretary of State's Report mentions this return as having been presented to the House under the heading, "Synopsis of returns presented to the House of Commons in 1883," and I have been unable to ascertain where it is. It is stated to have been presented to the House on May 22nd, before the close of last Session.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand from the Clerk that while that return is mentioned in the report of the Secretary of State, as having been presented, we have no record of its having been presented here.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I understand that the report is in error, and I will look into the matter.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call attention to the returns that were laid on the Table in response to an Address of the House about four weeks ago with reference to the office of High Commissioner. I mentioned once or twice that it was my intention to invite the attention of the House to the position of the hon. Minister of Railways and of the High Commissioner, and I desired this information for the purpose of acquainting the House with the facts that were material to a discussion of the question; and I called the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that it was extremely inconvenient that there should be any delay in presenting the information demanded. The Address was moved and granted on the 25th of January. It took just four weeks to bring down the return, which consists of a portion of one page of paper, containing a copy of an Order in Council recommending the appointment of Sir Charles Tupper as the successor to Sir Alexander Galt, and that is all that is brought down. The Address, however, required copies of all Orders in Council, correspondence, commissions, and instructions, touching the appointment of the present High Commissioner, touching the discharge of the duties of the Minister of Railways during his absence in England as High Commissioner, and touching the discharge of the duties of the High Commissioner during his absence in Canada as Minister of Railways. The Order in Council orders that a commission shall issue, but no commission is brought down; there is no answer to that part of the Address at all. The only communication brought down is that in compliance with the request contained in an Address to the House of Commons, a copy of the Order in Council is transmitted. If there was nothing else to be brought down, I understand it to be the usual course and the only respectful course, that there should be a statement from the proper officer that there are no papers answering the demand of the Address. If there have been no commissions, no correspondence, no instructions, we ought to know it; we do not know it because there is no statement one way or the other; and this paper is manifestly an improper return. On the same day an Order of the House of Commons was passed, "for copies of all correspondence relating to any payments, claims or allowances on any account whatever in respect of the office of High Commissioner, not already brought down, and separate statements, in detail, with dates and sums of all payments made on any such accounts in respect of the office, during its tenure by Sir A. T. Galt, and by the present incumbent respectively, and an estimate, in detail, of all sums payable on any such accounts, up to this date, and yet unpaid; also for copies of correspondence as to the letting of a residence for the High Commissioner, and statement of the terms and of the sums payable for rent, taxes and other charges in respect of such residence and the date of the letting." The only answer to that return is a letter from the Auditor-General, enclosing two papers, one of which gives in some detail, though not with the dates that are material, some of the payments made during the tenure of the office by Sir A. T. Galt. The other paper gives a statement of the payments made during the tenure of the office by Sir Charles Tupper. It is this: "1883-84—removed expenses of Sir Charles Tupper, per account of the 21st September, 1883, $636," without any date of the payment at all; "Bank of Montreal, London—credit cheque of High Commissioner, $3,893 33," without any date of the payment, without the letter of credit, or any details of the payments which were made in respect of that cheque. There is no statement here at all, that I can find, of payments that I am informed were made during the tenure of office by Sir A. T. Galt by the Department of Agriculture and Immigration to that gentleman. I think that some of the reports indicated, and my information is that such payments were made. This Address asks for statements in detail, with dates of all payments, claims or allowances, on any account whatever, and there is no statement of this, although, unless I am grievously misinformed, such payments were made in respect to the Department of Immigration, and I presume from the general account we have received, as to the discharge of the duties by the present Minister, some such payments have been made during his incumbency of office as High Commissioner. There is nothing stated to show that there are any sums accruing, due, and yet unpaid, and if there are any, we want an account of them. The Address called also for copies of correspondence, and there is no answer to that. Perhaps there is no correspondence, but we want to know if there is. Inasmuch as the Order in Council appointing Sir Charles Tupper High Commissioner, declares that his travelling expenses will be paid in the same manner as those of Sir Alexander Galt, and inasmuch as it appears by the paper before me that during Sir Alexander Galt's incumbency, the gross sum for house rent, fuel, and other contingencies, was ordered to be paid by Order in Council, the payment of Sir Charles Tupper's expenses was, no doubt, ordered in the same way, and I think that paper should be brought down, as it will indicate the mode and principle on which such payments were made. I trust we shall have full information at the earliest possible moment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The usual practice, when a return is moved for, is to send to the Department where the permanent officers prepare it, and it is then looked over by the Minister presenting it, to see that it satisfies the requirements of the House. In this case it is obvious the returns are altogether imperfect, and we will see that the full return is supplied.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the practice is to send all returns to the Secretary of State in the first place, and he is to see that they are all supplied.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The practice is certainly that all returns are sent by the officer of this House to the Secretary of State, who looks over them and sends them to the proper Department. Sometimes, as in this case, a return may require to go to more than one Department, and it is likely the hon. Secretary of State, or his officers, sent this to the Minister of Finance, and was not aware that the Department of Agriculture was in any way connected with it. Therefore, there was no demand made on that Department.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have just received a note saying that an hon. member of this House has called the attention of the Auditor-General to the fact that the returns of the details of expenditure were not complete, and the Auditor-General said he would have, as soon as possible, supplementary returns furnished and sent to the Department of the Secretary of State.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A return was asked for last year in the matter of timber licenses which appears not to have been brought down. Will the hon. First Minister take a note of this?

Mr. BLAKE. I find that a great portion of the delay which takes place in printing returns arises from the fact that they have been delayed after they were ready for presentation. I do not charge the Secretary of State with the delay because he may have delivered the return to the proper Minister, but a very considerable portion of the delay is caused after the returns are ready for presentation.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. At the opening of this Session the Department of the Secretary of State sent a circular to each of the public Departments, stating what reports had not been answered, and the returns, as received, were sent forthwith, with the exception of two or three papers that have been lying on my table from the beginning of this Pacific Railway question. None of those reports have been left standing in the Departments any one day.

Mr. DAVIES. I would ask when I may expect to get a return of the reports of the steamboat inspectors.

Mr. McLELAN. I will see that they are prepared and brought down.

FRAUD IN SALE OF PATENT RIGHTS.

Mr. MULOCK moved the third reading of Bill (No. 26) for the better prevention of fraud in connection with the sale of patent rights.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not object to the third reading of the Bill, although I agree to it with a good deal of hesitation. It has been strongly impressed upon me that the sale of these fraudulent patent has become a crying nuisance and is a case for special legislation. I regret very much that these frauds have been so extensive as to require special legislation.

Bill read the third time.

Mr. BLAKE.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. MULOCK, in moving the second reading of the Bill (No. 52) further to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, said: the first clause of the Bill is as follows:—

"In any case where a railway is constructed across or along any public highway, on the level, it shall not be lawful for any railway company wilfully to permit any, or any portion of any engine, tender or car belonging to or then used by such company, to stand on any part of such highway for a longer period than two minutes at one time."

As I understand the position of railway companies at the present time, in respect to this mode of working their railways, they are entitled to construct and to maintain their lines upon the public highways, across and along them; along the highways, of course, with the sanction of the municipalities. They are entitled by their general powers to cross with their trains, and, so far as may be deemed necessary to obstruct the highways by allowing their trains to stop upon the crossings. It appears to me that railway companies have abused this power, and have, to a large extent, come to a conclusion that they can utilize the public highways as long as they may deem it necessary to have their trains standing on such crossings. I do not think the evil is local, but, that throughout the whole country, railways now obstruct highways just so long as it suits them. Moreover, whilst they are apparently endeavouring to consult the convenience of the public, I think they consult it, but to a partial extent. It is usual in some parts of the country for railways to open their freight trains, where they are standing for a length of time near crossings, but they do not open them sufficiently wide to enable vehicles to pass through with absolute safety. They merely make a narrow opening between their box cars, and the public run the risk of danger both from the cars closing upon them when they are passing through, and from horses taking fright by being compelled to pass too close to these frightening objects. Accordingly, it appeared to me proper that, where trains are cut in two in this way, they should stand entirely off the highway, and the public should have the full use of their own highway—in fact, that the public should not be compelled to provide yard room for the railways. The object of the second section of the Bill is to give a wider definition to the word "village," as used in Sections 76 and 77 of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879. Sections 76 and 77 of the Consolidated Act of 1879 provide that "no locomotive or railway engine shall pass in or through any thickly peopled city, town or village at a speed greater than six miles per hour, unless the track is properly fenced." It has been held by the courts that this restriction on speed does not apply where the line is through a village that is not incorporated. Of course, I presume that what the Legislature aimed at was that, where there was a thickly peopled portion of the country, whether incorporated or unincorporated, certain safeguards should be adopted, namely: either fencing the line or the reduction of speed, but it has been held that this term "village" is used in its technical sense of an incorporated village. It appears to me that it is proper to give it the wider signification, and that the true reason for limiting the speed should be the character of the neighbourhood, not the circumstance whether it is incorporated or unincorporated.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have no objection to the second reading of the Bill if the hon. gentleman proposes to send it to the Committee on Railways. The period of two minutes seems to be very short, and I think the railway company should be heard in the Railway Committee as to the first clause; and, as to the second clause, it is very hard to define where an unincorporated village begins and where it ends. Some villages are very straggling. For instance, in the Province of Quebec, you see a long line of houses for miles, built so close together that they may be called a village. The heart of it, where there are two or three houses together, is generally called the village, and there must be some means of ascertaining where the village ends and the country begins. That, of course, can be considered in the Railway Committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, Sir, but it might be as well that there should be a little expression of opinion on the point to which my hon. friend has alluded. Most of us know, by unpleasant personal experience, that the Railway Company do habitually interfere with the convenience, and often with the safety of the public, by their habit of keeping their trains for very long periods of time standing across a frequented highway. I can state, from my own personal knowledge, that I have again and again and again, seen railway trains standing for twenty minutes and more across a street which, I suppose, would be traversed, in the ordinary course of things, by at least 100 vehicles in that time. Therefore, my hon. friend has done good service in calling attention to the habitual infraction of the ordinary rights of passengers on ordinary highways by the railways. As to the time he has fixed, whether it should be two minutes or not, that is a proper subject for consideration by the Railway Committee, but there is no doubt that the companies do abuse the power granted to them in crossing public highways in cities to a very great extent. I think the members of the House who were on the Railway Committee can testify, as I can, to this fact.

Mr. FARROW. I can testify as well as the hon. gentleman from South Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) that under the present law the public suffer great inconvenience. About one mile west of a little town in my county there is what they call a "Y". There is a public road crossing the railway, and the freight trains stop there across that road sometimes from ten minutes to three-quarters of an hour. When people make representations to men in charge of the trains, they can get no satisfaction. The train men are above all law and all authority. I shall go heart and soul for the support of that Bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If there is one fault to be found with this Bill it is that it does not go far enough. Speaking on behalf of the farmers of the country, I say that the way they are treated by railway corporations is most disgraceful. There is not a single country pretending to have civilized governments where the public submit to such exactions and conduct from railway companies, as they do in Canada. Why, in England they would not permit a railway to cross the smallest road where there is the least possible amount of traffic, unless they constructed a bridge or sub-way. Now, it seems to me that in this country the public put up with a degree of ill-treatment from corporations of all descriptions that is simply astounding. Where I live there is a railway crossing in the village of Allandale on the Northern Railway. There is not a day in the year when life and property are not in danger from that crossing, and it is a matter for wonder that there are not more accidents. There is another crossing in my county where there is a considerable amount of traffic, and nobody can pass on that crossing without incurring a certain amount of danger. Accidents have occurred and accidents will occur, but the public seem to care nothing about it. It is nobody's business to take up the matter, and so they continue to suffer. It seems to me the proper way to deal with this question is to reverse the policy of the Railway Consolidation Act; and, instead of railways being required to make bridges only when they are asked to do so, or when they are called upon to do so by the Railway Committee, the Act ought to compel them to make bridges, or sub-ways over all roads, unless they are specially exempted from doing so. That is the proper course for the country to pursue. In my own neighborhood there is not a day when life and property are not in danger from the actions of the railway company. Considering the extent to which this country is subsidising railway companies, the least thing the farmers of this country, who are the most interested, and the general travelling public who drive along the roads, have a right to ask, is that the Government insist upon these companies taking measures which will make it safe for people to cross their railways. I hope the hon. Minister of Railways will take the matter into consideration. He cannot do less, under existing circumstances, in view of the great increase of travel, the great increase in the number of trains, and the great privileges and assistance that railway companies are getting from this country. The least the Government can do is to alter, to reverse, our present policy, and, instead of making it incumbent on them to put bridges only where they are required to do so, they should be compelled to put bridges in all cases unless they are specially exempted.

MARITIME COURT OF ONTARIO.

Mr. ALLEN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 70) to extend the jurisdiction of the Maritime Court of Ontario.

Mr. DAVIES. There is a provision in this Bill that I think ought not to be adopted; I refer to the clause which prescribes that a ship shall be liable to attachment for cost of repairs, or supplies furnished to the ship, when the owner resides in the same Province. This to introduce a new principle altogether, that whether the owner resides in the Province or not, proceedings may be taken in rem against the ship for supplies furnished. I do not think it is in the power of this Parliament to apply the principle to other Provinces. You cannot supersede the jurisdiction of Vice Admiralty Courts, which derive their jurisdiction from Imperial legislation, and add the principle of this Bill quoad the Ontario Courts. You have one law in Ontario, and one law in Quebec. Besides, the principle is not sound. I do not see why a ship chandler, or other person who supplies goods to a ship, should not rely upon the credit of the owner, if the owner is in the Province; why he should have a right to attach the ship by proceedings in rem against it. Such a principle has never been introduced into Imperial legislation. I think it is calculated to operate unjustly against the owners of ships if it is applied here, and the hon. gentlemen promoting the Bill has given no reasons for it.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House comes from the Maritime Provinces. He objects to this Bill because it is not in accordance with the English law. Now, Sir, I simply wish to state to the House that the Maritime Act now in force in Ontario, is based on the Maritime law of England. That law provides that where the owner of any vessel has made repairs, or has purchased supplies for his vessel, and he lives within the country, there is no maritime lien. I have not heard the hon. gentleman give any good reason why a vessel belonging to this country, and the owner of which resides in this country, should escape the responsibility of a lien. Why should there be a lien against a foreign vessel for its supplies and repairs and no lien against a home vessel? This matter has been before the United States Congress, and a special committee made a very voluminous report. That report states that there is no reason at all why a home vessel should be treated differently from a foreign vessel. These vessels are often in ports where the owners are not known, where the responsibility of the owners is not known. They require repairs, they require goods to be furnished, in order to complete their voyage; they require repairs on account of disasters in the lakes, probably, and it is as much in the interests of the vessel owners themselves as it is in the interests of the people who furnish the supplies, that this law should be enforced.

I do not understand why the Maritime law should not give complete protection to people who do repairs, and supplying necessaries, the owner of the vessel obtains the value of the repairs and necessaries. Why is it that in our own country, and in regard to vessels belonging to our own people, persons furnishing supplies have to look to the owners for payment, whereas, in the case of vessels belonging to a foreign country or owned outside of this Province, those furnishing supplies have a lien on the vessel? There is no reason for that distinction. Our law provides, that seamen's wages, charges for towage and certain other charges shall form a lien against the vessel, no matter whether it belongs to this country, or a foreign country. Why the law should stop there, has always been a mystery to me. It is in the interest of the vessel owner, and certainly it is in the interest of those furnishing supplies, that the vessel should be responsible for what she gets. Taking this view of the case, I trust the Bill introduced by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Allen) will receive the consideration of the House, and that at this early stage it will not be rejected, because after full discussion it will appear that the reasons why this Bill should become law are so substantial and good the House will ultimately pass it. It is not necessary at this early stage of the Bill that I should enter at length into the reasons why it should be placed on the Statute Book, suffice it to say that there are persons who supply vessels from one end of the country to the other who know to their cost the defect in the present law, and who hold that if a vessel receives supplies or has repairs done, it is only just that the vessel should be held responsible. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) urges the old reason against this measure, that because it is not the law in England it should not be the law here. That is no valid reason, however, why the Bill should not be passed. The United States has a Maritime law, and every country which has a marine should have a Maritime law, because it is the only way of adjusting claims between claimants and owners. In the United States they have changed the law, making it different from the law of England and providing that vessels themselves shall be responsible for the repairs or supplies furnished them. I cannot understand why there should be any distinction between supplies and repairs, and any other lien so far as the responsibility of the vessel itself is concerned. I trust the Bill will receive a second reading and that when it comes up again the House will have an opportunity of discussing its merits.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I hope the Bill of the hon. member for North Grey will receive a second reading and meet with the approbation of the House. I quite agree with the views expressed by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister). I have had a little personal experience in carrying out the Maritime Act of Ontario, and it is a great inconvenience that vessels coming from a long distance should be allowed to obtain supplies and repairs, that workmen should be employed, and these men be deprived of their pay. It is not always an easy matter, for reasons which will suggest themselves to the minds of hon. members, to obtain payment from the owners. On a search being made at the port where the vessel is registered, it is perhaps found that the vessel belongs to some persons whom no one expected owned her, or that a mortgage exists. I am satisfied that great hardship occurs on account of the lack of a law of this kind. There is a certain law on the American side of the great lakes and rivers, and a different law on the Canadian side, and difficulty arises in consequence. If we had a similar law it would be a great improvement. I was surprised that the hon. member for Queen's, who is a distinguished law reformer, should object to the Bill mainly because it is not the law in England. I think he should have taken very much higher ground.

Mr. LISTER.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstood my remarks. I said that the law in England governed in the case of the Maritime Provinces, and you have no power to sue in the Vice-Admiralty Court under the provisions of the proposed Act. You will thus have one law in one Province and a different law in an adjoining Province, and I think that is not right.

Mr. PATTERSON. I accept the hon. member's explanation. A Session or two ago the Minister of Justice announced that he would bring this question under the notice of the Imperial Government with a view to having a uniform Act for the whole Dominion. It would be interesting to know what has been the result of the correspondence. I admit the hon. member for Queen's is correct in regard to the law in the Maritime Provinces; but in Ontario we are under the Ontario Act, and my experience, and the experience of the hon. member for Lambton, are identical in this matter, and I shall be very happy to do anything in my power to further the Bill of the hon. member for North Grey.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Two hon. members have stated that they approve of the principle of the Bill, and hope it will go to a second reading, and be afterwards discussed on its merits. That is an unparliamentary practice; the discussion should take place on the second reading. I have not had an opportunity of discussing this Bill with the Minister of Justice. Now that the attention of hon. members has been called to it, I think the second reading had better stand over, as we ought not to give it a second reading and affirm the principle unless the House is fully satisfied as to the merits of the Bill. I repeat that the attention of the House having been called to the Bill, its merits having been spoken to very shortly, and perhaps, not quite satisfactorily, it is desirable that the second reading should stand over. I therefore move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CUSTOMS OFFICIALS IN INVERNESS COUNTY, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness), in moving for copies of all petitions and correspondence relative to the necessity of increasing the number of Customs officials at Cheticamp, Mabou, Port Hood, Whycocomah, West Bay, and Hawkesbury, Inverness, Nova Scotia, said: In moving this motion I desire to say a few words in order to show the reason why I intend to ask for the papers and correspondence referred to. At the outset I may assure this House that I, as a representative of the Island of Cape Breton, occupy a very peculiar and uncomfortable position in this House. I find that, to a large extent, I receive no particular sympathy from the representatives of Nova Scotia proper. But I might as well at this stage, state once for all, the peculiar position that not only I, but all the representatives from the Island of Cape Breton, occupy in this House. Years ago, Sir, just after Confederation, the subject of better terms for Nova Scotia occupied a very prominent position in the minds of the people of that Province, and among them, myself. At that time I had the pleasure of writing a letter to the Hon. Sir John Rose, on that subject. I now propose to read it, as it will place before the people of this Dominion the exact position which I occupied on that question at that time. It was as follows:—

“MABOU, 21st January, 1869.

“DEAR SIR,—I observe that Hon. Joseph Howe and Mr. McLellan have left this Province to meet you at Portland, in order to settle, if possible, the Nova Scotia difficulty. I, therefore, beg leave to call your attention to the necessity of considering the claims of the Island of Cape Breton, in any modifications which may be made in the Union scheme. Nova Scotia has its railroads and other advantages, for which this Island had, since its annexation to Nova Scotia, been heavily taxed. This Island is larger than Prince Edward's, had its own Government in its day, and is as populous and of more importance to the Dominion than Prince Edward's Island. Nova Scotia Governments had always, previous to Confederation, neglected this Island, St Peter's Canal being the only offset to all the Nova Scotia public works, which cost over nine millions of money. If Prince Edward's Island comes into the Union, it must be under much more favourable terms than Cape Breton, which is much more important in its natural resources. The local requirements of this Island will be neglected by all Local Governments, for the want of that influence which numerical strength in representation always commands.

"Justice would give this Island the same terms in the Confederacy which Prince Edward Island shall obtain, with its fixed number of Senators, and consideration as a separate Colony, even without a Local Government, which ensures several advantages to that Colony, if, or when confederated. Unless something of that kind be done for Cape Breton, modification to satisfy Nova Scotia proper, may not better our condition in the slightest degree. Hoping that those few earnest hints will attract your influential attention, to the requirements of over eighty thousand people, dragged into the Union against their will, of whom many are daily emigrating to the neighbouring republic.

"I have the honour to be, dear Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"H. CAMERON, M.P."

To that letter I received the following reply:—

"OTTAWA, 30th January, 1869.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I am in receipt of your note of the 20th inst. The observations contained in it I have read with much interest. I assure you I am not insensible to the isolated position of Cape Breton, and I hope that the arrangements which we have now concluded with Mr. Howe and Mr. McLellan will place at the disposal of the Local Government ample means for assisting the services to which you refer. These arrangements are substantially that Nova Scotia comes in with a debt of $1,100,000 more under the Union, and receives about $90,000 a year for ten years, besides other collateral advantages.

"Mr. Howe and Mr. McLellan are entirely satisfied with the conclusion at which we have arrived, and it will place Nova Scotia in a position of financial ease that will enable her to meet all local requirements both as respects steamboat service and roads and bridges.

"I have spoken to Mr. Howe on the subject of your letter—he goes down immediately to Nova Scotia—and the statement which he will be able to make ought, I think, to be satisfactory to even the most exacting.

"You will readily see, that however much truth there may be in the statement you make of the claims of Cape Breton as a part from Nova Scotia proper, that we have no power to alter the constitutional arrangements under the Union Act, or to consider the Island other than an integral part of the Province. But I shall be glad to discuss all these matters with you when you come up for the session, which will probably be about the end of March.

"Believe me to be,
"Very faithfully yours,
"JOHN ROSE."

"H. CAMERON, Esq.,
"Mabou, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia."

Over fifteen years have elapsed since that time, and I regret to say that my anticipations have been fully realized, and notwithstanding the fact that a large amount of money has since that time been placed at the disposal of the Local Governments, not even one dollar of that large amount has been expended on the Island of Cape Breton. It may be said, that we have no right to complain here, that it is cowardly to attack the Local Governments who are not here to defend themselves. But, Sir, as I occupy the position of a representative of the Island of Cape Breton, I shall not hesitate to complain of the conduct of the Local Governments in Nova Scotia whenever I feel that they have failed to discharge every part of their duty, in aiding and assisting Cape Breton when necessary. Now, Sir, at that time I only advocated that Cape Breton should have a fair consideration in the Confederacy—such a consideration as Prince Edward Island had to obtain before she would accept the Union. Although we do not yet, in Cape Breton, ask for the same consideration that Prince Edward Island has received, I may as well now, once for all, tell this House that the day is fast coming when the people of Cape Breton, unless their services are attended to more satisfactorily than heretofore, particularly by the Local Government, will ask for Home Rule. Over $3,000,000 have been expended in Nova Scotia proper since Confederation upon railways, and notwithstanding that we make claims here for subsidies from the Dominion, we complain the Local Government in Nova Scotia failed to give us any aid whatever for railway purposes. I may be informed by members from Nova Scotia that all possible aid has been given for railway extension in Cape Breton. Leading people who do not know the facts have been led to believe that they really did expend some money on railways in Cape Breton. Unfortunately, while the agitation existed in Nova Scotia for the extension of railways east and west, Cape Breton was put off with mere promises. But this matter I shall discuss on a future day. My object to-day is only to make a statement to this House relative to the position which we in Cape Breton occupy, in order that this House will at least excuse us, when we undertake to press the claims of that island for more consideration than it has yet received. We complain that sufficient attention has not yet been given to other services as well as the railway service on that island, not the least of which is the protection of the revenue, particularly in the county of Inverness. For several years representations have been made to me from all sections of the county with reference to the necessity of protecting the revenue in various localities in that county, and years ago as well as lately I have visited the Department of Customs and pressed my views upon the Department to the best of my power. While I am ready to acknowledge that I received on all occasions the most courteous treatment, I must admit that I always failed to convince the Department that there was any necessity for further protecting the revenue on that side of the island of Cape Breton. We do not complain so much of the amount of smuggling which is carried on on the coast of that county as we complain that most of the smuggling is done in ardent spirits. The county of Inverness is, I believe, one of the most temperate counties in the Dominion of Canada. I believe also that the temperance advocates in that county are those who generally complain of the necessity of protecting the revenue, particularly with the view of preventing this kind of smuggling. The answer I invariably received in the Department was that the amount of revenue collected in the county of Inverness did not justify any increase in the expenditure. At first sight the objection was reasonable; but my impression is that the smallness of the revenue is the strongest evidence on the face of it why the protection to the revenue should be increased. Notwithstanding all that, I failed to convince the Department that there was much necessity for an increase. I hold that the amount of the imports and exports in an outlying constituency of the Dominion is not a correct indication of the quantity of goods consumed in that constituency. The exports from Nova Scotia in 1883 amounted to $9,820,332, and the imports to $9,042,017, showing a balance in favor of Nova Scotia of $778,315. The exports from the whole Island of Cape Breton, as shown by the trade returns, only amounted to $531,005, and the imports into the whole Island amounted to only $246,358, showing a balance in favor of the Island of $334,697. Now, Sir, every reasonable person on the Island of Cape Breton who knows anything about the trade of that Island, must admit that the imports and the exports are much larger than they are shown to be by the trade returns. I contend, and I contend with reason, that the exports from that Island amount to more than one-fifth of the total exports from the Province of Nova Scotia. It is true, the exports from the Island are not all made from the ports of the Island, for Halifax, which is the principle outport for the productions of the whole Province of Nova Scotia, exports a part of the productions of the Island of Cape Breton. While the trade returns represent that the exports from Inverness County amount to only $117,005, I think I can conclusively prove that the actual exports from that county amount to $380,000, or nearly eight times the amount represented by the trade returns. In order to explain the position more clearly to the House, I beg to call attention to the imports and exports at the various ports of the Island, which were as follows:—

	Imports.	Exports.
Arichat .....	$ 24,883	$ 33,623
Beddeck .....	16,392	97,926
Hawksbury.....	17,176	113,445
Port Hood.....	903	3,560
Sydney.....	42,262	204,360
North Sydney.....	144,752	128,141
	$246,358	$581,055

Now, Sir, the imports into a county depend upon the purchasing power of the people of that county. With the exception of Prince Edward Island, which is the best agricultural section of this whole Dominion; in that respect the island of Cape Breton presents as good a face as any other portion of the Maritime Provinces, and as good a face as more than one-half of the constituencies of the greater Provinces. I shall not discuss the productions of the whole Province but shall briefly refer to those of Cape Breton. In 1881 Cape Breton produced, as shown by census returns, 49,468 bushels of wheat; 529,259 bushels of oats; 1,226,842 bushels of potatoes, and 105,825 tons of hay—and this statement which I have before me gives the production of all the counties of the Province. Inverness alone produces 21,854 bushels of wheat, 256,483 bushels of oats, 435,533 bushels of potatoes, 47,816 tons of hay; and from the said statement, I conclude that the island of Cape Breton has comparatively a better agricultural section than the Province of Nova Scotia, and also that the county of Inverness is the best agricultural county on the whole Island—I may even go further and say it is the best in the whole Province of Nova Scotia. In proportion to its area and population, Inverness is the most productive county in Nova Scotia, and if we had the same railway facilities and harbours from which to distribute the productions of that island, it would give encouragement for greater production; and I have no hesitation to say that the production of that county would be doubled. But the difficulties in the way of distributing the products of that county are such that the people are discouraged from producing much more than is required for home consumption. By comparing the statistics of the various counties, I have arrived at the following conclusion with respect to Inverness. Inverness produces only a few tons of hay less than the counties of Richmond, Queen's, Shelburne, and Yarmouth, and hay is a great index of the productiveness of the soil in any constituency. Inverness produces 43,471 bushels of potatoes more than the counties of Richmond, Guysborough and Queen's; as much wheat as Yarmouth, Guysborough, Shelburne and Queen's; and more oats than Richmond, Guysborough, Queen's, Shelburne, Yarmouth, Lunenburg, Annapolis, Digby and Halifax. Yet, strange to say, nearly all these counties have a railway and Inverness has not, and the fact that we are without a railway only proves what we could produce if we had such facilities. The exports of Nova Scotia consist largely of fish and I find by the trade returns that the export from Inverness is more than the average from the whole Province. I have reason to know that the export of fish from Inverness last year amounted to over $500,000 and yet the trade returns only allow us $117,000 for all our exports; but the exports of fish from Inverness do not show on the trade returns as coming from the Port of Inverness, but as coming from the port of Halifax which is the point of distribution. The exports of cattle from Inverness amounted to not less than $150,000; butter, $100,000; canned beef and mutton $50,000; sheep $10,000; horses $10,000; in all $320,000, yet the trade returns only show $117,000, thus misrepresenting the productiveness of Inverness to the amount of nearly $700,000. Besides the productiveness as shown by the statistics already quoted I may refer to other indications of productiveness in that county. In 1880, as shown by the census returns, Inverness had 5,532 horses a greater number than then existed in any county of the Province 458 working oxen,

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness).

29,843 cattle, 45,453 sheep,—or more cattle and sheep than in any other county—5,573 swine, being more swine than in any other county; 117,081 pounds of wool, or more wool than in any other county; 649,276 lbs. of butter; 153,083 lbs. of cheese; 9,549 lbs. of flax; 147,211 yards of home made cloth and flannel,—more than was produced in any other county in the Province; 5,792 yards linens; 3,730 bushel apples, which is small as compared to the Annapolis Valley I admit; other fruits 913 bushels; maple sugar 5,668 lbs. I have given these statistics to show that the exports and imports of Inverness must be very much larger than shown by the trade returns; and the same remark applies to every county on the Island. This was an old argument used against the Island when we pressed our claims for public improvements, but it is an argument that is very fallacious. It may be asked, is there any smuggling? I am sorry to say there is, particularly in ardent spirits, to a very great extent. In order to show that is the case I beg to refer to a report in the local paper in our shire town which is as follows:

"Schooner Harriet Tory, of Souris, P. E. I., 59 tons, was seized in this harbour on Sunday last, the 16th instant, for violation of the Customs laws, in having on board a cargo of smuggled goods, consisting chiefly of liquors. The vessel and cargo are now in the hands of the collector. It seems our temperance Finance Minister, has not been more successful in producing a home supply of brandy, rum, whiskey and gin, than he has been in that of 'cotton, sugar and glass-ware,' by his National Policy for the foregoing article is still being imported."

My object in reading this is to show that, in that locality, there is considerable smuggling, and, when I assure this House that that is only one small village of a number of villages in the county, they must conclude with me that, if a large quantity of goods has been taken there, a large quantity is also unfortunately carried to our shores for the purpose of sale in the other villages. There are not less than six or seven villages in the county as large as that of Port Hood, and the want of harbours on the north-west coast of Cape Breton only encourages the smuggling trade. The trade is not always, in fact it is very seldom, carried on by our own people, from the simple fact that our people unfortunately do not own many vessels, and they do not own many vessels because they have no harbours on the north side of the island into which vessels, except of very small tonnage, can enter. Therefore it is not our own people, as a rule, that engage in this traffic, but people who find it a profitable business engage in it, and deluge the country with liquor, nearly altogether smuggled liquor. When I call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the fact that only $98, or thereabouts, was collected for revenue in the whole County of Inverness, from the Strait of Canso to Cape North, he must conclude with me that nearly all, if not all, the liquors used in that county are smuggled, and I regret to say that that is our experience. Now, in order to be relieved from such illicit trade, I intend to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the number of officers that, in my humble judgment, is required in order to protect the revenue in that county and also the number that is required in order to facilitate shipping from the various sections in which considerable trade exists. I may inform him at first that in Cheticamp, where there is a large business done, particularly in the fish trade, the traders in that locality complain that they have not a sub-collector of Customs in order that they may from that port get a clearance for their vessels and also enter them when necessary, without being put to the trouble and inconvenience of travelling eighteen or twenty miles for the purpose of doing so. At Broad Cove Marsh, where considerable business is done on Margaree Island and by traders on the shore, a preventive officer is necessary to prevent smuggling on the shore in that locality, according to representations repeatedly made to me by temperance men. At Mabou also, a place where I believe the largest business is done of any place in the county, there is not a preventive officer or a sub-collector. Certainly, a sub-collector is absolutely necessary in that district, in order to protect the revenue, and in order also to facilitate the shipping from that section, which, I am happy to say, is largely on the increase, on account of the improvements lately made by the Public Works Department. In former years, and until lately, there was hardly a vessel owned in Mabou. I am happy to say they own a few vessels there now, and have commenced to build more, so that the necessity of having a sub-collector in that district, is great. At Port Hood, where I myself have seen two or three hundred sail from different parts of the Province, and from the United States as well, anchored, it is necessary to have more help, to enable the Collector of Customs in that district, to discharge his duty efficiently and well. It is not only liquor, Sir, but tobacco and kerosene and other articles upon which a high tariff is paid, that are smuggled into the county, and Americans who frequent our shores not unfrequently, trade in kerosene and boots and shoes along our shores. In Judique, half distant between the Strait of Canso and Port Hood, where there are also a number of business men, it is almost absolutely necessary, in order to prevent smuggling, to have a preventive officer. It is also necessary to have a sub-collector of Customs at Whyccomagh, a large village, perhaps the largest in the county; and it is necessary to have a sub-collectorship at West Bay, which is also one of the growing villages in the county. Port Hawkesbury also requires a preventive officer, being the terminus of the railway and several steamers. Now, what would all these officers entail? It would not amount to much more than $1,200. The existing expense of collection and protection in that large county only amounts to a little over $1,000, and, putting both together, the expenditure in the county of Inverness would amount to less than the expenditure in any county of the Province of Nova Scotia, and not more than one-tenth the expenditure on the island of Prince Edward. The collection on the island of Cape Breton does not cost nearly as much as the collection on Prince Edward, and I think my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island will agree with me that the amount expended on collection on that island is not more than is necessary for the efficiency of the service on that island. When we ask to protect the revenue in the interests of our temperance people particularly on that island, we also urge it in the interests of the revenue. I admit that the collections in the county of Inverness will not be much, if any, larger than at present, but I hold that the collections in Halifax and in Montreal and other cities from which we import dutiable goods will be considerably larger than they are at present. And, in this connection, I may inform you of the mode of traffic, and it is this. Some enterprising trader will go into the city of Halifax, will buy $2,000 or $3,000 worth of liquors in bond, and will transfer such liquors to the Island of St. Pierre or Miquelon, and vessels coasting and fishing, having cleared from Newfoundland or from any other port, will call at St. Pierre and Miquelon for these goods, and will distribute them along the shore of the Island of Cape Breton, and in this way the duty collected in the cities from which such liquors are originally exported must show a falling off. My object then, Sir, is to call the attention of the Minister of Customs, and of the Government as well, to the necessity of increasing the protective staff on the north-west coast of Inverness and on the lakes as well. But when I assure them that the coast of Inverness county is equally as large as the sea coast of the whole of Prince Edward Island, they must agree with me that the number of officers in that county is not as large as it should be; and the number asked for only amounts to three officers more than the County of Richmond already possesses. In this connection I may say that, once for all, I feel that I have discharged my duty in connection with advocating further protection. I have advocated it now for fifteen years with little or no success. An increase was made, I believe, in 1871, or 1872, in Mabou, but in 1874, owing to the fact, I presume, that few collections were made in that locality, the officer was discontinued. But the fact that no collections are made in that locality does not argue at all in favour of the discontinuance; on the contrary it argues in the favour of further protection in the locality. Therefore, I beg to move for copies of all petitions and correspondence relative to the necessity of increasing the number of Customs officials at Cheticamp, Mabou, Port Hood, Whyccomagh, West Bay, and Hawkesbury, Inverness, Nova Scotia.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that we have in the Port of Gananoque, perhaps, as efficient a Customs officer as there is in Ontario. That officer has been in charge of that Port for the past twenty or twenty-five years. Correspondence has been sent, I believe, to the Government asking for an assistant for that officer; why an assistant has been refused, I cannot say. Some years ago an assistant was sent there but for some reason or other he has been removed. I find that if the figures representing the receipts and expenditure of that Port are to be taken into account, we have a good claim for an assistant at that Port. I find from the Trade and Navigation Returns, the following figures, based on the receipts and expenditures made for the past ten years:—

Year.	Colls.	Cost
1874.....	3,178	1,158
1875.....	5,314	1,498
1876.....	4,258	1,994
1877.....	3,507	1,983
1878.....	3,116	1,983
1879.....	4,103	1,926
1880.....	6,836	1,713
1881.....	8,616	1,586
1882.....	14,068	1,584

Now, Sir, I see no reason why, when the cost of collecting $3,116 in 1878, was $1,983, only the sum of $1,668 should be paid in 1883 for collecting the large sum of $14,248. During the years 1876-77-78, and part of 1879, an assistant was appointed at that port; but for some reason unknown to me, the officer who was in charge of that port in 1878, is now doing all the work there alone. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that he is over-worked and not sufficiently paid. In 1873 his salary was $700; an assistant was sent there during the years I mentioned, at a salary of $730—$30 more than the officer in charge of the port. I may say that since 1878, the expenditure at that port has decreased $315, while the receipts have increased $11,132—an increase of 356 per cent. in the revenue, and a decrease in the cost of collection of 18 per cent. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that if there is any port in Ontario, or in the Dominion, that makes a better showing than the port of Gananoque, with one officer in charge, then he should have an assistant. There should be an assistant in Gananoque now, owing to the fact, that it is a railway terminus, and in connection with that terminus we have a ferry plying to the opposite shore in New York, three times a day. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move an amendment to the motion that after the words "Nova Scotia" the following words be added, "and Gananoque, Ont."

Mr. PAINT. I desire to add a few words in connection with this matter. I may say that I have on several occasions pressed upon the hon. Minister of Customs, the necessity for more preventive officers in the County of Richmond, and I trust that my application will soon be granted. I am much obliged to my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr.

Cameron) for having brought this matter to the attention of the Minister. He has referred to the matter of railway extension into the Island of Cape Breton. This, Sir, is a matter of the utmost importance to that island, and it is one upon which the members from that island feel deeply. That island has long felt the disadvantage of not having railway facilities, and I may, on a future occasion, make some further remarks in connection with this matter. I trust that his request may be granted, and I hope that the county of Richmond may also receive attention in this respect. I am glad to hear from the hon. member for Inverness, that the county is so very productive, but at the same time it does not possess the shipping facilities as other counties in the Provinces.

Mr. GAULT. I think the present a very favourable time to say something in regard to the Customs of Montreal. It is not that I want an increase of men, but that the salaries paid to officers of the Customs are insufficient, and are not even up to living rates. To-day the chief appraiser in Montreal receives $1,800 a year, which is not equal to what is received by clerks. I know some employes who receive $3,000 and $4,000 a year, and yet these Government officials are every day placed in positions where they could make their salaries five times over. I hope therefore the Minister will consider the question of salaries paid to these officers and place them at amounts to which they are entitled.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have a similar cause of complaint with respect to my county; and as I think this is the first time I have uttered a note of complaint to the Minister of Customs, the hon. gentleman should feel grateful. I have been hoping for a long time to obtain the appointment of an appraiser for the town of Newcastle. We have only one appraiser in the county, and he lives in Chatham District; and that is the reason why I desire to obtain an appraiser for Newcastle. But it is like drawing an eye-tooth to get anything from the Minister of Customs. Whether we must put it down to a desire to economise, or to his idea that we may be trying to get a little job done, I do not know; but it will be very gratifying if he will do what I have long pressed on him, that is, to appoint an officer at a good salary, to perform the duties of appraiser at the town in which I was born. I feel it to be due to myself and the constituency I represent, that when these grievances from remote country districts in Cape Breton, the Gut of Canso, and the commercial Capital of the Dominion, are being presented, that he should consider the representation which I have made in regard to my county.

Mr. BRECKEN. On behalf of Prince Edward Island which has been very kindly referred to by the hon. member for Inverness, and of which he spoke so very highly, and yet without exaggeration, I have a few words to say. I desire to press on the hon. Minister of Customs the necessity of giving the Province an inspector of Customs. I am not going to make the admission with respect to the island which the hon. member for Inverness made with respect to Cape Breton, namely that the people are great smugglers. I do not know that we are; but it has been urged upon me by my constituents, that an inspector of Customs is urgently needed, and that an active and efficient officer would probably save to the revenue of the Dominion four or five times his salary. We had a sort of detective on the island, an officer who resided at Souris, King's County, and who had a travelling commission to visit various ports and repress smuggling; but the Minister of Customs, I regret to say—though perhaps he may have some good reason for having done so—thought proper to do away with that officer. If we had an inspector of Customs and one or two persons employed as detectives to visit the various harbours and inlets—for whatever may be the feelings of the people, the natural facilities afforded on the island for smuggling are very great—no doubt the Minister of Customs would find the revenue of the island considerably augmented.

Mr. DALY. I had intended to reserve my observations in connection with this subject for a future occasion, when the Estimates would be before the House, but as the subject with respect to the salaries of Customs officers has been brought up, I desire to direct the Minister's attention to the salaries of the staff at Halifax. Representations have been made to him at various times in this regard, and I am glad to see by the Estimates this year, that some increases have been granted in the salaries of those officials. Nevertheless, there are cases which have not been provided for, and which should be provided for. Clerks are now serving in the Long Room at Halifax, of 10 and 12 years, experience, who are receiving salaries of $600 a year, which is not sufficient to support them in a proper manner. I think those cases ought to be considered, and the scale of salaries increased, according to the length of time the officers have served. I have much pleasure in pressing the claims that have been urged by the hon. member for Inverness. I believe the outside Preventive Service in Nova Scotia, is not sufficient in numbers or adequately paid, and the more the Minister does in the direction which the hon. gentleman has pointed out, the more he will find his revenue increased, and the small salaries paid will be returned to the Treasury a hundred fold.

Mr. TEMPLE. With respect to Nova Scotia Customs officers, one is required in the noble county of York, N. B., which I have the honour to represent. There is a section of my county in which there is no Custom House officer; and an officer is much needed to prevent the smuggling which is going on between the State of Maine and my constituency. It is not fair to our traders that smuggling should be allowed to proceed right under their eyes. It involves a great loss to those traders, and I hope the Minister will endeavour to appoint an officer for that section.

Mr. IRVINE. As the hon. gentleman's constituency borders on mine, perhaps I can do something to help him out of his difficulty. I may say that there are three or four of the officers in our county who we could very well spare for the benefit of the hon. gentleman. Our people are so remarkably honest that they consider it to be their duty not to consume anything but what is manufactured in Canada, so as to give the National Policy a little start. There is no smuggling in our county, and I am sorry to hear that there is in the hon. gentleman's constituency. It was said that the manufacturing establishments would receive such an impetus on account of the National Policy that our people are so patriotic, in the true sense of the word, that they will consume nothing but Canadian goods. I think, therefore, that instead of appointing additional officers in the place of the one who was dismissed, and who, I presume, was a Liberal, for that is the programme this Government usually carries out, they might transfer some of our officers to his county. We do not want to reach our hands any deeper into the Treasury for the sake of these hungry cormorants who drain the Treasury, but we would rather assist in replenishing the Treasury. At all events we do not want any more of these officers.

Mr. BOWELL. I am sure the House will thank the hon. member for Inverness for the very interesting statistics which he has given proving that at least that portion of the Dominion is not only very productive but increasing very rapidly in wealth. Whether smuggling exists to the extent to which my hon. friend refers, I do not know, but one case to which he adverted was a seizure in Prince Edward Island of a vessel which was carrying some liquor—

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; it was in my county.

Mr. BOWELL. If that be the case, the fact that the vessel was caught while smuggling liquor, proved that there were officers there, attending to their duties, hence there was no necessity, so far as that particular part of Cape Breton is concerned, to increase the expenditure, by appointing other officers. The House will understand that upon a coast line like that of Nova Scotia, as well as in other parts of the Dominion, it would be utterly impossible to have officers stationed at every nook and corner, at which small vessels could land in order to smuggle in goods. The localities to which the hon. member for Inverness has referred, have many offices, one, two or three officers. The Port of Mabou which has been alluded to, had an officer for a long time, and another has been appointed to take the place of the gentleman who either resigned or died, though it is only a preventive station; but I have yet to learn that it is to those particular places, where officers are to be found, that smugglers are in the habit of resorting. On the contrary, smuggling usually takes place at other places than these, and if the revenue is to be protected in the manner suggested, it would be necessary to appoint travelling Preventive Officers, to travel from one place to another, as it would be utterly impossible to have an officer in each locality in which smugglers might visit. When we recollect how difficult it is in all countries that have a tariff, to prevent smuggling; in England where they had mounted preventive officers who travelled along the coast of that country, yet they had smuggling there, notwithstanding this means of protection against it. I fancy we must expect smuggling so long as there is a duty, whether it be small or great, people will be found ready to evade the law. I was surprised to find, however, that in the county which my hon. friend says is a most temperate county, a county in which perhaps temperance prevails to a greater extent than in any other county, either in Cape Breton or Nova Scotia proper, so much liquor should be smuggled. If the people are as temperate as they are represented they would only want the liquor for the purpose of exporting it to neighbouring and less temperate counties. If the hon. gentleman will look at the return which was brought down early this Session in answer to a motion by the leader of the Opposition, he will find that a number of vessels have been seized in the act of smuggling from the port of St. Pierre. It is a pity that there is a free port so near the coast of this Dominion, and it is with difficulty that smuggling can be prevented in that part of the country. If the hon. member will look at the statistics, he will find that they show that there is ex-warehoused in bond for St. Pierre, almost enough tobacco, liquors, and other goods, to supply a continent; and I can assure the hon. gentleman that this is not confined to Halifax and other ports of the Dominion, but that the statistics of Boston and other American ports show precisely the same thing—hundreds of thousands of dollars worth, are every year ex-warehoused and exported to the Island of St. Pierre. What becomes of those goods afterwards it is difficult to say, but we know that an irregular trade is carried on and as many officers as the revenue will justify are on the alert, in different sections of the country, to prevent this illicit trade as much as possible. In every case in which my attention has been called to the necessity of establishing either further ports or sub-ports, or appointing other officers, I have at once referred the matter to the Inspectors, who have in many cases reported that it would be in the interests of the revenue that such officers should be appointed. In other cases, where it has been represented very strongly by the representatives of the county and others, the Inspectors have reported that it would not be necessary to appoint further officers, and it is necessary that we should pay some little attention to the reports of these officers, who are entrusted with the performance of very important duties. Hon. gentlemen will readily admit that the officers in the head office in Ottawa cannot be personally acquainted with all the localities in the different sections of the country, but I can assure the hon. gentleman and his constituency, that their interests are well looked after by him in this particular. The general complaint made by members of this House, that the salaries of the officials are not sufficiently large, is a question which is not a new one. I have no doubt that if my predecessor in the Department were present, he would corroborate what I am about to state, and that is, that the representatives of different sections of the country are never backward in asking that the salaries of various officials should be increased. We find, however—and it is just as well that we should remember it—that it is a very favourite topic when we go to the electorate, to say that the heads of the Departments, those presiding particularly over the Customs and some other Departments, where there is a large expenditure of money, have been extravagant, and have not carried out their promises with regard to keeping down the expenditure during the past year. As far as the appropriation voted by Parliament would enable me, I have been trying to level up and equalize the salaries paid to the officers at the different ports; hon. gentlemen must bear in mind—that though a particular officer or clerk at one port may not receive as large a salary as a similar officer or clerk at another port, it will be found upon investigation that there is probably not half the responsibility or one tenth of the labour in the one case, that there is in the other. I never have the slightest difficulty in finding men to fill the places as soon as they become vacant, even at the salaries now paid. In the case of those $600 or $700 positions, to which my hon. friend from Montreal has referred, I do not think that he has ever found any difficulty in obtaining gentlemen who were willing to take the positions at those salaries. With regard to Gananoque, my hon. friend made a slight mistake. He said the expenditure there had decreased some 18 per cent. for the collection of revenue from 1878 to the present time. That is quite true, but instead of the increase of revenue being 35 per cent. at that port, it is nearer 335 per cent. I found that at that port there was a collector—and as my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says, he was one of the best collectors in the country—receiving a smaller salary than a temporary man, a very old gentleman, who was placed there at a certain per diem allowance, which was greater than the salary of the collector. As I found that the collector could perform all the work, I removed that officer to another place, where I thought his services could be better utilized, and reduced the pay he was receiving. Mr. Ormiston is a good officer, and instead of appointing another man, I increased his salary by one or two hundred dollars per annum, and I find that he is quite willing to perform all the duties imposed on him. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Northumberland, N. B. (Mr. Mitchell) that there is any necessity for an appraiser at Newcastle. It is true, that port had formerly an appraiser, because a few years ago it was an important point on the Miramichi; but if the hon. gentleman looks at the Trade and Navigation Returns, he will find that the revenue collected at that port was only $10,400; and as Chatham is only five miles distant, upon the death of the appraiser at Newcastle, I thought that the services of the appraiser at Chatham could be utilized to perform the duty there, and he is allowed extra pay for performing that work. If Newcastle were importing largely, and particularly of the stock of my hon. friend, I do not know but that it would be necessary to appoint an appraiser at that port. I think I may say generally that the object of the Department has been to increase wherever they could the salaries of efficient officers; and while this is done, it must be borne in mind that if all the appointments which are demanded all over the country were made, the head of the Department would have to come to this House and ask for an increased appropriation of some $50,000 or $60,000 per annum. The increases in the city of Montreal during the past year have been somewhat numerous. My hon. friend will find, when he comes to look at the expenditure, that it has increased much more rapidly than perhaps many would think justifiable; and when I tell him that the expenditure at that port is some $14,000 more than it was last year, and that I shall have to ask, in the Supplementary Estimates, for a sum to cover the extra expenditure, I question whether this House would sanction the increases which are constantly demanded in different parts of the Dominion from this and other Departments. The Montreal collections have increased from under $4,000,000 in 1878 to nearly $8,000,000 last year, and I found it necessary to add two or three appraisers to the list there; and I can safely say that those appraisers—particularly the one understanding chemistry, who is capable of analyzing patent medicines—have many times more than paid their own salaries in what they have saved to the country. One great difficulty I have had to contend with has been the fact that, during the reign of my predecessor in the last Administration, officers were appointed at different ports, and particularly at important points, at salaries of $1,000 or $1,200, to perform precisely the same work as equally efficient men, who had been there for half a score or nearly a score years, and were receiving only $500 or $700 per annum. This created numerous complaints, almost a little rebellion, because it was claimed that if anybody deserved promotion, it was those who had been in the Department for many years. It is one of the curses of the system not to make, in every case where you possibly can, promotion in the service, though I readily admit my experience has taught me that in nineteen cases out of ever twenty, as far as Collectors are concerned, a man who has been in business and who is, if I may use the term, up to the times, who understands the genius of trade at the present time, will make a better collector than the man who has been drudging in an official capacity in the Custom House for ten or fifteen years. I can only account for that by this reason, that the clerk goes on in his regular routine business, paying little attention to the outside world, without studying the changes, rapid as we all know they are, of trade, and the different modes of transacting business in all parts of the country. If you take a man from business who has had years of experience, who has been dealing in all the different articles which are imported into the country, he is, as a rule, better adapted to look after the interests of both merchant and revenue than many of those who have spent year of service in the Department. That at least has been my experience and I can account for it in no other way than that to which I have referred. I am glad to know that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Irvine) is prepared to dispense with some of the officials in his locality. I understood him to say, though I did not catch what he said very readily, that a Reformer had been turned out of office there by the Government. I have no knowledge of any such case.

Mr. IRVINE. What I said was, that I understood from the returns that a Preventive Officer has been turned out last year in the county of York.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is labouring under a misapprehension. There has been no officer turned out of York County; but one was suspended for reasons I do not desire to give in the House. But if the hon. gentleman desires, I will give the reasons. If the rev-venue requires an additional officer in York County, I will be very glad to appoint one. I have a distinct recollection of my hon. friend making a speech here a year or two ago in which he intimated to us that all the goods consumed in Carleton were smuggled goods. I am glad to know, however, that the placing of officers there has made my hon. friend's constituents honest, in this particular, at least.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 22nd February, 1884.

UNLAWFUL ASSOCIATIONS AND OATHS.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) in introducing Bill (No. 100) further to amend [the chapter 10 of the Consolidated Statutes for Lower Canada respecting seditious and unlawful associations and oaths, said: The character of the Bill is a very simple one. It is similar to that of the Bill passed in 1865 by the old Parliament of Canada. In the old ordinance relating to seditious and unlawful associations and oaths, there was a clause exempting Freemasons hailing from the Grand Lodges of Great Britain, and Ireland from the effects of the Bill. Subsequently the Freemasons of the Province of Canada established a Grand Lodge in this country which they called the Grand Lodge of Canada, and in 1865 an Act was passed simply to add the words Grand Lodge of Canada after the word "Ireland" in the original Act. After Confederation, the Province of Quebec becoming a political entity, the Freemasons in that Province established what they called the Grand Lodge of Quebec under the ordinary principle that prevails among them of making Masonic and territorial jurisdiction co-terminus. The object of this Bill therefore, is simply to add the words "Grand Lodge of Quebec" after "Canada." The same thing was done in 1865, and was done then without the formality of recording the votes of Parliament.

Bill read the first time on a division.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOAN.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that whenever the Resolutions moved by Sir Charles Tupper, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway are reported, and concurrence in them, as reported, is moved, such motion for concurrence shall have precedence every day next after routine proceedings.

Mr. BLAKE. As the further discussion of this question is impossible, without the presentation of those papers which have not yet been laid on the Table, I do not apprehend any protracted further discussion of it. We are not able to discuss it, as I have frequently pointed out, intelligibly without this information. Many of the propositions advanced on the other side; many of the statements and calculations made as to the condition of the work are dependent for their intelligent investigation upon the presentation of information which ought to have been submitted to the House in view of the proposals of the Government—which has been asked for repeatedly and is not yet brought down. Under these circumstances, I do not suppose that there will be any protracted discussion, and in this view, although I object to the motion, I do not propose to trouble the House with a division upon it, but ask that it be passed as agreed to on division.

Motion agreed to on a division.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the Orders of the Day, I beg to call the attention of the House to the following facts: I find, in a daily newspaper published in Montreal and called the L'Etendard, a correspondence dated from the Capital, and which contains inaccuracies which I desire to point out. I should have taken no notice of it had not my name been mentioned in the said correspondence, and that in connection with a statement which is false altogether. I do not wonder at this correspondent not saying the truth, as I do not think that in the caucuses held lately by the members from the Province of Quebec, there has been one man who acted the part of an informer or told the editor of that paper what took place in these caucuses. In consequence, I readily forgive him the inaccuracies which are contained in his letter. In the caucuses which were held, I understood that the hon. members had acted loyally, honourably and constitutionally, from what was said by the hon. Premier of the Dominion himself. Now, Mr. Speaker, it appears that some people are trying to impress the public with the idea that there have been persons outside of this House who brought a pressure to bear on the French Canadian members, in order to make them hold these caucuses, and to induce them to make to the Government those remonstrances which they deemed it their duty to make in the interest of their Province and of the country at large. My name being mentioned in that correspondence, I deny, for my part, all that has been said in it, and I also deny it on behalf of my colleagues from the Province of Quebec. There has been no such thing. The hon. members from the Province of Quebec met together, but they had no connection whatever with anybody outside of this House. They made up their minds to remonstrate, and, as was said by the right hon. First Minister, they did it constitutionally. I make these remarks in order to show that there are among the newspaper editors of the Province of Quebec, and especially at L'Etendard, persons who, urged by unavowable motives, which are unknown to me, write in their papers statements which are utterly inaccurate.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAKE. Last night, when the hon. First Minister was not in his place, I called the attention of his colleagues to the propriety of stating a day for the second reading of the Franchise Bill some time in advance of the period which is to be fixed for the second reading, for reasons which I then stated, and which seems to receive the assent of the hon. gentleman's colleagues. I ask now if he can name the day when he proposes to read that Bill, because the earlier the day is named, the longer period will hon. members have to prepare themselves for its consideration. I desire to ask the Minister of Finance, who disappointed us to-day by not introducing the Factory Bill, whether he proposes that that shall be introduced without any serious delay, because we are already at a somewhat advanced period of the Session. Then, with reference to the addresses, I had hoped that we would to-day have had supplied the defects in the returns already made as to the position of the High Commissioner and the Minister of Railways, but I call attention to the fact that the addresses or orders for the papers on this subject, especially those which should come from the Department of Agriculture, have not yet been complied with.

Mr. POPE. They are being made up now.

Mr. BLAKE. But they ought to have been made up a month ago.

Mr. POPE. We could not have made them up a month ago.

Mr. BLAKE. They ought to have been made up a month ago—a lunar month, which suits the hon. member better than a calendar month.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not catch the reason the hon. gentleman gave last night for asking for a day to be fixed for the second reading of the Franchise Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. Because the measure is a very long one and a very important one, our attention has been directed to other subjects, and it seemed to me important that we should have four or five days' notice of the day which the hon. gentleman would propose to fix. I desired very early to make that statement because I did not wish, when the hon. gentleman proposed to read the Bill a second time, to interpose any delay. As I think it important to deliberate upon it as early as possible, I thought he should intimate to us as early as possible when he proposes that we should deliberate upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite recognize the unreasonableness of the hon. gentleman's suggestion, which is not in the lunar month sense. My hon. friend says he desires to have the Bill fully considered. The Bill was before the House last Session, and stood over for the purpose of consideration for a year, but, however, my hon. friend, with all his quickness of perception, with all his readiness in making up his judgment, has not yet made up his judgment. Therefore, it is quite reasonable that we should have a day fixed. I have not the slightest objection that Tuesday week should be fixed as the day, that is to say, if we get rid of the question now before the House in reference to the railway by that time, and unless some accident should prevent the hon. Minister of Finance from making his financial statement before that time. We desire that he should make that statement as early as possible and as soon as this Pacific Railway matter is disposed of, but, if by chance he cannot address the House before Tuesday week, then his measure will take precedence of mine, which will follow immediately after that.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOAN.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the Resolutions respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, reported from Committee of the Whole (page 456), be read the second time.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to move. As a representative of the North-West, I suppose I ought to explain to the House and to the people my reasons for voting on these Resolutions as I have in the past. I am, I believe, the only representative from the North-West in the House who has voted against these Resolutions. I have several reasons for doing so, and one of the first is that I do not think it is in the interests of the country to have this money granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway without having something in return from the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have certain grievances in that country which, I think, this is the proper time to have remedied. I refer principally to the monopoly of railways in the North-West. My friend the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) the other night took occasion to make what I consider a very brilliant speech on the capabilities of the North-West, and I can heartily agree with all that he said so far as the natural advantages of that country are concerned. If it was possible to say more as to the natural advantages of that country, I should do so, but I think he exhausted the subject. At the same time, I think he probably made a few mistakes when he closed up by endorsing the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and by accepting the position that country is in under the high protective tariff, and also the land regulations. I think that possibly he and I might differ somewhat considerably on that. I believe the people of that country are just as much interested in having this road completed as those of any other Province, but it is the only Province, I believe, in which the veto power has been exercised in disallowing competing railways. I am greatly interested in that country and wish to see it prosper, and the only thing that will make it prosper is to have the country well settled, and to have the country well settled we must have good land regulations and reasonable rates on railways, and the only way to have reasonable rates on railways is to have competition. The rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway are, I think, a little high, inasmuch as it was said by the Minister of Railways, when this contract was let and this monopoly was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that they would have to run that road at a loss for the first ten years. If the Company get a monopoly of the carrying trade for twenty years they will be able to make up in the last ten years whatever they may fail to make in the first ten. We find by returns brought down to this House, and by a statement made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that during the ten months previous to that statement that Company had cleared net earnings of over $900,000. Now, if the railway is paying at that rate, and the Government have a right to interfere in the regulation of freight rates, I think it is certainly the duty of the Government to interfere. If they have made these enormous profits in ten months at so early a period of their monopoly, when there is so small an amount of cultivation, and so sparse a population, it is evident that as the country becomes more thickly populated, the profits of the road will be something enormous. I must say that I have my doubts as to that statement made by the Company being correct. I believe that it was probably made for the purpose of improving the condition of the stock so that they might get the money to pay interest on their bonds. If that is the case, and they have made that amount of money, they have made it out of the operation of about 300 miles of road. I am one, Sir, who believes that it would have been in the interests of the Company if that road had not been constructed so rapidly in the west as it has been. It is well known by people of that country that settlement is very much scattered, and the scattered nature of the settlement makes it very inconvenient for farmers. I see by the papers within the last few days that it is not going to pay them to run trains to the western end of the line more than once a week, and Brandon to Moose Jaw more than twice a week. That clearly shows that they are constructing a road that will not pay. Now, there are a great many portions of that country in which it would pay the Company to operate a railway, particularly those portions which have been settled by people with the expectation of having a railway convenient to their settlements. But people who have gone there with these expectations have been disappointed. Instead of the Company building branch lines to accommodate existing settlers they have devoted their energies to pushing the main line westward. Of course hon. members may differ in opinion as to the wisdom of that policy, but for my part I think it is not wise, and I am certain that every mile that has been built west of the Province of Manitoba has been of no benefit. I must differ a little from some hon. gentlemen as to the character of the land west of Moose Jaw. From all I have learned I believe those lands are of very little consequence for the purpose of cultivation. I have not been over that section myself west of Moose Jaw, but from all I can learn—and I think I have quite as good sources of information as any other hon. gentleman—that country is almost a barren wilderness. A surveyor who had been in that country last year informed me that in certain districts there is no rain for three months and a-half. I do not think any country can prosper, as a grain growing country, which is without rain for more than one-fourth of the year. Besides that, it is very difficult to get water. I know in some places the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has dug down as deep as 480 feet, and has been unable to find water. If the country were a paradise in all other respects, this want of water is a fatal objection. In some places it would cost a man more to get water, if he could get it at all, than it would cost him to buy a farm in Manitoba. I think, also, that the Government ought to have required the syndicate to build the road on the line laid out for it by the Government. I think the line ought to have followed the route laid out by the Mackenzie Government—I may say by both Governments. Many people have endured great hardships in that country on account of the change of route. People who went into that country six or seven years ago, settled on the line that was surveyed for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they are living there yet. They have broken up a certain portion of land and have cultivated a certain portion, but they cannot dispose of their grain, because it is too far to haul it to market. The result is they have had to put up with great hardships on account of the railway not having been built on the line laid down by the Government. I think that the construction of the line west of Brandon to the Rocky Mountains has been the cause of a great deal of speculation in that country. In fact, I think, the Railway Company have run the road south for the purpose of acquiring lands at the least possible cost, for the construction of the road. There were no settlers in that section of the country, and the lands on the north line, that laid down by the Government, were taken up. All the places for town sites had also been taken up; consequently, the railway syndicate could not benefit by the sale of town sites on the northern line, as they have on the southern line. I am sorry to hear any hon. gentleman in this House make use of such language as the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) used the other night. People in the North-West are not spoiled. On different occasions they have had the spoon held out to them, but it has passed into some other people's mouths before it got to theirs. I can assure that hon. gentleman that I know something of the hardships suffered by the people of Ontario, but I can assure him also that there are many people in the North-West who have undergone just as great hardships as the early settlers of Ontario—and I believe even greater. The North-West is a country with a very rigorous climate. A person living in that country has to be both well fed and well clothed to stand the winter. In Ontario the winters are also cold, but there the people have many conveniences which are wanting to the people of the North-West. I think the hon. gentleman would know more about it if he would go out to these plains, and see what some of the people have to undergo. If he saw people without specially warm clothing, and probably without quite sufficient food in the house, where the farmer has to take his ox team, and go ten or twenty miles for wood, with the thermometer thirty degrees below zero, he would know something of the hardships they have to undergo.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a fine description you are giving of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Let us have the truth for once.

Mr. WATSON. What I am stating is a fact. That is not the case in all portions of the country, but I am speaking of the portion of country west of the Province of Manitoba, which is very sparsely provided with wood.

An hon. MEMBER. What part?

Mr. WATSON. We will take Regina for instance.

Mr. BOWELL. What about it?

Mr. WATSON. You have to go ten or twenty miles for wood across the Regina plains. I did not obtain all my information from the press, but from traders and old residents, who have been in the country thirty or forty years, and I had information long before the Canadian Pacific Railway was built in that western country, and that information was, that from about twelve miles west of Moose Jaw, for many miles west, it was a barren country. I hope this may prove to be incorrect, and the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) the correct one. I do not circulate untruths for the sake of building up the country. As to Manitoba, too much cannot be said about the natural resources of that Province, and I believe if that country has a fair show and is well governed, it will be one of the brightest spots in this Dominion. But I must say, at the same time, that the land regulations have not been such as they might have been to have made the people well satisfied. The Government, I think, will admit that a few years ago these regulations were very often changed, and the same regulations could not be counted upon as existing for more than two or three months at a time. I am glad to say the regulations are better to-day. I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite read the speeches delivered by hon. members, and they will remember that the hon. member for Lisgar eulogized the land regulations, the other night, and stated that a settler in Manitoba could receive 160 acres of homestead, and 160 acres of pre-emption. I am glad this is the case. Last year that hon. gentleman said that the worst speculators in the North-West were the settlers who obtained homesteads and pre-emptions. I did not agree with him then, nor do I now. I only hope the land regulations of the Dominion Government will continue to be as liberal as they are to-day. Then there is the question of branch lines. I think while the Government is granting this money to the syndicate every Province should see that some benefit is derived out of this grant. I observe by this arrangement the syndicate have to place every dollar they receive from the Dominion Government in the construction of the main line. They are to give all the road already constructed and the plant as security; consequently they will have nothing from which to realize in order to construct branch lines. I should like to see the Government make provision either for building, or assisting to build, branch lines through Manitoba. The settlements of which I spoke in the North-West, where the people went in and settled along the proposed line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, after waiting a number of years for the building of that railway, are now asked to give heavy bonuses to private companies for the building of a line along the same route as was proposed for the Pacific Railway Company—I refer to the road which the Manitoba and North-Western is building. That company is subsidized by the Government, and has obtained very heavy bonuses along the line. This, I think, should not be. I think the Dominion Government should endeavour to build, or have built, in the interests of the original pioneers of that country, such railways; and these, I think, would pay the Government and syndicate, and be greatly in the interests of the people. It would pay better to build fifty or one hundred miles of branch lines, and be able to run trains regularly over that distance, instead of rushing the road out west, where they do not feel disposed to run more than one train a week. There is another reason why I am opposed to the Resolutions. I believe that if the wheat of the North-West is to be shipped by an all-rail route to Montreal, after the cost of carriage has been deducted, the prices received by the farmers will be very low. I think we will have to get to the seaboard by some quicker means than that. We have the road constructed to Port Arthur, which, I think, will be the outlet for the wheat of the North-West. Of course it will not be operated in winter, and I believe that the freight rate will be so high on the monopoly road along Lake Superior that, unless we have competition in Manitoba, it will not pay farmers to farm to any great extent. Two things are required in the North-West. First, we require cheap implements; and second, cheap freight rates for the exports of the country. We have to remember that in opening up the North-West doubt exists as to whether there is going to be a market found for all the North-West wheat; but with cheap freight rates we would be able to supply an enormous quantity of wheat, because I consider we can grow wheat of better quality and at less cost in Manitoba than in any other Province of the Dominion. I was a little surprised the other day to hear the hon. member for West Wellington (Mr. Orton), make use of such words as, that the only cause for dissatisfaction in the North-West at present was due to the frost there last fall and a few farmers and political agitators.

Mr. WHITE (East Hastings). Hear, hear.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member for East Hastings says "hear, hear." The hon. gentleman has been out into that country, and he should know. I do not think that some reports which the hon. gentleman has made have given altogether a true description of what he saw in that country. I know for a fact that the farmers have certain grievances. I do not think there is anything wrong or anything disloyal in the people asking the Government to remedy their grievances. A deputation of North-West farmers presented their case recently to the hon. First Minister and obtained a very good reception, but I think the reception will be about all they will get. They have returned without being very much encouraged; nevertheless, I hope the Government will remedy at least some of the grievances placed before them. We have also had the Premier of Manitoba here asking for certain concessions. I hope his request will receive favourable consideration; at present I believe the prospect of any remedy being applied is very discouraging. I will trouble the House by reading an extract from the Winnipeg Times headed "Manitoba's Position," that journal being, as hon. gentleman opposite well know, a supporter of the Government. Before doing so I may state that there are all classes of politicians in the Farmer's Union. So far as I am personally concerned I am not a member of the Union, I have never attended any meeting for the purpose of appointing delegates, and have taken no part in its arrangements lest it might be called a political organization, because I believe any class of men who find fault with the powers that be are declared to be acting for political purposes, or something of that kind. The Winnipeg Times of February 13th contains the following:—

"It is impossible just now to say to what extent Mr. Norquay has succeeded in his efforts to secure better terms for Manitoba. It appears to be certain, however, that he has failed to induce the Government to hand over the public lands to the Province; that the Government has not determined to extend our boundaries to Hudson's Bay; and that the question of giving the North-West a representative in the Cabinet is still undecided. Some concession will probably be made to us in the shape of an increase of subsidy; but it must be confessed that the east is not disposed to deal generously by us.

"Mr. White, the very able member for Cardwell, doubtless voiced public opinion there when he declared that the people of the North-West wanted too much. The Eastern Provinces, notably those on the seaboard, have made up their minds that the Canadian Pacific Railway is being built solely in North-West interests. They ignore their own admission that construction is being paid for out of the sale of our lands; and that the road is in all respects as much a necessity of Confederation as the Intercolonial or Welland Canal, neither of which benefit us, although we are paying considerably more than a fair share of the interest on the borrowed money that built them. These are patent facts, but with singular unreasonableness the east declines to admit their existence; and the Ministry is, of course, swayed by Eastern opinion. It may as well be admitted to-day as to-morrow that the door has been shut in the face of Manitoba, and that we are in the uncomfortable position of a young member of a family for whose future no adequate provision has been made.

"What is to be done about it? It is useless to blame Mr. Norquay. He has evidently done his best, and so have the Manitoba members and other prominent Manitobans now at the Capital. To advocate secession is entirely out of the question unless we are prepared for the inevitable result—annexation to the States. The only prudent course for us to pursue is to specifically formulate our demands, neither exaggerating them nor asking too little, and submit them direct to Parliament through the agency of our representatives."

That is the voice of the Manitoba Times, the exponent of the opinions and principles of hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Norquay has been here for some time, asking that the boundaries of the Province be extended, and that is a question upon which the people are more agitated, perhaps, than any other. They wish, also, to acquire their own public lands, if possible, so that they would be in a position to help themselves. At present they are exactly in the position described in this article from the Times, that is, of a young member of a family for whose future no adequate provision has been made. They have no resources of their own, nothing with which to subsidize a railway, and I think all the demands which have been made by our Premier, Mr. Norquay, should be acceded to. He asks also, for a readjustment of the financial position. We pay into the Dominion Treasury a larger proportion than any other Province, and I believe we receive less. The people of that Province are all agitated at present over the prospect of having the Hudson Bay Railway opened, one cause being, I believe, that they realize that the products of that country cannot be shipped by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the sea-board, and consequently they wish for a shorter and better route. If our boundaries were extended to the Hudson Bay, and our public lands acquired by our Province, the people would be in a position to assist in building this road if they saw fit. I think Mr. Norquay has laid his case very plainly and fairly before the Government, and that his demands are just and fair, and I trust, therefore, that the Government will give them a favourable consideration. Mr. Norquay did not, perhaps, ask for as much as the people of the North-West wanted him to ask for, but he came down with the intention of putting the people of Manitoba in a position to help themselves. I can assure hon. gentlemen that the agitation spoken of by the hon. member for Wellington has been underestimated. The delegates appointed at the first convention may not have been as representative as they might be—I will say nothing about that—but those gentlemen who have formed themselves into the Manitoba Farmers' Union, who have drafted a constitution and formulated certain resolutions which were presented by them, represent about 20,000 of the people of Manitoba, who belong to the Union, who have endorsed the actions of the first meeting, and of the delegates who came down here. I may read a telegram from Winnipeg on that subject. It is dated February 18th:

"The council of the Manitoba and North-West Farmers' Union has issued an address to the people of the Province, inviting the co-operation of all classes in considering the course to be taken to obtain relief from Dominion oppression. This is done in consequence of the report of the Ottawa delegates, who have returned. The address says: 'We believe that the time has arrived when the Province and the North-West by united action are compelled to force redress by determined and constitutional means.' A general convention is called to meet at Winnipeg on March 5th. At a meeting held to receive the delegates, very strong talk was indulged in by both Conservatives and Liberals. Secession was freely advocated, and grave difficulty may be confidently anticipated if the demands of the Province are not conceded."

This may seem rather a trifling matter here in the east, because our Province is young and struggling; but hon.

Mr. WATSON.

gentlemen must remember that the people who settled there are mostly composed of young men who went there to better their condition, and who will take a firm stand in trying to get their Province into the same position as the other Provinces under Confederation. With regard to freights in the North-West upon the Canadian Pacific Railway last fall as compared with other lines, I may state, that the freight rates of that road from Portage la Prairie to St. Vincent, a distance of 126 miles, were 19½ cents per 100 lbs, and that on the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba, for a distance of 392 miles between St. Vincent and St. Paul the freight rates charged for the same quantity of wheat was 21 cents. I think this shows that the freight rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway are excessive. The rates on the American road may be due to a certain extent to the effort to divert trade from the Canadian Pacific Railway line to Port Arthur, a competition which, however, I would not care to see stopped. I do not think it is right to give a monopoly to any road, nor do I think it will be right to grant this money unless certain concessions are given to the Dominion and the North-West; because I believe the biggest card the Dominion Government could play to get people into that country would be to advertise that they had the best lands in the world, and no monopoly in railways. What we want is competition, and for that reason I have drafted the amendment which I propose to submit, and which I hope will receive consideration. I suppose this amendment will be attacked by hon. gentlemen opposite, who claim that there is no monopoly in Manitoba. At the same time, we have the fact before us that the Government have disallowed charters granted by the Local Legislature, which we considered should not have been disallowed. They were disallowed, not because it was particularly specified in the contract that they should be disallowed, but the Minister of Justice, I believe, claimed that their disallowance was required by the spirit of the contract. Now, there is no certainty that this will not occur again. The hon. Minister of Railways has stated that he may see fit, at the end of two years, to do away with the monopoly clause. If it is right to do that in two years, I think it would be much better to do it at present. I think now is the time to strike, when the Company are asking aid from the Government; and if we give that aid, we should get some quid pro quo. The syndicate claim, I believe, that after they complete the road north of Lake Superior, they will defy competition. I doubt that. I think the cheapest route from the North-West to the Eastern Provinces is by way of Port Arthur, and I hope the Government will see to it that the freight rates are not excessive on that part of the line of railway; because when we get to Port Arthur, we have the competition of the lake steamboats. I must repeat again that I believe the hon. member for Lisgar did not represent the feelings of the people of the North-West, and I do not think this Government believe so, when he endorsed the National Policy. If any part of the country has suffered from the high tariff, it has been Manitoba and the North-West, because we have no manufacturers there, and everything which we require comes from the Eastern Provinces or the United States. I am one of those who believe that the consumer pays the duty, and that being the case, Manitoba has to pay a large and excessive portion of the duty which is contributed to the Dominion exchequer. I hope that this amendment will carry, and that the Government will take this opportunity of requiring from the syndicate something in return for the large amount of money they are to receive. I might also state, as the hon. member for Lisgar was eulogised as an independent Liberal who was going to vote for the Government, that he was not always a Liberal. In fact, I do not know what he has been, for I suppose we may take for granted that if an assertion is made with reference to an hon. gentleman, and he does not contradict it, we may accept it as true. Perhaps the House will remember that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal), last Session, when describing the members from Manitoba, stated that he himself and the hon. member for Winnipeg supported the Government, that the hon. member for Selkirk was elected on the railway question, and I believe he gave me credit for being elected on a straight party issue; but he said that the hon. member for Lisgar represented himself—that Ross was elected for Ross. Probably the interests of that constituency have changed, for that hon. gentleman did not always speak of the monopoly in the same terms that he did the other night. I may read to the House a motion which that hon. gentleman made in the Legislature of Manitoba on 24th December, 1880:

"Mr. Ross moved for an address to the Governor in Council, praying that the terms proposed with the syndicate may not be entered into, inasmuch as the said terms will be found unacceptable to the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territory, more particularly part of clause 11 and clauses 14, 15 and 16."

Clause 11 gives the Company power to select their lands; clause 14 relates to the construction of branches; clause 15 is the restriction as to competing lines, better known as the monopoly clause; and clause 16 relates to exemption from taxation. The hon. gentleman went on after that to deliver a very vigorous speech against the action of the Government in agreeing to give the syndicate such a monopoly in that country, and amongst other things he said:

"People are willing to pay taxes to build roads to have them run for the benefit of the Canadian people, but not to swell the gains of incorporators across the lines."

If the speech was not so long, I do not know that I could make a better argument against this monopoly than to read it; and I am sorry to see him endorsing the action of the Government in this matter, after moving in the direction that he did at that time. But, as I said before, the interests of the constituency of Ross may have changed since then. I move, seconded by Mr. Holton, that all the words after the word "that" in the said motion be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:

"That said Resolutions be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with power to provide, that as a condition of granting the proposed aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, it should be stipulated that the Company shall no longer claim, that no lines of railway should be permitted to be constructed within Manitoba South of the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such lines as shall run South-West, or to the Westward or South-West, and that no lines of railway should be permitted to be constructed within fifteen miles of latitude 49."

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Mr. Speaker, I just ask this hon. House to give me ten or fifteen minutes in which to say a few words with regard to the North-West Territory from personal experience. I will promise that I will read no motions or speeches, and as I have no notes, I shall not occupy much of the time of the House. I believe that the British Columbia Resolutions were carried through the House of Commons in the year 1871. From that time to the present I have heard very many eloquent speeches for and against the Canadian Pacific Railway, for and against British Columbia, for and against the North-West Territory. I must say that up to the time I had the privilege of visiting that country, I knew very little about it. On leaving Winnipeg, I had only to look in every direction from the window of the car as I went along, and every place that I visited showed nothing but beautiful lands, and at every station, until we reached Brandon, I saw people coming to meet their friends from the older Provinces. We went at the rate of from twenty to twenty-five miles an hour, and all along the route there was no end of fine land. Although I had often heard that along the line of the railway the land was not good, I was satisfied that these reports were unfounded, as mile after mile of the finest land met my view, and Mr. Holt, the engineer of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said to me, you can go to bed and get up in the morning, and day after day you will find the same fine country. You may make the run from Winnipeg to Calgary, 860 miles, and I am satisfied that along the line there are not fifty miles where you will not see, as far as the eye can carry, first class land fit for settlement. The hon. gentlemen from Marquette says the railway is constructed too fast. Was it constructed too fast to Portage La Prairie for the hon. gentleman, who, I am proud to say, has made his fortune there, and I hope he will live long to enjoy it? It is not built too fast to reach Regina and Moose Jaw, because along the line until you reach that point there are quite a number of settlers. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman is it built too fast to reach the coal mines at Medicine Hat which have reduced the price of coal from by $4 or $5 a ton, if not in the city of Winnipeg, at least throughout the great North-West Territory? I can say now that had it not been for the opening up of the Medicine Hat coal mines the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territory would be paying to-day $16 per ton for coal when it can be purchased in Winnipeg for $10. Will the hon. gentleman say that the railway is constructed too fast, when its construction brings about the supplying of that fuel? I would ask the hon. gentleman if the herdsmen think the road is being constructed too fast? Had Mr. Cochrane's rancho been well managed, and I regret it was not, they would have been able to ship from Calgary a large number of cattle this year, as they would have had more than could be consumed in that country. Do the ranchmen believe that the road is being constructed too fast? Then when I had the pleasure of getting to the summit of the Rocky Mountains and passed through that beautiful valley of the Bow River, I had a talk with the miners who had been there, some a year, some six months, some three months, and they said to me: "White, use your influence that we may have a liberal mining Bill, because this country is rich in ore, because it has large quantities of precious metals that will enrich the Dominion of Canada." I ask if the miners of the Rocky Mountains think the road is being constructed too fast. The full extent of the railway strike was reached when I arrived at Moose Jaw, and I was astonished to meet the number of men I did from around London and the county of Middlesex<sup>1</sup> and to hear how well they spoke of my hon. friend the Postmaster-General; but the next day, after the strike occurred on the railway, they said: "Well, we sometimes find fault with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but what under the sun would we do without it? It is the only hope, the only prospect we have of getting in everything we want and sending out everything we raise; we cannot do without the road and we hope the strike will soon be over." When we reached Medicine Hat we saw not one train load of coal from that mine, but six train loads brought on a siding to send to different parts of Manitoba and the great North-West Territory. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, when he speaks of the interests of the people of that great country, whether there is anything they require more than heat, whether there is anything they require more than coal? They have the land, and when they get the coal it will help them very much. Had not the road been constructed the people would have suffered in that direction at all events. I believe that the hon. gentleman did say, or at least if he did not, others did, that the road was not well constructed.

Mr. WATSON. What I stated was that I consider the Canadian Pacific Railway have a good road and I think it is well operated. All that I have travelled over I have no fault to find with, as regards construction.

Mr. WHITE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has stated this because his political friend will believe my statement when it is endorsed by the hon. gentleman. The road as constructed is, I say, creditable to the Company. They not only have the track well constructed with easy grades, but at every nine or ten miles along the whole 860 miles, they have two sidings, one on each side of the track, and the road is raised about three feet from the prairie and every precaution is taken against its being affected by the snow drifts. They have built snow fences or banks of earth in order to keep the drifts from coming in at certain parts of the line, and there are not better stations, or sidings, or round-houses, or places for the men to reside in, on any other road on this continent than on the Canadian Pacific Railway, until you reach the summit of the Rocky Mountains, less the station that is to be constructed at Calgary. They are only working in the interests of the people and I believe their rates of freight will compare favourably with those of any other road going through a similar country. I believe the officials are doing everything they can to meet the requirements of the country. I believe the Company deserve a great deal of credit, and it is not right, proper, just or honest for any hon. gentleman to stand up in this House and try and injure the character of the road or the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman said that so far as climate was concerned, it was not a good climate. I never before, as long as I have lived in this country, slept under canvas. On the first of January at four o'clock in the afternoon, I left Calgary, and with two others drove forty miles across the plains. After dark we cooked something to eat and then slept in a shanty on the ground as we had no boards. On the next day we drove fifty miles, and the following day 120 miles across the country to the Rocky Mountains, sleeping under canvas ten nights, and during that time we saw no houses, shanties, or wigwams, or inhabitants, but an excellent country and a great deal of timber destroyed by fire. I believe that for 220 miles from Calgary, on the north of the Saskatchewan, to the Rocky Mountain House, there is not over thirty miles of poor land, or of land that will not compare favourably with the very best in Ontario, Quebec, or the other Provinces.

Mr. WATSON. I said nothing about the climate. I said, I think, that we had a rigorous climate. It is sometimes cold in winter there.

Mr. BOWELL. You said the land was no good.

Mr. WATSON. As far as the climate is concerned, I believe we have the best in Canada.

Mr. WHITE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say it was forty below zero. If so, I think I should have met with it between the 1st and the 13th or 14th of January, when I only had the pleasure of sleeping one or two nights under a roof, and the rest of the time under canvas; and, Mr. Speaker, I am back here, and I feel as sound as any man in this House, I feel as happy as you please. The climate—there is none on the continent to beat it. The Chinook winds, coming through from British Columbia along the base of the Rocky Mountains, make a man feel good, better than adulterated medicine or adulterated whiskey. As far as the climate is concerned, I say we have everything that we can desire. It may possibly at times be cold in and around Winnipeg, and in some portions of Manitoba, but the hon. gentleman will agree with me that the bright, clear sun from the time it rises in the morning until it sets at night, the bright, clear atmosphere makes it a really healthy and invigorating climate to reside in, and he will agree with me that, as far as that country is concerned, it has a grand—yes, a grand future before it. The hon. gentleman said, too, in his remarks, that so far as that country is concerned, they should have more side lines and less Canadian Pacific Railway constructed into the Rocky Mountains. I would, I think, not be out of place now, to make a few remarks concerning other and older Provinces. If you take the county I have the honour to reside in, the city of Belleville gave $150,000 to one road, the county $80,000, three townships about $45,000, and we constructed a railway believing we would have a road independent of the Grand Trunk Railway, but, after it was run for a short time, we were anxious that the Grand Trunk Railway should take it over, because it would be better accommodated, better run, better controlled, and better managed than by those who belonged to the company that had constructed it. I believe the hon. gentleman lived for some time in the Province of Ontario, and he should know that there are a great number of people residing in very thickly settled parts of the country who paid their portion of the money that went to the Grand Trunk Railway, paid their portion of the money that was required to buy the North-West from the Hudson Bay Company, and will pay their portion of what is going into the Canadian Pacific Railway for its construction, and their portion of what the Local Government has paid to railways. They are taxed for the next fifteen or twenty years for the money given to railways to construct them, and they cannot get over paying that. Does he forget that there are in that Province of Ontario, many people living fifty or sixty miles from railways? Does he forget that, in some of the best settled parts of the country, many farmers live twelve, fifteen and twenty miles from railways? And yet he is finding fault because the Canadian Pacific Railway did not stop at Portage la Prairie, or Regina, or Moose Jaw, and take the balance of the road and construct it to every man's door, so that every man having a bushel of wheat to take away would have nothing to do but to put it on his back and throw it into a railway car. It is impossible for this House or for this country to do that. After the railway is constructed, and after the assistance which the Government are giving and are anxious to give has been expended, the people there must do what they have done in the older Provinces—put their hands in their own pockets, and construct their short lines of railway wherever they wish. The hon. Minister said that, as far as the monopoly clause in Manitoba was concerned, it would be removed in two years, when the road was constructed north of Lake Superior. I have no doubt that, if that monopoly clause was not removed, the Government would make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to carry freight at the same rate as it is carried via Chicago to the sea-board, and at the same local rate given by the Grand Trunk to the localities it goes through; that would be satisfactory to the people of the North-West; and it is all they should ask, all they should expect, and all they should look for. It has been said that there has been a great deal of agitation in the North-West Territory, and it has been said by some parties that the people there were disloyal and were anxious to connect with the United States of America. I have been through that country, and I think I am safe in saying that I have as many friends in that country as any hon. member of this House, and I have talked with people in different localities and different sections of the country, and I make the assertion to-day that ninety-nine out of every hundred are loyal to the Canadian Government, loyal to Canada, and anxious to remain a part and parcel of Canada. Ninety-nine—yes, I am safe in saying nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand are loyal to this country and are anxious to belong to this country. I go further, and say that nineteen-twentieths of the people are satisfied with the land laws of the North-West Territories, and the land laws of Manitoba are better and more in their interest than the laws of the United States of America. Let me go further. A remark was made by the hon. member for Grey asking where was the Minister of the Interior—was he writing pamphlets? When that

hon. gentleman thought it necessary in the interests of this country to write pamphlets, he wrote them successfully, and he circulated them successfully, and he educated the people successfully, and, as he, with power and determination, circulated pamphlets to educate the people to the believe in the necessity of a change of Government. I am confident he will administer the affairs of the country and the great Interior Department of this country to the entire satisfaction of every man of a reasonable mind. Every man who has a reasonable demand to make will be met reasonably and honestly and conscientiously, but we do not expect or hope to give satisfaction to the agitators, the office-seekers, the men who go round talking as they have in the North-West. It is impossible to provide these men with places, and the people of this House and of this country must set their face against it, and when there is an agitation brought up by an office-seeker, or a man who has been put out of office because he did not do his duty, or a man who wants to be a member of this House or a member of the Local House, or a man who has an axe to grind, we must say: "We will do to you as we do to the rest of the people of this country, we will do what is fair and just and honest, but nothing more." If the House and the country are going to pay the attention they have in the past to the agitators in the North-West Territories, it will be utterly impossible to satisfy them. If every dollar that could be collected and every dollar that could be earned were sent into that country to build railways, it would not satisfy them, but they must be educated to believe that they are used as well as any other part of this great Dominion of Canada. I would say, too, for the information of the hon. member for Grey, that I am satisfied that any information he requires from the Interior Department, or the first Minister, that they will be anxious to give it him or any other hon. member, and that they will not suffer because the Minister of the Interior is not a member of this hon. House. So far as these Resolutions are concerned, I do not believe, looking at the bargain, or the contract or the agreement or the money loaned, if the Government discharge their duty, and I believe they will, that we are going to suffer anything by the operation or by the agreement. Why should we? We have got from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the control of $35,000,000 of stock. The Government, I am informed by the public press of the country during last fall, have the right to enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that they should take a certain amount of money, enough to pay 3 per cent. on the $100,000,000 of bonds for ten years, and give them a certain interest on the money up to the time they paid them out to the parties holding the bonds. If such is the case, why should we as a people suffer by this loan? The Finance Minister goes to the Old Country with 35,000,000 of bonds on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he says to the money lenders: "We will take 70 cents for those bonds." Can he not bring back to this country the $22,500,000, and will he not have, making a rough calculation, about $6,000,000 left? I am satisfied the Finance Minister will make that arrangement, and if he does, what right have we to be alarmed? But suppose he does not. The hon. member for West Durham, in that eloquent language we all admire, said that the lands, if I mistake not, were worth $3.10 per acre, on an average. I suppose he calculated that the 10 cents were for survey. Well, suppose it is worth $3.10; cannot this Government get back from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $10,000,000 or $11,000,000, even if the land is only worth $2 per acre? Are we then going to lose our money? I would like to ask the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) who owns, or who has owned, 30,000 acres in the very garden of Manitoba—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where?

Mr. WHITE. Well, in Southern Manitoba. Did you never own any there?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is a little too stretching in his calculations.

Mr. WHITE. The hon. gentleman will not say that the land is not worth $2 per acre over a great portion of that country. He is satisfied it is. I am confident that if he sold the lands he now has in Southern Manitoba at $2 an acre, and invest in the Nor'-West, he would be satisfied that he would have just as good a property as any Napanee landlord owns in the town of Napanee. We have heard a great deal said about better terms for Prince Edward Island, better terms for Nova Scotia, better terms for New Brunswick, better terms for Quebec, better terms for Ontario, better terms for Manitoba and the North-West—I believe British Columbia has not asked for better terms. We have heard it said that this company and that company, this Province and that Province, ought to be looked after; that this society and that society, this countryman and that countryman, ought to be looked after. I believe, so far as we are concerned, in discussing this great question, we ought not to know any Province, any locality, or any people. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that road will yet help Prince Edward Island; I believe it will help Nova Scotia, and all the other Provinces—that we will all be benefited by it. Why not go to work like men and say: We will do what is right with this Company; we will do what is right with each other, and let the Government step in and assist each Province the best they can. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe there are many people asking for assistance; I am confident the Government will meet every demand as far as they reasonably can. Now, the hon. gentleman said in his remarks that the Hon. Mr. Norquay, Premier of Manitoba, was down here demanding better terms. He said that the farmers of the North-West formed themselves into a union and sent three delegates down to this Government to demand better terms—so-called. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the course the Government ought to pursue is to consult those gentlemen who are selected by the people, and let the Local Government stay at home and attend to their duties. I was very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that he kept away from their meetings, and he discounted any delegates coming to Ottawa. He himself knows that in anything he has got to bring before the House or the Government, he would be listened to and treated with that courtesy, that respect, that his position and that of his constituents deserve. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman said that the Province of Manitoba was suffering from the National Policy. Well, that is a matter I think we can very easily compare notes on. Is it not a benefit to the people of Manitoba to have a protection of fifteen cents a bushel on their wheat. So far as the people of Manitoba are concerned they can manufacture goods as cheaply as they can be manufactured in Ontario. Will the hon. gentleman contradict that statement? He can buy a reaper in Manitoba for $270; he can buy the same reaper manufactured in the city of London for $270; he can buy the same machine in the city of Ottawa for $270; he can buy it throughout Ontario for that price; and therefore are the people of Manitoba going to suffer? The hon. gentleman knows that these machines could be purchased in Manitoba last summer as cheap—yes $10 cheaper—than the year before. I have the authority, and I have the public statement, of an agent of a party that sells machines for United States and Canadian manufacturers, who assured me that they were sold $10 cheaper last year than the year before. And he assured me that the increase of duty did not affect the machines last year, nor would it affect the machines this year, because they already had enough on hand to supply the demand. The deputation that came down here went home satisfied, and they had to admit that in the matter of agricultural implements they were not wrongly dealt with, and did not have much to complain of. I think the hon. gentleman says that they have no manufactures there. Why, have they not cheap coal? Will he deny that fact? He may say they cannot manufacture because they have not the raw material. If you can take a car load of raw material sufficient to build twenty-five or thirty machines. The people of Winnipeg and the North-West will soon commence to manufacture their own machines, and then they will be very highly pleased with the National Policy, and see that Protection benefits them. The hon. gentleman says that the people of the North-West have to pay a high rate of freight. He knows well that in Ontario a farmer has got to plough a field three times, and summer fallow it in order to get one crop in two years, sometimes, and seed it twice because it gets winter-killed. But in the North-West the case is far different. The hon. gentleman will agree with me that they can raise wheat and make more money at 60 cents a bushel than the farmers in Ontario can at $1 a bushel. He will not deny that fact. And why? They plough the land in the fall, they sow the grain in the spring, and they reap it quicker and easier than they do in Ontario, because the land is not so rough. They get it and thresh it all by steam, and the land produces such great crops that the people have greater profits. Then the hon. gentleman will agree with me that agricultural implements will last a great deal longer in that country than in Ontario. He won't deny that statement. Then the land is not so rough, machines are not so liable to get out of repair. Now, I do think that that hon. gentleman, and every other hon. member from his Province, should give their support to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Let them bear in mind that it is their salvation and their prosperity, and will be the advancement of that great country. Now, the hon. gentleman says that they want the Hudson Bay Railway built. The people of that country think they ought to have the road; but if it will not pay to send grain by way of Montreal, I should like to know how it will pay to send it by Hudson's Bay when the Straits are only navigable for about three or four months. The hon. gentleman, if I mistake not, is engaged in milling, or has something to do with the milling business. If he goes to the bank and wishes to obtain a large sum of money with which to buy wheat, the first question asked is, how are you going to ship it? The answer is, by the Canadian Pacific Railway direct to Liverpool. If wheat were shipped to Hudson's Bay, it would lie over till next summer, and would not reach Liverpool until next year. I know well such a scheme could not be profitable. At the same time the Government should render all the assistance possible, because the people in the North-West believe they should have a Hudson's Bay railway built. The hon. gentleman further stated that he thought the Government should aid branch lines; that the people were not satisfied with the way in which they were treated by the Dominion Government, and that they paid more duty per head than any other Province of the Dominion. I hope and trust the Government of Manitoba will not be placed in a position in which they could plunge the Province into debt, because we have the experience of other Provinces possessing as great resources and men as fully as well qualified to govern as Manitoba. The hon. gentleman did not tell the House and country the reasons for much of the agitation, and why the agitators obtained the ear of the farmers. He forgot that owing to the unfortunate frost last summer—I do not say he did it or that it was done at the mills at Portage la Prairie, but it was done at the remaining mills—millers paid only 25 cents, 40, 45 and up to 60 cents per bushel for wheat. The hon. gentleman will not deny that statement; that the average was about 45 cents per bushel.

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). On an average the wheat, I believe, brought 45 cents. I think the millers—I do not say he did so because I think he is too honest—paid on an average about 50 cents.

Mr. WATSON. Fifty cents for frozen wheat.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Frozen wheat was bought at from 30 to 35 cents and as high as 40 cents. But I tell the hon. gentleman that the millers of that country said that four-fifths of the wheat was frozen. Some of the best wheat ever grown was brought in, and the millers said they would not have it, because it was frozen. They, however, bought it at 45 cents per bushels, and sold the flour at $2.75 per 100 weight. They made $1.25 per hundred for grinding flour and had the bran and shorts. If the hon. gentleman has been guilty of anything of that kind, it would be well for him to ask himself honestly if he has done his duty to those people. $1.25 is really too much. He might throw in the bran and shorts. There, indeed, is a grinding monopoly; and when he places the belt on the machinery turning the stones, he grinds—what? He grinds from the unfortunate farmer the money which should pay for agricultural implements, the money which should go to buy tea and sugar, and clothes, and boots and shoes to enable the little ones to go to school. I am satisfied that the millers of Manitoba have had more to do with the adversity of that Province than any other class of the community, and I ask the hon. gentleman if such is not the fact—I do not say he is guilty, not at all.

Mr. WATSON. I have not been in the milling business for two years.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I knew I was safe in saying the hon. gentleman did not do it; but he knows it has been done. I am very glad he has sold out his business; but I really wish I were the owner. I would grind every cent out of the unfortunate farmers of the North-West, and then come down here and hurl a piece of the stone which ground the wheat, at the heads of the Government, and say they were the guilty parties, while at the same time I would put the dollars quietly in my pocket. Hon. gentlemen opposite have, I am glad to say, admitted that the Government were not responsible for the wheat being frozen. They well know that twelve months from now they will have no chance of getting up an agitation in the North-West. Who was the head centre of that movement, the great man who got up the Resolutions, and who advertised and took great interest in the meetings? It was that good and honest man, the late Judge Ryan. Bad as the hon. First Minister may be, I would rather take him as my guide than Judge Ryan, a man who has discharged his duties neither in the interest of the Government nor of the country. I hope the Resolutions will be carried by the same majority as was given on the votes already recorded, and I am satisfied the hon. Finance Minister twelve months hence will have no reason to find fault with the action of Parliament. I trust the Minister of Railways will make an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that they should give the same through rates to the people of the North-West and Manitoba as American farmers, millers and merchants get to Chicago, and the same local freights as the Grand Trunk, with all its faults, gives to shippers along its line. One word as to the Grand Trunk. There is no member of the House more anxious for the prosperity of the Grand Trunk than I am. The company deserve every consideration at the hands of members on both sides of the House. They have had a great deal to contend with; they have fought the battle and fought it well. But have not the Conservative party stood true to them on all occasions? That party stood up for the company when their enemies were making the most of little accidents and wrong-doings for which the company were not perhaps responsible, and stood by the company until they got a good road bed, good rolling stock and a satisfactory financial position—the company has forgotten that party, and gone over to hon. gentlemen opposite. Let us hope and trust that the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company belonging to the Reform party will not forget those who stood true to them when in need of assistance, but perhaps they will pursue a like course, when it is to their interests and do everything they can to decry and put down the interests and prosperity of that country. I repeat, that there are many on the other side, who do not do this, but they are outside of those who want to be ministers or expect to be ministers. Let us hope and trust that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will construct this work within the two years; let us hold the Government responsible for getting the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government which was announced to this House, carried out. It is our duty to help the Government to carry out this agreement, and let us unite as honest men, not as Englishmen, or Irishmen, or Scotchmen, or Frenchmen, but as Canadians—not as representatives of Manitoba, or Ontario, or Quebec, or any other Province, but as Canadians who represent the whole of this Dominion—let us unite to do good to the country as a whole. I am satisfied that the contract which has been entered into, and the present Resolutions, will be sustained by the people of the country, and I have great pleasure in supporting the Resolutions introduced by the hon. Minister of Railways.

Mr. GASEY. My hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. White) seems to be greatly exercised for fear any doubt should be cast on the goodness of the climate of Manitoba; and he instances his own experiences of that climate, as a proof that it is a good one. I am sure, Sir, that the climate of that country must have agreed with the hon. gentleman, for not only has it retained him in good health, and enabled him to come here full of energy, but it appears also, to have added eloquence to his tongue, unless that eloquence and fluency with which he has addressed us to-day, were acquired in pow-wow with Pie-a-pot and other native orators in the North-West, for he appears to have spoken with more freedom and enthusiasm than usual. I agree with him in this, that a visit to the North-West is sufficient to excite anybody's enthusiasm about that country, and that it is impossible for anybody who has been there to speak otherwise of the country than in terms which may appear somewhat enthusiastic and overstrained to those who have not seen it. I believe the climate of the North-West needs no defence either from the hon. member for East Hastings or myself. The sentence in the remarks of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) which gave rise to this discussion, was a very simple and innocent one. He wished to point out that every new country had its hardships and disadvantages, though people seemed to suppose that Manitoba had none of these and that, therefore, they did not so much need the railway facilities which the people of Ontario might require. He pointed out that men at a distance from the railway might find it awkward to drive thirty or forty miles in one of the cold days which occurred in that country, though they were not much colder than some weather we have had here in the capital, but even on those days it would be inconvenient to drive that distance with a yoke of oxen for a load of wood. I think it was only a fair and proper deduction from that statement, that the settlers should have a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway to bring them some of the coal about which my hon. friend from Hastings said so much. The inference was, I think, a legitimate one, but the Minister of Railways must interject his interruption and give the cue to his followers, as to the way they were to treat this illustration. Why, Sir, if everybody who mentions any of the evils incident to Manitoba, or any other part of Canada, is disparaging the country, we have an account to settle with some gentlemen on the other side. We have an account to settle with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who allowed an advertisement of Kansas, or Texas, or some wild-cat colonization scheme in the United States, to be printed within the covers of one of his immigration pamphlets.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. CASEY. Well, I should know; I saw it myself.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman says he permitted it, but he knows that it was put there without his knowledge, and that as soon as the Minister ascertained it, it was suppressed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. After it was published under the impress of the Department.

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly; we know that.

Mr. CASEY. It advised the people to stop wrestling with stumps and stones in Ontario, and to go where they would not have these disadvantages—that is in the Western States. That was disparaging the country, and the Minister of Customs says the advertisement was put there without the knowledge of the Minister of Agriculture. If that be the case the Department of Agriculture must be in a strange condition, and we will have to remove the hon. Minister who now fills that office, and put in his place the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. White), or the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), or some other gentleman, who, no doubt, from the interest taken in this question, will see that advertisements speaking favourably of foreign countries and disparagingly of our own are not put in documents issued from the Department. I think the explanation made by the Minister of Customs is about as damaging an attack on the Minister of Agriculture as could possibly be made—that they could get in without his knowledge and consent. As to the question of climate, I think my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Ross) who spoke on this question distinctly admitted that some of the north-western States had a better climate than Manitoba. I am inclined to doubt his information, because I have information from others who have had experience of both countries, that the climate of Manitoba is better; but at any rate if we discuss the admission and statements made by members on both sides, it is only proper to quote the language of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), in comparison with that of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). Coming back, however, to my hon. friend from Hastings, I find that he wound up with a pious ejaculation. He said: "Let us hope and trust that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will finish the railway in two years, and do what they propose to do; and let us hope and trust that the Government will see that the terms of the contract are carried out." Well, Sir, that is the proper frame of mind for a supporter of the Government in regard to this question. He should be in a trustful, hopeful, frame of mind, for we have no guarantee that these terms will be carried out; it must be a matter of trust and faith, and those who support the Resolutions must do so simply by trusting in the good faith of the Railway Company, and in the controlling power of the Government. I have no doubt that past experience of the controlling influence of the Government, of the sharp oversight they have exercised over this railway Company, of the manner in which they have compelled them to do things for the interests of Canada, instead of in the interests of the Company, of the manner in which they compelled them to abandon routes chosen in their own interests, which were not in the interests of the country—these past experiences have, no doubt, convinced my hon. friend from Hastings that we were safe in trusting to the Government and railway Company to do right. As the late lamented Artemus Ward said, "I speak somewhat ironically on this occasion," and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman sees it. The question has been raised as to whether the land adjoining the road of the Canadian Pacific Railway, west of Moose Jaw, is as good as that in old Manitoba—whether, indeed, it is fit for settlement at all. Now, I am prepared to believe that it is fit for settlement—or a great part of it—from reports I have heard, though equally trustworthy reports have given it a bad character. But I am prepared to believe on the testimony of my hon. friend, who has seen the country, that it is fit for settlement; but to say that it is as good as old Manitoba would be too absurd. In fact, the present route of the railway was not selected with the object of touching the best lands, or opening up the best part of that country for settlement. I contend that, in deciding upon the route of that railway, which is looked on as a great Government work, the Government should have insisted on the railway following such a route as would open up the greatest extent of good land for settlement. I think that is reasonable. I think also that the route selected by the present hon. Minister of Railways when he first took office was probably as good a route as could have been chosen. I am not going into the question of the change he made in the route laid out by his predecessors, in the eastern part of the prairie, but I refer more particularly to the western portion of the route. The railway, if built on the route first adopted by the hon. Minister of Railways, would have followed pretty much the line now laid out by the Manitoba and North-Western Railway. It would have struck out into the Birtle country, in the neighbourhood of Fort Ellice, and would have struck the Saskatchewan Valley, probably in the neighbourhood of Prince Albert, and followed that great and fertile valley towards the Rocky Mountains. No one acquainted with the North-West will deny that this would have opened up a vastly greater area of fertile country than the present route. We know that as far west as Moose Jaw, perhaps a little farther, the present route does pass through a very excellent country; but from that point westward, we all know that it passes through a country not nearly so good as that traversed by the hon. gentleman's original route. Of course, I take it for granted that the Government, in dealing with the railway Company, must have exercised some oversight in regard to the route—that they must have had something to say—that they did not abdicate their functions altogether, and leave the Company to select any route they pleased. It follows, then, that the hon. Minister of Railways must have been over-persuaded by the more powerful minds and stronger wills of the gentlemen who control the Canadian Pacific Railway to abandon his own route. This may appear strange to us for we have always entertained the idea that the hon. gentleman's brains and eloquence and force of will were as strong as they were ordinarily made. Yet we must either believe that he was over-persuaded to adopt an inferior route, or that he knowingly allowed the railway Company to adopt an inferior route. Which is the fact we cannot, of course, divine. The hon. member for East Hastings mentioned one of the Syndicate, by name; he says he hopes the hon. Mr. Smith, and other members of that Company, will not forget their friends who have stood by them in this crisis." That is, I must say, a very appropriate hope in the mouth of a Government supporter on the present occasion. The hon. gentleman also spoke of the Grand Trunk Railway. He asks: "Have the Conservative party not stood by that other great corporation through evil report and through good report till it has got control of nearly all the roads in Ontario? Have they not helped it out of its difficulties? Have they not given it all the money it wanted? Have they not concealed its accidents? And yet that company goes and throws itself into the arms of the Grits." It is quite true the Conservative party did stand by the Grand Trunk through evil report and through good report; it is quite true they gave that company all the money it wanted, that they sustained it in this way until it got control of nearly all the railways in Ontario. The Conservative party have stood by the Grand Trunk until it became practically a monopoly. So, I say, the Conservative party have been at all times the ally, the backer, the shield of every railway monopoly that has existed in the country; and now, when the Grand Trunk forsakes those who have worked for it so long, it is natural that the hon. gentleman should bewail—that he, who has so many Grand Trunk employees in his riding—

Mr. WHITE. Oh, oh.

Mr. CASEY. Well, his colleague has. It is natural that those gentlemen, who have done so much for the Grand Trunk, and expected so much from it, should deplore its loss, and should hope that the other monopoly by which they are now standing, will remember its friends.

Mr. BOWELL. Does the hon. member know where the Grand Trunk runs?

Mr. CASEY. I think it runs into Belleville, and the hon. gentleman lives in Belleville.

Mr. BOWELL. That is about as near my constituency as the hon. gentleman can go.

Mr. CASEY. I am quite aware that the hon. gentleman's constituency is not in Belleville; but I think the Grand Trunk has something to do with his constituency.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. CASEY. I think the Grand Junction runs through his constituency and is controlled by the Grand Trunk. At all events I say that hon. gentlemen opposite who are all connected with Grand Trunk influences, are in a very awkward position. They have supported that monopoly as long as they could; and now, when they are called upon to support the demands of a stronger, richer, and more powerful monopoly, they find they have lost the friendship of the one that they have stood by so long. Now, to return to the question of the "grinding monopoly." I have not heard any complaints against the millers of Manitoba, except one or two large firms, and chiefly the firm of Ogilvy & Hutchinson. That firm are reported to have such arrangements with the Canada Pacific Railway in regard to the warehousing and shipping of grain, that they are practically able to monopolize the grain-buying trade at certain points. These arrangements, according to Mr. Van Horne, are that wherever a warehouse is erected by any party, no grain shall be taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway, except through that warehouse; so that everybody who ships wheat from that point must sell it to the owners of that warehouse. Therefore, the farmers of any district in the North-West are at the mercy of any one who sets up a warehouse until they can collect capital enough to build a second one. The warehousemen are thus able to control the price of wheat, and they have forced the farmers to sell good wheat as frozen wheat at low prices. I believe it has been bought, not chiefly for milling in Manitoba but chiefly for export; and I have been informed by a friend of mine in Manitoba that the firm of Ogilvy & Hutchinson are likely to make $200,000 or $300,000 out of the so-called frozen wheat which they have bought at low rates, and which is as good as any of our Ontario wheat, by sending it in the spring or summer down to the eastern Provinces to sell, and get the advantage of the duty on wheat which my hon. friend from Hastings claimed was going to be a great advantage to the farmers of Manitoba. It will be a great benefit to those people who have secured the advantage they possess, by an alliance with the other monopoly which my hon. friend supports. In regard to reaping and mowing machines my hon. friend said, that reapers could be bought in Manitoba this summer cheaper than in Ontario, and he puts the price at $270. Does he mean self-binders.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Certainly.

Mr. CASEY. I am not prepared to say how cheaply you could buy reapers of that sort in Ontario during the past summer, but if it be true that they can be sold in Manitoba for less than here, one thing must be true: we know they have to pay high freight to Manitoba, and that the manufacturers or dealers expect to be compensated for the risk of sending them to Manitoba. The manufacturers must have been reaping exorbitant profits on those sold in Ontario if they could afford to sell in Manitoba below Ontario prices. But the hon. gentleman's statement could only have applied to a short interval, when there was a glut of reapers in Manitoba, for I do not believe that the average of the year or of any number of weeks, would give a lower price for reapers in Manitoba than in Ontario. Even if they could be sold cheaper in Manitoba that is not the proper criterion by which to judge the question for the people of Manitoba. The question with them is, what could you get those machines for, from the other side of the line, were it not for the heavy duty? I have not the prices at hand, but the people and settlers of Manitoba, when I was there, told me that if they were allowed to bring them in at a reasonable duty, they could get them much cheaper than by importing them from Ontario. That is the only way to determine the effect of the duty on the people of the North-West. My hon. friend took upon himself to lecture the Premier of Manitoba and the other delegates who came down here. He said they had better have minded their own business and staid at home and left the members representing that Province to attend to its affairs here. I am sure my hon. friend, Mr. Norquay, will hear with delight that a leading member of the party he has so consistently supported, should have thus slapped him in the face for having come down to attend the interests of his Province. I am sure that slap in the face was undeserved. Mr. Norquay never did himself greater credit than when he yielded at last to the unanimous desire of the people of Manitoba, and came down here to represent their claims. The very fact that Mr. Norquay, a Conservative, a supporter of the present Government, one whom people are sometimes inclined to call a slavish supporter—and a warm friend of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the very fact that he should come down and urge the claims of the farmers of Manitoba, proves to absolute demonstration that the farmers agitation was not a party manœuvre in the sense meant by the hon. gentleman. It was political, no doubt, in so far as its design was to obtain a political object, but not in the sense of being a party agitation or Mr. Norquay would never have undertaken it. The hon. gentleman made a little calculation to which I think it would be interesting to call the attention of the House. He calculated that the hon. Finance Minister could make a profit of $6,000,000 by floating bonds in the old country to obtain the $22,500,000 required to make this advance to the Canadian Pacific Railway. If this is a sound calculation, and it seems as sound as many others that have been advanced on that side of the House in regard to this transaction, then the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Railways have erred greatly in making the advance so small. If so much can be made on an advance of $22,500,000, why did not they agree to lend the company $100,000,000 and make $25,000,000 upon the transaction?

The hon. member for Hastings says they could have done so. I hope he will not withdraw his confidence from the hon. Minister because he has missed this glorious chance of adding $25,000,000 to the capital of the country. Another point alluded to by the hon. gentleman was the loyalty of the people of Manitoba, their desire to retain Canadian connection. In this particular I am able to corroborate the hon. gentleman's statement. These men are loyal. They are mostly picked men from Ontario and the other eastern Provinces who have gone up there full of energy and enthusiasm, and they are more loyal to Canadian connection than many of us are because I believe they have a broader sense of what is for the interest of the country at large. But that loyalty, that love for Canada, is being put to a tremendous strain. My hon. friend did not undertake to tell us how many pounds of pressure to the square inch are being put on that feeling of loyalty, or how many pounds of such pressure it will stand. We have heard no serious talk of annexation or independence in the North-West; but if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to create such a cry, if they wish to bring about a desire for independence, or for annexation on the part of the people of Manitoba, they could not have chosen more thorough-going means than those they have adopted. If there is anything calculated to make people disgusted with the country with which they are connected, it is the feeling that they are oppressed by that country. Whether rightly or wrongly, the people of Manitoba, doubtless, do feel that they are oppressed by the people of old Canada, and if there is anything calculated to add force to this feeling of oppression it is the pecuniary loss and injury, which they certainly suffer. A case was brought to my notice this afternoon. A worthy clergyman called to see me and told me that a brother who had taken up land in the southern part of Manitoba, one of the many places in which the Canadian Pacific Railway had proposed to build branches, had gone to work on his land last year but was unable to sell his grain in consequence of its distance from the railway, and he was seriously questioning whether it would not be better for him to throw up his land and leave the country. The prospect had been held out that the Canadian Pacific Railway was going to build a branch in that section. They put that line on their maps but it was not built, and the settlers there seriously question whether it is worth their while to go on with their homesteads. I think it is—but no doubt in the meanwhile they are suffering hardship and wrong—from the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway will not build branch lines in their neighbourhood, and will not allow anybody else to build them. Speaking of these branch lines, brings me to another clause in my hon. friend's speech. He said the people of the older Provinces had, after the Grand Trunk had been established by Government assistance, put their hands in their own pockets and built lines themselves, had granted bonuses and subscribed stock in those roads for their own use. He said further, that the people of the North-West could do the same thing, that the Government had built the stem, and the people would have to furnish the branches at their own expense. The hon. member cannot be unaware that the people of Manitoba have, time and again, expressed their willingness to do this, to put their hands in their pockets and build branches. We know the South-Eastern Railway Company, the Emers and North-Western Railway Company, and the Tramway Company were prepared to put their hands in their pockets and build branch lines south of the Canadian Pacific Railway. They had got their charters from the Local Government and made arrangements to go to work, and had been promised bonuses, but the Canadian Pacific Railway would not allow them. I say the Canadian Pacific Railway would not allow them—the monopoly would not allow them—because it was distinctly in the interests of that monopoly, it was avowedly for the sake of the bargain made with that monopoly, that my hon. friends opposite disallowed those charters. It was distinctly for the sake of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the people of southern Manitoba were not allowed to put their hands in their pockets and build the branch lines the member for Hastings said they ought to build at their own expense. But northwards, they are allowed to build branch lines, because any branch line in that direction would be simply a feeder to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and would bring more profit to the promoters of that line, simply because all the money spent by the struggling settlers to the northward of that line would bring more money to the pockets of these wealthy speculators. So they were allowed to build branch lines, and have they not done it? Does not the Manitoba and North-Western Railway exist? Does it not approximately follow the route chosen by the Minister of Railways. Does it not justify the correctness of his first impression on that matter, and does it not show the incorrectness of his permission to the Canadian Pacific Railway to take a different line? The people of Portage la Prairie have given $100,000 to that railway; the people of the county and town of Minnelosa have given it a large bonus; the people of the municipality of Westbourne have given $75,000 to that railway. These seem pretty big figures even to us here, and, when you remember that Portage la Prairie is only a town of four or five thousand people, that the town of Westbourne is what we should call down here a mere country village, that the country around it is what we would consider thinly settled, that these bonuses represent an almost intolerable tax upon the sparse settlers in those regions, you can form some idea of the eagerness with which the people to the north of the Canadian Pacific Railway have desired to get branch lines, some conception of the feeling existing, that it was a matter of life and death to them.

Mr. ORTON. Do I understand that the policy of the former Government was to go to Portage la Prairie and Westbourne.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know what the hon. gentleman understands, but that is my understanding of the matter. I cannot enter into a discussion with the hon. gentleman just now. My understanding of the original route approved of by the hon. Minister is that it was to branch north-westward from some point in that neighbourhood and strike the Saskatchewan country—I do not remember the exact place at which it was to branch off or where it was to strike, but that is the region of country it was to traverse. From these bonuses, which are absolutely enormous in view of the thinness of the population, you can get an idea of the conviction the people had that it was a matter of life and death to have these branch lines, and you can also get an idea of the eagerness with which the people to the southward would subscribe their money to build branch lines, if they were allowed to do so, but the monopoly which grinds down not only the people of Manitoba, but the people of this country, will not permit them to have these branch lines, or to do anything in regard to railway building which may interfere with its interests.

After Recess.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. White) has referred to the fact that the people of his county have bonused branch lines for their own benefit. This very fact, with which the hon. member is so familiar, that the people, even in a comparatively rich county like Hastings, felt the need of branch lines and paid for them at their own cost, should have opened his eyes to the necessity which would be felt by the struggling settlers in a new country like Manitoba to have similar accommodation.

Mr. CASEY.

But I must not omit to notice a little humorous remark of the hon. gentleman in reference to the reaper question, although I have already passed that part of his speech. My hon. friend asked: "Why do they not make reapers in Manitoba if they find the cost of reapers from Ontario excessive—have they not cheap coal there?" Certainly the hon. gentleman's humour has been developed by his trip to Manitoba, for a more humorous question than this I cannot imagine. Have they not cheap coal in Manitoba! In Manitoba, a place which is one of the most distant from the ordinary supplies of coal, a country whose own coal supplies are only beginning to be opened up, a country in which the only railway charges exorbitant freights for the carriage of that native coal upon which the country must depend in the future! He referred to the mine of Medicine Hat, and told how cheaply the Company was carrying the coal to Winnipeg. I am aware that last autumn the railway Company charged $4 a ton freight on this Medicine Hat coal to Moose Jaw, which is less than half the distance to Winnipeg—not much more than one-third the distance. If it was $4 to Moose Jaw it must have been enormous to Winnipeg. I believe the lowest point native coal has touched there is something like $9 per ton. If the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) thinks it will pay to use that coal at that price and import iron for the manufacture of agricultural implements in Winnipeg, as a means of escape from the burdens imposed by the National Policy on the agricultural population of Manitoba—if he really thinks that, he has very strange ideas in regard to the manufacture of agricultural implements. But I have no doubt at all he intended it as a witticism, and as such I must regard it. He grumbled because the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) had said the road was being built too fast. He said the ranchmen at the foot of the Rocky Mountains did not think it was built too fast. Oh, I suppose not, but then I do not know that the road was built entirely in the interests of these ranchmen. I think the farming population, the poor people of Manitoba, have as much right to be considered in respect to building this road as those few of our Canadian aristocrats—I use the word not in a bad sense, but in a good sense. I give all credit to those gentlemen for their enterprise in trying to develop the business of raising cattle in the North-West, in developing the grazing lands there, and thus adding to the wealth of the country; but their interests should not be considered at the expense of the farming class. All they can do is quite insignificant in increasing the general wealth, as compared with what the agricultural population are doing. They will, no doubt, obtain considerable wealth for themselves, and they deserve it; but their interests are not to be compared for a moment with the interests involved in the rapid and efficient settlement of the rest of the country. I use the word "efficient" advisedly, because I hold that the settlement springing up along the Canadian Pacific Railway is not an efficient or convenient settlement; it is a mere ribbon of settlement stretching across the continent, without cohesion, where people are without near neighbours, and where it will be impossible for them to obtain the advantages of schools, roads, &c., that can only be had where the population is moderately dense. This plan of rapid settlement in a long strip, is the worst plan that can be adopted in the interests of the country. There was no great necessity for this undue haste. The Company had up to 1891 to finish the road, and they have been constructing it a much more rapid rate than that time limit required. They have not pretended that this rapid construction was done in the interests of the country; they have admitted, impliedly, that it was done in their own interests. They thought it would pay them to build it rapidly, they wanted to earn their land grant rapidly, and so they built the road rapidly. But, to pretend that this rapid construction was in the interests of the country is absurd, because the sort of settlement that it induces is extremely inconvenient, and costs those who go there the ordinary comforts even of new settlements. I think those are the principal points of my hon. friend's remarks to which I need allude. I come now more directly to the question raised by the amendment of the hon. member for Marquette. That amendment asks that when we are granting such a favour as this to the Railway Company, we should have some relaxation of the terms which they originally imposed by virtue of the influence they have exerted upon the powerful minds of hon. gentlemen opposite, the conditions which they imposed by that influence upon the people of this country, and especially upon the people of the great north-western territories. Sir, it is not at all improper at such a time to ask for some relaxation. We all know that in days of old when some young king had been rather extravagant with his revenue, and was compelled to call his loyal Commons together and ask for a benevolence in the shape of further grants, it was usual and customary for those loyal Commons, for the sturdy people of that period, to demand a relaxation of some of the burdens imposed upon them, the removal of some monopoly, the abatement of some grievances. Now, Sir, our position is very similar. If there ever was a corporation with something closely resembling royal power, it is the corporation that controls the destinies of the great North-West—and I will say the destinies of the whole Dominion also, as appears from late transactions. If there ever was a head of a corporation who had a right to be dubbed with a royal title it is King Stephen the First. He had his ministers and courtiers, and acted in a truly royal manner.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You must make it Stephen the Martyr.

Mr. CASEY. Well, Sir, I do not remember that King Stephen the First was Stephen the Martyr; but, I think that if this present King Stephen is ever to be martyred, certainly it will not be at the hands of his loyal and trusted ministers who sit opposite me on this occasion, for no king, I think, ever had more loyal ministers, "these ministers of his that do his pleasure"—if my right hon. friend wants quotations I will give him that—because they have done his pleasure on this and on other occasions when he has had occasion to come to this House. He has instructed them on this occasion to lay before his loyal subjects his request for further supplies. They have done so. They have put aside all other business that might interfere with the speedy granting of these supplies. They have assured us, in the case of this royal personage, that it is absurd, inconvenient, and improper to enquire into the grounds upon which these supplies are asked. They have been formally, by resolution, requested to have such an enquiry, and they have said it was improper, and they have refused it, and have been backed up by their friends in the House in that refusal. They have said that there is no necessity for postponing the consideration of this demand for further supplies. There is now a request, Sir, from a portion of the loyal subjects of this great king for the abatement of a monopoly, the abatement of a nuisance, of something that is to them a daily and an hourly oppression, a daily and an hourly pecuniary loss. Now, Sir, I have no doubt that his ministers will refuse that; but, I claim that it is very proper to ask for this abatement, and my hon. friend from Marquette has only done his duty to his constituents and to his Province in asking it. If he had not done so, it would have been the duty of some other member of this House to demand the removal of this monopoly clause from the contract by which our present monarch was seated on the throne. I need not dwell on these quasi historical precedents for saying that it is a proper time to demand the abatement of a nuisance of this description. Why, Sir, we have had an instance already in this House, a few days ago, of such a demand being made, and a successful demand, although the grievance complained of was not in connection with this particular Canadian Pacific Railway contract. We have the authority of the Ministerial organ in Toronto, a paper which, by the terms of the printing company's by-law, is the personal organ of the First Minister, that the supporters of the right hon. gentleman from the Province of Quebec have been demanding what we may call, in general words, better terms for their Province, although I believe part of the so-called better terms consisted of the settlement of an old account, and their demand is said to have been at first unsuccessful. On the eve of this crisis, those hon. members, according to the right hon. gentleman's own explanation, met together and brought to bear on him in a corporate way that sort of "constitutional pressure" which is usually brought to bear on such occasions. And they have found the crisis a good one for their purpose. They have found, as nearly as we can gather from the oracular statements of the Minister of Railways and the remarks of the First Minister, that some sort of promise, hint or indication was given that their claims would be recognized. I say here was an instance where the redress of grievances was demanded by a section of the right hon. gentleman's own party, and it has been apparently granted. I am not saying anything about the propriety or impropriety of that demand; that is a matter which need not be discussed here. All I wish to urge is, that the hon. gentleman's friends from Quebec appear to have been thoroughly satisfied that their demands were just, being demands which were made in a former Session and repeated again. Those members have taken the constitutional means of demanding redress of those grievances when asked to do something for this great Company, and these grievances apparently will be redressed; if not, they will be very much disappointed. If the hon. members for Manitoba, whom the right hon. gentleman claims to have with him, with one exception, had chosen to bring "constitutional pressure" to bear on the First Minister, perhaps they might have been equally successful; perhaps, indeed, they brought some such constitutional pressure and obtained a promise of something for Manitoba. If those hon. members have not obtained a promise to remedy grievances, their constituents will call them to serious reckoning. If they have obtained a promise, it would be interesting to know what it is; if not, it will be very disappointing to their constituents. I think the constituents of those members have a vague idea that a great deal of money is being paid away, in which Manitoba will receive no share or benefit. The Conservative members of Ontario supporting the right hon. gentleman, had a grand opportunity to bring some "constitutional pressure" to bear upon him on this occasion. There are several questions in dispute between Ontario and the Dominion Government. There is the question of boundary, also of our right to legislate upon our own provincial affairs. If the Government supporters had chosen to bring their united strength on the First Minister, no doubt concessions would have been made in respect to these matters. Even in regard to the financial question, I do not think it is exactly settled as to what amount of money is in the hands of the Dominion Government belonging to Ontario. I have heard rumours that there was some dispute about that. Some people insist that the expenditure of Ontario will very soon exceed the limits of the Provincial subsidy and the other ordinary sources of revenue. There was therefore a grand opportunity for the members of Ontario, the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) and other strong supporters of provincial rights, to have brought pressure to bear on the Dominion Government in order to obtain something for the Province. I would like to know if they have done so. No doubt their constituents would like to know. They should follow the noble example of members from Quebec, who, no matter what their errors in some respect, are to be admired for the way in which they cling together and work unitedly for the benefit of the Province, and yield to no considerations, whether of party or anything else, tempting them to vote against its interests. If only the Conservative members from Ontario were animated by the same spirit, and acted unitedly in the same determined and constitutional manner, Ontario would not be in the position she is in now in regard to the questions at issue between her and the Dominion Government. The Conservative members have power to obtain for the Province what they believe to be her rights; if they have not done so, their constituents will call them to a very serious reckoning. Before we leave too far behind this question of monopoly from which Manitoba asks to be relieved, I must allude to the manner in which monopoly nearer home is spoken of by the First Minister's personal organ, by his organ in the city of Montreal and other organs throughout the country. They say that an unholy alliance has been formed between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Grit party, and that our object is to impose on Ontario a gigantic monopoly, namely, the coalition of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk in operating all the roads of the Province. This, they say, would be an intolerable and gigantic monopoly. In the first place, that coalition of which they speak is utterly imaginary, as are many of the other facts published in the Government organs from time to time. I do not doubt the desire of the Grand Trunk to bring about something of the kind, or that under certain circumstances the Canadian Pacific Railway would be equally willing to bring about such an intolerable monopoly; but to assert that any hon. member who was going back to the people for election would endanger all his future prospects of being elected by such an alliance was a monstrous notion, as those who put it forward well knew. But what is this bug-a-boo with which they threaten us. What would be the worst result which could happen to Ontario if this unholy alliance were formed. If the Opposition came into power and did for the Grand Trunk, their alleged allies, what the Government are doing for the Canadian Pacific Railway, their actual allies—I will not say allies, but masters—the worst thing would be such an intolerable grievance as now exist in Manitoba and the North-West. The condemnation of hon. gentlemen opposite comes out of their own mouths. If such a grinding monopoly would be intolerable in Ontario, where there is plenty of capital to build new roads, what must be the grievance where one line of railway constitutes the only means of travel and transportation to the people of that country? If such a monopoly would be intolerable here, it is surely something more than intolerable there. A description of the relative agonies of rheumatism and gout runs in this way: rheumatism may be compared to the turning of a thumb-screw until the pain is unbearable; gout is another turn of the thumb-screw. A coalition of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway would be the first application of the thumb-screw in Ontario; in Manitoba the monopoly is like another turn of the screw. And what people could be expected to endure what is worse than unbearable? In the whole of this discussion, there has been a great deal of talk by hon. gentlemen opposite about patriotism, and many accusations have been brought against us for being unpatriotic. Why? Because we called attention to what we claimed to be an oppressive monopoly, to the improper conduct of the Government in dealing with lands in the North-West, and to their improper conduct in yielding on every occasion to this Canadian Pacific Railway. It is patriotic to do these things of which we complain, to create a monopoly of this kind, to make the people of Manitoba practically the serfs of such a monopoly, to make constant drafts on the Treasury of this country in favour of this monopoly, to break through the usual and ordinary course of business to confer favours on this monopoly, to yield to every desire of theirs, to conceal the facts necessary for hon. members and the country, to form a decision on this question—all this is patriotic, it is the very acme of patriotism, but to find fault with such conduct, to attack those who are guilty of such conduct is unpatriotic and disloyal. Disloyal, undoubtedly, it is to the power whom hon. gentlemen opposite serve. It is disloyal to the interests of King Stephen the First, but it is the highest loyalty to Canada. Who have been the patriots of every age? Is it not those who have called attention to grievances which existed? How could grievances ever be remedied if attention were not called to them? How can monopolies be removed unless they are agitated against? How have they been removed in England and other countries except by exciting strong public indignation against them? And removed they will be. Those who are now denounced as unpatriotic because they call attention to things which militate against the desirability of Manitoba as a place of residence or immigration, will in a few years be recognized by everybody, in and out of Manitoba, as acting in the true interests of the country, because in that time the things complained of will be remedied, and those who have secured the remedy will earn the gratitude of that country. Supposing it was unpatriotic to call attention to things which make Manitoba seem undesirable as a place of residence, does anybody imagine it would have had as great an influence in checking immigration to that country as the conduct of hon. gentlemen has had? When this contract was brought down, we were promised that 25,000 people would go in there the first year, that 50,000 would go in the next year, and that 75,000 would go in this year; and the First Minister showed good reasons for our expecting such an immigration—the nature of the soil, the probable progress of the railway Company. Now the nature of the soil is as good as it was then, and the progress of the railway has been greater than he estimated, but where are the 75,000 immigrants? Why are they not there? Simply because this very monopoly clause has oppressed those who have gone into that country already, and they have sent bad reports to their friends who intended immigrating; because the land policy of the Government has disgusted many who have gone there; because of these and other such policies on the part of the Government, that large immigration has been checked. In the days of the boom, immigration was rapid enough; the Government did their best to stimulate that boom, and they did so to an extent that they knew to be unhealthy. The boom boomed out, and the reaction came, and for that boom and the reaction and the consequences that followed upon everything connected with Manitoba, the Government are distinctly responsible. These are the things which check, and which will continue to check immigration into Manitoba, and until their whole policy in connection with the railway, with the land, and immigration is changed, we need not expect the effects to follow which otherwise we might naturally expect, and which the hon. gentleman expected when this scheme was first before the House. I have only one more observation to make, and that is, that this is not merely a Manitoba question. Hon. gentlemen may flatter themselves that Manitoba is theirs, no matter what they refuse to her or what they give to the railway Company. They may possibly be correct, but I do not think so. They may have means of coercing Manitoba that we know nothing of; but I do not think they have any means of coercing the other Provinces, and we know that almost every farmer in Manitoba is a brother, or a son, or other relative of some elector in the older Provinces; that most of them have dozens and scores of relatives in these Provinces; that they keep these relatives posted with regard to all the disadvantages of this railway policy, and that these relatives in the older Provinces will keep these in mind when the next day of reckoning comes; and the Government will find that they have lost a great many votes in the older Provinces as well as in Manitoba by their policy. I recommend this fact to the consideration of the Government and their supporters. I think, also, they will find it advantageous to drop the sneering tone in which they refer to Manitoba and her business. We used to be told that "you cannot check Manitoba," that we Grits were the only people who abused it, and the Government and their supporters the only people praised it. But did we not hear the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. White) giving a slap in the face to the Government of Manitoba for meddling with things that do not belong to them? And the other day the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) said the people of Manitoba were spoon-fed, a remark which my hon. friend who sits behind me very properly resented. It is an expression which is not correct—it is one which is thoroughly incorrect. I do not know of any Province, the people of which have derived less benefit from the past expenditure of public money, which have been made in the name of that Province. No doubt in certain parts the people derived some benefit from the money which was spent in the construction of that railway, but by far the greater part of the wages which were paid the men went out of the country. The contract was made with an American firm, and Americans were engaged to fill the important positions on the railway staff, and as little as possible of the money went to Canadians. And a great part of the profits made by the Company will go where they have already gone—to Montreal—and will be spent in splendid palaces for the royal person I have already spoken of. Some of the spoon-feeding, some of the pap has gone in that direction, and there will be little left for Manitoba. Hoping that the people of Manitoba will appreciate these compliments of hon. gentlemen opposite, and that they will do us the favour to continue to make such compliments, I will resume my seat.

Mr. POPE. I am given to understand that in my absence the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) referred to something which took place in 1879, that he referred to a pamphlet that was published in which there appeared an American advertisement. I was condemned by the hon. gentleman for having taken that advertisement. Now, Sir, I did not receive that advertisement, but I confess I did wrong, and I confess that any of us, on this side of the House, will always be wrong whenever we attempt to give any patronage to the Grit press. I happened on this occasion, as I wanted to accommodate a Grit friend, to give him a little of our patronage; and that gentleman put in the middle of that pamphlet—true to his friends, true to gentlemen on the other side of the House, he could not refrain from putting it in—that American advertisement, although I had ordered the pamphlet. I wish this matter to be understood, for it seems to be a very important question with hon. gentlemen opposite. I think I heard it referred to by the leader of the Opposition; I heard it mentioned by the hon. member for Brant, and I was told that the hon. member who has just sat down had referred to it. Now, let it be understood once for all, that I will never be accused of such a folly again, so long as I have a seat in this House. Now, Sir, one word with respect to the hon. gentleman who preceded the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I listened with a great deal of pleasure, and I received a great deal of information, as I am satisfied did every man who was in this House last night, from the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross). Every man who heard that hon. gentleman must have felt that he received information that was new to him from a man of experience, from a man who has travelled through that country from one end to the other. It was information important enough to be sent to the other side of the water, for it was really an immigration advertisement, telling plain facts with regard to the North-West, and pointing out to the emigrating world on the other side of the water that there was a country where they might well come to settle in, with benefit and satisfaction to themselves. But, Sir, I was sorry to hear another hon. member, the other night, advertising throughout the length and breadth of this land, to every capitalist and every intending settler, that they should not go to that country. Why, Sir, does he know anything about that country? No, Sir, he never has seen it, and knows nothing about it. And yet, in the face of the testimony of the hon. member for Lisgar, who had seen the whole length and breadth of that country, in the face of the reports of Professor Macoun, which have been read all over Canada, that hon. gentleman comes here and denounces that country as unfit for settlement. He tells you that it costs more to get water there than it would cost to buy a farm in another place. And who is this man? How does he agree with those men who have come from that country, and who have seen ten times as much of it as probably he ever will. From the hon. member for Lisgar there was no uncertain sound. What did the hon. member for Marquette do? Why, Sir, he gave his vote like a man.

Mr. POPE. Clap your hands, gentlemen; you are pleased with a very small thing. Rejoice when you can, for it is very little you can rejoice over. The hon. member for Selkirk voted for these Resolutions, and I believe we shall yet hear his voice raised in defence of that country, which he was sent here to defend, and which every man has defended but one. I do not say that any member from the front benches went back and told the mover of the amendment before us that if he gave his vote against the Resolutions that night, he might move against the monopoly clause to-day. I do not believe any hon. member of this House would be so bad as that. It is possible that someone may have put it into his head. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman thought he was doing right. I have no doubt he thinks his constituents, when he goes back, will renew their confidence in him; but I do not think the people of Manitoba generally will endorse his action. But where do we stand to-day in relation to that monopoly clause? Have not hon. gentlemen opposite, day after day, and hour after hour, been pointing to us, and asserting that we put the monopoly clause into that contract? Did not my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) declare that the Pacific Railway should be protected in that country? Did he not, as well as my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, in the Railway Committee, declare and vote that no other railway should be built in that country?

Mr. MACKENZIE. If the hon. gentleman wants an answer from me, I will give it at once.

Mr. POPE. Yes, I do.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I never made any such declaration.

Mr. POPE. Then, I am very much misinformed. I can tell the hon. gentleman that he gave his vote—I know the hon. gentleman will not deny it—in the Railway Committee, that no road should be built in that country south of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I never gave such a vote.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman gave his vote in Committee—I assert it positively—and so did the hon. leader of the Opposition—

Mr. BLAKE. No, no.

Mr. POPE. That no roads should run west or south-west. That was the position the hon. gentleman occupied. What position does the hon. member for Marquette occupy with respect to his constituents to-day? Would he never have a railway at all? I can tell the hon. gentleman that he never would have had a railway unless in its inception, while it was being built, it had protection. The hon. member for Marquette knows that quite well. Everybody knows it perfectly well; and yet the hon. gentleman who has just sat down gets up here and says: Why, you are doing exactly the same thing in Ontario. In Ontario? Has the Grand Trunk not had an opportunity to develop that country? Has it not had time to get its business established? How can the Grand Trunk be cited as an analogy to this road? I can tell the hon. member for Marquette that if there had been no such protection for this railway, he might have gone to the capitalists of the world, and pleaded in vain for assistance to build this road. For a time there must be protection, and that was the resolution voted by the hon. member for East York and by every member of the Opposition at that time in the Railway Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. No, no.

Mr. POPE. Yes, yes. I know it perfectly well, for I was there myself; and the leader of the Opposition was there, and he voted too.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not.

Mr. POPE. I tell you, you did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. We cannot have these flat contradictions.

Mr. POPE. I made no contradiction, Sir; the hon. gentleman made it. I stand by what I said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. POPE. Such, Sir, is the position with respect to this monopoly—that if we had not given that protection, we should have had no road; and the hon. gentleman heard my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways, come down, the other day, and say that the directors of this road did not care to continue that monopoly for any length of time, but that they were willing, when the road was completed, and when they had secured the traffic that was due to that road, to allow of competition. Still, this did not satisfy the hon. gentleman. He comes forward, and against the protest of every other member for Manitoba, moves against this monopoly clause. I ask the hon. gentleman whether he thinks his constituents will endorse conduct of this kind, whether he thinks he will ever again sit on the floor of this House, or whether we would ever have had a railway had not this protection been extended to it.

Mr. TROW. It was not my intention to make any remarks on this subject, which has been so thoroughly discussed, but I can scarcely resist the temptation of saying a few words in reply to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. That hon. gentleman, above all others, should know something about that country—not that he has paid it a personal visit, but that his Department is so closely connected with the settlement of the North-West—that although such unguarded expressions might be excusable in other hon. gentlemen, they are not excusable coming from him. In the first place, he defends his Department for issuing that pamphlet, but he never before attempted to make any explanation of it. The matter has often been called in question, and this is the first time any explanation whatever was attempted, to show why and how this pamphlet was issued. The pamphlet in question certainly had an evil tendency. It was printed and circulated at the instigation of the Department, probably to the number of 70,000 or 80,000. These copies were in circulation—

Several hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. TROW. I say yes; and they would have been circulated in their entirety without anything being expunged had I not called attention to them at the time. What was then done? The moment the matter was called in question, the hon. gentleman got his officials to cut out the objectionable pages and they were issued minus several pages that advertised Dakota, Minnesota, and other parts of the American Union. The hon. gentleman seemed to me somewhat unguarded in his expressions. He accused the hon. member for York (Mr. Mackenzie) and the hon. leader of the Opposition, of not being opposed to a monopoly clause. When they denied this, he persisted in his statement that they had actually voted in the Railway Committee for the monopoly clause. The hon. gentleman should have accepted the word of these hon. gentlemen, acknowledged his error and said he was misinformed. But no, he still persisted in declaring that he was right and they were wrong. I have travelled pretty extensively in that country and know something about it. I have no desire to decry it. I have travelled thousands of miles through it in various directions, not by rail, on a pass, like the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. White), when the snow covered the ground to the depth of two feet, and the train running at the rate of probably thirty miles an hour. He could not know much about the country. I would ask how, if any gentleman traveling through a country, no matter how denuded of timber it was, and could only see a few miles on each side of the track with the soil covered by about two feet of snow, and on a train going at the rate of twenty or thirty miles an hour—I would ask how any one could form any idea of the soil under such circumstances? I do think, without egotism, that I know as much about that country as any hon. member in this House. There are lands there for millions, good homesteads for millions, but for an hon. gentleman to say that the whole face of the country is good, is preposterous. There is no country that I know of that is all good. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) last night accused the Reform press of this country with retarding immigration by the articles that emanated from Liberal papers in various parts of the Dominion. Now, if there is one paper under the sun that has done more to people the North-West than another, it is the Toronto Globe. If there is one paper that has advocated its attractions and resources day by day and year by year, since the country was settled, since Confederation, it is the Toronto Globe. The Globe even sent down, at an enormous expense, their agent through that country, and one of their agents, whose expenses were paid by the Globe Co. travelled with the Marquis of Lorne to the foot of the Rocky Mountains. Indeed, I thought at the time that he was exaggerating, because he said that 90 per cent. of the lands in the whole country were good. I have travelled in Europe and in many States of the United States, and more particularly in the North-West, and I say I have never travelled in any country in my life in which 70 per cent. of all its lands were good. In regard to the North-West, I say there are millions of acres there unfit for settlement, but there are tens of millions of acres really good and adapted to successful settlement. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are entitled to great credit for their push and perseverance in carrying through that great work to the foot of the Rocky Mountains in such a short space of time, but I question the propriety very much of carrying it through so rapidly, for the simple reason that the land being locked up all south of the line by the policy of the Government, the Syndicate taking a very large proportion on each side of the line, and the colonization companies owning large portion, all new settlers are anxious to get the best portion of the country naturally travelled westward in advance of the railway, and lots that were accessible have been taken up all through the line. The consequence is there is a series of scattered settlements from one end of the country to the other. It would be much better if 100 or 200 miles had been made in one season in advance of settlement. The people would then have had their communities, they could have arranged for school and municipal organizations, and it would have been much better for the country and the people. My impression is, after having travelled pretty extensively in that country, that the railway is located in the wrong part of the country. I do not know why it was constructed there. The old survey adopted by the late Administration, was certainly preferable. The lands were better, easier of access, and with more timber and good water, and settlements sprang up through them for at least 300 miles from Winnipeg with the expectation of getting immediate railway communication. I recollect, some years ago, when the policy of the Mackenzie Administration was to construct a line north of Lake Manitoba, the hue and cry of the Conservative party was: Why not run south of Lake Manitoba and benefit the present settlers? Why not run through a settled portion of the country? Even if you should diverge somewhat from a straight line, it is your duty to accommodate the pioneers of the country. This Government certainly have not adopted what they advocated then, because, after leaving Portage la Prairie, there was scarcely a settler to be found from Portage la Prairie to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, and I question very much if the railway Company had to purchase the right of way from a single settler. For 500 or 600 miles the grades are probably much easier, but the country is not so well adapted for settlement. After leaving Regina, and more particularly Moose Jaw, the country is not adapted for successful settlement. It may in the course of time, but it is my impression that it is barren, it is denuded of its timber. Probably there never was any timber on it, but, at any rate, there is not sufficient rainfall there for the growth of cereals. However, there are other parts of the country that are good. There are millions of acres in southern Manitoba that have been closed up from settlement for years but are now opened for settlement, and no doubt there will be a rush for that portion of Manitoba, which is probably the best portion of the Province. I have heard hon. gentlemen say—particularly the Minister of Agriculture and Immigration—that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) may be called to account for his stewardship when he returns to Marquette, for his unguarded remarks here to-day. I wish that hon. gentleman to know that the member for Marquette has been in that country for years, and has travelled in that country for seven or ten years to my knowledge, and knows a great deal about that country, and knows what he is talking about, and he is responsible alone to his constituents and not to the Minister of Agriculture; and, as to the member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), his vocation in life did not lead him to travel much through the country. He was principally in the city of Winnipeg. He may speak of the city and its surroundings, but he does not know as much about that country as the member for Marquette.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The member for Marquette said he had not visited the country westward.

Mr. TROW. I am aware that he has; he has been as far as Moose Jaw and Birtle; he has been, at any rate, 300 or 400 miles west from Winnipeg, and therefore he knows something about the country.

Mr. RYKERT. A great authority that.

Mr. TROW. The contract that was entered into by the Syndicate with the Government was alleged by all parties, at the time, both Reform and Conservative, to be a good bargain. It was acknowledged by the press of both sides and by the whole country at large that they had succeeded in dictating their own terms to the Government and in obtaining a wonderful contract, a very remunerative contract from the Government—the $25,000,000 and the 25,000,000 acres of land, with all the exemption from taxation, which in itself is a matter of great importance. There is no doubt that there are members in this House who pay at the rate of $20 of taxation for each section of land, and, if you make a calculation of what the Syndicate save in that way on their tract of land—they have 39,062 sections, which, at $20 each, gives $781,240 a year, and that, for twenty years, is a very valuable consideration. The hon. Minister of Railways, above all other hon. gentlemen, has handled his case—though it is a bad case—with a great deal of ingenuity and a great deal of ability. I question if there is another gentleman in the Dominion who could have handled that case so cleverly. In the first place, he states that the Syndicate made no overtures, were not anxious for any additional subsidy, but that the Government were anxious that the work should be immediately constructed. He further stated, if I am rightly informed, that they would carry out the contract in its entirety.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. I do not think I made any such statement as that they made no overtures. I do not think he will find that anywhere. If I did make such a statement, it is certainly an erroneous one.

Mr. TROW. The hon. gentleman knows best what he did say, but I was certainly under the impression that the Syndicate had made no plea for the $30,000,000, that they had no particular desire, that they were capitalists and would fulfil their contract, in compliance with the terms of the contract, by 1891, but it was an object for the Government to encourage settlement and to increase immigration, to get these parties to construct the work more rapidly at both ends, the portion to the north of Lake Superior more particularly, and that portion through the Rocky Mountains. Now, I question very much the propriety of the construction of the railway north of Lake Superior so rapidly. I do not know but that you have already all the facilities now which are essential and requisite to carry on successfully the immigration as well as if you went all the way by rail. It is a kind of rest for an immigrant, after coming out from the old country by water, to go 1,000 miles by rail, and then another rest of 1,000 miles by water. I do not think it would retard immigration the least, and that railway north of Lake Superior runs for 700 or 800 or 1,000 miles through the most inhospitable country on the face of the globe—I do not speak now of Manitoba, but north of Lake Superior, from Callander even to Winnipeg. It is questionable in my mind whether there are 10,000 acres adapted for settlement along the whole line of the route, and, if you carry on a railway through a country not adapted for settlement, it strikes me forcibly it will be carried on with a very large expense to the country, and will not be remunerative to the contractors. Unless there is some way-freight for a railway, it is utterly impossible for it to be a paying concern. If the Syndicate are prepared to give ample, good and sufficient security, it strikes me forcibly that they could obtain what means were requisite from the capitalists of Europe, where moneys are obtained for such enterprises by all nations and by all contractors. That is the proper place where money can be obtained at a much more reasonable rate of interest than even from the Government. Why, the Minister of Railways stated that they could obtain the money at 3 or 4 per cent. in Europe, whereas the Government are charging 5 per cent. It seems to me that it is bad policy on the part of the Syndicate, if they have good security, to get it from the Government at any rate. The question is, why should we tax the people of this Dominion $7.75 or $8 per head of the population, probably $40 to $50 for each head of a family in this Dominion, for this Syndicate? They are men possessing ample means, and if they have ample security to give, it is my impression that they can obtain all the capital which is necessary by giving the security which is spoken so highly of. I think the settlers in that country have been somewhat deceived. I know that thousands of the settlers have settled around Westbourne, Gladstone, the Little Saskatchewan, Minnedosa, Shoal Lake, Birtle, Shell River, Silver Creek, Ellice and other places, with a full knowledge and impression that the Government had agreed to construct a railway on that route. And now, what is the result of it? There is no private enterprise that can accommodate them, and the result is that the settlers in and around Birtle and Shell River have to travel at least 150 miles with their grain to Brandon, before they can sell one bushel. It is true, the country yields, and has yielded, abundantly, though this last season the crop was a partial failure. Hon. gentlemen seem to say that it is decrying the country for hon. members on this side of the House to say that the crops were frozen. The first I ever saw about frozen wheat was in the Montreal Gazette, in a telegram from Winnipeg to Montreal. It reads as follows:—

That is in the Montreal Gazette of the 3rd of October.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Would the hon. gentleman read the telegram that came from Winnipeg two or three days afterwards, and which was also inserted, correcting that statement, and saying that it was entirely an error. I may remark here that that particular telegram was intended for Mr. Ogilvie's brother, and not for publication at all. Its publication was a mistake.

Mr. TROW. I have read the telegram word for word as it appeared in the Montreal Gazette. It has been published and spread broadcast through the country. The country was assured by Hon. Mr. Ogilvie, who has more interest in the productions of the country than any other individual in it, that such was the fact.

Mr. WHITE. The Hon. Mr. Ogilvie had nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. TROW. It was from a Mr. Ogilvie at all events. Apparently, the Senator has something to do with it. However, it was published in the Gazette. The First Minister seems to consider that the speech of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) was great help to his party, that hon. gentleman knew so much about the country, and had spoken so favourably of it. The hon. member for Lisgar has been much flattered for the vote that he has given. Well, I do not know that he is a great acquisition to the party opposite, because so far as I know he has never belonged or identified himself with the Opposition. We know, at all events, that he has never allied himself with the Reform party since he entered Parliament.

Mr. RYKERT. Read him out, then.

Mr. TROW. By no means. We would take the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), scrap-book and all, if he would only come over.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And all the Bleus of Quebec.

Mr. TROW. It is true that that hon. gentleman sometimes changes his mind. I believe some years ago he was a respectable member of the Reform party. He fell from grace, at all events, and probably he is satisfied with his present position. Sir, I contend that there is no justification, no reason, for taxing the community $8 per head for the benefit of the Syndicate, under our existing financial circumstances. The money may be recouped, it may possibly be refunded. The hon. Minister of Railways, and those who support him, say that it will all be refunded, that there is sufficient and ample security. I hope that is the case. I have confidence in several members of the Syndicate, that they are men of honour, men of capital, and it is to be hoped that the money that is to be voted to them will all be refunded to the country. However, past experience shows us that other influences may be brought to bear which may disappoint our expectations of getting this money back. We have the case of the Grand Trunk Railway before us, and it may turn out that this money will become a bonus, and that we shall not get it back. However, I hope I am mistaken in that respect, and that we shall get it all back with interest. Sir, I should not have troubled the House with any remarks were it not that the hon. Minister of Agriculture made some uncalled-for expressions in reference to the pamphlets and votes of the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). I am anxious to see this discussion come to an end, but I nevertheless feel called upon to refer to some statements that have been made by some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, which are so at variance, in my judgment, with the truth in relation to the North-West, that I should be recreant to my duty if I left them to go uncontradicted. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat remarked that some of those who had spoken favourably of that country had gone up there on fast trains and on a free passage. Well, I visited that country and I went up on neither. I went up on a purchased buck-board, bought with my own money. In about two months I traversed over 2,000 miles of the prairie country; consequently, I can speak from personal observation; and more than that, I want the House to understand that I am speaking as a thoroughly practical farmer—indeed I am almost egotistical enough to say that in respect to the character of the soil, I would put my judgment against that of any hon. gentleman in the House. Before I reached the extremity of that country, my previously favourable opinion of it was verified by the indications of growth I saw there. However, before I go further, I wish to make a remark on a statement made by the hon. gentleman who just sat down, when he claimed that the Globe newspaper did more than all other means to settle that country. Now, I will read an extract from a remark made by the ex-Finance Minister, who said:

“But, he admitted, that although the attacks of the Liberal party were bad, they were not a circumstance to the attacks of the Liberal press. As to the Liberal press, he had hardly any words too strong to convey his disapprobation—”

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Go on, go on.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am going on as rapidly as I can read. I am suffering from a sore throat to-night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must trouble the hon. gentlemen to read what I stated from the Hansard. What he is now stating is a deliberate falsehood. I do not accuse him of making it, but I say he has read a statement which is deliberately false—not by intention of the hon. gentleman, however, I have no doubt.

Mr. FERGUSON. The only reply to the hon. gentleman is that, so far as I am concerned, the statement is not deliberately false. It was the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Watson) who made a statement which brought me to my feet. I believe he stated very distinctly that west of Moose Jaw there was no land fit for agricultural purposes in that country.

Mr. WATSON. Not from my own experience, but from information received.

Mr. FERGUSON. His experience does not amount to anything. If he gave a statement to this House without sufficient knowledge, his act is as iniquitous as that of a judge rendering judgment without hearing the evidence. In the few remarks I propose to make upon the North-West country, I shall speak as a practical farmer. I went there neither as a speculator nor as a tourist, but with a view to satisfy myself of the agricultural capabilities of the country of which I had heard and read so much. I can venture this assertion, and I do it without fear of contradiction successfully, that it will yet be found, and in a very early period, that the great grain and food producing region is west of Moose Jaw. As I said before, I have travelled over the country on a buck-board, leisurely, going where I pleased, and I was not confined to the railway and looking out of car windows, as was attributed to many hon. members by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow). I saw, west of Moose Jaw, west of Medicine Hat, and south of Calgary, as fine wheat, oats, pease, and barley grown on the Indian farms and on the farms of some settlers who had been there for some fifteen or sixteen years, as I have seen grown in the most favoured agricultural districts of Ontario, and I think I live in one of the best of them. As to the district between Moose Jaw and Medicine Hat, of which we have heard so much as being a barren desert, many who have gone over the country are quite mistaken as to its character. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), the other night explained to some extent the cause of that misapprehension, saying that it was owing to the character and colour of the grass. That country, for a couple of hundred miles, is covered with buffalo grass. Many hon. members do not know exactly what that is; I did not till I went out there. It is not long, wavy, bunchy grass, but a short grass, not more than from three to five inches in length, and owing to the early spring, it matures in the first part of June. It cures on its foot and turns white. It is not burnt, but simply ripened on its stock; and anyone who has driven a pair of horses over it for a month, with no fodder except that grass, must know that it is nothing else than matured hay. There is sufficient moisture in the soil to produce a new crop by the first of August. That crop grows to a height of two inches if burnt over, and of four inches where it has not been burnt over. It is simply because the season is so much earlier than it is in Ontario that persons unaccustomed to and not looking carefully at the face of the country, miscalculate the character of the Province. Mention has been made of people leaving there on the ground that there is neither fuel nor building material. I will confine my remarks chiefly to Alberta, regarding which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) should have informed himself before he addressed the House. As to wood, there is not much in that country, but nature, through its wisdom, has compensated that district by supplying an almost unlimited supply of coal. The result of my observations is that I can unhesitatingly state that in the whole Province of Alberta I saw no place, nor do I believe there is a locality, where a farmer cannot, with his own cart, need haul fuel more than a distance of five miles, and in half the cases within that distance. As to building material, as far west as Brandon—I am now coming back to Manitoba—I know good building material, American pine and our own Rat Portage pine, is sold within a few cents per thousand as cheaply as it can be purchased to-day in the lumber yards at Ottawa. I saw as good siding for buildings sold retail to hundreds of settlers at $25 per thousand, as you see in the Ottawa market to-day. Doors, frames and window sashes, with glass, can be bought even cheaper than in Ottawa.

Mr. WATSON. I never saw good siding sold in that country at the price named.

Mr. FERGUSON I did, and did not hesitate to help men who went from my county to load lumber on their waggons bought at these prices. As to the price of fuel, there is such an abundance so easily reached, that with ordinary and reasonable opportunities given to mining companies by the Government, which, no doubt, will be given, and such rates as I found proposed for the transportation of coal by the Canadian Pacific Railway, coal will be supplied almost as far east as Winnipeg—I know as far east as Brandon—to settlers all along the railway line and villages and towns which are rapidly springing up, within twelve months from to-day, at 25 per cent. less than coal of the same character is supplied to towns and villages bordering on the banks of the St. Lawrence. As to the question of transportation, I do not wish to divulge the profits of any coal miner, but I have the most reliable information that coal can be put on the surface there with very large profit to miners, at $1.50 per ton, and the agreement for transportation which was being made while I was there, was 40 cents a ton for 100 miles. Anyone can calculate the cost to carry it 400 miles and lay it down. As to water; there are places in that country where water is scarce, and it is in the district beyond Moose Jaw. It is not that there is not water in the soil. Here is the difficulty: All over that region there are immense deposits of pure tenacious clay, almost pure aluminium, that is, clay without any porosity whatever, and so the water only permeates the gravel beds. When you find a district thus overlaid, you will find no water except surface water—but you will find lakes from one to 100 acres on this clay—until you reach a gravel bed; but these districts are very few and scarce. Mention has been made of a locality where the railway Company went 300 feet to find water. They did that to suit their own convenience at a special point on the railway. I know, as a matter of fact, that at a station west of that point, a man who went to start a store there, acting on my suggestion, went to the side hill and dug into the gravel instead of boring down into the clay bed. I had to go south, and on returning ten days afterwards, we drank from a bucket of water taken from a well, only twelve feet deep, in which there were five feet of as nice water as I ever drank in my life. This difficulty in respect of water only applies to the central portion of the Province of Assiniboia. Running east from the mountains in Alberta, there are from eight to ten beautiful rivers, the character of the water of which, unless seen, cannot be appreciated. We all talk about the beautiful water of the St. Lawrence, but that is not a patch on it. As an experiment, I dropped a five cent piece into one of the streams, and I distinctly distinguished it at the depth of a long fishing rod which I had at the time. That is the character of the water, and it is so cold that in the middle of August it takes a vigorous fellow to take a dip into it. As to the character of the face of the country, I state most unhesitatingly—and I believe that observation on a more extended scale will shortly verify my statement—that in no portion of Ontario is there a smaller proportion of land unfit for agriculture than in the district of Alberta. I travelled there for days, and in various directions, and from one hill, or rather from one beautiful, rolling, undulating slope to another, and I frequently saw thousands of acres in one valley of the finest loam that the sun ever shone on. I say, as an agriculturalist, that I never left any portion of the earth which I have visited, with such a degree of reluctance, as I left the district of Alberta. My hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. White), spoke about living out in the snow. I may say that I saw snow there one afternoon, but I was told that it was 80 miles away. I saw it from Calgary, and speaking of that place, I may say that the man who has not visited Calgary has not yet seen one of the most pleasing sights, one of the finest landscapes, that could be presented to any man's view. I am not very much in the way of quoting poetry, but certainly if not the loveliest village ever was built. A finer site for a town could not have been selected, for they have abundance of water, they have coal, in the neighborhood of the mountains, they have timber, and they have mines. I believe that in a short period that town will be the rival of Winnipeg, and before the next ten years the people of Alberta will be knocking at the doors of this Parliament for a charter of incorporation, as by that time, I am sure, they will have attained the limit of population provided by the British North America Act. There seems to be some dispute as to the merits and demerits of the Tariff as affecting the price of agricultural implements. One implement, which was more especially referred to, was reaping and binding machines. I admit that I did not price them, but I did price reapers, mowers, horse rakes, waggons and ploughs, and I am satisfied that with regard to those of which I knew the value myself, they were sold in that country, in many instances, cheaper, and in no instance dearer, than in Ontario, and cheaper than they were before. As to the supply, I might take Brandon as an example, and I am satisfied that it would take a most ingenious man to stack upon an acre lot the quantity of agricultural machinery carried over there this winter. As to the rapidity of construction of the road, and the location, I may say that I had some doubt about the location before I visited the country, and took in the topography of the region. The road, I am satisfied, runs through as good a portion of the country, in an agricultural sense, as the northern line, and it has this advantage, as has often been stated by the Minister of Railways, that it is 100 miles shorter, a most important item in a national highway. In my judgment, if the character of the country, on the northern line, is as represented by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow), it will be rapidly penetrated by railways; in fact, it is being so penetrated already; and the main national line being to the south of that country, we will be able to procure the whole carrying trade of that region; whereas, if it had been built on the northern survey, it is possible we might have competition to the south, which of course, is impossible under existing circumstances. The member for Perth also spoke about the difficulties of settlers drawing their grain for hundreds of miles; but if a road had been built to the north, the people in the southern part of the country would have had the same difficulty to contend with. The real difficulty is that the country is so vast that it is impossible to construct a railway to every man's door, or to every little town, in the two years during which the road has been operating. As to branch lines, there appears to be some discrepancy as to the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. One hon. gentleman argued that all the money should be spent on the main line, while another declared that the prosperity of the country was being impaired, and settlement paralyzed, because branches were not built. This is a discrepancy the hon. gentlemen can reconcile, as they please. There is one branch line, however, which would be of vast importance to the country. Many settlers were induced to go into the southern part of the country, that part south of the main line, in consequence of the hope that the Manitoba and South-Western would be constructed; but that road having been suspended, for some cause or other, and the Canadian Pacific Railway having acquired its charter, I think it should be pushed forward as rapidly as possible, because there have been settlers there a longer time without railway facilities than in any other part of the country than I am aware of, and I think their claims should be well and carefully considered. As to the farmers' delegates, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) denies that there was any political cabal, or that the movement originated for political purposes. Now, I chance to know something about that movement, as I happen to have some friends in the hon. gentleman's own town, as well as in Brandon and Winnipeg. If, as the hon. gentleman claims, that movement was strictly in the interests of the country, he should have been one of its leading spirits; but he says: No; I am afraid of my political position; I will not join in it at all, else somebody will find fault with me. The very fact of his absenting himself from the meetings, and taking no part in the proceedings, is an evidence, to my mind, that he was satisfied with the erroneousness of the whole movement. As to the character of the men sent down here, I am going to give a little comparison in a professional way. If the medical profession were to hold a convention in their interests, in, say the

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville).

Province of Ontario, I am quite sure that they would not send carpenters or blacksmiths, or even lawyers, if you like, to represent them, but medical men. There is an association of farmers, so called, who come down here, as they claim, to represent the farmers; but it is a question in my mind, if those men ever cultivated one square rod of land, and I doubt if they know peas from buckwheat, still, they come here to present the grievances of the farmers to the Dominion Parliament. The proposition is an absurd one. In the neighbourhood of Brandon, there are two or three men, whom I happen to know, prominent and successful farmers, old residents, and notoriously political friends of the hon. gentleman, and I would ask him why did not such men as Mr. Sifton, Mr. Mackenzie, or Mr. Stewart, and others of that character, come down on this delegation. But not one of them came; they were sensible, prudent men, who would have nothing to do with this little bit of political clap-trap, whose case was printed in the Globe office, on King street, Toronto. This was the place where these bomb-shells were prepared, which were to burst upon the country. Now, I travelled, as I said, on a buckboard. I took occasion when I met a farmer on his farm to ask him: "Well, neighbour, where did you come from?" "Well, I came from Carleton." But eight out of every ten men I met came from Huron and Bruce. Well, I found that every man I met, I may say without a single exception, who was on his farm and went there to make the country his home, expressed himself as perfectly satisfied, and as having no wish to go back to Ontario. I did find a few growlers—where did I find them? Loafing about the piazzas of the hotels; and I will venture the wager that 95 per cent. of the growlers were this class of men. True, my professional friend from Grey (Mr. Landerkin) the other night, gave an instance of one or two of the supporters of the hon. gentleman going out to that country and not finding where to place their feet. They could not find a spot in Manitoba, in which to-day there are more than 15,000,000 acres of unoccupied lands, while west of the boundary line there is a country capable of supporting 25,000,000 or 30,000,000, of not any denser population than we have in Ontario. And yet these supporters of my hon. friend, these strange kind of Tories, could not find a place to stick their heads in. I came across one or two men who said they had always been Conservatives and voted with the Conservative party; but they went up to the country, and were unfortunate; and, on enquiry, I found that they expected something from the officers of the Department, contrary to the expressed Statute, and did not get it. The law was administered so fairly and properly in the interest of the actual settler that these men had to come back. Many of these men were unsuccessful business men—unsuccessful newspaper men—or, perhaps there was some chap who had been unsuccessful in running an election, and who thought that if he went up there and selected a valuable property, he could get it in some way by bull-dozing the Government. These were the kind of men who said they were Tories, and who growled. These were the only class of men whom I found there growling. I asked: "Well, what is the matter?" "Oh, it is the land regulations." "Well, what do you object to in them?" "Oh," they say, "it is the land regulations." Now, as to the land regulations, their advantages were explained so fairly and so fully the other night by the hon. member for Lisgar, that it is unnecessary for me to make any long reference to them. But I feel that our land regulations are so liberal, so generous and so inviting, compared with those prevailing in Dakota, that I cannot refrain from mentioning a few of their features. Hon. gentlemen know that one of the first things that meets a Canadian or any other man who goes to settle in Dakota or Minnesota, is the oath of allegiance, especially against Great Britain. Do we impose any such conditions upon any one who goes to our

North-West? We say: No; you give us your citizenship for three years, and we will give you the land. The American term of residence is five years; ours is only three years, or rather only six months in each year of the three. And with reference to preemptions, no settler in Dakota can get a preemption until he gets a certificate of his homestead. The result is, that he is obliged to locate his preemption 30 or 40 miles away from his homestead, and then he only gets eighty acres. In our North-West, the moment a man makes his homestead entry, he can make his preemption entry, and he gets the two side by side; and he receives all the advantages that can accrue to him from his occupation of that preemption, as he does from his occupation of his homestead. It is just as sure to him as his homestead, provided he fulfils the necessary requirements of his homestead. So that there is no comparison between Dakota and our North-West in that respect. And yet hon. gentlemen get up in this House and state that one of the causes of the exodus, which I could not discover, is the inferiority of our land regulations to those of the United States. Now, with regard to the exodus. I found a great number of men in Manitoba, from Dakota, from Minnesota, and especially from Montana. I met one very intelligent man at Medicine Hat, who had been a mixed grazer and farmer in Montana; and he said to me: "As compared with Montana, this is God's country." That was his expression. Now, I have heard it said that there are large settlements of Canadians in the United States, and hon. gentlemen opposite attribute these settlements to the difference in the land laws of the two countries. I say that is absurd and unfair. I know that there are large settlements of Canadians in the western States—whole districts for miles around; I am speaking more particularly of Michigan and Illinois, in which there are large numbers of people from my own neighbourhood. Men whom I have lived with for fifteen years have gone out there. And why did they go? For this simple reason: they were led away by the profuse and attractive advertising, not only of the American Government, but principally of American railways that had lands for sale. I remember, twenty years ago, seeing something that I thought should not be tolerated by the Canadian people—the immense placards which were hung up at every prominent point in the country. I remember seeing in the Union station at Toronto, and also at Montreal, immense glass cases, about six feet long, containing specimens of all sorts of grain from Illinois, Minnesota, and other western States. I remember one advertisement in particular. In front there was a prairie scene, with long waving grass, and on one side a herd of buffalo; immediately in the rear were a number of engineers, with their instruments set up, and behind them were men laying a railway; behind that again were three or four ploughs, a reaping machine, a threshing machine, and other instruments at work, and behind that were a lot of carts drawing wheat to the railway. Now, what immigrant could resist an advertisement like that? Why, it was a whole lecture in itself. We had no prairie lands to offer at that time, and any young man, or old man either, who was intelligent and vigorous, and was desirous of making a home for himself and his sons at the least expenditure of labour, was not going into the back woods of Ontario, where he would have to cut down maple trees, and ash trees, and elm trees, to make a place for his home. Here was a country completely devoid of all these obstructions, and it attracted a lot of people; hence the settlement of Canadians in the north-western States. I know many of these old men were strong in their allegiance to British institutions, but they went there for the sake of pecuniarily benefiting themselves and families, and they lived and died British subjects. I know some to-day who never went to poll a vote; though their sons voted, they did not. What I want to point out is this: that the young people of to-day are just as strong in their attachment to Canada as those old men to whom I refer; and when we have a country as extensive, as good, and as accessible to offer to these people, we will not have many more of these American settlements, provided hon. gentlemen opposite do not deter people from going in there by their cries about cold, want of fuel, bad water, blizzards and bad land regulations. In speaking of the frost, the hon. gentleman says the thermometer went down to 40 below zero. I noticed that one day on my own verandah, it went down to 38°, and the strong wind and the damp atmosphere at the time, I am satisfied, registered more on my feelings and those of any man in the country than 45 of the clear atmosphere of the North-West. Although the frost may have a deterring effect on those who do not thoroughly understand the conditions and the effect it has on that country in an agricultural sense, the cold period in the far North-West is much shorter than it is either in Manitoba or Ontario. Winter comes on in the extreme North-West about, perhaps, the middle of November, and men who have lived there ten years say that during all that time there was no season in which they could not sow their grain on the first of March, and the winter is practically gone by the end of February. As to the effects of frost, naturally it may be difficult to get through the winter until those people have built for themselves comfortable houses and got cheap fuel. But it has this effect upon the country, that every inch of frost that penetrates into the soil during the winter and thaws out in the spring, it disintegrates the food elements of the plants which are growing upon it, and adds to the store value of that country as an agricultural region. We know that as you approach the Mississippi from the north, even as far south as southern Dakota, where the frost does not penetrate to such a great depth, from six to eight years is about as long as the average surface of that country would preserve its maximum virgin production, for the simple reason that the frost does not penetrate any further, and as no sub-soiling has been attempted, the roots of the plants do not penetrate into the soil that has not been loosened by the frost. In the lands in this section, which have for years been under cultivation, the falling off, from this cause, is not compensated by the increase through new territory; but our North-West will preserve her maximum production of that under cultivation four or five years longer, so that even at a much less rapid pace of settlement than our neighbours, her maximum will be continued for a much longer period. There is another feature to which I draw attention. Every hon. gentleman who has paid attention to the zone belts of the earth, in which food cereals are produced, know that it is in the north temperate zones that nearly all the grains are grown, and the nearer the northern limit of that belt in which grain is matured perfectly, the better is the quality of the grain. What I illustrate by that is this: that we, having to-day in that North-West country a larger area of land fit for agricultural purposes, when we get a fair proportion under cultivation, we will produce a larger quantity continuously of a better quality than the American States can ever hope to do, and I state what I know is a matter of fact, when I say that wheat near our own boundary in northern Dakota is more valuable than that grown further south. Why is that? Simply because the grain is of a better quality—it is what is technically called of a flinty character, and, when grown, will produce more flour, and is used to mix with the softer grains grown in the southern wheat belt. In the southern belt, the same wheat cannot be grown more than three years successively, because it so softens that the germinating properties are lost and half the seeds will not sprout. A large quantity of our wheat, even as early as three years ago, was sent down to that region for seed wheat, as the hon. member for Marquette well knows. The ultimate result of this will be that when that country is fairly under cultivation, when it has a population of five, six or eight millions, its production will be so great that when exported either by the Hudson Bay route, by the Canadian Pacific Railway or Port Arthur, I care not how, and launched on the Liverpool markets, those who schedule the bread stuffs and make up their prices for the season will not only ask how much is the production in England, in Russia, or in India or the United States, but the great question will be what will be the export from Canada? The production of Canada will regulate the prices of the world. This question has been dealt with so long and so variedly and by so many hon. gentlemen in this House, who have many years ago made their maiden speech, that there is very little left for me to say, and I feel that my remarks will have, perhaps, less interest than they might have had at an earlier date. But there is one thing, in speaking of the country west for settlement, which I think is very important, and the reason I mention it is that in reading, as I always do, carefully the reports of the geological surveys, I find no mention is made of it, nor is it mentioned by any surveyor or others who have travelled through that country. I think, therefore, that I am perfectly justified in drawing attention to the fact that in the extreme North-West fuel will be so cheap that the difficulty mentioned by the member for Marquette with reference to building timber will be easily remedied. Now I quite disagree with him. I am satisfied—I know it—that the cheapest building material, of the most durable and beautiful quality that exists on this continent, exists in that North-West Territory. I referred a few minutes ago to the large deposits of almost pure clay. Those beds are the deposits of the disintegration of the hill rocks, long before the country was settled, anyway, and the lime which the rocks contained has been carried off while held in solution. The clay, almost pure, is deposited—and I refer especially to the coal regions—in immense beds over the coal. The only substance that these clay beds contain, aside from the clay, is a silicate sand which is insoluble in water. What drew my attention to this was, that I saw at various places on the river banks, natural brick kilns, burnt and almost ready for the carter, of acres and acres in extent. It came in this way: The deposits were made over the coal beds by the action of water. In the course of time, ravines have been formed and cut through the coal beds. Eventually, the grass grew over the ravines, and, by some accidents in prairie fires, the coal caught fire, and continued back for acres under the surface, converting the whole superincumbent mass, from 150 to 200 feet, into one mass of beautiful brick. It is the character of the brick I wish to draw the attention of the House to. It is a brick formed from the clay, entirely devoid of lime, containing a silicate sand. In burning, after mixture, there is no expansion of the particles of lime. The brick is almost perfectly compact. It is a silicious brick. It is a crude glass, impervious to water, and almost indestructible by atmospheric influence. I found blocks in the Saskatchewan and in the Bow River, and north of the Red Deer River, which must have lain there, perhaps, for a thousand years, where they had fallen off, by the action of water and weather, into the water. Taking them up and breaking them with my hatchet, I found they were perfectly dry. Taking up ordinary limestone and smashing it, I could see evidence of the porosity and moisture there, convincing me that that brick was more impervious to water than our blue limestone. I found where they had drifted down the river for many miles, they were as smooth as any slate I ever saw polished. So much with reference to the building material. There is a scarcity of wood, it is true, and transport will cost something, but in that country you find the clay always overlaying the material for converting it into brick—the coal beds—you find it over the whole country; and brick may be moulded into any form—pillars, corners, mouldings—into any shape possible for the construction of a beautiful edifice, while in the kiln it may be converted into this indestructible brick, on the ground, from the coal that is there. There is another feature, that, when burnt, they may be polished, because they are so compact; and I saw thousands of evidences of their capability of being polished from the action of the water. That is not all. These clay beds vary from 25 to 50 feet, which were deposited at several spaces of time, and of different colours, the colour having been given, no doubt, by the character of the vegetable at the time the deposit was made, and the colour fixed by the silic acid in this sand, which, I think the hon. the Minister of Finance, from his knowledge of chemistry, knows, is the acid that fixes all vegetable dyes. There you find, in one stratum, a clay which makes a beautiful garnet red brick; in the next, a nice brown; then, a beautiful golden yellow; and, at the top, a snow white. There is the material and the character and the profuse nature of this supply. I am satisfied that, when that country comes to be settled, the towns and villages there will be the handsomest, the most durable, and the cheapest that ever were constructed on this continent, and that we will have ornamental buildings of material much more beautiful, because it takes a better polish, as indestructible, and at much less cost to the producer than the ordinary limestone rubble wall of Ottawa. So much as to the building material. I have given my view of the water and the fuel, and have stated my opinion as to the soil. I visited those farms and saw the results in wheat, barley, peas and oats. Let me detain you a moment longer. The barley of the North West region will be the select barley of this continent. During the time of its grain maturation, the atmosphere is dry, and such a thing as a bag of brown barley will never be produced. And, if my friends from Quebec will not take offence, I will say that, as for peas, the region is unsurpassed. I plucked peas, whole bundles of them, six miles south of Calgary, when I could count the peas in the pod 20 feet from the fence I was standing at. I forgot to mention as to the vegetation. I myself plucked and pulled cabbage, carrots, turnips and beets on the 8th August, seven miles south of Calgary, took them on the buckboard, and had them put in a tent, and eat them. I found one garden which will astonish some hon. gentlemen here, containing 15,000 heads, and there is not a head in this House as big as any of them. Just one word to the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). He stated that, to his personal knowledge and his belief—that is a lawyer's way of putting it—the majority of the people in Manitoba were as loyal in their feelings and sympathies and desires to the Canadian Government and institutions as a very considerable portion of the people in Ontario. That was about the only statement that I accepted fully from him, because I thought he was speaking for himself, politically, and his associates. Just one word in conclusion as to the Resolutions. Having had the honour of a seat in the House for a number of years, I think I am able to read between the lines, and to understand the cause of the opposition to these Resolutions. If my memory serves me aright, and I think it does, I have heard it stated by hon. gentlemen in this House—or if not in the House, in the vicinity of it—that all the monetary capacity of 4,500,000 Canadians, backed by the endorsement of Great Britain, could not build that road in the time specified. Now, we have almost indubitable evidence that within half the specified time the road will be constructed. And by whom? Under whose auspices? By the Conservative party. Hence the feeling of antipathy. I must say that it would, perhaps, have been better for the country if there had been no necessity for making this loan. It would have been better if circumstances had not placed the Company in a position that obliged them to ask for this loan. But since they have come back to us and have plainly, distinctly, and, I have a right to assume, honestly and fairly, laid before the Government, and the Government before the House, the cause of the difficulty, I think they are entitled to favourable consideration. I look at the matter, not from a Canadian Pacific Railway standpoint, but from a broad national standpoint. Whatever question there may have been under the old contract as to the security offered for the performance of the work, this new arrangement makes it infinitely better. So, on the ground of security, my mind is perfectly clear. As to the object to be attained by the early construction, I am equally clear. It is well known to every hon. gentleman in this House that both the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the Canadian Government, through the Minister of Agriculture, have advertised in every country in Europe, I believe in almost every language spoken in Europe, in a manner and with a profuseness that have never been done before. The result is that we are attracting the attention of the people at a specially opportune season in Europe in our endeavour to procure immigrants. It is well known to every one who reads the newspapers that there are social commotions in all the over crowded districts of Europe, such commotions as never existed before—land difficulties in Ireland, and land difficulties in Scotland, too; Communism in Germany, and Nihilism in Russia. These people are looking for some escape, for some country where they can go and reap the reward of their labour. We have so advertised the country, we have so directed attention to it, that the earlier we give them a thorough Canadian route, unembarrassed and unobstructed by rival land agents, the better for the country and the greater the volume of immigration we will secure. The Railway Company have informed the Government that they will be able to finish the road within half the time allowed by the contract; these people in Europe have been advised of that, and to suspend the construction of the road under present circumstances for six years longer, would lose us a large proportion of that immigration. Once the tide of immigration, like any other enormous tide, is flowing in any special direction, it requires a greater amount of exertion to arrest it than it does to hold it after it is started. One circumstance struck me to-day in a discussion that took place in another part of this building—in Committee. A gentleman gave us in figures his estimate of the advantages to the country from the immigration into the North-West, considering the money they brought in, the revenue the country will derive from their consumption of dutiable goods, &c., and he estimated that the 80,000 immigrants who came in last year represented an increase of $5,000,000 to the wealth of the country. Now, if, for the next six years, we have the same amount of immigration, and no greater, it will represent an addition to the fixed capital of the Dominion of $30,000,000. That, to my mind, is a reason sufficient to warrant the loan, and I shall vote for it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I rise to a personal question. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down was good enough to state that I had used these words—that I could find no words strong enough to express my disapprobation of the conduct of the Liberal press? Now, I should like to know, is there any human being having a seat on the floor of this House, stupid enough to suppose that I declared I could find no words strong enough to express my disapprobation of the conduct of the Liberal press. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman appreciated the utter absurdity of putting such words into my mouth. I told him, at the time, he was utterly mistaken, and I request him now, either to withdraw that statement or else to prove it—whichever he pleases.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). As the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) a few days ago put some very pertinent questions, I desire to say a few words in answer to his enquiries. He insinuated a few days ago that my motive for making a speech on another question was my justification for voting for the Resolutions in favour of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is not my desire, Sir, to make any recriminations in debate on an important question of this kind. But I desire to call his attention to the fact that in 1872 I voted for Resolutions in this House giving a land grant of 5,000,000 acres, and a cash subsidy of $50,000,000, for the purpose of building a railway from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. At that time, the Government of the day assured the representatives from Nova Scotia that the building of that road would not cost the people of the older Provinces of this Dominion one farthing. Although a large amount of money has been expended on that road since that time, I am happy to say that neither directly nor indirectly has the people of the rest of the Dominion, of the older Provinces, paid one farthing towards the expenditure on that road up to the present time. We did, it is true, borrow money for the purpose of building that road, but it is equally true that we received as much from the sale of lands in that territory as paid for the interest. In 1872, the Government of the day promised that not one farthing would be taken out of the pockets of the rest of the Dominion. The right hon. the leader of the Government, 18th January, 1881, said:

"Both Governments were pledged that the North-West should pay the cost of its own railway. We saw and felt that there was no reason why the taxpayers of the Maritime Provinces, or of the old Provinces of Canada should, out of their own pockets, pay for railway construction in the North-West. Those hon. gentlemen felt, as we felt, that in order to develop that great country, we should make an advance, borrow money and loan it to the North-West, which was rich enough when its resources were developed to repay principal and interest for the advance which they wished Parliament to make. We did ask Parliament to make the grant. Parliament made the grant, but under a solemn pledge given by myself and my colleagues, that we believed and knew that by a proper and vigorous administration of the affairs of that country, not one farthing would be taken out of the pockets of the rest of Canada, and that the North-West should pay for and build its own railway."

With this statement before him, any business man in the Dominion would consider it a justification for his vote on this question. The Minister of Railways was asked in regard to the repayment of the loan. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) said:

"In regard to the return of this money, I ask the hon. Minister of Railways, with his experience as to the difficulty involved in getting money back into the Treasury from a railway company, whether he really and honestly expects that the money will ever return?"

"Sir CHARLES CUPPER. Yes, every dollar."

That statement, combined with the assurance of the leader of the Government, should have satisfied the hon. member; but it appears to me to be very difficult to satisfy him. Let us suppose that we will not get the money returned; what position will we then occupy? We will have advanced $25,000,000 in cash, have given the Railway Company a road which cost this Dominion $28,000,000, for which the hon. member for Digby and the members of the former Government were responsible, and we will have advanced to them $32,500,000, which give an aggregate amount of $15,500,000. What shall we have as security? We will have 100,000,000 acres of land set aside for the purpose of the road, and also 21,000,000 acres which the Company give as security, together with many other valuable securities for repayment of the loan. That land, at $2 per acre, which I consider a very low price for such land as is described to me by persons who are personally acquainted with the North-West, will amount, together with other securities to no less than $24,000,000. Out of this I assume that the cost of surveys would be about $40,000,000, thus leaving a net balance to the credit of the Dominion of $124,500,000. Under such circumstances, I do not consider that the people of the Maritime Provinces, or the rest of the Dominion, need fear to advance $22,500,000 on such security as the Company now offer. The hon. member for Digby, asked another question, in these terms:

"I ask my hon. friends from Nova Scotia, who I am sure are desirous of doing anything they can, both for the Government and the Province they represent, if they have looked at the Public Accounts and the amount of the public debt, if they have noticed that in 1867, when the Province were confederated, the whole gross debt amounted to $93,000,000, and that in sixteen years we have increased that amount to $202,000,000, and it is now proposed by the hon. Minister of Railways, with one stroke of the pen, to add $30,000,000 more."

I think it is hardly fair for the hon. member for Digby to say that we will add $30,000,000 to the debt of Canada simply because we advance $22,500,000 on such substantial security as I have described. But the increase in the debt of this Dominion since 1867 can be accounted for. This first increase of the debt was on account of the better terms given to Nova Scotia $1,100,000. I would ask the hon. member for Digby if he would object to that increase? A large portion of the increase of the debt was due to the building of the Intercolonial Railway. Would the hon. member object to that increase? Another increase was owing to the assumption of the debt of $11,000,000, due by Ontario and Quebec, on account of which Nova Scotia received $1,500,000. Would the hon. member object to that? Another considerable amount of the increase in the public debt was due to the very large deficits which occurred during the administration of affairs by the Government of which the hon. member for Digby was a distinguished member. Surely he would not object to that increase? The whole question in regard to increased debt depends altogether as to whether the increase is one in the interests of the Dominion or not. Other items of increase were owing to the Dominion undertaking and completing public works which developed its resources, and on account of which a large amount of revenue was collected, and the expenditure was not only justifiable but in the interests of the whole Dominion, and consequently in the interests of the Maritime Provinces. He commenced his speech in the usual sympathizing manner. We were accustomed to that in a particular part of the Province to which I shall not allude, in connection with questions of this kind. He said:

"Almost every hon. gentleman who has risen on this side of the House has spoken in opposition to the Resolutions, and for that reason they have been charged with being disloyal, to some extent, and with being enemies to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. gentleman has thought proper to say that because I moved this amendment to defer for six months the consideration of this question, I must necessarily be an enemy to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I deny the charge, Mr. Speaker. This House has now been occupied for the last fortnight, almost, in the discussion of these Resolutions. We know, Sir, it must be very important for this country to have this matter settled one way or the other, as soon as possible. I say I am not an enemy to the Company, because I hold certain members of that Company, whom I know very well, in high respect—in much higher respect than any hon. gentleman who sits on the Treasury benches. I would be the last man in this House to say one word against those gentlemen composing the Company, or do anything at all to interfere with the progress of the great work in which they are engaged in completing our line of railway to the Pacific coast."

Good language this to be used by any person in any part of the Dominion and very emphatically in favour of the construction of that road. But the hon. gentleman's sympathies were not only with the different members of the Company, but with the great country through which that railway is to pass; but, notwithstanding all that, his allegiance to party would compel him to protest, immediately after, against the scheme which the Government proposed in order to build the railway through that great country. This question has been so exhaustively discussed that it is utterly impossible for a member from an outlying district in this great Dominion to advance anything new, and I would not have spoken at all only for the very serious question raised by my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail). But before sitting down, I beg to call the attention of the House to a letter which I received from one of my constituents who happens now to be at Port Arthur. It is so interesting, and has such a bearing on this discussion, that

I think it my duty to read as much of it as refers to the subject under discussion. It is as follows:—

"Undoubtedly you may be surprised to hear from me in this part of the Dominion, to which I came last November, having been previously over the summits of the Rocky Mountains. I went there in July, and remained until work was suspended, about the 1st of October, as it was doubtful through which of two different passes at or near the summit the railway would pass, the grading having been finished to that point, which is seventy miles into the Rockies. It is very singular there was hardly any rock excavated in all that distance to the summit. There is a gap made by the Bow River through the Rockies, carrying a level flat varying from one to three miles in breadth all along to the summit. Since my return to Port Arthur the times are rather dull, but we anticipate a good summer, and I intend to remain here until the next fall. There is a large tract of excellent land between Port Arthur and Winnipeg. The Eagle River country, particularly, about 200 miles west of Port Arthur, contains hundreds of thousands of acres of bush lands to settle on, and the rivers and lakes are teeming with excellent fish. I would like to have my family there, as well as other friends from Cape Breton. The land is easily cultivated there, and I would rather settle on it than on any prairie lands."

Having heard so much of the value of the prairie land of the North-West, and having heard upon such good authority as this letter, that the lands between Port Arthur and Winnipeg are even superior to that, I have come to the conclusion that there is not much risk in expending all the money necessary to finish the road from Callander to Port Moody. It is evident, to my mind, that the building of this railway will vastly benefit Ontario particularly, because a large portion of it passes through that great Province. No person can question that it will benefit Manitoba and the North-West Territory and British Columbia. I am glad of it; and it will always afford me pleasure to give the inhabitants of these sections of the country as much money as will be required to build their railways, particularly when the cost of those railways is paid by the great country itself. It is also a benefit to Cape Breton, as you will perceive by the letter of my correspondent. If he fails in the future as he did in the past, in securing railways for Cape Breton, he finds that there is an outlet for him and his family to the great North-West; and I must say if I can influence the people of Cape Breton, and divert the tide of emigration which now exists, unfortunately, from that Island to the United States, and induce those people to go to the North-West Territory, I conclude I have done well in voting for money to build railways into that great country. Now, Sir, my conclusion is this: That as we voted in 1872 for the building of that railway from Callander to Port Moody, on terms which bore more heavily on the people of the North-West Territory than the present one, or rather bore more heavily on the assets which we possess there, to meet our liabilities, I feel no difficulty in voting for the proposition which is before the House on this occasion, when assured that it will benefit the great country to the west and will not injure any one in the county from which I come.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). The member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) challenged a quotation which I made, and I would like to say that I find the extract to which I referred on page 196 of Hansard, of this year. It is as follows:—

"But he admitted that although the attacks of the Liberal party were bad, they were not a circumstance to the attacks of the Liberal press. As to the Liberal press, he had hardly any words too strong to convey his disapprobation of their conduct towards the North-West and towards the railway. Now, Sir, I am not responsible, nor are my friends responsible, for all that the press of Canada choose to say. I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite would like to be held responsible—at least, I hope they would not—for all that their press choose to say about the North-West, or about other public subjects."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, is it possible that we have in this House a gentleman possessing the education of my hon. friend—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. An hon. gentleman gave way—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, Sir, I am surely entitled to make a personal explanation, and to say that the hon. gentleman placed in my mouth words which I stated were used by Mr. Ives, and he apparently does not know grammar enough to see the difference.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is perfectly in order for the hon. gentleman to make an explanation; but I thought he was going further.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, no; I was going to make an explanation of what I said.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the hon. gentleman is quite in order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I beg to call attention to the fact that those words are the words of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, and not mine, as the hon. gentleman can see if he chooses to read the words as they are.

Mr. RYKERT. Bosh! rot!

Mr. SCOTT. I do not intend to trouble the House by speaking on the Resolutions, but in the few remarks I have to offer I will endeavour to confine myself to the subject, that is, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). I must say that I was not a little surprised when that hon. gentleman thought it his duty to cast a vote against the Resolutions. I felt that a gentleman representing a constituency in Manitoba, could not be true to the trust reposed in him—could not have that belief in the future of his Province that he ought to have, if he cast a vote in that direction. I felt, and I feel now, that the present and the future prosperity of that Province depends very largely upon the rapid construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and as a representative from that Province, I felt that it was my duty to the country to cast my vote in favour of those Resolutions. I must say now that I for one feel that it is also my duty to cast my vote against the amendment moved by the hon. member for Marquette, which is especially directed to the Manitoba members. The hon. gentleman says, and the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Casey) also said, that the road has been constructed too fast; and we have heard that repeated during the whole of this discussion by hon. members on the Opposition side. We heard this statement for the first time when these Resolutions were submitted to the House. Before that, did we ever hear anything but praise to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for building that road as rapidly as they have done? But now we hear that increased rapidity means increased cost. I contend, however, that the rapid construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway has done more to draw the attention of the world to our North-West than all else besides. The people on the other side of the Atlantic have seen that a railroad can be constructed, and constructed more rapidly, than any other across the American continent, on Canadian territory: and that must convince them that in a country where there is such little difficulty in railway construction, we must have soil that is easily worked. Those who grumble to-day at the speedy construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, were the first to grumble a few years ago because there was delay in building that road. As soon as the present Company obtained their charter, the road was pushed forward very rapidly. I am sure the hon. member for Marquette must remember that before the hon. the Minister of Railways visited the little straggling hamlet of Portage la Prairie in 1879—when, with the consent, I have no doubt, of his colleagues, he diverted the road six miles into the town—the people of Portage la Prairie were prepared to move out six miles. But what has been the result of the hon. Minister's action on that occasion? The town has doubled in population as well as in wealth.

The hon. Minister of Railways, on visiting the town again, was taken by the hand by every warm-hearted Grit in the town; he was feted and dined and wine and almost kissed by those Grits, they were so thankful to him. Two years afterwards—not to their credit, be it said, they sent the hon. gentleman who now represents them to oppose the present Government, and to speak in disparaging terms of his own Province in order to justify the vote which he has given on this question. With regard to the farmers' grievances and the difficulties which now obtain in the Province of Manitoba, I admit that there is considerable agitation; I will admit also that there are complaints, and the sooner those complaints are remedied the better it will for the Province and the whole Dominion at large. But I must say this: that the grievances could and would be easily rectified and corrected were the proper measures taken. I am opposed, and I think every hon. gentleman who represents a constituency in this House must be opposed, to this frequent sending of delegates to the Government in reference to every little matter which may affect their constituents, and I believe a great deal will depend upon the way in which people will place their complaints before the Government. I think the Government have shown a disposition at all times to meet the people from the prairie Province, and have shown that they were most anxious and willing to do all they could to further the interests of that section of the country. With regard to this agitation, I do say that it has been manipulated by a set of wire-pullers to a very great extent—by men who have not the true interests of the Province at heart, but have little objects of their own to serve—men who are hostile to the present Government, and want to make as much political capital out of this agitation as they can. I must say that the language used by many members of that farmers' convention has been anything but beneficial to the country; on the contrary, has been most injurious. Only a week ago, at a meeting of this Farmers' Union, one gentleman prophesied that ten years would not pass before this Province must become separate from the present Confederation. That is about as patriotic as some other utterances coming from the same quarter. Another gentleman—and I take the report of the Free Press, the Grit paper, which, of course, must be correct—the President of the Farmers' Union said:

"While the people in this country wanted to respect the law and be law-abiding citizens, it was a question of bread and butter. We are bound to reverence the Imperial Parliament as a mother, and our loyalty was first to it, and the men of this country must know whether they were to be the honoured sons of a hoary empire, or the bastard infants of a juvenile confederacy."

Such language, coming from such a quarter, must have great weight with the present Dominion Government. Now, Sir, as to this question of the twenty years' limitation, or, as it is generally called by those opposed to it, the monopoly clause of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter. When the charter was under discussion, the Manitoba members then supporting the present Dominion Government objected to that clause. We are informed that the great difficulty and the great fear was that we would not get an early completion, at all events, of the road running north of Lake Superior. We felt that although living in the North-West and a thousand miles away from the other portions of the Dominion, it was our duty, as loyal subjects, to support the building of a line through Canadian territory, and we gave our vote and our assent to the twenty years' limitation. To show what effect this agitation may have, I may say that when the railway known as the South-Eastern was chartered by the Local Government, and the charter was disallowed by the Dominion Government on the grounds of public policy, because it conflicted with the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, the people of Manitoba were up in arms. The Federal elections took place in 1883, a few months afterwards, and I was informed that as a supporter of the Government, I would not get a corporal's guard, that I could not obtain twenty votes in the whole city, that my defeat was a foregone conclusion, on account of this disallowance. I replied that the Government would have committed a breach of faith had they allowed this charter, and that the men who were urging the Government to break faith in this matter would be the first to malign them for having done so. Then, as to-day, we heard the same cry that the whole of Manitoba was in a state of revolution, that the people were in a solid body opposed to the Government. The Reformers brought out their most solid men, and to make the thing doubly sure they induced a Conservative to run as an Independent. I received more votes than both of them. This little agitation to-day, I believe and I hope, will result in good for the Province, but at the same time, I have no sympathy with any set of men who, while professing to assist their country, are doing all they can to injure it. I feel that in the Province of Manitoba we will now have the right to build roads in any direction we please; I believe the Government will deal with any charter coming before it on its merits; and I can state positively that the feeling of ninety-nine out of every hundred people in the Province of Manitoba is in favour of allowing that monopoly clause to be struck out of the charter. We do not want to deflect all our trade to the American Pacific, but wish to give all our trade possible to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we have every reason to believe the Canadian Pacific Railway, as soon as constructed, north of Lake Superior, will be able to compete with any American lines. I further claim that it really is not a monopoly, and that limitation was placed there, I believe, wisely by the Government. To-day we know the Canadian Pacific Railway have not been as successful as expected, but I believe that clause was placed in the contract to strengthen the Syndicate in the money markets of the world, and when this Bill is passed I believe the Company will be in a position to rapidly construct the road, thus giving us what we require most in the city of Winnipeg, in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West, to-day. We will require other outlets, and that very soon. I am strongly in favour of the Hudson Bay route, and have strong faith in the possibility of that route. I believe that in 1891, the year in which the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be completed under the charter, we will have a road to the Hudson Bay, and both lines will not be sufficient to move the immense quantity of grain which will require to be shipped from that country. The Government should, in my opinion, do all that lies in its power to give assistance to the construction of branch lines of roads; and so soon as a section of country gets settled up roads should be built there, and every 25 or 30 miles of country will sustain a railway. Objection was made by the member for Perth (Mr. Trow) that the Canadian Pacific Railway was built through a barren country, and he claims that it should have been constructed on the old northern line. Well, I believe a charter was granted and an application for the extension of the charter has been made for a line running through that section, and no doubt, in a very few years we will have another road running to the Rocky Mountains south of the main line, so that so far as roads running south and west are concerned, we will have sufficient lines, but our great object is to have a network of railways striking the main line. I will not detain the House longer in reference to this matter, but simply wish to correct the hon. member for Marquette, and to say he does not represent the opinion of the people of Manitoba in casting his vote against the Resolutions now under consideration.

Mr. WATSON. I wish to say a few words of personal explanation. It has been stated by the hon. gentleman that I did not represent—

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman is clearly out of order.

Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. SPEAKER. He asks for a few words of explanation. The hon. gentleman has not the right to reply. It is only the mover of a substantive motion who has the right to reply.

Mr. KIRK. I shall not detain the House beyond a few minutes, as I only wish to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Inverness. During the last two Sessions that hon. gentleman has made several lengthy speeches, and the burden of his speeches has been justice to Cape Breton. I am glad to-night he has found a subject upon which he can glorify this Dominion, and for which he is willing to support this Government on the ground that they are doing justice to Cape Breton—by voting $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway to build a railway to the North-West. He justifies this on the ground, and in this he repeats what the leader of the Government has said, that this vote will not cost the country one cent, and he points to the fact that there is sufficient from the sale of lands in the North-West to pay the interest of the debt incurred in the building of this road. What are the facts? The hon. Minister of Railways, in presenting his case, made this statement:

"I hold in my hands a statement showing the amount received on account of Dominion lands, homesteads, pre-emptions, sales, colonization companies, timber, grazing, minerals and miscellaneous receipts in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and I asked the hon. Minister of the Interior to divide this so as to show, as far as possible, by contrast, the effect upon this important question of the contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. From the 1st July, 1870, to the 30th June, 1880, ten years, we received from all these services the sum of $817,426. From the 1st of July to the 31st December, 1883, we received $3,572,876."

Now, Sir, in answer to this, it was stated by the leader of the Opposition, and it has not been contradicted or denied up to this moment, that the sum that was paid during this period for the government of that country out there, on three different heads alone—that is, maintenance of Indians, $3,096,000; Mounted Police, $1,135,000, and Dominion Lands, $1,340,000—was in all, $5,571,000. Now, if these figures are correct, and they have not been disputed, I should like to know where he gets the money to pay the interest which this money is going to cost them. I have but little more to say. I believe it was maintained by both political parties that this road was expected to be built without adding one cent to the taxes of the people of this Dominion. Has it not already added largely to the taxes of the people? Why is it that the taxes of this Dominion have been increased from 17½ to perhaps 35 per cent.? Why is it that the necessaries of life have been taxed? Why is it that the fishermen of the hon. member's county have to pay a tax on their cornmeal and flour and all the other necessaries of life? Was it not to raise a revenue for the purpose of building this railway? Everyone knows that it was impossible to build this railway at the rapid rate they are attempting to build it without increasing the taxation. It is for that reason, because the taxation of the people has been increased, because, if we voted this $30,000,000 additional to the debt of the Dominion, the taxes of the people must necessarily be further increased, that I intend to record my vote against the Resolutions of the hon. the Minister of Railways, and for the amendment.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I think I may be pardoned for saying a few words. It is very seldom that I trouble the House, and I may say that only the innate modesty and proverbial diffidence of a sailor have prevented my opening my mouth before, but I conceive it to be my duty, inasmuch as it has been said that this railway is being built for British Columbia, to say something on it before it reaches British Columbia. I have listened with marked attention to all the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who compose the Ministry, and I have listened with equally marked attention to what has been said by the members of the Opposition, and from the two I have been able to draw sufficient conclusions to induce me to vote in favour of the Resolutions. There are several reasons why I think the members from British Columbia should vote for these Resolutions. One is, that it shows an honesty of purpose on the part of the present Administration to carry out the terms with British Columbia. It is also a noteworthy fact that, in any case, no matter how much the progress of the Canadian Pacific Railway may be expedited it will, at the best, as far as British Columbia is concerned, be five years behind time, with regard to the original terms of Union. This I do not blame the present Administration for, nor am I inclined to hit those that are down; but I must say that the delay has been mainly attributable to the apathy and indifference of the Administration which preceded that which I have the honour to support. We come here, one and all of us, in a triple capacity—first, to represent our individual constituencies; secondly, the interests of the Province of which that constituency is a concomitant, and lastly, although perhaps we might more correctly say firstly, the interests of the whole Dominion. I regard the Canadian Pacific Railway not as built in the interests of British Columbia, but in the interests of the whole Dominion. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Homer), one of my colleagues from the Province of British Columbia, has very tritely remarked that it will be a surprise, and a most agreeable surprise, to the whole of this Dominion when they reach the Pacific coast, that they will be placed in communication with 700,000,000 souls, and the commerce to the Dominion cannot be over-estimated from China, Japan, India, and the islands of the Pacific Ocean. There is another thing that I might say. It will be very refreshing, I think, to members from Ontario—not so much to the members from Quebec, Nova Scotia, or Prince Edward Island, but to those from Ontario, and those who are at present inhabiting the North-West Territory and Manitoba—to be able to get in forty-eight hours to a sight of salt water, as they will by going west to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. KIRK. If they go east, they will see salt water.

Mr. BAKER. There is another reason why British Columbia should, in any case, support these Resolutions. We have, for a number of years, been labouring under all the disadvantages of being in the Dominion, without reaping any of the advantages. The operation of the Tariff in British Columbia has alone been enough to make the people of that Province cry out as regards the tardy construction of the railway, not for the last two or three years, but previous to that; so that, when the railway is constructed, we shall be placed in closer connection with the eastern Provinces, and be able to derive some of the advantages which attach to home industries. I will not detain the House, as I see everybody is anxious to get to a division, and I am not particularly anxious to inflict the House with any words from your humble servant, but I do think that inasmuch as we have, as far as I can see, about two to one, it might be taken for granted that the Ministry have certainly weighed these things much more closely than we have done or can possibly do, and we should give them credit for a certain amount of perspicuity. I shall, with all my heart, support the Resolutions now before the House, without casting any reflections upon the opinions which may be evinced by the gentlemen who may vote on the opposite side.

On the main motion being put,

Mr. WELDON. We have heard, during the course of this discussion, a great deal about the North-West, and we have had statements put forward by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. White), and an interesting account by the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Ferguson). I can only hope that the boasts of these hon. gentlemen regarding the future of that country may be realized, and that the fears entertained to the contrary, may prove unfounded. My hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. White), made a eulogy of the North-West country, and claimed not only that it would benefit the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but he also claimed that it would benefit the Maritime Provinces. He did not point out, nor has any speaker ever endeavoured to point out, how we in the Maritime Provinces are going to be benefited by the Canadian Pacific Railway; but we must remember that the Maritime Provinces will have to pay their share of the burdens, since they form a portion of the country. During the Confederation campaign, it was put forward in New Brunswick that St. John would become the Liverpool of Canada, and it was urged as one of the main grounds in favour of Confederation that to our ports in the Maritime Provinces would be drawn the trade of Canada. Now, the policy the Government foreshadowed when the Canadian Pacific Railway matter was first brought before this House—a policy which has been reiterated in this House and in the Railway Committee—was to make that road wholly on Canadian territory, with no connection with American roads, that it should be entirely a trans-continental railway on Canadian soil, stretching from ocean to ocean, from a Canadian port on the Pacific to a Canadian port on the Atlantic. If that was the policy of the Government, and if it was considered beneficial in the interests of the North-West and in the interests of Canada that that restriction should be made, then I do not see why the same should not apply to the Maritime Provinces; and if that policy is a sound principle in the North-West, I do not see why it should not equally be sound in principle when applied to the east. The lines were not to be connected with American lines, and the policy of the Government was announced to be to divert the carrying trade wholly to Canadian territory. Now, I do not see why that policy should not apply to the Maritime Provinces, and why the winter port of the Canadian Pacific Railway should not be in Canadian territory, on the Atlantic Ocean. The Minister of Railways has put that forward; but he has also said that the advantages of Portland, to some extent, will over-ride the general policy, and that so far as the east is concerned, they will be justified in departing from that policy. I hold that so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, we have a right to exact a pledge that so far as the Government have control over this Company, they should give some assurances to the Maritime Provinces that the resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall be applied in endeavouring to form connections with the ports in our Provinces, and thus to fulfil the promises that have been made that the trade of the North-West should find an outlet in Atlantic ports in Canadian territory. In the Maritime Provinces we have ports in which every facility is afforded for shipping. The first port I may mention, is that of St. Andrews. It is open all the year round, and is well adapted for the purposes of shipping. Then we have the port in the county which I have the honour to represent, the port of St. John, at the mouth of St. John River, and very well adapted for the purpose. I can recollect that twenty-three years ago, when the Allan line first came to Portland, their ships were not able to get a cargo at Portland, and were obliged to come down to St. John to load or unload a portion of their cargo, and then return to Portland to fill up, and to get the Canadian mails which they carried across the Atlantic. In view of the facilities of that port, of the improvements in the harbour, of the knowledge possessed by our pilots, of the extensive trade there, and extensive navigation, I think it offers all the facilities required. The objection which used to be put forward with regard to the Bay of Fundy are almost entirely done away with. During the past year, a large number of steamers have loaded in that port, and without a single exception all those steamers, during all periods of the year, have forsaken navigation in and out of the Gulf. We have, then, the port of Halifax, one of the finest—I may almost say the finest—ports in the world, in which I was going to say the whole navy of Great Britain might ride in safety. It is also one of the nearest ports to Europe. The hon. Minister of Railways said some time ago that he hoped the day might come when the old prestige of Louisburg might be revived, and that that magnificent harbour which caught the attention of France so many years ago, and which is equal in many respects to any harbour on the continent—that that harbour might also become a winter port for the termination of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be the duty of this Government to facilitate and encourage trade. If we look across the border, we find the cities of Baltimore, New York and Boston, vying with each other in endeavouring to afford facilities to attract the trade from the west to flow into their ports. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in our own case, it is the duty of the Government and the duty of the Company, in its relations to the Government, in using the resources afforded by the Government, to form a connection with the ports in the Lower Provinces, and thus to give those Provinces the advantages of being a terminus of that road. Now this is a matter which has already been under consideration by the people of the Maritime Provinces, and they are becoming alive to it. I would call the attention of the House to certain resolutions passed by the Halifax City Council, of which, I presume, copies have been sent to the members from the Maritime Provinces. In January last, the Halifax city council passed resolutions, some of which, in regard to the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, are as follows:—

Mr. WELDON.

“Whereas, It has come to the knowledge of the Council that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have it in contemplation to locate their Atlantic winter terminus at an United States port, and

“Whereas, The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, although, in one sense, a private corporation, such as would be, under ordinary circumstances, empowered to locate their road so as to secure the largest practicable profit to the Company's shareholders, on the other hand have undertaken a great national work with a view of building up and consolidating the various sections of the Dominion; and

“Whereas, The exceedingly great assistance given to the Company in their undertaking by the Government and Parliament of Canada, make it evident that the Company, in constructing and completing their road, are doing a work which is regarded as a great public necessity, and which would have been done by the Government had no company been found able and willing to undertake it; and

“Whereas, The refusal of the Government and Parliament of Canada to allow an intermediate link of the great inter-oceanic highway to be located even temporarily in a foreign country, indicated a fixed determination that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be in all its parts a purely Canadian work; and

“Whereas, The location of the Atlantic winter terminus of the railway in United States territory, would derogate much more from the national character of the work than the utilization, for temporary purposes of the American lines south of Lake Superior, between Saute Ste. Marie and Manitoba; and

“Whereas, The Lower Provinces, whose people have contributed largely towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, are entitled to derive therefrom the comparatively slight advantage of having its winter terminus situated within their territory;

“Therefore, Resolved, That in the opinion of the Council, the projected location of the Atlantic winter terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at a foreign port, would be a direct violation of the principles enunciated and acted upon by the Government and Parliament with respect to the road around Lake Superior and an irreparable injury to the people of the Lower Provinces, and that it is the imperative duty of the Government of Canada to take such steps as may be found necessary to secure the location of the eastern winter terminus of our great inter-oceanic railway at a harbour within our borders.”

Such, Mr. Speaker, are the resolutions passed by the city of Halifax. They are approved by the city of St. John and by the city of Quebec. As we have learned from members of the Government, so far as Quebec is concerned, the members for that Province appear to have attained their object. As regards the Maritime Provinces, it will be urged that trade will always go to the nearest port, and that Portland and Boston have advantages which will cause the trade to go there. But there are advantages as regards Customs regulations and other matters, in having the terminus on Canadian territory that more than counterbalance any advantages possessed by the American ports. In New Brunswick we are building railways, and the New Brunswick Railway, to connect with the Intercolonial at Riviere du Loup and running down to St. John will afford facilities which, with the encouragement of the Government, will enable that Company to have a terminus at one of the ports I have mentioned. I do not speak for any particular port, although my predilections are in favour of the city which I represent; but the Company might take any of those ports, and the Maritime Provinces would be willing to concur in the choice. We have heard a great deal about patriotism from hon. gentlemen opposite, and I think, in view of the position of the Maritime Provinces, we have a right to appeal to that patriotism of which hon. gentlemen are fond of speaking, in order that the eastern terminus of the Pacific Railway may be placed within the Dominion, and not at a port over which a foreign flag waves. Without taking up the time of the House further, I beg to move the following amendment:

That all the words after the word "that" in the said motion be left out and the following inserted instead thereof:—The said Resolutions be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with power to provide as a condition of the proposed advance, that so long as any part of such advances or interest thereon remains unpaid, none of the resources of the Company shall be expended towards acquiring interests in railway or railway securities in the United States, with a view to an Atlantic Ocean terminus in the United States territory.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not intend to address the House on this question, although it is one of the most important which has come before Parliament for many years. As I found that the disposition to orate was so prevalent on both sides of the House, and that hon. members desired to place their views on record, I thought it was much more to the point to listen to those who have had practical experience and vote when opportunity offered, rather than occupy the time of the House when others were so much more disposed to speak on the subject than I was. It was not that I did not feel the importance of the occasion, which has kept me so long silent, but because I thought that on an important question like this, one in which the great future of this country is involved, one in regard to which Canadians look forward with hope and satisfaction, I preferred allowing those hon. gentlemen who are well informed on the subject to state their views. I did not intend, half an hour ago, to address the House on this subject; but a question has arisen which closely and particularly affects the Maritime Provinces, and it is because the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), has chosen further to delay the decision of this matter by moving an amendment which has the aspect of a sectional character—I will not say it is drawn with the purpose of catching sectional votes, but it has that appearance—that I, as one of the Maritime Province members, wish to place my views on record in reply to the hon. gentleman. What is the purport and substance of the Resolutions? That a large enterprise has been entered into by the people of Canada, that a sum of money is being asked in aid of the completion of the enterprise, one of the bases of which is the completion of a line to the Pacific Islands and Ocean. The subject has been ably and fully dealt with by hon. gentlemen who are responsible for placing it before the House—I refer to the hon. members of the Government. The Minister of Railways, with that fullness which always characterizes the utterances he places before Parliament, with that detail which is convincing and which ought to be satisfactory to every man who has listened to it or read it in print, with that decision which always characterizes his acts, has laid the views of the Government before this House and the country, in a way that has satisfied me of the propriety of supporting the Resolutions which he has submitted. I must say the line of argument which has been pursued, and the course followed by the two parties in the House, differ very materially. On this side of the House, there has been moderation and argument, while in the large majority of speeches on the other side, I deeply regret that the remarks which have been made by some of the gentlemen reflected on the credit and reputation and character of men to whom this country points to-day, and who will be pointed to with pride and satisfaction when this great enterprise is completed. These men, I say, and their reputations, have been attacked in a manner anything but creditable to the discussion and to the persons who have made these attacks. I am not going to enter into details of this great scheme at this late stage of the debate, and this late hour of the evening; but I say this, from a Maritime Province point of view, that the remarks of the hon. gentleman from the city of St. John (Mr. Weldon), meet with no sympathy from the Province from which I come, and to which I belong. I am well acquainted with the sentiments and feelings of the people in my native Province. I am at least quite as high in authority as to the wishes of the people there, as the hon. gentleman who has moved the amendment, and when he tells this House, speaking as a Maritime Province man, and giving his utterances as one coming from the great commercial capital of the Province of New Brunswick, and referring to the facilities and advantages which the ports of the Maritime Provinces afford for the creation, as he calls it, of a winter port, I tell him that, in my opinion, he is not speaking in sympathy with the great body of the people who live by the sea. He talks about the creation of winter ports, and he says that these people who now come to the House asking for the aid which this Parliament is going to give, and which the country is going to endorse, ought to be asked to guarantee the creation of winter ports in those Provinces. Sir, I tell him, that nature creates ports, and it is the greatest nonsense in the world to talk of creating winter ports. The Almighty has created them, and nature has placed them where they are, and the course of commerce will find those ports which are the most advantageous for shipment. No matter what Parliament may do, we cannot annihilate distance and space; and as every mile of transit creates an additional cost of the traffic which passes over it, if the circumstances of the port as to distance and its proximity to the markets to which the produce is being sent, are not of that character which enables it to compete with ports which are nearer, then, I say, no advantages which the Government can give will enable the line of trade to take that direction in opposition to the natural obstacles which may be placed in its way. My hon. friend talks about making St. John and Halifax winter ports, and he says that no money should be expended to enable these gentlemen who are associated together, carrying out this enterprise, to find an outlet to American ports. Sir, it is not these gentlemen, it is not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company who have a voice in saying where the exports of the North-West are to be sent from. If I, as a merchant in Winnipeg or Toronto, desire to send my produce to Europe, do you suppose I would let the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway dictate to me from what port I shall ship it? I will ship it from the port where I can get the cheapest freight, where there is the shortest transit, where there are the cheapest facilities for sending it to the European markets, and where I can get my insurance and my ocean steamships at the lowest possible rate. It is that which will command the traffic and trade of the country and fix the direction in which shipments shall be made from our western country. I am anxious to see our Maritime Provinces ports built up. I am desirous that the great and magnificent ports which we have by the sea may be utilized in connection with this great enterprise, can be made, by means of this and other Canadian enterprises developed by Canadian capital, the great outlets and entrepôts of the commerce of the country. But we are not going to say that we will embarrass a scheme of this kind by requiring, before we grant this money, that a stipulation shall be placed in the Resolutions, that exports by this line shall pass out of Maritime Provinces ports and that from a particular port shipments must be made. What is going to be the effect if the amendment of my hon. friend should pass? Will it secure a winter port for my hon. friend any more surely than if it does not pass? No, Sir; we cannot control where the shipments can be made from. Shippers will utilize every outlet, and the object of those persons engaged in creating this great means of communication will be to get to the nearest common point where shipments can be made. If it is found that they can be made more cheaply at Halifax or St. John than at Portland, New York or Boston, they will go there; but if it be found that a person in Winnipeg, or Chicago, or any of these western ports, can ship more cheaply from New York or Baltimore, or Philadelphia, or Portland, than from Halifax or St. John, you may depend they will send their produce there. It would be wrong and unparliamentary for me to say that the object of this amendment is not for the benefit of Canada or the promotion of this great enterprise. I do say, however, that its object is to embarrass the passage of these Resolutions; for, if the amendment is carried, the result will be to paralyze the object we have had in view for weeks past, and to prevent this enterprise being carried out in the way desired, by the expressions of opinion which have been made in this House. I shall not occupy more time in discussing the matter further than to say, that so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, they are satisfied to let the opportunities which they have develop, and show whether or not the Canadian ports can be made available as winter ports, for the outlet of the produce of the West. I am anxious that they should be so. I am sure that the Government and Parliament are desirous that they should be so. What have they done? They have made a commencement by the establishment of a grain elevator at Halifax, and I have no doubt that if similar enterprise is shown, and similar aid given—as it will be given—to the erection of elevators at St. John, some portion of the traffic will be shipped from those ports; but we are not going to embarrass or arrest the progress of the action which the Government have laid before the House, for the purpose of enabling my hon. friend to record a resolution which will show that he has got some interests in developing, on the part of the locality he represents, the means of shipment, simply because they are Canadian ports. I rose simply for the purpose of expressing my opinion as to what the wishes of the people of the Maritime Provinces are. I have no doubt they would desire to establish these ports that hon. gentlemen speak so freely about; but Sir, they cannot defy nature; they cannot go in opposition to natural laws. If winter ports can be established in the Maritime Provinces, I am sure the Government will use every means to develop them and to utilize such ports as we possess. In conclusion, I would simply observe that I have no fear about the vote that will be given on the motion of my hon. friend. I am sure a large majority of the members from the Maritime Provinces will vote against it, and thus prevent my hon. friend from defeating and embarrassing the great measure which this House has for some time been deliberating upon.

Mr. KING. I must crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments, while I endeavour to give expression to my own views with regard to the subject under discussion. The amendment moved by my hon. friend from St. John city and county has a special bearing on the interests of the Province from which I come, as well as of the Maritime Provinces as a whole. I hope I shall not lay myself open to the charge of want of patriotism if, in the few remarks I make, I shall confine myself to the standpoint of the Maritime Provinces. I have listened, during this and the other evenings through which this debate has extended, with a good deal of patience to the speeches delivered by hon. gentlemen representing constituencies in Manitoba, and representing North-West interests; and I must say that I feel proud of the loyal utterances of those men who stand up nobly in the interests of the Provinces they represent, and

I claim the same right to advocate the claims and the interests of the section from which I come. I was surprised at the course pursued by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) in dealing with this question to-night. The hon. gentleman will pardon me if I say that I think he did not fairly understand the tenor of this amendment. There is in it no provision to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to utilize any ports in Canadian territory. As I understand the amendment, it goes just this far and no further—that with respect to the loan of $30,000,000 of the money of the people of Canada to the Canadian Pacific Railway, until that is paid, no portion of it shall be used in securing a terminus in a foreign country.

Mr. FOSTER. No portion of that money?

Mr. KING. No portion of the money of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I do not think that the amendment stipulates in any way that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are required to select a port in the Maritime Provinces. Now, I propose to refer briefly to some remarks which fell from the lips of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster), a few evenings ago, when addressing this House on this all-important subject. I am sure that hon. gentleman did afford a great deal of pleasure to the very large audience which happened to be in the House on that occasion, in that speech which consumed something like three hours and a half in delivery. But I could not help thinking, during the course of his remarks, that it was unfortunate for him that he could speak so fluently that he required so little time for consideration before dealing with that subject. I may be pardoned if I suggest to the hon. member that the next time he has a subject of this kind to deal with, he should devote two hours and a half to its consideration, and the other hour to delivering his speech. The hon. gentleman thought proper to carry us back to a time prior to the Confederation of the Provinces, and in doing so he represented to us his position at that time as a boy sitting on a school form of the school of the district of which he was an inhabitant. The hon. gentlemen told us of his youthful aspirations, of his dreams, and of his ambition to become a citizen of a great country. He told us that the desires, such as those to which he alluded, and which pervaded the minds of the youth of this Dominion, culminated in Confederation. Well, it may have been so. I confess that we in the Maritime Provinces think that that measure did not originate in a common school. We think the desire to confederate these Provinces originated rather in a political school; and an opinion prevails largely in the Maritime Provinces to-day, that those who attended that school, charged with our interests, were somewhat overburdened, and that if they had to do that work over again, they would discharge it in a way more to our interest than they did at that time. But, Sir, the hon. member for King's, now that we have not only the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, in this Confederation, but the great North-West, must feel satisfied. But I noticed that he spoke of this country as an almost illimitable country. I wonder what he meant. Is he looking to that great territory of Alaska? Is it possible that before this House rises, the hon. gentleman will move for a Committee to enquire into the possibility of getting that territory, so that we may have a territory that is illimitable. One would naturally suppose, from the way in which the hon. gentleman spoke of Confederation, that the people of the Maritime Provinces were fully satisfied with the result of that Union. Now, standing in my place as the representative of a constituency of New Brunswick, I have no hesitation in saying that if there is one subject on which I think a large majority of the people of the Maritime Provinces, of both shades of politics, would agree, it is that, so far as their interests are more immediately concerned, Confederation has been an utter failure.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all.

Mr. KING. I go further, and say that if Confederation has proved a failure, so far as the interests of the Maritime Provinces are concerned, I charge it upon the idea which is often expressed, and which has taken possession of the mind of the hon. member for King's, that we must have a great country. I think the hon. gentleman forgets that we have in the Maritime Provinces a great country—that we have there millions of acres of land awaiting settlement—and we might be satisfied with that, without reaching for a country stretching from the United States boundaries to the north pole. The hon. member for King's went further, and he said we were committed to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I admit we were, but not to its completion by 1886. As I understood the contract entered into in 1881, the road was to be completed in ten years, or 1891; but he says we have raised the expectations of the people? Who raised the expectations of the people? I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the expectations of the people in the county he represents have been raised to believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be completed at the end of 1885, and if so, the hon. gentleman himself alone is responsible for having raised them. He says that it is in the interests of Canada that the road should be completed by the end of 1885, that:

"In hundreds of thousands of homes in England, Ireland, and Scotland they are sitting round their firesides to-night talking about that plucky Canadian Dominion, which, with its 4,500,000 of people, has undertaken to weld all its parts together by building a railway 3,000 miles in length. They are reading documents which have been scattered by this Government, and by means of this very same railway organization, and their thought and feelings, and sympathies, are being drawn out to this country of Canada as a field for immigration, and as a country whose people are full of energy, full of enterprise, as shown by the very fact that they have undertaken, and promised to perform this gigantic work, and have it finished by 1886."

Who promised the people sitting around their firesides in England, Ireland, and Scotland that the road should be finished in 1886? Did the Parliament of Canada promise it to them? Why is it that we are expected to take so much greater interest in the wishes and feelings and the prosperity of the people living on the other side, than of our own people? We have a right to consider this question from an entirely different standpoint. I do not think it is the duty of this Parliament to look across the water and consult the wishes of people who, for aught we know, may never cross the Atlantic. The hon. gentleman proceeded to give reasons why this loan of $30,000,000 should be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in reading over his speech, as carefully as the hon. gentleman read over the speech of the leader of the Opposition, I find that only two reasons are given—one to which I alluded, and another of the same character, that the completing of this road in a year and a-half would promote immigration; and that to delay its completion five or six years would imperil the interests of the country in that respect. I do not agree with the hon. member in that statement. It does seem to me that if to-night there are people in England, Ireland and Scotland sitting round their firesides watching the efforts of the people of this country, they will be more interested in seeing that a system of economy is practised by the Government which, if they should make this country their home, would afford them a guarantee that they will not be subject to the heavy taxes that weigh them down in their own country. The construction of a railway in my own Province had much to do with helping many of our poor people in getting on their feet; but if it had been put through in haste, no such benefits would have been derived. Complaints might have been made by some parties that sufficient progress had not been made. But on the whole, I am satisfied that the benefits which accrued to our people were much greater in many counties along the north shore of New Brunswick than if this railway had been put through, as the Canadian Pacific Railway is now being put through, with undue haste. What is applicable in this case, is doubly applicable in the North-West. All the hon. members who have spoken on this subject, have admitted that the great North-West is to be a great country, and that it will never, or, at any rate, it will not for a long time to come, become a manufacturing country. I ask hon. gentlemen, whether it would not be in the interest of the people of the North-West that much less haste had been displayed in the construction of this road, since a large portion of the supplies would then not have to be brought from the States, and the settler of the North-West would derive the full advantage from the construction of the road during a longer term of years. What applies to the people there to-day, will equally apply to those going in to-morrow. The result of this rapid construction will be that in a year and a-half from now, before two crops are grown, the whole expenditure will be made, and the home market, which is so great a feature of the National Policy, will be taken away as a centre in the North-West. Speaking of immigration, it seems to me that people about to leave their homes in order to better their condition, will naturally compare the public debts of the different countries which open a field for emigration. Up to the present time, the largest portion of immigration has been drawn to the United States, and while the debt of the United States has been reduced to $30 per head, ours will very shortly be increased to $50 per head. Is it not fair to suppose that when intelligent people look into this condition of affairs, they will find a greater inducement to settle south of our boundary than to cast their lot in the North-West? The hon. gentleman has told us that he is perfectly convinced the security offered by the Canadian Pacific Railway is ample. I do not propose to say anything with regard to those gentlemen composing the Canadian Pacific Railway; I have very little acquaintance with them, and I have no right, so far as I am personally concerned, to meddle with the business which is particularly their own. But in dealing with this question, I propose to deal with it from the standpoint of a representative of New Brunswick, holding the Government of the day responsible for the way in which this great subject is disposed of. I do not propose to trouble the House with going over the number of items which were included in the statement of the hon. member for King's, which footed up something like $121,000,000, and which he says is ample security for the loan of $22,500,000, forgetting that $22,500,000 was not the whole of the loan, but that there is $7,500,000 additional, making it $30,000,000. There is one item, however, which I do propose to call attention to. He says:

"Therefore, when they come and ask for a loan of $22,500,000, and offer securities worth $141,147,953, because I add the $35,000,000 of stock, at the rate of 60 per cent., which will make $21,000,000 more, I believe the security is ample."

Now, I think I was justified in the remark I made at the outset as to the hon. gentleman's want of consideration in dealing with this question, and I am sure now that, after having revised his speech and considered the matter more carefully, he does not pretend to say that if, in the event of this Company not being able to repay this loan of $30,000,000 to the people of this country, this road became the property of the people of Canada, he would attach very much importance to a security like that $35,000,000 of stock, which would be nothing more, under those circumstances, than the assets of a bankrupt Company. I hope it will never come to this. I hope that the gentlemen who are securing this large amount may, and I think it is to the interest of the people of this country that they should, be able to repay this amount, but I think the hon. gentleman attaches too much importance to this small sum, this trifling sum of $21,000,000, which goes to make up his assets of $141,000,000. I am sure that there are a number of farmers, to say nothing of the intelligent business men, in his county, who know what value to attach to a security in a case of that kind. But the hon. gentleman goes further. Supposing that the line should become the property of the Government, we have every evidence, he said, to lead us to conclude that it would be a paying investment; and how does he attempt to prove it? From the returns of the Company, which I have no doubt are correct, which were laid on the Table of the House, he says: I show you that the year before last the receipts were so many millions, and last year they were $5,000,000 in round numbers, and for nine months the net receipts were nearly a million dollars, I think he puts it, and therefore it is a good investment. Now, the hon. gentleman ought fairly to have stated that, in the same report which gives those figures, it is clearly shown that something over a million and a quarter of dollars was credited to the actual receipts of the road for the transportation of the material used in the construction. It strikes me that, if he had subtracted that from the amount he has given us, it would have reduced it to that extent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman surely does not mean to say that I did not state that to the House? If he reads my speech in the Hansard, he will find that I gave the exact amount credited.

Mr. KING. I am not referring to any remarks made by the hon. gentleman, but I am speaking of the statement of the hon. member for King's, in his printed speech in the Hansard, and if I am not correct, I have no doubt the hon. member for King's will take the opportunity of correcting me. I am quite sure that if, in two years from now, this property should become the property of the Dominion Government, and the hon. gentleman happens at that time to fill the position he now holds, and I have no doubt he will, if the whole amount of $35,000,000 which he values at $21,000,000, were offered to him for his Sessional indemnity, he would take the $1,000 and leave the $35,000,000. Then the hon. gentleman gave us some calculations which he said he had made very hurriedly. I am not going to dispute the correctness of his calculations, nor do I recollect exactly the figures he gave, but his statement was something like this: that, in ten years from now, it was safe to presume that we would have 500,000 increase of population in that North-West country. He estimated that there would be 50,000 a year for the next ten years, and that 40,000 of that 50,000 would be an agricultural population, and that one out of four would be a farmer, and that therefore there would be 80,000 farmers in that country in ten years; and he says that, if proof were wanted that it would be a good paying investment, it was found in the fact that these people would be in the North-West and would be very large producers of wheat. I am not disposed to criticise the hon. gentleman's statement, except so far as this, that it is evident that, if the people of the North-West ever go very largely into wheat growing, they have not their eyes turned in this direction for the probable destination of their wheat crop. He must be aware that there is at this time a Committee of this House investigating the question of a Hudson Bay route, and every gentleman from Manitoba who has spoken on this question has made statements which lead me to conclude that they are looking to Hudson Bay, and not to Port Arthur, or the all-rail route north of Lake Superior, as the outlet for their products. I think it would have been fair for him, in putting this matter fairly and squarely before this House, to state that fact, because he is not ignorant of it; he knows that the expectations and hopes of those people are in that Hudson Bay route; he knows that the First Minister himself, a few days ago, made statements which led us to believe that he had faith in that Hudson Bay route.

and we know that the evidence which is being elicited by that Committee from day to day goes to show that, for months, at any rate, that will be a port, and they even say it is probable that an outlet will be found there during the whole year. It strikes me, at all events, that the hon. gentleman cannot take into account the probability that the whole of the wheat crop of that country will take a direction which will afford traffic to this great trans-continental line. But suppose that the road should become the property of the Government, suppose that you get 500,000 more people in the North-West. They give us, I was going to say, a good deal of trouble here now, but I do not blame them. We know, however, that they receive a great deal of attention, that their wants and wishes receive more attention than the wants and wishes of people from other parts of the Dominion, and I am satisfied, from what I have seen, that, when this road in the North-West becomes the property of the Dominion Government, it will be run in the interests of the people of Manitoba, and they will not allow the Government to make very large dividends out of the road. Therefore, I do not think the people of the Maritime Provinces, who have no interest that I can see in the development of the North-West and the building of the railway, more than the interest they have in the whole Dominion of Canada, who have no direct interest in it, at all events, have not much to expect when this road becomes the property of the Government. For my own part, I hope this Company will succeed in completing that line, and that it may remain their property and they may operate it in their own interests and for their own purposes. We have enough Government railways now, and as to the proposition of the hon. member for King's, that the Government should assume control of all railways, I think the returns laid upon the table of the House as to the management of another railway which has cost us a good deal of money, I mean the Intercolonial, which the Government do operate, show that, taking it all in all, it has not been very profitable to the people of this country. I do not say, and I do not wish to be understood to say, that the Minister of Railways, in the management of that road, has not displayed as much business tact as possible and done the best it was possible to do under the circumstances, but that he has utterly failed during the last six months to make both ends meet—in fact, that he is short $115,000, will not be disputed. Then, if you add the road between Montreal and Quebec, and add the 600 miles north of Lake Superior and the 400 miles from Prince Arthur's Landing to Winnipeg, and cut off the traffic of the North-West by a route to Hudson Bay, it is decidedly problematical whether we are to derive any very great or grand return from that investment. There is another way in which I would view this question and in which I would ask this House to look at it. I quite confess that when we talk of $30,000,000, the sum is almost beyond my comprehension. I have heard hon. gentlemen say that it is a mere bagatelle, a mere trifle; but, Mr. Speaker, if we contrast it with other things of which we do know something, then we can come to some conclusion as to the extent of this loan. A short time ago I happened to pick up the last bank statement which had been made, and I observed that the whole bank note circulation of the Dominion of Canada is just $30,000,000—a remarkable coincidence, to my mind, that the amount which the Government proposes to loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in order that the country may reap the benefit of the completion of that road in two years instead of six, is just the amount of the bank note circulation as shown by that statement. Then, there is another way of viewing it. I find by the same return, that the paid up capital of all the banks in Canada to day, is in round numbers, $61,000,000. The amount the Government proposes to loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is just one-half that sum; in other words, if the banks had to furnish that sum, it would wipe out one-half the banks doing business in Canada to-day. There is another way of looking at it. We are called plucky because we are willing to engage in this vast enterprise, and because we are willing to invest our millions in it. We sometimes refer to the wealth of our neighbours to the south of us, and I would like hon. gentlemen just to make a calculation. We are giving a loan of $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Now, if the 55,000,000 of people in the United States were to make a loan in the same proportion, what would it amount to? The people of the United States, in order to exhibit the same pluck we do, would have to vote $385,000,000. Then, in addition to that—and a fact that is lost sight of by many—in addition to this loan of $30,000,000, we have to provide $12,000,000, or nearly $13,000,000, to pay the balance of the unpaid subsidy which is due to the Company on the completion of the line, and that, I suppose, has got to be provided inside the next two years. This will make the sum of $43,000,000 in hard cash. It may be a mere bagatelle, but I fancy the people of this country, who have no direct interest in the construction of this railway, will feel that instead of its being a mere bagatelle it is a great burden indeed. The hon. member for King's, N. B. (Mr. Foster), in reply to the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., (Mr. Davies), said that we had a right to believe that the people of this country were satisfied with what was proposed to be done with their money. He said: We have heard of no protest from any part of this country; no public meetings have been called to protest against the expenditure of public money. I dare say that is quite true. But I would like to make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman. It may be too late—I fear it is too late. I would like to have suggested to him to go down to his county as soon as he understood the character of this transaction, and that he should have asked the people to assemble at some place in that county. I am well acquainted with his constituents. I have the honour to have been born in that county, and I take a great interest in it—not that I do not think it is quite safe in his hands. I think if he had gone down to his county and asked the people to meet him and had put this matter before them and said: Gentlemen, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company entered into a contract in 1881 to build the Canadian Pacific Railway for $25,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 acres of land, and to finish it by 1891. They have got along splendidly, but the Government thinks that it is necessary for that that road be built in two years from now. If he had stated that the Company were willing to go on and complete the road in the time specified by the contract, but that in the interest of the people of England, Ireland and Scotland, the Government desired to have this road completed in two years instead of seven; and if the hon. gentleman had then asked his constituents if they were willing to allow themselves to be taxed to the extent of $200,000—I think that would be about the proportion of his county for the whole sum; if he had gone further, and told the people of his county that from the experience we had of the past, loans of this character made to railways seldom found their way back into the Treasury, and that it was just possible this might go in the same way—I would like to know what answer that hon. gentleman would have received from his constituents. If he had also told them, as I have shown, that all the available cash at the time had been handed over in order to pay their part of the loan, I think, Sir, they would have told him to go back to Ottawa and mind his own business; to do what he was instructed to do; that if he had any money of his own that he wanted to invest in the North-West, he had a right to do so, but that, so far as their money was concerned, he had no right to do anything of the sort. Now, Sir, to look at this ques-
