MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TELECOMMUNICATIONS CONTRACT FOR RADIO STATIONS

Motion No. 179—Mr. Cowan:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence dated August 15, 1962 to December 1, 1962, between the government of Canada or any minister, department or agency thereof and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railways and the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, respecting the contract for telecommunications for the approximately 195 radio stations, the previous ten year contract having been replaced by a new contract effective October 1, 1962.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, this motion calls, among other things, for correspondence between Canadian National Railways and the government of Canada. Succeeding governments have always taken the position that such correspondence should not be produced in the house. I have discussed the matter with the hon. member. The information he is seeking is contained in a letter bearing a date outside the dates embodied in the motion, a joint letter from the two railways. There is no objection to producing that document. If the motion could be withdrawn I would be glad to produce it. I believe it covers the subject matter of the hon. member's motion, and this would not raise any difficult legal questions.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member satisfied to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Cowan: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF BAC-111 PLANES

Motion No. 181—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and documents exchanged between the Minister of Industry or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the British Aircraft Corporation concerning the total or partial construction of BAC-111's in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF CARAVELLE PLANES

Motion No. 182—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the Compagnie Sud-Aviation of France concerning the total or partial construction of Caravelles in Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: There is no such correspondence, and I therefore ask that the motion be dropped.

Mr. Gregoire: If there is no correspondence that is all right, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

T.C.A.—REPORT RESPECTING NEW AIRCRAFT

Motion No. 183—Mr. Gregoire:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the report of the engineers, experts, technicians or advisers of Trans-Canada Air Lines concerning the choice of a new medium range aircraft by Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, this motion asks for a copy of the report of the engineers, experts, technicians and advisers of Trans-Canada Air Lines, which is a document prepared on behalf of Trans-Canada Air Lines for their own board of directors, which is then submitted by the board of directors to the government after it has been dealt with. There has always been an objection taken by succeeding governments to producing this kind of document. Therefore I ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion or otherwise to have it transferred for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on that motion, I would like the house to vote with regard to the tabling of this return.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wonder why the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) wishes that this return be transferred for debate, if he does not want—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the rules of the house this matter has been transferred for debate. The rules are established by all hon. members, not by the Chair.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT—PURCHASE OF PLANES BY T.C.A.

Motion No. 184—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, documents and telegrams exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers or employees of his department and the Canadair company concerning the construction of a new medium range aircraft for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Motion agreed to.

DE HAVILLAND COMPANY—CONSTRUCTION OF PLANES FOR T.C.A.

Motion No. 185—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, documents and telegrams exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers or employees of his department and the de Havilland Company concerning the construction of a new medium range aircraft for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. McIlraith: There is no correspondence covered by this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CANADAIR—CONSTRUCTION OF PLANES FOR T.C.A.

Motion No. 186—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, documents and telegrams exchanged between the Minister of Industry or any of the officers or employees of his department and the Canadair Company concerning the construction of a new medium range aircraft for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the hon. member for Lapointe, and with the understanding that this does not call for the production of privileged documents we have no objection to the mention.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation stated by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DE HAVILLAND COMPANY—CONSTRUCTION OF PLANES FOR T.C.A.

Motion No. 187—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, documents and telegrams exchanged between the Minister of Industry or any of the officers or employees of his department and the de Havilland Company concerning the construction of a new medium range aircraft for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. Drury: I have discussed this motion also with the hon. member for Lapointe, and on the understanding that I will provide him with the details of the Canadian content in the construction of the DC-9 he has agreed to withdraw this motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

SUD-AVIATION—PRODUCTION OF PLANES IN CANADA

Motion No. 188—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and documents exchanged between the Minister of Industry or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the Compagnie Sud-Aviation of France concerning the total or partial production of Caravelles in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT—PRODUCTION OF PLANES IN CANADA

Motion No. 189—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and documents exchanged between the Minister of Industry or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the Douglas Aircraft Company of the United States concerning the total or partial construction of DC9's in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH AIRCRAFT CORPORATION—PRODUCTION OF PLANES IN CANADA

Motion No. 190—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the British Aircraft Corporation concerning the total or partial construction of BAC-111's in Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: There is no such correspondence as is asked for in this motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT CO.—PRODUCTION OF PLANES IN CANADA

Motion No. 191—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the Douglas Aircraft Company of the United States concerning the total or partial construction of DC9's in Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: There is no such correspondence as is asked for in this motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CONSTRUCTION OF AIRCRAFT FOR T.C.A.

Motion No. 192—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of Trans-Canada Air Lines concerning the total or partial construction of a new medium range aircraft for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. McIlraith: For the same reasons that I indicated in connection with notice of motion No. 183 I must ask that this notice of motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

T.C.A.—CHOICE OF NEW AIRCRAFT

Motion No. 193—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of Trans-Canada Air Lines concerning the choice of a new medium range aircraft by Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. McIlraith: For the same reason I must ask that this motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COMPENSATION FOR SHEEP DESTROYED

Motion No. 194—Mr. Madill:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all statements or records containing names of all owners or other persons to whom compensation has been paid since the 21st of April, 1963, for sheep suffering from scrapies which had to be destroyed, and the amounts paid respectively to each of such owners of other persons.

Mr. Beer: This notice of motion for the production of papers, No. 194, by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe requests information with respect to compensation paid to owners of sheep which were destroyed on account of scrapie since April 21, 1963. An answer has been given today to question No. 1,873 by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, giving information with respect to scrapie compensation payments over the last 10 years. The answer to question No. 1,873 does not, however, list the names of the individual farmers to whom compensation has been paid.

It has not been the practice to disclose publicly the names of people who have been ordered to have animals slaughtered under various disease eradication programs, since it could be considered by some as a reflection on the health status of their herds and because the circumstances in many cases are ones over which they have no control.

While there are these reservations about the desirability of disclosing names of people, I recognize that public expenditures are involved and, if the hon. member insists, the information will be provided in the form he has indicated in his motion. However, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe might wish to consult the information which has now been provided in answer to question No. 1,873 to determine whether this contains information of the type which he requires. In the meantime, I suggest the hon. member may wish to allow his motion to stand, or on that basis he might wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a principle of responsible government that information such as this should be provided.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that I did not hear the Leader of the Opposition; another hon. gentleman was speaking at the same time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I stated that it is a principle of responsible government that this information should be provided. Indeed, it is provided each year in the public accounts and in the circumstances I would ask that the motion be called in the regular way.

Mr. Pickersgill: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Beer: It is my opinion that the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe consented to withdraw.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Under the rules of the house I must put the motion.

Mr. Beer: I ask that the motion stand.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there was no request that it stand for debate. There was a request that it stand, and we have strong objections to this being stood in view of the attitude taken by the Minister of Agriculture. I ask you to call the yeas and the nays.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should point out to the house the wording of standing order No. 47, which reads as follows:

> Notices of motions for the production of papers shall be placed on the order paper under the heading "Notices of motions for the production of papers". All such notices, when called, shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired by the member proposing it or by a minister of the crown, the motion will be transferred by the clerk to the order of "Notices of motions (papers)".

Under the circumstances, we have had a request to transfer the motion for debate by the Secretary of State—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite prepared either to allow the motion to stand or to have it transferred for debate, whichever course appealed to the hon. member who is moving the motion.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, you were on your feet putting the motion, and I think we should proceed once the motion is put.

Mr. Pearson: The motion has not been put.

Mr. Speaker: I must reach a decision. There is a request from the Secretary of State to transfer it for debate; consequently the motion is transferred for debate.

PRAIRIE AIR SERVICE—TRANSFER OF SOUTHERN ROUTE

Motion No. 195—Mr. Olson:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, or documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers of his department, the president or any of the employees of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and any officers or employees of TransAir Limited respecting the transfer of the southern prairie route between, Regina and Calgary generally; and specifically all correspondence, telegrams, documents, agreements, etc., respecting transfer of aircraft equipment and other operating facilities from Trans-Canada Air Lines to TransAir Limited.

He said: I ask that this motion stand.

Motion stands.

[Mr. Beer.]

QUESTIONNAIRES TO CANADIAN SEAMEN

Motion No. 196—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all questionnaires that have been sent or delivered to seamen employed on the Canadian side of the great lakes by the board of trustees of the Canadian maritime unions or by a public relations official or person on behalf of the said board wherein information regarding the personal affairs, employment, etc., of the seamen is requested.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSFER OF RURAL MAIL CONTRACT, NORWOOD, ONT.

Motion No. 197—Mr. Webb:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Postmaster General or any of the officers of his department and any other person concerning the transfer of the mail contract for rural route No. 3, Norwood, Ontario, during the year 1963.

Mr. Denis: I have no objection to the adoption of this motion and the tabling of all official correspondence.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSFER OF POST OFFICE, BIRDSALL, ONT.

Motion No. 198—Mr. Webb:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Postmaster General or any of the officers of his department and any other person concerning the transfer of the post office at Birdsall, Ontario, in the year 1963.

Mr. Denis: There is no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the adoption of this motion and the tabling of all official correspondence.

Mr. Rheaume: Could we have an explanation of what the Postmaster General means by "official correspondence"?

Mr. Speaker: At this time there is no debate under the rules of the house.

Motion agreed to.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECONDARY INDUSTRIES, QUEBEC

Motion No. 199—Mr. Langlois:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will clause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, letters and other correspondence exchanged between different mining companies situated in the Thetford Mines, Black Lake and Coleraine municipalities, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, his deputy minister or assistant since 1950 concerning the establishment of secondary industries or manufactures in the said localities.

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, there has been no correspondence with those municipalities.

[Text]

Mr. Langlois: I withdraw my motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECONDARY INDUSTRIES, QUEBEC

Motion No. 200—Mr. Langlois:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, letters and other correspondence exchanged between the municipalities of Thetford Mines, Black Lake and Coleraine and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, his deputy minister or assistant since 1950 concerning the establishment of secondary industries or manufactures in the said localities.

He said: I withdraw this motion also.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MARITIME LUMBER BUREAU

Motion No. 201—Mr. Coates:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence received by the minister or any of the officials of the Department of Finance, from the maritime lumber bureau of Amherst, N.S., as well as copies of the replies forwarded by the minister, or his officials, to the maritime lumber bureau since September 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MARITIME LUMBER BUREAU

Motion No. 202—Mr. Kennedy:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence received by the minister, or any of the officials of the Department of Forestry, from the maritime lumber bureau of Amherst, N.S., as well as copies of the replies forwarded by the minister, or his officials, to the maritime lumber bureau since September 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) did not respect this morning the undertaking he took last Wednesday before the house when he stated, as reported on page 5695 of Hansard:

If that is agreeable to the hon. gentleman, we will not transfer these for debate—

Now, three motions were transferred for debate this morning whereas we would have liked motion No. 183 to be put to a vote.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am afraid I did not hear the page reference given by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Gregoire: It is page 6024 in the French version.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not happen to have a copy of Hansard in French. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could assist me by telling me where it is in the English copy.

Mr. Gregoire: I do not have an English copy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, sir, the hon. member and I might agree to defer this matter until we can get our documents together. I certainly want to say at once that I am not conscious—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —of having said that. However, there were one or two things I said last night that perhaps this morning I would not have said in quite the same way. I assure the hon. gentleman I had no intention whatever of giving the impression—

Mr. Gregoire: I am speaking of the commitment of the Secretary of State when he said that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have found the passage to which the hon. member refers. Apparently it is at page 5695, and the amendment reads:

Mr. Speaker, the position I take, and the position I stand on, is that there must be a conference between the two ministers, and an endeavour will be made by the government to give all the information that is properly producible under the rules.

We have done that:

If that is acceptable to the hon. gentleman we will not transfer these for debate—

That is, all the items that are producible under the rules, and the only motions that were transferred for debate this morning were those asking for information that is not producible under the rules because it has always been understood to be privileged. It does not seem to me, therefore, that the hon. gentleman has any question of privilege on this matter.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the discussion is complete on this matter, and there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I draw attention to the fact that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has refused to answer question No. 1,558 which has stood on the order paper since October 30, although he has informed me of the answer, which indicates that he has awarded the contract in question to someone other than the low bidder and has refused to reaward it to the low bidder as I requested.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to reserve my right to speak on the question of privilege relating to the statement made by the Secretary of State, when he said that the motions that were transferred today were recognized as asking for information to which the house is not entitled. I am going to come back to that because under the ruling made earlier today when we asked for the names of those to whom payments had been made, if the government can get away from answering by simply saying the motion is transferred for debate then this house might as well close down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite sure the hon. gentleman did not wish to misinterpret what I said. I was referring to certain motions that had been made by the hon. member for Lapointe, and I was not making any general reference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You said all motions.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Speaker; I think it is generally understood in the house that the member who is speaking is supposed to know what he intended to say, at any rate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If he is conscious.

Mr. Pickersgill: Both the right hon. gentleman and I have occasionally had slips of the tongue in this house. I do not think we ought to try to make anything of that. What I intended to say was this, that those motions of the hon. member for Lapointe which were transferred for debate were motions which asked for documents which are normally not produced by a government.

In so far as the motion of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe is concerned, the hon. member for Peel pointed out that that information was producible and would be produced if it were insisted upon. This will be found in his statement. These were payments out of public funds, and if there was any insistance the names of those persons to whom they were paid be given to the house, we were prepared to give them. He wanted to have the matter transferred for debate because he wanted to debate the request since he did not think it would be fair to give these names to the public. This was the reason for the transfer. I may say, sir, that does not deny the house anything, because the Minister of Agriculture's estimates will be up today or tomorrow and the whole matter of these payments to the sheep farmers can be debated on those estimates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to continue the argument, except to say that if the government is asked a question for information that is produceable and should be answered, and takes recourse in transferring the motion, then this house might as well close down because we will never get the answers to the questions that we ask. If I misinterpreted the Secretary of State I can only say I understood him to say all the motions were transferred today. He has made it perfectly clear that he did not have the motion of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe in mind, and when the Minister of Agriculture gets to his estimates he will have some opportunity to answer the questions that have been denied the house in the proper way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now I want to ask the Minister of Finance, in view of the continued rise in the cost of living what action is the government going to take in this regard and—

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: —I ask him whether or not—

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the increase in the amount of Canadian money—

Mr. Teillet: There is a question of privilege before the house, I believe.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out I did not know that the minister wished to raise a question of privilege. Is it a question of privilege that the minister wants to raise?

Mr. Teillet: I did not raise the question of privilege. I believe one of the hon. members from the other side did.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest, if it is not a question of privilege, that we allow the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to finish his question.

Mr. Teillet: I understood the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) to have raised the question of privilege. I attempted to get up in reply, and I was cut off by the Leader of the Opposition with another question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I immediately rise to say you directed me. I do not take my direction from the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Teillet: May I still pose the question, was that a question of privilege or was it not? Will the hon. member tell the house—

Mr. MacInnis: It is up to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cumberland rose on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Stefanson: He has no manners. He doesn't know any better.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure we will make much faster progress if we now allow the minister to reply, if he wants to, on the particular question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Cumberland and, if I may, I will ask the Leader of the Opposition to suspend his question for a short time.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. gentleman is that he knows perfectly well there were technical difficulties with both the contractors involved. He has been supplied with all the information by officials of the department, and I have attempted to reach him myself in the last few days in order to request from him what his conclusions were after discussing it with the officials. I will be glad to discuss this with the hon. gentleman at any time.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Is it the intention of the government house leader to reply to starred question 1,806 this week of next Monday?

Mr. Pearson: That is not a question of privilege.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I made a mistake when I asked a while ago that question No. 1,778 be made an order for return. I would like this order to be withdrawn and the question to remain on the order paper.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET REPORTED INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I started off to ask the Minister of Finance a question, and it has now got into serial form. It has to do with the very serious increase in the cost of living. I want to ask the minister what action the government intends to take in this regard, and whether the increase in the Canadian money supply in total currency in chartered bank accounts which, since February 24 has increased by $1,345,000,000 has anything to do with it and is a contributing factor to this very serious increase in the cost of living.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has raised a serious question and I would like to be allowed to give a full reply because of the implications that it has.

First of all I will deal with the point about monetary policy. As I have already informed the house, the monetary policy followed in Canada is that which the government and the Bank of Canada consider to be in the best interests of the Canadian economy. This policy is directed and has, I think, been successfully directed to encouraging domestic economic expansion and achieving balance in our international transactions.

Under the policy which has been followed, the money supply in Canada has increased to meet the growing needs of an expanding economy. During the 12 month period ending in November the total currency and bank deposits in Canada, that is the total money supply, has increased by 8.6 per cent, while the privately held money supply has increased by 6.9 per cent. It may be of interest to hon. members to point out that the corresponding increases for the United States over the same period were 7.3 per cent for the total of currency and bank deposits and 8.4 per cent for the privately held money supply, so defined.

The increase in the total currency and bank deposits in Canada over the past two years has amounted to an aggregate figure of 12.9 per cent, which compares with a 15.0 per cent increase in the United States.

In judging the appropriateness of developments in the money supply one must of course take into account a wide variety of factors, including the movement of employment and production, the amount of unused capacity, the state of the balance of payments and so on. The movement of prices is clearly an object of continuous concern, and the monetary authorities must always be alert to upward pressures on the cost of living.

In this respect the recent Canadian experience has compared favourably with most other countries, particularly when account is taken of the devaluation of the Canadian dollar which, though it was helpful in restoring our international competitive position, inevitably had the effect of raising some import prices. Over the recent 12 month period for which information is available the consumer price index rose by 1.6 per cent in Canada, which compares with 1.1 per cent in the United States, 1.3 per cent in the United Kingdom, 6.4 per cent in France and 2.0 per cent in Germany.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister had no notice of the question but of course he realized this was a matter that would be raised. I now ask him this, and I am quoting from the New York Times. Have government treasury officials admitted that the currency expansion in Canada is a definite factor of monetary policy, and that the reason for the increase is the agreement that was entered into, a gentlemen's agreement with the United States, to hold down interest rates closely to United States levels, and that that agreement with the United States is linked with the billion dollar increase in the Canadian money supply?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I was ready for the question last week because the article to which the Leader of the Opposition refers appeared in the New York Times of December 8. I have given an answer which I think deals completely with the article and the points made in the article. I do not think there is anything more to be added that would be helpful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a supplementary question. Is it a fact that the Canadian government has a gentlemen's agreement with the United States; that, when Canada was granted exemption from the proposed interest equalization tax on new capital issues, the government authorities entered into a gentlemen's agreement to maintain Canadian interest rates at the United States level so there would be no undue incentive for a heavy inflow of United States dollars into this country?

Mr. Gordon: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. It has been the policy of the government and the Bank of Canada, working together, to keep interest rates in Canada at the lowest possible level, and I hope we will be able to continue to do this. The spread between interest rates in Canada and the United States has been narrowed substantially and it will be the policy of the government to keep that spread as narrow as we can in the months ahead.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that still is not an answer. Is there such a gentlemen's agreement?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I started my last answer by saying "on the contrary". If I can put it in more simple language and more directly, the answer is no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is it. Good.

Mr. Pearson: Very disappointing, is it not?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, following the questions asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Can he tell us why there is such an increase in the money supply and why inflation has reached such a level in Canada, even though Social Credit is not in power and the Liberals expressed such fears about inflation?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps it is one of the reasons, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to say anything that would be offensive to my hon. friend, but I am surprised that he has asked the question. I thought he would perhaps compliment the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Debt free money.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of Finance. In the answer he gave a moment ago to the hon. member for Chicoutimi he said he could not understand why that hon. member would ask the question regarding an increase in credit, and that he should be approving it. What did he mean by that? Is this the implementation of the action of the government members in voting in November, 1962 for debt free money as advocated by Social Credit?

BREAD

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question which I would have directed to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the report in today's Globe and Mail that the price of bread has been increased by one cent or more across Ontario, would the Prime Minister request the Minister of Justice to have the appropriate officials of his department investigate the matter? It is a well known fact that bakeries tender on contracts for government institutions at 12½ cents or 13 cents a loaf.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the matter with the Minister of Justice, who will be here tomorrow.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—FREEZE ON APPLICATIONS FOR ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the house have the assurance that the present freeze on applications for rail line abandonment will be continued until the legislation which is contemplated to deal with the recommendations of the MacPherson commission is before the house at the next session?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the arrangement with the railways was made on the expectation that the legislation would be dealt with before the end of this year, but there is no reason to anticipate any difficulty whatever in having the freeze continued until the legislation is dealt with in the early part of next year.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that this legislation may take some time and although the minister does not contemplate any difficulty, am I to take it that the minister is giving the house the assurance that the government will take steps to see that none of these applications are proceeded with until the legislation is dealt with?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I was also seeking to point out that there was no ground for the fears inherent in the hon. member's question.

FINANCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO ESTABLISH NEW BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received a petition from a certain group of individuals who are proposing to establish a new bank that is to be known as the bank of western Canada?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did have a visit from Mr. James Coyne and Mr. Stevens—

Mr. Fisher: Who?

Mr. Gordon: I think the name was Stevens—some days ago, last week I believe, saying that they were contemplating making an application for a charter for a new Canadian bank. They have not made an application. When they do I am sure it will be done in the usual way and it will be dealt with according to the procedures laid down in the Bank Act.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS—COST OF PROTECTION OF NAVIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the minister can supply the house with the details of the fantastic, unrealistic and ridiculous estimate of $62 million conceived by his department for remedial works made necessary by the construction of a bridge at Three Rivers.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I think that could be done, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member as the former minister is probably familiar with the situation as it was indicated in the files in the early part of this year.

Mr. Balcer: It was an amount of $7 million.

LABOUR RELATIONS

B.C. FISHERMEN'S STRIKE—APPOINTMENT OF NEW ARBITRATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries, and may I precede it by saying I know the minister has had an almost minute by minute interest in this matter. I should like to ask him whether he has yet been able to get in touch with Hon. Mr. Peterson, minister of labour for British Columbia, and whether any decision has been reached about appointing an arbitrator to replace Mr. Justice Dryer?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I was able to get in touch with Mr. Peterson on Monday, and yesterday at noon we made the announcement that Mr. Justice Nathan Nemetz had agreed to act as arbitrator to replace Mr. Justice Dryer.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CALGARY—CONTRACT FOR REPAIR OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry if he has an answer to the question I asked him yesterday about the C.P.A. repair facilities at Calgary.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, may I say in answer to yesterday's question that the contract with C.P.A. in Calgary has not been cancelled, nor has the company been notified yet that it will be.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question. Does the government intend to continue to give contracts to this company for the coming year when the present one runs out at the end of March?

Mr. Drury: The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is no.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the minister whether he is aware that over 400 people will lose their jobs as a result of this. What arrangements, if any, are being made to provide alternative employment for these men? It is the same situation as the repair facilities at Winnipeg, except this is a much more serious case because they are being closed out entirely.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the reason for the delay in notification is an endeavour to work out in conjunction with the company an adequate, satisfactory method of phasing out the work and to ensure that there will be alternative employment for those who are being released from the C.P.A. facility.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the minister where or how this alternative employment is to be supplied? Are these men to be moved to other repair shops or are jobs of some other type to be provided for them?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if I could provide the answer to that we would not need future discussions.

QUEBEC—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING TREATMENT OF ARSENAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and defence production, but since he is not here, I shall direct it to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

As regards the unfair position of the employees of the Valcartier arsenal, where certain materials have seemingly gone out for purposes other than national defence, does the minister intend to order that an investigation be made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police so as to clarify this situation?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): All I can do is to take this question as notice.

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Speaker, I have already directed that question to the Minister of Industry, but his answer was not satisfactory. I ask that an investigation be made in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Industry is in the house, I wish now to put to him the question which I directed a while ago to the Associate Minister of National Defence concerning the unfair situation of the personnel at the Valcartier arsenal. It seems that some materials have disappeared at the arsenal and are not used for national defence purposes. Could the Minister of Industry inform the house whether he will launch an investigation through the R.C.M.P. concerning this matter.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to inquire into this.

[Text]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PUBLICITY RESPECTING DANGERS FROM SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in her absence I will address it to her parliamentary secretary. Has the department published any pamphlets or brochures outlining the dangers of cigarette smoking and its link with cancer? If not, does the department propose to do so?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

Mr. Fisher: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the desire of all hon. members that I call orders of the day at this time?

Mr. Pigeon: I have a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, you could fail to see the clock for a few minutes so that hon. members could ask their questions, we could then get on with the ordinary business.

Mr. Howard: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would call it one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the desire of hon. members that I see the clock or do not see the clock?

Mr. Howard: One o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

REDISTRIBUTION

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State regarding the first reading of the proposed bill to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions. Perhaps I might be permitted to base my question on an incomplete sentence uttered the other day by the Leader of the Opposition, the end of which I am sure we would all like to have heard. Discussing this matter and indicating why he had objected earlier to the bill being given first reading he said, as found on page 5940 of Hansard:

> There is no reason at all why, before the end of this session, which I hope is not too far removed—

At that point he was interrupted by "hear, hear" from the Secretary of State and so we never got the rest of the sentence. It seemed to me that the logical conclusion to the sentence should be that there was no reason why before the end of the session we could not have the introduction of the bill, not for the purpose of proceeding with it but so that we could see it between now and the next session. I wonder whether that is the situation, and if the Secretary of State would make whatever arrangements are necessary so that first reading may be given to the bill before the session ends.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, although the hon. gentleman is a great authority on the rules, I am not quite sure that this question is the kind that is in order on the orders of the day, but we will not dispute that. I might say that at the time the bill was not given first reading I said I would have some further conversations, and I meant through the usual channels outside the house, with representatives of the other parties. I intend to do that. I should like to do so, and I would prefer not to answer the question until I have done so.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF COASTGUARD SHIP "NANOOK"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with regard to the answer he gave me yesterday as to the coastguard ship Nanook. In his answer he stated he would give consideration to leaving the ship at Pictou until a decision was made. Does he believe that due consideration has been given, in that the ship is under orders to leave the port today and may even now be leaving that beautiful harbour?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was able to have this matter considered immediately after the question was asked yesterday, and in addition to what I said then I should like to expand my reply as to the situation. It is perfectly clear now that the ship will not be required in service, since there is a shore installation at the point it served that is quite adequate for the needs for next season and the foreseeable future. That being so, it was decided it was better to take the ship back to the marine agency at Halifax, where we do not have to pay for storage and thus save the storage charges that were being incurred.

Mr. MacEwan: Can the minister tell us whether the government has any plans for alternative employment for the shipyard since it is not proceeding with work on this ship?

Mr. McIlraith: There is a tender call going out tomorrow for some work on the Auk, and I hope the pencils in that yard will be very sharp in completing the tender.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENHOLD, ALTA.—REQUEST THAT STATION PERSONNEL BE NOT REDUCED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the decision not to allow the Penhold air base to be used for jet training, have any alternative plans been made so that the personnel on this station will not be reduced?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that this is a question for me. I am not able to give the Leader of the Opposition a full answer, but I can say that a great deal of discussion is going on between the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence at this time with a view to trying to meet that kind of problem.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GILL REPORT—CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour concerning the Gill report. Is it the minister's intention at the next session to have a committee formed so that we may study the report and discuss it with the officials who may be called before the committee?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is quite hard to forecast, but I would presume that if a bill is presented to the house it would be sent to a committee at the appropriate stage.

Mr. Langlois: Does the minister intend to send it to a committee as soon as possible after the beginning of the next session?

Mr. MacEachen: As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. TO CANCEL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to initiate talks with the United States in order to put an end to the agreement concerning the storage of American nuclear weapons in Canada?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, no such talks are presently contemplated.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR OPPORTUNITY FOR VOTE ON BILL NO. S-15

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that some of his supporters talked out Bill No. S-15 relating to the "Back to the Bible" broadcasts, could he arrange for time prior to adjournment in which a vote could be taken on this bill?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was not only government supporters who expressed some interest in this bill yesterday, with the result it was not proceeded with. I do not believe that the circumstances surrounding the consideration of this bill yesterday would justify the request for any such special arrangements this session.

Mr. Aiken: Will the Prime Minister take into account that discrimination against a religious group is involved?

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice of his question, so I have had an opportunity to look into the matter. I do not feel myself that the question of discrimination and religious freedom was involved in the action taken yesterday.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO PLOMMER CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have sent the Associate Minister of National Defence notice of this question. Will the minister inform the house if the charges of Commodore Plommer concerning the administration of the Royal Canadian Navy have been the subject of an independent investigation? If not, is such an investigation planned?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that in 1962, when Commodore Plommer first voiced his grievances, a complete inquiry was made into the grievances and a report was made to the then minister of national defence. Subsequently, as the result of an article that appeared in one of our Canadian magazines, the special committee on national defence had Commodore Plommer as a witness and all questions pertaining to the charges were investigated. At the same time the members of the committee were able to question the chief of naval staff about these charges. As the hon. member knows, the special committee on defence are now preparing a report, and we are going to wait for this report before making any decisions about further investigation into this matter.

HOUSING

INCREASED PRICES RESULTING FROM WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has been made aware of the fact that in order to benefit from the $500 bonus, some contractors have increased the prices of their houses by $800 to $1,000 a house? If he is not aware of this, would he inquire in order to stop this kind of speculation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not been aware of the situation but I will make inquiries.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF COLD STORAGE SUBVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on October 28, because of the absence at the time of the Minister of Agriculture, I directed a question to the Prime Minister. That situation also prevails today. The question I asked the Prime Minister on October 28 was whether the government were going to reinstitute the subventions under the Cold Storage Act and, if so, when. At that time the Prime Minister said he would look into the matter, and I would ask him whether he is in a position to answer now.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I am not able to give an answer. I apologize for the delay and I will discuss the matter at once with the Minister of Agriculture, who today is attending a meeting of federal-provincial ministers of agriculture.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps he is in cold storage.

FEDERAL AGENCY TO PROVIDE FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister without Portfolio. It concerns the federal-provincial conference and the eastern feed board. Has any matter concerning this board been brought up at the conference which is underway at the moment?

[Translation]

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I know that this matter is on the agenda of the conference.

[Text]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INCENTIVE TRAINING PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he could give an indication to the house as to how the older employee program is coming along.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have no definite figures to hand today with respect to this program. We are very anxious to have it succeed, and we are considering further steps which might be taken which would make it more attractive.

Mr. Starr: I wonder whether the minister could give us some indication say tomorrow or Friday of the number of applications in respect of this program.

Mr. MacEachen: I will, Mr. Speaker, either on orders of the day or on my estimates, which will be before the house this week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Has the Minister of Labour received any communications from industry that this present incentive plan to employ older workers is far too complex?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall any particular communication, but I will be pleased to consider any representations which might have the effect of simplifying the plan or making it more effective.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF EFFECTS OF AUSTERITY PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received a letter from the Civil Service Association of Canada, written over the signature of the president, Mr. J. C. Best, requesting early consideration of the effects on establishments of the austerity program, and also a review of the fringe benefit areas as they apply to people affected by policy changes which cause establishment reductions? If so, can the minister indicate what reply he has made to this request?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have received such a letter. I know of no austerity program.

An hon. Member: It is a prosperity program.

Mr. Gordon: It is suggested that we have a prosperity program and not an austerity program. The freeze of the establishments of various departments has been eased considerably. They are being reviewed commencing January 2. The other points raised in Mr. Best's letter will be considered, and I will be replying to him just as soon as I can.

Mr. Knowles: When the minister says there is no austerity program—he knows we are referring to the civil service—does he mean that the establishments have been put back to the levels in effect before the freeze?

Mr. Gordon: In many cases the establishments have been put back either completely or in part. The remainder are being looked at as of January 2.

Mr. Knowles: But the austerity is still there.

Mr. Gordon: I could not agree that the austerity is still there; quite the contrary.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Has the freeze on the hiring or replacement of civil servants in the various departments been lifted entirely?

Mr. Gordon: To a very considerable extent.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR AMPLIFIED ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I put question No. 1,482 on the order paper some time ago, directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I was asking about bids on different tenders, and I received only the one that obtained the contract. Could I also ask the parliamentary secretary to answer the last part of this question and give me the bids on the other tenders?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and see if I can have an answer by tomorrow.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1. Departmental administration including Canada's share of the upkeep of the international bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $2,083,500.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, Department of Post Office, vote No. 1. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Ricard: Are we going to have a statement from the minister?

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): In presenting the estimates for the department for this year, I can surely not be accused of patronage since these estimates have been initiated and prepared by our honourable friends opposite.

Under these circumstances, naturally, you will permit me to be somewhat restricted in my praise, while being fair towards my co-workers by chance.

Since the annual report of the department for the year 1962-63 has not yet been tabled—it is at the printers—I will allow myself to outline the most important points, then to comment on our 1963-64 estimates, and finally, to inform the house of the initiation of reforms and decisions undertaken by the department since the coming into power of the present government, and in doing this, I will necessarily limit the number outlined in order not to prolong the debate.

The year 1962-63 was to the Post Office Department, a most significant year of re-organization. Following the report of the royal commission on government organization, every effort was made to incorporate those recommendations of the commission which pertained to the department and which were under the department's jurisdiction.

The changes made emphasized, to a great extent, the decentralization of authority and responsibility to the benefit of officers in the field. As a result, many decisions will be made in the field, providing better service to the public, as field officers will be empowered to make many decisions on the spot rather than wait for approval from headquarters. The changeover is also expected to eliminate much correspondence between headquarters and the field. Headquarters, of course, still remain responsible for formulation of policy and headquarters officers will be in a better position to spend more time on this aspect of the work.

The 1962-63 fiscal year shows total receipts amounting to $222,358,848 while our disbursements totalled $218,872,399 leaving a surplus of $3,486,449.

This compares quite favourably with the figures recorded in 1960-61 and 1961-62, which showed deficits in round figures of $4.7 million and $1.2 million respectively. We must, however, take into account salary increases to post office personnel, which amount to $230,000 and which must be charged to the year 1961-62 and credited to the year 1962-63. On the other hand, we must also debit the retroactive part, amounting to $4,887,076, of the recent salary increases paid during the current year, which should be charged to the fiscal year 1962-63. These retroactive increases produce a real deficit of about $1 million for that year, rather than the surplus of about $3.5 million.

Letter carrier service was inaugurated at Summerside, P.E.I., Oromocto, N.B., Thornhill, Ontario, Ste. Rose, Quebec and Hawkesbury, Ontario. In addition, 207 additional letter carrier walks were placed in operation, bringing to 3,113,765 the number of calls where letter carriers provide door to door mail delivery. The increase in the number of calls is less than in previous years. This is a result of the reduced expenditure program undertaken by the government during the year under review. The 5,640 rural routes now in operation across Canada have brought this service to an all-time high, serving 645,-115 householders.

Post office activities in the field of labour relations saw improved procedures in regard to truck drivers who are employed by contractors for major mail transportation services. Clauses have been inserted in the post office contracts with carriers establishing a minimum hourly wage determined by the Department of Labour. Other clauses incorporated in the contracts deal with annual holidays with pay.

During the year the volume of mail handled showed an increase of 3.94 per cent over the figures for 1961-62. It should be noted that, due to increased efficiency and more effective planning, this increased volume of mail was handled by a staff increase of only one half of one per cent.

The increases and improvements in service that I have described—in letter carrier service, in rural route service, in mail volume and in revenue figures—are the result of the normal growth of the postal service in an expanding economy and a growing population. These increases have been accompanied by an increase in the costs of salaries, transportation and equipment, which are also a normal product of an expanding service.

This pattern of normal growth is reflected in the statistical review of the year 1962-63. While these statistics will be presented in detail on the tabling of the Postmaster General's report, I should like to mention just a few of them here. For instance, departmental revenues increased by almost $9 million in 1962-63 over the previous year. Similarly, departmental expenditures increased by about $4 million during the same period. These figures do not, as I mentioned earlier, include back-dated salary increases which result in a net deficit for the year.

So much for the past. The total departmental estimates for 1963-64 are $191,704,000, which represent an increase of $1,113,500 over last year, taking into consideration supplementaries for both years. It should be noted that salary and transportation increases, factors over which the department has little control, account for the bulk of this figure, which has only been kept down to this level by savings made in these and other areas of expenditures.

Our increased expenditures will be met to a large extent by increased postal rates and fees which I announced some months ago. With the new rates, we have calculated that the department will about break even over the next three-year period. It should be noted that without the recent increases, the department's anticipated deficit over the next three years would have been nearly $15 million.

I should like to point out that the five separate rate increases recently announced were all for services which were not paying their way. Under the new rates, there will still be a net loss, but it will be much less.

I have indicated that normal additional services, particularly in regard to letter carrier service, had been slowed down by the government's reduced expenditure program.

I am pleased to tell you that part of the additional revenue from the recent rate increase is being used to provide door-to-door mail delivery on a normal basis which will give this type of service to some 20,000 new homes in the immediate future. Already, since the beginning of October more than 10,000 householders have been granted door-to-door letter carrier delivery service and the others will follow as quickly as arrangements can be completed.

I also intend to give a brand new look to Canadian postage stamps and, in the future, Canadians can look for brighter and more interesting stamps as the department produces three and perhaps four colour stamps by a combination of steel engraving and offset lithography as compared to the customary one or two colour designs. Red will be mostly used to make them more attractive.

We plan to begin a series of coloured stamps showing the various provincial floral emblems. We have under way what I think are attractive stamps on the themes of world peace and Canadian unity, and also stamps to commemorate the Charlottetown and Quebec conferences of 1864 which led to confederation. We have decided, for next year, to issue a special Christmas stamp that should be most appropriate.

The department has in its vaults some 58,000 foreign stamps. We wish to display this magnificent collection for the public. This vast collection is now being catalogued and organized and, we hope, will soon be made available for public inspection both at Ottawa and at other points across the country.

Since becoming Postmaster General I have met with great pleasure every group of postal employees who wanted to meet me. In addition, I have met with the executive officers of all the postal associations. I have also done everything I could to back up the work of the department's standing committee on employee relations. As a proof of my interest in the welfare of the employees, I have succeeded in increasing the percentage of the salary increases granted to postmasters of smaller offices during the recent pay revisions.

Another example of my interest in the welfare of the employees was my decision to give the postmasters of smaller offices an opportunity to compete for promotion in a wider field, and that, at the request of their association.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Denis: Certainly.

Mr. Valade: The minister referred to the fact that he had obtained salary increases for the postmasters. Can he tell us the amounts of those raises?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I said that I had succeeded in increasing the percentage of salary increases granted to postmasters of smaller offices. As a rule, the increase is based on a percentage and as these were smaller offices, the increase would have been between $25 or $30, for instance. That is why they were granted, through my intervention, a minimum raise of $60.

Mr. Gregoire: That is very good.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, at this point in my remarks, I wish to state that, in spite of everything that was said here and elsewhere, the appointment of postmasters and the granting of contracts for supplies and services were made, and still are, under the provisions of the Post Office Act. In all cases, the act was followed faithfully.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot close my remarks without paying a special tribute to all the postal employees who, day in day out, through unselfish devotion to their work, have given the Canada post office a reputation of being second to none. This includes not only the regular employees of the department, but also, the rural mail carriers, the contractors and their employees, whose contribution to the postal service is great indeed.

In short, the Post Office Department has given and continues to give to the Canadian people a service of which they can be proud, and it is for this reason that I humbly ask this house to approve the estimates, as now submitted.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, my first words will be to congratulate the minister for having been as brief in his remarks as his administration will be.

We noted that the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) came into the house under a certain nervous stress, probably dreading the moment where we could at last criticize his department.

The minister has colour and all hon. members know him, but what we would like to know is the political colour of those he seems to favour in certain very special circumstances.

[Mr. Denis.]

Mr. Chairman, the attendance of the Postmaster General in the house this afternoon was prepared by the Secretary of State and leader of the house (Mr. Pickersgill), who is known for his wit during our discussions. Indeed, as found on page 5733 of Hansard of December 11, 1963, the leader of the house announced that we would benefit from the lights of the Postmaster General. Here is what he said:

When they have concluded—

And the leader of the house had just been speaking about the Department of Agriculture.

—and the carnage is over, the Postmaster General is only too ready to enter the slaughter house.

Those are the words used by the leader of the house and I think he was right. I do not think the Postmaster General will enter the slaughter house, but I think that he is ready to commit suicide to try and save the reputation of the Liberal party.

At this stage of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I avail myself of the opportunity to tell the minister I understand his great self-denial in face of the patronage situation experienced in his department, in so few weeks of administration. The minister will not mind, I hope, if I tell him I understand he has already made his sublime sacrifice on the altar of Liberal patronage and that he is ready to tell his leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), like St. Theresa of Lisieux: It does not matter, my God, if I burn in hell for eternity, if such is the will of the dear leader of the Liberal party.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the minister is ready for holocaust, so much so that he omitted, in his introduction, to speak about the most important problems—

Mr. Gregoire: One sees the mote in other people's eyes, but does not see the beam in his own.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) would abide by standing orders, I would be grateful to him. No doubt, he has interesting things to tell us, and if they are, we shall be in a position to appreciate them later on. So, I would ask him to please stay still a bit and allow those who have serious things to say to express themselves in this house.

Mr. Chairman, in his brief speech and his short statement of excuses, the Postmaster General did not touch on a side of his department's administration which is indeed one of the most important ones, since his department is supposed to be the only one able to support itself, without having to rely on any grant whatever from the federal government.

For instance, the minister has failed, unintentionally or not, to mention salary increases for certain postal employees, increases which he called for when he was but a very noisy private member and critic of the Post Office Department for the then official opposition.

He also used to deal with the improvement of working conditions in that department. In fact, all will admit that the present Postmaster General was the champion of the improvement of working conditions for the employees of the Post Office Department. He no longer talks about that now.

Mr. Chairman, a matter which seems to have haunted the Postmaster General when he was only the private member for St. Denis, is that of the thefts in post offices. In fact, I recall that he used to repeat the same story all the time, that there was not a single day when we would not have heard the hon. member for St. Denis ask the then postmaster general if he was not aware that a burglary had taken place in such and such a post office.

I was really surprised to note that the Postmaster General made no mention at all of post office thefts in his brief statement on presenting his estimates. Yet, those thefts keep on happening and are even getting more serious since the minister was appointed to his present duties.

When he analysed the situation in his department, the minister failed to suggest a policy to ensure a balanced budget. As a matter of fact, we are far from the balance policy he always advocated when he was in the opposition.

He acquired a wide experience and showed great competence since he was elected to the house, more especially since he was designated as official critic of the opposition on postal matters. At that time, he put himself to a lot of trouble. He searched through all the departmental files and he even had access to confidential reports the then postmaster general was kind enough to let him consult.

In the light of the minister's comments, we must come to the conclusion that, since he took over as Postmaster General, he has not put into practice any new formula and none of the suggestions he made when he was sitting in the opposition.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to quote certain observations the present Postmaster General made on July 26, 1958, when he was just the private member for St. Denis, and which show exactly the situation in which the Postmaster General finds himself once again today. The situation which the minister promoted a few years ago has become for him, today, a stumbling block, and it cannot be denied that when he was sitting in the opposition, the minister played a much more efficient role than he is playing today.

I should have liked the Postmaster General to speak more extensively on the question which obsessed him when he was in the opposition. I do not intend to quote all the insignificant allegations recited in the past by the present Postmaster General; neither do I intend to give an account of the debates, reflections, complaints and laments he was then heard to express. On the other hand, he spoke of thefts, as though they had been invented; he spoke about the postal system, saying the department owed it to itself to grant the country two postal deliveries a day.

I could quote the words of the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), as reported in the official record for July 26, 1958, and so applicable to the present Postmaster General. I could not let this opportunity go by without reminding him of his own words, which, today, must leave him quite ill at ease in his present position.

Concerning thefts in post offices, I have before me a newspaper article mentioning a recent theft in Montreal, involving over $40,000. I learned through another article, a few days ago, that a post office had been robbed of about $20,000. Since the minister has been there, you learn that everywhere in this country post offices suffer important thefts. I wonder why the Postmaster General, after four years experience in the opposition, at which time he was obsessed, as I was saying a while ago, by thefts occurring in post offices, did not find it appropriate to tell us what he thought of this situation, and especially what means he intends to use to protect the valuables and other articles that the department is entrusted with.

Mr. Caouette: It takes him a long time to understand.

Mr. Valade: I agree with the hon. member for Villeneuve when he says the Postmaster General takes a long time to understand.

Mr. Chairman, if we cannot discuss objectively the estimates introduced by the Postmaster General, it is because we notice that the estimates are in accordance with reality. That is what we find strange and the only explanation I could find is that they were prepared by our administration, which goes to show once again that the people had no reason to overthrow a government which had such a good record of administrating public business that the present Postmaster General adopts the same system.

Of course, the Postmaster General gave new guide lines to his department's policy, guide lines which clearly indicate the philosophy of the government now in power, because since they have taken over, the Liberals have applied the policy of patronage of which the Postmaster General is but one example giving us an opportunity to point out the most crucial and most shocking problems. And to think that those people were elected on the commitment to bring new life to the federal administration.

The Postmaster General specially forgot to discuss the matter of the salary increases asked for by his employees for so long. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that when we were in power, we gave a salary increase to post office employees.

I have in front of me a few letters from people who are asking how it is possible that with an administration headed by a man who promised during so many years to raise the post office staff salaries, not only the employees have not had any increase, but they had a cut in their salary. In fact, I wonder whether it is the policy of the government to consider increasing the wages of the employees.

One of my constituents wrote me on August 17 saying:

—As you undoubtedly know, the employees have been granted an increase; the workers on the fourth floor at least were given an increase of 16 cents per hour, I think, but our wages were reduced by 14 cents per hour. We were earning $1.57 and we now receive $1.43 an hour for the same work—

Mr. Caouette: A policy of grandeur.

Mr. Valade: Yes, I am wondering whether this is a policy of grandeur and whether the Postmaster General is showing a genuine interest in the wages of postal workers, as he promised while he was in the opposition.

I also have a document to prove that under the Conservative administration all employees had been granted some rather substantial increases. I shall spare the house the enumeration of all those increases and all the categories of persons who benefited therefrom. In any case, I think the Postmaster General is aware of those salary increases. Nevertheless, I would have liked to hear him tell us what policy he intends to follow in this matter.

The Postmaster General knows as well as I do that the employees of his department are rendering a valuable service to society. They are dedicated people who do not count the hours spent at the service of the Post Office Department, though their health may sometimes suffer.

Since all the bills having received most careful consideration by the government were designed to raise the salary rates of high government officials in Canada—there is also the bill which enabled the members of this house to get a rather substantial increase—I wonder whether the minister could now look after the little people and at long last solve a problem that is surely worthy of more attention than the minister has been giving to it until now.

If I am not mistaken, the minister did not refer to the steps advocated by the Glassco commission in its report on the improvement of efficiency in the postal service. Unfortunately, being a good Liberal administrator, he overlooked the recommendations of the Glassco commission. He should have realized that it would have been to the advantage of the Canadian people to apply certain steps and he could then have told us something about the improvement in service the public is asking for.

I have here an article published in La Presse of October 15, 1963, in which it is said:

—But if Mr. Denis is convinced that without those increases, there will be a deficit in his department, the public is just as convinced that, without an increase in the number of wicket clerks, at the Place d'Armes post office among others, some day there will be a fresh outbreak of separatism.

I think that if the Postmaster General would really take the trouble of considering the administrative problems for which he is responsible rather than considering the request for patronage made to him by sympathizers of the great Liberal cause, it would certainly result in some great improvement for the public.

Mr. Chairman, the minister gave us a broad outline, a little while ago. His outline of the situation was somewhat too broad to allow him to make any concrete announcement. For instance, he spoke about the pay increase granted to sub-postmasters but when I inquired about the nature of that increase, I was not surprised to learn that it was $5 a month. What a big improvement, what an acknowledgement of the services and devotion of that category of employees.

I am wondering whether the minister was in earnest when he said that owing to his personal intervention, the postmasters' salaries had been increased, while they were only increased by $60 a year. If the minister's intervention has no better result than that, I believe he could really ask his leader to recommend him for a job in which a $60 a year increase could be considered as a special treatment for him.

However, I believe the Postmaster General juggled with his department's expenditures and has not concerned himself with bringing improvements such as those made by the former government, which came to power in 1957, and that on the whole, the administration entrusted to him is a complete failure.

The present Postmaster General had been so voluble when he was a member of the opposition that people had expected something more than the incoherent statements he has given us this afternoon.

Of course, I understand the minister is in a somewhat difficult position; rumour has it that an appointment would be intended for him in a much quieter and easier place, in a less committing position. So I believe that having in mind a promotion in another place, the minister has not taken pains to examine thoroughly the problems inherent to his department.

We are not going to blame him too much for that, because we are under the impression that the Prime Minister will know how to reward him during the Christmas holidays. And as we are in a festive spirit, I should like to take this opportunity to wish the Postmaster General to find in his Christmas stocking the appointment that he has been wishing for all these years, and the house will not be any worse off for it. Upon our return, we shall be able to offer him our warmest congratulations for getting a transfer to a world of tranquillity instead of worries, as he experiences at this time.

When the minister said earlier, that patronage had been introduced into the Post Office Department by the former administration, I had the impression that he was referring to the former Conservative administration. But after checking my material, I understood that he was referring rather to the former Liberal administration. If the minister wants to be honest and consistent, he can refresh his memory by looking into an article published in La Presse on May 31, 1951, that is close to 13 years ago, when the Conservatives were not in office. That article proves that patronage was really a Liberal creation for which the minister, in order to make excuses for himself, is trying now to blame the former Conservative administration.

That article has this to say:

> Members of the opposition maintained yesterday in the Commons that appointments made in the Post Office Department are sometimes the result of patronage.
> Members of the three opposition parties criticized the way appointments were made during consideration of the bill presented by the Hon. Mr. Rinfret, postmaster general, to amend and revise the legislation concerning the postal service.

Mr. Chairman, that article was published in that newspaper at a time when our friends opposite were in power. That goes to show that the minister was mistaken, once again, when he said that patronage started under the Conservative administration. It is more of a genuine Liberal system, it is part of the Liberal party's concepts and philosophy to use power to its own advantage rather than to serve the people.

If I were the only member here to make that charge, I think the hon. members opposite would be justified to question my word. But when we come back to the reason why the member for St. Denis is part of the cabinet as Postmaster General, we get the feeling of being before the Liberal party's executioner, that is to say the patronage handler in the highest sense of the word. There is no doubt that patronage came into the federal administration with the Postmaster General.

Some time ago, when we asked the Postmaster General if he had really compiled a patronage list, he stated, upon his word as a minister, that there was no patronage list in his office.

When we plied him with questions, the minister finally admitted that there was a list, but that it was not a patronage list. It was a list which he called a "list of consultants".

I regret to say that the minister misled the house when he said that there was no patronage list in his office and when he called the list a "list of consultants".

After examining that notorious list of consultants, we were in a position to see that this list, by error or for political reasons, included the names of Liberal candidates defeated in the last election, in all the ridings in Canada.

Yet, knowing the man who was my political opponent and who, by the way, did not even live in the riding, I wondered how he could have been appointed a consultant to the Post Office Department with his lack of qualifications. At least if he had been a consultant. The Postmaster General knows full well that the Quebec minimum wage act forbids employers to pay their employees less than the minimum wage. Now, I feel that those people should be paid a salary by the department, particularly if they are qualified consultants.

We made a comparison and we came to the conclusion—

[Text]

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I may ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Valade: If your name is on the list.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Munro: I wonder if the hon. member could tell us whether under the former administration his name was on a Conservative patronage list, under the title "consultant".

Mr. Valade: I am very happy that the hon. gentleman has asked me that question, because I was just going to speak on that matter. I hope the hon. member will be satisfied with my question—

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Valade: —and if he is not satisfied I hope he will ask me another question. I will conclude my remarks in English because I would like the hon. member to have the opportunity of getting the meaning that I want to convey with regard to the patronage list to which he has referred.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, at the request of my friend for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner), I shall pursue my remarks in French.

When the minister was accused of having such a list, he said: "We have no patronage list." Later on, he said: "Your Conservative list was worse than ours".

When a minister states that there is no patronage list and then ends up saying "Your list was worse than ours", it seems to me that there is a lack of coherence on his part, as regards the official or non-official recognition of a list that really existed.

Now, to answer the question put to me a moment ago, I have here the list of consultants that was prepared in the minister's office—

Mr. Caouette: Those are two identical lists.

Mr. Choquette: He is somebody, he is a man.

Mr. Valade: A good man who almost lost his deposit, despite the speech made by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) in the riding of St. Mary.

We have here, Mr. Chairman, the list of consultants issued by the Liberal party, and we find that the basic difference between the patronage list of the Liberal party and its list of consultants is that on the list the Postmaster General had in his office, in all ridings where Liberal members were defeated, Liberal candidates were appointed patronage agents under the title of consultants to the Postmaster General.

When the minister said that there was a list of Conservatives identical to his own, I say here that he misled the house, either by ignorance or knowingly, in order to clear himself.

I am in a position to prove that statement, and I can tell the hon. member that the list referred to by the minister was a list of addresses, prepared during the last electoral campaign and containing the addresses of all the Conservative candidates who had organization committees in each of the counties, and not a list of former candidates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Valade.]

The Chairman: Order. I would like to remind the committee that the hon. member for St. Mary has the floor.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. members opposite have misunderstood what I meant when I said that the former postmaster general had issued a list of addresses in March 1963, so that the mail addressed to the members of the House of Commons could be redirected to the various constituencies. It was not a list which was put in the office of the minister for patronage, for placing people in post offices, as is done at the present time.

I appreciate that our hon. friends might have some difficulty to see the difference; indeed, they do not want to see the difference. We are proving to them that under the Conservative administration there was no such thing as a patronage list, while under the Liberals such a list is official, classifying as "consultants" defeated candidates in the election.

That list is a sort of open sesame to the various post offices throughout Canada, whereas, under the Conservative administration, the only thing the postmaster general did, was to advise the offices that this or that member could be found at the address of a central committee during the electoral campaign. That was a normal thing to do. It was not a matter of patronage, it was a list of addresses, and I know—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Valade: I hope that the house will allow me a few more minutes, for we have on many occasions agreed to listen to the nonsense of certain members opposite.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the house to agree to let the hon. member go on with his remarks, since he is far from being offensive.

Mr. Valade: I can understand the Postmaster General stating that I am not offensive, for he himself is very defensive; but he would just the same like to be in another situation.

I know that I must thank him for the opportunity he has given me to reiterate the wish which we all make, that the new year would increase, in the interest of the House of Commons, the number of senators and deliver us from his presence.

Finally, he will be regarded as one of the postmaster generals who indulged the most in patronage in the history of this country.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, the time allocated to the hon. member has now expired and I object to his continuing to talk nonsense.

An hon. Member: This is going to be good.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I hear the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger) say that this is going to be good. It will certainly be better than it is in his constituency.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, may I raise a point of order. My point of order is that it is the normal course of events to see the spokesman for the various parties recognized in the order of party precedence in the house, and therefore the hon. member for Danforth should have been recognized.

The Chairman: Order. I appreciate this point. That is what I had proposed to do but I must say I did not see the hon. member for Danforth until I had called on the hon. member for Villeneuve. Perhaps the hon. member for Villeneuve may want to yield the recognition I accorded him in favour of the hon. member for Danforth.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to follow the traditions of the house and I shall leave the floor to the hon. member for Danforth.

[Text]

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to thank the hon. member for Villeneuve. I had not intended to raise the matter myself, but the hon. member for Skeena is always insistent on the rules being followed and is a great respecter of the rules and traditions of the house. I thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for yielding to me.

There are a few remarks I should like to make on behalf of our party with regard to this department. I should like to begin by saying that most of them, in fact all of them, are not directed at the minister in any personal way. I have had occasion to have dealings with the minister on postal matters, and from a personal point of view I can say I have found him to be quite co-operative and very fair. I want to make that clear. I wanted to say that at the beginning, because the balance of my remarks will not be quite as congratulatory of the minister and the government.

Over the years the Post Office Department, of course, has been a department that has not always received the care and attention that is should have received from parliament and from the ministers who have looked after its affairs. From our examination it is our view that one of the best cabinet ministers ever to handle this portfolio was Mr. W. Hamilton, a former member from Montreal, I believe. An examination of the records and of his performance of his duties shows that he did make an honest, sincere and partially successful attempt to root out many of the more flagrant abuses. It is regrettable in a way that he was removed from our midst by the wishes of his constituents in the 1962 election, because we have never felt that his successors measured up to his ability. As I have said, the department is one which is capable of great use or great misuse. Signs already appearing, which we can see, seem to indicate that some of the older and more reprehensible practices in this department are again rearing their heads.

I was interested in the speech of the hon. member for St. Mary, much of which I thought was needlessly self-congratulatory of the previous government, and some of it quite hypocritical. The criticisms he has been making could more properly have been directed, and to some degree with greater validity, toward the administration which preceded the present one. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, one of the most depressing aspects this session is the constant refrain we hear from this side of the house that all the present government is doing is carrying on the brilliant and marvellous programs introduced by the Conservatives when they formed the government.

I want to deal with the department in two or three aspects, and the first one is one which has partially been raised by the previous speaker. I refer to patronage. We have heard a great deal about this. In fact, I notice that most members on the other side of the house have their little lists of consultants and they are waving them with great glee. I do not know how many there are in the house but it is quite a pretty sight to see all the white sheets being waved. Of course, these lists are not new. They were used by the previous government as well. I do not know to what degree they constitute patronage, but I do think there are more serious charges of patronage that can be made against the government and ones which ought to be investigated in the next session by a special committee of the house.

Mr. Denis: May I ask a question? Will the hon. member mention the particular cases?

Mr. Scott: The minister is just about two minutes ahead of me; I am just coming to that. I am not suggesting whether these charges which have been made by responsible members of the postal department are true or not. Obviously we do not have enough evidence to judge at this stage. But they have been made and to me they constitute a very grave and serious reflection upon an important aspect of the civil service. If the charges that the present government is instituting patronage practices for political purposes are true, we have the right to know. They should be investigated, as I have said, by a special committee of the house in the next session of parliament. Obviously there is not time to do it now, and no one suggests that a serious attempt could successfully be made.

I have a photostat of an article which appeared in one of the Ottawa newspapers. In it charges are made by a Mr. Bill Houle, who is president of C.P.E.A., Montreal local. This man is not a politician but a responsible officer in his department. He has charged, at a meeting at which the deputy postmaster general, W. H. Wilson, was present—I think it was the annual dinner of the Ottawa branch which was held here—that by the use of patronage we are reintroducing patronage into the government of Canada. That is a very serious charge to make. The article does not disclose any detailed facts, but complaints were made about the manner of hiring being adopted by the department. The local postal clerk, a Mr. Bernard Belanger, asked whether the post office had a policy of hiring cheap casual help to fill jobs previously held by postal clerks, and he said that this policy would eventually result in the extinction of postal clerks. These are grave charges, Mr. Chairman. We do not know whether or not they are true, but if this trend is beginning to make itself apparent then we have the right to know about it and to try to stop it before it goes any further.

All this banter which has taken place in the house over the subject of the lists is not that important. I think it is an unpleasant thing to do and that it is somewhat improper, but I think all the hullaballoo made about it is a little silly. But we as members of parliament should be concerned at the more serious aspects of the matter which are rearing their heads. While the post office department has always been lightly regarded by the government, it is a department of some importance touching the lives of everyone in Canada, and should be looked after carefully by us in our deliberations. Therefore I suggest to the minister that he agree to have these charges investigated, and that we be permitted to call before us various individuals who have made such charges so as to ascertain whether or not they are true. It may be they are untrue. If that is the case then we should know this as well.

The other matter about which I wanted to speak is also of great importance and concerns the working conditions under which postal employees operate. We always hear a lot about the need for good postal services, for two or three deliveries a day, and taking care of the desires of the public. But I want to make an appeal to the minister to become the champion of the postal employees, because they are the neglected part of the Post Office Department. It is all very well to talk of pretty stamps, of an annual stamp day, of a stamp for this person and a stamp for that person. But the minister would make a greater contribution to his department if he became the spokesman of, and the champion for, the rights of the employees.

I should like to put on the record something of the conditions under which they work. I think it is reprehensible that this large body of public servants should have no collective bargaining rights and no arbitration rights. We give these to all sections of the working community through our labour laws. We give them to such people as a matter of right. We give the right to our workmen to associate together and to bargain collectively for the betterment of their working conditions. Our farmers have certain farm organizations to take care of their interests. I think it is extremely reprehensible that our employees in the postal department do not have similar rights.

I think most members received a bulletin from the federated association of letter carriers in June of this year headed: "The Postmen ask, is it fair". In this bulletin are set out some of the onerous conditions under which these people are working, and I should like to put them on record.

The letter carrier is made completely responsible for the mail on his route. He has personal and individual responsibility as compared to the average postal employee who works in a group.

He is responsible for registered mail and for all changes of address, sometimes for as long as a year, sometimes indefinitely. He re-addresses all changes and keeps an up to date directory for this purpose, and notifies publishers of changes in address.

In addition he has recently been assigned the task of redirecting family allowance and old age pension cheques, formerly a responsibility of the recipients.

He is responsible for collecting government money through C.O.D. items, short-paid mail and custom and excise charges.

He must personally investigate complaints that mail which was posted was not delivered, often due to the fault of others, and write an explanation on a special enquiry form.

In dealing with the public he is expected to do a good "public relations" job for the government and the post office in particular. He is expected to be neat in appearance, courteous and knowledgeable.

He is expected to carry ever-increasing loads. In a ten year period the average walk has increased by more than 100 calls and 400 pieces of mail daily.

Despite advancing age he is expected to keep in top physical condition in order to perform his job quickly and efficiently. He must stick on the job until his daily task is completed. While he has a starting hour he has no finishing time.

The carrier is up and on the job by at least 6.30 a.m., often earlier.

Apart from a ten minute coffee break he has to go without lunch until his last item of mail is delivered. This can be a six-hour grind and often is even longer.

He must carry out his duties in all kinds of weather, outdoors all year round, in temperatures from the nineties to below zero, through rain and snow and upon treacherous, icy sidewalks and stairs.

Aside from regular mail he is the pack-horse for business firms who load his walk with bundles of "householder" pamphlets, dodgers and other sales promotion literature, which he must deliver to every letter box on his route—a veritable gold mine for the post office in the Toronto area alone.

While other postal workers are required to work many hours overtime the carrier is expected to prepare and deliver his volume in a regular working day.

Working under these wonderful conditions, Mr. Chairman, the letter carrier has had no pay increase in almost three years. His average weekly wage is $67.50 take home pay; that is a man with two children. The bulletin continues:

Many wives and mothers must work to make ends meet and many carriers take second jobs to support their families. Like the low man on the totem pole he carries the great weight of those above him and receives the least attention for his efforts. Is it any wonder the letter carriers ask: Is it fair?

These kind of working conditions would not be tolerated by this government.

I was at the reception the other day for the Canadian Labour Congress and I never saw a more smoothly managed stage performance or such a degree of interest in labour. Labour is going to get anything it wants. I have never seen such interest in the working man. He is going to get a fair deal. They could not have been more careful in the way they were currying favour. But in the department over which the minister has control there are people working under these types of conditions, who have no collective bargaining rights, for which they have been asking for years. They have been asking for compulsory arbitration so that they can force upon an unwilling government the awards which an arbitrator would give them, and they cannot get that right either. I appeal to the minister, as I said at the start of this phase of my remarks. If he wants to be a great minister and to elevate himself above the level at which most postmasters have been content to serve, then let him become the champion of the people in his department. From letters I have received I am under the impression that morale in the Post Office Department is low. I hope I am wrong in this. But I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should get out of his office and talk to some of the people who work in his department. Never mind the senior officials, though they are perfectly competent. The minister should find out what are the feelings of the letter carriers and of the workers in some of the lower levels in the post office. These people are unhappy. They feel that no one really cares about their working conditions. I do not think this state of affairs will be improved until the minister himself is ready to get out into the field and find out the thoughts and wishes of those who work there. If he were to do that, there would be at least a chance of bringing about an improvement in conditions.

Some consideration should be given to establishing a fairer method of handling dismissals. At the present time, employees who are dismissed are entitled to appeal to a higher body. Some of us have had occasion to appear before these kangaroo courts. They are loaded in favour of the department. The applicant rarely has an opportunity to call witnesses, or else he finds witnesses are not available. I appeared before such a body on behalf of one employee and I sent in a list of the people I wanted to call as witnesses in support of my case. They were astonished. This had never been done. They were all working. They were not available. Consequently, there was no evidence to repudiate the charges which were made and in due course a notice came out to say that the appeal had been dismissed. I have never appeared before a more one-sided kangaroo court. I should like to see the minister do something to remedy this state of affairs and give employees a better chance. In particular he should make sure that those who come down from Ottawa to hear these cases have all the evidence before them. I do not criticize them. If they do not hear both sides of the case they cannot make an intelligent judgment. But by controlling the evidence to which the board has access the department is, in effect, controlling the decisions. I think this is a situation which should be changed.

The minister should give consideration to increasing the remuneration paid to the thousands of people who operate sub-post offices. I spent the whole summer in my constituency trying to get a new sub-post office established. I did not think of going to see the consultant. I might have got some action if I had had the forethought to do that, but it did not occur to me at the time. The real difficulty we encountered was that no one would take on the job. We found all kinds of individuals who are interested in running a post office, but as soon as I quoted the rates they politely showed me the door. The rates are so low that it is not worth the trouble of providing a service. This is not an effective way in which to operate the department. I ask the minister to give serious thought to this, because the present rates of remuneration are affecting the quality of the service from coast to coast, and I think they are affecting the quality of the individuals who serve in our sub-post offices.

I do not wish to continue at any great length because I know there are a great many speakers to follow me and they will probably cover the subjects which I omit. I should like to conclude by renewing my appeal to the minister. I know there are rumours in the newspapers that he is not going to be here very long. I hope they are not true. I hope he will stay with us and that he will find within himself the qualities necessary to make this department a much better department than it is at the present time. There are areas which are in grave need of overhaul. Some of this work was started by Mr. Hamilton when he was postmaster general but I do not think any serious attempt has been made since that time. One of our disappointments so far is that the present minister does not give us on this side of the house the impression that he intends to use the qualities he possesses. We do not get the impression that the minister really understands the problems of this department or that he is the type of minister who would turn his whole party against him, if necessary. I am told that Mr. Hamilton was such a good postmaster that he did not have a single friend in the Tory party. I do not want to interfere with the hon. gentleman's friendships but if he were able to announce next year that he was so good, so impartial, so anxious to serve the needs of the post office at the expense of his party that he did not have a single, solitary friend in the Liberal party, this would be the greatest tribute he could be paid.

Mr. Olson: I wish to make only a few remarks with respect to the estimates of the Post Office Department which are before us now. At the outset I think it was well known in this house to the dismay of most members that we see this ugly trend toward patronage coming up again in a government department. It seems it has shown up more in the Post Office Department because of lists which have been tabled and if there are such things in other departments, we do not know they are there but we hope they are not.

The fact is that members have these lists before them now and they are extremely sorry that this kind of thing is being continued. In my opinion, in this enlightened age when we have technological apparatus available to us and to the leaders of parties, and to members and candidates, to communicate with the mass of the people in Canada, in their constituencies in particular, this kind of patronage which has begun to show up again is, in fact, a liability to a political party, rather than an asset. I know that in days gone by when there were no facilities for mass communication with the people there were politicians and political party organizers in various areas who were consultants, and so on. It may have been a political asset then, but I am certain that in the long range view today any form of patronage of the nature that is showing up now is, in fact, a liability. It belongs to an age that has gone past and I certainly hope we are going to see an end to it, particularly in the post office.

I was interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Mary. If I understood him correctly—and he was interrupted a few times—he said the purpose of the lists which were tabled was to enable the department to find members of parliament after the election. If he did not say that, I apologize. But if he did say something to that effect I would like to pose a question. I read from the front page of this list, sessional paper 255, part I, and it says:

> Effective immediately. All matters pertaining to Newfoundland will be referred to James A. McGrath, M.P. and I think at the time of referral he should be supplied with the name and address of the individual who is our normal consultant concerned with the particular problems.

What does that mean? Does that mean you needed the list so you could forward mail and, furthermore, what do they mean by "all matters pertaining to Newfoundland—"

Mr. Valade: Since the hon. member asked me a question, I would like to refer him to the dates on this list, which are February 8, February 26 and March 26. It was, in fact, a demand from members of parliament so that their addresses should be changed in order that their mail would be forwarded to them during the campaign. There is nothing connected with patronage about this. It is just a list so that the mail will reach members of parliament.

Mr. Olson: I see there is an amendment no. 11, dated March 6, 1963. I see that very plainly. On the face of it, it says "effective immediately on all matters." "All matters" must include more than having addresses. I think the hon. member would consider me naïve indeed if I were to conclude these were only lists of addresses.

I have in my hand the Conservative list, by the way, and I notice that in Medicine Hat the consultant to the Postmaster General is Edwin W. Brunsden, care of Progressive Conservative campaign headquarters, South Railway street, Medicine Hat. He is to be addressed as "Dear Ted". The evidence is fairly clear, Mr. Chairman. Let us look at the Liberal list. I find that in Medicine Hat the consultant is to be Dave Broadfoot, of Redcliff, Alberta. For the benefit of hon.

members who do not already know, I may say that Dave Broadfoot was the Liberal candidate who ran against me. In Edmonton-Strathcona, the name of the consultant is John Decore. In Edmonton West, the consultant is J. Harper Prowse. He was also a defeated Liberal candidate. In the constituency of Lethbridge, the one right next to mine, the consultant is Martin Hoyt. He also was a defeated Liberal candidate.

I would ask the Postmaster General what it is about which he consults these gentlemen? Are they experts in the administration of the post office? Do they have some special knowledge about where post office buildings should be put? Do they have some knowledge of the general administration of a post office, or just what is the reason for having them on the list, and what kind of questions do you refer to them for their counsel? This is an important bit of information, Mr. Chairman. What kind of questions have been referred? So far as I am concerned, I do not know that any of these gentlemen in the constituencies about which I have information, have any special knowledge that would be important to the Postmaster General in the operations of the Post Office Department.

As a matter of fact, the results of the elections would seem to indicate these gentlemen did not even have a high degree of public support. They were not only defeated, but they were away down the list in being defeated. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, this kind of operation belongs to an age long past. The Liberal government and the Postmaster General in particular would be well advised to recognize that we have moved out of that era where this political patronage was an asset to a political party.

During the election campaign of 1957, and for a number of years prior to that, the Liberal candidate of that time used a great deal of his time, and in fact most of his campaign was based on being present at the opening of post offices and federal buildings throughout the constituency. He had no hesitation about making it evident that, as Liberal candidate, he got in touch with the Liberal government of that day and that credit should be given to him for getting the building. This was true of places like Taber, Brooks, and others about which I know. He was at the official opening and made it abundantly clear he was instrumental in seeing that the people got these buildings.

I want the Postmaster General—I see the Minister of Public Works is here too—to know that the electorate in the constituency resented it, rather than giving him credit for it. This pursuit of political patronage was not an asset but was a liability. I am not suggesting to the Minister of Public Works that this sort of thing is going on now. I am just telling him what happened at that time. Even at that time, this kind of patronage was a liability rather than an asset. The candidate's vote went down substantially after he engaged in this kind of activity.

I do not want to take a lot more time of the committee, Mr. Chairman. We have these lists. I hope the Postmaster General will resolve now that he is going to destroy these lists and use the officials within his department who are supposed to have some knowledge of the administration of the department when he needs advice. I can understand the frustration of some of the officials, the regional officials of the Post Office Department, when they try to do something on the basis of what is right and what is in keeping with good administration, only to be overridden roughshod by some political consultant who may not agree with what they are trying to do.

An hon. Member: A political hack.

Mr. Olson: Hack is the word. I say in all kindness to the Postmaster General that if he can get himself to change his attitude towards this political patronage and recognize that this is nearly 1964 and this kind of patronage is no longer any good, even for practical politics, then perhaps we can have good, solid administration of the Post Office Department. On the other hand, if he intends to pursue this business in the way he has, and in the way it has been done by almost all federal governments in the past, then I think we should have an investigation into the department. I think, too, that if he persists in pursuing this kind of administration, perhaps Canada would be better off if we had a different Postmaster General.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we are considering at present the estimates of a fairly important department, namely the Post Office Department, and the minister in charge is well-known to me since we were colleagues from 1946 to 1949. At that time, the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) was a member of the famous "Little Chicago" sitting to the right of the Speaker, at this end of the chamber. The present premier of Quebec also belonged to that group.

We are happy to see that the minister has matured intellectually since then. At least, he seems to take his office seriously and I am happy to see him at the head of such an important department.

Mr. Chairman, there are only 15 items for this department; the estimates amount to $191,166,000 and the number of postal workers is 56,371.

Mr. Chairman, one has to agree that 15 items are not too many for such an important department. As a matter of fact, this reminds somewhat of the story to the guy who asked for a bowl of pea soup in a restaurant. When the soup was served to him, he noticed that there were only three peas in his plate. He called the owner of the place and asked him: "Tell me, where do you buy those peas?" The owner said: "Why do you ask?" And the man replied: "I never saw three peas that made so much juice."

As for me, Mr. Chairman, I never saw 15 items involving so many expenditures. It is indeed a remarkable thing.

Mr. Chairman, the previous speakers have mentioned the high degree of patronage dispensed in the Post Office Department. I will not accuse the minister himself of dispensing patronage, but I will surely blame the system and those who allow this system to be maintained not only within the Post Office Department but also in others.

As for the Post Office Department, I have already called the attention of the minister on the patronage dispensed in my constituency and after having asked a copy of the correspondence exchanged between an employee of the Post Office Department and my constituents, I received copy of letters from the employment division, the contract assessment and tenders division of the Post Office Department.

Mr. Chairman, I have here the correspondence exchanged since the month of May, that is since this government came into office, and October 25 last, that is less than a month and a half ago, between the department and Mr. Stephen Cuddihy, ex-Liberal candidate defeated by more than 11,000 votes on April 8 last.

Mr. Stephen Cuddihy is a young lawyer aged 26 or 27, who knows absolutely nothing about postal administration. And now the high officials of the postal department write to him to advise him that the appointment of Mr. Hector Villeneuve as postmaster at Rapide Sept was confirmed on October 25, 1963. What does a Rouyn lawyer care about the appointment of Mr. Villeneuve as postmaster? And that letter is signed by Mr. DeGaspe Tache, acting director of personnel.

If Mr. A. DeGaspe Tache, high official at the Post Office Department, is not aware yet of the fact that Real Caouette is the member for the riding of Villeneuve, I take it upon myself to let him know. I will also draw his attention to the fact that all federal hon. members, whether they are from the New Democratic, the Conservative or the Social Credit parties, are entitled to know what is going on in their riding, and that even if high officials of the department are concerned, whether it is Mr. A. DeGaspe Tache or Mr. R. A. Cathro, director of transport—whatever the names are—this sort of patronage must stop.

The people in my riding pay taxes to the federal government as much as the voters in the Postmaster General's riding, and the onus does not lie upon the high officials of the Post Office Department to decide who must pull the wires in a riding, on behalf of a political party, whatever it is. We must be more respectful of the principles of democracy, if we boast of living in a democratic country, because a democratic country is ruled by a government of the people, elected by the people and for the people. We must show some respect at least to those who are elected by the people.

On September 25, 1963, Mr. R. A. Cathro writes once again to Mr. Stephen Cuddihy:

> Mr. Sylvio Pilotte, postal contractor on rural route No. 1, Val Senneville, has requested a salary increase.
> Following a complete review, it has been established that $1,750 would be a fair salary for the work involved. This would represent a yearly increase of $175.
> Consequently, the department intends to increase Mr. Pilotte's salary from $1,575 to $1,750 a year, as from October 1, 1963.
> Yours truly,
> R. A. Cathro
> Director of Transport

What does that matter to Stephen Cuddihy? What has he got to do with that?

What has notary Morin of Val d'Or got to do in the management of the postal service?

But it goes even further, and I continue. I shall not quote all the letters, but I have one dated September 23, 1963, from Mr. DeGaspe Tache to Mr. Stephen Cuddihy, another dated September 9, 1963, from Mr. Cathro to Mr. Stephen Cuddihy, the latter concerning Mr. Ulysse Charette, of Sullivan, stating that his salary will be increased by $205.64 a year.

I have another letter written by Mr. Cathro to Mr. Cuddihy, on May 31, 1963. It is strange that Mr. Cathro never wrote me to ask for information or to make suggestions to me about the riding of Villeneuve.

An hon. Member: Because he was never asked for that.

Mr. Caouette: He was never asked for that.

I have a still better one, dated September 5, 1963:

> Mr. Stephen Cuddihy
> 90 Perreault East
> Rouyn, P.Q.
> Dear Sir,
> On August 24, 1963, we had to close down sub-office No. 1 which was situated at 607 Murdoch (Blue Sundries), because Mrs. Cotnoir, the postmistress, sold her store.

That small office was well situated to accommodate patrons from the western part of town who, mostly, must travel one mile to go to the main post office.

Those far-away patrons miss their small post office and make it clear to us in no uncertain terms and in the most democratic way, by circulating a petition on which we have about 90 names.

Mr. Cuddihy, I ask you to try and do something for them. I shall be pleased to open a new post office when I have the authorization.

If you require further information, do not hesitate to contact the undersigned.

J. C. Langlois
Postmaster
Noranda, P.Q.

The very person who gave tender forms to Mr. Cuddihy last fall for the repainting of mailboxes in the limits of Noranda. You remember that he gave him three tender forms and said to him: hand these to your friends and manage so that the one who deserves a favour from the government gets the contract. Things happened that way and those tender forms were presented to a garageman in Rouyn, his manager and his first salesman, who were asked to submit a tender at the Noranda post office, to Mr. Langlois.

Mr. Chairman, such behaviour should be stigmatized and those who put such methods into practice should be held up to public scorn. That is what I am doing at the present time in this house.

I am not surprised that the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Guay) does not understand those words, as he never understands anything.

Mr. Chairman, on September 3, 1963, Mr. Cathro wrote to Mr. Theo Beaudry and to Mr. Stephen Cuddihy, two former Liberal candidates:

Service: Louvicourt and Senneterre, contractor: Narcisse Grand'Maison, price: $3,588.80 a year, expiring date: December 31, 1963.

The contract in connection with the above-mentioned service expires on the specified date.

The department is ready to renew the contract at the present rate of payment, for another period of four years.

For four years, without calling tenders, at the request of former Liberal candidates from Chapleau and from Villeneuve.

The list goes on. On August 30, 1963, Mr. Cathro writes again to Mr. Stephen Cuddihy in connection with Duparquet.

On August 15, 1963, Mr. Cathro wrote to Mr. Stephen Cuddihy:

The department accepts once more to renew the contract as of December 31, 1963.

On June 28, 1963, Mr. Cathro writes to Mr. Cuddihy:

Service: Amos and Val d'Or, contractor: Abitibi Provincial Inc., price: $1,983.63 a year, expiring date: September 30, 1963.

—The department would be willing to renew the contract at the present rate for a further period of four years—

On June 10, 1963, Mr. Cathro sent another letter to Stephen Cuddihy:

Service: Val d'Or, R.R. No. 1, contractor: G. Henri Tremblay, price: $1,550. a year.

Expiring date: September 30, 1965—

In that case, the department is again willing to renew the contract.

This is what Mr. Cathro wrote to Mr. Stephen Cuddihy on June 3, 1963:

Service: Val d'Or and parcel post delivery, contractor: Mrs. J. Rousseau-Rivard, 856 Fourth avenue, Val d'Or, Que., price: 10 cents per item—

I should like to draw the minister's attention to the price of 10 cents an item which is paid to those who handle parcel post delivery to residences and places of business. In my opinion, that is not enough. The price paid is far from being sufficient since the contractors get into debt, especially in a district like ours where the climate is fairly harsh.

Along the same lines, the department pays only $1,150 for mail transportation to settlements like Mont Brun. That is not enough; the price should be raised by $200 at least.

Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago, we were talking about two lists of consultants, that of the Conservatives and that of the Liberals. The Liberal consultant in the riding of Villeneuve is Stephen Cuddihy. There is no mistake about that since his name appears on the list which also states that the member of parliament is Real Caouette who may be addressed familiarly in all correspondence. That is the close relationship I have with the minister—

Mr. Turner: Quite an honour.

Mr. Caouette: Indeed.

Mr. Chairman, the list of consultants is obviously a patronage list. Furthermore, I would say that there is no difference in that respect between the Conservatives and the Liberals. The former did exactly the same thing as the present government. Thus, last year, the consultant in the riding of Villeneuve was Mr. Cloutier, a former Conservative candidate. The Conservatives wrote letters and acted just like the Liberals are doing now.

Mr. Chairman, we can understand members having personal friends in their constituency. However, we do not believe the Canadian people should pay the costs for political patronage. That a well-known man should be favoured instead of another one, prices being equal, there is nothing to say against that. But there are lots of small contracts, of small jobs, which are authorized without public tenders. That is where, it appears, political patronage is practised to the greatest extent.

If we make the total, we find that tremendous amounts are spent to the advantage of friends of the government. I do not say the Liberals only practise that policy, for the Conservatives did exactly the same thing. Besides, the estimates of the Post Office Department we are discussing—the Postmaster General mentioned that in his opening remarks—were not prepared by the present government, but by the former government, that is by the Conservatives. Those are the estimates we are asked to pass today.

When the Conservatives attack the Liberals, after having done exactly the same thing, I do not believe very much in their sincerity.

A while ago the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) tried to explain the difference between the list of the Liberals and that of the Conservatives. In fact, he blundered thoroughly and his explanations did not stand to reason. We had proof of political patronage during the Conservative administration, as we have, today, under the Liberal government, with letters from the Post Office Department providing for the distribution, for instance, of mail contracts and the openings of post offices through the representative of the party in office in the constituencies concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly object to such a way of doing things in our counties. We have not been elected to parliament to play politics, we have been elected to represent our respective electors, whether they voted Liberal, Conservative, Social Credit or New Democratic party.

Mr. Chairman, those people are worthy of respect and I think the fairest procedure for any department is to keep the member of parliament aware of what is going on in his constituency, of the projects which are to be carried out. Then, we could boast that we have democracy.

But if the government has the right to select his supporters and ignore the opposition parties, I wonder what difference there is between being red in Ottawa and red in Moscow—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Caouette: —where no one has the right to live, nor to give his opinion and where opposition is not tolerated.

The government has the responsibility to respect the basic principles of democracy. Those principles consist in respecting those who were duly and legally chosen by their electors.

Those are the observations I had to make and the suggestions I wanted to offer to the Postmaster General whom I have known for many years.

I know he is a Liberal through and through who flaunts the colour he represents, but he is also a gentleman and as I said at the beginning of my remarks, I never try to attack men as men, but rather to criticize systems.

I understand that we cannot reach perfection, neither with the present Postmaster General nor with those who will succeed or have preceded him, but one must try for perfection so as to reach a higher level, to come to a better understanding and a greater mutual respect.

In closing I will say that we are prepared to vote the estimates of the Post Office Department and that we are prepared to state, if other parties agree that there be no more speakers—in order to speed up the adoption of those estimates—we, in this corner of the house, will not have any other speaker this afternoon.

However, if others are to rise, then we will follow suit. On the other hand, we are ready to co-operate so as to vote those estimates as soon as possible.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, although I appreciate the offer just made by the hon. member for Villeneuve and assure him through you, sir, that I will be extremely brief, I feel it is my duty to mention a few points at this stage of the minister's presentation. I must say at once that I have a very high regard for the officials of the Post Office Department, the people who do the work of the department in all its various branches. They have been extremely courteous so far as I am concerned and I feel this cannot, at this particular time, go unnoticed or unmentioned.

In referring to the speakers who have preceded me, Mr. Chairman, I should mention this particular point. I do not think too many of us in the house doubt for one moment that degrees of patronage are probably practised in any government. It is not the existence of the minister's list, that I had the privilege of producing, that I disagree with, although I am opposed to such practices and I do not care who carries them out. What I am opposed to, and what I object to, is the way the minister misled this house. We can think of cases in other countries where ministers of the crown have resigned for this sort of thing. Recently in Great Britain, for example, for statements that I would say were of no greater consequence or significance, the minister in question was not forced to resign—although perhaps he was forced to resign—but resigned of his own choosing. If we go back to the days of Hugh Dalton we recall that that minister resigned of his own accord. There are other similar situations, of course.

The point is that it is a matter of principle. If the principle cannot be upheld by the members of this chamber, then it is high time that the people took a good look at those occupying the treasury benches. In my estimation the matter was so serious that at the time the situation arose I requested that the minister resign his seat. This did not happen, of course. The Prime Minister did not see fit to remove him either. Therefore the Prime Minister must also take responsibility for this particular incident.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Danforth. He made many points in his address which I thought were fair and well directed. I will not reiterate them, but in my opinion he made some very fair suggestions in his remarks. Along the lines of what the hon. member had to say there is the matter of consideration for people in contract post offices, not only with regard to the standard of remuneration they receive for their premises and their efforts, but also from the point of view that it is high time we gave some consideration to some method of giving them a holiday period each year, whether it be a week or two weeks. I believe this matter deserves consideration.

The hon. member for Danforth also referred to discrimination within the department. I too believe this exists. I could give examples at length but I will only mention two cases. I had more reason for criticizing the minister, on the occasion of the production of the list, than that particular incident. The case I am about to refer to caused me much greater anguish. I would ask him to note the date. On April 9 of this year in one of the areas in my constituency a lady who occupied the position of junior clerk was relieved of her position, because of a situation that existed in her family the day before, with regard to certain efforts put forth in the conduct of the election on that day. I might say that in this case political patronage more or less backfired. She was engaged by the Grits in 1955, and because her husband was out of work he was given a very minor task on April 8 which resulted in the action taken in regard to her on April 9. The fact is that when I complained about the situation she was re-engaged.

However, not too many weeks passed before the position was made vacant again, and the job was transferred for listing under the civil service commission. I have no objection at all to the job being put under the civil service commission, but with this qualification: If it is the function of the Post Office Department to practise patronage and eliminate people who have a good history of service to the people of Canada in the department, then it is high time something were done, not so much in the department, but with regard to the minister himself; because I feel that is where the direction came from.

I also have a letter dated December 15 from the city or town, whichever category it enjoys, of Oakville. It is from a Canadian citizen and in his letter he refers to the situation in that post office by saying that it is the most disdainful thing that has happened in that community in the writer's memory. He states that Miss Jean Duncan worked in the government post office for nearly 20 years, that she was fired last July, and that she is a very capable and friendly coloured girl. He states it is the unanimous opinion of everyone to whom he had spoken regarding the matter that it is racial discrimination at its very worst. Although this despicable event took place last July the writer only learned of it recently, but hopes something can be done. He says he wrote to—and here I shall say "the Liberal member" so as not to involve him directly, who replied that he could do absolutely nothing.

I suggest to the minister that this case deserves a little consideration as well. There is one other point I should like to make before I resume my seat having to do with the statement of the minister regarding new issues of stamps next year. I wonder whether the minister has considered issuing a stamp, as recommended by the Royal Canadian Legion, to commemorate Remembrance day. The minister described some of the stamps to be issued and the occasions involved, and I believe this is one that the minister should consider. I would expect that representations have probably been made to him. If not, I make this request on behalf of this organization at this time. Before I resume my seat I should like to wish the minister well in his department and say to him "bon voyage".

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, I am only going to speak for a very few minutes in order to comment on some of the remarks that have been made in the house this afternoon. In the short time I have been a member of the house, a little over a year, I cannot recall any other occasion when there has been such hypocrisy as was practised in the house this afternoon. We have heard from all the statesmen this afternoon. We have heard the hon. member for St. Mary talk about the deplorable practice of patronage. We have also heard the hon. member for Danforth and the hon. member for Villeneuve speak in similar vein, all of them members of such sterling character that they would resist the common temptations to which we all succumb now and then. We have also heard from the hon. member for Grey-Bruce—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Munro: —and I imagine we are going to hear from—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Valade: I should say a point of order. I am sure the hon. member has made a slip of the tongue when he has referred to the hypocrisy of certain members this afternoon. I do not think this is quite parliamentary. I should like him to revise that word because if he wants to talk about hypocrisy I will reply to him quickly.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, the only comment I wish to make is that I could understand such an objection coming from other members of the house, but after the personal abuse and vindictiveness this particular member heaped upon the Postmaster General not more than three quarters of an hour ago it seems very strange that he should raise a question of privilege at this time. However, to save the time of the house I am quite prepared to change "hypocrisy" to "exercise in insincerity" if that will please the hon. member any better.

Mr. Nowlan: It may not be better, but it is parliamentary.

Mr. Munro: I suppose we are going to hear the issue of patronage ragged to death for the rest of the afternoon. In my opinion this involves a greater waste of time, so far as the taxpayers are concerned, than the picayune patronage in lists like these. I will be the first to concede also that waving these lists, on which the name of practically every member of the house is to be found, outside of the minority parties, is also a complete waste of time.

Mr. Peters: Our hands are clean.

Mr. Munro: I would be the last to defend patronage. I think that the situation certainly calls for a review. It may be that so far as our own party and the official opposition are concerned the issue of patronage should be resolved by deciding to do away with it. But until it is resolved it certainly seems strange that it should be laid at the doorstep of one particular cabinet minister and that he should be pilloried when all of us, except those in the minority parties, have participated in this practice in years gone by.

Therefore I hope that for the rest of the afternoon we can be spared hearing the saints talk about the terrible evils of patronage as it has been practised in the Post Office Department. Some of my friends in the official opposition have been here longer than I have and they will know how many letters one gets in a year, from the Postmaster General. As far as I am concerned, I do not believe we get very many, and they usually have to do with a postal station in one's area that probably pays so little you cannot find anybody to take the job anyway. Therefore I do not see why such an issue should be made of this matter. In many cases it is probably an assumption by a particular member of a duty which removes a headache from the department itself. But I do think the sooner we remove this practice the better. But when week after week members of the house, many of whom have been involved in this process and whose names appear on the list, get up and talk about patronage and its evils, and suggest it is confined to one party,

An hon. Member: Sit down then.

Mr. Munro: The hon. member for Villeneuve is one of the members of a minority party which I cannot be convinced would be so superior that any administration he headed would be absolutely pure.

I should like to comment also on what I consider a rather unfair criticism, although the hon. member for Danforth had many constructive remarks to make. He was one of the few hon. members who did have constructive remarks to make. He referred to the question of collective bargaining rights and binding arbitration for postal employees. I stand to be corrected, but as far as I am aware this is a civil service matter. Certainly it is not an issue which can be laid at the doorstep of one cabinet minister rather than at the doorstep of the government as a whole. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the Prime Minister a short time ago about the plank in our party's platform for the 1962 and 1963 elections with regard to collective bargaining rights and binding arbitration for civil servants. The Prime Minister indicated then that we were committed to the proposal and would bring it down in due course. We have been in office about eight or nine months, so I think it is reasonable to allow the Prime Minister and the Liberal party to bring down this legislation sooner or later, instead of criticizing the minister of one particular department. This whole exercise about post office patronage reminds me of some of our more insincere members of the house. One hon. member receives quite a bit of publicity in connection with post office patronage and starts a bandwagon rolling. Then all of a sudden we find many in the house want to get on the bandwagon, too. The bandwagon is getting a little overcrowded and I think we are all beginning to look a little ridiculous. I hope the rest of the remarks which are to follow deal with some of the more pertinent aspects of the administration of the Post Office Department, rather than being continually surfeited with sanctimonious speeches about patronage.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief. I do not agree with the hon. member who spoke last, because I feel that if we take up the time of the committee discussing patronage in the post office, or in any other department, and if as a result of that discussion that practice is eliminated, then I think we have accomplished a great deal.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Why did you not abolish it when you were in power, then?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not care when the practice grew up. If it grew up in 1867 I think it is still a bad practice, and that has always been my position. If the Postmaster General looks at his department's files he will discover that I expressed the view on previous occasions that where public goods and services are involved every Canadian should be given the opportunity to tender for a contract. That was the practice followed in my constituency, and it has been followed since 1957. Not a contract went out without a bid being called for publicly, giving everyone the opportunity to bid regardless of what his politics were; and the lowest bidder got the contract. I did not speak on the estimates of the Minister of Public Works last night, but if he looks at his files I am sure he will find representations made by me to the same effect. If the Postmaster General would follow that practice we would not find instances, which I will describe briefly this evening, which are again arising in my constituency. As they arise in my constituency I am sure they also arise elsewhere. I am referring to instances where there has been a departure from the fair procedure of calling for these contracts by public tender.

I mentioned to the minister the other day the opening of the new post office at Ross River. I suggested to him that there was an instance where, instead of advertising for bids for the performance of this service, a selective procedure was adopted whereby only a certain carrier or carriers were asked to bid. The Postmaster General said at that time that he would look into it, and I hope that if he caught the matter before the contract was actually awarded he will have been able to revise the procedure and call for public tenders on that particular contract.

There have been other instances. In his opening remarks the Postmaster General said there was not one single breach of the Post Office Act in the administration of his department since he took over as Postmaster General. The Post Office Act, if it authorizes the procedures which I have described and will be describing in a moment or two, is nothing more or less than legalized patronage, which I think is wrong. If the Post Office Act is to blame, then it should be changed.

I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the sessional papers which were tabled in reply to a motion which I had put on the order paper, I believe No. 1,170, for all copies of correspondence between the post office department and the officials thereof, and Mr. Wylie and others in Whitehorse. In the correspondence tabled was a letter from the director of transportation dated October 24, 1963. This letter concerns a contract for the carrying of mail from Dawson Creek and Whitehorse. The total cost of the contract is not a trifling sum, as indicated by the hon. member who has just taken his seat; the total amount involved is $76,630 per year. I know that the Post Office Act authorizes the minister to renew a contract which expires after three or four years, but I want to make it clear that the procedure adopted in the Yukon, which I think should be adopted nationally, is that when those contracts expire new tenders should be called. Because in every case during the six years when the Conservative party were on the government side, when these contracts were called the government got the services for a cheaper price than the going rate at the time. With one single exception every one of these contracts was put out to public tender on expiration of the contract. The exception was a case in which I made representation on behalf of a Mr. George Simmons, because he happened to be the brother of the Liberal candidate who ran against me in 1957, and I did not want him to think that I had exercised a prerogative as a member of parliament to do him out of a contract just because he happened to be on the other side of the fence. If the minister examines the records he will find that when that contract did go out to public tender at the next expiration date the savings to the government were almost $4,000 per annum, and the incumbent, Mr. George Simmons, was the twelfth highest bidder. In other words, he was the highest bidder of the 12 who submitted bids, and the contract was let for something over $9,000 compared with well over $12,000 previously.

This $76,630 contract expires on March 31, 1964. The letter reads as follows:

> The contract for this service expires on the date indicated.

That is, in March, 1964, so there is still time to do something about it.

> The department proposes to issue instructions authorizing the renewal of the contract at the existing rate for a further period of four years.

That, I say, is wrong. Tenders should be called. There are other trucking companies on the highway which can compete with the existing holder of this contract and the minister will probably find that a saving to the taxpayer would result. The letter of the director of transportation goes on to say:

> As this service operates in the electoral districts of Cariboo and Yukon, a copy of this letter is being sent to persons consulted for these constituencies.

I hope that these consultants, if they have any sense of fair play at all, will advise the minister that the fairest thing to do would be to call for public tenders so that all interested Canadians having transportation facilities on the Alaska highway may have an opportunity to bid on this contract.

There is another contract which expired on September 30, 1963. This contract, says the director of transportation in a letter of May 15, 1963, to Mr. Wylie in Whitehorse, expires on the day indicated, that is, on September 30, 1963. The amount of the contract is $8,954 per annum. Here is the rest of the letter:

> The department proposes to issue instructions authorizing the renewal of the contract at the existing rate for a further period of four years.

Again, let me say the minister would probably save the Canadian taxpayer money if he were to send the contract out for public tender. Even more important is the question of principle. The guiding principle, surely, should be that all Canadians have a right to bid on contracts for the supply of goods and services to the public.

The hon. member who spoke last referred to hypocrisy in amended terms. Since the minister has failed to agree with me that he has found the information which I suggested to him would be found on his files, I want to read a letter I wrote on January 29, 1959. I do not know Mr. Pageau personally, but he is one of the officials of the department with whom I had a good deal of correspondence during the six years before the government changed. Mr. Pageau will tell the minister of the true circumstances which have existed in the Yukon since I have been representing that region. When I have been advised by Mr. Pageau that a certain contract was expiring, and asking for my recommendations, I have in every instance, with the one exception I mentioned, written to him and asked him to send the contract out for public tender call. I said in writing to one of my local executives on January 29, 1959—and it was on or about that date that I wrote to Mr. Pageau to the same effect—

> The Yukon Progressive Conservative association supports the proposition that when these mail contracts come up for renewal, they should go out to public tender so that all who are interested may have an equal opportunity to bid on them. As you know, this was not always so in the past and there are still some mail contracts in Yukon which have been automatically renewed, thus precluding the opportunity which all citizens in the Yukon have a right to expect, viz., the opportunity to bid on all public works on an equal basis. We have always stood for this principle which, I think you will agree, is a fair one.

This is the stand which I took and which I have taken since I was elected to represent the Yukon, and I think the minister would be well advised to revert to that practice. If he does not care to do so nationally, or if he has trouble with his own backbenchers over this aspect of patronage, then at least let him do me the courtesy of treating the people of the Yukon in an equal and fair fashion.

In addition, I should like to ask the minister a further question. I learned from this correspondence which has been tabled that the postmistress in Carmacks has been dismissed. I should like to know why. In the letter advising Mr. Wylie of the dismissal, the acting director of personnel states:

> This is to inform you that instructions are being issued for a transfer of the Carmacks, Yukon, post office to Mrs. B. McKay as postmaster provided she possesses the necessary qualifications and can meet the requirements of the department.

I want to know if one of those qualifications is that she must be a Liberal.

An hon. Member: Political fitness.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps that is one of the qualifications. Most likely it is; I do not know. The people of Carmacks were getting good service. I dare say that if a petition were circulated, like the one which the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac had sent to him, it would be found that the people of Carmacks were satisfied with the service they were getting. I should like to know why this lady was dismissed, and I should like to know whether one of the qualifications of Mrs. McKay is that she is politically acceptable to the Postmaster General.

I have a further point to bring to the minister's attention. The wages that are paid to seasonal post office workers in the southern parts of Canada amount to 85 cents an hour. The wages paid to permanent personnel in the north are, of course, subject to supplementation by isolated post allowances; but these allowances do not apply to the seasonal staff earning 85 cents an hour. The same rate applies in the north. It was the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, who is also concerned about this, who drew the matter to my attention. If he speaks he may have something to say about it as well.

So I should like the minister to look into the question of those contracts. First, the Ross River contract. Why was that not put out to public tender, thus giving all Canadians an equal chance to bid in connection with this public service. The second was the contract for the carriage of mail between Dawson Creek and Whitehorse. The third was the contract for the carriage of mail between Whitehorse and Alaska Highway. That one, I assume, has already been awarded because it was on September 30, 1963, that it expired. I think I should also like to ask the minister to agree with my statement that in every case where contracts were called for public tender in the Yukon in the last six years there has been an actual saving in the taxpayers money by so doing.

I want to say a word or two about a matter referred to by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce. Patronage is a wrong principle on which to operate. I do not care whether it originated in 1867 or whether it was carried on throughout the whole of the years since that date. It should be dispensed with and disposed of by every government department, and there should be equal opportunity for all Canadians. I can remember a phrase which sticks in my mind, one of those phrases responsible for my getting into politics six or seven years ago. It was: "Fairness to all and favours to none". That is a sound principle and one which should be followed in all government activities. The minister's biggest single shortcoming in connection with this whole business of the production of lists and the question of patronage was the fact that he told the house when the matter was first referred to that there were no such lists. Then, on subsequent occasions, he admitted the existence of the list. Finally, belatedly, he produced the list. I feel that the minister has misled the members of the house, as the hon. member for Grey-Bruce put it. I think he should have resigned when it was suggested to him.

Certainly, not only the Prime Minister but all the occupants of the treasury benches are implicated. Surely it is not proper conduct for any member occupying the treasury benches to say that something does not exist which actually does exist. Not only did he deny the existence of the list, but when he finally admitted its existence he actually tabled it. This sort of conduct falls a good deal short of what I feel Canadians expect of a minister. Certainly, the tenure of the Postmaster General must be short indeed. I think his days are numbered. I feel the Prime Minister should have taken some action at the time when it became apparent the minister had misled the house. I certainly do not expect to see the Postmaster General after Christmas. I do say that, brief as the minister's stay in the department might have been, he cannot in all conscience expect to remain there after Christmas. I should like, therefore, to wish the minister bon voyage and Merry Christmas.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, it is with the utmost sincerity that, first, I wish to congratulate the minister for having been appointed to the high post he now occupies.

I have many personal reasons to offer him my congratulations. To begin with, he was born in my constituency, where the Denis family is highly thought of, in addition to being held in great respect by your humble servant.

I have no intention of delaying the adoption of the Post Office estimates, but, very briefly, I should like to bring up three points about which I would appreciate his opinion or that of the officials of his department. Here, incidentally, I want to congratulate those people for the excellent job they are doing and the efforts they are making to continually improve the postal service throughout the country.

First of all, I would like to tell the Postmaster General about the numerous protests we received, in particular from citizens in the province of Quebec, against the possible removal of the words "postes" and "postage" from the stamps. I believe that many members received such protests from all corners of the province.

In my opinion, there is an advantage to keeping this visible proof of bilingualism in Canada. I wonder if the hon. minister could review that decision, whether it was taken by him or by officials in his department. I am sure also that his colleagues in the Liberal party made representations to him in that respect. It is to be hoped that no change will be made in the printing of the stamps and that those inscriptions will remain as they are now.

I should also like to ask the minister whether it would not be possible to suggest to the officials of his department to take into consideration, when assessing the value of mail contracts, not only the route but also the volume of mail to be delivered.

For a few years now, the Postmaster General has always considered distance as a primary factor in the case of a letter carrier but I think that today, in view of the ever-increasing volume of circulars and printed matter of all sorts which has to be delivered by the carrier, the officials of the department should also take into consideration the time it takes him to deliver his mail.

The Post Office Department should also consider a reclassification of post offices, especially semi-staff offices, where revenue is less than $3,000. I submit that the department should take into consideration the continuous increase in the cost of living, municipal taxes, rents, heating and electricity, so that in estimating the salary to be paid a postmaster whose revenue is less than $3,000, allowance be made also of the cost of living and of the various items I have just mentioned. Moreover, allowance should be made of the work that the postmaster is required to do in order to give satisfaction to the people he must serve as a postmaster.

Those are, Mr. Chairman, the few remarks I intended to address to the minister. And since there are reports that this house might be deprived of the presence of the minister in the relatively near future, I hope that if he is going to leave us, he will at least go to a more quiet place than this house. If that should happen, one cannot but bid him goodbye and wish him every success.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few moments to discuss a problem which, I think, is of interest to the house.

There are reports—and some people told me that it was a fact—that it was decided in the Social Credit party that every member of the house should give to the party coffers an amount of $3,000 taken out of their salaries. We have no objection to that at all. But I have heard that among them some had objected. I wonder if it is not the reason why some members of that party take liberties which, I think, are disgraceful, as far as the postal service is concerned.

I wish to refer more precisely to the fact that certain members take the liberty of using their franking privileges to distribute to Canadian taxpayers in certain constituencies their political propaganda. In this particular instance, it is about a publication of 50 pages or so, like this one, entitled "Proposition de reformes monetaires, Credit social", which has been mailed by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger).

I do not see any objection to the Social Credit trying to save its sinking boat. However, Mr. Chairman, I should not like the Canadian taxpayer to pay for that propaganda.

May I quote the note which Mr. Antoine Belanger, member of parliament for Charlevoix, has forwarded to hundreds of residents of the constituency of Charlevoix-Saguenay together with a copy of a publication like this one.

After receiving one of those booklets a voter in the riding of Charlevoix asked me to protest in the house, if you please, and to tell the member for Charlevoix that if he insisted on annoying people with such propaganda, the least he could do would be to stop making them pay for this mail service.

Mr. Chairman, this session is already well advanced, otherwise, I feel that the hon. member should be called before the committee on privileges and elections of this house. However, since it is getting late, I hope he will note these protests and immediately stop using public funds and the postage-free mailing service for such doubtful political progaganda as that of the Social Credit party.

I see that my hon. friends opposite seem to have fun because I accuse the members of the Social Credit party. Well, hon. members opposite should indeed feel that the hat fits them also, because they have also been guilty of this unfairness to the taxpayers.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I should ask the hon. member for Three Rivers to alter part of his last statement, and that is to replace the name "Social Credit" by the expression "Ralliement Creditistes."

Mr. Balcer: It is with great pleasure that I accept that suggestion.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I also rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Three Rivers just quoted a Social Credit pamphlet distributed by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger).

Mr. Pigeon: At the expense of the state.

Mr. Caouette: I bring to the attention of the house the fact there is a difference between doctrine publicity mailed by the hon. member for Charlevoix and the purely political propaganda distributed at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers by the Conservatives when they were in power.

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. members will agree that there is no question of privilege here and I ask the hon. member for Three Rivers to continue.

Mr. Balcer: If it was done in the past, that is no excuse to do it now.

The hon. member for Villeneuve proved nothing and only made a wild charge. I have here a letter from the hon. member for Charlevoix. I think it is scandalous to use Canadian public funds for such propaganda.

As for our hon. friends opposite, I should simply like to call their attention to those intriguing letters sent all over the province. It is an insult for the Canadian people when the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Cadieux) speaks about a great member of parliament, the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau), chairman of the caucus, and reports on all his activities. Reference is also made to the Prime Minister and the newspapers of this country are asked to use that propaganda paper to heave this country out of the mess it is in.

Indeed, the time has come to put a stop to such practices. Let us think of the taxpayer and do away with such practices.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, through you I would like to say to the minister that a few years ago I enjoyed very much participating with him in another activity when he was the captain of a bowling team of which I was a member. He is a good bowler; in fact he is a better bowler than he is a Postmaster General, if his first few months in office are any indication.

Mr. Denis: I am improving every day.

Mr. Howard: The minister says he is improving every day. If he improves every day as a bowler that is not possible, because in the first place he is a prime bowler; but if he says he is improving every day as a Postmaster General, all I say is that he cannot do anything else but go up, when he is at the bottom. However, I do hope that the remarks about his departure are not well founded and that he stays with the government, with his present post, so that in time to come we can see whether or not he and his government do improve.

Unfortunately, the hon. member for Hamilton East does not appear to be in the chamber, but I would like to make a few comments about his remarks. Initially let me say I agree with them, in so far as conduct of this kind is concerned. It makes me wonder, though, whether the hon. member for Hamilton East, and others of his party, would have the same views if the Conservatives had not had the discretion to disclose the patronage or consultant list in the first place. But once it has been disclosed, I think he tried to make the best of an awkward situation.

I do not want to deal with that list in any way at all, except to attempt to be helpful to the Postmaster General. I would say to him that if he is going to maintain such a list of consultants, and if he wants to use that list for greater efficiency in the operation of his department, I would be very happy if he would consult with me about the person on that list from Skeena, because I can name many more competent people than the one he has presently listed.

The person on the list is neither able, competent nor interested in assisting any of the activities of the office of the Postmaster General and, apart from that, he does not live in the riding, but rather in Duncan on Vancouver island, and has relatively little contact with the constituency. Now, he might make a good consultant for my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, if he so desires, but I would be happy to talk privately with the minister, or express publicly now, alternate consultants for Skeena if the minister wishes me to help him.

I should like to confine the remainder of my remarks to one phase of the activities of the department which was very disturbing to many members of parliament when it was first instituted. I am referring to the so-called spy system in some of the post offices throughout the country, the system whereby closed circuit television cameras are used—if that is the mechanism that is used—and one-way mirrors or peepholes to permit officials of the department to spy upon the activities of other employees in the department in the functions that they carry out during their work day.

This of course is automatically an invasion of the right of an individual to privacy. It casts serious reflection and doubts upon the honesty of employees in the minister's department, and it is even more nefarious than that when these mechanisms for spying are installed in the washrooms in some post offices.

An hon. Member: Male or female?

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend will have to ask the Postmaster General about that point.

An hon. Member: How do you know they exist?

Mr. Howard: I know they exist because I take the word of members of the cabinet who have proclaimed in this house that they do exist, and the word of people in the Post Office Department to whom I have spoken and who say they exist. But the interjection by the hon. member opposite about whether these are placed in male or female washrooms, or both, does raise the question of what sort of people are employed to use these spying mechanisms, and what is the classification given by the civil service commission to individuals within the post office structure who actually do the spying into washrooms in the department, spying on the activities of the individuals who use the washroom facilities. There are some who have particular aptitudes which one might class as voyeuristic, and who might fit well into this category. But whether or not people with perverted ideas about what should take place in washrooms are employed in using these spying mechanisms, it should be disclosed. I understand from the communications that have been sent to me, and from discussions I have had with employees, that they are concerned about two things. They are concerned (1), about the system of spying upon them, because it is an invasion of their privacy, especially when it takes place in washrooms; and (2), they are concerned about the type of individual or just who it is who is watching them, as Big Brother is supposed to watch people, through peepholes or one-way mirrors to see what is taking place there. I think it is a regrettable situation that the Post Office Department has to engage in this sort of activity, which casts doubt upon the honesty of all the employees concerned and places them under a continual, daily cloud of suspicion even in so far as their most private moments are concerned.

I now wish to turn to another matter, Mr. Chairman. I have had a number of exchanges of correspondence with the minister about individual, local problems that exist in Skeena. I do not want to relate them all now to the minister or the committee, or place them on Hansard, so far as the pertinent details are concerned; but I do wish to make general reference to the fact that we have in the riding of Skeena communities which have a once a month postal service; once every month, in some of the communities, mail is delivered and once a month it is taken out again. This means that people often have to wait a month or a month and a half before they can deal adequately with any piece of correspondence. I am sure that people who are used to getting mail delivered on a daily basis would, if they just reflected on this and thought how it would be if their mail were delivered on a monthly basis, realize the inconvenience that exists for these people. In this enlightened day I think that to continue a system which has been in existence for many years now, namely mail delivery on a once a month basis to communities in this nation, is an unconscionable thing.

We have other communities in which the regularity of mail, as the minister knows, is twice a month, or on a two weeks basis. That is only half as bad as it is on the basis of once a month. We have situations in which mail cannot be delivered directly from one point to another, but you can look across the water and see the community to which you want a letter delivered. In spite of the proximity, you find it is impossible to put a letter in the mail and have it carried across perhaps two or three miles of water, even though a boat goes every day. You find it cannot be delivered to the other point directly, but instead it has to go 500 miles by air to Vancouver, wait in Vancouver overnight, be put on exactly the same plane that took it there the day before, and be brought the 500 miles back again to be delivered to a place that, as I say, you can look across two or three miles of water and see.

I think this is an unfair imposition upon people who happen to live in communities which are relatively more isolated than, say, large urban cities such as Montreal, Ottawa, or any of the other many, many communities and municipalities in Canada. I do not want to put all these things on the public record item by item or relate them orally to the minister now. We have had correspondence about them. The answer I received from the minister, though beautifully phrased and encompassing an entire page, winds up really saying that no change is going to be made to correct this situation. While I have communicated with the minister about this and intend to do so again, at this stage I wish only to ask him orally to please do something to correct this situation. If in this day and age people have to wait a month at a time to deal with their correspondence, it is a sad situation. They would like to see this matter straightened out, and I am sure the minister would also. If he would apply himself as assiduously to this question of providing adequate mail services to these relatively isolated and small communities as he applied himself to the job when he was captain of the bowling team of which I was a member, this problem would be solved before the end of the year.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I was happy to hear the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) state a while ago that the names of members from third parties do not appear on the patronage lists. In fact, I noticed that we are not on the list of the chairman of committees nor on that of the deputy chairman of committees either because we had to wait until a number of members had concluded their remarks before we could have the floor ourselves. Anyhow, we do not complain about that because our conscience is clear since we are not included in any list.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Postmaster General's (Mr. Denis) ordeal is practically over. I shall be brief since, unlike the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), we did not have the privilege of securing official correspondence. We believe there has been a leak somewhere, but we do not know where.

Mr. Belanger: It was simply given by the government.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I am told that it was simply given by the government. I am well pleased—

Mr. Belanger: All you had to do was to ask for it, by putting a notice of motion on the order paper.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, when I phoned my wife last night, I learned that someone who had asked for a letter of introduction during the weekend wished to have another letter. I must say that this letter was not to be sent to the Post Office Department, but rather to the Department of Transport—at least, I believe that it was to be sent to the Department of Transport; any way, it was not for the Post Office Department.

Finally, it appears that when the individual in question came to apply for a job, another letter was asked of him because the one he had was not good. They suggested he obtain a letter from the Liberal member in the constituency. Then, for the first time, I learned it was possible to have two kinds of members in my constituency: the member who was elected under the Social Credit tag, and another one who was supposed to have been elected under the Liberal tag.

And they even insisted to give his name. When it was mentioned it was lawyer Ovide Laflamme, my wife understood immediately it was not the Liberal member for the constituency, but the defeated Liberal candidate. I hope this elector was lucky enough to obtain a letter from the defeated candidate, since he was really in need. As far as I am concerned, I thought I could have helped in recommending him. I hope my hon. opponent agreed to give him a letter, so that he could obtain the job in question, since the recommendation from the member does not seem sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to insist too much on the question of patronage, since it is currently discussed, and is a state of affairs of which everybody is aware. We are still in the era of the "believe or die", when qualifications are more often based on political allegiance or existing lists than ability to fill the job.

I think it is time to put a stop to such a procedure, especially as members on both sides of the house spoke against that state of affairs, and I see no reason why the government should not decide, once and for all, to do away with those lists, or at least place them in secure places, so that the matter is not constantly heard of in the House of Commons.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal briefly with a problem concerning the Postmaster General.

A while ago, mention was made of new control or spying devices being used in the Post Office Department. I realize that such devices make it possible to spy, so to speak, into the private lives of many workers. However this does not necessarily mean that everybody is suspected. It simply means that all civil servants know there is a threat, a kind of sword of Damocles hanging over their heads, and that is for the purpose of preventing certain practices in use in the past. Maybe, it is a good thing, for fear is the beginning of wisdom. However, I hope that the department officials will never have to use those devices, since the employees know that they exist.

Mr. Chairman, I wish also to comment about the employees' efficiency rating. Naturally, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) did not talk about that since it is the policy of a socialist government to have efficiency and efficiency rating. But I would say that efficiency rating is more often contrary to personal freedom than the means of protection which we now have, just as our buildings are equipped with protection devices against fire or against theft.

It is a question of protecting the employees who, being human, are liable to make mistakes or be guilty of some indiscretion.

In any event, the use of some efficiency norms interfere with personal freedom because the employees concerned are labelled beforehand by the officials in the department.

In fact, certain civil servants think that such part of the work must be done in so many minutes, that the employee should classify so many letters in a minute, in a quarter of an hour, or in an hour, and, in order to know whether that employee does his job well, inspectors are placed not behind spying machines, but in galleries next to the employee's place of work. I say this is really a derogation to human freedom, and I believe people who work efficiently should be trusted, especially when they work in an atmosphere where they have the feeling they are useful to the government and the public. I believe those people are able to do their work without always having inspectors watching them for efficiency.

I also wish to quote the case of certain extra workers hired for the Christmas season, for instance, sometimes through their member and sometimes through the defeated candidate, sometimes directly through the postmaster, which evidently may give rise to criticism. However, I wish to point out that some voters in my constituency, who applied to their member were refused employment, while others were accepted because their letters of recommendation came from somewhere else.

There are also additional employees. In my constituency, I have heard of people having worked on a part time basis and rendered great services and then being told, after a year, that they had to be replaced since their job was only temporary. And they were replaced by other workers at a lower salary, as the latter had no claim to the increase which had been granted to their predecessors. As I said, I do not think it is a matter of a man's efficiency but rather a matter of discrimination for various reasons unknown to me.

Before closing, I should like to remind the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—whom as I have learned recently has been nicknamed Yukon Eric—that the whole Post Office Act should be completely amended and not the minister's attitude, because the act authorizes the minister to renew contracts without calling tenders, provided he is satisfied with the performance under existing contracts. That, of course, is left to his discretion. If he does not want to renew a contract, he can call tenders.

I made a thorough study of the Post Office Act last year because several cases were referred to me where people had lost their contract following a call for tenders while others could not get a contract even when they made a bid because the previous contract had been automatically renewed. I think it would be appropriate for parliament to take a look at the Post Office Act in order to put an end to that situation.

Before I resume my seat, I should like to wish good luck to the minister. No matter where he goes in the next few years, I am positive everybody would want to wish him well.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, I also would have been very pleased to congratulate the Postmaster General. However, the few comments I intend to make would not justify such congratulations, and that is why I shall refrain from offering any.

I have no intention either of speaking about patronage—the word patronage seems to grate on the ear of the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro). I feel I have to speak of arrogance. One may be taxed with arrogance if, when duty-bound to inform somebody, he refrains from doing so by dodging the issue or hiding behind the rules.

At the beginning of October, in a speech I had described the Postmaster General as a real champion of patronage within the Liberal party, and I think that title fits him like a glove.

Earlier, the hon. member for the Yukon indicated that when the matter of a list of consultants in the Post Office Department came up in the house, the minister answered that there was no patronage list but he admitted a week later that there was such a list of consultants. It was even suggested, in some quarters, following that change of mind, that this would almost call for a resignation and that, in all fairness, the Postmaster General should resign. Some newspapers even dared to ask for such a resignation.

I should like to tell the house that that was not the only time the Postmaster General was not accurate in his answers.

As reported on page 676 of Hansard I asked the Postmaster General the following question:

Question No. 115—

Has a contract been awarded for the construction of a post office in Beauceville and, if so, who was awarded the contract and what was the amount of the tender?

The answer was as follows:

Mr. Badanai: Not as yet although tenders have been received and a recommendation made to the treasury board.

On page 3620 of Hansard for October 16, 1963, I asked question No. 1,220:

1. Why was it necessary to start building the Beauceville post office again?
2. Were the changes that have been carried out provided for in the plan originally accepted?
3. Are the changes to the initial project expected to increase the cost?
4. What is the estimated cost of the increased expenditures brought about by these changes?
5. Why was the original project changed after it had been accepted?

Here is the answer given by the deputy postmaster general:

1. Part of the structure had to be rebuilt due to an error in the plans.
2. No.
3. Yes.
4. $2,450.
5. Because, in the original plans, the floor level was too low as compared with the sidewalk level.

As reported on page 3743 of Hansard for October 18, 1963, I asked an oral question, following those answers. Here it is:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Postmaster General, to whom I have given notice.

My question relates to the one bearing number 620, which appeared on the order paper and which has been answered.

What person or persons have been consulted for the choice of the architect responsible for the building of the Beauceville post office in the county of Beauce?

And here is the answer:

That is a question for the order paper—

Again I put on the order paper a series of questions which can be found at page 4669 of Hansard for November 13, 1963. Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out here that those questions were identical, in form as well as contents, to those asked by all the other members of the Ralliement Creditistes. All other members who had put similar questions got the appropriate answers with figures.

Here is question No. 1,428:

1. How many contracts have been let, or for how many contracts have bids been called by the Post Office Department since April 8, 1963, for the constituency of Beauce?
2. Who were the bidders on these contracts?
3. What were the bids of each of them?
4. To whom were the contracts let?
5. Who was responsible for distribution of tender forms?

The answers were as follows:

1. None. 2. Not applicable. 3. Not applicable. 4. Not applicable. 5. Not applicable.

I am the only one to have obtained such an answer. However, following the production of the list of consultants, I put another question asking for the tabling of documents. I have here the whole list of correspondence, as well as contracts reviewed from April 30, 1963 until November 1963.

I have here a written contract dated September 18, 1963, and sent to Mr. Jean-Paul Racine, in St. Honore de Shenley. I quote:

Dear Mr. Racine,

A request for an increase in salary has been submitted by Mr. Joseph Gagnon, mail transportation contractor operating between St. Georges West and Vallee Junction.

The case having been carefully reviewed, it is felt that $1,800 would be a just retribution for the work done. That would represent an annual increase of $251.

Consequently, the department intends to bring up Mr. Gagnon's salary from $1,549 to $1,800 a year, as from September 1, 1963.

The list continues, and it is rather a long one. It is addressed to the former Liberal candidate in Beauce county, who gives us an official answer. Now, as recorded in Hansard of November 13, 1962, the minister says exactly the opposite, that is that there was no exchange of letters, no contracts let.

That is why I say that that he is hiding behind standing orders to avoid answering questions which are entitled to a clear, precise and exact answer; I feel that in the present instance, the minister does not deserve from me any of the congratulations which other hon. members have lavished upon him.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make, and I was anxious to make them because I am the only one to have received such an answer to questions similar to those asked by other hon. members.

If this is not a sort of patronage, then I think the word "arrogance" would be the most appropriate word for such a way of doing things on the part of the Postmaster General.

I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve say that the minister was, in the good old days, in 1946, a member of the Little Chicago in the house.

Well, in my opinion, the title I gave him in a speech I made in the house, in October, suited him perfectly.

I do not want to speak of patronage, but I can say that it is after many such arrogant actions that we, Social Crediters, have the right to say that if the people were aware of everything that goes on in the lobbies, they would not put up any longer with the old line parties in the house.

I was listening a while ago to the remarks of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) who said that, in a newspaper report, mention was made of $3,000 for our election coffers. In reply to this assertion, I can say that the old line parties also have coffers supplied from sources whose origin we sometimes know. That is why I do not hesitate to answer back that even though it were true that some members of the Ralliement Creditistes contribute to the activities of their movement in the province of Quebec, this is no reason to make charges; far from it, this is all to their credit.

Besides, certain political parties get their funds in Canada and even, sometimes, out of the country.

However, if these gentlemen think that it is in order to heave off our boat, I hope that it will not be the Three Rivers ferry that will change the situation, but the bridge that will be built with the shortest possible delay.

You will appreciate that with such arrogance, it is impossible for me to congratulate him about the way the officials responsible for the lists of consultants act. Here, I agree with the hon. member for Villeneuve when he says that it would be normal, when letters are exchanged in a riding which have to do with the spending of public funds, that the member for the riding be at least informed through a copy of the letter, even if they want to send one to the consultant, in order that he may know what goes on.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make. Whatever the result of the approval of the Postmaster General's estimates, I nevertheless wish him the greatest possible success should he be called to take on other duties, which would be a normal reward after some 30 years in politics. He deserves our whole sympathy, even if sometimes he does not get our congratulations for a certain kind of work. I wish him, as did others, to enjoy at last the quietness he deserves.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, it is always interesting to speak on any departmental estimates, especially the estimates of the Post Office Department, for the simple reason that before being elected to the House of Commons as representative of Waterloo North I was postmaster and supervisor at Elmira for nearly 36 years. During that time I saw a great many changes. I understand that there are over 50,000 people employed in 12,000 post offices, and the postage required to handle the mail brings in revenues of more than half a million dollars each day. The greatest asset of the department is its nation-wide family of postal workers, and the principal reason for the respect with which the department is regarded by the people of Canada is the devoted service which this great body of men and women has given. Such service has played an important part in the nation's development. It has provided the all-important communications system without which our country could not have achieved its present growth and prosperity. We know that the Post Office Department can never be static, but I am sure that the future will see many more changes, and constructive changes at that. These changes rest not only upon new machinery and equipment but upon the traditional spirit of devotion to duty which has always characterized our postal employees, and the personal sense of responsibility on the part of each member of the service.

I was very much disturbed by the report that patronage is creeping into the service more than ever. I might say that if this is the case it could be the most damnable disaster which could ever happen to the Post Office Department. It has been brought to my attention that the federal association of letter carriers is protesting the disciplinary policy of the Post Office Department and, in particular, the sentencing of employees to salary reductions for petty or unintentional discrepancies. I understand that "unknown checks" are to be carried out on letter carriers—in other words, spying—and that salary reductions will be recommended for the least error. Surely such tactics are altogether unwarranted and I hope the department will abolish this type of punishment.

I am sure we all agree that people making applications for positions should have all the qualifications necessary for the work required and that these appointments should be approved by the civil service commission without interference from anyone. This is the only way in which this great service will be able to continue for the benefit of all people in Canada.

Most of us think of our postal service merely as an organization for transmitting mail, and though we may have daily contact with postal employees very few of us realize how extensive are its services and how diversified are its functions.

The size and scope of Canada's post office can be indicated by the following example. Let hon. members imagine, if they can, the combined weight of a thousand diesel locomotives. This would amount to slightly less than the weight of mail handled daily. As I have previously mentioned, there are over 12,000 post offices across the country. In some of our major cities these offices employ upwards of 4,500 people. In many other centres they are located in a general store or other central place where the only postal employee is a part-time postmaster.

More than any other government department or agency the Post Office Department is in direct daily contact with almost every Canadian, delivering each year an average of 225 letters for almost every Canadian man, woman and child in this country.

The previous government saw the need of improvements to the postal service in my constituency of Waterloo North, as well as in other places. We have a new post office in Kitchener, now nearing completion. We have one in Waterloo and, I understand, plans are being made for one in Elmira.

Perhaps one of the most important changes in postal rates was the four-cent local or drop letter rate of postage between Kitchener and Waterloo which was approved by the former postmaster general. In my remarks of April 13, 1961, which will be found in Hansard on page 3653, I referred to the possible application of the minimum four-cent local or drop letter postage between these twin cities. As members can understand, Kitchener and Waterloo at that time were classed as two separate and distinct postal areas. This has been of great importance to these twin cities, as well as others across Canada, and also has meant a great deal to the larger firms. Sub-offices are a great asset to any city, and Kitchener has had some new ones which have provided excellent service to people in such localities. Waterloo had its first such office installed under the previous government, and another one added some time later. I feel that Waterloo with its 22,000 people should have more than two such offices.

I would like to congratulate the Postmaster General on his appointment and, as a former employee, let me say I well understand that his position could become the most important in the government. Over the past five years, while sitting in opposition, he asked the former postmaster general many questions during orders of the day. Yes, and some of them were of very little interest or value. I trust, now, that he will be ready, and indeed anxious, to answer any questions which may be put to him in his turn. I understand that the degree of activity since April 8 within this department has been, generally, nominal. In fact, a list of the activities which have been undertaken would include only a couple of new stamp issues, an extension of the stamp issue program and an increase in the postal rates governing a variety of items. The increase in registration fees is, no doubt, in keeping with the times, as is the increase in special delivery fees. However, I feel the increase is too severe. It could cost some of the larger firms thousands of dollars. The working man, with his small income, could also object to such a jump, as could the small businessman.

The rates of postage on third class mail and the fees on C.O.D. are to be increased as of April 1, 1964. I believe these changes should have been made effective on the same date as the changes affecting registration and special delivery, in which case the government might have increased its revenue by about $10 million during the Christmas season.

For some time I have been asking that part-time assistance in the post office could be employed through the civil service commission in the same way as full time employees. If this were done, these workers would probably give better service and they would also have the opportunity of enjoying superannuation benefits after they retire. At present, this is not possible. A number of years ago I had a lady working with me in my office. She was a part time employee. This lady is still employed there, and on her retirement she will walk out without superannuation or any benefits whatever. Surely such people should be given some compensation on leaving their positions.

I was interested to learn about the new promotion opportunities for postal employees as announced by the Postmaster General. In future, vacancies at semi-staff group 33 offices, of which there are 210 in Canada, will be filled by competition open to postal employees in the postal district. In the past, these positions have been open only to the residents of the community where the vacancy occurred. This is a welcome move. However, I believe this should also apply to members of the groups 30, 31, and 32 whose work is similar to that of the 33 group.

Another suggestion I should like to make is this, that the competition be extended to the whole province and not only to the district concerned. This will give a greater opportunity to postmasters and assistants in the lower group of semi-staff post offices who have the qualifications to compete for such positions. The present move will be welcomed by the Canadian postmasters association of which I was a member for many years. The officers and executives of this association have for a long time dedicated their services to the welfare of all employees, and former postmasters general under the previous government have recognized the valuable work of this association for the betterment of the postal service. I hope the present minister will accept the co-operation of this body and give careful consideration to all the suggestions which it brings forward.

The former government played a great part in making possible the progress of this department. In 1961-62, the volume of mail handled remained high. More than 4 billion pieces were processed. Revenue in that year amounted to $213,579,446 and represented an increase of $11,575,655 over the previous year. A revision in parcel post rates accounted for $8,600,000 and additional mailings of U.S. publications in Canada accounted for $1,400,000. The farsightedness of the previous government is best exemplified by the construction of the Sir Alexander Campbell building which brought the various divisions under one roof and allowed, for the first time, for a more closely knit organization with better inter-office communication and co-ordinated working facilities. The postage meter system was increased, or extended, in 1961-62 to an additional 62 offices. My former office in Elmira joined in such progress, which gives many firms the opportunity of using this service. I understand that this mechanical method of pre-paying postage is now installed in 1,163 Canadian post offices.

In the fiscal year, 1961-62, construction of 110 small and large post office buildings was completed, while 52 were under construction at the end of the year. The number of post offices accommodated in federal buildings as of March, 1962 was 1,121, while 940 offices were accommodated in leased quarters.

An important part of the progress made in 1961-62 concerned the letter carrier walks whose number was increased by 230. It now totals 104,603. The total number of calls has increased by 104,603 and totalled 2,999,969 at the end of 1961-62.

As a postmaster for over 35 years, and also supervisor of smaller offices in my district, I well recognize the fine work being done by all such supervisors. Such work was carried out by the former area superintendents, but there has been a change and now such work, as I mentioned, is being carried out by these postmasters.

The employees and the department have played a great part in the constant advancement and progress of this fine Post Office Department. Few of us realize how extensive are its services and how diversified are its functions. It has expanded, changed and adapted itself to the physical and economic growth of the nation. I may say to the Postmaster General that I hope in his travels he will visit all the smaller offices, as the former postmaster general did, and in that way become acquainted with the members of the staff and the work that should be done. From the smallest of beginnings, the Post Office Department has grown to a complex nation-wide organization that penetrates into the most remote corners of the country, swiftly and efficiently knitting together the threads of our national fabric. Yes, Canada's post office has an extremely appropriate motto: Service to the public.

In order that this advancement may continue, may I point out to the Postmaster General that all appointments must be made by the civil service commission, so that all applying for such work may have an equal chance of success according to their qualifications.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, in taking part in this debate, I can assure you that it is not my intention to delay the proceedings of the house very long.

First of all, I would like to take this opportunity to greet the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette), who occasionally visits us in this house. I would like to ask him to be indulgent and to listen to my few remarks.

I would also take this opportunity to congratulate the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) for the confidence put on him by his leader when he entrusted him with the administration of one of the most important departments of the government, that of the post office. I was glad of that promotion which has been given him.

I have been one of the first to know him, and it was then both of us were delegates to the United Nations. I profited by his wide experience and his parliamentary life as well as by his sound advice and his company, for he is a very merry man, whom it is always a pleasure to meet. I believe that newspaperman Mr. Marcel Gingras, of "La Presse", has given proper credit to that personality in one of his recent life stories.

I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute and at the same time thank the officials of the Post Office Department who are always at our disposal to help us with all the problems which we submit to them.

I can only say that my relations with them, and with the department as well, have always been most friendly, for we always succeeded together to solve the few problems which we had to discuss.

However, I wish that the Postmaster General had not, in his everyday work, preferred to follow the suggestions coming from outside rather than those formulated by the elected members of the house who deal with public affairs.

I feel that the minister would do well to change his attitude and to pass through elected representatives instead. As far as I am concerned, I can assure him that I would not abuse the privilege since I have only one ambition here, that is to serve my electors as well as I can.

Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly agree with what the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) said. I shall not repeat the suggestions and recommendations he made to the minister but I should like to take this opportunity to stress certain inaccuracies and contradictions made by the minister in some of his statements concerning the increase in postal rates.

If my memory serves me well, he laid the blame on the wrong party at the time. He may not have used those very words but he nevertheless tried to convince his audience that the increase was due to lack of administrative ability by his predecessor at the head of the Post Office Department.

Like the hon. member who spoke before me, I regret the increases which the minister recommended because they are costly for the public. In the long run, Canadian taxpayers will have to foot the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind the minister that when he was sitting on this side of the house, he did not miss a chance to advocate mail delivery twice a day. I wish to point out that it is now within his power to restore that service.

I congratulate the minister for having obtained salary increases for certain classes of employees, but I should like to associate myself with those who deplore the fact that he has not used his influence a little more, since this pay boost of $60 gives the parties concerned only 17 cents more per day. Everyone will agree that is not much, and the good job done by those people should have been better rewarded. As I say, the minister should have brought more pressure to bear and obtained a larger increase for his employees.

Mr. Chairman, since the Christmas season is almost here, I would ask the minister to kindly help me give a practical gift to the residents of four important parishes of my riding.

I refer to the parishes of St. Denis, St. Damase, St. Rosalie and Upton. With the co-operation of the minister, we could give those parishes a building for the post office, which the citizens of those parishes would welcome.

Mr. Chairman, in closing my remarks, I will say that, should the rumours whispered around parliament hill materialize, I join with other members of parliament to wish a most agreeable and most pleasant journey to my friend, the hon. member for St. Denis, Postmaster General.

[Text]

Mr. McBain: Mr. Chairman, my remarks are going to be as brief as possible, as I know the Postmaster General desires to have his estimates passed before this day's sitting finishes. I take this opportunity of congratulating him on the presentation of his first estimates. For a number of years I have enjoyed a friendly association with him in an organization that has previously been mentioned, the House of Commons bowling league, and I feel possibly I may have brought him along up to the presidency of that league because he followed me in that office. Our associations in it were very pleasant and I hope they will continue to be that way.

Before going further I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Waterloo North, who this afternoon presented what I think was the second report on the Post Office Department, outlining in a very excellent way the activities of the department as carried out in previous years, and this was but rightly so because he is the only member of the House of Commons who was a P.M.—a postmaster—before he became an M.P.

The hon. member for Danforth brought a matter to the attention of the committee that I also wish to speak about, the reasons letter carriers are at the present time asking for a salary increase, collective bargaining and compulsory arbitration.

I do not know whether the hon. member brought to the attention of the committee that these requests were contained in a letter put forth by branch No. 1 of the Toronto association, but I do wish to support his remarks for the reason that branch 23 of the federated association of letter carriers of St. Thomas has also endorsed this letter and asked for the same consideration.

I now want to turn to a few items of a local nature in my own constituency. Before doing so I cannot let the opportunity pass without mentioning something about patronage. I am not going to be critical of the minister, because I do not recall that any patronage has been practised in my riding since I became a member of parliament. But I suggest to the minister that he throw away that Liberal list of consultants and make a new list, which would have on it the elected members of parliament; because they are the men and women elected to represent their constituencies here and, if anyone is to be consulted, they are the ones who should be consulted about matters pertaining to their constituencies.

Patronage was not practised in the constituency of Elgin during the previous administration, and more especially it has not been practised in the matter of rural mail carrier contracts. There are over 40 rural mail contracts in the riding of Elgin and during the past 10 years since I was first elected, to the best of my knowledge only a few of those contracts came up for tender. The reason a tender is called is usually due to the death of a contractor. These men and women are doing an excellent job and they see that the mail is carried and delivered every day regardless of weather conditions; and we all know that weather conditions, especially at this time of the year, are not always the best.

When these rural contracts do come up every four years and a contractor is doing efficient work, then I feel consideration should be given to the renewal of his contract. Many contractors fail to ask for their contracts to be reviewed after they have been in force for two years. They are hesitant to do so because if they ask for a review and an increase in their contracts, they fear they will lose them at the end of four years, and if patronage is being practised they are hesitant to ask for the consideration which is rightly theirs.

I now wish to refer to an election promise made during the last two election campaigns by the Liberal candidate in my riding, that if a Liberal government were elected a new post office would be erected in the village of Vienna. Last June I put this question on the order paper and it was answered on June 12, question 350:

> Is it the intention of the government to build a post office at Vienna, Ontario, this year?

The Postmaster General replied:

> No. This is a revenue post office, group 24, where the postmaster is responsible for the provision of the premises as part of his remuneration.

That is probably quite correct but I feel that certain discrimination is being practised against the residents of this community because the present post office is contained in a room no longer than the table in front of me here, and I believe it is only eight feet wide. Three miles to the south, in the village of Port Burwell they have had a new post office for some time and, five miles on the other side, Staffordville, also has a new post office. Naturally the residents of Vienna cannot understand why these other two communities, one not nearly as large, have been able to obtain new post offices.

It is correct that under the present regulations the postmaster is supposed to provide the accommodation, but he has reached the age of retirement. He is now on extension and no doubt does not wish to go to great expense on his own behalf to provide accommodation that he may only occupy for a short period of time. I hope the minister will give serious consideration to see if some method can be worked out whereby this community can have a new post office.

The other item I wish to mention is the post office that has been promised for the village of West Lorne. Over the past number of years the residents in West Lorne have not been able to agree on a site, but in the neighbouring village of Rodney the Department of Public Works has already secured a site which has been cleared, and both town councils have agreed on it. I suggest that consideration be given to the building that was promised for West Lorne, and I believe that in the estimates of the Department of Public Works provision is made for that. It would be of great benefit if it were built in Rodney where a site is already secured.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of these short remarks, I would like to congratulate the Postmaster General on his recent appointment. I hope that during his short term of office he will take steps to further the public interest and that of his department.

I would like to offer him a few suggestions and, if he takes them into account, he will be considered, in his brief tenure, as an excellent Postmaster General who works in the public interest, in his country's interest.

First, the Postmaster General could study the possibility of closing post offices on Saturday. That practice is followed by some financial establishments, including banks, in Canada. On the other hand, the government of the Netherlands decided recently to close post offices on Saturday.

Second, I ask him to find a way so that letter carriers will not have to climb stairs to deliver mail to people living on the second or third floors. In my opinion, an arrangement could be made with the landlords and the tenants to have mail boxes on the first floor, so that those postal employees would not have to work under such inhuman conditions. I realize that they have to serve the people but the Canadian people, I think, would appreciate any change which might make the letter carrier's work easier.

[Mr. McBain.]

Third, the minister talked about new stamp designs. If he should like to have suggestions in that respect, he could ask the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette).

I would also ask the Postmaster General to find a way to prevent the Post Office Department from being used to distribute communist propaganda. This problem is not new. However, it should be possible to find a way to completely stop that communist propaganda which is distributed throughout the country. Canada spends millions of dollars on national defence, against our eastern enemies. Therefore I find it illogical to allow the Post Office Department to distribute communist propaganda.

Before coming to the end of my remarks, I would like to point out that some members on the government side use official House of Commons stationery, as well as envelopes, and the House of Commons frank to mail Liberal party propaganda. I have the evidence here: House of Commons, Ottawa, Canada. It is a letter mailed to weeklies in the province of Quebec and signed "Jean Berger, Montmagny-L'Islet, publicity agent of the Liberal party, Ottawa". And the amazing thing is that he used an envelope with the frank of the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Cadieux) on it.

I am of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that government members should set the example and not have—

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm implicated me. I did not know that the hon. member considered himself amongst the most uncompromising members. I take note of that. Now, coming back to the precise point he mentioned, I sent exact information to weekly newspapers, but I did not consider it necessary to mention the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will admit that this is not a question of privilege but an argument, and he will probably have the opportunity to submit it later.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, my remarks were quite polite. I quoted a document which truly exists and the hon. member had his secretary put underneath his signature—on paper paid for by the taxpayers—the typewritten inscription "Publicity agent of the Liberal party, Ottawa".

Mr. Chairman, before I resume my seat, I should like to quote an article which was published in the Ottawa Journal, on November 14, 1963, and which refers to a statement made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) who, as we all know, sits on the government side. The article, which deals with the abuses of the government and the patronage within the Post Office Department, reads as follows:

[Text]

Dr. Jewett critical of politicians.
She said that the bids for rural postal routes, in particular, still operate under patronage.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, these were the few comments which I wanted to make and I hope that the Postmaster General will take up the suggestions which I made at the beginning. I would like to hear his comments.

Mr. Marcoux: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Go on.

Mr. Marcoux: Has the hon. member ever sent a letter for propaganda or publicity purposes?

Mr. Pigeon: I did not make any publicity for my party in particular. I wrote to the local newspapers in Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, and this is my right and duty as a member to give to the people an account of the work done by your humble servant in the house, Mr. Chairman.

[Text]

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few minutes of the time of the committee just to say that the Postmaster General has ignored every attempt to soften his heart and dispense with the old, Liberal party tradition of immediately firing everyone who dared to differ from their opinions or were even brave enough to express their own opinions. Many of these people, who are innocent of even being interested in politics, were dismissed because of the biased opinion of someone in their party or a member of their ranks. I could take up considerable time of the committee in telling hon. members of many such instances, but I will not because of experience in the past few weeks of complaints falling upon deaf ears. I also refrain from detailing these instances because I do not wish to take up the time of the committee. However, I take this opportunity, on behalf of the riding of Hastings-Frontenac, whose people are, I believe, the most loyal in the Dominion of Canada to our democratic way of life, to express to you, the Postmaster General, our good wishes for a very merry Christmas and a happy new year.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I merely want to rise and make an appeal to the minister to consider the possibility of providing house to house deliveries in smaller ciites where the geographical circumstances warrant it. I recognize that at the present time the regulations provide for only house to house deliveries in cities with a population of 5,000 and over. I believe that is the number. I have written to the present Postmaster General and to the previous postmaster general regarding the city of Port Moody, which is located along the Burrard inlet. Because there is a mountain on one side and the sea on the other, the city has had to stretch out over a considerable territory. The result is that many old people are 20 or 25 blocks away from the post office. I recognize that in many communities where there are 2,500 people in a compact area it is not much of a problem to go to the post office. But when a city because of its geographical features extends over a considerable territory this really works a hardship. I suggest to the minister that he take these geographical features into consideration. I do not think that the population figure alone ought to be the cut-off at which house to house delivery is provided. I should like to ask the minister to give some consideration to this point.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Douglas: May I say to the member who is saying "carried" that I have taken no part whatsoever in the discussion today and have taken none of the time of the committee. Therefore I reserve the right, if I choose to do so, to raise this matter with the Postmaster General at this time.

Item agreed to.

5. Operations including salaries and other expenses of staff post offices, district offices, railway mail service staffs, and supplies, equipment and other items for revenue post offices, including administration, $121,454,700.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether the minister has referred to the matter of railway delivery but there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in my area with regard to the curtailment that is taking place in the sorting of mail on some railway runs. In my opinion this service has been a very satisfactory one. It was built up over a number of years and it has been particularly so in the case of small communities. Certainly this is true of places outside Toronto. I have had complaints of letters taking five days to be carried 100 miles. When letters to be carried from one community to another community ten or 15 miles away were sorted on railway mail cars the letters were put into a bag that was dropped off at the next point. If there are no sorting facilities the mail is sent to a terminal, is handled in that terminal and is returned, but only on trains providing the type of mail service involving delivery to each area.

This has been a problem in northern Ontario. There is considerable discussion about removing one of the trips of one of the major trains out of Toronto at the present time. This will curtail most of the mail delivery that used to be made, by reason of the train running from Timmins to Toronto on Sunday. This will mean that in many cases it will take more than 24 hours for the mail to go to the terminal point, be sorted and returned.

Despite what Mr. Gordon and others may say, the railways are not operating on freight alone but also on express and mail carriage, and if they did not have the revenue from the branch lines serving the less populated areas they would not be able to show a profit of any kind. I think the Postmaster General has a great deal of influence with regard to the service that is being provided in this field.

It has been said that mail delivery has been speeded up by the use of road transportation. To my knowledge this has never been the case. It has not been advantageous for me to mail a letter from Ottawa to my riding by air. There would be no advantage in sending it by air because if the proper train connections can be made, delivery is much quicker. We think that a plea should be made for those engaged in the mail sorting service. If the service is discontinued we will in my opinion be catering to the large communities with central distribution offices and central sorting services without providing service to as many Canadians as possible, regardless of population and what facilities they themselves have.

You can put a letter on the train in Swastika, for instance, and if there is a sorting service on the train it will be delivered to the addressee in Englehart in the morning. If it is taken to North Bay it is not returned until the next morning. If there is still no drop-off service on the train it will go back to the centre it came from and be returned to the post office as bag mail. This could take 48 hours. You could walk the distance in several hours and carry the letter with you.

In my opinion the department has always been very co-operative. They have considered this matter and some changes have been made that are advantageous. There was a time when, because of circumstances, mail from Ottawa went through the Besserer street post office and was delayed there. In particular, mail in brown envelopes was not given very much consideration and was often delayed. Mail that was sent to the station and put on a train providing drop-off mail service was there in a matter of 12 hours, at the start of the next business day.

I hope the minister has looked into this matter. I know that the former minister was quite concerned about it, not only in terms of the service in relation to the operations of the Post Office Department itself, but with regard to the whole matter of railway mail service to small communities.

Item agreed to.

10. Transportation—movement of mail by land, air and water, including administration, $64,650,400.

Mr. Peters: On this item I also have another problem to raise with regard to the communities that do not have a large enough population to warrant the type of name and street directory published by private enterprise in the case of larger centres. In my area there has been a reluctance on the part of one postmaster in Kirkland Lake to give much consideration to mail. I would not say this was on a political basis, but he seems to think that anything coming from Ottawa is propaganda and therefore really does not deserve much consideration.

In this municipality we have a very large turnover of population because of the type of people who lives there. Mining communities have always had a large turnover, and although directories may be issued only two or three months before we are sending out a large quantity of mail, we have found that in some cases returned mail has amounted to as much as 18 per cent. We had discussions previously with the director of the department. At the time he was interested in establishing on a trial basis an I.B.M.6 system which would require the postmasters in the town to make out a form when mail was undelivered and return that form so the directories could be brought up to date.

Before the last election the situation in my riding was probably worse than in any other, and because of the fact that we tried to give such broad coverage we ascertained that there was no way of establishing where people had moved to. The director was kind enough to put out a temporary list at that time in mimeographed form and we used this. We found that after only a month had gone by there was a 4 or 5 per cent change in addresses.

I think the suggestion of the director is one that merits some consideration at least on a trial basis. An I.B.M. form would be used and every urban or rural carrier who could not deliver a letter would note the change of address. This form would be returned to the district post office and referred to the directory section at Ottawa so the change could be made there. This was contemplated, but I have not heard anything more about it. I presume the matter has been neglected. I suggest this is a field where the rural directory has been serving a purpose and has been used by businesses and others interested in securing mail coverage in their area. I believe it should be maintained, and if it is going to be maintained it is not much more expensive to keep it up to date. It is unfortunate that some of the postmasters pay very little attention to this matter. I have checked in Ottawa and I find that the rural carriers outside the city have cards. When mail is being delivered they try to ascertain to where the person to whom it is addressed has moved. The changes are made so that the change of address finally gets back to the distribution point where sorting takes place, and something can be done there to remedy the situation. In the case of Kirkland Lake, all it amounted to was that we took off the list the people we knew did not live at the address to where their letters were being sent. As far as the directory is concerned Kirkland Lake is short two or three thousand people who live in that municipality. In this connection I think a punch card system could be tried on a rental basis in an effort to bring the matter up to date.

This problem may not be too important to members of parliament, because it is interesting to note that if a member of parliament sends out literature and it comes back he readdresses it to somebody else and sends it out again. But from the point of view of the businessman, if he is using the directory for the purpose of furthering his enterprise, I think this would be very disconcerting. Therefore I hope the minister will let us know whether he can give some consideration to the rural directories, because a large number of ridings in Canada are affected in the way I have described. I believe it is a worth-while service which, with a little more effort, could be brought more up to date than it has in the past. The director which the minister has in his department is doing as much as possible with the limited number of people he has; but this is a big department and should get more consideration than has been possible in the past.

Mr. Barnett: I am rising to ask the minister to give careful consideration to a policy review in the department with respect to the present definitions or arrangements which would restrict the carrying of mails to scheduled carriers. I make this request with particular reference to the carriage of mails by air because of the very anomalous situations which may exist, and which certainly do exist on the west coast of Canada; reference was made earlier to this problem by the hon. member for Skeena.

By way of illustration I should point out that in actual fact much of the mail at the present time is carried on the coast by non-scheduled carriers. I happened to notice the other day that a complete polling station in the last federal election, where the address of all the electors in my constituency was provided, is listed as having an address in care of a certain air line, or one or two air lines. This is their postal address. Yet I know that neither of the particular air lines mentioned are officially carrying any mails. I do not know whether the Postmaster General remembers a discussion which took place in this house a number of years ago, when the esteemed late Mr. Cote was postmaster general, on the subject of what one member described as bootlegged mail. I very well recall how horrified was the then postmaster general at the suggestion that any of Her Majesty's mail was being bootlegged. I also recall that it was quite easy to tell where in the house those members who represented the more sparsely settled constituencies came from, because of the chortles of laughter which came from those particular spots in the house at the postmaster general declaring up and down that no such thing could possibly exist as the bootlegging of Her Majesty's mail.

I do know that, because of the present regulations, those in charge of trying to work out the best arrangement for the transportation of mails are often hamstrung, because of the existence of the regulations, in deciding what constitutes a scheduled carrier. I remember hearing recently the Minister of Transport say that he had discovered, while attending an international air conference, that in many respects Canada has a system of air transportation which is quite unique in the world. Many of our communities since the advent of transportation by air have become dependant upon a form of transportation which really has no parallel anywhere else in the world. I feel that the present rules and regulations concerning the transportation of mails have not, as far as I can see, been altered very much since the time when all mails had to be transported either by rail, or by water in areas where steamer transportation existed.

Apart from having developed certain arrangements regarding the rapid transit of mails on the cross-Canada runs we really have not looked into the problem of how the mail services could be improved by making use of the smaller air lines which, in many cases, are operating under a class three or even under a charter form of licence. I feel the time has come when there should be a much more careful look at this question from the policy level in Ottawa in order that the officers of the department who are concerned with trying to provide the best transit of mails can do a better job.

One of the considerations which the department tends to lose sight of is the community of interest in certain areas. There are areas in my constituency where it is a matter of a ten minute flight by air from one community to another, with planes running to and from these points quite frequently, but it takes at least a week for the transportation of mails. These are communities which are united in a geographic area of interest in such things as hospital districts, in such things as school districts, in such things as the administrative functioning of an Indian agency, where it is most difficult for ordinary business to be transacted within a reasonable period of time.

I have also had people complaining that they have practically been taken to court by the authorities in the provincial administration because they were not able to comply with certain provincial regulations regarding the filling out and return of certain forms and reports within a prescribed period of time. This is a problem which some of the smaller municipalities face in dealing with the department of municipal affairs in Victoria. I have discussed this matter from time to time with some of the officers of the department. I realize it is a very complex matter, one for which there is no easy or clearcut solution; but I feel that there should be a top policy review by the minister's department in Ottawa to see whether some better arrangements can be worked out.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Peters: Before it carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like a reply from the minister as to what his functions are and what the department is going to do about the anticipated curtailment of trains 49 and 50, on the Toronto to Timmins service. The latest word I have is that it is the intention to drop this service entirely by April.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, in order to answer the question of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I must say that I do not know how we will manage, if certain lines are abandoned. We will then decide to organize the transportation of mail by land. I must emphasize here that we have done our best to obtain railway service, in order that a certain amount of mail could be carried by railway if the matter is not settled by trucking.

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask one question of the Postmaster General. I have given him warning of this question on previous occasions. I know there have been some unkind things said, but I want to wish the hon. gentleman a very merry Christmas. And I want to ask him this: Would he mind explaining to the Canadian people and to the House of Commons why there have been no robberies since he took over his job of Postmaster General.

Mr. Denis: There have been some robberies since we took over, unfortunately, we have not had enough time to convince the thieves or robbers that they should change the bad habits they had formed under the previous regime.

The Chairman: That concludes the estimates of the Postmaster General's department.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, allow me to thank all hon. members and all those who contributed to the passage of my estimates. I thank them for the flowers, but somewhat less for the thorns. Fortunately, they were not too prickly and I think I can stand it.

However, with regard to my possible appointment to the Senate, it would be difficult for me to satisfy everybody. Some people want to send me to the other place, and others want to keep me here. I cannot cut myself in two and I suggest that the decision should be left to those responsible. Then we will know if the house loses or the Senate gains.

[Text]

LEGISLATION

The Speaker of the Senate—
1. Allowance in lieu of residence, $3,000.

Mr. Peters: This is a very important subject in my opinion and it is one which has not been looked at carefully for a long time. Many people do not realize the extent of the field which is covered by these estimates. The housekeeping of parliament has grown very greatly since the days when the Speaker and the Sergeant-at-Arms knew everyone by name. The time is ripe, in my opinion, when we should provide the house with a more efficient method of operation than we have been able to obtain under the present system. Most of the items under this heading, legislation, are handled, as hon. members are aware, by the officers of internal economy who include the Speaker and several members of the cabinet. We are all aware that most of the members of the eternal economy committee—

Mr. Woolliams: The eternal economy committee?

An hon. Member: What is the matter with "eternal"?

An hon. Members: You were right first time.

Mr. Peters: It may have developed to that point, and that is what I would like to change.

The operation of the House of Commons involves the equivalent of a town of fairly large size. There are, working here, more than 1,000 employees, and if 1,000 employees were working in a municipality, the operation of a municipality containing between 5,000 and 10,000 people would be provided for. It is true we do not have the responsibility for providing recreation for the children. We do not have many streets. We do not face a number of the problems with which a municipality has to contend. On the other hand, there are many which a municipality could avoid. The majority of the staff of the House of Commons do not come under direct control of the civil service. The staff employed in these buildings includes stenographers, messengers, protective officers, cleaners, employees of the Department of Public Works and, of course, members of parliament; but I suppose we would not include them, Mr. Chairman, in the working force. I suppose they amount to an additional 350 including the Senate.

An hon. Member: You were talking about workers.

Mr. Peters: Thus, we have a large number of people and it is doubtful whether an organization like this can best be handled under the system which was originally set up. I suggest the time has come when we should make changes. I should like to discuss some of the problems which face us and go into details about some of those problems in order that members may be aware of the situation which the Speaker has to face from day to day. I should like to spend some time commenting on the long range considerations which he has to bear in mind, and on the relationship which exists between the rules of this house and the actual operation. I should like to go into this question and make some suggestions for the consideration of the committee. I should like to call it seven o'clock and do all this at a later date when the estimates come before us again.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not seven o'clock, and I hope the hon. member does not intend to deny me the right to say a word in the committee, too. The government, particularly to oblige the group to which the hon. member belongs, brought these particular estimates on at this time rather than at the usual time, at the very end of the estimates. This was done particularly to oblige the hon. gentleman. I may say that the other members of the committee enjoy listening to the hon. member and we would be willing to listen to him as long as he wants to talk about this matter. I suggest, therefore, that he accommodate the rest of us by getting right on with his speech.

Mr. Douglas: I do not know what the Secretary of State is trying to do, but there has been no accommodation. These estimates were brought down at five minutes to seven. My hon. friend has a perfect right to call it seven o'clock and continue his speech whenever the estimates are before us again. We did ask that they be brought on sufficiently early to allow of discussion.

An hon. Member: Why not get ahead now?

Mr. Douglas: There is no reason why we should continue. We agreed to sit this morning at twelve o'clock. We agreed to sit until seven. I see no reason why we should extend this sitting beyond seven o'clock merely because the Secretary of State wants to rush these estimates through in a few minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, on reflection, the hon. gentleman will consider that statement of his as being a most unfair one. I am not suggesting these estimates should be rushed through at all. What I said—and he can examine the words I used—was that I thought it was the sense of the whole committee that we were willing to sit here and listen to the hon. gentleman for as long as he wished to speak. That, surely, is not rushing anything. But there are 265 members in this house and some of us would like to get the business done in the present week. The hon. member has something he wants to say. We want to hear it. I do not know whether I am speaking for the committee generally, but I think I am, and I say to him: we are all ready to hear him for as long as he wants to go on, but we do ask him to make his speech now.

Mr. Barnett: I think the Secretary of State is making some inaccurate assumptions. We have, as a group, agreed that there should be an extension of time as suggested. It was certainly not the responsibility of my hon. friend from Timiskaming that these particular estimates did not come before us until five minutes to seven. The Secretary of State is right when he says there are 265 members of this house all of whom have the right to bring up matters which are of interest to them. I do not mind confessing, Mr. Chairman, quite freely that much of the discussion that occupied a good deal of the time this afternoon I considered to be quite inconsequential to the functioning of parliament, and much less important than the subject matter the hon. member for Timiskaming was discussing. This is only my opinion, however, and I do not expect it to be shared by other members. I feel that I have been here and available during the hours that were set and that the hon. member for Timiskaming is quite right in his contention.

Mr. Douglas: It is seven o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

CONSUMER CREDIT

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand) presented the second report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on consumer credit and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I now ask the house leader how much business he expects to get through the house tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet. I think we will find that the hours—

Mr. Peters: Do not accommodate me tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. member for Timiskaming for his courteous interruption. For reasons which I do not think I should bore the committee by going into, we would like to start tomorrow with the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture; then, take the estimates of the Minister of Fisheries; then, the estimates of the Minister of National Revenue, and then the estimates of His Honour the Speaker. We would then take the estimates of the Department of Labour. After that, it seems to me that I could perhaps ascertain from hon. members which departments it would be most suitable to bring on from that time forward.

I should like to say that I seem to have been misunderstood a few minutes ago. I do not wish in any way to reflect on any hon. member in anything I have said. I have been trying, sometimes with rather a lot of difficulty, to accommodate hon. members in all corners of the house about sittings and everything else. There has only been one occasion during this session when the government has had to make a motion and divide the house on the sitting hours. I should like to be able to do that for the rest of the week to the end of the session. I should like also to have the session end at the end of this week, as perhaps could be accomplished because there have been very few sessions in the history of parliament when more time has been devoted to the consideration of the estimates than in the present session, if the hours are looked at. There have been a few, but not many. No one can say we have neglected consideration of these expenditures.

Now, of course, the Minister of National Defence will be back tomorrow as will the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The one department has only been discussed, but no items have been passed and the other is not completed. There are a number of other departments that have not been completed as yet. We cannot hope to conclude the proceedings this week without a certain degree of self-discipline. I do not believe, either, that because each of us thinks his speech is important, though some of us perhaps are occasionally resentful of those of others, we can accomplish our objective unless we are willing to make a serious extension of the hours. I am not going to ask now, but I hope tomorrow at the opening of the house there may be unanimous consent to sitting, from the opening of the sitting, without a break until some time late in the evening when there is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Secretary of State whether there is any other legislation to come before this session? As a subheading, I mention the world's fair bill and the two or three Senate bills to which he referred earlier. Are those items still on the agenda or have they been dropped?

Mr. Pickersgill: So far as the three bills from the Senate are concerned, which I believe are non-contentious, I hope the house would be able to find time after the estimates have been concluded to consider them. I have said two or three times, that we are not going to hold up prorogation if they are not considered. However, they would have to be started all over again and they would take up a certain amount of the time of both houses at the next session if we do not consider them now. Hon. members have had these bills on their files for some time, and I believe they realize they would not need prolonged discussion.

In so far as the world's fair bill is concerned, the reason we did not proceed earlier is that there were discussions going on earlier this week which might have necessitated some slight amendment to the bill. I did not want to waste the time of the house by bringing it up until we were sure. I am not able to say for certain, but it may be we will have to take time to consider it.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask one other question? Has the Secretary of State in mind suggesting any additional extension of hours, bearing in mind that he has done fairly well at this session by consultation and by getting co-operation? He has done rather well, has he not? It may be a good idea to continue with this, rather than just bringing it to the house cold.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I thought I made it very clear in what I said earlier—perhaps I did not—that I was not asking the consent of the house now to the hours for tomorrow. I do not want to take hon. members by surprise. If I could get consent now, I cannot tell you how happy I would be. I am not asking for it. I am hoping hon. members will reflect upon it between now and the time of meeting at eleven o'clock tomorrow. Then at eleven o'clock tomorrow I could propose that an order be made that the house remain in session continuously throughout the day until a motion is made for adjournment, which would certainly be made before the end of that day.

Mr. Churchill: May I just ask the house leader if he will reconsider the proposed legislation that is still to come before us? So far as we are concerned we do not want to be put in the position of having to consider legislation at the conclusion of the estimates. We would rather deal with it before the estimates are concluded.

The reason I say that, is that the official opposition has shown as much desire as the government side to get the business of the house completed, but it is not in our mind at the moment that we would like to sit late, say, on Saturday or Sunday morning to consider some piece of legislation which we ourselves might not wish to debate at any great length. Much as we would like to accommodate other parties in the house, there is obviously a limit.

Mr. Pickersgill: With respect to the measure regarding the world fair, just as soon as the government is in a position to bring it forward, and that will not be tomorrow—but it might conceivably be the first item on Friday—just as soon as we are in a position to say definitely what we will do about it, I will indicate it through the usual channels to hon. gentlemen, and it would be our view it should be brought forward early, because it is legislation that has to pass both houses. These other small measures respecting the Department of Transport have already been through the other place. After we send the appropriations bill to the other place there is always a certain interval, and if they do not pass it in that interval we would not hold up prorogation if they had not passed it; but if it could be—

Mr. Knowles: We could have done all this in the time we are talking about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I am prepared to propose them right now and get them disposed of. Do we have unanimous consent to do that, sir?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: The three are the Ontario harbours bill, the national harbours bill, and the carriage by air act.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right. If you would call item No. 4 on today's order paper we could proceed.

HARBOURS

APPROVAL OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND ONTARIO RESPECTING PUBLIC HARBOURS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-5, to approve an agreement between the government of Canada and the province of Ontario respecting public harbours.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD ACT

SUBSTITUTION OF FRENCH NAME "TROIS RIVIERES"

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-39, to amend the National Harbours Board Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Churchill: I would like to ask the house leader if he wants me to check the French version of this bill, or will he leave it to the hon. member for Lapointe?

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I think it is a matter for the hon. member for Three Rivers to do, but perhaps I should give a slight explanation of the bill which, at first blush, looks a little silly. I am told, however, that certain lawsuits might take place and very large sums of money might be involved, if somebody got the idea before this bill passes; and the bill has a very practical effect.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

Business of the House

CARRIAGE BY AIR ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONFORM TO PROTOCOL TO WARSAW CONVENTION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-37, to amend the Carriage by Air Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Pickersgill moved the third reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before this bill is read a third time I should point out that it will be of great interest to our widows if we should die in an air crash, because it increases the liability for insurance.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: I am sure the Secretary of State would like to be able to answer another question so that he can show what a good mood he is now in. Is it clear that the only other piece of legislation for this session, apart from the appropriations bill, would be the one regarding the world fair?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very embarrassing question. I do not know whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows quite how embarrassing it is, but I believe in certain quarters of the house there have been some discussions about a number of private bills that are on the order paper and a method of disposing of them, about which an understanding has not yet been reached. It may be that as the result of certain consultations that are going on if all hon. members of the house were agreeable there might be some method found of dealing with that problem.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, we are only asking the minister about government legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am referring also to government legislation.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister, what additional government legislation?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be a measure providing for another method of dealing with those private bills that are now on the order paper. But really I would prefer not to go into any more explanations at this time, because these discussions have not advanced very far and they may come to nothing.

Mr. Knowles: Just tell us you are in a good mood.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know how many hon. members heard the program this morning that comes on right after the news at eight o'clock—it is one of my favourite programs—in which a speech from the throne was delivered by one of our friends who sit above us and observe us from a lofty eminence. It was said in that broadcast that I had expressed appreciation—perhaps the extent of it was exaggerated a little bit—for the co-operation of the opposition. I must say that I do think that in so far as the management of the house is concerned, the co-operation of the opposition ever since September 30—I say nothing about the early part of the session—in the difficult circumstances of this particular parliament has been very good indeed, and I continue to say so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

It being twenty five minutes after seven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1. Departmental administration including Canada's share of the upkeep of the international bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $2,083,500.

5. Operations including salaries and other expenses of staff post offices, district offices, railway mail service staffs, and supplies, equipment and other items for revenue post offices, including administration, $121,454,700.

10. Transportation—Movement of mail by land, air and water including administration, $64,650,400.

10a. Transportation—Movement of mail by land, air and water, including administration $238,000.

15. Financial services including audit of revenue, money order and savings bank business; and postage stamps, $3,260,400.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 19, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS THIS DAY

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to say just a word about the sitting today, in line with what I said at the close last night. I indicated at that time that I would endeavour to find out at the opening today whether the house would be agreeable to sitting through the luncheon and dinner hours in order to expedite the consideration of estimates, and I indicated that there would be no legislation brought forward today by the government. I would just like to find out, if I could, whether that would be agreeable to the house.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the suggestion of the Secretary of State. Does the house agree to the suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any good purpose would be served by sitting continuously. In the first place, I think it is most unfair to staff, translators and reporters, to ask them to take on the almost unbearable burden of working continuously from eleven o'clock in the morning until, in all probability, midnight or after; because I cannot see any prospect of our adjourning at 10.30. Also, as far as members are concerned, I do not think we will save any time. I think that by exercising a little self discipline we will get as much work done if we rise from one o'clock until 2.30 and from six o'clock until seven o'clock, and then if necessary we could extend the hours at the latter part of the day.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): We are prepared to go along with the suggestion of the house leader. In fact we have been prepared for a long time now to meet any of these requests. The success in getting legislation and estimates through the house up to this point has been due very largely to the co-operation of the official opposition. I wish I could say the same—

An hon. Member: Let us give him a hand.

Mr. Churchill: —for some of the other small parties in the house. We are quite prepared to go ahead with this idea and wind up the business of this session. It is not too difficult at this stage of the game to sit through the lunch hour and dinner hour. I think from the standpoint of the staff it would be better for them to have their work completed by Friday of this week rather than to be here on Saturday.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): We are prepared to go along with the suggestion that has been made by the government house leader. It seems that we could arrange to get lunch some way or other. It would appear that most of the debates that are necessary have been pretty well completed. We would be prepared to go along with any suggestion that would expedite the passage of the business.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) is quite acceptable because we are having a special meeting at one o'clock and we cannot be here between one o'clock and half past two.

We would be quite agreeable to sit a little later tonight to make up for the lunch period.

[Text]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the suggestion that has been put forward and the comments that have been made on the suggestion, I think there is one other word that should be said. I agree with the position taken by my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I think we will do just as well by recognizing the normal hours plus an extension later in the evening if we need it, and we can do just as well in that way as we can by cramming things through.

I should like to say to my good friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that his suggestion that his party has always been co-operative and we have been difficult is not borne out by the record. The only time this session that it was necessary to achieve an extension of the hours by a motion and by dividing the house was on October 17, when the Progressive Conservatives objected to and tried to thwart the proposal made by the Secretary of State. We have negotiated these extensions, and we are prepared to negotiate today as to the use of the time. I suggest that the application of Christmas good will would be better than trying to force things through.

Mr. Churchill: The accusations of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre have to be answered. If you examine the record you will see that time and time again the business of this house has been obstructed by opposition from the New Democratic party. They have refused to sit an extra few minutes night after night when we could have completed the various estimates.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has no right to use the term "obstructed" when referring to this group. I would remind you that we have co-operated wholeheartedly throughout the session. I would remind the hon. gentleman that he, along with some of his colleagues, took two hours on third reading of the centennial bill trying to defend a position that was indefensible. I would remind the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre he is not now the government leader of the house, a position which he occupied with the diplomacy and finesse of a bull in a china shop.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to wish all members a merry Christmas.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have to rise on a question of privilege. It is based on the false statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he misled the house by suggesting that on October 17 this party opposed the extension of the hours of sitting of this house. That is not the case at all, and it is deplorable that a senior member of this house should make a statement of that nature.

I base my question of privilege on the fact that on that date I said we were in favour of extending the hours. I suggested extending the hours by five and a half hours per week instead of five. I suggested that later this session we would be sitting Wednesday nights, Friday nights and on Saturdays, and I hinted that we would dispense with some of the supply motions. Unfortunately, although I asked the house leader to consult with us on the matter, at that time, inexperienced as he was, he refused that consultation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On this question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has no right, even at Christmas time, to suggest that I made a false statement. The record is quite clear. The amendment made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on October 17, while it proposed more hours of sitting for the week, proposed less time for government business than the motion proposed by the Secretary of State. That is one point.

The other point is that the record is clear, that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre called "On division" on the motion moved by the Secretary of State. I do not know how much clearer the record has to be, even for my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: This is typical evasion. The hon. member should cross the floor of the house and join the Secretary of State and the other ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Frequently during heated debate words are used extending beyond what might be a polite meaning. I am sure that was the case here.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

First report of special committee on procedure and organization—Mr. Speaker.

Third and fourth reports of standing committee on public accounts—Mr. Baldwin.

Second report of standing committee on external affairs—Mr. Matheson.

Second report of special committee on food and drugs—Mr. Harley.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOHN WASYLENCHUK—ALLEGED ILLEGAL DEPORTATION FROM B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a series of questions to the Minister of Justice in regard to one John Wasylenchuk of Vancouver, who has been directed to be taken from Canada under extradition. I do this because of a statement made by the Liberal leader in British Columbia, Mr. Perrault, to the effect that the Minister of Justice signed an order for the extradition of this man and, to quote what the press said, he did not know what he was doing when he signed it, that he would have signed his own death certificate.

I ask the minister, did he sign an order directing the extradition of this man several days before the habeas corpus proceedings taken by him were decided upon; what was the date of the signing of the order by the minister; what was the date when the judgment was handed down? Furthermore, did the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice, following the signing of the order, make an attempt to stop extradition by phoning the warden of Oakalla prison yesterday, and by phoning the border officials to prevent the extradition?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions which have been put and I shall be pleased to answer them, but first I think I should give to the house the situation as it exists.

Under date October 25, 1963, the government of the United States requested extradition of John Wasylenchuk, who is charged with the crimes of robbery and murder in connection with a bank robbery in the western district of Washington, pursuant to the extradition treaty with the United States to which Canada is a party. Wasylenchuk was brought up before Mr. Justice Hutcheson of the supreme court of British Columbia for a hearing in the nature of a preliminary inquiry pursuant to the treaty and the Extradition Act. On November 14, 1963 Mr. Justice Hutcheson reported to me that he had committed Wasylenchuk for extradition pursuant to the act. He stated that the evidence before him included evidence submitted on behalf of Wasylenchuk with a view to establishing an alibi as well as evidence connecting Wasylenchuk with the alleged offence.

Next, habeas corpus proceedings were then taken on behalf of Wasylenchuk before Mr. Justice Ruttan, also of the supreme court of British Columbia, and under date of December 11, 1963 I was advised by the district registrar of the supreme court that such application had been refused. I accordingly signed an extradition warrant for Wasylenchuk's surrender to the United States authorities pursuant to the Extradition Act. It was sent out on Monday, December 16, 1963 to counsel in Vancouver acting for the United States authorities, and I understand Wasylenchuk was removed to the United States under such warrant yesterday.

In answer to one of the other questions by the right hon. gentleman, several days did expire, as he intimated in his question, between the habeas corpus proceedings being taken and the signing of the warrant. It was not until after the habeas corpus proceedings had been taken and the matter had been discussed with my officers that I signed the warrant.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask this question. Was the warrant signed by the minister signed before the judgment was handed down in the habeas corpus proceedings?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to that is no; it was signed afterward.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then would the minister also answer whether his parliamentary secretary yesterday made these communications? I ask because Mr. Perrault is reported to have stated that the Minister of Justice promised a full review early this week in a telephone conversation—

Mr. Chevrier: I did not get that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Justice early this week promised a full review in a telephone conversation. Following that alleged telephone conversation to which Mr. Perrault has made reference, did the parliamentary secretary yesterday endeavour to stop the extradition in the manner in which I have indicated?

Mr. Chevrier: Insofar as a telephone conversation is concerned, I can tell my hon. friend that I did have correspondence with Mr. Perrault in which he set out some points. I replied to him that I had investigated all the points that had been raised and following advice from the officers I had no alternative but to sign the extradition warrant.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One other question has not been answered, regarding the minister's parliamentary secretary. Did he make an attempt to stop the extradition by telephoning the warden of Oakalla yesterday, and by telephoning the border when he found that this man was en route to the border, in order to stop the extradition?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, as my right hon. friend knows I was absent from the house yesterday, and I have not had an opportunity to discuss that part of the matter with my parliamentary secretary. I should like to have the opportunity to do so before making any reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is of age. Let him answer.

Mr. Pearson: He is not a minister yet.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Justice if, when he signed the surrender order for John Wasylenchuk, he was aware of the fact that he was on parole. In view of the fact that under section 11 of the Parole Act a person on parole is still deemed to be serving a sentence, and under section 24 of the Extradition Act no person who is serving a sentence can be extradited, would the minister not consider that his surrender order was illegal?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker. That matter was carefully gone into, both the section of the Extradition Act as well as the section of the Parole Act, and the legal advice I have received is that although a man is on parole he is still subject to extradition under the treaty and under the act. Otherwise a man who was on parole could leave the jurisdiction, go into the United States, commit an offence, come back and not be extraditable. The converse would be true with regard to a citizen of the United States who came into Canada under such circumstances. In my view the treaty which has been entered into between the two countries envisaged such a situation.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister this question. Is he not bound by the Extradition Act, section 24 of which says very clearly that a person cannot be extradited if he is serving a sentence for some crime other than the one for which extradition proceedings have been taken?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not agree with that interpretation of the section. The section does not say that, and the advice I have received from my officers is to the contrary. As I said earlier, my advice is that although the man is on parole he is still subject to extradition.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question. In view of the fact that Wasylenchuk claims he was in Burnaby in 1954 at the time the offence was committed for which he is being extradited, and that any alibi he may try to establish will have to be established through witnesses in Burnaby, is any arrangement being made by the Canadian government to see that he has ample opportunity to call witnesses and to get the necessary funds to convey witnesses to the United States in order that he may receive a fair trial?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the circumstances are with reference to the alibi, although in the statement I made earlier I pointed out that this had been considered by one of the judges. But I can tell my hon. friend that in so far as I am concerned I would be prepared to do everything possible in order that he may obtain a fair trial.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that there has been communication between the Minister of Justice and the parliamentary secretary, instead of asking for secondary evidence I would like to put the question to the parliamentary secretary. I ask him whether yesterday he made an attempt to stop the extradiction of Wasylenchuk by telephoning the warden or telephoning to the border.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to make any statement at this time without a full opportunity of discussing this with the minister, a fuller opportunity than has been possible since the minister gave his answer.

Mr. Churchill: Just answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the parliamentary secretary not deny this? If he does not deny it, under what authority did he go behind an order that was made?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the answer I gave the right hon. Leader of the Opposition a while ago he would at least have given me an opportunity of discussing with my parliamentary assistant what happened in my absence yesterday. But that conversation did not take place, and I am not in a position to deal with it. I would like to make sure that the information which I give to the house is factual, and that I cannot do until I have had an opportunity to discuss it with him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I noticed the two in conversation.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister, when he is looking into this matter and making a statement to the house, to also clarify the statement he made earlier to me; because section 24 of the Extradition Act is quite clear. It says:

> A fugitive who has been accused of an offence within Canadian jurisdiction, not being the offence for which his surrender is asked, or who is undergoing sentence under a conviction in Canada, shall not be surrendered until after he has been discharged, whether by acquittal or by expiration of his sentence, or otherwise.

It seems to me that is, for legal terminology, unusually explicit. I hope the minister will clarify this point because it would seem, on the face of it, that the surrender order which he signed is clearly illegal.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is simply repeating the statement which he made earlier. When I do anything in the Department of Justice I accept the advice of the legal officers and, unfortunately, not of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I must repeat what I said to him a while ago, that the advice I was given in so far as this section is concerned was that it did not apply under the circumstances.

Mr. Douglas: All I am asking the minister to do is, when he makes his statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have had quite a full discussion, and I think the Minister of Justice seized the point.

Mr. Douglas: Will Your Honour not give me a chance to say what I was going to ask the minister to do?

Mr. Speaker: This is not the time to make an argument. We have discussed the matter on two occasions this morning.

Mr. Douglas: I am not making an argument, Mr. Speaker. I am just asking a question. I am asking the minister a question and saying that as a member of the house I have the right to some explanation from him. The mere fact that he tells me his law officers have advised him is not sufficient. I am asking the minister whether he will be kind enough to tell the house, when he makes his statement, how he reconciles the opinion which was given to him by his law officers with section 24 of the Extradition Act.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think there will be any difficulty about that, Mr. Speaker, and if the hon. member will just hold his patience, perhaps tomorrow I will be able to make a statement on the matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MINISTERIAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question either to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of National Defence, both of whom have been in Paris. Are they now in a position to give the House of Commons any statement following the NATO ministerial council meeting?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my estimates will be coming up in a very short time, and I thought I might take advantage of those estimates to make a report on the ministerial meeting.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH SUD-AVIATION PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question of which I have given him notice.

Would the minister report to the house on the interview he had in Paris with the assistant to the president of Sud-Aviation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, while in Paris, I tried to get in touch with General Puget, president of Sud-Aviation, but since he was out of the country, I was able to have a very satisfactory and very friendly telephone conversation with the general manager of Sud-Aviation, Mr. Giusta.

I told him that the decision taken by T.C.A. to purchase DC-9 aircraft had been determined exclusively by the very special requirements of operations within our country in the field of air transportation, and I expressed the sincere regret of the Canadian government that this incident had taken such proportions and that legitimate interest, on both sides, might have been affected without, of course, the excellent relations between the French government and the Canadian government being involved.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Would the minister tell us whether he has read an article written by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), in which he stated that the French ambassador in Canada had not been very diplomatic?

Would the minister give us his opinion on that point?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I have not read that article.

TRADE

BREAD—PROPOSED PROHIBITION OF IMPORT INTO NEW YORK STATE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. On last November 20, I asked him a question about a bill introduced in the legislature of the state of New York to prevent the importation of Canadian bread in that state. At that time, the Prime Minister replied that he would inquire. Well, I have here a copy of that bill which provides that 50 per cent of the shares of a private concern or company doing business or selling bread in the United States must be held by Americans. This particular section of the bill ends with these words:

[Text]

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be guilty of a misdemeanor.

This act shall take effect immediately.

[Translation]

Does the Prime Minister and his government intend to make representations to the authorities of the state of New York to prevent such discrimination against Canadian exports?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a report yet from my inquiry, but I will try to get it during the day and reply to my hon. friend tomorrow morning.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—U.S. POSITION RESPECTING PAYMENT FOR DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, allegedly made yesterday by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in Vancouver to the effect that the United States negotiators on the Columbia river treaty have insisted that payments by the United States for downstream benefits be placed under federal government control rather than that of the government of British Columbia, will the minister explain the effect of this demand upon the outcome of negotiations? Furthermore, has British Columbia agreed to the setting up of a federal trusteeship to administer this fund to some $400 million?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my attention was directed to the story which appeared in one of the morning papers. I may say that I do not believe the headline is warranted by the circumstances with which I am familiar. As to the contents of the article, I believe the right hon. gentleman will appreciate that these negotiations are now under way. There is to be a meeting with British Columbia and the United States tomorrow, and I would not want to say anything at this time that would prejudice these negotiations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Those laudable words should apply to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. He is the one who made the statement, and I ask did the United States negotiators insist that payments for downstream benefits be placed under federal government control; because surely parliament is entitled to know what a minister of the government spreads in other parts of the country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am very grateful to the right hon. gentleman for clarifying his earlier question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You follow suit.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have asked for a report from my colleague, who is not in the capital at the moment, concerning precisely what was said. I am sure the right hon. gentleman, with his great experience in negotiations, would not expect me to say anything further.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister's answer, stripped of unnecessary verbiage, that parliament is to be denied information that ministers give outside the house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman and I are in full agreement as to the rights of parliament.

Mr. Churchill: No wonder the NATO conference was confused.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in connection with the minister giving information outside the house, information that has been denied us for months. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet receive a telegram from C. P. Neale, general secretary treasurer of the Vancouver and district labour council, expressing concern at the possibility of ratification of the Columbia river treaty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I have received that telegram. I have received a number of telegrams, and one of them suggests that perhaps it had been urged on me as a result of suggestions made by my dear and hon. friend.

Mr. Herridge: As a supplementary question, if what the minister is reported as saying in Vancouver is proven correct, will the minister then inform the house of the terms of this treaty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, Mr. Speaker, the government certainly has no intention of withholding from the house information to which it is entitled. We have given a clear indication of this all along. Whether the information was in fact given at all by my colleague, will be clear from the report which I have already told the right hon. Leader of the Opposition I hope to have today or tomorrow.

Mr. Herridge: I have another supplementary question. If it is proven correct, will the minister elaborate on the statement made by the minister of northern affairs in Vancouver, before this session ends?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, that is obviously a hypothetical question and I can add nothing more.

PUBLICATIONS

COMPETITION WITH CANADIAN EDITIONS OF U.S. MAGAZINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he now has the statement on the publications matter which he indicated two weeks ago would be delayed for several days, and I particularly ask him whether he is considering any form of Christmas present for the hard pressed magazine publishers of Canada.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did indicate to my hon. friend that I hoped to be in a position to make a statement on this matter, but since I made that promise to my hon. friend there have been certain other developments, including evidence I have received from certain quarters, which may delay the statement for a few days. But I still think there will be a chance before the house adjourns.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING LEGISLATION ON COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I ask this question of the minister because there seems to be some doubt in the minds of many native Indian people regarding the progress of Bill C-130 regarding the disposition of Indian claims, which was introduced the other day. I would like to ask the minister whether it is clearly the intention of the government not to proceed with this bill this session but to hold it over so that public discussion and examination can take place.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I may tell the hon. gentleman it is clearly the intention of the government to withhold the legislation until all concerned are notified. A mailing list is presently being prepared so that the Indian bands and the associations interested in Indian affairs will have a chance to look at the bill, consider it, and make their representations to the government.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I wonder can the minister advise the house what effect the legislation will have on pending litigation. I believe there is a case pending in the Calgary area with reference to the Blackfoot band at Gleichen, involving over $1 million in claims. What effect will this have on pending legislation; because this is important to that band at the present time?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would permit me I must admit in all humility that I am not completely au courant with this particular claim he has referred to, but I will be pleased to discuss it with him at his convenience.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR 1966 QUEBEC FESTIVAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or in her absence to her parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that a committee has recently been formed in Quebec named the comité des jeux d'hiver interprovinciaux, and considering the recommendation made by the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport, I would like to ask whether that committee is going to get the very important grant of $500,000 which has been requested.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's temporary absence from the house I will be glad to take this question as notice and bring it to her attention.

TRANSPORT

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF SATELLITE TRACKING STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is he in a position to bring the house up to date on the further negotiations which he stated recently were going on between the national aeronautics space agency of the United States government and his own department in regard to the proposed nimbus meteorological satellite tracking station for Victoria county, Nova Scotia.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is much I can add to the answer I gave some days ago. We are still waiting developments because of the changes in scientific discoveries in this field.

NORTH SYDNEY-NEWFOUNDLAND—MAINLAND FERRY TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On December 9 I posed a question to the Minister of Transport, who was unavoidably absent. The Secretary of State, who was acting minister, very kindly replied that he did not believe a definitive reply could be made until the Minister of Transport was back in his seat. The question related to the mainland terminus of the second ferry to Newfoundland. Now that the minister is back in his seat, and in the spirit of the season, could he give that definitive reply; and will that reply indicate that the present government has confirmed the action of the previous government in designating the port of North Sydney as the mainland terminus of the proposed new ferry?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I am not aware that the previous government had designated the terminus. In any event, the matter is still under consideration and I cannot give a definitive reply.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask a supplementary question. If the minister would check the speech from the throne he would find confirmation of my statement. Would he kindly advise what his colleague the Minister of Labour meant when he stated to the Halifax Chronicle-Herald on December 16 that the Canso strait was ruled "out" in the guessing game but "in" was North Sydney. I do not understand it.

Mr. McIlraith: I have not seen the press release.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TORONTO—CONVERSION OF STATION CJBC TO FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister received any complaints or representations concerning the decision to change the C.B.C. Toronto station CJBC to all French programs?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I thank the hon. member for asking this question, because it enables me to say that I was just shown an extract from the Toronto Star of yesterday which says:

> No complaints have been received by state secretary J. W. Pickersgill, who answers to parliament for the C.B.C.

It does not quote me as having said that, and I have heard that there was dissatisfaction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have drawn to the attention of those who have expressed the dissatisfaction to me, either orally or in writing, that their views would be brought to the attention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which has the responsibility.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister agree with the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), on his side of the house, who stated that French speaking residents of Toronto should provide for themselves a private French radio station, in the same way that a small English speaking minority in Quebec city supported a private English station?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it is a well known rule of this house that ministers do not comment on statements made outside the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mine is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Fisher: I wanted to ask the minister a question. I know he cannot comment on what members who support him have said, but I think it would put this whole matter into focus if he could tell us whether he has indeed received representations from Toronto members of parliament in addition to the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), suggesting that the C.B.C. be asked to review and postpone its decision in this regard. I ask this question because some of us who do not live in Toronto do not always appreciate having to carry the hod for the Toronto area.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I indicated, Mr. Speaker, that I had received a certain number of representations both orally and in writing, and that I was bringing any representations I have received to the attention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the many arrangements and negotiations between Canada and the state of Maine for a reciprocal agreement on unemployment insurance, can the minister now say whether the state of Maine has arrived at a conclusion on this matter; and if so, what it is?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can advise my hon. friend that the unemployment insurance commission of the state of Maine is not prepared to enter into reciprocal arrangements with the unemployment insurance commission of Canada, and my recollection is that this decision was conveyed to the commission some weeks ago. There is no disposition on the part of the unemployment insurance commission of Maine to intervene.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF $2 PER BUSHEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): In the presence of the Minister of Agriculture, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. When can we expect legislation fulfilling the fervent promise of the Liberal party to guarantee the grain producers a floor price of $2 per bushel for wheat?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ASSISTANCE FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any representations were made to him recently regarding the need for greatly increased financial assistance for medical research.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. However, I think I had better make inquiries in my office.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO BANK ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the interest shown in the reported application for a charter for the bank of western Canada and the speculation that other applications might follow, can the minister say whether in his current review of the Bank Act he is giving consideration to the removal of the 6 per cent ceiling on interest on bank loans and also the matter of Canadian ownership requirements for banks.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Bank Act has not yet come up for review. When it does, I have no doubt that both these questions will be fully explored and discussed. In the meantime I think it would not be proper for me to say anything on the subject.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS, QUE.—REPORTED OBJECTION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): I should like to ask a question in French of the Minister of Transport.

[Translation]

Can the Minister of Transport tell the house whether the difficulties which opposed the interests of the Three Rivers bridge corporation and of the province of Quebec to the interests of his department have at last been smoothed out and, if so, whether people who live in the centre of Quebec may hope to get, as a Christmas present from the minister, a precise and clear statement about the construction of the bridge at Three Rivers?

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: Yes or no?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I do not know which of the three questions contained in that statement I would answer by yes or no. In any event, it is not a matter of difficulty between the Department of Transport and the Three Rivers bridge corporation, it is a matter of the construction of this bridge being under provincial jurisdiction and the responsibility for navigable waters being under federal jurisdiction. There is a difference of opinion involved in what is required to protect the navigable waters of the river in terms of the proposed designs of the bridge.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—POSSIBLE CHANGES IN CANADA'S MILITARY CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Has any progress been made in the study of NATO defence policy which was agreed to at the ministerial meeting last May in Ottawa? If so, can the minister indicate what changes in Canada's contribution to NATO military forces may now be expected?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I think it might be appropriate to say a word or two about this subject when my estimates come back before the committee, which will likely be tomorrow. I may then have an opportunity to give a brief report to the house on the meeting which was just concluded in Paris.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BREAD

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question further to the one I directed yesterday to the Prime Minister. Has the Minister of Justice as yet had an opportunity to discuss with his officials possible action with respect to the all too coincidental general rise in the price of bread in Ontario?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I have noted the hon. member's question, as I have noted the press reports of bread price increases. I have also discussed this subject with the director under the Combines Investigation Act, and I am satisfied that the matter is receiving adequate consideration. As the house knows, the general practice is that no information is given out as to whether an inquiry is being conducted in a particular industry unless and until a report is published.

AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I raised a question with the Prime Minister with regard to taking the Cold Storage Act out of the deep freeze and reinstituting subventions under it. The Prime Minister indicated that he would speak to the Minister of Agriculture about it. I wonder if we could have an answer today from the Prime Minister or the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Yesterday on orders of the day the hon. member for Skeena referred to a question he had directed to the Prime Minister on October 28, as to whether it was the intention of the government to reinstitute the subsidies under the Cold Storage Act for the construction of cold storage warehouses, which were suspended in July, 1962. In reply I may say that this policy is at present under review, and an announcement will be made in due course.

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING FEDERAL JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. It is prompted by a speech he made to the club Richelieu in Quebec yesterday, with many of the non-political parts of which I am in agreement. Would the minister say, in order to clarify this question, whether in his speech he intended to convey the impression that the concurrent powers of the provinces with regard to matters of immigration were not at all times subject to federal laws and regulations?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I do not believe I ever did convey that impression, because the jurisdiction is clearly subject to the basic laws enacted by the federal parliament and may not go contrary to those laws.

PUBLIC WORKS

SAUBLE RIVER, ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR DREDGING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works with regard to the Sauble river in the riding of Bruce. Would the minister reconsider his decision to cancel the development project at the mouth of the Sauble river; that is, the proposed dredging program? This resort area serves approximately 15,000 vacationers and possibly as many as 30,000 visitors, who are increasing in numbers each year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member would like to put that question on the order paper.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ACTIVITIES IN LABOUR DISPUTE AT GRANDE PRAIRIE, ALTA.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Two days ago the Minister of Justice promised to make a statement regarding a complaint which was lodged with him by the international woodworkers of America on December 11 relating to the allegation that R.C.M.P. forces were being used in strike-breaking in connection with a dispute at the Canadian forest products planing mill at Grande Prairie. Is the minister ready to make a statement?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I did undertake to do that, but unfortunately I was away yesterday. I was not able to contact the commissioner, but I will do that some time today and possibly make a statement tomorrow.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, $1,057,600.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of supply, Department of Agriculture, vote No. 1. Shall the item carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I have but a few remarks to make at this stage, because I do not want to delay the business of the house too much.

Our Liberal friends have made so many promises when they were in the opposition that I cannot let an opportunity slip by without reminding them a few of their election promises and urging them to carry them out.

The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) reminds me that this being Christmas time, it would be the most appropriate time for the Minister of Agriculture to carry out his promises.

Mr. Chairman, referring to the election campaigns of 1962 and 1963, we remember that at that time, the Liberal candidates were travelling throughout our ridings, reminding the farmers that agriculture was in a stage of stagnation, but that they had all the solutions to their problems.

No wonder the voters were deceived by these fine words; but now they ask them to keep those promises.

I am one of those who now intend to ask those people to keep their promises.

One of the main promises was that eastern farmers would have a minister from the east. We remember that at the beginning of the session the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), now leader of the house, requested the house to do things quickly, in order that we may appoint a minister of agriculture for the east as soon as possible. So it is surprising now to see that his former impatience to proceed in this field has turned into unending delays, since this appointment is even postponed until the next session.

Mr. Chairman, in that field, we are facing two contradictory positions on the part of our friends on the other side, which well indicates the extent of their sincerity when they speak about farmers, for if we go back to April 8 last, we find that very little has been done in the field of agriculture to improve the condition of the farmer.

As soon as they came to power, they introduced a measure which had baleful results, especially for the farmers in my district. As soon as he took over as Minister of Agriculture, the first thing he thought advisable to do was to remove the 25-cent premium per hundred pounds of milk granted to farmers who sold their milk to plants.

We have here an idea of the extent of the damage caused to farmers in my constituency, if we consider that after the Conservative government established that premium, farmers in St. Hyacinthe-Bagot benefited by the amount of $1,576,222.

As concerns the farmers in the province, the premium represents an amount of nearly $21 million they would have received during the years that measure applied.

It is difficult to understand that people wishing to help the agricultural class find nothing better to do than removing that premium and depriving the farmers, both in my constituency and in the province, of such an essential revenue. It must not be forgotten that at least 40 per cent of the farmers' income is derived from the dairy industry.

They had a right to expect different conduct on the part of the minister.

If he wishes to know what the farmers think of the present government's agricultural policy, he just has to pay them a visit. He will see that his popularity and that of the Liberal government is going down constantly month by month.

Mr. Chairman, you can also have an idea of the Liberal party's concern for farmers when you consider that at the election of last April, 15 farmers were eliminated at Liberal conventions.

In the June 1962 election, Mr. Jean Baptiste Lemoyne had run in my own riding and was reported to be a future minister of agriculture in a Liberal cabinet. When one considers that he was turned down at the convention during the 1963 election campaign, the degree of sincerity of the Liberal party towards farmers can readily be appreciated. I believe that the Liberals lost no time in removing that premium as soon as they came into power so as to punish the rural ridings for supporting the Conservative party.

The hon. gentleman who aspires to become minister of agriculture is somewhat guilty himself because he spared no effort to eliminate from this house a genuine farmer, Mr. Alfred Belzile who had accomplished a great deal here. He was known by all members of the house as a genuine farmer who made a valuable and worth-while contribution whenever agricultural matters were being considered in the house.

I must tell the candidate to the ministry that his attitude was at complete variance with that of the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) because when he was asked questions, he did not give the impression, like his successor, that they did not deserve any consideration.

During these last weeks, I directed questions to the hon. minister and he gave the impression that he felt he was too far above the common herd to reply. If he wants a piece of advice for his own information and his own future good, and if he really wants to do something for the farmers, he should have a little more humility and consider himself as part of this world.

Mr. Chairman, during the 1962 and 1963 elections, and also during past sessions when our friends opposite sat on opposition benches, they had answers to all questions and rose one after the other to deplore the lot made to the farmers by the Conservative government.

But it is a recognized fact that the Conservative party and particularly the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) have given the farmers much more during six years of Conservative administration than they had been given by the Department of Agriculture while its activities were directed by the hon. Mr. Gardiner.

Those gentlemen said in their speeches that new leadership had to be given to the milk products industry and steps taken to have milk distributed in the schools. Well, Mr. Chairman, what do you have since those people have come to power? Are they carrying out the policy which they advocated in the past? Absolutely not. We are not distributing more milk in the schools than formerly. Perhaps those people have realized that we were encroaching on a field which did not come under their jurisdiction.

This is further evidence that they should have tackled the problem with more sincerity, that they should have studied it before speaking; thus, they would not have ventured in fields where they are completely lost.

When we were in power, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had legislation passed to help particularly, the dairy farmer in the province of Quebec and eastern Canada. In order to promote butter consumption we granted a reduction of 12 cents per pound of butter to the consumer. This has represented a considerable incentive to butter sales and today, this commodity sells much more than formerly.

Mr. Chairman, there is something disturbing in the fact that the subsidy may be withdrawn altogether, as pointed out in an article I was reading a few weeks ago in La Terre de chez-nous. Is anything being done now to condition the farmer and the consumer in that respect?

I think it is my duty, in my capacity as representative of a semi-rural and semi-urban riding, to urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and, if I may, the next minister of agriculture, to use all their energies and influence to have this subsidy maintained and not abolished.

Having said this Mr. Chairman, may I present to the Minister of Agriculture, to the aspiring Minister of Agriculture, as well as to all my friends in the opposition, my best wishes for the year 1964, but I wish them a short political life.

Mr. Dupuis: You are the friends in the opposition.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments to make to give the minister a chance to reply afterwards.

I wish to start by bidding the minister good luck in his new functions.

Then I should like to bring to the attention of the house a brief addressed to the present Minister of Agriculture by the corporation of agronomists of the province of Quebec. Here are a few excerpts:

> My dear Minister,
> The corporation of agronomists of the province of Quebec wishes to draw to your kind attention the situation of the agronomists who are employed by the federal Department of Agriculture in the province of Quebec. Several of these federal agronomists are not fairly classified and remunerated, considering the responsibilities attached to the duties they have to perform.

A little further down, it says this:

> Certain functions such as the inspection of crops should be the exclusive responsibility of agronomists with good knowledge of phytopathology and entomology acquired at the university. At one time, the veterinarian responsible for a sub-district earned exactly the same salary as the agronomist of the federal Department of Agriculture in the production service. Today, this veterinarian gets an average of $1,500 more in some cases. Yet, the agronomist's responsibilities are quite as important. A salary scale which discriminates against a profession in favour of others coming under the same employer, in spite of equal responsibilities, could not be considered as fair.

This letter that I have not read in full bears the signature of Mr. T. Mongeon, agronomist and secretary general of the corporation of agronomists of the province of Quebec.

I ask the minister and his departmental officials to look into those suggestions, in order that the agronomists in the province of Quebec, and even in other provinces, may be treated as fairly as the veterinarians and a complete review be made so that their professional status may enable them to receive a salary equivalent to those paid in other fields of agriculture throughout the country.

Mr. Chairman, the federal Department of Agriculture is one of the most important in Canada, and at the same time one of the most complex.

May I take this opportunity to congratulate the present deputy minister, Dr. Barry, who discharges his responsibilities so well.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the associate deputy minister of agriculture, Mr. Chagnon, who is a qualified man familiar with the problems of agriculture, particularly those concerning eastern Canada, should have wider responsibilities in the federal Department of Agriculture, because the present deputy minister, Dr. Barry, assumes in my opinion so many responsibilities and does so much work that it is impossible for him, even if he so wishes, to give special consideration to all the problems.

I believe it would be in the interest of the federal Department of Agriculture, that is in the interest of the agricultural class, to find a means or method of sharing responsibilities, so that Mr. Chagnon, who has been appointed lately associate deputy minister of agriculture, would share equal responsibilities with Dr. Barry.

It is not my intention to blame anybody in saying this. On the contrary. I have always greatly admired the officials of the Department of Agriculture, but I believe there is reason to divide executive responsibilities at that level.

I should also like to make a few remarks in connection with federal experimental farms. The problems that arise there are not new; they are of long standing.

To correct the situation in the province of Quebec, it is imperative to take the necessary steps to provide the experimental farms with a greater budget and with more agricultural technicians, doctors in agricultural sciences and agronomists.

I know that agronomists are scarce in French Canada at present, because the Quebec government has attracted a large number of them by offering high salaries. In other words, the provincial government has fine agronomists in its employ.

I submit that the Department of Agriculture should give special consideration to the problem so as to find in Quebec agronomists to fill jobs first in Ottawa and, in the second place, at research stations in the province.

I would strongly advise the Minister of Agriculture to ask one of his deputy ministers to go to the faculty of agronomy at Laval University to explain to the students the federal government's need for agronomists, so that agricultural technicians may come and take the place to which they are entitled within the federal Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, I come back now to the subject of experimental farms. I have here figures and statistics but for the time being I have no intention of quoting them. However, I should like that special attention be given to the federal experimental farm of L'Assomption. I have here a report prepared by the local chamber of commerce of L'Assomption area. This report was prepared by Mr. Richard Bordeleau, who is the director of the experimental farm in that area; he is very competent and he has prepared this report with the co-operation of officers of the chamber of commerce in an effort to find a way to fill the vacancies in the federal experimental farm of L'Assomption area.

Let me quote a few excerpts from the resolutions passed by the chamber of commerce of L'Assomption on June 2, 1963.

> Whereas the number of stations for agricultural research as of April 1962 represented 21.3 per cent of the Canadian total for Ontario and 17 per cent for Quebec;
> Whereas the number of professionals engaged in that research represented to this date 17 per cent of the total for Ontario and 9.3 per cent of the total for Quebec.

This submission of the chamber of commerce goes on along this line and it is an excellent brief. As I said, we ought to try by all possible means to compensate this deficiency, this lack of agronomists at the federal level.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make at this time.

I wish that in 1964, the Minister of Agriculture will be able to implement the brief of the corporation. I would be glad if, later on, the minister would be able to comment on it and tell us whether he thinks that the suggestions to be found in the brief are good.

To conclude, I also ask the government to fully consider the problems of the farmers in the east and in British Columbia. As we have said already, the work to be done is tremendous and the field is broad, but I know that by co-operating and working together, we will succeed in raising the revenue of the farming class in eastern Canada as well as in British Columbia.

[Text]

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to prolong the debate on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, but I feel it is my duty as a farmer from western Canada to seek clarification from the Minister of Agriculture of some of the policies that were advocated by the Liberals during the election campaign. Now that we are coming to the end of a session and also to the end of 1963 I believe it is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture to give us answers to some of the questions in which the western farmers are very much interested.

During the time the previous government was in office they were very much concerned about a two price system for wheat, and on three occasions during those years acreage payments were made in lieu of a two price system amounting to approximately $40 million a year. This did not seem to be acceptable so far as the Liberal platform was concerned and they recommended $2 per bushel for No. 1 wheat, with the idea that the difference between the price farmers are now getting and $2 should be regarded as in the nature of a two price system for wheat consumed domestically. We have not heard anything more about this since this parliament started. The government also promised that in addition to a price of $2 per bushel for No. 1 wheat the prices of other grades would be adjusted accordingly, and I should like the minister to deal also with this point.

The second promise the Liberal party made had to do with the initial delivery of wheat. They promised that on the initial quota of 300 bushels a price of $3 or $4 per bushel—I cannot remember which—would be paid. The farmers of the west would like to know what the policy of the government is with regard to these promises. I must say that we have had a good crop and have been able to sell more wheat than in other years. Nevertheless, over the years the farmers have always asked for a two price system for western wheat, and before the session ends we would like to know from the Minister of Agriculture what the Liberal policy is in this regard.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I intend to take only a few minutes, because I realize everyone wants to get the estimates through as soon as possible. However, I do want to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that for some time, over a year, I was denied the opportunity to get reports made by the economics division of the Department of Agriculture with respect to the agricultural potential of the area affected by the proposed high Arrow lakes dam project and also with respect to the effect on agriculture of certain proposed dams in the east Kootenay area. Finally I got a copy of the report on the Arrow lakes quite recently from the deputy minister, Mr. Barry.

I simply want to say that if the economics division of the Department of Agriculture is going to publish reports as inaccurate as this one the people of Canada will have very little confidence in their reliability. This report mentions that there has been no detailed soil survey, and this indicates that the persons who made the report cannot know very much about the agricultural potential of the area. I am not going to read it because it will be dealt with by very informed people before the committee on external affairs when the Columbia treaty is presented to the committee. However, I can tell the minister I have one neighbour about 40 miles north of our home who shipped $40,000 worth of cattle last year. Another neighbour 40 miles to the south shipped $37,000 worth of cattle and fruit, and one little community which has about 80 acres in fruit shipped $60,000 worth last year. There are only three areas in Canada where peaches can be grown, the Niagara peninsula, the Okanagan, and sections of the west Kootenay district.

To indicate how inaccurate this report is, I wrote a letter to our retired district agriculturalist and horticulturalist, a man I have known for many years and who has had long time experience in the Kootenays. This is what he has to say with respect to the report:

Dear Mr. Herridge,

Your letter along with the preliminary report on the agricultural potentials of the area affected by the proposed high Arrow lakes dam project, received a few days ago. I was glad to hear from you and to receive this report. The report is very inaccurate and misleading in many respects. Where they got the information in this report is hard to say, as they have not given the district a true picture and facts as to agricultural production as a whole covering the area. There is nothing wrong with the soil, some of the best in the province, excellent climate, and water can be had for irrigation if required. Most kind of fruits can be grown in the area and can compete with the best grown in British Columbia. One of the best sections in the west Kootenay district for future development in fruit, field crops, hay crops, alfalfa and raising of livestock. Tree fruit diseases is not a serious factor in this area. New sprays that have been developed in the last few years makes it possible to control these orchard diseases with much less work and sure of success in the operation.

I sure would hate to see this beautiful agricultural valley flooded. We will need the land to produce food and a place to live.

Yours very truly,

E. C. Hunt

I have another letter from the manager of B.C. Tree Fruits Limited, who is preparing a brief and who is appalled at the inaccuracy of this so-called report on the potential of the area.

About a year or so ago I was informed of another report and I tried to get it without success. I wrote to the deputy minister of agriculture on November 26 last but I have not received a reply yet. In that letter I said:

I would also appreciate receiving a copy of the memorandum regarding the effect on agriculture of construction of reservoirs on the Columbia and Kootenay rivers between Luxor and Dorr dams, Department of Agriculture—July 14, 1960.

My complaint is first simply that apparently the departments of the government, or branches of certain departments, are making their reports to fit the political requirements of the government of the day. Now, we want accuracy; we must be fair about this.

My second complaint it that members of this house have been denied this information when members of the press and some other persons have seen these reports. That is what I object to very strongly indeed, and I bring this question to the minister's attention in the hope that this information in both instances—that is, both reports—will be made available to all members of the house. I also ask that his economics division make a further study of this question, rather than the superficial one they have made in which they admit there has been no detailed soils survey and on the spot survey. I say without any hesitation that this report on the Arrow lakes section from an agriculturist's point of view is no credit to the economics division of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Hamilton: I do not intend to hold up the first item, but I do think I should ask the minister a precise question dealing with the payments for sheep scrapie. This comes under vote No. 75, compensation for animals, and if the minister would indicate now that he would be prepared to give us the answer to this question then we could let item 1 go through.

Mr. Hays: The reason I suggested that this information should not be made available is that I have quite a bit of experience of what happens when a flock of sheep is slaughtered because of scrapie. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle knows all that is involved, and the reason for a slaughter policy.

Since 1955 we have destroyed something like 14,000 sheep and 396 individual people have been involved in nine provinces. Usually the owner of a slaughtered flock has sold breeding stock or rams into four or five different provinces, and there is a belief that scrapie is an inherited disease. That being the case the animals which have been sold are followed, and in the interval probably one of them may have been sold to a farmer in Prince Edward Island. That animal is traced and destroyed, and this creates a problem for the man who purchased it because it makes it difficult for him to sell other sheep to his neighbours and sheep breeders. Even though the animal which has been destroyed may have been with his flock just a few days and may not have associated with his other sheep, breeders stay away from that flock for a long time afterwards. There is a stigma on the flock.

If the hon. member wants these names produced we will be glad to produce them, but that is the reason I thought it better not to produce them. There are some 134 people involved in Ontario alone and it was in the interests of protecting these people that I made the answer I did.

Mr. Hamilton: I think my point has been overlooked. In our system of public accounts in Canada it is required that the names of all people receiving money from the crown be listed. I think the minister knows that scrapie comes under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and these names must appear in the public accounts. They were there for last year, and I suggest the minister has no alternative but to put them in the public accounts. However, that is not my question. I am simply saying that if by the time vote No. 75 comes around the minister will consider giving this information, then we will not have to go through the process of waiting for a debate on the motion that was moved yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. member a question. Does he say that he gave this information last year when he was Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Hamilton: I am simply pointing out that under the public accounts the names of all those people who received compensation under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act are listed. You cannot get around that. I am simply saying that by giving the answer the minister gave in the house the other day he is bypassing parliament.

Mr. Hays: I understand that it is only with respect to those who are listed by special vote that this information is given, and that it has not been given in all cases.

Mr. Hamilton: The only thing I am trying to assure is that the rights of the house are maintained. The minister has no right to refuse information of this sort unless he can declare that it is not in the public interest to disclose it. I am simply pointing out that if the minister assures the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe that he will give this information, then we are quite prepared to drop the subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope it will not be misconstrued if I intervene, but the minister has not had long experience in the technicalities and perhaps I have had too long an experience. True, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre described me as inexperienced earlier today, but perhaps this matter could be held up for a moment or two to consider what the practice was last year, and the minister has indicated that he is perfectly prepared to follow the same practice that was followed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, on this matter of scrapie we may as well finish the discussion on item 1. I had intended to raise it on vote No. 75. As all hon. members will know, I put a question on the order paper, No. 1,730, several weeks ago asking for exactly the information that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is now seeking; that is, respecting the payment of compensation for the slaughtering of sheep that were diagnosed as having scrapie. I did not realize at the time that so many breeders had in fact been paid under the act; I did not realize that it encompassed such a large area. As a matter of fact there are 393 breeders in nine provinces. This information is recorded on page 6054 of Hansard.

The reason I requested that the wording of that question be changed was simply to protect innocent breeders from having the value of their herds brought down because they had been named, when they did not actually have their herds exposed to scrapie for a long period of time; and of course, as has been pointed out, there is not complete agreement among the veterinarians even now as to whether this disease is hereditary.

In the question I put to the Minister of Agriculture, which was answered on December 18, I asked him to point out, without giving the names, those breeders who had received compensation more than once under the scrapie slaughter and compensation program. We see there are 13 such breeders. When I looked at the answer I found there was one sheep breeder, No. 7, who received $50,000 in September of 1959, and in July of 1963 he received $24,000. In other words, about $75,000 went to this one sheep breeder. Then further down a breeder is listed as No. 9. We find he has been paid three times, and in those three times he has received $143,000. In other words these two breeders have received about 35 per cent of all the money that has been paid out under the program in ten years of operation.

I think the Department of Agriculture, if they are going to continue this scrapie program—and in view of the information I have I think it should be taken off the list as a named disease for which compensation will be paid—these two breeders should be notified that if they want to get back into the sheep business they do so at their own risk. We have paid them well over $200,000 now. I understand there may even have been difficulty in arriving at the evaluation figures. There may be validity in the health of animals branch making compensation and demanding the slaughter of certain animals in order to eradicate disease, but in my opinion scrapie is a disease which they do not know exactly how to diagnose. As a matter of fact, in the United Kingdom they do not name this disease as something that can be eradicated by slaughter methods, and there is no compensation program. They destroy the actual animals that have the disease but they do not go back through the whole progeny of these animals and destroy them, because they are not satisfied that this is helpful; they are not even satisfied that it is contagious.

I intended raising this matter on vote 75, Mr. Chairman, but I think the time is long past for our health of animals branch in Canada to get in touch with the health of animals branch in the United States and see if they cannot reach some kind of agreement to take scrapie off the list; because the fact is that this slaughter and compensation for slaughter is destroying the purebred sheep industry in Canada. I would urge the minister to take this action as soon as possible.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I agree with a great deal of what the hon. member has said in this connection, and we should take another look at the whole program. I should like to advise the committee that this matter is being reviewed in the United States early in the new year, and we will be represented there. I feel very much the same as the hon. member in this regard. We have been giving this program some consideration, and the United States is also giving it a great deal of consideration. In the first instance I understand that in so far as Canada is concerned this program was put in because of a very strong recommendation of the Canadian sheep breeders. They wanted to protect their market in the United States, particularly the purebred sheep market which we enjoy in that country. I concur in what the hon. member has said and can assure him that we will take a look at this program.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a couple of questions. Before doing so I want to pay him a tribute for what Hays Limited, of which he was a member, has done for the purebred cattle industry over the years. I have known these people for a number of years and they have made a great contribution to the livestock industry of this country. I want the minister to know that we Holstein breeders are fully cognizant of the contribution made by Hays Brothers.

I want to ask the minister this question. At the dominion-provincial conference held here, when they were dealing with agricultural problems—and I know the minister's intense interest in the dairy industry—did he place before that conference the promise that his party made during the last federal election campaign, namely to put milk into the schools? I am sure he is as aware as anyone in the house that this would get rid of the surpluses faster than any other known method. I am wondering whether the minister discussed this with the provincial people at that conference.

I know it takes a little time to solve all these problems, but I want to ask the minister a further question about the family farm. I am sure he and his party, and all parties in the house, want to have the family farm retained. What is the minister doing in the credit line to allow the family farm to carry on its tradition and stay in the family? Also what is being done, or what ideas has the minister evolved, to help those young men who want to come into this field and make farming their life career?

I also wish to congratulate the minister on the idea he enunciated with regard to machinery. He said the small farmer cannot afford to buy this machinery. However, I am a little confused as to how he proposes that the small farmer will get this machinery in order to look after his crop. I know the minister mentioned custom work, but I am sure he is very well aware of the fact that you may have grain or hay that needs to be harvested tomorrow and there may be many other fellows who want to do it at the same time. If we have too many wanting work done in the custom field alone, we will get into trouble; because you may lose your hay or your crop if you have to wait. Can he give us an indication of what he has in mind?

This concludes my questions, and I want to wish the minister a very merry Christmas and a happy new year.

Mr. Hays: I wish to thank the hon. member for Simcoe East. In so far as the school milk program is concerned, I might say we that we first discussed this with the provincial ministers in the spring. At that time it was decided we should gather information in connection with the school milk program in the United States and other countries as well as the various cities throughout Canada. We discussed the question again at some length at both the deputy minister and ministerial level yesterday. I hope we will have something that will be better than we now have.

There are a great many problems connected with the program because education is under provincial jurisdiction. There is a problem in having the milk dispensed properly by the teachers. Then, too, consideration was given to tying a school milk program to a school lunch program similar to the one that was instituted in Japan after the war. There is the question of accommodation in schools, but most of the schools have auditoriums and that sort of thing. I am sorry I cannot give more information at this time, other than to say the ministers would like to see something like this done. I can assure the hon. member the program is not forgotten.

In so far as the family farm is concerned, I have nothing to report as yet. We hope to do so at the next session. It seems to me if we are going to maintain the family farm we must take a look at the costs, and the costs that are pressing upon the farmer today more than any others are the high costs of farm machinery. In some cases the cost of machinery represents almost 50 per cent of the farmer's total investment. The provincial ministers are also interested in this question. Some of the provinces have gone quite a long way in attempting to solve it. We feel, of course, that we must work with them.

There is also an educational program in this connection. I hope we will be able to bring something to the house that will be satisfactory and will help maintain the family farm. If we are going to have the maximum amount of production it seems to me this is the area in which we will achieve production. I think we all recognize this.

There are one or two questions I should like to answer just to keep the record straight. I should like to give the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot figures which would indicate that the price of milk for manufacturing purposes this year is 15 cents a hundred higher than it was in 1962. In fact it is higher than it has been for many years. We know that we will be continually making improvements, but these figures are for the whole of Canada. On November 29 the president of the national dairy council made a speech which was reported in the London Free Press. This report reads in part as follows:

> A shift to cheese production from butter has helped provide the dairy industry with the most optimistic situation experienced in many years, President J. M. Hartwick of the national dairy council of Canada said yesterday.
> "It is now almost certain that cheddar cheese sales in Canada this year will record an all-time high of well over 105 million pounds," he told the annual convention of the central Ontario cheese makers' association.
> Up to October 31, output was higher by 18 million pounds than last year—a testimony to the switch in federal price support programming to place more emphasis on cheddar cheese and less on butter, a chronic surplus item in the past five years.
> Mr. Hartwick said butter output meanwhile is down by 11 million pounds. Process cheeses, using about half the cheddar cheese supply, were selling at a rate about 4 million pounds higher than in 1962.
> "Total consumption of all types of cheeses in 1963 will be well in excess of 155 million pounds," Mr. Hartwick said. Per capita consumption on the domestic market this year will reach about 8½ pounds, an increase of nearly 4 pounds per person in the last 15 years.

The president of the national dairy council feels this way about the new dairy program which was instituted on May 1, 1963.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, for the enlightenment of the minister I hold in my hand copies of bills from producers which indicate, in black and white, that what they received for their milk since the present Minister of Agriculture took office and eliminated the subsidy is 5 or 10 cents less. I urge the minister to record the names I am going to read to him and inquire of these people if my statement is true.

For instance, the minister might write to Mr. Gilbert Bergeron of Ste. Rosalie. He will tell you that he has been paid less for his milk than he was under a Conservative government. The minister might write also to Mr. Raoul Vaughel of Ste. Madeleine, and Aime Leduc of Ste. Madeleine; Mr. Germain Tetreault of St. Barnabe and Paul Emile Tetreault of Ste. Madeleine. These people, Mr. Chairman, will inform the minister what is happening in their own businesses. They will inform him that the price they are receiving for their milk is less. I am only giving a few examples of what is happening in my riding. If the minister wants to be good enough to turn around and ask the hon. member for Stormont, who is sitting behind him, he will receive corroboration of what I am saying.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Stormont is in the chair. I wonder if the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and I could clear up this other point.

Mr. Peters: Do it quickly, because it is one o'clock.

Mr. Hamilton: I have had conversations with the house leader, and I think as long as we have the assurance as to the right of parliament to get this information that we want, it will be all right. This is the first thing we are trying to establish. Second, we want to get the information for the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. If the minister would give an indication that he is prepared to provide that information by using the technique that we used in answering other questions, that is identifying the breeders by number and by province rather than by name, then I think at this stage we would like to see that information.

Mr. Hays: I will be pleased to do that.

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

An hon. Member: No; one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of saying anything on item 1, but after listening to some of the assertions made a few minutes before the one o'clock recess, I feel it my duty to remind the house once again of something I have referred to on several occasions—at least twice, on May 23 and October 15 of this year. While the minister was absent as well as all the other members of the cabinet, I mentioned that the price of milk in the province of Quebec was lower this year than last year.

During the speech I made on October 15, 1963, I quoted figures from:

Report on milk products marketing, marketing information section, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ont.

I said that, in August 1962, according to the figures published by the Department of Agriculture, the price of milk for cheese ranged from $2.85 to $3.05 and that this year, for the same month, it ranged from $2.85 to $2.97. That means a decrease of 8 cents per hundredweight for the farmers and producers in my province. We noticed that decrease in each of our ridings.

Before the adjournment, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) gave the names of the farmers who were getting less for their milk this year than last year.

Again, I would like to repeat what I said last May 23 by showing you, for instance, that a farmer in my riding, Mr. Jean Louis Lacharite, living in Petit St. Esprit, Nicolet, received this year $2.78 per hundredweight of milk, whereas he received last year $2.76 plus 25 cents per hundredweight in subsidies.

If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) wants to make inquiries, he only has to write to J. J. Joubert Limitee, in Nicolet, and he will be told that they pay 23 cents per hundredweight less than last year.

I do not want to put on the record all the payments made by cheese factories that I have with me, but I do want to say this to the house. We are the representatives of rural counties, elected to this house to champion the interests of our farmers. I submit that when an hon. member gets up to put on the record of the house a given problem, which entails losses amounting to millions of dollars to the Quebec farmers, members should at least have the common decency to listen to him, to read his speeches and to study them.

Mr. Chairman, those figures are not the work of my imagination; they have been supplied to me by the Department of Agriculture itself. It was not my intention today to point out again their appropriateness. I thought that we would have the opportunity to raise the question in the committee on agriculture.

Therefore, in view of those facts, I am of the opinion that this question will have to be solved in this house, because the way the committee is sitting now, with 12, 15 and 18 Conservative and only two or three Liberal members, we realize that those members are not interested in the problems of agriculture in eastern Canada, and we do not trust the Liberal government for the solution of our difficulties.

As I was saying, the price of milk is lower this year. Even if, in August 1962, the price of cheese was 32.2 cents a pound and the subsidy was only 25 cents per hundred pounds, the price of milk was lower, this year, whereas the price of cheese was 35.3 cents a pound and the subsidy, 30 cents per hundred pounds.

If you consider that from nine to nine and a half pounds of cheese can be produced from 100 pounds of milk, it means that there should be an increase of 25 to 30 cents per hundred pounds of milk. Moreover, whereas a subsidy increase of 5 cents per hundred pounds was provided before, we did not get that increase this year.

The other day I asked the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Tremblay) and the Minister of Agriculture to give special consideration to that problem.

We are now at the end of the session, and indeed at the end of the year, and this problem concerning the farmers of my province seems to have been disregarded.

On May 23 last, when I pointed out the difference between the subsidies of 14½ cents per pound of fat and of 12 cents per pound of butter, I was told that those figures were incorrect. I still remember that some hon. members even went so far as to contradict me. But today, they must be saying: He was right, those prices are lower.

I should not want to see the estimates of the Department of Agriculture passed by the house without the minister giving us a clear and definite answer on the matter, and not only the type of answer we have been getting since last May: "The price of milk is higher and those who claim that it is lower than it was last year are wrong".

Well, Mr. Chairman, those are the figures given by the Minister of Agriculture which confirm that I was right to say that this year, the farmers are in such a situation on account of the inertia of the Liberal government, and the inaction of the 46 Quebec Liberal members who do not even bother to attend the meetings of the committee on agriculture—we, the 12 to 15 Conservative members, have to wait almost half an hour to have a quorum of 20. We only have to note the attendance in the committee on agriculture to find out that there are only two or three Liberal members, one or two out of 46, while we are only eight Conservative members from the province of Quebec and we are at least three to sit on this committee to discuss farm problems.

We do not make long speeches nor do we give lectures, but these problems exist and they have to be solved. It is important that this money which belongs to the farmers of Quebec and of the whole Canada goes back to them.

I should also like to mention that this year a 10 cents a pound subsidy is paid on casein, at a cost to the federal government of $2,300,000. The price for casein last year—and no Liberal member is aware, I think, of the casein price last year—was 20 cents on the Montreal market. This year, with the 10 cents a pound subsidy, the casein price is 21 cents a pound, that is an increase of 1 cent a pound to offset the 10 cents a pound subsidy. Now, this means that $2,300,000 go to 13 Canadian casein producers, 11 of whom are from the province of Quebec.

What I am saying about the price of milk used for the production of cheese also applies to the price of milk used for the production of powdered milk.

I should like to remind my Liberal friends once more that when they were in power, in 1953, the price of milk used for the production of cheese fluctuated between $2.23 and $2.40; $2.31 and $2.40, in 1954; $2.21 and $2.48, in 1955 and $2.45 and $2.76, in 1956. But under the Conservative administration, the price fluctuated between $2.73 and $3.00, in 1957; $2.87 and $3.15, in 1958; $2.80 and $3.16, in 1959; $2.85 and $3.12, in 1960; $2.80 and $2.95, in 1961 and $2.85 and $3.05, in 1962.

Following the return to office of my Liberal friends and the promises they had made—such promises as the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) used to make when he went around the province of Quebec saying: "I know about eggs, dairy industry"—the price of milk went down immediately to $2.97, that is a reduction of eight cents per cwt., because the government wanted to save the taxpayers from $6 to $8 million.

Now, eastern farmers, will not even get the income required to maintain their operations, if this situation continues.

[Text]

I will conclude this statement now, but I should like to hear a reply from the Minister of Agriculture. Let him not simply tell us, as he has told us three, four, five, six or seven times before, that the price of milk is higher. I want to hear him explain why farmers in the province of Quebec are losing millions of dollars this year because the price of milk is lower than it was last year and because the prices of cheese, skimmed milk and all the other milk products should be higher by at least 20 cents or 30 cents a hundred pounds.

[Translation]

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the statement of the Minister of Agriculture concerning the improvement of costs for milk producers.

The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) stated, before lunch, that farmers had received 5 to 10 cents less this year than under the previous Conservative administration. I would like to remind him that he should intervene to the bureau of investigation under the Combines Investigation Act concerning the milk producers of his riding.

The hon. member mentioned the Glengarry-Prescott riding. Since I am the member for that constituency, which is the largest cheese producer in Canada, I should like to point out that according to the reports we have, the average received by farmers since May 1, this year, represents an increase of 10 to 35 cents per cwt. of milk based on a 3-5 testing.

Farmers who own their cheese-dairy received up to 35 cents per cwt. more than during 1962. Others who send their milk to privately owned cheese-dairies received between 10 and 20 cents more than last year.

Those who send their products to large condensed milk concerns even received between 5 and 10 cents more per cwt. than last year.

I should like to point out to the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot that if he wants information, he only has to visit the Glengarry-Prescott and Stormont ridings.

The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) claims to have prices based on statistics of the Department of Agriculture. So have we. It has been recognized that, as a whole, farmers received between 10 cents and 20 cents per hundred pounds of milk more than last year.

Mr. Vincent: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Ethier: When I have concluded my remarks, my hon. friend.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want the house to be under the impression that the new policy of the Liberal party is discriminatory towards farmers. I appreciate the fact that it may not be entirely satisfactory, but in my opinion, it constitutes a great step forward in the right direction, and the new policy of the Liberal party will continue to increase the income of our milk producers.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott mentioned me in his remarks, I wish to put a question to him.

According to a statement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), the federal government will save $6 million this year, by eliminating the premium of 25 cents per hundred pounds of milk; now, who will pay for that saving, if not the farmer?

If the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott can give another explanation, he will have to inform the Minister of Agriculture, who does not share his opinion. And if they differ on that matter there is but one conclusion, namely that the minister does not know what he is talking about or that the hon. member is completely unacquainted with the present situation.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Chairman, I think that the difference will be made up for by the increase in the support price for skimmed milk and such has been the case in my riding.

When the 25 cents per hundredweight subsidy was abolished, the manufacturers of condensed milk reduced their price by 25 cents per hundredweight only to increase it some three weeks after. In some instances, they have paid this year, in the ridings I mentioned, 5 cents and even 10 cents more than last year. Now, they may have discovered a new process; I do not know.

Mr. Ricard: It still remains that the government has caused the farmers to lose $6 million.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a simple question to the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott. What price is being paid at present in his riding for 3.5 milk used in the production of cheese?

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, certain cheese-dairies pay $3.10 per hundred pounds at present. In the case of cheese-dairies owned by the farmers themselves the price is $3.55.

Mr. Vincent: $3.55 at this time?

Mr. Ethier: Yes.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I was asked to give an answer, and the answer is quite simple. I have here the dominion bureau of statistics figures, and these are weighted f.o.b. farm prices based on actual fat tests. In August, 1962 the price of cheese in Quebec was $2.72 and in 1963 $2.76. In Canada the average price in 1962 was $2.66 and in 1963 $2.78. For concentrated milk, which would include ice cream, butter, powder and condensed milk, the Quebec price in 1962 was $2.63 and in 1963 it was $2.72. For Canada the average price in 1962 was $2.60 and in 1963 $2.67. Inasmuch as roughly 90 per cent of all processors in Quebec are co-operatives there will probably be another payment and, if not, there will probably be some sort of capital gain as the farmers own the plants.

Mr. Vincent: Does that mean that we have to take the figures of the bureau of statistics instead of the figures of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Hays: Our figures just show a range of several factories that were picked out. The figures from the dominion bureau of statistics are weighted figures for both fat and milk.

Mr. Vincent: Was that the same range last year and two years ago for the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Hays: They would be comparable with the dominion bureau of statistics figures.

Mr. Pigeon: I have a short question to address to the minister. Can the minister explain to the house what Mr. Sorel meant by his statement last October, when he said that the federal government and the Department of Agriculture are neglecting the eastern farmers and not paying attention to their problems?

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Pigeon: No.

Mr. Fisher: I have a couple of questions for the minister, Mr. Chairman. They deal with any policy or intention in the realm of policy that the government may have regarding farm cut pulpwood and bringing it under the agricultural prices stabilization board. This has been a general matter of suggestion. I believe it entered the realm of suggestion a number of years ago when the then prime minister was campaigning in Quebec. I have forgotten the exact date, but I believe he gave an indication at Rimouski that it was the intention of his government to bring farm cut pulpwood under the agricultural prices stabilization board. Nothing actually developed. When the hon. member for Calgary North was minister of agriculture he indicated that there were too many difficulties in the way. His successor had the matter under consideration for some time but nothing was done. I should like to know whether the government has any policy or any intention of trying to bring farm cut pulpwood under the agricultural prices stabilization board.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I understand there are many problems, but I can assure the hon. member the matter is still under study by the stabilization board. No decision has been made yet but they are taking a look at the situation. Other than that I cannot add anything.

Mr. Fisher: I am glad to know that. May I say to the Minister of Agriculture that we will want to know more about this study at the next session. There is one point I should like to put to the minister and his officials who may be considering the matter. One of the arguments against doing this has been the fact that the pulpwood market focuses upon the pulp mills and so tends to break up on a regional basis. But it does seem to me that, given the location of the pulp mills in this country, it would be possible to mark out six definite market areas, centering one upon the maritimes, one with Three Rivers as the fulcrum in Quebec, one upon Ottawa, one upon the lakehead or lake Superior region and one upon the west coast. It seems to me that the assistance this would give the farmers would be very great.

The provincial governments of both Ontario and Quebec, particularly Quebec, have been very concerned about the need for farmers to get a decent price. As long as we have the situation where it costs a pulp mill cutting off limits it holds under lease $30 to $40 for wood while at the same time the price paid to farmers ranges from $16 to $25 in the various segments of Canada, there is such a wide spread that we cannot help but feel that if the price were stabilized by the agricultural prices stabilization board it would be of great assistance to people working in this field.

I think one reason there was a disaster at Kapuskasing last year in which three men were killed, and one reason there is conflict rests upon the fact that it has been impossible for the settler to get a good price for his wood. He has been forced into co-operatives that lead to shenanigans, with management set against the union which is operating in a way typical of the old dormitory style camp. It seems to me that a floor price guaranteed by the board in the various parts of the country would do a great deal to remove the antagonism as between the union, management and these settlers, and would lead to a new deal for this particular kind of farmer in the lakehead and northern Ontario generally who has to depend for his very existence on what he gets from the pulpwood cut.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Chairman. We have addressed many questions to the minister and it is his duty to reply. Even if we are obliged to stay awake we will stay here if the minister does not reply to the questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the opportunity at this time to express my views on the situation of agriculture in general but especially on the conditions of farmers in eastern Canada, in the province of Quebec and more particularly in the riding of Compton-Frontenac which I have the honour to represent in the house.

First, I should like to stress the part played by agriculture in our national economy. Without getting into all the details, I would say that, with the exception of the western provinces, agriculture has known better days in Canada.

In 1962-63, the federal government provided $161 million for agriculture. In 1963-64, the estimates of the department have been raised by $11,213,360 for a grand total of $172,221,-160. On the whole, that is not even enough to settle several major problems which face our farmers.

It is very difficult, according to our set of values, to reconcile some figures, to account for the fact for instance, that national defence appropriations are nine times higher than those of the Department of Agriculture.

We are given some information about the farmers' situation which leaves us sceptical, because it does not often reflect the actual plight of our farmers. For instance, La Presse published the following item on May 28 last:

> In 1962, farmers had a record income. But when the reasons for this 6.6 per cent increase over last year's income are looked into, it is soon realized that western farmers are those who benefited from it. We are happy about this, but the problems of eastern farmers remain unchanged, the solutions offered are often unpractical or still based on the work of three generations to come.

On the other hand, a press release from the association for the expansion and protection of agriculture in eastern Canada incorporated, dated January 1963, bears the following title:

> Income of Canadian farms falls during the year.

Let me quote the first paragraph of that press release:

> Canada is at the bottom of the list of countries where the farmers' income has decreased last year. According to the annual report of the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization, the decrease reached 24 per cent. This has brought the net income of Canadian farms in 1961 to its lowest level since 1945. However, the cash income of farmers increased, owing to the sale of the stocks of the preceeding years, according to that report.

Here again, the marketing of those stocks concerns western farmers. To quote another sentence of the press release:

> It is difficult to reconcile the sad position of eastern farmers with the fact that our country should be first in agricultural prosperity.

I leave it to the hon. members of the western provinces to enlighten us on the various aspects of the agricultural situation in their region; thanks to the marketing of their wheat in the last two years, western farmers are sitting pretty, while in the east, most of our farmers are going through a very critical period.

The Economiste agricole of August 1963, on page 75, has this to say about farm income:

> For the first quarter of 1963, the farm income in Canada reached $654.7 million, as against $596.1 million for the first quarter of 1962, and $661.3 million for the corresponding quarter of 1961. These estimates include cash income from the marketing of agricultural products, payments made by the Canadian wheat board on the grain crops of previous years, prepayments on grain stored on western farms and deficiency payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, but do not include the supplementary payments.
> The increase in income during the first quarter of 1963 is due mostly to the increase in proceeds from the sale of wheat, coarse grains, potatoes, cattle, calves and poultry products as well as to larger payments made by the Canadian wheat board on grain crops of previous years. There was also a slight increase in prices for rye, fruits, vegetables, tobacco, and dairy products.

It is quite easily seen that with a few exceptions, the increase radically ignores Quebec farmers and most of the eastern farmers.

The same situation prevails at all levels of farming for eastern farmers, and in particular for Quebec farmers.

Looking for a few minutes at the 18th annual report of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, we note, for instance, that as far as loans for the purchase of farm implements are concerned, Quebec is not among the four provinces which registered a raise in the loans for purchase of tractors. Once again, with the exception of Quebec and Ontario, there was an increase in all provinces of combines financing. For the purchase and financing of several other farm implements, Quebec always has the honour of being in the last place.

As far as loans for farm buildings are concerned, Quebec is conspicuous again, holding the last place. The situation is the same as regards loans for the purchase of cattle.

What is wrong in Quebec?

With your permission, I shall use a few examples taken in my own constituency to illustrate quite briefly the unfortunate lot of our farmers. First of all, Quebec agriculture has always been in a different context and generally does not know the specialization which characterizes western farmers.

Our farmers who are not very prosperous very often do not have the basic credit required nor the necessary security to secure loans. They often need guidance. On that matter, the federal as well as the provincial authorities do not seem to be capable to cooperate, and if the problems are taken into consideration, solutions are viewed in the framework of a regionalism which does not take into account geographic, physical, social and economic characteristics of a given sector in a region.

It is true comprehensive studies on problems are necessary to arrive at a guidance which may be useful to the majority. But, here again, if I refer to Mr. Brownstone, volume 3, page 59, chapter "Land Maintenance and Improvement" in Resources for Tomorrow, I read the following:

> Within each government jurisdiction there are problems of a different order. Effective land maintenance and improvement requires integrated, or at least co-ordinated effort from a number of directions. At the federal level, and in many of the provinces, such integration and co-ordination exists (if at all) only at cabinet level. The federal legislative-administrative organization for the use and management of agricultural resources is administered by ten departments. Complete integration may not be possible, but greater integration combined with effective co-ordination is a realistic objective.

However, the fact remains it should be possible for our farmers, and here I refer particularly to those in my constituency of Compton-Frontenac, to obtain the services of consultants to study their particular problems, and to see thereby the production potential and the economic soundness of farms which cannot support the farmers if they do not experience some specialization.

On page 23, dealing with agricultural resources, I read the following:

> There is no doubt research on soil sciences, animal and plant genetics and agricultural practices may increase production. The proof was obtained on a large scale.

But our farmers are caught, and they have to live and support their families. The primo vivere is found here as everywhere else. They have to expatriate themselves to the United States where they find work as labourers and lumbermen and they do not even benefit from the unemployment insurance when they come back. That is the pitiful situation of our old regions in Quebec. In Le Devoir of November 28, my attention was drawn to an article:

> Mr. Paul E. Lachance stated at Roberval that farmers cannot be at the same time farmers and foresters.

Our forests have always brought additional revenues but for the average farmer, they cannot give him a living and often they prevent preparatory works that should be done in order to make the land produce as it should.

We have great projects in existence, ARDA for instance, which in the long run may give tangible results.

What our farmers need, at least in my district, is to know if, for instance, it would be economical to start hog, poultry or cattle breeding, or else, if on account of special factors, truck-gardening would offer a solution, the blueberry culture could be considered, and our farmers could draw some revenue from reforestation. Those are all possibilities, but, the very idea often makes the individual farmer shrink from fear.

Our farmers should be able to borrow without having to pay interest rates they cannot meet; they should be able to purchase tractors at low prices. When we consider for one moment the money spent for the production of armoured cars and other motorized weapons which after all will never be used in our time, it is inconceivable that the government cannot do anything to provide for the equipment of those who are the very foundation of the country's survival.

Therefore, I appeal to the government to restore the value of agriculture in eastern Canada, to take concrete and efficient steps so that our farmers may earn a decent living and not have to keep trying to make both ends meet. Above all, I ask the government not to get muddled up in piles of dust-gathering reports and red tape which only serve to get everybody mixed up and do not help solve anything in the end.

Members of the cabinet, the situation is alarming, there is a revolt brewing among our farm people, and not without cause. It is more than time to get some action. Our farmers are not asking for favours. They have shown themselves ready to work. What they need is tools and capital, and leadership as well. We are waiting impatiently for a realistic piece of legislation, one which will not give everything to the same people. We agree that it is important that agriculture be prosperous in western Canada but the eastern farmer also has the right to live, not as an overworked second class citizen but in all the dignity he has managed to retain in spite of the fact that the government has neglected him.

The Canadian confederation will cease to be a Utopia the day the plowed fields bear their fruits from the Atlantic to the Pacific and will not just crowd the Rockies, unaware even of the existence of the eastern farmers and, in particular, of Quebec farmers.

As the spokesman for the farmers of the riding of Compton-Frontenac, I ask the government to take action before it is too late. These are not threats but rather the result of findings which are only partly translated by the few ideas I have tried to express here.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, my contribution to this debate will be brief. First of all, I should like to say that I represent a farming constituency, probably one of the finest rural constituencies in the province of Quebec, with the constituency of Nicolet-Yamaska.

A while ago, my hon. friend opposite said that we have repeatedly stated on television and through other media that the Liberal party is particularly interested in agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, of all the assertions I made, I have none to withdraw, because the problem of agriculture is really for us the most serious problem, one which gets our very active consideration.

For the information of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) and his colleagues, I must say that during the election campaign, our party promised to appoint a second minister of agriculture, who would be especially responsible for agriculture in the east. And I must say that, despite this commitment, we of the Quebec caucus felt that perhaps we had not gone far enough.

In fact, we brought pressure to bear—and we will continue—on the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), that we may have not only two ministers of agriculture, but the establishment of a second department of agriculture, responsible for agricultural questions in the east.

That is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) replied that the question is still under consideration.

Consequently, the Liberal members from Quebec made representations and brought pressure to bear, and we trust that our efforts will soon be successful and give satisfactory results.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, before directing a question to the Minister of Agriculture, I wish to put one to the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette).

Can he tell the house how many times he attended the sittings of the committee on agriculture and colonization?

Can he tell us also how many Liberal members from the province of Quebec—if they have decided so at the caucus—were selected to attend the sittings of that committee, which has been sitting for a month and a half already?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I am not particularly interested in this type of competition concerning attendance at the meetings of this or that committee. In my opinion, the important thing is to find an appropriate solution to the real problem.

Besides, I may say to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska that I stood up in the house much more often than he did.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, one can realize the extent to which the Liberal members from the province of Quebec are interested in the problems of agriculture. I believe that if it had been up to them, the committee on agriculture and colonization would not even have sat since the beginning of the present session, for there were never more than four or five Liberals in attendance at the sittings.

And now, here is the question which I would like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): You did not even continue the sittings of the committee on agriculture and colonization? What have you done on your part? The committee has not sat since 1961. In fact, it was not even established.

Mr. Vincent: But when did the house adjourn?

[Text]

I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture to make a comparison between the situation in Ontario and Quebec. I am referring to a report on dairy products from the markets information section of the Department of Agriculture. I believe that is a branch of the minister's department. In August, 1962 the price of milk for cheese factories in the province of Quebec was between $2.85 and $3.05; in Ontario during the same period the price was between $2.75 and $3.02. In August, 1963 the price of milk for cheese factories in the province of Quebec was $2.85 to $2.97, a decrease, whereas in the province of Ontario the price was $2.98 to $3.28, an increase of 25 cents to 30 cents a hundred pounds.

Will the minister tell the committee why there was a decrease in Quebec and an increase of between 25 cents and 30 cents per hundred pounds in Ontario?

Mr. Hays: I do not think I can add anything to what I have already said.

Mr. Vincent: You have said nothing.

Mr. Hays: I recited the bureau of statistics figures and explained that in so far as subsidies are concerned, all dairymen throughout the country are treated equally. I have nothing to add to the figures I gave to the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

A moment ago, Liberal members from the province of Quebec were accused of not attending the meetings of the agriculture and colonization committee. The committee is supposed to sit at half past three, and that is where we are going this very minute, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the committee that it will be the first time that the hon. member for Lotbiniere attends a meeting of the committee. I think I know the reason why. There is to be a vote this afternoon and the Liberal members insist on overruling the decision taken by Conservative members.

The Chairman: Order. May I ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the estimates under consideration.

[Text]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, this is going to be my last question.

Some hon. Members: Hurrah.

Mr. Vincent: I hope you will applaud again after I get a good answer. I have a serious question for the minister, and it is going to be the last one. Is he ready to tell the committee that he will have a special look, not by somebody else but himself, into the problem which exists in my province in connection with dairy prices? If he is able to tell me that he will have a special look at this problem, I am ready to pass the first item of his estimates.

Mr. Hays: I spent about two and a half days with the minister of agriculture for Quebec during this summer. I was in Quebec and we discussed many of these problems. I can assure the hon. member this government is interested in all the farmers of Canada and all their problems. We know they have problems. We know there must be improvement, and we are making what we hope is a start in this way. We will continue to work for them, and I will be glad to go and see the people in Quebec.

Mr. Langlois: I have one or two points I should like to make in connection with the minister's estimates. One is related to a field about which the minister does not hear very much. I should like also to deal with some of the problems eastern producers are encountering at the moment.

On October 23 the minister sent me a letter telling me that he had given subsidies to the maple sugar producers in Beauce constituency, in my own constituency of Megantic, in Dorchester and in Frontenac. I understand that much of the 1963 crop has not been sold as yet, and some of it is going sour in the storage rooms of farmers or local co-operatives. The maple sugar business would be good if the government would go out and see if they could not get greater markets. At the moment many farmers are closing down their maple sugar business because it is not profitable; in fact at the end of the year they are in the hole to the tune of approximately $1 a tree.

I was at one meeting at which the yearly budget was presented, and it ran somewhere around $5 million. I would not have accepted a budget such as that. During the past five or six years maple sugar producers have tried to ascertain the market price for their product. They know what they are receiving for it, but they do not know the retail price. At the moment the producers receive from $2.35 to $2.50 per gallon for No. 1 syrup. I am sure if you bought that syrup from a store—I am not talking about the immediate vicinity in which it is produced—you would not pay $2.50 for that syrup. There seems to be some sort of control over this market to such an extent that syrup was not bought this year but left in the storage houses to go sour. Then, too, there is no relationship between the purchase price of the syrup and the return the farmer receives, considering the amount of work he has put into it.

I would ask the minister, instead of paying subsidies, to look into the situation and see if he can straighten it out. If the government were not paying subsidies I would not be talking about this here. But look what we are paying by way of subsidies. A lot of sugar businesses are closing down, and production of maple sugar is a typical business in eastern Canada. In fact production of maple sugar elsewhere in the world is rare. It would be a good thing if we got a larger market in Canada for maple syrup. We should stop buying extract which is supposed to be maple syrup. We pay a ridiculous price for artificial syrup; it is dearer than the pure product, yet the farmers cannot sell the real maple syrup produced on their farms. I would ask the minister to take this matter into consideration, and if he has any statement to make I would like to hear it, as would also the producers of maple syrup.

Another point I want to raise concerns the control which is developing over the sale of beef cattle in my area as well as in other regions, from what I have heard. This has developed as a result of brucellosis and tuberculosis in cattle. We are attempting to classify cattle in different areas and prevent their transportation from one area to another. A control is exercised in this way by federal inspectors. If they were provincial inspectors I would not mention the subject, but in my constituency federal inspectors have been trying to get all cattle to go to the slaughterhouse instead of to the butcher's shop, thus preventing the butcher buying direct from the producer.

If it is to be the case that sales are to be conducted only in this way, with the meat first going to the slaughterhouse, you will find the price will be fixed by the slaughterhouse, which will have complete control, probably indirect but nevertheless complete, and the farmer will know exactly how much he is getting for his beef and how much the consumer will be paying for it in the butcher's shop. This means the butcher will get a rough deal. The slaughterhouse will control the price and when one buys meat from the butcher he will have to pay the price which the slaughterhouse wants.

I should like the minister to scrutinize this point and try to prevent possible control or monopoly in the meat market, a control which is developing at this moment. I would ask the minister, if any of his inspectors are found with their hands in such a business, not to hesitate to tell them in black and white what are the opinions of the minister and his department. Because if the federal inspectors are left to continue such a practice they can control the whole meat market in Canada, in that meat would have to pass through the slaughterhouse, which in turn would control the price of meat, which would result in a loss to the consumer and the producer but a profit to the slaughterhouse. I would ask the minister whether he has had any representations to that effect and, if so, what he intends to do about the matter.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I might tell the hon. member that I have not had any representations about this matter other than his own. If these instances exist we would very much like to know about them, and I would certainly investigate them. I understand that the brucellosis program in Quebec will probably be completed in the next three years. This is a Canada-wide program. Farmers in many provinces who have cattle which are reactors to brucellosis have to send their cattle to a licensed slaughterhouse. That is the law. We have discovered a negligible amount of brucellosis in Quebec, but I will take the matter under advisement.

With regard to the maple syrup industry, they have sent representatives to see me on several occasions. The group which wishes to change maple syrup to sugar so that it can be stored were in to see me; they asked whether they could store it until prices were better. I will also take this question under advisement. They do have a marketing board, but if we can help them we will do so.

Mr. Langlois: Would it help the minister to decide, or would it broaden his opinion if I brought him some letters concerning the situation in the meat market?

Mr. Hays: Yes, I would like them.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I have only one or two points to make, and I will be very brief. On one occasion the minister replied to a question of mine, as reported at page 2450 of Hansard, at which time I inquired about the possibility of paying the support price for hogs and eggs on a quarterly basis. This was one of the promises of the Liberal party and I am sure the minister is well versed in this subject. On that occasion he felt there was no need for this. This was on July 22 last. However, prior to April 8 there seemed to have been a dire need for this type of payment.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Korchinski: If the hon. member is able to convince the minister about this, then this item could carry. Someone suggests it should, and if he can convince the minister that is fine with me. I am wondering why the minister has suddenly changed his opinion. I am not so much concerned about why he has changed it, but I am wondering whether there have been further studies conducted to see whether these payments are possible, and if not, what are the reasons.

The second point I want to raise is in connection with scrapie. I know that listed in Hansard by means of numbers are several farmers who have scrapie among their cattle. I do not know what, for example, "No. 1" or "No. 2" means, or where these people live. One could be my neighbour. However, my point is that if my neighbour has sheep which are subject to scrapie I should like to know, for the simple reason that I do not want my sheep subjected to the same kind of procedures as sheep with scrapie, and I do not want them wandering through my fences, and so on. There may be a valid reason for not divulging the names of these people, but it seems to me that I as a farmer should be able to protect my sheep from other sheep with scrapie.

I am wondering whether the minister has given the matter enough thought. I am sincere about this, because I think this disease can be spread unless areas in which scrapie is prevalent are listed and made known. There may be no cases in my area, but how in the world can we protect ourselves unless we know?

The department is very reluctant, obviously, to give us information on this. If the department does not want to tell us the amount of money which is being paid that is one point, but the point I am raising is that we should be very careful about this and should inform the municipalities in farming areas of the regions in which scrapie is prevalent, thereby protecting other farmers with sheep in those areas.

Mr. Hays: In connection with the first question, we spent two hours this week discussing quarterly payments at the ministerial level with the ministers of agriculture. The deputies also discussed this question, I understand. I can say that this subject is under review. We do not know whether we should be doing it or not. I can assure the hon. member we are studying it.

In connection with scrapie, let me say that this disease does not appear to be highly contagious. The best authorities believe it is inherited. When an infected animal does move into another flock, the procedure is that the flock is quarantined until the animal is destroyed. But there is no evidence that the disease is contagious.

Mr. Korchinski: Would the minister not consider designating particular areas where scrapie is prevalent? The authorities are not sure how the disease is caused or how it is spread. They do not really know whether it can be transmitted from cattle to horses or from dogs to cattle. If an area were designated the disease might be confined. Members know that animals affected by foot and mouth disease are destroyed. Surely we should be more concerned about measures which might be taken to control scrapie and keep this disease from spreading. It seems to me that the department is extremely vague on all these points and that it should make more information available.

Mr. Hays: I would be glad to give the hon. member a complete report on this disease.

Mr. Korchinski: Give it to the house.

Mr. Hays: If the hon. member wishes I will be glad to pass on what we have learned about it. The disease is prevalent in the old country and the United States, and my personal opinion is that the situation is not serious.

Mr. Herridge: Before this item carries I should like to direct two questions to the minister. Will he make available the reports on agricultural land in relation to the effect of the construction of the Luxor and Dorr dams, which were prepared by the economics division of his department?

My second question is, would the minister give the committee the names of the officials who prepared these reports in relation to proposed dams on the upper and lower Columbia?

Mr. Hays: I will look at those reports and check into it.

Mr. Herridge: You will give them to the members?

Item agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to put a question to the minister.

What does he intend to do in order to fill the vacancies in certain experimental farms, one of them being that of L'Assomption?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: We are trying very hard to fill all these vacancies.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Hays: We are doing it now.

Mr. Peters: The other day in the committee we asked some of the officials of the research branch what work was being done in relation to sterilized products. We were referring to sterile milk products, sterile meat and other foodstuffs. A good deal of work has been done in this field in other countries, but we were told that little had been done in Canada.

In the area from which I come sterile milk, sold under the label of Multimilk, is causing a good deal of concern to farmers, because the milk which is used is a surplus product selling at about $2.80 a hundred. It goes into northern Ontario and meets competition from fluid milk at about $5.15 a hundred. So there is a great difference between the reward the farmer gets for his share in the production of these two products. I think there would be less complaint if those concerned were bringing in fluid milk from the London area. It would still cause concern, but transportation costs would be an important factor in determining the final price.

If the farm organizations had known the potential of this sterile milk product before it began to enter the area, the farmers would never have allowed it to come in. They would have done the advertising necessary to counteract its sale. They would have been prepared, if necessary, to pool their milk resources and supply a similar product, presumably under another name, as a secondary product. In any case a competitive system would have been established.

I refer in particular to Timiskaming and the surrounding area, because this is the area where the product got its biggest try-out. I know it is possible to buy Multimilk in Ottawa as well as in other parts of Ontario. There is an argument going on around this product at the present time. The federal Department of Agriculture so far has not been able to decide whether the sterile milk is actually a processed milk product, such as reconstituted whole milk, or whether it is condensed milk and therefore a secondary milk product. This is an important question as far as the farmers are concerned because it means a 100 per cent difference to them in the prices they receive.

I presume the minister has some knowledge of this problem. I suggest the farm organizations should at least have been given some information about this process. I am not saying the department should get mixed up with the negotiations in the districts and in the divisions which are being conducted within the industry. Ontario has had more than its share of heartaches in this respect. But it is not too late even now to do something about this situation. The department has been carrying out extensive research with regard to the extension of this sterile product patent to various other foodstuffs, including meat. In the United States a steak can be wrapped in ordinary, clear paper and put on a shelf or a table for two or three weeks, without refrigeration, and at the end of that time the meat is still in a satisfactory condition for human consumption. There are, however, some reservations to be attached to this. The process kills most of the bacteria which cause deterioration. Milk does not turn sour and meat does not go bad. But the process is not capable of destroying all the types of bacteria which may be present, and the product may still not be fit for human consumption.

There is another point which I wish to bring to the minister's attention. Many housewives can go into a store and buy cream—this is quite a complaint recently—that has an additive so the cream does not go sour. But the cream becomes very blue or light in colour. When you pour it into coffee it does not curdle, but the taste is something out of this world and anybody smelling it would probably not bother with cream for some time. This additive is not illegal, but in my opinion some research by the department is warranted because we are now entering upon completely new technological developments in the handling of dairy products.

I was surprised when the director of the research department said that cream with such an additive had not been investigated. It may be that the amount of the estimate is not high enough and more people should be added to that branch. I am sure they are very capable in their field of research, but I think the farmers have the right to be forewarned and to have some advance knowledge of the technological advances that are taking place, because this is vitally important to the operation of their marketing agencies and the method by which they control the distribution of their production.

I am not sure whether the federal government is going to look after this field or whether it is the provincial people, with some of whom I had the opportunity of talking the other day. However, I believe there is an obligation on the federal Department of Agriculture to do the necessary research so that before any change in the product takes place the farmers will have the opportunity of knowing that such a change can be made.

I am sure you personally, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as you represent a constituency with a very large dairy industry, are aware of the developments that have been taking place in the last few years in the use of bulk tanks and other methods of handling milk. Milk is no longer collected from the farms every day but rather several times a week in the winter and perhaps more often in the summer. This type of milk handling has resulted in very large credit outlays on a fairly long term basis, and the farmers are encountering a great deal of this in the operation of their farms. It seems to me that when a large truck can come into an area and have enough milk under light refrigeration to supply that particular area, this is a hazard that the farmers should have been warned about so they might have been able to do something about it.

I do not imagine this matter can be decided today. I am not demanding that the minister give an opinion on it or express any indication that it is going to be examined, but I strongly urge that the minister at least consider it. It is a new and large field. In my view it is going to play a considerable role in eastern agriculture in the near future, and if the federal government wants to make a greater contribution than it has been making probably the cheapest way they can do so while at the same time providing the most assistance to many farmers would be in the field of research.

Mr. Latulippe: I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). Does he intend to re-establish the $3 premium on hogs.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: It has never been taken off. It is $3 now.

40. Agricultural Stabilization Act, administration, $504,800.

Mr. Pigeon: Is it the intention of the Minister of Agriculture to stabilize the price of feed grain next session?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, the whole matter of feed grain is still being studied. I would not care to answer that question until we have made a complete study of the whole subject.

Mr. Peters: The minister has now had an opportunity of examining the Agricultural Stabilization Act, and some minor changes have been made. Does the department contemplate the continuation of the program as it applies now, or is there a possibility of extending the stabilization of prices to other agricultural products, one of them being pulp?

Mr. Hays: Any policy that is good the government will not be changing but will be trying to make better. So far as pulp is concerned, we covered that before. I said the matter was under investigation. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister can give some indication whether any change in the support price of eggs is under consideration.

Mr. Hays: There is no change. An announcement was made in the house a few days ago as to the 34 cent basis.

Mr. Nasserden: I asked whether there was any thought of making any change in the future.

Mr. Hays: I believe the matter has to be reviewed every 12 months. We have just finished taking a look at the egg situation, and I think the floor is 34 cents.

Item agreed to.

42. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Coal Storage Act, $76,500.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have a particular interest with regard to this item and it does not involve agricultural products but, strangely enough, fisheries products. At one time the subsidy under this act used to be one third of the capital cost of the particular warehouse under construction. When the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was minister the one third subsidy was limited by putting on a ceiling of $50,000. When the austerity program came into being following the 1962 election the subvention was suspended, and we have assumed that no action has been taken since 1962 to give assistance under this item to those wanting to build cold storage facilities.

As I said, my interest is in fisheries products. Since this matter first came to our attention it has always seemed odd to us that agricultural products and fisheries products should be lumped together in the same department and considered by the same set of officials. We submit that conditions with regard to the two types of products are quite different, and that there should be a division of responsibility in considering applications for subventions to build cold storage warehouses. If that were done the Department of Fisheries would have under its jurisdiction the consideration of grants for fisheries products cold storage warehouses and the Department of Agriculture would naturally concern itself with agricultural products.

The proposition I put forward now and which we have put forward in past years was supported very strongly by the Secretary of State and others when they sat on this side of the house. I put it forward now not to embarrass the government but only to remind them that we should like to know what consideration has been given to the division of responsibility for the consideration of applications for grants, so that the Minister of Fisheries and his department would concern themselves with applications for grants for fisheries products cold storage warehouses and the Minister of Agriculture would retain his authority in so far as agricultural products are concerned.

Inasmuch as the subventions have been suspended since July of 1962, about a year and a half ago, I should also like to know why there is an item of $76,500 in the estimates for the current fiscal year for subsidies under the Cold Storage Act.

Mr. Hays: To answer your last question, this $76,000 is an old commitment. I think I answered the other part of the question this morning when I stated this whole program was under review. Although I do not think it is necessary, the fishery department in the past has approved of these grants.

Mr. Howard: I understood the minister to say he did not think it was necessary for the fisheries department, as was the case in the past. Perhaps I have misunderstood him.

Mr. Hays: Yes, it is not required by the act.

Mr. Howard: No, it is not required by the act, but what I am getting at is that they should have prime consideration in dealing with applications.

Mr. Hays: They do have. We refer it to them for approval of the application.

Mr. Howard: Then I misunderstood the minister in the first instance and I thank him for clarifying that. He has said this $76,500 is for commitments, I gather, prior to July, 1962. Could the minister indicate how many commitments, for what purposes, in what communities, and the total amounts?

Mr. Hays: There are two items. One is the Tignish fishery co-operative association and the other is the Belleville, Ontario cheese producers co-operative, $50,000.

Mr. Howard: Where is the first?

Mr. Hays: Tignish, Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Howard: Have no subventions been paid for applications since July, 1962?

Mr. Hays: The date for Tignish is November 9, 1961, and the other date is January 18, 1962. That is when these applications were approved.

Mr. Howard: I have been given to understand that there is a fisheries produce cold storage warehouse in the Magdalen islands. Is that the one to which the minister just referred?

Mr. Hays: No.

Mr. Howard: I understand its application came in after July, 1962, and I wonder could the minister tell us what happened to it. Has it been considered, or how has it been dealt with?

Mr. Hays: I think these are applications that are being considered but they have not yet been approved.

Mr. Howard: The minister said he thinks they are being considered. Are they?

Mr. Hays: They are, yes.

Item agreed to.

50. Dairy products division—grants and other assistance in accordance with the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvements Act, $1,073,000.

Mr. Peters: Is any promotion being undertaken by the department to subsidize the production of cheese suitable for export to Great Britain? There is a shortage of such cheese because fairly large storage is necessary to keep the cheese for six months, as opposed to the pasteurized type of cheese which we in Canada eat, but which has proven unsatisfactory to our European customers, particularly the British.

Mr. Hays: This is something we are studying. I understand we pay a subsidy of two cents a pound on premium cheese and the item here amounts to something under $1 million. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Peters: No. The problem is that we have two types of cheddar cheese. We Canadians do not pay too much attention so long as it is cheddar cheese, but the British will not buy pasteurized cheddar cheese. This cheese is usually held in storage for 30 days and has been very suitable for the Canadian market, but a few years ago when the Ontario cheese board tried to develop the export of it they met considerable difficulty, and arrangements had to be made for that board and the Ontario government to pick up a fairly large loss on the product. There is a market for 75 million pounds of cheese of the type suitable to the British taste, but the cheese factory in my area, for instance, which has facilities to handle high flash pasteurized cheese cannot contemplate the extension of storage required for cheese suitable for export.

Mr. Hays: I think I get the question. There is a difference in this cheese, in the pasteurized cheese, and there is even a difference in the fodder cheese. There is a market in Britain for more of the raw milk cheese, as it might be called, the cheese which is produced from milk when the cows are out on grass. I think the cheese board is having a great deal of difficulty making the other cheese as acceptable as raw milk cheese, but I can assure the hon. member that our research people are working on the problem and are trying to find out why there is a difference in these two cheeses. I hope they will soon have some of the answers because I recognize the problem and it would be a great boon if we could export more.

Mr. Peters: Will the minister keep in touch with the Ontario cheese board on this?

Mr. Hays: Yes, very closely.

Mr. Peters: This is a problem which is difficult for the Canadian people to understand for the simple reason that they cannot distinguish between unpasteurized raw milk cheddar cheese as opposed to pasteurized cheddar cheese. Both look the same and have the same market, so far as we in Canada are concerned.

Mr. Temple: Mr. Chairman, if these were the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys I would have no hesitation in speaking about Black Diamond, but since they are the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture I will confine my remarks to cheese in general.

Mr. Peters: Your Christmas present was appreciated.

Mr. Temple: Thank you. In the first 11 months of this year we produced some 19 million pounds more cheese than in the corresponding 11 month period of 1962, and I think the drive on the part of the minister and his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, towards increasing our exports will be quite successful.

There will be an increased burden put on the present facilities for the production of cheese. At present a grant up to a maximum amount of 50 per cent, or X number of dollars, is made available when two cheese companies amalgamate. I know that the producers are grateful for the assistance of this 50 per cent towards the cost of installing cooling equipment in their curing rooms, and for renovating and acquiring new equipment when an amalgamation takes place, but I would like to know whether consideration is being given to making grants available to a single joint stock company, where there is no amalgamation in the making, or to the provision of substantial loans for an individual joint stock company at a low rate of interest.

Mr. Hays: The curing room grants are available, or have been available, but not the others. I believe I also mentioned this morning that this whole matter is under review at the present time, and we will probably be coming up with some of the answers in a very short time.

Mr. Howard: Am I to understand, Mr. Chairman, that subventions payable under the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvements Act have been suspended, or are in a state of suspension at the moment, similar to those under the Cold Storage Act?

Mr. Hays: They were suspended temporarily, but we are taking a look at them now, on merit. We have some applications, and we have accepted some.

Mr. Howard: In fact if there is no suspension at the moment—

Mr. Hays: No.

Mr. Howard: —it will certainly appear to people in the fishing industry especially that they have been getting an unfair deal. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could be permitted to go back briefly to dealing with the Cold Storage Act subventions. People in the fishing industry have felt, naturally, in the past that they have not been getting a square deal, because the consideration of applications for subvention was under the Department of Agriculture. Perhaps what is of greater concern now is that they will feel more intensely that they have been unfairly treated because the minister has said that in so far as the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvements Act is concerned there was a moratorium on subventions but that has been lifted, and yet the moratorium in reference to the Cold Storage Act—and I assume these acts were both instituted at the same time, namely in 1962, as a result of the austerity program—has not been lifted. People in the fishing industry will feel even more concerned about this. At this juncture, Mr. Chairman, I would urge upon the minister to please, for heaven's sake, give an extra bit of consideration to this particular question—and not just extra consideration, but favourable consideration. I would ask him to listen to the Minister of Fisheries, who knows what is going on in the fishing industry, and let him have jurisdiction over matters concerning fishery products.

Mr. Hays: He does, and last month they were lifted. He has considered some. This is in connection with fish.

Mr. Howard: Am I to understand now, Mr. Chairman, that the subventions under the Cold Storage Act, in so far as they apply to fish—

Mr. Hays: No, cheese.

Mr. Howard: —do not exist any longer; there is no moratorium?

Mr. Hays: I am speaking of cheese factories. The fisheries department are now considering some of the applications in so far as cold storage for fisheries is concerned.

Mr. Howard: It is very nice that they are considering them. I am sure the people who applied will be interested to learn that. But why are they considering them if the subventions under the Cold Storage Act are in a state of suspension?

Mr. Hays: I cannot speak for the fisheries department, because the Minister of Fisheries approves those applications. But he has suggested to me that they are now taking a look at applications in so far as cold storage for fisheries is concerned. I would suppose that in the not too distant future they will resolve them. But they are taking a look at some of the applications that have been received. I believe they have two at the moment.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Howard: Just before it carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like this matter clarified. I regret that perhaps I did not understand this too clearly when we were dealing with vote 42, but perhaps with the consent of the committee I might clarify the matter now.

Mr. Hays: Would you like the Minister of Fisheries to clarify it for you?

Mr. Howard: Yes; but the Cold Storage Act comes under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the item has passed.

Mr. Howard: And, as the Secretary of State has said, the item has passed. The item has passed because we accepted the statement of the Minister of Agriculture with respect to it. But now when we get into item 50, which deals with the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvements Act, and I ask a question following the discussion on that item, I find the minister was not at all clear when giving the information under that item. That is why I asked if we could deal with it now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the minister's suggestion should be accepted. The Minister of Fisheries is ready to go on with his estimates as soon as these are completed, and he will be very glad to give an answer on this point, with which he is thoroughly familiar.

Mr. Howard: I quite agree that the Minister of Fisheries is thoroughly familiar with this point. However, if we could agree to this course of action I am sure we could reach an understanding now, so the Secretary of State will not rise to his feet when we are considering the items of the Department of Fisheries and complain that we should not be concerning ourselves with this question because the item under consideration in the estimates of the Department of Fisheries does not deal with cold storage warehousing. If the Secretary of State will give that undertaking, I will be quite hapy.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman did not mean the implications of what he has said, because I do not think he has any ground for saying that any undertaking I have given to him or anyone else has not been carried out.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, if the Secretary of State draws this conclusion from what I said, he is drawing the wrong conclusion. I do not wish to imply any motives or anything else to him. I merely at this stage want to make it clear to everybody, not only to the Secretary of State—although I made reference to him as being the one who might raise the question as to whether we were on the right item—just so the committee understands that when we get to the fisheries estimates objection will not be raised that we are dealing with something that is not properly before us. I want that understanding, that is all.

The Chairman: Shall vote 50 carry?

Mr. Barnett: I think it should be pointed out to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that the concern of the hon. member for Skeena might arise in part from the fact that we have already dealt with item 1 of the estimates of the Minister of Fisheries. I wonder whether we could reach the understanding in the committee that we will deal with this question under vote 50 of the estimates of the Department of Fisheries, which vote has to do with the Newfoundland bait service?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it matters under which item it is discussed. Let us have it under vote 50.

Item agreed to.

90. Livestock Division—Grants to agricultural fairs, exhibitions and museums in accordance with regulations of the governor in council; payments pursuant to agreements in force on March 31, 1963, with exhibitions covering the construction of buildings and other major undertakings; and a grant of $50,000 to the royal agricultural winter fair, Toronto, and freight assistance on livestock shipments for exhibition thereat, $751,600.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, with regard to vote No. 90, I have received, as I am sure the minister has, many representations asking whether the original intention of the federal government in making available grants to the class A and class B fairs could be extended to the class C fairs, because the class C fairs would appear to be doing more for agriculture than either the A or B class fairs. I do not see the fairs listed here, but one of the A class fairs, I presume, would be the national exhibition. Then there is the royal winter fair, the eastern Ontario agricultural fair. I believe they are B class fairs. C class fairs are those little fairs that are held throughout the agricultural communities across the nation which allow farmers to show farm livestock for exhibition purposes, vegetable displays, farm crafts and the other aspects of farming in relation to what is actually happening in a community. The A and B class fairs in my opinion—and I think this opinion is shared by many people—have gone into the exhibition class and are really trade class fairs now, rather than agricultural class fairs. The problem is developing in my own area where we have a very large C class fair at New Liskeard. This has reached the size now where there is constantly a great deal of pressure put on the fair board to include exhibitors who are not in the agricultural field at all; they may be automobile, manufactured goods, natural gas or any other entrepreneur. These people are asking to hold exhibitions there and exhibit their potential and their wares, rather than the agricultural people themselves.

If some consideration were given to these class C fairs, it is my opinion that these agricultural fairs would be the ones to really demonstrate the potential of agriculture in a given area. There are many small class C fairs that do a great deal of good. As an example, there is the Charlton fair in my area. It is very small. I do not know the standard for a class A or class B fair, but I suppose it has some relationship to the number of people who attend. Charlton is a small community of about 700 people, and is a fairly progressive potato growing area as well as other mixed farming.

I use Charlton as an example of what I believe agricultural fairs should do. There was a family a number of years ago who started exhibiting what I suppose were very muddy and misshapen potatoes. The judges who came from other areas to the Charlton fair told this family what the different types of potatoes were supposed to look like. As a result of this the family, by the name of Ryan, eventually was able to win first prize at the Charlton fair. They later exhibited their potatoes at the royal winter fair where they took first prize. Then, they exhibited them at the international world fair and their potatoes brought to Canada and the little village of Charlton the world championship.

The point I am making, Mr. Chairman, is that as a result of the education process which takes place through these fairs, people can often develop products that are able to bring awards to Canada and bring esteem to our nation. The hon. member for Cochrane, of course, could tell the same story. Over a period of many years, as a result of exhibiting in small fairs, people in the Cochrane district have been able to develop a wheat crop that has won the world championship. The same process has been repeated with other products.

The point I am making is that when you have people winning these awards who originally exhibited at small regional fairs, this shows the value of the small class C fairs. I am sure the minister is familiar with this problem. I am quite sure he goes to more fairs than I do. I am proud of the fact that I have quite a number of them in my area. I am sure he has seen many class C fairs, the ones in which manufacturers do not ask for space, and in which the farmer exhibits the products he has worked very hard to develop. It seems to me that this is the area in which the greatest gain to the farmer would be derived. The farmers who start exhibiting in class A and class B fairs probably never reach the top. Those who start in class C fairs very often develop products that win awards. These fairs, therefore, are the ones that are the most worthy of support. I should like to ask the minister to really consider this matter.

There are many young people in the 4-H clubs and junior farm organizations who would like to contribute to these class C fairs. These are the ones that the federal government does not assist. I am aware of the fact that there are difficulties involved in the way of grants for buildings, perhaps scholarships, and so on. Perhaps these awards could be given to certain classes who would be entitled to exhibit at a higher level. Certainly, in northern Ontario, there is a great interest in continuing and expanding the class C fairs. I should like the minister to consider this matter very seriously because it seems to me this is one way in which he could help to develop a better type of agriculture both in relation to animal husbandry, plants and grain.

91. Livestock division—special grant to royal agricultural winter fair, Toronto, $140,000.

Mr. Hales: I should like to make a brief comment on this item and compliment the Minister of Agriculture on this grant to the royal winter fair. I am sure the minister knows the great benefits this grant provides through the development and promotion of the royal winter fair, the largest and finest show in North America. Many improvements have been made around the buildings. There is the new entrance and the hall of fame, which the minister had the opportunity of opening this year, wherein the portraits of leading agriculturists in Canada and those people who have done so much to promote agriculture are hung.

If the minister has any doubt about where the money might come from for this grant, I suggest he take a long, hard look at two sections of his department. The first one is publications. I believe there are many publications going out that need to be updated. There is also a great amount of duplication between the provincial departments of agriculture and the federal department in respect of some of these publications. I think this results in a waste of the taxpayers' money. The same situation applies to the field of research. Many experiments that are being carried out by the provinces are being duplicated by the federal department. There needs to be more co-ordination in the experimental work that is being done in agriculture. I would, therefore, mention those two branches to the minister for close scrutiny.

Item agreed to.

95. Livestock division—grants to agricultural organizations as detailed in the estimates, $266,200.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to spend a moment on this item of $266,200 which consists of grants to agricultural organizations. It is a worth-while item. I notice that included in those grants is a grant to the federated women's institutes of $10,000. I rise to urge consideration of increasing this grant in the years ahead. I am sure the minister has knowledge of the excellent work that is done by the women's institutes throughout Canada. I have had knowledge of their work for some 53 years, their dealing with fairs, giving demonstrations in small communities and compiling the history of a community. In some cases, they have looked after cemeteries and dealt with legislation. I know that in two or three of the provinces the women's institutes have had a very beneficial influence on legislation related to the ownership of property by women, and their rights. I urge, therefore, that there be an increase in this grant, especially when we realize the shoddy society in which we live and the fact that many people fail to make any contribution of this solid type to the development of our country. Therefore, I believe the work of these women should be recognized by an increase in this grant in the years ahead.

Item agreed to.

115. Plant products division—agricultural lime assistance, $1,608,900.

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask one question on this item. It is a complicated question because it involves dominion-provincial responsibilities. Will the minister consider, or has he considered, the extension of the subsidy on lime used as fertilizer? There are many areas in which the cost of fertilizer varies according to transportation costs. It appears to me and to farm organizations as well that the fairly farsighted policy regarding agricultural lime, if applied to the use of fertilizer for agriculture, would bring a return to the farmers which in my opinion would probably be out of proportion to the cost the government would incur in making this subsidy. The farmers union of Ontario have asked for this on numerous occasions. The farm organizations themselves have asked for this. Their submission, which I think is a reasonable one, is that lime used in agriculture is only required for specific conditions. Farmers in one area need lime, while others do not. There are other supplements which could be added to the fertilizers on other farms which do not use lime but which would be as beneficial as lime.

I was wondering whether the department had considered the matter and were prepared to make some recommendations to the provinces at the next federal-provincial agricultural conference so as to ascertain what assistance the provincial governments would provide. I believe leadership has to come from the federal government, owing to our subventions, but I think the country would be interested to know the minister's thinking on whether this type of assistance can be extended. As I say, lime applies only to some farms, whereas nitrogen and other chemicals have a wider application and can serve a somewhat similar function on land on which lime would be unsuitable. Would the minister give us his intentions as to that?

Mr. Hays: I will be glad to bring it up at the next conference.

Item agreed to.

Board of grain commissioners—

130. Administration, $173,500.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, just one or two remarks on vote 130 which deals with the administration of the board of grain commissioners. I want to make an appeal to the minister. There was a recent change in the regulations regarding the definition of an elevator which would qualify for licensing. At the present time the act says:

"Elevator" means any premises into which western grain may be received, or out of which it may be discharged, directly from or into railway cars or vessels—

This definition precludes the giving of a licence by the board of grain commissioners to any off-track storage. At the present stage of railway abandonment I know that my asking for a change in the act is not very popular, because the present definition of the communities with elevators alongside "elevator" certainly strengthens the case for any railway track that it is proposed to abandon, and this provision in the act also strengthens the case for the elevator companies. While it is not very popular to take this position at the present time, I firmly believe that some of the railways in western Canada are going to be abandoned, whether this year or five years from now. I also believe there are a lot of elevators situated alongside railway tracks which could serve a very useful purpose to the neighbouring communities, even if the railway was abandoned. For example, at several places around Medicine Hat almost all the grain coming into the elevator is taken out again and hauled to the mills by trucks. So paying large subsidies to maintain some of these railways, simply on the pretext that they are necessary for the movement out of the elevators of grain, when in actual fact the railway is not even used for that, is to me just a nonsensical approach.

One of the first things necessary in my opinion is to make some small amendments to the Canada Grain Act so that these elevators could remain licensed by the board, even though the railway alongside had been abandoned.

I do not want to labour the point now, but I think it is necessary that the government recognize, and that the board of grain commissioners recognize, that some of these elevators could serve a very useful purpose even when the railway is not there. For one thing they could be gathering points for the farmers in the immediate area, who could bring in small amounts of grain and sell it. On the other hand, if the railway is abandoned —they would have to haul the grain to the mill themselves. When the elevator is full and the time comes for the grain to be shipped out, it is a well accepted practice now to send a fleet of trucks to empty the elevator. But as long as this provision remains in the act, then if the railway is taken away the elevator goes too.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a few words about grain elevators. I am not an expert on agriculture and I make no secret of it. However, I think that the minister must realize that at the present time, eastern Canada needs some grain elevators to reduce the cost of feed grain. This need has been felt for several years.

All I want to do this afternoon, is to ask the minister to act as soon as possible and to build grain elevators on the St. Lawrence shores, at the proper location, so that agriculture in the province of Quebec and in eastern Canada may take advantage of them. This is an important and urgent problem, and even if the minister is anxious to have his estimates passed promptly, I think that it is still more important to try to solve this problem, and as soon as possible. I am asking the Minister of Agriculture to do so.

140. Canadian government elevators—Operation and maintenance including authority to purchase screenings, $1,529,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, just a brief comment on vote 140, which deals with Canadian government elevators. There is a terminal elevator in the city of Prince Rupert, built, I believe, in 1926 at a time when the late Mackenzie King was in that area and predicted that Prince Rupert would become the metropolis and shipping centre of the west coast. I may say we still have hopes that the vision which Mr. King had then will come to reality. However, it is a fact that the shipping distance between Prince Rupert and the Orient is quite a considerable amount shorter than it is from the port of Vancouver or New Westminster. The problem is that even though the route is shorter there is sometimes difficulty in getting alternate cargoes in and out of Prince Rupert to make it lucrative enough for shipping companies to quote reasonably competitive rates from the port of Prince Rupert. As I say, there is an elevator there, which has a storage capacity, in round figures, of one million bushels and a working capacity of 800,000 to 900,000 bushels. The elevator was designed in such a way that its facilities could be duplicated, and it has been waiting ever since for this duplication to take place. I have had correspondence about it with the minister.

I have had discussions with officials of the hon. gentleman's department and with officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce with regard to the expansion of elevator facilities in Prince Rupert, but so far there has been no definite commitment that these facilities will be expanded. The minister's predecessor in office gave an indication to the Prince Rupert chamber of commerce that the government did not intend to expand or duplicate elevator facilities in Prince Rupert. I can only hope that the present minister and the present government will take a more favourable attitude to this question, especially in view of the fact that they are taking all credit for the immense grain sales which have taken place this year and have stated that the port of Prince Rupert, as well as all other west coast ports, will be used to optimum capacity from now on until, at least, next year or next fall.

I only wish to take the time now to ask that serious consideration be given to the representations which have been made by myself, by citizens of Prince Rupert and, again, by the chamber of commerce of Prince Rupert, which has submitted a well documented proposal in this regard. We are vitally concerned that steps should be taken to recognize the fact that Prince Rupert exists and that it is the finest harbour on the Pacific coast of North America, notwithstanding what the people of Vancouver might think. Shipping distances are shorter—

Mr. Woolliams: How much shorter?

Mr. Howard: It is just not possible to find a more suitable location than Prince Rupert for the establishment of grain shipping facilities. I urge this upon the minister now, so that when the new session begins one of the first announcements he will be able to make is that elevator facilities at this port are to be increased. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could even make his announcement during the interval between the two sessions. I will not go so far as to ask him to make a comment on this subject now, because he has indicated that the question is being studied; but it is one of the items to which I hope he will give serious consideration.

Land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects—Irrigation and water storage projects in the western provinces including the South Saskatchewan river project; the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act program; land protection, reclamation and development—

145. Administration, operation and maintenance, $8,229,200.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, this item reads as follows:

Irrigation and water storage projects in the western provinces including the South Saskatchewan river project; the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act program; land protection, reclamation and development—

I know that British Columbia is included in that program but I should like to know whether the government intends to extend the coverage to Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces, including Newfoundland, so that all the provinces may participate to that program since, in my opinion, irrigation is important not only in certain provinces but everywhere in Canada.

Could the minister tell us whether he intends to broaden the policy in that respect?

[Text]

Perhaps the minister would answer yes, or no. Is it the intention of the minister to extend this policy?

Mr. Hays: We spent a good deal of time on this the other day. We thought the particular items mentioned should probably be included under ARDA, rather than being an extension of P.F.R.A.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, but does the minister intend to change this policy now? I believe ARDA is outside this program.

Mr. Hays: We are giving consideration to the extension of this work under the ARDA program.

Mr. Herridge: There is an item included here amounting to $382,100 for forest nursery stations. Is this related to the ARDA program? What is the reason for this item being under the vote we are now considering.

Mr. Hays: I think that is under P.F.R.A. I understand it used to be under research. These trees are used for windbreaks, to prevent soil erosion, and so on.

Mr. Herridge: They are directly related to the activities of the department?

Mr. Hays: Yes.

Mr. Hamilton: Removal of this reforestation item from the estimates of the scientific services was done as part of the preliminaries to the establishment of the ARDA program. We had made an agreement with the provinces to enter upon an extensive program of tree planting, and there had to be an assurance that these trees were coming forward. I would not like this occasion to pass without that being very clear on the record.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): I should like to say a few words on this item. For many years, in the three western prairie provinces, a policy of rehabilitation has been pursued under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and excellent results have been obtained, especially in the past two years, with respect to the development and fencing of community pastures.

I wonder whether the minister is planning to increase the extent of these pastures. A lot of the rough timber could be cleared and the land brought under cultivation, with the result that the land, instead of growing brush, would have the capacity to carry a great many more cattle. If more of this land could be seeded down its productivity could be greatly increased. With a fence around it, it should be producing good pasture instead of brushwood. This is why I am wondering whether the minister intends to extend these grants so that more acreage can be cleared in these northerly lands and put under cultivation. It would not be so necessary in the south, but we, in the more northerly areas, have already proven what can be done.

Mr. Hays: This is a continuing program of clearing and seeding, and we are hoping that it can be accelerated. If we are to increase our beef production, which we think we shall be able to do in the next ten years, this is certainly an area where this could be done economically. As I say, it is a continuing policy.

Mr. Peters: I should like to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. There is a growing demand that eastern Canada should be shown some of the consideration which has been given to western Canada under P.F.R.A. and other agencies. It seems to me that removing this item and placing it under ARDA is nothing but eyewash. We, in the east, may get a few of these projects, but only at the wish of the province.

Farmers in eastern Canada need the benefit of some of these projects which have been developed in western Canada and which have proven to be successful there. I believe that in dealing with eastern agriculture the federal government should not divorce itself from some of the responsibilities it has assumed over the years with respect to the western provinces. I do not intend to press the point further at this time. But I think that the minister and the department should take warning that some of us representing eastern agriculture are not going to be quiet another year on this matter. We are not asking for the discontinuance or curtailment of anything in this regard in western Canada, but we are going to ask for equal treatment in each of these fields in eastern Canada. If the department wants to get along well with us they are going to have to make some concessions.

Personally I am not interested in the department saying these things are going to come under ARDA. If ARDA is interpreted properly by the department, they are going to have to face the fact that is a long term project to convert much agricultural production into other fields of endeavour. I think this is fairly fundamental. It is not a short term but rather a long term solution for agricultural problems. The provisions that are made under this item and following items should also be made applicable to eastern Canada in the same way they have been applied in western Canada, and the ARDA program should not be restricted to eastern Canada because of certain fundamental changes in agricultural production such as mentioned by the previous speaker in relation to fodder, which have been accomplished under some of these grants.

I should like to have the minister's opinion on whether or not he is prepared to give consideration to the extension on equal terms to the eastern provinces, of some of these projects now under way in the western provinces, which projects are administered and supervised by the federal government and not in co-operation with the provincial government. I believe, as many others do, that there is a field in which co-operation is necessary, but there is also a field in which the federal government can give leadership and I suggest that the experience gained from these projects undertaken in western Canada should be applied to the undertaking of similar projects in eastern Canada. I think the minister should indicate now whether he intends to extend these projects into the eastern areas and whether or not this will be brought about by the time the minister presents his next estimates.

Mr. Hays: In reply to the hon. member may I say I discussed this problem for three hours yesterday with the ministers of agriculture from the various provinces. They are very interested, of course, in the ARDA program, and from the discussion we had I would say they are also interested in including the things the hon. member has been saying the things the hon. member has been speaking about in the ARDA program, because they think this is the proper place for them. This being the case, we have not given any thought to the extension of P.F.R.A. and these other measures into other areas.

Mr. Peters: Will it also be the intention of the minister to eliminate the P.F.R.A. organization and include this work as an extension of the ARDA program? I am concerned about the fact that certain projects are being carried on in one area that are not available to another area. If the minister, and the ministers of agriculture of the various provinces, have come to such a conclusion, I have no argument with them; but there is a demand for equality in both the ARDA program and the other special projects that are under the control of the federal government.

Mr. Hays: This is a policy that has not been resolved yet. If it is, it will be a government policy that will be announced later.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, this item deals with the South Saskatchewan river project and I have one brief comment. I understand the minister is leaving very soon to go to Regina to attend a conference on the future water requirements of the prairie provinces. I should like to emphasize the vital importance of the problem and to urge the minister to see that the interests of the prairie provinces are protected in any program of water diversion, even with regard to a possible future diversion of water into the Columbia river into the South Saskatchewan river. I hope the minister will assure us of his intention in this regard.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I only want to take a moment or two to raise an objection to something the hon. member for Timiskaming said. I suggest to him that when he refers to western Canada he should say Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba if that is what he means, because western Canada truly and properly is British Columbia.

Mr. Peters: On a point of clarification, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member really should not refer to me but to the department, because the department has referred to "irrigation and water storage projects in the western provinces including the South Saskatchewan river project". There may be some difference of opinion in the department as to what is western Canada and what is east. As far as I personally am concerned, anything west of Timiskaming is western Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could intervene for a moment not to suggest that the hon. gentlemen skin their own skunks but to see if it would be the wish of the committee, of which I have taken some soundings and I believe it might be, to go on for the next hour in committee in an endeavour to finish the esimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton: We are in accord.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, before complying with the request of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), I should simply like to say this.

I read in the French version of yesterday's Hansard what the Secretary of State said yesterday afternoon about our motions for the production of papers. Upon close scrutiny, one realizes that the Secretary of State did not keep the promises he made last week and that he resorted to some tactics or tricks to prevent the house from expressing its views concerning the tabling of certain documents.

We are willing to forego the private member's hour, but I must point out before that it was very wrong of the Secretary of State to disregard his undertaking in that connection.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to enter into a debate with the hon. gentleman about the French translation of what I said. What I said I said in English, and without in any way reflecting upon the translators I think I can only be responsible for the words I uttered and not for words that someone else, however competent, put in my mouth. I certainly had no intention of deceiving the hon. gentleman in any way and if I did I am sorry.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: It is not only in the French version because the same words appear in the English version. I am talking about the French version of the official report because I used that one, but the English version says the same thing.

The Secretary of State had promised us not to transfer those motions for debate but he had more or less allowed us to put them to a vote, which we have not yet been able to do.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, for our part, and especially for the benefit of the absent former minister of trade and commerce, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, we are quite pleased to co-operate with the Secretary of State. May I say that we also agree with the contention of the hon. member for Lapointe.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would think that generally any suspension of the rules should take place when the Speaker is in the chair but on this particular occasion—

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that is necessary.

The Deputy Chairman: —and due to the fact that all parties have agreed with the suggestion of the Secretary of State, is that suggestion accepted by all?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: Carry on.

Item agreed to.

165. Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act—administration, operation and maintenance, $157,000.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that this very important vote represents a most interesting development to large numbers of people in Canada. I am just going to suggest that in order that the purpose of this act is understood and so that the persons who are interested in it will know what is going on, some literature be published indicating the purpose of the act and giving information with respect to the agreements with the provinces, what is being undertaken and what is proposed for the future. That would be very useful to farmers' organizations.

Mr. Rapp: I would like to ask the minister, have there been many failures or defaults in the repayment of cash advances on grain?

Mr. Hays: I would not know exactly, but I understand they are very small.

Mr. Rapp: Then I would just like to point out that in 1957 when we advocated these free cash advances we were told that the Canadian wheat board would go broke if we gave them.

Mr. Peters: Would the minister indicate what arrangements there are between the provinces and the federal government for the announcing of ARDA projects? I feel there should be a joint release from both the agencies that are participating. The reason I am raising this is because I only learned of the first project in my area during an election campaign, and it took the form of a political announcement. I have been in politics a long time and I see some advantage for whoever is making such an announcement; but if this happens it leaves the door open for members of parliament and others to involve themselves in the preliminary discussions on various projects.

A much better way would be to have the co-operation of the two agencies of the federal and provincial government in making a joint announcement, rather than publishing it in some political journal.

Mr. Hays: I do not think it is being done that way in toto, but the hon. member's suggestion is worth looking into, and I may say I agree with it.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes and concludes the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank hon. members very much for their consideration of my department's estimates, and I appreciate their constructive criticism.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the next department is entered for consideration perhaps hon. members would like to know the score. Seven departments have now been completed, there are still 15 to go.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

45. Canadian share of expenses of the international commissions detailed in the estimates, $1,162,000.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, when my estimates were previously considered by this committee on October 24 last I agreed to make a statement on the question of participation by the Soviet union in the conference on north Pacific fisheries. Opinion has been expressed in some quarters, especially by the leaders of the maritime fishermen and allied workers union that the Soviet union should be brought into the convention with Canada, Japan and the United States covering the fisheries of the north Pacific ocean. The hon. member for Skeena brought this subject up in the course of the debate on these estimates on October 24.

First of all it should be pointed out that the Canadian government would be glad to co-operate with the Soviet union in the management of sea fisheries. Canada and the Soviet union are now parties together with the United States and Japan to the interim convention on conservation of north Pacific fur seals. The Soviet union as well as Canada is also a party to the northwest Atlantic fisheries convention, along with 11 other countries. It is hoped that this co-operation in the development of sea fisheries can continue and be further extended.

However, in the fisheries of the north Pacific, in which Canada is interested, these being principally salmon, halibut and herring, a special situation exists, perhaps unique in the world, in that these fisheries have been developed either singly or in some instances jointly with the United States to the point of full utilization, based on scientific management at great national cost over a long period of time.

It was because of this unique situation that the north Pacific fisheries convention between Canada, Japan and the United States provided for the reservation of these fisheries to the nations which have developed them, and Japan agreed voluntarily to abstain from fishing for salmon, halibut and herring of North American origin in the high seas where normally there is freedom of fishing for all nations.

The Soviet union, whose fishing fleets and operations have been greatly expanded in the last decade has so far given no indication that it would recognize the special or unique situation of our fisheries. On the contrary the Soviet union has publicly proclaimed it is against the principle that any nation or group of nations can reserve for their own use the fisheries in the high seas.

At the 1958 Geneva conference on the law of the sea, Mr. Krylov, a delegate representing the Soviet union, made this statement in the third committee:

> The principle of abstention was at variance with the principle of equality of rights and the concept of freedom of fishing on the high seas. In the U.S.S.R.'s opinion no discrimination should be allowed against relative "newcomers" in fishing grounds already being exploited by other states.

This attitude of the Soviet government was further confirmed in an exchange of notes between Canada and the U.S.S.R. in 1961-62. On October 4, 1961 the Canadian government, being apprehensive of the effect on our highly conserved fisheries, of expanding Soviet fishing operations in the north Pacific, sent a note to the U.S.S.R. in which it pointed out the long and painstaking efforts of Canada and the United States in the preservation of the halibut of the north Pacific ocean and expressed the hope that the Soviet union would co-operate in avoiding any damage to this resource by its fishing operations.

In a reply dated February 12, 1962 the Soviet government said that it cannot agree with the attempt by Canada and the United States to question the right of other countries to fish halibut in the open seas and that the U.S.S.R. could not recognize the monopolistic rights of Canada and the United States in the area. The Soviet note added that the Soviet fishing organizations are not at present conducting large scale halibut fisheries in the northern part of the Pacific ocean; that operations are limited to the study of reserves, the habitat and the seasonal migration of halibut. The note ended by stating that should the Soviet government in the future begin commercial fishing in the area it would be ready to co-operate with the governments of Canada and the United States on a just and equal basis in the protection of halibut reserves and in the regulation of its catch.

So far there has been no indication of any change in this attitude of the Soviet government. Therefore, there would be little likelihood of getting the co-operation of the Soviet government in obtaining the protection of our salmon, halibut and herring resources to the extent now obtainable under the convention between Canada, Japan and the United States

Representations are from time to time made by the leaders of the united fishermen and allied workers union which also find their echoes here in parliament that the Soviet union exploits its salmon resources in the same way as Canada and the United States, that is, at the surf line, and the Soviet fishermen do not fish for salmon in the high seas. The same people argue that because of this the Soviet government would support the Canadian and United States position: that for the proper management of salmon, high seas fishing should not be permitted. Those who argue that way overlook the fact that the Soviet union and Japan have a separate treaty on salmon fishing in the northwestern Pacific. Under this treaty the right of Japan to engage in salmon fishing in the high seas is recognized, and at the annual commission meetings a quota of Japanese catch of salmon is set for each year. In fact, far from restricting Japanese fishing in the high seas, Japan is restricted to fishing only in the high seas at considerable distances from the coasts of the Soviet union. Therefore the question of Soviet participation is one for consideration by Canada, Japan and the United States. Perhaps the attitude of the Soviet government may change in the future and it will be prepared to cooperate in recognizing the unique situation of our salmon, halibut and herring fisheries, and that these resources, being fully utilized, need special protection under the principle now incorporated in the north Pacific convention between Canada, Japan and the United States, or a similar principle. The situation may also arise where if the Soviet union should exploit stocks of fish which are of concern to us on an economically significant scale and to our disadvantage, we may have to conclude that the best solution would be to bring the U.S.S.R. into the agreement. In such case Canada will consult with Japan and the United States on the matter. At the present time, however, for the reasons I have given, the time is not opportune to initiate any further discussions on the subject.

This concludes the statement which I had in mind in connection with the participation of the U.S.S.R. in the north Pacific fisheries. In their note which was tabled the other day the U.S.S.R. make it very clear that it cannot recognize the monopolistic right of Canada and the United States to exploit the living resources of the open seas in the northeast part of the Pacific ocean.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite evident to everyone that if the minister had had the foresight and interest to make such a statement when his estimates were being considered earlier, perhaps they would have been passed at that time. It is this sort of full declaration of support for the action, or lack of action, of a government that is appreciated by the house and by the country. It has cleared up a number of misunderstandings. All this difficulty developed because of the hesitancy of the minister to fully disclose what was in his mind and in the mind of the government. There was threaded throughout his statement very slight, but none the less they were there, insinuations which could be interpreted by members of the house as being directed toward them. I do not want to take that interpretation in so far as I am concerned. I will say, however, that it is a good thing for the country that the individual fisherman and the groups of fishermen find a voice in the House of Commons, for there is no question that the fisheries association finds its spokesmen here in parliament, and I think to bring it into balance it is necessary that all sides of the case are put forward.

I was very interested to read the exchange of notes between Canada and the Soviet union regarding the halibut fishery which was, as the minister said, tabled, not at my request but upon an order of the house, really, even though I initiated the motion. I was likewise interested to see that at the time of that order of the house to table this particular correspondence, an admission was made that there was no such correspondence in existence with respect to either of the five species of salmon which intermingle in the mid-Pacific, or with respect to herring; but only with respect to halibut. I do not want to be accused—although I am sure many people would like to do this; perhaps may even do it regardless of my contention here—of being the spokesman on behalf of the government of the Soviet union or the government of any other nation; but I think, in order to have all the information on the record, we should read fully the note from the Soviet union with respect to the halibut fishery so we can see that not only did the Soviet union contend in that note, as the minister said, that it would not recognize the monopolistic right of Canada and the United States to exploit the living resources of the open seas in the northeast part of the Pacific ocean, but the Soviet union also makes reference to their attitude about conservation.

This is from sessional paper 269, which reads as follows:

> The following is a translation of the text of the Soviet ministry's note dated February 12, 1962 and numbered II/2E in reply to the note of October 4, 1961 from the Canadian ambassador in Moscow.

It reads as follows:

> The ministry of foreign affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics presents its compliments to the Canadian embassy and with reference to the embassy's note of October 4, 1961 concerning the halibut fishery in the northeast part of the Pacific ocean has the honour to declare the following:

Then it says:

> The Soviet government cannot agree with the attempt, contained in the note, to call in question the right of other countries to fish halibut in open seas of the northeast part of the Pacific ocean. The existence of a bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States of America concerning the regulation of halibut fishing in the northern part of the Pacific ocean and in the Bering sea, to which the Canadian government refers, cannot be an obstacle preventing other countries from fishing halibut in the above mentioned region. It is known that, according to the generally accepted norms of international law, high seas are open to fishing by all states. The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics therefor cannot recognize the monopolistic right of Canada and the United States of America to exploit the living resources of the open seas in the northeast part of the Pacific ocean.

It is fairly clear that their contention is that the high seas are open to anybody subject, however, to any treaties which may exist. I cannot help but compare the attitude expressed in that paragraph which I have just read with the attitude the United Kingdom took to poor little, insignificant Iceland when it took steps to declare a 12-mile fishing zone, when they put warships and everything else out to protect what Great Britain contended was its right under international law. None the less, that is the attitude expressed in this note by the Soviet union. I think any country which has that attitude and carries it into full effect, without regard to the detrimental influence it may have on other countries, is committing something that is unconscionable. I think, in this regard, while the Soviet union in one sense may be correct in its reference to what it thinks are the accepted norms of international law, none the less the language is far too strong for my liking and carries with it the implication, "If you do not agree with this and if we desire so to fish there, other methods will be instituted to guarantee our right to fish the resources of the high seas". The note goes on to say this:

The government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics always proceeds from the need for international co-operation between states in the matter of the rational conduct of fisheries in order to maintain the productivity of commercial fish in the open seas at a constant level, while permitting the maximum permissible catch.

I do not think there is any disagreement with that statement. I think it is the kind of statement Canada would make, although I would have one reservation about the use of the word "constant" where the note says:

—in order to maintain the productivity of commercial fish in the open seas at a constant level—

I think the desire in all approaches to exploitation and conservation is not only to maintain the productivity but to see whether the productivity can be increased. Therefore with the exception of the use of the word "constant" and the desire to substitute therefor the attitude of increasing productivity, which is I think our goal, this is a statement with which I am sure the Canadian government agrees. I am sure the Minister of Fisheries has, in fact, made precisely the same sort of statement, perhaps not using those exact words. He nods his head in agreement, so I take it that is an agreeable statement and that the Canadian government shares the attitude referred to, namely that we should always proceed from the need for international co-operation between states in the matter of the rational conduct of fisheries, in order to maintain the productivity of commercial fish in the open seas at a constant level, while permitting the maximum permissible catch.

Then, I should like to read the last paragraph of the Soviet union note:

At the present time, Soviet fishing organizations are not conducting large scale halibut fisheries in the northern part of the Pacific ocean.

I think the same condition exists today, and they are not engaging in the halibut fisheries.

For the time being, these operations are limited to the study of the reserves, the habitat, and the seasonal migration of the halibut. If in the future the Soviet government decides to begin the commercial catching of the halibut in the above-mentioned region, it will be ready to co-operate on a just and equal base with the governments of Canada and the United States of America in the protection of halibut reserves and in the regulation of its catch.

While the note from the Soviet union starts off on a note of arrogance and disdain for what I consider the legitimate claims of Canada to protect that which we conserve in co-operation with the United States, it winds up in a declaration of co-operation. I think that note should be put on the record so that a clear picture is there for those who want to read it and who will appreciate the situation. I did not feel it would be necessary to read the original note from Ambassador Smith in Moscow to the Soviet union dated October 4, because, in essence, what it says is that "the Canadian government is concerned about your activities in the northeastern Pacific, and we would like you to consider our situation." However, I thought it was necessary to read the note from the Soviet union in its entirety and express my thoughts about it as we proceed.

The Soviet union is not now, so far as we know, as the minister said, engaging in salmon fishing on the high seas, at least not in that area of the mid-Pacific where the salmon from both sides would meet. I think they are engaging in the salmon fishery, but that would be closer to their own shores. I do not believe it really matters a great deal whether or not the Soviet union is in a treaty with us regarding herring, because our herring fishery is a relatively close offshore fishery. If the position of the Canadian government to the effect that we should have a 12-mile fishing limit is adopted and the boundary is drawn in such a manner as to include Hecate strait, Queen Charlotte sound and Dixon entrance, then we do not have to concern ourselves too much about inroads that would be made into our herring stock, because they would be almost entirely within our own waters. We would then have to concern ourselves only with those that spawn off the Queen Charlotte islands, and those have been removed from the abstention principle so far as Japan is concerned.

It is our salmon fishery that is of interest and of concern. In regard to the salmon fishery, I should like to quote from a publication entitled "Western Fisheries", for November, 1963. This issue contains a report on the recent meeting of the north Pacific fisheries commission in the latter part of November, wherein the Bering sea halibut quota was reduced by a little more than 40 per cent. There are some interesting references here to this particular question. I should like to read a comment by a United States delegate, namely Mr. Clarence F. Pautzke, commissioner of the fish and wildlife service and head of the United States section. At the opening of the plenary session of the commission he said:

> The commission failed to take adequate steps at its last annual meeting for protection of the red salmon runs of North American origin which are exposed to the Japanese fishery west of 175 degrees west longitude.

Perhaps I am guessing now, but I think the reference to red salmon would be a reference to the sockeye species. I continue to quote from the article:

> "The Bristol Bay run (in 1963) was smaller than was expected," Pautzke said. "The information available to the U.S. indicates that the Japanese fishery took a large proportion of the run. The run which entered Bristol bay was so small as to cause a disaster in the industry in the United States.
> Had the commission taken timely action, the situation would have been better.
> This should not be permitted to happen again. The commission must do more than it has in the past if it is to maintain any semblance of responsibility," Pautzke warned.

That is the end of the quotation, but the article then goes on to say:

> This was the strongest formal statement to come out of the meeting and reflects the grave fears of the industry in Alaska that the salmon runs of Bristol bay may be facing extinction under the pressure of the Japanese ocean fishery, and the mounting concern for other fishery resources, especially king crab and halibut, which are coming under rapidly increasing exploitation by Soviet fleets.

This article says that the halibut and king crab fisheries are coming under rapidly increasing exploitation by the Soviet fleets. Already the United States people are concerned about the possible extinction of the salmon run in the Bristol bay area as a result of the expansion of Soviet fishing activities, and the king crab and halibut fisheries are also under pressure. I think that if such is the case it should cause us concern.

There is no question but that the pressure of the population has forced nations to look to the sea for a greater amount of their food, especially protein products. It is quite apparent that the north Pacific fisheries are already under pressure from the Japanese. This gentleman has been expressing his thoughts at the discussion which took place in respect of the attempt to renegotiate the north Pacific fisheries treaty when Japan brought pressure against the fishery stocks of the Pacific upon which we have spent thousands and thousands of dollars in attempting to conserve. The publication "Western Fisheries" makes a reference to the fact that the Soviet union is increasing its fishing activity and it refers specifically to the king crab and halibut fishery. There is no question but that the amount of pressure from the Soviet union will increase as the years go by. The pressure will increase more and more as far as those species of fish which are spawned in our land, and on which we spend countless thousands of dollars over the years in an attempt to conserve, are concerned. An attitude of complacency, an attitude of regret, an attitude of interpreting the remarks of the Soviet union to the effect that it is not interested in international co-operation or conservation on the high seas is not good enough. It is true that the Soviet union's note of February 12, 1962, as I said, was arrogant, disdainful and disgraceful in its first part, where it interpreted the norms of international law as meaning it could not care less about what Canada does in the matter of conservation.

The Soviet union's claim that the right to fish the high seas, while in essence and under international law perhaps correct, in actual fact is, as far as I am concerned, despicable. We know that the Soviet union are masters of speaking with two voices; of saying one thing one time and something else another time. Nevertheless the contention of the Soviet union in the latter part of its note is that it will be ready to co-operate. Let me read the words again:

> If in the future the Soviet government decides to begin the commercial catching of the halibut in the abovementioned region, it will be ready to co-operate on a just and equal base with the governments of Canada and the United States of America in the protection of halibut reserves and in the regulation of its catch.

Then in November 1963 "Western Fisheries" says that the king crab and halibut are coming under rapidly increasing exploitation by the Soviet fleets. If that is the case I think it is high time that we got down off our diplomatic horse and dealt man to man and face to face with the Soviet union, and say to them point blank: "If you guys are going to fish on the high seas, fish which we spend thousand of dollars to conserve, then you had better get into a conservation treaty with us. We want you to come in with us". We should not wait until it is too late, until the size of the fleet of the Soviet union is such that not only will the salmon runs be subject to extinction, but all other runs as well. The time to move is now. I sincerely hope that the minister gets a little closer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, fights for this action in the cabinet, and takes some steps to deal with the Soviet union in an open and direct way in an attempt to save our fisheries from extinction. That is the matter of prime concern to people on the west coast, particularly the fishermen, and it should be of prime concern to the people in the rest of Canada as well.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong this discussion unduly but I am sure the Minister of Fisheries would be the first to agree that what happens on the high seas in fishing matters is one of the most important matters which can be discussed in the fisheries field. I think the quotation referred to in this communication from the Soviet union, in particular the phrase which says that it is known that according to the generally accepted norms of international law the high seas are open to fishing by all states, is a contention which has been promulgated by many other nations as well as the Soviet union. It is important that we should recognize that that attitude arose at a time when it was assumed that the fish on the high seas were wild fish. I think there is a parallel in the hunting of wild game. If we go to the areas of our own plains in the days when the buffalo roamed, the buffalo were wild game and fair game for all comers. The time has come when Canada should be promulgating new doctrines of international law in respect to fishing on the high seas.

I think we should take a stand which has its parallel in the law of the range, where in effect certain cattle owners put their brand on their herds. I think we should be raising our voice to put the Canadian brand on some of the fish now roaming the open range of the high seas. The time has now come when there should be a new approach in the field of international law to this matter so that it is clearly recognized that the fish which in effect are reared within our borders, and which for the time being are out on the open range, under any proper understanding of international law are our fish. This is a revolutionary doctrine, I think it would be agreed. But I think it should also be agreed that our scientists are doing some rather revolutionary things in fisheries and in the field of fish rearing. This calls for a new approach to international law.

The fact that we have these votes in our estimates to support certain international commissions is an indication that we have taken some steps in this direction. But I suggest that at this particular stage we should, through the Minister of Fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, be sounding forth with a much clearer voice than we have been the promulgation of this new concept in respect of those to whom the resources of fish on the high seas belong. I think this is more important to the question of the survival of Pacific salmon fisheries than it is to any other fisheries matter at the present time.

I think it should be evident that the great concern that is felt by almost everyone I have met in the coastal areas of British Columbia who know anything about fish, and the changes made to the north Pacific fisheries treaty annex is basically due to a growing appreciation of the need for insisting that those fish which go from our shores into the high seas temporarily to feed are really Canadian fish.

As the minister knows, I have expressed concern about this matter in a motion which is still on the order paper, and which I doubt will receive very much further discussion during this session of parliament, in respect to the manner in which the government dealt with the amendments to that treaty. My concern about the manner in which they were dealt with is basically due to the fact that I feel it represents an attitude on the part of the government of Canada which fails to recognize how important a public question is the manner in which these treaties are amended. It is not good enough. At a time when we should be seeking to gain acceptance in the international field of a new concept relating to resources of fish on the high seas it is not good enough for us to agree to amend and change treaties in a way which gives the impression it is done under the carpet or under the table.

In closing I submit that this parliament and the people of Canada have still not been informed in any official way that I know of that the treaty has been changed. I can find nothing in Votes and Proceedings about it. I can find nothing in the Canada Gazette. As far as I know, nothing has appeared in any of the official channels through which the government of Canada gives notice that certain actions have been taken. I mention this matter on the discussion of these estimates because I feel it is symbolic of the government's failure to appreciate the importance of what it is doing with respect to these changes which are being made in the north Pacific fisheries convention, in particular, and other conventions which, we hope, will be developed so that we may have a new concept and a new acceptance of international law on the high seas, a concept which will in many ways differ to such an extent from that initiated in this document sent by the Soviet union to our government as to be a complete reversal of the attitude which is here expressed.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, just a word to call the minister's attention to the situation in which our Gaspe fishermen find themselves. On many occasions, I received complaints to the effect that those fishermen were faced with competition absolutely—

The Chairman: Order. I wonder how the hon. member for Villeneuve can find a connection between his remarks and item No. 45 now under consideration.

Mr. Caouette: Well, Mr. Chairman, I keep to the text of vote No. 45 which reads as follows:

Canadian share of expenses of the international commissions detailed in the estimates.

I feel that it is always possible to tell the minister that it is still important to take into account our Gaspe fishermen who sell their products not only on the domestic market but on the international market.

When I was in Jamaica, I happened to see on the shelves in food stores sardines from Gaspe, bearing the trademark "Galcier", and also from New Brunswick—

Mr. Robichaud: There have never been any sardines in Gaspe.

Mr. Caouette: Certainly. Those sardines came from Gaspe and the shores of New Brunswick.

I think that the products we are exporting are of higher quality than those we keep here, in Canada.

Therefore, I call the attention of the minister to the fact that, in the field of international trade, we must take into consideration our fishermen from the shores of Gaspe or New Brunswick, so that they are not subject to an appalling competition from big companies.

Mr. Howard: The other day, in the latter part of November, following the meeting in Vancouver of the north Pacific fisheries commission, I asked the minister if he intended to make a statement or report to the house. He said his estimates would be up again shortly and that he would make a statement then. I see he has a document in his hands. Undoubtedly, it constitutes that statement.

I wonder if I might pose a question to him? He could then answer the question and deal with the statement at the same time.

My question arises out of some statistical information which was contained in a publication of the fisheries association of British Columbia called "Facts on Fish". Sometimes it is referred to as "Fishy Facts". I say this just to show to the minister and others that I do read different documents and publications on the subject of fisheries. In the edition of this publication dated October 15, 1963, the following paragraph appears:

During the 1948-58 decade, Canada's catch—

—that is, of fish—

—remained almost constant. The U.K.'s catch decreased by 16 per cent while the only other loss registered by a major fishing country was that of Norway which decreased by 6½ per cent. And, while the United States registered a moderate increase of 8 per cent in its fish production, Russia and Japan increased their catches by 77 per cent and 126 per cent respectively.

I call particular attention to the figures for Japan, the United States and Canada, because those three countries are participants in the north Pacific fisheries treaty, which is again up for renegotiation.

In the annual review for 1963 of the Fisheries Council of Canada, the following statistical information is given about the commercial salmon catch. I have here a table showing that in 1962 the total commercial salmon catch, all species combined, amounted to 839 million pounds—I will just give the round figures. By 1961 it amounted to 959 million pounds, or an increase of 120 million pounds of salmon caught in that period. Canada's catch in 1952 amounted to 150 million pounds and in 1961 it was 125 million pounds, or a decrease of 25 million pounds. In 1952, the United States had caught 352 million pounds, and the 1961 catch amounted to 314 million pounds or a decline of 38 million pounds. The Soviet union had a catch in 1952 of 256 million pounds which had declined in 1961 to 175 million pounds, a decline of 81 million pounds. The statistics for Japan are especially interesting and demands some sort of explanation. In 1952, the year before the north Pacific fisheries convention was signed, Japan's catch of salmon amounted to 80 million pounds. I think it will be worth while to add at this point that Japan has an almost insignificant amount of native salmon and does not contribute more than a pinch to the total salmon stocks of the Pacific. But her catch, in 1952, amounted to 80 million pounds. And in 1961 it had been increased to 344 million pounds, a total increase of 264 million pounds over that period.

Summarizing these statistics we find that Canada and the United States have seen their catches decline over the last ten years.

or so while Japan has shown a tremendous increase. I wonder whether the minister, as he reports on that meeting of the north Pacific fisheries commission held in Vancouver in the latter part of November, can also give an explanation for the figures to which I have referred.

Mr. Robichaud: It will be difficult for me to give an explanation of the figures which have been quoted by the hon. member for Skeena. The hon. member will realize, however, that such figures may not give a true picture of the situation because only two years have been selected, 1952 and 1961, and in order to give a true picture we should have the catch year by year. It is true that Japan has increased its activity in salmon fishing, especially in the last decade, and this could explain the increase in the catch of salmon by Japan by 264 million pounds. As the hon. member has mentioned, most of this fishing, in fact, probably all, is done on the high seas.

In so far as the advisory committee is concerned, I promised the hon. member when he asked me a question some time ago that I would give a report on my estimates. The advisory committee to the Canadian section of the international north Pacific fisheries commission held its second meeting at Vancouver, November 15, 1963, under the chairmanship of the deputy minister of fisheries, Dr. A. W. H. Needler. Members attending this meeting were Mr. Francis W. Millerd, fisheries association of British Columbia, Mr. Homer Stevens, united fishermen and allied workers union, Mr. Martin Eriksen, Prince Rupert fishermen's co-operative association and Mr. R. Stanton, Pacific trollers association. Messrs. J. M. Buchanan, J. C. Cameron and Carl Giske, Canadian members of the international north Pacific fisheries commission, the area director, W. R. Hourston, and Dr. W. M. Sprules, special assistant to the deputy minister, also attended.

There was a frank exchange of views regarding problems to be considered by the annual meeting of the international north Pacific fisheries commission, November 18 to 23, especially joint conservation measures on halibut in the Bering sea, measures to prevent trawling for other bottom fish from damaging halibut stocks in the gulf of Alaska, and the continued qualification of stocks of salmon, halibut and herring for abstention by Japan. Progress in the negotiations of a revised north Pacific fisheries treaty with Japan and the United States and the objectives to be sought in continuation of these negotiations were also discussed.

Item agreed to.

50. Newfoundland bait service, $1,771,000.

Mr. Robichaud: On vote 50, I agreed a while ago to give an explanation to the hon. member with respect to the subsidy situation. First I wish to inform the committee that this whole matter of subsidy on cold storage facilities is now being reviewed both by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Fisheries. We have decided that the proper place to have a thorough discussion of this problem will be at the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa during the week of January 20 next. This matter will be discussed at that conference then I think we will be able to make a decision and establish a policy.

In the meantime I wish to advise the hon. member that an application has been received from the Grand Harbour co-operative, Grand Manan, for a subsidy and the application has been approved by the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Agriculture. A decision by treasury board is expected soon. It may have been made this afternoon. I have not had any report yet.

Another group has had some communications with my department about a subsidy but they have not decided whether they will make an application.

Mr. Howard: I should like to express my appreciation to the minister for disclosing that information to the committee. It would indicate that while there is a so-called freeze on subventions the freeze is quickly thawing, and at least one application has been decided upon favourably. I anticipate one other application coming to the attention of the minister very shortly.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes. In fact, I had a discussion about it this afternoon with the representatives of the group concerned. I would ask my colleague, the Solicitor General, to move:

That vote No. 50 be reduced by $70,000.

Mr. MacNaught: I so move.

Mr. Robichaud: The explanation is that it is part of an item for the construction of a bait service vessel for Newfoundland. The work has been delayed and we expect that at the 31st of March next there will be some work to be completed in the next fiscal year. Therefore this amount of $70,000 will not be required.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution as amended carry?

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask one question. What happens to the seasonal prevailing rate employees in the other months of the year when they are laid off? If these people are receiving unemployment insurance it might be advantageous if other duties were found for them, so that they could be kept employed. It would appear that this operation is one that is repeated year after year, and these are not just casual employees who are hired each year for this service.

Mr. Robichaud: There are cases where some of the employees are retained throughout the year or for a longer period than others. We are making every effort possible to try to keep these employees as long as their services are needed. However, there are other cases where the service is not operating for a certain period of the year and, unfortunately or fortunately, these employees have to take advantage of unemployment insurance.

Mr. Peters: Benefits are paid on their behalf?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes.

Item as amended agreed to.

90. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,070,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, as this is the last vote in the department, in view of what I intend to say, I am sure you will allow me to be somewhat out of order. Before the minister concludes his estimates I should like to express in a formal and public way, even though it has been done before, our regrets at the unfortunate passing some months ago of the late George Clark, who was the deputy minister of fisheries for many years. He was a very competent and able person.

I should also like to express our congratulations to Dr. Needler on having been elevated to the position of deputy minister and to wish him and his confreres in the department well. I should also like to wish good luck to Dr. Kask, chairman of the fisheries research board, and to say generally that even though there are times, because the fishing industry is a very complicated existence, when fishermen may object strenuously and violently to the closures and other conservation measures that are imposed, and even though some may object when they are penalized for fishing at times and in places where they should not fish, nevertheless in the fishing industry of British Columbia there is general approbation of the officials and staff of the Department of Fisheries. For my own part I share that feeling as well.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, in concluding the estimates I wish to thank members of the committee for their co-operation in passing them.

[Mr. Peters.]

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

1. Customs and excise division—general administration, $5,270,500.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Is it understood that at seven o'clock this is the item we will be on, national revenue?

The Chairman: That is my understanding.

Mr. MacNaught: That is correct.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: Shall this vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Churchill: We hope the minister will make a very short statement.

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): I shall be delighted to oblige in the short aspect of it. The estimates before the committee are those covered by votes Nos. 1, 5, 10, and 15, and they provide for the financing of the 1963-64 operations of the customs and excise division of the Department of National Revenue. I should point out to the committee that these estimates are quite separate from the estimates of the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue and I would ask the committee's co-operation, as in past years, in keeping the discussions of them separate. It seems past experience has shown that more orderly and effective discussion is possible in this manner.

These customs and excise estimates total $40,571,400 and do not include some $2,341,000 supplementary moneys provided for the most recent revisions of salaries. Of course, as members of the committee know, salaries make up most of these estimates and in fact account for more than 93 per cent of the total.

A great deal can be said about the operations of this division which last year was responsible for collecting $2,397 million in customs and excise revenues. However, in view of the rather tight schedule of the committee I will limit myself to saying that in the short time I have been Minister of National Revenue I have been greatly impressed by the efficiency and forward-looking spirit which I feel characterizes the policies of the administration of the customs and excise division.

The record bears this out. It shows, for example, that last year, 1962-63, the total of revenue collections was close to $470 million more than was collected in 1958-59. The record shows also that during this period almost every area of customs and excise operations experienced considerable development and growth. Yet, notwithstanding these additional demands on its resources and staff, the customs and excise division has during this period, through good management actually reduced its personnel establishment. At the commencement of the current fiscal year this division had 518 fewer employees than it had five years ago, which represents an annual savings of over $2 million. Such is the record of the administration of the customs and excise division, and I think that it speaks for itself.

I shall be pleased to do my best to answer any questions that hon. members may wish to raise, and I again would ask their co-operation in considering the customs and excise division separate from the taxation division. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the committee would permit me to inject a personal note here. I would like to express my thanks —this is the first opportunity I have had to do so publicly—to my predecessor, the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, for assisting in the smooth transition following the change of government and the take over of this department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Garland: I would also express the hope that I might enjoy, in the passage of these estimates, at least some degree of the success that was enjoyed by another predecessor, the very able, well respected hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I have a few words to say about certain administrative procedures in the income tax office of my riding—

The Chairman: May I remind the hon. member for Villeneuve that following the suggestion of the Minister of National Revenue, it would be advisable to consider at first the first items relating to the customs and excise division, that is items 1 to 20. After item 20, we shall be considering the estimates of the taxation division.

Mr. Caouette: I gladly agree with your suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for his co-operation.

Mr. Gregoire: Agreed.

Item agreed to.

Taxation division—

20. General administration, $3,906,300.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I come now to some remarks I want to make about the income tax office located at Rouyn, in my riding of Villeneuve.

As in all the other income tax districts, naturally, methods are being used which I believe may not be known to the minister himself but which are certainly known to his officials. I am thinking here of those tyrants, those zealous men who seem to be envious of those who succeed and who take pleasure in torturing them with very little reason or no reason at all by making them believe that they will be severely punished by the income tax division if they do not conform to their rules. Hence, those officials misuse their authority and act with arrogance.

I had a personal knowledge of actions by certain inspectors of the income tax in the division of Rouyn-Noranda, which comprises the whole northwest region of the province of Quebec. Let me give you a name. One Mr. Bob Hardy, for instance, is an inspector who checks the bookkeeping and takes pleasure in fining small businessmen because they do not send to the department, at the required date, the amount collected from their employees as income tax. He even threatens to send them to prison if they do not send their cheques at once for the tax collected and this, on top of the fine which is imposed.

This Mr. Hardy is a big man and he seems to be all-powerful in his department. Therefore, I vigorously protest against the actions of those federal employees. If the officials of the division know about such things, a man such as Bob Hardy of the Rouyn division, should be made to toe the line and be called to order.

I also would like to call the minister's attention to the matter of charity receipts, about which the minister has probably heard.

The figures of charity receipts submitted to the minister have been cut down, particularly since the present government came to power. Last year, and the year before that, we met with much less difficulties; but this year, it seems that everybody is acting in collusion, to harass not the taxpayer who, is not bothered in his own home, but rather the parish priest who is being disturbed at his residence, and asked to check his books, in order to certify whether Mr. So-and-so has given $100, $200 or $50 to charity. Then, in a most arbitrary manner, the authorities cut down the total amount of the charity receipts which the Canadian taxpayer was able to deduct from his income tax return.

I know of several cases in my own county, where people had charity receipts for a total figure of $500 or $600, and where the income tax officer in Rouyn, on his own authority, and without consulting the taxpayers, brought down those figures by $400 or $500, and stated that he had established that $200 and no more had been given to charity. How could this income tax officer know what went to charity, and was given by the taxpayer?

There is a way to remedy the situation and forget altogether about charity receipts. The minister could decree a general abatement of the income tax for charity, up to 10 per cent of the personal income. This would stop the harassment of Canadian citizens by income tax inspectors.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out another matter to the minister. When people send in their income tax returns a few days after the deadline, the department automatically fines them. Is that logical? I find it strange then that the department has never thought of paying some interest to taxpayers who are entitled to a refund. These people may wait for weeks, or even months, before getting their refunds, but they are not granted any interest, for the government does not pay fines. After all, these taxpayers are deprived of a part of their income for a given period of time, but woe to the taxpayer who does not send in his income tax at the date set by the department, for he will certainly be fined. I see the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) shaking his head. If that does not happen in his riding, it does in mine and I am quite sure that it does happen in his riding.

Mr. Gregoire: It is because the member for Edmonton West never meets his electors.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Lapointe is probably right on that point.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wished to make. Something has to be changed in the administration of the Income Tax Act. For instance, employees of that department should show more courtesy when they meet the taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, those inspectors are not our employers. They are government employees. They are at the service of the Canadian people and they must respect the human persons they have to deal with. Therefore, those civil servants should be a little more courteous towards the Canadian taxpayers.

[Text]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just a few brief remarks after complimenting the minister. It is very refreshing to have a minister begin his estimates by generously acknowledging his predecessors. This is one way in which I am certain he can expect, and will receive, the full co-operation of the house. Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring in a private bill, if necessary, to assist our school teachers across the country in the way of providing them with some exemptions from income tax. This is of course impossible under the rules, so I just bring to the attention of the minister and his officials this very important subject.

Most of our teachers all across Canada are anxious to upgrade their own academic standing and so be in a better position to train our young people in the very competitive world in which they find themselves. In order to do this, often at great sacrifice on their part they are obliged to re-enter university. Some of them have to go back to university and attend summer school for a period of eight or ten years in order to get the qualifications necessary to be able to teach our young people in this ever-increasingly technical world. I should like to suggest that every consideration be given to the granting of a tax exemption of a reasonable amount to school teachers to cover their tuition, books and perhaps their maintenance during the summer months when they are obliged to go back to university.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, only a few words to remind the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland) of a request I addressed him during the fall concerning many taxpayers in the east of the province of Quebec who have to send their income tax returns to the Montreal office and who always eagerly wait for a refund of the tax they overpaid during the year.

I noted that after representations by the minister, the civil servants of the Montreal office did speed up the revision of files. But numerous family heads have been particularly anxious in the last couple of weeks to receive the tax refund they think they are entitled to and I hope that the minister, with his recognized and proverbial kindness, will ask once again the civil servants in his department to speed up the revision of files so that the taxpayers can get the tax refund due them at least before the end of the year.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, just a few brief comments.

I too wish to come back on this matter of receipts for charitable donations since, in the Quebec area and in my constituency especially, many complaints have been made on this subject.

If I am not mistaken about the provisions of the Income Tax Act, taxpayers may deduct, for charitable purposes, up to 10 per cent of their taxable income. This means then that a person who submits a receipt in proper form, signed by the religious authorities or the organizations to which the donations were made, can deduct up to that amount from his taxable income.

Now, such receipts are often rejected, in whole or in part, by income tax officers. If the idea is to refuse to grant deductions for these charitable donations, the thing to do is to amend the legislation. But, at this time the act allows a tax deduction up to 10 per cent of the taxable income, for charitable donations.

Moreover, I believe that the investigators, under the act, do not have a legal right to reduce claims for charitable donations, putting forward various excuses for doing so.

What is even worse is that when somebody complains, the answer is that the case was studied, that inquiries were conducted and that it was finally established that the amount to be claimed for charitable purposes did not reach the amount appearing on the receipts.

Mr. Chairman, I am not able to prove the contrary, but I would really like those officials to actually prove that they conducted an inquiry, that they did get the exact figures, since, after all, those figures can come only from those who have submitted them.

Consequently, if the receipts indicate a certain amount, I cannot understand how the investigators can state it is otherwise, or that the amount claimed was not paid.

Mr. Chairman, we receive numerous complaints to that effect, particularly in the Quebec district. That is why I wanted to call the attention of the house on this state of affairs, which is becoming a sort of tragedy. Some other procedure should be found.

The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) suggested a method a short while ago. I believe there are no doubt others. In fact, somebody has already suggested a reduction on the tax rate for the first taxable amount of $1,000, so that the taxpayers could, without receipt, benefit from abatements almost identical.

Mr. Chairman, another problem on which I wish to call the attention of the house is that of small industries manufacturing products which are called seasonal products. The industry itself is not seasonal, but the products are.

For instance, let us take the case of the manufacturers of gloves, mitts, boots and slippers. Those manufacturers accept orders during most of the year, but as soon as they have accepted the order, they must pay the federal sales tax, according to the regulations of the Department of National Revenue. However, that sales tax is not refunded to them until the bill is paid, that is not until a period of at least six months, or even more, has elapsed.

There are many such industries in my constituency, considerably several of which manufacture various leather articles. The directors of those industries are obliged to bear for six months at least, sometimes longer, the cost of the federal tax which they must pay at the time of the order and which is refunded to them only when the bill is paid.

Mr. Chairman, this procedure, I think, affects the development of those small industries which we claim we want to help but which are prevented from surviving by similar things like that.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe that the Minister of National Revenue should be able to change the legislation in order to remove all the economic harassment the small industrialists are subjected to at this time.

I have already contacted the officials of the Department of National Revenue about this and I have been told that it was difficult to determine the marginal difference between small and large industries. I admit that, but it should be possible to set a criterion which could be based either on the number of employees or the number of working hours, it does not matter which. This is a problem which it is up to the officials to settle. As far as we are concerned, what we want is results. We do not want small businessmen to have to wait months for the refund of a sales tax they had to pay in taking an order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, first I want to say that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland) is possibly the nicest and the most pleasant Canadian citizen I have had the pleasure to meet. And I say this not to flatter him but because I believe it. However, I must add that I doubt there is a more unpleasant department than the one he heads.

To be head of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration that is encouraging. To administer the Department of the Secretary of State, that is also encouraging. But to be Minister of National Revenue, to be the boss of those who empty our pockets, that, Mr. Chairman, is a very thankless job.

And I must say that the minister deserves all our sympathy.

I must also confess that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) chose the present Minister of National Revenue, he chose one of the nicest and most charming members to fill that most thankless job.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I must recognize that I have no reason to complain about the attitude of the revenue officials in my riding or my district because we have none. There is no district income tax office in the Saguenay-Lake St. John area. There is none in such towns as Jonquiere, Alma, Roberval, etc. In fact, the nearest office is in Quebec city, which means that taxpayers of my region have to travel 135 miles if they wish to submit a claim of some sort to the income tax people.

Mr. Caouette: You are better off than we are, because we have one.

The hon. member for Villeneuve says that they are better favoured than we are because they have one. But I must admit that even though they are in Quebec, the inspectors are efficient enough to come and grab it. But when they want to protest, taxpayers find it far. I say that the people of Saguenay-Lake St. John are in an inferior position when it comes to appealing against the decisions of the Department of National Revenue, dispute its decisions, try to obtain information, let their opinions be known.

I recognize that the farther we are from taxation inspectors, the better it is; nevertheless, it is sometimes convenient to have them near us in order to let them know what we think.

Mr. Chairman, the only thing I should like to point out tonight is the question of charity receipts. It is well known and even striking—the minister must admit it today—that the legislation is ill conceived. Something should be changed in the act. As a rule, a 10 per cent deduction is granted to those who file charity receipts, but we ought to remember what Christ said: let not thy left hand know what your right hand does; in other words: make charitable donations but do not proclaim it on housetops.

Now, with the Minister of National Revenue, receipts are needed; everything must be in good order. Just try and make a charitable donation to an organization that is not recognized by the department or to an individual who needs it badly and is not recognized either; then it is not accepted. In my opinion, it is distorting the true meaning of Christian charity as it is usually understood. I see that the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) approves what I am saying now. All that means only one thing, Mr. Chairman; the act is defective and should be revised.

One good solution would be to do away with this business of receipts and give a general rebate of 10 per cent on the first $3,000, for instance, 7½ per cent on the next $2,000 and 5 per cent on incomes of more than $5,000. That is the first point. We must change this antiquated and immoral act which goes against all principles of true charity.

It should not be forgotten either that, under the present legislation, unjustified investigations and inquiries are being made in rectories and religious establishments.

The parish priest and his assistants are not employees of the Department of National Revenue; they are not there to represent them, but to help their parishioners and devote themselves to parochial tasks. Therefore, it is a practice that should disappear.

Those inspectors of national revenue are arrogant, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Villeneuve has said. Not that they are so personally, but because of the legislation of which they are the servants, and because of the zeal which they display and the stale atmosphere which prevails in the Department of National Revenue. It would seem that everyone who works for national revenue feels an obligation to be arrogant and contemptuous to the highest possible degree. I say again that those inquiries in the presbyteries must cease.

In conclusion, I should like to ask something of the Minister of National Revenue. At the present time, a great number of constituents and taxpayers of our ridings have been writing to us along those lines: We submitted receipts of $500 or $600 for charitable donations and the department replied: Your receipt for charitable donations has been reduced to $250 or $300. We then write to the income tax office in Quebec city and always get similar letters from the same official by the name of Audette saying: After inquiry, it has been found that the individual had not donated more than such an amount.

I ask the Minister of National Revenue how can an inquiry be made when a person holds a receipt signed by the parish priest, if nobody bothers to go and see the taxpayer.

In my opinion, there is no inquiry at all or simply a superficial one that cannot be taken into account. I would therefore ask the Minister of National Revenue:

1. To amend the legislation.

2. As regards past cases, to instruct his inspectors to go and see the taxpayers who protest, so they can prove their good faith. In the case of those who do not protest, it means that they agree with the merits of the assessment made by the Department of National Revenue. Otherwise, it would not be an investigation but a farce.

Mr. Chairman, this is all the more important because the Income Tax Act is entirely different from all other Canadian acts. Under Quebec's civil code, a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty beyond a doubt. On the other hand, according to the Income Tax Act, a person is presumed guilty, and it is up to him to prove himself innocent beyond the shadow of a doubt. In such a case, the individual himself has to pay the costs, to hire a lawyer to prove his innocence.

Mr. Chairman, in the great majority of cases, rather than spend money to prove their innocence, the taxpayers prefer to let the matter drop, which does not prevent them from saying: there is the kind of justice we have in Canada. And they keep on cursing the government, protesting against injustice, against the fact that they cannot assert their rights without having to spend a great deal of money.

Mr. Chairman, I maintain this is a serious matter in a democratic country where each and every one is entitled to justice and fair play. With the Income Tax Act, we do not have such a thing in Canada because the individual is first presumed guilty. Judgment is taken against him and he has to pay court expenses and lawyer's fees in order to prove his innocence.

This situation has to change, otherwise we shall see an increase in the number of Canadian citizens who will accept, without abdicating however, to be deprived from their rights because they are not prepared to spend money to have them recognized. The Income Tax Act which says that everyone is guilty unless proven innocent, must be changed.

That is what I wanted to say, Mr. Chairman. I made my remarks in good faith, I think they are pertinent and the Minister of National Revenue should inquire with his inspectors in order to find out the feeling and the climate in which they work, so as to remedy the situation and revise this legislation which is faulty in many cases.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder whether the minister would have the names of institutions, organizations, etc., listed as charitable for purposes of income tax assessment set out in Hansard?

Mr. Knowles: Order paper.

Mr. Garland: Do I understand that the discussion on item 1 is completed?

The Chairman: Order. If the minister intends to reply to the several speeches which have been made, perhaps we could recognize, before he does so, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to support the view presented by the hon. member for Athabasca with regard to allowing deductions for expenses incurred by teachers who are taking courses, not only the cost of tuition itself but of the textbooks required. I believe last year I attempted to move an amendment to that effect which was ruled out of order. I think the department has probably received representations from the Canadian teachers federation and other interested bodies with regard to this matter. This is a question of investment in training and efficiency, and I should like to see some consideration given this matter.

There is another matter I should like to raise for consideration by the minister and his colleagues in the cabinet. This concerns a rather important policy question. We have heard from the Liberal party in the past some suggestions about campaign expenses incurred by political parties. I do not have with me the book "The Liberal Party" by J. W. Pickersgill—usually one can get from that a quotation on any important policy matter—and I do not know whether he deals with this subject, but I should like to suggest that the cabinet give consideration to allowing certain sums of money to be deductible—that is, with respect to contributions to political parties. I think the amount would have to be in the neighbourhood of $200 or $300. Citizens who help finance the campaigns of political parties are assisting the democratic process and I think this should be recognized to a certain extent. This matter has been mentioned in the house before, but nothing seems to happen in this connection. I believe that if a lot of people could be encouraged to make contributions to political parties in the same way as they are encouraged to make contributions to charity, some of the abuses which now occur in the field of political contributions could be avoided.

Mr. Peters: I am pleased that the minister comes from northern Ontario because I am sure he will be aware of many of the problems we have there. I wish to add my voice to those who have already discussed this question of donations, particularly to religious organizations. I have had several letters from clergymen in my area who are concerned about the issuing of receipts. I have one letter from a clergyman who is being asked to list cases where donations of $1 have been described as donations of $10 and so on. He says he is not getting this money, though he and his church would be very glad if he were. Yet pressure is being put on him as if he were an employee of the people who are asking for receipts. He is being asked to supply receipts for money which he has not collected.

This is a growing problem and we shall have to face it in the future, because many more people today are earning an income which encourages them to enter religious donations, whether actually made or merely contemplated, on their tax forms. The fact is that clergy are being asked to do something which is dishonest. I suggest that workers who make a straight contribution to income tax out of their pay, without much chance of other deductions, are finding that this is an agreeable method of obtaining tax relief.

On the other hand, there are those who make donations to charity and ask for nothing but an honest receipt. Yet in some cases such receipts cannot be given because of the manner in which the donations are made. The donations which are put into collection plates on Sundays are difficult to account for. I am sure that if the inspectors in the department went into some of these churches and added up the receipts and related them to the collection on the plates it would be found that many people had arrived very early and that there would be no receipts for those who had arrived late. It may be, as the hon. member for Lapointe said, that it would be better to allow for the reduction of a flat sum in the case of everyone who wished to make a contribution to a religious organization. It is not a revolutionary idea because this is now being done in the case of union dues. Lodge or union dues can be deducted up to a fixed amount. I believe it would be fairer to those who now have to issue these receipts if deductions were made possible in this manner.

I am not one of those who believe that inspectors should not go round to check the information given on the tax forms. I think they should. I do not believe anyone should get a receipt for money that is not given, and I believe this has happened on many occasions. But I agree it is difficult for anyone to say with accuracy how much a parishioner has donated in a particular year unless the donation is made in a lump sum, and I imagine that this is something which seldom happens.

A point has been raised in connection with teachers' salaries and I agree that special provision should be made for those in the teaching profession who are engaged in training. It is obvious, of course, that the salary paid to different groups of teachers will vary widely and some difficulties are bound to arise as a result. I imagine that in some cases two groups of teachers could be found in the same institution whose incomes and tax responsibilities would vary widely.

Again, in conclusion, I urge the minister to look carefully into this question of tax receipts for donations. This problem is growing because of the change in our economy which has arisen with the development of the industrial age. People are earning a living in a different way. Those engaged in farm work were often in the habit of writing up a good many expenditures as farm expenses. Industrial workers have found it difficult to obtain similar advantages and this has led them, in many cases, to apply for receipts in respect of religious donations which may never have been given. The longer we leave this question in abeyance, the more difficult it is likely to become.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I would like here to say a few words about charitable receipts. The matter has been raised already by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) as well as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). However, I do not share their views in that respect.

Mr. Caouette: We are not surprised.

Mr. Lambert: It is just that I feel there is a way to control charitable receipts with regard to income tax.

I can tell you that it is accepted where I come from; we have Catholic and Protestant parishes as in all the other ridings in the rest of Canada and we do not have any difficulty simply because we use envelopes.

When a parishioner makes a donation to his parish through this system of envelopes, or any other donation, the receipt he receives for the amount given in the envelope is the only amount he can claim as a deduction.

Mr. Caouette: This is not the business of the government.

Mr. Lambert: The exemption for charitable donations is an exemption under the Income Tax Act. We are already granted an exemption of $100 without receipt. If you examine the situation in general, you will notice that less than 35 per cent of parishioners who pay taxes, require a receipt. First, there are the children and the persons who have no job; then there are those whose income is not high enough to be taxable.

So the only persons who ask for receipts are those who have a taxable income, that is a third of a parish, this is no phenomenon. So why not use a system of contributions through envelopes?

That system has been used for years in dioceses in the west, and is used more and more in dioceses near the east. And I can tell you, following my experience at the Department of National Revenue, which dates back three years ago, that that system has been set up in some dioceses of the province of Quebec, and it works.

Then if a parish priest is in a position where he is subject to pressures, all he has to do is to set up a system of envelopes, whether it is in a diocese of Quebec, Ontario, the maritimes or the western provinces.

Those people are not different one from another; then why would they protest against a system of envelopes? I do not think that there is—

Mr. Belanger: May I ask a question of the hon. member?

Mr. Lambert: Certainly.

Mr. Belanger: Does the hon. member know that it happens sometimes that a donation is made and that the parish priest is not aware of it? For example, when a $1 candle is lighted every Sunday this represents a sum of $52, the parish priest is not aware that money is deposited in the box.

Mr. Lambert: If you make a donation for the missions, you are entitled to ask for a receipt. Now as far as vigil lights and other—

Mr. Belanger: If during the Sunday collection—

Mr. Lambert: Well, if you forget your envelope, it is up to you—

Mr. Belanger: —I give a dollar, I do not have any receipt.

Mr. Lambert: It is your fault if you forgot your envelope. The method has been in use for years and people are satisfied. So I wonder why all this difficulty? Honestly, I do not see any problem in connection with those charity receipts. Let people acknowledge receipt or ask for a receipt to cover actual charitable donations and there will be no trouble.

Now, other questions have been brought up.

[Text]

I should like to raise now certain points I have raised from time to time in the past with regard to the administration of the department. The first one has to do with the allowance for the use of an automobile for business reasons, whether by lawyers, automobile salesmen, travelling salesmen, farmers or anyone else. There is a varying scale of allowance and I think there is discrimination in this regard.

I know that a sort of rough and ready rule or yardstick is applied. But I am wondering to what extent the matter has been reviewed recently because I think great difficulty arises in the case of the individual taxpayer or the tax accountant, shall we say, who is preparing the tax return of say a farmer for example. If my memory serves me correctly, a farmer may be allowed 75 per cent of his automobile expenses when the automobile is used for farm purposes. An automobile salesman may be allowed 50 per cent, a lawyer down to 20 per cent or a doctor up to 80 per cent. I hope the minister can set me right in this regard, but I think this is an area that merits some study to see if a fairer yardstick cannot be devised for application to all sorts of persons who use their automobiles. Automobiles are no longer in the category of a luxury or something used merely for pleasure. Today they are a necessity. In the case of a lawyer transportation to his office is just as important as for a doctor who is going to his office. Time is of the essence to these people and to business and professional men generally, and I think the matter should be considered in that light.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would the same argument not apply to workers going to a factory?

Mr. Lambert: If a doctor uses his automobile to go to a hospital or a lawyer uses his automobile to go to a police court—

Mr. Knowles: But the hon. member referred to a lawyer going to his place of work. I have many C.P.R. workers in my constituency who go to the Weston shops in Winnipeg by car. That is their place of work. Should this rule not apply to them also?

Mr. Lambert: I will accept the hon. member's question and say that I think this is part and parcel of the problem. It may be that the allowances now given certain classes of people should be cut down. I am not saying others should be brought up, but some may be cut down if we are going to have a rather more general rule. There are other subjects I could discuss, but in the interests of expediting the business I will leave them for some future occasion.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, at the risk of raising applause I will say that I shall be brief. I do not intend to pick a quarrel with the hon. member who has just resumed his seat concerning the control of receipts for charitable donations. The Christmas season will soon be upon us and we are all anxious to get this session over.

That system may be of some use in certain areas but it is difficult to put into effect in some parts of the province of Quebec.

I am sure that no matter how shrewd my parish priest may be, he cannot say exactly how much is given to the various charities.

My reason for participating in this debate on the estimates of the Department of National Revenue was not to take sides on the issuance of receipts for charitable donations nor to settle the question.

I merely wish to draw the attention of the minister on a point which has been especially dear to me for many years. It has to do with the customs and excise tax on U.S. imported goods used by farmers.

I know that most articles in that category are exempt from this 22½ per cent tax. However, there is one product which I would like to see exempt, that is what is commonly called control panels for electrical fences, an item which is used nearly exclusively by farmers and which is still subject to this tax of 22½ per cent.

I have already written to the minister several times in an attempt to obtain an exemption of the 22½ per cent tax for checking devices on electrical fences that can only be used by farmers, of course, for agricultural purposes.

I cannot understand why the officials of that department persist in subjecting those goods to this 22½ per cent tax.

I am well aware that the minister needs revenue in order to meet the requests submitted to him. On the other hand, I also feel that our farmers, especially those in eastern Canada, are not in such good circumstances that every opportunity should be taken by the administration to make them pay the highest charges possible.

In conclusion, I ask the minister to be good enough to look especially into this item, because I know that many farmers are affected by the 22½ per cent excise tax and are anxious to be exempted from it.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words in connection with corporation taxes as compared with personal income tax.

It is a well-known fact that taxpayers pay 22½ per cent as income tax. The percentage is worked out for each $100. For example, the taxpayer who has a net income of $1,000, pays 14½ per cent of income tax covering the difference between $1,000 and $2,000 and this percentage increases up to 80 per cent.

On the other hand, companies pay 22½ per cent on the first $100 of income up to $35,000.

I think that there is a serious discrimination here against taxpayers as compared with companies. That is why I ask the minister to examine carefully that situation so that justice may be done in this regard, especially when one considers that individuals pay more taxes than corporations do.

Besides, corporations are entitled to reinvest capital while individual persons are denied that right.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on behalf of the worker. We all know that, to earn their living, workers need the tools of their trade. For instance, bushworkers need many mechanical tools that cost a great deal of money. But the cost of those tools, unfortunately, is not deductible for income tax purpose and, as a result, the workers have to pay for those tools themselves. What is more they even have to have cars to carry them to their work, so they can earn a living. Neither their car nor their tools are exempt from income tax.

[Mr. Frenette.]

Consequently, I think the minister should give this matter serious consideration in order to treat the workers a bit more fairly.

I would like also to talk about the carpenters. They also need many tools in their line of work. I can also mention the plumbers who find themselves in the same situation. The cost of the tools used by these skilled workers cannot be deducted either for income tax purposes.

I submit that the Minister of National Revenue should consider all those cases and I ask him to study carefully the situation of those poor workers, those poor people who work hard to earn a living and do not benefit from any exemption for the cost of the tools they need to earn a living.

That is all I had to say, Mr. Chairman.

[Text]

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Garland: I wonder if I might be permitted just a word to express my appreciation of the co-operation shown and for the many suggestions made, of which a careful note will be taken.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Mr. Churchill: Where is the minister?

Mr. Pickersgill: He will be here in a moment or two, and meanwhile the parliamentary secretary will carry on in his place.

20. Industrial relations activities including the administration of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act, the Female Employees Equal Pay Act, the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, the Annual Vacations Act, and regulations, and the promotion of labour-management co-operation, $625,600.

Mr. Knowles: While the minister is coming in I would like to say a brief word on this vote. I see that he is now in his place. As hon. members are aware, we debated the estimates of the Department of Labour for a full three and a half hours on the night of November 8, and I think on both sides of the house we would agree we had a very good discussion of those estimates. Accordingly we do not feel that extensive discussion of the remaining items of this department is necessary tonight.

I would like to make two or three observations related to the aspect covered by vote 20, as well as other matters that come under the purview of the department. We particularly welcome the minister's assurance, given on November 8, that there is a real possibility of two things being done at the next session of the house: First, the introduction of a national labour code covering the various things which we agreed on that night as properly belonging to a national labour code and, second, that there would be legislation amending, or revising, or reconstituting the Unemployment Insurance Act.

We were glad to hear these announcements or promises confirmed at the recent meeting between the government and representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress.

I suppose what I am doing tonight, by thanking the minister for these promises is, in effect, pinning him down to them; we are reminding him that when the next session comes we will expect both these items to be mentioned in the speech from the throne; and we hope most of that speech from the throne will be implemented during the course of that session. We were sorry that the minister did not find it possible, either in the house when we were dealing with his estimates or when he was before the Canadian Labour Congress on the recent occasion when that body met the government, to give the assurance that there would be an overhaul of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act between now and the next session. However, he did indicate both to us and to the Canadian Labour Congress—and I believe he did so to other labour bodies that appeared before him—that as soon as possible there would be a study in depth of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. We hope it will not be too long before we get action in that field.

As I say, we did have a pretty good discussion of the department on the previous occasion, and although there may be a few items with regard to which some hon. members may wish to raise points, we do not feel it is necessary to prolong the discussion on the estimates of this department.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that this place, as always, abounds with rumours. Sometimes one ignores them; sometimes one wants to ignore them; sometimes they come true. One of the rumours that circulates around this place relates to the Minister of Labour. All I want to say with respect to that rumour is that if we have to have a Liberal government in power, we would like to have the present minister presiding over the Department of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I believe I can ask this question on this particular item, because it might apply to any item. I wonder if the minister could tell us whether treasury board has now lifted the freeze on the whole department, or only on a certain portion of it, as far as new employees are concerned.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the unemployment insurance commission and the national selective service, I think we have lifted any restrictions on that particular part of the operation; and we have lifted the freeze, if that is the correct term, on part but not all of the remaining departmental operations.

Item agreed to.

25. Civilian rehabilitation branch administration including payments to carry out the purposes of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act and agreements made thereunder, including undischarged commitments under previous agreements and the promotion of a program for the employment of the older worker, $529,000.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister advised us, when introducing his estimates, that nine provinces had signed vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons agreements. I wonder whether he could tell us which province has not signed.

Mr. MacEachen: The province of Quebec has not signed, Mr. Chairman. I understand that province is well advanced in its consideration with regard to signing.

Mr. Starr: Does the minister expect that province to sign?

Mr. MacEachen: It is my expectation and hope that the province will sign.

Item agreed to.

Special Services—

30. Special services branch including the promotion of a program for combatting seasonal unemployment, the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries and assistance to the provinces under agreements entered into with the provinces by the Minister of Labour with the approval of the governor in council, $525,700.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think this would be a good time for the minister to give us an accounting as to what is happening in the older worker program. I think when I asked him in the house yesterday or the day before he promised to do this.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I did indicate to the hon. member for Ontario that I would tell him the extent to which this program was utilized in the month of November. For that month there have been, up to the present, 325—that is the correct figure—employer applications for this program. I must say that, while I appreciate the extent of the response, I would like to see it more acceptable and more widely used. For that reason, in response to views that have been expressed in the house by members of the official opposition and the New Democratic party, and in response to my own consideration, we have decided to extend the period of hiring for an additional two months, so that instead of the hiring period finishing at the end of January it will finish at the end of March. This additional period will be open for hiring.

We have also made further changes. We have relaxed the provision of the previous regulations that eligible older workers would have to exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits before qualifying under the program. We hope these two changes, together with one or two others that are not as substantial in character, will accelerate the acceptance of this program. We are trying to utilize the services of the national employment offices in the way of making direct contact with employers who may be encouraged to take advantage of this program. It is an experimental program, and we hope that by observing the developments that take place and by observing the response to the program, we will have contributed significantly to solving the problem of the older worker and will possibly gain some information about how to handle this problem in the future.

Mr. Starr: In this item, Mr. Chairman, the amount is shown as $525,700. There is a proposed reduction of $5,000 in this item, is there not?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Provision for the older worker program is contained in the supplementary estimates and the sum provided in this particular supplementary, for the older worker program—

Mr. Starr: I was referring to the amount now shown in the item. It is $525,700 for expenditures for 1963-64. I think when the minister spoke in the house previously he said there would be a reduction of $5,000, to $520,700.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is true that I did say on November 8, when introducing the estimates, that the amount shown under vote 30, which is the vote to which my hon. friend is referring, would be reduced by $5,000. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I should like my colleague the Minister of Transport to move that this reduction be made. It shows my attitude of economy.

The Chairman: Mr. McIlraith moves that vote No. 30 of the estimates of the Department of Labour be reduced by $5,000. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said motion?

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Technical and vocational training assistance—

40. To carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder—payments to the provinces, $109,484,000.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Starr: On this vote, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether he could give us some idea as to how the plans for training in the agricultural area are coming along. We did have a conference here in Ottawa last year, I think it was, with the provinces in respect to this matter, and then the provinces were going to carry on this program. I wonder whether there is any report as to what progress is being made in this field.

Mr. MacEachen: I would like to tell my hon. friend that the foundation that was laid by the conference to which he has referred has been carried on by further consultations with various provinces, especially the province of Saskatchewan. We are carrying out consultation in regard to the ARDA program and there is a special provision for additional personnel, I think, in one of the other divisions to carry out this further consultation in connection with the ARDA program and the agricultural field.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question for the minister in connection with this item 40 which concerns the expenses relating to the implementation of the Technical and Vocational Training Asssistance Act and of the agreements under it.

Do the agreements passed this year between Ottawa and Quebec give more to the latter, in comparison with previous years when Quebec was given an inferior treatment compared to Canada as a whole, so far as this question of technical training or of technical and vocational training assistance is concerned?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: I think it is a fact that in previous years the province of Quebec did not participate as fully as the other provinces in the benefits of this program. I do not believe there was any disability within the program itself that brought about this condition, but it was a fact that the financial benefits accruing to Quebec were not as great. The house has already this session approved amendments to this particular act to provide for a further extension of the time so that, especially in the field of capital construction, the province of Quebec will be able to participate as fully as the highest province, up to the end of the last fiscal year. There will be, therefore, many additional millions of dollars available to Quebec and, in a theoretical way, if all the provinces participated to the maximum Quebec would be in full parity with all the provinces of Canada.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in discussing this item in previous years I have been surprised at the lack of graduates from the many training projects that we have undertaken on behalf of the unemployed. The retraining programs have produced quite a sizeable number of graduates, but the percentage of graduates compared with the number who enter the course has not been large. Is there any improvement in this field?

I should like to ask how extensive the program is at present for training supervisory staffs. Under the technical school program that has been undertaken in Ontario during the past two years, there has been an excessively large number of technical classrooms and a shortage of technical teachers for those institutions. I was wondering how successful the technical teacher training program has been, and what the potential is in the next two or three years for training teachers for technical schools?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, before the minister answers the previous speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank him for putting the record straight with regard to the law that was introduced by his predecessor. I am glad to hear from the minister that there was nothing wrong with the act passed by the previous Conservative government, but that it was the fault of the Liberal government of the province of Quebec, if that province did not get as much as they should have. The fault did not lie with the previous minister of labour or the Conservatives, but the fault lies with the Liberal ministers of the province of Quebec.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, my information is that since the program began 3,000 teachers have been trained for technical purposes. I understand that in 1962-63 alone, 600 teachers were trained in Ontario for technical purposes, and this province has an extensive program in this field. I understand that during 1963 alone, 267 teachers were trained. This is not the end, because the province is going ahead actively with further training programs.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister have a percentage of those who graduated from these courses? I am interested in those who were trained under the unemployment insurance scheme in co-operation with the provincial departments.

Mr. MacEachen: I am told we do not have figures available at the moment, but I will make an effort to get them for my hon. friend and provide them as quickly as possible.

Mr. Peters: I am not really concerned with the numbers. I had some experience with this program because a friend of mine was training. He said that the number who dropped out was very large. This would seem to indicate that we were having difficulty in completing this program and turning out a large number of people. All I am really asking is, whether the minister is satisfied with the progress we are making? I agree it is a difficult field. We are taking adults from one occupation and trying to train them in another field. There are many hazards in connection with such a program. Is there overall satisfaction with the results we are getting from this retraining program?

Mr. MacEachen: I am sorry I cannot provide exact figures, but I think I can meet my friend's interest by telling him that approximately 30 per cent of those who enter these courses are drop-outs. Presumably, therefore, approximately 70 per cent graduate with full benefits from the course. It would be desirable if we had 100 per cent, but it seems in this field this is a considerable accomplishment.

Mr. Langlois: May I ask a supplementary question? The minister said that 70 per cent graduated from this course that we have had established for quite a few years. Can he furnish figures indicating to what extent the persons who graduated were successful in finding permanent employment?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, there is a variation in this particular area. My information is that approximately 80 per cent of those who graduate get work at once of a permanent character in their chosen field of training.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I should just like to express my views on the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) with respect to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

The hon. gentleman seems to blame the present government of the province of Quebec when, in fact, that legislation was enacted under the previous administration which deserves our praise in that connection.

The group which was in power in Quebec under the leadership of Mr. Duplessis, in 1957, did not want to participate to the program because they felt—and rightly probably —that education was a provincial responsibility. However, when the present administration took over in Quebec, in 1960, it was already too late for the province to obtain all the grants it could have had if it had prepared for them. When a request was submitted for the extension of the legislation to enable Quebec to get all the grants it had coming, the then minister of labour replied that the program could be extended for another six months only. Obviously few technical schools could be built in six months and it is only since the present federal Minister of Labour introduced new legislation that Quebec can get just as much as the other provinces.

[Text]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think the record should be clear on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

When I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) a question, it was not to allow the members for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and Longueuil to play politics. I merely wished to inquire about the federal government's intentions concerning the province of Quebec.

The Chairman: There is no question of privilege.

[Text]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to keep the record straight. I have listened to the exchange which has taken place regarding this matter and I must point out that the act did not pass parliament until December 1960. Six months later all of the provinces signed the agreement with the federal government with respect to this program, with the exception of the province of Quebec, which took another six months to sign their contract. The money was there; there was no ceiling. Every province had the same opportunity to participate as much as they wanted, with the approval of the federal government.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: I wish to take this opportunity to repeat in French what I said a while ago in English.

I am grateful to the Minister of Labour for having paid tribute to his predecessor by admitting that the legislation passed under the previous administration was written so as to give satisfaction to everyone.

I regret and have always regretted that the province of Quebec due to the fact that its government is friendly with the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Cote) has not deemed necessary to take advantage of the legislation passed by the former Conservative government to promote the progress of youth.

I regret with my hon. friend for Longueuil that before the downfall, the province of Quebec did not obtain more grants, but we are both helpless in this connection.

Nevertheless, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), when he was Minister of Labour, tried to do something so that the young people in the province could improve their lot. However, the province of Quebec, under a Liberal government, did not find appropriate to avail itself of the act which, as mentioned a minute ago by the present Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), is a sound and equitable act, the purpose of which was to give equal opportunity to all the young people in the country.

If the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Cote) is in mourning at this time, let him join his Liberal friends in the province of Quebec and let them weep together. It is not our fault, the Conservative's fault, because we want to give to the young people in the province of Quebec as much chance as to the young people of western Canada.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, following the remarks by the member for Longueuil and the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, it would be appropriate to clear the record.

It must be noted that education falls under provincial jurisdiction. It must be noted also that the federal government with direct taxation, invaded a field which is not his. It is by invading sources of revenue to which it had no right that the federal government permitted itself subsequently to enter sources of expenditures also outside its field of jurisdiction.

If the province of Quebec has taken advantage of this act after the other provinces, it is not its fault, it is due to the fact that the principle involved in this field is fundamentally wrong, since the federal government went to look for money where it had no right to look and went into expenses which it was not its business to make.

I believe that this clarification was necessary.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he is aware of the fact that at the present time, the unemployment insurance commission is asking unemployed citizens in the province of Quebec to take vocational training courses and when those citizens refuse, they lose their unemployment insurance benefits.

Does the Minister of Labour think that is a democratic policy that should be maintained?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I question very much whether this practice takes place. If my hon. friend has instances of a claimant being disqualified for refusing to undertake a training course I would be glad to investigate the matter. I regret that the chief commissioner is not with me tonight but I will be glad to investigate that particular issue.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I think I should bring to the attention of the minister the situation which exists under the winter works program in certain municipalities. In one municipality in my constituency some of those who applied for unemployment insurance were asked to work on winter works projects and were laid off unemployment insurance. That is one way of taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another, into winter works projects. Some people who were receiving $36 a week unemployment insurance went to work under the winter works program for $8 a day for three days, carrying branches of trees along the roadside or digging ditches. Yet they were able to receive $36 by staying at home. This amounts to a transfer of funds from one place to another, and people had to work in this way for half the money.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask a number of questions in connection with the vocational training scheme of the minister. Certainly it was a plan brought into being by the government of which I had the honour to be the head, and has been tremendously successful, as shown by the statistics given by the minister. However, he delivered a speech the other day in the city of Toronto to the commercial travellers. He was substituting for the Prime Minister on that occasion. He pointed out what a wonderful system this was; that there was assistance for vocational training schools, and he mentioned the plans the present government had. As I listened to a recital of his speech over the radio—it was on T.V. as well—the minister, unintentionally I know, left the impression with his hearers that this indeed had been a plan which was the brainchild of the present government, and had been a tremendously successful undertaking. I mentioned that this, of course, was not done intentionally in any way. It is just one of those coincidences which give evidence of carelessness in the use of language, which is not commonly shown by the minister. In ordinary circumstances, if any of us had been present at the time of this meeting, I am sure that this carelessness in language would not have taken place. And so that the record may be completely correct and up-to-date, I wonder if the minister will tell the committee the total amount which was expended up to April 21, 1963, either by contract or undertaking—the number of new schools contracted to be built under this plan, the number of schools in which renovations were to be carried out, and so on. I should like the minister, too, to bring the committee up to date with regard to what has happened since April 21, 1963—the number of schools which have been contracted for since the present government took over and, in general, to give us a bird's eye view of the situation, so that there may be no mistake in this connection.

Mr. MacEachen: I certainly regret it, if I gave a false impression to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, it was to the meeting. Had I been there, the misconception would have been corrected.

Mr. MacEachen: I spoke in the presence of the former member for Eglinton and I thought he listened with approval to what I said. I took care to mention the time period in giving the statistics of student placements and total capital expenditure. I thought I used a date which brought the program well within the period of the right hon. gentleman's jurisdiction. I certainly would not for a moment attempt to take away any of the credit which the hon. member for Ontario deserves for the development of this program. Indeed, I have taken pains, speaking in Ontario and elsewhere, to refer to the work of the hon. member for Ontario.

I will give as many statistics as I can. First, the capital expenditure program, projects approved from April 1, 1961, to March 31, 1963. The total estimated cost of this program was $507,570,169, of which $323,424,821 was the estimated federal contribution. I have the estimated federal contribution for each of the provinces, as well. I will give them in round figures: Newfoundland, $21 million; Prince Edward Island, $2 million; Nova Scotia, $7 million; New Brunswick, $4 million; Quebec, $23 million; Ontario, $200 million; Manitoba, $4.9 million; Saskatchewan, $8.2 million; Alberta, $36.9 million; British Columbia, $13.5 million; Yukon, $682,000 and Northwest Territories, $64,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would that be the total amount or the federal contribution?

Mr. MacEachen: These figures represent the total estimated federal contribution on approved projects up to March 31, 1963. It is noteworthy that in this period the estimated federal contribution to Quebec was $23 million, though to Ontario it was $200 million. As I stated, this disparity does not arise from any disability within the opportunities offered to each and every province under the program. It was because of this outcome—

Mr. Churchill: By that, you mean it is not the fault of the former Conservative government. Is that what those words mean?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. gentleman would not expect me to go that far.

Mr. Churchill: You are sitting where the minister of external affairs sits, and you have adopted his habit of circumlocution.

Mr. MacEachen: I have similar figures in respect of capital projects approved up to November 30, 1963 and these, when compared with the figures I have already given, will indicate what has happened since this government took office. The total for Canada is $531,479,925. The federal share is $337,663,741. That, I think, indicates the extent of the program up to the end of March of this year, and the additional projects approved in the period up to the end of November. I think the tables I have are complete but I believe the figures I have already given are sufficient to make the comparison clear and I will not detain the committee further.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for the amplitude of his answer. It indicates that since the present government came to office they have actually expended 5 per cent of the amount the previous government made available.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, reference was made a while ago to vocational or professional training. I am glad to inform the house that, in several cases, those training courses were very efficient. As far as I am concerned, I want to thank and congratulate the persons responsible for setting up that program because, in my riding, several men and women have been able to take advantage thereof.

But I wonder if it would not be possible to improve the employment facilities for the people who followed those training courses. In fact, I know several workers who, after making tremendous sacrifices to follow that training program and reach a certain level of specialization in some skill, have remained unemployed or, very often, had to be satisfied with working as labourers or taking any job they could find.

A while ago, during the discussion of the national revenue estimates, several hon. members agreed that they had to face many income tax problems.

And now, I think we could say that hon. members also have to face many problems in their relations with employees of unemployment insurance or employment offices in the country.

I realize it is very difficult for managers and employees of unemployment insurance offices to satisfy every unemployed who goes to see them. Mr. Chairman, I hope I will be allowed to say this: I wanted to experience that myself, and, one day, I went incognito to one of our unemployment insurance offices, because my constituents had told me that some officials treated unemployed people in an offhand manner. As I say, I went myself to that particular office, and I saw, with dismay, that the grievances I had heard were justified. Some of the officials, particularly among the lower ranks, were extremely rude to the unemployed who came to that office.

I feel that the various officials of the Department of Labour, and more particularly officers of the unemployment insurance commission, should act as advisers to people who come to see them, instead of being, first and foremost bureaucrats, who maliciously seek to annoy and embarrass those with whom they are dealing.

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member for Portneuf. I wonder if his remarks could not be brought to bear on vote No. L-27A relating to the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I rushed ahead. It is perhaps because I am a bit too anxious for Christmas to be here, so that we may get some rest. However, I shall resume my remarks when the occasion arises.

[Text]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, from the music we are hearing tonight there is no doubt we are hearing Christmas, and to hear the minister sing the praises of the former minister is certainly reassuring. I was glad to have the minister put on record that he did not want to take any credit away from his predecessor with regard to the technical training measure. It was certainly reassuring to hear him say that he wanted to pay a special tribute to the hon. member for Ontario for all he has done to prepare our young people to be better equipped for the future. I again thank him for putting this on the record and I wholeheartedly agree with him.

Item agreed to.

45. Administration of the Government Employees Compensation Act, $114,000.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member rising on vote No. 45?

Mr. Peters: Yes. Several problems have come to my attention in relation to the federal compensation act. I know the minister has been very busy with labour matters that he is not normally called on to deal with, but I am sure he has given consideration to some of the problems that will face us with the new areas that are to fall under the jurisdiction of the federal government. The establishment of two new territories in northern Canada will add to these problems and I believe the time has arrived for the federal government to provide some leadership in establishing for those areas a model compensation set-up that will be a guide for them when they achieve the status of provinces.

I receive letters about many compensation cases in Ontario and some from Quebec and I was very surprised when I received one a few weeks ago from a workman in Frobisher, who had been home for some time with a broken leg, to find that he was receiving no compensation. I was particularly surprised because in this case the matter of compensation was being handled not by the federal government but by a trust company in Montreal. It seems to me we are going backward a long way when we have trust companies dealing with compensation matters.

We are aware of the difficulties that have arisen in the Northwest Territories in relation to employees there and the fact that in public works contracts it is specified that the Department of Labour will only deal with those cases arising out of works that have been declared to be in the public interest and for the public good. It is surprising, but there are officials in the Department of Labour who will say that a vote of this house providing for a particular project in the Northwest Territories does not qualify that project to be considered to be in the interests of Canada. I would presume that gentleman must be a Conservative now, with a Liberal government, and had been a Liberal previously, with the Conservative government, because he seems to be very perverse in this regard. He is not alone. The Department of Justice and many other departments were involved in this particular case and none of them could come to the conclusion that I thought should be reached. But this does raise the point that there is a great deal of difficulty in establishing jurisdiction in that area.

While this other case was in another labour field the fact that this man had an accident and that it was a compensation case confirms that the whole field needs some examination. I know this is not a large item and that in the whole of Canada employees, including public service employees, are very cautious and safety conscious. An item of less than $3 million a year is not a significant one. However, I would think the minister might like to institute a pilot compensation set-up under federal jurisdiction in order to provide legislation that would assist provinces who might wish to look to Ottawa to bring their own compensation boards up to date.

I believe that in the past it has been necessary to use provincial compensation boards, hospitals and other facilities, but now that we are establishing new areas under federal jurisdiction I think a federal compensation board would serve a purpose not met by any other agency. Therefore I think the minister should consider establishing a model compensation board under federal jurisdiction. The fact that as far as the territories are concerned it would not be in existence too long is no reason to restrict it, but an added incentive to make it as good as possible, so that when provincial compensation boards are established they can take advantage of the farsightedness of the federal government.

I am not expecting the minister to suggest that he is prepared to set up this type of compensation board, but I submit he should give some consideration to it. When the bills to set up the two new territories in northern Canada, the Eskimo one and the other, are brought forward it is my intention to try to have compensation boards established if the federal government has not moved in that field before these territories are established. I suggest that the minister should consider the matter, and if this can be done I am sure the people in these areas will certainly appreciate it.

50. Administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act, $45,412,500.

Mr. Starr: On a previous occasion the minister said that some 362 new positions were being added to the national employment service. Have these been approved by treasury board, and when does he anticipate they will be filled—in a year, a year and a half, or two years?

Mr. MacEachen: The additional personnel have been approved by treasury board. We are actively recruiting now through the civil service commission, and we want to fill the positions just as quickly as the commission gets the people for us.

Mr. Starr: I had the experience when we tried to fill 175 positions in the area of placement officers that it took something well over two years before they were all filled. Are these positions in respect of placement officers?

Mr. MacEachen: There is a considerable number of employment officers in the establishment and there is provision for special service officers, if that is the term, who would take a more active part in manpower development, training and retraining programs of the employed and unemployed, and who would assist generally in the promotion locally of manpower programs. My hon. friend will appreciate this is a pretty important activity, and that is why we would like to get the recruitment done as quickly as possible. It may be that it will take us longer than we expect and that we will have the difficulty experienced by my hon. friend when he was minister.

Mr. Starr: How many of these positions are placement officer positions?

Mr. MacEachen: The large share of these 362 are employment or placement officers, and maybe 100 for other categories.

Mr. Starr: About 100 out of 362?

Mr. MacEachen: Roughly 250 placement officers or employment officers.

Mr. Starr: What is the present state of the unemployment insurance fund, when does the minister expect it will be depleted, and is he making any provision for a loan?

Mr. MacEachen: At the end of November the amount in the fund was roughly $56 million. We have already made provision for the usual loans, so that we expect we are fully covered for the present fiscal year. It may be we will have a deficit but we are in a position to deal with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the house has a rather heavy program and that everyone is anxious to be on holidays, I shall not repeat what I said a while ago. But, even if I wander a bit from the item before us, I do wish to tell the minister how much I would appreciate it if the job opportunities advertised by the various employment offices were given more elaborate publicity.

Employment offices receive from the Department of Labour, through the usual channels of distribution, notices of job vacancies and they try to bring those opportunities to the attention of workers in the area.

I am wondering whether employment offices are giving enough publicity to such notices so that the unemployed may be made aware of them.

On that matter, I should like to give the example of an office which makes known its employment offers as they should be made known. It is the office of Three Rivers which, I believe, could be held up as a model for all other offices in the province as regards the publicity it gives to the employment offers and the means by which it makes things easier for the unemployed who call at that employment office.

I should like to see all other offices in the province follow the example of the Three Rivers office in order that the unemployed be well informed about the different job opportunities.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just one thing about item No. 50 to the minister responsible for the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Section 21 of the act, general principle, says:

> That any employment is insurable, except those exempted under the terms of the act.

Consequently, a little further in the act, there is a long list giving all exempted employment, including agricultural employment.

The act does not say anything more about agricultural employment. In my opinion, that is dealing a bit harshly, even unjustly, with people who would like to do agricultural work. Therefore, I submit that the act should be amended to enable agricultural employment to become insurable because farmers have a hard time finding farm hands.

Many cases have been submitted to me by farmers in my riding, to the effect that they encountered great difficulties in securing farm help because they were not covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act. I therefore consider that this exemption of farm employees mentioned in the list appended to section 21 of the Unemployment Insurance Act should be amended so as to provide for the coverage of those farm hands by the act.

That is the only remark I wanted to make.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: That would be a good question for the minister to answer, because many of us want to know whether the government intends to place farm labourers under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I would like to ask him, is he aware of the problem in many parts where the inspectors coming into areas to do spot checks classify certain areas as remote areas for employment.

It seems to me that if a man is employed for a period of time in a locality and is obtaining a livelihood there, it is not fair for an inspector to come and say, "This is a remote area and you will not be eligible for unemployment insurance. You are now in a category that will not allow you to draw unemployment insurance." I would sympathize with the minister if an I.B.M. operator went into a lumber area where there was no sizeable plant, and certainly no equipment. That person would be placing himself or herself in a remote area for employment purposes.

This matter has been a real problem in my part of the country; and I do not think there is any difference in an area where employment is obtained for seven or eight months of the year, and is difficult to find the other four months from, for example, those in the fishing industry who cannot go fishing in the off season, and sometimes cannot fish because of weather conditions. I am sure this is not the general policy of the unemployment insurance office, but the outside inspectors do go into an area with the avowed purpose of knocking off 20 per cent of the unemployment insurance benefactors. I have taken some of these cases through the various steps and have in several cases gone as far as the board of referees. The matter cannot be argued satisfactorily because when it is decided that this is a remote area, the only thing that can be said against it is that it is not a remote area. Going before the board of referees cannot establish any conclusion in these cases. I would like to know whether the minister is considering this matter of remote areas and what changes he proposes to make to correct the abuses—and there are certainly abuses in some areas—in the use of the term "remote area".

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not bring to the attention of the Minister of Labour a subject with which he is very familiar. I refer to the matter of unemployment insurance for farm labourers. I had a bill on the order paper for a number of years, but the reason given to me for nothing having been done in the past was that the Gill committee report, when it was handed down, would make some recommendations and would contain clarification on this point. As I pointed out to the minister not very long ago, the Gill committee report is actually in favour of unemployment insurance payments being made to all unemployed people, if administrative difficulties can be overcome. At that time the minister agreed with my proposition, and said that as soon as the Gill committee report was handed down, this problem would be given serious consideration. I would like again to direct the attention of the minister to this problem, Mr. Chairman, because in my opinion and in the opinion of many people, this is a serious problem, and this is the only section of our labour force that is not covered by unemployment insurance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, there is a brief remark I have to make. There is also a class of employees who are not covered by unemployment insurance. I refer to the seasonal provincial employees—at least in the case of the province of Quebec.

I would ask the minister to kindly consider the possibility of covering those seasonal employees who, forced to remain unemployed a few months, receive no income during the winter months.

[Text]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I was expecting the minister to answer the question raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming. I wanted to ask the minister a question about another aspect of the matter of unemployment insurance.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, as I understand the point made by my hon. friend from Timiskaming, the suggestion was that inspectors would go into a particular area and disqualify workers because they were in a remote area. It seems to me this is a practice we would want to investigate, if in fact it is occurring on any scale, or even at all; because surely if a claimant has created entitlement to benefit, and is in receipt of benefit, other things being equal he ought not to be disqualified because of his residence in a particular area, remote or not. It may be that a worker who has qualified for benefit will move from one area to another and because of that movement has restricted availability of employment, which might render him eligible for disqualification because it brings in the question of test for availability of work. But I would be glad to hear of any cases or further details, and I will have the matter examined.

Perhaps while I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I ought to say a word about the question of farm labour raised by two hon. members. Farm labour is not an insurable occupation at the present time. The Gill committee recommends the exclusion of farm labourers because of administrative difficulties. We expect to be considering the recommendations of the Gill committee next session when they are put into a bill, and hon. members will have a full opportunity of discussing these questions in relation to general coverage, which is another matter raised by the Gill committee.

With respect to the point raised by my hon. friend in connection with seasonal provincial workers, the commission is currently in discussion with the province of Quebec with respect to coverage for provincial employees.

Mr. Peters: Just for clarification, Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise this point. There is no disagreement with the minister in the case of a person moving into an area where unemployment is not available in his type of work. However, if he makes his living in that area, he is now being disqualified for two reasons which are very much the same. One is the question of remote area, which is usually coupled with transportation. Perhaps the minister is not familiar with how this is done. A man comes into the area and goes to the unemployment insurance inspector. He answers a number of questions which form, in effect, an affidavit. He will be asked, "Do you have a car? Does your friend have a car? Is there a public conveyance that can take you to such-and-such a place?" Then the inspector will ask, "Isn't it true that transportation facilities here are very limited?" and the man will say, "Yes, that is true". In terms of a series of questions you can elicit almost any kind of answer. This is being done and it establishes transportation difficulties to an employment centre. This question will not be reconsidered even if the claimant moves into the town, where employment might be more readily available. The man may never have worked in that town in his type of job. By going there he may really, as the minister mentioned, be putting himeslf in an area remote from the type of employment he is capable of doing.

These inspectors have done this. I suggest they have done it for the simple reason of eliminating a number of people. It is not widespread, but I believe it has been done in a number of cases. A year ago it was being done to quite an extent. If one takes such a case to the board, it usually results in a number of C.U.B.'s being cited which those appearing before the board have no opportunity of seeing. I have appeared on a number of occasions where women were involved, and usually the C.U.B.'s that were cited referred to pregnant women, and some of the problems they had. In the cases I have had, this has never been a factor. I suggest to the minister that this practice is widespread—I can only speak for my area—and there should be a redefinition in this regard. To be fair, Mr. Chairman, I must say that on the occasions we have brought these cases to the attention of the director of unemployment insurance there has been an investigation, and a satisfactory one. I have been receiving a number of letters recently from unorganized areas in which this is again a factor. I presume this is at the direction of some of the local offices.

Mr. Bigg: I should like to make a short submission on this item. My district of Athabasca contains the air base at Cold Lake. This is a very poor place for employment generally, and sometimes service personnel, artisans in the lower income brackets, find it awkward when they are moved to this air base from bases which are adjacent to large cities. They are accompanied by their wives who have to give up their jobs to go there. I realize that they do so voluntarily, but they are accompanying their husbands and find themselves involved as a result in severe hardship. They run into this difficulty referred to by the hon. member for Timiskaming. I do not know what the solution is, but I would appreciate it very much if the minister's officials could look into this problem. I have received several letters in this regard, and I would be pleased to make my files available if necessary.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word about this matter of unemployment insurance for farm labour. There are certain classes of farm labour to which quite a bit of security is attached. It would seem to me the department should try to move into that general area and provide coverage for these people. It is a fact that today people who have a job which entitles them to stamps will not take a job on the farm because they would be denied stamps if they did so. Surely, there is some rule that could be brought into play that would take care of this particular situation. I only mention it to the minister now so that if he has some recommendations to introduce at the next session, he can take this problem into consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, since we are dealing with unemployment insurance, I think it is appropriate to remind the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) of the conditions of the Canadian loggers who go to work in the states of Maine and Vermont.

Following a motion for the production of papers, in September last, I received certain letters with regard to a possible agreement between the state of Maine and the Canadian government. In fact, in the last letter on record, the social security representative from the state of Maine implied that in the near future, that is early in September, an agreement might be reached between the Canadian government and the state of Maine.

We are now in December. On many occasions, we have asked questions to the minister on this matter and considering that this situation affects more than 6,000 lumbermen in the ridings of Beauce and Dorchester and a few others in the lower St. Lawrence, I feel that we are justified in expecting that the minister will tell us whether negotiations are actually under way. It should be kept in mind that lumbermen have a right to expect that this problem affecting them will be solved a little more promptly.

Mr. Chairman, it was possible to reach an agreement rapidly with our neighbours on the matter of nuclear weapons. I feel, therefore, that after seven or eight years of discussions by both successive governments, and more especially following the information provided last September, when we were given to understand that an agreement was possible, it is strange that no answer has yet been supplied as late as December.

Mr. Chairman, could the Minister of Labour tell us this evening whether the negotiations which are under way will result in the signing of an agreement between the Canadian government and the state of Maine concerning Canadian forest workers?

[Text]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, as has been indicated by some previous speakers the minister has mentioned the fact there will be an opportunity early in the next session to discuss some aspects of unemployment insurance. I do not believe any of us expect him to undertake a detailed discussion of the question of unemployment insurance tonight. However, there is one aspect of this question of unemployment insurance and the national employment service administration about which I should like to inquire. I am referring to the general pattern of establishing offices for the servicing of claims, and particularly the national employment service offices.

I have a feeling that there has been a rather rigid formula developed over the years since the commission has been in operation. I am wondering whether, along with that review of the whole operation of unemployment insurance arising out of the Gill report, this sort of thing could be reviewed. I have a particular interest in this matter and I should like to illustrate the point I have in mind by citing a case I have in my own constituency. I know that prior to 1957 in the planning of a public building for Campbell River, provision was made for an office for the national employment service. According to information given to me in answer to a question just before the last election, this place is still available.

I know, too, that no efforts of mine exerted in co-operation with the former minister of labour, and through him to the commission, nor any efforts of the former member for Comox-Alberni resulted in an indication of willingness by the commission to establish an office on either a part time or full time basis in Campbell River. A great many people feel very strongly that the problems of unemployment are aggravated because of the difficulty people have in reaching the employment service. This is emphasized at times by the inaccessibility of the office for filing claims. Using this situation as an example of what I am driving at, I should like to ask the minister to tell us whether there is any review of the whole question of policy for establishing employment offices under way at the present time, particularly from the point of view of making the national employment service a more useful instrument in the elimination of unemployment.

Mr. MacEachen: In this connection, Mr. Chairman, as my hon. friend realizes, the Gill committee made a proposal to separate the national employment service from the unemployment insurance commission, so that it could become a more effective instrument, more dynamic and more closely linked to the policies for employment programs. This whole question is under consideration, and surely one of the matters that we would want to consider in connection with the possible severance of the national employment service, is how to make the service more effective; and that obviously would entail locations. In that respect, the matter will be under review.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that we waited till a few hours before prorogation of the house to study such an important question as unemployment insurance in Canada. It is true that I have only a few words to say on this matter at the present time. However, a matter of this magnitude should have been discussed much earlier in the session, so that every hon. member would have had the opportunity to say what is going on in his riding concerning the administration of unemployment insurance.

Last week I received a letter sent to me from St. Jerome, in the county of Terrebonne, where there was a strike which lasted four months. During the strike employees were paid $12 a week by their union.

Finally the strike was settled. People reported at the unemployment insurance office to ask for their benefits. Then they were told that as long as 80 per cent of employees were not taken back by the industry concerned, they would not get more than what they had received at that time, that is $12 a week paid by their union.

I think that governments should have done something to help those people who had already suffered for four months in claiming the rights they were denied.

Mr. Chairman, there is another point I want to bring to the attention of the minister. I mean the treatment given to the unemployed when they report at the unemployment insurance office.

We have received numerous complaints in that respect. In some offices, people are as welcome as a dog on a putting green. They are treated like numbers. They are instructed to march like soldiers. It seems that an absolutely rigid discipline is imposed. Under such circumstances, I say to the minister that the unemployed suffer enough from being out of work and grappling with the problems of life without employees of federal employment offices and unemployment insurance offices causing them additional troubles.

Now I would have another remark to make concerning conciliation, but since I do not want to take up any more of the time of the house so as to permit adoption of the estimates of the Department of Labour, I suggest to the minister to introduce his estimates much earlier at the next session, because otherwise, I think that we will exercise nevertheless our rights to discuss thoroughly the problem of unemployment insurance in Canada.

The Chairman: The item is carried.

The Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Labour.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $2,406,800.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, is legislation being brought forward tonight? It was on last night's list.

Mr. Pickersgill: I apologize. I had intended earlier to say that it had been suggested to me that it would better suit the convenience of a number of members if legislation were held over till a little later. I think I indicated to some hon. gentlemen privately that that request had been made, but I am afraid I omitted to explain it to the committee, as I should have done. I hope there will be no objection taken to this course.

Mr. Nasserden: What is next?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps it might be convenient if I indicated the order in which we would like to go on for as long as we can this evening. After the Department of Veterans Affairs we will take mines and technical surveys and then the remaining item of the Department of Industry and the remaining item of the Department of Trade and Commerce. We would then take the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and then the Department of National Defence. Perhaps that would be all we could hope to get done tonight.

Mr. Knowles: I do not wish to lengthen the list, but in these private communications which took place I thought transport was fairly high on the list.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Transport was ready to pinch hit at an ealier stage in the evening when I was looking for some of my other colleagues who have now turned up. There are also reasons of convenience why I prefer to take these other departments which I am now indicating.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to make a speech this evening in introducing these estimates for the very good reason that they have been dealt with by the committee on veterans affairs, where I gave a brief presentation. My intention this evening is only to express my thanks for the excellent work of that committee, which has again carried on in the tradition which has been developed over the years. I think they have done an excellent job and I want to assure them that their recommendations, as well as those of the veterans groups which have made presentations to them, will be given every consideration when we examine and review the legislation of the department for the next year. When I introduced the estimates to the committee I said at that time that there would be two or three small amendments or adjustments in the amounts of three votes. These are not changes of principle or changes in programs; they are adjustments due to the fact that we were able some eight or nine months after the printed estimates were prepared to make a more accurate forecast and to assess the situation more accurately than could have been possible eight or nine months earlier. We will, of course, move these amendments as the votes come up.

I have not all the officials of the department available because I think most of them have been exposed to the committee. They answered all the questions which were asked at the time. With that, Mr. Chairman, I will end my remarks.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, one of those who has been very active in the veterans affairs committee for a long time is the hon. member for Kootenay West. The long hours he spends on his duties have made it necessary this evening for him to be absent from the committee, and I know that he would have liked to be here for the discussion of these estimates.

The point I wish to raise is this. What value is this committee which has discussed these estimates, when its report is never considered? We have given consideration, not just one year but nearly every year, to the same type of procedure and now we are being asked again to do the same thing. I believe the minister's parliamentary secretary, who has been on this committee for many years, will agree with me that this year the presentations which were made by the Legion, the Canadian corps, the Hong Kong veterans, and the many other veterans organizations were much better presentations than those presented in previous years. All were highly critical of certain aspects of the department. I suggest the minister would be well advised to attend these committee meetings himself. He would learn a great deal there and be in a much better position to make recommendations himself, instead of letting his officials make the recommendations. I do not say this is true of all departments, but I think it is true of veterans affairs. There is a certain amount of emotion involved in veterans problems, and in the presentation of those problems, which can only be assessed if you listen to them and follow them closely.

Personally I am unhappy that I have not been able to attend all the meetings myself, because I found at the meetings I did attend a much stronger representation being made than has been made during the four or five years I have had the privilege of being a member of the committee. There are changes which should be made. The minister comes into the house in the dying days of the session, which is always the chance which the backbenchers have to put before various ministers on discussion of their estimates the wishes of their constituents. These things are always left to the last minute. Backbenchers are promised all the year that they will have opportunities to speak on the estimates. How many are standing up and making their observations tonight? Not very many. Sooner or later I think the leader of the house will have to say that he is willing to change the system. If it is not changed, there is no point in attending committees. All we need to do is to allow the cabinet to carry on the government of the country.

These representations have been made to us. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek tried to take action with regard to some of them and I believe he was unfairly treated. He pointed out, as a number of witnesses had pointed out, that two or three sections in the act needed amendments so as to change the whole concept of the treatment veterans are receiving. There has not been a great deal of complaint against officials of the pension commission or of the department itself. It is a political criticism. We have left loopholes in the act which make it necessary for persons without legal training to decide whether or not an injury has occurred during service, or arising out of service or in relation to service. This important point was discussed in the committee.

The department did not violently disagree with what was proposed, except that it did have its legal counsel defend what it considered to be the correct interpretation of the act on a legal basis as it now stands. I believe they were hard on the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek because, surely, the whole intention of this veterans legislation is being negatived by the application of a strict legal interpretation to the wording of the act. This legislation is intended to be a reward, a compensation for service done by the veterans of this country. The hon. member was putting forward a case which all the veterans organizations had agreed to support. Many of the committee members were in favour of it. We would be better off tonight if the parliamentary secretary were to rise and tell us what the department intended to do in relation to the representations which have been made.

I believe the minister should tell the committee that there is to be a fundamental change in the attitude of the department. I think most members of the committee will agree that there has to be a new interpretation of the several sections of this act. There is no real opposition to such a new interpretation being made. Yet the minister has not told us what he proposes to do in this regard or what consideration is being given to it. How can he consider this proposal when the report has not yet been tabled? In any case, he has not had enough time to study it and reach a decision. I think the government is being unfair to the veterans when it asks the committee to pass this item. A committee of the house has been studying sections of this particular act. But we have received no assurance from the government that it is considering changing the system so that committees will meet earlier in the session, so as to be in a position to bring in a report for discussion by members before the estimates are passed and in time for the government to indicate what its intentions are in relation to the report.

I do not intend to make a speech of this kind on all the other estimates which have yet to be considered, but I do so in this case because the opinion was unanimously expressed that we have reached a milestone in the administration of the veterans charter and that consideration should now be given to changing the act. The situation which now confronts us is not the fault of the officials of the department or of those who are administering the law. This is something we have to do. It is parliament which must change the legislation so as to bring it up to date. I do not expect the minister to announce, tonight, that he intends to do this. But I have been here since 1957 and I have been placed in the same position every year. We do the difficult work in the committees, but nothing comes of it. I am in favour of making concessions, but the concessions we are being asked to make are unfair to us and unfair to the veterans organizations which appeared before us at their own expense. In addition, the present situation is unfair to the minister who has not had an opportunity to do anything about these recommendations.

I make these statements in condemnation of no one except the leader of the house and those responsible for preparing the order of business. Here is a case where members of voluntary organizations have made their presentations. Members of parliament sitting on a committee have agreed with many of the proposals which were made. Now the officials are waiting for us to take the further steps that are required, and we cannot do it because of the time factor.

Mr. Nasserden: I have only a brief word to say, and that is in commendation of the work which this department has undertaken in the past. I wonder if the minister could indicate what plans the department has for the veterans hospital at Saskatoon?

Mr. Churchill: I so seldom find myself in agreement with the hon. member for Timiskaming that I cannot resist the rare opportunity of expressing my sympathy with the point he has made tonight, with the sole exception of his statement that his experience has been the same all through these years. I agree that the minister should make some statement with regard to the future plans of the department, based on the extensive submissions and the recommendations made by the committee.

During the period when I had the good fortune to be associated with the Department of Veterans Affairs, I introduced certain substantial changes in legislation and I did indicate that I thought one of the next steps should be a revision of the Pension Act. The present minister has been in office for several months. He has had the benefit of the committee hearings and he should by now be in a position to let us know what the government has in mind for the veterans of this country. I may caution the hon. gentleman by saying that, as far as I can gather, the veterans of Canada are not very sure what this government intends to do about some of their problems, and perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite should show some signs of activity along that line.

One of the main items which has been before veterans, certainly in these latter years, has been the benefit of the doubt section of the Pension Act. When I was connected with the department we endeavoured to correct that by persuasion. I recall a debate in the house on one occasion when almost all the veteran members of the house participated and talked about the problem of the benefit of the doubt clause. At the committee hearings this year very extensive evidence was introduced to show how that matter had been dealt with in England where the same problem had arisen, and it seems to me that the minister, for the sake of the veterans of this country, should have said something tonight about the intentions of the government with regard to that particular problem.

Then there is that other section in the Pension Act which causes so much distress to the pension commission in their endeavour to do justice. It concerns servicemen who are now with the regular forces, or their dependants. It is a section in the act which saddles the pension commission with a problem which perhaps should not be a problem for the pension commission, but rather something that should be handled by the Department of National Defence. This again was a matter I had hoped to deal with, and had conditions not changed so fundamentally and so disastrously for the country perhaps it would have been dealt with by this time. But the responsibility now rests on the Liberal government. It is not a partisan matter.

In the one instance there is the problem affecting the veterans of this country under the benefit of the doubt clause and, second, there is the problem that concerns present servicemen and, in the event of their death, their dependants. These problems have to be recognized and faced and something has to be done about them. The minister has said nothing. Granted that these estimates were considered by the veterans affairs committee, and granted that under these circumstances the house will possibly not spend very much time on them, nevertheless in order to avoid spending too much time on these estimates a clear statement from the minister is desirable so that we will not have to ask him such questions or prod him into giving us a review of what the government's intentions are.

There is a third matter which is of very great interest to the veterans of this country. They would like to know the intentions of the government with regard to veterans hospitals. I recall that last spring when the report of the Glassco commission came out with a suggestion that the veterans hospitals be turned over to civilian use, we immediately said: Hands off the veterans hospitals. Subsequently I looked into the matter and I discovered that the officials of the Glassco commission who had written that particular section of the report had ignored the submission made to them by the director of medical services for the Department of Veterans Affairs. Under the circumstances, therefore, that report cannot be accepted as valid.

To create in the minds of our older veterans any doubt as to the veterans hospitals is in my view very unwise. I have said time and time again since that report was issued that in so far as our older veterans are concerned nobody wants to deprive them of the services of the veterans hospitals which have served the veterans of this country so well all these years. Everybody realizes, of course, that if there is no further war, and we hope there will not be, the veterans hospitals will be available in time for other purposes, but for our older veterans of the first world war in particular these hospitals are essential. They are also essential, of course, for the veterans of the second world war and Korea, but at the moment the numbers of those veterans who require such attention is not as great as in the case of the veterans of the first world war. I am aware of all the reasons for and arguments about the extra expense involved in looking after our older veterans in veterans hospitals, where the cost per bed is much higher than it would be if they were given attention under other arrangements. I know all the arguments there; but until these other arrangements are made for the older veterans of this country, let us reassure them that their needs will be looked after in our veterans hospitals, and let us reassure their relatives at the same time.

On these three matters I have raised, which were the subject of considerable discussion in the committee on veterans affairs, the minister should say something to the house to inform us what the intentions of the government are. If he will do that I will relieve him of something that has been hanging over his head for eight months, his shabby treatment of a former member of the pension commission. But if he is not going to give us satisfactory answers on these other matters I will revive that matter. I will read into the record my cable to the Prime Minister and his brush-off reply which I have also described as shabby treatment of a veteran of the first world war. Therefore we await the minister's accounting.

Mr. Teillet: There are two things I am going to say at the moment. The hon. member is perfectly right, of course that the report has only been in my hands a short time. The submissions of the association were also presented to me. I had meetings with most of these groups and, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, the matter will be under very intensive study and I am going to give these representations every consideration.

As far as Saskatoon is concerned, I am given to understand that tenders are about to be awarded for the new hospital there, so my hon. friend should have the answer to that shortly.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there is one small point I should like to draw to the attention of the minister. It is a point that gave me some pause when I occupied the position he now has. I refer to the matter of the retroactivity of a pension when awarded by the pension commission. I found some difficulty in understanding the principle involved, in that if a veteran applied for a pension, was examined and in the normal course of events was awarded a pension in six weeks or two months time after assessing his case, the pension was then made retroactive for 12 months. Even though the veteran may not have even considered it or had no entitlement 12 months earlier, the pension is paid as of 12 months earlier. I think this is done to compensate more or less for those veterans who apply for a pension, are turned down and then have to go through the appeal procedure which sometimes takes a year, 18 months or more to get a final favourable decision, with the result that they would be penalized, and therefore an average of 12 months was taken. I think basically as the commission now works it would be far more equitable to make the pension award as of the date of the application, rather than the date 12 months prior to the date of the award. If a man has applied and it takes 15, 18 or 24 months for a favourable decision to be reached, the entitlement in effect was as of the date of the application.

There may have been some cases that stretched over three or four years, many years ago, and the rule was adopted then because the officials felt too great a sum of money would be paid to a veteran. But if a man is entitled to it he should get it. It was a wrong principle to limit him to 12 months just because it took a long time to come to the decision which should have been reached in the first place. If a final appeal is favourable, then that means that the original decision should have been favourable. For those reasons it is my earnest submission to the minister that this rule should be reviewed and that the date of the application should be the date from which the award ought to start.

Mr. Bigg: I have just two brief points to make. First of all I am a member of the veterans committee, and a very fine appeal was made by the Hong Kong veterans to that committee. I draw this brief to the minister's attention for special consideration. These veterans are the ones gravely affected by the controversial section 70 in the Pension Act concerning benefit of doubt. In my opinion any man who served in Hong Kong and was four years in a Japanese prison camp should certainly get the benefit of the benefit of doubt rule. There is a burden on those of us who did not pay in this very definite manner for our freedom to see to it that these veterans should not be put to the indignity of begging.

In the absence of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, who is working very hard in the committee and in the house seeking a judicial review of the administrative boards in this connection, I would again like to draw the minister's attention to the presentation by Lord Denning, chief justice of England, which I believe is written into the minutes of the committee meetings. I do not think one could cite a higher authority on judicial matters, and he is quite open and free in his support of a judicial review of all points of law, whether or not an appeal is spelled out in the covering statute.

Mr. Thompson: I would just like to add my voice in support of what the previous speaker has mentioned concerning Hong Kong veterans. One of the greatest tragedies of war involves those who suffer injuries that cannot be measured in terms of loss of limb or physical wounds. It is difficult for any of us to realize what those veterans went through during their years of imprisonment, and I believe there is not a single group of veterans so worthy of special consideration as they are.

There is no special item in the regulations which applies to them, but in many cases they are more worthy than some of those who probably have less difficulty fitting into the regulations. Therefore I urge that the minister give very careful consideration to the responsibility our nation owes these people who went over there, poorly equipped and probably poorly trained, to meet the type of struggle they had to take part in, and then go through years of imprisonment.

The second matter I wish to mention concerns war veterans allowances. I believe the maximum casual earnings allowed for those who are entitled to these allowances are $900 a year. In many cases, combined casual earnings supplemented by war veterans allowances do not provide veterans with sufficient to maintain the standard of living which we all agree a man is entitled to in this day and age. It would not cost the department anything to permit an increase in the maximum amount of casual earnings, and I believe this is a point very worthy of mention.

Mr. Churchill: I am sure the hon. member for Red Deer would not like to leave the impression that the people who served in Hong Kong were poorly trained. Those regiments were organized at the beginning of the war. The Winnipeg Grenadiers, whom I knew so well, were mobilized in September 1939. They were well officered and the ranks were well trained. Their problem was shortage of equipment when they reached Hong Kong. They put up a magnificent fight against very heavy odds, and those who survived and suffered in the Japanese prison camps deserve special treatment from a grateful country. Vey few of them have recovered from the suffering they went through. I hope the hon. member will not mind if I just make that slight correction to his remarks, because they were a well trained body of troops and they fought magnificently.

Mr. Thompson: I did not intend any reflection on the type of training or the degree of training they had at home, but certainly they were not trained for the type of fighting they had to face. They expected attack from the sea, and they had to fight an entirely different type of warfare. This is not a time for controversy over whether they were trained or equipped. The main point is that they deserve special consideration, and I think we are all agreed on that.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the debate on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, which amount to $335,000,000, I believe it is appropriate for me, like the hon. members who preceded me, to make a few remarks.

It is easy to realize that the expenditures of that department are rather sizeable, since they total $335,000,000. However, if we consider the objectives for which they are intended, we must admit that those who took part in the two world wars as well as the Korean conflict surely deserve all the consideration of the Canadian parliament and their country, for they were called upon to defend us. That is why I feel that it is certainly appropriate to pass those votes, even if they are very considerable, in order to avoid some criticisms of the department by veterans of world war I.

I am not sure whether the minister is aware of the fact that some veterans receive a meagre pension, which is not even the equivalent of 50 per cent of the present cost of living. None the less, veterans are entitled to a pension.

As for the pension itself, I do not know exactly according to what standards it is established. In any case, several veterans of my constituency complain that they do not receive enough to honour their commitments, and this, at a time they have reached old age and can no longer hold a position in view of their state of health, which was considerably affected during their service in world wars I and II. Moreover, I know of other veterans who returned from war with disabilities but who, during the first year after their discharge from the army, did not seem too badly affected as far as their occupation was concerned. Now, after three or four years in civilian life, they find that their health is seriously handicapped and, then, they experience tremendous difficulties in being admitted to the class of veterans entitled to a reasonable pension.

I believe the minister should deal more seriously with such cases and, as far as possible, grant them a more generous pension, and this, in order that those veterans may be in a position to live more becomingly in their country. Furthermore, I submit that the department should see to it that veterans have adequate housing, because they have sacrificed a part of their life on the battlefields.

I think they should be given much more than what they get today, a preference when an administrative job has to be filled in the country. Thus, I think it would be possible to employ many more veterans who do not ask for more than to earn their livelihood. Unfortunately, their health is affected, they cannot take any kind of job. I think the department should give them priority as veterans in many areas where their energy could be used.

Now, I should like to point out to the minister another aspect of his department which I think is very important. I refer to the lot of veterans' widows. I have very often exchanged correspondence with the minister on that matter.

In my own riding, several veterans' widows are complaining today that people do not seem to be willing to heed their representations, because these widows do not know how to submit them. In brief, they do not know where they should apply for information they absolutely need in order to take advantage of the continuance of their husbands' pensions as veterans' widows.

I hope that after the many sittings of the veterans committee held this fall, numerous steps will be taken so that, at the next session, the Department of Veterans Affairs can bring forward something new to improve that act.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I propose that item No. 25 be reduced by an amount of $250,000.

[Text]

Item agreed to.

20. Treatment services—medical research and education, $419,000.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak for just a moment on this item. Before commencing my remarks I would congratulate the minister on his inheritance of an excellent department, excellently administered, and I hope the work that was carried out by his predecessors continues in the future for the benefit of the veterans of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacRae: Item 20 deals with medical research and education and it is noted that the amount is $419,000. The details, which are shown on page 453, indicate that for medical research itself the vote has been raised from $80,000 to $130,000. When Dr. Crawford appeared before the committee on veterans affairs I questioned him on the item of medical research, especially in the field of mental illness. To me this is vitally important, as I think it must be to many who have seen the broken minds of those men who served in Canada's wars. I first became interested in this matter early in world war II and I had occasion to visit Ste. Anne's military hospital, where one could see these men. It was depressing to see the men who had been bodily wounded, but it was even more depressing to see those men whose minds had been broken in 1915, 1916, 1917 and 1918 and who were still fighting their battles.

I became more deeply interested a few years later when a young man who served under my command and was decorated for gallantry was hospitalized at the end of the war for battle exhaustion so severe that for the rest of his life—he was then 19 years of age—until the time he dies he will remain in hospital. He was so battle exhausted that he could never go back to his home, to his family or to his friends. I would suggest that the minister should give very special thought in the future to the whole field of research into mental illness.

Dr. Hans Selye, the famous physician, is doing a tremendous amount of research in this whole field. His viewpoint is that stress and strain are the basic causes of most of the illnesses which beset mankind. If this is so, the men who served in battle in Canada's wars, have more than anyone else undergone stress and strain, and this calls for some consideration at the hands of this nation. I suggest to the minister that as the years go by his department will find that men who would perhaps have lived much longer and would have led much easier and happier lives will break down because of what was popularly known in world war II as battle exhaustion. This condition received much more humane treatment in world war II than it did in world war I, when a man who had been shell-shocked was considered to be a coward, and such men were sometimes shot as a result.

I commend this matter to the attention of the minister, and I hope that next time he presents his estimates he will be able to report to us that much more than is detailed in this vote has been spent in the whole broad field of research into all types of mental illness, especially as it applies to battle exhaustion.

Item agreed to.

25. Treatment services—hospital construction, improvements, equipment and acquisition of land, $2,599,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, after securing the necessary information, I move that the item No. 25 be reduced by $250,000.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Mr. Favreau moves that vote 25 of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs be reduced by $250,000. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

30. Prosthetic services—supply, manufacture and administration including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year for prosthetic and related services, $1,435,200.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I have no wish to delay the passage of the minister's estimates. They are important. They are, of course, the estimates of the previous administration and we are now looking towards prorogation. I wish to speak very briefly on this item. The minister will know, when he reads the report of the veterans affairs committee, that there is therein a recommendation that the prosthetic services of the department be made available to all Canadians. I realize that the minister will be giving this recommendation his consideration in due course.

The point was made by Dr. Crawford that perhaps adequate prosthetic service was not available throughout most of our country. Well, that is true but only up to a certain point. Mr. Chairman, there are in this country a number of private prosthetic makers who do an excellent job. We are a free enterprise country. Also, let us keep in mind that we do not want this service to be any less than it is now for the veterans of this country. I would ask the minister to look carefully at this recommendation before taking this particular branch of our veterans service into the welfare state towards which we seem to be headed.

45. War veterans allowances and civilian allowances, $86,244,000.

Mr. Favreau: I move that vote No. 45 be reduced by $700,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Peters: We would like to know why there is this large reduction.

[Mr. MacRae.]

Mr. Teillet: As I explained in the committee and at the beginning of my estimates, this is quite a large vote amounting to $86 million. An assessment was made some eight or nine months after the book of printed estimates was available. The requirements during the year indicated that this lesser amount would be required to meet the commitments. There is no change in principle or policy involved at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I wish to remind the minister of the promises which were made to the veterans when they were soldiers in the 1939-45 war, while they had, in Europe, a visit from the minister of national defence, Colonel Ralston, who said to them: Young men, fight with courage and bravery and when you go back to your country, Canada, you will never suffer again poverty in the midst of plenty and you will be treated—as we say in French—"aux petits oignons"; you will be respected by your country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the veterans' benefits in many cases are not sufficient to allow them to live decently. I know that the minister cannot change his estimates at this time, even though he introduces a reduction of $700,000; but when parliament meets again in 1964, I hope that the government will take into account the needs of the veterans and of their widows, in every respect.

Item as amended agreed to.

60. Burials and memorials, $1,691,500.

Mr. Peters: I am interested in this item. Perhaps the minister does not have the information I require at hand, and perhaps he could supply it later. I had a request from my areas, and I am sure the same situation applies in other areas, for some type of perpetual care to be supplied to cemeteries in which veterans are buried, both enemy and allied. At the time I was led to believe the benefits of the national war graves commission had been made available to cemeteries for prisoners of war. I am just wondering if sufficient time has elapsed to allow that work to be done under this arrangement. If the minister does not have the information, it is quite all right, but I would appreciate it if he would look into this question of the maintenance of war graves in this country in relation to the arrangements that were made earlier.

Mr. Teillet: May I take advantage of the kindness of the hon. gentleman to suggest that I might dig into the matter and report to him at a later date?

Item agreed to.

Canadian pension commission—

75. Administration expenses, $2,592,200.

Mr. Churchill: I suggested earlier to the minister that if he would give a statement to the committee concerning some of the issues raised on item No. 1, I would refrain from drawing the attention of the committee to the treatment he afforded a first world war veteran immediately on taking office. The minister gave no statement. I simply record the fact that I sent a telegram to the Prime Minister of this country on May 8 to this effect:

When your government assumed office on 22 April there were two vacancies on the pension commission. A third vacancy was created on 1st May by the action of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I repeat my request for the immediate reinstatement of McKay to correct the imbalance in the representation of first world war veterans on the commission and in the representation of western Canada.

The Prime Minister replied as follows:

I am in receipt of your telegrams, one sent to London and one sent to my office here, concerning the decision of the Minister of Veterans Affairs not to renew the appointment of former commissioner McKay of the Canadian pension commission on the completion of his term which expired on April 30 of this year.

I do not believe that this is a matter in which I should interfere with the decision of the responsible minister.

I consider that to be shabby treatment of a veteran of this country who gave service in two world wars and who served in the trenches in the first world war at the battle of Passchendaele. Anyone who served at the battle of Passchendaele will understand the circumstances, and why I speak strongly in favour of this man.

More important than that, sir, is the fact that on May 17 I asked a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs which is recorded on page 14 of Hansard and reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I should like to ask him whether he has filled the two vacancies on the pensions commission which were existing when the government took office on April 22.

The minister replied in these words:

To my knowledge there were no vacancies on the commission at that time.

This statement misled the house, because there were two ad hoc vacancies on that commission. I asked a supplementary question in the following words:

In view of the fact that there were two vacancies on the pensions commission when the government took office on April 22, I should like to ask the minister why he found it necessary, as he stated, to create a vacancy—

This was by way of a letter and a press release.

—when those two were in existence; and will he immediately correct the imbalance on the pensions commission and reinstate Mr. McKay so that representation may be restored for first world war veterans and for western Canada?

He replied as follows:

I have given the hon. gentleman a complete and truthful answer in writing to this question.

I maintain, sir, that the house was misled by that statement. There were two ad hoc vacancies on that commission when the minister was appointed, and he then created a third. He raised the issue of the non-representation of various parts of this country and tried to confuse the issue. I say that the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Prime Minister of this country treated very shabbily a veteran of this country who deserved better from this government and from his country.

Mr. Teillet: I expected, of course, that the hon. gentleman would have carried out the threat he raised earlier, and that is one of the reasons I allowed him to. Second, I will not repeat the argument except to tell him that the statements I made were truthful and categorical and they remain so. To attempt to suggest that an injustice was done here means that, if there was, then I was only correcting an earlier injustice which took place a year before. I reinstated the balance of the commission because the hon. gentleman unbalanced it. I said that at the time. I still think that is the fact, and as far as I am concerned the matter rests there.

Mr. Churchill: The minister said that on the first occasion—

Mr. Teillet: That is right.

Mr. Churchill: —and he says "and the matter rests there". The veteran has been let out. The minister said there is no imbalance on the commission, that there are no vacancies. I say again that he is misleading the house. There were two ad hoc vacancies on the commission at the time he took office.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I will not take very long to make my point. In this furore or difference of opinion which has developed between the minister and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I recognize that a question of principle is involved. I felt that there should be protection against this sort of thing and I put on the order paper a bill, Bill No. C-35, described as an act to amend the Criminal Code (a purge for the king's evil). In this sense I just want to define what "king's evil" means. A lot of members have come to me and have asked whether "king's evil" is scrofula, which is some kind of skin disease. In this particular case the king's evil is the arbitrary power of the king, in this sense the crown, to dismiss people at a moment's notice. It is a failure to renew an appointment which the incumbent might expect to be renewed, without giving notice of any kind.

Therefore I would advocate to all hon. members the purpose of this bill. If it had applied to this case it would have meant that the member whose appointment was not renewed would have had six months' notice. This is one of the things we should consider, that when any gentleman is drawn into the public service on an appointment basis, most of which appointments offer a high salary, and they devote three, five, perhaps seven years to their appointment, when a shift in government comes, for example, they may be dropped very quickly. I can think of some examples on the other side. A Mr. Buchanan was dropped very abruptly from the tariff board by the Conservative government. This often results in a tremendous shock to the person concerned. No matter what his partisanship may be, the bottom drops out of his economic base.

In considering people in the pension commission at the present time, those who were Conservative appointees, when their time ends, must expect to be dropped. But what about the man doing a good job on the commission? I am sure there are several of them doing a good job, whatever may be their political allegiance. I think the best way to protect them and to prevent the kind of situation developing evidenced by the obvious disagreement between the minister and the former minister is to put something like this bill I have proposed on the statute books, making it a requirement to give six months notice when an appointment will not be renewed. I leave this with hon. members as a suggestion, because it is quite apparent my bill will not be debated in this particular session of parliament.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the bill would have been in the house a few days ago, had the hon. member been available. I came down with all this material intending to support him, for I like the idea of six months' notice. All Mr. McKay was given was 24 hours' notice.

Item agreed to.

Terminable services—

115. Veterans benefits including assistance and the training of certain pensioners under regulations approved by the governor in council, $1,044,600.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That vote No. 115 be reduced by $65,000.

Mr. Clancy: I should like an explanation of this deduction.

Mr. Teillet: I gave the answer a little while ago. A later assessment some eight or nine months after the printing of the estimates allowed for more accuracy. There is no change in principle or policy.

Mr. Clancy: I agree, as long as you speed up the queen's printer.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes and completes the estimates of veterans affairs.

Mr. Teillet: May I express my thanks to the committee for assisting me so expeditiously.

Mr. Peters: Ten thirty.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is out of the chamber for a few minutes, could we take the lone item of Department of Trade and Commerce and dispose of it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

L63b. Acquisition in the 1963-64 and 1964-65 fiscal years of uranium concentrates in accordance with contracts to be entered into with the approval of the governor in council by Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada with Rio Algom Mines Limited, Denison Mines Limited and Faraday Uranium Mines Limited; and to provide in the current and subsequent fiscal years for the cost of stockpiling uranium concentrates purchased under the said contracts, $20,000,000.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That concludes the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Peters: Ten thirty.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether, in view of the general desire of the committee to get on with the business so that we can finish this week, there could not be an understanding that we would sit long enough at least to take the estimates of my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys which have already been considered, according to the records I have, for three and a half hours and which, I imagine, will not require much more time.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Administration services—

1. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's fee for membership in the pan-American institute of geography and history, $1,290,100.

Mr. Benidickson: We were considering item one, I think, on November 15 and I believe at that time the hon. member for Port Arthur had the floor. I have spoken to him in the meantime and I think we have agreed that I shall see the prospectors association of Port Arthur on my next visit to Port Arthur, which will perhaps be in the very near future.

With respect to some of the items which were brought up, I think I could very well, with the consent of the committee, write replies by letter to the hon. members who spoke. I see my predecessor in office is here. He was not available last night in the committee but I paid him the compliment of saying I was really advancing his estimates. If he has any suggestions to make I shall be glad to reply to them. But apart from that, I think we had a good discussion on November 15 and, with the consent of the committee, I assure everyone that although some of the members who spoke that night are not here this evening, I will see that my officials analyse with great care the recommendations they made, and we will reply to them in writing.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief since it is getting late.

However, I should not want to let this occasion go by without first congratulating my successor, whose graciousness is well known and who is doing such a fine job. I do not think my friends opposite will mind my saying that.

I should also like to pay tribute to the late Marc Boyer, the lamented deputy minister who passed on suddenly while I was his minister. His demise was a great loss not only to the officials who were associated with him in the department, but to the people in the Canadian mining industry who came in contact with him. A man of great competence, he was always in for those who sought the development of that important industry. We greatly deplore such an untimely death.

As for the present deputy minister and his assistant, I know that they carry out their duties with great competence, and I commend them for it.

I think that the minister has realized the importance of having within his department a supply of scientists and technicians who are second to none in knowledge among other world scientists and who are responsible for the tremendous progress accomplished by one of our most important industries.

As the minister pointed out, the estimates now being considered have been prepared in great part by the Conservative administration, and I could hardly object, of course, to the projects covered in those estimates. But since the budget of this department relates mostly to industrial research, I suggest to the minister that he should certainly not yield to the pressures that must have been brought to bear by his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in order to further reduce his estimates. I know that the minister, who has the welfare of his departmental officials at heart, and more especially the country's development, will use his great influence, not only to maintain the estimates at their present level, but even to increase them so as to improve the outstanding services provided by the various divisions of the department.

Mr. Chairman, before I conclude, allow me to say that the department and particularly the mines branch renders important services to the mining industry. However, in my opinion, these services should be given more publicity, and this not only to enable the mining industry to make use of them, because it does so quite freely, but also in order that prospectors and small people of the mining industry from the grass roots of the mining industry, as we say, be better acquainted with the services of the mines branch.

In this connection, I agree with the proposal made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), to the effect that the department should tangibly support the very important work of the prospector because he is at the basis of the mining industry and hence of the discovery of this important source of wealth for our country. Therefore, I ask the minister to find concrete means to assist that very important category of our miners.

Mr. Chairman, I think the whole question of industrial research in this country should be reconsidered, and I would go as far as to suggest that the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, where there is a nucleus of scientists and specialists, be made the centre of all research services in the federal government. In my opinion, it is more than time to centralize those research services, and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is the ideal place to achieve such a concentration.

If the government undertakes the re-organization of the public service, as suggested by the Glassco commission, it will perhaps establish a department of research, the heart of which, if I may put it that way, should be the present Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: I should like to add one more point to the minister's consideration of his meeting with the prospectors. I appreciate that he intends to get in touch with the very active prospectors association at the lakehead. I have mentioned before that the minister of mines in the Ontario government at the present time is from the northwest section of Ontario, from the riding of Port Arthur. The minister knows him. He is a man who is very much in touch with mining developments. At the present time he is promoting a silver "come back" in our area. Now that we have two ministers of mines who come from the big prospecting country, I suggest it is a perfect time for them to get together, and I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he would consider having a conference with the Ontario minister of mines specifically to see if Ontario and the federal government cannot devise a program which would be of mutual interest and which, perhaps, could also be applied to other provinces.

I am sure Saskatchewan, which has a program for prospectors at the present time, would be interested in joining in. The lure of the big strike, the dream of making it rich, of making it big through a mineral discovery is one of the dreams in Canada that to me is much more worth while than the idea of striking it rich in the Irish sweepstakes. I think it has real consequences for our economy. We need to do something about refurbishing the dream of a lot of men who have fallen behind the kind of scientific and technical advance that more and more is turning prospecting into something that is really in the hands of the very large corporations with great technical resources and geological experts, such as the hon. member for York-Scarborough.

Mr. Benidickson: I want to say immediately that I have had two recent conferences with the minister of mines of Ontario. This subject is another on which we would be very glad to collaborate, with the hon. member for Port Arthur.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Pigeon: One question.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he has received a request from the province of Quebec and from the province of Newfoundland to set once for all the boundaries of Labrador and New Quebec—because the federal government often steps in, for instance in the field of transport which concerns two, three, four, ten provinces—and as this matter concerns two provinces, I would like to ask him if he has received a request or if he intends to invite the representatives from those two provinces to Ottawa to settle for good this problem which has been pending for many years.

[Text]

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, since I have become minister I do not recall that I have received an official letter from either province, but our position has been stated in the house at this session of parliament. We will be very glad to render the assistance available from our officials to either or both provinces, but I think both must make the request.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a supplementary question?

Does the minister intend to ask representatives from the two provinces to come to Ottawa in order to find a final solution?

[Text]

Mr. Benidickson: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: I call it 10.30, Mr. Chairman. I suggest that if we are not interested in ourselves we should at least be courteous to the staff and let them have a certain amount of rest before they have another hard day. If we cannot run our own business properly, let us at least help them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have tried to be as considerate and courteous as I possibly could be to every element in the opposition, but I do not think anyone will take it amiss if I say it seems to me that the hon. member, who has taken at least a third of the whole time during the day, is taking a rather lot upon himself by making it possibly necessary for the officials for whom he is expressing consideration to have to come to work during Christmas week when, if we would get on with our work today, tomorrow and Saturday, they would be able to enjoy their holidays and so would the rest of us. I appeal to the hon. gentleman, to whom all of us have listened with the greatest courtesy and politeness whenever he has spoken today, and who has been treated very well by other hon. members, to reciprocate the co-operation he himself has received.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I am one who has taken up none of the time today and I wish to express my strong disapproval of the inconsiderate manner in which the house leader has tried to encourage us to extend the hours without any regard for the health or welfare of those people who have to remain on duty in the interpreting booths. I think it is disgraceful.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, may I say to the hon. member, who represents a mining community, that we are dealing with mining estimates. Last week I dealt with some of the remarks the hon. member for Timiskaming made then. May I say that I dealt in the most pleasant fashion with members from all over the country who are interested in mining. The hon. member's remarks were accepted well, in proper parliamentary form, and I think he might consider putting through these estimates.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Ten thirty.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks that have been made I would certainly be glad to co-operate if the minister will ask that the estimates of his department be accepted in total.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it would be the wish of the committee to accept these estimates, there having been nearly four hours discussion of them, we would be quite agreeable.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Pigeon: How many millions did we vote in 20 seconds?

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader three questions with regard to the business for tomorrow.

The first is, would he so arrange the business that we could have answers to the written questions, of which 60 remain on the order paper, and unless they are answered tomorrow I presume they will die there. The second question is, what legislative items are still to be considered, and will he call those first tomorrow? Then my third question is, what estimates will be taken up tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: I can propose, but it is quite obvious that is as far as I can go. So far as the questions are concerned we had questions answered yesterday—I have almost lost track of the days—yes, yesterday. I would doubt if there are many more answers available but I would be quite glad, when we have concluded the estimates and sent the appropriations bill over to the other place, if the house would agree at that time to have questions called, to give any answers that by that time are available to any of the questions on the order paper.

With regard to legislation, as I indicated last night there had been some question about whether the government would have to make some suggested changes in the legislation with respect to the world's fair. We have now reached the conclusion that the proposal that is on the order paper is the one we would like to recommend to the house, and therefore we would ask the house to consider both the resolution and the bill tomorrow. There is no difficulty about that because the bill stands for second reading, owing to some fortunate Speaker's decision in, I think, 1913; but I would hope we could have the debate wholly on one or the other. I would suggest the bill might be preferable.

There is also a notice which has been put on the paper of a resolution preceding a bill which, as a result of such consultations as we have been able to have through the usual, and some more than usual channels, I believe will be generally acceptable to the house. If, when hon. members look at their Votes and Proceedings tomorrow and see this notice, they indicate that they are prepared to proceed expeditiously with it, the government would be glad to bring it forward, and I am led to believe that if it was acceptable to the house, it would then be possible to deal by agreement with a large number of private bills that still stand on the order paper.

There is no other legislation except those two matters and the private bills I referred to, that the government feels any obligation about. There are of course quite a number of public bills, and I believe there is one other private bill and, if there is any time after the appropriations bill, it has been suggested that some time might be devoted to a further consideration of that bill. That is something I personally would like to recommend to the house when the time comes.

Mr. Douglas: Which bill is the minister referring to?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a bill in the name of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie.

Mr. Knowles: Portage-Neepawa.

Mr. Pickersgill: I stand corrected. The hon. member himself is from Portage la Prairie.

There are still estimates of nine departments to be completed and I cannot be quite sure of the order in which they will be called because one or two ministers, and particularly my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, have other preoccupations tomorrow of a pretty urgent character. But as I see it now, the order in which we would like to call them is first, the Department of Industry, which has relatively little left; then the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, where no items have been passed but where there has been quite an extended debate; then the Department of National Defence, most of the items of which have been dealt with, but there are a few items still standing; then the Department of Transport, most of the items of which have been dealt with but there are quite a number of items still standing; then the Department of External Affairs which of course has been considered carefully in the special committee and I believe was considered for one evening in the house, but in which no item has yet been passed.

There is an item left over in the department of northern affairs and we would work it in at some convenient time among the latter estimates. Then there are the estimates of the Speaker and the Department of Finance, and my own estimates which have not yet been considered at all. I think they would be kept until the last, in the order which I have given, unless there are some very strong reasons for changing the order.

When that has been completed, so far as I can see the business of the house for the session which began on May 16, 1963, so far as the government is concerned, would be completed.

The Minister of Industry reminds me that it is various agencies within his responsibility which have to be dealt with, but that the department itself has been disposed of. That is a technical correction of some importance. Whether it will be possible to do all that business in one day I do not know, but it does raise the question of what kind of hours the house is prepared to sit.

If there is no understanding about the matter we would take the public business from 11 to 1, from 2.30 to 5, and from 7 to 10.30. I think it is perfectly obvious to every hon. member that we could not possibly complete the business in those hours. I would hope, particularly now that the hon. member for Port Arthur was able to explain the king's evil to us this evening, that there might be a disposition to forgo the private members' hour, which would make quite a difference to the day.

The government would be very happy, and I do not think there would be much objection from the staff of the house, if we could agree, from the time we start in the morning—and every effort would be made to accommodate hon. members at their convenience in this, and to accommodate the staff—to sit without a break until some time in the evening when a motion to adjourn would be made. I would certainly be only too ready to undertake that the motion to adjourn would be made not later than eleven o'clock, and certainly not later than twelve o'clock.

If that is not agreeable, perhaps we could at least have a definite understanding that if the business is not completed tomorrow we would meet on Saturday at eleven o'clock, and have the same rules apply to our proceedings as apply on Friday, except there would be no private members' hour. Perhaps I could have some expressions of view on this question.

Mr. Churchill: With regard to tomorrow we are quite prepared to meet at 11 and sit continually until some adjournment hour later that evening, and our preference would be to complete the business tomorrow if that could possibly be done. We are prepared for a Saturday sitting if this fails.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I really do not think we have any right to keep staff here from 11 in the morning until 10.30 or 11 at night without a break, no matter what the Secretary of State says. Translators, Hansard reporters, messengers and others have to be on the job during that period almost continually, and I think it is a most inhumane type of treatment to impose on any group of people. I do not think it is necessary, and I am sure that the longer we have, the more some people will waste time.

I think if we follow the time table we had today, maybe if we see we are going along pretty rapidly in the afternoon we could dispose of the supper hour, but we are certainly prepared to come back on Saturday. I think it would be better to handle this with decent hours and not kill the staff, rather than try to do it all with indecent haste and have a lot of people played out on Saturday morning.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, our group has no objection at all to the sitting hours proposed by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). However, I would suggest he asks personally whether the staff has any objections. If not, I do not see why we should not go on sitting according to the schedule suggested by the Secretary of State. In the circumstances, we are ready to do it, and even to sit Saturday if necessary.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, we, on this side, are also prepared to co-operate with the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and the government with regard to the suggested hours for tomorrow. We are assured that arrangements will be taken so that the staff may be replaced alternatively during the lunch and supper hours. Consequently, we are prepared to agree to these sitting hours so that we may complete consideration of the estimates in order for the house to prorogue as soon as possible.

It is strange to note that the opposition to that schedule comes precisely from those who are delaying the passing of those estimates, rather inconsiderately.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I might perhaps form a consensus from what I have heard, without trying to be invidious in any way, it seemed to me there was absolutely no objection to sitting on Saturday if it were absolutely necessary. I would like to have that clearly understood first. If that is the case, I think perhaps I might make a modified suggestion. It would be that we take one hour for lunch tomorrow, from one o'clock to two o'clock; that we take the private members' hour for government business, and that we make no decision about the supper hour at all and see what progress has been made and what the prospects are, because I think if the staff thought they did not have to come back on Saturday they would be glad to provide the services during the supper hour tomorrow. But I think there is something in what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has said, that if it becomes certain by that time that there is to be a sitting on Saturday anyway, it might perhaps be desirable to have a break; and I hope it is clearly understood that we would sit, without any question, until eleven o'clock in the evening.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we are agreeable to any of these arrangements. I hope there is no impression left here that any party in this house is disregarding the staff of this institution. I am relying on the house leader to make the necessary arrangements for the staff; and if the situation becomes impossible, we will be satisfied with his judgment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have been observing parliament, in it and around it, for a quarter of a century. If we manage to end this session without having one day of continuous sitting, I think it will be just about the first session that has ever been ended without that having been done. It is not that I mind setting a precedent, if we can do it. I hope it is understood, then, Mr. Speaker, that we will meet tomorrow at eleven o'clock; we will adjourn from one o'clock to two o'clock; we will take the private members' hour; we will consider before six o'clock, through the usual channels, whether we want to sit between six o'clock and seven o'clock; we will come back at seven o'clock; we will sit till eleven o'clock, and if we have not concluded our work, we will start our sitting on Saturday at eleven o'clock and complete it, I hope, before too long that day.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the minister means when he says "take the private members' hour"? Does he mean take it for government business?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the house will sit tomorrow at the times and hours suggested by the Secretary of State?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: I hope, Mr. Speaker, there is not any pressure with regard to sitting until eleven o'clock. I hope the Secretary of State, if he says eleven o'clock, will not put up this tirade at that particular hour.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the house, Mr. Speaker, that unless the hon. member for Timiskaming rises and asks us to sit after eleven o'clock tomorrow night, I will not ask.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we should also have it noted, just to get it all together that we are agreed to the Saturday sitting if necessary.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed, as far as the Saturday sittings are concerned?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

It being seventeen minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

Supply—Items Passed

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day (for amendments see text):]

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

A—Department—

Administration services—

Departmental administration—

1. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's fee for membership in the Pan-American institute of geography and history, $1,290,100.

5. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works and equipment, including common-use field survey equipment, $304,600.

10. Explosives Act administration, $104,500.

15. Mineral resources division, $424,100.

Surveys and mapping branch—

25. Branch administration including a grant of $1,000 to the Canadian institute of surveying and photogrammetry, $197,000.

30. Geodetic survey of Canada, $1,119,400.

35. International boundary commission including authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the United States government of the cost of binding annual reports and maintaining boundary range lights, $102,900.

Topographical surveys—

40. Administration, operation and maintenance, $2,002,800.

45. Construction or acquisition of equipment, $87,000.

50. Legal surveys and aeronautical charts, $796,600.

51. Provincial and territorial boundary surveys including authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amounts of the shares of the provincial governments of the costs of the surveys, $300.

60. Map compilation and reproduction, $1,628,100.

Marine sciences branch—

70. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's fee for membership in the international hydrographic bureau, $6,001,800.

75. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $3,100,000.

Geological survey of Canada—

80. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's share of the cost of the geological liaison office, British Commonwealth scientific conference, London, England, and $75,000 for grants in aid of geological research in Canadian universities, $6,191,000.

85. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works land and equipment, $265,800.

Mines branch—

90. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's share of the cost of the commonwealth committee on mineral processing and $35,000 for grants in aid of mining and mineral processing research in Canadian universities, $4,677,700.

95. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $464,200.

Geographical branch—

100. Administration, operation and maintenance including the expenses of the Canadian permanent committee on geographical names and the national committee for Canada of the international geographical union, Canada's fee for membership in the international geographical union and a grant of $500 to the Canadian association of geographers, $554,300.

Dominion observatories—

Dominion observatory, Ottawa and field stations—

105. Administration, operation and maintenance including the expenses of the national committee for Canada of the international astronomical union, Canada's fee for membership in the international astronomical union and a grant of $3,500 to the royal astronomical society of Canada, $1,722,000.

110. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $495,000.

Dominion astrophysical observatory, Victoria, B.C.—

115. Administration, operation and maintenance, $217,900.

120. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $60,600.

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "LA PRESSE"

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

On page 25 of yesterday's La Presse, under an eye-catching headline, it is written:

Caouette said to have ordered all members of his group to hand over to him $3,000 out of their pay.

The article is signed by Marcel Gingras and reads as follows:

The leader of the Ralliement Creditistes, Mr. Real Caouette, is reported to have given 24 hours to the members of his group to hand him over a sum of $3,000 that each had promised to pay him.

And a little further on, one may read:

Each had been so happy about his raise in sessional indemnity that all the Caouette followers accepted the deal. Yesterday was the day of reckoning, but two of them are said to have refused to cough up, and it was then that the leader of the Ralliement is supposed to have issued his ultimatum.

Mr. Speaker, those are false insinuations and rumours bordering on stupidity. I do hope that the correspondent, Mr. Gingras, will show some professional integrity and give my denial as much space as he gave to those foolish statements which are quite typical of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer).

Mr. Speaker, since, unfortunately, I have to leave Ottawa today to keep an engagement in my riding tomorrow morning, with your permission and the unanimous consent of the house, I wish to take this opportunity to say how happy I am to be able to thank you for the courtesy and fairness you have shown us during the session that is drawing to a close.

May I offer you also my best wishes for Christmas, as well as to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), to the cabinet members, to the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), to all the leaders of the other parties as well as to all the members of the house and to the staff.

I am looking forward to seeing you again in 1964.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, like the hon. member, I think that anyone who would accept to hand $3,000 to the hon. member for Villeneuve would really do a foolish thing.

Mr. Pigeon: It would be a bad investment.

MR. VALADE—REFERENCE TO REMARK IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR DANFORTH

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I wish also to rise on a question of privilege under citation 140 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

As reported on page 6077 of the English version of Hansard for December 18, 1963 the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) stated:

I was interested in the speech of the hon. member for St. Mary, much of which I thought was needlessly self-congratulatory of the previous government, and some of it quite hypocritical.

Mr. Speaker, I take exception to those remarks by the hon. member and I hope he will have the honesty to withdraw them or give an explanation that will dispel any doubt about me or any other member.

I am no more of a hypocrite than the hon. member for Danforth and I hope he will, in all fairness, withdraw his remarks.

[Text]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Mary telephoned me yesterday, and I regret having been unable to return the call. I thought he was inviting me to a duel or something. I am still at a loss to know what is troubling the hon. gentleman, but if there was anything in my remarks to which he took exception in a personal way certainly I have no objection at all to withdrawing them.

Mr. Valade: On a question of privilege, I did not hear the hon. member retracting his words "in a hypocritical manner". I think those words should be withdrawn so they are not left on Hansard. There are some people in the house who have been conducting themselves in a hypocritical manner, such as those who have refused to vote on certain occasions in this house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that we have had enough discussion. Words must be given their ordinary meaning, and it seems to me that the hon. member for Danforth did withdraw any implication he may have made.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, as far as the words "hypocritical manner" are concerned, if the hon. member withdraws the words I put them back on the record again.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for St. Mary does not feel aggrieved at this time. He has had considerable time of the house. The hon. member for Danforth made a withdrawal even if he did not use the words in question complained of. I do not think the hon. member will improve the situation by making further remarks at this time. I think we should get on with the business of the house.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, surely I am not to be denied my right to raise a question of privilege, which is a right assured to each and every member of the house. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) I hope did not have too much of a party yesterday, but he has just reiterated the words. He said that if the hon. member for Danforth was withdrawing the words he would put them back on Hansard. I think he should back them up on his own behalf, because he has been an expert in this field.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could suggest that as the matter occurred two or three days ago, it is more usual to raise the question of privilege at the time. Perhaps we could go on with the next item of business.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Third report of special committee on defence—Mr. Sauve.

Fourth report of sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping—Mr. Richard.

Fourth, fifth and sixth reports of standing committee on privileges and elections—Mr. Pennell.

Sixth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. McNulty.

Third report of standing committee on debates—Mr. Batten.

Third report of standing committee on mines, forests and waters—Mr. Cyr.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham) presented the second report of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that this is a very long report, and that there is no particular reason why the house needs to concur in it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the hon. member will not press the suggestion that he will move concurrence later today.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-131, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

JUDGES ACT AND EXCHEQUER COURT ACT

On the order: Government notices of motion.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act to authorize the appointment of, and the provision of salary for, one additional judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder whether, in accordance with what I suggested last night at the end of the day's business, we could advance the government notice of motion which appears in the name of the Minister of Justice on page 2 of Votes and Proceedings of today so that it would be available for consideration after we have dealt with the bill respecting the world fair today. If there should be any considerable objection from any quarter of the house the government would not proceed at all, as I indicated clearly last night, but I believe there has been the usual consultation and my impression is that there was agreement to proceed with this matter.

Mr. Churchill: I am sorry. What was the reference which the hon. gentleman gave us?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the matter could be left until a little later. Maybe I could reserve the right to ask to return to government notices of motion later in the day, and have an additional word with hon. members about this.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DATE OF OPENING OF NEXT SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister in a position yet to indicate to the house the expected date of opening of the next session of parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hope it would be acceptable to the house if, subject of course to any emergency developing which might make another decision necessary, the house could reassemble for the next session in the second week of February. I regret I am not able to suggest to the house the exact day during that week, but it would be in the second week of February. That is our present intention.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think there will be general agreement with that, particularly when it is subject to the qualification the Prime Minister has mentioned, that should anything occur during the intervening weeks that would require the earlier convening of parliament it would be done.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOHN WASYLENCHUK—ALLEGED ILLEGAL DEPORTATION FROM B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice was going to make a statement today on the Wasylenchuk case. I wonder whether he is prepared to do so now.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am. I do so in answer to a question raised by the Leader of the Opposition and also one raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, but it has to do chiefly with a question put by the Leader of the Opposition with regard to whether or not my parliamentary secretary had any communications with others in connection with this matter.

The statement is as follows. After the extradition warrant had been sent out a telephone call was received by my parliamentary secretary from Mr. Ray Perrault, speaking for himself and on behalf of what he described as a legal committee, asking for further consideration of the point that Wasylenchuk ought not to be surrendered for extradition because he was on parole, and for consideration of the point that the habeas corpus judge had not actually issued an order dismissing the application.

Mr. Perrault indicated that the execution of the warrant was imminent and suggested to Mr. Macdonald that he should telephone the warden of Oakalla prison with a view to delaying execution of the warrant while these points were being considered. Mr. Macdonald complied with the request, and when he reached the warden he was informed that Wasylenchuk was already in the custody of United States officers and on his way to the United States.

With reference to the question raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam with regard to my looking into the point having to do with section 24 of the Extradition Act and section 11 of the Parole Act, I have this to say. I do not wish to be drawn into a legal argument, and I do not believe it would be in accordance with the practice for me to engage in one. Therefore I shall restrict myself simply to saying that I have been advised by the legal officers of my department that neither by force of section 24 of the Extradition Act nor section 11 of the Parole Act, nor both, is a person who is at large on parole to be considered as a person who is, to use their words, "undergoing sentence" within the meaning of the Extradition Act.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the confusion surrounding the extradition I wonder if the minister would not see fit to table the so-called opinion?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it is not a so-called opinion. It is an opinion, a verbal opinion that was given to me by the officers when the matter was under discussion prior to the statement I made the other day and again today.

Mr. Fairweather: Will the minister table the opinion?

Mr. Chevrier: There is no written opinion; therefore I cannot table it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not think that a reading of the sections indicates that the opinion he received is a nonsensical opinion?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have read the sections. I do not think it is a nonsensical opinion. As I said the other day, I must be guided, as every minister of justice must be guided, by the advice I receive from the officers and not by advice received from members of parliament. That is what I was guided by when I made the statement yesterday and when I, in effect, repeated it today.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister one supplementary question. Did he receive this opinion before he signed the surrender order or afterwards?

Mr. Chevrier: I am glad to answer that question. The point raised by my hon. friend was not raised until afterward, and that is why my parliamentary assistant, in deference to Mr. Perrault, who raised the point particularly in his telephone conversation with him, made representations to the warden of Oakalla prison. It was after that that the point was considered; in fact two points were raised, and I might as well give them to the house.

The first point was that the proceedings had not been properly signed by the judge in question. This was gone into, and it was seen immediately that was not the case. The next question was whether a person who is on parole is subject to extradition. The opinion was given by our officers, and they have communicated it to me on several occasions, that according to their interpretation of these two sections a person who is on parole under these circumstances can be extradited.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Do I take it from what the minister now tells the house that he signed the surrender order for this man prior to receiving the legal opinion on this particular point; that his parliamentary assistant, in his absence, was so perturbed about this point that he tried to stop the extradition, and not having been successful in stopping the extradition the legal opinion has now been concocted to fit the situation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the Minister of Justice would have been quick to answer the suggestion of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Knowles: He cannot.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to get into an argument about this. Does the minister say that his opinion was received before he signed the order permitting extradition?

Mr. Chevrier: No, I did not say that, because the point was not raised specifically at the time. When the warrant was placed before me with a memorandum from my officers there were two judgments. There was the judgment of Mr. Justice Hutcheson, who had conducted a preliminary hearing and had committed the man under the circumstances. Then there was the decision of Mr. Justice Ruttan having to do with the habeas corpus proceedings. Those were the two things I had before me; and it is customary under those circumstances for the officers to come before me and advise that this is the kind of warrant that should be signed. Having those circumstances before me I signed the warrant of commital, as I believe every minister of justice would have.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That latter statement I challenge immediately; I do not think it can be justified in law or in justice, regardless of whether this man is good or evil.

The minister did not mention whether the parliamentary assistant communicated with the border officers to see if he could stop the F.B.I. from taking this man over to the United States. This was part of the question yesterday, and I am sure that with the amount of consultation that has taken place since the minister will be able to tell us.

Mr. Chevrier: No, the parliamentary assistant did not communicate with those officers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With reference to the statement made yesterday by the minister, has attention been drawn to a Canadian Press dispatch on this case and an interview with Mr. Perrault, the leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia?

It states as follows:

> Mr. Perrault said yesterday in Vancouver that he categorically denies a statement made by justice minister Chevrier.
> Mr. Perrault termed untrue a statement by Mr. Chevrier...that he advised Mr. Perrault all points in the affair had been investigated and that he (Mr. Chevrier) had no alternative but to sign a warrant permitting release of the murder suspect to U.S. authorities.
> ...Mr. Perrault said: "At no time have I received from Mr. Chevrier any telegram or letter on this subject".

What has the minister to say in that regard?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the right hon. Leader of the Opposition raised that question. The statement was brought to my attention. Since the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has put something on the record, I would like to put on the record the telegram which I received from Mr. Perrault last night, which reads as follows. It is dated Vancouver, December 19:

> Received your letter regarding Wasylenchuk dated December 12th and postmarked Ottawa December 16th today at 2.20 p.m. Pacific standard time. I appreciate your assurance that following my letter to you of December 5th, you took every step in accordance with my request to review the matter and that following our telephone conversation of December 16th, you felt compelled to follow the advice of your officials that the point raised by me specifically the effect of section 11 of the Parole Act and section 24 of the Extradition Act did not relieve you of your duty to execute the warrant. I trust that everything will be done to assure an adequate defence for Wasylenchuk and I welcome your reported announcement in the house today to this effect. It is unfortunate that a breakdown in communications—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier:

—has led to misunderstanding. Best regards.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that letter?

Mr. Dienfenbaker: Was that telegram received after the discussions yesterday in the House of Commons?

Mr. MacEwan: Of course it was.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think perhaps I should tell the right hon. gentleman that I received a letter from the—

Mr. Nielsen: Special delivery.

Mr. Chevrier: —leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia on December 5, 1963, concerning this matter. I replied on December 12, but unfortunately the letter went to the legislative buildings in Victoria and was not received by the leader of the British Columbia Liberal party until after the 16th—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Look, if you want to listen to the facts, all right. If you want to listen to the hon. members from the other side of the chamber, it is all right with me. If you do not want to listen to the truth, that is fine. I am trying to say, in answering the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, that when Mr. Perrault made the statement which has been referred to, he had not received my letter; and when he received my letter he sent me this telegram. Now, that is all there is to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEwan: Table the document.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would simply point out that the Canadian Press dispatch is dated yesterday—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I point out that the Canadian Press dispatch is dated yesterday, which—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think all hon. members will agree that by now we have had quite a complete discussion on this matter—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: —and it is developing into a debate. In view of the seriousness of the principles involved I have tried to be as generous as possible, but we have been discussing that matter, even though it is a very serious one, for many, many minutes, and I do hope it does not develop into a debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the time taken is concerned, when there is injustice to any individual, regardless of whether he has a good reputation or an evil one, the time of parliament is well taken up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Minister of Justice whether he was aware, when he signed the surrender order, that Wasylenchuk was on parole.

Mr. Chevrier: I have already answered that question, I believe.

Mr. Douglas: The minister has not answered that question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have been extremely lenient with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I agree with the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that when matters affecting the liberty of an individual, good or bad, are concerned, it is an extremely important matter and therefore justifies taking up considerable time of parliament. But the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, it seems to me, is merely arguing the case at the moment. May I suggest to him that if he has anything more to contribute he should do so, but let us not get into a long argument over the matter.

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order which you have raised, Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking to argue the matter. I asked the minister a very simple question, as to whether he was aware, at the time he signed the surrender order, that Wasylenchuk was on parole. If he knew he was on parole, why was the legal opinion, which he later sought, not secured at that time; or if he knew Wasylenchuk was on parole and did not seek a legal opinion, why did he not seek a legal opinion? I ask these questions because it certainly seems that an injustice has been done. These are two very simple questions that the minister should answer. Did he know, at the time he signed the surrender order, that the man was on parole? If he did, why did he not seek a legal opinion at that time?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into a discussion of the legal aspect of this matter. I have been informed that these two sections, considered together, do not in the slightest degree affect the extraditability, if I may use that word, of the individual.

Mr. Douglas: I am simply asking the minister why that opinion was not sought before he signed the surrender order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the minister tell Mr. Perrault in a telephone conversation that when he signed the extradition order he did not know this man was on parole? Did he tell Mr. Perrault that?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not recollect that I did.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I cannot remember that part of the conversation, although I have a note of it in my office. In fact I am sure that I did not make that statement.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not answered the simple question that I asked him. Did he know, when he signed the surrender order, that Wasylenchuk was on parole?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not desire to add anything more to what I have said and what is now on the record.

Mr. Douglas: The minister would not be adding anything to something he has already said, because I have not had an answer.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister at any time lead Mr. Perrault to believe that we would intervene in extradition proceedings?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether, in view of the disclosures made earlier this morning, he does not think the time is now ripe to dispense with the services of the Minister of Justice or clean out the justice department.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a most insulting question and I do not propose to dignify it by attempting to reply.

An hon. Member: You should be ashamed of that answer.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I know how desirous the minister is to be sure that justice is blind, but in view of the serious nature of what took place in the Wasylenchuk case would he ask the Supreme Court of Canada its opinion on this subject, as to whether what was done was legal? The wording of the two statutes, being as they are, challenges the government to act in this regard to assure that injustice will not be done in the future and that the injustice already done will be rectified.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the statement made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that an injustice has been done under these circumstances. This is not the first such warrant of committal that has been signed by the Minister of Justice since he has been in office, and it was signed under the same circumstances as it is usually, when the decision of the court is rendered. The courts of the province of British Columbia dealt with this case on two occasions—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not on this question.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, they did, indirectly. The question comes up on habeas corpus and on appeal from the lower court, so it would seem to me that the whole question was determined by the courts. However, the problem which my hon. friend raises is one which it seems to me should not be considered under the circumstances. I do not see why the matter should be referred to the supreme court in this case any more than in the half dozen or more other cases where extradition proceedings have been decided upon and a warrant has been signed by the minister. To refer this particular point to the Supreme Court of Canada, or to any other court, under the circumstances does not appeal to me at the moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I will ask just one question. In any one of the six cases to which the minister made reference, when he states he signed extradition orders, were any of those extradition orders made in respect of a man while out on parole?

Mr. Chevrier: I would have to look that up. I could not answer that offhand but I am convinced in my mind, after a reading of the two sections, that the treaty does apply under these circumstances for the reason I gave once before, namely that if that were not the case then a person on parole could leave the Canadian jurisdiction, go into the United States, commit a crime there, come back into Canada and, because he is on parole, would not be subject to extradition, and of course vice-versa, and I am sure that was not the intention of the two countries when they entered into the extradition treaty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, on what basis, unless the parliamentary secretary thought an injustice was done, or what authority did he have to get in touch with the warden?

Mr. Chevrier: I have already replied to that question—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Chevrier: —and the parliamentary secretary did exactly what the minister would have done under the circumstances if a request had been made by a person in authority, by a person such as the leader of the Liberal party in B.C. or anybody else in authority, asking that this matter be considered. This was all done in about 10 or 15 minutes when it was not possible to get an opinion, and I think I would have done just as the parliamentary secretary has done, and would have taken the action which he took, and after it was taken—my right hon. friend laughs. He is serious one moment, then he laughs the next.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am laughing at the ridiculous answer.

Mr. Pearson: Anything to make a little political capital.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the right hon. Leader of the Opposition for having said that and for his very complimentary remarks, but I repeat that the advice I have received from the officers who considered this very carefully was that under the circumstances the person in question was subject to extradition.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, do I take it the minister is now telling us that the legal opinion he has is based on what the statute ought to say rather than on what it says?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As a supplementary question, in view of the reference made by the minister to the telegrams and letters which he was holding in his hand, would he be prepared to table them?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I think I will have to obtain permission from the person who sent them.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister is required under the rules to table the documents to which he has made reference, and I refer Your Honour to citation 159 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

Mr. Chevrier: If you will allow me, I received this telegram from Mr. Perrault—well, it is already on the record so I do not think it necessary to table it.

Mr. Fairweather: We would like them all on the record.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that if they are public documents that is one thing, and if the minister is reading from the documents he should table them.

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection to tabling it, and here it is. I wish to deal with one point, if I may, that the Leader of the Opposition raised.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I raised—

Mr. Chevrier: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We must proceed in an orderly manner, and surely the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will keep his seat while the Minister of Justice is trying to reply to the various questions asked.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I raised a question—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nobody wants to add to the difficulties of Mr. Speaker, but when a point of order has been made and a request is made for a ruling, I think the hon. member for Yukon was entitled to say what he said.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the Minister of Justice is entitled to speak on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I thought that in my remarks made about four and a half minutes ago I had in effect given a ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Yukon, and I thought also that by virtue of that ruling the Minister of Justice was proceeding to carry out certain suggestions. So I do not see any difficulties at the moment.

Mr. Nielsen: I had not understood Your Honour had made a ruling on the point of order I raised dealing specifically with citation 159 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which it seems to me requires the minister to table all documents to which he has had reference. In any event he read fully from the telegram, and I think also read dates from two letters. I heard him read them when answering a recent question. I think the rule clearly requires the minister to table all documents to which he has referred or from which he has read, and he did read from the two letters in question, even if he only read the dates.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the telegram in question which came after the Perrault statement—

Mr. Nielsen: What about the two letters?

Mr. Chevrier: —which was referred to by the Leader of Opposition. The telegram is dated the 19th of December 1963, 5.26 p.m., Vancouver, and I received it around 10 p.m. In the telegram reference is made to the letters.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, surely that is not enough, because the minister has read from the letters. Now that this telegram has been tabled it makes reference itself to the letters. The minister having read from the letters, he should table them.

Mr. Chevrier: The statement made by the hon. member for Yukon is totally inaccurate. I did not read from letters; I read from the telegram.

Mr. Nielsen: You read the dates.

Mr. Pickersgill: The dates are in the telegram.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I have a ruling on the point of order? Is the minister going to be required to table the letters or not?

Mr. Speaker: Subsection 3 of the citation referred to says:

> It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the table of the house, if it can be done without injury to the public interest. The same rule, however, cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. As a non-lawyer but as one sharing everyone's concern that justice be done in this case, may I ask whether the government would consider asking the United States authorities to return this man to Canada until these points have been cleared up?

Mr. Chevrier: Let me say this. The existence of the extradition treaty rests on mutual respect for each other's judicial systems. It has never been the practice for Canadians or Americans to doubt that a fair trial would be given to a Canadian citizen in a United States court, or vice-versa. Under the circumstances it would seem to me that the matter should rest there.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. I want to follow up the question I asked yesterday. While it is true that the alleged crime was committed in the United States, Wasylenchuk is depending for his defence solely on an alibi in which he claims that he was in Burnaby, British Columbia at the time the offence was committed. This will require, if he is to have any defence at all, that Canadian witnesses be conveyed to the United States. This man has been in jail and on parole. He is not likely to have very much money with which to provide for either counsel or witnesses. Would the Department of Justice consider whether assistance could be given by the Canadian government to see that he has proper representation and a fair trial?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think I can add a great deal to what I said yesterday other than to put it in this way, that should it appear that there is anything the Canadian government can do or should properly do in this matter, the hon. member can rest assured that steps will be taken accordingly.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: May I take this opportunity to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the doubt the house now feels over the Wasylenchuk case, does he intend to allow the Banks trial to proceed without interference?

Mr. Chevrier: I did not hear the last part of the question.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister give the house an assurance that he will be allowing the Banks case to proceed without interference?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think that question is worthy of an answer.

COFFIN CASE—STATEMENT ON REFUSAL TO COMMUTE SENTENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the Coffin case I promised that before the house rose I would make a short statement and I have it here. On Tuesday of this week I said I was studying, in co-operation with the officers of the department, what happened prior to the refusal to commute the sentence of Coffin and that I hoped to be able to make a statement in that regard before the adjournment of the house.

Since making that statement I have spent a very considerable amount of time reviewing the file with the officers of the department, and to avoid any misunderstanding I should say that what I have seen so far indicates that representations regarding the significant matters raised in the book, except the incident of the Indian, Thompson, were before the department and considered by it before the decision was taken not to commute the sentence. Nothing I have seen so far has pointed to the desirability of any different kind of inquiry from what I have been making.

The incident concerning the Indian, Thompson, arose, of course, subsequent to the carrying out of the sentence. Nevertheless I cannot say that in the time at my disposal I have been able to go into the matter sufficiently, at first hand, to state a final conclusion. I shall therefore have to defer my definitive statement to a later date. I would hope to have it ready in the not too distant future. I am sorry for this delay, but as I indicated on a previous occasion I believe that the seriousness of the issue requires care rather than haste.

AGRICULTURE

AMENDMENTS TO BANKRUPTCY ACT TO PROTECT PRIMARY PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the urgent concern of the producers of primary products in Canada I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government can now state its position on Bill No. C-5, an act to protect the primary producers of this nation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has considered the report of the committee on this bill and is prepared to consider appropriate amendments to the Bankruptcy Act to deal with this matter at the next session of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ASSISTANCE FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the request sent to him relating to increased aid for medical research. I have a copy of the letter which was sent to the Prime Minister on December 5 by a number of very eminent professors. I wonder whether the Prime Minister has now seen it.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I regret that yesterday I said to my hon. friend that to my knowledge I had not received it. When I went to my office I found it had come in; that I had received the letter, acknowledged it on December 12, and wrote Dr. Barr, chairman of the institute, that the matter was being given consideration by the cabinet.

VANCOUVER—SUGGESTED USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. On October 18 the minister's office received a brief from the Vancouver branch of the association of television and radio artists complaining of the inadequate C.B.C. facilities in Vancouver, and requesting the construction of a combined C.B.C. radio and television centre. Will the minister arrange for the C.B.C. to conduct a cost and feasibility study on acquiring and converting part of R.C.A.F. station Vancouver, Kitsilano site, into a combined C.B.C. television-radio centre to allow the corporation economically to get out of the five or six inadequate and inefficient locations they now have?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the president of the C.B.C. wrote a letter to me after he had heard the announcement made some little time ago by the Minister of National Defence on his estimates, which indicated that this property might be available, to inquire whether the C.B.C. would be given an opportunity to examine the property to see if it would be suitable for their purposes. I communicated with the Associate Minister of National Defence and I believe he, or the officials of the department, have since been in touch with the C.B.C., or are in the process of getting in touch with them, with a view to seeing what would be feasible in this connection.

WORLD FAIR

REASON FOR ATTENDANCE OF OFFICIALS IN OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works.

Could he tell the house whether the officials of the world exhibition are in Ottawa at the moment, and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The operating and capital budgets, together with the master plan, will be submitted to the government during the day; these documents will also be presented today to the Quebec government and to the municipal authorities of Montreal.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, could the Minister of Public Works tell the house whether Canadians will be allowed to see that master plan?

Mr. Deschatelets: No, Mr. Speaker, at any rate not before it is approved by the government; as I said a moment ago, the plan is being submitted today to the Quebec authorities and, according to the tripartite agreement, it is not to be presented to the city of Montreal before it has been approved by the Quebec government and the federal government.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister, since today is the day the report is to be tabled in the house, whether he does intend to table it today.

Mr. Deschatelets: No, Mr. Speaker. I think what the hon. member is saying is not accurate, because there is nothing in the provisions of the statute or in the tripartite agreement which obliges this document to be tabled today. It has to be submitted to the government of Quebec and the government here in Ottawa today. After it has been approved by both governments then it will be made public. Of course if the house should be sitting at that time it would be submitted to hon. members before being made public.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

LONDON, ONT.—APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE FOR CITIZENSHIP COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration but I do not see him in the house at the moment. He was here a moment ago. However, perhaps I can address the question—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I can help the hon. gentleman. The minister's estimates will be coming up a little later in the day and he could ask his question then.

Mr. Irvine: Perhaps I could address the question to the Minister of Justice, who may be able to assist. Would the minister inform the house when a judge is to be appointed to preside over the citizenship court in the city of London, Ontario?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister I will draw that to the minister's attention and ask him whether he could answer the question on his estimates.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONVERSION OF CF-104 PLANES AS NUCLEAR MISSILE CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Defence. In Time magazine of December 20 there is the statement that the CF-104's were expensively converted by the Tories into exclusively nuclear missile carriers. Would the Minister of National Defence confirm or deny that statement? Would he state whether the CF-104's were ever anything but exclusively nuclear missile carriers?

[Mr. Fisher.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the CF-104's have not been. I think what is referred to there is the basic aircraft itself, which has been used in many configurations.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question. This statement in Time magazine is false, is it, according to the minister's interpretation?

Mr. Hellyer: I will not comment further. When my estimates are up for discussion, if the hon. member would like a little fuller information about the hardware of the CF-104 I would be glad to give it.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he would agree that the CF-104's were built to be nuclear missile carriers and were not expensively converted for that purpose.

Mr. Hellyer: A question was asked on that subject a minute or two ago. I wonder whether the hon. member would be good enough to leave this matter until my estimates are called later in the day, and then I could make a fuller explanation of what was done.

Mr. Churchill: I ask the minister to answer this question with a simple yes or no.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INTRODUCTION OF TWO PRICE SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture would the Prime Minister indicate whether legislation will be brought forward next session to implement the Liberal pledge of a two price system for wheat?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Nasserden: I have a question supplementary to the one directed to the Prime Minister a few minutes ago in reference to his decision regarding the two price system. Can the right hon. gentleman tell us whether that decision was reached in consultation with the committee of five set up by the Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Pearson: That question is not appropriate for the orders of the day, but I am sure the hon. member will join me in the great satisfaction we must all feel that the farmers in the province are getting an income which is at an unparalleled height as the result of sales of agricultural products.

Mr. Nasserden: In reply to my supplementary question, the Prime Minister made certain remarks regarding the income position in Saskatchewan at the present time. This is not the occasion for me to take issue with the right hon. gentleman concerning those remarks, but I should like to remind him—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure there will be an opportunity to expand on those remarks at another time.

TRADE

LUMBER—INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has been in communication with President Johnson with reference to the legislation which will shortly come before him for signature requiring that Canadian lumber be marked with a country of origin label. At the same time would the Prime Minister say what representation has been made in this connection to the United States administration, and particularly whether the United States has been informed that if this legislation is approved such approval would be a dark symbol for the opening of world tariff bargaining, beginning in May, because it is evidence of a protectionist stance?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, representations have been made to the United States government on this matter. They were made some days ago by our ambassador to the secretary of state. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is in Washington today, and he is also making oral representations there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the Prime Minister communicated on the "hot line" with the President?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the report in this morning's Globe and Mail that a 16 per cent reduction this year in the number of persons seeking work has given Brantford the best employment picture in five years, does the minister still think that Brantford is a depressed area which has need of all the proposed lush tax advantages over the neighbouring cities of Guelph, Kitchener, Woodstock and Waterloo?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I do not think either the government or myself have ever classed Brantford as a depressed area. Brantford is part of the national employment service designated area. It was so designated because of high and chronic unemployment, and the statement just quoted from the newspaper would indicate that the policy designed to relieve high and chronic unemployment in Brantford is being moderately successful.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. Would the minister be good enough to tell us just when these tax changes went into effect, if they have done so much good?

Mr. Drury: With the adoption of the budget.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Can the minister now guarantee to the house that in future, areas will be so designated only after consultation with the province concerned?

Mr. Drury: I gave such an assurance to the provincial ministers of trade and industry at the recent dominion-provincial conference.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR 1966 QUEBEC FESTIVAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): I am as concerned about the "comité des jeux d'hiver" in Quebec as the hon. member for Kootenay West is concerned about the Columbia river in British Columbia. I wish to address a question to my good friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the hon. lady tell the house when, in accordance with a recommendation by the advisory council on amateur sport and fitness, the committee of the "jeux d'hiver" in Quebec will be told the exact amount of the grant it will receive?

Mr. Speaker: That is certainly a question for the order paper. I think the matter was raised yesterday.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET REPORTED INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question to ask the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that today's daily bulletin issued by the dominion bureau of statistics shows a rate of growth in the gross national product of 1.3 per cent for this year, which is less than the rate of increase in the cost of living in the same period, would the minister state what measures the government intends to take to correct this alarming situation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I must disagree with the adjective used by the hon. member. I am sure that when he hears the speech from the throne at the beginning of the next session all his anxiety will be relieved.

Mr. Martineau: The minister may disagree with the adjective, but does he disagree with the fact that the cost of living is now increasing at a greater rate than the increase in the gross national product?

Mr. Gordon: That is like trying to compare oranges with bananas. It is not the sort of question or comment I can deal with on orders of the day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONVERSATIONS WITH BRITAIN AND FRANCE RESPECTING CHOICE OF PLANE BY T.C.A.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I want to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday which indicated that he approached Sud Aviation on his visit to France in order to discuss with that company the fact that T.C.A. did not choose the Caravelle. My question is based on the assumption that this was on the advice of the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the secretary of state was advised to contact Sir George Edwards, the head of the British Aircraft Corporation, in order to explain why T.C.A. did not take the BAC-111.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is in the same field as the one which was asked by my hon. friend from Port Arthur. It is based on two press reports. One is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs tendered an apology to Sud Aviation in connection with this matter. The other is a report that the government of France is alleged to have interfered in T.C.A.'s problem here in this country. Can the Prime Minister confirm or deny these two reports and, with respect to the latter, if the government of France did interfere how was this done? Was it done through the French embassy in Canada?

Mr. Pearson: There was nothing in the minister's telephone conversation with the gentleman in question in Paris which, it seems to me, could be described as an apology. As far as the second question is concerned, the minister can deal with that. His estimates will be coming up later in the day and he will be able to explain what action, if any, he took.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PICKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the department considering recommending changes in the provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with picketing and secondary boycotting following the decision by Mr. Justice Aylesworth of the Ontario court of appeal which sharply restricts the traditional right of informational picketing?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I indicated some time ago the attitude of the department toward changes in industrial relations legislation, and nothing has happened since except it is likely that a matter of this kind would be considered in the course of such a review.

NATIONAL REVENUE

COLLECTION OF DUTIES ON LUMBER IN BORDER OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the hon. member for Dorchester requested that an inquiry be made to determine whether all customs duties were being paid in a specific industry. The details are found on page 5988 of Hansard. I can tell him that we have complied with the request and I am pleased to report to him that all duties payable are being collected.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSIDERATION OF PAY INCREASE FOR CLEANING STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West on December 13 regarding the pay of the cleaning staff of the house, may I say this matter has been investigated and I find that these ladies are employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms and do not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works. However, I have been informed that an increase for them from $1.16 to $1.20 an hour, dated back to May 1, has been approved, and it is hoped they will receive their back pay before Christmas day.

Mr. Douglas: Is it Santa Claus or Scrooge who brought that in?

REPORTED OVERCROWDING OF PRESS GALLERY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at this time of brotherly love and good feeling I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been drawn to certain evidence given by Mr. Arthur Blakely regarding overcrowding in the press gallery, with regard to which I am advised he said that the overcrowding is of such a nature that it contravenes the factories act. Is the government giving any consideration to providing further facilities in this connection so that the gentlemen and ladies of the press will not find themselves under such stringent restrictions as the lack of space today imposes?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for bringing this matter to my attention. I recall that when we were in opposition we were asked to intervene in this matter month after month for five or six years, and immediately we took office we decided something should be done about it. We are trying to decide now exactly what can be done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that in these days of decision the matter is receiving consideration?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and it will not take five years.

Mr. Pigeon: Use the Senate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You will not be here by that time.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ACTIVITIES IN LABOUR DISPUTE AT GRANDE PRAIRIE, ALTA.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has twice promised to make a statement with reference to the complaint I brought to his attention from the international woodworkers regarding the alleged use of the R.C.M.P. in strikebreaking activities at Grande Prairie, Alberta.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): That is true, Mr. Speaker, and I have the statement now. The question posed by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam on December 17 relates to the strike which took place at Northern Canadian Forest Industries Limited, Grande Prairie, Alberta. Strike action was taken on August 7 by the union, the I.W.A., after conciliation processes failed to reach an agreement.

The strike ended approximately November 6. During the time the strike was in effect there were two incidents as a result of which court action was taken. On October 18 a group of strikers stopped a truck driven by a private sawmill operator who was moving wood to the plant, and they threw off half his load. The owner of the truck recognized four of the strikers and he preferred charges against them for mischief. These cases are still before the courts. On November 6 the owners of Northern Canadian Forest Industries Limited saw two men breaking windows in the plant, and the owners laid charges against the two men under the provincial petty trespass act. At no time were the R.C.M.P. involved in any alleged strikebreaking activities.

I should point out that in the province of Alberta the R.C.M.P. police the province under contract and are responsible to the attorney general of the province. Similarly, the town of Grande Prairie is policed under contract by the R.C.M.P. who are responsible to the municipal council.

Mr. Baldwin: The city of Grande Prairie.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister leaves the Grande Prairie case, may I ask him whether the R.C.M.P. were used at any time to conduct strikebreakers through the picket lines?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer I have from the commissioner is in the negative.

CANADIAN WORLD EXHIBITION CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING NUMBER OF DIRECTORS, SALARIES, ETC.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (for the Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act to increase the number of directors of the corporation by two and to provide for the expenses of the said two directors; to authorize the corporation to pay to the commissioner general and to the deputy commissioner general such allowances as are fixed by the governor in council; to establish an executive committee of the board consisting of three directors in addition to the commissioner general and the deputy commissioner general and to authorize the payment of remuneration by the corporation to the said three directors; and to make further changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: This is not debatable.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I have two or three minutes to say a few words on this resolution?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is not debatable until the chairman is in the chair. It is not debatable at this stage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this the resolution?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the resolution.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether hon. members would not agree to pass the resolution stage so the bill can be distributed. Then we will be able to discuss all the particulars of the bill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think there are questions that require to be answered—

Mr. Knowles: Louder.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and if we proceeded to the second reading of the bill some hon. members might not be allowed to ask the questions they wish to ask. I am agreeable to trying to restrict the time taken on the resolution stage, but I believe there are a number of questions some hon. members want to ask. If we can get them cleared away we will be able to pass the resolution and proceed to second reading of the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the study of the bill and while we are still at the resolution stage, it seems to me it would be appropriate for the Minister of Public Works to make a statement concerning some problems which are being raised in relation with this measure to amend the world exhibition legislation.

I should like to put a few questions to the Minister of Public Works, and I hope he will be able to answer them so as to enlighten the people on the many problems that have come up in these last four months, or more, with regard to the world fair.

First, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works what are the reasons which prompted him to defer the official decision pertaining to the choice of the present site.

I also asked sometime ago whether the minister was aware of the technical problems involved in the filling of Notre Dame island. It seems to me that it would be in order for him to tell us how it is that instead of removing daily about 20,000 cubic yards of filling material from the bed of the river, only 3,000 cubic yards are taken out, which does not seem to be consistent with the reports given to us these last weeks about the possibility of handing the land over to the corporation by June 1964, as provided by the act.

I should also like to ask the minister whether the bill is now before us merely in order to increase the salary of the members of that crown corporation, or if the amendment is intended to extend its administrative framework?

I think that it would be in order also for the Minister of Public Works to assure us that this amendment to the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act is not another excuse to open the door to patronage, for it has been noticed for some time that several appointments have been made in favour of persons who are very close to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) and, moreover, those persons have been seen with him during the official proceedings to receive the new commissioner general.

Moreover, I should like to get an answer from the minister to the following question. We have been trying for four months already to know what salaries will be paid to the commissioner general and to his deputy.

Mr. Chairman, those are all questions that must be answered.

I wonder what prevented the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) from telling us until now what will be the salary of the commissioner general.

The minister has assured us on several occasions that we were going to receive this information within a few days. This question goes back to July of this year. Nearly five months have elapsed since, and we have not received the expected answers.

Mr. Deschatelets: The hon. member for St. Mary has raised five questions which I will try to answer as briefly as possible, while trying at the same time to give him satisfaction.

As far as the allegations that there has been a delay in the selection of the site are concerned, I must state that there has been no delay. The former prime minister, in a wire which he sent in March 1963, admitted in principle the selection of the present site.

Likewise, we have confirmed the same choice in May. We said that we reserved the right to acknowledge formally the selection of this site as soon as the engineers' report would have assured us of the feasibility of holding the exhibition on that site. In July, we received a report from the Lasalle laboratories and, two or three days later, we came to an agreement with the province and the city of Montreal.

I must point out to the hon. member for St. Mary that the municipal engineers of Montreal, who are paid by the city, imposed two conditions concerning the present site, that is the building of a breakwater upstream from the Champlain bridge and of a sill downstream.

Consequently, we discussed the matter with the engineers and, as I said a moment ago, we signed an agreement only two or three days after we received the report. So there was no delay in making the decision.

As for the difficulties which the city of Montreal is encountering in connection with the filling operations which are being carried out on St. Helen's and Notre Dame islands, I must say to my hon. friend that I am aware of that fact just as well as he is or anybody else because there has been mention of it in the press. However, this matter is covered by a tripartite agreement among the province of Quebec, the city of Montreal and the federal government. Under the agreement, the city is to deliver the present site by June 1964. It was to be expected that there would be difficulties.

The hon. member must know that, only two days ago, the mayor of Montreal again confirmed that the site would be ready on time. Let us leave it to the Montreal authorities to provide the site and to respect the commitments made.

With regard to the bill now before us, it does not provide for any fundamental amendments, though it involves amendments of some importance. The purpose of this bill is to amend the title of the act and the reference to the site of the exhibition, so as to specify that it will not necessarily be located on the island of Montreal. Third, it provides for the establishment of an executive committee, for an increase from 12 to 14 in the number of directors, and for the allowances payable to the directors, the commissioner general and the deputy commissioner general.

There is also a clause dealing with the retirement of employees. Another clause is meant to protect the symbols referring to the exhibition, which must remain its property in order that they may not be used for general business purposes. When my hon. friend referred to the increase of directors from 12 to 14 he said a word about the possibility of patronage. I can reassure him because when I met the former commissioner general, Mr. Paul Bienvenu, as well as his successor, Mr. Dupuy, I clearly explained to them that we expected that the heads of the exhibition would organize an exhibition worthy of Canada and that we were leaving them the entire responsibility of the administration.

I can say that all appointments were made by the directors of the fair and we did not make any suggestions. The only intervention by the government is about the appointments to be made only by the governor in council.

With regard to the salary of the commissioner general, there is nothing unusual about that. If I was unable to give the hon. member an answer until now, the same holds true today. The commissioner general of the fair is still on the establishment of the external affairs department, he is still our ambassador to Paris, but I can tell my hon. friend that the matter will be settled in January.

On the other hand, I can give an answer immediately to the hon. members about the salary of the deputy commissioner; I speak from memory and if my reply is not accurate, I will correct myself in a while after consulting my officials.

The deputy commissioner general will receive a salary of $35,000 a year.

I think that takes care of the questions of the hon. member.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question to ask the Minister of Public Works.

Can the minister explain why the appointment of Mr. Pierre de Bellefeuille as assistant to the director of public relations, Mr. Beaudry, was announced through the newspapers?

It seems that Mr. Beaudry's office was completely unaware of that appointment and learned about it in the newspapers.

I have nothing against Mr. de Bellefeuille. I am merely wondering why his nomination was announced by the newspapers before the exhibition corporation knew about it and only a short while after it was officially confirmed by the government.

The minister said that the amendments to the act are to increase the number of directors from 12 to 14. I should like him to tell us why, instead of changing the structure of the board of directors, it could not be possible, if additional staff is required, to simply hire in the usual way the staff required for the administration.

I would also have liked the minister to deal a little longer with the reasons which led to the resignation of Messrs. Paul Bienvenu and Carsley. I come back on that point because the minister is aware of the fact that Mr. Paul Bienvenu had sent his resignation to the Prime Minister of Canada during the month of July and when I asked a question on July 18, asking whether it was true that Mr. Bienvenu was about to resign, the Prime Minister replied that there was nothing true in those allegations and that everything was fine and dandy; yet, he had in his hands a letter dated July 8 to the effect that Mr. Paul Bienvenu had informed him of his intention to resign.

Therefore, the Prime Minister's answer was inconsistent with the facts, and I think the Minister of Public Works has the responsibility to set things straight.

I take this opportunity to congratulate Messrs. Paul Bienvenu and Carsley for their tremendous and admirable effort while they were in office. Besides, statements of appreciation were published in every newspaper.

I should like to point out to the house that Messrs. Paul Bienvenu and Carsley accepted to work without pay or indemnity while the deputy commissioner will receive a $35,000 salary, and we do not yet know what the chief commissioner's salary will be.

I think it is quite illogical for a crown corporation to hire someone without even knowing if a salary will be paid to him and to make him work without knowing whether he will be paid or not.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that both the house and the public should know the amount of that salary and the terms of employment.

I am of course very happy about the appointment of Mr. Dupuy and of his deputy, for they are both very able men; however, I would like to get more precise explanations as to the reasons which prompted Messrs. Bienvenu and Carsley to resign; I am also curious to learn why the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of Public Works have given us such evasive, and even inaccurate answers?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) has asked five questions, which I am quite happy to answer.

As to the appointment of Mr. de Bellefeuille, I understand that he will have nothing to do with public relations. I believe his official title is something like "director of the exhibitors". As for his appointment, I must say that before it was made, I got a letter from the world exhibition authorities, recommending that Mr. de Bellefeuille be given the position of director of the exhibitors.

Having looked into the bylaws, we pointed out to the fair directors that they were under no obligation to consult the government as to that appointment, which fell under their jurisdiction, and that the governor in council appoints only the commissioner general and his deputy.

It was after that exchange that Mr. de Bellefeuille was appointed, and the federal government had nothing to do with that appointment. I am happy to say that we are delighted with Mr. de Bellefeuille's appointment; he is a very able man, and we feel that he will do an excellent job.

Concerning the appointment of two additional directors, I think this is very important. It was pointed out that under the former organization, various regions of the country were not represented, so as to give that organization a national character. Now, as this will not be a Montreal or a Quebec exhibition but indeed an exhibition which must be an accomplishment of the whole of Canada, the government thought it appropriate to appoint two more directors, in order to give the organization a more adequate national representation.

As to the actual reasons for the resignations of Messrs. Bienvenu and Carsley, I must tell the house that I have nothing to add to the letters of resignation which were handed in to the Prime Minister some months ago. Furthermore, I believe Messrs. Bienvenu and Carsley gave information to the press in addition to that contained in their letters.

I agree with my hon. friend that these were resignations that caused much regret in all circles, and I should also state that I wrote a personal letter to Messrs. Bienvenu and Carsley, with whom I was well acquainted, not only to express my regrets but also to tell them how much the government appreciated the work they had accomplished since the laborious beginnings of the exhibition.

Mr. Chairman, I do not speak this way because the previous government was implied or because the former prime minister was responsible for the establishment of that organization. It is normal that the beginnings of an undertaking such as the world exhibition should be complicated and difficult; but once the organization has taken shape, so to speak, the task becomes much easier.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Mary stated that the former commissioner general and his deputy had offered their services free. That statement is true, and I believe that this has not been sufficiently known in the public. I am glad the hon. member has brought this up, so that the public at large will know that Messrs. Bienvenu and Carsley had no other ambition than to help their country by placing their wide experience at the service of the Canadian people free of charge.

But today, the situation is different. The commissioner general and his deputy have to face a tremendously difficult job and we thought it fair, in the circumstances, that both of them be paid. Actually I think that neither the hon. member for St. Mary nor any other member will want to question the fact that a reasonable salary should be paid to people who now have to work from 15 to 17 hours a day.

Mr. Chairman, I think that I have dealt with all the questions of the hon. member for St. Mary. If I have overlooked certain points, I am sure that he will raise them again.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to ask any particular questions of the minister, but rather to make some comments and express my view that this resolution and such a bill—because we have now seen the bill and therefore have more knowledge of what is in the government's mind than would ordinarily be the case—should be opposed. I for one want to indicate that I have grave doubts and reservations about proceeding any further along this line that we have been following in the last few months since the passage of the original act.

Because of the progress that the resolution, and the bill which will follow, have had in the house so far, it seems to me there is some reluctance on the part of the government itself about this measure; because in the first instance the bill was introduced improperly, as Mr. Speaker ruled, and surely the extreme knowledge which the members of the cabinet, especially the Secretary of State, have about the rules should have warned them that the bill was going to be out of order on the grounds that is was not preceded by a resolution. Following upon that, the various delays that have taken place in calling this resolution indicate even more strongly to me that the government is not that anxious to participate in the particular project which will take place.

It was originally conceived that this would be a Canadian project, expressive to an extent of the Canadian viewpoint, and to coincide with our one hundredth birthday in 1967. In fact the speeches made in the house on the occasion of the passage of the original act reflected this desire for Canadianism, Canadian participation, and that a national concept be shown in the world fair itself, but unfortunately it has degenerated from something of a national scope to something not only provincial in nature but almost restricted to a city.

Even the Hansard index, which all hon. members have, indicates this; because in the index, if you look under the heading "Canadian World Exhibition Corporation" you will find a subheading which says "Montreal", and under the heading "Montreal" there are listed the references to the world fair. That is where you find all the references, not under "Canadian World Exhibition Corporation" but under "Montreal world fair".

While the goal may initially have been Canadian, I submit primarily that the force behind this concept is that of Quebec and the pressure is that of Mayor Jean Drapeau of the city of Montreal, who incidentally, I understand, is a gentleman who absolutely detests those of English background and those who speak the English language, and this is regrettable and unfortunate.

I have reservations about supporting this measure because if all the indications we have had in the past are carried out, then this to me is not a national project or something which would reflect the concept of Canadian expression, or full Canadian participation in the fair. Primarily it is to be a sort of monument to the mayor of Montreal himself, and the minister has said that the expansion of the directors from 12 to 14 was designed to deal with this problem and make the fair more national in scope and application. But even though the number of directors is to be increased from 12 to 14, half of them are going to be chosen specifically and directed by the lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec and the other seven are to be chosen by the governor in council, presumably to give a more national application to this particular organization.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would my hon. friend permit me one remark at this point. On reading the measure, it is true that seven directors will be chosen by the lieutenant governor of Quebec and seven by the federal government, but there was an understanding that the province of Quebec will choose one director from among the present directors, so this will leave to the federal government two directors to be appointed, and then it will be possible for us to have certain regions of the country represented on the board of directors.

Mr. Howard: That information is revealing, not only for what the minister said but for what he did not say. If that is the intention, why does the bill not say so? I do not think the rest of Canada wants the lieutenant governor of Quebec to appoint someone to represent it. I am sure the premier of British Columbia would not want the lieutenant governor of Quebec to appoint a director to represent the region of the west coast. That is the implication behind what the minister said.

Mr. Deschatelets: I think it is worth while that we be very clear about this. Under the existing regulations there are six directors appointed by the lieutenant governor of Quebec and six directors appointed by the governor in council, which is the federal government. Now, with this amendment it would be possible for the governor in council to appoint two additional directors. The present directors will stay on, but there will be two additions to the board of directors, and it is the responsibility of the governor in council to appoint them. The lieutenant governor of Quebec will have nothing to do with these two additional directors.

Mr. Howard: The minister says the lieutenant governor of Quebec will have nothing to do with these two additional directors, but the bill says, if I may be permitted to refer to it:

(2) Of the fourteen other directors referred to in subsection (1), seven shall be appointed on the recommendation of the lieutenant governor in council.

Mr. Deschatelets: This is true.

Mr. Howard: And there are seven left to be appointed by the governor in council.

Mr. Deschatelets: Not seven. If the hon. member will permit me, there are today 12 directors. Six have been appointed by Quebec and six have already been appointed by the federal government. The purpose of this bill is to permit two additions to the board of directors. I agree that this information does not appear in the bill, but there was an understanding with the province of Quebec that they are going to take their additional director from among those now sitting on the board of directors, so that we will have two to be appointed by the governor in council.

Mr. Marcoux: Would it be possible to pass the resolution first so we can be supplied with the text of the bill? We are discussing the bill and we do not have the text.

Mr. Howard: If the hon. member looks at Bill No. C-120 he will find that is the bill that is already before us because, by a special ruling of the house, it was maintained on the order paper. Now, the minister says this does not appear in the legislation, but if that is the intention why does it not say so? I do not like these arrangements with Premier Lesage or anybody else in Quebec, or in any other province, that such things are understood. If this is the intention the bill should say so, without leaving it to agreements reached between the minister and somebody else.

Whether these two additional directors are appointed by the governor in council or not, does not change the attitude that this is a Montreal-Quebec affair and not a national affair, no matter how many words are used to dress it up.

Another objection I have to the world fair, so-called, is that there have been a great many illegal activities taking place with respect to this bill and the world fair site. The original act stated clearly and unequivocally:

—there shall be held in Canada, on the island of Montreal for a period of six months in the year 1967—

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

And it goes on to say what shall be held there, but I point out that it says:

—there shall be held...on the island of Montreal

a certain event, a world fair.

It is not going to be held on the island of Montreal.

Mr. Deschatelets: Partly.

Mr. Howard: Partly. You can drive a car out to the approach to a bridge, perhaps, to get to some other place, but the world fair will not be held on the island of Montreal. Anyone who has paid the slightest attention to the matter knows that. In fact the city of Montreal, through Mayor Jean Drapeau, arranged for a special advertising supplement in the New York Times earlier this year in which throughout there was reference to Ile Ste Helene as being the site of the world fair. The island of Montreal was completely disregarded. The law was disregarded. As far as I am concerned the law was broken.

To draw additional attention to the matter I have here a publication which, while it is not a government publication, none the less gives an indication of what is happening. This is the Alcan News of October, 1963, and it refers to the birth of a world fair. It says:

Although the publicity drums are beating loudly these days for a "world fair" to be held in New York next year, Canadians are well aware that the next officially-recognized international exposition of this type will be held in their country during 1967. It will be located on a group of islands in the St. Lawrence river opposite the city of Montreal.

Then there is reference to a contract having already been let to Royalmount Construction Limited, which has 90 days to complete the job of creating a man-made island. There is the indication there that it is not the island of Montreal which is to be used, that the statute has been violated and that illegal activities have been taking place there.

I also have before me something which I am sure other members have received, owing no doubt to the season. It is a Christmas greeting, I suppose, although it does not say it is. It is from Mayor Jean Drapeau, mayor of Montreal, and Mrs. Drapeau and a Mr. Lucien Saulnier, who is chairman of the executive committee. I presume that is the executive committee which we are about to establish.

Mr. Deschatelets: No, it is not.

Mr. Howard: Well, it is the chairman of the executive committee; and these people and Mr. Saulnier send their best wishes. I am merely indicating who this is from.

Mr. Valade: It is the city of Montreal.

Mr. Howard: Very well. It also says:

On August 12, 1963—

That was when the statute was in effect which said that this world fair would be on the island of Montreal—

—were officially inaugurated the works to enlarge St. Helen's island and create Ile Notre Dame, site of the 1967 universal and international exhibition to be held in Montreal on the St. Lawrence.

Included in these Christmas greetings is a beautiful coloured picture of St. Helen's island.

Mr. Deschatelets: I am glad my hon. friend says it is beautiful.

Mr. Howard: Oh, yes. I have a great liking for photographs which depict things correctly. If I can go further into it, as the minister is interested in beautiful pictures, in the Alcan News there is another beautiful picture of a dike which has been built around the upper end of St. Helen's island, and a pit where fill will go to create this artificial or man-made island. But throughout the mayor of Montreal, Jean Drapeau, has made a fool of the federal government. Indeed, the federal government is asking parliament to participate in this foolery, to participate in making a fool of itself by creating a monument to the mayor of Montreal, when we should be talking of creating Canadian activity for the operation of the world fair generally. I am not disposed to give passage to this sort of activity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of references I want to make to this matter. I begin by saying to the minister that I like the way in which he answers questions. Whatever question is asked him he shows the disposition to answer, which is at all times commendable and the more so when it is so unique among hon. gentlemen opposite.

[Translation]

Mr. Rinfret: The member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) has undoubtedly heard that—

[Text]

Mr. Valade: He is the only one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: However, there are always exceptions, as the hon. member for St. Mary has pointed out, and it is to the exceptions that I intend to direct my attention. In the first place I am going to refer to the bill, if I may, because it has already been spoken of by the minister. He stated a moment ago that the two directors to be appointed would be appointed by the governor in council. But the bill does not say that; the bill says the very reverse. Clause 3 (2) says:

Of the fourteen other directors referred to in subsection (1), seven shall be appointed on the recommendation of the lieutenant governor in council.

I think a change will have to be made in this regard. An amendment will have to be made so as to bring this section into line with the arrangements which have been made by the minister with the government of Quebec.

We are facing a very difficult problem. I think there has been gross delay on the part of the government in connection with launching the world fair. Canadians as a whole have a great stake in national prestige to assure the success of this project. No one yet knows what the total expenditure will be. There has been an estimate of $585 million as the total cost, an estimate I think made by Mr. Bienvenu some months ago. I feel we should receive very full information on this matter before passing the bill which will be before us following passage of this resolution.

This fair is to be representative of Canada. It is not a sectional fair, and that has been so recognized both by the province of Quebec and by the mayor and council of the city of Montreal. There is no question in my mind about the desire of the government of Quebec and the capacity of that province, with the rest of Canada, to make this fair a monument to confederation, a monument to better understanding between the races. That monument is to mark a new era of progress in national unity. But those objectives will not be attained by the haphazard, zigzag courses which are being taken since this government assumed office.

Mention has been made of the statute; that it provided for this fair to be sited on the island of Montreal. I recall very well discussions taking place in this connection when I was prime minister. I agree quite frankly, on the basis of the representations and views of the government of the province of Quebec and of the corporation of the city of Montreal, that a change in this regard would be desirable. But I pointed out that any action in this respect must result and stem from a statute passed by parliament. I can understand the delays which have taken place to provide for the amendment required to establish as the site of the fair St. Helen's island rather than some other location on the island of Montreal.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question. Would the right hon. gentleman not admit that his government passed an act unanimously approved by parliament on December 20, 1962? This was seven months, or many months, before approval was given to the site. Does not this contradict what the right hon. gentleman has already said?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Very definitely not. There were discussions which took place then on the passage of the legislation. In the month of March representations were made that on the basis of full consideration of all the elements, the appropriate place would be St. Helen's island. I made it clear that because of the suggestion made by the secretary general, the assistants and the directors, with the concurrence of the government of the province of Quebec and of the city council of the city of Montreal, legislative amendments would be brought before parliament so as to give parliament the opportunity to make that alteration. But what has happened is this. The present government has been in office since April 22, and parliament has been sitting fairly steadily since May 20. During all this time work has been proceeding which is totally illegal, unlawful and beyond the rights of those carrying it out. I found it passing strange that the Prime Minister of Canada should be attending the opening ceremonies on an island which, as yet, has received no designation from parliament.

I agree as to the necessity of the change, but as to the action so far taken, which has been to proceed without proper authorization, I would point out that the executive has no authority to act contrary to the statute, that parliament is supreme in these matters. We are in favour of the amendment, but I am pointing out that every action taken to date has been legally improper and totally beyond the authority given by parliament.

To say this in no way detracts from the fact that every support will be given by the opposition to changing the location on the basis of the verbal arrangements made and the subsequent confirmation of the site by the present government. Nevertheless, the action taken to date by the government and its representatives has been altogether beyond the rights of those concerned. I know that the Minister of Public Works, who is an excellent lawyer, will be the first to agree that what has been done has been illegal. He affirms that. Parliament is now being asked—

Mr. Deschatelets: On a question of privilege. Because I am an excellent lawyer I would like to raise a question of privilege. I have never admitted that anything that has been done so far has been done illegally. Now I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman a question. Is he able to cite me one case or any undertaking since last April which is not permitted or authorized either by the act which was passed during the time of his administration or by the tripartite agreement? I would like him to give me one example.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the first place may I say that when the hon. gentleman bowed his head in a vertical position, I took it as a sign of approval. Apparently the hon. gentleman follows the custom in Nepal, I think it is, where the elevation of the head in a vertical position expresses a negative.

Mr. Nicholson: I think the right hon. gentleman mistook the nod which was given in recognition of the statement that my hon. colleague is an excellent lawyer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no one with the innate modesty of the minister would have gone as far as to indicate approval of that, much as he may have felt it within his soul.

May I call it one o'clock?

It being eight minutes after one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, lest there be any misunderstanding, I assure you and all members of the house that the evidence just displayed of there being unity between the Secretary of State and myself was purely coincidental.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will second that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, before the adjournment I was dealing with the problem created by the delays, and had mentioned the very lengthy delays and the fact that whatever work has been done on this location, ratified as I know it will be by parliament, is none the less illegal and improper. The government should have brought in this legislation immediately the session was under way, and if it had done so what has taken place subsequently would not have occurred.

There are one or two other observations I want to make. We want to get information. Today we received information as to the salary that the associate director is going to receive, but we have had no information as to what the director is going to receive. Naturally we are all very anxious to bring this session to a conclusion, and the easiest way to do that is to furnish information. The government is in a position to furnish that information, and must have available to it knowledge of the amount that will be paid the director general.

In that connection I want to mention Mr. Bienvenu and Mr. Carsley. These men accepted their positions because of their belief that by doing so they could do something worth while on behalf of their country. They asked no fee; they asked no salary. When asked to serve they simply agreed to do so. We should have the information I have mentioned.

We should also have information as to the total expected expenditure to be made on this fair. I do not want to reiterate what I have already said, but this fair cannot fail. To allow this fair, representative of this nation, even to enter the spectrum of failure would give to Canada a black eye internationally. In that connection I want the minister to let us know how many nations have agreed to participate. Months have gone by. Is it a fact that so far only two nations have agreed to send exhibits?

The next question I ask is this. Is there any foundation for the widely spread rumour that the government has in mind the possibility of postponing the date of the fair from the year of the hundredth anniversary of this nation to a later year? I hope there is no foundation for that. To do so would be to follow a course of defeatism and despair, and would give our country a reputation that would be far from favourable.

I would also point out that a few weeks ago information was sought in the house by the hon. member for St. Mary. He has been asking for information, as has the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. None has been forthcoming. There has always been the suggestion that if you just wait in hope and expectation you will ultimately be given information. Certainly there has been no application of the principle, ask and ye shall receive, when it comes to information in connection with this fair.

I ask this question. Will Mr. Pierre Dupuy give up his position as ambassador? There was a suggestion that this matter might be resolved in the month of January. I have a great regard for Mr. Pierre Dupuy. As a matter of fact I made the recommendation that he be ambassador to France following my experience with him in Rome in 1954 when he was ambassador there. I found there was nothing he would not do to make Canadian visitors to Italy welcome, and would personally do everything possible to make their stay convenient. I found him a very wise counsellor and I was greatly impressed by him. But he cannot do two jobs.

When listening today to the Minister of Justice speaking of when we might get information in regard to a case in British Columbia that received consideration in the house this morning, I saw in his eyes that glow that indicates that an ambassadorship may well be the resting place of the Minister of Justice. If that be so, I would say that Canada would be better represented there by him than it is in his occupancy of the position of Minister of Justice. I do not know whether that vacancy is going to take place, but I am just trying to find out. I am not seeking information as to identity at the moment, but no one can deny me the speculative right to contemplate the possibilities of a final resting place being found.

I should also like to secure some information that has been asked for and promised over and over again. What are the expected fair costs? I refer to an article that appeared in the press on October 10, in which it was stated that Mr. Shaw, the deputy commissioner general, was bubbling with appreciation of the site and disclosed certain things in an interview. The article points out that Mr. Shaw is a good humoured man and tries to answer all questions put to him. He did not appear to know definitely, but he did say that within a matter of six weeks the costs of the fair and the estimates would be available. The Minister of Public Works himself, having been asked a similar question in the house, also stated that full information would be available by December 20. I would ask the minister to place before the house, first in general and then in particular, the developments that the fair directors have in mind, the cost of each of the several items, and the extent to which any advances towards the building of these fair devices have been attained.

These are some of the matters upon which information has been requested. We have not been able to get anything but generalities, and the time has now come when the house and the country should be assured, finally and absolutely, that this fair is going to be a success; that it is going to achieve the objectives and purposes that the government in which I had the honour to be prime minister had in mind when it made the application on behalf of Canada to secure this fair.

It is well for the record to go back and review, very shortly, something of the course taken. It was in 1958 that the late Senator Mark Drouin suggested, when he was at the Brussels exhibition, that Canada might hold a fair in 1967 to coincide with the centennial celebrations. In 1959 the Montreal chamber of commerce prepared a brief. In 1960, on February 10, I announced that Canada would apply to I.B.E. for the fair; that Ottawa would guarantee $20 million, Quebec $15 million and the city of Montreal $5 million. On March 7, 1960 Canada was informed officially that Russia would apply for the 1967 fair to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the communist revolution. We tried very hard to secure the fair at that time. On May 5, 1960 the U.S.S.R. on the fifth ballot received a majority of the votes in the meeting of the I.B.E. In 1961 the U.S.S.R. decided it would not go ahead.

Once more a movement began for a new application. In June, 1962 Premier Lesage confirmed the provincial promise of $15 million. On September 7 the then government announced it would apply for the fair. On November 13, 1962 the 1967 exhibition was awarded to Canada by the international bureau of expositions. There have been many articles on the subject pointing out the delays that have taken place since April 21. There was an exhaustive article by Mr. Bernard Dufresne of the gallery, which appeared in the Globe and Mail on August 30. It reads as follows:

> When things go wrong in French Canada they say, "Ca ne tourne pas rond." A rough translation could be "The wheels are turning off centre," but the best idiomatic equivalent is: "Things are in a mess."

I hope there is no foundation for the fears expressed in that article and that the minister will set out in detail what the plans are, how far progress has been made, and what will be the total amount of expenditure for Canada. What is the consensus as to the buildings that are to be erected? We should like to know, before we leave here, if this legislation is amended as requested, what advances will be made toward the attainment of that objective which must be dear to the hearts of all of us, namely the success of the fair. I have seen a fine spirit of co-operation between the provincial government and the mayor and corporation of the city of Montreal. I hope the same co-operation will be available to the federal government. However, there has been nothing yet to indicate a recognition that time is of the essence and that action must be taken.

As for regularizing what has been done illegally in starting the work on St. Helen's island without amending the act of parliament, that is passed now. I do not like to see legislation after the event. It is the kind of retroactive legislation that has inherent in it dangerous possibilities. However, the work has been done. We intended, when we were in office, to introduce legislation, but the exigencies of elections brought about a change which denied that legislation. This government followed the views we had expressed in the months of February and March and made a decision that the St. Helen's island site would be the one. However, they did not bring legislation before parliament. I ask, what was the reason for the delay? I cannot understand it. There has been legislation brought before us of little or no consequence, while this is of the utmost importance to Canada. Canada will suffer an international degradation, a national loss of prestige that this parliament and the Canadian people cannot possibly dissipate.

I want to say again that I hope the minister will give us the facts and answer these questions. Let us know how much is going to be paid for holding this fair. Let us know what is going to be expended. What are the plans? He could have gained the co-operation of all members and brought on the activity that has been lacking if he had introduced this amendment rather than sitting back and holding this important legislation to the last minute of the last hour of the last two days of this session.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I think I can count on the house's permission at this time to answer the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and then the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I listened with some dismay to the comments of the hon. member for Skeena.

Surely, the hon. member for Skeena is aware that we shall soon be celebrating Christmas and the new year and wishing for peace on earth and good will to men, and I do not exclude the hon. member from the group of men of good will. However, when he comes back for the next session, if he reads over and meditates on what he said this morning, I do not think he will care to repeat it. I am sure of that and I do not wish to reply in detail to everything he said.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to co-operation between the federal, provincial and municipal governments. He recognized that such co-operation existed and was essential to the success of such a gigantic undertaking as the world exhibition, where the prestige of Canada is at stake.

[Text]

I would like to refer immediately to a few points raised by the Leader of the Opposition. As far as the allegation of delays is concerned, I wonder whether the Leader of the Opposition is in a position to state clearly what he has in mind. I have followed this undertaking since the month of April, and last May we confirmed approval in principle of the site of the fair. If the Leader of the Opposition had been the head of the government from April to July, I am sure he would not have come to an effective agreement with the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal to begin the work without there having been proper surveys and studies carried out by engineers. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the city of Montreal knew only in July that the site was a feasible one. They did not know this until they received the report of the Laboratoire Lasalle after innumerable studies had been made, and then the three governments were in a position to examine this report and take proper steps.

I repeat what I said this morning. In the same week that the final report of the Laboratoire Lasalle reached my office, an agreement was made with the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec. I again say that I reject any allegation of delays as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the date of the agreement, please?

Mr. Deschatelets: I will supply that information before the end of this debate, Mr. Chairman. The right hon. gentleman referred to the increase in the number of directors. May I say that this act was passed while he was head of the previous government. The reason the province of Quebec has the same number of directors as the federal government is that under the tripartite agreement—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not at any time question the fact that they should have the same number of directors. I pointed out that the bill says the other two appointments to be made will consist of one appointee by the governor in council and one by the lieutenant governor in council.

Mr. Deschatelets: I was coming to that, Mr. Chairman. I would be ready to admit that technically the right hon. gentleman is right. The reason we are increasing the number of directors from 12 to 14 is that we would like to improve the image of the organization; we would like more regions of this country to be represented. The right hon. gentleman will find in the bill before us that the same number of directors, namely seven, is provided for Quebec and for the federal government, though we are going to appoint two additional directors. The reason is that because the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal will bear half the total expenditures, we thought that at least in the statute they should provide the same number of directors as the federal government. This number is seven. But I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, and I do not hesitate for a moment to commit myself by saying, that the two additional directors will be appointed by the governor in council. A gentlemen's agreement was reached between the federal government and the government of Quebec. I hope hon. members will be satisfied with my statement.

The right hon. gentleman also claimed that we should have presented to the house before now an amendment to the act in order to legalize the description of the site. I wish to state that we were planning to present this amendment immediately after the house resumed in September, but because we thought we would be making additional amendments it was considered preferable to wait and present all the amendments at the same time. Because the leader of the official opposition may think he has a prima facie case of illegality, may I state first of all that the government of the province of Quebec last summer passed an act in which it is stated very clearly that Notre Dame island belongs to the city of Montreal.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, may I say that the federal government has not yet spent one nickel in relation to the site. I repeat, not one nickel has been spent by the federal government in relation to the site. I repeat also that the site is the sole responsibility of the city of Montreal, and they have the obligation to deliver this site before the end of June, 1964. A budget was prepared for the year 1963, and it has to do with salaries and details of the organization. There was no mention of any other undertaking or construction project.

I now come to the question of salary of the chief commissioner. I repeat that this question has not been settled as yet but will be settled sometime in January. Until then the chief commissioner will continue to enjoy the salary and indemnities as ambassador, which post he is still occupying.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is he paid as commissioner or just as ambassador?

Mr. Deschatelets: Just as ambassador. The right hon. gentleman has asked for the total expenditure, the plan, and so forth, and I believe I answered that question this morning on orders of the day. This afternoon the operating and capital budgets, as well as the master plan, will be presented to the federal government and the Quebec government, and to the city of Montreal. The right hon. gentleman is experienced enough to know that in such a case it is not possible for us to make this information available to members of parliament or the public before it has been approved.

In order to make my point very clear I would like to read clause 8 of the tripartite agreement among the government of Canada, the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal, signed on January 18, 1963:

> The corporation shall submit, annually, to the minister and the minister of industry and commerce of Quebec...an operating budget and a capital budget, with deductions for any anticipated income in each case, for the next following financial year of the corporation, which shall be the calendar year, for their approval, and approval by the Minister of Finance of Canada and the minister of finance of Quebec, and shall forward copies of the approved budgets to the city.

We are going to examine these documents sometime tomorrow or next week. The government of Quebec will do the same, and it is only by courtesy that these documents have been made available to the city of Montreal, because under the agreement it is mentioned that we could have waited for approval before giving them to the city of Montreal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When we undertook to have the fair we fixed the total liability of the federal government at $20 million. That was the basis upon which the fair was proceeded with, but subsequently the present Prime Minister added to that amount. I would now like to know how much the federal parliament will be called upon to pay for this fair, and what was the basis upon which the $20 million—which was of the essence to agreement that we would join in the fair—has been increased? Is there any further increase over and above that which was promised by the Prime Minister in August?

Mr. Deschatelets: I do not think the right hon. gentleman's statement is quite accurate. It is true that the government of Canada has agreed to pay a grant of $20 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And no more.

Mr. Deschatelets: This is where the right hon. gentleman makes a mistake, because clause 7, concerning the borrowing powers of the corporation, is very clear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Read it.

Mr. Deschatelets: I will read clause 7:

If further funds—

That is in addition to the $20 million, the $15 million from Quebec and the $5 million from Montreal.

—are required by the corporation for the purposes of the exhibition, other than those obtained by way of temporary loans from the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, Canada and the province agree that the corporation shall, subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance of Canada and the minister of finance of Quebec, borrow such funds and may issue securities therefor and that such securities shall be jointly guaranteed by Canada and the province. The securities and the joint guarantees shall be in such form and subject to such terms and conditions, including rates of interest as approved by Canada and the province.

In answer to the right hon. gentleman's question may I say there was no increase, and that the situation is the same as the one set under the previous administration. There is no increase whatever in the grants to the corporation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I read from the Montreal Star of August 13:

Prime Minister Pearson said yesterday the federal government is prepared to spend—

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Not to loan—

—$50 million over and above the $20 million already allocated as its share.

That is not a loan under clause 7 of the agreement.

Mr. Deschatelets: I am just wondering whether the statement read by the right hon. gentleman has to do with the Canadian pavilion. In addition to the grants, the federal government has undertaken to build a Canadian pavilion. I do not know exactly how much this will cost, and I would refer that question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is in charge of this sector.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to say a few words and to express to the Minister of Public Works my best wishes for the success of the world exhibition in 1967.

On the other hand, I want to state that I am sorry about the remarks made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I think that all members of this house, with the exception of the hon. member for Skeena, feel that His Honour Mayor Drapeau, of Montreal, is anxious to co-operate with everyone, at all levels, so that the world exhibition might be a success.

The mayor of Montreal must be commended for giving of his time, his energy and his talent in order that the city of Montreal may contribute, directly or indirectly, to the success of that exhibition. Actually, the world exhibition is not the responsibility of Mayor Drapeau only, but also of the Quebec government and of the federal government, with, of course, the co-operation of the foreign countries which will have a pavilion at the fair. This is an undertaking on a national scale and not on a municipal scale, as suggested by the hon. member for Skeena.

I would like to ask the minister why we must wait so long to have Mr. Dupuy's status determined? Mr. Dupuy is in charge of the fair, but he is still the Canadian ambassador in Paris. I wonder why he has not yet been asked to devote himself exclusively to the fair since, as the minister said, it is a tremendous venture which certainly requires, to my mind, the undivided attention of Mr. Dupuy.

I have a suggestion for the minister: at the very first opportunity, he should replace Mr. Dupuy by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Chevrier. I think that would provide a speedy settlement of the problem.

As far as developing of the exhibition site is concerned, that is the development of the islands, it seemed to be understood that the filling material would cost some $12 million. I should like to ask the minister whether it is true that it will cost $60 million because the required material cannot be taken from the bottom of the St. Lawrence river since there are several feet of sheet of rock.

I think the authorities concerned will have to see to it that the filling is well done, because taking the New York world exhibition statistics in 1939-1940, public services involved 10 miles of sewers, 20 miles of drains, 15 miles of water pipes and 16 miles of gas lines. This means that the authorities concerned will have to see to it that the ground is well settled in order to avoid pipe breakage for instance.

Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition quite properly asked what would be the total cost of that gigantic undertaking. I have some information from an authority very close to the world exhibition concerning the approximate costs for the various administrative levels to carry out that project. For instance, the total investment is estimated at $580,540,000, of which $82,300,000 are chargeable to the exhibition corporation, $83,740,000 to the city of Montreal, $141,500,000 to the province, $70,500,000 to the federal government, $104 million to foreign countries and $98.5 million to Canadian private enterprise. So the total investment will come close to $1 billion.

The management anticipates expenditures of over $80 million, without taking into account administrative expenditures which will certainly add up to several millions. To meet that tremendous responsibility, I understand the exhibition corporation only has the $40 million put at its disposal by the three governments. Since the total revenue is estimated as some $40 million, based on the estimates already prepared for the New York exhibition, a large operation deficit is already anticipated.

Then we would appreciate, if the minister without entering into details would at least tell the house, whether it is true that, as I have been told by someone who is very close to world exhibition, the total cost would reach a billion?

The minister has also spoken about the Canadian pavilion. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether it is true, even if this matter comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce, that the cost of the Canadian pavilion will reach $21 million. We, on this side of the house, would appreciate receiving this information.

Mr. Chairman, those were the remarks which I wanted to make. However, as for the approximate cost of this venture, I would be pleased if the minister would give us further explanations.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up too much of the time of the house this afternoon.

First of all, as member for a constituency where all races live together in a genuine spirit of national unity, I simply want to say that I do not wish to waste the time of the house in replying to the remarks made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

With the harmonious co-operation of the entire population of my riding of Brome-Missisquoi, as well as of every province, I am convinced that we shall be holding in 1967 genuine and sincere celebrations for the centennial of our great and young country.

We are indeed fortunate in not having among our people persons with the same frame of mind as the hon. member for Skeena.

I have often asked the Minister of Public Works questions concerning the world fair. From time to time, I noticed that in his replies, he never referred to the important things which were happening in Montreal.

A few weeks ago, the Prime Minister stated that he intended to appoint a permanent liaison officer to keep the federal government constantly and fully informed of the events in Montreal. As I say, not so many weeks ago, the minister told me that, for the time being, he was acting in that capacity himself.

In view of the speech he delivered and the announcement which the Prime Minister made, I hope the government will soon appoint a permanent liaison officer so that, from now on, we may get appropriate information on what is happening in Montreal, when we ask questions in the house.

Speaking in all sincerity, I submit that what we need at the present time is an efficient system permitting co-operation between the federal government, the provincial authorities of Quebec and those of the city of Montreal.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, if I may say so I think the best compliment I can pay to the last two speakers is to direct my remarks through you to the minister and say to him that my initial comments on this resolution were not made out of rancour or bitterness or anger; they were placed on the record because that was the way I felt about the situation after watching the progress, or lack of it, of the world fair in the months up to now. If hon. members want to get emotionally incensed about it and base their attitudes to this question on pure emotion rather than looking at it logically, that is their prerogative and I bear them no ill will whatsoever.

With respect to the contention made earlier today and reiterated by the Leader of the Opposition that all the works done to date are illegal and without statutory sanction, I should like to tell the minister that I still hold this view. I believe the arguments which the hon. gentleman put forward in this regard do not hold water. He said, for instance, that the legislature of the province of Quebec brought Notre Dame island within the confines of the city of Montreal. That may well be, but that does not make Notre Dame island part of the island of Montreal, and the act specifically says that the world fair should be held on the island of Montreal.

The hon. gentleman indicated that not five cents has been spent by the federal government on the work which has been done up to the present moment. I do not think that argument has any validity with respect to whether what has been done has been done legally or not, because the relevant section of the act says quite clearly that there shall be held in Canada, on the island of Montreal, for six months, the exhibition referred to. The act does not talk about whether the federal government should spend money on the exhibition. That is immaterial.

The invitation cards which we received in August indicated that there was to be an official inauguration of the site. That is contrary to the law. The minister also said that the city of Montreal had until the end of 1964 to deliver the site; that is, to have it ready and available. This is immaterial too. We contend that the work which has been done up to this time has been illegal and contrary to the law of Canada, and we should all recognize this fact.

Even if this bill passes I do not think it will legalize what has been done up to now. However, I think there is a general disposition to agree that we should do something to regularize the illegal procedures which have been followed up to now. I still take the position that, so far, this has not been developed as an exhibition worthy of Canada in a national sense. So far, these activities have revolved primarily around the city of Montreal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister did not answer a couple of the questions that I put to him. One of those questions concerned the rumour, passed from person to person, that the world fair was to be postponed. This rumour originated in an answer given by the Prime Minister on October 18 to the hon. member for St. Mary. The exchange is reported in Hansard on page 3742, as follows:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he have any comments to make on an article published in Maclean's and stating that the Prime Minister's advisers recommended giving up the idea of a world fair in Montreal? The article appeared on page 17 of the October 5, 1963 issue of that magazine.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make.

The very fact that no comment was made accelerated the number of rumours in this regard, and I would ask the minister to direct his answer to this point.

The second question I asked him was this. How many countries to date have agreed to exhibit at the Canadian centennial exposition. My information may not be correct, but I have been informed that only two countries have expressed any direct interest in taking part in this exhibition. That is a very serious situation. The third question to which I did not receive an answer—it was brushed off—was what expenditure is to be made by the parliament of Canada? I am going to read from the remarks of the Prime Minister made in Montreal as reported on August 13.

In 1962, the federal government took the necessary action to establish the world fair corporation and to extend invitations to countries through our diplomatic channels abroad. It approved a contribution of up to $20 million to meet the direct costs of the exhibition.

Now the minister would have us believe that this $20 million was simply to be spent on a building or on a pavilion. Nothing of the sort. It represented the limit to which the former government would go in contributing to the direct costs of the exhibition, and that view was accepted by the present Prime Minister. Then the right hon. gentleman went on to say:

The federal government is also prepared to provide an exhibit which will be worthy of the country. It has undertaken to meet the very substantial additional costs that its engineers consider will be necessary to provide for the protection of this site against ice accumulation.

How much has been estimated as the cost which the federal government would accept in order to provide protection against ice accumulation? These various costs which I have mentioned will in themselves total something over $50 million. We want to know what the contribution is to be.

There is the building of the pavilion. Naturally there will be a national pavilion. But the undertaking of the government, when I was prime minister, was that our direct contribution would be no more than $20 million. Now the present government states there will be further costs in connection with the highway. I can recall the minister being asked a question as to the cost in this connection, and he said the highway would be built as part of the trans-Canada plan and the share paid by the federal government would be the share normally paid by the federal government toward the cost of such highways.

I should like to get the outline of this expenditure. The direct contribution is $20 million. Then there is the pavilion. Over and above the pavilion, what further contribution is Canada to be asked to make? What is the estimated cost of providing protection against ice? What is the estimated cost of the road construction? What is the estimated cost of engaging additional engineers, and so on? We should know these things. There have been some grandiose plans suggested. As a matter of fact I notice someone has proposed that the parliament of Canada should provide free transportation for everyone who wants to go to the fair. I thought that was going a little far; indeed, I thought it was going much too far.

What I am trying to point out is that unless there is some degree of control there is no plan, however ephemeral or ridiculous, which might not ultimately be charged to the federal government. What degree of control do we have? What is the limit? I repeat that we said no more than $20 million was to be provided by way of direct assistance. That did not contemplate the cost of the pavilion. As soon as the minister gives us this information he will more or less have covered the picture.

Mr. Deschatelets: May I at the outset remind the Leader of the Opposition that there is no clause dealing with expenditure on the fair in the bill before us. I think he will be bound to agree with me when I point this out. I will go as far as I can in answering his questions, although I feel I am not supposed to do so because the subject is not covered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We will regard it as covered.

Mr. Deschatelets: I am ready to meet the right hon. gentleman half way. I wish to be very clear about this. There has never been any question of postponing the date of the fair. I have never heard of it, and this is especially so on this day when we are going to be supplied with the master plan and the organization is now in the midst of developing its projects. I think this answers the points raised by the Leader of the Opposition. It is true that three countries, I believe, have actually accepted participation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which are they? Britain, France and Belgium?

Mr. Deschatelets: I think this is information we will have to supply later to the right hon. gentleman. I believe he can easily understand that it is pretty early for the different countries to accept participation. We are in December, 1963 and the fair will take place in 1967. But I might say here that at least 25 countries have already indicated that they are going to participate. I think this should answer the point. The federal government is going to provide a pavilion, but I do not think it would be proper for me to give the amount because this is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Trade and Commerce. But I might say today that the Canadian pavilion will surely be the pride of all Canadians—

Mr. Diefenbaker: How much is the pride going to cost?

Mr. Deschatelets: —who will visit the fair. As far as the expenditures are concerned, we forecast an expenditure of $20 million, the federal government paying $17.5 million and the city of Montreal $2.5 million for a total of $20 million.

The right hon. gentleman mentioned the cost of highways and access roads to the site. As far as the access roads are concerned, it is one of the obligations of the city of Montreal to provide access roads to the site and also to provide for the services, the corporation being responsible only for the services within the site. I am the one who signed the agreement under the Trans-Canada Highway Act with the province of Quebec for the expressway from the west end to the east end of Montreal, and I wish to remind the house that this has nothing whatsoever to do with the world fair except, of course, to permit the construction of a very important link coming from the north end of the city to the site. We would have accepted this agreement whether or not there was going to be a fair in Montreal in 1967. I wish this to be well understood. This is the reason the expenditure under the Trans-Canada Highway Act should not be included in the cost of the world fair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What will be the amount of that expenditure?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, we will have to pay approximately $30 million as our share for the construction of the Boucherville bridge, and we think starting at Metropolitan boulevard in the north end of Montreal up to Boucherville bridge and the tunnel we are going to spend approximately $45 million. The hon. gentleman must remember that the province of Quebec only entered into an agreement under the Trans-Canada Highway Act in 1960, and although the federal government is paying 50 per cent of the cost there is a provision in section 10 or section 11 of the act whereby we pay 90 per cent of one tenth of the mileage. When we dealt with other provinces in the past, of course, we were always called upon to pay 90 per cent on the most expensive section. However, this was one of the purposes of the act, and it is the reason we are paying 90 per cent in Montreal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought the 90 per cent covered mountain roads and the like.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or bridges.

Mr. Deschatelets: I do not know if the right hon. gentleman is kidding about that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I am being very serious.

Mr. Deschatelets: I am supplying the information—

Mr. Diefenbaker: And I thank the minister.

Mr. Deschatelets: —under reserve of the point I have already made, that this is completely outside the scope of the bill, and I hope the right hon. gentleman will appreciate this.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I wish to say this. When an ambassador must leave his post, a period of three or four months is usually required on account of his duties and that is why the commissioner, Mr. Pierre Dupuy, necessarily needs that period of time.

I wish to say that this problem will be settled sometime in January and the hon. members will be informed.

Mr. Valade: After the cabinet shuffle.

Mr. Pigeon: I hope that the delay in the appointment of the Minister of Justice will not be that long.

Mr. Deschatelets: As far as Notre Dame island and St. Helen's island are concerned, I wish to repeat to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that that is the city of Montreal's responsibility and that not later than yesterday, Mr. Jean Drapeau announced through the press that those islands would be handed over in time, as provided in the by laws.

In my reply before the recess, I dealt with the point raised by the hon. member about services. The city of Montreal has to provide those services to the site, but within the limits of the site the corporation will have to set up those required by the fair.

I am sorry to say that I am not able to satisfy my hon. friends' curiosity as far as building costs are concerned. Again, the master plan will be presented only today; it will be considered tomorrow or Monday by us, and also by the government of the province of Quebec which, this very day, is meeting the fair officials who will present the plans to them, as well as to the city of Montreal. Within a few weeks everybody will be informed of the decision.

I must say that the organization of the exhibition now enters the most important period of all, which is the carrying out the plan that will be accepted by the three governments.

Mr. Pigeon: Would it be possible, at the beginning of next session, to have an idea of the approximate cost?

Mr. Deschatelets: I am happy to answer this question. When the plans have been approved, there is no reason why they should not be made public. This morning, I said it was unfortunate we should not sit at that time, for the hon. members would then have learned of these plans before the public.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get some information from the minister. He himself mentioned the east-west Montreal expressway which will be built to help speed up traffic on the occasion of the world fair.

As he mentioned the subject, I would like to have some information concerning the laying out of that road, especially where it branches off from Dorchester boulevard. I understand, according to the lay-out, that the expressway is to start at a point west on Dorchester boulevard to reach Delorimier street, go up that street and from there continue east on Ontario street, up to the Boucherville tunnel. If I am right in this—and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong—I do not understand why the expressway would pass on an elevated road, in the eastern part of Montreal, on a very busy artery.

I should also like the minister to tell us what will be the responsibility of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation concerning means of communication with and access to St. Helen's and Notre Dame islands, the site of the exhibition. At the official opening ceremony persided over by Mayor Drapeau, in spite of the roads now available, we certainly found ourselves in a serious traffic jam.

I wonder how we are going to have adequate means of access to the site, if the government, the city and the province do not decide immediately what are to be the roads of access and exit. I also wonder what comprehensive studies have been undertaken to prevent the exhibition from causing great big traffic jams which would jeopardize its success.

I wonder if the minister could get in touch with his colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) to see whether the toll could be removed on Champlain bridge.

A member from the city of Montreal and myself urged that tolls be abolished on the Champlain bridge, as soon as possible, since even now that situation slows down traffic considerably in the city of Montreal because the work now going on on St. Helen's island and truck traffic are already causing quite serious bottlenecks on the roads between the south and the north shores.

I make this suggestion because I feel that the most important thing to think about after giving a structure, so to speak, to the corporation, is to ensure that all means of communication will benefit the world's fair.

Since the minister offers to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Act, I wonder whether he could tell us what are the intentions of the corporation about the pavilions which will be left there, once the fair is over. Rumours circulate to the effect that these pavilions could be sold to individuals. If such were the case, I think that we would be making a mistake because such a decision would lead to speculations with regard to the disposal of those pavilions.

In my opinion, these pavilions could be used to serve many purposes. I could even suggest to the minister that the corporation give up or sell some of them to the University of Montreal, which could use them as research centres, medical laboratories or even as hospitals.

As I mentioned already, these buildings could be used for many purposes, but I am of the opinion that before venturing too far, the minister should look after all the details to make sure, at the outset, that no speculation will be possible when the fair is over.

Mr. Chairman, I wish also to comment on some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who, some time ago, seemed to blame the mayor of Montreal for the delays in the preparation of the world fair.

I feel the hon. member has been very badly informed, as in other circumstances, it may be added, because in the July 4, 1963 edition of La Presse, there was an article signed by Mr. Albert Tremblay to the effect that the city of Montreal was blaming Ottawa for the difficulties encountered in the preparation of the fair.

And the second paragraph of the article in question was as follows:

> At a press conference called especially for that purpose, Messrs. Jean Drapeau and Lucien Saulnier defined once again the position of the administration—

And the conclusion of the article was that the delay was due to a lack of decision on the part of the federal government.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the Minister of Public Works should not be the only one blamed for that situation. I think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is also responsible to a great extent for those delays for which I suggest there is no excuse, because of the short period at the disposal of the authorities of the city of Montreal to have the grounds ready.

I have a letter which the Prime Minister sent me on September 24, 1963 concerning the site of the exhibition, when I asked him to investigate the internal problems of the world exhibition corporation, particularly in connection with the resignation of Messrs. Carsley and Bienvenu. In his reply, the Prime Minister said then that a bill would soon be introduced in the house to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act.

Mr. Chairman, I draw the attention of the house to the fact that this letter was dated September 24, 1963, and that it is only on December 20, that is nearly three months later, that the government finally introduced legislation to amend the said act.

I insist on calling this to the attention of the hon. member for Skeena and of the minister to stress the fact that the government is to be held responsible for the delays encountered in the decisions concerning the world fair.

Some time ago, I spoke of the reasons which motivated the resignation of Messrs. Carsley and Bienvenu. The minister did not reply. I would ask him to give those reasons to the house.

On August 22, 1963, La Presse published the letter which Mr. Bienvenu sent to the Prime Minister and copies of which he had given to the press. This is what he said in paragraph (b):

> Important decisions were taken without the corporation being even invited to attend the discussions. There should not only be close co-ordination between the three levels of government but the commissioner should be provided with the means to ensure such co-ordination if senseless delays and duplication are to be avoided.

This letter is a clear indictment against the present government and the minister responsible for the world fair for their lack of co-ordination not to say co-operation. I wonder if the Liberal government should not assume part of the blame for those delays which nearly compromised the world fair, which, as we all hope, will be a success.

I hope, therefore, that the minister will not try to evade his share of responsibilities and will recognize that it is as late as eight months after the coming into power of his party that entirely technical legislation is introduced in order to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act. Indeed, the minister must admit that the amendments proposed only involve a very small part of the administrative structure and that they mostly concern the payment of allowances to the directors.

I feel that the government could have introduced much more practical amendments than those now before us and which only tend to amend the act so as to appoint two other directors and increase their remuneration.

I would like the minister to give us some definite explanation because his hesitation in making known the allowance to be paid to the commissioner general is absolutely unacceptable. I am wondering why the minister cannot tell us today what salary will be paid to this director who will soon be working for the company?

In this connection, I will give as an example the civil service commission. When this commission advertises a competition, the salary paid to the successful candidate is usually indicated. I cannot therefore understand why the Minister of Public Works is not in a position to tell us now what will be the salary paid to the commissioner general.

I realize that it may be advisable to take this decision when the house will be in recess, because we could then ask other information and I find that this perhaps is a characteristic attitude of the Minister of Public Works with his usual courtesy, he does not want to start a controversy.

I do not want to start a discussion on the matter, but I think we should insist, as members responsible for the money spent by the government, that the minister tell us how much the commissioner general will get.

I think it should be easy for the minister to answer that question. If one of his friends were to meet him and ask: "My dear minister, what is your salary?", it would be easy for him to answer his friend and it would not take him two months to do it, because he knows how much he is being paid. Therefore, I think the minister is in a position to tell us if the salary in question will amount to $10,000, $15,000, $25,000, $35,000 or even more than $35,000 or $50,000 per year.

It is important that we should get that information because we are asked to pass a measure meant precisely to give consideration to the matter of salaries to be paid to the directors of the world's fair.

I hope that the minister will answer the questions we put to him and, in particular, will assure the house that neither the provincial nor the federal government will intervene from now on in the administration of the world's fair.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to start a debate but I know that some contracts were granted directly without public tenders being called. There might not have been anything wrong in that since the authorities of the city of Montreal are responsible for the preparation of the site but I hope that the three governments will give the corporation the independence it should have if we really want the fair to be a success.

[Text]

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, possibly the minister now, in the spirit of Christmas, will let us have that information. He has been pretty generous in his information as to the salary the deputy commissioner general is to receive. When he has given this information he will have pretty well covered the questions that were asked. I summarize this matter at the moment by saying we have no apology to offer for the time taken in the examination of this very important matter. I am glad to have the assurance of the minister that the fair is going to be proceeded with. The uncertainty that was created stemmed directly from the indifference of an answer given by the Prime Minister, to which I alluded earlier.

There must be—and I think parliament takes this stand—strict regard to the expenditures that are being made. This is not to become a field day for expenditures. The undertaking was that $20 million would be the total amount that parliament would provide. That was the understanding, the very clear understanding; and I remember very well that Toronto was approached in this connection and said that an exhibition of the kind contemplated for a centennial of confederation exhibition could not be financed on the basis of the terms which were acceptable at the time we entered into the arrangements with the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal. When I hear the record of expenditures in connection with roads, tunnels—

An hon. Member: Bridges.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —dams, ditches, and one thing and another, to provide for this fair, I begin to wonder whether the sky is the limit, and the very suggestion of that would shock the sensibilities of Canadians generally.

I am pleased to hear that this fair is going ahead, and I simply end my remarks by saying that it must be a success. National pride cannot suffer the ignominy of having the 1967 centennial of confederation exhibition turn out to be the world's fiasco. We want it to be a world exhibition that will concentrate attention on Canada. There has been nothing up to the present moment that has been indicative of a serious regard to the terrible consequences to our national prestige and pride that will follow if this fair does not succeed. If the minister would now give us the information, I will express in advance my appreciation of the way in which he has answered the questions, difficult as they have been and difficult as it has been for him to provide the fullest information in this connection.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, as far as the salary of the chief commissioner is concerned, may I say that it will be recommended by the Prime Minister. It will have to be approved by cabinet. Surely it should be proportionate to the salary of the deputy chief commissioner, which is actually $35,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a beautiful example of telling us nothing. Is the rumour correct that the recommendation is going to be $65,000 or more?

Mr. Deschatelets: I hesitate to even comment on rumours such as the right hon. gentleman is reporting to the committee this afternoon. This has never been suggested or mentioned. I think the right hon. gentleman should be satisfied this afternoon when I say that the salary of the chief commissioner will be in proportion to the salary now enjoyed by the deputy commissioner.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In what proportion?

Mr. Deschatelets: He is now receiving $35,000. I think we should be satisfied with this. I have given a few of the reasons why this matter has not yet been settled. It will be settled during the month of January. I would like to come back to the last point raised by the right hon. gentleman. When he says the $20 million grant is the only expenditure—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; the only grant.

Mr. Deschatelets: —the only grant—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The rest are loans.

Mr. Deschatelets: —I can assure the right hon. gentleman that today we do not envisage any increase in the grant. There is absolutely no increase and we do not envisage any increase. But the right hon. gentleman will remember, I hope, that in the tripartite agreement entered into he gave the corporation borrowing powers—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Deschatelets: —and these loans will have to be guaranteed by the Minister of Finance of the Canadian government as well as the minister of finance of Quebec. Nothing has been changed as far as this is concerned. I wish to reiterate—and this is important—that nothing has been changed; the $20 million grant remains at the same amount.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, the minister has not told us what is the intention of the government regarding the disposal of the pavilions. Does the government consider giving instructions to the Canadian world exhibition corporation along that line?

Mr. Deschatelets: All these matters will be dealt with, of course, when the construction program has been accepted by the government. Up to now this program has been submitted to the federal government and also to the Quebec government, and when it is made public, all these questions will be answered.

The hon. member also talked about the surplus left when the fair is over. May I draw his attention to clause 19 which reads as follows:

> The corporation shall wind up its affairs and dispose of its assets and liabilities within such time after the closing of the exhibition and in such manner and subject to such conditions as the governor in council, with concurrence of the lieutenant governor in council, may prescribe.

If the three governments were called upon to contribute respectively 50 per cent, 37½ per cent and 12½ per cent, they will share revenues in the same proporton at the end of the exhibition.

Resolution reported.

Mr. Deschatelets (for Mr. Pearson) moved that the said resolution be now read a second time and concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Howard: Did I understand you to say that the bill should be read a second time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, that the said resolution be now read a second time and concurred in.

Resolution read a second time and concurred in.

Mr. Deschatelets (for Mr. Pearson) moved that the said resolution stand referred to the committee of the whole on Bill C-120, an act to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to.

World Exhibition Corporation Act

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SITE, NUMBER OF DIRECTORS, ETC.

On the order:

Resuming consideration of the proposal of the Prime Minister for the second reading of Bill C-120, an act to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, on the motion for second reading of the bill I would like to draw something to your attention and ask for your ruling on whether the bill is in order now, and whether it has been preceded by a proper resolution.

Your Honour, when you were in the chair the other day, you ruled with respect to a previous question of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on December 10, and I want to quote briefly one of the paragraphs in your ruling as recorded at page 5666 of Hansard for December 10, where citation 355 of Beauchesne's fourth edition was quoted. Then you said:

It should be noted however that resolution is required not only when an amendment seeks to increase the amount previously approved by parliament, but also if it changes the modality and conditions of the grant authorized by the original legislation.

I submit that this bill seeks to change the modality and the conditions of the grant authorized by the original resolution with respect to the site of the fair itself, and no reference is in the resolution which the committee just considered to the site but only to increasing the number of directors of the corporation, to payments to the commissioner and the deputy commissioner, to establishing an executive committee of the board, to authorizing payment of remuneration by the corporation to directors, and to making further changes in connection with the administration of the act. The act at present states, and this has been mentioned quite a number of times:

In connection with the celebration of the centennial of confederaion in Canada in a manner in keeping with its national and historical significance, there shall be held in Canada, on the island of Montreal for a period of six months—

The bill now before us says:

There shall be held in Canada, on the island of Montreal.

Then these words are added:

—and on or in the vicinity of Ile Ste. Helene, Ile Ronde, Ile Verte and Ile Notre Dame

—which I submit is an addition of four extra islands not referred to in the original legislation. I submit that the inclusion of these four islands in fact changes what you referred to as the modality and conditions of the grant authorized by the original legislation. I also submit that we should proceed according to what the rules say, the rules which were applauded so heartily by the Secretary of State when Your Honour made that ruling.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not intend to go into any detail, and I certainly do not intend to make the kind of flattering references to the hon. gentleman that he constantly makes to me. I may say the resolution was drafted, as is customary with resolutions presented to the house, by the law clerk of the house, who is very experienced in these matters and who had the benefit of the views both of Your Honour and those expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who raised the point of order originally, who is also very experienced in the interpretation of the rules and who has tripped up a good number of other members on various occasions. I should be surprised, sir, if the law clerk had made a mistake.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There are two points on which the Chair should comment. The first deals with the question of the regularity of the bill at this stage, and I may say this was covered by an order of the house as reported at page 651 of Votes and Proceedings for December 10:

And the honourable member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) having raised the question as to whether the bill should stand on the order paper or be reintroduced after the house has passed the resolution referred to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am informed that there is a precedent dating back to the session of 1912-13 where the procedure which is now proposed by the honourable the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) was followed.

This is an order of the house. With respect to the question of whether the island of Ste. Helene is part of the island of Montreal, to my mind that is a question of geography which the Chair should not be called upon to resolve. I would therefore rule that the bill is in order.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, December 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson for the second reading of Bill No. C-120, to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, together with the resolution adopted earlier this day, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the reason for the change of name, and what brain produced this schedule? It is a most interesting schedule. This is the motto of the fair and I just wonder what its purport is. What does it mean? I suppose one must have an artistic temperament to understand it, but I must say it is difficult to understand. It is a series of angles facing one another in a regular arrangement around a circle.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that the readers of Hansard may wonder what we are talking about. I suggest that a cut of this design be put in Hansard—the queen's printer can do it—perhaps at this point. This could be done by unanimous consent.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The design referred to above appearing in the schedule to the bill, is reproduced below:]

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to answer the two points raised by the leader of the official opposition.

The title of the act is being amended in order to reflect more precisely the aims of the Canadian corporation set up by the government to organize the world exhibition. The former title read as follows: the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act, but the title we propose would be: the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition act. It seems to me that if one compares both titles, one is fully justified in proposing that amendment.

As far as the drawing at the end of the bill is concerned, I may say that this emblem is based on the original emblem. It is a vertical line with diagonal arms, and it is said that this graphic symbol of man is the oldest there is.

This design was conceived by an artist, Mr. Hebert, who had the idea of joining two symbolic figures of man, to convey the idea of friendship and fraternity. By a clever grouping in the form of a circle of eight of these double figures, the artist suggested the form of the earth, that is the world of men, without resorting to the usual graphic interpretation which can be seen on any truck passing in the street.

In our opinion, this is a well-conceived and well-designed symbol and I think that when the public are used to it, they will surely understand the viewpoint of the artist when he designed it.

To conclude, I want to say that in this design, the artist gave priority to man over earth, contrary to what is usually done.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, we are trying to show something Canadian here. I am glad the hon. gentleman has the imaginative processes of appreciation for the artistic and decorative nature of this emblem. When I was a boy we used to draw men like that, just two or three lines; it was simple. It was the only artistry we could indulge in. To me this looks like an artistic monstrosity. I would have thought that this would be an ideal occasion to place the maple leaf in the centre to show it was Canadian. I hope this is not a precursor of the kind of flag the government is going to bring in as a distinctive Canadian flag.

I speak in all seriousness. I cannot understand it. You cannot make head nor tail of it, because no matter how you look at it, it is upside down. I cannot understand how this could represent a nation like Canada in the centennial of its confederation. I should have liked to see the maple leaf or something characteristic of Canada. I am not just being jocular, but to me that represents nothing characteristic of the confederation of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: May I reply to that? It is only an impression. The first time I for one saw this design, I must admit that I had the same reaction as the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

But one gets used to it. I must say—

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: We get used to looking at you over there on the treasury benches; nevertheless this hurts every time we look at it.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: I must say here, Mr. Chairman, that artists have examined that design. Of course, one must understand the synthesis made by the artist and the idea he wanted to represent by his design.

At the time the world fair opens, the design will be reproduced and distributed everywhere to show the site of the fair to the visitors. I imagine there would be a design like this, with an arrow to indicate in which direction the fair is.

This has the advantage that it cannot be given any other meaning. When people will see the design, they will know that it means the world fair.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, a word only to say that I am surprised that the minister accepts this symbol, because it looks very much like the one adopted by a certain organization fighting nuclear arms. I wonder whether the minister could not have this design corrected because we do not know exactly what it represents. Does it represent in some way what the monument by the famous artist Vaillancourt tends to express? Will it be necessary to have protests or organized walks against it?

I entirely agree with the opinion expressed by the Leader of the Opposition that it would be preferable to have the maple leaf.

[Text]

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the remarks of the leader of the official opposition and concur in what he said. Is the minister seriously telling us that this weird looking thing will be plastered all over the world fair? Thank heavens it is in Montreal and not in Toronto.

Mr. Leboe: I suggest this looks more like a combination of a tractor wheel and a bunch of power poles. I am not satisfied with it at all; I think it is crazy.

Mr. Fairweather: I do not know whether the whip is on in any discussion of a design. I hope it is not, because I think the design is rather imaginative. Perhaps the symbolism there might be likened to the seed of the maple leaf, this Y-shaped thing. That might cover the problem. I also agree with the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm; it certainly has the symbolism of the Canadian campaign for nuclear disarmament, which is a rather significant feature in a world fair. I like it.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we should not simply throw out this symbol which, in my opinion has no meaning as far as bilingualism is concerned in Canada. I submit that we should be totally opposed to this project.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I say that the argument we have had for the last few minutes illustrates why legislative bodies never legislate art.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to know which is the English version and which is the French version. I have never seen a monstrosity like it. It will bring ridicule to Canada. There is nothing to indicate Canada in it, either indirectly or otherwise. Is there going to be a glossary with the issue of every one of these so that people will understand it? Will the hon. gentleman read once more the description of the imaginative processes the artist suffered as he produced this, because it was difficult to follow.

Mr. Deschatelets: I will surely oblige the right hon. gentleman by reading it again.

[Translation]

But at this stage, I should like to say it is a matter of taste. In front of a painting we have various reactions. Some people do not like abstract paintings, but we must respect other people's opinion.

I must say that this design certainly has an originality which can be found in no other. I think it is precisely the purpose of this symbol. As soon as you see it, you will know you are on the road to the world fair. That was one of the objects of the artist.

In any case, I will repeat the description:

This symbolic design is based on the primitive emblem of man represented by a vertical line with diagonal arms. This graphic representation is the oldest one existing.

A few minutes ago, the Leader of the Opposition said that when he was a boy he used to draw like that. We all did. If you take a good look at this design, you find out it represents the age of the caveman, and it is somewhat that primitive design which is represented here.

I should like to add this, and it is important. There are two emblems of man in each one of these figures. That is to indicate, in the concept of the artist, friendship and brotherhood. But in the concept of other people, that design might represent love or even a little of everything. But nevertheless, it indicates that it is something pleasant.

Since it is about a world exhibition, it was absolutely necessary that the emblem take the form of a circle. I suppose we could have had a planisphere, but that is too common. You see all kinds of trucks with a map of the world on the panels.

Mr. Pigeon: Why not include the maple leaf?

Mr. Deschatelets: It is a world exhibition and we must give it a universal character.

I will ask the Leader of the Opposition something. In these dying hours of a long session, surely he is a little tired; he should go and have a rest and when he comes back and takes a good look at that design, I am sure he will have a quite different attitude when he sees it.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, the reputation of the Minister of Public Works, as a lawyer, needs not be bolstered, and the proof is he very well defended a bad case today.

Canada has no distinctive flag. It is to be hoped we shall have one for the year 1967. However, I have no small fear the visitors to the world exhibition may find it strange that we do not have a typical emblem and a more representative symbol of the world exhibition.

I am no heraldist, but I would like to hear from the minister whether he himself chose that design. Moreover, I would like him to tell me whether this design is in conformity with heraldry. Besides, can he tell the house whether that model was submitted to the criticism of some heraldists? Finally, I would like the minister to tell us whether the individual by the name of Hebert, the author of this design, as he mentioned, would be Mr. Jacques Hebert?

Mr. Deschatelets: The person in question is Mr. Julien Hebert, industrial designer.

I should tell the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere that this design was accepted by the board of the world exhibition. It was referred to us after that and we also accepted it following explanations which may have been a little more satisfactory than those I am giving the house today.

At all events, I believe the hon. members should not discuss further that aspect of the bill. The work is an original emblem which satisfies the board of the world exhibition. It is already known and circulates in the public at large. In my opinion, we should proceed and pass the bill at this stage.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: This may appear to be a debate along the lines described in one of the chapters of the book setting forth Parkinson's law; vast sums are discussed briefly and then there are hour long discussions about an $800 bicycle shed.

[Translation]

But enough of that. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister could tell us what the symbol means, because, if you examine it closely, you can find that, besides representing two primitive men, it is also made up of two letters, the letters M and W. Could he tell us if the letter M stands for Montreal and the letter W for World and also if there is a French translation that fits those two letters?

On the other hand, if the letter M is meant to stand for Montreal, whichever way you look at it, it must be realized that it ought not to represent the Montreal exhibition but rather the Canadian world exhibition.

Such being the case, I find it impossible to accept that symbol which, in my opinion, is a false one.

As to the character that such a symbol might give, be it primitive or modern, I submit that it falls into almost the same group as a certain mural which has just been unveiled at the Edmonton airport and which, incidentally, looks as if someone had thrown a few dozens of eggs on the wall.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I shall answer briefly the hon. member for Edmonton West. The first time I was shown that symbol, I asked whether the letter M which appears on it referred to the city of Montreal. But I must tell him that it is quite by accident that we can see here the letter M which does not stand in any way for the city of Montreal.

In this case, it is two emblems, two figures linked together. It is just accidentally that this analogy happens, and I wish to tell the hon. member that.

Now, I also wish to say to the hon. members that this design was not submitted to them for approval. It was accepted as it is. The only reason why we are submitting to the house is to protect it because, if the hon. members will read section 9, they will find that, with regard to all the words as well as the design itself, a section of the act forbids them to be copied, and that is only to make sure that the design will remain the exclusive property of that crown corporation.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: That answers one question. It cannot now be amended. The thought occurred to me that they had seen one of the colouring books of last April 8. Maybe it originated from that book. If it did—and it could have—I am wondering whether there could not be some pigeons going through the centre, flying away.

An hon. Member: Good idea.

Mr. Winkler: I am not referring to my hon. friend. I was merely following a remark made by one of the hon. members in the New Democratic party who said "Now we are away". I thought that if the design does come from that pamphlet we should also include the pigeons.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, when venturing in such a field, where we have to approve or judge the true value of a design, we should abstain from rationalizing and stay within the artistic field.

I want to refer to the definition given to beauty appreciation by Saint Thomas, one of the greatest philosophers of all times. Here is how he defined it: Id quod visum aut auditum placet, which means "That which is seen and heard once is pleasing".

Then the appreciation comes from looking. The question is not to analyse, to rationalize, but merely to be aware that something seen or heard is agreeable.

If, like the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), we say: "Let us look at it carefully and analyse it", we do an injustice, in my opinion, because I think such a work should not be judged.

Personally, I cannot say that at first sight the design pleased me and that I was under the impression that it was a work of art. On the other hand, other persons are under the impression, at first sight, that there is something beautiful in it, and this is why beauty in the field of such works is always comparative. One cannot judge this type of design in an absolute way, and that is why some will find it satisfactory, others will find it beautiful and others will say that there is nothing pleasant in all that.

If what we want is to get a design, a model or a crest such as this for the world fair, we should not start rationalizing and analysing all the details. People must be left with the idea of a thing which, seen once, may please. There is a symbol involved. It is somewhat like a piece of music which represents, now a river, then waterfalls. Others who are more realistically minded will say that it reminds them of a storm or of a falling branch.

In my opinion, that is not the way one should see and judge things like that; one should not look for realistic evocations in an emblem such as this one. One must look at the general aspect of the thing and not ask himself whether it means something or not. I feel that we should rely on artists for an appreciation of a symbol such as this one which represents the Montreal world fair.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, this is not a symbol of a Canadian world fair at all. This is just a primitive design detracting from the Canadian theme of the world fair which is to be held in our centennial year. No one looking at it can tell that it is a symbol of the world fair to be held on the occasion of our centennial. The letters "MW" are so plain that anyone can see them. The hon. member for Edmonton West mentioned the same thing. It is something that is going to occur to everybody who sees it, and I think the minister and the corporation should take this into account and give some consideration to having something more symbolic of this fair in our centennial year.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the remarks made by several hon. members.

If I am allowed 30 seconds I shall express my views on the subject, since I have some experience in this field having been an industrial designer for 15 years.

In spite of everything that might be said, I think it must be recognized that the designer of this symbol, Mr. Hebert, readily achieved his purpose, that is, to appeal to the imagination of the person looking at the design.

In my opinion, that is precisely what he achieved by leaving it to the imagination of the persons looking at the symbol to find out by themselves what it means.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief questions on this matter that I should like the minister to answer. I can agree with him that this is symbolic of primitive man because my youngsters bring designs like this home from kindergarten quite regularly. This places it on a very elementary level. But if this is symbolic of primitive man and the brotherhood of man, why is there not some interconnection between each of the units in the design? Does the fact that there is a break between each of the units have any symbolic significance?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the element of free enterprise.

Mr. Dinsdale: Second, I wonder whether the artist who prepared this design is the same artist who prepared the design for the mural in the Edmonton airport which was put forward as a memorial to the northern bush pilots. Hon. members will recall that there was a lack of public acceptance in regard to the symbolism in that design. Third, if we must have an expression of symbolism representing man, can we not introduce a note of Canadian realism by having a maple leaf superimposed in the centre of the design? The minister has indicated that we are not able to introduce any amendments but perhaps the designer and the members of the board of the world fair would be willing to accept a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am very much taken by the suggestion made by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I think it would greatly improve the design. First of all, I look upon the minister as a pretty capable minister of public works but I never expected to hear him give a detailed explanation of primitive and exotic art. I congratulate him on his capacity, shall I say, to deal with imagery. Someone mentioned that this design was intended for persons to gaze upon and that the longer they gaze upon it the more ideas will come into their minds. Mr. Minister, if I were to tell you what is in my mind at the present time you would be shocked. However, I do think that the suggestion of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris is an excellent one and it would give the design a Canadian touch. I am a very simple person and I am quite incapable of understanding that kind of art. I am not a post-impressionist or a cubist or anything of that sort. This is beyond all that. I should like the minister to say what he thinks of the suggestion of the member for Brandon-Souris, because it will give a touch of realism to something that is beyond this world.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, to all that has been said about this symbol, I should like to add that it must be filed with the International Bureau of Exhibitions in Paris and all the stationery has been consequently prepared. At all events, I think that I will convey to the directors of the exhibition the reaction of the hon. members to this symbol. I will be pleased to do so and I am convinced that they will take into serious consideration the remarks made by some hon. members, especially the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale).

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if, following the proposal made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, all hon. members would not run the risk of being imprisoned, on account of the implications of clause 9 of the said bill which provides that nobody is entitled to use the symbol or have it printed.

I am wondering if by having it printed in Hansard we could not be found guilty on summary conviction.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: We have not got past clause 9 as yet, and that is the reason I made the proposal.

Mr. Churchill: When the minister said he would bring to the directors the reaction of hon. members of this house, would he please put the adjective "unfavourable" in front of the word "reaction"?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Establishment and constitution.

Mr. Howard: I think we should deal with subclause 2 of clause 3. The subject matter has been debated somewhat during the resolution stage, and involves one half of the 14 directors. It states categorically that they shall be appointed on the recommendation of the lieutenant governor in council, which means the lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec. Regardless of any understandings which the minister may have with the province of Quebec, I think these understandings should be reflected in the statute so that parliament knows when it legislates something it is not left to agreement between somebody to put into effect what parliament wants.

Apart from that, I feel that subclause 2, in reality, amounts to abdication of the rights of Her Majesty's privy councillors, all of whom have taken the oath of allegiance to the country and have certain responsibilities resting on their shoulders. One of these is that it shall not be the right of the privy council to delegate its authority to the lieutenant governor of a province. This is precisely what we are doing here—giving away an inalienable right of the federal cabinet to a particular province by saying that the lieutenant governor of that province will recommend certain appointments and that there is no choice residing then in the governor in council, but that he must—it is mandatory—appoint whomever the lieutenant governor in council of Quebec recommends. I think this section is ultra vires of our legislative authority. I would not want to see someone challenge this section in the court at some subsequent time, because I believe it would be ruled ultra vires.

Then, there is another thing we should look at. Our discussions a moment ago about this symbolic design, and our discussion in the resolution stage, entirely revolved around whether or not Canada, as a national entity, was going to find some expression in the world fair. In order for that to happen, I think we must take into account the fact that there is more than one province in Canada, even although the world fair is to be held in the province of Quebec. If we want to have representation, as the minister said, on the board of directors from all regions of Canada, we should spell that out in this clause and state the areas from which we would like to have that representation. In so far as the territories are concerned, I do not think we need to mention them here, because they are under the jurisdiction of the governor in council.

However, there are provinces in Canada that I think are entitled to representation on the board of directors if they so desire. Following that of course—this is another matter with which I cannot deal at this stage—they should be entitled if they so desire to participate financially in the development of the world fair. Accordingly, I should like to move:

That clause 3 be amended by striking out lines 15, 16 and 17 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(2) Of the 14 other directors referred to in subsection (1), one shall be appointed after consultation with the lieutenant governor in council of each of the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, and the remaining four on the recommendation of the minister.

[Mr. Howard.]

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that in moving this amendment the hon. member has a praiseworthy objective, but as far as we are concerned, we also want this section to be truly national in character.

That is why I promised earlier, when I said that the two directors added to the 12 now appointed will be appointed by the governor in council, to give to the corporation an adequate national representation.

Now, all the regions of Canada will be represented, but not necessarily all provinces. We have often discussed that matter and we feel that it would not be desirable to add a great number of directors to the 12 already appointed; but when the other two are appointed by us, we shall see to it that all regions are represented.

Under those circumstances, we cannot accept the amendment moved by the hon. member.

[Text]

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: yeas, 5; nays, 52.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9—Marks and symbols.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, sir, I have to put one more question on the symbol. I quite understand the need for having a symbol and the need for that symbol to be protected against illegal use. The minister stated that of course parliament has nothing to say as to what the symbol shall be. We are just handed the symbol and they say, "This is it. This is the one we have registered. The directors have decided upon it, and that is final". But such is not the case, because section 18A provides as follows. I shall read the section because of its importance:

(1) The words "Exhibition", "Fair", "Exposition", "Foire", and any abbreviations thereof, whether or not used in conjunction with any of the words "World", "Universelle", "Canadian", "Canadienne", "Canada", "Centennial", "Centenaire", "Montreal", "1967" or any abbreviations thereof or with any other words or abbreviations referring to the exhibition, are hereby declared to be the marks of the corporation—

I think that portion of the section has dangerous implications but I am not going to argue that part of it. It must have been considered. However, my recollection of the "ex" in Toronto is that it is called the Canadian national exhibition. They cannot use that title any more if we pass this section in the present form. The material portion to which I make reference at the moment and to which I direct my entire attention is as follows:

—are hereby declared to be marks of the corporation—

That is the end of that portion. Then it says:

—and the symbol reproduced in the schedule is hereby declared to be the official symbol of the exhibition.

Now parliament is to have the opportunity to determine that. The minister thought otherwise. We had a jocular discussion on it and a very jovial one, but it is a very serious matter that a monstrosity like this is going to represent my country and your country, sir—Canada—on the occasion of its 100th birthday of confederation. We would have to have it interpreted to find out somehow or another what an industrial artist had in mind when he thought this would be representative of our country. This to me, aside altogether from its artistic properties which have been examined somewhat carefully by those artistically inclined, is a monstrosity and nothing else but.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is to represent my country, the land of my forefathers. This is how Canada is to be represented in the exhibition that is to be part of her centennial celebrations. Canada is to be represented by that which denies all the principles of Canadian nationhood. We dealt with it in a general way, but I now deal with it particularly. I say we ought not to approve this symbol. It is not a measure upon which amendment means a lack of confidence in the government, and I am asking for support in all parts of the house for an amendment which will strike out the words:

—and the symbol reproduced in the schedule is hereby declared to be the official symbol of the exhibition.

Somebody may say, "Then anybody can use the symbol". Nothing of the kind. The board of directors can produce a symbol. They can send an amended symbol to the international exhibition board in Brussels. I go on and point out that if we strike out these words we do not allow anyone to use the official symbol, for we provide the following in subsection (2):

Except in accordance with the terms and conditions set forth in any licence that may be issued by the corporation in that behalf, or except as permitted by any bylaw of the corporation, no person shall

(a) apply to any goods or wares, or to any services,

(b) sell, offer for sale or have in possession for sale any goods or wares, or perform any services, to which have been applied, or

(c) adopt in connection with any business, or any establishment or premises in which any business is carried on, any mark of the corporation or the official symbol of the exhibition—

If that amendment that I propose is accepted, the board of directors, after approval by the cabinet—I do not know whether that is required—could produce something that will have distinctively Canadian connotatons. I have heard the argument for generations that we must have our national symbols; we must have a distinctive flag—

Mr. Knowles: Maybe this is it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in spite of the fact that the crown said our flag was distinctive—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, could I interrupt the right hon. gentleman for a moment and ask whether he could make available to us, for study right away, the amendment he is proposing, while he is continuing his remarks.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. I have not written it out. I will tell the minister what I have here. I move, seconded by Mr. Churchill:

That the words "and the symbol produced in the schedule is hereby declared to be the official symbol of the exhibition" as set out in section 18A (1) be deleted.

I will send this over to the minister. I do not know whether he can read my writing any better than I can understand the symbolism of this; but it is a simple deletion of these words and it will in no way prevent the adoption of a symbol. That will be protected, because it is clearly set out in section 18A (2) that whatever is the symbol, it is protected. It will allow Canada to have a symbol in keeping with the traditions of her past and in keeping with what we are celebrating, namely a Canadian national event, an event great in its possibilities, bringing to that exhibition some 35 million people or more. Then we could have something that really represented Canada. This symbol could be used in Timbuktu, South Viet Nam, or any other country in the world. I am asking that the government give consideration to this amendment. I am asking that the members of the Liberal party, who are always talking about something distinctively Canadian, now remove this symbol from the bill. This will permit the directors, with the assistance of the cabinet, if the matter is submitted to them, to have something that will represent Canada.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, may I just add a word to what has been said on this matter. I do not know to what extent this symbolism should be international or to what extent it should be Canadian; but if it should be Canadian, and if there is a possibility of following the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman which I know we have all listened to with very keen interest and, I think, sympathy, may I point out to the committee an answer that was given by the ministry on June 3, 1963, as appearing on page 560 of Hansard. The question asked was:

> Does Canada have a national emblem and, if so, what is the emblem?

The answer was:

> Yes; three maple leaves conjoined on one stem.

This has been the law since November 21, 1921. I might add that a similar question was addressed to the previous government and a written answer was delivered, which never appeared in Hansard. But both the question and answer were identical. That is to say there would appear to be no difference of opinion legally respecting the assertion that Canada does have a national emblem which consists of three maple leaves conjoined on one stem.

This is no way unsympathetic to the province within which the fair is going to be held, because if we look at the base of the arms of the province of Quebec, the identifying symbolism for the province of Quebec is on a field or three maple leaves conjoined vert—that is to say, three green maple leaves on a gold base. Therefore there is a great deal of harmony between the symbolism of the province of Quebec and the symbolism of Canada. I would ask that those who are responsible would give some consideration to what has clearly been established law in Canada since the proclamation of November 21, 1921 during the time of the Borden administration.

Mr. Regan: While I know little or nothing about the background of this symbol, I am wholly in agreement with the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition that it is atrocious. It appears to be a beatnik type of symbol and I think we should have some symbol for the world fair that would be symbolic of the nation.

Mr. Greene: I agree with the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and his artistic interpretation of whatever it may be we have before us, but this is a world fair and it was an international agency which gave it to us in Canada. I wonder whether having a completely and uniquely national symbol as the symbol of the fair might do something improper, so far as the international aspect of the fair is concerned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the hon. member for Leeds has done a great service in pointing out the answer to the question of June 3 last. The hon. member for Renfrew South asks whether or not a symbol for a world fair can give any indication of the nation within whose boundaries the fair is being held. My answer to that is that there is no reason there should not be identification as to the nation. That was something we discussed when this matter was before us, and that is the best of my recollection with regard to the point raised by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Deschatelets: We are going to accept the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell us how much the world exhibition corporation paid Mr. Hebert for that design?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I do not know.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw the attention of the house on the fact that when that symbol was submitted to the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation, the former general commissioner and his deputy were opposed to it.

I merely wanted to put on record that this design was not accepted by the former general commissioner and his deputy.

[Text]

Mr. Prittie: I think the minister is making a mistake in accepting the amendment from this group of self-appointed art critics. I only hope he does not bring his designs for future public buildings to this house for decision.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say I have a certain amount of sympathy with what the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond said. I doubt if we would ever have a national gallery in Canada if we permitted the members of the House of Commons to be the committee of selection. But after all, we did submit this to the house. It has been submitted for the judgment of the house. There has been a preponderance of view in one direction, but possibly a compromise can be found in this matter. I hope this will be a lesson to all future governments not to submit art for legislation. We are not elected to parliament in our capacity as art critics, but for other reasons.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, would the committee be willing to interrupt its proceedings for a minute? We are considering the amendment, so as to avoid any inconvenience, and I would ask that the vote be delayed a few seconds.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, since the minister is requesting a delay, I should like to take this opportunity to ask him whether he could assure the house that the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition will be accepted and that a maple leaf will be included in the design.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, it is not up to us, but to the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation to decide that.

[Text]

Mr. Scott: On the subsequent point that was raised by the Leader of the Opposition, as to whether the passage of this clause will in effect prohibit the Canadian National Exhibition from continuing to use its name, the clause appears to forbid the use of many words, such as "exhibition," "Canada," "Canadian," etc. There is a serious conflict here that ought to be resolved.

Mr. Deschatelets: If the hon. member would refer to clause (9), 18A(4) he will find the answer to his question. Mr. Chairman, I suggest you call the other clauses and we could come back to this one.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree we shall stand clause 9?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clause 10 agreed to.

On clause 11.

Mr. Knowles: Should not clause 11 stand too until we see what we have done with the amendment?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps if we all relaxed for a moment or two it would not do us any harm.

Clause 11 stands.

On clause 9—Marks and symbols.

Mr. Knowles: Is that the effect of the symbol?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration agrees that we delete the words suggested in my motion, namely:

—and the symbol reproduced in the schedule is hereby declared to be the official symbol of the exhibition.

Then we can substitute the additional words. I would ask to place that amendment before the committee, and then the minister will move his amendment to provide the substitutive words.

Mr. Favreau: It would then read as follows:

That lines 39, 40 and 41 on page 4 of the bill be deleted and replaced by the following:

"corporation, and any symbol adopted by the corporation not later than December 31, 1964, is hereby declared to be the official symbol of the exhibition as of the date of its publication in the Canada Gazette".

And I will move that clause 11 be deleted.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that the whole amendment be treated as moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Knowles: If that is agreed I assume that the last few words uttered by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration are not part of the amendment to clause 9. His last few words were: "and that clause 11 of the bill be deleted". The actual amendment to clause 9 surely stops before that. He is suggesting that later, when we get to clause 11, we delete the clause.

Mr. Favreau: That is a forecast of the probable future.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then my motion is simply that those words be deleted from section 18A of the act, namely the words:

—and the symbol reproduced in the schedule is hereby declared to be the official symbol of the exhibition.

Substituted therefore will be the words placed before the committee by the minister of immigration.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just one matter, Mr. Chairman. It will, of course, be brought to the attention of the corporation that the general feeling of members everywhere is that there should be something distinctively Canadian about this. I was particularly impressed with the suggestions made first by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, who said the maple leaf should be represented, and then by the hon. member for Leeds, who pointed out that in answer to a question put some months ago it was stated that the official emblem of Canada is three maple leafs.

Mr. Deschatelets: This point is well taken, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 9 as amended agreed to.

On clause 11.

Mr. Favreau: In view of the amendment that has just been accepted, I move:

That clause 11 be deleted.

Mr. Knowles: Is that necessary, or can we not just vote it down?

The Deputy Chairman: I then declare clause 11 negatived.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): By leave, now.

Mr. Deschatelets (for Mr. Pearson) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-120, to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee in supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

The Deputy Chairman: House again in committee of supply. Estimates of the Department of Industry, the estimates of the national research council.

National research council—

10a. Assistance toward research in industry, $500,000.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, on some previous estimates a few hon. members were misinformed as to their opportunities to speak on the emergency measures organization. The minister later said that it would be all right during the estimates on the Department of Defence Production to speak about this subject. Have I a correct understanding of the situation?

Mr. Drury: I suggest this be done right away. If there are members who did wish to speak on the emergency measures organization and who have not done so by reason of our speed, I suggest they should speak right now.

Mr. Peters: As one who is interested in emergency measures, may I say it was not my intention to speak on the subject, but I do think the minister should say something about the changes which are taking place. The organization has been in a state of confusion for some time, and now that he has an opportunity of assessing the situation perhaps the hon. gentleman would wish to take this opportunity of clearing up a number of the doubts which have arisen. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by putting forward views which I have expressed in the past. However, there is some confusion in the minds of those who are serving voluntarily in this field and the minister might help to clear this up by indicating the attitude which the government intends to take.

Mr. Herridge: I do not intend to take up very much time on this item, but I promised certain people in my constituency who are interested in the emergency measures organization that I would say a few words about it. There can be no question that there is a lack of direction in the country with respect to this organization. Policies are being carried out which are now suspected of being obsolete and there has been a decline of interest in the organization in many quarters. I personally believe this organization will not be successful unless the training given to members includes training to deal with disasters of all types. I think training of this type would interest a great many people, including possibly those who feel that there is no adequate defence against an attack by nuclear weapons.

In this connection I should like to read from an article which appeared in the Financial Post of October 19. The heading is: "If the Big Bomb drops, can EMO Cope?" and there is a further heading which says: "The harsh truth is that it can't".

> This poses some difficult questions for Drury and his advisers:
> There is the over-all policy question: should EMO still be formally oriented toward nuclear war or should it now be officially aimed toward natural disaster work?
> Although much of the work that has to be carried out serves both purposes anyway, a rethinking of the main direction of civil defence wouldn't mean scrapping all—or even most—of the existing structure.
> But there are still purely "nuclear" programs underway. For example, Ottawa and the provinces spent $602,500 in the last fiscal year on radioactivity measuring instruments. These would be useful to tell the public when radioactivity was reaching dangerous levels, but if the public has nowhere to go to get away from it, does it gain much by knowing?
> Should Ottawa go on urging Canadians to build fall-out shelters?

Some people here are still being urged to build them though Great Britain gave up this policy two years ago. The article goes on:

> If the Berlin wall and the Cuban blockage couldn't get the Canadian public digging, what hope is there now?
> Drury has other heavy responsibilities—the new Department of Industry, Defence Production, government research and five crown corporations—and hasn't had much time to tackle these civil defence questions. He was to begin a detailed policy examination this week.
> Whether it will lead to any basic changes remains to be seen. But one thing is certain: thanks to the threat of nuclear war, Canadians are now better prepared than ever to look after themselves in any local or national emergency. It is a happy side advantage from an unhappy era.

I do not intend to speak at any length on this subject. But I would bring to the attention of the minister the fact that there is a great deal of uncertainty about this program. It is too late in the session to deal with the question in any detail but we hope the minister will turn his attention to this matter and give direction to the Canadian people who are interested in this work, so that they may get some leadership along the lines suggested in the article from which I have quoted.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister intend to explain what the government's intentions are?

Mr. Drury: If there is no one else to speak on this item, perhaps I might say, very briefly, that the purpose and function of the emergency measures organization are closely linked with defence policy. The committee is fully aware that the whole of our defence policy is currently under review. This organization is its corollary. The two are proceeding hand in hand. It would be my hope that about the time that there is, in the new year, a new formulation of defence policy there will be, to the extent necessary, a new formulation of the EMO approach.

I am in full agreement with the remarks of the hon. member who suggested there should be a duality of purpose in the approach of the emergency measures organization—that the organization should be prepared to cope not only with nuclear disaster but with natural disasters. This is a consideration which is being borne in mind in the review which is currently taking place.

Item agreed to.

Public printing and stationery—

5. Purchasing, stationery and stores, $1,247,900.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the minister is now in a position to tell us who the queen's publisher is to be.

Mr. Drury: As the office has not yet been established it is a little premature to announce an appointment.

Mr. Fisher: Why has there been this delay? There was every indication several months ago that a publisher would be named. As a matter of fact, a certain civil servant let it be known—his name appeared in the paper with the title "queen's publisher" after it—that he had been appointed. Nothing has been done, officially, to support this claim. What has caused this delay in implementing what were apparently sure intentions early in the fall?

Mr. Drury: The intention to establish the office of queen's publisher is as firm as it ever was. There were, and still are, details to be worked out with regard to both administrative and legislative changes, particularly legislative changes, needed to bring this intention into operation. As the committee will be aware, the Glassco commission made certain fundamental recommendations. These recommendations are now being reviewed in detail and it will not be until this review has been completed and new legislation prepared that it will be possible to establish the new office.

Mr. Fisher: I have two further questions to ask. Is there any intention at the present time to spread the contracts which will be entered into for both printing and other types of supply over a wider field in Canada? Will there be an attempt to spread these opportunities beyond the Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto axis? The second question is this: Has the minister anything to report on the operation of a caisse populaire within the establishment of the queen's printer over in Hull? I raised this matter with him on an earlier occasion.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in so far as spreading contracts is concerned, as the house will be aware the Department of Defence Production is in the process of itself being reorganized to undertake the general supply function for the government and included in the supply function will be responsibility for the procurement of stationery, office machinery, forms and the like. The Department of Defence Production has followed a successful practice of equitable distribution of this work at the lowest possible cost and the same techniques and policies will be applied in respect of printing, supplies, stationery, forms and so forth.

In so far as the caisse populaire of the printing bureau in Hull is concerned, I do not have much to report beyond what I have told the hon. member for Port Arthur privately, namely, that this is a co-operative venture on the part of employees of the printing bureau in Hull and represents a co-operative banking effort on their own behalf. As I also told him, in my view this kind of co-operative effort and form of voluntary association for communal purposes is desirable.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Industry.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Departmental administration, $976,200.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to make the kind of speech I ordinarily would make if it were not so late in the session. I should have liked, for example, to discuss in some considerable detail some of the things which I feel need doing very badly with regard to the problem of Indians.

I must say it is very difficult to be critical of the minister because he has made some very fine speeches, very liberal, with a small "l", and he has not only made good speeches but, in addition, when members, and I include myself, have gone to him with particular problems he has shown a very deep interest and a sympathetic approach. However, when it comes to the problems of the Indians it seems to me we have a very long way to go.

I want to give one illustration of the kind of thing which I think needs to be done. I put some questions on the order paper recently with regard to the efforts of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to foster co-operatives for the Eskimos and similar questions with regard to the efforts of this department in the fostering of co-operatives for Indians. If the minister will take the time when the house adjourns to look at the answers, he will see precisely what I mean. The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has specifically assigned two or three people to work full time on this matter actively and aggressively, with the result that there are 14 or 15 very active and successful co-operatives among the Eskimos of northern Canada. But the answers I got with regard to the support of co-operatives for Indians would indicate there is nobody working full time on this job in the minister's department, and that anything which is done is largely done through the efforts of provincial departments, and that if there is any success it is almost incidental to a large extent.

If we are really thinking in terms of solving the Indian problem we must think not of giving them welfare but rather of getting them to be able to function on their own. I can think of no better way of getting them to function on their own than to form co-operatives, both producer and consumer, where they will be responsible to themselves and will look after themselves instead of waiting for the department or the church or the Hudson's Bay Company or some other organization to do it for them. Without going further today, into the problem of the Indians, I suggest to the minister that he should look at this matter very seriously.

I should also like to say a few words about the question of citizenship. Here again I must say I am more than satisfied with the specific responses I have had from the minister with regard to actual cases. But it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if the minister has to solve a case himself there is an admission right away that we have failed because the standards should be so clear and simple that these cases should be solved before they get to the minister. The minister has said that he is reviewing the standards, and I hope he will continue to be the minister long enough to be able to solve this problem and lay down policies and standards much more suited to the 60's before he leaves for another job. The revision of the standards for citizenship is long overdue.

I am one of those people who believe that the democratic system of society under which we supposedly live is the best system we can have. If this is so, it seems to me we should not worry too much whether or not a few people who have some doubts about citizenship and our democratic way of life receive citizenship. I know, and I am sure the minister knows better than I do, that in every city in Canada where there are ethnic groups, non-French, non-Anglo-Saxon, some of these people having come here before world war I, there are hundreds if not thousands of people who have not been able to get their citizenship. I have in mind Ukrainians in Winnipeg and probably Finns in Port Arthur. I could go down the list in each area where there are people of the various ethnic groups.

The answer up till now has been that these people are members of the communist party or members of organizations which have been classified as being sympathetic to the communist party. I hold no brief for the political views of these people. I have fought the communists at every turn over the years. In my constituency there are probably as many as in any other constituency in Canada, and I have fought them all my life. At the same time, however, if in 1963 we refuse to grant the right to become citizens to persons who have lived in Canada since 1915 or 1920 simply because they are, or are supposed to be, communists it seems to me we have not got very much confidence in our democratic way of life. It seems to me that if the minister is going to look at the standards of citizenship, then this is something at which he should look very seriously.

There is one more point I should like to make, Mr. Chairman. In recent years a number of people from the United States have come to Canada. Many of these people are highly qualified in various fields, such as science, town planning, and what have you. They have been appointed to some very responsible positions in Canada. I can think of one whose name I shall mention because he has been referred to in the press, namely Mr. Blomenthal of the city of Toronto, who has been the chief town planner of that city. I can think of several who are scientists who have represented Canadian organizations within the fields in which they are working at various international scientific conferences. We thought enough of their abilities and their qualifications to let them come into Canada. They are holding responsible jobs. I think of one who is doing work that the government of Canada thought so important they erected a building costing a couple of million dollars in which he could work. Some of these people have applied for citizenship and have been turned down. I can think of nothing more stupid, nothing which indicates more to me that we really have not got confidence that our democratic society will work, than this action. If we had that confidence, we certainly would not turn down citizen applications from people like these. I think the minister should have a careful look at this situation after the house adjourns and he has the time to do so. Many of these cases have been on his desk for some time.

I should like to say a few words on immigration. I was glad to hear the minister say that the government intends to follow a more aggressive policy than it has. I was glad to hear the minister say that his objective for the next year is to have more than 100,000 immigrants come to Canada. There will be general agreement with this policy amongst the population. The labour movement of Canada, for obvious reasons, has been skeptical of a policy of mass immigration. After all, when you have 500,000 or 750,000 people unemployed, the trade unions that were formed to protect the conditions and way of life of their members cannot be blamed if they are a little worried. They have made it very clear, however, that they support increased and continuing immigration into Canada, provided we keep in mind the problem of unemployment.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, they have also made it very clear, and they did this as early as 1957, that they are completely opposed to the discriminatory immigration policies of past governments on the basis of race, religion and colour. I should like to quote a couple of sentences from their submission to the government in October, 1957. This is the submission of the Canadian Labour Congress and reads in part as follows:

> The present Immigration Act is thoroughly unsatisfactory. It was passed without giving anyone but a few government departments and the transportation companies any opportunities to be heard. It contains a series of provisions which are a threat to civil liberties which the British people fought for centuries to establish. It enshrines the vicious principle of racial discrimination. It gives the administration sweeping and arbitrary powers, with a minimum of judicial control. It has been administered in a high-handed spirit which has often totally disregarded elementary human rights. Immigration officials overseas have often been imperfectly informed of conditions in Canada, and have accordingly misinformed intending immigrants, and induced people to come here at times when it would have been better if they had stayed at home.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration have been making speeches in which they try to create the impression that Canada's immigration policies have been shorn of their discriminatory and racialist slant. Thus the Prime Minister said in parliament on October 18, 1963:

> —I should like to make it clear that the present government, like its predecessor, is firmly opposed in principle and in practice to racial discrimination.

He said that, Mr. Chairman, when he was asked a question about the refusal of the United States government to permit Mr. Wayson S. Choy, a Canadian citizen, entry to the United States. This is a very laudable statement of intent, but it does not really fit the Canadian situation. If we examine the Canadian Immigration Act, and more particularly the regulations which have been promulgated by the department over the years supposedly to carry out the intent of the act, we can see how far we have strayed from this very fine statement of principle which the Prime Minister expressed on October 18.

Permanent admission to Canada is regulated by the Immigration Act. There are a whole series of prohibited classes, including of course people who have been convicted of certain criminal offences, people with communicable diseases, people who have been guilty of having subversive associations, etc. Section 5 of the Immigration Act lists classes of persons prohibited from entering Canada. Subsection 1 of this section prohibits members of subversive organizations from entering Canada. Under this section any person who has, while living in a country behind the iron curtain, attended a university can and probably will be prohibited from immigrating to Canada since in all likelihood membership in the young communist league of that country was probably a requirement of university attendance. It seems to me that this provision is completely unnecessary.

Section 5, paragraph (t) prohibits the entry into Canada of persons who cannot or do not fulfil or comply with any of the conditions or requirements of this act, or the regulations, or any orders lawfully made or given under this act or the regulations. This section, gives unlimited power to the officials of this department to refuse entry into Canada to anybody on any ground or without any ground because the decision rests entirely on the whim of the departmental officials. I am not saying they use this section, but the fact it is there gives them unlimited power which I think is an unnecessary power in a democratic society.

Now, the main control on the admission of immigrants to Canada is based upon regulations passed by the cabinet, under the authority of the act. These regulations can, of course, be changed more readily than the act itself. Under these regulations, Mr. Chairman, we make it much more difficult, in fact we make it virtually impossible, for people from Asia and Africa to come into Canada. Certainly, it is much more difficult for them than for people in other parts of the world. In other words, what we have done has been to apply the principle that George Orwell talked about in his book "Animal Farm", when he said, "All pigs are equal but some are more equal than others." We have said that all people are equal but some are more equal than others.

Section 61 of the Immigration Act, which deals with the regulations which may be made by the governor in council, permits,

> (g) the prohibiting or limiting of admission of persons by reason of
> (i) nationality, citizenship, ethnic group, occupation, class or geographical area of origin.
> (ii) peculiar customs, habits, modes of life or methods of holding property,
> (iii) unsuitability having regard to the climatic, economic, social, industrial, educational, labour, health or other condition or requirements existing, temporarily or otherwise, in Canada or in the area or country from or through which such person comes to Canada,
> (iv) probable inability to become readily assimilated or to assume the duties and responsibilities of Canadian citizenship within a reasonable time after their admission.

Mr. Chairman, if there is any way in which the department could find an excuse to keep a person out other than those listed here, I certainly cannot think of one. In this section you are talking about things such as customs, habits, climatic conditions, and so on, and of course if the people in the department think the number of non-white people in Canada is as large as they want it, they could—they have done this in other years, although I do not say it is done now—take the attitude that people from the West Indies, for example, ought not to come here because the climate of Canada is cold—it is certainly cold today—and therefore these people would not fit into our country.

It seems to me that the time to stop this nonsense has long passed, and I think the minister should really get at it. I think these kind of racial and religious prejudices should have long since been eliminated in Canada. Under section 31 of the regulations with respect to the Immigration Act, which deals with handling requirements and specifies the type of classes permitted to enter Canada, subsection (d) says that the following may enter:

> A person who is a citizen of any country of Europe, including Turkey; of any country of North, Central or South America or islands adjacent thereto, or Egypt, Greece or Lebanon—

In other words this regulation can be used to bar people from every country in Africa and every country in Asia but Turkey, Egypt, Lebanon and Israel. How much more discriminatory could we get, even if we tried harder? I think it is time the government made public a statement of policy showing clearly what the government, rather than the officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, consider to be necessary standards of training for admission to Canada and what sort of economic circumstances in Canada are required when the number of immigrants to be permitted to enter Canada is decided.

Parliament contemplated giving an applicant a hearing by a special inquiry officer. If that officer found a person was not admissible, that person should have the right of appeal. But the regulations have now been expanded to say that a person can have a hearing only as to whether or not he has a visa. If the department officials think a person undesirable, they do not have a hearing on the reasons for that person being excluded. They have a hearing only on whether the person has a visa, which the department has already refused to grant. Thus they never discuss the real reasons for exclusion. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the supreme court has upheld this right of the department. It seems to me that the immigration appeal board, which is now composed of former or actual immigration officials, should be completely and totally divorced from the department. It should be required by the act or the regulations to give reasons for its judgments, and should have authority to make recommendations to the minister.

Further, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that prospective immigrants should have the right to appeal and also the right to be told why they are being turned down. They certainly do not have this right at the present time. These are just a few of the things which I think the minister should look into. I hope he will have a chance to look into them before he leaves this department, if he does, because I think if before the house meets to discuss the estimates in the next session the minister changes the regulations and recommends changes to the act, it will please members of the house, certainly those in this group, and I think it will please most of the people in Canada.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I know this is a very important department, and because of several facts I do not intend to take up much time. I consider the minister to be a very capable minister and congratulate him on the action he has already taken in relation to the Indian affairs branch of the department. I would only like to point out that I asked a question which was made an order for return on November 20. It is not really important for me to see this order for return, but it will be of interest to the minister. A very large number of people have been brought into Canada under order in council over the last 10 or 15 years. There are exceptions to the rule, but unfortunately the Liberals used this method to a greater extent than is generally known, and it has led to many abuses being committed. I have discussed with some of the Chinese population some of the problems connected with the amnesty program of this department over the last several years. One of the problems has been the lack of diligence on the part of the ministers of citizenship and immigration, and certainly the lack of toughness. We were assured there were going to be changes and this problem was going to be straightened out. I am sure there are exceptions—there are always exceptions—but the exceptions have become away out of proportion. I know there is a large number of Chinese amnesty orders in effect. A person in Canada applies for amnesty under this amnesty order and a report is made to the minister as to the corrected situation in relation to their admission to Canada. In many cases there are abuses, and this is obviously not in the interests of Canada.

I have suggested to the Chinese people in my area that they should publicly state their case and should appeal to the minister in this regard. I was naïve enough to think that by giving amnesty you would stop this difficulty, but if anyone wants to look into this matter he will see that a multi-million dollar racket cannot be stopped, no matter what we do. I am informed by the R.C.M.P. that the problem is still prevalent in my area and it is prevalent across Canada. They are trying to do something about it and are meeting a certain amount of resistance from the Chinese people themselves. Under the system in effect the R.C.M.P. look into the file and receive from the immigrant the correct information as to his status. Then the R.C.M.P. come back to the order in council. No matter how illegal the act was, no matter whether a member of parliament received consideration for making the recommendation that was finally approved under the blanket order in council, no matter what the circumstances were and no matter what the arrangements were, the R.C.M.P. are not able to go behind the order in council, because it has legalized any action that may have occurred illegally up to that stage.

I have asked for the production of these orders and am interested in them personally. There are law enforcement officers who are interested in them. People in my riding are interested in the problem, because we have quite a large number of immigrants who are interested in establishing a true status for themselves. They were brought into this country through no fault of their own, under circumstances that did not meet the requirements of the act of the day. I believe this situation should be corrected. I know the minister will look into the problem and I suggest that he take one of these orders in council which affects someone who has long gone from this house. You can pick somebody who is here, if you wish; but I suggest you pick somebody who has died. I think that would be preferable. The minister should take that order in council and make an example of the one case by going back beyond the order in council, laying the charges and doing the things that are necessary to eliminate the arrangements which allow people to come here, under order in council, in an illegal manner. I suggest this in all sincerity because, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North said, we deserve a much better immigration law than we have. Very few of us are natives, and most of our ancestors came from somewhere else. That is the history of the Canadian nation.

We now find many abuses and large involvements in certain areas. These must be curtailed. The minister is the only minister who has been in charge of the department, since I became a member of parliament, who appears capable of handling the problem, and I hope he gets a chance to look at the immigration section of his department before he receives a call to higher office.

Mr. Dinsdale: Over the years I have been interested in the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and it can be agreed that slowly but surely we have been making many improvements in this very important area of Canadian activity.

I was pleased to hear the minister indicate that he will continue and expand the new humanitarian emphasis that in recent years appeared in relation to immigration matters, and that he hopes the target of 100,000 newcomers will be reached in the next fiscal year.

There has been an improvement in the attitude of Canadians generally towards immigration matters, resulting from a combination of circumstances, such as the activities of the United Nations organizations operating in this field, and the voluntary groups that have carried out extensive adult education programs among Canadians. I refer in particular to the work of the Canadian citizenship council which has branches in every part of the country and has an adult education program as one of its main functions, interesting Canadians in improving the immigration laws, and their attitude toward Canadian citizenship.

It will be agreed that the changes introduced in the regulations in February, 1962, were a step forward. One of the complaints hon. members had concerning the regulations was their attempt to define qualifications for intending immigrants for the purpose of maintaining what might be described as an elusive ethnic balance. To me this always had some element or overtones of discrimination, and the new regulations, placing the emphasis on skills and training rather than on conforming to an indefinable ethnic balance, are a much fairer approach.

Another improvement in the regulations was the inclusion of unsponsored immigrants. The element of sponsorship was restricted to a very narrow group, or rather I should say unsponsored immigrants, and this narrow group mainly included the old commonwealth countries and the western European countries. This meant that, with the improving standards of living in Europe and the United Kingdom, the traditional sources for large numbers of new citizens were rapidly drying up. Prior to the regulations being changed in 1962 there had been a declining inflow of immigrants from those traditional sources, and I would presume that it is largely because of the changes in the regulations that we can now anticipate the increase that was mentioned by the minister. As a matter of fact there was an encouraging increase last year.

Before I leave this point I would like to say there has been a tendency to be more restrictive on applications for intended immigrants from Greece than from other similar parts of Europe. I have found, in my own personal experience, it has always been more difficult to get approval, particularly for unsponsored immigrants, from Greece than from other countries of Europe located in the same area.

I wonder if the minister could indicate to us to what degree the change in the regulations has resulted in the increase of immigrants. Is it possible to separate numerically the improved immigration figures on the basis of the broader approach taken by the amendments to the regulations in 1962?

I was also pleased to see there has been a tendency, along these same humanitarian lines, towards encouraging the reunion of family groups. Again this is due to the broadened regulations. Before they were changed they were so narrow in their application to Chinese immigrants as to be almost prohibitive. If I wished to be sensational I could relate many tragic experiences of Chinese Canadians during the early '50's when it was impossible for them to bring their wives or married children over to this country, due to the very restrictive nature of the regulations.

I am also pleased to note that the minister will proceed to amend the act as quickly as possible. As I have already indicated, it is one thing to amend the regulations; but regulations must be reinforced by specific legislation, and I am sure that the minister will be assured of support from all sides of the house when he moves to bring the Immigration Act into line with the more humane approach which has developed in Canada, and in the world generally, toward these matters.

I should like to say a word in the area of the minister's other responsibilities, concerning the superintendent general of Indian affairs, and I will be brief owing to the shortage of time. I am pleased to see that here too there has been a tremendous improvement in the attitude of members of this house, and of the Canadian public generally, in respect to the rights of our first citizens. The Canadian Indian, if we look back in historic perspective, has been subject to segregation, neglect and discrimination in every respect. From time to time sensational situations develop which bring to the attention of the public some of the extreme problems in looking after the welfare of these, our first citizens. I recall it was just a year ago when Manitoba was exposed to a rather sensational amount of publicity regarding a situation which developed in one of the reservations in northern Manitoba. If the searchlight of publicity had been applied at the same time to any of the other reservations, I am sure a similar situation would have been exposed. However, since the unlimited franchise was extended to the Indian population of Canada—this is also a recent occurrence; I believe in 1960—politicians have become interested. We have had more discussion in this house concerning Indian affairs than ever before. The Indians themselves have become interested in public affairs. I have noticed this in my constituency, in which there are two reservations. It is now possible to hold regular public meetings in which the residents of the reservations take a very keen and active interest. But I think even more encouraging has been the expansion of interest to neighbouring communities. Segregation, out of sight, out of mind, has been the great curse of our Indian problem. The fact that these our first citizens were isolated on reservations kept the problems largely hidden from the population generally.

I want to encourage the minister and the department along the lines of the encouragement already given to voluntary groups which are now appearing in communities right across Canada. I believe financial assistance is available to friendship societies, for example, where they are formally organized and make application to the department for such assistance. I am wondering whether it is possible to get some idea of the number of friendship groups or societies which have qualified for the available grants. Here at long last is an attempt being made on the part of Canadians generally to make contact with the people on the reserves, to introduce them to the community, and in turn to have regular contacts and associations with the Indians in their own reservations. It seems to me that this is the best way to deal with a problem which has been with us for far too long.

With regard to education, again we are moving forward. The program of integration of students in our community schools has, I think, been the most progressive approach to this problem in recent times. In the past four or five years in which it has been in operation I have seen the schoolchildren in the reservations of my own constituency almost entirely removed from this double situation of segregation—educational segregation as well as ethnic segregation—and fitted in happily with the schools in the surrounding communities. There have been expressions of approval not only by the Indian population themselves but also by people who for the first time are having Indian children to their homes—because some of these youngsters are boarded—during the Christmas recess, and making important contacts in this way.

Another major difficulty with our first citizens is the economic problem. Here is one area in which we have not made much progress. I know there are special placement officers who have been appointed who are beginning to do outstanding work; but if we are really going to tackle the problems of our first citizens which are so well known, next to the educational solutions we must have some kind of program which will make it possible for them to find suitable and adequate economic means of supporting themselves.

I am sure the minister agrees that the ultimate objective in all these programs is to move the Indian population toward full citizenship as quickly as possible. As a former minister of northern affairs I know this was my objective with the Canadian Eskimo; while there are some differences of approach to the problem here, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North indicated, I know there is general unanimity in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, as well as in the department of northern affairs, to move these first Canadians toward full citizenship as quickly as possible. This can be accomplished only as the concept of community development pioneered by my native province of Manitoba in recent years is accepted in each provincial area. Until we can develop a spirit, a self-propelling spirit, in each of the Indian reservations which gives them the motivation and creativity to come to grips with their own problems, we are not going to make it possible for these first citizens to become real first citizens in fact as well as in name.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, since immigration is a vital matter, I apologize for having to take the time of the committee to make some brief remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer my heartfelt congratulations to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) for the stirring speech he delivered a few days ago in Quebec city. Should he also be congratulated for his tactful blame of the Quebec provincial authorities?

Indeed, immigration is an extremely important and even crucial matter if one considers, for instance, that from 1951 to 1961 the population of Canada increased by 4,230,000 and that 25 per cent of that increase must be ascribed to immigration.

I should like to submit to the house a few figures I compiled; they go back to 1926. I hope I will be able one of these days to go as far back as 1867.

At any rate, those figures indicate that 3,102,449 immigrants were admitted to Canada between 1926 and 1962. Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to be aggressive or spiteful but I should like to point out that these figures indicate that there is a real threat to French Canada. Only 90,206 of those immigrants were French speaking and, by that, I mean specifically French speaking people like Belgians and Frenchmen. On the other hand, immigrants of Anglo-Saxon origin, that is the English, the Scots and the Irish, totalled 1,038,888.

Mr. Chairman, the difference in numbers is fantastic. I am not saying that all of the 3,102,000 immigrants were English speaking but I wonder if the Department of Citizenship and Immigration could make a special effort to translate into practice the principle of biethnism we hear so much about.

Messrs. Laurendeau and Dunton may well indulge in semantics to define the words

"biculturalism", "bilingualism" and "biethnism"; it will be a loss of time if there is no one left in Canada who speaks French.

Mr. Chairman, I welcome to our fine and great country people from the British isles and elsewhere. Everybody is welcome as far as I am concerned.

We want to create a Canadian ideal based on the fundamental respect of the rights of the two great races of which we are proud.

Mr. Chairman, let us not, therefore, hand to the extremists of our country a weapon they try to use to their advantage, especially in the province of Quebec, where there are bad Canadians who want to break up confederation. We, the Liberals of the province of Quebec, are trying to prevent this because we want to maintain confederation as radiant as possible.

In order to do so, however, it is essential that the decrease in population among French speaking Canadians, which has taken alarming proportions according to the figures I have just quoted, should be stopped.

Consequently, I earnestly ask and I even beg the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to make a firm and continued effort to redress that difference which has worked against French Canadians. I suggest that if 25 per 100 of the increase in population from 1951 to 1961 is due to immigration, a good and a sound immigration policy can help to save confederation.

Mr. Fisher: Many things have come up in the debate, including the contribution of the hon. member who has just spoken, that I should like to get into. My disappointment is most bitter in connection with the fact that I have a great number of Indian problems. I think I represent as many Indians as anyone in this house, between six and seven thousand; no one is sure of the number. Honestly, they are in the most pitiful condition of probably any inhabitants of Canada, and there are a great number of questions to ask and remarks I should like to make in connection with them, but I will give them over in the main and stick to questions.

Before I do, I would remind the minister of the remarks made by my hon. friend from Timiskaming, and the need to investigate the orders in council in that situation. I want to be even more specific and blunt than the hon. member for Timiskaming. I do not know whether the minister is aware, but this is what he was suggesting, that a number of members of parliament in the past have worked on this kind of case and have used their influence to smooth this kind of arrangement. What we would be interested in knowing is that this practice has been stopped by this government, and that there is no possibility of this being an avenue for the kind of private patronage available to any member of parliament. If the minister would like some names of members of parliament from previous parliaments and would like to see the record checked in this regard, I will be glad to provide him with three or four.

I should like to ask the minister one question with reference to immigration. It relates to the fact that for a number of years—

Mr. Lambert: Is the hon. member suggesting that a member of parliament should not intervene on behalf of the constituents who are having difficulties with respect to immigration or citizenship? Perhaps he would tell us just what he means.

Mr. Fisher: I have got all kinds of letters here where I have intervened. I am referring to the situation where certain members of parliament have acted as a regular channel over the years. In most cases they are lawyers, and there has been a fee exchanged. That is what I am referring to. It is something distinct and special and, I think, a bad situation.

I should like to point out to the minister that there has been a great big holdback in the coming to Canada of Italian people who have qualified. As a matter of fact, I think three years ago there were some 59,000 people who had qualified to come to Canada and who were being held up. I have a large Italian population in my riding. This pressure is upon me all the time. The minister has told us that the Italians who come to this country are very seldom involved in crime, relatively speaking, and that they have a great sense of inner responsibility. This is one of the reasons why a lot more of these people could be brought into this country as a responsibility of their relatives. Instead, what seems to be the situation is that the demands which are being made on relatives in terms of bank accounts, housing facilities and requirements such as that have been increased in the last year or two, rather than decreased, and I would like to know from the minister on his estimates what the holdback figure is at the present time and whether it has been much reduced.

I will call it six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was some question left last night, depending on the progress made, whether it might be the disposition of the committee to sit during the supper hour. I thought I would just find out.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Douglas: I think it is perfectly apparent that we have not made the progress which had been anticipated, and that there is no prospect whatever of our being able to finish tonight. Had there been some prospect of doing so we would have been prepared to sit through the supper hour in order to try to finish the work. But there are two important departments, the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs, whose estimates still have to be dealt with, and it is apparent we shall have to sit tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that the hon. member has made a most eloquent argument in favour of sitting during the supper hour. But since there is no unanimous agreement, it is now six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, just before the break I was talking about the question of Italian immigration. I should like to add that I believe it is time for our government to talk firmly, directly and brutally to the Italian government about the fact that it is so difficult for Italians with any techniques or training or skills to get out of Italy to come to Canada. Very many of them are now going to Germany, France and the other common market countries. There is a very large flow there, but I think the minister and his officials will have to admit that there is a tendency on the part of the Italian government and officials to block off this kind of skilled person coming to Canada and, of course, there is encouragement on the part of the Italian government for unskilled people to come to Canada. I think we can absorb a good many of the unskilled. We have and they have made their way and have risen very well, particularly in the business world, the construction world and in carpentry. I do not know where our construction industry would be today if it were not for the Italians and the contribution they have made.

But I suggest we need to talk very directly to Italy in this regard because it seems to me this is one country where we can get many more people. With reference to the argument of the hon. member for Lotbiniere about wanting a greater Canada and recognizing that it is people who will bring this about, if it is hard to get people from France and Belgium of French speaking background, perhaps there is an affinity between the Italians and the French that would make Italy promising ground for the kind of recruiting efforts that the minister suggested the Quebec government should undertake.

There is one last point in connection with immigration on which I want to touch and that is the possibility of an amnesty for more than just the Chinese people who entered Canada illegally. I have spoken to the minister about this matter. In my own riding I am acquainted with five or six people who happen to be Portuguese and who are not here on forged passports but are here illegally, in that they came in on visas, although the visas were not forged. At the present time they are working in the country. I have talked to several of them. I am not trying to condone the fact that they are breaking the law. They have told me that to their knowledge there are probably 500 or 600 people of their particular background in northern Ontario in the ring extending from the lakehead around to Sudbury.

Most of these people have been able to carry on for three, four or five years in this country because they are good, steady workmen who are never in trouble. It seems to me that some kind of effort is merited not only to examine and clear up each one of these cases that are outstanding, but also if they are typical of other groups of people of other backgrounds who are in this country illegally I think an over-all amnesty that would give them a chance to come forward with some hope of being able to stay here would be a very good move. I hope the minister will consider this. I think it should be much wider than just for the Chinese because people from other lands are involved.

Turning to the Indian affairs branch, I received a very sad document the other day from the Little Longlac chamber of commerce, a very prosperous small town in northern Ontario. It is supported by the Kimberly-Clark Corporation, one of the most enlightened companies I have had any dealings with. Right adjacent to this community there is an Indian reserve and the Little Longlac chamber of commerce points out in its representations, which went to the minister and to the Prime Minister, that there is a desperate situation in the community. You can see it in the statistics that half a dozen of the Indians from the reserve adjacent to this community have been killed on the roads or have died terrible deaths in other ways in the last few years as a result of drinking, careless behaviour, a complete misunderstanding of traffic rules and such things. Little Longlac or Macdiarmid in my constituency are perfect examples to show how badly we have done with the northern Ontario Indians.

I know the minister is sympathetic in this regard. I assume he was the one who was responsible for sending to us this pamphlet, "The Dilemma for Our Indian People", by James P. Mulvihill, O.M.I. I think it is an excellent analysis of the situation. It is quite apparent that we need to do something drastic. As far as I can see, in the northern Ontario Indians we have a form of crisis on our hands. It is no good belabouring the Indians affairs branch. Many of their agents have behaved like feudal barons, but they have not had any background or training in sociology or social work. It seems to me that many of them behave as though they are carrying out a routine job and are taking the easiest way out of it. But I think the reason for this is our lack of response. The Indians now have the vote, but as you go around an area the size of mine, which I would point out to hon. members comprises almost one third of the area of Ontario, you begin to appreciate that there is no simple answer.

I am sick about the situation of the Indians in my area. I have talked to the Jesuits, who have a religious interest in many of the reserves, and they are sick at heart about the situation. Many of them are despondent. I talked to one old priest last year just before he died. He had a total of approximately $7,000 in i.o.u.'s in a great big box in his kitchen. These were i.o.u.'s that had been given for two or three dollars at a time by Indians on his reserve so they could make a phone call, buy bread or use the money for taxi fare to go to the unemployment insurance office. He had no complaint about the fact he had advanced this form of charity. He knew it was charity. He knew the i.o.u.'s did not mean anything, but to him they were typical of the fact that these people always had to be turning to him or to someone else for assistance, even for a minor loan of $2 in order to go down the road a way.

This kind of difficulty is widespread throughout my whole riding. Every Indian reserve of which I know in my riding has a water problem. For example, at Heron Bay they have three pumps, and wells have been sunk. None of the Indians want to use any of the wells. They have a real complaint. Traditionally, they use the river, and the river is full of pulpwood for most of the year. We have been trying to do something about this. Gull Bay has had some wells sunk and some pumps put in. Every time I go there the Indians tell me that the pumps are not working. Sometimes this is the result of vandalism and sometimes it is recalcitrance on their part to use the facilities or take care of them.

I can give the minister a typical example. I went into one place last spring on the Gull Bay Indian reserve and a young man pointed to the walls. He said, how would you expect anybody to live through a winter in this place. He and his wife had just been through the winter. You could see outside and there were the remains of some snow on the ground. You could see right through the walls. I was quite incensed, so I went to the Indian agent. I discovered that the Indian affairs branch had provided him with liner for his shack, provided insulation and everything. It had been brought up by trucks, and as soon as it landed he had sold it. Then, he and his wife had gone on a drunk and left the kids to be looked after by the grandmother.

I could tell the committee a really sad story. Last summer a 17 year old girl came to me and wanted to know if there was any possibility of getting a job. Obviously, she was pregnant. I made inquiries and discovered she was seven months pregnant. She was a very pretty girl. I inquired into the case from both the people on the reserve and the Indian agent, as well as from people who did welfare work. Here was a little girl who, at 13, was dragged off into the woods by one of the older Indians and kept as a prisoner for six months. None of the other Indians told on him. Finally, a school teacher found out about it and got the police. This man wound up with three or four years in Stoney Mountain and the poor girl was a physical wreck. She had been beaten and battered, and she wound up in a training school. She came out of the training school at 15, and where did she go? She hit the streets of Port Arthur. I do not know what can be done with a child like that. She does not know who her father was, and she does not know the potential father of the child she was carrying.

If this were just an isolated situation, if this were just the odd case, I could say we just needed mild remedial measures. However, that is not the situation. The minister can go into almost any reserve within range of the highway, and the tracks, where the white men are living close to the Indians, and this will be the kind of situation he will find. I went into one Indian home near Armstrong in my riding a little over a year ago and talked to the Indian father. He stated his daughter was home from school. She had gone to grade 12 and she hoped she would go on to be a nurse. I said, you must feel very proud. He said that he did, but she was not going to be a nurse. I asked why and he said she was pregnant. I asked how this happened. He told me she came home during the summer holiday and there was a pretty wild crowd around there. There happened to be some troops in the vicinity and that was the end of another promising Indian career.

I do not want to suggest any scandal. However, the actual living conditions, the morality, the behaviour of the Indians in my area of northwestern Ontario, including the riding of Kenora-Rainy River, all the way along the railway is as bad as this.

What have we got in the Indian affairs branch to face up to this situation? So far as I know, in that whole area we have one training or location office. To my knowledge, there is not any person intimately connected with Indian affairs in that region who is a trained social worker. The Indian agency centre for our area is in the town of North Bay, which is a long distance from the concentration of Indians in our part of the country.

I want to put it to the minister that it is about time there was a serious effort made in that region along the north shore, and up to Hudson bay, to bring to bear the skills that are available in the Indian affairs branch to do something for these people. Obviously, the solution is not a religious one, although I believe the religious authorities could help. I am sure they will help, and they are ready to help. It is more than just a community problem of association with whites in the small towns around which the Indians cluster. It is more than just an employment problem, although the fact is that employment is a factor. I know of one reserve on which there were 112 able-bodied men right in the middle of a timber limit that is being exploited by one of the big companies in Canada. However, only two men out of the whole band of 112 who were considered adult and able-bodied had any kind of permanent employment. You look at the figures for forest land in Ontario held by or for the Indians, and it is pitifully small. It is down to a few thousand square miles for the whole province of Ontario.

I can express my umbrage and my dissatisfaction. I have not any simple answer to suggest. It puzzles me, it defeats me, it discourages me. All I do know is that it will take some of the best wisdom and some of the largest resources that we can muster in terms of money and skill to really arrest the situation and to begin to convert these Indians into people of whom we can be proud, as Canadians, instead of being ashamed that these people live as they do. Some people are saying that the minister is going on to bigger things. I hope if that is his ambition he does. However, I suggest there is no bigger disgrace that we have to face as Canadians than the Indian situation—I can only speak of northern Ontario. I cannot think of any greater challenge for the minister or his successor than to really do something about this situation—instead of just what I am doing, standing up and talking about it.

I should like to close by saying that I think within the Indian affairs branch there is a group of people who are waiting for the kind of imagination and leadership to gear and move this kind of program. However, it has to be much more intensive than before. There has to be more encouragement from the minister and from the senior officials of the department than I think has been given. I suggest that we have one experiment going in my area. A gentleman in Port Arthur who is working for the children's aid has taken on one of the reserves, one of those where conditions are poor. As a result of the co-operation he has had from the Indian affairs branch, he is carrying out a recreational program that is a real bootstrap operation. I should like to suggest to the minister that needs to be examined very soon to see if the results are worth while. If they are, this type of program should be applied to other reserves in the area.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been longer than I intended in making these remarks. I should like to conclude now by saying that my sense of shame that my constituents have to live this way and be isolated as they are with a kind of apartheid with which most of us go along, although we would never accept it as a philosophy, has caused me to speak. I will tell the minister that any move he makes in this regard that shows an awareness of the problem and an attempt to meet it will have my support. I can almost guarantee, too, that he will not have to stand up in this house and plead or beg for money, or for votes to support it.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there are a few subjects I would like to talk about on the estimates of this department. The first has to do with Indians and Eskimos. One might ask, what have I to do with Indians and Eskimos, since I represent primarily an urban riding in which there are no Indian reservations. But there is located within the riding of Edmonton West the largest Indian and Eskimo hospital in the country. This is the first subject I would like to draw to the attention of the minister. The Charles Camsell hospital does not come under his direct jurisdiction, but under that of his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare; but this hospital deals with the people in whom the minister is primarily interested, as is the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I know the northern health services came under the examination of the Glassco commission, and one of the recommendations was that the Charles Camsell hospital be not rebuilt. I happen to know a number of the doctors who were on the project team, shall we say, that looked into this matter and I had rather violent disagreements with them in this regard. With all due respect to these gentlemen, I think they were at least one generation ahead of their time with regard to medical services for our Indian and Eskimo populations, particularly as they deal with the Northwest Territories and the province of Alberta.

It was only a few years ago that the Indian and the Eskimo was prepared to accept and trust the white man's medicine. We now know from statistics that the health condition of our reserve Indians and our Indians and Eskimos in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon has improved immeasurably. But this progress must be maintained. There is a tremendous amount of work to be done in this regard. We can help by encouraging them to continue coming to a hospital where they are welcome, where they feel they are among people of their own kind, where the staff know how to handle them. An Indian or Eskimo patient from the Northwest Territories is not the same as the white man off the streets of the city of Edmonton.

I must confess that I was absolutely astounded at the philosophy that seemed to be propounded by those advocating that the Charles Camsell hospital be not rebuilt or modernized, because the main building is an old college building going back 50 or 60 years, and the remaining portion is a redwood building erected by the United States army when they were putting through the Alaska highway and the Canol pipe line. It is a veritable fire trap and it is inefficient; but it does the job. The plans had reached the point where there are working drawings for the new hospital. This project is now at a halt. I do not know how many times since last April I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether a decision had been reached with respect to the Charles Camsell hospital. I always received the usual answer, "No decision has yet been reached. When one is arrived at, you will be advised". I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that I think I would have received a little better action under other circumstances. It is high time the government made up its mind one way or the other with respect to this hospital. If the government decides to follow the recommendation of the Glassco commission report, I would say to the minister this would be a most retrograde step with respect to the health services for our Indians and Eskimos.

It is true that there is a hospital at Inuvik and there is a hospital at Whitehorse. But for the long term treatment of tuberculosis and some of the other diseases which are more difficult to eradicate there is nothing like the Charles Camsell hospital in Edmonton, where you have the most highly qualified medical practitioners available as consultants, where there is a good staff within the Department of National Health and Welfare, people who are dedicated to their work. I will simply tell the committee that last January I went through the hospital on the occasion of the awarding of scholarship certificates. These were awarded to a young Eskimo from Inuvik who was going into second year medicine, a girl who was going into education but who was a patient at the hospital—these were university students—and a girl who had just received her certificate from a commercial school and was going out to work as a stenographer. Every year I have had the opportunity of congratulating these young people who have made their mark, who have achieved something. They are examples to other young people among the Indian and Eskimo populations.

Just a few months prior to that the hospital had been closed at Hobbema, which is located in the constituency of my colleague the hon. member for Wetaskiwin. It was indicated to the Indians on the two reserves at Hobbema that they could go into the Wetaskiwin or the Ponoka county hospitals. What was the result? The registrations in the Camsell hospital during January and February, 1962, were up by 45 each month in respect of people from those two reserves. You ask the Indians, "Why do you come here to Edmonton when you could be so much closer to your homes at Wetaskiwin or Ponoka?" They say, "We come among people who know us, who understand us. We are here with patients from other reserves. We have rehabilitation services here. We are welcomed in this hospital". We know that in the county, municipal and city hospitals the overcrowding is fantastic. Unless you are just about dying and require an emergency operation you cannot get into some hospitals. If they are queuing up from the white population to go into our very limited general hospitals, how is it to be expected that our Indians and Eskimos will be accepted? If an Indian woman wants to come into hospital to have a child, is she going to go into a general maternity ward? Today she will not. A generation from now, she may. So I would urge the minister to give this matter serious consideration.

I do not want to belabour the point but I wish to re-emphasize everything I have said in correspondence with his office and the office of his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Charles Camsell hospital must be rebuilt. Ultimately it may be made into a general hospital, but that is a generation from now. I think this would be one step in helping these people to integrate.

We should not give them the sort of cold water treatment of saying, "All right; we are taking your hospital away from you. You can now fend for yourselves in the local hospitals". That is not good enough and it would be a retrograde step.

Still on the subject of Indians and Eskimos, Mr. Chairman, there is a residential school in my riding to which some young Indians are brought from northern British Columbia to attend the city schools.

On examining the situation as to the training for the Indians at Yellowknife and some of the other training schools, I think that somehow we have missed the boat. We take these Indians from their homes while they are still in their early teens, and perhaps younger, put them in a white man's school, teach them white man's training and white man's habits, and then at the age of 16 turn them back to the reserves or among their own families. They are not adapted to Indian native habits. They have not acquired skills in hunting. They have the white man's skills, but no agency is there to follow up and see that they use that training.

The minister may say, "Well, we do for a bit." But is it not like a child learning to walk. You are asking these young people to go from a crawl to a walk and, Mr. Chairman, you know that a child learning to walk will stumble many times. You have to pick him up and get him back on his feet. I suggest that a massive assault must be made on this problem. It may take a generation. I hope it will take less, but these young Indians have got to be followed up, and this must be a government policy decision.

I hoped I was convincing the minister's predecessor in this regard to start such a program, but it does not concern only the minister within his department. He must convince his colleagues that there has to be a massive assault on this whole problem. It may take 10, 15 or 20 years, but if we do not do it we will not have a satisfactory solution that will help these people become self-reliant, more adapted to modern ways, and able to form an integral part of our population. If we can do that, we will have achieved something and the increased moneys we will have to spend will be worth while.

There are several reservations in and around the Edmonton area. They are handled through what is called the Edmonton agency, where there is an officer in charge, with various Indian agents operating out of the Edmonton office. I wonder whether this is right. It has been put to me by people who know Indians, and have been associated with them for many years, that it might be better if the Indian agent as a general rule lived on a reservation. There may be a paternal aspect to this, but there is a benefit in his being there and knowing the people. He is not then an office man who comes out to them three times a week.

I shall now switch to the subject of immigration. I have discussed privately with the minister something which I hope he will look into, the acceptance as immigrants to this country of more young people from the other side of the iron curtain. There should be an extension of the rules regarding relationship, so that we can admit young people under the age of 21 for the purpose of reuniting members of families, where the senior members of families in Canada are well established, in the position to take in further relatives, and are willing to do so.

Some excuses have been made on the basis of security, and one thing or another, but I will put this question: Is the government's policy more concerned with immigration or security? By this I do not mean any disrespect to the R.C.M.P. who have a difficult problem to deal with. As I say, I have discussed this with the minister privately, particularly with reference to countries like Poland and Czechoslovakia, provided of course the governments of those countries will release their nationals to come to Canada. We cannot drag people here from those countries.

Gracious me, are boys and girls of 15 or 16 years such subversives that they cannot be admitted to this country on the same basis as orphaned nephews or nieces? What is wrong with extending the regulation to cover second cousins? We are prepared to make exceptions for nephews, nieces and unmarried children, so what great danger would there be in extending the regulation to cover grand nephews, grand nieces and second cousins? We would be doing a great service in uniting members of families and assisting them to become economic units. If there is a step that can be taken in the right direction with regard to immigration, it is in this area, and I suggest it apply to countries on the other side of the iron curtain, and indeed to all the countries of Europe.

This afternoon the hon. member for Lotbiniere spoke about the disparity in the figures of immigration from France and from the Anglo-Saxon countries.

[Translation]

He referred to the Belgians and the French. When you mention the Belgians, you have to speak of the Walloons and the Flemish.

As for me, I am of Flemish origin, and I know there is quite a difference. I know also that my grandparents never thought of themselves as French speaking, despite the fact that they could speak the language.

And I can tell the minister it is quite likely that, out of the thousands of French immigrants that we have received within the last two generations, many have left the country. As a matter of fact, before I was elected to this house and at the request of the American consul, I used to translate and check the documents of the French and Belgian people who wished to obtain a certificate executed and authenticated by a notary.

I then translated law reports, military bulletins, etc., and I can tell the minister that, from the outset, namely some time before 1954 or 1955, I cannot remember a single week when I was not required to translate such documents for French people who had immigrated to Canada and were going to the United States. When they were asked why they were doing so, they answered: Well, here, in Canada, the weather is very cold. Most of these immigrants were coming, so it seems, from southern France, and they were going to California. We could not keep them here and this is the reason for this lack of balance in the field of immigration.

[Text]

There is one further brief point I would like to make with the minister, and it concerns Chinese immigration. Those of us who represent western cities have more contact with the problem of Chinese immigration than our colleagues from eastern Canada. I have heard, not only from the minister but from his predecessor, about the staff difficulties in Hong Kong, and I would like to know what has been done to ameliorate those difficulties in the last year? I still get from time to time queries about applications for immigration, where a potential immigrant has been told to come back for an interview in four or five months. This does not do much good, when a wife with small children is told to come back in four or five months.

This situation has existed for some time. Is it to be tolerated forever? I suggest to the minister that so far as Chinese immigrants are concerned we in western cities would welcome a lot more. They represent in the city of Edmonton I suppose one half of 1 per cent of the population, if that. They are not what used to be the popular conception of a Chinese citizen. Many of them are professional gentlemen, excellent businessmen. Second, the second generation Chinese are of the very best citizens within our communities. I think that here we can do something. I would ask the minister to let the house know what has been done to straighten out the situation in Hong Kong. I know there is a great deal of pressure in this quarter, but it seems to me that there has not been a great increase in staff to handle it. We still get some of the same complaints about officials. I would say that almost one out of three applications by Chinese immigrants results in recourse being had to a member of parliament to see whether the application could be pushed and set moving. Strangely enough, when you do get behind it, it does move. So what is happening? Is it because more pressure is required? If so, all right, we will put on the pressure. But I think the minister recognizes the problem, so I would ask him to take the committee into his confidence and to tell us what he has done and what he anticipates doing in regard to this problem.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak very briefly indeed. I do so because I have received a letter from the minister's special assistant regarding a case which I mentioned when I last spoke on the estimates. I rise to deal briefly with the circumstances and to ask the minister a question, to which I trust I will receive a favourable reply, this being Christmas time.

I refer the minister to the application of Mr. Wong Hong Taw for the admission to Canada of his son Wong Yun Lam from Hong Kong. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister at the request of numerous people in Kootenay West who have known the old gentleman for many years. He is a splendid old chap. His application was supported by a petition of some 50 names, including one official of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, the mayor of Trail, prominent business people and other persons. It is rather a pathetic case. I was under the impression that Mr. Wong Hong Taw had more assets than appears to be the case at the moment. He was at one time quite a prosperous market gardener, but recently he has suffered from ill health. The minister was kind enough to have this case reviewed and referred to his official in Nelson, who has reported to the minister. I just want to refer to the letter and then ask the minister a question. The letter is dated December 16 last, addressed to me, and it reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Herridge:

I refer to my letter of November 29, 1963, concerning the application of Mr. Wong Hong Taw for the admission to Canada of his son, Wong Yun Lam, from Hong Kong.

The immigration officials have had a report from their officer in Nelson, B.C. who states that Wong Hong Taw is almost destitute, having no assets either in cash or real estate, and being a recipient of somewhat meagre welfare payments. Under the circumstances, the applicant cannot meet minimal requirements for settlement arrangements for his son.

Mr. F. C. Crosman's letter of July 11, 1963, commented on Wong Yun Lam's limited qualifications. The report of the Hong Kong immigration officials, on which Mr. Crosman's letter was based, clearly indicated that Wong Yun Lam could not qualify as an unsponsored immigrant.

The previous decision in this case can therefore only be sustained. In view of your interest, I regret that my reply is not more favourable.

I am returning herewith the documents which you left with me in connection with this application.

Yours sincerely,
Peter Bosa,
Special Assistant.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am rising again at the request of a number of people in my constituency who are very concerned about the welfare of this really lovable old man whom they have known for many years. I understand the circumstances and the reason for the minister's reply, but I ask him this question. If the hon. member for Kootenay West sponsors this young man and guarantees that he will never be a public charge, will he be admitted to Canada to stay with his father?

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Pigeon: Only one question, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I have only two questions to ask. I should like to ask the minister whether his department intends to implement the report of the Glassco commission, which suggests to allot the issuing of passports to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration rather than to the Department of External Affairs.

My second question is this. Did the minister, who is very close to the government of the province of Quebec, meet the authorities of that government to suggest that the province of Quebec should make the necessary efforts to be in a position of extending a better welcome to the immigrants, as the other provinces do, especially Ontario?

In this connection, I am inspired by an article published in Le Devoir on November 10, 1963 and which reported the statement made by Mr. Lesage on television:

The province of Quebec should take the necessary means so that immigrants be given a better welcome on their arrival in Quebec province.

Those are the only comments I had to make on this question.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to take a few minutes of the committee's time to express my approval of the statement made this afternoon by the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) concerning the immigration to Canada of French speaking people.

I know that I can develop the hon. member's arguments because, unfortunately, he was unable to do so himself since the party whip likes nothing better than to restrain the members of his group.

Mr. Choquette: I regret to inform the member that it is not so.

Mr. Gregoire: As for me, I feel much freer on this side of the house, I can express any opinion I hold.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statements made this afternoon by the hon. member for Lotbiniere. Of course, as in all the speeches he has been making these last three or four days, he began by praising a good deal the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. However, I agree that in that case the praise was well deserved. In fact, I wish to take the opportunity to say that the minister has a brilliant future in his party.

However, Mr. Chairman, a fact remains. According to the figures quoted this afternoon there is a disproportion between immigration from English speaking countries and immigration from French speaking countries and there are many reasons for that. What solutions could be brought to the problem?

I believe that the first one would be a better concerted and better prepared publicity in the French speaking countries.

I also believe that the minister should give more attention to another important fact which is the supervision of the emigration of a great number of Canadian citizens to the United States. If we take into account the number of citizens of the province of Quebec and other provinces who have, since the beginning of this century, left Canada to go and work in other countries, we will find that this emigration has been harmful and even disastrous for us. One of its causes can be found in the facts of life.

For instance, the lumberman in the Bellechasse, Beauce, Dorchester, Kamouraska and Temiscouata constituencies, and so forth, go to work in the United States in winter, and when they come back into the country, they do not benefit from the assistance their country gives in the field of unemployment insurance. Well, when that happens, these Canadian citizens are inclined to try to emigrate to the United States, where they may take advantage of the social legislation in that country.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration might perhaps urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to have our Canadian citizens share in all the social benefits to which they are entitled.

Mr. Chairman, I have a last comment to make. For some time, a debate has gone on between the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in Ottawa and the minister of national resources in Quebec in order to find who will have charge of the administration—and at the same time, who will have jurisdiction over the educational system—of the Eskimos and Indians living in New Quebec or in the north of the province.

I submit it is quite an important problem to consider. Perhaps, at the present time, a rather limited number of individuals are involved, but there is every reason to believe that, within a relatively short period, mining or industrial developments will take place in that part of the province of Quebec. At that time, Eskimos and white men will live side by side, and one of the two groups will come under the authority of the provincial administration, whereas the other will live under federal jurisdiction. Then, that problem will be more acute than it is now. That is why I think the minister should give it his whole attention in order to anticipate the related problems which will come up within ten or 12 years in that area. Problems will inevitably come up if the present situation keeps up, when New Quebec and the far north are developed. But if we anticipate the problems —I think that what is wrong with the government at the present time is that corrective measures are taken only when the problems come up—if, in that area, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, with the capability we know he has, could anticipate the difficulties and find the solution right away, then, we would avoid for the future generations, discussions which might be very bitter.

Mr. Chairman, those are the three points I wanted to submit to the minister, and I would sum them up like this: French immigration in our country; disastrous emigration of too many Canadian citizens to the United States; and the Eskimos and Indians living in northern Quebec.

I hope the minister will take those problems into consideration and that in his next estimates, he will be in a position to tell us what he intends to do to settle them.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I shall start by replying right away to the three questions that have been asked. First of all, I shall answer the question dealing with the recommendations of the Glassco commission concerning passports. This recommendation will be looked into. I must say, however, that the matter does not come under my departmnt as such, but concerns rather the study group which is presently considering the recommendations of the Glassco commission. In any case, that is one of the points under consideration at present.

Second, with regard to the discussions with the Quebec government, I must say that the discussions held were informal rather than official. I have already had or started to have talks. I feel confident that, in the future, my views in that regard will prevail.

[Text]

As to the matter raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West, I am not in a position, in full committee, to settle a specific question of this kind; but I can tell the hon. member that in view of the sympathetic nature of the proponent of the question I cannot help but consider the matter very sympathetically.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I first wish to thank the hon. members who made such flattering remarks about me. I simply consider them as an encouragement to perform my duty in the future as I have done up to now.

Some constructive suggestions have been made, several have already been implemented and others are under consideration. We must not forget that criticism is still one of the best ways to expedite public business. I thank the members for their constructive criticisms.

I would like to say a word about Chinese immigration. I hope that I did not convey the impression, in my remarks, that Chinese immigration, which evidently involved some complex problems, had been overlooked by the department.

May I say on the matter of sponsorship that there will be a broadening of the plan with respect to families, particularly in the speeding up of consideration and disposal of requests which are being processed.

Many protracted meetings have already taken place in that connection with my officials, and I can even promise the committee that within the next year, recommendations will be submitted to the cabinet and, for this reason, I am not free to disclose, for the time being, the solutions I intend to propose.

Now I must point out that in 1961, 661 immigrants of Chinese origin were admitted into Canada, that 826 came into this country in 1962 and that, during the first nine months of 1963, 1,008 have already been admitted, which means that this year we will substantially exceed the number of immigrants of Chinese origin admitted up to now.

Two weeks ago, the acting director of the immigration branch went to Hong Kong at my request, and I intend to follow him soon. As a result of recommendations, we have already applied measures which will reduce by 50 per cent the work and time involved in the processing of applications of Hong Kong immigrants.

[Text]

In the course of their remarks, some members have asked whether or not final consideration has been given by me to the case of Miss Irene Rebrin who immigrated to Canada in 1958 and who was ordered deported in January, 1959. I must say that this case was relatively complex. It involved certain delicate factors and it was my intention to give it all the consideration required. I am pleased to inform the committee that the review of this case has now been completed. I have decided that Miss Rebrin should now be admitted to Canada as a landed immigrant. The necessary procedures are being commenced to adjust her status. The conclusion I have reached takes into account the current circumstances and it is not intended to have any bearing on the past treatment of this case or to imply that any decision made in the past in this respect was improper at the time it was made.

I have stated, Mr. Chairman, that it is at least my opinion, because we are dealing with human beings directly, that in these cases the minister should refrain—I do not say that in the past the minister has not refrained—from any comparison between his own policies and the policies of previous ministers or governments. This is why I wish to make it very clear that the Rebrin case has been looked into in the light of the facts as they existed in December of 1963. If an immigrant is refused in 1959, for instance, under section 5 because this immigrant suffers from a disease, and if the matter is looked at in 1963 and that person has been cured, a decision is then made in the light of the factors as they exist in 1963 and may not be interpreted as reflecting unfavourably on any previous decision.

I am not unmindful also in taking this decision, and I think it is important, that there is presently pending a libel suit between Miss Rebrin and somebody else. As a lawyer I have considered that and I know I am satisfied in my own mind that in the suit the facts, of course, will be looked at as they were in 1959, and not 1963, and that consequently any decision I may make may not be used for or against anybody in the case, because anything which I might say would not be acceptable legal evidence. It would be purely hearsay. So I thought it was my duty to make the decision, and having arrived at that conclusion, I am pleased to state it to the house tonight.

May I say just one word with respect to Indian affairs. In a jocular fashion but in a way seriously, I know, it has been suggested that the minister try to devise a system whereby he will ensure that the important branch of his department known as Indian affairs will disappear in 20 years. I must say I cannot agree more. I also know that when I say this my officials will not be frightened by the proposition because, knowing their dedication to their cause, I know that they all agree. This is the objective and the purpose, that once the Indians have fully succeeded in adjusting themselves to our present way of life in a fashion compatible with their own traditions and original culture and also in the freest possible way there will not then be any necessity for an Indian affairs branch as such. This objective, of course, embodies a requirement for the implementation of all of those measures which we have discussed during the presentation and discussion of these estimates.

May I say a last word on matters of immigration about the relaxation of what have been called the rules of relationship. This is one of the subjects which, as many members know, I have most deeply at heart at present. Rules which were probably necessary at the time they were made have caused difficulty, and ways and means must be found to adapt them to more humane conditions of immigration.

My last word is to join with hon. members in congratulating the new deputy minister of my department on his accession to that high position. I must say that if the first 30 days of his presence in the department are a sign of the future, and I know they are, there will be a great future for the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the minister on his decision with reference to the Rebrin case and say to him that many of us are highly pleased at the excellent beginning he has made in the handling of his department. We look forward to a very enlightened period of administration under his guidance.

I should like to ask him one brief question. I have reference now to the Mrs. Miriam Stevenson case which I raised in the house on the orders of the day some weeks ago and about which I wrote the minister. I do not want to take much time of the committee but I would like the minister to give, if he can, some assurance with reference to the immediate status of this case. I do not know Mrs. Stevenson nor am I familiar with all the details of her case. I do know that, according to press reports, she is a citizen of Great Britain, that she lived for a while in the United States and that she is now being deported because in the 1930's she was for one year, it is claimed, a member of the communist party. She contends that she has had no association whatsoever with the communist party since the 1930's.

The minister was gracious enough to grant a stay of proceedings for 60 days on this case during which time she and her legal counsel are requested to produce evidence to prove that she has dissociated herself from her former connections. I hope she can do that but, as I pointed out to the minister when I wrote him, it is very difficult to prove a negative. How you prove that you no longer are something is extremely difficult. She may be able to get character references or people who will express opinions, but I do not know how you can prove you are not something. It may be possible to prove that you are a member of an organization, but how you prove you are not a member of an organization seems to me extremely difficult.

It may not be possible within the time limit she has to produce this kind of evidence. Therefore I want to ask the minister first of all whether it will be possible, if that evidence is not forthcoming and it appears to him that the case is deserving of consideration, to extend the time during which she can endeavour to get this kind of evidence. Second, is it the intention of the minister to review the act to see if some of these very wide discretionary powers which are given to the minister could be spelled out in the act? It seems to me that the powers are very wide when the whole discretion whether or not this woman, who is a British subject, who has lived in Canada and who is now in her late 50's, will be deported lies entirely with the minister. It so happens I am fairly well satisfied with the discretion of this minister, but that is not the point at issue. The point is whether or not this is a discretion which is far too great to reside in any one person, without any right of appeal.

Mr. Howard: I have just a brief word or two before the item passes. The minister made a statement a while ago which will be pleasant sounding music to the ears of native Indian people of Canada, namely that it is his desire that within 20 years or a reasonable period of time there will no longer be a need for an Indian affairs branch, or the Indian Act for that matter. It has been one of the sore points in the minds of the native Indian people for many years, that they should be singled out and subjected to a law and an administration specifically dealing with them on a racial or ethnic basis. As I said earlier in my remarks, and I hope the minister will not take this personally because it is not intended that way, the Indian people feel that there is a need for action rather than words. Words have been directed to them time after time in years gone by. It is action that will impress them at this point.

I have great hopes that what the minister says will be accomplished will, in fact, be accomplished.

I have a question or two I should like to direct to the minister about a problem I raised earlier. However, it might be as well to wait until the item is called which deals with welfare.

Mr. Herridge: As the member who first raised the case of Irene Rebrin in the house I wish to thank the department on behalf of the people in British Columbia. I am sure the minister has made a lot of people in British Columbia happy to hear that he considered the unfortunate plight of this young lady.

Mr. Clancy: I should like to ask a question of the minister with reference to the order in council concerning Weldon Chan. This is a man who broke every law in Canada and who went underground for three years. Suddenly, he is pardoned by order in council. Now, how do I advise my constituents, a lot of whom come from eastern Europe? Do I tell them to bring their relatives in, admit nothing and hope that they will be pardoned by the minister? This was the most disgraceful thing that ever happened in this country.

Mr. Peters: Is the minister going to say anything about the matter I raised earlier concerning the opening up of old orders in council to try to ascertain where the difficulties lie in the cases that have come before the department?

Mr. Favreau: I am sorry if I forgot that question. I first wish to thank the hon. gentleman for having agreed to my suggestion to restrict the area of his very broad question. The answer to his first question would have required a lot of time and expense. When the answer is completed, whether or not the house is in session, I will send a copy to my hon. friend for sure. I must say this, though, that the adjustments are not made by order in council. These persons have entered Canada and once their status is adjusted, they are not deported. They are considered as people who have been admitted, and for the purpose of citizenship their landing is considered to have taken place at the time of their arrival.

Mr. Clancy: Could I have an answer—

Mr. Peters: Could there be—

The Chairman: Order; the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Yorkton.

Mr. Clancy: I should like to ask the minister what advice I should give to my constituents. Do I advise them to forget the laws, come in under a visitor's permit and then disappear?

Mr. Favreau: In reply to the hon. member I would say that his experience in the house and with his constituents is much greater than mine. I know that he cannot give them anything but sound advice.

Mr. Clancy: I may tell the minister that I try to be honest with my constituents.

Mr. Favreau: You can advise them that the minister looked into all the circumstances of the Weldon Chan case. In so far as I am concerned, this was a very particular case. If you look at the circumstances as a whole, it is a case without precedent. Each of these cases must be examined upon its own merits at the time it comes before the minister. He tried to do justice to the best of his ability and knowledge.

Mr. Clancy: May I advise my constituents to break the law and throw themselves on the mercy of the minister?

Mr. Douglas: Could the minister give me a report on the Miriam Stevenson case about which I was asking? Has there been any change?

Mr. Favreau: All I can say is that it was a good thing there was a discretion in the minister because I saw the file about 24 hours before the deportation order would have been executed. My power of discretion allowed me to send a telegram suspending the deportation order for six days. We have not yet received the representations sought. Instructions have been given for a further investigation, and no deportation order will be given until such time as we are satisfied that the facts are before us.

Item agreed to.

25. Field and inspectional service, Canada, including $10,000 for grant to immigrant welfare organization, $7,059,800.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to filibuster my own estimates but I ask my colleague, the Secretary of State, to present an amendment to vote No. 25.

[Translation]

Mr. Pickersgill: I move:

That vote No. 25 be reduced by $20,500.

[Text]

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

60. Welfare operation and maintenance including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates and authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the total of all amounts to be paid by the governments of provinces and territories under agreements entered into on terms approved by the governor in council with such governments in respect of social assistance to non-Indians residing on Indian reserves, $11,772,900.

Mr. Howard: Vote No. 60 covers the operation of the welfare branch of Indian affairs, with which I dealt in an earlier part of my remarks. There is an agreement, I have not got it with me now, but I believe it is headed, statement of policy on health or welfare services, and it is an agreement between the government of Canada and the province of British Columbia. Perhaps there are similar agreements with other provinces, I do not know. The effect of this agreement which came into force this past January, as I read it, is that if an Indian lives on a reserve and is eligible to receive welfare, he will receive that assistance at the rate established by the Indian affairs branch, namely $22 per month. Then, if there are any dependants the amount decreases to $15 per month for dependants over 12 years of age and $12 per month for dependants under 12. I do not know if these figures are correct. However, if an Indian person lives off the reserve for a period of time and is eligible for welfare assistance, he receives welfare assistance at the rate paid by the provincial department, which is substantially in excess of the amount paid by the Indian affairs branch.

Then, if a non-Indian living on the reserve is eligible for or in need of welfare assistance, he will receive that assistance at the rate payable by the Indian affairs branch. If he is living off the reserve, of course, the agreement does not apply. The essence of this agreement is that it sets up two schedules of welfare payments for Indian people, one when they are on the reserve and one when they are off the reserve. In view of the desire of governments—as enunciated also by the minister recently—within the last couple of years that the goal and objective should be what we loosely call the transfer of jurisdiction over these matters to the provincial government, I wonder whether the minister could tell us what plans are afoot to either discard that agreement or revise it in such a way that there is equality of welfare payments to native Indian people as compared with people of non-Indian origin. I am talking about British Columbia, but I am sure that if similar agreements are in existence in other provinces and the same sort of discriminatory system prevails, naturally what I have said applies to those provinces also.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, first I must say that it is probably a laudable objective to even out as much as possible the rates of welfare payments. But surely no member of an Indian community may complain about the fact that when they go off the reserve and live somewhere else in the province the federal government has seen to it by agreement that they be not treated differently than other residents of the province. I do not want to justify the rate that is paid to Indians, and I do not say it is not justifiable either. I must say that the rate paid to Indians on the reserve is for food only, but Indians living off the reserve have considerable additional expenses which those on the reserve do not have, including provision for lodging, heating, fuel and other factors. Indians living off the reserve have to meet these expenses and those on the reserve do not have to meet them.

In the same way it is true that the rates vary even from province to province, and so long as uniformity between the provinces is not achieved, even if we adjusted the rates as applied to Indians there would, because of the different levels in the provinces, remain certain differences. It is our objective to level out these things as much as possible. I think we will be in a position to do a great deal with respect to looking into this question in depth at the conference which takes place in the month of May between the federal minister and the appropriate provincial ministers. As I said, this conference is in preparation and the agenda will soon be discussed among the provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I anticipated that the conference which arose out of the recently concluded dominion-provincial conference would provide the arena for the discussion of a great many of these matters. I only wanted to raise the question with the minister now, so that it is on the record once again and we do not lose track of it in the wealth of all the other things that take place; because this is an important matter. The minister said—and I am paraphrasing him now—that surely no Indian living off the reserve would complain that he is receiving the welfare assistance payable by the province. Perhaps they do not, but an Indian person does complain in this way. They look at the disparity in welfare payments as a result of this agreement and say, "Ah, ah; here is another attempt by the government to entice us to get off the reserve. They are now using the enticement of increased welfare payments to do it". I say this because, as the minister well knows, the history of the treatment of native Indian people by law has been full of enticements for them to become enfranchised, to leave the reserve, to lose their status as an Indian. These enticements involve the right to vote, which was granted a few years ago. They involved liquor, and still do to a certain extent. They involve the amount of band funds the Indian gets when he becomes enfranchised, and so on.

Most of the Indian people have resented the fact that enticements have been offered to get them to cease being Indians within the meaning of the Indian Act. They want to retain their history, culture and association with their own people. They look upon this agreement, with its disparity in the approach to welfare, as being another enticement by government to get them off the reserve. It is unfortunate that this attitude exists. I can only hope at this moment that when the federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs is held it will do something to correct this discrimination. Everyone will be praying for it to come up with something that is reasonable, decent and conclusive with respect to Indian affairs, so we can take the step the Indian has been looking for, for so long—the step toward equality and decency of treatment for them.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I wish to remind the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) of my request addressed to him last November in favour of Indians belonging to the La Manouane reserve who are deprived at the present time of all medical assistance. There is no nurse in the reserve at the present time and, unfortunately, tuberculosis is rampant there.

I have been in recent contact with officers of the minister and I pointed out to them that I had been told by the reserve chief that it would be advantageous for a doctor to practise in that reserve. As I am aware of the minister's concern with problems relating to his department, I feel sure that the Indians of La Manouane will be given, in the future, the medical assistance that is essential to that community.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to express my thanks to all members for the high degree of co-operation they have shown, particularly for the spirit of understanding they have displayed towards the poor minister who presented his first estimates.

Mr. Pigeon: It is thanks to your parliamentary secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration including authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the treasury board, for total commitments of $2,529,570,600 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50, 55, 60 and 65 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $978,136,600 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government, $3,432,000.

The Chairman: Order. Vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of National Defence. Shall this item carry?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman. I am quite prepared to move very rapidly on these items if the minister will give us a short statement on the NATO conference, and any developments at that conference, and bring us up to date on the recent changes that we read about in the newspapers concerning national defence. We would like to hear about these matters right here in the house.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the NATO conference I would be pleased to make a very brief report. It was, in my opinion, a most satisfactory conference. There had been some apprehension, I believe, that certain issues would be divisive, or could possibly be divisive; but there was no evidence of this at the conference. There was reaffirmation of the solidarity of the 15 nations which compose the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. We received a first class briefing of the military threat which presently exists from the Soviet union, an assessment of their strengths and of their capabilities. If anything, the consensus was that the conventional strength of the Soviet union, when given a qualitative analysis, is not as great as was previously estimated, but of course is still quite formidable.

We also heard a very interesting statement in respect to the western capabilities, the forces available to meet the threat, and the state of the alliance from the military standpoint at the present time.

On behalf of the Canadian delegation we had a statement which made the council aware of the defence review which is presently being undertaken here, and which mentioned certain decisions that already have been taken and of which the council were already aware. It also indicated that one or two other matters were under consultation at present with the military authorities, and that these would be presented to the permanent council in the usual way as soon as agreement was reached.

It was pointed out that our review in this country was really in two phases. The first phase dealt largely with procurement, which is now completed. We attempted not to procure equipment which would limit the options open to us in future years. The second phase of our review was in respect to longer term policy, and that in determining longer term policy the government would be very much aware of the relationship between our armed forces, and those of our allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. This statement seemed to be well received, as were any consultations we had with military and civilian authorities at the conference.

I think the most notable achievement of the whole meeting was the reaffirmation of solidarity, and the undertaking on the part of all members of the alliance not to stand in the way of going ahead and working out problems which arise from time to time, as is inevitable in any alliance of 15 nations in peacetime. In summary, it was a most satisfactory conference and we in the Canadian delegation took satisfaction from it.

With respect to the hon. gentleman's second question, it is unfortunate that consultations are not yet complete and therefore I am reluctant to say anything more at this time. It is not helpful to give information in detail before negotiations have been worked out, and these negotiations are presently under way. The NATO military authorities have been advised of any proposals the government of Canada has at the present time. These are being studied, staff work is being done at the moment, and we expect to hear back in the not too distant future. I would hope it will be possible within a few weeks to make public any additional information that is relevant to the slight adjustments which have been proposed.

Mr. Douglas: Could the minister give us some information regarding two matters recently reported in the press. One is a report which appeared in the Globe and Mail of December 20 and which says:

> The Royal Canadian Air Force base at Grostenquin, France, will be closed, a highly placed source said yesterday.
> The other Canadian base in France, at Marville, will be retained but the CF-104 nuclear bombers there will be converted to a strictly conventional, reconnaissance role, the source said—
> The CF-104's at Grostenquin will be moved to the German bases.

Is this the plan which the department has in mind? Is it intended to close the first base and move the aircraft to Germany, and is it also the intention to keep the Marville base open but to change the equipment on the CF-104's so that they can be used for conventional purposes?

The other matter is with reference to an announcement which came from Paris while the minister was there. There were some conflicting reports about this. I gather some of the papers were quoting the statement as though it came from the minister, but later

I received a more accurate report which said it came from British military sources. It was a statement to the effect that an agreement had been signed permitting the British V-bomber force to be trained in Canada and it said——that the R.A.F.'s nuclear V-bomber force is to use Canadian air space to test a new "low-level" attack strategy.

It also said:

—the V-bombers would operate from Canadian bases, covering "distances in northern Canada similar to those which would be met in a retaliatory assault on Russia."

Most people felt this was hardly the way to contribute to a lessening of international tensions, and to strengthen the détente which it is hoped we are building between the east and the west since the signing of the partial nuclear test ban agreement.

I would like the minister to give some explanation why this new training program is being launched? Is a new agreement being entered into, or is it being done under some former agreement? Will it mean a great increase in the British personnel located in Canada, or is it simply an old program being blown up for publicity purposes by the British government, which is sorely in need of being bolstered on the home front?

Mr. Hellyer: The Globe and Mail report is one of a series which has appeared in respect to the proposed adjustments to the air division. It is not too inaccurate in respect to a proposal that has been made by the Canadian government, and is a pretty fair reflection, though not quite complete, of the suggestions we have made to the military authorities in NATO. I would prefer if the hon. member allow me not to go beyond that in spelling it out, because I feel we have some obligation to our allies not to pre-publicize in detail suggestions which have been put forward while they are in fact subject to consultation.

I believe the second report had an unfortunate emphasis. It is true, and this much I confirmed while in Paris, that there has been agreement to permit British V-bombers to use a low-level training route in Canada. This is not really a new situation because we have made air space available to the British for training purposes many times, and it is really just an extension of the long standing co-operation existing between the Canadian government and the R.A.F. This involves a technique of contour flying, low level flying which requires special training.

The difficulty is in obtaining routes which do not unduly interfere with the civilian population. Particularly in England such routes are just not available. For that reason a request came forward to make available a route in Canada which would be over part of our territory, but which would not be an undue nuisance to the civilian population. A route was selected and permission given to operate this one route. It does not mean that there will be any sizeable augmentation of British personnel in Canada. It will just be a staging operation. Planes will come over. I think they are to operate from Goose Bay; they will fly this training route perhaps on several successive days, and then fly back to their regular bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for his concise reply. I only want to say one thing, that when he tells us about reports in the Globe and Mail referring to the disposition of the CF-104's, the closing of one base in France and the retention of the other for the use of CF-104's which are being converted to a conventional role, it makes me somewhat apprehensive of the fact that this is about the third or fourth time in recent months that highly informed sources have been able with amazing accuracy to prophesy what the minister is going to announce. Again I imagine that somebody has stolen the minister's thunder and has told the public what the minister has only now told the House of Commons. I can understand the reluctance of the minister not to tell the House of Commons until the matter has been cleared up with our allies, but I should point out to the minister that it is a little disconcerting for parliament to find that most of the policies of the Department of National Defence seem to be announced in the press a week or two before they are announced in the house. While there might be a certain amount of guesswork going on, the accuracy with which these prophecies have been fulfilled makes one think that the minister ought to look and see whether there is a leak somewhere in his information set-up, or whether the minister himself is deliberately flying a kite—I do not know which it is.

Mr. Hellyer: May I say that the minister is a little apprehensive too. This information did not come from my office, if that is what the hon. gentleman is suggesting. Up to this moment I have not been able to find out just who the informed source was. I should like to know the answer to that question, and if the hon. member can assist me I would be most grateful. I find it a little disconcerting myself, because at noon I was eating in the restaurant and one of my colleagues, a member of parliament, introduced me to a young officer, who informed me to my face in front of my friend exactly what we proposed to do. So that when we refer to informed sources, it seems to me there are quite a few of them, and it is very difficult to tell exactly which one it is.

For this reason I try to make the information public as quickly as possible. That was certainly one of the main reasons for making so many announcements on the estimates, even though they actually applied to next year's estimates, so as to end the rumours and speculation and to get the information on the record. I would be pleased to put the information respecting the other readjustments on the record just as fast as can be arranged in order to end this type of speculation, which I find a little interesting, as does my hon. friend.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that the estimates of the department now before us are the most important of all the federal budget. As a matter of fact, the Minister of National Defence surely is the most greedy of all, since he takes for his department alone more than 25 per cent of the money collected from Canadian taxpayers.

I would now like to make the following remarks. I am amazed, like many other Canadians, to see that in a period such as this, the Department of National Defence has found it advisable to have three submarines built in England for the Canadian navy, while so many Canadian workers in our shipyards are now unemployed and greatly need the work that would have been provided by the construction, in Canada, of those three submarines.

I submit that the Minister of National Defence, before making other commitments of this kind and before granting to other countries contracts to build submarines, or aircraft, or any other type of military hardware, should first endeavour to grant them to Canadian industries, factories or shipyards.

If the Minister of National Defence could meet the Canadian people, he would realize that the public is voicing strong protests against his department's decision to award those contracts to foreigners while there is unemployment in Canada.

There are two or three other questions I should like to ask the minister.

First, are any nuclear arms stored at present at Bagotville for the Voodoos which are stationed there?

Second, if there are no nuclear weapons there now, when is it expected that a stockpile will be established?

Third, will the Voodoos stationed in Bagotville make daily flights or will they be allowed to carry nuclear weapons during their daily or regular flights?

Fourth, what kind of a danger can these weapons represent for the neighbouring population, especially when they are carried by the Voodoos?

I think that the people of our Saguenay-Lake St. John region, who are fine people living in a beautiful area, would like to know the answers to those questions so as to know what to think about the dangers that those weapons represent.

Finally, a fifth and very important question: to what extent will the Bagotville, Chicoutimi and Arvida region serve as target in the event of an enemy attack, in view of the nuclear arms which are stored there?

I should be glad if the minister would answer those questions so as to make the Canadian people aware of the danger that may threaten them.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, in rising to make a comment or two on the estimates of the Department of National Defence I should like to express my unqualified confidence in the minister and in the manner in which he is conducting his department. I like the man, I like his manners, and I like his methods. When I was sitting on the other side of the house in opposition a year ago I expressed my belief that the basic point in Canada's external affairs policy and the basic aim in its defence policy should be the friendliest of relations with the United States of America. This has been my lifetime conviction and it will remain with me till I shuffle off this mortal coil, I know. On December 5 of this year when we were earlier considering the estimates of the Department of National Defence, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre interrupted the hon. member for Vancouver East in his comments on defence policy. I read from page 5462 of Hansard for December 5:

> Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—
> Mr. Winch: If you do not mind, I have only got 30 minutes.
> Mr. Churchill: You can take 30 minutes. I am raising a point of order. The hon. member has made a statement which is false and it must be corrected immediately...False statements made in this house must be corrected immediately...False statements made in this house must be corrected. They must be withdrawn if they are false. The hon. member's statement is false—

May I point out, while we are considering the estimates of the Department of National Defence—and this is Christmas time, a time of charity and good will—that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on May 27 in this house produced a forged letter supposed to have been written by the United States ambassador to Ottawa and sent by him to the Prime Minister.

The Chairman: Order. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member without giving him an opportunity to make his point, but I suspect that he cannot deal with the subject he is beginning to deal with while remaining within the four corners of vote 1 of the estimates of this department.

Mr. Cowan: I note that you were the chairman on December 5. I have one more sentence and then I will have completed my remarks. I should like to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, in view of this point of order which he has discovered and which the chairman did not recognize on December 5, if he will not agree, now, to withdraw his statement made on May 27, and all its ramifications as are to be found in Hansard on pages 319, 320 and 321, thereby expunging a blot from the official record of this house and a personal affront to the representative of a friendly nation?

The Chairman: Order. I feel strongly that the hon. member is not in order in raising this point. It is not relevant to the vote which is now before the committee.

Mr. Churchill: On the point of order, I am surprised not only that the hon. member should have raised this matter but that he has been permitted to read it into the record. Are we not dealing with the subject of national defence? Do I, as a member of this committee, have no protection under the rules? If the hon. member wishes this matter to be debated I am prepared to give the hon. member an answer.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will realize that I felt at the start that the point which the hon. member for York-Humber appeared to wish to make was out of order. I cautioned him right at the beginning. He then said he had only one sentence to go in order to complete his point. It was a long sentence but, in fairness to the hon. member, I allowed him to finish his statement. I am in full agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that the remarks made by the hon. member for York-Humber were not relative to the item before us.

Mr. Winch: I know the minister did not make the decision, but can he give the committee any information as to the basis on which Canada purchased a type of CF-104 for our R.C.A.F. squadrons in Europe capable only of using nuclear weapons, whereas all the F-104's used by other countries were built with a dual purpose possibility. Why was Canada the only country which bought an aircraft with a strictly nuclear capacity? The CF-104 must have been built that way with the knowledge of the previous government. They must have known it could never be used, except with nuclear warheads.

Mr. Hellyer: First of all I might answer the hon. member for Lapointe. He asked if there are nuclear weapons now at Bagotville. The answer is, no. He asked when there will be nuclear weapons there. I do not know; probably late next year. He asked whether there will be daily flights with nuclear weapons aboard aircraft. The answer is, no. He asked what the danger would be to the people in the area when these weapons are adopted. May I say that every possible precaution is taken. We have safety procedures which are as good as can be devised and the success of these measures is shown by the fact that throughout all these years the United States has had nuclear warheads numbering many thousands, there has never been an accidental nuclear explosion. Every conceivable precaution is taken.

I am not familiar with all the reasoning which went into the particular configuration of the CF-104. It was part of the development of a new weapons platform embarked upon by a number of nations in co-operation. Canada shared the cost of that development. Our particular configuration was a little different from the F-104G which is used by some of our allies, but it does have some built-in capabilities. This would make it possible to adopt a dual role for part of the air division if that should prove to be the proper solution. The aircraft is capable of carrying bombs of various kinds. A Gatling gun can be installed. It is possible to fire rockets if the pods and the rockets are purchased. There are a number of minor modifications which, if undertaken, would give the plane non-nuclear capacity. The cost would vary according to what was done, but it would not be great. The necessary wiring is all built into the aircraft, and though some minor modifications would be necessary the cost would not be great in proportion to the total amount of money involved in the program.

Mr. Winch: Perhaps the minister did not follow my question. The F-104, with which a number of other countries are equipped is constructed with a dual capacity. Only the CF-104, which we have has been so constructed that it is only capable of delivering nuclear warheads. I believe this is a fact. If it is, can the minister explain why?

Mr. Hellyer: As I was saying, although the CF-104 was designed specifically for the strike role, it does have this capability of being easily adapted to a number of roles without need for major modification. The capacity is built in so as to give considerable flexibility. It really is not very different from the F-104G.

Mr. Laniel: I should like to address a question to the minister of defence. I should like the minister to tell the committee something about the recent reductions in the budget of his department and the trend toward the reduction of national defence spending. I congratulate him on these reductions because the hon. gentleman has taken positive action in this regard. I should like to know from the minister if the economizing in his department will at the same time eliminate the possibility of his officials making a study with regard to establishing compulsory service in this country. In this regard I want to refer to the suggestion I made to the minister on October 29, for which I received congratulations from many parts of my constituency and from other parts of Quebec, and especially from people in the educational field. I repeat what I said at that time, that I feel that the youth of this country really need some discipline and additional education, and therefore the minister and the department should make a study of this matter. Even having regard to the need to reduce the budget of the department, I think the minister and his officials should not put aside the possibility of looking into this matter. It is something that would be good for the young people of the country, would give them some discipline and at the same time provide a supplement to their education. After all, I am not so sure that it would cost the country so very much, having in mind what is spent in the fields of welfare and unemployment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I think I should comment upon some of the problems raised by the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel). My hon. friend said, among other things, that compulsory military service would complete the education of our young people. I wonder how the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry can justify the idea that it is up to the army to complete the education of young Canadians.

He also said that it would give them a sense of discipline. But what type of discipline would the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry want our youth to be taught? Military discipline or intellectual discipline?

If a man is to be judged according to a real scale of values, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry is wide of the mark; I feel that the best discipline that we can give our young people, is intellectual and moral discipline, which they can get in our vocational and training schools, rather than in the army.

Our educational system is not under the army's jurisdiction, though the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry would like it to be; that system is under provincial jurisdiction, and I protest against this new infringement, by the federal government of a provincial field, that of education.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I do not have the same gift as the hon. member for Lapointe for making fiery and colourful speeches and for getting all sentimental—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I feel it should be possible to bring forth solid arguments and to judge these arguments according to their real value, instead of trying to distract the house's attention by speaking of colour rather than of value.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, I think I should answer the hon. member for Lapointe. Listening to him, I soon found out that he had done very little or no military service—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I challenge the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry to prove what he just stated.

The Chairman: I should like to ask the member for Lapointe to give the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry a chance to finish his remarks.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I believe he has no right to make an allegation like the one he just made.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe has asked what additional education military service could give the young people in this country.

I wish to say to the hon. member for Lapointe and to all members of the house that if I am here today as a member of the federal parliament, I owe it largely to the army because the army gave me perhaps that additional education that our various institutions could not give me.

I acquired in the army a technique of work and things that I could not acquire in universities because they had not been put at my disposal. In the military service, I was able to complete my education. Moreover I learned what military discipline, individual discipline was but not necessarily the discipline which exists in the party to which the hon. member for Lapointe belongs.

Personally, I believe in military service, I know what it can bring to the young people. In fact, I received letters from educators, not only from my riding, but also from the city of Montreal—I could show you those letters—who simply congratulated me to adopt such a position in saying that today, young people need discipline and that they can, in the army, learn how to assume responsibilities.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I object to two allegations made by the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry. He said he had received in the army things that he could not get at the university. Mr. Chairman, I could not let pass without protesting that insult to our universities, because I think the universities of the province of Quebec can give—

The Chairman: Order. It seems that the discussion just started between two hon. members is not of a nature to advance the business of the committee and I would ask them to forget strictly educational matters to come back to item No. 1 now before us.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I am willing to co-operate in order to accelerate progress of the business of the house, but not at the expense of the honour and reputation of the universities of the province of Quebec which are equal to the task—

Mr. Lambert: Learn to have some self-discipline.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) is insulting the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) by attributing to him words he has never uttered. And I think that before lecturing anybody in this house, the hon. member for Lapointe should have the honesty to report faithfully the statements that were made.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, tomorrow's Hansard will report the words said tonight by the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry when he stated that he received in the army a training which he could not get at the university.

And I believe that tomorrow's Hansard will amply prove that the member really made the statement I pointed out.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The only thing I wish to have recorded in Hansard is that I want the hon. member for Lapointe to know I never had the opportunity to attend university. If he had listened, he would have understood what I said, that is I did not acquire at the university what I was able to acquire in the army, since my basic schooling did not permit me to attend university. But, the army has nevertheless enabled me to be elected to this house and to serve my country perhaps even better than the member for Lapointe.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to note the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry at last succeeded in explaining what he wanted to say. I agree it was complicated enough, but by keeping on trying, he finally succeeded.

However, I maintain my statement to the effect that education comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces and not the army, and that the suggestion to make military service compulsory is contrary to the democratic principles we all cherish in this country.

During the last war, I was not yet old enough for military service, but despite all this, I did not hesitate to register in the air cadet corps of my country and I acquired in that corps, not education, but the necessary training, that is the training required to help defend my country, if the war had lasted any longer. That is how I know whereof I speak, since I belonged, at an early age, to a military corps which was called the air cadets of Quebec, and this at the Jesuits' college in Quebec.

On the other hand, I think that each individual should be left free to decide. This service should not be imposed upon him, because that is against the democratic principles that we must try to impress upon our young people, instead of trying to impose military service on them or to have them enlist.

Mr. Chairman, those are the remarks I wanted to make about the comments of the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry, and I hope that, in future, the hon. member will think twice before speaking.

[Text]

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, may I say that I am sure everybody in this house is conscious of the fact the minister has taken a very searching look at defence. He has been assisted in this by members in all parts of the house who are, I am sure, aiming at precisely the same objectives, that is a more efficient contribution to the security of Canada and to our contributions to the alliance. There is only one thing I would ask the minister, and that is that in his search for economy, for a better role, he very carefully consider what can be done for Canada by those people who have given and who are prepared to give service in our militia.

There was a parade in my riding recently at which almost 100 per cent of the Brockville Rifles turned out. These militiamen have been giving hundreds of hours of their time to their country. They have been closely following the proceedings of the defence committee and every statement that has been made by the minister.

The Chairman: Order; may I bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that there are conversations going on in the committee which make it difficult for the Chair to follow the speech now being made.

Mr. Matheson: May I say that these militiamen have been trying to follow intelligently what has been happening. They recognize the high priority of the needs of their fellow Canadians who are serving in the brigade in Europe, in the air force and at sea. They know we have to have new equipment. They know there have to be economies. I am sure this regiment is typical of many regiments across the country, and many hon. members could contribute in relation to their constituencies in the way I am tonight in relation to mine. This regiment has signed a document indicating that 100 per cent of the membership is prepared to continue serving in the regiment without any pay whatsoever. They care very much indeed about the future of the militia.

I know the minister right now is taking the best advice he can get from various sources. I would ask him to consider that the advice he is getting from the service chiefs is, of necessity, placing a high priority on the active forces. These men, who have to choose where cuts may be made in order to replace equipment, do not always find it possible to give the same attention to some factors that they would if the same pressures for economies were not upon them. They cannot now assess the role of the militia as dispassionately and objectively as they otherwise might.

We have had evidence from very distinguished officers such as General Foulkes and General Simonds, both of whom indicated the militia played an important part in the security of Canada. I hope that amongst the people who might be appointed to assist the minister in this advisory capacity there might be a very distinguished soldier, Brigadier Eric Snow, now of Toronto. He has had a lot of experience in action and with the militia. I believe he is the kind of person who will help, because when we are approaching the 100th birthday of Canada I am sure it would be a great tragedy if the militia just disappeared. I am sure the defence committee has not had a chance to go into this matter carefully. I think the minister, with the pressures upon him, has not had a chance to consider this matter with sufficient care.

I am not asking him to make any statement at this time; it would be premature to express a view on this problem. However, some of these militiamen care greatly about Canada and want to play a part in its security. I hope that they will not just go down the drain.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to support what the hon. member for Leeds has said. My whole purpose two weeks ago in declining to pass the estimates then was to give the minister an opportunity to review the situation with regard to the militia and the reserve units of the air force and navy. I was under the impression at the time he made that announcement about cutting the militia almost in half that he was acting rather prematurely. The very fact a person objects to that type of reorganization does not mean that a person is not in favour of reducing expenditures. Of course, the pundits put it the other way around and say that because we object to something the minister has done we are not in favour of reducing these expenditures. This is not the case at all. I imagine the hon. member for Leeds, who has spoken so eloquently about the militia, is just as much in favour of making reductions in defence expenditures as any member in this house. So am I. Surely it is our privilege to suggest to the minister that he re-examine this particular aspect of it and effect the reductions which he requires somewhere else. Let the defence committee assist him in this matter. Had we known that he was going to slice the militia we would most certainly have examined this aspect with great care. We would have had many witnesses there to talk to us. We had no knowledge of this at all until the minister announced it in the house.

The hon. member for Leeds has put forward the case with regard to militia, and the service they give to their country. The minister based part of his argument on the fact the militia is used for general mobilization and that the next war is not going to be like 1914 or 1939. He attempted to leave the impression that I was still thinking in the past. I believe my thinking is away ahead of the minister's. Having served in the militia and in both of these wars, I know very well the militia is not the foundation for general mobilization. How nonsensical to say that 50,000 men in the militia constitutes general mobilization. It is just nonsense. Nowadays we have manning depots for recruiting purposes and for processing people into the service. Having organized and commanded one of these manning depots since the second world war, I know what I am talking about. To say that the present formation of the militia is based in terms of the last world war where great masses of infantry were required is not to understand the facts of history.

In the first world war all sorts of regiments and battalions were organized without a militia foundation whatever. The same is true of the second world war; that is just nonsense. The militia serves a purpose in giving an opportunity to our young men to gain military service. Military service is useful in a young man's life and you do learn things in military service that you do not learn in universities. I have had both experiences. I suggest to the minister that he have another look at this.

I am not overlooking the fact that from time to time the militia of this country has been reorganized. Of course it has. In the period of the '30's a great number of cavalry regiments were disbanded and amalgamations took place. If I had had any influence in the thirties, tank regiments would have been formed. But the thinking of the hierarchy in those days was against anything as modern as a tank. Yet I owe my life to the fact that a tank was present in the first world war. That is how experience influences your thinking. In the '30's the hierarchy was not up to the times. We do not want to be in that position in the '60's. We do not want to be away behind the times, having people in uniform doing jobs for which they are not suited in some future war.

I am prepared to go along with the minister, that the next war is not likely to be one of mass infantry actions, as were the first and second world wars. I am also prepared to go along with the minister that our active forces should be instantly ready for action and properly equipped. Incidentally, I hope the minister will correct Time magazine, which has misquoted him saying that our army is now the best dressed, etc., and the poorest equipped. The minister corrected it in the house, but the Time magazine writer failed to notice that correction.

I am prepared to go along with the minister with regard to the active forces. Behind the active forces, reserve forces are essential. People do move from the reserves to the active forces, and people who retire from the active forces sometimes serve in the reserves. This is true of the army, navy and air force. These reserve forces have some influence on the cadets. There are some changes that may be required; but let us look at them first. To cut the militia in half is to destroy the morale of the militia. I ask for a pause with regard to this proposal.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, let me say this. This was the point raised when we talked about this matter before and I asked the minister about the role of the militia in survival operations in civil defence. I was disappointed that he brushed me off and said this matter would be explained when emergency measures operations were under discussion in the house. Then he said the whole plan apparently had to be revised because the 265 columns for re-entry, and so on, are either badly placed or are not required in that number. I suggest to the minister that in addition to the work he has to do and the responsibility that rests upon him to make preparation through the services for a thermo-nuclear war, which is the worst of all, for a so-called conventional war and to make preparation for the work that we do with the United Nations, he still has this other job. That is the protection of the civilian population in case another war breaks out. If we are subjected to destruction in Canada by either conventional bombs as used in Europe or thermo-nuclear bombs, such as were used at Hiroshima, then we do need trained, organized, disciplined forces to assist the survivors. I do not know how that could be done except through the assistance of the regular forces and the militia forces that happen to be available in Canada, because people who have training, and understand organization, can assist the willing civilians to do the jobs that are required.

I fail to see how this type of work of survival operations can be carried out by just a civilian organization, because in time of emergency you have to have discipline. The serviceman is disciplined and understands the necessity of obeying orders, whereas the civilian does not have to obey orders. In times of great emergency a firm hand must be used and people must do what they are told. This is the result you get from service people. So, Mr. Chairman, may I join with the hon. member for Leeds in pleading with the minister to postpone his too drastic action with regard to the militia and the reserve units of this country.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have just a brief question for the minister. It would appear to me that the press and some others have interpreted the minister's recent announcements with regard to defence as reductions in the ultimate expenditures. I would like the minister to clarify that situation and let us know if the result will indeed be a reduction in expenditures or whether it is rather a change of emphasis in the direction of our defence program.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister one question. He may have dealt with this matter already, but I have not the information. Would the minister tell the committee what is planned in connection with navy league cadets, sea cadets and air force cadets, young soldier programs in the militia. Finally, would he tell the committee what will be done with the training divisions at the universities and with regard to training ships such as those in Hamilton, Vancouver and Edmonton—particularly in Edmonton, where H.M.C.S. Nonsuch has been eliminated. What is to happen to the training division of the University of Alberta?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, the details of this are being worked out at the present time. There is no reduction in the allowance for the training of cadets. There was, as I announced on the second day of the debate, a reduction proposed for the future of about 50 per cent of the allowance for the university contingents. How and where the cadets can be housed, however, is a question which will have to be given detailed study. Just as soon as plans are complete, I will be glad to make the hon. gentleman aware of them.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I did not enter the chamber until about half an hour after the minister started his speech. He may have dealt with this matter, but perhaps he did not. I would like to ask the minister if, as Minister of National Defence, he can in any way take this house into his confidence and give us some indication as to any proposals he may have made to the NATO council as to the role of Canada's armed forces within the operations of NATO.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I think I did give the committee all the information that I can give at this time in that respect. There were no new proposals put forward to the council beyond the readjustment of the air division, which was referred to previously.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: In the absence of the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Guay), who should take interest in this situation, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, in connection with the low level of employment in the Canadian shipyards and especially in those of Lauzon.

Could the minister tell us whether the contract relating to the building of three submarines, which was awarded to shipyards in Great Britain, was awarded for economic or for technical reasons?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, the answer to this question has been given a number of times in the house. It was a production sharing arrangement which was really commenced by the previous government and which this government decided to carry on. It does not actually involve a loss of employment to Canada. What it does mean is a shift in employment from one industry to another. This has a detrimental effect in one area and a beneficial effect in another. In order to alleviate the situation temporarily, the government has already announced a shipbuilding program in the civilian field. Beyond that, the Department of National Defence has indicated that it will resume its shipbuilding program just as soon as it possibly can, following certain studies which are now being carried out. The shipbuilding program will be a Canadian program, and the future requirements of the Royal Canadian Navy will be built in Canadian shipyards.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the minister answer my question?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think I am at liberty to give the proposed estimates of our department for next year, but in the debate a week ago I said it was our intention to hold expenditures at about the current level and at the same time have a change of emphasis, to shift some of our expenditures from operations and maintenance to capital, to permit more research development and construction of new equipment.

Mr. Nasserden: Am I right in assuming we could not expect a reduction in expenditures, but just a change of emphasis?

Mr. Hellyer: That depends. A reduction from what? What is your starting point?

Mr. More: We all sympathize with the minister in the job he has to do and we realize adjustments and re-evaluation of programs are necessary, but I know that during the past three years the Saskatchewan area command has a new morale compared with its previous low morale, which resulted from an unfortunate situation that developed in previous years when the militia were somewhat downgraded. There has been a considerable pick up in the last three or four years. We are all proud of the new esprit de corps and the revitalization of the area command, our militia unit, and H.M.C.S. Queen which has given service for 40 years.

Among many people there has been great concern that the minister's initial announcement was too hasty and the evolution of the new program was not considered fully. I believe the minister has received some representations from Regina, and I wonder has he replied promising reconsideration, especially with regard to H.M.C.S. Queen?

Mr. Hellyer: I have not given any specific undertakings. What I have suggested is that this does not mean the end to the militia. Quite the contrary. Although we will have a smaller reserve force I am sure it will be a more effective force. I am sure there is general agreement that though at the moment we have quite a large number of units, some rethinking as to the number of units and the groupings should be undertaken.

That is the reason we are seeking assistance in this case from militiamen who know the history, effectiveness and capabilities of the militia units. We will indicate to them what we need, the requirements we have for reserve forces, what they are to undertake and what their responsibilities will be. Then we will expect them to assist us by making recommendations for reorganization which will provide effective reserve units to carry out the tasks which would be theirs. Although this will mean a reduction in the numbers, I am sure the total force if anything will be more effective.

Mr. More: Is any reconsideration being given to the announcement that H.M.C.S. Queen would be closed completely and abandoned?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think it has been reconsidered.

Mr. Winch: This is a department which concerns our party very much, but in view of the fact that the minister is taking a completely new look at all aspects of the armed services, that he has announced he will be bringing down a white paper early next year, that the special committee on defence has filed an interim report and hopes to be able to continue its studies next session, so far as I am concerned I have no more to say at this stage; but I want it clearly understood that this is on the basis of the white paper, the interim report, and the continuation of the study by the defence committee.

Mr. Churchill: I do not have very much more to say but I am surprised the minister is so assured his proposed reorganization of the militia is the right thing. He tells us the militia force will be cut in half, and then the militia officers will be called together to inform him whose throat is to be cut and which regiment. He says he is convinced we will have a much more efficient operation, but there is no evidence on which to base this point of view. I would like to ask the minister, who perhaps has not been associated with the militia—I am not sure—what happens if you cut the militia down to half size? Will the militia units only be in the big cities? What about all the smaller villages and towns from which have been drawn some of the best fighting men in Canadian history?

I could give many an instance of the work that has been done by militiamen and by retired soldiers. I can tell him of a retired naval chap who worked with the reserve army for years in an area in Manitoba which has produced, on a percentage basis, more men for the services than any other part of Canada. The reserve force was essential in order to give the young men something to do. If the forces are to be cut in half, will they be located in the big cities, or outside them in smaller places? It seems to me this cannot be done. We are talking in terms of 50,000 men scattered across 10 provinces, and that is a very small percentage of the population.

Like the hon. member for Leeds I wonder whether the minister has been listening to some people who scoff at the militia and think of them as "Saturday night soldiers," as they were described in a recent Time article. The Saturday night soldiers have given every whit as good service in times of emergency as others.

Has the minister been talking to some regular officers who are a bit irritated with the duties revolving upon them because of the militia? I have been all through this, and I understand the thinking of some people in the regular services who find it a bit troublesome working with a militia unit. From what source is he getting his advice. He cannot expect us to accept his assurance that this plan will provide a more efficient and better reserve force. That is not logical and I suggest he put a stop order on the so-called reorganization of the militia and the reserve units.

Let him give this problem to the defence committee for study, if that committee is reconstituted next session. It is too easy to write off the militia, and I speak from experience. I recall in 1938 when the crisis was almost upon us, at the time of Munich, a friend of mine said, "Now, you fellows who have been playing at soldiers, here is your chance." That was the way some civilians looked at the people who were in the militia. Our chance came one year later in 1939. They were Saturday night soldiers, says someone who I bet has never served in uniform. No one who had served in uniform would speak so disparagingly of the militia of this country. These people who have not given service say: "Well, these are just social clubs". Mr. Chairman. you can spend three nights a week in militia, as I have done year after year. That is why I did not become a first-class curler in the wintertime, because I spent three nights a week for many years on militia work. That was no social club activity. That was not being a Saturday night soldier. It was attempting to do something for our country, and a great many other people across the land did the same thing. I did not do anything of any special importance; others have done much more.

The militia of this country has never been properly recognized, and I think the minister has taken the wrong advice on this matter. However, I want to save him for another day. Let us save him for some other larger problems which we can quarrel over more effectively. Let us not quarrel over the militia.

Let the minister recognize the militia as the force it is in this country, and keep it in being, with certain modifications of course, without slicing it in half. What has disturbed us over the minister's action is the tremendous slice cut out of the militia. If it had been a proposed reorganization plan with a smaller percentage cut it would be different; but to cut the amount almost in half I think is disturbing and, I say seriously, is very unwise.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, about the radar station in my riding. I am duty bound to intervene, because I have received from almost all the municipal councils to be found in the constituency of Lotbiniere a resolution stressing the importance of maintaining the radar station in St. Sylvestre. The chief reason for doing so is that the 80 civil servants who are working there would be laid off if the station were to be closed.

Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favour of defence cutbacks. In this regard, I must pay special tribute to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) for acting the way he did.

However, I do not think it is expedient to close the radar station unless air detection has made such progress that it is no longer needed. If the rumours going around are true, then I believe it is my duty to urge the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) and the Minister of National Defence to see that none of those employees will be laid off and that the station is not closed before jobs have been found for those people.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have one comment before leaving this item. It arises from the reply given by the minister. I hope that our civil defence program is not to be crippled so as to acquire high-priced hardware. When you take into consideration the situation in the world today, you cannot do justice to the subject at this time. In view of the state of the session I do not want to say anything more. However, I do want to leave that thought with the minister if he is bringing forward new programs.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, if you will just permit me before we go on to the next item of business I should like to thank the committee for its co-operation not only today but during the two earlier days of debate. I was very pleased with the quality of the debate. I found it very interesting and helpful and I think it reflected the study given of the matter by the special committee on defence. While I am mentioning the special committee on defence, I should just like to compliment that committee, the members of it individually and collectively, on the excellent report which they presented to the house today. They have obviously taken their task very seriously and worked assiduously in order to come up with a consensus which I believe represents a very good judgment of the evidence and the opinions put before them.

While I was in Europe last week I received only the highest praise and compliments, not only for the deportment of the committee when visiting Europe but also for the way they attacked their tasks and the intelligent and searching questions which they put forward. There is no question that over the past few years there has been a considerable amount of emotionalism regarding defence problems in this country. The report of the committee today represents, in my opinion, a tendency or trend toward, a non-partisan or multi-partisan approach to defence probblems. I think this is a most rewarding development. It was well worth the effort, because in my opinion defence is much too serious a business to be the subject of political footballing. I was very pleased to see the report and I congratulate the committee on their work. I am sure that, if the committee is reconstituted in the next session, it will carry on with many of the worth-while studies it has undertaken during this session.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

120. Railway employees' provident fund—to supplement pension allowances under the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund Act so as to make the minimum allowance payable in the calendar year 1963 $30 per month instead of $20 per month as fixed by the said act, $7,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the last time we were dealing with the estimates of the Department of Transport I had a few subjects on which I wanted the minister to comment. Certain items were allowed to stand in order that he might be able to speak to us on these particular subjects. Item 120, I think the minister indicated, was an appropriate item under which he would deal with the question of necessary improvements in pensions of retired employees of the Canadian National Railways, and I hope the minister is ready with an appropriate statement on this subject tonight.

The minister knows that members of all parties in the house have for many years raised questions regarding the pensions of Canadien National Railways employees. We are all aware of the fact that about a year and a half ago some very significant improvements were made in the pension plan so far as those still in service were concerned. I am raising this question because I want an answer from the minister and I do not see any point in talking if other people are talking to him over there.

Mr. Churchill: Which minister?

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Transport.

An hon. Member: He is listening, now.

Mr. Knowles: Good. The point I was trying to make is that improvements in the pensions paid by the Canadian National Railways were made in the early part of 1962 by a revision of the plan, as far as those still in the company's service are concerned. But no improvements have been made affecting those who retired before April 1, 1962.

A few years ago, whenever we argued in favour of improving the pensions of employees of the C.N.R. or of retired civil servants, or of any group of people who had already retired, we were met with the argument that there had been a contractual arrangement and nothing could be done. But, as the minister knows, improvements have been made in the pensions of retired civil servants. Some of us think it is about time that these improvements were brought up to date; but at least the principle has been established. Some private employers have also recognized this problem and made increases in the pensions of employees already retired. The minister knows that there has been a great deal of correspondence about this subject throughout the years. Some of us feel it has been most unfortunate that these men who served the company for many years should not be getting the benefit of the higher standard of living and the higher standard of pensions which is now more general. Just as the company in co-operation with the government was able to meet the needs of those still in the service of the railway, I hope the government and the railway will find a way to deal with the pensions of those who retired prior to April 1, 1962.

The minister knows, because we have both been in this house for a good many years, that sometimes when I have made this plea I have trotted out the statistics which the minister of the day has put on record in Hansard in response to my questions. Those statistics indicate the number of retired railway workers who receive pensions and the amounts of pension they receive. Certainly, the number who receive pensions at a very low figure is altogether too high. I know this can be explained. In fact, in the tables which are given in Hansard there is usually a footnote explaining them. The fact remains that these faithful servants of bygone years are among those who have been overlooked with regard to the improvements which have been made for retired people generally. I hope we can hear from the minister on this important subject, and maybe tonight he will have something encouraging to tell the committee with regard to it.

Mr. McIlraith: As the hon. member has correctly stated, this subject was dealt with about a year and a half ago. As a result, those who are still employed are in a much better position with regard to their pensions. But the people who are of concern to the hon. member are those who retired before, and I take it he is concerned to know whether or not the government has any measure to bring forward at this time or in the immediate future which would better their conditions. I do not think this is an oversimplification of the hon. member's submission.

I want to tell him it is quite wrong of him to say that these persons have been overlooked. At the time I am not able to give the hon. member any helpful information with respect to them. It is a complicated question. It means providing, from one side only, funds out of which to pay the additional pensions. It involves, by inference, raising the pensions of all others as well. It would involve the railways bringing a plan forward. I assume, bearing in mind the operational requirements of the railways and the desirability of keeping costs down, that it would involve looking to the government for the funds from which to pay the increases suggested and I regret to tell the hon. member I am not able to give him any encouraging news at the moment.

Mr. Knowles: In view of the minister's statement that he has no encouraging news to give the committee on this subject I wonder what he means by saying that these retired employees have not been overlooked. It seems to me they have been overlooked and are still being overlooked.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not my understanding of the language. What it means is that this question has been getting attention. It has been studied. As I may have put on record —or perhaps it was something I said in private conversation—this very subject is receiving some study now and I hope to have these studies continued with a view to seeing whether something could be done. But there is nothing of a definite nature which I can say which would be helpful, and I am one who does not believe in trying to create a more favourable picture than that which actually exists.

Mr. Knowles: If the minister had only said that the matter was being studied I suppose we could take some hope out of it, but when he adds those words about nothing definite being under consideration it is a bleak prospect for the people concerned. I do not think it is enough to say that this is a complicated business, that it involves finding the money, and so on. I have already reminded the hon. gentleman of what had been done for retired civil servants up to a certain point in time. This was done on the basis of a formula worked out, although it had been said year after year that it was a complicated matter and that it could not be dealt with. I would remind him that the item under which we are having this discussion, an item which has been in the estimates for many years, provides for a supplement to the pensions of employees who came under the old Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees Provident Fund Act—pensions which according to that original act were very low. Yet some of these people are still alive, and it was recognized, on an ex gratia basis if you will, that they were entitled to something better.

And so a method was found. This item decreases year by year as these men advance in years and leave us. However, there are these several examples of a way being found when there is a will to find it. The minister says he has no good news to give me or the men concerned, but I hope the little sentence he put in about the matter being studied is one which will be stepped up. He must know from experience that some of us, when we feel we have a case that is just, do not let go. It is not just a case of making the same request year after year for the sake of hearing ourselves talk. It is also because we are aware of the fact that some of these cases that for 10 or 15 or 20 years we thought we could never win have eventually been won. I believe that the retired Canadian National employees who are asking that something be done for them have a just cause, and I hope the minister will step up the study or, to use the modern phrase, that he will do a study in depth and find a way to deal with the complications and to get the money, so that these retired faithful servants of the Canadian National Railways may enjoy the pension standards that are possible today.

Item agreed to.

140. Control of civil aviation including the administration of the Aeronautics Act and regulations issued thereunder, $5,211,100.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I just have one or two brief questions to ask the minister on this vote. They concern the matter of sums to be repaid to international air lines as a result of the withdrawal of the government's suit against Pan American and KLM in connection with overflight charges that were made. Would the minister inform the committee what the total amount of repayments to the international air lines was, and would he also indicate specifically the amounts repaid to each of the air lines concerned?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, it is not possible to give that information because the precise amounts have not been calculated. This is an individual matter that has to be worked out with each air line, and because of the effect of allowances for other charges and so on the information is just not available yet. In any event, I can tell the hon. member that the total amount is something over $1 million.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is entitled to more specific information than that. As I understand government accounting procedures, moneys received by the government are accounted for properly. Receipts are issued upon the receipt of any sums by the department, and proper bookkeeping entries are made. Therefore it should not be difficult at all to determine immediately what amount is owing to each of the international air lines concerned. The reason I raise the question is that I doubt very much whether the minister knows.

Mr. McIlraith: He does.

Mr. Nielsen: If the minister knows, surely he can inform the committee what amounts are due and owing to the air lines involved.

Mr. McIlraith: I can only repeat that with the way the various charges applicable to air lines of this type are set out there may be deductions, in that when one charge is paid another one does not become payable and so on. The consequence is that you have to take each air line individually, get their flight statements and then re-account for a whole series of charges on each flight statement and arrive at the amount. This is now in the course of being worked out with the individual air lines. This being so, it is not possible to give the precise amount because it has not been determined by the department or, indeed, by the air lines themselves; but the best estimate I can give of the total amount to be repaid is a little over $1 million.

Mr. Nielsen: I still feel that the committee is entitled to a more satisfactory reply than the minister has given. If the minister knows the total amount of moneys that have been paid by these international air lines it should not be difficult at all to delineate specifically the exact sums which are due to be returned to these international air lines as a result of the withdrawal of the suits against the two concerned. I believe the department does not know at all the precise amounts that are owing to the air lines. I believe further that the departmental officials—I was going to say the minister but perhaps it happened before his time—actually had to communicate with the air lines concerned to ask them how much money they had paid in. In other words, the government had to rely on the bookkeeping of the air lines in order to determine the amounts that were owing.

I am sure the committee would be very pleased to have the minister's reassurance that this was not the case. In any event, government accounting procedures surely are sufficiently precise to allow the minister to give a specific answer to this question, because this business of paying money in and paying money out as explained by the minister does not get around the fact that ordinary acceptable bookkeeping practices should be sufficiently accurate to allow the minister to state with precision the exact amounts that are owing to the air lines concerned.

Mr. McIlraith: As I indicated earlier, certain charges are not made where overflight charges have been made. For instance, a landing fee is not payable. Therefore you have to recompute the charge made on each flight. Each one has to be recomputed. What has been done represents a little more care in the accounting and bookkeeping system than the standard the hon. member is seeking to have imposed, in that the government sought to check and cross-check every figure with the companies concerned so there would be no dispute afterwards. In effect you have full knowledge, because you have the benefit of the cross-check. That is why the companies were asked for that information and I think it is the correct way to proceed in the matter. That is what I meant to indicate.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the minister saying that the department actually communicated with the air lines concerned in order to ask them how much they had paid to the department in respect of these overflight charges?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Chairman, but the department did communicate with each air line to cross-check their records.

Mr. Nielsen: On this point I wonder whether the minister communicated with Trans-Canada Air Lines for the same purpose, in order to determine whether or not the figures that the minister mentioned were accurate with respect to that international air line?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. McIlraith: In the case of every trans-Canada flight, they were landing in Canada so it would not be necessary with them.

Mr. Nielsen: Am I to take it that Trans-Canada Air Lines as an international carrier paid no overflight fees at all under the Financial Administration Act which authorized the charging of fees against two international air lines using Canadian air space, and air space under Canadian jurisdiction?

Mr. McIlraith: That statement I believe to be correct. It is possible there could have been a flight or two but I believe the statement to be correct.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have to reiterate that the members of this group have always been strong supporters of Trans-Canada Air Lines. We have always believed that the best air transportation system in Canada should be publicly owned. We certainly opposed the decision of the former government to permit C.P.A. to operate a transcontinental run, a decision which has since caused T.C.A. financial difficulties. It is with a good deal of regret, therefore, that I want to say that some of us are, to say the least, very unhappy about the leadership that T.C.A. is getting from its present chief officers. We do not like to criticize the detailed operations of a crown corporation. I am not rising to complain about Mr. McGregor just because I disagree with a decision he obviously made some years ago that the head office and most of the operations of T.C.A. which had been in Winnipeg should be moved to Montreal.

If Mr. McGregor had had the approval of his board of directors, if he had so reported to the government and to the minister in charge, and the minister had reported to parliament and had received approval for this transfer, even though it was and is a real blow to the city of Winnipeg, I would not now be complaining. The fact is that on innumerable occasions Mr. McGregor speaking for T.C.A., as well as the ministers in charge—

The Chairman: Order. May I bring to the attention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North that I have very serious doubts as to whether he can go into the detailed operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines on particular points which would normally be considered by the special committee on railways, air lines and shipping operated by the government. I have not interrupted the hon. member, but perhaps he could make his point briefly. I think his remarks should be directed to the vote which is now before the committee.

Mr. Knowles: In so far as the point you have raised is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Minister of Transport will recall that when we had the first item of these estimates before us there was a desire to get the first item approved, and to get as many other items through as we could. Some of us identified the subjects we desired to discuss and asked that items be designated on which we could discuss them. I have dealt with the Canadian National pensions under the item agreed upon for that subject. It was agreed also that we would discuss the T.C.A. base at Winnipeg on the general item of the civil aviation branch. I think, Mr. Chairman, your ruling is technically correct, but we had this agreement the other night, the last time the estimates of this department were before us.

The Chairman: If that is the wish of the committee, of course the Chair is satisfied.

Mr. Orlikow: I was saying that if this decision of T.C.A. to move the major facilities from Winnipeg to Montreal had been made years ago, and had been approved by parliament, I would not be objecting. As I said, the fact that the decision had been made has been denied consistently. As long ago as 1948 questions were asked about the possibility of this move of T.C.A.'s head office from Winnipeg to Montreal. The minister then in charge, the late C. D. Howe, made it very clear T.C.A. had no intention of moving its main departments from Winnipeg. I was not here when Mr. Howe was minister, but I have heard enough about him and read enough to know that he was a pretty strong minister. If it had been recommended to him by T.C.A. that the headquarters should be moved, if the case had been proved to him, he would have so reported to the house. I do not believe for a moment, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Howe would have said in 1948 that there was no intention to do this, if the decision had been made and he had known about it.

At that time Mr. Howe said that while some head office departments might be moved, 95 per cent of the company's activities would remain centered in Winnipeg. A few months later, following further rumours that T.C.A. would move its main overhaul base to Montreal, Mr. Gordon McGregor, then as now T.C.A. president, said that some executive staff might move but the overhaul base would stay. In 1949, Mr. McGregor announced that the administrative offices and operations department of T.C.A. would move to Montreal in the fall. He said, and I quote:

> —there is no conceivable reason nor any grounds for suspicion that this move marks the beginning of a mass transfer of T.C.A. activities to Montreal.

Later that year Mr. Howe said that T.C.A. did not contemplate making further transfers of personnel from Winnipeg to other centres. In October, 1951, T.C.A. transferred radio technicians to Montreal. In the same month a T.C.A. official said there was never any suggestion that the mechanical operations of the company would be moved from Winnipeg and that the city would continue to house the system's only complete repair system. In February, 1956, T.C.A. announced that it was dropping major overhaul work on aircraft radio equipment in Winnipeg, and that the staff had been offered transfers to Montreal where the work was to be centralized.

A few months later Mr. McGregor denied that the company was about to consolidate its two repair depots at Montreal and Winnipeg into one unit. In September, 1957, T.C.A. officials denied rumours that the overhaul base was to be moved from Winnipeg. Mr. McGregor assured T.C.A. employees in Winnipeg that operations in the city would not be curtailed as new operations were introduced. In October 1958 a T.C.A. official announced that in 1960 T.C.A. would move another 100 of its Winnipeg based workers to Montreal. This was the instrument shop.

In January, 1961, Mr. Hees, then the minister in charge, wrote a letter to the Manitoba government to the effect that the overhaul base in Winnipeg would be closed in 1965 or shortly thereafter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in January of this year, I think it was, the people of Manitoba sent a delegation to see the government. The then minister, Mr. Balcer, assured them that a study would be made and that in the meantime there would be a job freeze as far as Winnipeg was concerned. During the election campaign the present Prime Minister made certain statements. I am not going to go into them tonight because we can debate them at some other time. These statements were taken by everybody in Winnipeg, including the Liberal candidate in the last federal election, and the Winnipeg Free Press, as a commitment that Winnipeg would remain the major overhaul base for T.C.A. I believe that in June another delegation from Manitoba came to see the Prime Minister and he gave the same assurance. The other day the Prime Minister reiterated the same kind of thing in a statement to another delegation.

The overhaul base at present is overhauling the Viscount and Vanguard planes which, as soon as T.C.A. switches to medium jets, will no longer be used. Obviously, then, the base will have to be closed. The interesting thing, and the obvious thing is that since January, when supposedly we were to have a job freeze promised by the former government, and which I take it is still in effect because this government has not repudiated it, 200 workers at the overhaul base have been transferred to Montreal. There are now 200 jobs less in Winnipeg than there were in January. I do not think this is an accident. I think this is part of a deliberate plan made by Mr. McGregor of T.C.A. back in the late forties. If T.C.A. had given reasons for this decision at that time, I might have disagreed with it, but I would not be objecting now.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this has been done by stealth, with deliberate misrepresentation by Mr. McGregor. When I say that I want to say that I speak for every group in Winnipeg, every political party, every trade union and every business organization in Manitoba. Indeed, I can honestly say I have never seen such united feeling on any issue as I have on this. In my opinion, when the head of a crown corporation misrepresents the facts as Mr. McGregor has, when he hides important matters from the people who hired him, because after all T.C.A. belongs to the people of Canada, that man has outlived his usefulness. Mr. Chairman, I think it is time the government gave serious consideration to getting a new president for T.C.A.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, since item 140 refers to civil aviation, as a member of this house, I should like to call the Minister of Transport's attention to an important point.

I would like to know whether the Minister of Transport, who is responsible after all for civil aviation and its related branches in Canada, or his departmental officials, makes investigations and experiments in order to develop a true aeronautics industry in Canada.

This is a question of current interest, since T.C.A. has purchased or will purchase over a rather brief period about 30 rather large aircraft as well as medium range jets.

There is then good ground to ask ourselves whether a crown corporation directly coming under the Department of Transport and with the assistance of other departments of the government and with all our engineers, technicians, labourers, could not have promoted the permanent establishment of such an important industry in our country, such as the aeronautics industry? Is the government taking the necessary steps to achieve that purpose?

It is noted that T.C.A. has chosen an aircraft, a very unimportant part of which furthermore will be manufactured in Canada, while this opportunity could have been used to undertake the development of a complete aeronautics industry.

We feel that the Minister of Transport is to blame in that connection for failing to intervene and protect the interests of the Canadian people and to develop our aircraft industry.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

We put on the order paper a motion calling for the tabling of the report submitted by T.C.A. employees, engineers and experts concerning the choice of the new aircraft. Our request was turned down and the main argument used to justify the choice of the DC-9 is that its operation would be cheaper for T.C.A. It may well be; in fact, we are quite ready to admit it.

In that case, only T.C.A. would be making savings. Would it not have been possible to consider savings at other administrative levels? Would it not have been possible to prove that the savings made by T.C.A. could have resulted in much bigger savings for the country?

If you consider the question in general, the choice of the DC-9 means that T.C.A. will be buying an American aircraft. That is a serious business since our capital will be flowing out of the country at a time when our balance of payments is already unfavourable.

Had we been in a position to decrease the deficit balance of our international payments by that much, I am sure that the Minister of Finance, if he were here, would have been very glad. This is to say that we would have been able to make direct savings in that the balance of our deficit payments would have been reduced by that much. We would have thus had a certain profit which could have made up for the savings that T.C.A. has been able to make by purchasing the DC-9 aircraft.

The second factor is the fact that the DC-9 will be mostly built in the United States, while we could have built the Caravelle in Canada. This would have supplied work for many years to thousands of Canadians, and would have resulted in another saving, in that those workers pay income tax to the Canadian government.

Now as a third element; we must consider the expenses it would have saved the Canadian government, namely that the government would have avoided paying unemployment insurance or social assistance benefits to every one of those unemployed. It would already be a second source of savings that the Canadian government would have made on the whole.

It is a fact that when two Canadian workers are given jobs in industry, a third Canadian citizen finds employment in related spheres or in sales. That means that for every 2,000 Canadian citizens employed in the building of the Caravelle we would have 1,000 Canadian citizens employed in related fields of services or sales.

Then if we consider the salaries paid to Canadians, if we consider the taxes paid to the government by Canadians, if we consider unemployment insurance and social welfare, that the government does not have to pay if we consider the savings realized by the Minister of Finance in reducing our balance of payments, then we can realize that for the country as a whole, it might have been more profitable if Trans-Canada Air Lines had got these Caravelle aircrafts, even at a greater expense.

In my opinion, the Minister of Transport, as a responsible member of the federal cabinet, should have tabled this report and submit it to the members of the house and to the other members of the cabinet, in an attempt to find out whether, on the whole, it would not have been possible to save more money than by purchasing the DC-9.

All the more so since at the present time any industry could have developed. We could have trained technicians, skilled workers who could have created a Canadian aircraft industry. There is no doubt that would have helped our country to find new markets, new export outlets.

If we had wanted to study the problem, not only in the limited sense of technicians and experts, but adding to it a number of opinions, the views of our competent economists—at least those who are—we could have studied also the problem of industry and foreign trade as well as our balance of payments deficit. Those are all matters T.C.A. could have looked into.

The Minister of Transport has neither the character, nor the strength or competence required in that field to analyse all the related problems concerning the choice of an aircraft. In fact, he has not even shown the business ability which we expect to find not only with a director of a crown corporation but with a member of the cabinet of a country like Canada which is due to develop. Mr. Chairman, that is the point I wanted to bring up.

There is also another field in which the Minister of Transport must assume his part of responsibilities as he was sitting beside the president of T.C.A. when the latter made his statements on the Caravelle, the aircraft produced by the Sud-Aviation.

I have read the committee's report on that point. Sometimes I feel that the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), have some responsibilities in the matter, and that they must try and restore the harmony which should reign between two great countries like Canada and France, and between two large air companies like Canadair and Sud-Aviation.

I think that the minister should see to it that the necessary excuses are offered to the French people, who are a proud people and naturally keen about a plane like the Caravelle, which has been imitated by several other countries.

I hear the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) saying, ah! ah!; I feel sure that his constituents, many of whom will not be able to find jobs, because the member for Dollard did not have the courage to stand up and to demand that the Caravelle be built in Montreal—

Mr. Rouleau: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he know that the 5,800 employees of Canadair will hold their jobs for two more years because of the contracts awarded by the federal government?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the hon. member for Dollard has just said, but I never learned to be satisfied with little when I can get much more. If the hon. member for Dollard is satisfied with the minimum, his electors will judge him, but as far as I am concerned, I think that a country like Canada, in the full swing of 20th century development, cannot be satisfied with the minimum but should rather strive for continuous development and for increasingly accelerated progress. It is nice to be satisfied with the minimum, but the Canadian people need better members than that; they need members who want their country to have an aircraft industry as well as develop and prosper in all other fields.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, apologies should be tendered. I said also that we should get more information on those matters and above all inform the people because today they want to know what is behind all those things.

When, for instance, a report published about the Winnipeg base, which was mentioned in the house, says not only that this base must not be closed but should be kept in operation until 1973 and, a little later, it is said that an aircraft built in the United States must be purchased and the minister then refuses to consider instances and requests made to him in favour of another aircraft, we think there is one law for the rich and one for the poor.

If the minister had analysed the whole situation, not only on the basis of T.C.A. but on the basis rather of the general economy of the country, I am convinced that changes would have been made at that time and that we would have agreed to build an aircraft called Caravelle thus developing an aircraft industry here in our country which would have provided jobs for our people.

Mr. Chairman, I said earlier, when the hon. member for Dollard interrupted me, that we should offer apologies to the French people who are proud of their Caravelle which is today copied by several other aircraft designers in other countries, and among them the builders of the DC-9 who are using the same fundamental principles which was used by the French aircraft industry when it built its Caravelle and even its Super-Caravelle. The latter will be more technically advanced and will be put into service, not in ten years as has been claimed, but in 1964 as asserted by Sud-Aviation.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that those are important points which have not been taken into consideration lately and on which the cabinet did not try to get information. But I say that this must be a warning to the present cabinet, and that the facts must be put forth so that, when faced by a problem, it does not approach it in such a restricted sense but in a sense that embraces the whole economy and development of the country.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Before this item passes I want to ask the minister a question to which I hope he can give me a satisfactory answer. What considerations were given by T.C.A. to Transair in return for the latter company assuming responsibility for the so-called prairie milk run? The reason I ask the question is that, as most hon. members know, T.C.A. found the prairie milk run uneconomic and wanted to dispose of it. Transair offered to take it over and applied for the franchise.

I am told that the consideration given to Transair by T.C.A. consisted of a Viscount, two DC-3 aircraft, and about $500,000 worth of DC-3 aircraft parts, all for the nominal sum of $1. In the committee the president of T.C.A. said this was a good deal for T.C.A. because it was getting out of an uneconomic line. I am not quarrelling with the deal at all. The reason I am raising the question is that Transair, who got this very considerable reimbursement, has now applied to get out of the uneconomic parts of the prairie milk run, and under air transport board order No. 3784 of December 10, 1963, they are going to abandon the service from Regina, Swift Current, Medicine Hat and Calgary, effective January 11, 1964.

The point I am making is that this company got a very considerable compensation to assume a franchise on the prairies, and it would appear it is now welching on the agreement; that having got some consideration from T.C.A. it is now prepared to drop the uneconomic part of the run, retain the lucrative part of the operation, and still keep whatever consideration T.C.A. gave it. I am not blaming the minister. This did not come under him, but what I am asking is whether T.C.A. is going to recover any part of what was given to Transair, or is the air transport board going to take into consideration, when it reviews this matter, that this company not only applied for a franchise and got it, but got in addition a very considerable reimbursement in the form of the aircraft and the $500,000 worth of parts to which I have referred?

I would like to ask the minister what consideration was given? Is the consideration I have outlined an accurate one, and what steps is the government going to take to make sure that Transair, having accepted this consideration, is not now going to be allowed to welch on its agreement and discontinue the service which it undertook to operate when it applied for the franchise and took this consideration from T.C.A.?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speak for too long—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Balcer:—in view of the enthusiastic reception I am getting from my hon. friends opposite, I shall stretch my comments.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to refer to certain articles which have appeared in the press, especially one written by a talented young writer, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), concerning the dealings of the French ambassador to Canada. The Ottawa correspondent of the Winnipeg Free Press also wrote on the same subject.

Mr. Chairman, I believe everything the French ambassador did in this matter was right. I know that some people, like the hon. member for Port Arthur, were shocked because the ambassasor of another country tried to help one of his country's industries to secure a contract in Canada. In my opinion, there is absolutely nothing there that is not in keeping with the role of an ambassador and I would go as far as to say that all good ambassadors are guilty of the same crime. Besides, the duties of an ambassador have evolved considerably in past years, especially since we have international organizations, like the United Nations and NATO, and since communications between countries take place at the ministerial level when political questions are settled directly between governments.

In my opinion, the embassy in question accomplished its duty by trying to promote, quite strongly, I must admit, the sale of a national product. I have nothing to say against that and, moreover, I hope our Canadian ambassadors will do the same thing everywhere in the world, instead of just giving parties.

I may quote the example of one of our best ambassadors, Mr. Bull, who was ambassador at Tokyo. I recall that once every year he would give a party for all the bakers in the city of Tokyo, in order to promote the sale of good Canadian wheat. I suggest that this ambassador acted as a good Canadian and that he did not do anything not in keeping with his duties as an ambassador, even if he did not follow the old obsolete rules which may have had some purpose in the past. I believe that in doing what he did Mr. Bull played his role of a Canadian representative abroad.

Now, I should like to tell my hon. friend from Port Arthur that, instead of being shocked because a foreign ambassador behaves like a good citizen of his country, he should write another article, in that style of his we all marvel at, where he would encourage our own ambassadors to do the same.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. Can he explain, if this is good tactics—and I am not going to quarrel with that particular argument—why there was none of the propaganda in favour of the Caravelle put to the English speaking members of parliament? Does this not raise the issue that there is a possibility that the French ambassador, recognizing a particularly difficult situation in the country at this time, was deliberately exploiting the kind of spirit which is tending to divide us?

Mr. Balcer: The hon. member for Port Arthur was a member of the committee, as I was, and I think he was the one who asked, or was there when one of the members asked, the Minister of Transport whether he had received a visit from General Puget of Sud-Aviation. He asked the minister who was accompanying General Puget and the minister said that it was the French ambassador. The French ambassador addressed himself to the Minister of Transport. He was very friendly to the French Canadians, but he is not a French Canadian. I do not know about the different moves which have been made by the French ambassador, but I think that by addressing himself to the Minister of Transport he has done precisely what my hon. friend was trying to say that he did not do. I do not know everything that the French ambassador did, but I would not be at all scandalized if he tried to sell a product of his country. I hope our ambassadors will do this same thing, wherever they are in the world.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I will take only a few minutes to raise a couple of points. One arises out of the hearings of the committee dealing with T.C.A., wherein I found it a little dismaying to find that the Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto run is losing so much money. On this run aircraft are operating at a very satisfactory level of occupancy. The testimony before the committee indicated that under apparently ideal conditions of passenger traffic in the present aircraft, or on the DC19 which they are planning to buy, all we could look forward to is a further deficit on this run. Since the public will have to reimburse any deficit, what dismays me is that there was no testimony given to show what plans T.C.A. have to circumvent this problem. There was no suggestion of a new way to cut overhead.

By way of example, let me take the P.W.A. air bus between Edmonton and Calgary, on which run you merely walk on the plane and buy your passage on the aircraft. This might be more appropriate under item 145, dealing with ground handling, etc. It might also mean that T.C.A have some ideas which they did not reveal to the committee, although I wish they had said something about it.

So far as our last meeting was concerned, the situation seemed to be that with a satisfactory volume of traffic to create maximum efficiency, and with the aircraft of their choice, they cannot operate a run of that kind with anything but a deficit for some time to come in the future. The committee was left in this state, that there was no suggestion from T.C.A. that they had used any imagination as to different aircraft, a different manner of handling them, or any method of reducing ground handling costs or other costs, or whether the run should be taken over by a smaller air line with a smaller overhead. Perhaps that is the answer, but I want to inform the minister of the situation as it exists today.

It is not so bad where T.C.A. does provide a much needed service. It is not a case where they cannot get the passenger traffic. They have a very satisfactory passenger demand. In cases where planes are full but they are still losing money, obviously something more is needed. If T.C.A. have no more answers they had better find them, and I hope it is not a case of concealment from the committee.

Another point concerns Edmonton municipal airport, a matter I have raised before. The present situation is that half the traffic out of Edmonton use the new Niksu airport and half the old municipal airport, but the government is cutting off some assistance, less than $200,000 a year. If the municipal airport is cut down in this way the result to Edmonton is a loss of service. The planes now flying from the Nisku airport to Calgary are not giving as good a service as they used to give. We have made a very large investment, and if there is discouragement of air services at the municipal airport about 50 per cent of Edmonton's present air services are going to step down a grade again. I think that no one in authority would want to think that the immediate result of an investment of $30 million or more on a new airport is a reduction in air services. The proposed reduction of $200,000 a year is less than one half of the interest on the money invested. This seems to me a penny wise, pound foolish approach. If government expenditures on airports and air services are justified we must strive to get the most per dollar we can. I want to point out that the dollars which go the furthest and give the most in air services, and the most to Edmonton, Calgary and the entire north country as far as the Edmonton municipal airport is concerned, are those dollars now spent on the municipal airport at Edmonton. I ask the minister to reflect seriously before he cuts out this small amount of money and gives Edmonton a worse air service than it had before. At the moment, the only benefit we have is from the jets. Long range jets can land there. But most of the service at that airport has been poorer, and if the department continues its present policy the other half of the air service will deteriorate. The minister can stop this trend, if he wishes, by restoring the cut and making sure that Edmonton airport remains open and that we can have good service.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) concerning the statement made by the hon. gentleman for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher).

I think the French ambassador to Canada was duty-bound to take the necessary steps so that, if possible, T.C.A. would choose the Caravelle.

[Text]

I should like to direct a specific question to the Minister of Transport. I hope he will reply directly because otherwise we shall be obliged to spend two days on his estimates. I ask him if he shares the views expressed by Mr. McGregor as to the capacity of French Canadians to take their place in T.C.A.

Mr. More: I do not want to repeat what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has said with regard to Transair. There is, naturally, concern that they are abandoning this particular leg of this run on January 10. I understand they have the equipment, valued, according to some estimates, at $1 million or more. T.C.A. is reported to be losing $230,000 a year on serving this route. Transair has been serving the route for less than a year. Surely this company is not going to get out of the duty which it accepted to serve this run. I ask, what is the relationship between T.C.A.

and Transair Limited with regard to the ownership of this equipment, in view of the fact that they are getting out of the unprofitable portion of the run to serve the profitable portion of this run, and the service to the community is being denied.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I see that some people feel frustrated. Those who are not allowed by their whip to take part in the debate would like to prevent from speaking those who are free to do so. We shall give them the opportunity of getting rid of their complexes and to say what is on their minds in this house. It will do them good, I believe.

Reference was made earlier to the article written by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). Personally, I thought it was better not to mention it, because I have known for a long time that when the hon. member refers to something else than Maurice Richard and Lili St. Cyr, he talks nonsense.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) termed the whole thing as gossip and I think it was rather improper of him to do so, because hardly two days ago, he made so bold as to rave and gossip—

Mr. Balcer: Does the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Gregoire: Yes.

Mr. Balcer: Has the hon. member paid his $3,000?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I paid $1,671 in income tax to the federal government, and this is due to the bad administration under the Conservative government as well as under the Liberal government at the present time.

As for the rest, I say that the hon. member for Three Rivers has only gossiped just like his Conservative colleagues of the province of Quebec.

However, I wish to point out a fact. Several persons, among whom some newspapermen, have asked us whether pressures had been brought to bear on us or whether we had obtained some information from the French embassy about the Caravelle aircraft, or whether questions had been suggested that we should ask the president of T.C.A., and so on.

In view of the rumours abroad, I wanted to deny that we had ever been in touch, that any member of our group had ever been in touch with the French embassy, concerning the Caravelle or anything else for that matter, and that the embassy had brought pressure to bear on us.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, since there has been some mention in the last few minutes of the uneconomical flights operated by T.C.A. and in view of the fact that, this week, attention was drawn to the unfair competition on the part of this crown corporation which operates small uneconomical routes from one end of the country to the other, I should like to make a few remarks—

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member for Beauce permit me to interrupt him for a moment? It would appear to me that it is eleven o'clock and that we are unlikely to get this particular item through. Perhaps the committee, in the next thirty seconds, would consider dealing with the balance of the items in this department and we could hold over this particular item until tomorrow morning. I think that would create a better psychological situation. I do not intend to suggest that we should extend the time in order to do this.

Mr. Barnett: I think the minister is aware that I have a long anticipated date with him on one of the other items.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman object to the other items passing, except this one and the other with which he wants to deal.

Mr. Gregoire: The suggestion is that we should stand this item. Is that the proposal?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would appear to me now that the best thing to do is regard it as being eleven o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Peters: I should like to call it eleven o'clock and suggest to the committee that we meet tomorrow at ten rather than eleven and dispense with the question period. We could consider what would be done about the luncheon hour in the light of the progress being made and we would be in a better position to determine how long the session would go.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is a most constructive suggestion and I hope it will commend itself to all members of the committee. Perhaps when the Speaker is in the chair we could have an order made along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Timiskaming, that we meet at ten o'clock, dispense with the question period, go right into committee of supply and get on with our business.

Mr. Churchill: The only thing I think is wrong with that is the waiving of the question period. That is unsound. Something might happen in the interval. We do not object to sitting at ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Last night the hon. gentleman was ready to prorogue tonight, in which case there would have been no question period on Saturday, so we would be giving up something which, if his expectations had been realized, would not have existed. I suggest we accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Pigeon: If we want to complete these estimates it is important that the Minister of Transport should answer the direct question I put to him.

Mr. Herridge: Would the house consider a compromise and limit the question period to 30 minutes definite?

Mr. Pickersgill: Fifteen.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, surely we should waive the question period entirely. It is a Saturday and not a normal sitting day. There is not going to be too much press coverage come out of it anyway on a Saturday.

Mr. Churchill: There may not be very many answers come out of it either, but I think parliament exists as an institution which requires a question period. Thirty minutes as has been suggested is all right but let us not bargain everything away.

Mr. Pigeon: It is not a question of publicity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: We work for the public interest.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the understanding of the Chair that we will meet toworrow at ten o'clock and that there will be a 30 minute limitation on the question period. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Douglas: What about the balance of the day? Do we rise from one to two?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand the other place has adjourned to meet at one o'clock. I would hope that if there was some reasonable prospect of concluding our business by say, two o'clock we would not rise for lunch, but if we were going to go on all day perhaps we could rise between one and two. If it could be understood that there would not be any objection taken to making a decision at that time and taking the general sense of the committee at that time, it seems to me that that would be the best arrangement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might indicate the order in which the departments will be called tomorrow. We will continue with the few items left in the Department of Transport. I believe there are four or five or possibly six. Then we will take the Department of External Affairs, then the Speaker's estimates, then the estimates of the Minister of Finance, then the various items for which I have to answer to the committee, and finally the one item that is standing in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

It being eight minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day (for amendments, see text):]

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration including authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the treasury board, for total commitments of $2,529,570,600 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50, 55, 60 and 65 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $978,136,600 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization of any provincial or municipal government, $3,432,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Saturday, December 21, 1963

The house met at 10 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—RESPONSIBILITY OF JUSTICE MINISTER UNDER BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege involving the duties and responsibilities of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) and what I think is a violation of the responsibilities which he has. Section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights reads as follows:

The Minister of Justice shall—

So it is not discretionary; he must do this.

—in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the governor in council, examine every proposed regulation submitted in draft form to the Clerk of the Privy Council pursuant to the Regulations Act and every bill introduced in or presented to the House of Commons, in order to ascertain whether any of the provisions thereof are inconsistent with the purposes and provisions of this part and he shall report any such inconsistency to the House of Commons at the first convenient opportunity.

Then there are regulations pursuant to that section which merely set out more intricate machinery as to how this should be done; it involves a certificate to be signed by the deputy minister, and so on, but I do not think that is germane to this point at the moment.

On June 7 of this year, more than six months ago, I introduced in this house Bill No. C-71. The bill was introduced and given first reading, and so far—and I checked this with the office of the Clerk of the House of Commons this morning at about twenty or twenty five minutes after nine o'clock—that bill has not been returned from the Department of Justice with any indication on it that it has been examined.

During the last session, in fact on February 1, I raised a similar question of privilege and founded upon it a motion, which is to be found at page 3329 of Hansard for February 1 last, that the standing committee on privileges and elections be authorized and instructed to inquire into and study the responsibilities attendant upon the Minister of Justice by virtue of section 3 of the Canadian Bill of Rights and whether those responsibilities were properly carried out with respect to Bill C-14, an act respecting Indians. No decision was taken on that motion. The matter was taken under advisement and the house prorogued, or parliament was dissolved, before an opportunity was accorded the Speaker to rule on it.

There are some interesting comments with respect to that question of privilege reported at page 3330 of Hansard. For example, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) said:

Mr. Speaker, this appears to us to be a matter of pretty serious import—

Then there is an interjection by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), who said:

A breach of the law; that is all.

Then the hon. member for Laurier continued:

—more particularly because of the fact that the bill has been held up from October 1 until now, and my suggestion to you, sir, is that this matter be taken under advisement.

Then there is the following comment by the then hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin):

Particularly because of the violation of the act by the Minister of Justice.

Precisely the same situation as this arose with respect to Bill No. C-71, and this is even worse because it is a longer period of time, more than six and a half months.

Mr. Knowles: What did the Secretary of State have to say?

Mr. Howard: Unfortunately the Secretary of State was particularly silent when this matter was raised on February 1. I contend that the Minister of Justice has not fulfilled his obligation under the bill of rights with respect to Bill No. C-71. It is immaterial at this stage whether or not, as was done on June 7, the Speaker expresses any thought about the bill, because the measure has been introduced into the House of Commons and given first reading. I remind hon. members of the provisions of section 3 of the bill of rights where the expression is used: "and every bill introduced in, or presented to, the House of Commons", which makes it even broader.

I should like to move a motion founded on this question of privilege, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), namely:

That this house expresses its regret that the Minister of Justice has not fulfilled his obligation pursuant to the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I have to decide whether or not there is a question of privilege. I should like to say in this connection first of all that it appears to me that this is rather in the nature of a grievance against the conduct of a minister with regard to action which has or has not been taken. If it is desired to condemn the action of the Minister of Justice it should be done in the form of a substantive motion requiring notice. In this connection I would refer the hon. member to Beauchesne, fourth edition, citation 127, paragraph 2, and to Bourinot at page 301.

In the circumstances it seems to me that the motion is in the nature of a grievance and not a prima facie case of privilege. Therefore I regret I cannot accept the motion.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I could ask the unanimous consent of the house to my moving it as a substantive motion.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I have not looked into this matter recently, although I did receive some representations from the officers of the department, and I wonder—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Minister of Justice, but I have given a ruling and I suggest we now proceed with the business before the house.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT POLICY WITH RESPECT TO FOREIGN INVESTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I address a direct question to the Minister of Finance with reference to what has been described by Mr. Kierans and others as the discriminatory policies directed against foreign investors. Is the minister in a position to advice or at least give some hope that these policies he brought into effect, which resulted, to use an expression in one editorial, in biting the hand that feeds Canada and the commission of a historic blunder on Canada's part, will be withdrawn?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, they will not be withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT PLANS WITH RESPECT TO BUDGET DEFICITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the substantial budget deficits that were announced yesterday, will the minister have some better plans for us in the new session?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I am afraid I did not hear the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Aiken: I asked the minister, in view of the substantial budget deficits that were announced yesterday, will he have some better plans for parliament in the new session?

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he any report to make to the house respecting the negotiations which took place yesterday on the Columbia river treaty? Further, is he hopeful that this matter may be brought before parliament early in the next session?

Mr. Fisher: Order paper.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my estimates will be up this morning, and perhaps at that time I could deal with my hon. friend's very appropriate question.

TRANSPORT

SOULANGES CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO SALE TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question. Could he tell the house what his department is going to do about the Soulanges canal?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, the government will continue to accept responsibility for the canal unless some other disposition is made of it.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport can tell us if he has been officially notified by the government of the province of Quebec that the province is refusing to buy the Soulanges canal for the sum of $1, as it had agreed a few years ago.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SUGAR

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING BULK PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on November 12 the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated that his department had opened negotiations with sugar exporting countries with a view to ascertaining whether some bulk purchase arrangement could be made. I would like to ask the minister what progress is being made in these negotiations, and how soon he expects to be able to announce that a bulk purchase arrangement has been entered into by Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there have been fairly lengthy negotiations with various groups of producers. So far we have not felt that any of the arrangements that have been proposed would be in the interests of Canada. However, we are continuing these discussions, and if we can reach a satisfactory conclusion we shall do so, of course, and announce it in due course.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Before this day is over or before this session ends will he see whether certain returns can be brought down? I refer in the first place to a motion for papers, No. 105, passed on October 23. The last time I asked about this I was assured it would be brought down shortly, and a couple of weeks have gone by since. May I also draw his attention to a document which I asked the Prime Minister to table, or to add to this return. The reference is on page 5701 of Hansard for December 11. This all has to do with correspondence and briefs regarding the Canada pension plan. I realize that it is an order of the house and it will have to be brought down sooner or later even if this session ends, but I would hope these documents might be brought down before the end of the session.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is not meant as criticism, but I regret that the hon. gentleman did not mention this to me yesterday; because with his well known solicitude for the public servants he will realize that it may be difficult today to get the necessary co-operation from departments that may be required to meet his requests expeditiously. But if I can find someone who is available I will be glad to get the papers that are already available, as probably some of them are, and have a partial return made at any rate. I have no idea what the status of the return is, but as far as it is possible on a Saturday I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Knowles: May I just say to the Secretary of State that after his promise of a couple of weeks ago that this would be done I did not think it would be necessary to remind him.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no doubt that after the hon. gentleman brought the matter up all the departments were duly alerted. However, he will appreciate that I do not devote much of my time personally to checking each day to see what progress has been made with these returns.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Would he inform the house if he is going to table the correspondence relating to the Columbia treaty in compliance with a motion for papers approved by this house on October 30, and if not why not?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the appropriate course will be taken. This return will be made in due course and the correspondence will be tabled.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SASKATOON—REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF R.C.A.F. BAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he indicate to the house what action, if any, is planned to keep No. 23 wing R.C.A.F. band in Saskatoon? I would remind the Prime Minister that this band is considered to be one of the best in Canada, and its loss would be a serious blow to the city of Saskatoon.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into the question of this band. I may not be able to reply before the house ends this session, but I will keep in touch with my hon. friend about it.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS—STATUS OF PROJECTED LINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister tell the house if the government has abandoned the project to construct a railway between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No decision has been taken on that matter, and when a decision is taken it will be announced.

Mr. Ricard: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Since the previous government had decided to construct such a railway, will the minister tell the house the reason why the construction has been delayed so long, especially when it means so much to this part of the country?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. The reason for the delay is that the survey taken by the railway shows that the cost would be much higher than that indicated in the legislation. In addition, there were many indications of opposition in the area because the building of the railway would sever farm lands in the valley, which are rather long and narrow, in a way that would be very damaging. Then, too, the railway would be detached from any direct connection with the Canadian National Railways line which serves most of the area, and arrangements would have to be completed for running rights or some other rights over the intervening Gulf railway. There may be other matters which require consideration as well.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): This is an extraordinary statement on the part of the minister. Does he intend at the next session to introduce legislation to repeal the law passed by parliament under which this railway was to be built?

Mr. McIlraith: I simply do not know what the intention will be so far as legislation is concerned for the next parliament. This matter is now under consideration. It is quite an important matter, and it will require a decision in the light of all the circumstances. I tried to give the hon. member who asked the question the information as to the nature of the problem.

PUBLICATIONS

COMPETITION WITH CANADIAN EDITIONS OF U.S. MAGAZINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I understand the Prime Minister cannot give us a statement of government intentions with regard to publications, but could he at least give an indication what those certain considerations are that have arisen recently and have caused a delay in the decision?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The additional factors are concerned with the desirability or otherwise of broadening the basis of any action that may have to be taken to include foreign control of Canadian newspapers and possibly foreign control of television and radio.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question; I know this is going into policy, but I think it would be very interesting and informative if we knew the answer. Does the Prime Minister at present say that such a move has to be made by means of legislation?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are very much aware, as I am sure my hon. friend is, of the far reaching importance and the seriousness of the question, and if possible action is to be extended into this field very careful consideration will have to be given as to how best it can be done.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question. Could he tell us where he sends all the letters children write Santa Claus each year at this time?

[Text]

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENTS TO FILL PROSPECTIVE VACANCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State. Can he say whether any decision has been reached as to appointments to be made to the Atlantic development board when the terms of the original appointees expire on January 24?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. An order in council was passed on December 17 reappointing Mr. Frank H. Sobey, Mr. Melvin J. McQuaid and Mr. Fred Ayre, who were appointed on the recommendation of the previous government in January of last year. The only member of the board who was appointed by the previous government and who is no longer on the board is Mr. Lalande, who regrettably had to resign for business reasons and who was replaced some months ago by Mr. Armand Cormier of Moncton. Mr. Cormier has also been reappointed, so, with that one exception, the board will continue in exactly the same form as it was when the legislation was adopted by parliament. This, I might point out, is one of those examples of the partisanship of the present government.

[Later:]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to supplement the answer I gave to the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough by saying that Mr. McQuaid is a former Tory cabinet minister in Prince Edward Island.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SARNIA, ONT.—REPLACEMENT OF HARBOUR MASTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): That was an example of good judgment, but I am going to bring up a question that has to do with rank partisanship. It arises because of the last words of the Secretary of State; otherwise it would not have been presented.

Has the Minister of Transport received communications from Sarnia, Ontario, protesting against the removal of the local harbour master, W. Hillmer, who has received severance notice as of December 31; and is it correct that his replacement will be the campaign manager for the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Foy) in the last election?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Leader of the Opposition for having given me notice of this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: In spite of the laughter that this has provoked, I must say I really appreciate his notice of a question for a change, because I do not get many notices of questions these days. In any event, dealing with the subject matter of the question, the gentleman he mentioned, Mr. Whitney Hillmer, came to retirement age on November 1 this year. He was continued in employment until the end of the year because it was thought unwise to terminate his employment during the shipping season, and the effort was made to have him finish his annual reports.

He has been replaced, but not by the gentleman named in the telegrams, which all seem to be the same and seem to have been inspired, as indicated in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail, by Allan Fowler, president of the local Progressive Conservative association.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: I might add that Mr. Whitney Hillmer was the campaign manager for our former colleague in the House of Commons from that area, Mr. Murphy. He is not being replaced by the gentleman mentioned in the telegram and mentioned, in the question of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition; but he has been replaced by Captain Alex McNeil.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister tell us something about Captain McNeil?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I can tell the right hon. gentleman something about Captain McNeil. He was born on August 25, 1912—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: He had a high school education. He has four sons. He served from 1930 to 1939 with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. From 1939 to 1945 he served with the Royal Canadian Navy. He had a rather distinguished record in the navy. From 1945 to 1952 he was in charge of Royal Canadian Mounted Police patrol craft on the Atlantic and the great lakes area. In 1952 he retired on Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension. From 1952 to 1962 he served as assistant plant protection supervisor, fire, safety, security and first aid department, for the Canadian Oil Company's refinery at Corunna, Ontario. In June, 1962 he left that position. He holds a master's home trade certificate. He holds a mate's coastwise certificate. He holds the Royal Canadian Navy watchkeeping certificate. He holds the Royal Canadian Mounted Police long service and good conduct medal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: He attended a fire course at the Ansul fire training school, Marionette, Wisconsin; a fire course at the Ontario fire college, Gravenhurst, and safety courses of the industrial accident prevention associations in Toronto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there is only one qualification that is not included, and that is "superb". But I do want to thank the minister. When I telephoned him this morning and asked whether he had any information on this and had he received a number of wires and complaints, he did not have any information. I brought it to his attention, and this shows how carefully he proceeds after a request is made.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I meant it when I thanked the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we agreed last night to start our sitting at ten o'clock this morning and it was also agreed that the orders of the day would be called after 30 minutes. That 30 minutes has now expired.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise all hon. members that the 30 minute period will expire at 10.37.

Supply—Transport

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask when he expects to get the report of the royal commission on medical care.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am sorry that I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker. The last time it was asked I said that I hoped it would be in soon. I can only repeat that now. But I will make inquiries right away and get in touch with my hon. friend.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA—REPORTED SALES OF AUTOMOBILES AT AVIATION MUSEUM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources what arrangements have been made at Uplands airport, at the civil aviation museum, that allow Percy Carriere to sell jeeps out of the museum?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries and advise my hon. friend.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

145. Airports and other ground services—operation and maintenance, $22,532,100.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have but one comment to make on item 145, concerning airports. It has to do with restaurants. I understand those restaurants are leased to concessionaires who benefit from somewhat exclusive rental rates and take advantage of this to raise the price of the goods they sell at air terminals. For instance, cigarettes cost more there and that goes also for newspapers, chocolate, soft drinks and what have you.

I wonder if the Minister of Transport should not investigate that situation and see to it that the exclusive privileges granted to concessionaires in restaurants and other business establishments are not used to increase prices, thereby causing unwarranted inflation.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, a few words only on item 145 before it is agreed to. I want to refer to parking lots at airports. We note that these lots are looked after by contractors. Could the minister tell me whether the leasing of these lots brings in a great deal of revenue to the Department of Transport and whether it would be a great loss for the department if these parking lots were made available free of charge to patrons of air lines, instead of being leased to contractors who, in turn, rent space on parking lots?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Chairman, this brings in a great deal of revenue.

Item agreed to.

155. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment with respect to national airports (as determined by the Minister of Transport) and related facilities; contributions towards construction done by local or private authorities with respect to such airports, amounts to be paid in settlement of claims for compensation by persons whose property is injuriously affected by the operation of a zoning regulation made under authority of paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Aeronautics Act and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed a total amount of $41,360,000, $38,477,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, there is a brief comment I would like to make on item 155, which has to do with the construction or acquisition of buildings for airports under the Department of Transport. My brief reference is to the new airport at Winnipeg, which is indeed a tremendous improvement over the facilities we had there in former years. I regret to say, however, that there is one feature about this airport—as a result, I am told, of the practice of economy—which is unfortunate. I understand that the original plans called for tubes to be provided so that passengers would go from the second level directly out on to the aircraft, but somewhere along the line it was decided that these could not be afforded and they were not installed.

The lay-out of the airport is such that when passengers are going from the airport to the aircraft, or from the aircraft into the airport, both ways they have to go from ground level up, and then down. This is all right for some of us, but for older people, for women with children, for passengers carrying baggage, and so on, it seems rather unfortunate. I know that the first time I went home after the new airport was opened, I went along with the rest and found myself going up to the second level, and when I wanted to get my baggage I had to go down again. I thought I had missed a directional sign or something, but my inquiries revealed that this situation results from a decision taken, on the basis of economy, not to have these special tubes to permit loading and unloading from the second level.

I can understand this bit of economy, and perhaps we should not get these tubes at Winnipeg for a while yet. But that is not the end of the story. In addition to that, escalators which were planned to operate both ways were altered so that they would go only one way. This means that passengers alighting from aircraft, although they start from ground level, have to walk up to the second floor and then go down to the ground level to get their baggage.

When departing, passengers have to do the same. I hope the department will take another look at this and realize that it is an unfortunate situation, and that if it is not possible to revert to the original plan to have loading from the second level, at least escalators should be installed so that people would not have to walk up a flight of stairs and then down again. I should like to hear from the minister whether consideration is being given to correcting this situation.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, while on the subject of international airports I should like to point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the Edmonton building does not suffer from that problem because it is better designed. But one point I would make to the minister which affects all international terminals is that we have a singularly cold reception for people coming into the building off international flights. At European international airports there is a sign which says "Welcome" or "Bienvenue" to the particular country. Why can we not do that here in Canada? I have taken this matter up with the minister's departmental officials on previous occasions and I was told that this should be a local responsibility, that I was to see my local chamber of commerce. These buildings belong to the Department of Transport. Surely in these huge terminals in Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal we should say "Welcome", even just to welcome Canadians back to their country.

Mr. Pearson: In both languages.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, obviously. At some terminals we might even go further. After all, here in Ottawa for a certain convenience we use a third language, Spanish.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the last question I might say that this problem is usually looked after by the local boards of trade. I might inform my hon. friend from Edmonton West that in one area I could mention the local board of trade goes further and meets passengers with a serving of rum.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is the minister suggesting rye and ginger ale here?

Mr. McIlraith: However, I will take this point under consideration. With regard to the matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, by reason of the earlier cut-back in expenditure in 1962 the installation of the escalators to which the hon. member referred was not proceeded with, but the building is so constructed that escalators can be put in, without requiring many structural changes. I hope that in due course as the situation improves the matter can be taken care of.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask whether "in due course" will be some time soon? In other words, are plans being made now to reconsider the installation of these escalators?

Mr. McIlraith: It depends on the house's treatment of the budget and the estimates, I suppose, but in any event the problem is one to which the department is very much alive. I have also given the matter some consideration myself and am looking forward to visiting the airport in a few days.

With regard to this criticism which has been made of the airport, it is a curious thing but after this rather costly, and I agree rather good, airport was opened it seemed that the criticism made of this matter was rather disproportionate. But in any event the matter is one of some concern, although I cannot give a commitment now as to what the estimates will be next year in this respect.

Mr. Knowles: I am glad to hear the minister will be coming to Winnipeg. If he will let us know when he is coming we will welcome him with a cup of tea.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I saw in the press not so long ago that the department intends to go ahead with rolling sidewalks at Montreal airport. I know that these rolling sidewalks were included in the original plans for the airport, but there again I am afraid they were the first victims of treasury board in the same way as were the escalators at Winnipeg.

I hope treasury board will revise this policy, because I do not think this sort of thing should be the first to be cut back in any plan for a new public building designed to handle a tremendous number of people boarding or being discharged from an aircraft and who may have parcels in their hands, children with them, and all that. I hope that in any new public building this policy of cutting back on elevators, escalators or rolling sidewalks will be revised. Montreal airport is probably the most beautiful air terminal in the world, yet people are still complaining about the fact that distances between the planes and the public facilities are much too great.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether he will give a reply to the question I asked him last night regarding Transair.

Mr. Pickersgill: We passed that item.

Mr. Douglas: But the minister has not yet replied. I was hoping that the minister would give a reply to this question.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should have replied but unfortunately the answer did not come in until after the house met this morning. The situation with Transair is that on part of the route the service in question has been suspended as of January 11. A hearing will take place before the air transport board to consider whether they should permit the air line to abandon this route, at which hearing there will be an opportunity for all interested parties to make representations. Notices of this hearing have been sent out in the usual way.

There is a real problem here, because the traffic load over one part of the route averages out at barely one passenger per trip. Obviously it is not possible to run an air line on that basis on that kind of route without some examination of the problem of how to meet the requirements of the communities involved, and meeting them adequately.

As the matter has not yet been dealt with by the air transport board it would be useless for me to speculate, and quite improper for me to do so, as to what their decision will be until persons making representations have had a full opportunity to do so at the hearing.

There was another part to the hon. member's question, if I remember correctly, concerning Trans-Canada Air Lines transfer of assets or equipment when they abandoned this route. I think I answered this question on July 15 last; there was also an order for return made as well.

Mr. Fisher: But there were no details given.

Mr. McIlraith: In any event, the essential point as I have indicated is that Trans-Canada Air Lines equipment is bought and sold in accordance with normal commercial practice. This matter was also before the committee, and I think the report will be found on page 56 and following. Information was sought at that time. I have not had an opportunity to look up the record and see precisely what information was given, but there was an opportunity to ask about it, and there is no information I can give beyond what was given at that point.

[Mr. Balcer.]

Mr. Douglas: I asked if the figures I gave last night were correct, namely that T.C.A. gave to Transair one Viscount, two DC-3's and half a million dollars worth of DC-3 parts for $1. The second question was, will T.C.A. recover any part of this if Transair, who have operated the route for less than a year, gives up the uneconomic part of the line?

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member is really asking me to answer indirectly what I explained to him could not be answered directly.

Mr. Fisher: The minister has in effect told us we shall have to wait until the air transport board holds its hearings, and he says that is the fair thing to do. I suggest it is not the fair thing to leave this matter for the air transport board, because the board itself has already been involved in this whole matter and so has the minister. I am not saying it is the present minister, but some minister has been involved.

It is obvious to all of us who have followed the situation which led to Transair getting this route that at some stage there was a recommendation or intervention at the ministerial level. It was not a case of the air transport board making up its mind as between a couple of carriers. Somewhere there was ministerial intervention, and it was obvious why there had to be. A crown corporation, T.C.A., was involved, and there was an arrangement of some kind—I was about to say a deal, but that might have been invidious. This question of where Transair stands in relation to these routes and to T.C.A. is more than just a matter for the air transport board. There are others involved besides the public and the cities of western Canada. They are the competitors.

What did Mr. McGregor tell us at the committee hearings? He said T.C.A. tried to demonstrate as far as it could that it was impossible to make money on this southern line. Despite all the arguments which T.C.A. gave, Transair insisted that money could be made, and they went ahead. They got in in April, and now they are out. Given a situation of this kind, it is not good enough to say that a solution will come as a result of hearings to be held by the board. There is surely a need for ministerial action and explanation with regard to this matter. If this is not forthcoming, I have to feel that the minister is letting the air transport board carry responsibility for something with regard to which he himself should be reaching a decision.

Mr. Nesbitt: I should like to say a word or two on the decor of public airport buildings. I know that in the past such questions as these have usually been left to the architects involved. But the costs are now beginning to run high. In Toronto airport $150,000 was paid, I believe, for artistic objects of, to say the least, a controversial nature, and I am wondering whether in future it might not be a good idea to have these things checked by a government committee, perhaps including somebody from the national gallery. I say this because $150,000 is a sizeable chunk of the taxpayers' money, especially when it comes to the purchase of objects which are highly controversial even in artistic circles. One was described by a prominent Toronto artist as resembling a lump of mud. I think a little greater care should be exercised, and it might be a good idea to select objects which made concessions, at least to some extent, to the taste of the general public. Art galleries are perhaps another thing, but in the public airports one has to use a little reason.

It has been the fashion in the last few years to have large quantities of tropical plants scattered about our airports. These plants have an unfortunate habit of not living very long, and they are expensive to replace. This increases the cost of maintenance. All this may seem trivial, but I suggest that those responsible for the interior decor of airports and other government buildings might take a second look at the use of enormous quantities of tropical plants and devise some suitable alternative which would have a greater degree of permanence. I suggest some direct control be exercised by the department.

Mr. Nielsen: There is one further matter I wish to raise with the minister. The Yukon legislative council communicated with the hon. gentleman or his officials requesting that a member of the Department of Transport should travel to the Yukon and discuss with the council the requirement for terminal buildings, emergency airstrips and all the facilities needed in the Yukon. I am informed that the department refused to acknowledge this request. A similar request to the Department of Labour was, I understand, no more successful; there was no reply.

It seems to me that when a request comes from such a body as the Yukon legislative council the courtesy of expert advice and assistance should be extended to them if they request it in order to obtain the efficient service which they feel is required in the way of improved airstrips and facilities throughout the region.

I showed the minister a telegram I received the other day concerning the positioning of the terminal building at Whitehorse. Apparently it is to be placed in such a position that a discontinuance of the cross strip, the east-west runway, will be required. Great concern is being expressed over this situation. I believe this question, along with others, could be solved if the minister would ask one of his officials to go and sit with the council as the council has requested.

Mr. Olson: I want to return to this question of Transair for a moment. Since the discussion has gone thus far, I think I should point out to the minister that there are many people along this southern prairie route who are deeply distressed because of the events which have taken place since last year. On December 11 of this year I put on the order paper a notice of motion for the production of papers asking for all correspondence between Transair and Trans-Canada Air Lines that would in fact reveal to members of the House of Commons what the arrangement or deal was.

I think the minister has taken the position that this is not public information but is an arrangement which was made between two companies. But as has been pointed out by hon. members just a few minutes ago, Transair knew very well when it undertook to provide this service that it was not going to pay, particularly on the basis they set it up. The results of the service for the few months they did carry it on substantiate that, of course, in that on one part of the run the number of passengers averaged .8 per trip. We do not disagree that this kind of service needs to be discontinued, but we are a little bit concerned about the position of competitors who may have been able to set up a service with schedules and so on that would have resulted in the service paying.

Transair also claims it lost a lot of money. No one can disagree with that if the figures they have given are true, and I am not disputing them. But we are going to pursue this matter in the next session because we want to know whether Trans-Canada did in fact transfer to Transair assets with a value in excess of the amount of money Transair lost. It may be a million dollars, it may be half a million dollars; apparently it is somewhere in that neighbourhood.

Transair operated this service for 117 days, I believe, and claim they lost up to $1,000 a day. If this is so it means that Transair got by way of assets from Trans-Canada Air Lines at least five or six times as much as Transair lost on the run. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this is wrong. I also believe that inasmuch as Trans-Canada Air Lines belongs to the people of Canada the House of Commons has a right to investigate this matter and also to have the answers from the minister; because it seems obvious to us that unless Transair knew in advance of the deal what assets Trans-Canada was prepared to transfer to them for $1, they would never have undertaken to provide the service at all.

In spite of what the minister has said about not being able to get hold of the information that passed between Trans-Canada Air Lines and Transair, I believe that we as members of the house have a right to know if something like $300,000 to $500,000 in publicly owned assets were turned over to this corporation, which was then allowed to suspend the service.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. McIlraith: There are two points raised in the discussions, it seems to me—

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps we could allow the Minister of Transport to reply to the points raised by previous speakers, and then I will recognize the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. McIlraith: It seems to me that there are two points involved in the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat and to some extent in the earlier remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur. I believe the point having to do with routes is fully answered by the fact that a hearing is going to be held. I would want to check my information, but I believe that already two applications have been made to serve parts of this route.

This is the very thing that should be determined by the air transport board, because it is a matter of examining the areas requiring service to see how they can best be served and what is the best method of getting some kind of service that will be effective. Obviously, as I think the hon. member realizes, a basis of service cannot be provided with an average of less than one passenger per flight, as was the case between a couple of points on that route. As to that part of the matter, I think the answer is surely satisfactory.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister leaves that point may I ask a question. Would the air transport board have any power to make Transair disgorge part of the planes and equipment it got to operate this route so they could be used to subsidize the successful applicant for the new franchise?

Mr. McIlraith: The question the transport board determined was whether or not they would permit them to cancel the service. As to the question put by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I would think the answer would be that this was a commercial transaction between two air lines and that the board would not have any jurisdiction to inquire into it. But if the hon. member will bear with me until I deal with the other part of the question raised by the other two members perhaps he will find his question sufficiently answered.

The transaction referred to was carried out under the former government before I had the responsibility of office. In the light of what has been said, in view of the motion for papers which was put on the order paper and possibly was withdrawn at my request—I do not know what became of it—and of the discussion that arose at that time, and in the light of repeated questions on this point by the hon. member for Port Arthur and the questions now raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I am quite content as soon as the house finishes to have a look at the whole transaction to see if there is any ground on which I can with propriety produce information that would satisfy hon. members and show exactly the details of the whole situation. I shall make such an examination particularly with a view to seeing whether any part of this transaction falls within the realm of the government's responsibility and if the information thereon may be produced. But I do not want to recede from the position that information as to ordinary commercial transactions between air companies may not be produced, because it will be recognized that if I did that we would get into very serious situations. I will look at the whole matter in the light of the questions yesterday and today.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister another question before he sits down. I am not asking for details of the transaction between the two air companies, but I am asking the minister if Trans-Canada Air Lines, in giving Transair these planes and equipment, received any assurance that Transair would operate this route for any specific period of time.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, that is the very type of thing I have in mind. I want to examine the whole transaction in some detail, as is obviously required, and that is one of the many details that will have to be looked into. I must say I have not had any real opportunity to look at the matter at all in the past week since the matter was raised.

Mr. Olson: When the minister does come back to the house I would ask him to supply information so we will know the total fair value of all the planes and equipment involved and also the total loss of Transair while it operated the service, in order that we can make some comparisons and find out whether in fact they made a profit by losing money.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall now turn to another matter with which the citizens of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area are very much concerned, the Bagotville airport.

Hon. members know that that airport is both a military and commercial airport. There have been accidents between T.C.A. aircraft and military aircraft using the landing strips there. The resulting danger makes the people in that area a little nervous, and they have requested for a long time a civil airport at St. Honore, near Chicoutimi, that is practically in the centre of the area.

I wonder whether the Minister of Transport contemplates setting up a civil airport at St. Honore.

Besides, the citizens of that area have been asking for some time for an air terminal in Bagotville, because there is, at present, a sort of building without any conveniences and with a waiting room totally out of date; it is necessary that conditions be improved. And, therefore, I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) whether he could give us some information regarding the building of a new airport or a new terminal in the Saguenay-Lake St. John area.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I do not have much information on the precise details of the new airport. There are no immediate plans for it. However, in so far as the building to which the hon. member refers is concerned, I recall signing a letter on that subject within the last week. It is involved in the future plans, but I have forgotten the precise dates and the actual timing.

Mr. Gregoire: Will we have this new building for the airport in Bagotville without too long a delay?

Mr. McIlraith: I cannot tell my hon. friend anything offhand because I do not have the file. It depends on the estimates program; however I did deal with the new building within the past week.

Mr. Scott: Will the minister give us an up to date report on the status of the Malton airport? What is the stage of construction, and what is the estimated date for its official opening? There is a great deal of interest in this matter in Toronto.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the best information I can give the hon. member is that the airport will come into operational use at 12.01 a.m. on January 12, and that the formal opening will take place on February 28. I do not know that there is much I can usefully add to that.

I might take advantage of the opportunity to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Oxford. The answer is that the art selection is made by an art selection committee, one member of which is the head of the national gallery.

Mr. Leboe: I should like to take a couple of minutes of the committee's time on one or two subjects. We have ranged rather far and wide, Mr. Chairman, so I hope you will let me conclude my remarks without interruption. First of all I should like to thank the minister for his co-operative attitude in connection with the representations I have made to him. We appreciate that.

However, I am a little concerned about airport facilities, particularly at Quesnel. The last time I was at Quesnel I saw the strange sight of the ticket agent making out tickets on the baggage wagon on the airstrip. There is absolutely no place in the Quesnel airport for passengers who are getting on or off planes. If it happens to be raining they have to get into a taxi or go into one of the hangar sheds for private aircraft. It would seem to me that one of the problems Canadian Pacific Airlines have in operating out of Quesnel is the lack of airport facilities for passengers.

Another thing that concerns me is the situation when an air service fails and for some reason or other cannot meet its scheduled flights. There have been cases where such a carrier had landing rights in certain airports and refused landing rights to other carriers who were willing to provide the service. I have actually had experience with this situation, and I hope a closer check will be made in connection with this matter so that people who want to get from one place to another when the regular carrier is unable to fulfil its obligations will have the right to use another carrier which is willing to provide the service. This is most important in an area such as the Cariboo, where there are a lot of air minded people. As the minister knows there are many aircraft being used, both private and commercial, because this particular area lends itself very well to air transport.

I believe that at the moment the fares on Canadian Pacific Airlines in this area are too high, and therefore they are not getting the traffic that is available. If the fares were reduced by even a small amount I am sure the traffic would increase and these large aircraft they are using would be filled closer to capacity. Perhaps the minister could use his influence in that regard, and I hope consideration will be given to this point.

I think it has been demonstrated by Pacific Western Air Lines that what they call a bus service between Edmonton and Calgary is practical. I think an air bus service from Whitehorse or from Fort St. John, with a reduced fare and no reservations but just picking up your tickets on the aircraft, could provide better service all around.

There is one other thing I should like to mention, but I hesitate to do so. I hope when the minister goes to Winnipeg he does not have to shave with an electric razor. The washroom in Winnipeg, which is as big as any office in this building, has no outlet in which to plug an electric razor. I looked all over this new airport to find a place to use an electric razor and finally wound up in the kitchen. I hope the minister will have better success in finding the outlet than I did.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have a last question to put to the Minister of Transport. In view of the scope afforded by this item, the last one on that subject, can the Minister of Transport tell us whether it is true that when the contract was passed between T.C.A. and Douglas Aircraft in the United States, it was agreed that the tail units of the DC-9s would be built in Toronto and that the overhaul and maintenance of these aircraft would also be done at the Toronto plant?

The Chairman: Order. It seems the the question of the hon. member for Lapointe is in no way related to item 155. However, if the minister is willing to answer, he is free to do so. But the hon. member for Lapointe—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I believe we are still on item 145.

Mr. Lambert: No, we are now on item 155.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that we were still considering item 145.

The Chairman: No, we are now on item 155.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, as soon as you called the first item, if you remember, I rose and—

Mr. Lambert: No, no, we are on item 155.

The Chairman: I must tell the hon. member for Lapointe that item 145 was passed by the committee and that we are now discussing item 155.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, something is wrong here. If the item was passed, an hon. member was on his feet then.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe seems to forget that he has already spoken on item 145 which was passed later on.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not know exactly what happened but there is a mistake. At any rate, I should like to have a reply to my question. I asked whether the contract for the overhaul and maintenance of the DC-9 has been awarded to de Havilland.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: The commercial contract is not before us, but in any event this question was answered in the committee, and it was proposed to do this work at the existing overhaul and maintenance base. Since that time another delegation has come with other ideas.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not think this question has been settled and that the committee has received an answer to it. A rather important principle is involved, owing to the fact that Trans-Canada Air Lines equipped and organized a whole plant in Montreal for the general maintenance and repair of those aircraft. But now, because a contract was passed, Montreal is to be deprived once again of the general maintenance and repair of the DC-9.

I feel a very important matter of principle is involved here, especially in view of the fact that expenditures were incurred for the repair of those jet aircraft at the base in Montreal. Moreover, since the DC-9 is being bought, all those expenditures will again be incurred in Toronto for the maintenance and repair of that aircraft. Now, that means that Montreal loses not only the contract for manufacturing part of this DC-9 aircraft, but also the maintenance and repair contract.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry to say the hon. member seems to have got a lot of very serious misinformation. Nothing is being taken away from Montreal, and that is the whole thing I am being attacked for these days. The overhaul for these aircraft has always been proposed for Montreal and there was no suggestion it be done in Toronto. As to the other part of the question, it has been stated in evidence many times that the Canadian share of the aircraft production is very high.

Mr. Gregoire: If I have been misinformed it was by a member of the cabinet, because on a motion for the production of documents the Minister of Industry said that the overhaul of these DC-9 aircraft would be done in Toronto, according to the contract between de Havilland and T.C.A. I would like to have the truth.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I could give a short answer. The hon. member has misunderstood the whole matter as it affects overhaul and maintenance. The overhaul and maintenance by T.C.A. was proposed to be done in Montreal, subject only to the requests from other parts of the country that it be done elsewhere. There has been no change in that whatsoever; but where the confusion is creeping in is that the hon. member is not aware of the nature of the work being done by the manufacturers of the aircraft at the de Havilland plant in Toronto. It is true that certain company work is being done which is an obligation on the manufacturing company in Toronto. He is confusing that work with the work of the air line that buys these aircraft.

Mr. Gregoire: The confusion is due to the fact that we were told by the Minister of Industry that these aircraft would be overhauled and repaired in Toronto, according to the contract. I have had previous experience of this kind, when the Department of National Defence bought Voodoo aircraft from the United States, and it was a condition of the contract that for two years all the parts for those aircraft would be repaired in the factory in the United States. If that is the case with the DC-9, then they will be repaired in Toronto.

Mr. McIlraith: It is quite clear now that the overhaul the hon. member is speaking of concerns that work which is an obligation on the manufacturer, and that will be done in the de Havilland plant. This is a very good contract for Canada, but it has nothing to do with the points raised about the overhaul and maintenance by T.C.A., which will be done in Montreal.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister assure me that he will send an official of his department to confer with the legislative council of the Yukon?

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry the question did not get answered, but I think there is a little misunderstanding about the facts. The department always sends officials out, and I believe a letter was sent within the last week on this subject. It has gone to some inquiring person or agency, with a view to having the appropriate persons sent from the department.

Mr. Nielsen: I know the letter has gone out because I have a copy of it, but it said that the department would not send any one to confer with the government of the Yukon. I would like to have the minister's assurance that he will have one of the officials comply with the request of the council.

Mr. McIlraith: My understanding of the letter is quite different from that. I will look into the matter again, but I understand the letter first asked for certain types of information.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister send an official?

Mr. McIlraith: I will look into the whole matter.

Item agreed to.

165. Grants for the development of civil aviation in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $360,000.

Mr. More: I just want to bring to the minister's attention the problems of the association of Canadian soaring and gliding clubs. I spoke some two years ago about this, and I believe the association has been seeking some assistance and recognition from the government. I believe the matter would come under this estimate. I doubt if the minister would have any knowledge of it, but I can assure him I will be pressing it next session. Meantime I hope he will look at their representations.

Item agreed to.

205. Salaries and other expenses including the Canadian delegation to the international civil aviation organization, $622,400.

Mr. Barnett: I would like to ask the minister if he could tell us something about the new chairman of the air transport board. Not too long ago the Canada Gazette announced the appointment of Mr. F. T. Wood of the city of Montreal, Quebec, to be a member for a term of ten years. I do not suggest that the minister give us the date of his birthday, as he did earlier this morning with regard to another appointment, but I would be interested to know some of the qualifications of Mr. Wood for this appointment. Perhaps the minister could also give us an explanation of the resignation of the former chairman of the board and what changes in board policy, if any, may be anticipated as a result of the appointment of Mr. Wood as the new chairman.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give a long answer since I have no notes. Mr. Wood has been in the transport business all his life. He was first a Canadian National Railways employee and later joined Trans-Canada Air Lines, and became one of its vice presidents. He has been president of the air industries and transport association and is still a member of that board. He has had a great deal of experience in dealing with the relationships of air lines in the international field; that is, with air organizations and the negotiating end of air operations, both nationally and internationally. I do not know that there is much more I can usefully add.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister, further, whether he can give any report on what consideration may be given to the suggestion that there be developed an arrangement of regional representation for the air transport board. I am wondering whether he may be willing to consider the idea of setting up regional panels within the air transport board, which might involve some expansion of the membership of the board but on the other hand might enable the board to give more detailed consideration and attention to on the spot investigation of problems on a regional basis than has hitherto been the case.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, this question has received some consideration. I came to the conclusion that the best thing to do was continue with the three man board; that the way to meet the problem raised by he hon. member for Comox-Alberni is not by enlarging the board but by perfecting the board's hearings system, particularly with a view to regional hearings and that sort of thing. I think the hon. member will be interested to know that hearings will be taking place in his part of the country in the latter part of February.

Mr. Barnett: I have one other matter that I would like to raise in connection with the operations of the air transport board. It has to do in particular with its terms of reference as drafted under the Aeronautics Act. I was interested earlier in the session to note that the minister was introducing a bill to amend the Aeronautics Act; but I was rather disappointed, when the bill came before the house and we were acquainted with its terms, that it made no reference to the particular area of the act in which I had become interested and about which I must confess I have some concern.

I think this might be a very appropriate time for me to bring forward a suggestion for the consideration of the minister. I suggest there is to be an amendment to the act. If my understanding is correct, the present bill is not likely to be dealt with prior to the end of this session. In the interval of time which will elapse between the end of this session and the beginning of the next the minister might be willing to agree to some redrafting of the present bill which would include this point.

My concern arises out of the present terms of the act in respect to appeals to the minister from decisions of the air transport board. I have a file here on the subject of disagreement with certain decisions of the board. It contains copies of a large number of petitions addressed to the minister in connection with the ruling of the board contained in decision No. 1865. I am not going to attempt at this time to go all through this file in discussing this question with the minister, but I am sure he will recall something of its contents. I will say, Mr. Chairman, for the information of the committee, that I do not recall any single matter ever creating such a volume of communications from Comox-Alberni as did this particular decision of the air transport board. I think the committee will therefore readily understand my concern in the matter and my interest which led me to look at the Aeronautics Act in a way that I had not had occasion to do before.

The particular point about which I am quite concerned is this. As I understand the act, under section 15 (9) an air line which has made an application to the board for a certain form of licence has the right of appeal to the minister if it is dissatisfied with the decision of the board. But another air line which may consider itself adversely affected by the decision of the board, which air line was not an applicant, has not this right of appeal. Under the circumstances it would mean that in effect a decision of the board could put a competing air line out of business in favour of the applicant air line and they would have no right of appeal whatsoever. There was an attempt to appeal to the minister by one of the air lines involved in this situation. That appeal was disallowed by the minister on the technical ground that he had no jurisdiction, under the terms of the Aeronautics Act, to deal with their appeal.

This appears to me a rather inequitable state of affairs. I believe the Aeronautics Act should be amended in this connection so that any air line which considers that its vital interests have been adversely affected can have a review made of the matter. All air lines should be placed on an equal footing in this connection as far as the Aeronautics Act is concerned.

I am also rather concerned with the situation that arises under section 15 (10), which gives the air transport board the authority to alter or change or amend the conditions of the application in its original form. The result of the operation of this section is that when the board does use the authority—and I am given to understand that it is an authority which the board has rather seldom used—a form of licence can be granted which in effect is different from that which was notified to the interested parties prior to the hearings of the board.

I think the minister will recall that one or two of the air lines operating in my area felt themselves to be quite seriously aggrieved, and a great deal of the objection that arose on the part of the public and local organizations stemmed from the fact that they felt the board had made a decision with regard to which there had been no prior notice of hearings.

I would urge the minister to pay serious attention to these two subsections and consider an amendment to the Aeronautics Act in this respect. I would certainly be interested to have some comment from the minister as to what consideration he is prepared to give to my argument, perhaps more particularly in respect of the question I have raised about the inequity of section 15 (9).

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the case the hon. member has raised and with the difficulty in the language used in the particular section to which he referred. I will have a look at his argument today to see how the problem can best be dealt with. The Aeronautics Act will be coming back for debate very early I hope in the new session, and there will then be an opportunity for an appropriate amendment to cover the point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni if, after examination, he should find it advisable to do so. However, I will look at this matter in light of his arguments this morning as well as in light of some other rather technical legal arguments which have been raised subsequent to the decision to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that this is a rather complicated matter and one of which I certainly do not claim to have any expert knowledge. But it seems to be that there is a prima facie case of inequity in the way the present clause 9 reads.

One other question I should like to take the time of the committee to ask the minister about is this. I wonder whether he could give a brief explanation of the reason for the recent amendment to the regulations as published in the Canada Gazette, part II, of December 11, 1963, in which subsection 1a of section 6 of the commercial air services regulations is revoked and a substitute regulation brought in which in effect eliminates class 4 group C fixed wing aircraft from the provisions of the former order. It now provides that:

> Notwithstanding subsection 1, applicants for licences to operate commercial air services in classes other than class 7 shall satisfy the board that the proposed commercial air services would be in the public interest.

I wonder whether the minister would explain the thinking behind the amendment of that regulation, which has changed the position as far as the class 4 licence lines are concerned.

Mr. McIlraith: This is the regulation which restores licensing of group C, class 4 and the procedures governing such licensing.

Item agreed to.

> 212. Amount to be credited to the railway grade crossing fund, in addition to the amount to be credited to the fund under the Railway Act in the current fiscal year; and, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize an increase to $24,067,000 in the commitments (in addition to any commitments in respect of which amounts are appropriated under this or any other act) that may be made in the current and subsequent fiscal years, $100,000.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, what about item 210?

Mr. McIlraith: That was passed last July 26.

Mr. Herridge: Then I will take advantage of vote 212 to raise a matter that is of great importance to the people of southeastern British Columbia, and I make no apology for this final appeal because time is of the essence. The governor in council is required to make a decision by January 16 with respect to the termination of passenger service on the Kettle Valley railway. I have been asked to bring this matter to the attention of the committee by residents of Fernie, Kimberley, Nelson, Trail and Penticton. They want a spokesman in this house on this matter because they are very concerned about it.

For some years we have been suffering from a limited and split passenger service on this very important railway, a decision initiated in the first instance owing to supposed danger from bombing attacks by the Sons of Freedom. That matter has now been overcome so it is no longer a consideration.

Some time ago the Canadian Pacific Railway made application to the board of transport commissioners to discontinue this passenger service, and hearings were held in the district. Strong opposition was voiced to this step. The city of Fernie was represented as well as the Fernie chamber of commerce. So was the city of Cranbrook and the Cranbrook chamber of commerce; the brotherhood of locomotive engineers; the brotherhood of railroad trainmen; the city of Lethbridge; the village of Natal; the Nelson chamber of commerce and the city of Nelson; local 480 of the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers; Tye; and also the Kootenay lake bible camp and others.

I have sat here patiently waiting for an opportunity to express in as few words as possible the concern of the people in southeastern British Columbia over this problem. I have received telegrams from Nelson, Trail and Rossland, and I have handed them over to the minister. A good number of these municipalities and other organizations are sending petitions to the governor in council because of the changed circumstances.

Just to indicate the thinking of the people of the district I am going to read one petition sent by the Nelson chamber of commerce:

> Petition: We the Nelson chamber of commerce hereby humbly pray to appeal against the ruling of the board of transport commissioners order authorizing the discontinuance of operation of passenger trains No. 45 and 46 between Lethbridge, Alberta and Spences Bridge, B.C.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has taken the necessary steps to discontinue the said passenger service effective date set for this area is January 16, 1964.

Throughout the time the board of transport commissioners were holding its hearing in this area there were misgivings on part of both the railway company and the public to be served as to the economic value of the passenger service.

In late October of this year the railway companies of Canada announced new reduced passenger rates for travel in Canada. On this basis we request a rehearing of this application of the board of transport commissioners. We feel that until the board have had the opportunity to assess the value of the new rates to the travelling public of this district the cancellation date of said passenger service is premature.

This petition is addressed to the governor general in council, Ottawa. This matter seriously concerns the people of this district, because our air service is sometimes limited in the winter by weather conditions. Our road service is also limited by road conditions, particularly over the summits. This railroad serves one of the great wealth producing areas of British Columbia, and the discontinuance of this passenger service will affect at least 100,000 people. In this area we have a great mining and smelting industry, a great forest industry, and other industries are being developed in the region. I raise the matter again, as I promised these various organizations and persons who have wired and written to me I would, on this last opportunity before the end of the session. I urge the minister to bring these representations to the attention of the governor in council and to give favourable consideration to the very reasonable request of a very reasonable group of people.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, this matter raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West is of very great importance to the entire southeastern portion of British Columbia, as a matter of fact to the entire southern portion of the province outside of the lower mainland. The minister will tell the hon. member that I have brought this matter both to his attention and to that of the government on a number of occasions, and the minister has assured me that as soon as the session is over and the work load becomes a little less arduous he will be considering the question of the board's order to allow the C.P.R. to withdraw this service.

It might be well to mention here, Mr. Chairman, that one of the most lucrative subsidiaries of the Canada Pacific Railway, and I believe one of the subsidiaries that makes the greatest contribution to the dividends paid by the railway company, is itself located in this area. That is the huge smelter mentioned by the hon. member, the mines in Kimberley adjacent to Cranbrook and, of course, the vast fertilizer industry established by the same company in Trail.

Unquestionably this service is losing money for the railway company. The submission to the board indicated, I believe, that the company is losing some $500,000 as a result of so few passengers using the service. The service consists of Budd cars, units which can be operated relatively cheaply, yet the operation has been showing a deficit of $500,000 when all costs have been considered.

Should this service be discontinued $500,000 of the taxpayers' money would be saved. This is axiomatic when one considers that we are now subsidizing the railways to the extent of $70 million on a straight grant basis to provide additional revenue to the companies because they have not been allowed to increase their rates as permitted by the board. I suggest that the Department of Transport consider spending an equal amount of money in providing safe all weather airstrips which would enable us to have the benefit of a first class air service in that area at all times. The hon. member for Kootenay West has told the committee that the air service in this area is not dependable in the winter months and I think we can realize why, when we consider that the airport of which he was speaking is situated between two high mountain ranges. The hon. member for Yukon can talk about airstrips running east and west and the danger of having them obstructed by terminals. In the area of which I am speaking we have our strips running in one direction only because that is the only direction which they can run, in other words parallel to the mountain ranges.

There are these difficulties about providing a service, but I wish to say that Canadian Pacific has provided an excellent service having regard to all these circumstances. If Mr. McConachie were required to come before a house committee, as is Mr. McGregor of T.C.A., to report on the activities of his company I think we would find that this air route has been operating since 1946 and showing a deficit during all those years. The company is attempting to provide a good service, and I am sure if the department were to make better landing facilities available we would see a great improvement in the service during the winter months.

The railway service is an old and historic service and its discontinuance would represent a serious backward step. I ask the minister now publicly to give this matter serious consideration as soon as the house prorogues, sometime this afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not "dissolves".

Mr. Gundlock: I wish to add my support to the objection taken on behalf of the communities in southern Alberta to the proposed curtailment of air travel facilities. I think probably everything that can be said has been said, but I should like the minister to give us some assurance that this matter will be considered. It is a bad time of year to resort to bus travel over the mountains. Even if this proposal to abandon the route could be put off for two or three months, until spring, it would be a help. I strongly urge the minister to consider this matter in every light. It would be a good Christmas present for us if he would do so and reach a favourable decision.

Item agreed to.

Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

213a. To provide payments to companies subject to order number 96300, dated November 17, 1958, of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada of an aggregate amount of $20,000,000, in respect of the period April 1, 1963, to March 31, 1964, to be paid in instalments at such times as may be determined by the said board for the purpose of reimbursing the said companies for such diminution in their aggregate gross revenues during the said period as the opinion of the said board is attributable to such companies maintaining the rate level for freight traffic at an 8 per cent increase instead of 17 per cent as authorized by the said order; and to provide payments to the said companies of an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year 1963 of $50,000,000 to be paid in instalments at such times and in accordance with such methods of allocation as may be determined by the said board for the maintenance by such companies of the rates of freight traffic at the said reduced level, $70,000,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) a few questions with regard to vote 213a, which reads as follows:

Interim payments to companies as defined in the Freight Rates Reduction Act as compensation to such companies for the maintenance of their freight rates on freight traffic at reduced levels.

I also read on the detail of the same vote.

Appropriation not required for 1963-64.

Could the minister tell us whether this means that as of January 1, 1963, or at the beginning of the fiscal year 1963, such interim payments to companies under the Freight Rates Reduction Act are discontinued and will not be in effect as of this year?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: This is to provide the identical amounts which were provided last year. It has to do with adjustments which are made by carryover because of the different fiscal years.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, does this mean that those payments will not be made in 1963-64?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: No, they will be made.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, since that subsidy will be granted again, I wish to say a few words about it.

First, I want to point out to the house that those payments or subsidies are granted to all railways, which use them to reduce their freight rates. That being so, the railways are competing unfairly with the trucking companies because the federal government grants subsidies to the railways on a percentage of the cost of transport, whereas the truckers do not get the same advantages.

I wish to point out to the minister that the subsidies amounting to $50 million, which are given to the railways only and not to the air transport companies or the trucking companies, are taken out of the taxes paid by the people and the Canadian corporations.

Trucking companies and truckers pay taxes which are used to grant subsidies to railway companies, thus letting them compete with their own enterprises.

Mr. Chairman, you will agree with me that this does not make sense. Why tax private enterprise so as to make it possible for public enterprise to compete with it.

It should be noted that the C.N.R., for instance, does not pay any taxes; but it is the money collected from the truckers which will help the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. to compete with them in the transportation field.

I think that this is illogical, unfair and illegal competition on the part of a crown corporation and against private companies.

At the meeting of the sessional committee on railways, I asked the president of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Donald Gordon, whether he would agree to the granting of this subsidy not only to the railways but to all freight carriers. The president of the Canadian National Railways replied that he would readily agree to the granting of these subsidies not only to the railways but to trucking companies as well.

It seems to me then that, if it were so, competition would be fair and that there would not be this attempt to drive the trucking industry to bankruptcy. That would be only fair for all transport companies, including trucking and air transport companies.

I wonder if the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) would agree with the trucking companies which made representations and with the president of the Canadian National Railways, so that those subsidies be granted not only to the railways but to all carriers including trucking and air transport companies.

I ask the minister if he is prepared to change those payments in order to grant them to all transport companies operating in Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, just before the minister rises to answer I should like to express my support of what the hon. member has said about this matter, because it seems to me that under the present set-up we are in fact using public funds to direct business to the railroads in a discriminatory manner, and we do not allow the same thing to happen with private firms. If we are going to have these subsidies I believe that the trucking firms should have an equal opportunity, so that at point of origin freight can be designated to go either by truck or rail. I certainly feel that a choice is not given shippers in this matter because of this situation.

The minister knows, of course, that the matter was discussed to quite an extent in the committee. When this question does come up for final consideration I hope we will put an end to this type of thing and bring things out into the open so that truckers can compete with the railways on a fair basis. As far as I am concerned the trucker is not given a fair shot at the business at all.

Mr. Nasserden: On this particular point I should like the minister to clear up a question in my mind. So far as the railways are concerned, do they receive this subsidy on any goods that they move by truck?

Mr. McIlraith: The answer to that question is no. The essential difference between the trucking industry and the railways has been completely missed in the discussion of this item. This item was provided for the railways by the former government because the railways were prevented from adjusting their freight rates. In order to compensate them for the arbitrary restriction of their right to adjust their freight rates, this payment was provided. I am somewhat amazed to hear hon. members who come from areas where great quantities of freight originate that require to be shipped by rail raising any question at all about this item.

In any event, the truckers are free to charge whatever rates they like, and so far the government has not seen fit to restrict the rates they can charge. The whole premise on which the argument of the hon. member for Lapointe was based disappears. The item is one that I hope will disappear in this form from the estimates. It really is an item that arises because of the delay in dealing with the railway legislation based upon the MacPherson royal commission report. I must say I am rather disappointed that there was no opportunity to deal with that legislation at this session, because it is a piece of legislation that I think is of vital significance and of some urgency to the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, if we ever heard a specious argument, it is the one that has just been advanced by the Minister of Transport, when he said that the government does not control trucking rates as it does for the railways.

It is obvious that the government, by trying to restrict freight rates, wanted to cope with a substantial increase in freight rates. But to correct one evil, it produced another one which it does not seem ready to remedy. To grant subsidies to railway companies in order to prevent an increase in their rates is like saying that since railway companies have now a given rate, trucking companies that want to remain competitive with them are compelled to maintain their own rates at a relatively low level.

It is obvious that the government does not and cannot control private trucking companies' rates. But if special subsidies are paid to the railways so that they can maintain their rates at a relatively low level, trucking companies have to do the same, and this represents an indirect way of controlling the rates of the said companies. However, as truckers do not get special subsidies from the government, they have to put up with losses if they want to maintain their rates at the same level as the railways'; and if their rates are higher than those of the railways, they are not competitive and the shippers use the railways. It is therefore by means of the government's subsidies that the railways enter into unfair competition with the trucking companies.

The government controls the trucking rates, if not directly, at least indirectly, as these rates are compulsory for the trucking companies that wish to remain competitive not only as regards the C.N.R. but railway companies operating in Canada.

That is why we suggest to the Minister of Transport that the legislation should be changed. As I said a moment ago, although the subsidies were granted to prevent an exorbitant increase in rates, I am afraid that by trying to cure one ill, the government has brought about another one: the unfair, illogical and illegal competition of railway companies against private trucking companies.

That is why I ask the minister to enlighten the house about the government plans on that point for the coming year. Is it the minister's intention to put the railway companies on an equal footing with the trucking and air line companies? What are the solutions that he could propose before too long to solve that problem?

I would like to hear the answer of the Minister of Transport.

[Text]

Mr. Leboe: Before the minister speaks, if he does answer, I should like to say that I do not want to be misunderstood. The minister said he was surprised that the question was raised in connection with a possible reduction of freight rates to consumers. We are not against that, and we do not want to be misunderstood. What I am saying is that the shipper has no choice in placing an order because of the 9 per cent difference between the truckers' rate and the railway rate which results from this subsidy.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois):

That item 213a be not voted in its present form, but that it be granted for any type of transportation, of the shipper's choice.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not wish to raise any point of order, but I have grave doubts as to whether the amendment is in order. I think the simplest way to settle it would be to put the question on the amendment.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, even though it is Saturday and we want to get through, let us not establish a precedent of that kind. If this amendment is allowed to be voted upon after a point of order is raised we could have all kinds of amendments on 500 different items.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I say that if the hon. member had listened carefully he would have heard me say that I was not raising a point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Then I do.

Mr. Gregoire: Then I withdraw my amendment, and I propose—

Mr. Lambert: No, the hon. member cannot withdraw without consent.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely we are going to give consent if it is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Since the point of order has been raised, I submit it is not possible to do anything to a money vote in committee of supply except to pass it, reduce it or one or two other things like that. One cannot change the destination or purpose of the amount. I have a good idea what the hon. member is going to do now. He is going to move that the vote be reduced. Let us not waste time with something that is completely out of order. Let the hon. member withdraw it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could save a little time for the committee by suggesting that there be unanimous consent to allowing the hon. member to withdraw his amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to allowing the hon. member for Lapointe to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Megantic.

That vote No. 213a be reduced to $1.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: That is in order.

Amendment (Mr. Gregoire) negatived: Yeas, 6; nays, 53.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have only one word to add on that matter. I must say that the truckers, not only in the province of Quebec but throughout Canada, requested many times that the subsidy legislation be amended. At the present time, there is no indication that will be done.

When we asked what were the plans of the Department of Transport to improve that legislation, we did not get any answer. The truckers told about their problems in detail. They even told us that each time a political party was out of office, it showed itself sympathetic to their problems and approved the plans and suggestions made by the truckers. But when that same political party comes to power, then it disregards the suggestions and recommendations made by the Canadian truckers association.

I think that today truckers are in a position to see how things stand. Since each member was free to vote, the truckers will be able to appreciate the sincerity of the members of the house.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Gregoire: On division, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Transport.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to thank all hon. members of the committee for their courtesy not only today but throughout the whole of this session. I should like to wish each hon. member and his family a very happy festive season.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you call the next department, Mr. Chairman, there was an understanding last night that when we approached one o'clock we would decide whether it would be worth while sitting through the luncheon hour, if that would expedite the business of the committee and allow the staff to get home for the evening. It seems to me we have made the kind of progress which would suggest that if we had that hour during the day we might be able to get through well before six o'clock, and if it was understood there was general acceptance of that view we would sit right through. Instead of interrupting the estimates of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who might at one o'clock be in one of his eloquent flights, I thought it would be preferable to make a decision on this point at this stage.

Mr. Lambert: That would be the most compelling reason to rise at one o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: I think we should all have some break for lunch.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then could we agree to break off at one o'clock, or pretty near one o'clock, and come back half an hour later?

Mr. Knowles: All right.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed we break off at one o'clock and come back half an hour later?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1. Department administration, $7,648,800.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Nesbitt: I realize that since these estimates were discussed on a previous occasion the Secretary of State for External Affairs has visited NATO headquarters; and while most of us realize that no great, momentous decisions were made at NATO, because of the newness of various heads of states for other reasons, nevertheless I wonder if he, in his customary genial manner, could attempt to give us some information on what went on at the NATO meeting. I would also like to have his comments, briefly, on the likelihood of Canada securing a seat on the security council of the United Nations.

This is a matter which I have raised on various occasions, and in the interval between the minister's attendance at the NATO meeting in Paris it has gained a great deal of prominence at the United Nations. As hon. members know, the Soviet union has made it quite clear the security council will not be expanded until such time as the People's Republic of China is given the Chinese seat. As a result the available non-permanent seats are going to have to be redistributed to provide for Asian and African representation.

In all likelihood the commonwealth seat will have to go, if it has not already gone. The other day the Prime Minister was a little clearer in the house on this question than the Secretary of State for External Affairs had been, but he pointed out—and I am fully aware of them—the difficulties which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has in this problem. There is no easy answer to it, but if the commonwealth seat goes at the next meeting of the general assembly and is filled by an Asian or African member, then Canada will be left with no place to go. In other words she will have no group to join in order to obtain a seat on the security council, and I think everybody would agree that would be a ridiculous situation in view of the work and the assistance which Canada has supplied to the United Nations.

There are two alternatives. Canada could go with the Latin American group or the west European group, but that would only give her a chance to secure a seat on the council every ten or 12 years, and this would not be very suitable. The other possibility, which I have mentioned on previous occasions and which I would like to draw to the minister's attention again, is that if the redistribution takes place a number of other countries will be in the same position as Canada, countries like Australia, New Zealand, Israel, Cyprus and perhaps the two West Indian countries, Jamaica and Trinidad. Although I hope every effort will be made to retain the commonwealth seat, possibly some arrangement could be made in the interim, until the security council is expanded, whereby the countries I have mentioned could form a group in order to obtain a one year seat on the security council. Canada, Australia and New Zealand are three charter members of the United Nations and have contributed to it in a great many ways. I have a feeling that if the minister went out and really tried to sell this proposition among the other countries in the United Nations he might have the same success he had in days gone by when he introduced the package deal providing membership for all the new countries in the United Nations.

I am concerned about Australia and New Zealand but more concerned about what will happen to Canada, because our role at the United Nations has been such that I am sure nearly every member country would agree we are entitled to have an opportunity to serve on the security council and the other councils of the organization.

Mr. Gelber: Mr. Chairman, there was an ancient Greek philosopher called Heraclitus who said you cannot stand in the same stream twice; everything is in flux; everything is in change. I believe we should take a look at our attitude toward NATO, the commonwealth, the United Nations and at our associations with Britain and the United States, which are always in a state of change. Today our relationship with Britain has matured, but our association with the United States is under critical review. The emergence of our southern neighbour as the political leader of the free world, and the most powerful of all the world's economies, has placed special stresses on our thinking, for we have profited much in terms of our security and economic growth by the easy relationship which ensued between us for more than a century.

It is important to separate in our minds the problems which are disturbing us. The role of the United States as leader of the western alliance should not be confused with the question of United States capital investment in Canadian development. We can only welcome the profitable participation of friends in our economic growth. Our ability to provide solutions that meet our national needs and prove attractive to foreign investors is our task, not theirs.

Trade problems also influence our relationship with the United States. Here there is a closer association between political and economic policy, and the United States must follow policies of trade which will give strength to her leadership and not frustrate it.

The pull of the frontier endowed American life with a spirit of optimism and a faith in the invincibility of American power. Much of this democracy has given a special and attractive quality to American society. It has also had its shortcomings, and among these have been the inward-looking tendency of American public life, its messianism, its boundless optimism, its refusal to plan because the realization of the American dream was inevitable in any case.

The role of the United States as a world leader was thrust upon her. There was to be a rude awakening. Today we still live with the shock of Pearl Harbor. The United States has learned that it must play a large role and that the price of leadership is not always sweet. The American public has learned that to meet the challenges of the 1960's it does not possess resources without limit. The United States also needs allies, and it prizes them.

The death of John Kennedy removed a powerful leader who was not the product of a disenchantment with the American tradition, but the eloquent spokesman of a new and mature pragmatism that has been willing to accept the burdens of its role and looks to its allies to accept theirs. It would be unworthy for Canadians to be anti-American as it has been unworthy for Canadians to be anti-British or anti-French. The passions that were expressed about Britain between the two wars have subsided not only because Britain is different, but because we too have changed. But the lesson remains. As a member of a wider alliance we must press for what we think is right, while remaining loyal to our allies and associates.

John Kennedy was not a typical American in a society where the collective pressures to conform are so powerful. His love of learning for the sake of learning marked him as someone special. His refusal to bow to the orgy of sentimentalism that on occasion engulfs his people marked him as a strong individualist. His personal dignity and that of his wife have shown them as chief citizens who eschewed the popular humdrum. His belief in the equality of man before the law, as expressed by the highest tribunal in his land, will remain his finest hour as it is the blessing of the American commonwealth.

To play our part we must strengthen our own national life for the benefit of all Canadians. The economic growth of our country provides us the sinews for international policy. We must be wise, and we must have the wherewithal to underwrite our judgment. We must have amity. In our broad country there is scope for all who live here. If we are to be torn by a struggle between our two chief cultural groups, then we will have less to say, we will have less for each to do. A frantic dialogue can enervate our national being and frustrate the well-intentioned purposes of all. Abroad, we could only sink in the scale of those who are contributing to peace and well-being. The first test of our statesmanship is leadership at home. This means both national and provincial and in the area of all those voluntary groups which contribute so much to our national life.

In working for a world at peace we seek the extension of the rule of law. We were among the founding members of the United Nations and have joined each of its specialized agencies. Through the developing commonwealth and in association with our NATO allies we are daily seeking to strengthen the forces of peace and to make more abundant the avenues of international well-being.

Canadians must be prepared to share office with more members in the committees of the United Nations and in its secretariat. Canada's influence now more especially will be related to the wisdom of its counsel and the strength of its national life at home. The shifting emphases in NATO reflect in part the recovery of Europe itself, which NATO was formed to protect. The underpinning of European peace was recognized as the special interest of all the partners, and the English speaking members made commitments stronger, more pervasive and automatic than ever before, which marked a turning point in the history of the west. To resist the encroachments of Soviet power was sworn on the headstone of Czech democracy.

The discomfitures in NATO arise not alone from jealousies over sovereign power, but the very sinews of national being are at stake in the problems of industrial production, of markets and the race for nuclear technology. These problems of Europe and the Atlantic community pose difficult challenges to American leadership of the west, to the European members themselves, and to countries like Canada which have an important interest and must have an opinion about these serious issues.

We all welcome the moves which the government has made to increase Canadian participation in programs of aid to underdeveloped countries. This was first marked by doubling the allotment to the special United Nations fund. In his recent statement the Secretary of State for External Affairs outlined government policy for an additional $70 million in the fiscal year 1964-65. These programs which assist the developing countries to help themselves are a growing aspect of our foreign policy. Foreign aid will remain a facet of our public life during the lifetime of all members of this house, and beyond. We must cast it in these terms, and international assistance will grow as an aspect of our national policy. It seems to me that we should continue to support all those multilateral programs which have grown under the aegis of the United Nations and have to their credit many brilliant accomplishments. The devotion and service of peoples from diverse backgrounds who have contributed in a spirit of dedication places us in their debt. Among these are many splendid Canadians.

While we view foreign aid as a permanent feature of our public life, we must plan our programs in terms of our over-all economic policies. Here is the union of the right and of national interest, and we must be ashamed of neither. Foreign aid, like all economic programs, must be viewed as part of our own economic growth and part of the important objective of full employment for Canadians. To further these aims and to give greater weight to foreign assistance programs, it seems to me that we are going to have to expand our bilateral programs. These provide the more likely avenues for a wide expansion of this special international activity.

There is another facet which we must not neglect. I mentioned the Canadians who have given service abroad. In most of the developing countries there is a lack of know-how. The skills we have, we can share. The programs of investing in the skills of our people should be related to needs both at home and abroad. Many Europeans have given this service when the flags of their motherlands flew over the lands of colonial peoples often rich in great traditions but poor in the techniques needed to help themselves. Canada should provide career opportunities for those who wish to serve abroad. It was suggested by the former secretary general of the United Nations, the late Dag Hammarskjold, that the United Nations itself should create such an international agency through which people of skill could be seconded to developing countries seeking to borrow special talents. The agency could provide the security and the career opportunities which a recipient country is unable to offer. Canada itself could start such a program through a special section of the civil service. Men and women specially recruited and trained could thus bring their talents to the international scene where such avenues are now provided in modest measure.

In a world of turmoil we are jealous of fundamental rights and liberties of all human beings. The United Nations, through its commission on human rights, has provided an important means for the discussion of these important issues. The position of Jewish people in the Soviet union is a case in point. This is one aspect of Stalin's policy which Khrushchev has not neglected, although the means are different. The Soviet union is based on the legal recognition of nationalities and, within the context of this law, Jews are designated as a nationality. Jews constitute slightly more than 1 per cent of the Soviet population and are eleventh among the nationalities. Thirty eight per cent live in the Russian republic, 37 per cent in the Ukraine and 7 per cent in white Russia. In a country where they have resided for over a thousand years they are looked upon as an alien group. Policy toward the Jews and Judaism has remained the same since 1948. The communist poet Yevtushenko asked why there was no monument to the thousands of Jews slaughtered by the nazis outside Kiev, at Babi

Yar. There is a strong tradition of anti-Semitism in Russia, in which the Soviet leaders have been raised. But there have also been other voices. No Hebrew bible has been published since 1917. Not a single Jewish religious book has appeared since 1920. Synagogues have been closed; the study of Hebrew forbidden; Jewish religious observances hounded and harried. This process has been stepped up since the middle of 1961. The public baking of matzah—unleavened bread—for the Passover has been forbidden since the spring of 1962.

Attacks on Jews and Judaism have been published in the communist press. Elderly religious Jews have their names listed in the press, together with the names of their children, stating public positions and places of work. This is to hold them up to ridicule and is effective social blackmail. The economic crimes which have led to public trials are almost unbelievable, and death has been the frequent verdict. That within the context of a communist society another economy exists is like Alice in Wonderland. This is not even state capitalism. Karl Marx said in his attack on the rise of capitalism in England that when they stopped burning witches they started hanging men for stealing horses. The progress from Stalin to Khrushchev may be mirrored here.

Edward Crankshaw of the London Observer, as printed in the Globe and Mail of Saturday, November 16, reports a trial where the accused "contrived to perfect a racket which diverted a great deal of the products of no less than 52 state-owned factories and a number of collective farms into their own pockets". One "had bribed his way into a political post which put him in charge of a 'psycho-neurological health centre' where a large number of patients were innocently engaged in occupational therapy. By bribery and blackmail on a majestic scale, he and" another "turned this modest outfit into a commercial underwear factory, fitting it out with the latest machines embezzled from state-owned enterprises, diverting wool—460 tons in all—from collective farms, sent out the manufactured articles to be finished at other state-owned factories, and privately selling the final products in markets and at railway stations".

Of course the accused were trapped because an accomplice, who sold his wife to one of the plotters, confessed to the police, who found under the floor boards of their house rubles valued at $300,000, and bullion in gold bars. The picture was perfect. The Soviet union confesses that within a communist society exists a highly organized economy of the demi-monde, equipped with everything, even gold bars. The Soviet union is loth to have meetings of the United Nations commission on human rights. Canada must be one of the guardians of this tribune of fundamental freedoms and ensure that it is not put aside.

The influence of Canada abroad can only be impaired by bitter struggles at home. Sparsely spread along the southern frontier of our great continental land mass, we have only emerged as a country of significance and a people of achievement because for two centuries we have lived and worked together on a basis of give and take. That tolerance is the mortar of our edifice. Should it not withstand the weathering of time, then surely what we have built will crumble.

To be a Canadian is to be proud of our achievement. Should we lose the sense of the worthwhileness of what we are doing we will never respect ourselves nor command the loyalty and allegiance of others with whom we are associated in the great tasks of building peace and well-being. We must stand for understanding both at home and abroad, and this we share with our friends and allies.

The eternal flame which was lit over the grave of Jack Kennedy in Arlington Park will pierce the darkness where prejudice abounds and provide a beacon to men who dream and struggle for freedom. This is something for us all.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I had the privilege, along with others, of being a member of the standing committee on external affairs, the sessions of which were very ably conducted by the hon. member for Leeds, assisted at times by the vice chairman, the hon. member for Queens. I am sure all of us who were members of that committee feel that even though it was late in starting—it had to meet at a time when there was competition for space, and so on—nevertheless its sessions were worth while, and we hope that at the next session this important committee will meet earlier.

It is not my intention to rehash any of the matters discussed by the committee on external affairs. Rather there are two subjects on which I wish to speak briefly. The first is one which has arisen since the committee held its sessions; the second is a matter part of which has just been referred to by the hon. member for York South. The reason I did not raise this before the committee is that the minister himself was not able to be there all the time, and the matter was such that I wanted to raise it when he was present.

The first matter, one which has come up since the sessions of the committee, is, I freely admit, a delicate one. Nevertheless I think it ought not to be delicate, and that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should comment upon it. It came up yesterday or last night during discussion of the estimates of the Department of Transport. I think it was somewhat out of order at that point, but it is certainly in order now. It arises, at least as far as I am aware, from an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on Thursday of this week under the by-line of Victor Mackie. The headings are rather interesting. The article is headed "Diplomatic eyebrows up. Canada raps French critics. Federal government angered over embassy's too open pressing for Caravelle". I should like to read the first paragraph of Mr. Mackie's article which appears, as I say, in the Winnipeg Free Press of December 19, on page 1.

Activities of the French embassy in Ottawa during the period when the cabinet was considering Trans-Canada Air Lines' decision to purchase the DC-9 medium-range jet embarrassed members of the Canadian government, it was learned here today from informed sources.

The French government has been made aware of the embassy's unusual activities. It has been drawn to the French government's attention that their embassy in Canada appeared to capitalize on the delicate English-French situation within this country to promote the interests of the Caravelle.

I was quite interested in the comments made on this matter last night, and I recognize the motives behind those comments. I think it is pretty generally known that I am one of the strong advocates, of whom there are many of us in this house of all parties, of equal rights for the two main groups which make up this country of ours. But it seems to me we should not confuse the rights of the French language and the English language and the rights of the French culture and the English culture in Canada with an issue of this kind. It is my view that if it is true that the ambassador of a friendly country, the country of France, used his position in this country on behalf of a commercial outlet in his own country, and if he exploited a difficult situation which we had in this country, there is reason for these headlines; there is reason to believe that the federal government must at least have been embarrassed, if not angered, over what happened.

I express the hope that the minister, diplomatically but nevertheless clearly, will give us his view of this incident. At first when press reports appeared about this one wondered whether it was really true. Then reports seemed to mount. Yesterday morning there was a preview commentary on this matter over the C.B.C., although I think the speaker on that occasion did not refer to the embassy but to the French government participating in this matter. But last night the hon. member for Three Rivers, as far as he had knowledge of it, seemed to confirm that this actually took place and that the ambassador of France to this country did participate in the matter.

On occasion American officials in this country have done things which we did not like, and we have said so. I think we should continue to do so. Not long ago in a British Columbia election I think there was a complaint about a United States government representative in this country. I do not think our sensitivities on this question should keep us from bringing this incident out into the open too. I believe our diplomatic relations with friendly countries will be maintained in the way they ought to be maintained only if the proprieties of diplomatic relationships are respected.

I should like to hear from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this matter. Does he have knowledge that these activities were carried on? Has the Canadian government made its views on this question known to the ambassador of France or, through our ambassador in Paris, to the French government? I noted what the Secretary of State said about the capacity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for eloquent flights. However, even if he is to make an eloquent flight I hope he will not fail to speak to us diplomatically and calmly, but nevertheless clearly, on this issue.

It had been my intention a few minutes ago to make this small contribution to the debate and then to sit down and let the minister comment if he would, and then to rise later and raise the other issue. But because of the latter part of the remarks of the hon. member for York South I feel I should deal with this other question at this time. I for one was interested in the entire speech made by the hon. member for York South, even though it is the last day of the session, which is not usually a day when long speeches on philosophical and international issues are the order of the day. Nevertheless it was a good speech. I liked in particular his bringing out into the open another delicate question and one that concerns us, namely evidence of anti-Semitic practices in the Soviet union. With what the hon. member for York South said I am in complete agreement. I think in all parts of the house there is agreement with and sympathy for the point of view he expressed.

I only wish he had gone a little further, and that he had told us what the present government's position is on this matter. I am sure that as a member of this house he must know of documents which have been tabled. He must know about the one I have in mind, because he was here when I asked for it to be tabled. I refer to sessional paper No. 264, tabled on Wednesday, November 27, 1963. This document consists in the main of a communication addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs by the Canadian Jewish Congress over the signature of Mr.

Michael Garber, the president of the congress. In addition to that letter there is a copy of the reply which the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote to Mr. Garber's letter. Mr. Garber's letter was written on October 8, 1963 and the reply was written under date of October 30.

Mr. Garber in his letter referred to a portion of a brief presented earlier to the Prime Minister on behalf of the Canadian Jewish Congress, and both that portion of the brief and Mr. Garber's letter referred to the very things about which the hon. member for York South has told us. In particular there was a specific reference to a rabbi in the Soviet union who was charged with certain alleged economic malpractices, and there was a possibility at that time that this rabbi would be sentenced to the death penalty for those alleged practices.

It is hard to believe that this kind of thing can happen in our modern world. When it happened some years ago in an other country our consciences were shocked. They were even more shocked when it was over and we were aware of the extent of it. I remember being in this house when we considered these matters and passed certain legislation concerning them. I remember when we considered the universal declaration of human rights and when we discussed a convention against genocide, and I felt that the house was resolving in its heart, man by man, that we would never again countenance anything of that sort no matter where it reared its head.

I think the letter of Mr. Garber was restrained and reasonable. In the main it asked two things. It asked that the government take the matter up with the Soviet union through diplomatic channels; and second, that it raise the subject of discrimination and anti-Semitism in the Soviet union in the third committee of the general assembly of the United Nations. I do not intend to take up the time of the committee by reading Mr. Garber's letter. I hope hon. members will take my word that it is a well composed document, restrained in its requests. I feel it should have been responded to in a positive way.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he replied, expressed concern, sympathy and understanding. He went on to say he doubted whether there was any official program encouraging anti-Semitism in the Soviet union but, nevertheless, it existed. In fact he used language almost the same as that which the hon. member for York South used a few minutes ago about the way it had been going on for hundreds of years with some of it, which is there now, being residual from what had been there in the past. But when the Secretary of State for External Affairs got to the two specific requests that the matter be taken up with the government of the Soviet union and raised in the third committee of the general assembly, this is what he had to say. In a lengthy paragraph he referred to the fact that the creation of the state of Israel had heightened suspicion of the Jewish community in the Soviet union. Then he said:

> This suspicion continues, and it has been our policy, therefore, to avoid any action which would emphasize the Jews' foreign connections and confirm Soviet fears. We would be loath, therefore, to make representations directly from the Canadian government to the Soviet government on the rabbi's behalf as it would emphasize the foreign ties and might provoke a renewed drive against the Jews.

That is the response made to the specific request contained in the letter with regard to representations. As to the second request, that the subject be raised in the committee, I should like to read the following paragraph from the letter written by the Secretary of State for External Affairs:

> Although the third committee at the United Nations will not be discussing the question of religious intolerance in any detail this year, the Canadian representative will at some point be making a statement on human rights. If an appropriate occasion arises, it might be possible to make reference in a general way to religious persecution in the Soviet union, which is not directed only against those of the Jewish faith. For the reasons outlined above, however, I would prefer that strictures on the practice of the Jewish religion not be mentioned specifically.

I can only hope the hon. member for York South has not read this letter, because I am sure he would have been scandalized by it. Or perhaps he has read the letter and has decided to ignore it.

If these practices exist at all we should not be so unwilling to mention the question to a friendly nation, bearing in mind that we belong to a generation which has memories of what anti-Semitism did not only to millions of Jews but also to the hearts and souls of all of us. We should not be so unwilling to raise a question on the subject of human rights at the United Nations. I asked for this document to be tabled at a time when a delegation of Canadians was seeking to meet officials of the Soviet embassy here in Ottawa. I know the people who were planning to meet them, and I know that up until the day they were hoping to go they had been given no assurance that they would even be allowed in the embassy. But they were allowed in and they did have a discussion, and I suggest this emphasizes a point which Mr. Garber made in his letter to the minister, namely that the détente we seem to be enjoying at the moment is an occasion when it might be possible to discuss some of these things and get somewhere with them.

Like other members of this house I have had the opportunity of visiting Berlin recently. I remember, when I saw the wall while we were there in September, it looked like something which would never be breached. Today many thousands of West Berliners are at least getting a day in East Berlin. The impossible can happen. I plead with the Secretary of State for External Affairs not to treat this as a subject which should not be raised. I ask him to listen to the eloquent words which were uttered on this subject by the hon. member for York South. I ask him to reconsider the letter he wrote to the Canadian Jewish Congress. I ask that Canada carry forward the sense of resolution we had with regard to this question during the second world war and immediately after when we said, in our hearts if we did not say it openly, that we would never again keep quiet in the face of anti-Semitism anywhere in the world.

These are the two subjects I wished to raise. Neither of them was raised in the committee. I should like to hear from the minister, when we return after our half hour break. What does he think about these reports of the activities of the French embassy, and what has he to say about the government's responsibility to state Canada's position with regard to combating anti-Semitism anywhere in the world?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 1.30 p.m.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on this item rather than wait for the particular item, because I suppose we will be in a greater rush than ever then. I should have liked to say something about external affairs in general but I realize that time is limited. I was a member of the committee, but being a member of other committees also I unfortunately was not able to attend many sessions. I hope that next year our committees will start early in the session so we will only have a third of them sitting at a time and can really do the work that is required.

I have been sitting here almost restlessly, Mr. Chairman, expecting a statement from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the negotiations with respect to the Columbia, but I assume we will hear from him at great length when I have concluded. I am going to confine my few brief remarks to a particular aspect of this matter, because it does provide an opportunity to advance one argument which I trust will have some effect on what up to now appears to be the minister's impervious mind in this respect. I wish to refer to a motion I moved for the production of papers, and I really have a complaint here. On October 30 I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Port Arthur, and it was ordered:

> That there be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence and telegrams exchanged between the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or their offices and any private citizen in Canada with respect to the Columbia river treaty since May 1, 1963.

I have risen on a few occasions, Mr. Chairman, to suggest that we were looking forward to the production of these papers. I mentioned it again today and the Prime Minister did not give a very satisfactory answer. I do hope these papers will be produced before this session ends, because they are interesting letters and there are a lot of people who are anxious to peruse them prior to the commencement of the new session. I do ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to open his heart in this respect. I am told privately that the person who is really holding them up is the secretary of the privy council, Mr. Gordon Robertson. I am told he is primarily responsible for advising the minister not to release them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is wholly inaccurate.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to hear that, because I could not understand why that would be done. In any event, I do urge that these papers be produced before this session ends, which I trust will be by midnight today.

I rise particularly to bring to the minister's attention the concern of the governments of the prairie provinces, organizations in the prairie provinces and many individuals with regard to the protection of water resources that will be required for future development on the prairies. There is a great deal of concern in that respect. The western reclamation association had a meeting last year in Vernon, and against the protests of Hon. Ray Williston unanimously passed a resolution supporting General McNaughton's scheme on the Columbia because they know that in that scheme there would be provision for their water requirements.

In contrast to the attitude, as we understand it, of the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia, what do we find in the states to the south of British Columbia and Alberta? In that connection I want to quote briefly from an article in the Christian Science Monitor of December 7 last headed "Northwest Opposes Sharing of Water":

The Pacific northwest states of the Columbia basin—their future water supply more secure than that of any other region in the nation—will not gladly share that resource. Opposition has been general in Oregon, Washington and Idaho to a Los Angeles proposal that a 519 mile aqueduct be constructed to siphon off Pacific northwest water to the relief of parched southern California.

Consensus of official statements, newspaper editorials, and other expressions of opinion in the northwest has been: Let people come to the northwest if they want the northwest's prime resource—water.

What we say is, let people come to British Columbia if they want our power for industry. I mention that to indicate how concerned they are with preserving their water rights and not giving them away without certain requirements of the states in question being met. I urge that the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia look upon these water resources as resources that should be developed for the Canadian people first, and then let others have our surplus. We can treat these people with complete equity and fairness and protect our own interests at the same time.

On a number of occasions I have asked the minister questions in respect of article 13 of the Columbia river treaty. I have asked whether the consumptive requirements of the prairie provinces were protected under this article. On those occasions the minister has risen and given what I think it is fair to call very evasive answers. The minister must realize that the diversion of water from the Columbia into the prairie rivers must be accomplished by pumping; then there must be the production of electrical energy to recover the power lost in pumping, and then this water will flow through a number of plants on the rivers in Alberta and Saskatchewan. The minister replied in effect that the rights of the prairie provinces were protected in so far as consumptive requirements were concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, so far as consumptive uses are concerned, which is quite different.

Mr. Herridge: The minister never gave me a direct answer in respect of the multiple use requirements, which is a different question. I should like to ask the minister three questions. They are as follows: in the event that 10 or 20 years from now it was decided to divert water from the Columbia into the Saskatchewan for consumptive and non-consumptive uses, and that this water was to flow through a series of hydro plants between the Rockies and its point of use in Saskatchewan or Manitoba and the surplus was to flow on to Hudson bay, is there anything in the Columbia treaty in its present form that could prevent it?

Has the government of Canada ascertained the views of the United States government on this matter, and are they the same as the views of the Canadian government?

If not, will the Canadian government ascertain the views of the United States government on this matter before the treaty is signed? I ask these questions because they are being asked by people in Saskatchewan and organizations that represent the persons interested in the consumptive use of water on the prairie provinces.

In conclusion I have one more question. In view of the written promise of the Prime Minister of Canada that a Liberal government would not make a decision with regard to the Columbia river treaty prior to the persons directly concerned being consulted, can the minister assure the house that this promise will be kept and no decision will be made until those persons interested have been consulted and their views heard?

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, after listening carefully to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), who dealt with the question of diplomatic relations, I should like to say a few words on the occasion of the consideration of the estimates of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin).

Since efforts have been made in these last few years, through the ecumenical council, to bring closer relations between representatives of the various religious denominations throughout the world, it seems advisable to mention here a request which was made on several occasions by Canadian organizations, in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces, to the effect that an ambassador should be appointed to facilitate relations with the Vatican and to interpret the various religious viewpoints in Canada.

In my opinion, it would be more than ever advisable, especially since it is endeavoured by all possible means to bring together the different religious faiths in the world in order to help solve the religious, political and economic problems throughout the world.

I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs this question. Does the Canadian government intend to take this opportunity to appoint in the near future an ambassador to the Vatican?

[Text]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I promised the other day, after returning from the NATO meeting, in answer to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, that on my estimates I would make a report on that meeting. The hon. member for Oxford has renewed the request of the Leader of the Opposition, which I am very happy to fulfil at this time.

The ministerial meetings of NATO, are in camera. It is not possible to give a detailed account of the matters discussed or of the decisions reached. However, to the extent that it is possible to give an indication of our discussions, I may say that this particular meeting took place at the end of a rather unusual year in international affairs.

At the beginning of that year we had what the Soviet union foreign minister has called the Caribbean affair or the situation in Cuba, and the actions taken by the United States with regard to the installation on the island of Cuba of Soviet offensive nuclear weapons in October, 1962. Since that time other matters of interest have taken place. We have the partial nuclear test ban treaty which was agreed by the foreign ministers of the United States, the Soviet union and the United Kingdom in August. This partial test ban treaty has since been supported by 107 nations or more. Then there was the agreement between the United States and the Soviet union with regard to the banning of weapons of mass destruction in outer space.

These are matters of great significance in relation to the general problems that face us at the present time. Perhaps in themselves they do not represent the full achievement which is desirable, but certainly as demonstrations of the détente that exists they must not be discounted.

Advantage was taken at this meeting and against this background, to discuss the general state of east-west relations. It was well that this should be done, because at this meeting there were a number of new representatives of governments. Since the previous ministerial meeting there had come into office some new heads of government, including a new prime minister in the United Kingdom, a new chancellor in West Germany, a new president in the United States and a new prime minister in Italy. In addition to these heads of government there were at the NATO table a number of new foreign ministers, including of course the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom, Mr. Butler.

I took advantage of the meeting in Paris the other day to invite Mr. Butler, at some time convenient to him, to visit Canada. I hope this visit will take place in the relatively near future. I took advantage also of the presence of Mr. Saragat, a distinguished Italian statesman who has taken an active part in the politics of his country over a long period and who is now its foreign minister and vice premier, to ask him to come to Canada at his convenience.

We agreed at the ministerial meeting to take advantage of every opportunity to extend the area of agreement with the Soviet union. We were not all agreed as to the nature of the period of tranquillity which exists and as to whether it is in fact a détente. I am impressed by the suggestion that there is a difference between a détente and a state of actual peace; and bearing in mind that refinement it must be obvious that there is today a détente between east and west. We must take advantage of this to further reduce the risks of conflict between the Soviet union and the western nations.

Mr. Nesbitt: When the minister refers to a détente between the Soviet countries and the western countries does he mean that in the strictly military sense or in the political sense, in the broader meaning of the word, and also in the economic sense?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I meant in the general relations which prevail between east and the west. Between the Soviet union on the one hand and the western world on the other, there is a disposition, we believe, to try to eliminate possibilities of conflict, particularly in this era of nuclear independence.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister means military conflict?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope my hon. friend will permit me to examine the nature of this situation as I see it. We are convinced that, for a number of reasons, the Soviet union is desirous of improving its relations with the western world, we in turn are anxious to make sure that there is proper reciprocity.

There are a number of reasons for the exisence of this détente. It is not necessary to traverse what I said when my estimates were introduced. We believe there are a number of contributing factors in this developing situation. I took occasion then to express the view that commercial, cultural and scientific contacts could be important in bringing about a further harmonization between east and west.

While the situation of détente exists, it is true that at the same time the major political problems that divide east and west remain unresolved. There is still a divided Germany. There is still a divided Berlin. There are the problems centered in Indo China, particularly in Viet Nam and in Laos, and the situation developing in Cambodia. There continue to be problems in the Middle East, and there are, of course, problems in the commonwealth country of Malaysia and the attitude toward that country adopted by Indonesia, notably by the president of Indonesia. So while on the one hand there is this détente, the problems that divide east and west have yet to be resolved. There is therefore no justification for overstatement; nor is there any justification for failure to appreciate the extent to which progress is being made in relations between east and west.

The 18 nation disarmament committee, will be holding its session in Geneva on January 20. We at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting gave consideration to some aspects of the problems that will arise at Geneva. There is a strong disposition to take advantage of the Geneva meeting to see if further agreement, even on a limited scale, might not be achieved on disarmament. I think it is wise to be realistic and to recognize the realities that may not make possible a wide area of agreement on disarmament at this time. I indicated that Canada would pursue its objectives, in concert with its NATO allies, trying to reach as wide a measure of agreement as possible on disarmament, taking advantage of the agreement that was reached in Moscow on the partial nuclear test ban treaty.

We will stress at the Geneva meeting, as I indicated at the Paris meeting, the importance we attach to the proposal for the establishment of control posts on each side of the iron curtain as a means of reducing the risks of surprise attack. This matter was given attention by ministers attending the NATO meeting, and between now and the disarmament meeting to be held in January, there will be further consideration of some practical aspects of the proposal for the establishment of control posts and inspection teams on both sides of the iron curtain.

I wish to say that there is no justification for the view, so widely stated in the newspapers, about the state of disunity in NATO. Each member of the organization took occasion at this last meeting to affirm his country's belief and confidence in the integrity and the purposes of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. There were no exceptions to this reaffirmation of confidence in the purposes of the alliance.

There are differences, of course, as to method, but this is inevitable in any alliance that is predicated upon the membership of nation states that are free. But there can be no doubt that NATO represents a group of nations dedicated to the fundamental basis of the organization, which they recognize as an essential instrument for the preservation of peace, and for their defence in the light of the situation that prevails in the world at the present time.

I think I properly characterize this meeting by saying that the relative tranquillity that has existed in the world for the last 12 months, gave the foreign ministers in attendance an opportunity to carefully evaluate their relations with the east, with the Soviet union. This involved a consideration of commercial policies. It involved a consideration of the use and the terms of credit that should be extended to communist countries in trade in non-strategic goods. It also involved an appreciation of the results of some of the activities of the United Nations that are of concern to NATO.

I should like to tell the committee that there should not be any reserve in the minds of hon. members about this country's support for NATO or about the wide measure of support for the alliance by all the member states which constitute that organization.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I will not take much of the committee's time. I am sure all hon. members of the committee were interested in hearing the résumé given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the recent NATO meeting. I wanted to ask the minister just three brief questions. The first is with reference to the role of NATO in economic matters. The press reports certainly gave the impression that this was a lacklustre meeting of the NATO ministers, largely because, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself has said, we have reached a détente and the primary purpose on which NATO was predicated, is much less serious now than it has been for many years. This is the criticism that many of us raised at the time NATO was formed, that an organization that is built upon a negative, namely fear of military aggression and nothing else, is likely to lose its centripetal force when the threat of aggression diminishes.

This is why many of us argued so strongly at the time that article 2 of the treaty ought to be the important and the long range objective of NATO. I would predict that unless NATO is able to assume a more positive role, as the danger of military aggression relaxes NATO is very likely to disintegrate. I want to ask the minister whether the economic role which was envisaged for NATO is now going to be left entirely to O.E.C.D., or whether there were any discussions with a view to giving NATO some effective and positive economic role in world affairs.

The other question I want to ask the minister is with reference to the attitude of the NATO countries concerning the shipment of arms and military equipment to South Africa and to Portugal. I would like to have it clear as to Canada's position in this regard. What steps are we taking to make absolutely sure that no Canadian arms or military supplies are going to either South Africa or Portugal? Also, what member nations of NATO are taking definite steps to see that armaments are not going to Portugal and South Africa? Would the minister tell us which nations have refused to place such an embargo on this type of shipments? I would appreciate it if we could get some information from the minister on those points, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I have been asked a number of questions. First of all I should like to deal with the questions asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West with regard to the Columbia. In this connection I note the question put to me today on the orders of the day by the hon. member for Kootenay East as to the progress of the discussions on the Columbia river project, the meeting yesterday with the United States negotiators.

I believe that the discussions held yesterday advanced this project more than at any time since we began this series of negotiations. As a result of the progress made and the agreement reached, we are now in a position to put into documentary form material for consideration by our respective governments. This will be followed by a meeting to be held in Washington about January 9. I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that at yesterday's meeting those of us who represented the Canadian position, the government of Canada and the province which is owner of the resource, maintained a joint position in our negotiations with the United States.

The Columbia river project is a very important one. It is one of the major projects that has been considered by any Canadian government. It is a matter of great importance not only to British Columbia but to Canada as a whole. It is a matter of great importance in the relations between the United States and Canada. I may assure the committee that in the negotiations the interests of this country are, of course, carefully observed.

My hon. friend asked me three questions. The three questions that he put to me today were contained in a letter dated December 16 which I received from the premier of Saskatchewan. I shall be replying to that letter in the course of the next few days.

On the first question, as to the situation 10 or 20 years from now with regard to the right of use of the waters of the Columbia for what my hon. friend called consumptive purposes, I can say—this is obviously a hypothetical question—that it will depend upon the situation at that time. But in the context of the question in the language used by the premier of Saskatchewan, the decision would have to rest in this instance with the government of British Columbia. This is obviously a matter on which only the owner of the resource could make a decision.

As to the question of diversion from the Columbia for purposes of irrigation, there is no doubt about the position under the treaty. My hon. friend said that when he asked this question some time ago, I was evasive. I do not think I was evasive in regard to this question. I was not able to give my hon. friend answers to all his questions, because most of them obviously had to do with matters that were then under negotiation. But on the question of interpretation of the treaty there has been no evasion. Article 13 (1) is clear. No loss of right to divert waters for irrigation purposes is contained in the treaty, because the expression "consumptive use" provides for irrigation. This right would be open to Canada in the future, if it were thought that this resource, the Columbia, was desired for irrigation purposes by any particular province in western Canada.

In confirmation of what I have just said there is the testimony of General John Itschner of the United States army corps of engineers before a committee of congress; it said in substance what I have just indicated, namely that neither country will be denied the right of diversion from the Columbia of water for irrigation purposes, which under the treaty are defined as consumptive use.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked me about the economic aspects of NATO. Article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization provides for collaboration among the members of NATO along lines which would promote their mutual economic interests. As he knows, Canada was among those nations which have taken a strong position in urging action toward the implementation of article 2. However, the situation within recent years and more particularly since the establishment of the organization for economic co-operation and development, has considerably advanced.

It is not correct to say that within NATO itself there has been complete implementation of article 2, but some of the ancillary and auxiliary actions taken by members of NATO in the organization for economic co-operation and development go a long way to cover what has not been done under article 2. O.E.C.D. is an organization made up not only of members of NATO. It is made up not only of members of the European economic community and E.F.T.A., but includes two European nations which are not in either of these European eonomic groupings and, in addition, Japan, the United States and Canada. I attended the O.E.C.D. meeting, as my hon. friend knows, about a month ago, and from what I saw at that meeting and from what I have been able to learn since taking on this particular ministerial responsibility I think that O.E.C.D. will very largely meet our demands for the kind of co-operation among NATO member states which has not been fully satisfied under article 2 of NATO.

In addition to O.E.C.D. there is the Kennedy round, the proposal for a 50 per cent linear tariff cut, an initiative which we have welcomed and which we regard as very important for international economic relations, both for the developing countries and for the developed nations.

In addition to this there are the GATT discussions, and the United Nations trade and development conference, which will be held in the spring and will be presided over by a very distinguished Latin American Dr. Prehisch, the former governor of the bank in the Argentine. This conference will not only provide the opportunity to consider the economic interests of countries in the O.E.C.D., but as well the relations between members of that group and the developing nations of the world. This will have a very important bearing on the whole question of external aid; because while we all support the principle of external aid on a bilateral basis, I think most of us recognize that to do something fundamental to help the developing countries will require some effort to touch their productive systems and to touch their whole economies. There is no avenue by which this can more effectively be accomplished than by the future trading patterns which are established between these countries and the developed countries of the world.

In answer to the second question of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, may I say that Canada has acted on the decision of the security council with regard to the embargo on arms. The Canadian government, in answer to the note of the secretary general on August 19 pursuant to a decision of the United Nations security council, replied on October 21 in these words:

> It has for several years been the policy of the Canadian government not to permit the shipment of arms to South Africa which might be used for the enforcement of a policy of apartheid. Following the security council resolution the Canadian government has decided that it will not authorize the acceptance of any new orders from South Africa for items of military equipment, or permit the shipment of such equipment to South Africa.

A similar statement was made with regard to Portugal, the exception in the case of Portugal being confined to arms for use by Portugal in her capacity as a member of NATO. With regard to the use of arms to further her colonial policies there is a prohibition. The Canadian government informed the secretary general on October 18 that no military assistance has been given by Canada to Portugal since November, 1960; and with regard to sales on a commercial basis, it had been the policy of the Canadian government since 1960 not to permit the export to Portugal or to the territories under Portuguese administration of any arms or equipment which in the opinion of the Canadian authorities would be used for military purposes in Portuguese overseas territories. The Canadian government intends to continue this policy. I made a similar statement along these lines in this house on October 21.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister leaves that point may I ask him this question. How is it possible to make sure that arms shipped to Portugal under NATO commitments are not transferred and used for colonial repression?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is a matter for each nation on its own responsibility. We have declared what we are doing. We can only assume that formal declarations of policy by other countries are being observed by those countries. It is the responsibility, I suppose, of the collective organizations concerned to see whether or not there is compliance by the various countries which have made replies to the requests of the secretary general.

Mr. Douglas: I do not know whether the minister has my point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With regard to the number of countries, I cannot tell my friend which countries of NATO have placed an embargo on arms for South Africa; I have not that information before me at the moment.

Mr. Douglas: I do not think the minister has the point I was putting to him a moment ago. I understood him to say that Canada had placed an embargo on the delivery of arms to Portugal or to any of her overseas territories which might be used for repressive measures, but that we still permit the shipment of arms to Portugal if they come within the category considered to be necessary for the fulfillment of that country's NATO commitments. I wonder how the government satisfies itself that arms going to Portugal to meet NATO commitments are not used for colonial repressive purposes. What criteria are used?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We rely on our NATO partner, Portugal. They know the nature of the embargo. We have no reason to assert that they have not conformed to the requirements of Canadian government policy. If the situation were otherwise we would not hesitate to discuss the matter with the government of Portugal.

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister assure the house that obsolete or out of date weapons which are replaced by new weapons from Canada are not taken out of Portugal and used for colonial repression?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would prefer to answer that question by directing myself to what I should think would be a better form of question, I know of no reason for concluding that Portugal is acting contrary to the policy of the Canadian government in this matter.

Mr. Herridge: I take it that the minister cannot assure the house that obsolete weapons replaced by new weapons supplied by Canada are not being shipped to Portuguese possessions overseas for colonial repression.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member looks at me with a delightful air of infallibility. I can only assure the committee that I know of no justification for the conclusion that Canadian government policy is not being observed by Portugal. This, surely is an answer which ought to satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister has been giving the committee his opinions about international affairs. He has talked about states of peace and detentes. I ask him again, referring to his use of the word "détente", whether he means to say that the Soviet union has placed an embargo on economic, ideological and revolutionary penetration in Latin America and other parts of the world.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the hon. member for repeating his question. It is true I did not fully understand its implications when it was first put. When I introduced my estimates I dealt with this matter. I said then that while I believe there is an improvement in east-west relations, this does not mean that the Soviet union has abandoned its ideological objectives either at home or abroad. There is serious difference between the Soviet union and the Chinese people's republic. However, this in turn should not lead Canada or any other western country to an unwarranted position as a result of the differences between these two giants of the communist world.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have one specific matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. As he knows, the United Nations has been placing special emphasis on aid to underdeveloped countries; in fact I believe it was the late President Kennedy who in one of his early speeches to the United Nations assembly referred to the importance of dealing with this matter as quickly as possible. I believe that as a result a special designation was given to the programs he espoused, namely the United Nations development decade.

Canada has responded in this area during recent years, particularly under the leadership of the former minister for external affairs, Hon. Howard Green, who was a distinguished member of this house for so many years, and there have been some improvements in this regard. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee enumerating the schemes which were launched during the time of Hon. Howard Green. However, I cannot refrain from doing so. In 1960 the external aid office was established, and about the same time the basic aid to Colombo plan countries was increased from $34 million to $50 million. Unfortunately there was a temporary cutback in this figure following the exchange prices of a year ago. I am pleased to see that the amount of money involved in this cut has now been restored.

Then there was participation in the special fund of 1959, and there was also the program of aid to the West Indies started in 1958, which over a period of some five years has resulted in a contribution of some $10 million to those countries. Then there was the commonwealth scholarship and fellowship plan which was commenced in 1960, which amounts to $1 million a year and results in an average of 200 scholarships being made available each year. Then there was the other program which was launched in 1961, designed to assist the newly independent French speaking countries of Africa. It was an education assistance program and involved an annual expenditure of about $300,000 a year directed to 15 newly independent countries of Africa. Then in 1960, in the wake of the challenge presented by the late President Kennedy, Canada agreed to offer assistance known as the special commonwealth aid program to countries like Tanganyika, Ghana, the Congo, and so on. This amounted to a contribution of $10.5 million over a three year period. Then there was the launching of the export finance program in January, 1961, which I believe represented a step forward in this field. So, generally speaking, Canada has endeavoured to carry its load in this area of assistance.

There is, however, one item that I should like to bring to the minister's attention at this time, and it concerns the emergency assistance program which was made available to Hong Kong in 1962 and which amounted to about $485,000, consisting largely of a contribution of skim milk and canned meat products which were in surplus in Canada at that time. The minister knows that I have been pursuing this subject in the house since July 24 of this year. I have asked a series of questions and the minister has constantly delayed giving specific replies. In the early stages of my questioning he seemed to suggest that he agreed there was a continuing state of emergency. We know the importance of Hong Kong as a bastion of the free world. The most recent statement the hon. gentleman made in this regard was to the effect that he would give me a complete and definitive report during the consideration of his estimates. I wonder if he is prepared now to do that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is quite correct. The fact is that there is no program of assistance to this area at the present time.

Mr. Dinsdale: My question is, will consideration be given to such a program? I am sure the minister is aware that Hong Kong suffered a disastrous drought last year which compounded the problems in that part of the world. It was my privilege to visit Hong Kong last May; and even though this country, being on the fringe of the Orient, is somewhat better off than other countries, it was quite obvious that there was a desperate need for assistance of this kind.

I was impressed too by the high regard in which Canada is held there, largely because of this important emergency food program and also because of the visit of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to that country some two years ago, when he established very important personal relationships with the people there on the occasion of the first sale of wheat to communist China. I am sure that the friendly and cordial relations which were largely established by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle during his visit have made it possible to continue this important wheat market for western Canadian farmers.

I am sure the minister is aware that there is a real emergency there, and in this decade when we are reaching out in every possible and conceivable way to deal with these problems of extreme urgency I am sure he will agree that the problems of the have-not countries, representing 80 per cent of the world, where people are ill clothed and ill fed, is one with regard to which Canada should assist in every way possible. With our surplus skim milk and our surplus canned goods products, it seems to me this is an area where Canada could quite easily provide continuing assistance.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, I have one question for the minister, and if I put it now it may facilitate the individual votes in his department going through very quickly. Some years ago, primarily as a result of the activities of the Canadian NATO parliamentary group, I believe, an action committee was formed under the chairmanship of Mr. Van-Zeeland of Belgium to establish an Atlantic institute. That committee operated and eventually did establish the Atlantic institute which I believe now has offices in Paris. One of the distinguished members of the original action committee was the present Prime Minister of Canada. I am wondering what the attitude of the Canadian government is now toward the institute. Do they recognize it? There is no evidence in the estimates of any government support for the institute. What is the attitude toward this body now?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the government continues to have an interest in the Atlantic co-ordinating committee and makes a grant toward its operations. The grant is in the amount of $2,500. I have had suggestions recently from interested parties in this organization for an increase in the grant, particularly in view of the fact that the institute will be holding meetings in Canada some time in the month of September, 1964, I believe. Consideration is being given to this request.

We recognize that the Atlantic institute, itself and the co-ordinating committee, perform a useful assignment in educating and informing the public about NATO, in research into the various purposes and activities of NATO, and generally in promoting the solidarity of the people of the north Atlantic area. I assure my hon. friend that this matter is one which engages our interest and will continue to do so.

While I am on my feet perhaps I might supplement my answer to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. We have not given any military assistance to Portugal since 1960. Assurances were requested from Portugal that it would not send Canadian NATO mutual aid arms or equipment to its overseas territories. From conversations I had in Paris the other day with the Portuguese foreign minister I have every reason to think that this is in fact being observed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I have three questions. They are not related to each other, but it will save time if I put them all to the minister now and he can answer all three at once when he gets to his feet. First, what comment has he to make on the reports that the French embassy in Ottawa interfered in some way with the decision that Trans-Canada Air Lines recently had to make? Second, what comment has he to make on the letter which he wrote to the Canadian Jewish Congress in reply to the appeal made to him by that body? I am referring, of course, to the exchange of letters to which I referred before we broke for lunch. My third question relates to something in the future. It has been indicated to us that the Prime Minister will be making a visit to Washington some time in January. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us if this has been made firm, and whether the agenda of that metting is something that can be given to us at this time?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the French embassy, I made a statement in the house the day before yesterday. I intimated that when I was in Paris on Monday and Tuesday of this week I called the Sud-Aviation Company of France and had what I would call satisfactory telephone conversation with regard to a situation which has reached proportions which should not affect good relations between France and Canada. I do not feel I can usefully add to what I said in the house the other day. I think my hon. friend will understand why I believe the question should be left at this point.

With regard to the matter of the Jewish congress letter, I share with my hon. friend, as every member of the house does, a dislike for any form of discrimination practised by any country toward minority groups. We have expressed our condemnation of apartheid in South Africa. The Prime Minister and I as Secretary of State for External Affairs, have in the United Nations, in this house and elsewhere expressed our concern about discrimination which is practised in many areas. Indeed, when I spoke on the question of apartheid in the United Nations I pointed out that it was against Canada's policy to expel any member from the United Nations because of such policies. One of the reasons I gave was that if we were to adopt this practice, we would have to direct our criticisms and take similar action against certain other member states in the United Nations.

The fact that anti-Semitism exists in the Soviet union today is condemned by us with as much vigour as by the hon. member, and I am sure he will agree. This question was dealt with not only in the correspondence between myself and Mr. Michael Garber, president of the Jewish congress; it was also dealt with on November 20 of this year when the Prime Minister made the following statement, as reported in Hansard at page 4957:

> I find it particularly unfortunate that any government should find it necessary to resort to those penalties for economic crimes which were abandoned in many countries of the world at least a century ago. Although the penalties have been levied against persons of various nationalities and faiths within the U.S.S.R., the disproportionate number of Jews given severe sentences may reflect the historical tradition of anti-Semitism which has prevailed among the population, even though there is no evidence to suggest a state program encouraging anti-Semitic tendencies.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Then on page 4958 the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> —there is in the Soviet union a deep-seated suspicion of cosmopolitanism, that is a mistrust of elements in the population and particularly of minority and religious elements which the Soviet authorities fear might have international connections and loyalties which could conflict with their allegiance to the U.S.S.R. Because of this consideration, Mr. Speaker, the present government, as did the previous administration, wishes to avoid any official action which, by emphasizing the Soviet suspicion of the international affiliation of the Jews, might provoke further restrictions against the Jewish community in the U.S.S.R.

I appreciate the attitude my hon. friend took this morning. It is an understandable attitude. I, as foreign minister of Canada, in the light of the information at my disposal, in the light of all the circumstances, believe that the exercise of judgment in this matter which we have made is in the interests of the three million Jews in the Soviet union. However, I have noted what my hon. friend said today. The matter will be reviewed again. I may assure him that the course we have taken in this matter was not taken lightly, but was taken in the interests of the Jews in the Soviet union. Nothing would be gained by resorting to spectacular acts of condemnation or criticism which might have consequences perhaps affecting the welfare of the Jewish people who live within the precincts of the Soviet union.

My hon. friend asked me finally about the visit of the Prime Minister to Washington. It is now settled that the Prime Minister will visit President Johnson on January 22, following his visit to General de Gaulle on January 15, 16 and 17. When the Prime Minister was in Washington attending the funeral of the late President Kennedy he had a talk with the President of the United States. As I mentioned the other day in the house, our Prime Minister was the second head of government to be asked to meet with the new president on that memorable day following the tragic death of President Kennedy. I was present at the conversation, so I can attest to the importance which the new President attaches to the relationship of his country to Canada. It was clearly evident to me that the new President is anxious to establish with the present Prime Minister of Canada the closest relations such as those that existed between the Prime Minister and the late President Kennedy.

When the Prime Minister returned from Washington he wrote a personal note to the President of the United States, thanking him for the generous time given by the President on that busy day, almost the first day on which he assumed the great responsibilities that are now his. Since this note was written in the Prime Minister's own hand I do not have a copy. It was a friendly note, thanking the President for the opportunity to meet him so early and extending to him on behalf of the government and the people of Canada assurances of friendly co-operation in meeting his heavy responsibilities.

I should think it would be desirable, and with the approval of the White House, I now place on the record the reply of the President of the United States. It is dated December 13, 1963 and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

I have been heartened by your letter of December 3. It has been a very great encouragement in these last hard weeks to have the sympathy and support of such a neighbour and leader as yourself. Even at the end of that longest of days, it was a help to have a chance to talk with you, and I now look forward with pleasure to the prospect of our meeting in the new year.

Relations between our two countries are so intimate, numerous and varied that for each of us the relationship is really unique. I fully agree with what you were the first to say—that the intimacy of our connection in no sense permits us to take our relations for granted. I have been close to a number of the specific questions which have been pursued with new understanding and energy on both sides since the meeting at Hyannis Port, and I can assure you again of my determination to keep our relations moving in the spirit which President Kennedy and you established then.

Both in this purpose and in wider problems of our common concern for peace, it is already a help to me to know that you and I can talk to each other frankly and work easily together. It is true that the burdens of this office are heavy, and its responsibilities not limited to the boundaries of this nation—and that makes it all the more important that the man who works here should have the help of friends like yourself.

This brings my warm thanks and the very best wishes of Mrs. Johnson and myself to Mrs. Pearson and you for Christmas and the new year.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will recognize the importance of the visit of the Prime Minister not only to France but to the United States on January 22. I had a discussion last Sunday with Mr. Rusk about this visit. It will be a working visit. The subjects under discussion will cover a wide area. It is of course not possible at this stage to talk about those. I thank my hon. friend for asking this question and giving me an opportunity to make this statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, as the minister seems ready to answer in great detail the questions which are being asked, I am going to remind him briefly of the one I asked a little while ago. Does the minister intend to appoint soon an ambassador to the Vatican?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member knows very well that when an announcement has to be made by the government, the occasion and the time for that announcement are its own choice.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: Could the minister tell us if any effort is being made at the United Nations to resolve the problems faced by Palestinian refugees in the Near East?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has referred to efforts at the United Nations, and I assume he also means efforts elsewhere, on the part of Canada to try and help resolve the differences between certain countries in the Middle East. With regard to the United Nations, may I, first, say that I am very grateful to my parliamentary secretary, to the members of the Canadian delegation and to the observers from the House of Commons who attended the last general assembly, for the distinguished and valuable services they rendered to Canada at the general assembly.

We continue to harbour a sincere interest in trying to bring together the representatives of the United Arab Republic and Israel. This has been the object of Canadian policy for a long time. I can only say to my hon. friend that our efforts in this connection are continuing.

Mr. Nasserden: Could the minister tell us whether any progress is being made toward a permanent solution of this problem?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think I can add to what I have said.

Mr. Barnett: In his earlier remarks the minister made reference in summary form to a few of the situations in southeast Asia. I did not hear him make any reference to Malaysia and the situation which has arisen between that country and Indonesia, with the so-called confrontation by President Sukarno. What assurances of assistance or help has Canada given to Malaysia as a fellow member of the commonwealth?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the committee generally would agree with me when I express the hope that there will be no deterioration in the situation which confronts the new Federation of Malaysia. It would be tragic if any initiative taken by any country in southeast Asia were to interfere with the development of the new federation. Malaysia, of course, is a member of the commonwealth. At the United Nations, commonwealth members had occasion to discuss Malaysia's problems and its present concerns vis-à-vis some of its neighbours. This matter is one that engages the interests of the commonwealth as a whole, particularly those of the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand; the problem is being carefully watched by members of the commonwealth, including Canada.

Item agreed to.

44a. Contribution to the Atlantic institute, $4,000.

Mr. More: I would like to ask the minister whether this vote is in addition to the $2,500 grant he referred to in reply to my earlier question. This is a vote for $4,000 for the Atlantic institute. Is this an additional grant?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Consideration is being given to an addition. The money was provided in the supplementary estimates of 1963-64 in the amount that my hon. friend mentions, and consideration is being given to a request for further assistance, but no decision has been taken.

Item agreed to.

50. Salaries and expenses, $652,600.

Mr. Knowles: The minister was not able to be present in the committee on external affairs when we put the report together, but I am sure he has read it and found it a useful and interesting document. I would like to draw his attention to the fact that two main recommendations made by the committee related to external aid, and that increased money be found to recruit personnel for this important work. I would like to enlist the minister's support for these recommendations.

Mr. Macdonald: In connection with the external aid office, I would like to congratulate the minister for his interest in and support of the Canadian university service overseas, and to enjoin upon him that he continue his earnest efforts to soften the hearts of treasury board and get a grant for this very worth-while organization.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, if there is anyone who should extend Christmas greetings and wishes for a period of peace it is the foreign minister of the country, and this I do with many thanks to members of the committee.

LEGISLATION

1. Allowance in lieu of residence, $3,000.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to go into this quite extensively, but I do not think the house is disposed that way so I will forgo my intention. However, we have done this a number of times. Legislation is always the last item, and I would like to say a few words on it because it is a very important field and we have not considered it extensively for some time. As I said the other night, when the Secretary of State felt I was only holding this up for one of my colleagues, that is not true. There is a decision to be reached in the matter of legislation. The Speaker of the house has this matter under consideration, and the report would indicate that there is an investigation contemplated that would allow the civil service commission to investigate it. The committee had this to say:

> Mr. Speaker has requested the organization division of the civil service commission to undertake a complete survey of the Speaker's establishment. This survey, which has been approved by the commissioners of internal economy, is now in progress—
> It is rather a study of the structural organization of the House of Commons staff to be followed by an examination of the work methods and procedures.

As I pointed out, we are running an establishment here equivalent to that run by a municipal government with a population of 5,000 to 10,000 people in the municipality. With the 1,000 or more employees we have in the house in various departments, it is an obvious fact that the Speaker and the internal economy commission cannot be expected to act as employer, supervisor and look after the other business that the Speaker obviously has to look after. It seems to me that we are operating under a very archaic system where we have the government itself, in the form of the internal economy commission—

An hon. Member: Infernal economy commission.

Mr. Peters: You can call it infernal, if you wish, because I am quite sure that some of the members of that commission have so much to do that they certainly have not much time to participate in this particular field. One of the problems that arises is the fact that many members of parliament have not really considered the establishment of the House of Commons and parliament hill at all. I have a summary of some of the legislation that affects the parliament buildings. I should like to table it, because I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by reading it. It was prepared by the law branch and refers to the title of the establishment of the House of Commons. I would like to table this document, Mr. Chairman, for insertion in Hansard, if there is no objection.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: By whom was this prepared, and under whose authority?

Mr. Peters: I said it was prepared by the law branch of the House of Commons. It may have been a former Speaker's authority. Well, I could read it, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gregoire: He isn't the Speaker any more.

Mr. Peters: Is there any objection to that course being followed, Mr. Chairman?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Peters: It is a history of how the property, particularly of how the House of Commons itself, has developed.

The Chairman: Order. Before the hon. member proceeds, perhaps the Chair could look at the document that is submitted. Is this to be inserted as part of the hon. member's speech, or attached as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Peters: As an appendix, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it would be perhaps less of a precedent if we had it printed as an appendix to Hansard rather than actually in the text, because putting it in the text creates a rather difficult problem.

The Chairman: That is the impression of the Chair. Is it agreed that the document which has just been submitted to the Chair shall be printed in today's Hansard as an appendix?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For documents referred to above, see appendix.]

Mr. Peters: Hon. members will have an opportunity to see this and assess what the intention of parliament with regard to the establishment may be in the future. This affects, of course, some of the things I shall mention. I would be willing, if it were thought desirable, to table it as part of my remarks concerning parking facilities and other facilities in connection with the house. This document also deals with the R.C.M.P. services on the hill and some of the duties of the protective staff. The protective staff of the house has grown rapidly since its inception. It is a highly trained and, I think, a very satisfactory staff. It is now handling an immense number of tourists each year as well as the other duties that are allocated to that branch. They have now had added to their number a staff which is servicing the west block, and I suggest they should also have added a staff to handle the east block of the parliament buildings. This staff should be given a higher status than it now has. These officers are not allowed to make arrests. They are not given any authority and do not, of course, have to assume certain responsibilities that a normal police force is asked to assume. These officers should have a status equal to that of our federal police force, because they are a federal protective staff and should therefore have some of the protections that normal police forces enjoy.

I would suggest that a municipality having 72 constables and officers is a fairly large municipality and this requires the force to be given the same protection as a regular police force. There should be a system whereby grievances can be dealt with and which will deal with the relationships between the force and the body it serves. There have recently been difficulties in the force. These come to the attention of members of parliament, and it seems to me this is not a satisfactory manner in which to handle this problem. I will not go into the details of some of the things that have happened; but it seems to me this is not a good way of operating this force. I am only using it as one of the examples, because there are 15 or 20 departments of a similar nature. I suggest that it may be necessary to bring them under the civil service, as is the case with the other branches, or it may be necessary to organize them into a union and allow them to operate within a union structure.

If it is decided that this problem can be settled in this manner, I personally will be quite happy to act as their agent on a temporary basis until they are organized. I would ask one of the unions of this country for the right to act as their agent, and organize them. I would be happy to do that early in the next session. This of course would create certain problems which I think should be discussed before this is done, because I can see some difficulty in my position, dealing with agents of the crown and applying to the federal labour board for certification. However, I think the problems involved are sufficiently great that if we cannot arrive at a more satisfactory solution I will attempt to do this early in the next session.

There are many other problems. One problem affects the Secretary of State and I think he has perhaps not paid too much attention to it. I refer to that hard working group of people in the house today, the 10 or 11 members of the translation bureau. This bureau comes under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. As I understand it, it is part of a larger bureau of translation, but most of them are employed here. I think it is true—and the Secretary of State certainly agrees with this, because he has said many times that it is very difficult to increase this particular staff—that they number—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the hon. gentleman would allow me to interrupt him for one second to give him a piece of what I regard as rather good news. I was not able to go to treasury board this week, but I have just been told that treasury board has approved an increase in pay for the translators, in the hope of making recruiting a bit easier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gregoire: How much will they receive under the new scale of salaries?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not carry the figures in my head; I am not quite that bright.

Mr. Gregoire: I see that in this morning's edition of Le Devoir the Quebec civil service is asking for translators and offering salaries starting at $8,400. I should like to know whether this is the same initial salary for translators employed by the House of Commons.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will answer that question when the estimates for the civil service commission come up a little later in the afternoon.

Mr. Peters: We thank the Secretary of State for this information. I hope this goes through because I am suggesting that the translators connected with the House of Commons be transferred to the Speaker's department on the hill. I suggest that this is a very good reason for doing this. These translators are highly skilled and have a very difficult job to do. They operate in an international sphere and can transfer from here to many international agencies, including the United Nations. There are approved methods of operation and rates of pay. It is interesting to note that their approved rate of pay in international work is $75 a day—$50 if they work for government. They are supposed to translate for 15 minutes and have a break period; and the hours they translate per day are regulated for. The rates here, until the Secretary of State made his statement, ranged between $7,500 and $8,000 a year.

The problem is this. These ten or eleven people—I will leave out of my consideration the other matters referred to of which I understand Mr. Speaker is well aware—are handling the business of this house. I think it is about this number who handle the translation both in the House of Commons and the Senate. I understand that three out of the ten are usually employed in the Senate. In addition to this there are 12 House of Commons committees and 30 outside commitments. When an agency asks for the services of these translators, even though the House of Commons may be in session they are supplied. I would point out that for the federal-provincial conference on September 9 and 10 five of them were employed on duties outside the House of Commons. Between August 22 and 29 the internal statistical institute employed all ten of them. If you check the figures, Mr. Chairman, you will find that this has been a problem which has recently resulted in a translator having to go into a committee and translate for four hours, on occasion, without a break. It is bad enough sitting in some of these committees for four hours without having to perform the mental gymnastics of translating from one language to another simultaneously. We have got to the stage where we are not using trained people as technicians. Messengers are operating electrical controls. Caucus rooms are being used for committees without microphones being installed in the right place. The situation is most unsatisfactory. One of these messengers could electrocute himself by using equipment he does not understand. I think we have a responsibility to train them, or to do something with these people before some serious accident occurs through no fault of theirs.

I have used these two examples, but I could go right through the staff. I have been here for some time now and have met many people here. I have talked to quite a number and I think I am safe in saying that I have met some four or five hundred out of the 1,000 employed. I think that whoever does the job which has to be done would have to know all thousand of them, which would be a full-time occupation.

I suggest, and I suggest this in all sincerity, that we set up a committee of an interparliamentary nature to assist the internal economy commission. The hon. member for Skeena has a bill to change the structure of the internal economy commission but this has never received much support. I give the government credit on each of the occasions when something has been done. It usually involves money, and therefore there is a government responsibility at stake. But I do not think we should expect to limit that responsibility or to remove it because we are on the legislative side of parliament. I think representatives of the various parties could represent much better the problems existing on parliament hill than is the case today.

There is trouble, Mr. Chairman, in every branch of the House of Commons. We have on standing orders, for instance, a rule which states there should be bilingual law clerks. This has not been the case for some time and this has caused considerable difficulty. The reason that that regulation is on standing orders is because we in this country operate under two completely separate types of legal history, and those trained in the Napoleonic code are not necessarily capable of handling the common law practices enjoyed by many of our provinces. So that we have two distinct types of civil law in this country, as parliament long ago decided on the matter. We have discussed this question previously, but unfortunately it was in the dying days of the last session, and it was decided that there was insufficient time to settle the matter and it should be discussed in some other way. But the problem is still with us. I suggest it is no one's fault except ours, and I think it is time we did something about it because we have gone beyond our rules in this connection.

There are many other spheres in which we need technical assistance in parliament today. We also need—and I think this is something we ought to look at very shortly—television of our proceedings in the House of Commons. It seems to me rather foolish to have television equipment kept outside in the hall with signs saying "Watch for cables". We spoil the appearance of the parliament buildings with the facilities which are provided. I think it would be wonderful to see television cameras all the time in our public galleries. I should like to see much of the work of parliament televised for the nation. But I think on occasions when parliament does need some coverage we should have proper facilities installed in this building so as to eliminate the temporary facilities provided under the present arrangements.

We have also asked for studios where interviews can be conducted. We also require facilities for radio broadcasting from the House of Commons. We have already mentioned the United Nations and their satisfactory set-up. Those who have attended the United Nations are well aware of it and I imagine are appreciative of it. We also know there should be some research in this regard, and while I am scared of too much research I think the research which would be available to members of parliament in a political sense would assist a member in the performance of his duties and would be of great value. I do not mean that this research should be available to cabinet ministers only. Every time we discuss estimates we see three or four highly trained and certainly highly qualified gentlemen advising the ministers, yet none of this advice is available by way of research to individual members.

Another problem is the translation of letters received from constituents. There is no service provided for this. Unfortunately I am not fluent in either one of the official languages; in one I am at a complete loss. It seems to me that, rather than making arrangements with messengers and other officials in the House of Commons, whom we have to trap in a corner and ask to translate a letter for us, when they are already busy on other duties, there should be a branch capable of doing translation of correspondence for the members.

The fact is that we come to this house early in the morning and leave it late at night. We are living here, so to speak, and outside this building we have only our sleeping quarters. This causes all types of problems. One of them arose recently in relation to refreshments. I received some credit for the discontinuance of this particular service, but I want to make it clear that I shared this with the Auditor General. I am not alone responsible; I am willing to take only my share of the responsibility. If these matters were discussed, we could arrive at a reasonable arrangement. The arrangement of hiding things for years in odd corners has proved unsatisfactory. I compliment the Sergeant-at-Arms and others who have taken some initiative on their own. I am sorry I may have had some interference in this initiative. I think the initiative itself was commendable and that the results they are trying to achieve are commendable. However, there has to be support, and a decision reached which is acceptable to everyone in regard to these matters. I believe this could be achieved.

We have been very hard on our Speakers in the last few years. I imagine that in no period of five or six years within the history of parliament have there been more calls on Speakers to make decisions and prepare judgments on particular matters, including subjects which are not normally considered to be part of a Speaker's responsibilities. I believe that for this reason the leader of the house should give us an assurance that a committee will be set up composed of representatives from each of the parties to sit down and discuss some of these problems. I think the time is ripe when this should happen and I may say I intend to write to a number of the international unions involved in regard to these people in the House of Commons. I may be able to secure credentials from many of them and if the problem is not solved in any other way we shall organize the staffs in the House of Commons. It will be a ridiculous situation if a member of parliament stands up and says to the house: Mr. Speaker, you have only until tomorrow night to settle this problem, otherwise there will be a sit-down in these different departments. Maybe this will not happen, but I am personally willing to try it.

I have been interested in this question for some time. In the dying days of parliament we are always making pious statements on this subject but nothing comes of them. I think the only way to bring it to a head is for somebody to do something drastic about it, and I am prepared, if necessary, to be the one who will do something of that nature.

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Peters: If the other business becomes lucrative enough, I may be able to do just that. Without being facetious about this question, it seems to me that the Secretary of State has certainly shown a remarkable capacity for playing chess with the House of Commons. This is a facility which does not come to most people.

An hon. Member: We are all pawns.

Mr. Peters: No, I was not thinking in that sense. I used the expression I did in the sense that the hon. gentleman has been able to make arrangements, to trade and to do the other things necessary to accomplish his purpose. The same procedure could be followed with regard to the matters now before us, and then these problems would cease to exist. I believe that when a problem arises affecting the operations of this house, a problem for which we are, in total, responsible, we should be able to face it and arrive at a solution in a very short space of time.

There is only one other matter I should like to mention and it concerns the training of our staffs. We are seriously in need of assistance. I believe the suggestion made by the Speaker that the head officers at the table be sent to other countries to examine the situation in those countries is an admirable one. It could be a calamity every time we lost an officer of the house, because we have no training, anywhere in the country, which produces men able to fill these positions. This is true with regard to other branches for which a high degree of training is necessary and in preparation for which no satisfactory apprenticeship is possible in another related field. This has been illustrated in the last few weeks by the regrettable illness of one of the officers of the house who sits at the table. I suggest we should complete the complement of our staff and provide a certain amount of stand-by training for others, so that when a vacancy occurs we might be able to fill it with the most competent people available. We must remember that a great deal of the responsibility for the decorum of the house rests with these officers.

If the house would consider these matters and agree to some changes on the lines I have indicated I believe the work of parliament could be carried out more expeditiously and that some of the problems to which I have drawn attention would not occur. If we really think of it, is it not true that the bringing in of staff on a political basis, because a political government was in office, lowers the morale of the department concerned in each case where this happens, because they know that no matter what their competence may be, political considerations, the friends they have, are more important. This is a situation we do not wish to encourage. It is one we are not going to encourage and I am sure the Speaker will give full consideration to seeing that this problem is solved so that efficiency can remain at a high level.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to bring two matters to the attention of the committee. The first has to do with the report of the standing committee on debates which was filed yesterday morning, pointing out difficulties in connection with the Hansard staff. There are, in essence, two difficulties, one relating to a shortage of reporters and the other to the question of salaries. I would ask that the commissioners of internal economy take action upon these recommendations in the committee's report as quickly as possible.

The second item relates to parking. This is a general question, not a particular one. There is a considerable amount of irritation caused among members of the staff regarding persons who are not connected in any way with parliament but who have parking permits in and around the west block. These people are observed parking their cars and then going to departments downtown somewhere.

I have intended at different times to ask for a return of the individuals who do not have employment on parliament hill but who, nevertheless, have traditional parking permits here. I think this is a situation which can produce a good deal of irritation, particularly at a time when we are short of parking space. It may turn out that there is no one in this category, but I have made inquiries from time to time over the last five or six years and I am convinced there are people in no way connected with parliament who are in possession of parking permits. I should like very much to see this situation resolved, because it causes irritation among staff members, particularly those who live some miles from parliament hill and who have to drive to get here and then seek parking away down behind the Confederation building, though there might be other accommodation available. I should like to see something done about those people who must drive to their work, as opposed to those who do not need to. Those are the two items I should like to mention at this time. The hon. member for Timiskaming has said that there are difficulties in parliament and I am sure there are. But I want to pay a tribute particularly to the protective staff who give courteous consideration throughout the year to the members and to visitors, particularly in the very difficult summer months. I should also like to pay tribute to the excellent work of the supporting services that keep parliament in operation.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I merely want to mention a few facts. For instance, section 4 of Bill No. C-91, which was passed at the end of July or at the beginning of August, reads as follows:

—there should be allowed to each member of the Senate and House of Commons such actual moving or transportation and travelling expenses between this place of residence or his constituency and Ottawa, and such actual telecommunication expenses incurred while in Ottawa, as each house may by order prescribe for its own members.

Mr. Chairman, as you know, like all hon. members, we constantly have to make phone calls and send telegrams to our ridings, especially on the occasion of winter works, when we must keep in touch with the secretaries and treasurers of municipalities, in order to be informed of any new development.

We note that this legislation was passed at the end of July and that up to now, at the end of December, nothing has been done along the lines I just indicated. We hope that the authorities concerned will be kind enough to take into consideration the fact that members of parliament were requested to pass this act—and it was passed by all—which says, in section 4, that telephone calls and telegrams made or sent to our constituencies, in the ordinary course of a member's business, are to be paid for by the government.

So I ask Mr. Speaker to see that this state of affairs is settled as soon as possible, or at least that we are told why it is not done.

I see that my friends on the Liberal side seem to approve this request, and I am sure all hon. members in this house will ask unanimously that section 4 of Bill No. C-91 which has been passed be put into effect.

We are now considering the Speaker's estimates. I think this is the only opportunity we have in the session to ask him questions. We are happy to do so but, we do not want to take undue advantage of it.

Certain decisions were taken during this session. We accept them and we do not intend to revive the discussions. However, I should like to remind the house of some events which have occurred since these decisions were taken, one of them being the official recognition or non-recognition of the group of 13 members making up the Ralliement Creditistes, under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who sits on this side of the house.

It will be remembered that a decision was reached giving precedence to the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) over the group of the hon. member for Villeneuve. Now, here is what transpired since then. The hon. member for Red Deer no longer receives the allowance of $4,000 granted to every political party leader in this house, while the hon. member for Villeneuve is in receipt of it. On the other hand, this order was decided upon ostensibly to comply with seniority. In this connection, I would like to quote a few figures. The 11 members making up the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer won a total of 23 seats; the group of 13 members under the hon. member for Villeneuve won 27. Moreover, amongst those members, the one who has been at the house for the longest time is the hon. member for Villeneuve, who was elected for the first time in 1946. Moreover, all the members making up the Ralliement Creditistes have been elected at least twice, while two members of the Social Credit party have been elected once only.

I also wish to point out that the leader of the Ralliement Creditistes now receives the $4,000 indemnity, that he has his offices like all party leaders, his secretarial staff, and is entitled to speak on motions like the other leaders of the parties recognized in this house, is entitled to delegations to foreign countries, is a member of the "Head Leaders club", a member of the "Whips club", which means that he is recognized exactly like other party leaders. Besides, we have seniority, as indicated by the figures I quoted a moment ago, the hon. member for Villeneuve having been elected as leader in 1958 while the hon. member for Red Deer was only elected in 1961.

Mr. Chairman, all those arguments give evidence of our seniority and I think that at the next session, the Speaker of the house will have to take his responsibilities and allocate to each group, according to its number and seniority, its rightful place.

I think that at the opening of the next session, the Speaker of the house will have to take his responsibilities and give the Ralliement Creditistes, under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve, the place to which it is entitled.

I respectfully submit this opinion and these arguments which cannot be contradicted because they are facts, and I hope that the Speaker will take them under serious consideration.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have only one word to say concerning the estimates of the Speaker.

First of all, I wish to congratulate the Speaker for his patience towards me. On occasions, he suggests that the period provided for questions in the house be shortened. From time to time, we do not have the same opinion. In any event, I wish him to show the same patience during the year 1964.

My remarks will be brief, Mr. Chairman. I want to ask you first whether it would not be possible to provide with simultaneous translation not only the public galleries, but also the second level of the press gallery.

Now, I would ask Mr. Speaker whether it would be possible to give more space to the press gallery. I submit that the members of the press work in difficult conditions, and it seems to me the ideal solution would be to provide them, not only with an individual office, but also with a telephone just like the members of the house, since, like them, they serve the public.

The members of the press gallery organized themselves in an association. I therefore wonder whether it would not be wise, in future, that they have their problems settled by their own association and not by the committee on privileges and elections, or by a member of the house, or by Mr. Speaker himself.

Here is my suggestion. Since journalists are grouped in an association, I think it would be advisable that we, members of the house, should not meddle in their affairs and that they should settle their own problems themselves. Whether a journalist should be admitted or not to the press gallery, I think that journalists are efficient enough to decide that by themselves, according to their own regulations.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I intend to concentrate on one item, the whole question of the Raymond Rodgers case vis-à-vis the press gallery, and my remarks are not for my fellow members so much as for the Speaker.

He will remember that there was a motion of this house to refer the matter to a committee. The committee considered the matter and has presented a report which appears in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings. Pursuant to the order referring to the committee the question of Raymond Rodgers' right to use the facilities of the press gallery, the committee held four meetings and heard the following witnesses: Mr. Raymond Rodgers, Mr. G. J. Connolley, Mr. Arthur Blakely and Mr. Clement Brown. The report states:

> The evidence given by Dr. Ollivier before the standing committee on privileges and elections on December 11, 1962, was also tabled before the committee and reproduced as an appendix—
> The committee has considered Mr. Rodgers' right to use the facilities of the Canadian parliamentary press gallery and has agreed to recommend:
> That while this committee recognizes that parliament has jurisdiction over the public facilities granted the members of the press, we feel that this jurisdiction over the public facilities must be exercised through the Speaker or his delegated representative. Therefore, the case of Mr. Rodgers is referred to Mr. Speaker for decision.
> The committee further recommends:
> That the special committee on procedure and organization, at the next session of parliament, consider the expediency of reviewing the relations now existing between the Speaker and the Canadian parliamentary press gallery on the one hand and the relations now existing between the House of Commons itself and the Canadian parliamentary press gallery on the other hand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking with caucus support on this matter. We are very anxious that a decision be made, and we are prepared to support it now or support it at the next session, that will give Raymond Spencer Rodgers, as long as he is the full time correspondent for the St. Catharines Standard, access to the public facilities of the press gallery. There were a number of ironies developed in the evidence and in the voting that went on in the committee. I suppose the most interesting thing was that the voting tended to cross party lines, and I do not believe I am giving away any secrets when I say that this particular recommendation was not unanimous.

I suppose the thing I found most intriguing was the fact that it took us so long to get going because the president of the press gallery, Mr. Connolley, was off to NATO. The whole matter, therefore, was postponed. Then, it turned out, even when Mr. Connolley got back, the press gallery found it necessary to have its main defence presented by a member of the press gallery whom I cannot find either on the executive or the directors of the press gallery. I refer to that great ex-columnist of the Montreal Gazette, Mr. Arthur Blakely. Mr. Blakely carried the defence for the press gallery. The evidence in which I am most interested can be found at page 756 of the report of the proceedings of the committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Speaker too, I have a particular personal interest in the operations of the press in Canada, and because of that I may say that I was quite intrigued by the Prime Minister's statement today that the government is considering legislation which would prevent the takeover of our press by foreign interests. However, that is an aside. In connection with my interest, I should like to say that I did not want to bring before the committee an individual examination of the basis for belonging to the Canadian parliamentary press gallery and, as a consequence, have the use of the facilities. I want to put Mr. Blakely's opening statement on the record, to put into context some of the things I want to say about the people who now have the right to use the public facilities in the press gallery which have been denied to Mr. Rodgers. Mr. Blakely says this:

The term "press gallery" means, in Canada, at least three things. Even in speaking among ourselves, we have to be careful to make it clear which one we have in mind.

The words "press gallery" mean:

1. The gallery overlooking the House of Commons from which we observe parliamentary proceedings.

I know that many of my colleagues will agree with me when I say that the most outstanding feature about these gentlemen is that when our attendance is criticized during the day or night, we have often found the gallery up there has been bare. The second point is:

2. The office space, provided to us on the third floor of the centre block, also at public expense, in which we write or otherwise prepare reports on what we have seen and heard in parliament;

I think some members must be aware of the fact that this is one of the worst blocks of housing, it is one of the worst examples of government planning that I have ever seen. It indicates either that the press gallery or the Speakers have been tremendously conservative to allow those conditions to continue, but they are conditions provided at public expense.

The third item Mr. Blakely put forward was:

3. The Canadian press gallery itself, a professional association which, while not of parliament, has been so close to parliament since confederation that William Lyon Mackenzie King defined it as an "adjunct" of parliament.

Now, those are the three descriptions that Mr. Blakely puts forward. Here, we have a situation where a young man, as the full time correspondent of the St. Catharines Standard, is denied these facilities. This is not his full time work, but so far as the St. Catharines Standard is concerned, he is their full time correspondent. This is a relatively small newspaper in a very prosperous town. They have hired him to do this particular work which consists, usually, of three or four stories a week and sometimes as little as two. However, he does send copy from this place to a legitimate daily newspaper and that copy appears several times a week. I might say that the copy he sends tends to be topical, that is it tends to follow things going on in the house. This is important to the point I want to make.

Now, the press gallery is denying Mr. Rodgers entry on the basis that he does not meet membership qualifications under article II, section (a) of their constitution. This is really the key point. The article reads:

Active membership of the Canadian parliamentary press gallery, hereinafter called the gallery, shall be restricted to persons who earn the major portion of their income through the writing or broadcasting of parliamentary or government news or comment as full-time salaried staff representatives of one or more daily newspapers, radio or television stations or systems, or a recognized news service, sending thereto dispatches regularly; and to persons assigned to work in Ottawa as a resident correspondent of a periodical of national and international standing.

This section, Mr. Speaker, embraces a very wide range. You have broadcasters, telecasters and writers for daily newspapers, weekly newspapers and periodicals both national and international. Every one admits that the St. Catharines Standard is a legitimate Canadian daily newspaper. We have it put on the record that the newspaper wants Rodgers as its representative. Rodgers fails to meet these membership qualifications because he is candid enough to admit that being correspondent for the St. Catharines Standard is not his full time job. It brings him in, he said, somewhere around 40 per cent of his income. One of the contentions Rodgers put to us was that he does not belong to the press gallery association, that is, the part Mr. Blakely had in part 3 of the club. He does not particularly worry about having access to the gallery, but he wants access to a mail slot and to the distribution facilities that are provided through public expense in the press gallery down the way.

I want to go through some of the members of the present press gallery to point out the discrimination that exists in this case through the denial and our failure, or Mr. Speaker's failure, to give this accredited person from a legitimate daily newspaper the right to access. I want to start off the list with Blair Fraser of Maclean's magazine. He is a very well known writer and he writes for a periodical which as I understand it, and I got this information from one of his colleagues, has a two and a half to three weeks deadline. In other words, his need for current copy or, say, for press releases or the blues, is really not very large. Even his need to be in his seat in the press gallery watching the House of Commons, and even though he is often in it, I suggest has nothing very topical about it and there is no great urgency for him to be here, because he has this two week deadline. One other point needs to be mentioned. Mr. Fraser and another man from Maclean's, Mr. Newman, write on very many other subjects relating to public affairs and not necessarily related to the House of Commons.

The next name I want to point out is Walter Scott who writes for the Toronto Star Weekly. This is a large newspaper which comes out once a week and has a circulation of about 800,000. He is down here part of the time and, incidentally, he wrote an article recently about the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On the average he turns out, relating to parliament and its activities, according to what I can find in an analysis of that paper, no more than one article every month or so. Here again he has been accepted. He is fine, even though most of his duties do not relate to the house, and I am sure he does not earn most of his income as someone covering parliament. But he is fine; he is accredited; he is in. I have nothing against Mr. Scott, who happens to be a friend of mine, but this is an example of the discrimination.

Now I want to go a bit further and pick out a gentleman for whom I have a great admiration and who has been very kind to me. That is Mr. Robert McKeown who writes for Weekend magazine. He is an active member of the press gallery. He is fine. He roams the world doing stories for Weekend magazine, but again I have checked up and on the average he writes less than six stories a year that have any application to the House of Commons or even to work here in Ottawa. A great deal of the kind of work he is doing has nothing whatever to do with Ottawa and the Ottawa scene, but he has membership in the press gallery. Rodgers cannot comply with this magic constitution but Mr. McKeown can. I put it to you that Mr. McKeown's deadline must be at least six or seven weeks. There is no need for him to have this access to blues or press releases. He is not in any kind of a hurry as compared with a man working for a daily newspaper, but it is O.K.; he has got them; it is fine.

I am hoping to put into hon. members' minds the thought that when you examine the range of people working in the press gallery and the kind of work they are doing, there is discrimination here that was not brought out in the committee. That was partly my responsibility because I did not want to get into this question of who does belong to the press gallery.

I want to take a couple of other people, Mr. Warren Baldwin for the Financial Times and Mr. Clive Baxter who works for the Financial Post. Both are well known, capable writers. They write for weeklies and happen to be in competition with each other. Both of them do report the day to day happenings but they tend to be at a little more than arm's length from the average radio or newspaper reports. My point here again is that these men have a deadline that is set for them, and it is not the daily deadline Rodgers may have to meet. Yet they have the advantage. They qualify for membership in the press gallery, and not Rodgers.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Now I want to turn to Time magazine. Time magazine has two members in the press gallery, Jack Beal and Richard Gwyn. I have no quarrel with the fact that they are entitled to the same privileges as many of these other fine gentlemen I have mentioned; but what I point out to you, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Speaker, is that they prepare copy that goes into some kind of masticator, some master digest in Montreal or Toronto, and that in no real sense are they anything more than, you might say, humble people who prepare the basis for what Time finally puts out in its mint condition. There is no urgency about the kind of work they do except in relation to their own weekly deadline.

There is no great need for them to have these facilities, current facilities, that are denied to Rodgers. In fact these gentlemen, and this is understandable, spend a great deal of their time going around Ottawa interviewing people; in other words, getting background, this depth that Time is always searching for. This is fine. This is what their publisher wants them to do. That is part of the Time approach to things. That is great, but their need for having the use of the facilities that are denied to Rodgers is not comparable at all, and I want them to know that.

Mr. Chairman, one of the things when you look at this list is that you realize that the facilities in the gallery—and Mr. Blakely was candid enough to acknowledge this—tend to be hogged by the big newspapers. The Toronto Star and the Toronto Telegram are examples, where they take up much more space, maybe space in relation to their circulations, but that of course should not be the basis on which public facilities are supplied; and I put it to you that the St. Catharines Standard is every bit as important as the Toronto Star and the Toronto Telegram to the member of parliament, to the constituents and to the country as a whole, and yet they cannot qualify.

The Star usually has three to four men circulating around here. They have the use of the gallery but here is this young fellow from the St. Catharines Standard and he cannot even get in to have a little position about four inches by six inches, where he can pick up his mail, press releases and the blues. If you look at this matter in this regard and look through this list—and I challenge the Speaker to do this—and look at some of the people who have membership, and then take a look at the fact that Rodgers is producing copy for a Canadian daily newspaper, there is something terribly discriminatory about the kind of constitution which comes up with this kind of block.

There is one other very touchy element I want to get into, and this relates to the fact to belong to the press gallery is not necessarily, as Roy Thomson found on getting a television licence in Scotland, a licence to print money, but it is a fact that to belong to the press gallery and have the use of its facilities gives you an opportunity to extend your income, and to diversify, as some members of the press gallery have done. Gerald Waring is an outstanding example of this and his colleague, Peter Stursberg is another. There is no criticism of this, but the point is when the use of these public facilities is denied to someone it also means he is blocked off from developing his own income in this particular field. When a press gallery association refuses its membership, and refuses to consider the sharing of the public facilities with someone who is an accredited representative of a daily newspaper, it raises in my mind and in the minds of others the feeling that perhaps they do not want anyone else to get in on their opportunities. I may be exaggerating on this particular point, but it is certainly in the mind of Mr. Rodgers and it is one of the reasons he feels that in this matter he has been discriminated against. I think it is important for hon. members to appreciate this.

I want to point out that any member—and I hope in this particular case it will be the Speaker—who goes through this membership list will realize what a relative minority of this membership really needs the full range of the facilities that the public supply—that is, that we supply—to these gentlemen. I am not suggesting that any of them should be excluded or limited in the use of these facilities. But I am very annoyed, and I think it is a definite injustice, that this chap from the St. Catharines Standard cannot have the right to use those facilities. I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker—it has been put back to you; it is in your lap—to extend to Rodgers the use of the facilities that he has requested, and that is not the right to belong to the press gallery association. I want to ask you to do this as soon as possible. I want to tell you that if you find it impossible, this matter is going to be raised when the next session starts, and next session we are going to approach it in a much more co-ordinated cohesive way, because if the facts remain the same, as far as we are concerned an injustice will have been continued.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, as a working Canadian newspaperman of over 40 years experience in the field in Canada, I wish to state that I endorse in every word and gesture the remarks just made by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I have sat in the press gallery of the Canadian House of Commons on three separate occasions, for three different newspapers. In every case the publisher sent a communication to the Speaker of the House of Commons asking for permission for me, as a representative of the paper, to be seated in the gallery. The publisher did not ask the members of the press gallery whether his representative could have the right to sit in the gallery. The privilege of seating people in the press gallery belongs exclusively to the Speaker and should be exercised by the Speaker. I want to go on record as endorsing the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur in this regard.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have a very few remarks to make on an entirely different subject matter. I will be very brief in connection with it. One could not have been around the parliament buildings for the last month without being impressed by the extent to which committee work has become such a very important section of the parliamentary process. For that reason I wish to say that I am very pleased indeed to see the report brought in by Mr. Speaker, which recommends the appointment of committees for the term of a parliament. I think this will have a very considerable beneficial effect on committee work.

There is one more suggestion I would like to make and it is ancillary to this recommendation. I hope that when the committee resumes, it will consider this matter. I refer to the extent to which a committee can in turn delegate its authority to subcommittees. It has been my experience that there are many matters included within the four corners of what is referred to a committee which lend themselves very well indeed to being treated by a small subcommittee of three, four, five, six or seven committee members, who in an informal way around a table, with the assistance of members of the permanent civil service, are able to direct their attention to these particular subject matters and then come back to the main committee with a report.

In my submission this is something which in due course might be worked out by a simple amendment to our standing orders which would provide—or should provide, I would hope—that a committee would have inherently the right to appoint such subcommittees. I would refer only to citation 294 of Beauchesne. I will not go into detail in this regard, Mr. Chairman, but there is raised by the contents of this paragraph, and by some research which I have carried out, some doubt as to the extent to which a committee can in fact delegate its authority to a subcommittee.

I would hope that for next year the house leader will give some consideration to establishing committees in the general terms of reference which apply, and I hope these terms of reference will include the right to appoint subcommittees for the purposes I have mentioned.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about this matter of Raymond Rodgers and the press gallery association's denial of access to certain things that he feels he requires. I am not going to go back over the evidence. It is all contained in the proceedings of the committee on privileges and elections and even in the report that committee tabled in the house yesterday. They accept the fact and restate that the facilities provided at public expense in the press gallery, and all this involves, must be under the jurisdiction of the Speaker. There is no point in going back over that.

But when we get down right to the nub of the point in question as to whether or not Rodgers should be in the press gallery, I would point out that we asked the spokesman for the press gallery during the committee meetings, "What is the criterion that is used to either accept or reject an applicant for membership in the press gallery?" Of course the witnesses referred to article 2, subsection (a) to which the hon. member for Port Arthur referred. I am not going to repeat it, but it provides that this right shall be restricted to persons who earn the major portion of their income through the writing or broadcasting of parliamentary or government news. When I was examining Mr. Blakely, who appeared before the committee, I put the question directly as to whether he knew anything about the income of the members of the press gallery. He said, in effect, that of course they did not look into anybody's income, and he said, "We do not care how much money they make". Yet this is the criterion they use to admit or reject people who apply for membership of and access to the press gallery and its facilities.

Under further examination the witnesses who appeared on behalf of the press gallery said that the income was not important; it was whether or not they were full-time. So I asked, "Full-time what? Full-time salary?" They said no, they did not care whether they earned $10, $40 or $200 a week; this was not important. But they had to have a letter from the managing editor or the publisher of the newspaper stating that this individual was in fact working for him full-time, or for the major part of his time. Well, Mr. Chairman, we know, as the hon. member for Port Arthur has pointed out, that there are a number of cases of members of the press gallery who do not spend most of their time, or perhaps do not even earn most of their income reporting in the press gallery. For example we have members of the press gallery who report for agricultural papers, weeklies and even monthly agricultural publications. These people are interested in anything that takes place here that has to do with agriculture, and I presume they write about that whenever it is discussed. On the other hand, they are full-time observers and they do not know whether something respecting agriculture is going to be raised on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday. So certainly with regard to the matter of time it cannot be said that they apply this section of their constitution to applicants. They admit that they do not apply the income part of it to applicants. Therefore I am convinced that it means nothing. They say it does not mean anything in regard to income, because they do not look into income. Nevertheless it refers to major income and says they do not care how much time is spent writing up there about the proceedings in parliament.

What actually happens is that the question of the acceptance or rejection of an applicant to the press gallery association is reduced to one of complete discretion on the part of the executive of the press gallery association. If the members of the House of Commons do not want to accept that kind of tyranny, I do not think we should allow it to go any further. I also want to say that as far as the committees work is concerned, and the recommendations they made, I think they did the Speaker an injustice, because the motion which was referred to the committee on privileges and elections was in these terms:

> That the question of Raymond Rodgers' rights to use the facilities of the press gallery be referred for quick study and report back to the house on its merits by the standing committee on privileges and elections.

What the report in part said was that the committee refer the matter back to the Speaker for decision and for further study by some other committee. And this, after we had five meetings. It is a prime example of not making a decision when asked to.

To get back to Mr. Rodgers, he told us that he needs the press releases, and needs access to them quickly so that he can meet the daily deadline of the paper to which he reports. The press gallery association said that if Mr. Rodgers would come to them with a letter from his managing editor or publisher stating that he is a full-time employee of that paper, they would accept him. Mr. Rodgers, as was pointed out, is a candid man, perhaps stubborn too. Perhaps he is too stubborn to lie, which in my opinion is an attribute rather than something to be discriminated against. He has said that he needs these facilities, which are provided at public expense.

There is a rather interesting precedent for this matter which is founded on a question of privilege set out in "Parliamentary Procedure" by Saint-Maurice, at page 669. This precedent bears a striking similarity to the present case. As a matter of fact I drew this matter to the attention of hon. members when I moved the motion which referred this matter to the committee. In this particular case an editor and proprietor of a newspaper had been commited by the Quebec legislative assembly to the custody of the sergeant-at-arms for allegedly traducing a member of his newspaper, and he remained in custody for some time. In the present case the individual has not been deprived of his physical liberties but he has been deprived of certain liberties which he had and which he ought to have to enjoy, because he relies on them to make his living. The speaker in the case cited ruled that to entitle a motion to waiver of notice and to precedence, the matter of privilege to which it relates must be urgent in point of time. This is exactly the point, Mr. Chairman: with each day of each week of each month that there is delay there is in fact a denial of liberty. The Speaker of the Quebec legislature went on to say this:

> His liberation depends upon the judgment to be pronounced upon his case by the house, and as the British constitution is jealous and vigilant for the individual liberty of all who live under its sway, the question proposed is urgent in point of time...

Mr. Rodgers has been deprived of the things he thinks are his right, as a Canadian citizen and newspaperman, for several months.

I am going to close now, Mr. Chairman, because we have had much discussion on this matter; but with every day of every week of delay which deprives Mr. Rodgers of his rights there goes a serious injustice, in my view. By delay we allow the press gallery executive, or whoever is responsible for keeping Mr. Rodgers out to win their case.

Now I want to turn to one other matter. I understand an hon. member wants to speak on this subject.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York-Humber, the hon. member for Medicine Hat and the hon. member for Port Arthur and others have expressed eloquently the feelings I have on this matter, as well I am sure as the feelings everyone in the committee have, and I think some course of action should be taken immediately to deal with it, rather than delay any longer. Accordingly I move:

> That the committee rise, report progress, recommend that Raymond Spencer Rodgers, as a correspondent of the St. Catharines Standard, be granted the use of the facilities of the press gallery, which are provided at public expense, and ask leave to sit again later this day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, have you given any consideration to the question whether the motion is in order?

The Deputy Chairman: I am ready to give a ruling on it. In the committee of supply the type of motion which is allowed is one to reduce an amount of money, or for the committee to rise. In this particular case the motion asks the committee to rise. So far as it goes to that point I believe the motion is in order. But the attachment to the motion of words which tells the committee what it will do when the committee rises I believe makes the whole motion out of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee desires, as does the house, to make a determination on this point. I will gladly withdraw the central part of my motion referring to the recommendation that Raymond Spencer Rodgers have access to the facilities of the press gallery, so that it would read:

> That the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again later this day.

Then when we rise and report progress with Mr. Speaker in the chair the house would be in a position to deal with the matter.

The Deputy Chairman: Then the procedure would be for the hon. member for Skeena to withdraw his present motion and to move a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. Howard: I would so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the motion would have to be withdrawn before the other was made. The hon. member would have to get agreement to withdraw his motion; I am sure it will gladly be given.

Mr. Howard: I would gladly withdraw it and bring in the other motion if I might have time to spell it out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might take a moment of the committee's time, while the hon. member is producing his motion, to raise a question which the hon. gentleman might answer before he goes further. It is this: Can he tell us what he thinks the house could do if the committee did rise and the Speaker went back into the chair? It is true that making this motion and giving leave to sit again does not impede the business of the house except for the brief period—if it was a brief period—during which the motion would be before the Speaker. I am not an expert on the rules, and the expert on the rules among the hon. gentleman's friends is, I regret, not here at this moment. He will be able to give us some guidance on this point. Indeed, I feel this is one of the occasions when we ought to send for him. But I will try, in my poor way, to fill in. It does seem to me that it would not be possible for the house to do anything of a substantive nature with the Speaker in the chair without a substantive motion of some description being before it. That would require unanimous consent in the circumstances which exist today. Perhaps a good deal of the time of the house and the committee could be saved if, before the hon. member went to the length of moving his motion, he would tell us what kind of motion he would propose to make after the committee has risen. Then he could ascertain from those of us who are here—and I do not think the composition of this chamber is likely to change materially in the course of the next few minutes—whether he would get unanimous consent for his motion after the Speaker has resumed the chair. Needless to say, I am in a mood to cooperate as far as it is possible to do so. But the hon. gentleman, who is very ingenious, has presented us with a surprise and perhaps he could tell us what the surprise is going to be before he makes his motion for the committee to rise.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I could deal with that. I may say that if there is any ingenuity on my part it is only because I have attentively watched the Secretary of State over the months, both in his present capacity and before that. Undoubtedly the motion would have to be a substantive motion and it would require unanimous consent, since notice is difficult to give at this late stage in the proceedings. The motion to which I would be glad to have the house give its approval is as follows:

That the Sergeant-at-Arms, pursuant to standing order No. 88, be instructed to grant pro tem a card admitting Raymond Rodgers to the press gallery of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the hon. member for Edmonton West wish to say something?

Mr. Lambert: As far as procedure is concerned, obviously this would be a debatable motion. It is a substantive motion and would require notice unless unanimous consent were given.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think everybody recognizes that, unless there were unanimous consent when the Speaker was in the chair, the Speaker could not entertain the motion. I suggested that we find out now, before the motion to rise was made, whether there would be unanimous consent to the motion being made. This would not imply that we would support the motion.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Lambert: On that point, I think it would be quite improper to ask what would be the desire of the house with the chairman in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should like to point out that the procedure we are embarking on now is somewhat irregular. The Chair is not very disposed to rule in advance. The duty of the Chair is to rule on what happens, not on what might happen.

Mr. Pickersgill: I defer to Your Honour and to experts like the hon. member for Edmonton West in these matters. It only seemed to me that if there was a plainly negative feeling expressed in the committee it might save a little time. However, perhaps it would be better if the hon. member were to put his motion, which he has a perfect right to do at any time, that the committee rise and report progress. We can see what happens when his motion is made. That does not imply that the other motion would be acceptable or that unanimous consent would be given if the committee should decide to rise. I may say that I would prefer—and I offer this suggestion to the hon. member—to let this stand over until we have disposed of the estimates and we have risen in the normal course of things. There will be a certain interval of time, then, during which the government has undertaken to allow one or two other matters to be brought up and I would certainly be willing to see that before we went to the other place the hon. member, or the hon. member for Medicine Hat, were given an opportunity to ascertain whether there was unanimous consent to consider the matter at that time. This would avoid any interruption of our present proceedings. If that would be satisfactory I would certainly give such an undertaking. This could be done after the appropriation bill had been disposed of and before we came to the other matters. The hon. gentleman could seek unanimous consent at that time and we would be able to continue.

Mr. Lambert: There is one further problem which I should like to refer to the Secretary of State. If the committee should rise, and if the Speaker were to come back into the chair, is the minister sure as to how the house would get back into committee of supply?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that the hon. gentleman was going to move that we rise, report progress and ask leave to sit later this day. So that problem is taken care of. But the position would be safeguarded by the suggestion I have made, and I hope the two hon. members who are particularly concerned with this matter will be disposed to accept it.

Mr. Howard: My approach to matters of this nature is not how we are bound by the rules, but whether we can take a reasonable course toward reaching a solution. That is what I have in mind, rather than what happened in 1890 or on various occasions in the past. I think the hon. member for Medicine Hat and others would agree to the course suggested by the Secretary of State, that is that we should wait until we have concluded the business before the committee, then rise in the normal course and ascertain what the views of the house are at that time. I would therefore ask leave to withdraw the motion which I placed before you a while ago, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am most grateful to both hon. members for being accommodating with regard to a matter about which they obviously feel strongly.

Mr. Fisher: Since, later on, he may be in the chair and it may be difficult for him to express any views, may I ask the Speaker whether he has any comments to make on the questions I raised with regard to the Rodgers case?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I have quite a few comments to make. Up to the present time there have been nine speakers, all raising matters of considerable interest. Certainly, they are matters of great interest to me. I do not think it would be fair at this time to concentrate on one subject. I would prefer to make a general statement at the end.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about the index of Hansard. I wish to suggest that those people who receive Hansard on the basis of lists sent in by members should receive the index as well. I know that people who subscribe to Hansard can get the index by paying an extra dollar, but many members send Hansard to schools and local libraries and I should like to suggest that the index go along with the regular subscription where the names are submitted by members.

My other point has to do with the indexing staff. My office is located next to the indexing branch, both English and French, and I notice that they seem to put in very long hours and very frequently work on the week end and particularly at night. It seems to me there is a very large amount of indexing to be done these days because of the increase in questions on the order paper and the many speeches being made. I have the impression that branch is understaffed and I should like to have this situation investigated.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring up again at this time a matter I raised earlier with regard to the capitalization and punctuation methods of the Hansard editors. I should like to bring it up now because I have noted that the Senate Hansard editors apparently follow, to my mind, a more literate and a more proper system of capitalization. This was brought quite sharply to my attention when I found that the hon. gentlemen in the other place had been discussing the same thing I had been discussing in the speech about which I complained. I refer to the capitalization of "international monetary fund" which the Senate Hansard editors quite rightly capitalized, as it is a definite organization and which our editor refused flatly to capitalize, leaving it in a perfectly ridiculous situation in that the reference might be merely to an abstract concept of a world fund of some sort. I should like to suggest at this time that Mr. Speaker take under advisement a review of the methods of capitalization and punctuation in the editing of Hansard because today they are far from satisfactory to anyone who has any care for the use of the English language.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item No. 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Before it carries, Mr. Chairman, I thought Mr. Speaker had some comments to make on some of the suggestions that have been made. I think some of them are fairly current and warrant immediate attention.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the few but very pleasant opportunities I have to say something in the house in the present circumstances. I should like to seize the opportunity and begin by conveying my appreciation of the good work that the staff of the Speaker has done in rather trying circumstances, shall we say, since September 30. In that connection I want to single out particularly the Clerk, who has carried a very severe load since September 30, Mr. Montgomery who, due to a little overwork, shall we say, had to leave us for a few weeks, and Mr. Dubroy who has been of tremendous assistance. The three gentlemen at the table in the centre of the Commons, as you may well judge, have carried more than their fair share of work this session.

I should also like to mention the Sergeant-at-Arms who is burdened with a great deal of detail, some of which has been referred to today. Then there are the various heads of departments, the head of Hansard, the interpreters, with whom we work very closely, although they do not actually come under our jurisdiction, the head and clerks of the committees branch—and I think all members know the difficulties under which they have been working this session—the constables, the pages and all other members of our staff.

I should also like to thank members of the house for their constant co-operation, which has been very necessary and very much appreciated by me. At this time, although it may be a little forward, I should like to thank members once again for the honour they have done me in sustaining me as Speaker on more than one occasion.

I would be remiss if I did not refer to the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman of committees who is in the chair now. They too have carried quite a burden.

It will be seen from what I have said, I think, and from the discussion this afternoon that times are changing in the House of Commons, and I am all for change. Eleven members this afternoon have shown a great deal of interest in the organization of the House of Commons, and I will not say that I am unsympathetic in any way with many of the views presented, but on the contrary the more constructive criticism we get the better I like it. With that in mind we have already been making a few changes. Things do not move quite as fast in the public service as they do in private organizations and I confess to periods of frustration, just the same as some hon. members. But we are building up a good working team in the Speaker's establishment and I am rather proud of it at the moment. We hope to improve.

Many questions have been raised. I am sure hon. members do not expect me to deal with them all in detail; but to show that I do have some comprehension of some of the problems I would refer to the fact that, for example, reference was made by the hon. member for Timiskaming to staff, and in particular to the protective staff and the fact that we have 72 members on that staff. One of the new problems which have arisen within the last three to five years is what to do with the increasing volume of tourist traffic on the hill. Five years ago we had 500 tourists a day. In July and August this year we ran between 6,000 and 7,000 a day. All of them want to get into the galleries. This is a new problem and it points up that times are changing and a new approach has to be considered.

Other questions had to do with the translation bureau. This morning I had the opportunity of visiting what I admit are very poor quarters that they are occupying at the present time. Already I have dictated a letter at 12.05 p.m. today to the Sergeant-at-Arms to raise this question immediately and see what we can do about it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

There is the question of committees and whether or not the messengers should be trained to operate the radio facilities. This matter has already been discussed on two or three occasions, and again another letter was dictated today with a view to seeing how we can improve the facilities for the next session.

There were a great many other questions. The hon. member for Timiskaming referred to the fact that the internal economy commission was perhaps outdated and should be replaced by a joint party committee to help the Speaker. This is a very interesting suggestion. It was dealt with more or less fully in 1962 by the hon. member for Skeena. I have the record here and I have read it very carefully.

However, I would point out to the hon. member that it is not up to the Speaker to decide this matter. The Speaker is bound by the House of Commons Act, which makes it a statutory matter. If the hon. member wishes to change the act, let him do so, but certainly the Speaker has no power in that regard. Section 16 of the House of Commons Act reads as follows:

> The governor in council shall appoint four members of the Queen's privy council for Canada who are also members of the House of Commons, who, with the Speaker of the House of Commons, shall be commissioners for the purposes of this section and sections 17 and 18.

It might interest hon. members to know that the members of the internal economy commission are the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Secretary of State.

With regard to television and radio facilities, I will have more to say about that in connection with the press gallery. Someone mentioned research facilities. This is one of the things I am extremely keen about and perhaps I am giving my personal views but surely once a year I am entitled to do that. We have in mind to review from the ground up or from the top down—it does not matter —the library of parliament. We feel that at the present time the library of parliament, good as it is, is not necessarily fulfilling the function for which it was set up. We have in mind the congressional library in Washington and the facilities provided in the United Kingdom. For that reason I have already on the desk a report on certain improvements which could be made. This question, of course, will be considered by the committee on procedure and organization which has been set up.

In so far as the Hansard staff is concerned, their salaries and numbers, I may say that this year we have been in particular difficulty as a result of the number of committees, the level of salaries which are paid, and difficulties in recruiting the staff. For that reason, the question of whether tape recording should replace the present system was referred to a committee.

Several other questions have been brought up today. There was the question of telecommunications raised by the hon. member for Lapointe. I understand that at the moment the internal economy commissioners have not reached any conclusion as to whether it would be a good or a bad thing to pay for the telegrams, long distance calls and all the rest of it. I am sure that hon. members will appreciate that they have not been too badly treated as of the moment.

In so far as the recognition problem is concerned, the hon. gentleman who raised it is not here so I am going to take advantage of the fact and not deal with the question.

Various other points were raised, not the least of which was the one raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur, joined by the hon. members for York-Humber, Medicine Hat, Skeena and one or two others. This question related to Raymond Rodgers and the press gallery. In view of the discussion here this afternoon, which I found very helpful and useful, I must say that I think hon. members know that I am not at all unsympathetic to the person concerned. I doubt if he has received as much attention from many other people as he has received from me during the last few months. The question is not an easy one to decide, and should not be decided on the basis of emotion or personality but on the basis of principle. For that reason I have told him, and told anyone who wanted to listen, that in due course when the principle has been established in the proper way and all factors have been considered, that will be the right time to render a judgment.

In so far as the press gallery is concerned, Mr. Rodgers is not alone in complaining. Many members of the press gallery are complaining constantly about the space problem. I am well aware of the conditions under which they work. I am well aware also of the fact that within the last few years the numbers in the press gallery have increased from 30 to about 110 or 120. This, in part, results from the development of communications by radio and television. The point is that the system under which we have been working up to the present time, vis-à-vis the press gallery, is very much out of date. Only yesterday I had the president, and perhaps the past president, of the press gallery in to discuss the constitution. I said that the constitution needs to be re-examined, reassessed and brought up to date. The same remarks apply to the bylaws under the constitution.

The question of space is a very pressing one. We thought at one time the taking over of the west block would be the answer to the problem. However, the problem seems to get worse every day. One idea that we have toyed with is that of dividing the membership of the gallery into two categories, those who are connected with daily papers and those who are connected with weekly papers or magazines. At the moment we have under reservation considerable space in the west block. We are trying to negotiate a solution between the press gallery and the Department of Public Works which will be of use to both sides.

There is also the question of visiting pressmen from other countries and other capitals. They arrive here and there is no place to entertain them. Perhaps the members of the press should construct their own building, as is done in Washington. Perhaps the owners of the large newspapers should, themselves, look into this problem and assist the rest of us.

In any event, it may be possible to work out a solution by which the members of the press gallery would get more space by splitting them into two parts, the daily and weekly or magazine sections, and thus make better facilities available. Amongst the better facilities, I include the need for a room in the basement or some other convenient place in this building to be used as a television and radio studio. I think all of us agree that it is ridiculous that the C.B.C. should go to the expense of hauling equipment up here every time they want to televise some proceedings, thus cluttering up the halls. It should be possible for members to go to a room downstairs for television or radio broadcasts. This is another thing we have in mind.

If I may summarize the whole question, I may say that the problem of the press gallery will be thoroughly considered by the new committee on parliamentary procedure and organization. I have already suggested that we set up immediately a small subcommittee, as was suggested by the hon. member for Peace River, to do the necessary research on this problem of space, constitution, bylaws, membership and all the rest of it. So far as I am concerned, until I receive a carefully thought out and well documented report which has been discussed with our advisers, I do not believe it would be right to jump in and give an emotional decision, no matter what I may think personally, nor is it the right time to give a decision on this Rodgers case. It may be decided later on. You cannot act as judge and jury at the same time.

I believe I have covered most of the points that were raised this afternoon in a very cursory way. There are a great many problems. One thing I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members is the desire which I know you have, and which certainly the Speaker has, of making a complete review of the Speaker's establishment. This is long overdue, for some of the reasons I have given this afternoon. Things get out of date when built-in systems of doing things continue from year to year. The purpose of setting up the committee on procedure and parliamentary organization was precisely to examine the standing orders of the house, try to modernize and streamline them for what it may be worth, and the most important factor involved is the modernizing of the way in which the institutions work in the house. I feel that inasmuch as we are in an industrial age, in a mechanical age, we need every mechanical gadget we can get to speed things up; that is the way things are done. I told you that I thought the library should be carefully examined. I told you I thought the committee system needed to be carefully reexamined. I have always said, from the beginning, that the committees are too large and smaller committees, as suggested by the hon. member for Peace River, are more effective. Well, this idea may be right or it may be wrong.

These are some of the outstanding problems, and anything which will make parliament more effective, which will create a better image vis-à-vis the public, must be considered and must be brought into force. This is the purpose of setting up the parliamentary committee on procedure and reform, if I could call it that. I assure you that the committee, consisting as it does of highly qualified members experienced in this house, with sufficient finances to find the necessary papers to study, with a desire to examine the system at work south of the border and the source of parliamentary inspiration in the United Kingdom, with all of these things and with these ideas floating around, will surprise me if it does not bring about a revolution in many of the procedures which we are following at the present time, something which is long overdue.

Mr. Howard: I am sure the applause indicates the feeling of everyone in relation to the reception of the comments by Mr. Speaker. It is always a bit inhibiting, because we have the highest regard for that office and for the person who holds it, to get involved in a controversial debate over matters under the jurisdiction of Mr. Speaker.

There is one point I would like to follow up, and it deals with the question of research assistance. The only research assistance that is available at the moment is that referred to in standing order 87 which says:

> It is the duty of the joint law clerks of the house to assist members...in drafting legislation—

[Mr. Speaker.]

I think it is particularly important to draw attention to the words "joint law clerks". The background for this, as was mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Timiskaming is such that there should be joint law clerks, one familiar with the civil code as it is in Quebec, and the other familiar with the common law as it is in other parts of Canada. It also is connected with the two founding races who entered confederation, and is connected with the current interest in bilingualism and biculturalism.

Unfortunately we do not have joint law clerks. We have one law clerk in the person of Dr. Maurice Ollivier who is, I am sure, well known to everybody in the house and who has appeared before a number of committees. Dr. Ollivier for the last few years—I could not say offhand how many, but eight or ten years—has filled the position set out in standing order 87 as "joint law clerks". I submit he is not. He is a singular person, and his background is that of the civil code of Quebec. I submit there should be another person appointed to participate with Dr. Ollivier in filling the position stipulated by standing order 87 of joint law clerks, so that there will be an English speaking and a French speaking person filling his office, having equal stature, status and standing, and so that members can go to whomever they choose to assist in the preparation of bills.

This matter was of great concern to many hon. members before the summer recess took place. It was discussed at a variety of meetings in which a number of people participated. We hoped that before the summer recess ended a solution would be found and that there would be appointed joint law clerks.

Speaking personally, I have a bit of a grievance with respect to this because the experience I have had with respect to Dr. Ollivier in assisting in the preparation of bills, has not been too good. I have only had occasion twice to go to him specifically to seek assistance in the preparation of bills. In one case he refused, saying it was not possible. In another case he prepared a bill for me which I filed and presented to the house. I subsequently discovered there were three errors in that particular bill and I am glad it did not come up for second reading, because it would have been a bit embarrassing for me to deal with a bill containing three errors, incidentally all of them on the same page.

I draw this to the attention of the committee because I think hon. members are not getting full assistance from the law clerk of the law branch, for the simple reason there is not in that office two people, one of French speaking descent, familiar with the civil code of Quebec, and another of English descent familiar with the common law of England and Canada, both having equal stature and status. This situation has been going on too long so far as I am concerned, and I hope Mr. Speaker will make a decision about it within the next few moments and indicate that there are going to be joint law clerks as provided by the standing order, so that every one will be on an equal footing.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Howard: This is a far more serious matter than meets the eye and I hope Mr. Speaker will reply.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to make just a few remarks as I realize time is passing. First of all, I want to say I have the highest confidence in and most pleasant relations with Dr. Ollivier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: He is, as is well known, besides being a good attorney a professor of constitutional law at Ottawa University, and I can testify that in my short term as Speaker so far, he has been of tremendous use to me personally, both with regard to preparing bills and opinions, and advice generally. As an attorney, myself, of a fair amount of experience, both in business and in law, I value his views.

I realize there are difficulties in that department. The hon. member and myself have discussed this on more than one occasion. I have done my best to try and regulate some of these difficulties, not too successfully; but while there is life there is hope. It is one of the problems that I referred to inferentially when I said there were a lot of problems in the Speaker's establishment; but this is one problem I am going to refer to the special committee. It is their job to examine it and help and advise me in reaching a conclusion. As of the moment I just want to say, so far as the gentleman referred to is concerned that he has my full confidence and will continue to have it so long as I am Speaker.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask the intentions of Mr. Speaker to maintain the office of joint law clerks?

Mr. Speaker: That is asking for a decision. I am not afraid to make decisions, but I am afraid of not making the right decision, and that takes time and consideration. As I have said, it is a difficult problem to answer and it is one which is under close study at present. As to whether there should or should not be more than one, I am going to seek the advice of this special committee which was set up to examine these problems. If we are going to use the parliamentary system at all and if we are not to have dictatorship—even though as I say I am not afraid of making decisions, I have made them all my life—we should use this committee. It was set up to consider these problems, and surely courtesy and justice dictate that the committee be consulted so that it may advise the Speaker. That is the democratic way to do things.

Mr. Otto: I was very happy to hear Mr. Speaker say that this committee, of which he is chairman, will introduce great reforms in the house. It is about time. However, I am sure hon. members will recognize one problem has not been touched upon, and that concerns the page boys, our great helpers. Of necessity they are enrolled in their own schools up to noon hour. That is half a day; and when they work here for the rest of the day they are denied the education that they should have, with the result that in a great many cases they drop out of school at a very early age.

Surely the time has now come when we should consider a completely new system of page boys, through which their education could be provided here, possibly along with living accommodation, and then page boys could come here from all over Canada and not of necessity just from Ottawa and Hull. I would like to bring this to the attention of the Speaker and his committee. It is a problem that deserves consideration as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, just a few brief remarks to thank the Speaker and the Clerk for the co-operation they have extended to me and the readiness with which they received my suggestion to put French and English titles on the books and reference records on the table of the house.

I would not miss this opportunity either to mention that the two preceding Speakers have always been very kind to me and have always shown their willingness to implement my suggestions to the effect that both in the house and on parliament hill bilingualism be more and more widely recognized.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps you would permit me, before we embark upon the estimates of the Minister of Finance, to find out what the wishes of the committee might be with regard to the hour between six o'clock and seven o'clock. If it was thought that we could complete the remaining two departments and one item by 7.15 or something of that sort, perhaps there would be a disposition to sit right through. If it was thought we were going to take rather longer, it might surprise the committee to have me suggest that we should rise either at six o'clock or 6.30 and do what we did at lunch time, that is take half an hour in order that we might stretch our legs and relax a little before going on. If we could have the sense of the committee at this stage, it would be helpful.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee sit right through?

Mr. Pickersgill: I put two alternatives, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, at noon today some of us were suggesting that we should have an hour, and the Secretary of State came back with half an hour. I think we should be fair about this. He has now suggested half an hour, so I suggest an hour.

Mr. Douglas: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if it would not be better to wait until six o'clock and see what progress we have made. I think most of us would feel that if we are rolling along and could finish by seven o'clock, we would rather sit through until seven o'clock and finish. But if at six o'clock it appears it will take a couple of hours, I think we should recess for dinner.

Mr. Nowlan: That is what I was going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we see what progress has been made and decide at six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps it could be settled at about five minutes to six o'clock, because hon. gentlemen in the other place are making one of their periodic reassemblies to find out what progress we are making, and they would like to have some prognostication at six o'clock. So perhaps at six o'clock I could interrupt the proceedings and we could then decide this matter.

Mr. Knowles: They are working hard today.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

25. Tariff board—administration, $207,800.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I thought the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings was going to speak on these estimates. I have a few things to say about them. I should not have let you go so quickly.

The Chairman: On what vote does the hon. member wish to speak? We are on vote No. 25 at this moment. Shall vote No. 25 carry?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Scott: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has some remarks that he wants to make. If the committee will not wait for a moment while he finds his notes, then some of us will have to start making speeches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I can say what I want to say on vote 40, Mr. Chairman. I will wait until we get there.

Item agreed to.

35. Royal Canadian Mint—construction or acquisition of equipment, $178,600.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks in connection with item No. 35.

Even if, on several occasions, we voiced criticism concerning the national debt and the interest paid thereon. I feel certain facts have to be brought out at this time when the committee is asked to approve an expenditure of $854,624,300.

The estimates of all departments are important but the present ones are of major importance since they amount to more than $1,300 million, $800 million of which will be used to pay the interest on the national debt.

Mr. Chairman, it is our duty to make a few suggestions at this point. All of us have not had the opportunity of getting a degree in political economy, but some of us have found the time to read and to make a close study of our economy, more particularly as regards its financial structure.

You can go back to the time of Adam Smith, the father of economic liberalism, you can read and study Karl Marx's theory or scrutinize Mr. Beveridge's theory or those of various contemporary authors, nowhere will you find any significant mention of the interest on the national debt. Yet, the Canada Year Book, especially the 1962 edition, contains appalling figures; in fact, they are a sign of an unacceptable and intolerable situation in a country like ours.

Thus, under the heading—

Summary of the public debt and interest payments thereon, years ended March 31, 1952-61

—we find that the gross national debt has increased from $17,257,668,676 in 1952 to $21,602,826,960 in 1961.

On the other hand, if this debt is distributed on a per capita basis—I am now referring to the net debt—this table shows that it has gone down from $773.59 in 1952 to $681.92 in 1961.

However, it is noted that the interest per capita has gone up from $30.87 in 1952 to $42.34 in 1961, in spite of the decrease in the per capita debt.

Mr. Chairman if under our present system we are required to pass estimates as important as those now under consideration and to appropriate some $800 million to the payment of interest on the national debt, it is high time we did something more than to follow this simple parliamentary procedure which allows us to criticize the estimates of the various departments.

What we have come to, nowadays, is that we raise loans to pay the interest on loans that we cannot even pay, under the present economic system, out of the taxes of all kinds which are imposed at all levels of government.

If we are ready to spend $854 million to pay the interest on the national debt, I feel it is time that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) should set up a committee to probe deeply into the workings of our monetary system.

We will be called upon, in 1964, to amend the Bank Act. It seems to me that, at that time, it would be appropriate to approach the problem from a new angle to make of the Bank of Canada an institution that will really serve the Canadian parliament. When things have come to the point where we talk about paying interest amounting to $854 million, it seems to me that the Minister of Finance should give serious consideration, when the Bank Act is amended, to the possibility of using the Bank of Canada.

But no, it would seem this thing is sacred. When the accountants check public accounts, it is always that particular item which is the least discussed; the amount of the debt is computed, the percentage of interest is established, and the interest is paid on the obligations incurred by the issuing of bonds or by some other means of contracting a debt. The total amount of interest paid is so great that it is nearly twice the sum earmarked for social security.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that when he prepares his next budget, the Minister of Finance should consider having the Bank Act amended so as to use the Bank of Canada to operate a complete conversion of the Canadian public debt, to avoid devoting most of the taxation revenues exclusively to the repayment of interests on the national debt.

We are not the only ones in this house to have recognized the need for putting into circulation, at some level or other, interest-free credits, or at least credits bearing but a small interest. Last fall, members of the N.D.P. admitted that it was necessary to find a formula for putting into circulation credits at a reduced rate of interest, in order to finance the development and the conversion of a public debt which has become such a heavy burden. I feel that this suggestion should be considered by the Minister of Finance.

To my mind, all our economists are inclined to become too technical and to forget hard facts. The Bank of Canada should be thought of as being an organization in the service of the Canadian parliament and of the Canadian people. In that way, instead of devoting such large amounts to the issuing of new bonds, the proceeds of which go partly to pay the interest on an outstanding debt, we could find a formula to put the Bank of Canada to the service of parliament and the nation as a whole.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with these few remarks, I would like to put on the official record table No. 13 of the 1962 Canada Year Book, published by the dominion bureau of statistics, but my hon. friends, the members of the house, perhaps would not allow me to read all these figures. However, I would like to put on the record some significant figures so that the numerous readers of Hansard may realize to what degree the national debt has become today an unbearable burden for the Canadian taxpayers.

If we consider carefully that table, we find that the interest on the debt has reached a more and more frightening level, now being close to $854 million.

We find that the total interest on the outstanding debt has increased from $432 million in 1952 to $756 million in 1961, which represents an increase of more than $300 million over a period of ten years.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if more people in the general public would read Hansard, they would know about all those figures, and I believe that we would all be more anxious then to amend our monetary policy.

[Text]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I realize that it would be a bold person who, at this particular juncture, would say very much so I will not take up much time of the committee. However, it seems to me that perhaps this is a suitable occasion to celebrate, shall we say the final obsequies of some rather unfortunate financial adventures which we have had over the past six to eight months.

I feel that one should not let this particular opportunity go by without making some comment on the attempts of our Minister of Finance to cope with a very serious problem which is facing Canada. His attempts were perhaps not very successful, but let us give him an "A" for his efforts to deal with the problem of the ownership of Canadian industry and resources. I do not think there is a member of this committee who does not sympathize with the minister in his attempts to cope with this problem, although we may have had a rather sardonic entertainment out of watching him rush to one door to close it, and then rush to another door on the other side of the building to open it because of the problems created by shutting off the inflow of capital from abroad.

This is a serious problem which cannot be dismissed by pretending that it is not important to Canada. My only regret is that the minister was unable to achieve some more effective method of safeguarding Canada's economic, and I think eventually political, independence than he was able to achieve. I think the trouble perhaps lies in the context in which he attempted to do it, and that the only method of solving this problem is by a method which will be repugnant to the Minister of Finance and his colleagues; that is, a massive program of public investment.

For that reason I regret another angle of government financial policy in this regard, and that is the terms under which the portable pension plan has been set up. I feel that here was the opportunity to cope with two problems at once; one to provide suitable retirement allowances for the Canadian people, and the other to pool Canadian savings for investment to achieve this purpose of independence. I think that there are matters with which the government will have to deal within the next few years. I know of no other way to do it than by the method of heavy public investment, and I hope that before long we may be able to applaud the minister for following that policy.

There is one other matter I want to mention while on my feet, and I think this is also a serious problem for Canada. I have been a little disturbed in noting the results of the recent dominion-provincial conferences. It seems to me that the federal government has been coming perilously close to the danger line with regard to the relinquishing of fiscal authority in the hands of the central government. I may say that I was particularly disturbed at the acquiescence on the part of the federal authorities to the relinquishment of a great part of the succession duty imposts. Because it seems to me that if there was one field of our federal fiscal policy which should have been maintained it was the retention of that particular impost in the hands of the central government, both from the point of view of equity and from the point of view of financial management. From the point of view of equity I think there is no doubt that large estates in Canada are usually derived from investments throughout the whole of the country, and it is manifestly unfair to permit the province in which the testator happened to be living at the time of his death to reap all the taxation benefits from it. But I think that even more important is the whole general problem of the care the federal government must take to see that it retains in its own hands sufficient fiscal authority to enable it to embark on programs of economic expansion from which the provinces can benefit.

Also I suggest that if this process is allowed to go too far it will impair the ability of the federal government to manage the Canadian currency effectively. These are matters on which the federal government should stand firm and it should not allow other considerations to be brought into the picture. I have been concerned to notice the way in which these strictly economic questions have become involved with emotional considerations such as biculturalism, bilingualism and provincial rights. As one who has a great sympathy with our French speaking compatriots with regard to the concern they feel for their language and culture, I must still point out that these demands to establish complete provincial autonomy so as to support emotional considerations are fraught with great danger to Canadian confederation. I do hope that the minister and his colleagues will place this question firmly before, not only the province of Quebec, but my own province of British Columbia, which to my mind made much more separatist demands than did the province of Quebec itself. And the government of British Columbia had less excuse for doing so because the province of Quebec is subject to emotional considerations which operate in this field, whereas I regret to say in the case of the province of British Columbia and, to a lesser extent, the province of Ontario, it was sheer greed and selfishness and a dislike of sharing burdens of bringing the least fortunate parts of Canada up to the status of the three wealthiest provinces.

I would say the government has gone as far as it can safely go in acceding to the demands for autonomy which have been coming from the three largest provinces of the country, and I hope that all members of the House of Commons from whatever part of Canada they come will support the government in firmly resisting any further dangerous diminution of federal power in the fiscal field. These are the matters which I thought we should be considering and I hope the minister will come before us early in the new year with firm proposals which will, perhaps, be more successful than some of those presented in the past, and that he will bear these things in mind. We rely on the Minister of Finance perhaps most of all to maintain a firm economy and a sound financial foundation for confederation. He should not allow himself to be swayed from that position by demands from different parts of Canada to balkanize the country under the guise of local autonomy, or even for ethnic or racial considerations. There is a price to be paid for maintaining Canada. It is not a price imposed by English speaking Canadians or by French speaking Canadians or by any province. It is a price imposed by federation itself. It is a price we cannot avoid paying without heading for the rocks of disintegration and balkanization.

Mr. Nowlan: I refrained from speaking on the first item, since the minister did not open on that. I thought it would be advisable to defer the few words I intend to say until somebody else has spoken. After all, I am in a position of having prepared these estimates. I can vouch for the fact that they are well and truly prepared. Undoubtedly, no better estimates were ever prepared than these.

The Christmas spirit prevents my discussing any administration of the items and it is obvious there is little I can say about the estimates themselves. I know there are editorial writers who may say it is unfortunate that parliament passes provisions for expenditures totalling hundreds of millions of dollars in such a short space of time, especially as these sums affect the whole economy of Canada, but I think these writers should be reminded that there have been many discussions concerned, directly and indirectly with these estimates of the Minister of Finance during past months. Aside from the speech from the throne there have been the budget, the budget resolutions, the resolutions preceding the income tax legislation, the income tax debates and all the others which have gone on for month after month.

There is a very popular word today; I think its original meaning has been confused. We hear a great deal about dialogue. It is an impressive term. I think there has been a widespread and fairly well developed dialogue with respect to the fiscal policies of the minister and the department during the past six or eight months. There is another word which is also in popular use today, the word consensus. I am not suggesting for a moment that there has been any great consensus as a result of the dialogue. Nevertheless, these things are in the course of discussion and, I hope, of fruition, and I do not see any point in discussing them at any length on this occasion. One could spend minutes or hours in discussing them, but I think most of the subjects which have arisen in connection with the hon. gentleman's policies regarding taxation, fiscal matters and the rest have been well debated in this house, in the press and in various organizations outside, both nationally and internationally and, frankly, I cannot see any great point in continuing at any length now.

After all, we can almost hear the sound of Christmas bells as the reindeer are harnessed, or as the jeep is prepared, and before we know it we shall be back here again. There will be another budget. The minister's policies will again be given careful scrutiny, and, this time, we shall have more experience of them. When another budget comes down, and I presume this will be fairly early in the fiscal year, it will be much more expedient to discuss these matters rather than to go into great detail at this time.

I agree with the previous speaker as to the necessity of maintaining the unity of Canada. I agree that the maintenance of Canada demands a price. We accepted that when Canada was formed. Our forefathers knew it, and it is well we should recognize it today. We have paid that price for almost a century and I am sure we will continue to do it.

There are one or two questions I might ask. When the minister does speak he might tell us whether any discussions are going on with respect to the renegotiations of the tax conventions, the one with the United States being probably the most important. We should like to know what stage these negotiations have reached. The hon. gentleman might also tell us about the progress of legislation in the United States affecting the so-called Kennedy tax measures which are somewhere in congress—I guess congress adjourned early this morning—and the probable effect of this legislation on the inflow of capital. The minister might have an opportunity to refer to these questions when he rises to reply.

Mr. Olson: As has been suggested, members of this party have had many opportunities to present their views with regard to the Department of Finance in the course of this session. It is apparent to members of the committee that we are particularly interested in these public debt charges, so I should like to ask a couple of questions about this particular item. We note that there will be an increase of $92,783,000 in the interest on the public debt in the 1963-64 fiscal year compared with the 1962-63 fiscal year. This changes total debt charges from $761,840,000 to $854,624,000. I should like the minister to give us the reasons for what appears to be a very large increase from one year to the next. We should like to know whether it has come about as a result of an increase in the total indebtedness or whether it is because of higher rates of interest on the national debt. Another reason could perhaps be that there has been some conversion from bond issues of a lower yield. There is one more thing I should like to ask, and I am going to be very brief. Can we expect this kind of increase to occur again next year and in ensuing years into the future?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, as we face a new year I would make the suggestion to the Minister of Finance that he use discretion and generosity in the preparation of his new budget for 1964-65.

Item agreed to.

40a. Payments, computed in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, to the government of each province, in respect of income tax paid by corporations whose main business is the distribution to or generation for distribution to the public of electrical energy, gas or steam; the said payments to be made in respect of such part of the income of the corporation for the taxation year ending in the calendar year 1961 (as determined under and for the purposes of the Income Tax Act) as is derived from the said distribution or generation in the province to which payment is made—to extend the purposes of this vote to authorize payments with respect to the taxation year 1960, $1.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether the minister has readily available a succinct and clear explanation of 40a?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply later to one or two of the other questions that have been raised, but I will reply to this particular question now. This supplemental vote is to enable payments to the provinces to be made from vote No. 40 with respect to the prior taxation year 1960. Vote 40 of the 1963-64 main estimates had authorized payment to the provinces of the half share of income tax collected from certain privately owned public utility corporations with respect to the 1961 taxation year. The amount payable to the provinces as determined by the Department of National Revenue on March 29, 1963, amounted to $10,172,096. The amount provided in item 40 of the 1962-63 main estimates was $6½ million and the additional amount of $3½ million by governor general's warrants for a total of $10 million left a further amount of $172,996 unprovided for. That is what this is for.

Item agreed to.

71a. To authorize the governor in council to make regulations, providing for the extension of a retroactive increase in remuneration, payable out of the consolidated revenue fund and granted in the current and subsequent fiscal years, with an effective date of July 1, 1963 or later, in whole or in part and under such conditions as may be specified in the regulations, to all or any persons who would have benefited from the increase if it had been granted on the day to which it was made retroactive, notwithstanding that they would not be included in the class of persons who would have benefited from such increase if it had not been retroactive, and prescribing to what extent payments made by virtue hereof may be included in the calculation of pension, superannuation or other benefits under any act, and to authorize payments in the current and subsequent fiscal years in accordance with such regulations, $1.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Minister of Finance expects me to speak on item 71a. What is more important, I should like to hear from him in a more humane way than he has yet dealt with the subject matter that I believe is covered by vote 71a. As I understand it, this is the vote under which authority is provided to make pay increases that were granted later retroactive to employees who were still in the public service, provided they were in the public service on July 1, 1963. Am I right so far?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: That is what this vote is all about. I want to say something about the application of this decision in the current situation, but I should like to go a step further and see if I understand this gobbledygook which is placed before us. Am I right in believing that this $1—one always has to look at these $1 votes more closely than at votes for several millions—also settles this question for the future in the sense that it provides for regulations to be made covering the same kind of situation if it happens again? Again may I ask the minister, am I understanding it correctly?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, if I may recapitulate, this $1 vote does two things. It makes the provision so far as the last increases were concerned that people now out of the public service can get the increase on a retroactive basis only if they were in service on July 1, 1963, and then it also lays down regulations for the future. I have more to say but I will be glad to hear from the minister now.

Mr. Gordon: I was just going to say, as I think I have said before in reply to questions from the hon. member, that the problem we were up against was to find some date from which this new approach would apply and, as I think I have explained before, there was an attempt made to make it retroactive but we did not know where it should be retroactive to. It was decided that it should apply from the 1st of July, 1963, but the hon. member's interpretation is correct.

Mr. Knowles: So far the minister and I are in agreement, but so far we have only been interpreting what the vote means. I want to say to him now that I think it is most unjust, inhuman, and all the other adjectives that one would throw in if he had the time, that the government has taken this decision with respect to those immediately affected. The result is that there are cases of civil servants who in January, February or March of this year worked alongside each other, did exactly the same work, were classified in the same way and so on, but because one of them retired before July 1st he does not get the increased pay that was awarded retroactive to last October or whatever the date was. But the person who is still working or still in service gets the increased pay on a retroactive basis. In both cases the period under consideration is a period when both of these individuals to whom I am referring were working.

I think it is completely unfair to deny these increases retroactively to people who have since retired or may have left the service for any other reason. After all, it is not the fault of the civil servants concerned that the making of the increases was delayed so long. In this respect both governments are the same. They both took a long time to make the decisions with regard to these increases. I will give the government credit for making them retroactive once they made the increases.

Mr. Nowlan: It was not a very easy thing to do.

Mr. Knowles: I grant it was not an easy thing to reach a decision as to what the increases should be.

Mr. Gordon: I hope the hon. member is not suggesting the government took a long time to make this decision. We made it almost immediately.

Mr. Knowles: You mean the decision to make the effective date July 1?

Mr. Gordon: Well, that was not what I meant.

Mr. Knowles: I can remember that at least as long ago as last December I was asking the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings when he was over on the other side if this provision was not going to be made retroactive, and he was giving the matter consideration. The present Minister of Finance gave the matter consideration, and finally in June or July we got word that it was not possible to make it retroactive. I do not know who it was who talked to me about this just in ordinary conversation, but I know one of the arguments put up was that it was difficult to find some of these people. They have retired and left the service and in some cases have moved away. It would not be fair to pay some people and not to pay other people. Some of them might have died in the meantime. So the argument goes. My colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, says it would not be much trouble finding those who are still alive. If you put an ad in the newspaper that there was money available, people would turn up very quickly.

All facetiousness aside, it does seem to me that this is a grossly unfair decision to make, to cut out those people who have left the service from getting their increases on a retroactive basis. I have an uneasy feeling that they are looked upon as a group of people who are out now; they do not have any particular pressure to exert. They do not have any bargaining power that the civil servants have—which is not very much. I hope they will have more when they get collective barganing. These retired people are a group of has-beens. It is a case of their not being able to exert any particular pressure, so we cut them off. Out of sight out of mind. They do not get the increase.

As I say, I think it is a most unfair practice. The minister admitted several times on orders of the day that it was a problem which was being studied. I hope even yet the government will find a way to make these increases available to those people who have retired on a retroactive basis to cover the period when they were at work.

The other point I want to make, and perhaps it will lead to a question or two, relates to what the situation is going to be in the future. One always has to look at these $1 items and realize that we are not only making a decision for the present, but that we may be setting a precedent that will last for a long time. I recall that away back in 1932 the cabinet ministers received their motor car allowance, instead of a car and chauffeur, by means of an item in the estimates. This practice was followed until this year, for 31 years, on the basis of an item that was passed in the estimates of 1932. I say, therefore, we are settling for the future what is going to happen when increases are made. I should like to know what is going to be the retroactive period next time. I think the retroactive date for the last increases was October?

Mr. Gordon: No, it was July 1, 1961, if I remember correctly. They were taken up in groups and some were studied early but the last ones were October, 1962. If the principle which is being suggested were implemented, it would have to go back to July 1, 1961, I think.

Mr. Knowles: All right. Here are people who have money coming to them for as far back as, I would say in terms of justice, two years. They are being denied that and a cut-off date is being put into this vote. In addition, we are also, it would appear, making regulations for the future, covering the situation in the future. Is it the implication that people can go through this two-year cycle because we go through the various groups, and be denied the increase, or is there any possibility that because this issue has been studied and talked about in the house, the regulation may be made in such a way that a decision could be made in advance to enable people who are leaving the service to receive increases made on a retroactive basis?

Mr. Gordon: That is the intention from July 1, 1963.

Mr. Knowles: That is, from here on?

Mr. Gordon: From here on, that will be the case.

Mr. Knowles: If a year from now increases are made which are retroactive to July 1, 1964, but they are not announced until January 1, 1965, the people who retire between July 1, 1964 and January 1, 1965 will get the retroactive pay for the period of time they worked in that interval?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Knowles: Well, that is good. It certainly justifies, if it needed justification, the institution of questions on orders of the day. This question, in my time here, has seldom been discussed in debate but it has been discussed often by means of questions and answers on orders of the day. Apparently this process has caused the minister to think about it and come up with a solution to the problem for people in the public service from here on. Those now in the service are going to be delighted to get this news. If this situation occurs again, they will be looked after. However, this is cold comfort to those who left the service during the last two years. As a matter of fact, the people who have written me, and they have been many, are mainly those who have left since last October and who had two or three months of work during the time the increases were in effect. They did not get them. It is rather cold comfort for them to know that the government has found a way to cope with the matter in the future.

Mr. Gordon: It did not take the government all that time. These decisions were made within two or three months of the time the government took office. There was a very careful study made, as I indicated to the hon. member on orders of the day, to see what the problems would be if we made this retroactive. Now, I think the hon. member's original suggestion was that we should go back to October, 1962. I can assure him I looked into that very carefully. The difficulty was, why single out these particular people when the cyclical review had taken a couple of years to complete?

Now, I agree with him, if it could have been done without a great deal of difficulty; perhaps the answer would have been to have gone back to the beginning of this particular cyclical review which I recollect began in July, 1961. There were difficulties, which I have explained on previous occasions in doing that. It seemed to the government that the next best thing to fixing up these things back to the beginning was to at least make a good start from now on, and this was done. The announcement was made some time ago.

The only other thing I want to say is to assure my hon. friend that I think this makes it clear the principle he is advocating, and that I am just as much in favour of—I suspect —as he, will apply from this time forward. I agree with him that I have some reservation about seeing these $1 items in the estimates. When these particular acts come up for review, I should like to see this provision incorporated in them, so that they will be there and it will be clear to everybody where they stand. However, if we tried to open up all these acts now it would take a little longer, apparently, than we have between now and Christmas.

Mr. Knowles: I want to make it very clear that I am not detracting one bit from the genuine use of the word "good" that I offered a while ago when it became clear what the decision was in respect of the future. It is perfectly true that on several occasions on orders of the day the minister indicated that the problem was being studied, and I am even prepared to say the government deserves good marks if it comes up with a solution in two or three months; but I do not think the minister has given a satisfactory answer to cover the last full cycle.

The difficulty is that these people are now retired. Many of them retain a connection with civil service organizations and that sort of thing, but they are out of the picture, and somehow or another when people are out of the picture they do not seem to get the attention and consideration they seem to get while they are in the picture.

I congratulate the government on the decision made and I am glad the minister was able to say, without any ifs, ands or buts, that from here on any pay increase that is announced will go to all people who were working at the time the pay increase became effective, even if they retire a week or a month from that date.

Item agreed to.

85. Government's share of surgical-medical insurance premiums determined in accordance with regulations made pursuant to vote 124, Appropriation Act No. 6, 1960, $8,500,000.

Mr. Knowles: Before vote 85 carries I wonder if the minister would care to make a comment on the item which is just above it, even though it is a statutory item. Will consideration be given between now and next session to possible amendments to the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act along the lines requested by the civil service federation of Canada and other organizations?

Mr. Gordon: I am not in a position to give any assurance of that, but I can say that the superannuation act will have to be considered and probably adjusted when the Canada pension plan is introduced.

Mr. Knowles: The minister is aware of the problem and he will keep it on his mind?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

Item agreed to.

95. Institute of public administration of Canada, $6,000.

Mr. Herridge: What is this organization, what is its membership composed of and why does it secure a grant from the federal government any more than, say, the barbers association or certified accountants association?

Mr. Gordon: I do not happen to be a member of the certified public accountants association or I might feel that remark had been directed to me. This particular organization was established to enable the civil servants of Canada at all levels to improve themselves and it was felt that a modest grant by the government of Canada would be a very useful investment.

Mr. Douglas: Several of the provinces also make grants.

Mr. Nowlan: It has been in existence for many years.

Mr. Gordon: I think the institute was started about 1948. If I recollect correctly, a very experienced and able civil servant from Saskatchewan is the president of the association and he has approached me to ask, not only that this grant be continued but that the federal government and all the provinces study the possibility of increasing the grants in the future. This matter is being considered by the government.

Mr. Herridge: I am not objecting to the grant, but I do hope the minister gives consideration to other groups who want grants to improve themselves.

Mr. Olson: I do not have any questions on this item, but I would like to know whether the minister is going to answer the questions I asked with regard to the debt charges.

Mr. Gordon: I would like first to refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. As he pointed out, these are his estimates. He is a little more fullsome about their purposes and their contents than perhaps I could be, as they are not mine, but I do want to agree with him that they were well prepared and I have no hesitation in joining him in endorsing them and thanking the members of the committee for approving them.

With regard to the charges on the public debt, all I can say is that the total amount of the interest payable on the public debt depends on two things, the size of the debt and the current rate of interest. There is no way I know of that governments can incur deficits without increasing their debt. I have pointed out to a few people outside this house that this is one of the prices we inevitably must pay when we have deficits—and I think, as was so clearly stated the other day by the Minister of Justice on behalf of the Prime Minister, that there are times when we should have deficits. The net result is that the debt goes up and of course, the interest charges go up too.

As to the level of interest rates, as we all know it is controlled by a number of things, but one of the practical facts of life in this country is that if our interest rates are lower than those prevailing in other countries, there would be an outflow of funds which would be very damaging to the expansion of the country. The fact is that the debt has been going up and the interest bill has been going up proportionately.

Mr. Olson: This increase from the 1962-63 to the 1963-64 fiscal year is $92 million, somewhere between 12 per cent and 14 per cent, and certainly this is away out of proportion to the actual increase in the total debt. I am just wondering if there are some other reasons for it.

Mr. Gordon: The other factor, of course—and I think the supplementary question is very well taken—is that there have been a number of refundings of issues that were sold during the war years when interest rates were very low. They have had to be refunded at current interest rates, which are substantially higher. That would account for a big part of it.

I would like to say a brief word about the two points raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. He referred to the need in this country of taking steps to see that we control our own affairs and our own economy. I agree with him. I think he would agree with me when I say it is easier to say that than to do anything effective about it. I think the action that has been taken will prove to be more effective in the years to come than some of the critics of these policies yet realize. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings talked about dialogues and consensus and one thing and another. I am glad that somebody else is uncertain about this word "dialogue" that seems to be worked to death these days.

Mr. Nowlan: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: I thought it had something to do with marital affairs, but apparently it has not. Anyway, let us leave it alone. I suppose that whenever new policies are introduced, and certainly new policies of the kind to which reference was made, there will always be differences of opinion, and strong differences of opinion. This has certainly been true in this particular case. Many people who were opposed to these policies have called me up lately and suggested they have come around to a different way of thinking. I am not suggesting this is by any means unanimous as yet, although I am hopeful that it may be at some time in the near future.

Mr. Nowlan: I have not called you yet.

Mr. Gordon: No, but you may. Another point raised was about the importance of the federal government retaining a position where it can influence the economy of the country and perform its clear responsibilities in this field. With regard to this I can only say that I agree completely with the hon. member. I have said this on many occasions publicly. I think we would all be very remiss if we allowed the federal government to become weak so that this country did become balkanized and there were no government left to give leadership. I certainly do not think this has happened and I do not believe it is going to happen.

The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings asked me two questions. The first was as to what steps were being taken respecting the renegotiation of certain tax treaties. We are having exchanges with the officials of the United States treasury now to set the time for detailed discussions of this matter. While I would hope these discussions might take place even before Christmas, I will be disappointed if they are not begun within the next couple of weeks. We are in communication with the United States treasury officials on the subject.

Mr. Nowlan: If we are not careful we will not get out of here before Christmas.

Mr. Gordon: I think on that note, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I will be excused from answering the other questions.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, we still have the estimates of the Secretary of State and one item of northern affairs. I doubt that we could finish by seven o'clock or 7.30. I would suggest, therefore, that we rise for half an hour and come back at 6.40.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I very much appreciate the consideration of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in accepting the half hour suggestion, and I hope it will be accepted by all. We could then come back in a relaxed mood. I am sure that every member of the committee has seen so much of my face and heard so much of my voice that they will not want to hear any more from me.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we will suspend the sitting until twenty minutes before seven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At nine minutes after six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 6.40 p.m.

SECRETARY OF STATE

The Chairman: House in committee of supply, estimates of the Secretary of State. Before we start discussing the estimates of this department may I suggest that we should go through the department itself, then to the different agencies, boards and commissions which come under the jurisdiction of the minister, leaving till the last the C.B.C. and the B.B.G., on which I assume there will be more discussion.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I thought that we adopted the position with other departments that we had a fairly free-wheeling discussion on item 1 and then proceed to the individual branches and pass them rather quickly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, since this is not like other departments, and as these agencies have no relation whatever, apart from the Atlantic development board, to the department, it would certainly be much more agreeable to me if we took the Department of the Secretary of State, the Atlantic development board and then the agencies in order. Because there is not much relation between them.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Board of broadcast governors—

1. Salaries and other expenses, $349,800.

Mr. Nielsen: I will be as brief as I can, Mr. Chairman. The only method I have of communicating with my constituents in the Yukon is through the medium of the C.B.C. I have no private radio stations to help me in the Yukon.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman's point which he is raising would not more properly be raised on the C.B.C. than on the B.B.G.?

Mr. Nielsen: I thought we were on the C.B.C.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, this is the B.B.G.

The Chairman: This is vote No. 1, board of broadcast governors.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise at this point a matter which has been receiving very widespread publicity in the Toronto newspapers, and I presume other similar news media, and that is the decision of the C.B.C. to convert the programs of radio station CJBC in Toronto from English speaking to French speaking. The reason I raise the matter under this item is that the suggestion I want to urge on the government is properly brought, I think, under this particular item of the board of broadcast governors. It is always difficult to talk of the C.B.C. because one does not like to be put into the category of attempting in any way to exercise political interference with a crown corporation. But at the same time this corporation has taken a decision and instituted a procedure in Toronto which appears to be widely opposed by a good many people. I think it is our duty as representatives of some of those people to raise this matter and to draw to the attention of the government the seriousness with which this move is being viewed in some very significant quarters in the city of Toronto. The background is well known to all and it has been set out in a release issued by Mr. R. C. Fraser who is a vice president of corporate affairs of the C.B.C. This document, released on September 20, traces the background of CJBC and its position in the C.B.C. national network and it outlines the reasons advanced by the corporation for the initial decision to carry French language broadcasts over CJBC. It also sets out reasons why the corporation has now reached a decision that by October of 1964 the station shall become completely French speaking. It is most unfortunate that this document was not published some considerable time ago. One of the difficulties, now, is that the C.B.C. has to some extent botched the whole job of public relations. I think there is a case to be made out for a French speaking station in the city of Toronto. All the statistics indicate that a fairly wide audience would be interested. But because, at the beginning, this was sprung on everybody without a good deal of advance preparation and public relations work, this matter is now being blown up into a great issue in the city.

I want to make it clear that as a representative of this party and of one of the Toronto constituencies I am not taking the position that French speaking or bilingual people should not have a station in the Toronto area. But station CJBC has built up a wide listening audience. It has developed a high calibre of programming and attracted the loyal allegiance of a large number of listeners—between 165,000 and 170,000, I think. Because of the manner in which this change has been announced by the C.B.C., the whole argument in its justification has become misunderstood. The most serious aspect of this situation is that many of us are coming to the conclusion, from work in our constituencies and surveys made, that there is growing in Toronto an increasingly widespread anti-Quebec feeling. This is a disturbing element, but it is a real one and it is easily perceived by anyone who tries to assess the feelings of his constituency. I recently completed a survey of my riding and the most significant thing about it, as the returns came back, was the growing anti-French sentiment. I think this arises because all that is being heard in English speaking Canada are the voices of the demagogues, the voices of the extremists—the people who are saying to English Canada: You must do this, or that, or it is the end of confederation. It is only because an extreme point of view is getting through to English Canada that this reaction is building up. But because of the way in which the C.B.C. is handling this matter, its decision to make this station French speaking is likely to be caught up in this anti-Quebec move which is developing, and I do not think we should permit this to happen. I do not think this is a decision about which we should make inflammatory speeches.

It may be that the case of the C.B.C. is unassailable. However, to date they have been unable to convince us that there is no other way of meeting the needs of the French speaking or bilingual people in Toronto. No satisfactory explanation has been given why we should be deprived of one of our largest and best English speaking stations. If an examination of the circumstances convinces everyone that there is no other technical solution which would provide a French program, then I think the C.B.C. would have a strong case, perhaps even an unassailable case. But this has not been done to date and the whole question has been so botched by the C.B.C. from a public relations point of view that the public has not been convinced of the need for this change. They do not understand the issue or the reasoning behind it.

For these reasons I would urge upon the minister as strongly as I can the proposal that the board of broadcast governors should hold a hearing into this whole matter. The board should undertake to have this whole matter reviewed and to let the C.B.C. come forward and make its case over again—to bring forward all the technical information which the rest of us must have if we are to justify the change.

When this matter first came up on December 12, I placed a lengthy question on the order paper, question No. 1,868. Had I been able to secure answers to that question quickly I would have been in a position to discuss this subject with the dozens and dozens of people who are continually calling every week end, wanting to know why this change is being brought about. But because we do not have this information we are not in a position to discuss this issue in a rational way with our constituents. That is why I feel the only way of preventing this thing from blowing up into a major issue between English speaking and French speaking Canadians is to have the whole question reopened by the board of broadcast governors so that all of us who are interested may give and receive information. Then, perhaps, if there is more light, there may be less heat generated. I do not think this is a subject on which we should all get up on white horses and make inflammatory speeches. There is too much wild talk about it in the city of Toronto at the present time and I do not think any of us have the necessary technical information with which to deal with it.

We all recognize the legitimate desire of the bilingual and French people in our area to have a station of some kind, but many of us are convinced that there are other technical solutions possible. If the corporation can convince us that there are no other solutions they will have a strong case, but until then the whole issue will be misinterpreted and misunderstood. Already we are getting ridiculous inflammatory documents mailed to us. Some are so ridiculous one hesitates to make them public. But they are symptomatic of what I mentioned in the beginning, and this is a misunderstanding of French Canada that exists in the minds of a lot of English Canadians. This misunderstanding is growing day by day because the voices of reason and the voices of moderation are not being heard. All that is getting through are the wild, extreme statements, and this is stirring up our people. While we have heard a lot about the rights of the French people, I want to make a plea for the rights of the English. We want to understand the problems of the French Canadians. We want to be sympathetic to their needs in our area. But I plead with the government not to let this issue sit because it will not just sit still. It will get worse and worse. More inflammatory remarks will be made and misunderstanding will continue to grow.

I hope the minister will very seriously consider whatever approaches it is proper for him to make to have the board of broadcast governors announce soon that they intend to open up the whole matter and rehear it. As a matter of fact, this suggestion was made when the initial decision was made to have some programming. At that time Carlyle Allison, I believe, made the suggestion that there might be further hearings in the event the decision for French programming was taken very much farther, and I think the answer he got at that time was that there would be if the board desired. I think this is an appropriate case for the board to reopen the matter, so that those of us who are vitally interested in it can get all the necessary information that is needed and, more importantly, so that the English and French people in Toronto will understand each other's problems, try to meet each other's needs and get to understand each other's difficulties before this thing gets blown out of all proportion.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to make a few remarks on the subject discussed by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott). In my opinion one should refrain as much as possible from delivering inflammatory speeches on this subject, especially since everybody has been hoping for a few years that some tolerance would be shown to the different ethnic groups of the country.

Allow me to quote from a report of the C.B.C. which is self-explanatory and which has been reproduced in the newspapers today. On the front page of Le Droit, under the title: "The record of station CJBC", we find this:

> The broadcasting of French programs within the transmitting zone of CJBC is in the national interest and in keeping with the mandate entrusted to the C.B.C. by parliament.

This shows that the matter has not been under consideration only for the past week. The whole principle is almost in effect at present.

The article goes on to say:

> The C.B.C. has been considering for several years the means of providing this service, as recommended, besides, by the Fowler commission in 1957.

So, that problem was studied almost six years ago by the Fowler commission, which looked into the problem of the C.B.C. and of French programs in other provinces than the province of Quebec.

It is neither intolerance nor extremism to quote those few remarks.

On page 2 of the same issue, one can read this:

> In August 1962, the C.B.C. requested from the board of broadcast governors, at a public hearing, "the authorization to have CJBC, its AM English radio station in Toronto, broadcast French programs on a full time basis."

It is not only since last week that Toronto citizens recognize the need of such a radio station.

Perhaps I could give here an example of comprehension on our part, since in Quebec city, radio station CKMI broadcasts a certain number of programs on the English network which is nearly equal to the programs broadcast by CFCM-TV on the French network. It gives the same number of broadcasts if we take into account the number of hours it is on the air, while the English people represent only 3 per cent of that population of 300,000.

According to the statistics, there are, I think, 167,000 possible listeners in the Toronto area, 63,000 of whom are French Canadians.

I do not think it is exaggerated to say that the people of Toronto will easily accept a French station. Indeed, there are as many tolerant people in Toronto as in the province of Quebec, people who accept the existence of the two major cultures. It is therefore possible to set up a station of the C.B.C.'s French network in Toronto, without going back on a decision which was taken by the B.B.G. after serious consideration.

In my opinion, the best thing to do would be to accept the decision of the C.B.C. and to ignore the extremists who are against a French station in Toronto.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, there are a few remarks I should like to make on the C.B.C. estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are on the B.B.G. at the moment. If it is the C.B.C., I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would wait.

Item agreed to.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

1. Grant in respect of the net operating amount required to discharge the responsibilities of the national broadcasting service, $78,439,000.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, as I started to say on the wrong item, the C.B.C. is the only radio outlet in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories and in order to get information to my constituents I have to use this medium of communication. There are no private radio stations there. The Broadcasting Act lays down guideposts for the making of political broadcasts over the C.B.C. Provision is made in the act for the broadcasting of communications of a political nature, whether by politicians or by newspapermen or by commentators. The routine for me and for my colleague, the member for the Northwest Territories, is to go to CBO in Ottawa and make a tape. That tape is then sent home to our constituencies and produced over the local network.

The regulations have always been such as to prohibit the production of political commentary of a partisan or controversial nature. How any politician or, indeed, any political commentator can say anything on the C.B.C. that is not controversial or of a partisan nature I do not know. I do not think it is possible. The issues of the day, the debates of the House of Commons, are all controversial. Otherwise our debates would not be debates.

On Thursday, December 12, just last week, I produced a tape at CBO at 10.45 in the morning. I was telephoned by one of the officials of the C.B.C. the following day but was not able to communicate with him again until December 17, five days later. At 4.30 p.m. I had a conversation with that official of the C.B.C. This was after I had received a letter from him dated December 17 and delivered to me by hand.

I am going to read the letter because it is important to the case I want to make, and the case I am going to make is to charge the C.B.C. with censorship of my broadcasts. One hon. member at the other end of the chamber said a moment ago it was a good thing that there should be no political interference with the C.B.C. With this I agree wholeheartedly. But conversely there should be no political interference by the C.B.C. with broadcasts which are made by commentators or members such as myself who have no other means of communicating with our constituents. The letter that was written to me on December 17 reads as follows:

> Dear Mr. Nielsen:
> I am writing you since we seem to have been unable to come together on the telephone. The matter I want to raise with you concerns the script of the report on the work of parliament which you recorded Friday last—

He is mistaken there, it was recorded on Thursday.

> —produced by Gordon Bruce, the senior public affairs producer in Ottawa and to be broadcast on the Whitehorse station CFWH.

He is mistaken there because it goes over the whole Yukon network which consists of more than simply the Whitehorse station:

> I felt it would be useful to talk to you as I think a confusion may have arisen about the purpose of the time provided over CFWH to report on the work of the house to your constituents. Perhaps I might draw to your attention the relevant parts of the C.B.C.'s manual of policies and regulations concerning political and controversial broadcasting.

"The C.B.C. is prepared, if requested by a member of parliament or of a provincial legislature, to broadcast talks by him to his constituents on corporation stations which serve an area not covered by any privately-owned radio stations, under the following conditions:

(a) The talks will be reports on the work of parliament or the legislature and will not be partisan or controversial.

The first part of that statement of policy prohibits talks from being partisan or controversial. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, how a politician can say anything concerning the business of this house that is not controversial?

Mr. Byrne: It can be done, and it is done by the C.A.B.

Mr. Nielsen: If most of these debates are not controversial, then I am mistaken as to the purpose of debate. Surely, the placing of both sides of an issue before anyone is, in itself, an indication that the matter is controversial. If I am going to place before my constituents over the C.B.C. any matters that arise in this house, surely I should be allowed to state the position that is taken by one side. It might not be the position taken by the other side, but that is the whole purpose of debate, and that is why we are here.

Mr. Byrne: Let us hear your script.

Mr. Nielsen: I will read my script in just a moment. I intend to do that to indicate the absurdity of the regulations that are laid down in this manual. I can read from Hansard as long as I wish, so I can put this speech on Hansard and then go back to the C.B.C. and read it over the air. This, I cannot do at the moment and, so far as the C.B.C. is concerned I am censored out of existence.

The second part of the rule—I have just read the first part—is as follows:

They will be given only when parliament or the provincial legislature is sitting.

I made this broadcast on December 17, in time for the tape to be sent for my broadcast over the Yukon network before this parliament adjourned. I must, in fairness, give the C.B.C. credit here. They tried to communicate with me sooner, and I tried to call back, but the official in charge had gone to Montreal and I could not communicate with him until the Monday. The net result has been that I have been prevented from reporting to my constituents by the lapse of time.

Now, paragraph (f) of the C.B.C. manual states this:

(f) The producer of the program, whether in Ottawa or at a local C.B.C. station, will be responsible for seeing that the broadcast conforms with these policies. If in his opinion it does not, he will refer the script to the office of the regional director or, in the case of northern stations, to the director of northern services in Ottawa before putting it on the air.

The hon. member for Skeena has the same problem that I do, because he reaches the northern part of his constituency by a low powered relay station that is hooked into the Yukon network. The upshot of this whole matter is simply that the producer of my talk has referred it to the supervisor of public affairs in Ottawa. He winds up his letter with this sentence:

I think this should be as soon as possible—

That is getting together for a discussion of this matter.

—since I am not anxious to hold up the broadcast any longer than we must.

In speaking to the C.B.C. official, I was informed that the broadcast was not going to be sent along to Whitehorse because, in his opinion, it was controversial and partisan. I sent along to the C.B.C. and obtained a photostatic copy of my script, and this is what I am going to read tonight. I know that many members are not going to agree with what I am going to say because it is a debatable matter. Nobody on this side agrees with the things that are said on that side, and the same situation exists between the political parties in this house. We all have different views on subjects, and therefore those subjects are controversial. How on earth can they be anything else? This is what I said in my remarks to my constituents:

Once again, I am reporting to you from Ottawa on the activities of the House of Commons and my work on behalf of Yukoners everywhere. Much has happened since you last heard from me and my activities on your behalf have indeed been varied.

I am sure that you have all heard a good deal lately, by way of radio broadcasts, and that which you have read in your newspapers, a good deal about the operation of the House of Commons. There are some who have said that there has been obstruction of the government's legislative program and there are others who have said that the house is operating inefficiently, due to the slow speed with which various legislative measures are passed through parliament. I do not believe this since I believe debate to be a very necessary instrument for the preservation of our democracy. Without full debate, and without free debate, we would quickly become a government by dictatorship.

I am not so sure we have not, but I did not say anything about that.

Anyone who is close to the activities of the House of Commons would agree with that, and I need not leave my opinion unsupported. I believe the best authority that I could quote as to the truth of my own beliefs in this regard would be Mr. Pickersgill. Mr. Pickersgill, of course, is a Liberal member of the government, and is the Secretary of State in the cabinet. He was very active in debates when he was in opposition, and he has said as recently as last November 29 precisely what I have stated concerning freedom of debate. In Hansard, on page 5268 for November 29, 1963, Mr. Pickersgill said this:

"So far as I am concerned, no one in the government has made any such allegation. Certainly, I have not, and I want to make that very clear. I have not made any such allegation at any time about the opposition. I think there has been a reasonable measure of co-operation."

And again, Mr. Pickersgill, on the same page of Hansard for November 29, said this:

"Perphaps the honourable gentleman will remember—and here perhaps I am breaking the rules myself by referring to the debate on redistribution the other day—that I am one of those who think there ought to be debate in parliament, and I do not regard debate as obstruction. I have not said and I have not thought that, taken by and large in this session of parliament, particularly since we met in September, there has been anything I would be inclined to describe as obstruction."

Even in Whitehorse, there have been references —and I can recall them appearing in one particular newspaper published in Whitehorse—that I have been rising to my feet too often in parliament. The particular newspaper if it can be called such to which I refer has certainly not been one of my ardent supporters and it seems rather puzzling to me that the editor of that newspaper would not want in fairness to his readers to publish statements such as that which I have just quoted by Mr. Pickersgill—not only supporting full and free debate in the House of Commons but also, frankly stating that there has been no obstruction by the opposition during this session.

I have also been criticized recently for saying too much in the House of Commons—for rising to my feet too often. Well, it seems to me that I would not be discharging my responsibilities to the people of the Yukon as their elected member of parliament, if I did not just as often as I possibly could rise and state the views of Yukoners, not only on those matters affecting our life in the Yukon, but also, on all those matters which affect our lives as Canadians generally. I do not believe that the people of the Yukon want a silent Sam sitting in parliament, saying nothing—doing nothing. It is time that the voice of the Yukon is heard and this the view that I have adopted ever since being elected your member in 1957. I have spoken just as often as I could and it is my intention to continue to express the views of the people of the Yukon with force and with frequency. There is, of course, the old adage that "the squeaking wheel gets the oil".

The most recent speech of any length which I have made in the house concerned the announcement by the Minister of National Defence with regard to the cut-backs being made in defence spending. I expressed views on the policy of the government with regard to national defence generally, and with regard to the cut-backs as they affect the Yukon specifically. I refer, of course, to the proposed changeover of the responsibility for the maintenance of the Alaska highway from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Public Works. I have stated before and I say again that, in the long run, I believe that this changeover will result in not only a more stable economy for the Yukon, but in time will result in the enlargement of our economy and in the growth of new businesses, which will grow up in order to serve the many requirements that the Department of Public Works will demand. D.P.W. will not be operating like the army has in the past in the maintenance operation with all sorts of various branches and divisions supporting the main task of highway maintenance, such branches and divisions being staffed and operated by the army. D.P.W. will be farming out many phases of the maintenance operation, thus causing the growth of new industries and businesses in the Yukon. This is a good thing but it will take time. The initial economic shock of losing the army pay roll will have to be absorbed, and there is no doubt in my mind that this can be done, even though certain hardships will be experienced until D.P.W. has the opportunity of infusing new capital into the economy of the Yukon by farming out their various requirements for goods and services in the maintenance operation.

Another matter to which I referred was the all weather maintenance of the Haines road which you know is to be done on an experimental basis this winter. I have said before and I do so again that it would be my hope that the experiment proves to be economic and that the feasibility of continuous all weather maintenance will become a reality. I am, however, disappointed that Canadian dollars are being paid to the government of Alaska for the maintenance of a Canadian road by the use of the United States equipment and labour. I have felt that Canadian dollars would more properly be spent in relieving the chronically heavy Canadian unemployment and in utilizing Canadian equipment. The argument is that it would cost more if we were to direct our efforts to this end, but surely it would be better to spend a few thousand dollars extra if we can put more Canadians to work, using Canadian equipment. However, the maintenance is on an experimental basis for this winter only and perhaps the government will have a change of heart and policy by using Canadian labour and equipment for next winter's operations. Certainly, that is what I am working toward and I have no fear that I will eventually be successful.

I have been extremely active in two committees in the House of Commons. These are the standing committees on privileges and elections, and on mines, forests and waters. The standing committee on privileges and elections is now considering amendments to the Canada Elections Act and the Canadian forces voting regulations. There have been several major changes which will be recommended by the committee to the House of Commons and I expect there will be full debate on all of these changes. The mines, forests and waters committee is now considering the two bills of the House of Commons which proposed the division of the Northwest Territories into two separate units. The western portion of the division would be called the MacKenzie territory and the eastern portion would be called the Nunassiaq territory. The purpose is stated to be that each of the territories would advance more rapidly toward self-government and it would improve administration of the Northwest Territories. These committees have not yet completed their work, but I expect they will do before the session ends.

There has been more interesting debate in the house in connection with patronage. Just yesterday it was suggested by Mr. Fisher, a member of the New Democratic party, that the House of Commons should refer the whole matter of the Post Office Department patronage to the committee on privileges, for the purpose of investigating the many, many charges that have been laid since the new Postmaster General took over—that patronage is running wild in his department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear hon. members say oh, oh, but I can find many worse expressions regarding this patronage on Hansard than any I made here in this talk of mine.

There appears to be every reason to believe that patronage is rampant in the Post Office Department since the new government took office.

Mr. Knowles: I would like to ask the hon. member this question. When he reads this speech over the radio on the basis of reading it out of Hansard, will he read all the interjections as well?

Mr. Nielsen: I could do this, because I am sure that the C.B.C. would not censor any omissions.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen:

Another area in which patronage appears to be appearing once again is in the activities of the Department of Public Works.

This comes as a surprise to the minister because I did not speak on his estimates. I did not because I wanted to save the time of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not speak on the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Survey, or on the estimates of every other department active in the north because I wanted to save time; but this is something that cannot be allowed to go unchallenged. I agree with the principle that there should be no political interference with the C.B.C., but the reverse holds true as well. There should be no C.B.C. interference on commentaries made by myself or other hon. members of the house.

Mr. Deschatelets: Go on with your bedtime story.

Mr. Nielsen: I will continue reading my bedtime story to the Minister of Public Works.

I had a question placed on the order paper which has recently been answered showing that since April 8, 1963, there have been 131 contracts let by the Department of Public Works concerning goods and services supplied for the government in the Yukon. Of these 131 contracts, 103 were awarded without public tender call. There may be reason for awarding one or two contracts involving smaller amounts for goods and services without calling for public tender but to award 103 out of 131 without public tender call seems to me to be beyond reason. Of these 103 contracts which were awarded without calling for public tenders, 69 of the contracts involve goods and services which were supplied by Yukon firms. Thrity three of these contracts involving well over $100,000 were awarded without public tender call to firms and individuals outside of the Yukon territory for goods and services to be supplied inside the Yukon territory. My position is this, that if public tenders were called for these contracts, the firms and individuals in the Yukon who could have supplied these goods and services would have at least had the opportunity to a competitive bid with those outside firms. My position is still that I believe this sort of precedure to be wrong and it should be rectified and I really don't care whether it went on under the last government or the previous government 20 years ago, or this government—the system is wrong and it should be rectified, and I will continue to work to that end.

It looks like this session of parliament will wind up its activities some time around the 20th of December. If the legislation has been completed by that time, the Prime Minister has said that there will be approximately a month's holiday but if the legislative program is not completed, the Prime Minister has said that it is his intention to call parliament back on December 27 to carry on until the work is completed. I think this is a proper approach and that since the job is full time, there can be no question about paying attention to completing the work before thinking of any holidays. It will result in my not being home for Christmas and also, perhaps, New Year's. It is my hope, however, that I will be able to get home at least for New Year's and for the first week or two in January to speak with as many Yukoners as I can. If I do not have the opportunity of personally wishing you a happy holiday season, I do so now, with my very best and sincere wishes for a warm and happy Christmas for all, and for a successful and prosperous new year.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

My point to the Secretary of State is how absurd it is, now that that speech is on Hansard, I can give it; but I was censored out of this speech by C.B.C. officials who put their own interpretation on these words as being partisan and controversial.

Mr. Nesbitt: They put their own interpretation on practically everything.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. gentleman let me ask him a question. Now that he has read it to us, would he give it?

Mr. Nielsen: I am prohibited from doing it now because parliament is going to pack up tonight, and the ruddy regulations say that I cannot make a speech on the radio after parliament packs up. I can only communicate with my constituents while parliament is sitting. I am not imputing any motive to the C.B.C. officials on this delay. I would not think of such a thing, but I remember how indignant the Secretary of State was a year or two ago when the Preview Commentary came off and he alleged political interference because of the discontinuance of that program. Let him now be just as indignant when the C.B.C. is preventing me from conveying fair comment on the debates in this house to my constituents. That is all that can be said about it. I think it is fair comment. The Secretary of State does not. In fact all the members sitting over there do not think that what is said on this side of the house is fair comment, but by George, when the day comes that we are prevented from expressing our views on debates over the radio, which is the only means for me to reach my constituents in the north, then we have come to a sorry pass indeed in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder would the hon. gentleman let me make a very brief comment on what he has said. This is of course a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the C.B.C. and I did not know anything about it until I heard a rumour the day before yesterday that the hon. gentleman was going to raise this matter in debate. I then consulted the regulations of the C.B.C. and was rather surprised to discover something I had not known, and which would have been quite useful to me to have known when I was in opposition, namely that the C.B.C. was willing in these areas where there were no private stations to let members of parliament broadcast to their constituents. I could have used that in Gander and Grand Falls myself if I had known, but the hon. gentleman seems to be more alert and better informed than I was, and for that I give him full credit.

I am merely speaking here as another member of parliament, because I have no responsibility in this matter, when I say I think it is rather an invidious thing for an organization like the C.B.C. to attempt to censor the speeches of politicians or anybody else. They have an editorial function, of course. They have the responsibility under the laws of libel, and certain other laws, to scrutinize in advance what is read, and to make certain something obscene or illegal is not broadcast. I am not one of these people who are much worried about partisan speeches, even when made by my opponents. But I thought there was one point raised by the hon. member which made a great deal of sense. Perhaps the hon. member quoted me—I am not quite sure—

Mr. Nielsen: I did.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but he said something about "full debate and without free debate". It does seem to me that perhaps the board of broadcast governors should take a look at the regulations of the C.B.C. and give consideration to these remote areas where the private stations do not exist, where the C.B.C. is the only outlet and where therefore the service of broadcasting reports from parliament hill by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, which is given to most of the rest of us, does not exist. I certainly would not want to see hon. members deprived of that privilege. I say that in these remote areas there should be an opportunity for the people to hear full and free debate. If only the elected member is to be heard, it does seem to me these people do not have much opportunity to get that full and free debate of which the hon. gentleman himself approves so much.

Perhaps the board of broadcast governors would look at this matter and see whether some arrangement could be made whereby various political views could be expressed in the area during the period of a session of parliament. I think that might be helpful. I am told that the C.A.B. are thinking of doing that. In the province in which I was elected, all the members are Liberal. I think it would be a good thing if we had some Conservative broadcasting in that area, because up to now—to put the matter on a low political plane—they have not made much impression. In Saskatchewan nobody is elected but supporters of the Leader of the Opposition. I think it would be a really good idea to have a little fresh air injected into that province.

I think the hon. gentleman may have done us all a service by raising this matter, and perhaps the board of broadcast governors, which under the Broadcasting Act has the jurisdiction, would look at these regulations and see that these reports from parliament hill give more than one point of view in all parts of Canada, including the Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a brief word here. The board of broadcast governors has made provision for the situation described by the Secretary of State. I read from the most up to date copy I have of the "Political and Controversional Broadcasting Policies" of the board of broadcast governors issued by the authority of the board and as revised to March 1, 1960. On page 3 they say, amongst other things:

> The right to answer is inherent in the democratic doctrine of free speech.

I say, give it, for heaven's sake. Let the Liberal party in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories get sufficiently organized so they can answer. As the Secretary of State said, it would be like a breath of fresh air to have the other side of the story put before the people. I would ask the Secretary of State, when he is asking the board of broadcast governors and the C.B.C. to take this matter into consideration, to have them look at page 3 of this document, where they set out in such pious terms:

> The board does not exercise censorship.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the treatment accorded to me, in good faith by the official concerned with it, is in effect censorship because I was prevented from making that broadcast to my constituents. Then this document says:

> It does not restrict the nature of material to be broadcast, except to see that such material conforms with its printed regulations.

How bureaucratic can regulations and interpretations get? Then it says:

> The policy of the board, with regard to controversial broadcasting, is based on the following principles:

1. The air belongs to the people, who are entitled to hear the principal points of view on all questions of importance.

The points I mentioned in my speech were certainly of importance, not only nationally but locally. Then we read this:

2. The air must not fall under the control of any individual or groups influenced by reason of their wealth or special position.

Not even the C.B.C. or their directorship. The third one I have already read:

The right to answer is inherent in the democratic doctrine of free speech.

Then:

4. Freedom of speech and the full interchange of opinion are among the principal safeguards of free institutions.

It seems to me that adopting the course which they did adopt, with all due respect to the bona fides of their position, was wrong. They should have allowed an answer to be made, if they thought it was controversial, but they should certainly not have prevented me from communicating, as I wished to do, with my constituents. The absurdity is apparent now. I could simply read this Hansard, if the session were continuing; but I cannot now because this session has almost finished. If there were still time I could go over there tomorrow, read the speech right out of Hansard and this would be within the law.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if I may make a suggestion to the hon. member for Yukon, it is this. This session will probably last for another couple of hours. Perhaps he could arrange for the C.B.C. to get over there quickly and have it recorded right away.

Mr. Nielsen: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, the mails to the Yukon are not that quick.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the suggestions made by the Secretary of State are really accepted already in principle.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are, for national broadcasts.

Mr. Douglas: There are provincial affairs broadcasts, where the various parties are given time according to a formula to discuss provincial affairs. There is also The Nation's Business, in which program members elected to the federal parliament may discuss federal matters. It seems to me that the same principle could be applied equally to areas such as the Yukon and Skeena, and those remote places where the C.B.C. is the only means of reaching the public. In those areas time could be allocated under the same type of formula as is used for provincial affairs and The Nation's Business.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly my view.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I rise to claim the establishment, as soon as possible by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, of a French television station in the city of Quebec. It is, I believe, an imperative need, not to say an obviously urgent need.

The city of Quebec is pre-eminently the French city in Canada; it is the capital of the province of Quebec and, I believe, it would be most appropriate that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation establish in that city a French television station.

In the city of Quebec, we have now two television stations, that is CKMI and CFCM, one of English language and the other of French language, evidently controlled and owned by private enterprise.

That is why I am of the opinion it is inconceivable to see the city of Quebec, the capital of the province of Quebec, not endowed with a station of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I remember that a few years ago, in this house, one of the most severe critics of the C.B.C. was none other than the former Conservative member for Roberval, Mr. Tremblay, who made the headlines lately in the Quebec newspapers for having said that the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism was a trap set for the French Canadians. It is this same Mr. Tremblay, the former Conservative member for Roberval, who says "no" to confederation.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether those remarks tally with those of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) or the views of the Conservative party, but I say this without bitterness, just to tease.

If we had a public French language television station in Quebec city, it seems to me that we could help promote unity and solidarity between all Canadians, and prevent people like Mr. Tremblay from making unfair, shocking and unfortunate remarks.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding I stress the immediate need for a French language television station in the city of Quebec.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told that this station is expected to be opened in September of 1964.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman and members of the House of Commons, I regret very, very much having to be here tonight and speaking on the 21st day of December. I realize that a modified form of closure is being applied and I am quite prepared to admit it. I have been a member of this house since a year ago last September. I have been anxious to speak on C.B.C. matters during that entire time, but not once has there been an opportunity to express an opinion on the operation of the C.B.C., and I have been on the government side since April 22.

On Friday, December 13, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam rose in his place and quite correctly asked that a mistake in a news broadcast on the C.B.C. be corrected. He was given this answer by the spokesman in this house for the C.B.C., as reported at page 5802 of Hansard:

> If the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation made a mistake, that could be referred to in debate by any hon. member at any time—

I want to make the flat-footed statement in this committee that there has not been an opportunity to debate the C.B.C. since I entered this house in September of last year. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was quite correct in what he was doing. He was simply trying to make a correction to a wrong news report. I have been associated with the news business long enough to know a wrong report when I see it; and for an accusation to be made that someone is trying to discipline or trying to censor the C.B.C. because an attempt is made to try and correct a mistake is beneath the dignity of all hon. members of this house. I resent the answer the hon. member received, and I wish to say so now.

My reason for rising to speak on the estimates of the C.B.C. is to inquire what we have hold of here. Is it a white elephant which we have to feed, or a cancer which feeds on us? Hon. members can take whichever simile they wish, because either is true. We are being asked here to vote the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the year 1963-64 the sum of $87,644,900. In the fiscal year 1959-60, which was four years ago, the estimates of the C.B.C. amounted to $69,641,975. In four years there has been an increase of $18,002,925, or 25.85 per cent. The expenses of the C.B.C. for which this government is responsible are up 25 per cent in four years, and unless somebody stops them the end is not yet.

I make the statement that I do not believe even the C.B.C. knows what is going on in the field of broadcasting. I happen to be the hon. member for York-Humber and I have an able Liberal colleague in the hon. member for York West, whom you all know as Mr. Leonard Kelly. We happen to be the only two members in the house who have what is generally known as "pay T.V." in our ridings in Toronto or, as it should be correctly called, "theatre in the home". Is "Red" Kelly or this hon. member ever asked for suggestions with regard to television? What do we know about television? We have about 5,000 theatres in the homes scattered about our ridings, and we are conceited enough to think that we do know a little about it. I should like to point out that I brought into Canada for the first time closed circuit television sporting events. I was promotion manager for the Toronto daily Star, and six years ago, maybe seven, I brought into Toronto at Loew's Uptown theatre closed circuit television of the world heavyweight boxing championship. I remember our concern as to whether or not it would take. But I learned then that closed circuit television in theatres was bound to be a success. For one thing, patrons do not have to go to the place where the game is being played or the sporting event takes place. They do not have parking troubles, and after the event is over, whether the event be in New York, Boston, Winnipeg or Vancouver, they are in their home town and can get home that same night.

I brought closed circuit theatre television to Toronto twice. The first time was the world championship heavyweight boxing match at Loew's Uptown theatre, on which occasion they had to call out the police to keep the people away from the doors. Seats sold at $6 each and there were a thousand men outside trying to get in. A year later another world's heavyweight championship was held, and we put it on closed circuit television at two theatres, Loew's Uptown and Loew's Downtown.

If anyone tries to criticize the $87 million expenditure of the C.B.C., heavens above, the corporation is defended like the sacred cows of India. We are told that we are interfering with the freedom of the press, with freedom of expression. We are told not to criticize the C.B.C. All my life I have been mixed up in this business of the freedom of the press. Freedom of the press consists of allowing a person to express his opinion on any matter of the day, provided the laws of libel and slander are not breached. But I submit this is not licence to go off to the sands of Algiers and make a film on the sand tracks in Algiers, or to go off to Patagonia to study the love habits of mice in the long grass. Is there no limit to the extent to which the C.B.C. send these safaris around the world, so they can come back to show us pictures which you can buy from any motion picture production house at one-tenth the cost? There has to be some discipline shown on these expenditures.

We have never been given an opportunity to discuss the C.B.C. estimates during the 20 months I have been in the house. I wonder how many members in the committee or people in the country realize that for 30 years the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railways have been carrying sound to the 195 radio stations throughout Canada, but lost the contract to the Bell Telephone Company of Canada in the summer of 1961? It will interest hon. members to know that in Newfoundland the Canadian National Railways is the only medium by which sound can be provided to radio stations. In the Yukon and in the area from Grande Prairie to Whitehorse and the north the C.N.R. have the only lines available for the carriage of radio sound to the station connections up there.

Hon. members will be interested to learn I am certain that this is the first time this matter has been dragged out into the open, because you simply must not talk about the C.B.C. as it involves freedom of the press. In 1962 the contract ran out and bids were called for from the combined railways who had been providing this service, as I say, for 30 years. They were advised on August 18, 1961 that the railway contract would not be renewed. It had been picked up by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. The two railway companies were somewhat surprised at this, and who can blame them? Here was the C.B.C., a government crown corporation, giving a contract to a private organization, although the Canadian National Railways is supposed to be government-owned. The Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National inquired into the matter and found that the bid of the Bell Telephone Company was approximately 25 per cent lower than they had been able to bid. All they had was their 30 years experience. Is the management of the Canadian National Railways and the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway so inefficient that they do not know their costs after 30 years experience? The Bell Telephone put in a tender which was 25 per cent lower than the tender of the railway companies.

I have a letter here under date August 30, 1961. You know, Mr. Chairman, how long it took me to get this letter from the government files. I tried to get it a year ago, but I was, shall I say, smiled upon and snickered at. I remember Mr. Halpenny, the secretary of state at the time, thinking it a great joke. The week before Christmas he asked me whether I would mind waiting a week so he could produce the letter, and I was so dumb he thought, I did not realize Christmas was the next week and I said that I had no objection. There was loud laughter in the house. This fall I tried to get the paper, and I got it last week. I knew what was in it before I got it, but I want to read the official government record. The letter was addressed to the Hon. Leon Balcer, Q.C., M.P., who was minister of transport, and it was signed by Mr. R. A. Emerson, for the chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and by Donald Gordon, chairman and president of Canadian National Railways. I want to read two paragraphs. The writers of the letters were, of course, upset at losing this contract to the Bell, and they write:

> Assuming that it is in the national interest to maintain competition in the communications industry, we think you will agree that such competition cannot be preserved if one group is permitted to quote depressed rates in the competitive situation and to obtain recompense through higher rates for other services.
> Public long distance telephone rates in Canada are 50 per cent or more above comparable rates in the United States which are regulated by the federal communications commission.

Hon. members will be interested to note that this was the answer which was received from Mr. Balcer:

> I have read the letter dated August 30 which you sent me jointly with the president of the Canadian National Railway dealing with the subject of transcontinental communications.
> I will be glad to see that the communication is brought to the attention of the appropriate officials in the department.
> I am sending a similar letter to the president of the C.N.R.
> Yours very truly,
> Leon Balcer.
> This is a carbon copy of the letter to Mr. Crump.

That was on September 8, 1961, and this is December 21, 1963. That is the last that the presidents of the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. heard about the situation where an organization comes in and, in a competitive situation, quotes a rate knowing it can recoup its losses on long distance or local calls. But the contract had been awarded to the Bell company. When they tendered on the prime contract they had to service Newfoundland and the Yukon—and there was only one organization which could do both, or either, and that was the C.N.R. Only after it was announced that the C.N.R. and C.P.R. would not have the contracts for the radio stations did the Bell Telephone Company go to the C.N.R. and ask them how much they would want for those territorial services. What kind of a situation is that, when the tenderer puts in a figure and has not even spoken to the subcontractors? Another thing: the Bell Telephone Company did not pay the C.N.R. for three months, but after I put my question on the order paper for the production of this letter last fall the Bell Telephone Company paid the C.N.R. within 72 hours. I think it was only a coincidence; I would not like to think I could influence a big organization like that. But the C.N.R. had been waiting for payment for three months and I put a question on the order paper and they got paid in three days. I would point out that the charges of the Bell Telephone Company are considered right now in our cost of living index month by month, but we do not consider in the consumer index the cost of servicing 95 radio stations.

The entire television and radio world at the present time is in a ferment, and for any man to estimate what is likely to happen in the next few years without realizing that cable television and theatre television are here to stay is ridiculous. In the ridings of York-Humber and West York where we have theatre in the home we are fortunate, because we can pick up the away games of the Toronto Maple Leafs. You have to pay to have the picture come on, but you can watch the games in your own home. You pay $1.50 or $2, and four or five men get together and pay 50 cents each and they see the game.

Then we have cable television. My experience of that has been that up at Penetanguishene and Midland, where I have a summer home since 1938 it has been in operation for many years. In Guelph I have seen it in operation in the homes of friends. It gives a marvellously clear picture. I came down here last May and attended the annual meeting of the community antenna television association of Canada in the Chateau Laurier to try to pick up a few indications of the future of this marvellous entertainment possibility. Later, on June 4, I spent an entire day in Christ Church hall listening to the arguments on cable television. I think I was the only member of parliament who sat there from the opening of the day to the close of the discussions. There was an argument against cable television put forward in the hall and the sum and substance of it was that when people have cable television in their homes they are not looking at local television stations. The local television stations contend that it is not right for viewers to have freedom of choice of this kind; they should be content to take what is offered by the local stations.

A year ago the hon. member for Port Arthur placed a question on the order paper. I have a return here dated October 31, 1962. The hon. member was a little exercised at the time because football games were being shown in Port Arthur and the lakehead by cable T.V. while others with television sets were unable to get these programs for free. I suppose some of his constituents were worrying the life out of the hon. member for Port Arthur, wanting to know why the fellow who paid for his television on the cable system was able to see these football games. So he asked a question on this score. I made some inquiries with the people who own Lakehead Videon and they advised me that they did not have any intention of putting the games on Lakehead Videon, but the C.T.V. people were broadcasting these football games, sending them east and west. Since there was no outlet in Port Arthur or Fort William the manager of Lakehead Videon was smart; he consulted his principals and said: That game is going over my head; let us put it on cable T.V. in Port Arthur and Fort William and please the fans. The principals of the outfit said: That is okeydokey. And this Lakehead Videon concern pulled the game out of the air and the people who were paying $4.50 a month got what they were paying for. But the people who were not getting it for free were complaining to high heaven.

This system is bringing important hockey games to Toronto which are not available on free television broadcasts. In addition, theatre in the home is carrying these games in York-Humber and West York. We also have these games on closed circuit system in Toronto. It started in one theatre and developed a great following. That theatre has 1,200 seats and all the seats were sold out. So popular are these games that they are now being played before audiences in 11 different theatres including one in St. Catharines, one in Hamilton and one in Oshawa and the audiences are terrific. I mention this question of closed circuit games because, throughout Canada, there are remarks made by team owners who point out that free television is not going to be with the Canadian general public long. Mr. Stafford Smythe has made statements in the recent past that there will be no Saturday night television of the hockey games in Canada much longer. What a hue and cry there has been about that. One of our most childish radio commentators—I do not want to refer to him by name; I used to be associated with that paper—says: You can't do this to us. It is astonishing to me that the C.B.C. should make no effort to point out that these sporting functions are being picked up on the cheap, and that this situation is not going to last much longer.

I wonder how many directors of the C.B.C. are aware of a decision which was handed down in the British high court in the case of Eastham v. Newcastle United Football Club, Ltd. et al. Of course, now that I have raised this matter they will no doubt say they knew all about it and are making a study of the situation. This man Eastham is a world beating inside forward in a team in the British soccer league and he is a player who incurred the wrath of his management. He was an outstanding player on his soccer team and I guess the management did not like the way he parted his hair or, as Scott Young says in an article, maybe he was not saluting the coach and backchecking at the same time. They did not play him and this soccer player

Mr. Eastham did not like it because he was sitting on the bench, and under the regulations of the soccer league he could not talk to another soccer club.

There is no combine in the Canadian hockey world, I would have you know. There is no combine; there is no trust. I say to you there is only an agreement. But in England just recently this soccer player was not allowed to play for Newcastle United. He just sat on the bench because he was held under what is called the retention clause. Other clubs were willing to pay him more money to play for them since Newcastle was not using him, but Newcastle said: You are our property, do as you are told, sit on the bench.

So Mr. Eastham who, thank God, has a little more intelligence than his predecessors in the soccer world, decided to go to court. He took the Newcastle United Football Club Limited into court on the ground that he was being held in restraint of trade and could not offer his abilities to other teams. On July 4 Mr. Justice Wilberforce of the chancery division held that the action of the soccer club with regard to this player was in restraint of trade and that the player was entitled to make whatever deal he could with owners of other clubs, wherever he might wish to go.

There is another interesting point about the decision of Mr. Justice Wilberforce and hon. members will be interested in this. I am going to refer to page 144 of The All England Law Reports which I got out of the parliamentary library, it having been received by the library on September 5, 1963. From page 144 I read the following:

> The maximum weekly wage for a full time player is fixed at £20 during a playing season and £17 during the off season—and I repeat that I refer to the date of the writ—and there are fixed bonuses for television—

Hockey players, professional football players, professional baseball players, the jockeys who ride in the big races, and professional golfers are in a state of ferment at the present time. The most popular feature on television in the United States, Canada and Great Britain is sporting events but the players are not being recompensed a cent for performing on all the television screens throughout the country. We know that tremendous sums are paid to clubs in order that games may be televised, but this money does not seep down to the players.

The judgment of Mr. Justice Wilberforce in the British chancery division is important because I can assure hon. members that legal action is going to be taken in Canada and the United States in the not distant future by these unorganized professional athletes in hockey, baseball, football and golf and by the jockeys who ride the horses.

[Mr. Cowan.]

Mr. Nowlan: Marbles.

Mr. Cowan: They maintain they are entitled to payment for their service and the entertainment they provide in these various sporting events. There is a very interesting thing in the estimates of the Secretary of State. On pages 386 and 387 there is a vote, "copyright and industrial designs division including a contribution to the international office for the protection of literary and artistic works". Here we are making arrangements to pay for literary and artistic works that may be reproduced. We can all remember how people howled when ASCAP came into being and began to demand that radio stations should pay every time they played a record. You will remember how the radio stations raised particular Ned on that score, and said they had bought the record and therefore they could play it. The musicians maintained that the playing of the record robbed them of work because people were using records when they should have hired live musicians. ASCAP was formed, and since then a certain percentage of money is paid by radio stations and anybody else using records for public entertainment into a fund of the musicians protective union.

We have copyright laws to protect writers, we have ASCAP to protect musicians. I say that the professional athletes are entertaining and are entitled to the same protection. They are demanding that the games in which they play shall go on closed circuit television either to homes or to theatres.

It is all right to sit back and say that the world series turns a tremendous sum of money into the pension fund of the players. Here is this morning's Globe and Mail and on the front page we can read about the big football game to be played in Chicago on December 29 between the Chicago Bears and the New York Giants. In the second paragraph there is this statement:

> Pete Rozelle, N.F.L. commissioner, said yesterday the reasons for this included the smaller capacity of Wrigley field compared with Yankee stadium and the fact there will be a $450,000 slice from T.V.-radio receipts earmarked for the player pension fund—

Hon. members may sit back and say that $450,000 for the player pension fund is tremendous, but the players are not satisfied. They know that if there is closed circuit television throughout the United States and parts of Canada they will get more money for the players' pension fund by that means than they will ever get from the free television broadcasting of sporting events. I say that the C.B.C. should be inquiring into the remuneration of these players who are appearing on our television screens. A year ago I asked the government of the day how much money they were going to pay the Grey cup players, because they ordered the players to perform on the C.B.C. network. I got a couple of very knowing smiles, the inference being that I was an ignorant boy who was new in the house, and I was given the answer that this was something I should take up with the C.B.C. I did not have time to take up the matter with the C.B.C. and I asked the question the second time. The C.B.C. had been ordered to broadcast the Grey cup game across the nation. The players in that game were going to entertain the millions of Canadians who look at the C.B.C. network stations, but the players were not getting any extra money from the C.B.C. for entertaining these millions of people.

These professional players are not dumb. We have a very good example of how smart they are in one who sits right in this house. Nobody can question his intelligence or mental capacity.

I have said before that if you start to speak about freedom of expression on the C.B.C. we are told, as was done to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that there can be no censorship, no discipline, not even when they make mistakes. This sacred cow or white elephant has got to be tethered and brought to time. I say to you that the O'Leary report is mixed up in this whole C.B.C. matter. Here we have $87 million being sought for the C.B.C. and questions are being asked: "What has happened to the O'Leary report?"

What about the O'Leary report? What are you going to do for our suffering magazines? I tell you that the magazines and newspapers are suffering because of the millions of dollars in advertising revenue that are being drained away from them by radio and television. There is talk about United States magazines such as Reader's Digest and Time, as though they were wrecking the Canadian publishing business. It is not Reader's Digest and Time that are wrecking the Canadian publishing business. It is the radio and television operations of the C.B.C. with its government subsidy of $87,644,900. The advertising rates that are set by an organization with a government subsidy of $87 million bear no relation to cost. Private television stations have to quote rates that bear some semblance to those quoted by the C.B.C. Newspapers and magazines in Canada have to quote rates that have to compete with the subsidized rates of the C.B.C. and the countervailing rates of private television. I can tell you the reason why our newspapers and magazines are in distress. It is because of the $87,644,900 that is being voted to the C.B.C. They should be out of the business.

The Chairman: Order. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has given us a great discourse about soccer players in England and marbles in Canada. We want him to know how much we appreciate it, because we want to hear from him what he thinks about the C.B.C. making CJBC a French station.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I hoped there would be a disposition to give the hon. member more time because he has not taken much time during the session.

Mr. Churchill: We want him to continue.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I could just indicate, in relation to that latter remark by the Secretary of State, that we do not want to hear any more nonsense from him when other people speak in debates.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was willing to give the floor to the hon. member for York-Humber if we could get unanimous consent. However, I understood there was some objection from the group on my left.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not hear any objection from anyone.

Mr. Cowan: I wish to thank hon. members of the committee for their indulgence. I understand their interest in what I am saying and it indicates to me they would like to have heard some of these facts during the past eight months that this house has been in session. However, no opportunity was given to discuss C.B.C. matters. This is now December 21, and everybody wants to go home for Christmas. There are a few of us left here, enough to make a quorum, but we want to go home for Christmas too, the time at which we celebrate the birth of Christ. How many of you realize that three days after the birth of Christ, in some churches they celebrate the slaughter of the innocents? I might tell you that here we are being asked to vote $87,644,900, which certainly represents the slaughter of innocent taxpayers.

These taxpayers would not need to be subjected to this cost whatever, if the C.B.C. were out of the network business. They should be providing programs which could be leased to private firms for television stations, for cable television or for use in theatre organizations. In speaking on C.B.C. matters,

I make the statement that there should be an investigation of that organization to let them realize that the people who are paying the money have the right to call the tune, particularly in view of the situation which now exists where television sports spectaculars are going into theatres and such places by means of closed circuits.

I should like to find out a few things about this system. The hon. gentleman who used to report for the C.B.C. is in the house. I recall when he was appointed to that responsible position, and he advised that he did not own a television set. I thought that showed the good sense of the hon. member. I rather agree with the gentleman in the United States who referred to the wasteland of television. He wants to know my opinion about the conversion of the radio station in Toronto on October 1 next year to another language. I thought this was rather generally known, but I should like to say to you, sir, that I consider the C.B.C. a cancer on the body politic of Canada. Some of the work they are doing in Toronto right now is just another cell on that cancerous growth. We have to stop it soon, and we should stop it right now. There should be a rigid investigation of the C.B.C. I do not believe the minister who reports for the C.B.C. in this house should stand up and say:

> I do not think that anyone in this house of any party would seriously argue that there should be allowed to take place any development that it is within the power of this parliament to control or to legislate about, which would indirectly undermine what has over a period of 40 years—indeed ever since the beginning of broadcasting, or licensed broadcasting, assumed any real importance in our community life—been regarded as a matter of national importance, a matter perhaps affecting the very existence of our country as a separate entity.

An hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Cowan: I am quoting the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, as reported on page 5279 of Hansard for November 29, 1963. I might point out that no reference is made there to the newspapers and magazines that have gone out of business in the last 30 years as a result of radio and television taking the advertising from them. It was the newspapers and magazines that built this nation and provided the cohesion that there is today. Nobody worried about the newspapers. We had the freedom of the press, and we paid the bills. However, the C.B.C. has the freedom of the press and we pay the bills. There is a hell of a big difference between having freedom of the press and paying your own bills and having freedom of the press and having someone else pay your bills. The action taken in Toronto within the last few days is just another indication of the rotten cancer that is on this body politic of Canada, and the sooner it is investigated right to the bottom, the better.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, taking a look at the clock and the calendar I find that there is not too much time allowed for a discussion of these particular estimates tonight. I should like, first of all, to extend my sympathy to the hon. member for York-Humber because the actions of the Secretary of State, as house leader, have denied him the privilege of dealing with this matter before today.

I believe that the parliament of Canada gave the C.B.C. a great responsibility when that organization was established in the first instance. During the past several years, I believe C.B.C. programming has become a monstrosity, threatening the moral and cultural fibre of this nation. The influence of the United States has left its mark on the C.B.C., and it is no secret that the present management of the C.B.C. has succumbed to that influence. The result has been to accelerate the destruction of Canadian culture and values as separate and identifiable elements in world civilization. The C.B.C. is, in great measure, responsible for the relaxation which denies any responsibility to its original purposes and objectives. I believe the time has come when a real shakeup in the C.B.C. is essential, if we are to salvage anything of value to Canadian institutions and to Canadian culture.

I do not intend to utilize this opportunity tonight to document the degradation and the accompanying dangers that the present trend will undoubtedly visit upon our nation. However, I want to read a letter, which is one of many I have received from my constituents, which indicates something of what I hear as I am going across this country from time to time. The letter reads:

> Dear Sir:
> This is a protest against the C.B.C. plays that have been presented on television these past two years. Some are nothing but unadulterated filth and a direct waste of taxpayers money. As a mother I refuse to let any such media into our home, and find that anyone I have spoken to feels precisely the same.
> Hoping you will exert whatever influence is necessary to stop this waste.

I ask the management and staff of the C.B.C. to take a look at letters of that type and then take a look at the kind of programming they have developed for the C.B.C. They should ask themselves whether they have been doing anything to enrich the culture of this nation.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I do not want these estimates to pass without a word on the other side. After all this "hate the C.B.C.

talk", and talk of a cancer on the nation, the hon. member for Rosthern wonders what the C.B.C. has done for entertainment and for the cultural activities of this country. I will say it has done a great deal more than many of the networks in the United States which are privately owned. Last night hon. members appointed themselves as a group of art critics and tonight we are appointing ourselves as a committee of censors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I would remind hon. members that, by and large, the C.B.C. is doing a good job. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Labour Congress and many other groups support the idea of the C.B.C., and feel that it should carry on as it is at the present time. The minister, I believe, need not pay too much attention to the complaints that are heard occasionally from the Conservative party and the conservative Liberals.

Mr. Regan: My remarks will be very short and I am sure they will not be in any manner controversial. Having derived my livelihood from the broadcasting business for some years before I entered the practice of law, I have a keen interest in the operations of the C.B.C. and broadcasting in general. While I worked in private radio, nevertheless I feel that the knowledge I picked up there helps me to appreciate the very important role that the C.B.C. has played, and today plays in the development of the national life and the culture of the country.

I have had the opportunity, as most hon. members have had, of observing both television and radio in other countries, and on that standard alone I think the C.B.C. shapes up very well indeed. I think the most significant thing we must remember with regard to the C.B.C. is that, had we not had it in the early years, and in later years in television, had we not had this national organization broadcasting in Canada and seen to it that there was included in the broadcasts matters of cultural interest, and matters for which sponsors could not be found, then our subservience to American culture would be very much greater than it has been.

In my opinion the C.B.C. is independent, imaginative, progressive, active and sometimes controversial. I admit it often puts on programs with which I personally disagree, but I would hate to see its independence taken away, and I think that any organization to be successful in this sort of business is bound to be very controversial sometimes.

I would agree with the hon. member for Danforth that its public relations branch somehow broke down rather badly with regard to the switching over from English to French of the radio station in the Toronto area, because the full story of that should have been put before the public at an early date. I just want to make two or three remarks of a regional nature, but before doing so I should like to make reference to the remarks made earlier in favour of closed circuit television. I do not know much about this pay television, but I do hope that in the rural areas of Canada, which probably will never be supplied with this type of television, people will still be able to watch such things as hockey games on C.B.C. television, involving the Montreal Canadiens, the Boston Bruins, Chicago Black Hawks, Detroit Red Wings and the New York Rangers.

The C.B.C. organization or branch in the Halifax area is capable of producing programs for television and radio of a very superior type. Some of these are shown on national television, such as the Don Messer show and King Fisher Cove, both excellent programs, and I thank the C.B.C. for the efforts it has made in developing branches in cities all across the country capable of producing programs of this type.

Before resuming my seat, I want to refer to one specific radio program carried over the maritime radio network which I think has merit to be included on the national network. I would urge the C.B.C. to consider the possibility of having the half hour show At the Opera, with David Murray, which is now broadcast on the maritime network on Thursday mornings, placed on the full Canadian network. This man David Murray not only has an excellent program but he shows excellent selection in his music, and includes a knowledgeable commentary of the proper length. In conclusion I only want to say I feel the C.B.C. has made, and I hope in the future will continue to make, a very valuable contribution in the development of a national culture across this nation.

Mr. Nesbitt: I shall just make one brief remark, although I have quite a number of remarks to make about the C.B.C. In fact, I have a nice long speech, not exactly in the same vein as the hon. member for York-Humber. I do not intend to deliver it this evening but I will on another occasion.

I do not think there are many members of the committee who really object to the C.B.C. as an institution. I for one think the C.B.C. as an institution is an excellent thing for Canada, but like the hon. member for York-Humber, I think there are a number of fields in which it needs rather severe checking up. However, the chief complaint most people have about the C.B.C., most of the people I have talked to, is in the field of public affairs programs.

We all agree there should be no political interference with the C.B.C. from this institution, but likewise I do not think there should be any political interference in the public affairs programs from within the C.B.C. itself, and I am not at all convinced that does not take place. There should be a very careful scrutiny made of it, and some arrangement arrived at to see that it does not take place. I am not going to say any more at the present time.

I have some very well documented remarks which I intend to deliver at a later date, but I hope between now and then the officials of the C.B.C., and those responsible, will take a very careful look at the selection of some of the political commentators, and also at the presentation of the news, a matter which was brought up by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam the other evening, so that there will not be a twisting or slanting of the news, such as has been going on in an accelerated manner recently. I hope a word to the wise will be sufficient, and that it will not be necessary to bring this up again.

Mr. Herridge: I just simply wish to make a brief comment, a passing reference to a regional difficulty, and one suggestion. I am very happy in representing a riding that is very fond of the C.B.C. generally. My trouble is getting enough C.B.C. service to various isolated points in the riding. I am one who appreciates the C.B.C. and believes in defending its independence. I always admired the former minister of national revenue, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, when he defended the independence of the C.B.C., sometimes under pressure from members of his own party. I shall never forget his rising on two or three occasions to defend the independence of the C.B.C.

In the area around Kootenay lake there are large numbers of people, relatively large for an isolated area, who are anxious to get C.B.C. service through a satellite station. They have repeatedly taken up this matter, and so have a lot of people in the Castlegar area, and they are disturbed over the delay in providing a satellite station. I understand this delay is occasioned by some difficulty with the provincial government in obtaining the site required for the station. There have also been representations recently from the Fruitvale district and the Montrose district, all wanting a satellite station, and I mention this to show the rate of demand for C.B.C. service in the area I represent.

Many of these people do not understand why they cannot get service immediately. This is what I rise to suggest. I think the C.B.C. does fall down in some respects with its public relations. Like the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan), I think sometimes its public relations are poor, not only with respect to programming and things of that type, but also with respect to policies and the priorities for the installation of satellite stations.

I suggest the C.B.C. would be well advised to publish their policy with respect to the installation of satellite stations and the priority given to population, density of population and things of that sort, so that persons will understand they are not being discriminated against, that their case is being considered; and when it comes up for review they will know the order of priority in which it will receive attention. This is something that should be considered in regard to the delay in providing services to the people in the isolated districts. I do think they should receive every consideration, because these people are producing revenue for this country in the work they are carrying out, and they are making a contribution to our economy. The C.B.C. possibly means a great deal more to them than it does to people in the larger centres who have other fields of entertainment, news broadcasts and other facilities.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Kootenay West I represent a constituency where people who have not the advantages of the C.B.C. service are clamouring for extension. However, I shall not attempt to go into the details of that question at this hour. I sought to catch your eye, Mr. Chairman, because the hon. member for York-Humber raised the question as to whether we were exporting any broadcasting stations from Canada. I would like to inform him and the committee generally that when I was in Malaysia this fall I heard very high praise indeed for the work being done by some of our C.B.C. technicians in assisting the Malaysians to establish their television system. This system, I might also point out, is being modelled very closely on that of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the British Broadcasting Corporation.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate somewhat to make certain comments on the estimates now before us, but I cannot leave unchallenged the statement made by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) as well as those made both in this house and outside by the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan).

Furthermore, certain remarks made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) lead me to put certain facts on the official record.

The hon. member for Danforth deplored the fact that French speaking Canadians in Toronto are getting a French radio station and he proposed that a full inquiry be held on this question. What surprises me, however, Mr. Chairman—

[Text]

Mr. Scott: I rise on a question of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman. I know the hon. member wants to be fair. I do not think anything I said deplored the request or the need of the French speaking people in Toronto for a radio outlet. Quite the contrary; I was most emphatic in reaffirming their rights. All I was trying to point out was that we are not convinced this is the best way to serve what may be a very legitimate and laudable purpose.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I think I was stating the position in perhaps a less controversial way than it was put by the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Scott: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, we should not continue with the sort of one-sided presentation of these difficulties that we are experiencing. All the hon. member is doing with this one-sided, prejudiced view is making the whole problem twice as difficult to solve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: Well, Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member for Danforth has given a fair explanation to the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, and I am sure he will be willing to accept that explanation.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Ricard: I have nothing to withdraw, Mr. Chairman, because I am just expressing my own opinion. I think I have as much right to my opinion as the hon. member who made that remark from his seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Danforth did not, for instance, request that an investigation be made when a permit was refused for the operation of a French language radio station in the city of Ottawa. If the hon. member for Danforth was so anxious to see the French speaking Canadians get a fair deal, he should, at that time, have made the remarks we heard from him today.

I am taking part in this debate mostly on account of the mitigated statements made by the hon. member for York-Humber, more particularly those he made outside the house.

As I said before, I wish also to talk about some remarks made by the Secretary of State. As reported in Le Devoir of December 20, 1963, the Secretary of State said:

In Ottawa, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) refused to say in the house whether or not the Liberal members from the Toronto area had made representations to the government to the effect that CJBC should not become a French language station. The minister had just stated that such representations had been made to him verbally.

Mr. Chairman, those remarks of the Secretary of State prove without any doubt that there is conflict of opinions and that there is opposition, even within the ranks of the Liberal party, to the granting of a French language station to the people of Toronto.

Mr. Chairman, this brings me to tell you and my hon. friends in the house that I am surprised to see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), who claims he wants to promote the cause of biculturalism in the country, was not able to convince his own supporters of the necessity of the French fact. If we consider the behaviour of certain influential members of the cabinet, it would seem in fact that they took actions that were prejudicial to the ethnic group to which I belong.

How can we explain the refusal of the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) to grant a licence for the operation of a private French language station in Ottawa, when that licence had been granted by the B.B.G.

Why, this ill-will?

[Text]

An hon. Member: A controversial opinion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have raised a point of order yet in the whole course of the consideration of the estimates. But it does not seem to me quite reasonable that the hon. gentleman, who had a perfect opportunity to raise this matter when the estimates of the Minister of Transport were before the committee, should raise it now. This matter has nothing at all to do with the C.B.C., which the committee is discussing at this time under my estimates. The Minister of Transport is not even in the chamber. I do think there should be a little reason in this matter. If the hon. gentleman wants to complain about me, let him complain to his heart's content; but if he wants to discuss the conduct of the Minister of Transport, that should have been done when the estimates of the minister were under consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, with due respect to the opinion the Secretary of State has just given, I think I am in order since permits for the exploitation of radio stations come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the minister's estimates are not before the committee now.

Mr. Ricard: Also, I cannot dissociate my remarks from what the Minister of Transport said. But if the Secretary of State wants me to end my remarks because the Minister of Transport is not in the house, I am willing to do so in the spirit of Christmas.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, with more particular reference to the C.B.C., I must say that for once, in this matter of station CJBC in Toronto, the C.B.C. has taken a stand that is all to its credit. Contrary to my hon. friend for York-Humber and some of his colleagues on that side of the house who deeply regret the position taken by the C.B.C., I can only commend its officers for the action they have taken.

Mr. Chairman, I would be the last person to prevent English speaking Canadians in Quebec from having a radio station in their own language. I am sure to express here the opinion and the feelings of my compatriots in the province of Quebec when I say they would be willing to take measures of elementary justice for the minorities in the province as they do in the field of education, and as the C.B.C. has given us an example.

I am amazed that not one Liberal member from the province of Quebec saw fit to rise and support the decision taken by C.B.C. concerning CJBC station. It is true that the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) rose to ask whether a former Conservative member represented the opinion of that party in the house, but if I wanted to be sarcastic and if you gave me permission, I would ask him immediately if he was expressing the views and especially the opinion of his compatriots and colleagues in the Liberal party when he said that Canada should not be governed by a foreign queen.

Those are the few remarks I had to make. Before resuming my seat, I should like to say that we had to wait for the Conservative party to come to power, after 22 years of Liberal administration, to restore effectively some rights which were ignored by those who nowadays claim all over the place to be the champions of human liberties.

[Text]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot has just claimed that I deplored the introduction of the French tongue into the radio world of Toronto. I do not deplore the introduction of the French tongue into the radio world of Toronto. I have a married daughter who lives in Quebec city and I visit her frequently. I stated that I deplored the conversion of CJBC from English speaking to French speaking. I stated that French should have the same opportunity to run a private station in Toronto which would broadcast in French in the same way as the English station in Quebec city is owned by English people and broadcasts in English. But I did not deplore the introduction of French to Toronto.

Mr. Nowlan: Before the minister finalizes discussion on these estimates, I should like to say that I have sympathy with him because from time to time I sat where he is now sitting and listened to some of the criticisms, some warranted, some unwarranted, some abusive, of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I do not have to apologize for the fact that I am one of those who have a tremendous respect and admiration for the corporation. I know it has made its share of mistakes, as have all organizations. But it is a corporation of which all Canadians can be proud and without which we would have much more difficulty in maintaining the unity in the country which is essential.

I am not going to make a speech, but I want to ask a minor question to preserve this unity. I am somewhat dismayed when I hear the seven o'clock news. This is a very picayune point I am making amongst all the other weighty matters which have been discussed, but it is one in which the minister is interested, coming from the easternmost province of Canada. I am somewhat irritated at night when listening to the news broadcast at seven o'clock. We find out what the weather is in Ontario. We find out what the weather is in Quebec. We find out what the weather is in Louisiana and what the temperature is in Texas. We know what is going on in Florida and we know whether they are skiing, or whatever it is, in British Columbia. But the announcer jumps from Montreal to Newfoundland and never one word about the maritime provinces.

I do not have to emphasize to this committee that there are several maritimers living in and around this area of, shall we say, upper Canada. Without the maritimers we would never have had an upper Canada. I am not criticizing the minister for this because I raised the matter, though in a very low voice, when I sat in his place. I was defending the C.B.C. from so many attacks at that time that I did not very well have the opportunity to urge my own problems. Now, being an independent observer, I am asking the minister whether he will emphasize to his officials of the C.B.C., casually at any rate, that they tell us whether there is sunshine in Halifax or thunder in Saint John, or what the situation is, as well as telling us what is going on in Tennessee and Louisiana.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can tell the hon. gentleman that it was snowing this morning in Digby-Annapolis-Kings, because I happened to be talking to someone on the telephone and inquired. I might say it was also snowing in Yarmouth. I do not know whether it was at seven o'clock this evening. I am speaking just as one elected member of parliament when I say quite non-politically that I think this is a deplorable failure on the part of the C.B.C. I join with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings in a non-partisan assault on this deficiency—if you can assault a deficiency—in the C.B.C.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I have one question I should like to ask the minister, if I may, if now is the time to do so. I should have got it in before but I allowed vote 15 to pass. Could he tell us whether the interpreter staff is included with the translation staff in the increase in salary which he mentioned earlier today?

Mr. Pickersgill: As long as this is not regarded as a precedent, because I do not think the C.B.C. estimates have passed yet, I can tell the hon. member that they are included, I am glad to say. Perhaps I might even give one bit of gratuitous information. Thanks to a number of questions which have been asked in the house during the session I get a steady stream of letters now from people who want to be both interpreters and translators. I am sending them on, not to the C.B.C. but to the civil service commission, and I hope they are all as well qualified as they seem to be.

Mr. Peters: Could the minister indicate the size of the increase?

Mr. Pickersgill: Thanks to my parliamentary secretary, the Minister of Justice, I am told it is $300 for the lower grades, $800 for the higher grades, retroactive to July 1.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we have been hearing many rumours of cabinet shifts. We did not know that this would be one.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to be permitted to thank hon. members on both sides for being kind to me and for failing, in the case of one or two members, to recall that I was not quite so kind when I was sitting over there.

Mr. Churchill: We made quite an effort.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be pleased to act for the minister of northern affairs, as was agreed when the item was held at the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre so that the hon. member for Yukon may make a speech.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Northern administration branch—

75. Branch administration including authority to make recoverable advances for services performed on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $1,092,800.

Mr. Nielsen: I should like to thank the committee for having held this item for me. I was busy in a house committee when these estimates were being discussed and for that reason I could not be here. I do not intend to speak at length. I had prepared a much longer speech but I will await another occasion before making it. I could be controversial in the course of my remarks and I could be extremely partisan if I wished, but I know that the committee does not wish to concern itself tonight with arguments of a philosophical kind.

I am sorry the minister is not here, because there were a great many matters which I wanted to draw to his attention. I will simply place on record some of the more important matters of concern to the Yukon so that he can read them when he returns to Ottawa. First, and most important, is the taking over of the Alaska highway by the Department of Public Works. There is a resolution in the 1963-64 statement of policy by the Canadian chamber of commerce, to be found at page 57, which calls for the paving of the Alaska highway and a similar resolution has been passed in the home province of the minister by the British Columbia chamber of commerce. There is a general policy resolution passed in 1963-64 which also calls for the paving of this highway. Mr. Sinclair, when he was on the cabinet benches of the Liberal government prior to 1957, on the occasion of a visit he made to the Yukon, promised that the highway would be paved and more recently the present Prime Minister while he was in the Yukon during the 1962 campaign certainly left the impression, if he did not directly promise, that the highway would be paved if a Liberal government was elected. I merely draw attention to these promises in the hope that they will be fulfilled by the government and that the paving program will be commenced without undue delay. I am happy to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his place tonight because he, I am sure, will be aware of any negotiations which are being conducted or which are to be conducted with the United States for a joint paving program under which costs would be shared.

There is another matter which I wish to raise. It has to do with the Haines road and it concerns the agreement entered into between the governments of Canada and the United States. I believe this agreement should be tabled, since the minister has made lengthy quotations from it. I think the hon. gentleman should take my remarks into consideration when he sees them in Hansard with a view to tabling this document.

I did refrain from speaking at length on the estimates of the Minister of Transport when they were up for consideration, but since every department is concerned with affairs in the north because of the direct responsibility which exists there as far as the federal government is concerned I might again mention the representations which have been made for the improvement and extension of the several airports in the Yukon. I did not get a direct answer from the minister this morning when I asked what steps were to be taken to oblige the legislative council which has requested the presence of an official of the Department of Transport for the purpose of discussing these communication links.

I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice, through the Secretary of State, to the lengthy delay which has been experienced in obtaining a senior legal officer for the Yukon, especially since this post has been established as a first step toward the assumption of jurisdiction in the matter of justice in the Yukon. The appointment will lead the way to the eventual creation of a solicitor general's department in the Yukon, and the longer we delay in obtaining the services of a senior legal officer, whose post has already been approved, the longer we shall have to wait to achieve this purpose. Perhaps the stumbling block is the fact that the category is not high enough to attract a solicitor of the calibre needed to take over this position.

Since this is the first opportunity I have had to do so, I want to draw attention to policies which have resulted during these years from 1957 to 1963 in a dramatic opening up of this portion of northern Canada. I read carefully the statement made by the minister when he presented these estimates and it seemed to me he was telling us that the vision which has been so often ridiculed and derided was not justified, and that perhaps the better course would have been to have made an effort to attract private investment in order to create the development which is desired in the north. This is very true, but government has to create the right atmosphere before private investment is attracted to the region, and in the absence of communication links and large expenditures on roads, private investment will not come.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

For the expenditure of slightly more than $22 million which was made in the Yukon between 1957 and 1962 during the period of the Progressive Conservative government there has been substantially more activity of an exploratory and development type in the Yukon and in the territories than ever before in Canada's history. Here again, I was disappointed in the minister's opening remarks. He seemed to be indicating that because of the small population in the north there was no justification for large federal expenditures. Again I would point out that the northern part of Canada is the property of all Canadians and, surely, the government should have the foresight to plan ahead so that the mineral riches of the north will be available to meet market demands which, I think all agree, will arise within the next few years.

It is not much good waiting until the demand is there and see the market taken up by other nations which are more prepared than we are. One of the most striking examples which can be given in this regard is the discovery of iron in Australia and Canada almost simultaneously. If we do not act quickly to obtain markets we shall lose them. The land in the north is being held in trust by the government and by the people who live there for Canadians everywhere. The minerals and other resource riches in the north are capable of being developed substantially, as was shown beyond doubt during the years between 1957 and 1963 and I hope this government will continue the policies which were established under the Conservative government and during the ministry of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who is the author of so many dramatic programs in the north which had the effect of attracting the very type of private investment to which the minister referred when he introduced his estimates. I must say too that the leadership of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was followed through by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris when he became minister and these policies were continued.

I am rather afraid though that there seem to be indications that the minister is departing from those measures that were so well received during the six years to which I have had reference. There seems to be an indication that construction is falling off. There seems to be an indication that policy decisions are being made which are cutting back investment in northern Canada. So many times when my friends opposite were in opposition I heard Liberal members rise and say that we should not be spending so many millions of dollars in the north but rather the money should be spent in the more southerly portions of Canada where more people live. I think this is a very wrong principle because surely this is expenditure on the basis of political expediency. Simply because more votes exist in the south is no reason to ignore the potential that the north has to offer in assisting our over-all national development. The north does have a good deal to offer and I am sure that if the present government were to follow the long range and visionary policies established by the Conservative government under the leadership of the present Leader of the Opposition they would be doing a service to Canada.

There are many matters I could mention that might be of small import to this committee which is waiting to finish its business at this late hour but I think they are very important to the people who live in the north. One of the more recent rumours, and I have received correspondence in this regard from the civil service association, is that the isolated post allowances are being cut again. I certainly hope that the minister will take another look at that decision because it may well be that a reconsideration would lead the government to decide that any such cut would not be justified.

I should like to say one last thing about these estimates. The people of the Yukon, and I am sure the same is true of the Northwest Territories, often felt themselves to be isolated in the years prior to 1957. The five years, 1957 to 1962, brought about a new feeling of permanence in the north because the government of that day paid more attention to their problems and to the belief that the resources of the north were capable of development. There were also many other factors which tended to change the feeling of the people who lived there from one of isolation to one of feeling that attention was being paid to them.

I would hope that the government will continue to send officials from the various departments into the north to find out about conditions first hand. One simply cannot appreciate the problems that exist there 4,000 miles away otherwise. People cannot make decisions sitting behind their desks in Ottawa and accepting certain things as facts, no matter how expert the officials believe themselves to be who tender that advice.

At this point I want to compliment the officials of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, most of whom I know personally and very well. I know they perform a very conscientious and dedicated job in the department. As far as I am concerned, it is a department which exists to eliminate itself at the earliest possible moment, and this can only be done by gradually transferring jurisdiction to responsible government bodies which are encouraged to grow in the northern areas. Incidentally, it is my personal opinion that this is not going to be abetted by dividing the Northwest Territories and duplicating services in the area. There are many arguments that can be put forward against such a division.

I do want to make a plea that more attention be paid to the proceedings of the Yukon legislative council. These governmental bodies should be encouraged to flourish and grow and take on more responsibilities and they will not if there is bureaucratic oppression from Ottawa. They will not do so unless there is an eager desire on the part of officials in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and in the government generally to transfer the jurisdiction they now have in order to encourage the growth of those representative government institutions which will result finally in provincial autonomy. The government should not be encouraging the stifling of this growth but rather should be encouraging a strong, viable, representative form of government until the day arrives when these areas can become fully responsible.

I will not hold up the committee any longer. I want to say I am very grateful that this item was held over so that I could make these few remarks, which I hope the minister will read when he returns. I wish him well in his portfolio and urge him to continue to make visits to the north similar to the one he made last summer with several of his staff in order to learn our problems at first hand.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, may I simply say that this is the last item of northern affairs and although I am only the acting minister I want to assure the hon. member for Yukon that his remarks will be brought to the attention of the minister. It is a unique distinction to have the opportunity to end the discussion of estimates. I simply wish to say that while we have our quarrels I believe that we want to wish each other a merry Christmas and a happy new year.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and also the estimates for this session.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Sharp (for Mr. Gordon) moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, the sum of $990,623,771.47, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Sharp (for Mr. Gordon) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-132, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1964.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Herridge: Is the bill in the usual terms?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I think the Acting Minister of Finance would be able to say the bill was in the usual terms.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I can give the house the assurance the bill is in the ordinary form.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A to E inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if I might have what I believe will have to be unanimous consent to revert to government notices of motion? Perhaps, if I get unanimous consent, the motion that stands on the order paper in the name of the Minister of Justice could be dealt with. In doing so, I would, of course, be asking for unanimous consent to have this measure dealt with in all its stages. I think perhaps I should not ask, though there has been a great deal of consultation about this, without informing some hon. members who may not be aware of the contents of the bill. The measure to be dealt with would be one establishing an additional judge of the exchequer court who would be available, if it were desired, and would have authority of an act of parliament to be founded upon this resolution, to have leave of absence to serve as an officer of the other place for the purpose of dealing with divorce petitions, as provided for in the legislation that was adopted last August. That is all, I may say, that is in the measure itself.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Sharp.]

JUDGES ACT

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR EXCHEQUER COURT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act to authorize the appointment of, and the provision of salary for, one additional judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Chevrier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-133, for the appointment of an additional judge to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I believe that the house would be disposed, from such consultations as I have had, to give unanimous consent to take certain private bills that are on the order paper, with the exception of one about which I believe another position is to be taken a little later, in a single motion, and that the house would also unanimously agree to dispense with sending the bills to the miscellaneous private bills committee. Then, we could go into committee on all the bills in a single motion and deal with all of them at each stage in a single motion. If I correctly interpret the will of the house, could that be ordered?

Mr. Aiken: In this connection, I would consent to reverting to private bills, but there has been no other agreement with regard to the final private bill reached. I would consent, therefore, to reverting to private bills, but not otherwise.

Mr. Pickersgill: Pardon?

Mr. Aiken: There has been no agreement reached in respect of the Good News Broadcasting bill, and therefore if we revert to private bills I merely want to revert to private bills, because this would bring on that bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman willing to have the divorce bills dealt with first?

Mr. Aiken: I have no objection to that. I merely indicate the Secretary of State said this would refer only to the divorce bills and not the last bill. I say that if we are to revert to private bills, I have no objection to taking them in any order, but we should take them all.

Mr. Pickersgill: I take it we have to revert to private bills.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

JOYCE EVELYN RANGER

Mr. L. T. Pennell (for Mr. Wahn) moved the second reading of Bill SD-357, for the relief of Joyce Evelyn Ranger.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we are very happy that the agreement of the house has been such that this problem, that we set out a number of years ago to resolve, has finally reached a very satisfactory state, and the government is to be congratulated on the effort it has made to assist in the solving of it.

Over the years the hon. member for Skeena and I have been accused of using the means to justify the end, and to some extent all the people mentioned in these bills which we are now passing are part of that means. On behalf of the hon. member for Skeena and myself, and the other hon. members of the house, I think we should express our sympathy with them in being involved. They have made a contribution to the social change of Canada, and we appreciate the fact that the Secretary of State and several other ministers have been able to arrive at this conclusion, which will be a very happy Christmas for many.

The Secretary of State will be pleased to know I have received a telephone call from Newfoundland, where the weather has been very bad today, but I can tell him that one of his constituents will be a very happy man this evening with the Christmas present given in this legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just want to say a word that is as equally out of order, but I wish to mention I have appreciated very much to help that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has given in reaching, I think, this very desirable goal which I hope is the end of a problem that all of us have been worried about for quite a long time.

Mr. Douglas: I only rise to say I think this is an important and red letter day in the history of the Canadian parliament. For years many of us have protested at having to deal with divorce bills in parliament, and all sorts of suggestions were made as to what should be done, but we were never able to produce a satisfactory solution that would be acceptable to all concerned. Those who have been mentioned are to be congratulated, and I would particularly like to express my appreciation, and I believe the appreciation of the house, to the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Skeena who, through long years, have kept this problem before parliament and before the country, and sometimes brought down on themselves a good deal of abuse. But they clung tenaciously to the principle they had in mind, with the result that parliament has now rid itself of this practice and has evolved a much more satisfactory manner of handling divorce for the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-15 to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada—Mr. Enns— Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Macdonald: No.

Mr. Howard: I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask for leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for York-Humber was speaking when the committee last rose. If he does not wish to make any statement at this time, I wish to do so, but I do not want to take any time from him if he wishes to speak.

[Mr. Douglas.]

The Chairman: I might point out to the committee that we do not have an amendment before us at the moment.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I was in error in assessing what course of action was going to be followed, and inasmuch as I did not put the motion in writing, it does not exist.

The Chairman: Then since there is no motion in writing, no motion can be withdrawn.

Mr. Aiken: I wish to make a very brief statement, and after that I hope that the committee and the house will see fit to render a decision on this bill which has been before parliament since early in June, and which has had quite a chequered career. Later today the house will adjourn to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ nearly 2,000 years ago. The news of this event was described at that time as glad tidings of great joy. Later in His life, Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature".

Many people still refer to this event as good news, and so in 1939 the Reverend Mr. Epps and his wife decided to broadcast the good news of Christ's birth by means of radio. He called his organization the Good News Broadcasting Association. To some sophisticates, this may sound corny; in fact it was so called in a committee of this house. But to many people it has real meaning.

In 1950 the broadcasts were started in Canada, and a business office was set up under licence of the Manitoba government. Over a million people each year in Canada, be they shut-ins or others who delight to hear, are so thankful for these broadcasts that they write in to the head office in Winnipeg. All that this organization now asks is that it be permitted to become Canadian by incorporation in Canada.

It falls to the house to consider as its last order of business before Christmas an act to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada. It is the effort of a small group of men to spread the glad tidings as they see them. Now the house must decide either to accept it, to reject it, or like Pontius Pilate of years ago, to wash their hands of it.

Mr. Macdonald: I would just like to say that for reasons stated in the debate on this matter previously I for one, as an individual, am not in favour of parliament enacting this type of bill. I agree entirely with the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, but I disagree entirely with this parliament incorporating a company under these circumstances, with this type of provision; and therefore I just want to make it clear I am recording my objection to the bill on the technical reasons of incorporation, and not in any sense expressing dissent with either the individuals who are promoting this particular enterprise or the objectives they are stating in it.

Clause 1 negatived: Yeas, 21; Nays, 35.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that clause 1 has been defeated, I presume the same vote will carry throughout and the bill has effectively been defeated. I would suggest, therefore, that we do not proceed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON HIGHWAYS

Question No. 1,188—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is it the government's intention to call a federal-provincial conference on highway problems this fall?
2. Has the Minister of Public Works discussed this matter with the ministers of highways in the provincial governments and, if so, what were the results of these discussions?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: 1. No.

2. Discussions with all the provincial departments of highways are not yet completed.

[Text]

INCREASE IN WAR VETERANS PENSIONS

Question 1,778—Mr. Irvine:

1. Is it the intention of the government to consider increasing war veterans pensions in line with the present standard of living and in view of the recent increase in old age security payments?
2. If so, when will this be considered, and what is the proposed amount of the increase?

Answer: 1 and 2. The War Veterans Allowance Act is under continuous study and review, and due weight is given to changing conditions and related factors. The time when the act will be amended is based on considerable research and any decision to amend the act, which would include proposals for increases in rates and ceilings, will be announced in the house at the appropriate time.

MEDICAL ASSISTANCE TO APPLICANT FOR VETERANS PENSION

Question No. 1,800—Mr. Douglas:

Have representations been received to the effect that a veteran applying for a pension, or making an appeal to the Canadian pension commission, should, with the consent of the Minister of Veterans Affairs or his nominee, be able to call on the services of a physician of his own choice to assist him in preparing his case and in presenting it verbally before the commission, such physician to be compensated from public funds, and, if so, what consideration has been given to this proposal?

Answer: Such representation was received quite recently, and this matter is receiving very careful consideration at the moment.

SHORE DAMAGE, STE MARGUERITE GALLIX, QUE.

Question No. 1,831—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the government any information concerning the extent of the damages caused by the sea last November to the North shore of the St. Lawrence river at Ste Marguerite Gallix, county of Saguenay?
2. Was a request for assistance made by the residents of Ste Marguerite Gallix and, if so, did the government indicate that such requests for assistance should be addressed to the appropriate provincial authorities?
3. Would the construction of a breakwater prevent further damage, particularly during the period of high tides, in December and January?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes.

2. Yes. The department suggested that assistance be sought under the winter works incentive program in which the provincial government participates. Since the erosion was not caused by navigation or by other factors involving the responsibility of the federal government, it is felt that this matter comes under provincial jurisdiction.

3. The construction of a breakwater might remedy the situation, but it seems that a protection wall would also be needed.

SHERBROOKE-MEGANTIC BRANCH RAILWAY LINE

Question No. 1,832—Mr. Latulippe:

1. In what year was the branch line of the Sherbrooke-Megantic railway opened?
2. How long did its construction take and what was its cost?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

1. The railway line between Sherbrooke and Megantic was constructed by the St. Francis and Megantic International Railway Company (now part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company) and was opened for operation in 1883.

2. Information in the board's files indicates that construction commenced about the year 1872. The board has no information as to the total cost of construction of the section of the railway line in question.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Question No. 1,854—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. When is it proposed to commence construction of post office buildings in Crapaud, North Rustico, and Mount Stewart in Prince Edward Island?

Questions

2. When will tenders be called?
3. What is the estimated cost of each such structure?
4. What are the dimensions of such buildings?
5. Is it the intention to construct similar buildings in other centres in Queens county and, if so, at what centres?

Mr. Badanai: 1. If suitable sites are obtained at reasonable costs it is expected construction of new post offices at Crapaud, North Rustico and Mount Stewart will commence early in 1964.

2. Answered by 1.

3. About $15,000.

4. The basic plan calls for buildings approximately 20 feet by 24 feet. However this size could vary for each location depending on local post office requirements and where accommodation may be provided for other government departments.

5. Not at the present time.

USE OF CANADIAN ENGINEERING FIRMS IN AID PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,864—Mr. Matheson:

1. In what ways are Canadian engineering services used within Canadian grant aid programs?
2. How many Canadian engineering firms are currently employed in grant aid programs?
3. What firms are so employed and where?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. Canadian engineers have been used within Canadian grant aid programs on the making of surveys, feasibility studies, design and supervision of major construction projects, the training of operating and maintenance personnel and in various advisory capacities.

2. Twenty one engineering firms.

3. The firms are:

(a) Stadler Hurter International Ltd., Montreal, Que.; Malaya, Pakistan, Burma.

(b) C. C. Parker, Whittaker & Co. Ltd., Edmonton, Alta.; Burma, Malaya.

(c) Canadian Hoosier Engineering Co. Ltd. Montreal, Que.; Pakistan, Ceylon.

(q) C. D. Schultz & Co., Vancouver, B.C., Kenya.

(r) Canadian Aero Services Ltd., Ottawa, Ont.; Nigeria.

(s) Pathfinder Engineering Co. Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.; Nigeria.

(t) Coode, Binnie & Preece, Ottawa, Ont.; St. Vincent.

(u) Piette, Audy, Lepinay & Bertrand, Quebec, Que.; Leeward and Windward islands.

*CONVERSION TO FRENCH OF STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Question No. 1,868—Mr. Scott:

1. What is the estimated listening audience of radio station CJBC Toronto?
2. What is the estimated number of French speaking people in the Toronto area?
3. Briefly, what considerations led to the decision to convert station CJBC into a station broadcasting in French only?
4. Were other proposed solutions considered to the problem of providing a French station in Toronto and, if so, what were such other proposed solutions, and why were they unacceptable?
5. What is the estimated amount of revenue that will be lost as a result of the conversion of CJBC from English to French?
6. Where will the French speaking staff come from to operate the station?
7. What provision is being made for the continued employment of those people presently working at station CJBC?
8. How many English speaking employees will lose their jobs as a result of this switch?
9. Will the present Protestant and Catholic church services now carried by CJBC be carried on another station and, if so, which station?
10. To what extent will the programs presently being carried by CJBC still be available to the listening public?
11. Which of the programs now carried by CJBC will no longer be available to the public?
12. What steps were taken to ascertain the views of the English speaking listeners of CJBC as to the necessity for or the desirability of this change from English to French?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, starred question 1,868 contains 12 parts and stands in the name of the hon. member for Danforth. I apologize for not having it ready for him on Wednesday, as I personally would like to have done. The answer is rather long, and hon. members have heard my voice rather often.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the house would consent to having the answer printed in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. During an average seven day period CJBC is listened to in 170,000 of the 1,119,000 homes located within CJBC's coverage area—i.e. approximately 15 per cent of them. During an average five day Monday to Friday period CJBC is heard in 136,000 homes—i.e. approximately 12 per cent.

2. It is estimated that in its daytime coverage area CJBC covers some 67,000 people who have French as their mother tongue and a sum total of 163,000 French speaking people.

3. (a) The C.B.C. is required by its mandate to provide broadcast service to the largest possible number of Canadians in the two official languages, French and English.

(b) The conversion of CJBC to French broadcasting is the simplest and quickest way to provide the required service in view of the fact that C.B.C. already has another station, CBL, supplying this area with the national service. No other Canadian city has more than one C.B.C. station operating in the same language.

(c) There is also the fact that a good, unoccupied broadcast frequency to provide the required service is not available.

4. Yes; as follows:

(a) Low power relay transmitter—not satisfactory for use in a metropolitan area.

(b) FM transmitter—(i) effective radiation area would be less than CJBC's (i) would compel French speaking audience to buy FM sets.

(c) New AM transmitter to serve same area as CJBC—see 3 (b) and (c) above.

5. It is not customary to require the corporation to make public such information in view of the competitive business in which it is engaged. However, the loss of commercial revenue will be offset by the reduction of operating costs. No additional requirement from public funds is expected.

6. Wherever suitable staff can be recruited.

7. These employees will be absorbed in the C.B.C.'s general Toronto operation through the normal turnover of staff.

8. None.

9. This has not yet been decided.

10. "The Learning Stage" will remain on CJBC. The corporation is now conducting a study to determine if some of the present CJBC programs might be inserted in the CBL schedule.

11. See 10 above.

12. A comprehensive analysis was made of available data relevant to CJBC's English as well as French listening audience. However, as indicated in 3 (above) the primary factor in the decision was the corporation's obligation to provide the national service to the large French language group in the Toronto area, coupled with the availability of a C.B.C. station which was no longer filling its function as the key station of a national English language network.

RADIO TECHNICIAN CLASSIFICATIONS

Question No. 1,874—Mr. Churchill:

1. When was the classification radio technician 1 to 5 abolished?
2. Was it replaced by the classification technician electronics 1 to 7 and, if so, when?
3. In the cyclical reviews of civil service salaries was the radio technician group included?
4. What was the salary schedule of the classification radio technician 1 to 5?
5. What is the present salary schedule of the classification technician electronics 1 to 7?
6. What are the salary schedules for the years 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963 for (a) air traffic control (5), and (b) technician electronics 3 (or equivalent radio technician)?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have been given the following answers by the civil service commission:

1. The class radio technician 1 to 5 has not been abolished. However, instructions have been issued to the effect that it is not to be used for new appointments.

2. The radio technician class will be replaced by the class technician 1 to 7, electronics, which was established effective October 1, 1962.

3. Cyclical salary review group "D".

4. Radio technician 1, $4,620-$5,160; 2, $5,100-$5,640; 3, $5,400-$5,940; 4, $6,000-$6,660; 5, $6,420-$7,140.

5. Technician 1, electronics, $3,780-$4,980; 2, electronics, $4,740-$5,460; 3, electronics, $5,100-$6,000; 4, electronics, $5,760-$6,300; 5, electronics, $6,300-$6,960; 6, electronics, $6,800-$7,500; 7, electronics, $7,200-$8,220.

6. (a) 1960, $6,000-$6,660; 1961, $6,300-$6,960; 1962, $5,580-$6,960; 1963, $6,720-$8,040.

(b) No single grade of radio technician is equivalent to technician 3, electronics. The salaries of grades affected by movement into this grade are as follows: Radio technician 1, 1960-1963, $4,620-$5,160; 2, 1960-1963, $5,100-$5,640; 3, 1960-1963, $5,400-$5,940; 4, 1960-1963, $6,000-$6,660.

Questions

STATION CJBC, TORONTO—FRENCH LISTENING AUDIENCE

Question No. 1,883—Mr. Smith:

During the time that CJBC was broadcasting a part of its daily program in French, were any tests or surveys made to measure the listening audience and, if so (a) what kind of tests or surveys were made (b) what was the result of such tests or surveys?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Yes. (a) information on the audience to CJBC's French language programs was obtained from an analysis, carried out by the C.B.C. research department, of all the available data relevant to CJBC's present and potential listening audience. This included data derived from C.B.C.'s own surveys and from several independent sources of audience information. (b) The analysis indicated that CJBC's 9.00-11.00 p.m. week day French language programs had an audience, within the station's coverage area, of about 9,000 different households over the course of an average five day week.

STUDIES OF FRENCH LISTENING AUDIENCE, STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Question No. 1,884—Mr. Smith:

Prior to the decision to make radio station CJBC in Toronto a French language station, were any investigations or studies made as to the potential audience and, if so (a) what were these investigations or studies (b) what were the results or conclusions from such studies?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Yes. (a) study and tabulation of statistical data on the French only plus bilingual population within the service area of CJBC; (b) it was estimated that a wholly French language CJBC could attract a home audience of about 30,000 different households in the course of an average seven day week, or 20,000 in an average day.

FLUORIDATION

Question No. 1,885—Mr. Lachance:

Has a careful appraisal of the advantages and disadvantages of fluoridation been made recently by the Department of National Health and Welfare and, if so (a) was a report submitted to the government (b) on what date was such a report submitted?

Miss LaMarsh: The Department of National Health and Welfare has carefully studied the dental effects of mechanically fluoridated water at Brantford, Ontario, and naturally fluoridated water at Stratford, Ontario during a period of 15 years. In addition the dental effects of naturally fluoridated water at Ingersoll, Ontario was studied in 1962.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

It was conclusively shown that fluoridation was beneficial. Water either mechanically or naturally fluoridated to a level of about one part per million was found to reduce the occurrence of tooth decay by about two thirds in persons drinking it regularly from birth. No ill effects were observed.

(a) The results were widely publicized through departmental reports, press releases, and articles in professional and scientific journals.

(b) Departmental reports were published in 1953, 1954, 1955, 1958, 1959, 1962 and 1963.

POST OFFICE BUILDING, DUPARQUET, QUE.

Question No. 1,886—Mr. Caouette:

Will a post office be built in the near future, at Duparquet and, if so (a) what lots have been purchased (b) from whom have they been purchased (c) what was the price agreed upon for those lots (d) have building tenders been called (e) who are the tenderers and what is the amount of each tender (f) what persons made representations to the Post Office Department for the construction of such a post office?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: Yes.

(a) Two lots are being purchased on Beattie boulevard.

(b) From Messrs. L. Dessailly and R. Gilbert.

(c) $800 each.

(d) No.

(e) N/A.

(f) The Post Office Department advise that they have not received any representations in this connection.

1. How many positions are authorized in the establishment of the office of the Indian commissioner for British Columbia?
2. How many of these are currently occupied?
3. By classified occupation what, briefly, are the qualifications and duties of each of those in the currently-occupied positions?
4. What is the authorized number of personnel of the Alberni agency?
5. How many of the authorized positions are currently occupied?
6. What, including an indication of whether this position is currently occupied, are the duties and responsibilities of each position authorized in the operation of the Alberni agency?
7. Who are the members of the crew of the Skeena, the vessel operated by the Alberni agency?
8. What are the duties and responsibilities of each of the members of the crew?
9. What other duties, in addition to acting as a member of the crew of this vessel, does each of the members perform?

Return tabled.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAMILTON—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR MEDICINE HAT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In the spirit of co-operation which we have had tonight, I would like to conclude one pending matter, which is a decision on a question of privilege raised a few days ago. I hope it will be accepted by the two hon. members chiefly concerned, inasmuch as we have discussed this matter together and I am convinced that the principle which I shall announce shortly is right. I hope both hon. members will be satisfied, although it is not my purpose to satisfy hon. members as long as the principle is right.

On December 13 the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) rose on a question of privilege, to the effect that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) had on the previous day stated the following:

> Never before in our history has any member spent so much out of public funds in order to advertise a political party.

He stated that this was an imputation against his personal honour and against his activities as minister of agriculture. In consequence the member for Qu'Appelle asked not only for a complete withdrawal but a very strong apology as well.

In reply the member for Medicine Hat stated that if anything he said the day before could be construed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle as being offensive to him personally, he would withdraw that, and he repeated the same statement later on. In the course of this discussion the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen) had this to say:

> In so far as the question of privilege is concerned, when the remark was made yesterday by the hon. member for Medicine Hat I was quite astounded, because what he is saying is that the former minister of agriculture has misapplied public funds. In essence he is making a charge of fraud by misuse of public funds—

It is true, as the hon. member for Yukon said when he quoted Beauchesne's citation 108, that "libels on members have been constantly punished and scandalous charges or imputations directed against members are equivalent to libelous charges". I am not ready to agree that the remarks made in the course of the debate by the member for Medicine Hat constituted, in the words of the member for Yukon, "a charge of fraud by misuse of public funds".

There could not be any fraud because it is evident, and to everyone's knowledge, that every year large funds are spent by each and every department of the government for purposes of publicity. This expenditure may be directed toward giving publicity to laws passed by parliament, to orders in council, to regulations, to the work done in and by the different departments, to statements made by ministers at home or abroad in connection with their official duties, to social or political developments throughout the country.

There is no doubt, also, that all this government publicity under favourable circumstances, may react to the benefit of the party in power and to the ministers administering the different departments. Furthermore, if I correctly interpret what was in the mind of the member for Medicine Hat—this according to his own statements—his intention was to refer to a political party, and then it becomes clear that the alleged libel would be one affecting the party itself rather than a single member of that party who at the time was responsible for the public relations of a department. As May has stated in the sixteenth edition, at page 459:

> Expressions which are unparliamentary when applied to individuals are not always so considered when applied to a whole party.

On August 1, 1958—Hansard, page 2981—the Speaker on a similar question of privilege stated the following:

> I think the hon. member for Vancouver East is taking more out of what was said than was implied. I remember quite distinctly that although the hon. member for Victoria began talking about the hon. member for Vancouver East, when he made the statement about a policy of shooting capitalists it referred rather generally to a group or party. It has been the practice in the house, as the hon. member will recall, that unless an allegation is made specifically against a member I have not felt it to be my responsibility to compel the hon. member to retract beyond what he himself feels he should retract.

In the present case it is quite possible that the hon. member for Medicine Hat used a metaphor to the effect, as he stated, that money out of public funds had been used in order to advertise a political party. I imagine that in the case of an alleged libel made in the house against a member of the house the test would be whether such declaration would be considered serious enough to give rise to an action for libel before a court, if such declaration had been made outside the house.

Beauchesne in the first lines of citation 108 states that:

> —anything which may be considered a contempt of court by a tribunal is a breach of privilege as perpetrated against parliament—

And to repeat paragraph (3) of the same citation as quoted by the hon. member for Yukon:

> (3) Libels on members have also been constantly punished: but to constitute a breach of privilege they must concern the character or conduct of members in that capacity, and the libel must be based on matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the house.

May I quote here the first part of citation 113 by the same author:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy. There are privileges of the house as well as of members individually. Wilful disobedience to orders and rules of parliament in the exercise of its constitutional functions, insults and obstructions during debate are breaches of the privileges of the house. Libels upon members and aspersions upon them in relation to parliament and interference of any kind with their official duties, are breaches of the privileges of the members. But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege. An attack in a newspaper article is not a breach of privilege, unless it comes within the definition of privileges above given, and then a member is bound to lay on the table the newspaper in which the article complained of appears.

Here, if the house will allow me, I would like to refer to a citation in May's sixteenth edition, page 140:

> Where the committee recommended that, in view of the explanation offered by the offender, and of his expression of regret for the offence he had committed, the house should take no further action in the matter, or that the conduct complained of was not such a breach of the privileges of the house as called for any further action on its part or that, in the opinion of the committee, the house would best consult its own dignity by taking no further notice of the libel, or that no further time should be occupied in the consideration of the offence, further action was not taken by the house.
> In another instance after the committee of privileges had reported that in their opinion a breach of privilege had been committed but that in the circumstances the house would best consult its own dignity by taking no further action in the matter, the house resolved that it agreed with the committee in their report.

Having brought the above comments to the attention of the house, may I now say that the words quoted at the beginning, namely:

> Never before in our history has any member spent so much out of public funds in order to advertise a political party—

—are not words that should have been used, but on the contrary, those words might give rise to a question of privilege. However, in view of the explanations offered by the offender and of his understanding of the matter as declared when the discussion took place, the house would best consult its own dignity by taking no further action in the matter.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, through the usual channels I have ascertained that there might be accorded unanimous consent to move a motion, and in a desire to wind up the session and strike a blow for liberty and freedom I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), with unanimous consent:

> That the Sergeant-at-Arms, pursuant to standing order 88, be instructed to grant pro tem a card admitting Raymond Rodgers to the facilities of the press galleries of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might be permitted to say a word on this. I feel I should take the responsibility, notwithstanding the offer I made—I do not think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) will accuse me of double dealing—to say that after this matter was brought up Your Honour made certain observations about it, and for that reason I feel that we should acquiesce in the position taken by Your Honour. Therefore, I do not feel I would wish to agree to give unanimous consent, and in doing that I hope I will not be misunderstood.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that unanimous consent is not given and that I cannot receive the motion. Unless there is some other business we will suspend the session till the call from the other place.

Mr. Nowlan: Did I understand Your Honour to say that we would suspend this session, or are you considering some documents before you before we proceed further?

Mr. Speaker: At this time of night free interpretation I believe is given to ordinary words on some occasions. If I said "session" I certainly meant "sitting". Usually it is customary to break for a visitor from the other place, but I might read this announcement now.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa, December 21, 1963.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber at ten o'clock p.m. today, December 21, 1963, for the purpose of proroguing the first session of the twenty sixth parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
sir
Your obedient servant,

A. B. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

Mr. Pickersgill: Before Your Honour leaves the chair or suspends the sitting, whatever the proper technical term is, I do not imagine that anyone can call me to order at this stage for anything I say, however foolish. But I do want to say how very much I have appreciated the co-operation of those members of other parties who have met with me regularly throughout the session to try to arrange the business of this first session of a new parliament in which no party had a majority, in which some problems arose which were not even expected when the session began, and where, notwithstanding some of the things we may have said to and about one another in the course of debate, a good deal has been accomplished and the order paper has been brought to a pretty satisfactory state at the end. This would not have been possible, sir, without the regular consultation and co-operation which hon. gentlemen opposite have given to me in the management of the business of the house, and I appreciate very much what they have done. I appreciate too the fact that we have been able in these last three weeks to arrange the business of the house, to arrange the sittings to dispose of the business without once having had a motion put to settle sitting hours.

I should also like to say that I believe this parliament has now become accustomed to itself and we have become accustomed to each other, and that it will be a great deal easier in another session for us to get down to business and dispatch the business we are all sent here to do, and perhaps even to criticize to the satisfaction of some members of the press.

[Translation]

And I must say, Mr. Chairman, in the other official language of the country, that I greatly appreciate the co-operation given to me by all members.

[Text]

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): It is usual at this hour of night before we approach the other place for prorogation to make certain good wishes, congratulations and expressions of mutual respect. This is all the more fitting on an occasion such as this when we are not only approaching prorogation but are also on the verge of the Christmas season.

I am sure the leader of the house will understand, when he says that we are getting adjusted to each other, that these adjustments must be on a somewhat temporary basis. As I told the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) when we were wishing each other a merry Christmas—I wished him a very merry Christmas and a very happy new year, but one not too prolonged in the forthcoming year. Possibly we have to bear some of these things in mind. Seriously, on this occasion I wish to say that we reciprocate what the leader of the house has said about the co-operation which has gone on, despite the criticism. We started in a rough parliament last spring. I think it is true that the Tories were mad and the Liberals were cocky, and it took us a while to get adjusted. But following the series of disasters which they faced, we felt better and I doubt whether any parliament has worked better than this one has in the last few weeks or months since we came back from the summer recess. I am sure that as long as we continue as a parliament this spirit will continue.

Royal Assent

On behalf of the official opposition I wish to extend to the Speaker of the house, to the Deputy Speaker, to the staff of the House of Commons and all those associated with them our best wishes for a very merry Christmas and the best of health and happiness in the coming year. As for our colleagues and associates on both sides of the house—we shall probably be seeing each other during the evening—I wish to all members of the House of Commons, wherever they may sit and to whatever party they belong, the very best of fortune in the coming year.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should just like to say, in reply to the remarks made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) that this has been a remarkable session of parliament. It began in uncertain circumstances. It could easily have been a most unproductive parliament. I think history may well show that it has been a remarkably productive parliament, though a parliament in which no party had a clear majority. I think this has been due to the fine co-operation which has existed in all parts of the house and to the diplomacy and patience of the Secretary of State, who has been the leader of the house for the government, and to our patience in putting up with him. I hope the press will notice that although it is close to Christmas and late at night there is a remarkably good attendance of members in the dying hours of this session.

I was measuring the representation qualitatively. I thought it was about evenly balanced. I should like on behalf of the members of this party to express to all members in all parts of the house, to the staff and to the members of the press gallery our best wishes for a merry Christmas.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Without being repetitious I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. members who have spoken and to wish everyone a very merry Christmas and a happy new year. We shall be looking forward to some real results when the next session comes round.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, since our group has been recognized, may I, on behalf of the members of the Ralliement Credistes, in spite of the fact that some are absent, join with the other members who spoke before me and wish to the staff of the House of Commons, to all our colleagues from the various regions of Canada, and to all the people of Canada, peace on earth and good will to men, wherever they may be.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

[Text]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Would you allow me to say a final word in the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who, I am sure, would have said something had he been here. He is in the other place.

Mr. Douglas: Permanently?

Mr. Chevrier: I am sure no one in the house would want him to be in any other place but this one.

Mr. Douglas: Let me say to the minister that there is a scripture which says: I go to prepare a place for you.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not know what the hon. gentleman has in mind but I have a feeling he must be referring to someone else. Be that as it may, I do want, on behalf of the Prime Minister to thank those of you who were so kind as to express good wishes and congratulations on this occasion. I should like to join with those who have preceded me in paying a special tribute to the Speaker of the house for his patience, to the Deputy Speaker and to those who are on his staff, to the members of the press gallery, to the staff generally and to all those who are responsible for the administration of the House of Commons.

I think, too, I would be remiss in my duty—and I am sure no one will take offence at this—if I omitted to say a special word of commendation to the leader of the house for the manner in which he has acted as a negotiator in many of the problems and difficulties which arose. I am sure this would not have been possible, especially since my hon. friend has not occupied this particular position before, had it not been for the co-operation he received from the house leaders on the other side—the house leader of the official opposition, as well as the leaders of the various other groups.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not convey to the house our appreciation for your work and for the work of all those who are responsible for the administration of the house.

If I speak a little longer than usual, it is because we have a few minutes to go before the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod arrives.

I take the occasion to wish you a merry Christmas and a happy new year.

I extend the same wishes to all my colleagues on both sides of the house, and I would add "le paradis à la fin de leurs jours".

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if Your Honour would consider suspending the sitting at the call of the Chair to enable hon. gentlemen in the other place to dispense with the last items of business.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the suggestion made by the Secretary of State?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of the Deputy Governor General, did thereupon say:

In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General thanks her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

After which the Deputy Governor General was pleased to close the first session of the twenty sixth parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The twenty sixth parliament opened on May 16 and you have at this first session, occupying a total of 23 weeks, enacted much important legislation designed to advance in many ways the well-being of Canada and Canadians.

It has been encouraging to note some easing of tension in international relations, expressed particularly in the successful conclusion of a multilateral treaty banning nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and underwater. This treaty was signed on behalf of my government on August 8, 1963. Further progress toward improved understanding between nations is urgently necessary. To this end my government continues, at the United Nations and elsewhere, to participate fully in the attempt to ease international tensions.

Canadians have shared the grief of the people of the United States over the tragic and untimely death of President Kennedy, whose contribution to the causes of freedom and peace has been of immeasurable importance for all the world.

The Canadian economy is currently enjoying a good rate of growth. It is gratifying that in recent months unemployment has been reduced to the lowest rate experienced since 1957, though further progress remains to be made. Exports have substantially increased and the payments deficit with other countries has been reduced. The recent wheat crop was the largest in Canada's history and exports of wheat in the current crop year are expected to establish a new record. My government has renewed on satisfactory terms the trade agreement with the U.S.S.R. first made in 1956 and has entered into wheat sales agreements with that country and with Poland, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria. The Canadian wheat board has entered into a long term arrangement for the sale of wheat to mainland China.

My government has held conferences with the governments of all the provinces. Matters of mutual interest have been reviewed in a spirit of co-operative federalism. Arrangements for closer and more continuous consultation in future have been made. The federal government has indicated certain changes which it proposes to make in fiscal arrangements with the provinces for the next financial year. A wider range of other subjects, including certain features of the federal government's proposed Canada pension plan, have been examined. The principal conference in November was followed by a meeting of the federal and provincial ministers of trade and industry and a meeting of the ministers of agriculture. Further studies have been arranged, as a preliminary to another conference with the premiers of the provinces.

My government has established a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism and has taken steps to increase bilingualism in the public service. Many of the recommendations of the royal commission on government organization are being put into effect.

A committee of the House of Commons has inquired into matters of national defence and my government is undertaking a full review of defence policy in the light of modern conditions. Arrangements have been made for the provision of nuclear warheads for those previously acquired weapons which require them.

In recognition of the need to provide a fair share of assistance to the less developed nations, my ministers have announced an increase in Canada's external aid program and the initiation of a food aid program to supplement the other forms of assistance.

Negotiations for the clarification of the Columbia river treaty, and for the sale of downstream power, have been conducted with the government of the United States in full co-operation with the government of British Columbia.

The House of Commons has established a committee to make recommendations on its procedure and organization.

You have enacted a measure to provide for the office of a representation commissioner to facilitate the equitable redistribution of representation in the House of Commons.

You have enacted legislation under which has been established the economic council of Canada, which will advise how Canada can achieve the highest possible levels of employment and efficient production in order that the country may enjoy a high and consistent rate of economic growth and that all Canadians may share in rising living standards.

You have adopted measures to stimulate industrial expansion in Canada through tax incentives, and to encourage greater participation by Canadians in the ownership of Canadian industry.

You have also authorized the establishment of the Department of Industry in order to encourage the development and efficiency of manufacturing industries in Canada. In the same act you have provided for an area development agency which, in collaboration with the provinces, will assist in programs for the development of districts where economic growth has been slow and unemployment especially serious and persistent.

You have adopted measures to provide special tax incentives for industrial expansion in such areas.

The Atlantic Development Board Act has been amended to increase the number of members and to provide for a capital development fund of $100 million.

You have enacted the Municipal Development and Loan Act to make available funds for additional municipal projects, administered in co-operation with the provincial governments.

You have also authorized the provision of greater incentives to municipal winter works and an acceleration during the winter months of federal works in development areas, which have contributed substantially to the maintenance of employment.

You have also authorized measures which, with winter housing incentives and higher N.H.A. loans at reduced interest rates, have resulted in a record number of homes now being under construction.

You have also authorized an experimental program to encourage the employment and training of older workers who have been without work.

You have amended the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act to give increased support to the construction of training facilities and the provision of training both in industry and to the unemployed.

You have enacted the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act with the object of restoring democratic trade unionism in the shipping industry and putting an end to labour strife on the great lakes.

You have provided for raising to $75 a month the pensions paid to Canadians from age 70 under the Old Age Security Act, and for likewise increasing by $10 a month the benefits to which the federal government contributes under the joint welfare programs for old age assistance and for blindness and disability allowances.

Other measures enacted at this session include the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act and amendments to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, the Small Business Loans Act, and other legislation.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May divine Providence continue to bless our country.

This concluded the first session of the twenty sixth parliament.

APPENDIX

PARLIAMENT HILL AND THE BUILDINGS THEREON

Notes on civil law respecting their ownership, management and control and the rights and interests therein of Federal and provincial Crown Parliamentary and Judicial authorities.

Legal Title

With the exception of the years 1802-1823, Parliament Hill has been owned by the Crown—successively the Crown Imperial, the Crown Provincial and the Crown Federal. Since 1823, the Crown has always held these lands for public purposes—either of defence or generally. In 1802, the British Crown granted the area to Jacob Carman who deeded it in 1812 to Thomas Fraser by whose son Hugh it was inherited. In 1823 the Earl of Dalhousie, the Governor, purchased the Hill from Hugh Fraser on behalf of the British Crown and, by letter, entrusted its control and management to Colonel John By with instructions that the Hill, together with Major Hill and Nepean Point, be reserved for military purposes. About 1857 the British Crown transferred the Ordnance (or military) lands —these including the Hill, together with the Rideau Canal lands—to the Government of Upper Canada. With Confederation the Hill and the buildings then thereon were included in those public lands and works transferred from Upper Canada to Canada by section 108 of the B.N.A. Act and clause 9 of the 3rd Schedule thereto. Thereafter the Hill has continued in the ownership of Canada. The statutory phrase is that the Parliament Hill lands are absolutely vested in Her Majesty in right of Canada for the purposes of Canada. See: Public Lands Grants Act, R.S. 1952 Can., ch. 224 and Ordnance and Admiralty Lands Act, R.S. 1927 Can., ch. 115.

Disposition, Control and Management

Primarily the powers of disposition, control and management of the lands and works of Parliament Hill are presently in the Governor in Council. This, of course, is by authority of Parliament which has the ultimate sovereignty. At the present time, the Governor in Council holds the power of disposition of title and the power of appointment over the control and management.

By virtue of the Public Lands Grants Act, R.S. ch. 224, the Governor in Council may classify public lands as those necessary for defence of Canada and those not so necessary: thereafter the Governor in Council may authorize the sale, lease or other disposition of any public lands not required for public purposes. Parliament, under the Public Works Act, R.S. ch. 228, has entrusted the control management and administration of the Hill and buildings to the Minister of Public Works: but, under section 35 of the Act, has given a power of appointment to the Governor in Council so that that authority may transfer the management, charge and direction of any public work (defined as including "property"), or any power, duty or function with respect thereto, to any other Minister or department. Section 28 authorizes the Governor in Council to make such regulations as he deems necessary for the management, maintenance, proper use and protection of the property. Again, the Governor in Council, under the Public Service Re-arrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, R.S., ch. 227, may transfer the duties of one Minister to another. Historically, Parliament first entrusted Parliament Hill and buildings to the Secretary of State. Chapter 42 of the 1868 Acts provided that the Secretary of State should be substituted for the Commissioner of Crown Lands as regards the Ordnance and Admiralty lands transferred to the late Province of Canada.

Parliament has also given the National Capital Commission certain interests under the National Capital Act, Acts 1958, ch. 37. The Minister in charge of any property may ask the Commission to maintain and improve it. More important from the control standpoint, any proposals for the location, erection, alteration or extension of a building or other work on public lands by a department in the National Capital Region (which is described in the Schedule as including "the whole of the City of Ottawa, in the County of Carleton, Province of Ontario") must be referred to the Commission: the site, location and plans must be approved by the Commission. However, non-approval by the Commission may be overruled by the Governor in Council; alternatively, if approval is given by the Commission, the Governor in Council may attach terms and conditions. Presently, the Minister answerable to the Governor in Council and Parliament for the actions of the Commission is the Minister of Public Works: the votes of the Commission for operation and maintenance of parks, parkways and grounds adjoining government buildings at Ottawa are included in the Supply estimates of the Public Works Minister. However, the control exercised by the Commission and the Governor in Council does not apply to interior alterations in a building.

Parliament has given the Governor in Council further administrative powers over the Parliament Hill lands in the Government Property Traffic Act, R.S. ch. 324, as amended by Acts 1960-61, ch. 34. By this act, Parliament authorizes the Governor in Council to make the necessary regulations for the control of traffic "upon any lands belonging to or occupied by Her Majesty in right of Canada". The Governor in Council is empowered to authorize "officers" to enforce the regulations which, by the statute, carry quasi-criminal sanctions. Under the R.C.M. Police Act, Acts 1959, ch. 54, the Governor in Council may require the R.C.M.P. to perform such duties and functions in such places within or outside Canada as the Governor in Council prescribes. The force is controlled and managed by the R.C.M.P. Commissioner who is under the direction of the Minister of Justice. Thus, the Governor in Council may require the R.C.M.P. to assume duties, as well as those of traffic, control, on the Hill; and thus the Minister of Justice is responsible for the execution of these duties to the Governor in Council and Parliament.

The final power over the control and management of the Parliament Hill lands and buildings is financial. All monies expended upon these lands and buildings are, of course, voted by the House of Commons in the annual Supply Bill. The specific votes covering such expenditures are in different departmental estimates: Legislation, Public Works, R.C.M. Police. In the 1961-62 Estimates, two Legislation votes indicated a degree of control in the respective Senate and House of Commons votes for the Protective Services. At present these Protective Services operate solely within the Centre Block Building. In the Public Works Estimates there are votes under two main headings: "Public Buildings Construction and Services" and "National Capital Commission". Under the R.C.M. Police Estimates, the expenditures on police service for Parliament Hill are included under "Headquarters Administration and National Police Service—Operation and Maintenance." There are two statutes of Parliament which distribute authority generally and specifically over expenditures on Parliament Hill and its buildings. One is the Financial Administration Act, R.S., ch. 116, as amended, and the other is the House of Commons Act, R.S., ch. 143. By section 5 of the F.A. Act, the Treasury Board acts as a committee of the Privy Council on all matters relating to "finance, revenues, estimates, expenditures and financial commitments . . . " Sections 15 to 18 of the House of Commons Act provide for the Speaker to prepare estimates for the House of Commons, for the approval of these estimates by the Minister of Finance, and for the administration of the expenditure of these estimates, as so approved, by a Committee composed of the Speaker and four members of the Privy Council who are also members of the House. These four Privy Councillors are appointed by the Governor in Council.

The Library of Parliament is in a unique position as to its ownership and the trust on which it is held, its physical occupation of a portion of the Parliament Buildings, and its control and management.

Parliament, by the Library of Parliament Act, R.S. 166, as amended by Acts 1955, ch. 35, provides that the title to the books and other effects now or hereafter in the joint possession of the Senate and Commons are vested in Her Majesty for the use of both Houses of Parliament—not public purposes generally. Parliament requires that the Library "shall be kept in a suitable portion of the Parliament Buildings appropriated for the purpose." This is the first reference to the Parliament buildings, as such, either in the singular or plural, in any statute herein cited. It will also be noted that no authority is specifically charged with appropriating Library space. Section 3 provides that the direction and control of the Library and of its officers and servants "is" vested in the Senate Speaker and the Commons Speaker assisted, during each session, by a joint Parliamentary Committee. (The English statute version gives the singular verb "is" to "direction and control" as though those the words had one meaning; the French version has "sont confiees" and thereby giving separate but equal value to each power). Section 4 provides that the Speakers, assisted by the joint committee, may make orders and regulations for the government of the Library and for the proper expenditure of moneys voted by Parliament for the purchase of books and other effects to be deposited therein subject to the approval of the two Houses of Parliament.

The relationship of the Reading Room of the Commons to the Library—and therefore to Parliament, the two Speakers, and the House Internal Economy Committee—is difficult to define. Prior to June, 1954, the Reading Room was an adjunct of the Commons and its control and direction entrusted to the Commons' Speaker: its estimates were included in the Speaker's estimates and so were subject to approval by the Minister of Finance and their expenditure, when voted, controlled by the Internal Economy Commissioners. The minutes of the Joint Committee on the Library for June 13, 1954, have the following entry:

"Reading Room of the House of Commons.

The Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons reported that the Internal Economy Committee of the House of Commons has recommended, at its last meeting, that the Reading Room of the House of Commons be placed under this Committee and, if this Committee agreed, that it be placed under the authority "of the Joint Librarians". This recommendation was adopted by the Joint Committee on the Library. Another entry notes that similar action was recommended with respect to the Reading Room of the Senate and that the Joint Committee had agreed to accept the responsibility of the Reading Room of the Senate subject to the approval of the Internal Economy Committee of the Senate. It appears that the Senate did not accept the offer of the Joint Library Committee. The motion made by the Joint Committee to the House of Commons and adopted by the Commons on the 23rd of June, 1954, is recorded in the House Journals as follows:

"That the Reading Room of the House of Commons be placed under the authority of the Joint Librarians".

An amendment to the Library of Parliament Act, in 1955, ch. 35, became effective on the retirement of one of the Joint Librarians and provided that the Parliamentary Librarian, the Associate Parliamentary Librarian, and the rest of the staff should perform those duties defined by regulations agreed upon by the two Speakers and concurred in by the Joint Committee.

The annual votes for the Commons' Reading Room have been since included in those of the Library. The transfer was awkwardly done from a legal standpoint and raises questions as to the financial and other management and control of the Commons' Reading Room, the ownership of its contents, and the responsibility of the Senate Speaker, if any.

The Joint Parliamentary Restaurant (which includes the Cafeteria) is another parliamentary emanation which raises questions of the lex parliamentii arising out of the financial relationship between the two Houses, on the one hand, and the Treasury Board, on the other, as well as a question of statutory interpretation of the powers of control given by Parliament to the Commissioners of Internal Economy of the House, and the inherent powers of control residing in the two Speakers and the Joint Parliamentary Committee. The following is extracted from the 1958 "Audit Office Guide", issued by the Auditor General, at p. 95:

Parliamentary Restaurant Accounts

The Restaurant is a joint activity of the Senate and House of Commons. While it is assisted out of votes, the account is not regarded as one within the ambit of the Public Accounts of Canada. The history of the audit arrangement is a somewhat interesting one: Up to 1932 it was not regarded as an account in which the Auditor General had any interest. However, in that year the Auditor General decided that the provisions of the newly enacted Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, imposed an obligation on him to examine the accounts of the restaurant. Accordingly, he wrote the Speaker of the House of Commons asking for a statement of receipts and disbursements. On 12 May, 1933 the request was considered by the joint parliamentary committee on the restaurant and it was decided:

That the Auditor General's application to audit the committee's books cannot be entertained because such of the committee's expenditures as are charged against moneys received in payment of meals and not against public moneys are now audited by the firm of Milne, Steele and Company, who give entire satisfaction.

The Auditor General referred the matter to Treasury Board and in August 1933 it was indicated to the Speaker of the House of Commons that the board's view was that an annual examination should be made by the Auditor General. No records being made available to him for audit, on 22 November 1934 the Minister of Finance wrote the Speaker urging that this be done. The letter was considered by the joint committee but no action taken and the position remained unchanged until 15 May 1936 when a meeting of the joint parliamentary committee on the restaurant dealt with the matter in the following way:

The chairman pointed out that at a recent meeting of the commissioners of internal economy the desirability of its being in a position to carry out close supervision of all House of Commons expenditures was discussed. Arising from this was a request from the commissioners that regular reports on the restaurant appropriation vote be submitted for their consideration from time to time. After some discussion, upon motion of Mr. MacInnis seconded by Mr. Landeryou it was unanimously resolved:

(a) That, inasmuch as the sum of $15,000 is included in the House of Commons Estimates for the expenses of the parliamentary restaurant which receives in addition a substantial revenue from the operation of its business, the commissioners of internal economy would find it easier to control the spending of the house's estimates if they were supplied with monthly statements showing the receipts and expenditures of the restaurant;

(b) That the restaurant's accounts should be audited by one of the Auditor General's subauditors because, although its revenues are not credited to the consolidated revenue fund, the employees' salaries and the deficit on the yearly operations are charged upon the above $15,000 vote which is under the control of the commissioners of internal economy;

(c) That the joint committee on the restaurant agrees to co-operate in this effort to ensure a close audit of all the moneys voted for the expenditures of the House of Commons.
